"There are those proposals which are clearly within the power of Congress and which deserve serious consideration. First among these, in my view, is the need for the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate to be extraordinarily diligent in examining the judicial philosophy of potential nominees. In evaluating judicial nominees, the Senate has often been stymied by its inability to obtain evidence of a nominee's judicial philosophy. In the absence of such evidence, the Senate has often confirmed a nominee on the theory that it could find no fault with the nominee. I would reverse the presumption and place the burden squarely on the shoulders of the judicial nominee to prove that he or she has a well-thought-out judicial philosophy, one that recognizes the limited role for federal judges. Such a burden is appropriately borne by one seeking life tenure to wield the awesome judicial power of the

EMAIL #1:
From the NRCC to Schedule C's:

The Republican Party is looking for volunteers...

As you know, the special election in Virginia's 4th Congressional District is an excellent opportunity to add to our majority -- it is a highly competitive swing district. Leading up to Election Day, one of the most important resources will be a broad volunteer grassroots organization for canvassing in key precincts.

To carry through on this, the Republican Party is organizing weekly bus trips for volunteers to the greater Richmond area of the district. Each Saturday until Election Day (June 19th), we will be sending buses down into the district. The buses will be leaving from 310 First Street, SE(Eisenhower Building) at 8:00 AM on these Saturdays.

If you are interested in participating and increasing our majority, please RSVP to research@nrcc.org <mailto:research@nrcc.org> . If you have any questions or comments, you can email the address as well or call Kris Skrzycki at PRA 6. Any time that you can provide will go a long way to ensuring victory.

VA-04 Bus Trip (June 2nd, 9th, & 16th)
Lv: 310 First Street, SE
Washington, DC
8:00 AM -- it is recommended that you arrive around 7:30 AM

To: 3233 Boulevard
Colonial Heights, VA 23834
PRA 6

NOTE: Breakfast, lunch, and all needed refreshments will be provided.

EMAIL #2: From Ken Mehlman

Earlier today you received an email from the RNC about helping out in the special election in the 4th District of Virginia. This request has been approved by the White House Counsel's Office. You are legally permitted to help. I encourage you to join the Republican volunteers this weekend who are going down to the Richmond area to help out. Please give this request your careful consideration.

From the NRCC to Schedule C's:

The Republican Party is looking for volunteers...

As you know, the special election in Virginia's 4th Congressional District is an excellent opportunity to add to our majority -- it is a highly competitive swing district. Leading up to Election Day, one of the most important resources will be a broad volunteer grassroots organization for canvassing in key precincts.

To carry through on this, the Republican Party is organizing weekly bus trips for volunteers to the greater Richmond area of the district. Each Saturday until Election Day (June 19th), we will be sending buses down into the district. The buses will be leaving from 310 First Street, SE(Eisenhower Building) at 8:00 AM on these Saturdays.

If you are interested in participating and increasing our majority, please RSVP to research@nrcc.org <mailto:research@nrcc.org> . If you have any questions or comments, you can email the address as well or call Kris Skrzycki at PRA 6 . Any time that you can provide will go a long way to ensuring victory.

Earlier today you received an email from the RNC about helping out in the special election in the 4th District of Virginia. This request has been approved by the White House Counsel's Office. You are legally permitted to help. I encourage you to join the Republican volunteers this weekend who are going down to the Richmond area to help out. Please give this request your careful consideration.

As a general matter, it is proper for the political entity to pay all costs with respect to travel to political events. There are separate rules that apply to travel on corporate aircraft, however, and Moose can advise you on those rules.

"It has been rendered the solemn duty of the Supreme Court of the United States, laid upon it by Congress in pursuance of the Federal Government's power "to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States," U.S. Const., Art. I, õ 8, cl. 3, to decide What Is Golf. I am sure that the Framers of the Constitution, aware of the 1457 edict of King
James II of Scotland prohibiting golf because it interfered with the practice of archery, fully expected that sooner or later the paths of golf and government, the law and the links, would once again cross, and that the judges of this august Court would some day have to wrestle with that age-old jurisprudential question, for which their years of study in the law have so well prepared them: Is someone riding around a golf course from shot to shot really a golfer?"

I have asked that all of you be added to the Counsel address book on Lotus Notes (see e-mail from Marvin Miller ). I have begun updating it, but it would really help if all of you could add entries of names, numbers, and other relevant information for people we may need to reach, and don't have the time to look up. It will only be available to members of the Counsel's office, so you do not have to worry about other people getting numbers and names. Thank you for your help.

ALR

I you have questions or problems, please either e-mail the person who sent you your notification that you have been added to the access list, or call Computer Support.

My view is that formal autographed photos can be handed out routinely. If somebody can figure out a way to profit from something that is generally available, so be it. Otherwise, every person who writes in asking for an autograph picture has to be vetted for motive etc. I discourage the signing of items other than official formal photographs, especially where it looks like there could be an attempt to achieve value-enhancement.

Brett, I'm following up on an e-mail I sent two weeks ago concerning the propriety of sending autographed photos when one knows they will be used for commercial purposes. Janet Walker suggested that I contact you. Are there any restrictions on using autographed photos? Dr. Llindsey has received several requests for photos and one stated they would be using it in a museum in Germany.

Please get back to me so that I can send a timely response to the requester.

In response to your inquiry, the RNC may pay costs associated with an off-site private event hosted by a private group where the Vice President will appear -- so long, of course, as the RNC approves ths payment and the private group is also ok with that arrangement. This would not constitute an augmentation of appropriations and is thus entirely permissible.

My analysis is that the nature of the event (official or political) is determined primarily by what occurs at the event and the purpose of the event. So this would be an official event, as I understand it.

If a private entity hosts an event that is considered official for the government official who attends the event, that entity may of course seek to defray the costs of hosting by asking another entity to pick up certain costs associated with the event. I do not see any legal problem from the government's perspective if the private entity receives such funding assistance from the local Chamber of Commerce, for example, or a political party. (As always, appearance problems could arise under certain scenarios.) That kind of funding issue in this instance is between the political party and the entity in question, but not one that, as I see it, implicates any particular legal concerns for the government or the government official. But I remain open to considering other analyses or concerns, of course.

In response to your inquiry, the RNC may pay costs associated with an off-site private event hosted by a private group where the Vice President will appear -- so long, of course, as the RNC approves ths payment and the private group is also ok with that arrangement. This would not constitute an augmentation of appropriations and is thus entirely permissible.

My view is that formal autographed photos can be handed out routinely. If somebody can figure out a way to profit from something that is generally available, so be it. Otherwise, every person who writes in asking for an autograph picture has to be vetted for motive etc. I discourage the signing of items other than official formal photographs, especially where it looks like there could be an attempt to achieve value-enhancement.

Not really. I don't think we should vet every request for an autographed photo. But when we know it will be used improperly, I think that we should decline to provide one.

I'd be interested in knowing more facts. If we know, with a great degree of certainty, that the requester is planning on selling the photos, I would recommend against giving them. That's just a gut reaction, though, and am open to being persuaded otherwise.

Invite you to attend the third event in our ongoing series of discussions:

Os Guinness

A World Safe for Diversity: Forging a Public Philosophy for Faith-based Initiatives

Dr. Os Guinness is a writer and speaker living in Northern Virginia.

Born in China during World War II, he remained there until 1951 when the communists forced most foreigners to leave. Since then he has lived mostly in England, Switzerland, and the United States.

Educated in England, he did undergraduate studies at the University of London and postgraduate studies at University of Oxford where he graduated with a D.Phil. in the social sciences from Oriel College.

He has written or edited more than twenty books, including The American Hour (Free Press, 1993), The Call (Word, 1998), Time for Truth, and Long Journey Home (Doubleday, September 2001).

Since 1984, he has lived in the Washington, DC area. He was a Guest Scholar at the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Studies and then a Guest Scholar and Visiting Fellow at The Brookings Institution. From 1986 through 1989 he was the Executive Director of the Williamsburg Charter Foundation, one of the drafters of the Williamsburg Charter, and co-author of the public school curriculum Living With Our Deepest Differences. He is currently the Senior Fellow at The Trinity Forum.

Old Executive Office Building, Presidential Hall, Room 450
Noon to 1:00 p.m.

Although I emphatically agree with the general message, especially the last two lines, of the Dorothea Day version, I have to stick with my position that Henley has the upper hand in cadence and pictorial and evocative force.

INVICTUS

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance,
I have not winced nor cried aloud:
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

William Ernest Henley

My Captain

Out of the light that dazzles me,
Bright as the sun from pole to pole,
I Thank the God I know to be
For Christ the conqueror of my soul.

Since His the sway of circumstance,
I would not wince nor cry aloud.
Under that rule which men call chance
My head with joy is humbly bowed.

Beyond this place of sin and tears
That life with Him! And His the aid,
Despite the menace of the years,
Keeps, and shall keep me, unafraid.

I have no fear, though strait the gate,
He cleared the punishment from the scroll.
Christ is the Master of my fate,
Christ is the Captain of my soul.

Although my usage book does not speak to addendum as opposed to memorandum, same rules should apply, I would presume. Garner reports that "either -dums or -da is correct as a plural. No less a writer than Shakespeare used memorandums . . ." AP usage book is same . . .

ESEA Reauthorization - School Vouchers

June 12, 2001 Senate Roll Call Vote 179 S1

Gregg, R-N.H., amendment to the Jeffords, I-Vt., substitute amendment. The Gregg amendment would create a demonstration program in three states and 10 school districts to allow public school children to use federal funds in the form of vouchers to transfer to another public school, including charter schools, or a private school. It would authorize $50 million for fiscal 2002 and subsequent necessary sums for the next six fiscal years. It also would require that 5 percent of the funds be reserved for the program's evaluation. The Jeffords substitute would reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for seven years and add language to modify the annual testing provisions in the bill, add a "Straight A's" demonstration program and allow parents of children in underperforming schools to use federal funds for private tutoring.

Rejected by a vote of 41-58:

Democrats 3-46 (Northern Democrats 3-37, Southern Democrats 0-9)

Who are the principal points of contact we have been using when we have discussions between our office and DOJ on litigation-related issues? Is there a central intake point at DOJ or do we speak with individual offices? What are the sensitivities that we need to keep in mind as we try to design a better system for information flow? I'd appreciate your advice on any of these questions.

Subject: question on transferring viruses

A moment ago, I spoke to one of your very helpful techs about the potential for transferring a computer virus from one computer to another via my handspring visor. (For your reference, the case number of that tech support call is 2124680.) I asked the question because I, and many others in my office, would like to use our visors (or palm piltos) at work, including installing the desktop software on my office computer. But our "security officer" believes that doing so would compromise our office computer system because a computer virus at home might get transferred by hot syncing to the office system. The tech I spoke to, after conferring with her manager, told me that that is impossible. I was hoping that you might confirm this in writing so that I can share it with my security officer and hopefully get the policy against visors changed. Of course, feel free to elaborate or qualify your response to the extent you need to do so.

Thank you. I'll anxiously await your reply.

What do you think about writing down our policy on reimbursing unofficial travel of the First Lady? See message below.

Merrill,

In order to bill as requested, this office requires a memorandum either from your office (thru legal counsel) or from legal counsel stating the current administration policy on reimbursement of Official and Unofficial travel for the First Lady.

The Trip Summaries I just received from you for First Lady are all official. Are any of them supposed to say personal?? If they are official, you won't need airfare rates as official travel is non-reimbursable.

FYI. Historically, the median coach or business class rate has been the most used method for non-campaign travel by the principals. As a reminder, the COST of flying the C-20 (most often used aircraft by First Lady) is $3,573 per hour for FY01.

Nanci

Nancy--

As we discussed today, when Mrs. Bush travels on personal business, Airlift Ops should seek reimbursement for the fare of the least expensive coach ticket (including any discount for a 2-week or 21-day advance purchase). I confirmed with Jack Shayegan in the travel office that he would be able to provide such discounted fares, even after the fact. Please send a list of these fares to me for those personal trips for which we have provided trip summaries. Any and all outstanding trip summaries will follow shortly.

Thanks,
Merrill

The All Or Nothing Approach
School District Bans Student Clubs Rather Than Allow Christian Club
Associated Press

An Orange County high school district banned non-curriculum clubs from its campuses rather than allow the establishment of a Christian club. The action resulted from a lawsuit settlement by Saddleback Valley Unified School District, which agreed to exclude student clubs rather than allow a chapter of Fellowship of Christian Athletes on one of its campuses. The clubs will have to meet before or after school, and can no longer use campus bulletin boards or other school outlets to solicit members or publicize meetings, Bill Manahan, the school district superintendent, said Thursday.

The dinner is fine. The liasions need to remember that because they are not PAS appointees and are not White House employees, they cannot perform "political activity" that goes beyond scheduling and the like while they are on duty and in their offices. It does not sound like that is how you intend to use them anyway, but that is the limitation under which they operate, as they all should know.

The RNC would like to have a dinner for the various WH Liaisons and selected WH staff. This would not take place during working hours, and would be intended to develop the role of the Liaison as the political contact in each agency. Liaisons help with various political questions including grant announcements and scheduling requests. Can you give us quick guidance on this?

Brett,

About a month and a half ago, I asked someone in WH Counsel's office (I believe it was someone named Heather) to send me a copy of all the WH memoranda that went around in the early days of the administration. I was under the impression that these memos had important guidance. I am now told that Heather has left the office.

Is there a way I can get a copy of these memos? If you are not the right person to ask, who is?

Much obliged for your assistance.

Sai

What did we decide on the meeting for tomorrow? I spoke with Clint -- he is around tomorrow and is eager to help.
when I was trying to set up a meeting between Judge, Tim and Ed Haden for tomorrow, 6:00 was the only consensus time available.

Can you ask Counsel's office whether they can think of any way to ask the Judicial Conference to comment on the new federal cause of action in McCain-Kennedy? They have already commented negatively on the concept of federal venue for denial decisions. Although McCain-Kennedy puts some denial decisions in state ct (the decisions involving medical facts), they create an really expansive new federal cause of action that is likely to burden federal cts. I assume the Judicial Conf. would hate it. Is there an appropriate way to ask for their views?

Could you forward this to that person in the Judge's shop? Thanks. Pls cc me, as well.

I believe that some spokesmen and women within the Administration (both WH and agencies) would benefit from media training. This would entail a day or so of seminars, interview simulations, and videotaped presentation try-outs.

Would it be appropriate and acceptable for these spokesmen to receive such training from the Republican National Committee? I would plan on exempting DoD, Justice and similarly apolitical agencies.

thanks,

fyi, this idea was discussed between DoJ and RNC as I understand, RNC (ie, the Tonester) was fine with it, but DoJ attorneys nixed it

My sense was that their decision shouldn't preclude us from doing it, but that's your call who does opinions on matters related to the RNC and the services they're able to provide to the administration?

Could you forward this to that person in the Judge's shop? Thanks. Pls cc me, as well.

I believe that some spokesmen and women within the Administration (both WH and agencies) would benefit from media training. This would entail a day or so of seminars, interview simulations, and videotaped presentation try-outs.

Would it be appropriate and acceptable for these spokesmen to receive such training from the Republican National Committee? I would plan on exempting DoD, Justice and similarly apolitical agencies.

thanks,

Tucker Eskew

Yeah -- she's the one who wanted to know about getting lists. I gave her your answer. Apparently Mehlman is really skittish and told her she had to go back to you again to get sign-off. She feels sort of silly going back to you after she already got an answer.

She's actually a friend of mine from the Dole campaign.
She just started working part-time doing women's outreach for OPL.

I generally think it is good when working in a high-profile office like this to socially engage (rather than avoid) the critics. In this instance, I tend to think it's good for the libs to know that 2 normal people (or at least one normal person, you) work here in this office for the President. Even if the upshot is only a very tiny modulation in tone by someone who happens to be there (e.g., Betsy Cavendish '89 of NARAL, Harold Koh), I still think it's a good idea. Could be entirely fruitless, but you never know . . .

We have tours on 7/4 from 9am-1pm, but they are all self-guided public. People do not need to get a ticket ahead of time, and as long as they are in line by 1:00, they will get in. As far as front of lines tours go, staff can do those during the normal time period, 10:30am-12:00pm.

Please let Melissa know your thoughts on the use of WH letterhead to decline political events.

I think there is a bigger question here re: the need for political letterhead and when it should be used.

Please confirm for me that her inquiry has been addressed.

If this topic isn't in either of your courts please forward this email to the appropriate individual.

Thanks!

Ken Mehlman asked me to contact you regarding list acquisition. I am helping Lezlee Westine with women's outreach and want to ensure that I am doing everything by the book from the beginning. I have had a preliminary discussion with Rachael Brand -- friend from former life -- but know that you are the final authority internally on this issue. I can be reached at 65571 or am across the hall in 126 1/2. Many thanks.

Hi Brett! Just wanted to touch base (I think one of our volunteers, Lisa Vogt, called you) to see if we can get a memo on the dos and don'ts of Larry Lindsey appearing at political events. We know that he cannot use (and neither can the group) his official title. Nor can he fundraise. But we're trying to put together some clear guidance for him on a variety of events.

Your guidance, as always, is tremendously appreciated.

Regards,
Janet

We have recommended against this type of activity for our employees. There can be an appearance of or - depending on the circumstances - an actual use of public office for private gain. I want to emphasize that the decision is up to DOE.

Do you have any thoughts with regard to this? thanks

The Secretary received a request from the College Republicans National Committee asking him to donate something for the College Republicans Silent Auction. DOEd sent the request to their lawyers/ethics office, who recommended that it was probably not a good idea and suggested declining the request. Terry would like to know if we have any ethical guidance, if other Cabinet Members have received similar requests, and if so, how have they responded?

Send A Letter To Your Senate Opposing The Bush Nomination Of Carolyn Kuhl To the 9th Circuit Court Of Appeals from <A HREF="http://www.democrats.com/">www.democrats.com</A> :

"I am writing to urge you to oppose the nomination of Carolyn Kuhl to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. I feel that Kuhl's hostility to established reproductive rights makes her unsuited for this position. Kuhl has argued for the overturn of Roe v. Wade and supported the domestic gag rule, which prohibited clinics receiving federal funds from providing women with full information about their reproductive health options. She also supported parental notification for contraception. With a woman's right to choose in peril, we cannot afford to have another activist, anti-choice judge sitting on the federal bench. Our nation deserves a federal court pledged to upholding the hard fought constitutional rights secured through Supreme Court precedents such as Roe." Brett,
The tour sounds terrific. I know I definitely want to take it. Last time I was in the White House your boss's father was VP and I sat next to David Stockman in the Canteen.
Rachel's daughter Maddie's tap dance routine was a hit, tapped to the tune of C'mon Get Happy. Definitely the highlight of my trip home. How was U2?

Happy to do tours any time. The best are West Wing tours after 8 p.m. on weeknights; I would lead the group; it takes 30 minutes and you see Oval Office, Cabinet Room, Roosevelt Room, Rose Garden, press room. Let me know when and who.

I never get to New York with this new job, but call any time when you are in DC and I can give you the WW tour as well. How was Rachel's play/dance?

Hi Bret,
I got your email from Peach. It was good to see you the other day. I have a question for you--I have friends from Louisiana coming to DC and they want to visit the White House. Is there any tour you know about, besides the standard one? Thanks for any help on this front.
Do you ever get up to NYC? If so, give me a call. It would be fun to have a drink.
Stephanie

Brett, we discussed several months ago the concept of reinstituting the Eisenhower Intern Program which allows interns to work in the WH and at the RNC while receiving a small monthly allowance. Doug and I wanted Anita to have a "heads up" that this was starting very soon, and they thought it would be wise to have approval in writing. Do you have an email on this you can shoot us for the files or can you send one?

I spoke to Toner this evening about a different issue (Crawford Ranch), and I raised a couple of the Christmas card issues with him directly. To wit: Apparently there is no need for a disclaimer. The RNC is aware of the cost. RNC is prepared to hire someone for a couple of months -- someone Mrs. Bush would be comfortable with. He suggested that someone at the RNC should be the liaison on this issue, and I am suppose to call Jack Oliver in a day or so to see who that person should be.

I'm not sure there are many other issues left, so I hope that your meeting on Charlie Spies wasn't going to be only on this issue. I'm sorry if I put you and Spies to any unnecessary trouble. I figured since I had Toner on the line, I should just go ahead and ask these questions.

Attached is the White House Energy Savings Plan. Among the actions required of White House Staff are the following:

? Turn out lights when leaving the office for an extended time and at the end of the day.
? Turn up the thermostat on window air conditioners in the EEOB upon departure.
? Do not use accent lighting where more efficient overhead lighting is adequate.
? Turn off monitors at the close of business each day
? Turn off computers if it will not be in use for two or more days.
? Eliminate the use of portable heaters unless minimum conditions cannot be met.
? Turn off lights in public areas at the conclusion of events, tours, or other activities.
? Turn off lights, pull down shades, and close doors for rooms not in use.
? Keep all windows closed when not required to be open.

Subject: CORRECTED QUOTE: WHITE HOUSE ENERGY SAVINGS PLAN

WHITE HOUSE ENERGY SAVINGS PLAN

President Bush is firmly committed to expanding and promoting energy conservation. He believes the federal government should set an example for all Americans by finding innovative ways to increase efficiency, and is starting the efforts at the People,s House.) Ari Fleischer.

President Bush instructed all federal government agencies to review energy use and develop a plan to reduce energy consumption.

The White House has completed a review and has begun taking steps to conserve energy. The following actions to reduce energy consumption and improve building and equipment conditions could result in an estimated 25% to 35% reduction in energy usage.

RECENTLY COMPLETED IMPROVEMENTS:

? Installation of new air conditioning chillers to support the East and West Wings and selected areas of the Old Executive Office Building.

? Former President Bush initiated this plan, the contract was awarded during the Clinton administration and the action was completed during the present Administration.

? The White House anticipates a 10% - 12% savings as a result of this modernization.

ACTIONS TO BEGIN IMMEDIATELY

? The White House will begin to implement a series of administrative actions helping each member of the staff contribute to the conservation effort.

? With the diligent implementation of these immediate changes, we anticipate a 3%-5% reduction in energy consumption.

? These actions include:

? The installation of motion switches for lights in conference rooms.
? Turn out lights when leaving the office for an extended time and at the end of the day.
? Turn up the thermostat on window air conditioners in the EEOB upon departure.
? Do not use accent lighting where more efficient overhead lighting is adequate.
? Turn off monitors at the close of business each day
? Turn off computers if it will not be in use for two or more days.
? Building Engineers will regulate temperatures based upon the temperature and humidity relationship. (This could mean that temperatures might be 78 degrees at 50% humidity but 74 degrees at 80% humidity.)
? Remove halogen lamps of 100 watts or more from EOP buildings.
? Delay the turn-on time for exterior lighting for all buildings until dusk each day.
? Eliminate the use of portable heaters unless minimum conditions cannot be met.
? Turn off lights in public areas at the conclusion of events, tours, or other activities.
? Set thermostats for hot water heaters at approximately 105 degrees F.
? Turn off lights, pull down shades, and close doors for rooms not in use.
? For computerized spaces, re-program them to allow the rooms not in use to have a higher temperature setting in the summer and a cooler setting in the winter.
? Keep all windows closed when not required to be open.

MID TERM REDUCTION PLANS:

? The White House will continue to renovate and modernize buildings in the White House Complex to make them more energy efficient.

? These mid term changes could result in a 5% reduction in energy consumption.

? Install motion switches for lights in all offices.
? Continue replacement of equipment, such as motors and pumps, with new equipment that is more energy efficient.
? Upgrade lighting with compact fluorescent lamps (CFLs) and other more efficient systems wherever feasible.
? Proceed with the HVAC upgrade for the eleven Jackson Place Townhouses.
? Install energy efficient doors wherever possible.

LONG TERM ENERGY SAVINGS PLANS:

? President Bush plans to initiate a significant modernization of the buildings on the White House grounds, providing energy savings for years to come. Many of the proposed projects will require Congressional action.

These renovations include:

? Modernize the EEOB electrical and mechanical systems to eliminate the approximate 400 window air conditioners and improve the primary and secondary electrical distribution.
? Computerize the all buildings through the use of a building management system that will zone the HVAC and lighting systems.
? Change the switching for the overhead lights so that two switches in each office controls approximately 50 percent of the lighting on each switch, allowing office inhabitants to use only the light necessary for the actual task.
? Install more high performance insulated glass wherever possible.

Brett,

A Public Relations firm in California wants to use a White House photo on their web site. Specifically, McGrath Power Public Relations has a client (Wyse) that attended the Technology Conservation event last Thursday (the President spoke). Apparently Wyse has a product that was featured at the event.

Now the PR firm wants to display the photo on their web site.

Their question is: can they use it?

Thanks

Jimmy

Brett-I wanted to ask you if I could get something in writing that says it is OK for the Political interns here in the WH can receive money from the RNC. I have been in contact with Doug Hoelsher and he say that there was a verbal OK. That is fine but for my records I was wondering if I could an email or something that I could attach to their file. The RNC would like about 1000 copies of the Energy report (the blue book) to give to donors at a summer meeting. They are totally willing to purchase but I just wanted to run it by you. The Vice President's office told me to check with Jim Wilkinson in Communications because they have some copies and to check with the Government Printing office which has some copies for purchase. Please advise asap because they need them soon. thanks!

Hi. There are some things I need to know:

1. Flight times, airline and numbers (both arrival and departure)

2. Does Ms. Westine need ground transportation or is it provided ?

3. Are there any special needs ?

4. Is she willing to take questions after she speaks ? (I am figuring about 20 mns to 1/2 hour for her address and 10-15 minutes for questions, if there are any). She will likely begin speaking between 12:30 to 12:45 PM.

Please let me know ASAP, especially if I need to make provisions. Thanks

The policy has been that, absent security issues, either (i) government cars should not be used for transportation to purely political events or (ii) the political committee must reimburse the government for the costs of the transportation. The governing principle is that additional, non-security-related costs incurred by the government as a result of political activity should not be borne by the government. In this case, that would be the cost of the use of the car between the White House and the airport (and perhaps also the extra costs associated with the driver if he gets paid by the hour or receives overtime). I recommend that it would be simpler for the RNC to provide transportation in situations like the one you describe here (unless there is a security issue). I am happy to discuss this further at 6-7984.

I think you are the expert on this one, although I'd be interested in hearing your response. Do I recall correctly that only the First Lady's personal aide is "always official"? Does that mean that if Andi Ball goes, she needs to reimbuse for her air travel?

Brett,

A Public Relations firm in California wants to use a White House photo on their web site. Specifically, McGrath Power Public Relations has a client (Wyse) that attended the Technology Conservation event last Thursday (the President spoke). Apparently Wyse has a product that was featured at the event.

Now the PR firm wants to display the photo on their web site.

Their question is: can they use it?

Thanks

Jimmy

Brett,

A Public Relations firm in California wants to use a White House photo on their web site. Specifically, McGrath Power Public Relations has a client (Wyse) that attended the Technology Conservation event last Thursday (the President spoke). Apparently Wyse has a product that was featured at the event.

Now the PR firm wants to display the photo on their web site.

Their question is: can they use it?

Thanks

Jimmy

Below is an excerpt from an editorial commentary today by someone who supports stem cell research, but does not believe current law permits it.

"Consider how the issue arrives on Mr. Bush's desk. Congress has annually attached a rider to medical research funding prohibiting 'research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed, discarded, or knowingly subject to risk or injury.' During the Clinton administration, however, the general counsel of the Department of Health and Human Services opened the way for funding by ruling that the congressional language did not prohibit experiments on the stem cells so long as the embryo that provided them was destroyed by someone else without federal funds. Research funding was about to proceed on this basis when the Bush administration called for a moratorium to review the matter. 3 nominees chosen for U.S. attorney

ORLANDO (AP) - A local judicial nominating committee selected three nominees for the next U.S. attorney for the Middle District of Florida.

The candidates include Paul Byron, an assistant U.S. attorney in Orlando; Edward Nucci, an assistant U.S. attorney in Miami; and Paul Perez, a former assistant U.S. attorney in Jacksonville, who now works in private practice.

The nominees face background checks and will be interviewed by the U.S. Department of Justice and White House officials in the coming weeks.

The final decision by President Bush is not expected until late July or August.

The sprawling Middle District covers 35 of Florida,s 67 counties, reaching from Tampa through Orlando and north to Jacksonville.

Rachel,

We are pleased to know that Microsoft Executive Vice President/COO Bob Herbold has been asked to take part in the Wednesday high-tech meeting on Trade Promotion Authority.

Office of Public Liaison has recommended that Herbold participate in a media conference call following the event.

In light of DOJ's ongoing involvement with the Microsoft Anti-trust case, does White House Counsel have any views regarding Herbold's participation in call?

Thanks

Brett:

Barry Jackson (6-2108) had the following questions:
1) When he plans meetings between OSI staffers and others within WH to discuss policy matters and political things such as polling data, who pays for the snacks? He's been paying for them out of his pocket, but (unsurprisingly) does not want to continue to do that. Can the RNC pay?
2) They're starting regular meetings among the Deputy Assistants to the President to brainstorm about various issues. They want to order pizza. Can the RNC pay for that?
3) If Barry sets up one dinner at a restaurant between Karl Rove/Ken Mehlman, etc., from the White House with outside pollsters to talk about strategy, etc., can the RNC pay for that?

(Barry: Please correct me where I'm getting the particulars wrong.)

On the first, I would have the RNC handle it. On the second, I believe such requests go through the Correspondence Unit at Staff Secretary's office. I see no problem with that, but you should check with that unit, which handles these requests, I believe.

Brett,

I am trying to work on getting approval for letters from the President and photographs of the President and First Lady for two separate publications.

1. The Texas Federation of Republican Women would like camera ready artwork due no later than August 31 for their upcoming convention program. In last year's book, the campaign produced and paid for an advertisement. This year, they are asking us for the artwork and they will publish for free. I'm looking for guidance on all fronts. I know that the WH photo office can provide camera ready artwork -- is it permissable for them to do this for a publication such as this and if not, who should do the work -- RNC?

2. The Texas Musical Drama (a non-profit Texas Panhandle Heritage Foundation) has requested a letter and photo of the President for their 2001 Texas Souvenir Program. Again, I'm looking for guidance on the approval process here. This one is more time sensitive.

I appreciate any direction you can provide. Thanks for your help.

Brett,

A Public Relations firm in California wants to use a White House photo on their web site. Specifically, McGrath Power Public Relations has a client (Wyse) that attended the Technology Conservation event last Thursday (the President spoke). Apparently Wyse has a product that was featured at the event.

Now the PR firm wants to display the photo on their web site.

Their question is: can they use it?

Thanks

Jimmy

Congressman Culberson's office has been receiving constituent letters regarding Karl Rove.
They would like more information-such as the Waxman letter-in order to properly respond to the letters.
Sarah Goldstein is the appropriate contact in Culberson's office.
She prefers the information in email form and her address information is listed below.

sarah.goldston@mail.house.gov
1728 Longworth House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-4307
Phone: (202) 225-2571

Let me know if you need me to send anything to Sarah.

President's Faith-Based and Community Initiative Takes Another Step Forward Action:

- The House Ways and Means Committee approved bipartisan legislation that includes key elements of the President's plan to rally America's armies of compassion, ensuring that the full House will have an opportunity to vote on the measure soon.

- The Committee approved a nearly $13.3 billion dollar, ten-year package of measures based on President Bush's proposals that will:

  - Allow those taxpayers who do not itemize on their taxes to get a tax deduction for charitable giving, in addition to their standard deduction.
  - Allow those aged 70 1/2 and older to make tax free withdrawals from their Individual Retirement Accounts for the purpose of giving to charities.
  - Permit an enhanced tax deduction for food donations by businesses that donate food inventory to charitable groups.
  - Double the funding for Individual Development Accounts, which are accounts designed to help low-income Americans accumulate assets.

- President Bush will continue to work with Members of Congress on a bipartisan basis to make incentives for charitable giving as robust as possible and to more effectively deliver vital social services to Americans who are most in need.

The President's Initiative to Help More Disadvantaged Americans:

The President's faith- and community-based initiative is designed to help Americans in need by:

- Stimulating an outpouring of private giving to nonprofits, faith-based programs, and community groups by expanding tax deductions and other initiatives:

- Eliminating federal barriers to effective faith-based and community-serving programs through legislative, regulatory, and programmatic reforms.

- Expanding established Charitable Choice principles to enable private, charitable and religious organizations to compete, on a nondiscriminatory basis, for federal funds for social service programs such as:

  - ✓ Juvenile justice
  - ✓ Crime prevention
  - ✓ Housing assistance
  - ✓ Job training
  - ✓ Elder care
  - ✓ Hunger relief
  - ✓ Domestic violence prevention
  - ✓ After-school and adult education services
  - ✓ Community Development Block Grants

- Empowering low-income families to save and build assets through Individual Development Accounts

Never said it would NEVER pass, just that I didn't think it would. Also, to say it's debatable that it won't pass is of course true.

Your suggestion that flag burning amendment will never pass is debatable . . .

Since 1995, three consecutive Congresses have voted on a constitutional amendment on flag desecration. In the 104th Congress, the House voted 312 to 120 in favor. The Senate voted 63 to 36, three votes short of the necessary two-thirds majority. In the 105th Congress, the House voted 310 to 114 in favor. The Senate did not take up the measure. In the 106th Congress, the House voted 305 to 124 in favor. The Senate voted 63 to 37, four votes short of the required two-thirds majority.

Brett,
Matt Schlapp and Ken Mehlman wanted me to check with you to see if it would be ok to send notices of and information on upcoming campaign schools to the Schedule C's in the various departments/agencies. Is this ok? (i.e. same rules as before -- it is ok for them to receive, as long as they do not forward ).
Thanks for any guidance you can provide.

Noel:

Sec. Norton recorded a message here for an RNC video involving women in the administration. She said, "This administration has more women in senior positions than any past administration." Can you advise on how what we should tell them about using this quote? I guess it depends on how "senior positions" is defined. Thank you for your help.

1. The London "Republicans Abroad" meeting question is obviously quite pressing.

2. I had talked with Brad W. about NARA providing the Burton Committee an opportunity to review the redacted Clinton-Barak transcripts (in response to the committee's request). NARA would not actually produce the transcripts or show them the unredacted version, but rather would just show Burton Committee staff the redacted version. Please advise whether that is ok by you.

Ken has a bunch of email groups that he likes to send daily talking points to. He would like to create one for the RNC Regents and Bush/Cheney Pioneers. Is there a problem with him sending emails to a donor group from the official computer or should he only use his political computer? The content would not be political- only agenda information- but the people are political. Also, the email would not indicate which group it is going to.

It is permissible to use the official computer for these. As indicated previously, we advise that you attempt to use the political computers for truly electoral/party activity, but that is only a prophylactic measure, not a legal requirement, and these e-mails would not fall within that description in any event. Please call with any questions.

We are being reminded that WH stationary and envelopes are to be used for official business only. This includes placing a stamp on a WH envelope. The mail room would like to remind us that all official mail should not be sealed.

3 cars have been stolen from the Ellipse during the day. They have increased security, but we are all reminded to take common sense precautions (lock doors, try to minimize visibility of CDs and other electronic equipment, etc.)

His name may appear in that fashion on the invitation, although the title "The Honorable" should be used rather than Ken's White House title. See 5 CFR 734.208 (Example 3).

Here is the final MOU, which has been signed off on by the agencies. DOI should be transmitting some information to you shortly, and I believe EPA and USDA will have something additional tomorrow. Please let me know if you have any questions.

We look forward to continuing to work with you in a constructive manner to accommodate the two branches' legitimate interests.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING
July 18, 2001

Based upon discussions held on Friday, July 13, 2001, the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA"), Department of Agriculture ("USDA"), and Department of the Interior ("DOI") (collectively, "the agencies") have reached the following understandings with the staff of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee ("the Committee") concerning the agencies' responses to the information requests sent by Senator Lieberman to the agencies on March 22, 2001 and June 6, 2001 ("the requests"):

1. The Committee believes that it is entitled to production of all documents responsive to its requests, without redactions or restrictions. The Committee believes that the privileges referred to below do not shield the documents from production to the Committee, and the Committee intends to further pursue production of some or all of the documents not produced by the agencies. The agencies, for their part, believe that they are attempting to accommodate the legitimate oversight interests of the Committee in a manner that is consistent with important executive branch institutional interests. The agencies disagree with the Committee's position regarding the applicability of privilege in the context of the Committee's requests, and they do not concede that the Committee is entitled to production of or access to any of the documents withheld pursuant to this Memorandum. The agencies make no assertion of privilege at this time but instead are committed to continuing the accommodation process, and they reserve all of their rights with respect to the possible assertion of privileges at later stages of the accommodation process.

2. Subject to paragraphs 3 through 6 below, the agencies will produce all responsive documents pursuant to the timetable set forth in paragraph 8.

3. Subject to and except as provided in paragraphs 4 through 6 below, the agencies will make available for timely inspection and review all responsive documents that the agencies may assert are or would be subject to a claim of privilege in litigation with private parties ("Underlying Litigation Privileged Documents"). The agencies will prepare a log identifying the Underlying Litigation Privileged Documents. To the extent possible, the log will identify with respect to each document the author (including title), the addressee(s) (including title(s)), the date, a brief description of the general subject matter, and the privilege(s) available in litigation. Inspection and review by Committee staff will occur at the agencies and there will be no restrictions with respect to time for review, number of Committee staff permitted, or note-taking. Information derived from such review, whether or not reduced to writing, will be treated as confidential by committee staff, including the marking of any notes as confidential, provided that if the Committee wishes to disclose the information, it shall provide reasonable prior notice and an opportunity to object to the agencies. The Committee reserves its right to seek copies of any or all Underlying Litigation Privileged Documents, and the agencies reserve all their rights with respect to responding to any such request.

4. The agencies will withhold certain deliberative documents prepared for use by senior decisionmakers at the agencies ("High-Level Deliberative Documents") and documents reflecting communications to or from the White House or the Office of Management and Budget ("White House/OMB Communications"). The agencies will prepare a log for these documents of the kind described in paragraph 3 above. The Committee reserves its right to seek access to or copies of any or all High-Level Deliberative Documents or White House/OMB Communications, and the agencies reserve all their rights with respect to responding to any such request.

5. The agencies will withhold and not log, and the Committee agrees that it does not currently seek, deliberative documents prepared in connection with ongoing regulatory proceedings ("Ongoing Regulatory Process Documents"), except to the extent that such documents describe, discuss, or refer to the reasons for or process underlying the past decisions of the agencies concerning whether to seek to suspend, delay, reconsider, or modify in any way the rules at issue (collectively, "the past decisions"). Documents (or portions thereof) falling into the exception will be logged and either (a) withheld, or (b) made available under the same conditions described in paragraph 3 above. The Committee reserves its right to seek access to or copies of any or all Ongoing Regulatory Process Documents, and the agencies reserve their rights with respect to responding to any such request.

6. The agencies will withhold and not log, and the Committee agrees that it does not currently seek, documents prepared during the course of and for the purpose of ongoing litigation either by the agencies or by the Department of Justice that the agencies assert may be subject to a claim of privilege in litigation with private parties ("Ongoing Litigation Documents"), except to the extent that such documents describe, discuss, or refer to any relationship between the ongoing litigation and the past decisions. Documents (or portions thereof) falling into the exception will be logged and either (a) withheld, or (b) made available under the same conditions described in paragraph 3 above. The Committee reserves its right to seek access to or copies of any or all Ongoing Litigation Documents, and the agencies reserve their rights with respect to responding to any such request.

7. The agencies will use their best efforts to produce the log or logs reflecting the categories of documents withheld by the close of business on Wednesday, July 18, 2001 and will in any event produce such logs no later than the close of business on Friday, July 20, 2001. Logs will include any redacted portions of documents that are otherwise being provided. Logs identifying the Underlying Litigation Privileged Documents to which the Committee staff will be given access may be prepared on a slower timetable, but still will be provided to the Committee in a timely manner. Likewise, the agencies will prepare a log of all documents provided to Committee where the document does not indicate on its face the information required to be logged. These logs, too, may be prepared on a more relaxed timetable, but still will be provided to the Committee in a timely manner. Until such logs are provided, the agencies will promptly respond to all reasonable requests from Committee staff to provide information otherwise required to be logged with respect to any document responsive to the requests.

8. DOI represents that it has produced all responsive documents it is not withholding or making available pursuant to the terms of paragraphs 3 through 6 above and has discharged its responsibilities to log the categories of documents described in those paragraphs with respect to the Committee's request dated March 22, 2001. DOI's log delivered on Wednesday, July 18, 2001 will inform the Committee whether DOI intends to make available to the Committee under the conditions described in paragraph 3 any of the documents listed on its log. Additional materials potentially responsive to the June 6, 2001 request are currently under review by DOI. All additional production and/or logging of those materials in accordance with the terms of this understanding will be completed by Friday, July 27, 2001. EPA will produce all remaining responsive documents pursuant to paragraph 2 above by Friday, July 27, 2001. USDA will use its best efforts to produce all remaining responsive documents pursuant to paragraph 2 above on or before Friday, July 20, 2001. If the Department is unable to produce all such documents on that date, it will produce as much as possible and produce the remainder on a rolling basis as it becomes available, with production to be completed no later than Friday, August 3, 2001.

David,

I appreciate your getting back to me so quickly regarding our alumna, Carrie
Click who works in the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives. As I mentioned on the phone, Carrie's dad, Jim Click, suggested I contact you as we are in the process of updating the view book for the School of Public Policy at Pepperdine University and are creating a new brochure about careers in public policy. In both books, we will feature a few students with photos, quotes, and a brief description of the positions they are working in. These brochures will be used primarily by Pepperdine University's School of Public Policy for student recruitment. In the next month, we will have a photographer in D.C. take photographs of several of our students at their work locations. We would like to include Carrie in this group and hoped to get a shot of her in front of the West Wing.

Pepperdine University's School of Public Policy is a 2 year graduate program offering a Master's in Public Policy - now in its 4th year. Pepperdine is located in Malibu, CA. More info can be found at http://publicpolicy.pepperdine.edu/ and www.pepperdine.edu. I am sending you a copy of our previous brochure which will give you an example of how we plan to use the photo. This will also give you a more full description of our academic program.

I appreciate your help in ensuring that we are handling this appropriately. If we get the go ahead, I plan to coordinate with Carrie directly. Thanks for your help.

For inquiring minds, I had used "over" instead of "more than" in a set of talking points and this usage was questioned by a then-anonymous guru, who turned out to be Courtney. My independent, post hoc examination of Garner's manuals reveals that Mrs. Elwood, as always, has a good point. The Manual states that the use of "over" for "more than" is "to be avoided in formal writing." The Manual (a different edition) does also state, however, that "over" for "more than" is "acceptable as a casualism e.g., 'Reagan won the election by over a million votes.'"

So the question comes down to whether a set of talking points is a "casualism" or "formal writing"? [No need to answer!!!]

No good clear cut lines on this. The more it seems an outside entity is trying to use WH employees for its own benefit, the less cooperation should be given to them. For example, if an alumni magazine wants to feature an employee so as to provide information to other alumni, that is not bad as a sales brochure used to promote the entity. Giving general biographical information about oneself is okay. Having one's picture taken in front of the WH for a promotional document does not seem like a good idea to me.

For inquiring minds, I had used "over" instead of "more than" in a set of talking points and this usage was questioned by a then-anonymous guru, who turned out to be Courtney. My independent, post hoc examination of Garner's manuals reveals that Mrs. Elwood, as always, has a good point. The Manual states that the use of "over" for "more than" is "to be avoided in formal writing." The Manual (a different edition) does also state, however, that "over" for "more than" is "acceptable as a casualism e.g., 'Reagan won the election by over a million votes.'"

So the question comes down to whether a set of talking points is a "casualism" or "formal writing"? [No need to answer!!!]

On a related note, I'd like to point out that many people improperly use "less than" when they should say "fewer."

Questions & Answers

What must the United States do to comply with the NAFTA panel ruling on trucks?

The United States is obligated to consider applications from Mexican carriers on a case-by-case basis. The United States has every right to require that Mexican trucks and drivers abide by U.S. safety standards, and that the United States may take reasonable steps to enforce such standards. Moreover, due to differences in safety regimes, the United States may impose different inspection requirements on Mexican firms than on U.S. and Canadian firms, so long as such differences are no greater than needed to address legitimate safety concerns.

Is the Sabo amendment passed by the House consistent with our NAFTA obligations?

The Sabo amendment would impose a total prohibition on considering applications from Mexican motor carriers. This would be a clear violation of our NAFTA obligations.

Is the Senate Appropriations Committee bill provision consistent with the NAFTA?

The Senate provision represents an improvement on the House language; however, for the following reasons, the provision in its current form could keep the U.S.-Mexico border closed indefinitely. First, the provision forbids DOT to begin processing any Mexican applications until DOT complies with twenty-two (22) separate requirements. Under the NAFTA, however, we may not simply bar Mexican carriers, but must allow them the opportunity to show that they can meet our safety standards. Second, although we are entitled to impose different inspection requirements on Mexican trucks to compensate for Mexico's less rigorous safety regime, any differences must be no greater than needed to address legitimate safety issues. We are concerned that some of the inspection requirements in the Senate provision may be more burdensome than necessary, and in fact may be unadministrable by DOT. Moreover, the cumulative effect of all of the different requirements may result in a disproportionate and discriminatory burden on Mexican carriers.

Even the Administration's proposal would keep the border closed for 11 months after the panel ruling. What is wrong with taking an additional 1 to 2 years to ensure that DOT is totally prepared to open the border?

Under the NAFTA, the United States was obligated to begin allowing access to Mexican carriers by December 1995 - more than 5 years ago. Nonetheless, the Administration will not allow access until it completes certain steps needed to ensure highway safety – such as the adoption of revised application and inspection procedures – and Mexico understands this. But the Senate bill includes requirements that are not necessary preconditions for the safe operation of Mexican trucks on U.S. highways. For example, DOT could not begin examining Mexican applications under its current standards prior to completing several complex new rulemakings.

What happens if the United States does not comply with NAFTA?

If the United States and Mexico cannot reach an agreement on an appropriate means for compliance, Mexico (the "prevailing party" under the NAFTA in this instance) has the option of retaliating by suspending trade concessions (i.e. raising tariffs or other restrictions on U.S. goods or services).

What is the retaliation process?

Under the NAFTA, the prevailing party is entitled to suspend trade concessions on an amount of trade equivalent to the amount affected by the NAFTA-inconsistent measure. The prevailing party initially selects the level of retaliation. The defending party can challenge that level, but the retaliation remains in effect during the challenge.

Mexico has stated publicly that it might restrict imports of U.S. high fructose corn syrup if the United States does not fulfill its NAFTA obligations. As a general matter, a prevailing party can be expected to select highly sensitive products or services for retaliation.

Can the U.S. challenge Mexico retaliation?

Yes. We can request that a new dispute settlement panel determine whether Mexico must lift its retaliation on the basis that the United States has complied with its obligations, or whether the level of any retaliation by Mexico is "manifestly excessive." However, Mexican can keep any retaliation in place while the matter is considered.

Must the U.S. comply with the NAFTA Panel report by January 1, 2002?

The NAFTA does not provide a compliance timeline. It allows the country being denied benefits to take compensation after thirty days, which Mexico is now permitted to do. The Administration presented an implementation plan to Mexico in March that included a substantial enhancement of our safety and inspection efforts, and committed to implementing this plan by the end of this year. While the government of Mexico would prefer a much shorter timeline, Mexico understands that the Administration is proceeding in good faith and is not seeking compensation at this time.

NAFTA Cross-Border Trucking

- Safety on America's highways is the Administration's top priority in opening the border to Mexican-domiciled motor carriers.
  - ✓ The Administration is committed to ensuring that all motor carriers seeking to operate in the United States – whether they are based in the United States, Mexico, or Canada – will be subject to the same rigorous safety standards.

- Banning Mexican-domiciled motor carriers that meet our rigorous safety standards discriminates against Mexico and violates our obligations under the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).
  - ✓ The Administration is committed to fulfilling our NAFTA obligations and treating our NAFTA partners fairly. We oppose any legislative actions that keep the U.S.-Mexico border closed -- either explicitly or implicitly.
  - ✓ Discrimination against Mexico and failure to meet our NAFTA obligations could result in retaliation by Mexico, including restriction of our ability to operate U.S. motor-carriers in Mexico.

- Legislation proposed by the Senate Transportation Appropriations Committee could keep the border closed indefinitely.
  - ✓ The Senate provision keeps the border closed until 22 separate conditions have been met. Many of these conditions are unworkable, impractical, prohibitively expensive and not directly related to safety. All of the conditions, taken together, could ban all Mexico-domiciled carriers from this country indefinitely.

- The Administration supports a strong safety enforcement regime similar to the very successful California inspection program for Mexican long-haul carriers.
  - ✓ The President has requested funding for additional resources at the U.S. Mexico border.
  - ✓ Such a program would ensure our rigorous safety requirements are met without discriminating against Mexican carriers.

- NAFTA has been part of the American economic success story of the 1990's and is an important part of America's economic future.
  - ✓ Since NAFTA took effect, employment has risen in all three NAFTA countries. In the U.S., employment grew by 11%, generating 13 million new jobs. Real U.S. industrial production increased by 43 percent.
  - ✓ In 2000, U.S. jobs supported by merchandise exports to our NAFTA partners totaled an estimated 2.9 million jobs, up over 900,000 since before NAFTA started.
  - ✓ Mexico and Canada alone accounted for 47% of total U.S. export growth over the period NAFTA has been in place.
  - ✓ The tariff rate cuts from the Canada FTA and NAFTA when applied to 1999 U.S. imports, were similar to a $210 tax cut for an average household of four.

- Mexican carriers meeting our safety requirements must be granted the same high standards of fairness and protection that we offer U.S. and Canadian carriers.

Presidents Often Seek Papal Advice

by DEB RIECHMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Ever since Woodrow Wilson, presidents have cozied up to popes. Lyndon Johnson lobbied a pope to back him on Vietnam. Ronald Reagan, once caught dozing during a papal address, talked Cold War tactics with a pope.

Now it's President Bush's turn to court the Vatican. He sees Pope John Paul II on Monday as he contemplates one of the most vexing questions of his presidency: Should the government sponsor promising medical research on stem cells extracted from human embryos?

The president is still weighing the moral and ethical -- and political -- ramifications of funding embryonic stem cell research.

Proponents believe embryonic stem cell research might yield treatments for people suffering with illnesses such as diabetes and Alzheimer's disease.

Yet Bush knows that deciding to pay for the research would put him at odds with the right wing of his party and the Vatican. The Roman Catholic Church is opposed to this research because human embryos are destroyed in the process.

''This is an issue that speaks to morality and science,'' he said.

Bush says politics won't sway his decision, yet the potential for political fallout is great.

He and Al Gore split the Catholic vote in 2000; Gore got 49 percent to Bush's 47 percent. Among churchgoing Catholics, Bush got 57 percent to Gore's 43 percent.

The president, who has been wooing the Catholic vote since taking office, hasn't said whether he'll broach the touchy stem cell issue with the pope.

If Bush doesn't bring it up, the pope will, said John White, professor of politics at Catholic University of America. ''I have no doubt that this particular pope is going to bring this issue up head on,'' White said.

American presidents didn't always seek an audience with the pope.

Woodrow Wilson and Dwight Eisenhower both visited the pope, but generally anti-Catholic sentiment was just strong enough in America that presidents were wary about aligning themselves with the pontiff. John Kennedy, the first Catholic president, ignored that taboo, as has every president since then.

Johnson decided to visit Pope Paul VI in December 1967, at the end of a three-day whirlwind tour of five nations, because he was worried the pope's New Year's Day address would attack the United States and its policy in Vietnam, said Gerald Fogarty at the University of Virginia. Before the meeting, Johnson sent the pope a 10-page memo of his views about the war and his search for peace.

Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford visited Paul VI too.

John Paul II, who became pope in October 1978, a year later became the first pontiff to set foot in the White House. Jimmy Carter welcomed him, holding the pope's cape in place as it fluttered in the fall breeze.

''This was an important moment as a pious Georgia Baptist welcomed the pope to the White House,'' said George Weigel, a papal historian in Washington, who watched the event from the White House lawn. ''How far America had come since the 1928 election when there were all these crazy rumors about how the pope was going to run (presidential candidate) Al Smith.''

That led to the Catholic joke: What was the one-word telegram that Al Smith sent to the pope the day after he lost the election? ''Unpack,'' Weigel said.

It was uncomfortably warm in the papal library when an exhausted Reagan visited John Paul II in June 1982. Reagan fully extended diplomatic relations to the Vatican and worked closely with the church to relax the communist grip on eastern Europe and calm U.S.-Soviet tension, though he will be remembered as the president who fell asleep while the pope spoke.

''As the pope droned on, Reagan's eyes began to close slightly and then open,'' Reagan's press secretary Larry Speakes recalled later. ''Then he nodded a bit and his eyes began to close again.''

Behind the president, Nancy Reagan shuffled her feet and cleared her throat. To no avail; he needed that nap.

We've been coordinating a bit but not as much as we should. Her comments on the PHrma meeting, for example, were not cleared through me. Maybe Tim or the Judge talked to her or Dan, but I don't know for sure. It certainly seems like there's a lot of risk associated with having press get out front on blessing conduct before talking to us. I'll talk to Ann about it.

Brett,
Mehlman & Schlapp wanted me to check in with you regarding regular informational updates that we have been forwarding to the White House Liaisons in the various departments/agencies. The informational updates include information on Hispanic related activities and policies of the White House and updates about publicly announced Hispanic candidates and the updates are produced by Leonarad Rodriguez in OPA.
A couple of the White House Liaisons have asked if it is ok to forward these along to all political appointees (SES, Sched. C's, etc.) or just to the Sched. C's. Does it matter from the WH Counsel's perspective? Is it ok to send to all political appointees within the depts./agencies?
Thanks for any guidance you can provide.

There is no legal prohibition on the campaign cameras coming into the Oval Office to record the meeting of the President and Mark Earley. On the otherhand, there is a risk of negative press attention focusing on the use of the Oval Office for a compaign commercial. You and I discussed earlier the possibility of limiting the campaign camera to the same access that would be given the press pool. After further consideration here in counsel's office, our recommendation would be to avoid the risk associated with having the campaign camera in the Oval, that the better course would be to ask the campaign to obtain footage from the press pool that will be attending.

I would say it is probably not great form to bring a guest (even a spouse) to a reception like this one unless the guest/spouse is specifically invited. And space likely will be tight. My 2 cents.

There is no legal prohibition on the campaign cameras coming into the Oval Office to record the meeting of the President and Mark Earley. On the otherhand, there is a risk of negative press attention focusing on the use of the Oval Office for a compaign commercial. You and I discussed earlier the possibility of limiting the campaign camera to the same access that would be given the press pool. After further consideration here in counsel's office, our recommendation would be to avoid the risk associated with having the campaign camera in the Oval, that the better course would be to ask the campaign to obtain footage from the press pool that will be attending.

I would say it is probably not great form to bring a guest (even a spouse) to a reception like this one unless the guest/spouse is specifically invited. And space likely will be tight. My 2 cents.

What's going on??? Me? So, so, but thanks for asking, really. (I sense that the attempted line-drawing went over like a lead balloon). Anyway, I thought you may be pleased to hear about my support for the President's faith-based initiatives: I'm going to Korea next week to do a Habitat for Humanity build. Much needed break. Hope you are well.

Depending on what phone you have, there is a usage plan. There is a given amount of minutes for a set rate and each additional minute is charged depending on the type of call and where the call is made. For non-official call payment purposes, the amount of the plan is divided by the amount of minutes in the plan to get the amount per minute for non-marked calls.

If you have any other questions regarding the billing of the cell phones, please contact me at 6-5106.

Please know that Sept. 28 to Oct. 4 is going to be a busy time for the two of you as you are the lucky souls who will be dealing with the IMF (per Tim).

Tim will be attending a meeting on this next week and can bring you up to speed. You don't need to attend this particular meeting.

I found some info on this at http://www.50years.org/s28/call.html in case you are interested in what may be in the cards that week.

Thanks!

July __, 2001

Dear Chairman Jeffords:

We have received your July 20 letter requesting access to 41 files of Jeffrey Holmstead from the time that he worked as an Associate Counsel to President George H.W. Bush. As we informed Senator Reid on July 9, in response to a similar request, we must respectfully decline your blanket request for these records. Mr. Holmstead was a White House advisor and attorney for President George Bush when the documents in question were created and received. The documents therefore will fall, almost by definition, within the deliberative process, presidential communications, and government attorney-client and work product protections, all of which ensure that high-level Presidential advisors and attorneys can and do provide candid advice to the President.

Your letter also indicates a specific concern about one aspect of Mr. Holmstead's testimony before the Committee, a concern that implicates three of the 41 files. In order to accommodate the Committee's interests and to allay your concern, we authorized members of the Committee staff to review those three files here at the White House, with appropriate guarantees of confidentiality and without waiving the privileges that apply to these documents. That review has now occurred, and we trust that it has alleviated any remaining concern you may have.

Thank you very much for your consideration of our interests, and please do not hesitate to contact me if you wish to discuss this matter further.

Sincerely yours,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

On the FOIA policy question, you may want to refer Viet to me given that I have to deal with those inquiries on a constant basis.
Alternatively, I could happily turn over the FOIA docket, which is a bit of a nightmare on a weekly basis, but I doubt you want that!

All -
We are planning to hold the next meeting of the Confirmation Working Group this afternoon at 4 pm at DOJ, Room 4637 (Associate AG's conference room). Please note that due to another urgent matter it may be necessary for us to postpone the meeting until later this week. If so we will send a further email at the earliest possible opportunity today.
Thanks

1. I hire a maid who comes to my house about once every 6 weeks. I pay her $85 per visit. While I buy some cleaning products (like floor polish, Softscrub for the bathroom, etc.), she brings and uses her own equipment. I am not now deducting taxes on her payroll. Is this ok?

2. I have a gardner who has twice come by to clean the yard up. When push comes to shove, he'll probably come 5 times a year at most. He brings all of his own equipment, removes everything, etc.
a. He says that he is a legal resident but that he was told it is illegal for me to make copies of his residency papers. Is this legal?

A campaign or political committee may purchase for its use photographs taken by White House photographers at White House events. These requests should be directed to the Director of the White House Photo Office, who keeps a log of such requests and will take care of billing at the normal rate. After the purchase, the campaign or political committee obviously has the right to use the photo as it sees fit, subject to ordinary legal restrictions and commonsense prudential considerations.

Lynden,
Thank you so much for your assistance.
We would like to put the photo on our website as well as use it in the newsletter.
Also the Earley campaign is most eager to put it on their site.
Can we either give it to them directly, or allow them to link from the photo on our site to their site?
Pls advise at your earliest.
Many thanks!
Kirsten

Per you request, attached is one picture file from the joint press conference Mark Earley and President Bush gave at the White House July 26, 2001.

From conversations with our political affairs office and Mr. Banning, we understand that you may publish the photo in the Republican Governors Association's newsletter and will pay for the attached picture file after an invoice from our office is received.

The invoice will be sent to:

Noel:

The photo office has a request to use a picture from Virginian gubernatorial candidate Mark Earley's joint press conference with the President (see forwarded message). The Republican Governor's Association bought one to use in their newsletter and now want to forward it to Earley's campaign.

Can our photos be used for campaigns?
Are groups allowed to forward our photos?
Should I come to you with these questions?

thank you,

As stated Monday, it is permissible for you to use government equipment to create such a speech. But for appearance and other reasons, a political speech should not be released as a White House release. The RNC should handle release so I would coordinate through Political Affairs.

When the President gives a political speech -- are they treated differently than a 'regular' speech? For example, at a political fundraiser or dinner, etc.? If it is for a partisan audience and with a partisan message, is the speech still treated as a White House release?

Good morning! Larry Lindsey is working on a partnership project with HUD and some outside groups on community development. Because of the complexity of the effort, certain legal issues are undoubtedly going to arise. To that end, I'd like to stop by and chat with you at your earliest convenience to make sure we all understand the proper lay of the land.

Could you drop me a line with a convenient time for you?

Many thanks!

Can you forward these articles about Bunning to Kentucky reporters and to Jonathan Ringel at Legal Times. Thanks a lot.

It is a series of newspaper articles about one of David Bunning's old cases, a murder-for-hire case. I believe the victim in the case is prepared to speak publicly on his behalf.

New Federal Bike Safety Campaign Announced. CBS (8/4, story 9, Assuras) reported last night, &Federal safety officials are calling for a new campaign for bicycle safety. It's a response to growing evidence that this popular recreation is becoming more dangerous. (More and more bicyclists are wearing helmets. Half of the 81 million riders in the country now do.8 CBS continued, &But even so, there has been a 10% increase in the number of head injuries in the past decade, that's according to a report by the Consumer Product Safety Commission.8 CBS added, &As one key part of the safety campaign, experts are calling for the designation of 100,000 miles of new bicycle lanes over the next five years.8

Bush Blitz: a Deluge of Prosecutors

Law enforcement veterans dominate list of U.S. Attorneys

By Jonathan Groner
Legal Times

Nominee for D.C. U.S. Attorney Roscoe Howard
The group includes longtime GOP Justice and Hill aide Paul McNulty, as well as Harry "Sandy" Mattice Jr., a Chattanooga, Tenn., lawyer and former counsel to Sen. Fred Thompson's campaign finance probe. And there's also 28-year-old Strom Thurmond Jr., son of the aged senator and an assistant state prosecutor in South Carolina.

But thus far, the typical George W. Bush pick for U.S. attorney is a man with a strong law enforcement background in his home state, no Washington experience, and relatively few political connections. Only three of the nominees thus far are women.

With the announcements last week of 26 choices for U.S. attorney slots across the nation, the White House made its picks for more than one-quarter of the 94 top federal prosecutors. The vast majority of the 26 come from Southern or Western states that Bush carried last November.

As the first line of federal law enforcement, U.S. attorneys take a lead role in pursuing firearms violators, drug offenders, and perpetrators of health care fraud. They also help represent the U.S. government when it is sued in civil cases.

A look at the backgrounds of the 26 nominees shows that almost all have served either as federal or state prosecutors. Some have been state judges. That type of experience is exactly what the Bush administration was looking for, insiders say.

"They made it very clear that merit and experience will be the hallmarks," says Joseph diGenova, a former Republican U.S. attorney in the District of Columbia who has informally advised the Bush White House on U.S. attorney nominations. "Politics, other than simple party affiliation, was not a factor."

As was widely expected, University of Kansas law professor Roscoe Howard Jr., 49, a former prosecutor in the District and part of independent counsel probes of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Housing and Urban Development, was tapped for U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia. Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General Paul McNulty, 43, was picked for the Eastern District of Virginia, meaning that the full roster of federal prosecutors in the D.C. metropolitan area has been selected.

Two months ago, President Bush selected criminal defense lawyer Thomas DiBiagio, 41, to be the U.S. attorney for Maryland.

Some local lawyers have expressed skepticism about the Howard nomination, noting that the nominee has had little contact with the District since 1994, when he took the teaching job in Kansas. But Michael Madigan of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld, who was one of several lawyers who advised the White House on U.S. attorney nominations, says these concerns are unfounded.

"I've set up meetings for Roscoe. He's met the chief judges, the presidents of the bar associations, and Sen. [Orrin] Hatch," says Madigan, who was widely reported to have been himself on the short list for top D.C. prosecutor. "He has impressed everyone, including me. He got a bad rap, with people saying he's from Kansas. Actually, he has a lot of experience in D.C. in the independent counsel investigations, for example."

With Congress in its August recess, confirmation hearings for the nominees won't begin at least until September. But Howard could be named acting U.S. attorney after Aug. 18, when the term of current acting U.S. Attorney Kenneth Wainstein ends, court sources say.

Out With the Old

All U.S. attorneys are political appointees who serve four-year terms. When control of the White House changes from one party to the other, there is always the tricky task of engineering the departure of all 94 federal prosecutors so that replacements can be named.

In 1993, two months into the Clinton administration, then Attorney General Janet Reno was widely criticized for demanding the immediate resignation of all the U.S. attorneys.

The current White House, says a Democratic lawyer who was involved in the early stages of the selection process, was more adept in handling the issue.

"This was handled in a sensitive manner," says Nicholas Gess, who was an associate deputy attorney general in the Clinton administration and remained at Justice briefly after the election. "Each outgoing U.S. attorney was contacted and was asked for a prospective date [of resignation]. They tried to accommodate reasonable requests rather than firing them all in one day."

Gess, a senior consultant at the Bingham Consulting Group in the District, has praise for other aspects of the Bush selection process for U.S. attorneys.

"It was very thorough. There was always an interview at Justice that included a representative of the White House counsel's office as well as a career Justice deputy. A lot of former Clinton administration people are very pleased with the way the process worked," Gess says.

The recommendations of U.S. senators of the president's party are always a key factor in the choice of U.S. attorneys. Gess says that although many such referrals came in, "more than one candidate was always interviewed."

Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson personally interviewed every candidate as well, say two sources close to the process. Thompson did not return a call.

A typical Bush choice, Gess suggests, is Michael Sullivan, the nominee for U.S. attorney in Massachusetts, whom Gess terms "very well-respected."

Sullivan was appointed Plymouth County district attorney in 1995 by then-Gov. William Weld, a moderate Republican who is himself a former U.S. attorney. From 1991 to 1995, Sullivan was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

Other than Howard, few of last week's nominees, if any, are expected to arouse any controversy. Most are from smaller states and districts.

The nominees for two high-profile districts-the Southern District of New York (which includes Manhattan) and the Northern District of Illinois (which includes Chicago) have not been announced yet.

For different reasons, these two will be closely watched.

Clinton holdover Mary Jo White, who has been looking into the last-minute Clinton pardons of Marc Rich and others, has been kept on, but late last week, the Associated Press reported that White will be replaced soon. Her successor will be carefully scrutinized for possible political bias in that probe.

In Chicago, Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, a Republican, has announced his recommendation of Manhattan-based Assistant U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald (no relation) as U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Illinois. It's unusual to bring in someone as U.S. attorney who has no ties to the district, and Patrick Fitzgerald, if he is in fact nominated, will draw opposition from Chicago bar circles.

Praise For President Bush's Thoughtful, Principled Solution On Embryonic Stem Cell Research Funding

National Institutes Of Health, Acting Director Dr. Ruth Kirschstein: "We are pleased with the President's decision to allow the use of Federal funds for important basic research on human embryonic stem cells. The approach he has outlined is sound, and we understand the President's clear desire to move forward with care. Using the more than 60 existing cell lines from around the world, many more researchers will now be able to explore the potential of human embryonic stem cells, in addition to the extensive work already sponsored by NIH using human adult stem cells. We believe this combined research has high potential both for opening new doors in basic scientific understanding and for discovery of new treatments for some of our most devastating diseases." (National Institutes Of Health, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

American Cancer Society: "The Society believes that such research holds extraordinary potential in the fight against a variety of life-threatening diseases currently afflicting an estimated 140 million Americans. . . . The American Cancer Society commends the Administration for allowing this vital scientific research to proceed - even in a limited way." (American Cancer Society Website, www2.cancer.org, August 10, 2001)

Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation International, Peter Van Etten, President And Chief Operating Officer: "We applaud the president for supporting embryonic stem cell research and for recognizing the importance this research holds to cure millions of Americans suffering from life-threatening illnesses." The Washington Post, August 10, 2001; Katharine Q. Seelye, "Bush Approves Limited Stem Cell Test Funding," The New York Times, August 9, 2001)

Biotechnology Industry Organization, President Carl B. Feldbaum: "We appreciate the difficult decision President Bush faced regarding federal funding of stem cell research, and we are pleased that the President determined the need for this research to continue. This was a good, clear, balanced outcome. As the President pointed out, advances in stem cell research could impact the lives of millions of desperately ill Americans who suffer from conditions for which there are no treatments, including Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases, various cancers, diabetes and spinal cord injuries. The President's decision is a major step forward for patients and the biotechnology industry. Among all the conditions that President Bush placed on this research with which we wholeheartedly agree, we have one reservation, which we believe will be worked out in time. Placing a limit on the number of cell lines available for this research may place roadblocks to medical progress, some of which may take years to overcome. . . . Again, we are very pleased with President Bush's concern for both the need for this critical research to continue, and for the ethical questions involved to be continuously and thoughtfully considered." (Biotechnology Industry Organization, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Timothy McCaffrey, Associate Professor of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, George Washington University Medical Center: "Considering the difficult positions he had to weigh, it appears to be quite a fair decision. Obviously, as a scientist, you want as few restrictions on your work as possible. But this doesn't disable the field at all. Compared with being unable to use federal funds, period, for stem cell research, this is a big step forward." (Carl T. Hall, "Scientists Worry How Policy Affects Them," The San Francisco Chronicle, August 10, 2001)

LeRoy Walters, Bioethicist, Georgetown University: "I think there will be a momentum effect. The pace of discovery will be accelerated and there may be the side benefit that some discoveries may be more available to researchers nationwide." (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "The President's Decision: A Question Of Research," The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

REV_00020144

Robert Lanza, Vice President of Medical and Scientific Development, Advanced Cell Technology in Worcester, Massachusetts: ". . . An important milestone in medical history. Up until now there was this black cloud that lingered over one of the most promising areas of biomedical research this century. This decision is going to spur a medical revolution as important as antibiotics and vaccines." (Anne E. Kornblut, and Mary Leonard, "A Limited OK On Stem-Cell Funds Bush Cites 'Promise' And 'Peril,' Allows Existing-Embryo Research," The Boston Globe, August 10, 2001)

Jeffrey T. Kahn, Director, Center for Bioethics at the University of Minnesota: "Had he banned this, all the research would have gone on at the private level, away from any oversight. If people take the federal money, they have to follow the federal rules." (David M. Shribman, "A Limited OK On Stem-Cell Funds Cautious Step Taken Toward A New World," The Boston Globe, August 10, 2001)

Doug Melton, Stem Cell Researcher, Harvard University: "If there are 60 lines that are robust, grow well and have the properties of human embryonic cell lines, that's news to me and it is good news." (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "The President's Decision: A Question Of Research," The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

Dr. John Mendelsohn, President, University of Texas M. D. Anderson Cancer Center: "It's hard to crystal-ball this. I believe President Bush made the important decision, which is to go forward." (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "The President's Decision: A Question Of Research," The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

Dr. John McDonald, Neuroscientist, Washington University (St. Louis): "He said he intends to apply soon for funds for research on human embryonic stem cells. McDonald is trying to find a way to heal injured spinal cords with stem cells. He said that he is pleased that some research will go forward. 'I'm very optimistic, and I think it's a good first step,' McDonald said." (Tina Hesman, "Stem Cell Decision Brings Support And Criticism," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, August 10, 2001)

Massachusetts Catholic Conference: "The Announcement by President Bush rejecting the use of federal funds for research using stem cells obtained through the destruction of human embryos deserves the highest praise. The President demonstrated the utmost in courage by refusing to compel millions of taxpayers against their conscience to promote the killing of human life for utilitarian purposes.

"President Bush had an opportunity to stand up for the dignity and inviolability of innocent human life and came through on the critical issues of cloning adn embryo-destroying research. Now we as a country can focus on positive solutions to the problems of disease and illness that involve the use of adult stem cells and not the cannibalism of human life itself.

"While the President's decision to permit research funding on sixty cell lines established from the previous destruction of embryos is disturbing, this does not diminish the significance of the President's refusal to fund research involving the future destruction of embryos.

"The President's announcement was clear, understandable, and well-reasoned. The public debate over this issue has been ably advanced as a result of his efforts tonight."

The Massachusetts Catholic Conference is the public policy office of the Roman Catholic Church in the Commonwealth, representing the Archdiocese of Boston and the Dioceses of Springfield, Worcester, and Fall River.

Reverend Jerry Falwell: "Fully believing President Bush and his commitment to the sanctity of life, I anticipated a statement that would maintain his integrity in this matter, however, only Solomon could have improved on the what the President did and said. He clearly maintained his integrity regarding the protection of unborn life. He also manifested his concern for the health and welfare of all Americans by allowing science to proceed unfettered but within reasonable moral boundaries. This was George W. Bush's finest hour thus far." (Dr. Jerry Falwell, Statement, August 9, 2001)

Reverend Jerry Falwell: "I've never been prouder of George W. Bush than I am right now. ... When I heard his words carefully and sincerely and with anguish spoken, when he finished, I said, the guy has not violated one tenet of his convictions in the pro-life position. . . . When I saw George Bush tonight and listened to him, I thought for a moment I was watching and listening [to] Ronald Reagan, and I cheered and said, 'God bless you, George Bush. Stay with it'" (Fox's "The Edge," August 9, 2001)

Focus On The Family, Dr. James Dobson: "Pro-life leaders were surprised - and largely pleased - with the thrust of Bush's announcement. Dr. James Dobson, president of Focus on the Family, told CNN's Larry King that the decision is a defining moment for Bush's presidency. 'From our perspective he didn't call for federal funds to be expended to take human life to kill those little embryos. (Bob Ditmer, Pete Winn and Karla Dial, "President Approves Limited Stem Cell Funding," In Focus, August 9, 2001)

Focus On The Family, Dr. James Dobson: "…I give the president's decision generally a thumbs-up. There are still some aspects to it that we want to look at, but I think he found a good solution for this stage." (CNN's "Larry King Live," August 9, 2001)

Christian Medical Society, Executive Director David Stevens: "Like many who heard the president's decision last night, I came away both encouraged and very concerned. I was encouraged to see our president drawing from the wisdom from a wide range of society, from the scientific and religious communities, as well as from everyday people. I was also encouraged to hear him commit to funding the tremendous promise of adult stem cell research, an alternative that may enable us to solve the problems of diabetes, Parkinson's disease, and a host of other chronic diseases. I was also encouraged to hear the formation of an advisory board that will continue to examine the important ethical aspects, as well as scientific progress, of stem cell research." (Christian Medical Society, Press Conference, August 10, 2001)

Pat Robertson's American Center for Law and Justice, Chief Counsel Jay Sekulow: "The American Center for Law and Justice, an international public interest law firm and educational organization, said President Bush's decision to prohibit the use of federal funds to destroy human embryos to obtain stem cells for research is the 'correct' decision on this critical issue. 'We are extremely pleased that the President has refused to permit the use of federal funds to be used to destroy human embryos and therefore human life,' said Jay Sekulow, Chief Counsel of the ACLJ. 'It is clear the President has given this issue very serious thought and consideration. And while all Americans hope that medical and scientific research result in new discoveries that provide cures for numerous maladies, the President also made it clear that he considers human embryos to be human life - sacred life - that must be protected. The President said 'no' to the most troubling aspect of this issue - the use of federal funds to destroy human embryos - to destroy human life. The President has reached the correct decision concerning one of the most serious ethical and moral issues of our day.'" (American Center For Law And Justice, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

National Right To Life Applauds President's Decision On Embryo-Destructive Stem Cell Research: "In an address to the nation this evening, President Bush announced that he would not allow federal funding of stem cell research that involves the killing of any more human embryos. 'We are delighted that President Bush's decision prevents the federal government from becoming a party to any further killing of human embryos for medical experimentation,' stated Laura Echevarria, director of Media Relations for the National Right to Life Committee. 'While National Right to Life mourns the loss of life for those embryos from whom stem cell lines have already been derived, nothing the National Right to Life Committee or President Bush can do can restore the lives of those embryos who have already died,' stated Ms. Echevarria. President Bush's decision will have no negative impact on ethical research involving stem cells derived from sources such as adult fat, blood, and bone marrow, as well as placentas and umbilical cord blood. Adult stem cells have been shown to be dramatically more effective, and have already been used to help patients. 'More and more people with disabling and chronic conditions are being helped by adult stem cell research,' stated Ms. Echevarria. According to a June (June 1-5, 2001) International Communications Research poll, 67 percent of those polled prefer having their tax dollars used for stem cell research 'using adult stem cells and other alternatives . . .' Only 18 percent favored federal support of research that included experiments which 'require destroying human embryos.' Moreover, instead of destroying human embryos through medical research, they may be adopted by parents. Indeed the demand for their adoption exceeds the number of embryos who could be adopted. 'We strongly commend the President's strong opposition to all human cloning and to the special creation of human embryos for research,' said NRLC Legislative Director Douglas Johnson. Last month a Massachusetts firm, Advanced Cell Technology, announced that it will soon begin attempting to create cloned human embryos for the purpose of harvesting their stem cells or using them in other lethal research (a practice referred to by the bio-tech industry as 'therapeutic cloning'). On July 31, the House of Representatives voted to ban all human cloning, including the creation of cloned embryos, 265-162. The legislation is now awaiting action in the Senate. President Bush has endorsed the bill. 'The Senate must act immediately to prevent the start-up of cloned human embryo farms in the United States,' Johnson said." (National Right To Life Committee, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

EDITORIALS:

The Dallas Morning News: "Mr. Bush supports scientific research. He has called for almost a 14 percent increase in the budget of the National Institutes of Health, to bring its fiscal 2002 budget to $23 billion. And the institutes' support for research on adult stem cells has been significant. What the president's decision means is that federal efforts will be able to be focused on more areas of promising stem cell research, including embryonic cells as well as those harvested from umbilical cord blood, placental tissue, adult and even newly engineered cells. Federal supervision and bio-ethical safeguards will be part of this revolutionary new area of science. The president should be commended for taking a conscientious, careful approach to the issue." (Editorial, "Stem Cells," Dallas Morning News, August 10, 2001)

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: "After months of deliberation, President George W. Bush made a landmark decision on embryonic stem cell research that reflected the conscience of a moral nation. Drawing the difficult distinction between ethics and religion, Mr. Bush announced that the government would fund promising research on stem cells derived from frozen human embryos earmarked for destruction in fertility clinics. It was an incomprehensibly far-reaching verdict for any one person to undertake, especially a pro-life, Republican president leery of offending Catholics -- a swing voting bloc that may hold the key to his re-election. . . . For so many who are ailing and holding out hope, it does not matter why Mr. Bush made his decision. But if the president wants to be more responsive to the needs and genuine suffering of everyday citizens, he has made an excellent start." (Editorial, "Stem Cell Research," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, August 10, 2001)

The Boston Herald: "With his announcement last night President Bush has laid the groundwork for enormous advances in medical research and given real meaning to his campaign pledge to govern as a 'compassionate conservative.' . . . In approving the use of federal funds for stem cell research and on setting reasonable limits for the use of embryos in that research, Bush has found that middle ground with which most Americans will feel comfortable and comforted. Comfortable because few people see anything terribly wrong in the scientific use of portions of embryos (created in clinics for in vitro fertilization) that would be destroyed anyway. And comforted because if it is in the power of modern medicine to help those with Parkinson's disease, diabetes, Alzheimer's or spinal cord injuries, then we have a responsibility to do so. . . . George W. Bush last night committed this nation to just such a policy. It's the right one." (Editorial, "Bush Course Best On Stem Cell Work," The Boston Herald, August 10, 2001)

The Chicago Tribune: "The Tribune has advocated funding for research on stem cells extracted from a limited number of embryos created for the purpose of in vitro fertilization, and destined to be discarded. The decision Bush announced Wednesday night would fund research on some 60 existing cell lines, though not on new lines from additional embryos. . . . Bush's decision, and his admonition that "we must proceed with great care," reflect a similar uneasiness. But while his limits may be too strict, the president has in fact moved in the correct direction. If federally funded research begins to yield promising results, the limits Bush articulated could change." (Editorial, "Stem Cells And Caution," The Chicago Tribune, August 10, 2001)

USA Today: "Bush, in a televised address, did not go as far as many scientists would like, or as far as eventually will be necessary for effective research and treatment. He limited research to just 60 lines of stem cells from embryos that have already been destroyed. But he nevertheless went far enough to fuel Wasson's hopes and those of millions of others. It also is a reasonable way, at least for now, to set limits on a fast-moving field in which scientists' abilities have outpaced the public's ethical consensus. . . . Regardless, his change of heart should not be seen as a sign of weakness or opportunism, but as a difficult balance between personal beliefs and the national interest. . . . Bush's stem cell decision is a thoughtful first step toward resolving the ethical conundrums posed by the rapid advance of science. But how far is far enough? New rules are just a start." (Editorial, "Bush's Tough Choice Moves Critical Research Forward," USA Today, August 10, 2001)

ELECTED OFFICIALS AND POLITICAL FIGURES:

Senator Olympia Snowe: "The President made a thoughtful and responsible decision that gives scientists the tools they need to begin the exploration of this exciting frontier of medical research, which brings hope to millions of Americans suffering the effects of disease and illness. His decision, bolstered by a Presidential commission that will monitor research and establish guidelines, begins the process of opening the door to further progress. I know the President wrestled and struggled with this decision, reaching his conclusion only after discussing and meeting with advocates on both sides of this issue. . . . I believe his decision is right for our nation, and reflects the views of the vast majority of Americans with family members who have suffered from these illnesses. The President's decision tonight gives America's best and brightest researchers federal support, complimented by the work of the National Institutes of Health and the National Science Foundation, to explore to potential of these amazing cells, and ensure maintenance of the highest scientific and ethical standards." (Senator Snowe, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Tom Harkin: "I'm glad that the President has decided to permit and encourage our medical scientists to do stem cell research. As the Chairman of the Senate subcommittee that funds all medical research, I want to work with the President and Members of Congress to move this research forward in a robust, but ethical manner. We must also consult with our top scientists to make sure we have an adequate number of stem cell lines to allow this research to reach its fullest potential. Stem cells hold so much promise for curing illnesses like diabetes, Alzheimer's, Parkinson's and spinal cord injuries that we cannot afford to wait any longer." (Senator Tom Harkin, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Bill Frist: "I believe the president has done the nation a great service by allowing promising embryonic stem-cell research to proceed while maintaining strong restrictions on the extent of the research and ensuring comprehensive oversight." ("Reactions To Bush Decision On Stem-Cell Research," Reuters, August 9, 2001)

Senator Orrin Hatch: "I believe that the President's announcement is a major step in the right direction. This was a victory for biomedical research and the promise it holds for all Americans. I think what he did was positive. President Bush's decision allows very promising research to go forward, research that will potentially help up to 100 million Americans. The decision showed real presidential leadership. It was a thoughtful, deliberative decision made after prayer and the most careful consultation with ethicists, families, scientists, doctors and religious leaders." (Senator Orrin Hatch, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Sam Brownback: "I think the President really took a thoughtful line. I am concerned about some of the lines that he breeched through. But he also put clear limitations on things. And as we're going into this brand-new field, as we're looking at these possibilities, and we all want to cure these terrible diseases, I think he really tried to make a straight and narrow path as much as he could." (CBS' "The Early Show," August 10, 2001)

Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison: "'I think he is going in the right direction, and I know he gave this issue the careful consideration and weight it deserves,' she said." (Bennett Roth, "Headaches Ahead For Bush," The Houston Chronicle, August 9, 2001)

Senator Jean Carnahan: "I support continuing federal funding of stem-cell research within the current ethical guidelines. I will need to review the specifics of the president's proposal to ensure that it allows the most promising avenues of research to continue, but his declaration of support for federal funding of stem-cell research is a positive development." (Steven Thomma, "Bush Supports Limited Embroynic Stem-Cell Research," Knight Ridder, August 10, 2001)

Representative Benjamin A. Gilman: "I am pleased that President Bush, after fully examining this issue, has decided to support federal funding for limited embryonic stem cell research. Scientists have stated that embryonic stem cells may provide the key to developing cures for a variety of diseases including Parkinson's, Alzheimer's, juvenile diabetes and spinal cord injuries. By allowing federally funded research we are providing scientists with all the tools they need to proceed with this important research and, hopefully, will be able to achieve a number of cures at an early date." (Congressman Gilman, Press Release, August 10, 2001)

Representative Mike Pence: "'I was pleased that President Bush tonight refused to fund research that would destroy human embryos,' Pence said. 'The President drew a moral line earlier this year when he promised to "oppose federal funding for stem cell research that involved destroying living human embryos." I commend him for keeping his promise with tonight's decision. At its core, President Bush's statement reveals a continued commitment to his belief in the fundamental value and sanctity of human life. . . . For the President, tonight's decision was a pragmatic one. It satisfied supporters of stem cell research with limited funding, and it pleased opponents with a ban on further destruction of human embryos. I also truly believe President Bush searched his heart in arriving at this conclusion. In his statement this evening, the President revealed that he had wrestled with his conscience and with God over his decision.'" (Congressman Pence, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

The Republican Leadership Council: "'The fact that President Bush approached this important issue in such a deliberative manner ought to be commended,' stated Mark Miller, executive director of the RLC. 'The President considered all viewpoints and delivered a well thought out opinion based on his belief that this research will advance the greater good of society. . . . President Bush deserves credit for his thoughtful decision on an issue with tremendous implications for science and public health for years to come.'" Subject: Schedule C Briefings

Ken is doing 5 political briefings for the Schedule Cs at the agencies here at the White House throughout August. He wanted me to run by you each meeting. They will be in room 450 on the following dates:

Tuesday, 8/14 at 3 pm (DOC, DOE, DOI, NASA)
Wednesday, 8/15 at 3 pm (DED, DOD, USDA, FEMA)
Friday, 8/17 at 3 pm (HUD, DOT, Treasury)
Wednesday, 8/22 at 3 pm (HHS, DOL, DOS)
Friday, 8/24 at 3 pm

Please email me back that this is ok. They will be very similar to what he gives the cabinet Secretaries and what he wants to give the PAS's, but has not set up any yet. (see message below). thanks

Subject: Your advice please

I have been meeting with several of the Cabinet secretaries to go over their travel schedules (only some of which is political) and also to give them political briefings (key issues, key states, key races). Several have asked me to come over and brief them, their Assistant Secretaries and DASs. Is this appropriate? I'd like to do it, as it provides them with useful information and we will no doubt send both them and their staffs on the road later this year and next year. Your guidance is much appreciated.

Case Leaves Disabilities Activists Wary Of Bush Policy

By Sarah Schafer
Washington Post Staff Writer
Wednesday, August 8, 2001; Page E01

The Justice Department has filed a Supreme Court brief supporting a company that is being sued for allegedly discriminating against a woman with a disability, worrying some activists about the Bush administration's willingness to defend the rights of the disabled.

In the brief, the solicitor general argues that a lower court used flawed reasoning to classify the woman as disabled. The brief further argues that the high court should send the case back to the lower court so it can reconsider its ruling.

Advocates for the disabled said that the Justice Department made good legal points. But they question why the administration took sides, filing a brief that favors the employer, Toyota Motor Manufacturing Kentucky Inc.

"They could have done it because they were being hyper-technical, or they could have done it because they were trying to pander in some way to the business community," said Chai Feldblum, a professor at the Georgetown University Law Center who helped draft the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990.

Many activists said they fear the latter. They are watching closely for how the Justice Department behaves in several upcoming cases. "This is one step in the wrong direction," Feldblum said.

Dan Nelson, a Justice Department spokesman, said that "the brief speaks for itself" and would not comment further.

The White House said it is committed to supporting the rights of disabled Americans.

"As you know, President Bush is a strong supporter of the Americans With Disabilities Act," said White House spokesman Scott Stanzel, adding that the president introduced an initiative early in his presidency to fund transportation for disabled workers and encourage companies to create technology to assist them at work, among other things. "President Bush will remain vigilant in protecting the rights of individuals with disabilities, and he is proud to support the ADA. His father signed that act into law."

But groups of advocates for the disabled, seniors, labor and others are closely watching the Bush administration for signs of how supportive it will be of their various causes. And many of the more liberal groups do not like what they see so far.

As a result, they are bracing for battle. They are recruiting more people to work at the grass-roots level, creating or beefing up lobbying arms, and -- like the disability rights groups -- becoming involved in lawsuits that could set precedents.

"I think you'll see battles royale in court," said one former Clinton Justice Department lawyer who is now in private practice and asked that his name not be used. "When the advocacy group and the administration basically agree, all of the fighting is within the family. . . . When [they disagree], all of the real action is in court."

For example, earlier this year, the AARP Foundation Litigation, an affiliate of AARP, a nonprofit advocacy group for people over 50, joined the legal battle against companies that force employees to sign agreements waiving their right to sue for employment discrimination. The group worried that these agreements would hurt older workers in particular. Until a recent Supreme Court ruling, the lower courts had not been consistent in deciding the legality of these agreements.

The liberal Alliance for Justice, a national association of environmental, civil rights, mental health, women's and other advocacy organizations, is trying to boost its grass-roots efforts. It's also creating a spinoff organization "that will give us a lot more leverage to lobby and really bring our issues full force to [Capitol] Hill," said Julie Bernstein, spokeswoman for the Alliance.

Already, several groups -- including the AFL-CIO, an umbrella group for more than 60 unions -- are preparing briefs to submit in favor of the worker in the Toyota case.

That case, which the Supreme Court will address this fall, deals with the scope of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which protects people with disabilities from various forms of discrimination, including on the job. Ella Williams, an assembly-line worker at a Toyota plant in Kentucky, claims in the lawsuit that she developed carpal tunnel syndrome from her job. She alleged that the company fired her in violation of the ADA when she refused a different job that would still require her to perform some manual labor.

Toyota claimed that it tried to accommodate Williams and that she should not be considered legally disabled anyway because she was unable to perform only some tasks. An appeals court sided with Williams, and the company appealed to the Supreme Court. The brief filed by the Justice Department does not address whether Williams is disabled. It simply contends that the lower court erred in the way it decided that she was.

Andrew Imparato of the American Association of People With Disabilities said his organization does not dispute the facts of the brief. But he called the administration's overt support of Toyota "unusual" and a departure from the Clinton era. "We want to make sure they go to bat for the ADA in the same way that the Clinton administration . . . went to bat for the ADA," he said, adding that Clinton had a far-from-perfect record on supporting the law.

To that end, the association has stepped up its activism efforts and become more litigious. Two months ago, it launched a project to protect the voting rights of the disabled. It has since sued several jurisdictions that have purchased voting equipment that is ill-equipped to handle, for example, the needs of blind voters.

"If the Justice Department were more active on that issue, we wouldn't have to do that," Imparato said.

Imparato's group has also been active in opposing several of Bush's federal court nominees who they claim take too narrow a view of who should receive protection under federal disability laws.

Imparato said he hasn't lost hope, however. He and others point out that the Justice Department has filed at least one other brief that supported the disabled party in a lawsuit. In addition, a few people were recently surprised to be invited into the White House to talk about their concerns with administration officials during a march on the White House by several hundred activists.

"There's a mixed message. . . . This administration has demonstrated support," said Marcie Roth, director of advocacy and public policy for the National Council on Independent Living, an Arlington-based organization for the disabled. "We remain ever vigilant."

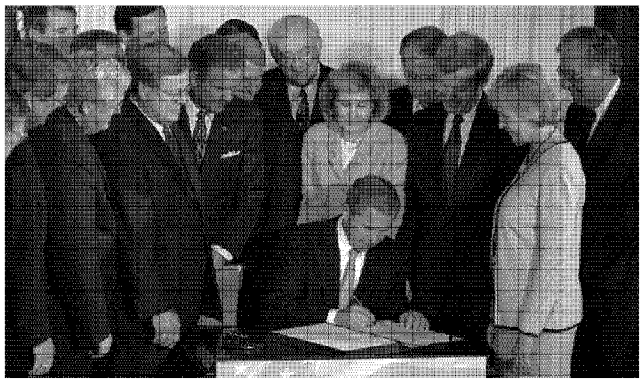
PRESIDENT BUSH WRAPS FIRST 6 MONTHS TACKLING TOUGH ISSUES AND WINNING IMPORTANT VICTORIES ON KEY PRIORITIES



President Bush and a bipartisan group of Members of Congress during the tax cut signing ceremony.

The President's leadership is replacing a culture of gridlock and cynicism with a constructive spirit of bipartisan respect and results. On June 7, 2001 the President signed into law the largest tax cut in 20 years that provides tax relief to all taxpayers in all brackets and gives our economy an immediate jumpstart. In addition, the President won bipartisan victories on several other key priorities, including patient protections, debt reduction, national defense, education, energy, and his agenda to rally America's armies of compassion to help those most in need. PRESIDENT MEETS WITH HOLY FATHER IN ROME; HONORS CARDINAL O'CONNOR IN NEW YORK

President Bush met with his Holiness Pope John Paul II at Castel Gandolfo in the foothills of South Rome on July 23, 2001. Also this past month, on July 10, 2001, President Bush was on hand at St. Peter's Cathedral in New York City to present the Congressional Medal of Freedom posthumously to the family of John Cardinal O'Connor.

PRESIDENT BUSH OUTLINES KEY PRINCIPLES TO IMPROVE MEDICARE

July 12, 2001 – President Bush, in a Rose Garden event today, announced his plan to improve Medicare. The President was joined by several Americans who would benefit from his plan to improve Medicare, giving all seniors the option of a new prescription drug benefit, and help for low income seniors. The President also wants to give all seniors better coverage of preventive treatments and better protection against serious illnesses; increase and improve Medicare benefits today while keeping Medicare benefits secure for the 77 million Americans who are about to retire; provide better options for access to needed health care; and ensure seniors can continue to get the coverage they have now if they are satisfied with it. PRESIDENT BUSH PRESENTS MEDAL OF HONOR TO VIETNAM HERO

July 16, 2001 – President Bush today presented the Medal of Honor to Major Ed Freeman. Joining Major Freeman were 57 previous Medal of Honor recipients who traveled from around the country for the event. Then Captain Ed Freeman distinguished himself on November 14, 1965 by flying his unarmed helicopter numerous times through enemy fire delivering ammunition, water, and medical supplies while saving nearly 70 lives during the Battle of Ia Drang Valley, one of the fiercest during the Vietnam War.

HOUSE PASSES KEY PARTS OF PRESIDENT'S FAITH & COMMUNITY-BASED INITIATIVE

July 19, 2001 – With bipartisan support, the U.S. House of Representatives passed H.R. 7 – the Community Solutions Act – legislation that contains key elements of the President's Faith & Community-Based initiative. The legislation passed at a time when leading civil rights organizations and respected national charities, ministries and philanthropic organizations announced their support. The President hailed the passage as a victory for millions of families trapped in welfare, the hungry, victims of crime, the addicted, the homeless, the needy, and the nearly 2 million children with a mom or dad in prison.

PRESIDENT'S ENERGY POLICY WINS KEY COMMITTEE SUPPORT IN HOUSE

July 19, 2001 - The House Energy and Commerce Committee today approved, with strong bipartisan support, key parts of the President's plan to address America's energy crisis. Today's action follows action earlier this week to approve other parts of the President's energy plan by the House Science Committee and by the Ways and Means Committee. Floor action is expected soon. President Bush believes America must have an energy policy that plans for the future, but meets the needs of today. The President believes we can develop our natural resources and protect our environment. (click here to read the National Energy Policy Development Group Report)

PRESIDENT MARKS 11TH ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

President Bush marked the anniversary of the Americans with Disabilities Act in his radio address on Saturday, July 28, 2001. President Bush also hosted teams from the "Challenger Division" for T-Ball on the South Lawn on July 15, 2001. The Challenger Division of Little League Baseball serves the needs of disabled children, providing the positive benefits of Little League that have been available for more than a half-century.

In June, Congress passed the President's "No Child Left Behind" Education Plan. President Bush believes "the federal role in education is not to serve the system. It is to serve the children." President Bush is challenging the status quo by focusing on increasing accountability, empowering parents, improving teacher quality, restoring school safety, and promoting character development. President Bush's education reform plan was his first bill sent to Congress and also demonstrates his strong desire to replace Washington's culture of gridlock with bipartisan accomplishments. PRESIDENT BUSH & THE FIRST LADY MEET WITH WOMEN BUSINESS LEADERS

The President and First Lady hosted over 100 women CEO's and senior executives at the White House to begin a candid dialogue on issues of greatest concern to women business leaders. In addition to the President, the women leaders met with Secretary Ann Veneman, Secretary Elaine Chao, Secretary Gail Norton, and EPA Administrator Christine Todd Whitman. President Bush is committed to building a strong economy, ensuring quality and affordable health care, promoting free and open trade, and reducing taxes and regulation for the over 9.1 million women owned businesses in America, which employ thirty-five percent more people than all the Fortune 500 companies combined. (click here to read the President's and First Lady's remarks)

What They're Saying About How President Bush's Policies Affect Small Businesswomen…

"President Bush is on the forefront of advocating for policies essential to the survival and viability of women-owned businesses: a small business friendly tax code, access to affordable and flexible health insurance, and breaking down expensive and complex barriers to overseas markets."
Karen Kerrigan, Chairman
Small Business Survival Committee

"The President's tax relief package provided a huge boost to small business owners and killing the death tax was critical for women and minority business owners."
Terry Neese, President of Women Impacting Public Policy & past National President of National Association of Women Business Owners

PRESIDENT BUSH & FIRST LADY HIGHLIGHT COMMITMENT TO FINDING CURE FOR BREAST CANCER

On Friday, June 1, 2001 President Bush and First Lady Laura Bush hosted over 300 survivors and families at the White House prior to the annual Race for the Cure in Washington DC. President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to improve healthcare in his budget by doubling funding by 2003 for NIH medical research on important health issues like cancer – the largest funding increase in NIH's history. The President's budget also creates more than 1,200 new community health centers to make health care more accessible.

PRESIDENT BUSH SIGNS HISTORIC TAX CUT; PROVIDES ENHANCED RETIREMENT SECURITY FOR WOMEN

On Thursday, June 7, 2001 President Bush signed into law the largest tax relief in a generation. Under the new tax reforms women benefit from the increased limits for IRA and 401(k) contributions. The law also provides for easier retirement account portability during job changes and allows women over age 50 – many of whom left the workforce at one time or another to raise children – to make additional "catch-up" contributions to their savings plans. The new law reduces the vesting period for employer contributions and provides key incentives to small businesses to have them adopt employer-sponsored retirement plans. PRESIDENT BUSH PRESENTS PLAN TO MAKE PRESCRIPTION DRUGS MORE AFFORDABLE FOR SENIORS

In an effort to improve Medicare and to provide immediate relief to America's seniors struggling to pay for prescription drugs, the President, in a Rose Garden ceremony on June 12, outlined his key principles for keeping Medicare benefits secure for the 77 million American's about to retire. The President wants to give all seniors better coverage of preventive treatments and better protection against serious illnesses; give seniors better options for access to the health care they need; and ensure seniors can continue to get the coverage they have now if they are satisfied with it. The Supreme Court's order is non-substantive. It simply notes that a stay was denied, that Stevens, Ginsburg, and Breyer would have granted the stay, and that Scalia, Souter, and Thomas did not participate.

Deputy SG Paul Clement was on leave last week, but I have reviewed the brief filed by the SG in this case. The case concerns the proper understanding of the term "disability" in the ADA. The question is whether a plaintiff can establish that he or she is substantially limited in the major life activity of "working" simply through proof that his impairment precludes performance of a particular job or a narrow category of jobs. Consistent with EEOC regulations on point, the SG's brief argues no, that an individual is substantially impaired only if his impairment excludes him or her from a class of jobs or a broad range of jobs in various classes. The brief thus agrees with the position taken below by Judge Boggs in the Sixth Circuit and seems quite correct as a matter of law. Although I understand that certain interest groups may seek broader interpretations of the ADA, this brief is consistent with EEOC regulations and with case law such as Sutton v. United Air Lines.

Attached, per your request. In addition to that guidance, use of e-mail does not cause the government to incur an additional cost; therefore, the use of e-mail for "political activity" in the manner you inquired about is legally permitted. As a prophylactic measure, however, your office has set up separate e-mail accounts.

This confirms advice given orally to the two of you.

I have confirmed with the Office of Special Counsel that the RNC can send e-mails seeking political assistance (get out the vote efforts, etc.) to non-PAS and non-White-House individuals who happen to work in the Executive Branch. In addition, the employees can respond to those RNC e-mails on their government e-mail system. However, the employees cannot use their government e-mail system to forward those e-mails to others, and that caution should be noted in the RNC e-mail that is sent to the employees.

Please contact me with any further questions.

The President and other White House officials will be participating here at the White House in briefings of regional RNC leaders. The first is scheduled for September 17. The briefings will be a mix of policy and politics. The RNC leaders who are invited are not invited as donors qua donors (although many naturally will have contributed to political campaigns and party organizations, of course). I have advised Ken that there are no legal or ethical problems whatever with these meetings -- so long, of course, as no solicitation of funds occurs and any additional costs generated by the meetings, such as for refreshments, are reimbursed by the RNC. See 5 CFR 734.502.

I also suggested to Ken that we may want to make sure that all relevant senior staff are made aware of the potential for news stories and editorials complaining about such Presidential activity in the White House. In particular, I think that Andy should be fully briefed well beforehand and that Karen/Ari should be apprised as well.

The question is whether a plaintiff can establish that he or she is substantially limited in the major life activity of "working" simply through proof that his impairment precludes performance of a particular job or a narrow category of jobs. Consistent with EEOC regulations on point, the SG's brief argues no, that an individual is substantially impaired only if his impairment excludes him or her from a class of jobs or a broad range of jobs in various classes. The brief thus agrees with the position taken below by Judge Boggs in the Sixth Circuit and seems quite correct as a matter of law. Although I understand that certain interest groups may seek broader interpretations of the ADA, this brief is consistent with EEOC regulations and with case law such as Sutton v. United Air Lines.

Doug: I am consulting with Legal Counsel at Dept of Justice on this as well just to make sure we also have their input and approval. It will take them until the week of the 27th. Apologies for the delay, but I believe this is best way to proceed. Note that I will be out the week of the 20th.

Attached, per your request. In addition to that guidance, use of e-mail does not cause the government to incur an additional cost; therefore, the use of e-mail for "political activity" in the manner you inquired about is legally permitted. As a prophylactic measure, however, your office has set up separate e-mail accounts.

This confirms advice given orally to the two of you.

I have confirmed with the Office of Special Counsel that the RNC can send e-mails seeking political assistance (get out the vote efforts, etc.) to non-PAS and non-White-House individuals who happen to work in the Executive Branch. In addition, the employees can respond to those RNC e-mails on their government e-mail system. However, the employees cannot use their government e-mail system to forward those e-mails to others, and that caution should be noted in the RNC e-mail that is sent to the employees.

Please contact me with any further questions.

The President and other White House officials will be participating here at the White House in briefings of regional RNC leaders. The first is scheduled for September 17. The briefings will be a mix of policy and politics. The RNC leaders who are invited are not invited as donors qua donors (although many naturally will have contributed to political campaigns and party organizations, of course). I have advised Ken that there are no legal or ethical problems whatever with these meetings -- so long, of course, as no solicitation of funds occurs and any additional costs generated by the meetings, such as for refreshments, are reimbursed by the RNC. See 5 CFR 734.502.

I also suggested to Ken that we may want to make sure that all relevant senior staff are made aware of the potential for news stories and editorials complaining about such Presidential activity in the White House. In particular, I think that Andy should be fully briefed well beforehand and that Karen/Ari should be apprised as well.

Please pass on to Anita as appropriate.

To confirm our guidance on non-campaign mixed-travel reimbursement: We should calculate using the hard-time, total-activity-time formula. See 5 CFR 734.503. For reimbursement for use of Air Force One, the political entity should the appropriate percentage of the coach rate plus tax plus one dollar for political passengers. (Note that the first class rate is the required reimbursement rate only for campaign travel.) Transportation and hotel and food costs for political travelers will be paid by the political source.

We should continue to discuss the following because I still have questions, but I would suggest that, for non-campaign political travel, we should calculate by using roundtrip fare from and to Washington (or from and to Crawford, or from and to the previous all-official site visited by the President, as the situation may be). In that regard, examine 5 CFR 734.503(c)(1), particularly the sentence beginning "The percentage figure . . ."

... As Confrontation Over Bush Judicial Nominees Looms
As he plots a legislative schedule for the fall, Senate Majority Leader Daschle also must prepare for looming confrontations with Republicans over confirming President Bush's judicial nominees. Republicans plan to force action on the issue, just as they have done with other Bush nominees to fill administrative posts. But the battle could become even more contentious now that the subject is lifetime judicial appointments that will affect court rulings on divisive social issues for years to come. "If the Democrats are going to behave irresponsibly, and do ideological litmus tests on all of the nominees," said a Senate GOP aide following the issue, "this is going to be a huge, major disagreement that could complicate everything for the rest of the year."
In a gesture that has drawn praise from Republicans, Judiciary Chairman Leahy has scheduled a hearing for Aug. 27 on two Bush nominees: Sharon Prost, formerly chief counsel to ranking member Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, nominated for the Federal Circuit Court; and Terry Wooten, nominated for a federal district court judgeship. But the bipartisan comity could be short-lived. Republicans and some of their allies predict that Democrats will drag their heels on judicial nominations throughout the year. "They're looking for ways to obstruct nominees," said John Nowacki of the Free Congress Foundation, which tracks the issue. Nowacki pointed to a hearing held this summer by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who chairs the Judiciary Administrative Oversight and the Courts Subcommittee, about the role of ideology in the confirmation process. "These seem to be structured to justify an obstructionist strategy," Nowacki said.

Democrats deny charges of obstruction, but note that a slew of factors - many, they say, caused by Republicans - could slow down the process this year. One involves Bush's decision to stop relying on the American Bar Association to vet nominees - a process that Leahy re-established when he assumed his chairmanship. "That shifted the time to the Senate clock instead of the White House clock," said a Leahy spokesman. The spokesman said committee staff also lost valuable time when Minority Leader Lott objected to a routine motion to waive a rule requiring nomination materials to be returned to the White House over the recess. "Despite all of this ... we're on a pace that compares favorably with earlier years," he said. There currently are 20 circuit court nominees and 20 district court nominees awaiting confirmation.
For now, Republicans are refusing to forecast their tactics, while expressing hope that nominations will move in a cooperative fashion.
But
GOP aides also brag that Republicans did not achieve results in moving other nominees until Sens. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, and Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., started holding up FY02 appropriations bills and blocking procedural motions on the Senate floor. Without much time to lose in the remainder of the session, such tactics could be the most effective way to force confirmation votes on the floor - provided they do not harm good will among Senate leaders in a way that causes the process to shut down completely. Such a delay would likely exacerbate the "judicial emergency" cited by Republicans, while making it harder for Congress to meet its budget deadlines and schedule a timely adjournment. - by

Mr. Kavanaugh -
At your convenience, upon your return from vacation, Christa Bailey and I would like an appointment with you to discuss getting copies of Christmas gift thank you cards from the Clinton Presidential materials project. Christa is Director of the Gift Unit. I am with Records Management and work for Terry Good. Records Management would have stored and then shipped these files to the National Archives for transport to Arkansas. These would be plain stock "thank you" cards and not the annual fancy Christmas card. The gift unit wishes to see any examples for the past administration, so that designs and wording are not duplicated. Since this material would have been sent to the general public, the National Archives may consider these to be "open files." This request would be for ongoing government business. Please let me know when you can schedule Christa and I. Thank you.

Subject: meeting on Victims Rights Amendment

Hi Ansley, I left a message on your voice mail on Friday about the possibility of getting your help on scheduling a meeting on the Victims Rights Amendment for sometime the week of August 27th. John Bridgeland is apparently between assistants and so I was wondering if you could help. Here are the folks from the White House that need to be at the meeting. John Bridgeland, Diana Schacht, Joel Kaplan (Josh Bolton's office), Brett Kavanaugh (WH Counsel's office). I know that Brett is out this week as well, and I don't know who his assistant is. Brett does want to attend the meeting next week (he left me a voice mail to that effect). Viet Dinh will lead the briefing. His assistant's name is Raushanah and her number is 202-514-4601. He is getting a new assistant but I am not sure when. Can you coordinate with her. Wednesday or Thursday of next week would be great. Give me a call if you can't help us out. THanks.

In his speech, Bush called on Americans to show more compassion to each other and look less often to federal government as a safety net.

"A culture of responsibility understands that if you live in a community and see a neighbor in need, that instead of relying upon government, that you ought to walk across the street and help that neighbor in need," Bush said.

Bush to pick top legal officer

U.S. attorney nod is political ritual

BY JAY WEAVER
Miami Herald

The ritual of law spiced with politics will unfold this fall when President George W. Bush is expected to pick South Florida's top federal prosecutor -- for the busiest jurisdiction in the country.

The three finalists -- interim U.S. Attorney Guy Lewis, former federal prosecutor Marcos Jimenez, and Gov. Jeb Bush's inspector general, Marcia Cooke -- have already been chosen by a federal judicial nominating commission.

Commission members said the finalists for the top job in the Southern District of Florida, which extends from Monroe to St. Lucie County, were selected solely because of their experience and qualifications.

``Politics played no part in it,'' said Miami attorney Tom Tew, one of 21 commission members and whose law partner, Al Cardenas, is chairman of Florida's Republican Party.

Karen Mintz-Margulies, chairwoman of the local commission, said, however, that is all about to change.

``The process from here on out is obviously going to be political, but there is nothing wrong with that,'' said Mintz-Margulies, a Broward County Republican activist.

The three finalists for U.S. attorney -- a position that pays $122,400 a year with authority over 240 federal prosecutors -- were interviewed by White House and Department of Justice legal advisors last month. Cooke went first, followed by Jimenez, and then Lewis at the July 19 interview.

Now the finalists face interviews with U.S. senators Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, most likely in September.

The two Democratic senators can offer their comments about the three finalists to the Republican president. Bush has the authority to pick one for Senate confirmation.

But Graham and Nelson can ``blue-slip'' the Senate Judiciary Committee's confirmation hearing on the president's final pick.

That means they have the power to stop the hearing or let it go forward.

Ultimately, the full Senate has the final say.

Lewis, appointed interim U.S. attorney last year by former Attorney General Janet Reno, is a career prosecutor. He has received praise across the political spectrum for his handling of the office.

Like his predecessor Tom Scott, Lewis has made the fight against public corruption and drug trafficking his top priorities.

His most celebrated victory was the conviction of five Cuban intelligence officers on espionage-related charges.

Lewis, 39, declined to comment, saying it would be ``inappropriate'' as the current U.S. attorney.

Jimenez, 41, a former federal prosecutor, who has done both criminal defense and civil litigation in private practice, is considered a front-runner for U.S. attorney, two legal sources told The Herald.

Jimenez, a partner with the Miami firm of White & Case, was on the team of lawyers representing President Bush in the Florida election disputes. His brother Frank is Gov. Bush's deputy chief of staff. And he's Cuban American, recognized for helping Cuban refugees over the years. Jimenez declined to comment.

Cooke is a former U.S. magistrate in Michigan, ex-federal prosecutor in Miami and now serves as chief of Gov. Bush's office of inspector general. She also has close ties to former U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez, who was appointed by Gov. Bush to chair the federal judicial nominating commission for the state.

Cooke, 46, also declined comment. Former Chief U.S. District Judge Ed Davis said that all three candidates are qualified for the position. But he said the ``extraordinary'' demands of the job -- greater even than those for a federal judge -- should compel the president and Senate to pick the best one.

``Politics is always a factor,'' said Davis, whose own vacant position on the Miami federal bench must be filled by Bush. ``But you hope, because the position is so significant, that they pick the next U.S. attorney based on merit.''

Subject: Longshot

Brett:

I am about to commence on a longshot, I appreciate any indulgence or assistance you can provide.

I am on the board of a charity called "Wings for Children". Wings provides free air transportation to ambulatory children of needy families. We serve the market that is within a 500 mile radius of Pittsburgh. We provide nearly 100 free flights a year.

This weekend (8/25 - 8/26) we are holding our annual fundraiser at the Allegheny County Airport (just south of Pittsburgh). Pilots and plane owners have donated their time and resources. The fundraiser is called "Fly Around Town for Pennies a Pound". We raise money by charging the public $0.15 per pound to take a half hour flight around the city of Pittsburgh.

It came to my attention that President Bush will be landing at the county airport this Sunday, presumably interrupting our fundraiser for a brief period. Obviously, we would love any chance to have the President meet our Wings founder (Mark Holewinski) and shake hands. It would provide an outstanding opportunity for us to raise awareness of the good we are doing in the community.

A couple of items that may make it personally appealing.
* The founder's wife is a Texan (complete w/ "Don't Mess with Texas" bumper sticker), and proud republican.
* You know I am a Yale 1987 graduate. Further, the president's inaugural speech and his emphasis on charitable work inspired me to accept the founder's invitation to join the board of his organization.

If you could forward the thrust of my message to the appropriate persons, I would most appreciate it. I apologize for imposing and understand completely if you cannot be help in this endeavor.

I hope all is well with you. See you next Spring.

Sincerely,

The interviews take place at the White House with representatives from both the White House Counsel's Office and the Justice Department present for the interviews. I do not think there is any particular problem confirming that information to an inquiring reporter, as she could confirm it anyway with minimal work. I am not sure what we are walking into, other than perhaps yet another media piece about judicial selection.

I'm sorry for the group interview, but I'm not completely sure which one of you is the right person. Ellen Nakashima with the Washington Post has called the justice department to ask about where judicial interviews are conducted. She has heard that the interviews take place at the White House now rather than the Justice Department where they used to take place.

Is this true, can we confirm, and what are we possibly walking into?

Thanks. As my email subject revealed, I thought it to be a longshot. In any event I think we raised about $10,000 (final numbers are not yet in).
Governor Ridge was there with President Bush. The Governor did come by and

The interviews take place at the White House with representatives from both the White House Counsel's Office and the Justice Department present for the interviews. I do not think there is any particular problem confirming that information to an inquiring reporter, as she could confirm it anyway with minimal work. I am not sure what we are walking into, other than perhaps yet another media piece about judicial selection.

Subject: judicial interviews

I'm sorry for the group interview, but I'm not completely sure which one of you is the right person. Ellen Nakashima with the Washington Post has called the justice department to ask about where judicial interviews are conducted. She has heard that the interviews take place at the White House now rather than the Justice Department where they used to take place.

Is this true, can we confirm, and what are we possibly walking into?

You can do a political update at agencies (i.e., in government buildings) so long as only PAS and White House officials attend. Of course, if it is not truly a "political" update, but more a policy/agenda update, then any agency employee could attend in a government building. But if it is in fact a political/electoral briefing, non-PAS agency employees can attend only when they are off duty and not in a government building. (Note: I did not write these convoluted rules.)

Bill Clinton Goes Bikini Shopping In Rio De Janeiro. Reuters (8/28) reports, &Former US President Bill Clinton gave tourists visiting Rio de Janeiro's picturesque beaches something else to gawk at on Monday when he went bikini shopping with British actor Sir Anthony Hopkins. ( The high point came when the two silver-haired men entered the Blue Man beachwear boutique to check out Brazil's most famous fashion product -- the bikini.
According to TV Globo, Clinton spent $113 on two bikinis and three sarongs. It was not immediately clear who he was shopping for.8

I agree. It is clear that there is a substantial amount of anxiety at the Republican Senate staff level about the Garrett interview and something needs to be done to dispel that feeling.

Senator Kyl's staffer called me seeking to find out what if anything we planned to do to try to help give the Republican Senators some cover in the wake of the Major Garrett interview. My recommendation is for some version of the letter that Brett prepared to be sent out. The letter could serve as a definitive statement of the Judge's views on where we have been, where we are, and where we should be going. We could add a few sentences to dispel the impression that the Judge feels Democratic obstructionism is understandable in light of past Republican obstructionism. I think we should not do nothing -- we ought to clarify the record and send a signal to our Republican allies up there that we're trying to help them out -- and this is by far the easiest of the available options for action (the others being an additional interview or a speech).

Please let me know what you think so I can provide an answer to Kyl. Thanks.

Brett,

I have attached the list we discussed yesterday afternoon for Sen. Hutchinson's proposed Washington fly in on Sept. 20. The idea would be to have these guys go to the President's departure and then to a conference room for a briefing by Ken Mehlman, Nick Calio and others.

Any guidance you could provide would be appreciated.

thanks

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Nominee Denies Leaking Files For Anita Hill Book

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

Jockeying For Federal Bench Could Get Ugly

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Nominee Denies Leaking Files For Anita Hill Book

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

And Judge Eugene Siler Jr., who turns 65 in October, plans to take senior status Jan. 1. Siler said he plans to continue working full time at least through 2002 to allow time for other judges to be confirmed.

The largest regional appeals court - the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit - has 27 authorized judgeships and three vacancies. It serves nine Western states, plus Guam. No other appellate court has more than four vacancies, and the Chicago-based 7th Circuit has none.

Annual salary for an appellate judge, a lifetime appointment, is $153,900.

Typically, the 6th Circuit's judges rule three to six months after hearing lawyers' arguments. Generally, about 15 months pass between the time a notice of appeal is filed with the court and the case is resolved.

J. Guthrie True, a lawyer from Frankfort, Ky., said it seems the 6th Circuit has taken longer in recent years to decide cases, though he could not provide specifics.

Delayed rulings can cost clients, particularly if they have been required to post bond during an appeal, he said.

"Many times, clients wonder," True said. "It looks like, to me, the 6th Circuit is doing everything they can to deal with the situation.

"You can only do so much when you're facing that kind of a shortage," he said.

Martin, 66, said the court still has the resources to do its job - but not without stretching.

"People would like decisions more quickly," Martin said.

But, he added, "We've got a steady flow of appeals, vacancies unfulfilled, and we're scrambling to hear the cases we have assigned."

The jockeying to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith is expected to intensify in the coming weeks, pitting some of central Ohio's Republican heavyweights against one another.

Unlike campaigns for elected offices -- with their yard signs, speeches and occasional public mudslinging -- the battle for a federal judgeship involves behind-the-scenes meetings and phone calls.

Although less visible, the process is not necessarily subtle or civil.

"Absolutely, it can be bloody," lawyer Larry James said. "You haven't seen politics like the lobbying that goes on for a federal judgeship." James, a partner in the Columbus firm of Crabbe Brown & James who lost his bid for a federal judgeship in 1991, said business leaders, law firms, politicians and party contributors all work to promote their candidates.

The battle for Smith's seat could rekindle a feud between Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien and former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

O'Brien and Columbus lawyer Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife, are among the leading candidates for the judgeship. Smith, 66, will step down Jan. 1 as a full-time judge and go on semiretired, senior status with a reduced caseload.

The relationship between O'Brien and Lashutka wasn't always strained.

Throughout most of the 1970s and '80s, they were friends and political allies. As Columbus city attorney, Lashutka appointed O'Brien city prosecutor in 1978. Lashutka enthusiastically supported O'Brien's run for city attorney in 1985 after Lashutka decided not to seek re-election.

But the relationship began souring after Lashutka became mayor in 1992, and the feud boiled over four years later during two incidents.

In January 1996, Lashutka publicly opposed O'Brien's bid for the GOP nomination for county prosecutor. Instead, Lashutka backed then-Judge Michael L. Close of the Franklin County Appeals Court. O'Brien won the nomination and went on to win the general election.

The chasm widened in October of that year during Lashutka's nasty fight to remove James G. Jackson as Columbus police chief. Lashutka and his safety director, Thomas W. Rice, reassigned Jackson to his home and barred him from all city buildings.

As city attorney, O'Brien issued a legal opinion that barring Jackson from his office was tantamount to an indefinite suspension, something only the city Civil Service Commission had the authority to impose. Lashutka and Rice backed off; they temporarily assigned Jackson to an office at Fire Division headquarters.

The dispute flared again during the 1999 battle over the Republican endorsement for the Ohio House seat formerly held by E.J. Thomas. O'Brien backed Jim Hughes, an assistant county prosecutor, while Lashutka supported David Robinson, his former City Hall spokesman and policy expert. Hughes won the endorsement and the November general election.

Michael Colley, chairman of the county Republican Party, would not comment on the O'Brien-Lashutka animosity.

"My job is only to pass along the names of those who have expressed interest in being a judge of the U.S. District Court," Colley said. "I'm not ranking them or rating them."

Colley's counterpart in the county Democratic Party sympathized.

"One of the biggest challenges as a party chairman is keeping everybody together," Denny L. White said. "I'm glad I don't have those headaches."

O'Brien wouldn't comment on the matter, and Adams downplayed any rift between her husband and the prosecutor.

"Ron and my husband used to work very closely together," she said.

Adams predicted that U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, would not take politics into consideration in recommending a replacement for Smith.

Although O'Brien and Adams, a partner in the Columbus office of Squire Sanders & Dempsey, are seen as two leading candidates for Smith's job, other county Republicans have expressed interest, too.

Colley mentioned Judges David W. Fais, Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of Common Pleas Court; Close, who is in private practice; and William A. Klatt, chief counsel for Gov. Bob Taft. Watson could have a leg up because he once served as chief counsel to Voinovich when Voinovich was governor.

Others also rumored to be interested include Judge Lisa Sadler of the Common Pleas Court, Domestic Court Judge James W. Mason and lawyers David Alexander and Juan Jose Perez.

In addition, Judge Gregory L. Frost of Licking County Common Pleas Court has applied for the job.

Other candidates also might surface, including some who might not live in the 30-county area in central and southeastern Ohio served by the Columbus federal court.

In 1991, for example, President George Bush nominated then-Hamilton County Commissioner Sandra S. Beckwith to fill a vacancy on the Columbus bench. And President Clinton in 1995 tapped Susan J. Dlott, a Cincinnati lawyer and wife of Stanley M. Chesley, a major Democratic contributor, to fill a similar opening in Columbus. Both judges later moved to the Cincinnati federal courthouse when vacancies opened there.

In fact, two Cincinnati-area lawyers have been mentioned as candidates: assistant U.S. Attorney Ralph B. Kohnen and Kim Wilson Burke.

U.S. district judges, who are appointed to lifetime terms, make $145,100 a year.

The president nominates candidates for these jobs, but U.S. senators from a candidate's home state usually have considerable influence over the process. The Senate must confirm all federal judges and U.S. attorneys.

So it came as no surprise when DeWine and Voinovich recommended Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory G. Lockhart of Dayton earlier this year to be the next U.S. attorney for central and southern Ohio.

Lockhart, who last week was named acting U.S. attorney while his nomination is being considered, is a longtime friend and ally of DeWine's. As Greene County prosecutor in 1978, DeWine hired Lockhart as an assistant prosecutor.

Likewise, Judge Thomas M. Rose of the Greene County Common Pleas Court, another former DeWine employee in the prosecutor's office, was recommended earlier this month to replace U.S. District Judge Herman J. Weber of Cincinnati, who is planning to take senior status.

Whichever Republican gets the nod for Smith's seat, the nominee will have to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. But DeWine's backing is expected to smooth the way.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, DeWine accumulated IOUs from Democrats while Republicans controlled the Senate during Clinton's tenure.

DeWine helped win confirmation for such Clinton appointees as Dlott, U.S. District Judges Algenon L. Marbley and Edmund A. Sargus Jr., and Judge R. Guy Cole of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Wooten Denies Leaking File; Senate Panel Considers Charge Against Judicial Nominee

By Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate Judiciary Committee aide who has been nominated by President Bush as a federal judge, yesterday disputed a writer's claim that he divulged private FBI files for a controversial book about the confirmation hearings of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Testifying at his own confirmation hearing before the committee, Wooten insisted that the allegations that he improperly shared confidential material to a writer seeking to discredit Anita Hill are "absolutely, 100 percent untrue."

"There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," said Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) questioned Wooten about the claim made to the committee and to journalists in recent days by David Brock, the author of a 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill," which assailed the law professor who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

For years a highly conservative writer, Brock has abandoned his former views and many one-time colleagues on the ideological right. He has said his book on the Thomas hearings contained information that he knew at the time to be false.

On Friday, Brock sent the Judiciary Committee an affidavit that could prove damaging to

Wooten, who worked as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) and was the committee's GOP chief counsel during Thomas's confirmation.

The unsolicited, five-paragraph affidavit says Wooten handed Brock confidential information about a woman named Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making crude sexual remarks but did not testify at his confirmation hearing. Brock said in the statement that he "published the verbatim sections of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file that Mr. Wooten had given me in my book."

Under questioning by Leahy, Wooten, who was nominated two months ago to a U.S. district judgeship in South Carolina, replied that as chief counsel he had access to FBI files and other confidential materials. But he said he did not routinely read files, relying instead on briefings from two committee investigators.

Wooten recalled receiving a telephone call from Brock, and "as a courtesy to him . . . I had a very brief conversation with him" after Thomas had been confirmed. Asked by Leahy whether he was the source of information from FBI files on Wright quoted in Brock's book, Wooten responded: "Absolutely not."

After the exchange, Leahy, one of only three committee members who attended the uncommon hearing during Congress's August break, indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed. A committee Democratic spokesman said Leahy would confer with the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), when lawmakers return to Washington next week before deciding to explore the issue further.

Yesterday, Brock declined to respond publicly to Wooten's denial that he had shared information, but reiterated his account. "I was told to meet with Wooten at the suggestion of President [George H.W.] Bush's White House and Justice Department officials to receive the FBI material on Angela Wright," Brock said. "That's what I did."

The Alliance for Justice, a liberal group that has been critical of the conservatism of the current president's judicial nominees, called yesterday for an investigation. "The fact [Brock] would willingly submit an affidavit, exposing himself to scrutiny, should warrant the committee's full attention and thorough investigation," said Nan Aron, the alliance's president.

Judicial Nominee Denies Leaking From FBI Files

By Stephen Dinan
The Washington Times
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

Terry L. Wooten, President Bush's nominee to the federal district court in South Carolina, denied during his confirmation hearing yesterday that he had leaked confidential information, including FBI files, while he was an attorney for Senate Republicans.

David Brock, a disaffected conservative journalist, says Judge Wooten was his source for FBI documents cited in his book "The Real Anita Hill," which he wrote after the 1991 Senate hearings to confirm Clarence Thomas as a U.S. Supreme Court justice.

But Judge Wooten, now a federal magistrate in South Carolina who was chief counsel to Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Thomas hearings, said yesterday he wasn't the source.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue," he said in response to a question from Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, who showed him copies of pages from Mr. Brock's book citing FBI files.

Mr. Brock, whose charges were first reported in the Los Angeles Times, said in an affidavit he swore out last week and filed with the committee that Judge Wooten had handed him copies of several pages of a confidential file --"no one but Mr. Wooten provided me with the FBI material," he says.

The file was on Angela Wright, one of Justice Thomas' employees when he was at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who said he made inappropriate sexual comments to her.

Judge Wooten said usually he didn't see FBI files and, if he had, he wouldn't have talked about them. He said he did talk with Mr. Brock for the book and he didn't remember if Miss Wright's name came up during the brief conversation, but he said he didn't divulge any confidential committee information.

Mr. Brock said yesterday he hadn't heard Judge Wooten's remarks to the committee and wouldn't comment on them anyway.

The committee held the unusual August confirmation hearings for both Judge Wooten, 47, and Sharon Prost, 50, whom the president nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. That court hears, for example, appeals from federal claims court, patent cases, the Court of Veterans Appeals, and appeals of certain decisions by Agriculture and Commerce secretaries.

Recess hearings are rare, Mr. Leahy noted, but this is the second one he has held this summer, which he said shows Democrats are trying to move along the president's nominations.

Republicans have charged that Democrats are playing games with nominations, but Mr. Leahy said the committee has moved faster to confirm appeals court judges this year than in 1989, 1993 and 1997 -- the first years of the last three presidential terms. He also said the administration's decision not to seek American Bar Association review of candidates before nomination has delayed the process for some.

Only three senators -- Mr. Leahy, Sen. Mike DeWine, Ohio Republican, and Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican -- were present for the hearing.

Both Mr. Leahy and Mr. DeWine said they expect Judge Wooten and Mrs. Prost will be confirmed.

Like Judge Wooten, Mrs. Prost also has worked as counsel for the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Mr. DeWine and Mr. Leahy praised her work.

Judge Terry L. Wooten, a former Senate staffer who has been nominated to become a U.S. district judge, denied under oath Monday that he had leaked confidential FBI files nearly a decade ago for a book that would discredit Anita Faye Hill, the woman who accused Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

"That allegation is absolutely, 100% untrue," Wooten told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't even remember seeing those files. I would not discuss that material with anyone" outside the committee, he said. Wooten is a federal magistrate in Florence, S.C. At the recommendation of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), President Bush nominated Wooten to be a U.S. district judge there.

But late last week, author David Brock said Wooten gave him the FBI files that he quoted in his 1993 book, "The Real Anita Hill."

In 1991, Wooten was the chief Republican counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and he played a key role in the battle over Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After Thomas was narrowly confirmed, conservatives were angry about Hill's accusations and were anxious to discredit her and Angela Wright, who also accused Thomas of making lewd and uncouth comments to her.

Brock said he was commissioned to write a book that would disparage both women.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock said in a sworn statement sent to Sens. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah). "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file."

Leahy, the committee's chairman, asked Wooten whether he had spoken with Brock.

The judge replied that he had agreed to meet with him to discuss the book. "It was a very brief conversation," Wooten said. "I can't remember the details of the conversation."

When Leahy pressed him again on whether he had disclosed any confidential information, Wooten replied, "Absolutely not."

The dispute is unlikely to derail Wooten's confirmation, the senators said afterward, although they may ask the judge to answer further questions in writing.

Leahy had scheduled the confirmation hearings for Wooten and another former committee staff member, Sharon Prost, during the August recess because their confirmations were seen as a near certainty.

Prost, a longtime aide to Hatch, is scheduled to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which handles appeals in patent cases.

Brock sent his statement to the committee late Friday, but the senators and their staffs said they did not see it until Monday.

As a result, they did not have time to consider whether it deserves further inquiry.

"Sen. Leahy will consult with Sen. Hatch when Congress returns next week to decide on how to proceed," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy.

The liberal Alliance for Justice said the committee should postpone action on Wooten's nomination.

The judge has "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety. . . . The committee's bipartisan investigative staff must fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten," the group said.

Cincinnati Appeals Court Has Highest Number Of Open Judgeships

By John Nolan
The Associated Press
Tuesday, August 28, 2001

The court that hears federal appeals cases for Ohio and three other states has more vacant judgeships than any of the 12 other U.S. appellate courts.

Vacancies on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached seven in mid-August when Judge Richard Suhrheinrich, 65, took senior status, under which a judge can opt to take a reduced caseload but still receive full salary.

The court that serves Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and Michigan now has only nine of its authorized 16 judgeships filled. Its longest-standing vacancy dates to 1995. Chief Judge Boyce Martin Jr. and his predecessor, Judge Gilbert Merritt, have written Congress over the years pleading for action.

"I've done it again and again and again. But they don't pay any attention to it," Martin said of Congress. "I do my job the best I can with the resources available to me."

Martin concedes the average person isn't likely to care about vacant judgeships. But the 6th Circuit, and other courts like it around the nation, quietly play key roles in affecting lives - sometimes with life or death consequences.

The courts rule on death penalty cases, and whether executions should go forward. They decide labor disputes and contract fights, review criminal convictions and environmental enforcement cases, and often rule on whether federal agencies have abused their powers and infringed on citizens' rights.

The appellate courts operate just one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. In many cases, their decisions are the courts' last word, because the U.S. Supreme Court accepts only a small percentage of the thousands of issues it is asked to review.

For now, Martin's court borrows federal district judges from its states for its three-judge panels hearing cases. The court also hears some arguments by telephone, decides some other cases on written - rather than oral - arguments, and uses staff lawyers to mediate some cases to get them off the docket.

Nationally, three-judge appellate panels average about 983 cases in a year. But that number has increased to 1,475 at the 6th Circuit because of its vacancies, said Dick Carelli, spokesman for the administrative office of the federal courts in Washington.

Presidents nominate candidates for federal judgeships, subject to Senate confirmation.

Two nominations to the 6th Circuit are pending. Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and former Ohio solicitor general Jeffrey Sutton were nominated by President Bush in May.

The Senate Judiciary Committee examined a judicial nominee for federal district court in South Carolina last week. But partisan battles still are bottling up most nominations.

Before leaving for the August recess, Senate Republicans forced the Senate to return all 164 unconfirmed executive and judicial nominees to the White House because of a fight with Democrats over other nominations. The Bush administration is expected to send all the nominations back to Congress in September.

The partisan process slowed as Bill Clinton's presidency neared its end, with Republicans hoping Bush would win the office to allow the GOP to control the nominating process. Democrats now barely control the Senate, giving them some clout to reach agreements with the Bush administration.

Two Clinton nominations from Michigan stalled during Clinton's term: state appeals judge Helene White and Detroit lawyer Kathleen McCree Lewis. Those nominations expired when Clinton left office.

Sens. Carl Levin and Deborah Stabenow, both Michigan Democrats, want the White and Lewis nominations resolved before GOP nominees are advanced, said Levin's spokeswoman, Kathleen Long.

That is only fair, because White's nomination lagged for 4 1/2 years without a confirmation hearing, Long said.

The policy-making Judicial Conference of the United States has categorized four of the 6th Circuit's openings as "judicial emergencies" because they are lengthy vacancies. The court's longest-standing vacancy was created when Judge Damon Keith took senior status on May 1, 1995.

Karl is suggesting we hold our Mexican Independence Day celebration at the White House similar to the one we held for Cinco de Mayo. We will need to fund 10K for stage, entertainment and lighting. What are the legalities involved in either raising this money by donations or asking the RNC?

Judges & the Constitution
Everything is politics. Nothing is principle.

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute & director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.
September 4, 2001 8:30 a.m.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong - unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without comment. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" - finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Karl is suggesting we hold our Mexican Independence Day celebration at the White House similar to the one we held for Cinco de Mayo. We will need to fund 10K for stage, entertainment and lighting. What are the legalities involved in either raising this money by donations or asking the RNC?

Judges & the Constitution
Everything is politics. Nothing is principle.
By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute & director of Cato?s Center for Constitutional Studies.
September 4, 2001 8:30 a.m.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong ? unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without comment. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" ? finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Judges & the Constitution
Everything is politics. Nothing is principle.

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute & director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.
September 4, 2001 8:30 a.m.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

In the early 1980s, he clerked for then-U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger and for Judge Antonin Scalia, who was then in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington and now is a Supreme Court justice.

Last year, Cassell withdrew his name as one of 14 nominees to the Utah Supreme Court so he could argue a Miranda case before the nation's highest court. As with most of his recent legal experience, Cassell was an intervening attorney for the conservative Washington Legal Foundation on the Miranda case, arguing to weaken certain rights established for the accused by the landmark case.

Cassell also represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing who wanted to attend Timothy McVeigh's Denver trial without jeopardizing their right to later testify about the bombing's impact on their lives.

Another U. professor, Michael McConnell, was nominated in May to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver. Given the current Senate makeup and McConnell's controversial views on the separation of church and state, his confirmation is also facing a challenge.

AR Joins 'Shake The Nation' Campaign, Says It's Time To Restore Sense To Judiciary; 'The Era Of Judicial Activism And Social Engineering Under The Color Of Law Must End,' Says Richard Lessner, Executive Director

The PR Newswire
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

For decades Americans effectively have been ruled by an out-of-control federal judiciary run by renegade activist judges who legislate from the bench, said Richard Lessner, Executive Director of American Renewal, the legislative action arm of Family Research Council.

Lessner's comments came today at a Washington press conference kicking off a campaign, backed by a broad coalition of conservative organizations, to "Shake the Nation." The campaign is aimed at influencing the U.S. Senate on behalf of President Bush's judicial nominations.

"President Bush has promised to nominate jurists who will respect the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine," Lessner said, "and resist the temptation to impose their own political opinions and policy desires upon the law -- often in flagrant disregard for the will of the American people. It is time to restore common sense and respect for the institutions of self-government to the federal judiciary. The era of judicial activism and social engineering under the color of law must end.

"For the better part of four decades, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court has imposed grotesque and fanciful interpretations upon the Constitution, amended the document by judicial fiat, and invented new rights out of whole cloth, the most egregious examples of which are Roe v. Wade, which fabricated a 'right' to abortion, and last year's Stenberg v. Carhart, which threw out 32 state laws against the odious practice of partial-birth abortion.

"The Shake the Nation campaign, which American Renewal enthusiastically supports, is meant to demonstrate to the members of the U.S. Senate that millions of Americans want to see fair and impartial jurists, not un-elected and unaccountable oligarchs, appointed to the federal courts and, ultimately, to the Supreme Court." American Renewal, the non-profit legislative action arm of Family Research Council, was founded in 1992 to educate the general public and cultural leaders about traditional American values and to promote the philosophy of America's founding fathers concerning the nature of ordered liberty.

Yes, Litmus-Test Judges

Joseph Califano, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

In considering presidential nominees for district and appellate judgeships, professional qualification alone should no longer be considered a ticket to a seat on the bench.

For years partisan gridlock and political pandering for campaign dollars have led to failures of the Congress and White House, whether Democratic or Republican, to legislate and execute laws on a variety of matters of urgent concern to our citizens. As a result, the federal courts have become increasingly powerful architects of public policy, and those who seek such power must be judged in the spotlight of that reality.

Years ago battles of the bench were pretty much limited to the Supreme Court: FDR's effort to stack the court with New Dealers, Johnson's attempt to name Abe Fortas chief justice, Nixon's push to seat Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell, and the in-your-face street fights over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas. Senate scrutiny was painstaking because the nine justices have such a potent voice in setting national policy. In those days, when it came to lower-court nominees, senators deferred to the wishes -- and litmus tests -- of their colleagues from the nominee's state and the president. Until Lyndon Johnson moved into the Oval Office, southern senators such as Mississippi's John Eastland, then Judiciary Committee chairman, insisted that presidents (including John F. Kennedy) nominate segregationist federal judges in their states. LBJ believed Kennedy had made a mistake in bowing to these senators. If there was to be a litmus test, it would be his.

As a result, in selecting judicial nominees, those of us who helped check them out and interviewed them nailed down their views on civil rights, desegregation and racial justice. LBJ's insistence on this cost him the friendship of his mentor, Georgia senator Richard Russell, over a federal appellate court seat.

The litmus test of recent years has focused on the pro-life or pro-choice views of nominees. It is as inconceivable that Ronald Reagan would have sent the Senate a decidedly pro-choice nominee as it was that Bill Clinton would have named a pro-life one.

Litmus tests are nothing new. What's new is the growing role of federal courts in crafting national policies once considered the exclusive preserve of the legislature and executive. As gridlock and big money have stymied the House and Senate and shaped the way laws are executed, concerned citizens have gone to court with petitions they once would have taken to legislators and executive appointees. As the federal courts have moved to fill the public policy vacuum, conservatives, liberals and a host of special interests have developed a sharp eye for those nominated to sit on the bench. So should the Senate.

The failure of Congress to enact sensible public health policies regarding tobacco to protect our children from nicotine pushers sent anti-smoking advocates to federal court to draft a settlement agreement with provisions that read like sections of a federal statute. While Republican and Democratic administrations and Congresses have been fiddling over a patients' bill of rights, patients have gone to federal court for relief likely to have at least as much impact on health maintenance organizations as anything the politicians at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue can cobble together.

Despairing of more effective legislative or executive action, many cities are asking federal district judges for damages and court orders to restrict the way manufacturers sell handguns and other firearms. Federal District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's final orders to remedy Microsoft's monopolization may have more to say about the development of the Internet economy that any president, House speaker or Senate majority leader.

When the executive does act, say on cigarette marketing or environmental protection, adversely affected businesses rush to court to overturn its actions and regulations. The big bankrollers of drug legalization like George Soros know the difference between a federal judge who can find a way to uphold state medical marijuana laws and one who will find that federal statutes preempt them.

Environmentalists, prison reformers and consumer advocates have learned that what can't be won in the legislature or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits.

Federal district judges are the lords of their realms, and unless they open the gates, it can be impossible for the litigating parties to get out once they enter the courtroom kingdom. These judges can hold cases for years, tying up businesses and regulating prisons, cities and schools with detailed court orders.

The battle over who fills the record number of judicial vacancies has taken on an importance unimaginable just a generation. Who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending, second-guessing the tax bill and whose fingers are poised to dip into the Social Security and Medicare cookie jars.

President Bush and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch understand this as surely as Democratic Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy and subcommittee Chairman Charles Schumer do. Both sides know that many of the individuals who fill these seats will have more power over tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities than the president or congressional leaders, and for a longer period of time.

That's why professional qualifications should be only the threshold step in the climb of judicial nominees to Senate confirmation. There is not sufficient time to examine each lower federal court nominee with the penetrating policy MRI reserved for Supreme Court justices. But the Senate must take enough time to give these men and women the kind of searching review their sweeping power to make national policies deserves.

The writer is president of the National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University. He was Lyndon Johnson's special assistant for domestic affairs and secretary of health, education and welfare from 1977 to 1979.

Too Late For Arguello?

Rocky Mountain News
Saturday, September 1, 2001

If the Clinton administration had been a little less arrogant, Christine Arguello would probably already be a federal judge. She had not only superb qualifications, but the support of Colorado's two Republican senators, though she's a Democrat. But President Clinton mulishly insisted on pressing other nominations long after it was clear they would never go through, and so by the time he finally nominated Arguello for a vacant seat on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, in July 2000, the clock had almost run out on his term and the U.S. Senate never scheduled her confirmation hearings.

Now she's among nine candidates for federal judgeships whose names Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell submitted for President Bush's consideration. But the political reality is that presidents take political philosophy and party affiliation into account when nominating judges, and Arguello's best chance may have been squandered.

It's a pity.

It would be a bold act for Bush to break from tradition and nominate her. He shouldn't do it.

Judges And The Constitution; Everything Is Politics, Nothing Is Principle

By Roger Pilon
The National Review
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

REV_00022239

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute & director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong — unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" — finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Ex-GOP attack dog David Brock charges that Bush judicial nominee Terry Wooten gave him

REV_00022241

FBI files to discredit a key witness in the Clarence Thomas hearings. Will the Senate investigate?

It was the morning of Oct. 10, 1991, and Terry Wooten, the senior counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, was one of eight Senate staffers deposing Angela Wright over the telephone after she joined law professor Anita Hill in making allegations against their former boss at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

"Now, the term 'boobs' came up," Wooten asked Wright. "Is that a term that he used when he spoke to you?"

"No, actually that is a term that I am using," Wright replied. "Actually, what he said was, 'What size are your breasts?'" The question came up, she said, while they were attending a seminar for the EEOC. A decade after the grisly Thomas confirmation circus, Wooten is coming under scrutiny as a federal judge nominee for the U.S. District Court in South Carolina. And his chief accuser is onetime right-wing reporter David Brock, who claims that not only was Wooten busily trying to discredit Wright as a committee lawyer, but to reporters as well -- slipping Wright's FBI files to Brock, who was at work on his 1993 book "The Real Anita Hill."

But while Wooten called Brock's charges "absolutely 100 percent not true" during a Senate hearing this week, and Senate Democratic sources confide that the controversial Brock has enough credibility problems to keep his charges from sticking, Brock is standing by his story and welcomes an investigation into the matter.

In fact, he tells Salon that he's willing to open his files to the Judiciary Committee -- if anyone on the committee, that is, would call him. If the FBI file is there, it's conceivable, he allows, that Wooten's fingerprints could be on it, which may help settle the issue once and for all.

Wooten, like other nominees before him, will not talk to the press before a confirmation vote. The Justice Department did not return a call for comment.

Whether or not the Judiciary Committee decides to take Brock up on his offer or not, Wooten's role in the Thomas confirmation hearings -- the modern TV scandal spectacle that all others, from O.J. to Monica to Chandra, followed -- is surely worth consideration. It's certainly not unprecedented to require former political operatives, even ones with J.D.'s, to answer questions about their various partisan machinations before they assume positions of judicial prominence.

Such was the case in the solicitor-general nomination of conservative attorney Ted Olson, who played some (though murky) role in the American Spectator magazine's war against all things Clinton (even penning under a pseudonym the article "Criminal Laws Implicated by the Clinton Scandals: A Partial List," February 1994). The solicitor general job, meanwhile, supposedly has the grandiose purpose once described as "not to achieve victory, but to establish justice."

During the Thomas scandal, Wooten and Brock were clearly both pursuing victory, not justice.

Brock was the Spectator's star reporter, and was all about kicking ass for the GOP, he says now. Wooten, he says, was a big help.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock wrote in an affidavit he faxed Aug. 24 to Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI files. This material included FBI interviews of Ms. Wright's former employers and former co-workers. With Mr. Wooten's agreement, I removed the FBI material from his office." In his book "The Real Anita Hill," Brock makes references to "an FBI file" in which Wright is referred to as "vengeful, angry and immature."

Asked by Leahy if he gave confidential FBI material to Brock, as alleged both in Brock's affidavit and in a story in the Los Angeles Times, Wooten forcefully asserted "that allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue. There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation."

But the question now has less to do with which person the committee believes -- the imperfect whistleblower Brock, or Wooten, currently a magistrate judge in Florence, S.C.-- than whether or not they'll take Brock's dare, and try to make sure, beyond any measure of doubt, that Wooten wasn't involved in a dirty tricks campaign against Wright. To many who followed the Thomas confirmation hearings, Angela Wright seemed as though she might have been the woman who ultimately could have sunk Thomas' nomination. That was certainly a concern of Wooten's.

Anita Hill, who had worked under Thomas at both the EEOC and the Department of Education, had been telling the Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., that Thomas had repeatedly asked her out and, after being rebuffed, began to "use work situations to discuss sex."

As she later testified, despite her consistent protestations that such talk made her uncomfortable, Thomas continued to talk about sex, from graphic pornographic films to tales of "his own sexual prowess."

"I began to be concerned that Clarence Thomas might take out his anger with me by degrading me or not giving me important assignments," she testified. "I also thought that he might find an excuse for dismissing me."

On Oct. 11, 1991, Thomas, infuriated, "categorically denied all of the allegations and denied that I ever attempted to date Anita Hill," saying, "our relationship remained both cordial and professional."

"He said/she said" is one thing. "He said/they said" is something else entirely. Wooten recognized the problem posed by Wright, who had never met Anita Hill and who told the committee that Thomas fired her after years of hitting on her and making inappropriate comments to her. As Biden told Thomas during the hearing, "If there's not a pattern, to me, that's," or legally significant.

REV_00022243

"Any time you had a second allegation, it was going to be a big problem," Wooten later told Mayer and Abramson.

During Wright's Oct. 10 deposition, Wooten took a somewhat aggressive tone with her, six times referring to her as having "come forward," as if politically motivated and eager to enter the fray, when in fact she'd been subpoenaed by the committee.

"I am sorry, Terry," she told Wooten at one point, "but I cannot answer, I cannot answer the questions if you are going to that I decided to 'come forward.' Obviously I did not come forward with anything. I am just answering questions that are just being asked of me."

Even after that point is made, however, Wooten continued to use the term. After Wright informed the Senate staffers that a friend of hers exists whom she had contemporaneously informed of Thomas' allegedly harassing behavior, Wooten said, "I think it may be helpful if you would check with that friend to see if he or she is willing to come forward."

"I will be glad to do that," Wright said. "But you keep using the term 'come forward.' I can pretty much assure you that this person is not going to 'come forward' or want to be very involved in this at all."

Wright ultimately told them how Thomas would "consistently pressure me to date him," how he hit on other women in the office, how he "made comments about my anatomy and ... about women's anatomy quite often," and how "at one point, Clarence Thomas came by my apartment at night, unannounced and uninvited."

Then, Wooten asked Wright about other employers with whom she's had a problem, citing the name of a former Wright boss whom Wright accused of racism. He then asked Wright, a registered Republican, "who you voted for in the '80, '84 and '88," a question she doesn't answer.

Wright was hardly a perfect witness, having been fired by Thomas six years beforehand for being "ineffective" and, Thomas claimed, for calling a fellow employee a "faggot," which Wright denied. Then-Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., later told the Washington Post that he was ready to put Wright through the wringer she wanted to put Thomas through. "I felt that when you are assassinating someone's character, you bring your own to the fore," Simpson said. "All I know is that if she wanted to expose herself to the committee with damaging information about Clarence Thomas ... I was fully ready to damage her character in the process."

In the end, curiously and to this day without a clear explanation, Wright was never called to testify before the Senate. Thus, a vast majority of the Senate remained ignorant of her story when Thomas was confirmed on Oct. 15. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the committee, told the Washington Post in 1994 that he had no idea Wright existed to offer a similar story to Hill's. Had she been permitted to testify, Simon said, she "could have toppled Thomas."

It is unclear what role Wooten played in keeping Wright from the microphone, but it clearly was not in Thomas' best interest to have her testify. And, Wooten has said, he did his part to keep her story under wraps. In an interview for the book "Strange Justice," by Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Wooten allowed that he even kept Hill's charges -- which had been privately divulged to the Senate Judiciary Committee staffers in August and September 1991 -- from his then-boss Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., as well as from other Republicans on the committee.

"Washington is the rumor mill of the world," he told them. "It didn't look like it was going to develop into any big deal. There was an effort to control the damage." Wooten has admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had a brief conversation with Brock after Thomas had been confirmed on Oct. 15. "Whether or not Wright's name came up, I can't say that it did or didn't," Wooten said. But if it did, "there was no confidential information that was released or that was made available to him." He had access to the confidential materials about Wright from both FBI and Judiciary Committee files, but it was information he only discussed with his boss, Thurmond, and a committee investigator, Duke Short.

Leahy based his questions on the Times story, since at the time of the hearing he hadn't yet even seen Brock's affidavit. Speaking to reporters after the hearing, Leahy seemed to imply that, barring any new information, the "he said/he said" would culminate in a Wooten confirmation. "Mr. Wooten is under oath and he understands very well the importance of being accurate," Leahy said. "I can't believe that he would lie before the committee."

Brock disagrees, and thinks the committee should investigate. "The issue is obviously resolvable by the committee if it wants to resolve it," Brock tells Salon. "One of us has already committed perjury." Brock says that the dispute "doesn't have to remain 'he said/he said.' In the context of some kind of investigation there are potential witnesses and potential evidence."

Such as? Brock says his lawyers have 10 to 12 boxes of material from his days with the American Spectator. If Wright's FBI file is there, and Brock is telling the truth, Wooten's fingerprints could at least lend his story some credence.

But the Judiciary Committee has yet to contact Brock. When the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday, Leahy and Hatch will confer and decide how to proceed with the Wooten nomination, says Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Established procedures on the committee would have the chief investigators for both the Democrats and the Republicans working together to get to the bottom of the charges, but Hatch and Leahy would have to agree to such cooperation. In May, before the Senate fell into Democratic hands, then-Chairman Hatch declined to invoke those procedures when Brock raised questions about the role played by Olson in the Spectator's "Arkansas Project," a multi-year, multimillion-dollar investigation into the lives of the Clintons. Despite serious questions about how forthcoming Olson was being before the Senate, he was confirmed on May 25 on a 51-47 vote.

Senate insiders predict a similar result with the Wooten nomination. It's not that members of the Judiciary Committee don't take Brock's charges seriously, a Senate Democratic source told Salon. But those who believe Anita Hill shouldn't get their hopes up for a showdown. There doesn't appear to be any evidence or witness who can corroborate Brock's story, the source says, apparently unaware that Brock believes he may have some evidence locked away with his lawyers.

But so far, only the liberal Alliance for Justice has issued any sort of public position against Wooten, saying in a statement that he's "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety" and calling for the "committee's bipartisan investigative staff (to) ... fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten." Moreover, the Senate source says, the credibility of the contradictory witnesses is at play. Wooten is a judge whom many of the committee members remember from when he worked as chief GOP counsel on the committee. Brock, on the other hand, has since renounced his political alliances and admitted lying in some of his past reporting.

In the August Talk magazine excerpt of his forthcoming book "Blinded by the Right," Brock wrote that he "lost my soul" printing things he knew to be untrue, both in favor of Thomas and against Hill, her collaborating witnesses and the rival book, "Strange Justice," by Mayer and Abramson. He also detailed his 1994 intimidation of Kaye Savage, a woman who'd supported Hill and her story, meeting her armed with "unverified embarrassing personal information ... that Thomas claimed had been raised against her in a divorce proceeding." Brock claimed he'd gotten the information from Thomas through an intermediary, former White House assistant counsel Mark Paoletta. "Thomas was playing dirty, and so was I," Brock wrote.

But Abramson, the New York Times Washington bureau chief, is quoted in the Washington Post as pointing out that the "problem with Brock's credibility" is that "once you admit you've knowingly written false things, how do you know when to believe what he writes?" Paoletta, now counsel to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has denied Brock's charges, while Thomas has refused comment.

The Bush administration has already begun to assault Brock's credibility. In the Los Angeles Times story, Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker ascribed fiduciary motives to Brock's allegation. "I think it would be unfortunate if the desire for book sales promulgated a charge involving a man's integrity, such as this might," Tucker said.

Brock insists that "the Wooten thing has no connection to any kind of book publication strategy." Still uncompleted, his book has been pushed back until November at the earliest and more likely January 2002, he says, and "the only relationship at all between Wooten and the book is in the process of writing the book obviously I've revisited this issue. The fact that Wooten was nominated to a judgeship is just a coincidence."

What about the fact that the Los Angeles Times apparently knew about Brock's affidavit long before Leahy did? Brock says that reporter David Savage had been contacting him for days, not the other way around, which Savage confirms. Brock hadn't been paying attention to Wooten's nomination, he says, until Savage -- informed by a third party that Brock had said Wooten had leaked him Wright's FBI file -- contacted him. After speaking to Savage, Brock faxed his affidavit to Leahy's Senate office late Friday, after 6:50 p.m. Leahy didn't receive the affidavit until after the Monday hearing.

Does there exist evidence in those files to prove Brock right and Wooten wrong? That remains to be answered, as do questions about how willing Leahy and the Senate Democrats are to engage in a confirmation fight.

Schumer Says Bush's Nominees Should Have To Persuade Senators To Give Them Judgeships

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

President Bush's judicial nominees should have to fight to get lifetime federal judgeships instead of senators having to find reasons to keep them off the federal bench once they're nominated, a top Judiciary Committee Democrat said Tuesday.

"Given the stakes at hand, it makes sense that the burden should rest with the nominees," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., head of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on judges. "We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case. It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same." Conservatives immediately accused Schumer of trying to find ways to keep Bush's nominees from being confirmed in the Democrat-controlled Senate by changing the traditional deference senators give most presidential nominees.

"Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee if he doesn't share their politics," said Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project. "In advocating a shifting of the burden of proof, Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee who doesn't answer their political questions."

The GOP has been complaining about the pace of approval of judicial nominations under the Democrat-controlled Senate. There are at least 107 vacancies in the federal court system, and there are 44 judicial nominations pending.

Only four judges have been confirmed by the Senate this year.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the subcommittee said he could see that very thing happening.

"The Democrats could say that they would vote against a nominee if he answers a question in a manner that shows he is conservative," he said. "On the other hand, the Democrats could say they would vote against a nominee if he refuses to answer their questions because he hasn't borne his burden."

Schumer, who held a hearing to explore whether nominees should have to prove they're worthy to get a lifetime judgeship, said forcing candidates to defend their nominations would net more qualified judges.

"Imagine a job interview where you walk in and it's up to the interviewer to either automatically hire you or find something in your past that disqualifies you," Schumer said. "Provided you sit there with your mouth shut, or at the most, voice meaningless platitudes, and as long as there's no major skeleton in your closet, you're a shoo-in for the job. Is that the best way to find the best person for the job? Of course not."

Republicans disagreed. "The most significant burden born by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's top Republican.

Added Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ken.: If nominees "are men and women of integrity, are qualified, have a judicial temperament, and will follow the Constitution and statutes as they are written and intended, then we should confirm them."

Bar Questions Bush Nominee About Ethics

By Courtney Kinney
The Kentucky Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

The American Bar Association is asking questions about the ethics of a Lexington lawyer whose nomination for a federal judgeship by President Bush could station him in Covington.

Prestonsburg lawyer Ned Pillersdorf said an attorney from the ABA called him earlier this week asking about Danny Reeves, 44, a judicial nominee who defended environmental lawsuits against Ashland Inc. in the 1990s.

The ABA caller wanted more information about a letter Pillersdorf wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee last month saying Reeves negotiated a settlement in 1997 that required several plaintiffs' lawyers to agree not to sue Ashland Inc. in the future with new clients.

The cases involved nearly 40 residents of Lawrence and Johnson counties who claimed Ashland harmed their health and property when it dredged up radioactive material in the Martha oil field.

Shortly before the cases were to go to trial, a confidential settlement agreement giving residents an undisclosed amount of money was signed.

REV_00022229

A Kentucky Supreme Court rule says lawyers can't make part of a settlement any agreement that would keep another lawyer from practicing.

"I don't think this is a trivial ethical violation," said Pillersdorf, who is representing a second batch of residents suing Ashland, now based in Covington. "There's a reason the Supreme Court has that rule."

Because the settlement was confidential, it is not known whether such a provision was actually in the agreement. But Pillersdorf said the lawyers' deal not to sue again has been common knowledge.

"I'm kind of surprised to see Ashland disputing it. It's not been a secret," he said.

Shortly after the March 1997 settlement, several dozen more residents of the Martha area filed their own suits against Ashland Inc.

No lawyer from the first group of cases is handling cases for the second.

"It's quite odd," Pillersdorf said.

The ABA will not say whether it is investigating Reeves, said Boston lawyer Roscoe Trimmier Jr., chairman of the ABA standing committee on the federal judiciary. The ABA has been asked by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which confirms appointments, to review all judicial nominations.

Ashland spokesman Stan Lampe said Pillerdorf's allegation is bogus and no one at Ashland has been contacted by the ABA regarding Reeves.

"The charge is unwarranted and groundless," he said.

Reeves did not return calls made to his Lexington office.

He is one of three lawyers nominated by Bush to fill judicial vacancies in the Eastern District. One vacancy is in Covington.

The other nominees are attorney Karen Caldwell of Lexington and David Bunning, an assistant U.S. attorney in Covington and son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., of Southgate.

Hispanic Leaders Rally In Support of Judicial Nominee

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

Area Hispanic leaders are urging Colorado's senators to push for the appointment of Chief Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello as a U.S. District judge in Denver.

REV_00022230

Arguello was appointed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Clinton, but that appointment lapsed because the Senate never held confirmation hearings before Clinton left office.

She was among a group of nine people nominated for the federal judgeship by U.S. Sens. Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, both R-Colo. During a rally Thursday at the state Capitol, about 60 people including leaders of the Hispanic community demanded her appointment to the federal bench.

"There has never been a Latino appointed to a federal judgeship in Colorado," said Awilda Marquez, a lawyer and political activist. "One of the country's best and brightest attorneys, Christine Arguello, is a candidate for such a historic opportunity."

Allard said there might not be much he and Campbell can do. He said while President Bush has not made an announcement, the two most likely nominees are Robert Blackburn of Las Animas, a former state prosecutor who is now a state district judge; and Marcia Krieger of Littleton, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for Colorado.

"It's the president's decision at this point," Allard said. "We've done our part."

Allard said he supported Arguello's appointment to the federal appeals court during the Clinton administration.

"The bottom line is this president has made it fairly clear to our office that he's interested in putting Republicans in the judiciary," Allard said.

Arguello is a Democrat.

Marquez said Allard and Campbell still should urge Bush to appoint Arguello.

"They have the power to do something about it," she said. "The White House will do whatever the senators want."

Arguello, 46, graduated first in her class at the University of Colorado in Boulder and was the first Hispanic woman admitted to Harvard Law School.

Trial Lawyer Blasts Judge Nomination

Maria Titze
The Deseret News
Friday, August 31, 2001

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a Salt Lake City defense attorney is harshly critical of U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch's latest nomination to the federal bench -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

REV_00022231

"He's not a practicing Utah lawyer, and I believe that there are lots of trial lawyers in the state who deserve consideration of this judgeship," defense attorney Ron Yengich told the Deseret News.

Cassell practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the faculty at the U.

News of Yengich's letter to Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy came after the American Bar Association made public a mixed review of Cassell's qualifications. While the majority of the 14-member ABA rating committee called Cassell "well qualified," a few called him "not qualified."

Senior administration officials took the ABA to task Thursday, calling the mixed rating "bizarre," and hinting that the entire rating system was unfair.

Roscoe Trimmier Jr., head of the ABA rating committee, insisted the ratings aren't political, but said the committee normally wants a nominee to have been a member of the bar for 12 years.

Yengich agrees, but doesn't hold his criticism to Cassell's lack of courtroom experience in Utah.

With a growing Hispanic community, Yengich said, "it would be nice to have a little diversity."

There is only one minority magistrate -- Samuel Alba -- and no minority judges on Utah's federal bench.

Yengich roundly criticized Hatch for making federal judge nominations without more input from local attorneys.

"I don't believe that belonging to the Federalist Society and espousing a conservative law-and-order agenda automatically qualifies you to be a federal judge, just because we have a conservative Republican president," Yengich said.

But Makan Delrahim, the Republican staff director for the Senate Judiciary committee, said Cassell has bipartisan support in Washington.

"This guy's been a litigator, worked at the justice department, and is one of the most prolific (legal) writers," Delrahim said. "And he's a Utahn."

Cassell clerked for former Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger and for current Justice Antonin Scalia when he served on a lower court.

Utah Defense Attorneys Oppose Nomination of Cassell To Federal Court

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

REV_00022232

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench is being opposed by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Ron Yengich, one of Utah's most prominent defense attorneys, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"The fact of the matter is that (President) Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance ... is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench - he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime," he said.

Cassell, an advocate of victims' rights and an opponent of requiring suspects be read their Miranda rights, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the university faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is listed as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released American Bar Association rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the rating committee found him highly qualified. A minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh called the minority opinion "irrational and bizarre."

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society.

Salt Lake defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

REV_00022233

Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association, said, "Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights. He's anti-defendant - it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

U. Prof's Bench Nomination Questioned; Cassell 's Road To Federal Bench Full Of Potholes

By Greg Burton and Michael Vigh
The Salt Lake Tribune
Friday, August 31, 2001

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench, already threatened by the U.S. Senate's political shift, now has been blindsided by a mixed review from the American Bar Association and a negative campaign by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Utah's most prominent defense attorney, Ron Yengich, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy.

Leahy seized agenda-setting power from U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on June 6, after Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords ended his affiliation with the Republican Party and gave Democrats a Senate majority and the right to name committee heads.

"The fact of the matter is that Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance, vis-a-vis John Q. Public, is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench -- he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime." Cassell, a high-profile advocate of victims' rights and one of the nation's harshest critics of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Miranda ruling, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

In taking aim at Cassell, Yengich also bemoaned the lack of racial diversity on the federal bench in Utah, which has no minority judges and just one minority magistrate, Samuel Alba.

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the U. faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court as either a plaintiff or defense attorney, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is, however, listed by the ABA as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Sen. Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

"This is a Utah seat and it should be filled by a Utah lawyer, someone who is steeped in Utah's history, not somebody who just comes in here and carpetbags into a federal judgeship," Yengich said. "And besides, we already have enough representation from the Scotch-Irish; maybe we should consider somebody whose name ends in a vowel."

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released ABA rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the 14-member rating committee found him highly qualified, a minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh blasted the minority opinion, calling it "irrational and bizarre."

The committee, which evaluates litigation, experience and temperament, does not release the numerical breakdown of its votes.

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society. Before his appointment to the Justice Department, Dinh investigated Hillary Rodham Clinton, Whitewater and served as a special counsel to U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici during the impeachment trial of President Clinton.

Salt Lake City defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. But Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

He said Yengich and Cassell once clashed over the latter's intervention in a criminal prosecution against a defendant represented by Yengich. "I'm only trying to make sense of the rating," Skordas said. "He has somehow gotten sideways with Ron."

Concern runs much deeper than a single personal quarrel, said Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association.

"Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights," Moffat said. "He's anti-defendant -- it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

Cassell has been a law professor at the U. for the past nine years. Before that, he spent three years as an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia, and he had previously worked for two years as an associate deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department.

In the early 1980s, he clerked for then-U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger and for Judge Antonin Scalia, who was then in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington and now is a Supreme Court justice.

Last year, Cassell withdrew his name as one of 14 nominees to the Utah Supreme Court so he could argue a Miranda case before the nation's highest court. As with most of his recent legal experience, Cassell was an intervening attorney for the conservative Washington Legal Foundation on the Miranda case, arguing to weaken certain rights established for the accused by the landmark case.

Cassell also represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing who wanted to attend Timothy McVeigh's Denver trial without jeopardizing their right to later testify about the bombing's impact on their lives.

Another U. professor, Michael McConnell, was nominated in May to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver. Given the current Senate makeup and McConnell's controversial views on the separation of church and state, his confirmation is also facing a challenge.

AR Joins 'Shake The Nation' Campaign, Says It's Time To Restore Sense To Judiciary; 'The Era Of Judicial Activism And Social Engineering Under The Color Of Law Must End,' Says Richard Lessner, Executive Director

The PR Newswire
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

For decades Americans effectively have been ruled by an out-of-control federal judiciary run by renegade activist judges who legislate from the bench, said Richard Lessner, Executive Director of American Renewal, the legislative action arm of Family Research Council.

Lessner's comments came today at a Washington press conference kicking off a campaign, backed by a broad coalition of conservative organizations, to "Shake the Nation." The campaign is aimed at influencing the U.S. Senate on behalf of President Bush's judicial nominations.

"President Bush has promised to nominate jurists who will respect the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine," Lessner said, "and resist the temptation to impose their own political opinions and policy desires upon the law -- often in flagrant disregard for the will of the American people. It is time to restore common sense and respect for the institutions of self-government to the federal judiciary. The era of judicial activism and social engineering under the color of law must end.

"For the better part of four decades, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court has imposed grotesque and fanciful interpretations upon the Constitution, amended the document by judicial fiat, and invented new rights out of whole cloth, the most egregious examples of which are Roe v. Wade, which fabricated a 'right' to abortion, and last year's Stenberg v. Carhart, which threw out 32 state laws against the odious practice of partial-birth abortion.

"The Shake the Nation campaign, which American Renewal enthusiastically supports, is meant to demonstrate to the members of the U.S. Senate that millions of Americans want to see fair and impartial jurists, not un-elected and unaccountable oligarchs, appointed to the federal courts and, ultimately, to the Supreme Court." American Renewal, the non-profit legislative action arm of Family Research Council, was founded in 1992 to educate the general public and cultural leaders about traditional American values and to promote the philosophy of America's founding fathers concerning the nature of ordered liberty.

Yes, Litmus-Test Judges

Joseph Califano, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

In considering presidential nominees for district and appellate judgeships, professional qualification alone should no longer be considered a ticket to a seat on the bench.

For years partisan gridlock and political pandering for campaign dollars have led to failures of the Congress and White House, whether Democratic or Republican, to legislate and execute laws on a variety of matters of urgent concern to our citizens. As a result, the federal courts have become increasingly powerful architects of public policy, and those who seek such power must be judged in the spotlight of that reality.

Years ago battles of the bench were pretty much limited to the Supreme Court: FDR's effort to stack the court with New Dealers, Johnson's attempt to name Abe Fortas chief justice, Nixon's push to seat Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell, and the in-your-face street fights over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas. Senate scrutiny was painstaking because the nine justices have such a potent voice in setting national policy. In those days, when it came to lower-court nominees, senators deferred to the wishes -- and litmus tests -- of their colleagues from the nominee's state and the president. Until Lyndon Johnson moved into the Oval Office, southern senators such as Mississippi's John Eastland, then Judiciary Committee chairman, insisted that presidents (including John F. Kennedy) nominate segregationist federal judges in their states. LBJ believed Kennedy had made a mistake in bowing to these senators. If there was to be a litmus test, it would be his.

As a result, in selecting judicial nominees, those of us who helped check them out and interviewed them nailed down their views on civil rights, desegregation and racial justice. LBJ's insistence on this cost him the friendship of his mentor, Georgia senator Richard Russell, over a federal appellate court seat.

The litmus test of recent years has focused on the pro-life or pro-choice views of nominees. It is as inconceivable that Ronald Reagan would have sent the Senate a decidedly pro-choice nominee as it was that Bill Clinton would have named a pro-life one.

Litmus tests are nothing new. What's new is the growing role of federal courts in crafting national policies once considered the exclusive preserve of the legislature and executive. As gridlock and big money have stymied the House and Senate and shaped the way laws are executed, concerned citizens have gone to court with petitions they once would have taken to legislators and executive appointees. As the federal courts have moved to fill the public policy vacuum, conservatives, liberals and a host of special interests have developed a sharp eye for those nominated to sit on the bench. So should the Senate.

The failure of Congress to enact sensible public health policies regarding tobacco to protect our children from nicotine pushers sent anti-smoking advocates to federal court to draft a settlement agreement with provisions that read like sections of a federal statute. While Republican and Democratic administrations and Congresses have been fiddling over a patients' bill of rights, patients have gone to federal court for relief likely to have at least as much impact on health maintenance organizations as anything the politicians at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue can cobble together.

Despairing of more effective legislative or executive action, many cities are asking federal district judges for damages and court orders to restrict the way manufacturers sell handguns and other firearms. Federal District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's final orders to remedy Microsoft's monopolization may have more to say about the development of the Internet economy that any president, House speaker or Senate majority leader.

When the executive does act, say on cigarette marketing or environmental protection, adversely affected businesses rush to court to overturn its actions and regulations. The big bankrollers of drug legalization like George Soros know the difference between a federal judge who can find a way to uphold state medical marijuana laws and one who will find that federal statutes preempt them.

Environmentalists, prison reformers and consumer advocates have learned that what can't be won in the legislature or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits.

Federal district judges are the lords of their realms, and unless they open the gates, it can be impossible for the litigating parties to get out once they enter the courtroom kingdom. These judges can hold cases for years, tying up businesses and regulating prisons, cities and schools with detailed court orders.

The battle over who fills the record number of judicial vacancies has taken on an importance unimaginable just a generation. Who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending, second-guessing the tax bill and whose fingers are poised to dip into the Social Security and Medicare cookie jars.

President Bush and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch understand this as surely as Democratic Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy and subcommittee Chairman Charles Schumer do. Both sides know that many of the individuals who fill these seats will have more power over tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities than the president or congressional leaders, and for a longer period of time.

That's why professional qualifications should be only the threshold step in the climb of judicial nominees to Senate confirmation. There is not sufficient time to examine each lower federal court nominee with the penetrating policy MRI reserved for Supreme Court justices. But the Senate must take enough time to give these men and women the kind of searching review their sweeping power to make national policies deserves.

Too Late For Arguello?

Rocky Mountain News
Saturday, September 1, 2001

If the Clinton administration had been a little less arrogant, Christine Arguello would probably already be a federal judge. She had not only superb qualifications, but the support of Colorado's two Republican senators, though she's a Democrat. But President Clinton mulishly insisted on pressing other nominations long after it was clear they would never go through, and so by the time he finally nominated Arguello for a vacant seat on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, in July 2000, the clock had almost run out on his term and the U.S. Senate never scheduled her confirmation hearings.

Now she's among nine candidates for federal judgeships whose names Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell submitted for President Bush's consideration. But the political reality is that presidents take political philosophy and party affiliation into account when nominating judges, and Arguello's best chance may have been squandered.

It's a pity.

It would be a bold act for Bush to break from tradition and nominate her. He shouldn't do it.

Judges And The Constitution; Everything Is Politics, Nothing Is Principle

By Roger Pilon
The National Review
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

REV_00022262

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute &
director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong — unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" — finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Judging Terry

Ex-GOP attack dog David Brock charges that Bush judicial nominee Terry Wooten gave him

REV_00022264

FBI files to discredit a key witness in the Clarence Thomas hearings. Will the Senate investigate?

It was the morning of Oct. 10, 1991, and Terry Wooten, the senior counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, was one of eight Senate staffers deposing Angela Wright over the telephone after she joined law professor Anita Hill in making allegations against their former boss at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

"Now, the term 'boobs' came up," Wooten asked Wright. "Is that a term that he used when he spoke to you?"

"No, actually that is a term that I am using," Wright replied. "Actually, what he said was, 'What size are your breasts?'" The question came up, she said, while they were attending a seminar for the EEOC. A decade after the grisly Thomas confirmation circus, Wooten is coming under scrutiny as a federal judge nominee for the U.S. District Court in South Carolina. And his chief accuser is onetime right-wing reporter David Brock, who claims that not only was Wooten busily trying to discredit Wright as a committee lawyer, but to reporters as well -- slipping Wright's FBI files to Brock, who was at work on his 1993 book "The Real Anita Hill."

But while Wooten called Brock's charges "absolutely 100 percent not true" during a Senate hearing this week, and Senate Democratic sources confide that the controversial Brock has enough credibility problems to keep his charges from sticking, Brock is standing by his story and welcomes an investigation into the matter.

In fact, he tells Salon that he's willing to open his files to the Judiciary Committee -- if anyone on the committee, that is, would call him. If the FBI file is there, it's conceivable, he allows, that Wooten's fingerprints could be on it, which may help settle the issue once and for all.

Wooten, like other nominees before him, will not talk to the press before a confirmation vote. The Justice Department did not return a call for comment.

Whether or not the Judiciary Committee decides to take Brock up on his offer or not, Wooten's role in the Thomas confirmation hearings -- the modern TV scandal spectacle that all others, from O.J. to Monica to Chandra, followed -- is surely worth consideration. It's certainly not unprecedented to require former political operatives, even ones with J.D.'s, to answer questions about their various partisan machinations before they assume positions of judicial prominence.

Such was the case in the solicitor-general nomination of conservative attorney Ted Olson, who played some (though murky) role in the American Spectator magazine's war against all things Clinton (even penning under a pseudonym the article "Criminal Laws Implicated by the Clinton Scandals: A Partial List," February 1994). The solicitor general job, meanwhile, supposedly has the grandiose purpose once described as "not to achieve victory, but to establish justice."

During the Thomas scandal, Wooten and Brock were clearly both pursuing victory, not justice.

REV_00022265

Brock was the Spectator's star reporter, and was all about kicking ass for the GOP, he says now. Wooten, he says, was a big help.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock wrote in an affidavit he faxed Aug. 24 to Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI files. This material included FBI interviews of Ms. Wright's former employers and former co-workers. With Mr. Wooten's agreement, I removed the FBI material from his office." In his book "The Real Anita Hill," Brock makes references to "an FBI file" in which Wright is referred to as "vengeful, angry and immature."

Asked by Leahy if he gave confidential FBI material to Brock, as alleged both in Brock's affidavit and in a story in the Los Angeles Times, Wooten forcefully asserted "that allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue. There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation."

But the question now has less to do with which person the committee believes -- the imperfect whistleblower Brock, or Wooten, currently a magistrate judge in Florence, S.C.-- than whether or not they'll take Brock's dare, and try to make sure, beyond any measure of doubt, that Wooten wasn't involved in a dirty tricks campaign against Wright. To many who followed the Thomas confirmation hearings, Angela Wright seemed as though she might have been the woman who ultimately could have sunk Thomas' nomination. That was certainly a concern of Wooten's.

Anita Hill, who had worked under Thomas at both the EEOC and the Department of Education, had been telling the Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., that Thomas had repeatedly asked her out and, after being rebuffed, began to "use work situations to discuss sex."

As she later testified, despite her consistent protestations that such talk made her uncomfortable, Thomas continued to talk about sex, from graphic pornographic films to tales of "his own sexual prowess."

"I began to be concerned that Clarence Thomas might take out his anger with me by degrading me or not giving me important assignments," she testified. "I also thought that he might find an excuse for dismissing me."

On Oct. 11, 1991, Thomas, infuriated, "categorically denied all of the allegations and denied that I ever attempted to date Anita Hill," saying, "our relationship remained both cordial and professional."

"He said/she said" is one thing. "He said/they said" is something else entirely. Wooten recognized the problem posed by Wright, who had never met Anita Hill and who told the committee that Thomas fired her after years of hitting on her and making inappropriate comments to her. As Biden told Thomas during the hearing, "If there's not a pattern, to me, that's," or legally significant.

REV_00022266

"Any time you had a second allegation, it was going to be a big problem," Wooten later told Mayer and Abramson.

During Wright's Oct. 10 deposition, Wooten took a somewhat aggressive tone with her, six times referring to her as having "come forward," as if politically motivated and eager to enter the fray, when in fact she'd been subpoenaed by the committee.

"I am sorry, Terry," she told Wooten at one point, "but I cannot answer, I cannot answer the questions if you are going to that I decided to 'come forward.' Obviously I did not come forward with anything. I am just answering questions that are just being asked of me."

Even after that point is made, however, Wooten continued to use the term. After Wright informed the Senate staffers that a friend of hers exists whom she had contemporaneously informed of Thomas' allegedly harassing behavior, Wooten said, "I think it may be helpful if you would check with that friend to see if he or she is willing to come forward."

"I will be glad to do that," Wright said. "But you keep using the term 'come forward.' I can pretty much assure you that this person is not going to 'come forward' or want to be very involved in this at all."

Wright ultimately told them how Thomas would "consistently pressure me to date him," how he hit on other women in the office, how he "made comments about my anatomy and ... about women's anatomy quite often," and how "at one point, Clarence Thomas came by my apartment at night, unannounced and uninvited."

Then, Wooten asked Wright about other employers with whom she's had a problem, citing the name of a former Wright boss whom Wright accused of racism. He then asked Wright, a registered Republican, "who you voted for in the '80, '84 and '88," a question she doesn't answer.

Wright was hardly a perfect witness, having been fired by Thomas six years beforehand for being "ineffective" and, Thomas claimed, for calling a fellow employee a "faggot," which Wright denied. Then-Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., later told the Washington Post that he was ready to put Wright through the wringer she wanted to put Thomas through. "I felt that when you are assassinating someone's character, you bring your own to the fore," Simpson said. "All I know is that if she wanted to expose herself to the committee with damaging information about Clarence Thomas ... I was fully ready to damage her character in the process."

In the end, curiously and to this day without a clear explanation, Wright was never called to testify before the Senate. Thus, a vast majority of the Senate remained ignorant of her story when Thomas was confirmed on Oct. 15. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the committee, told the Washington Post in 1994 that he had no idea Wright existed to offer a similar story to Hill's. Had she been permitted to testify, Simon said, she "could have toppled Thomas."

It is unclear what role Wooten played in keeping Wright from the microphone, but it clearly was not in Thomas' best interest to have her testify. And, Wooten has said, he did his part to keep her story under wraps. In an interview for the book "Strange Justice," by Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Wooten allowed that he even kept Hill's charges -- which had been privately divulged to the Senate Judiciary Committee staffers in August and September 1991 -- from his then-boss Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., as well as from other Republicans on the committee.

"Washington is the rumor mill of the world," he told them. "It didn't look like it was going to develop into any big deal. There was an effort to control the damage." Wooten has admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had a brief conversation with Brock after Thomas had been confirmed on Oct. 15. "Whether or not Wright's name came up, I can't say that it did or didn't," Wooten said. But if it did, "there was no confidential information that was released or that was made available to him." He had access to the confidential materials about Wright from both FBI and Judiciary Committee files, but it was information he only discussed with his boss, Thurmond, and a committee investigator, Duke Short.

Leahy based his questions on the Times story, since at the time of the hearing he hadn't yet even seen Brock's affidavit. Speaking to reporters after the hearing, Leahy seemed to imply that, barring any new information, the "he said/he said" would culminate in a Wooten confirmation. "Mr. Wooten is under oath and he understands very well the importance of being accurate," Leahy said. "I can't believe that he would lie before the committee."

Brock disagrees, and thinks the committee should investigate. "The issue is obviously resolvable by the committee if it wants to resolve it," Brock tells Salon. "One of us has already committed perjury." Brock says that the dispute "doesn't have to remain 'he said/he said.' In the context of some kind of investigation there are potential witnesses and potential evidence."

Such as? Brock says his lawyers have 10 to 12 boxes of material from his days with the American Spectator. If Wright's FBI file is there, and Brock is telling the truth, Wooten's fingerprints could at least lend his story some credence.

But the Judiciary Committee has yet to contact Brock. When the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday, Leahy and Hatch will confer and decide how to proceed with the Wooten nomination, says Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Established procedures on the committee would have the chief investigators for both the Democrats and the Republicans working together to get to the bottom of the charges, but Hatch and Leahy would have to agree to such cooperation. In May, before the Senate fell into Democratic hands, then-Chairman Hatch declined to invoke those procedures when Brock raised questions about the role played by Olson in the Spectator's "Arkansas Project," a multi-year, multimillion-dollar investigation into the lives of the Clintons. Despite serious questions about how forthcoming Olson was being before the Senate, he was confirmed on May 25 on a 51-47 vote.

Senate insiders predict a similar result with the Wooten nomination. It's not that members of the Judiciary Committee don't take Brock's charges seriously, a Senate Democratic source told Salon. But those who believe Anita Hill shouldn't get their hopes up for a showdown. There doesn't appear to be any evidence or witness who can corroborate Brock's story, the source says, apparently unaware that Brock believes he may have some evidence locked away with his lawyers.

But so far, only the liberal Alliance for Justice has issued any sort of public position against Wooten, saying in a statement that he's "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety" and calling for the "committee's bipartisan investigative staff (to) ... fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten." Moreover, the Senate source says, the credibility of the contradictory witnesses is at play. Wooten is a judge whom many of the committee members remember from when he worked as chief GOP counsel on the committee. Brock, on the other hand, has since renounced his political alliances and admitted lying in some of his past reporting.

In the August Talk magazine excerpt of his forthcoming book "Blinded by the Right," Brock wrote that he "lost my soul" printing things he knew to be untrue, both in favor of Thomas and against Hill, her collaborating witnesses and the rival book, "Strange Justice," by Mayer and Abramson. He also detailed his 1994 intimidation of Kaye Savage, a woman who'd supported Hill and her story, meeting her armed with "unverified embarrassing personal information ... that Thomas claimed had been raised against her in a divorce proceeding." Brock claimed he'd gotten the information from Thomas through an intermediary, former White House assistant counsel Mark Paoletta. "Thomas was playing dirty, and so was I," Brock wrote.

But Abramson, the New York Times Washington bureau chief, is quoted in the Washington Post as pointing out that the "problem with Brock's credibility" is that "once you admit you've knowingly written false things, how do you know when to believe what he writes?" Paoletta, now counsel to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has denied Brock's charges, while Thomas has refused comment.

The Bush administration has already begun to assault Brock's credibility. In the Los Angeles Times story, Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker ascribed fiduciary motives to Brock's allegation. "I think it would be unfortunate if the desire for book sales promulgated a charge involving a man's integrity, such as this might," Tucker said.

Brock insists that "the Wooten thing has no connection to any kind of book publication strategy." Still uncompleted, his book has been pushed back until November at the earliest and more likely January 2002, he says, and "the only relationship at all between Wooten and the book is in the process of writing the book obviously I've revisited this issue. The fact that Wooten was nominated to a judgeship is just a coincidence."

What about the fact that the Los Angeles Times apparently knew about Brock's affidavit long before Leahy did? Brock says that reporter David Savage had been contacting him for days, not the other way around, which Savage confirms. Brock hadn't been paying attention to Wooten's nomination, he says, until Savage -- informed by a third party that Brock had said Wooten had leaked him Wright's FBI file -- contacted him. After speaking to Savage, Brock faxed his affidavit to Leahy's Senate office late Friday, after 6:50 p.m. Leahy didn't receive the affidavit until after the Monday hearing.

Does there exist evidence in those files to prove Brock right and Wooten wrong? That remains to be answered, as do questions about how willing Leahy and the Senate Democrats are to engage in a confirmation fight.

Schumer Says Bush's Nominees Should Have To Persuade Senators To Give Them Judgeships

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

President Bush's judicial nominees should have to fight to get lifetime federal judgeships instead of senators having to find reasons to keep them off the federal bench once they're nominated, a top Judiciary Committee Democrat said Tuesday.

"Given the stakes at hand, it makes sense that the burden should rest with the nominees," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., head of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on judges. "We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case. It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same." Conservatives immediately accused Schumer of trying to find ways to keep Bush's nominees from being confirmed in the Democrat-controlled Senate by changing the traditional deference senators give most presidential nominees.

"Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee if he doesn't share their politics," said Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project. "In advocating a shifting of the burden of proof, Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee who doesn't answer their political questions."

The GOP has been complaining about the pace of approval of judicial nominations under the Democrat-controlled Senate. There are at least 107 vacancies in the federal court system, and there are 44 judicial nominations pending.

Only four judges have been confirmed by the Senate this year.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the subcommittee said he could see that very thing happening.

"The Democrats could say that they would vote against a nominee if he answers a question in a manner that shows he is conservative," he said. "On the other hand, the Democrats could say they would vote against a nominee if he refuses to answer their questions because he hasn't borne his burden."

Schumer, who held a hearing to explore whether nominees should have to prove they're worthy to get a lifetime judgeship, said forcing candidates to defend their nominations would net more qualified judges.

"Imagine a job interview where you walk in and it's up to the interviewer to either automatically hire you or find something in your past that disqualifies you," Schumer said. "Provided you sit there with your mouth shut, or at the most, voice meaningless platitudes, and as long as there's no major skeleton in your closet, you're a shoo-in for the job. Is that the best way to find the best person for the job? Of course not."

Republicans disagreed. "The most significant burden born by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's top Republican.

Added Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ken.: If nominees "are men and women of integrity, are qualified, have a judicial temperament, and will follow the Constitution and statutes as they are written and intended, then we should confirm them."

Bar Questions Bush Nominee About Ethics

By Courtney Kinney
The Kentucky Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

The American Bar Association is asking questions about the ethics of a Lexington lawyer whose nomination for a federal judgeship by President Bush could station him in Covington.

Prestonsburg lawyer Ned Pillersdorf said an attorney from the ABA called him earlier this week asking about Danny Reeves, 44, a judicial nominee who defended environmental lawsuits against Ashland Inc. in the 1990s.

The ABA caller wanted more information about a letter Pillersdorf wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee last month saying Reeves negotiated a settlement in 1997 that required several plaintiffs' lawyers to agree not to sue Ashland Inc. in the future with new clients.

The cases involved nearly 40 residents of Lawrence and Johnson counties who claimed Ashland harmed their health and property when it dredged up radioactive material in the Martha oil field.

Shortly before the cases were to go to trial, a confidential settlement agreement giving residents an undisclosed amount of money was signed.

A Kentucky Supreme Court rule says lawyers can't make part of a settlement any agreement that would keep another lawyer from practicing.

"I don't think this is a trivial ethical violation," said Pillersdorf, who is representing a second batch of residents suing Ashland, now based in Covington. "There's a reason the Supreme Court has that rule."

Because the settlement was confidential, it is not known whether such a provision was actually in the agreement. But Pillersdorf said the lawyers' deal not to sue again has been common knowledge.

"I'm kind of surprised to see Ashland disputing it. It's not been a secret," he said.

Shortly after the March 1997 settlement, several dozen more residents of the Martha area filed their own suits against Ashland Inc.

No lawyer from the first group of cases is handling cases for the second.

"It's quite odd," Pillersdorf said.

The ABA will not say whether it is investigating Reeves, said Boston lawyer Roscoe Trimmier Jr., chairman of the ABA standing committee on the federal judiciary. The ABA has been asked by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which confirms appointments, to review all judicial nominations.

Ashland spokesman Stan Lampe said Pillerdorf's allegation is bogus and no one at Ashland has been contacted by the ABA regarding Reeves.

"The charge is unwarranted and groundless," he said.

Reeves did not return calls made to his Lexington office.

He is one of three lawyers nominated by Bush to fill judicial vacancies in the Eastern District. One vacancy is in Covington.

The other nominees are attorney Karen Caldwell of Lexington and David Bunning, an assistant U.S. attorney in Covington and son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., of Southgate.

Hispanic Leaders Rally In Support of Judicial Nominee

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

Area Hispanic leaders are urging Colorado's senators to push for the appointment of Chief Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello as a U.S. District judge in Denver.

REV_00022253

Arguello was appointed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Clinton, but that appointment lapsed because the Senate never held confirmation hearings before Clinton left office.

She was among a group of nine people nominated for the federal judgeship by U.S. Sens. Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, both R-Colo. During a rally Thursday at the state Capitol, about 60 people including leaders of the Hispanic community demanded her appointment to the federal bench.

"There has never been a Latino appointed to a federal judgeship in Colorado," said Awilda Marquez, a lawyer and political activist. "One of the country's best and brightest attorneys, Christine Arguello, is a candidate for such a historic opportunity."

Allard said there might not be much he and Campbell can do. He said while President Bush has not made an announcement, the two most likely nominees are Robert Blackburn of Las Animas, a former state prosecutor who is now a state district judge; and Marcia Krieger of Littleton, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for Colorado.

"It's the president's decision at this point," Allard said. "We've done our part."

Allard said he supported Arguello's appointment to the federal appeals court during the Clinton administration.

"The bottom line is this president has made it fairly clear to our office that he's interested in putting Republicans in the judiciary," Allard said.

Arguello is a Democrat.

Marquez said Allard and Campbell still should urge Bush to appoint Arguello.

"They have the power to do something about it," she said. "The White House will do whatever the senators want."

Arguello, 46, graduated first in her class at the University of Colorado in Boulder and was the first Hispanic woman admitted to Harvard Law School.

Trial Lawyer Blasts Judge Nomination

Maria Titze
The Deseret News
Friday, August 31, 2001

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a Salt Lake City defense attorney is harshly critical of U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch's latest nomination to the federal bench -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

REV_00022254

"He's not a practicing Utah lawyer, and I believe that there are lots of trial lawyers in the state who deserve consideration of this judgeship," defense attorney Ron Yengich told the Deseret News.

Cassell practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the faculty at the U.

News of Yengich's letter to Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy came after the American Bar Association made public a mixed review of Cassell's qualifications. While the majority of the 14-member ABA rating committee called Cassell "well qualified," a few called him "not qualified."

Senior administration officials took the ABA to task Thursday, calling the mixed rating "bizarre," and hinting that the entire rating system was unfair.

Roscoe Trimmier Jr., head of the ABA rating committee, insisted the ratings aren't political, but said the committee normally wants a nominee to have been a member of the bar for 12 years.

Yengich agrees, but doesn't hold his criticism to Cassell's lack of courtroom experience in Utah.

With a growing Hispanic community, Yengich said, "it would be nice to have a little diversity."

There is only one minority magistrate -- Samuel Alba -- and no minority judges on Utah's federal bench.

Yengich roundly criticized Hatch for making federal judge nominations without more input from local attorneys.

"I don't believe that belonging to the Federalist Society and espousing a conservative law-and-order agenda automatically qualifies you to be a federal judge, just because we have a conservative Republican president," Yengich said.

But Makan Delrahim, the Republican staff director for the Senate Judiciary committee, said Cassell has bipartisan support in Washington.

"This guy's been a litigator, worked at the justice department, and is one of the most prolific (legal) writers," Delrahim said. "And he's a Utahn."

Cassell clerked for former Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger and for current Justice Antonin Scalia when he served on a lower court.

Utah Defense Attorneys Oppose Nomination of Cassell To Federal Court

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

REV_00022255

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench is being opposed by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Ron Yengich, one of Utah's most prominent defense attorneys, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"The fact of the matter is that (President) Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance ... is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench - he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime," he said.

Cassell, an advocate of victims' rights and an opponent of requiring suspects be read their Miranda rights, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the university faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is listed as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released American Bar Association rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the rating committee found him highly qualified. A minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh called the minority opinion "irrational and bizarre."

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society.

Salt Lake defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

REV_00022256

Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association, said, "Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights. He's anti-defendant - it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

U. Prof's Bench Nomination Questioned; Cassell 's Road To Federal Bench Full Of Potholes

By Greg Burton and Michael Vigh
The Salt Lake Tribune
Friday, August 31, 2001

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench, already threatened by the U.S. Senate's political shift, now has been blindsided by a mixed review from the American Bar Association and a negative campaign by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Utah's most prominent defense attorney, Ron Yengich, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy.

Leahy seized agenda-setting power from U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on June 6, after Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords ended his affiliation with the Republican Party and gave Democrats a Senate majority and the right to name committee heads.

"The fact of the matter is that Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance, vis-a-vis John Q. Public, is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench -- he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime." Cassell, a high-profile advocate of victims' rights and one of the nation's harshest critics of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Miranda ruling, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

In taking aim at Cassell, Yengich also bemoaned the lack of racial diversity on the federal bench in Utah, which has no minority judges and just one minority magistrate, Samuel Alba.

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the U. faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court as either a plaintiff or defense attorney, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is, however, listed by the ABA as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Sen. Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

"This is a Utah seat and it should be filled by a Utah lawyer, someone who is steeped in Utah's history, not somebody who just comes in here and carpetbags into a federal judgeship," Yengich said. "And besides, we already have enough representation from the Scotch-Irish; maybe we should consider somebody whose name ends in a vowel."

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released ABA rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the 14-member rating committee found him highly qualified, a minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh blasted the minority opinion, calling it "irrational and bizarre."

The committee, which evaluates litigation, experience and temperament, does not release the numerical breakdown of its votes.

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society. Before his appointment to the Justice Department, Dinh investigated Hillary Rodham Clinton, Whitewater and served as a special counsel to U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici during the impeachment trial of President Clinton.

Salt Lake City defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. But Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

He said Yengich and Cassell once clashed over the latter's intervention in a criminal prosecution against a defendant represented by Yengich. "I'm only trying to make sense of the rating," Skordas said. "He has somehow gotten sideways with Ron."

Concern runs much deeper than a single personal quarrel, said Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association.

"Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights," Moffat said. "He's anti-defendant -- it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

Cassell has been a law professor at the U. for the past nine years. Before that, he spent three years as an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia, and he had previously worked for two years as an associate deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department.

In the early 1980s, he clerked for then-U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger and for Judge Antonin Scalia, who was then in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington and now is a Supreme Court justice.

Last year, Cassell withdrew his name as one of 14 nominees to the Utah Supreme Court so he could argue a Miranda case before the nation's highest court. As with most of his recent legal experience, Cassell was an intervening attorney for the conservative Washington Legal Foundation on the Miranda case, arguing to weaken certain rights established for the accused by the landmark case.

Cassell also represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing who wanted to attend Timothy McVeigh's Denver trial without jeopardizing their right to later testify about the bombing's impact on their lives.

Another U. professor, Michael McConnell, was nominated in May to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver. Given the current Senate makeup and McConnell's controversial views on the separation of church and state, his confirmation is also facing a challenge.

AR Joins 'Shake The Nation' Campaign, Says It's Time To Restore Sense To Judiciary; 'The Era Of Judicial Activism And Social Engineering Under The Color Of Law Must End,' Says Richard Lessner, Executive Director

The PR Newswire
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

For decades Americans effectively have been ruled by an out-of-control federal judiciary run by renegade activist judges who legislate from the bench, said Richard Lessner, Executive Director of American Renewal, the legislative action arm of Family Research Council.

Lessner's comments came today at a Washington press conference kicking off a campaign, backed by a broad coalition of conservative organizations, to "Shake the Nation." The campaign is aimed at influencing the U.S. Senate on behalf of President Bush's judicial nominations.

"President Bush has promised to nominate jurists who will respect the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine," Lessner said, "and resist the temptation to impose their own political opinions and policy desires upon the law -- often in flagrant disregard for the will of the American people. It is time to restore common sense and respect for the institutions of self-government to the federal judiciary. The era of judicial activism and social engineering under the color of law must end.

"For the better part of four decades, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court has imposed grotesque and fanciful interpretations upon the Constitution, amended the document by judicial fiat, and invented new rights out of whole cloth, the most egregious examples of which are Roe v. Wade, which fabricated a 'right' to abortion, and last year's Stenberg v. Carhart, which threw out 32 state laws against the odious practice of partial-birth abortion.

"The Shake the Nation campaign, which American Renewal enthusiastically supports, is meant to demonstrate to the members of the U.S. Senate that millions of Americans want to see fair and impartial jurists, not un-elected and unaccountable oligarchs, appointed to the federal courts and, ultimately, to the Supreme Court." American Renewal, the non-profit legislative action arm of Family Research Council, was founded in 1992 to educate the general public and cultural leaders about traditional American values and to promote the philosophy of America's founding fathers concerning the nature of ordered liberty.

Yes, Litmus-Test Judges

Joseph Califano, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

In considering presidential nominees for district and appellate judgeships, professional qualification alone should no longer be considered a ticket to a seat on the bench.

For years partisan gridlock and political pandering for campaign dollars have led to failures of the Congress and White House, whether Democratic or Republican, to legislate and execute laws on a variety of matters of urgent concern to our citizens. As a result, the federal courts have become increasingly powerful architects of public policy, and those who seek such power must be judged in the spotlight of that reality.

Years ago battles of the bench were pretty much limited to the Supreme Court: FDR's effort to stack the court with New Dealers, Johnson's attempt to name Abe Fortas chief justice, Nixon's push to seat Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell, and the in-your-face street fights over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas. Senate scrutiny was painstaking because the nine justices have such a potent voice in setting national policy. In those days, when it came to lower-court nominees, senators deferred to the wishes -- and litmus tests -- of their colleagues from the nominee's state and the president. Until Lyndon Johnson moved into the Oval Office, southern senators such as Mississippi's John Eastland, then Judiciary Committee chairman, insisted that presidents (including John F. Kennedy) nominate segregationist federal judges in their states. LBJ believed Kennedy had made a mistake in bowing to these senators. If there was to be a litmus test, it would be his.

As a result, in selecting judicial nominees, those of us who helped check them out and interviewed them nailed down their views on civil rights, desegregation and racial justice. LBJ's insistence on this cost him the friendship of his mentor, Georgia senator Richard Russell, over a federal appellate court seat.

The litmus test of recent years has focused on the pro-life or pro-choice views of nominees. It is as inconceivable that Ronald Reagan would have sent the Senate a decidedly pro-choice nominee as it was that Bill Clinton would have named a pro-life one.

Litmus tests are nothing new. What's new is the growing role of federal courts in crafting national policies once considered the exclusive preserve of the legislature and executive. As gridlock and big money have stymied the House and Senate and shaped the way laws are executed, concerned citizens have gone to court with petitions they once would have taken to legislators and executive appointees. As the federal courts have moved to fill the public policy vacuum, conservatives, liberals and a host of special interests have developed a sharp eye for those nominated to sit on the bench. So should the Senate.

The failure of Congress to enact sensible public health policies regarding tobacco to protect our children from nicotine pushers sent anti-smoking advocates to federal court to draft a settlement agreement with provisions that read like sections of a federal statute. While Republican and Democratic administrations and Congresses have been fiddling over a patients' bill of rights, patients have gone to federal court for relief likely to have at least as much impact on health maintenance organizations as anything the politicians at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue can cobble together.

Despairing of more effective legislative or executive action, many cities are asking federal district judges for damages and court orders to restrict the way manufacturers sell handguns and other firearms. Federal District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's final orders to remedy Microsoft's monopolization may have more to say about the development of the Internet economy that any president, House speaker or Senate majority leader.

When the executive does act, say on cigarette marketing or environmental protection, adversely affected businesses rush to court to overturn its actions and regulations. The big bankrollers of drug legalization like George Soros know the difference between a federal judge who can find a way to uphold state medical marijuana laws and one who will find that federal statutes preempt them.

Environmentalists, prison reformers and consumer advocates have learned that what can't be won in the legislature or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits.

Federal district judges are the lords of their realms, and unless they open the gates, it can be impossible for the litigating parties to get out once they enter the courtroom kingdom. These judges can hold cases for years, tying up businesses and regulating prisons, cities and schools with detailed court orders.

The battle over who fills the record number of judicial vacancies has taken on an importance unimaginable just a generation. Who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending, second-guessing the tax bill and whose fingers are poised to dip into the Social Security and Medicare cookie jars.

President Bush and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch understand this as surely as Democratic Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy and subcommittee Chairman Charles Schumer do. Both sides know that many of the individuals who fill these seats will have more power over tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities than the president or congressional leaders, and for a longer period of time.

That's why professional qualifications should be only the threshold step in the climb of judicial nominees to Senate confirmation. There is not sufficient time to examine each lower federal court nominee with the penetrating policy MRI reserved for Supreme Court justices. But the Senate must take enough time to give these men and women the kind of searching review their sweeping power to make national policies deserves.

Too Late For Arguello?

Rocky Mountain News
Saturday, September 1, 2001

If the Clinton administration had been a little less arrogant, Christine Arguello would probably already be a federal judge. She had not only superb qualifications, but the support of Colorado's two Republican senators, though she's a Democrat. But President Clinton mulishly insisted on pressing other nominations long after it was clear they would never go through, and so by the time he finally nominated Arguello for a vacant seat on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, in July 2000, the clock had almost run out on his term and the U.S. Senate never scheduled her confirmation hearings.

Now she's among nine candidates for federal judgeships whose names Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell submitted for President Bush's consideration. But the political reality is that presidents take political philosophy and party affiliation into account when nominating judges, and Arguello's best chance may have been squandered.

It's a pity.

It would be a bold act for Bush to break from tradition and nominate her. He shouldn't do it.

Judges And The Constitution; Everything Is Politics, Nothing Is Principle

By Roger Pilon
The National Review
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

REV_00022300

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute &
director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong — unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" — finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Judging Terry

Ex-GOP attack dog David Brock charges that Bush judicial nominee Terry Wooten gave him

REV_00022302

FBI files to discredit a key witness in the Clarence Thomas hearings. Will the Senate investigate?

It was the morning of Oct. 10, 1991, and Terry Wooten, the senior counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, was one of eight Senate staffers deposing Angela Wright over the telephone after she joined law professor Anita Hill in making allegations against their former boss at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

"Now, the term 'boobs' came up," Wooten asked Wright. "Is that a term that he used when he spoke to you?"

"No, actually that is a term that I am using," Wright replied. "Actually, what he said was, 'What size are your breasts?'" The question came up, she said, while they were attending a seminar for the EEOC. A decade after the grisly Thomas confirmation circus, Wooten is coming under scrutiny as a federal judge nominee for the U.S. District Court in South Carolina. And his chief accuser is onetime right-wing reporter David Brock, who claims that not only was Wooten busily trying to discredit Wright as a committee lawyer, but to reporters as well -- slipping Wright's FBI files to Brock, who was at work on his 1993 book "The Real Anita Hill."

But while Wooten called Brock's charges "absolutely 100 percent not true" during a Senate hearing this week, and Senate Democratic sources confide that the controversial Brock has enough credibility problems to keep his charges from sticking, Brock is standing by his story and welcomes an investigation into the matter.

In fact, he tells Salon that he's willing to open his files to the Judiciary Committee -- if anyone on the committee, that is, would call him. If the FBI file is there, it's conceivable, he allows, that Wooten's fingerprints could be on it, which may help settle the issue once and for all.

Wooten, like other nominees before him, will not talk to the press before a confirmation vote. The Justice Department did not return a call for comment.

Whether or not the Judiciary Committee decides to take Brock up on his offer or not, Wooten's role in the Thomas confirmation hearings -- the modern TV scandal spectacle that all others, from O.J. to Monica to Chandra, followed -- is surely worth consideration. It's certainly not unprecedented to require former political operatives, even ones with J.D.'s, to answer questions about their various partisan machinations before they assume positions of judicial prominence.

Such was the case in the solicitor-general nomination of conservative attorney Ted Olson, who played some (though murky) role in the American Spectator magazine's war against all things Clinton (even penning under a pseudonym the article "Criminal Laws Implicated by the Clinton Scandals: A Partial List," February 1994). The solicitor general job, meanwhile, supposedly has the grandiose purpose once described as "not to achieve victory, but to establish justice."

During the Thomas scandal, Wooten and Brock were clearly both pursuing victory, not justice.

REV_00022303

Brock was the Spectator's star reporter, and was all about kicking ass for the GOP, he says now. Wooten, he says, was a big help.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock wrote in an affidavit he faxed Aug. 24 to Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI files. This material included FBI interviews of Ms. Wright's former employers and former co-workers. With Mr. Wooten's agreement, I removed the FBI material from his office." In his book "The Real Anita Hill," Brock makes references to "an FBI file" in which Wright is referred to as "vengeful, angry and immature."

Asked by Leahy if he gave confidential FBI material to Brock, as alleged both in Brock's affidavit and in a story in the Los Angeles Times, Wooten forcefully asserted "that allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue. There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation."

But the question now has less to do with which person the committee believes -- the imperfect whistleblower Brock, or Wooten, currently a magistrate judge in Florence, S.C.-- than whether or not they'll take Brock's dare, and try to make sure, beyond any measure of doubt, that Wooten wasn't involved in a dirty tricks campaign against Wright. To many who followed the Thomas confirmation hearings, Angela Wright seemed as though she might have been the woman who ultimately could have sunk Thomas' nomination. That was certainly a concern of Wooten's.

Anita Hill, who had worked under Thomas at both the EEOC and the Department of Education, had been telling the Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., that Thomas had repeatedly asked her out and, after being rebuffed, began to "use work situations to discuss sex."

As she later testified, despite her consistent protestations that such talk made her uncomfortable, Thomas continued to talk about sex, from graphic pornographic films to tales of "his own sexual prowess."

"I began to be concerned that Clarence Thomas might take out his anger with me by degrading me or not giving me important assignments," she testified. "I also thought that he might find an excuse for dismissing me."

On Oct. 11, 1991, Thomas, infuriated, "categorically denied all of the allegations and denied that I ever attempted to date Anita Hill," saying, "our relationship remained both cordial and professional."

"He said/she said" is one thing. "He said/they said" is something else entirely. Wooten recognized the problem posed by Wright, who had never met Anita Hill and who told the committee that Thomas fired her after years of hitting on her and making inappropriate comments to her. As Biden told Thomas during the hearing, "If there's not a pattern, to me, that's," or legally significant.

REV_00022304

"Any time you had a second allegation, it was going to be a big problem," Wooten later told Mayer and Abramson.

During Wright's Oct. 10 deposition, Wooten took a somewhat aggressive tone with her, six times referring to her as having "come forward," as if politically motivated and eager to enter the fray, when in fact she'd been subpoenaed by the committee.

"I am sorry, Terry," she told Wooten at one point, "but I cannot answer, I cannot answer the questions if you are going to that I decided to 'come forward.' Obviously I did not come forward with anything. I am just answering questions that are just being asked of me."

Even after that point is made, however, Wooten continued to use the term. After Wright informed the Senate staffers that a friend of hers exists whom she had contemporaneously informed of Thomas' allegedly harassing behavior, Wooten said, "I think it may be helpful if you would check with that friend to see if he or she is willing to come forward."

"I will be glad to do that," Wright said. "But you keep using the term 'come forward.' I can pretty much assure you that this person is not going to 'come forward' or want to be very involved in this at all."

Wright ultimately told them how Thomas would "consistently pressure me to date him," how he hit on other women in the office, how he "made comments about my anatomy and ... about women's anatomy quite often," and how "at one point, Clarence Thomas came by my apartment at night, unannounced and uninvited."

Then, Wooten asked Wright about other employers with whom she's had a problem, citing the name of a former Wright boss whom Wright accused of racism. He then asked Wright, a registered Republican, "who you voted for in the '80, '84 and '88," a question she doesn't answer.

Wright was hardly a perfect witness, having been fired by Thomas six years beforehand for being "ineffective" and, Thomas claimed, for calling a fellow employee a "faggot," which Wright denied. Then-Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., later told the Washington Post that he was ready to put Wright through the wringer she wanted to put Thomas through. "I felt that when you are assassinating someone's character, you bring your own to the fore," Simpson said. "All I know is that if she wanted to expose herself to the committee with damaging information about Clarence Thomas ... I was fully ready to damage her character in the process."

In the end, curiously and to this day without a clear explanation, Wright was never called to testify before the Senate. Thus, a vast majority of the Senate remained ignorant of her story when Thomas was confirmed on Oct. 15. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the committee, told the Washington Post in 1994 that he had no idea Wright existed to offer a similar story to Hill's. Had she been permitted to testify, Simon said, she "could have toppled Thomas."

It is unclear what role Wooten played in keeping Wright from the microphone, but it clearly was not in Thomas' best interest to have her testify. And, Wooten has said, he did his part to keep her story under wraps. In an interview for the book "Strange Justice," by Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Wooten allowed that he even kept Hill's charges -- which had been privately divulged to the Senate Judiciary Committee staffers in August and September 1991 -- from his then-boss Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., as well as from other Republicans on the committee.

"Washington is the rumor mill of the world," he told them. "It didn't look like it was going to develop into any big deal. There was an effort to control the damage." Wooten has admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had a brief conversation with Brock after Thomas had been confirmed on Oct. 15. "Whether or not Wright's name came up, I can't say that it did or didn't," Wooten said. But if it did, "there was no confidential information that was released or that was made available to him." He had access to the confidential materials about Wright from both FBI and Judiciary Committee files, but it was information he only discussed with his boss, Thurmond, and a committee investigator, Duke Short.

Leahy based his questions on the Times story, since at the time of the hearing he hadn't yet even seen Brock's affidavit. Speaking to reporters after the hearing, Leahy seemed to imply that, barring any new information, the "he said/he said" would culminate in a Wooten confirmation. "Mr. Wooten is under oath and he understands very well the importance of being accurate," Leahy said. "I can't believe that he would lie before the committee."

Brock disagrees, and thinks the committee should investigate. "The issue is obviously resolvable by the committee if it wants to resolve it," Brock tells Salon. "One of us has already committed perjury." Brock says that the dispute "doesn't have to remain 'he said/he said.' In the context of some kind of investigation there are potential witnesses and potential evidence."

Such as? Brock says his lawyers have 10 to 12 boxes of material from his days with the American Spectator. If Wright's FBI file is there, and Brock is telling the truth, Wooten's fingerprints could at least lend his story some credence.

But the Judiciary Committee has yet to contact Brock. When the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday, Leahy and Hatch will confer and decide how to proceed with the Wooten nomination, says Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Established procedures on the committee would have the chief investigators for both the Democrats and the Republicans working together to get to the bottom of the charges, but Hatch and Leahy would have to agree to such cooperation. In May, before the Senate fell into Democratic hands, then-Chairman Hatch declined to invoke those procedures when Brock raised questions about the role played by Olson in the Spectator's "Arkansas Project," a multi-year, multimillion-dollar investigation into the lives of the Clintons. Despite serious questions about how forthcoming Olson was being before the Senate, he was confirmed on May 25 on a 51-47 vote.

Senate insiders predict a similar result with the Wooten nomination. It's not that members of the Judiciary Committee don't take Brock's charges seriously, a Senate Democratic source told Salon. But those who believe Anita Hill shouldn't get their hopes up for a showdown. There doesn't appear to be any evidence or witness who can corroborate Brock's story, the source says, apparently unaware that Brock believes he may have some evidence locked away with his lawyers.

But so far, only the liberal Alliance for Justice has issued any sort of public position against Wooten, saying in a statement that he's "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety" and calling for the "committee's bipartisan investigative staff (to) ... fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten." Moreover, the Senate source says, the credibility of the contradictory witnesses is at play. Wooten is a judge whom many of the committee members remember from when he worked as chief GOP counsel on the committee. Brock, on the other hand, has since renounced his political alliances and admitted lying in some of his past reporting.

In the August Talk magazine excerpt of his forthcoming book "Blinded by the Right," Brock wrote that he "lost my soul" printing things he knew to be untrue, both in favor of Thomas and against Hill, her collaborating witnesses and the rival book, "Strange Justice," by Mayer and Abramson. He also detailed his 1994 intimidation of Kaye Savage, a woman who'd supported Hill and her story, meeting her armed with "unverified embarrassing personal information ... that Thomas claimed had been raised against her in a divorce proceeding." Brock claimed he'd gotten the information from Thomas through an intermediary, former White House assistant counsel Mark Paoletta. "Thomas was playing dirty, and so was I," Brock wrote.

But Abramson, the New York Times Washington bureau chief, is quoted in the Washington Post as pointing out that the "problem with Brock's credibility" is that "once you admit you've knowingly written false things, how do you know when to believe what he writes?" Paoletta, now counsel to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has denied Brock's charges, while Thomas has refused comment.

The Bush administration has already begun to assault Brock's credibility. In the Los Angeles Times story, Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker ascribed fiduciary motives to Brock's allegation. "I think it would be unfortunate if the desire for book sales promulgated a charge involving a man's integrity, such as this might," Tucker said.

Brock insists that "the Wooten thing has no connection to any kind of book publication strategy." Still uncompleted, his book has been pushed back until November at the earliest and more likely January 2002, he says, and "the only relationship at all between Wooten and the book is in the process of writing the book obviously I've revisited this issue. The fact that Wooten was nominated to a judgeship is just a coincidence."

What about the fact that the Los Angeles Times apparently knew about Brock's affidavit long before Leahy did? Brock says that reporter David Savage had been contacting him for days, not the other way around, which Savage confirms. Brock hadn't been paying attention to Wooten's nomination, he says, until Savage -- informed by a third party that Brock had said Wooten had leaked him Wright's FBI file -- contacted him. After speaking to Savage, Brock faxed his affidavit to Leahy's Senate office late Friday, after 6:50 p.m. Leahy didn't receive the affidavit until after the Monday hearing.

Does there exist evidence in those files to prove Brock right and Wooten wrong? That remains to be answered, as do questions about how willing Leahy and the Senate Democrats are to engage in a confirmation fight.

Schumer Says Bush's Nominees Should Have To Persuade Senators To Give Them Judgeships

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

President Bush's judicial nominees should have to fight to get lifetime federal judgeships instead of senators having to find reasons to keep them off the federal bench once they're nominated, a top Judiciary Committee Democrat said Tuesday.

"Given the stakes at hand, it makes sense that the burden should rest with the nominees," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., head of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on judges. "We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case. It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same." Conservatives immediately accused Schumer of trying to find ways to keep Bush's nominees from being confirmed in the Democrat-controlled Senate by changing the traditional deference senators give most presidential nominees.

"Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee if he doesn't share their politics," said Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project. "In advocating a shifting of the burden of proof, Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee who doesn't answer their political questions."

The GOP has been complaining about the pace of approval of judicial nominations under the Democrat-controlled Senate. There are at least 107 vacancies in the federal court system, and there are 44 judicial nominations pending.

Only four judges have been confirmed by the Senate this year.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the subcommittee said he could see that very thing happening.

"The Democrats could say that they would vote against a nominee if he answers a question in a manner that shows he is conservative," he said. "On the other hand, the Democrats could say they would vote against a nominee if he refuses to answer their questions because he hasn't borne his burden."

Schumer, who held a hearing to explore whether nominees should have to prove they're worthy to get a lifetime judgeship, said forcing candidates to defend their nominations would net more qualified judges.

"Imagine a job interview where you walk in and it's up to the interviewer to either automatically hire you or find something in your past that disqualifies you," Schumer said. "Provided you sit there with your mouth shut, or at the most, voice meaningless platitudes, and as long as there's no major skeleton in your closet, you're a shoo-in for the job. Is that the best way to find the best person for the job? Of course not."

Republicans disagreed. "The most significant burden born by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's top Republican.

Added Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ken.: If nominees "are men and women of integrity, are qualified, have a judicial temperament, and will follow the Constitution and statutes as they are written and intended, then we should confirm them."

Bar Questions Bush Nominee About Ethics

By Courtney Kinney
The Kentucky Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

The American Bar Association is asking questions about the ethics of a Lexington lawyer whose nomination for a federal judgeship by President Bush could station him in Covington.

Prestonsburg lawyer Ned Pillersdorf said an attorney from the ABA called him earlier this week asking about Danny Reeves, 44, a judicial nominee who defended environmental lawsuits against Ashland Inc. in the 1990s.

The ABA caller wanted more information about a letter Pillersdorf wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee last month saying Reeves negotiated a settlement in 1997 that required several plaintiffs' lawyers to agree not to sue Ashland Inc. in the future with new clients.

The cases involved nearly 40 residents of Lawrence and Johnson counties who claimed Ashland harmed their health and property when it dredged up radioactive material in the Martha oil field.

Shortly before the cases were to go to trial, a confidential settlement agreement giving residents an undisclosed amount of money was signed.

REV_00022290

A Kentucky Supreme Court rule says lawyers can't make part of a settlement any agreement that would keep another lawyer from practicing.

"I don't think this is a trivial ethical violation," said Pillersdorf, who is representing a second batch of residents suing Ashland, now based in Covington. "There's a reason the Supreme Court has that rule."

Because the settlement was confidential, it is not known whether such a provision was actually in the agreement. But Pillersdorf said the lawyers' deal not to sue again has been common knowledge.

"I'm kind of surprised to see Ashland disputing it. It's not been a secret," he said.

Shortly after the March 1997 settlement, several dozen more residents of the Martha area filed their own suits against Ashland Inc.

No lawyer from the first group of cases is handling cases for the second.

"It's quite odd," Pillersdorf said.

The ABA will not say whether it is investigating Reeves, said Boston lawyer Roscoe Trimmier Jr., chairman of the ABA standing committee on the federal judiciary. The ABA has been asked by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which confirms appointments, to review all judicial nominations.

Ashland spokesman Stan Lampe said Pillerdorf's allegation is bogus and no one at Ashland has been contacted by the ABA regarding Reeves.

"The charge is unwarranted and groundless," he said.

Reeves did not return calls made to his Lexington office.

He is one of three lawyers nominated by Bush to fill judicial vacancies in the Eastern District. One vacancy is in Covington.

The other nominees are attorney Karen Caldwell of Lexington and David Bunning, an assistant U.S. attorney in Covington and son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., of Southgate.

Hispanic Leaders Rally In Support of Judicial Nominee

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

Area Hispanic leaders are urging Colorado's senators to push for the appointment of Chief Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello as a U.S. District judge in Denver.

REV_00022291

Arguello was appointed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Clinton, but that appointment lapsed because the Senate never held confirmation hearings before Clinton left office.

She was among a group of nine people nominated for the federal judgeship by U.S. Sens. Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, both R-Colo. During a rally Thursday at the state Capitol, about 60 people including leaders of the Hispanic community demanded her appointment to the federal bench.

"There has never been a Latino appointed to a federal judgeship in Colorado," said Awilda Marquez, a lawyer and political activist. "One of the country's best and brightest attorneys, Christine Arguello, is a candidate for such a historic opportunity."

Allard said there might not be much he and Campbell can do. He said while President Bush has not made an announcement, the two most likely nominees are Robert Blackburn of Las Animas, a former state prosecutor who is now a state district judge; and Marcia Krieger of Littleton, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for Colorado.

"It's the president's decision at this point," Allard said. "We've done our part."

Allard said he supported Arguello's appointment to the federal appeals court during the Clinton administration.

"The bottom line is this president has made it fairly clear to our office that he's interested in putting Republicans in the judiciary," Allard said.

Arguello is a Democrat.

Marquez said Allard and Campbell still should urge Bush to appoint Arguello.

"They have the power to do something about it," she said. "The White House will do whatever the senators want."

Arguello, 46, graduated first in her class at the University of Colorado in Boulder and was the first Hispanic woman admitted to Harvard Law School.

Trial Lawyer Blasts Judge Nomination

Maria Titze
The Deseret News
Friday, August 31, 2001

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a Salt Lake City defense attorney is harshly critical of U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch's latest nomination to the federal bench -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

REV_00022292

"He's not a practicing Utah lawyer, and I believe that there are lots of trial lawyers in the state who deserve consideration of this judgeship," defense attorney Ron Yengich told the Deseret News.

Cassell practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the faculty at the U.

News of Yengich's letter to Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy came after the American Bar Association made public a mixed review of Cassell's qualifications. While the majority of the 14-member ABA rating committee called Cassell "well qualified," a few called him "not qualified."

Senior administration officials took the ABA to task Thursday, calling the mixed rating "bizarre," and hinting that the entire rating system was unfair.

Roscoe Trimmier Jr., head of the ABA rating committee, insisted the ratings aren't political, but said the committee normally wants a nominee to have been a member of the bar for 12 years.

Yengich agrees, but doesn't hold his criticism to Cassell's lack of courtroom experience in Utah.

With a growing Hispanic community, Yengich said, "it would be nice to have a little diversity."

There is only one minority magistrate -- Samuel Alba -- and no minority judges on Utah's federal bench.

Yengich roundly criticized Hatch for making federal judge nominations without more input from local attorneys.

"I don't believe that belonging to the Federalist Society and espousing a conservative law-and-order agenda automatically qualifies you to be a federal judge, just because we have a conservative Republican president," Yengich said.

But Makan Delrahim, the Republican staff director for the Senate Judiciary committee, said Cassell has bipartisan support in Washington.

"This guy's been a litigator, worked at the justice department, and is one of the most prolific (legal) writers," Delrahim said. "And he's a Utahn."

Cassell clerked for former Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger and for current Justice Antonin Scalia when he served on a lower court.

Utah Defense Attorneys Oppose Nomination of Cassell To Federal Court

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

REV_00022293

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench is being opposed by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Ron Yengich, one of Utah's most prominent defense attorneys, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"The fact of the matter is that (President) Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance ... is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench - he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime," he said.

Cassell, an advocate of victims' rights and an opponent of requiring suspects be read their Miranda rights, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the university faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is listed as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released American Bar Association rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the rating committee found him highly qualified. A minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh called the minority opinion "irrational and bizarre."

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society.

Salt Lake defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

REV_00022294

Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association, said, "Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights. He's anti-defendant - it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

U. Prof's Bench Nomination Questioned; Cassell 's Road To Federal Bench Full Of Potholes

By Greg Burton and Michael Vigh
The Salt Lake Tribune
Friday, August 31, 2001

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench, already threatened by the U.S. Senate's political shift, now has been blindsided by a mixed review from the American Bar Association and a negative campaign by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Utah's most prominent defense attorney, Ron Yengich, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy.

Leahy seized agenda-setting power from U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on June 6, after Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords ended his affiliation with the Republican Party and gave Democrats a Senate majority and the right to name committee heads.

"The fact of the matter is that Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance, vis-a-vis John Q. Public, is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench -- he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime." Cassell, a high-profile advocate of victims' rights and one of the nation's harshest critics of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Miranda ruling, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

In taking aim at Cassell, Yengich also bemoaned the lack of racial diversity on the federal bench in Utah, which has no minority judges and just one minority magistrate, Samuel Alba.

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the U. faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court as either a plaintiff or defense attorney, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is, however, listed by the ABA as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Sen. Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

"This is a Utah seat and it should be filled by a Utah lawyer, someone who is steeped in Utah's history, not somebody who just comes in here and carpetbags into a federal judgeship," Yengich said. "And besides, we already have enough representation from the Scotch-Irish; maybe we should consider somebody whose name ends in a vowel."

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released ABA rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the 14-member rating committee found him highly qualified, a minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh blasted the minority opinion, calling it "irrational and bizarre."

The committee, which evaluates litigation, experience and temperament, does not release the numerical breakdown of its votes.

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society. Before his appointment to the Justice Department, Dinh investigated Hillary Rodham Clinton, Whitewater and served as a special counsel to U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici during the impeachment trial of President Clinton.

Salt Lake City defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. But Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

He said Yengich and Cassell once clashed over the latter's intervention in a criminal prosecution against a defendant represented by Yengich. "I'm only trying to make sense of the rating," Skordas said. "He has somehow gotten sideways with Ron."

Concern runs much deeper than a single personal quarrel, said Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association.

"Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights," Moffat said. "He's anti-defendant -- it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

Cassell has been a law professor at the U. for the past nine years. Before that, he spent three years as an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia, and he had previously worked for two years as an associate deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department.

In the early 1980s, he clerked for then-U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger and for Judge Antonin Scalia, who was then in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington and now is a Supreme Court justice.

Last year, Cassell withdrew his name as one of 14 nominees to the Utah Supreme Court so he could argue a Miranda case before the nation's highest court. As with most of his recent legal experience, Cassell was an intervening attorney for the conservative Washington Legal Foundation on the Miranda case, arguing to weaken certain rights established for the accused by the landmark case.

Cassell also represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing who wanted to attend Timothy McVeigh's Denver trial without jeopardizing their right to later testify about the bombing's impact on their lives.

Another U. professor, Michael McConnell, was nominated in May to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver. Given the current Senate makeup and McConnell's controversial views on the separation of church and state, his confirmation is also facing a challenge.

AR Joins 'Shake The Nation' Campaign, Says It's Time To Restore Sense To Judiciary; 'The Era Of Judicial Activism And Social Engineering Under The Color Of Law Must End,' Says Richard Lessner, Executive Director

The PR Newswire
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

For decades Americans effectively have been ruled by an out-of-control federal judiciary run by renegade activist judges who legislate from the bench, said Richard Lessner, Executive Director of American Renewal, the legislative action arm of Family Research Council.

Lessner's comments came today at a Washington press conference kicking off a campaign, backed by a broad coalition of conservative organizations, to "Shake the Nation." The campaign is aimed at influencing the U.S. Senate on behalf of President Bush's judicial nominations.

"President Bush has promised to nominate jurists who will respect the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine," Lessner said, "and resist the temptation to impose their own political opinions and policy desires upon the law -- often in flagrant disregard for the will of the American people. It is time to restore common sense and respect for the institutions of self-government to the federal judiciary. The era of judicial activism and social engineering under the color of law must end.

"For the better part of four decades, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court has imposed grotesque and fanciful interpretations upon the Constitution, amended the document by judicial fiat, and invented new rights out of whole cloth, the most egregious examples of which are Roe v. Wade, which fabricated a 'right' to abortion, and last year's Stenberg v. Carhart, which threw out 32 state laws against the odious practice of partial-birth abortion.

"The Shake the Nation campaign, which American Renewal enthusiastically supports, is meant to demonstrate to the members of the U.S. Senate that millions of Americans want to see fair and impartial jurists, not un-elected and unaccountable oligarchs, appointed to the federal courts and, ultimately, to the Supreme Court." American Renewal, the non-profit legislative action arm of Family Research Council, was founded in 1992 to educate the general public and cultural leaders about traditional American values and to promote the philosophy of America's founding fathers concerning the nature of ordered liberty.

Yes, Litmus-Test Judges

Joseph Califano, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

In considering presidential nominees for district and appellate judgeships, professional qualification alone should no longer be considered a ticket to a seat on the bench.

For years partisan gridlock and political pandering for campaign dollars have led to failures of the Congress and White House, whether Democratic or Republican, to legislate and execute laws on a variety of matters of urgent concern to our citizens. As a result, the federal courts have become increasingly powerful architects of public policy, and those who seek such power must be judged in the spotlight of that reality.

Years ago battles of the bench were pretty much limited to the Supreme Court: FDR's effort to stack the court with New Dealers, Johnson's attempt to name Abe Fortas chief justice, Nixon's push to seat Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell, and the in-your-face street fights over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas. Senate scrutiny was painstaking because the nine justices have such a potent voice in setting national policy. In those days, when it came to lower-court nominees, senators deferred to the wishes -- and litmus tests -- of their colleagues from the nominee's state and the president. Until Lyndon Johnson moved into the Oval Office, southern senators such as Mississippi's John Eastland, then Judiciary Committee chairman, insisted that presidents (including John F. Kennedy) nominate segregationist federal judges in their states. LBJ believed Kennedy had made a mistake in bowing to these senators. If there was to be a litmus test, it would be his.

As a result, in selecting judicial nominees, those of us who helped check them out and interviewed them nailed down their views on civil rights, desegregation and racial justice. LBJ's insistence on this cost him the friendship of his mentor, Georgia senator Richard Russell, over a federal appellate court seat.

The litmus test of recent years has focused on the pro-life or pro-choice views of nominees. It is as inconceivable that Ronald Reagan would have sent the Senate a decidedly pro-choice nominee as it was that Bill Clinton would have named a pro-life one.

Litmus tests are nothing new. What's new is the growing role of federal courts in crafting national policies once considered the exclusive preserve of the legislature and executive. As gridlock and big money have stymied the House and Senate and shaped the way laws are executed, concerned citizens have gone to court with petitions they once would have taken to legislators and executive appointees. As the federal courts have moved to fill the public policy vacuum, conservatives, liberals and a host of special interests have developed a sharp eye for those nominated to sit on the bench. So should the Senate.

The failure of Congress to enact sensible public health policies regarding tobacco to protect our children from nicotine pushers sent anti-smoking advocates to federal court to draft a settlement agreement with provisions that read like sections of a federal statute. While Republican and Democratic administrations and Congresses have been fiddling over a patients' bill of rights, patients have gone to federal court for relief likely to have at least as much impact on health maintenance organizations as anything the politicians at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue can cobble together.

Despairing of more effective legislative or executive action, many cities are asking federal district judges for damages and court orders to restrict the way manufacturers sell handguns and other firearms. Federal District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's final orders to remedy Microsoft's monopolization may have more to say about the development of the Internet economy that any president, House speaker or Senate majority leader.

When the executive does act, say on cigarette marketing or environmental protection, adversely affected businesses rush to court to overturn its actions and regulations. The big bankrollers of drug legalization like George Soros know the difference between a federal judge who can find a way to uphold state medical marijuana laws and one who will find that federal statutes preempt them.

Environmentalists, prison reformers and consumer advocates have learned that what can't be won in the legislature or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits.

Federal district judges are the lords of their realms, and unless they open the gates, it can be impossible for the litigating parties to get out once they enter the courtroom kingdom. These judges can hold cases for years, tying up businesses and regulating prisons, cities and schools with detailed court orders.

The battle over who fills the record number of judicial vacancies has taken on an importance unimaginable just a generation. Who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending, second-guessing the tax bill and whose fingers are poised to dip into the Social Security and Medicare cookie jars.

President Bush and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch understand this as surely as Democratic Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy and subcommittee Chairman Charles Schumer do. Both sides know that many of the individuals who fill these seats will have more power over tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities than the president or congressional leaders, and for a longer period of time.

That's why professional qualifications should be only the threshold step in the climb of judicial nominees to Senate confirmation. There is not sufficient time to examine each lower federal court nominee with the penetrating policy MRI reserved for Supreme Court justices. But the Senate must take enough time to give these men and women the kind of searching review their sweeping power to make national policies deserves.

Too Late For Arguello?

Rocky Mountain News
Saturday, September 1, 2001

If the Clinton administration had been a little less arrogant, Christine Arguello would probably already be a federal judge. She had not only superb qualifications, but the support of Colorado's two Republican senators, though she's a Democrat. But President Clinton mulishly insisted on pressing other nominations long after it was clear they would never go through, and so by the time he finally nominated Arguello for a vacant seat on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, in July 2000, the clock had almost run out on his term and the U.S. Senate never scheduled her confirmation hearings.

Now she's among nine candidates for federal judgeships whose names Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell submitted for President Bush's consideration. But the political reality is that presidents take political philosophy and party affiliation into account when nominating judges, and Arguello's best chance may have been squandered.

It's a pity.

It would be a bold act for Bush to break from tradition and nominate her. He shouldn't do it.

Judges And The Constitution; Everything Is Politics, Nothing Is Principle

By Roger Pilon
The National Review

REV_00022323

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute & director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong — unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" — finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Judging Terry

Ex-GOP attack dog David Brock charges that Bush judicial nominee Terry Wooten gave him

REV_00022325

FBI files to discredit a key witness in the Clarence Thomas hearings. Will the Senate investigate?

It was the morning of Oct. 10, 1991, and Terry Wooten, the senior counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, was one of eight Senate staffers deposing Angela Wright over the telephone after she joined law professor Anita Hill in making allegations against their former boss at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

"Now, the term 'boobs' came up," Wooten asked Wright. "Is that a term that he used when he spoke to you?"

"No, actually that is a term that I am using," Wright replied. "Actually, what he said was, 'What size are your breasts?'" The question came up, she said, while they were attending a seminar for the EEOC. A decade after the grisly Thomas confirmation circus, Wooten is coming under scrutiny as a federal judge nominee for the U.S. District Court in South Carolina. And his chief accuser is onetime right-wing reporter David Brock, who claims that not only was Wooten busily trying to discredit Wright as a committee lawyer, but to reporters as well -- slipping Wright's FBI files to Brock, who was at work on his 1993 book "The Real Anita Hill."

But while Wooten called Brock's charges "absolutely 100 percent not true" during a Senate hearing this week, and Senate Democratic sources confide that the controversial Brock has enough credibility problems to keep his charges from sticking, Brock is standing by his story and welcomes an investigation into the matter.

In fact, he tells Salon that he's willing to open his files to the Judiciary Committee -- if anyone on the committee, that is, would call him. If the FBI file is there, it's conceivable, he allows, that Wooten's fingerprints could be on it, which may help settle the issue once and for all.

Wooten, like other nominees before him, will not talk to the press before a confirmation vote. The Justice Department did not return a call for comment.

Whether or not the Judiciary Committee decides to take Brock up on his offer or not, Wooten's role in the Thomas confirmation hearings -- the modern TV scandal spectacle that all others, from O.J. to Monica to Chandra, followed -- is surely worth consideration. It's certainly not unprecedented to require former political operatives, even ones with J.D.'s, to answer questions about their various partisan machinations before they assume positions of judicial prominence.

Such was the case in the solicitor-general nomination of conservative attorney Ted Olson, who played some (though murky) role in the American Spectator magazine's war against all things Clinton (even penning under a pseudonym the article "Criminal Laws Implicated by the Clinton Scandals: A Partial List," February 1994). The solicitor general job, meanwhile, supposedly has the grandiose purpose once described as "not to achieve victory, but to establish justice."

During the Thomas scandal, Wooten and Brock were clearly both pursuing victory, not justice.

REV_00022326

Brock was the Spectator's star reporter, and was all about kicking ass for the GOP, he says now. Wooten, he says, was a big help.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock wrote in an affidavit he faxed Aug. 24 to Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI files. This material included FBI interviews of Ms. Wright's former employers and former co-workers. With Mr. Wooten's agreement, I removed the FBI material from his office." In his book "The Real Anita Hill," Brock makes references to "an FBI file" in which Wright is referred to as "vengeful, angry and immature."

Asked by Leahy if he gave confidential FBI material to Brock, as alleged both in Brock's affidavit and in a story in the Los Angeles Times, Wooten forcefully asserted "that allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue. There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation."

But the question now has less to do with which person the committee believes -- the imperfect whistleblower Brock, or Wooten, currently a magistrate judge in Florence, S.C.-- than whether or not they'll take Brock's dare, and try to make sure, beyond any measure of doubt, that Wooten wasn't involved in a dirty tricks campaign against Wright. To many who followed the Thomas confirmation hearings, Angela Wright seemed as though she might have been the woman who ultimately could have sunk Thomas' nomination. That was certainly a concern of Wooten's.

Anita Hill, who had worked under Thomas at both the EEOC and the Department of Education, had been telling the Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., that Thomas had repeatedly asked her out and, after being rebuffed, began to "use work situations to discuss sex."

As she later testified, despite her consistent protestations that such talk made her uncomfortable, Thomas continued to talk about sex, from graphic pornographic films to tales of "his own sexual prowess."

"I began to be concerned that Clarence Thomas might take out his anger with me by degrading me or not giving me important assignments," she testified. "I also thought that he might find an excuse for dismissing me."

On Oct. 11, 1991, Thomas, infuriated, "categorically denied all of the allegations and denied that I ever attempted to date Anita Hill," saying, "our relationship remained both cordial and professional."

"He said/she said" is one thing. "He said/they said" is something else entirely. Wooten recognized the problem posed by Wright, who had never met Anita Hill and who told the committee that Thomas fired her after years of hitting on her and making inappropriate comments to her. As Biden told Thomas during the hearing, "If there's not a pattern, to me, that's," or legally significant.

REV_00022327

"Any time you had a second allegation, it was going to be a big problem," Wooten later told Mayer and Abramson.

During Wright's Oct. 10 deposition, Wooten took a somewhat aggressive tone with her, six times referring to her as having "come forward," as if politically motivated and eager to enter the fray, when in fact she'd been subpoenaed by the committee.

"I am sorry, Terry," she told Wooten at one point, "but I cannot answer, I cannot answer the questions if you are going to that I decided to 'come forward.' Obviously I did not come forward with anything. I am just answering questions that are just being asked of me."

Even after that point is made, however, Wooten continued to use the term. After Wright informed the Senate staffers that a friend of hers exists whom she had contemporaneously informed of Thomas' allegedly harassing behavior, Wooten said, "I think it may be helpful if you would check with that friend to see if he or she is willing to come forward."

"I will be glad to do that," Wright said. "But you keep using the term 'come forward.' I can pretty much assure you that this person is not going to 'come forward' or want to be very involved in this at all."

Wright ultimately told them how Thomas would "consistently pressure me to date him," how he hit on other women in the office, how he "made comments about my anatomy and ... about women's anatomy quite often," and how "at one point, Clarence Thomas came by my apartment at night, unannounced and uninvited."

Then, Wooten asked Wright about other employers with whom she's had a problem, citing the name of a former Wright boss whom Wright accused of racism. He then asked Wright, a registered Republican, "who you voted for in the '80, '84 and '88," a question she doesn't answer.

Wright was hardly a perfect witness, having been fired by Thomas six years beforehand for being "ineffective" and, Thomas claimed, for calling a fellow employee a "faggot," which Wright denied. Then-Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., later told the Washington Post that he was ready to put Wright through the wringer she wanted to put Thomas through. "I felt that when you are assassinating someone's character, you bring your own to the fore," Simpson said. "All I know is that if she wanted to expose herself to the committee with damaging information about Clarence Thomas ... I was fully ready to damage her character in the process."

In the end, curiously and to this day without a clear explanation, Wright was never called to testify before the Senate. Thus, a vast majority of the Senate remained ignorant of her story when Thomas was confirmed on Oct. 15. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the committee, told the Washington Post in 1994 that he had no idea Wright existed to offer a similar story to Hill's. Had she been permitted to testify, Simon said, she "could have toppled Thomas."

It is unclear what role Wooten played in keeping Wright from the microphone, but it clearly was not in Thomas' best interest to have her testify. And, Wooten has said, he did his part to keep her story under wraps. In an interview for the book "Strange Justice," by Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Wooten allowed that he even kept Hill's charges -- which had been privately divulged to the Senate Judiciary Committee staffers in August and September 1991 -- from his then-boss Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., as well as from other Republicans on the committee.

"Washington is the rumor mill of the world," he told them. "It didn't look like it was going to develop into any big deal. There was an effort to control the damage." Wooten has admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had a brief conversation with Brock after Thomas had been confirmed on Oct. 15. "Whether or not Wright's name came up, I can't say that it did or didn't," Wooten said. But if it did, "there was no confidential information that was released or that was made available to him." He had access to the confidential materials about Wright from both FBI and Judiciary Committee files, but it was information he only discussed with his boss, Thurmond, and a committee investigator, Duke Short.

Leahy based his questions on the Times story, since at the time of the hearing he hadn't yet even seen Brock's affidavit. Speaking to reporters after the hearing, Leahy seemed to imply that, barring any new information, the "he said/he said" would culminate in a Wooten confirmation. "Mr. Wooten is under oath and he understands very well the importance of being accurate," Leahy said. "I can't believe that he would lie before the committee."

Brock disagrees, and thinks the committee should investigate. "The issue is obviously resolvable by the committee if it wants to resolve it," Brock tells Salon. "One of us has already committed perjury." Brock says that the dispute "doesn't have to remain 'he said/he said.' In the context of some kind of investigation there are potential witnesses and potential evidence."

Such as? Brock says his lawyers have 10 to 12 boxes of material from his days with the American Spectator. If Wright's FBI file is there, and Brock is telling the truth, Wooten's fingerprints could at least lend his story some credence.

But the Judiciary Committee has yet to contact Brock. When the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday, Leahy and Hatch will confer and decide how to proceed with the Wooten nomination, says Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Established procedures on the committee would have the chief investigators for both the Democrats and the Republicans working together to get to the bottom of the charges, but Hatch and Leahy would have to agree to such cooperation. In May, before the Senate fell into Democratic hands, then-Chairman Hatch declined to invoke those procedures when Brock raised questions about the role played by Olson in the Spectator's "Arkansas Project," a multi-year, multimillion-dollar investigation into the lives of the Clintons. Despite serious questions about how forthcoming Olson was being before the Senate, he was confirmed on May 25 on a 51-47 vote.

Senate insiders predict a similar result with the Wooten nomination. It's not that members of the Judiciary Committee don't take Brock's charges seriously, a Senate Democratic source told Salon. But those who believe Anita Hill shouldn't get their hopes up for a showdown. There doesn't appear to be any evidence or witness who can corroborate Brock's story, the source says, apparently unaware that Brock believes he may have some evidence locked away with his lawyers.

But so far, only the liberal Alliance for Justice has issued any sort of public position against Wooten, saying in a statement that he's "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety" and calling for the "committee's bipartisan investigative staff (to) ... fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten." Moreover, the Senate source says, the credibility of the contradictory witnesses is at play. Wooten is a judge whom many of the committee members remember from when he worked as chief GOP counsel on the committee. Brock, on the other hand, has since renounced his political alliances and admitted lying in some of his past reporting.

In the August Talk magazine excerpt of his forthcoming book "Blinded by the Right," Brock wrote that he "lost my soul" printing things he knew to be untrue, both in favor of Thomas and against Hill, her collaborating witnesses and the rival book, "Strange Justice," by Mayer and Abramson. He also detailed his 1994 intimidation of Kaye Savage, a woman who'd supported Hill and her story, meeting her armed with "unverified embarrassing personal information ... that Thomas claimed had been raised against her in a divorce proceeding." Brock claimed he'd gotten the information from Thomas through an intermediary, former White House assistant counsel Mark Paoletta. "Thomas was playing dirty, and so was I," Brock wrote.

But Abramson, the New York Times Washington bureau chief, is quoted in the Washington Post as pointing out that the "problem with Brock's credibility" is that "once you admit you've knowingly written false things, how do you know when to believe what he writes?" Paoletta, now counsel to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has denied Brock's charges, while Thomas has refused comment.

The Bush administration has already begun to assault Brock's credibility. In the Los Angeles Times story, Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker ascribed fiduciary motives to Brock's allegation. "I think it would be unfortunate if the desire for book sales promulgated a charge involving a man's integrity, such as this might," Tucker said.

Brock insists that "the Wooten thing has no connection to any kind of book publication strategy." Still uncompleted, his book has been pushed back until November at the earliest and more likely January 2002, he says, and "the only relationship at all between Wooten and the book is in the process of writing the book obviously I've revisited this issue. The fact that Wooten was nominated to a judgeship is just a coincidence."

What about the fact that the Los Angeles Times apparently knew about Brock's affidavit long before Leahy did? Brock says that reporter David Savage had been contacting him for days, not the other way around, which Savage confirms. Brock hadn't been paying attention to Wooten's nomination, he says, until Savage -- informed by a third party that Brock had said Wooten had leaked him Wright's FBI file -- contacted him. After speaking to Savage, Brock faxed his affidavit to Leahy's Senate office late Friday, after 6:50 p.m. Leahy didn't receive the affidavit until after the Monday hearing.

Does there exist evidence in those files to prove Brock right and Wooten wrong? That remains to be answered, as do questions about how willing Leahy and the Senate Democrats are to engage in a confirmation fight.

Schumer Says Bush's Nominees Should Have To Persuade Senators To Give Them Judgeships

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

President Bush's judicial nominees should have to fight to get lifetime federal judgeships instead of senators having to find reasons to keep them off the federal bench once they're nominated, a top Judiciary Committee Democrat said Tuesday.

"Given the stakes at hand, it makes sense that the burden should rest with the nominees," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., head of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on judges. "We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case. It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same." Conservatives immediately accused Schumer of trying to find ways to keep Bush's nominees from being confirmed in the Democrat-controlled Senate by changing the traditional deference senators give most presidential nominees.

"Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee if he doesn't share their politics," said Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project. "In advocating a shifting of the burden of proof, Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee who doesn't answer their political questions."

The GOP has been complaining about the pace of approval of judicial nominations under the Democrat-controlled Senate. There are at least 107 vacancies in the federal court system, and there are 44 judicial nominations pending.

Only four judges have been confirmed by the Senate this year.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the subcommittee said he could see that very thing happening.

"The Democrats could say that they would vote against a nominee if he answers a question in a manner that shows he is conservative," he said. "On the other hand, the Democrats could say they would vote against a nominee if he refuses to answer their questions because he hasn't borne his burden."

Schumer, who held a hearing to explore whether nominees should have to prove they're worthy to get a lifetime judgeship, said forcing candidates to defend their nominations would net more qualified judges.

"Imagine a job interview where you walk in and it's up to the interviewer to either automatically hire you or find something in your past that disqualifies you," Schumer said. "Provided you sit there with your mouth shut, or at the most, voice meaningless platitudes, and as long as there's no major skeleton in your closet, you're a shoo-in for the job. Is that the best way to find the best person for the job? Of course not."

Republicans disagreed. "The most significant burden born by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's top Republican.

Added Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ken.: If nominees "are men and women of integrity, are qualified, have a judicial temperament, and will follow the Constitution and statutes as they are written and intended, then we should confirm them."

Bar Questions Bush Nominee About Ethics

By Courtney Kinney
The Kentucky Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

The American Bar Association is asking questions about the ethics of a Lexington lawyer whose nomination for a federal judgeship by President Bush could station him in Covington.

Prestonsburg lawyer Ned Pillersdorf said an attorney from the ABA called him earlier this week asking about Danny Reeves, 44, a judicial nominee who defended environmental lawsuits against Ashland Inc. in the 1990s.

The ABA caller wanted more information about a letter Pillersdorf wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee last month saying Reeves negotiated a settlement in 1997 that required several plaintiffs' lawyers to agree not to sue Ashland Inc. in the future with new clients.

The cases involved nearly 40 residents of Lawrence and Johnson counties who claimed Ashland harmed their health and property when it dredged up radioactive material in the Martha oil field.

Shortly before the cases were to go to trial, a confidential settlement agreement giving residents an undisclosed amount of money was signed.

REV_00022313

A Kentucky Supreme Court rule says lawyers can't make part of a settlement any agreement that would keep another lawyer from practicing.

"I don't think this is a trivial ethical violation," said Pillersdorf, who is representing a second batch of residents suing Ashland, now based in Covington. "There's a reason the Supreme Court has that rule."

Because the settlement was confidential, it is not known whether such a provision was actually in the agreement. But Pillersdorf said the lawyers' deal not to sue again has been common knowledge.

"I'm kind of surprised to see Ashland disputing it. It's not been a secret," he said.

Shortly after the March 1997 settlement, several dozen more residents of the Martha area filed their own suits against Ashland Inc.

No lawyer from the first group of cases is handling cases for the second.

"It's quite odd," Pillersdorf said.

The ABA will not say whether it is investigating Reeves, said Boston lawyer Roscoe Trimmier Jr., chairman of the ABA standing committee on the federal judiciary. The ABA has been asked by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which confirms appointments, to review all judicial nominations.

Ashland spokesman Stan Lampe said Pillerdorf's allegation is bogus and no one at Ashland has been contacted by the ABA regarding Reeves.

"The charge is unwarranted and groundless," he said.

Reeves did not return calls made to his Lexington office.

He is one of three lawyers nominated by Bush to fill judicial vacancies in the Eastern District. One vacancy is in Covington.

The other nominees are attorney Karen Caldwell of Lexington and David Bunning, an assistant U.S. attorney in Covington and son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., of Southgate.

Hispanic Leaders Rally In Support of Judicial Nominee

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

Area Hispanic leaders are urging Colorado's senators to push for the appointment of Chief Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello as a U.S. District judge in Denver.

REV_00022314

Arguello was appointed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Clinton, but that appointment lapsed because the Senate never held confirmation hearings before Clinton left office.

She was among a group of nine people nominated for the federal judgeship by U.S. Sens. Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, both R-Colo. During a rally Thursday at the state Capitol, about 60 people including leaders of the Hispanic community demanded her appointment to the federal bench.

"There has never been a Latino appointed to a federal judgeship in Colorado," said Awilda Marquez, a lawyer and political activist. "One of the country's best and brightest attorneys, Christine Arguello, is a candidate for such a historic opportunity."

Allard said there might not be much he and Campbell can do. He said while President Bush has not made an announcement, the two most likely nominees are Robert Blackburn of Las Animas, a former state prosecutor who is now a state district judge; and Marcia Krieger of Littleton, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for Colorado.

"It's the president's decision at this point," Allard said. "We've done our part."

Allard said he supported Arguello's appointment to the federal appeals court during the Clinton administration.

"The bottom line is this president has made it fairly clear to our office that he's interested in putting Republicans in the judiciary," Allard said.

Arguello is a Democrat.

Marquez said Allard and Campbell still should urge Bush to appoint Arguello.

"They have the power to do something about it," she said. "The White House will do whatever the senators want."

Arguello, 46, graduated first in her class at the University of Colorado in Boulder and was the first Hispanic woman admitted to Harvard Law School.

Trial Lawyer Blasts Judge Nomination

Maria Titze
The Deseret News
Friday, August 31, 2001

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a Salt Lake City defense attorney is harshly critical of U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch's latest nomination to the federal bench -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

REV_00022315

"He's not a practicing Utah lawyer, and I believe that there are lots of trial lawyers in the state who deserve consideration of this judgeship," defense attorney Ron Yengich told the Deseret News.

Cassell practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the faculty at the U.

News of Yengich's letter to Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy came after the American Bar Association made public a mixed review of Cassell's qualifications. While the majority of the 14-member ABA rating committee called Cassell "well qualified," a few called him "not qualified."

Senior administration officials took the ABA to task Thursday, calling the mixed rating "bizarre," and hinting that the entire rating system was unfair.

Roscoe Trimmier Jr., head of the ABA rating committee, insisted the ratings aren't political, but said the committee normally wants a nominee to have been a member of the bar for 12 years.

Yengich agrees, but doesn't hold his criticism to Cassell's lack of courtroom experience in Utah.

With a growing Hispanic community, Yengich said, "it would be nice to have a little diversity."

There is only one minority magistrate -- Samuel Alba -- and no minority judges on Utah's federal bench.

Yengich roundly criticized Hatch for making federal judge nominations without more input from local attorneys.

"I don't believe that belonging to the Federalist Society and espousing a conservative law-and-order agenda automatically qualifies you to be a federal judge, just because we have a conservative Republican president," Yengich said.

But Makan Delrahim, the Republican staff director for the Senate Judiciary committee, said Cassell has bipartisan support in Washington.

"This guy's been a litigator, worked at the justice department, and is one of the most prolific (legal) writers," Delrahim said. "And he's a Utahn."

Cassell clerked for former Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger and for current Justice Antonin Scalia when he served on a lower court.

Utah Defense Attorneys Oppose Nomination of Cassell To Federal Court

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

REV_00022316

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench is being opposed by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Ron Yengich, one of Utah's most prominent defense attorneys, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"The fact of the matter is that (President) Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance ... is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench - he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime," he said.

Cassell, an advocate of victims' rights and an opponent of requiring suspects be read their Miranda rights, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the university faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is listed as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released American Bar Association rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the rating committee found him highly qualified. A minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh called the minority opinion "irrational and bizarre."

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society.

Salt Lake defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

REV_00022317

Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association, said, "Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights. He's anti-defendant - it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

U. Prof's Bench Nomination Questioned; Cassell 's Road To Federal Bench Full Of Potholes

By Greg Burton and Michael Vigh
The Salt Lake Tribune
Friday, August 31, 2001

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench, already threatened by the U.S. Senate's political shift, now has been blindsided by a mixed review from the American Bar Association and a negative campaign by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Utah's most prominent defense attorney, Ron Yengich, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy.

Leahy seized agenda-setting power from U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on June 6, after Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords ended his affiliation with the Republican Party and gave Democrats a Senate majority and the right to name committee heads.

"The fact of the matter is that Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance, vis-a-vis John Q. Public, is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench -- he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime." Cassell, a high-profile advocate of victims' rights and one of the nation's harshest critics of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Miranda ruling, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

In taking aim at Cassell, Yengich also bemoaned the lack of racial diversity on the federal bench in Utah, which has no minority judges and just one minority magistrate, Samuel Alba.

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the U. faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court as either a plaintiff or defense attorney, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is, however, listed by the ABA as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Sen. Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

"This is a Utah seat and it should be filled by a Utah lawyer, someone who is steeped in Utah's history, not somebody who just comes in here and carpetbags into a federal judgeship," Yengich said. "And besides, we already have enough representation from the Scotch-Irish; maybe we should consider somebody whose name ends in a vowel."

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released ABA rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the 14-member rating committee found him highly qualified, a minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh blasted the minority opinion, calling it "irrational and bizarre."

The committee, which evaluates litigation, experience and temperament, does not release the numerical breakdown of its votes.

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society. Before his appointment to the Justice Department, Dinh investigated Hillary Rodham Clinton, Whitewater and served as a special counsel to U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici during the impeachment trial of President Clinton.

Salt Lake City defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. But Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

He said Yengich and Cassell once clashed over the latter's intervention in a criminal prosecution against a defendant represented by Yengich. "I'm only trying to make sense of the rating," Skordas said. "He has somehow gotten sideways with Ron."

Concern runs much deeper than a single personal quarrel, said Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association.

"Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights," Moffat said. "He's anti-defendant -- it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

Cassell has been a law professor at the U. for the past nine years. Before that, he spent three years as an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia, and he had previously worked for two years as an associate deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department.

In the early 1980s, he clerked for then-U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger and for Judge Antonin Scalia, who was then in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington and now is a Supreme Court justice.

Last year, Cassell withdrew his name as one of 14 nominees to the Utah Supreme Court so he could argue a Miranda case before the nation's highest court. As with most of his recent legal experience, Cassell was an intervening attorney for the conservative Washington Legal Foundation on the Miranda case, arguing to weaken certain rights established for the accused by the landmark case.

Cassell also represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing who wanted to attend Timothy McVeigh's Denver trial without jeopardizing their right to later testify about the bombing's impact on their lives.

Another U. professor, Michael McConnell, was nominated in May to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver. Given the current Senate makeup and McConnell's controversial views on the separation of church and state, his confirmation is also facing a challenge.

AR Joins 'Shake The Nation' Campaign, Says It's Time To Restore Sense To Judiciary; 'The Era Of Judicial Activism And Social Engineering Under The Color Of Law Must End,' Says Richard Lessner, Executive Director

The PR Newswire
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

For decades Americans effectively have been ruled by an out-of-control federal judiciary run by renegade activist judges who legislate from the bench, said Richard Lessner, Executive Director of American Renewal, the legislative action arm of Family Research Council.

Lessner's comments came today at a Washington press conference kicking off a campaign, backed by a broad coalition of conservative organizations, to "Shake the Nation." The campaign is aimed at influencing the U.S. Senate on behalf of President Bush's judicial nominations.

"President Bush has promised to nominate jurists who will respect the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine," Lessner said, "and resist the temptation to impose their own political opinions and policy desires upon the law -- often in flagrant disregard for the will of the American people. It is time to restore common sense and respect for the institutions of self-government to the federal judiciary. The era of judicial activism and social engineering under the color of law must end.

"For the better part of four decades, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court has imposed grotesque and fanciful interpretations upon the Constitution, amended the document by judicial fiat, and invented new rights out of whole cloth, the most egregious examples of which are Roe v. Wade, which fabricated a 'right' to abortion, and last year's Stenberg v. Carhart, which threw out 32 state laws against the odious practice of partial-birth abortion.

"The Shake the Nation campaign, which American Renewal enthusiastically supports, is meant to demonstrate to the members of the U.S. Senate that millions of Americans want to see fair and impartial jurists, not un-elected and unaccountable oligarchs, appointed to the federal courts and, ultimately, to the Supreme Court." American Renewal, the non-profit legislative action arm of Family Research Council, was founded in 1992 to educate the general public and cultural leaders about traditional American values and to promote the philosophy of America's founding fathers concerning the nature of ordered liberty.

Yes, Litmus-Test Judges

Joseph Califano, Jr.
The Washington Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

In considering presidential nominees for district and appellate judgeships, professional qualification alone should no longer be considered a ticket to a seat on the bench.

For years partisan gridlock and political pandering for campaign dollars have led to failures of the Congress and White House, whether Democratic or Republican, to legislate and execute laws on a variety of matters of urgent concern to our citizens. As a result, the federal courts have become increasingly powerful architects of public policy, and those who seek such power must be judged in the spotlight of that reality.

Years ago battles of the bench were pretty much limited to the Supreme Court: FDR's effort to stack the court with New Dealers, Johnson's attempt to name Abe Fortas chief justice, Nixon's push to seat Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell, and the in-your-face street fights over Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas. Senate scrutiny was painstaking because the nine justices have such a potent voice in setting national policy. In those days, when it came to lower-court nominees, senators deferred to the wishes -- and litmus tests -- of their colleagues from the nominee's state and the president. Until Lyndon Johnson moved into the Oval Office, southern senators such as Mississippi's John Eastland, then Judiciary Committee chairman, insisted that presidents (including John F. Kennedy) nominate segregationist federal judges in their states. LBJ believed Kennedy had made a mistake in bowing to these senators. If there was to be a litmus test, it would be his.

As a result, in selecting judicial nominees, those of us who helped check them out and interviewed them nailed down their views on civil rights, desegregation and racial justice. LBJ's insistence on this cost him the friendship of his mentor, Georgia senator Richard Russell, over a federal appellate court seat.

The litmus test of recent years has focused on the pro-life or pro-choice views of nominees. It is as inconceivable that Ronald Reagan would have sent the Senate a decidedly pro-choice nominee as it was that Bill Clinton would have named a pro-life one.

Litmus tests are nothing new. What's new is the growing role of federal courts in crafting national policies once considered the exclusive preserve of the legislature and executive. As gridlock and big money have stymied the House and Senate and shaped the way laws are executed, concerned citizens have gone to court with petitions they once would have taken to legislators and executive appointees. As the federal courts have moved to fill the public policy vacuum, conservatives, liberals and a host of special interests have developed a sharp eye for those nominated to sit on the bench. So should the Senate.

The failure of Congress to enact sensible public health policies regarding tobacco to protect our children from nicotine pushers sent anti-smoking advocates to federal court to draft a settlement agreement with provisions that read like sections of a federal statute. While Republican and Democratic administrations and Congresses have been fiddling over a patients' bill of rights, patients have gone to federal court for relief likely to have at least as much impact on health maintenance organizations as anything the politicians at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue can cobble together.

Despairing of more effective legislative or executive action, many cities are asking federal district judges for damages and court orders to restrict the way manufacturers sell handguns and other firearms. Federal District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly's final orders to remedy Microsoft's monopolization may have more to say about the development of the Internet economy that any president, House speaker or Senate majority leader.

When the executive does act, say on cigarette marketing or environmental protection, adversely affected businesses rush to court to overturn its actions and regulations. The big bankrollers of drug legalization like George Soros know the difference between a federal judge who can find a way to uphold state medical marijuana laws and one who will find that federal statutes preempt them.

Environmentalists, prison reformers and consumer advocates have learned that what can't be won in the legislature or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits.

Federal district judges are the lords of their realms, and unless they open the gates, it can be impossible for the litigating parties to get out once they enter the courtroom kingdom. These judges can hold cases for years, tying up businesses and regulating prisons, cities and schools with detailed court orders.

The battle over who fills the record number of judicial vacancies has taken on an importance unimaginable just a generation. Who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending, second-guessing the tax bill and whose fingers are poised to dip into the Social Security and Medicare cookie jars.

President Bush and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch understand this as surely as Democratic Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy and subcommittee Chairman Charles Schumer do. Both sides know that many of the individuals who fill these seats will have more power over tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities than the president or congressional leaders, and for a longer period of time.

That's why professional qualifications should be only the threshold step in the climb of judicial nominees to Senate confirmation. There is not sufficient time to examine each lower federal court nominee with the penetrating policy MRI reserved for Supreme Court justices. But the Senate must take enough time to give these men and women the kind of searching review their sweeping power to make national policies deserves.

Too Late For Arguello?

Rocky Mountain News
Saturday, September 1, 2001

If the Clinton administration had been a little less arrogant, Christine Arguello would probably already be a federal judge. She had not only superb qualifications, but the support of Colorado's two Republican senators, though she's a Democrat. But President Clinton mulishly insisted on pressing other nominations long after it was clear they would never go through, and so by the time he finally nominated Arguello for a vacant seat on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, in July 2000, the clock had almost run out on his term and the U.S. Senate never scheduled her confirmation hearings.

Now she's among nine candidates for federal judgeships whose names Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell submitted for President Bush's consideration. But the political reality is that presidents take political philosophy and party affiliation into account when nominating judges, and Arguello's best chance may have been squandered.

It's a pity.

It would be a bold act for Bush to break from tradition and nominate her. He shouldn't do it.

Judges And The Constitution; Everything Is Politics, Nothing Is Principle

By Roger Pilon
The National Review
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

REV_00022346

By Roger Pilon, vice president for legal affairs at the Cato Institute &
director of Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies.

Timed nicely for Sen. Charles Schumer's hearings this afternoon on judicial ideology and the Senate confirmation process, Democratic party elder Joseph A. Califano Jr., placed an op-ed in last Friday's Washington Post entitled, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." The wraps are now fully off the Democrats' plan to block President Bush's nominees for the federal courts unless they meet a Democratic ideological litmus test. Early in the year, still smarting from the Supreme Court's ruling in Bush v. Gore, academics like Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman urged Senate Democrats to reject every Bush nominee to the bench until the White House had a legitimate occupant. That was too much, of course. But Senate Democrats, once they regained power, did the next best thing. They've turned the judicial confirmation process into a full-blown ideological affair, with today's only the latest in a series of hearings not on the Bush nominees but on judicial ideology and the Senate's confirmation role.

Califano now gives us the rationale for it all. Gridlock and big money, he says, have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters. As a result, concerned citizens have been plying the courts with petitions they once took to the legislative and executive branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy." Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget, the level of defense spending," and virtually everything else going on in Washington today. For we've all learned, he continues, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." Thus, it's time for the Senate to step in, not to legislate but to determine, on explicitly ideological grounds, who the judicial architects will be, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

What a striking picture. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Indeed, it is not a little noteworthy that over the entire article, devoted to our most basic political arrangements, the word "constitution" appears not even once. That's no accident. The Constitution sets forth the principles and the rules under which we're supposed to be governed. It divides and separates power, assigning different tasks to different parts of government.

But on Califano's view, judges don't apply law to decide disputes, as the Constitution contemplates. "Sympathetic judges" make law, like so many legislators, "setting national policy" in the process. As for our nominal legislators, the Senate is reduced to vetting and electing our true rulers. One imagines that the word "constitution" doesn't appear in Califano's article because the document is an embarrassing relic, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

Yet for all that, Califano's picture, unfortunately, is too close to the truth to be ignored. The lesson he and his fellow Democrats have drawn from it is wrong — unless, of course, they like the picture. But we are today, in all candor, a very long way from living under constitutional principle.

REV_00022347

The main origins of the problem are in the Progressive Era of a century ago, when the social engineers of the time sought to do through government what the Constitution left to be done in the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court, an event Califano notes without. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power. Although the Court that emerged, by virtue of its deference to the political branches, was called "restrained," it was, in truth, "activist" — finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring individual rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to the shift of power to the judicial branch.

The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess Congress was making of things. But second, those who had long pushed such programs didn't always win in the political branches. When that happened, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win there, from "sympathetic judges," what they had failed to win politically. Regrettably, the Warren and Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were too often only too willing to step into the fray, imagining themselves to be a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress's powers are limited. They can't imagine that if an end is worthy, Congress might still not have the power to pursue it. They can't imagine that James Madison, the principal architect of the Constitution, was serious when he wrote in Federalist #45 that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Do we want to ensure the separation of powers and an independent judiciary? Do we want to restore limited constitutional government and, let's be clear, the rule of law? Those are the stakes in the current debate. If Senate Republicans are serious, they cannot pretend otherwise as the confirmation battles unfold.

Ex-GOP attack dog David Brock charges that Bush judicial nominee Terry Wooten gave him

REV_00022348

FBI files to discredit a key witness in the Clarence Thomas hearings. Will the Senate investigate?

It was the morning of Oct. 10, 1991, and Terry Wooten, the senior counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, was one of eight Senate staffers deposing Angela Wright over the telephone after she joined law professor Anita Hill in making allegations against their former boss at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

"Now, the term 'boobs' came up," Wooten asked Wright. "Is that a term that he used when he spoke to you?"

"No, actually that is a term that I am using," Wright replied. "Actually, what he said was, 'What size are your breasts?'" The question came up, she said, while they were attending a seminar for the EEOC. A decade after the grisly Thomas confirmation circus, Wooten is coming under scrutiny as a federal judge nominee for the U.S. District Court in South Carolina. And his chief accuser is onetime right-wing reporter David Brock, who claims that not only was Wooten busily trying to discredit Wright as a committee lawyer, but to reporters as well -- slipping Wright's FBI files to Brock, who was at work on his 1993 book "The Real Anita Hill."

But while Wooten called Brock's charges "absolutely 100 percent not true" during a Senate hearing this week, and Senate Democratic sources confide that the controversial Brock has enough credibility problems to keep his charges from sticking, Brock is standing by his story and welcomes an investigation into the matter.

In fact, he tells Salon that he's willing to open his files to the Judiciary Committee -- if anyone on the committee, that is, would call him. If the FBI file is there, it's conceivable, he allows, that Wooten's fingerprints could be on it, which may help settle the issue once and for all.

Wooten, like other nominees before him, will not talk to the press before a confirmation vote. The Justice Department did not return a call for comment.

Whether or not the Judiciary Committee decides to take Brock up on his offer or not, Wooten's role in the Thomas confirmation hearings -- the modern TV scandal spectacle that all others, from O.J. to Monica to Chandra, followed -- is surely worth consideration. It's certainly not unprecedented to require former political operatives, even ones with J.D.'s, to answer questions about their various partisan machinations before they assume positions of judicial prominence.

Such was the case in the solicitor-general nomination of conservative attorney Ted Olson, who played some (though murky) role in the American Spectator magazine's war against all things Clinton (even penning under a pseudonym the article "Criminal Laws Implicated by the Clinton Scandals: A Partial List," February 1994). The solicitor general job, meanwhile, supposedly has the grandiose purpose once described as "not to achieve victory, but to establish justice."

During the Thomas scandal, Wooten and Brock were clearly both pursuing victory, not justice.

REV_00022349

Brock was the Spectator's star reporter, and was all about kicking ass for the GOP, he says now. Wooten, he says, was a big help.

"During the course of my research, I met with Mr. Terry Wooten in a Capitol Hill office," Brock wrote in an affidavit he faxed Aug. 24 to Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI files. This material included FBI interviews of Ms. Wright's former employers and former co-workers. With Mr. Wooten's agreement, I removed the FBI material from his office." In his book "The Real Anita Hill," Brock makes references to "an FBI file" in which Wright is referred to as "vengeful, angry and immature."

Asked by Leahy if he gave confidential FBI material to Brock, as alleged both in Brock's affidavit and in a story in the Los Angeles Times, Wooten forcefully asserted "that allegation is absolutely, 100 percent untrue. There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation."

But the question now has less to do with which person the committee believes -- the imperfect whistleblower Brock, or Wooten, currently a magistrate judge in Florence, S.C.-- than whether or not they'll take Brock's dare, and try to make sure, beyond any measure of doubt, that Wooten wasn't involved in a dirty tricks campaign against Wright. To many who followed the Thomas confirmation hearings, Angela Wright seemed as though she might have been the woman who ultimately could have sunk Thomas' nomination. That was certainly a concern of Wooten's.

Anita Hill, who had worked under Thomas at both the EEOC and the Department of Education, had been telling the Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., that Thomas had repeatedly asked her out and, after being rebuffed, began to "use work situations to discuss sex."

As she later testified, despite her consistent protestations that such talk made her uncomfortable, Thomas continued to talk about sex, from graphic pornographic films to tales of "his own sexual prowess."

"I began to be concerned that Clarence Thomas might take out his anger with me by degrading me or not giving me important assignments," she testified. "I also thought that he might find an excuse for dismissing me."

On Oct. 11, 1991, Thomas, infuriated, "categorically denied all of the allegations and denied that I ever attempted to date Anita Hill," saying, "our relationship remained both cordial and professional."

"He said/she said" is one thing. "He said/they said" is something else entirely. Wooten recognized the problem posed by Wright, who had never met Anita Hill and who told the committee that Thomas fired her after years of hitting on her and making inappropriate comments to her. As Biden told Thomas during the hearing, "If there's not a pattern, to me, that's," or legally significant.

REV_00022350

"Any time you had a second allegation, it was going to be a big problem," Wooten later told Mayer and Abramson.

During Wright's Oct. 10 deposition, Wooten took a somewhat aggressive tone with her, six times referring to her as having "come forward," as if politically motivated and eager to enter the fray, when in fact she'd been subpoenaed by the committee.

"I am sorry, Terry," she told Wooten at one point, "but I cannot answer, I cannot answer the questions if you are going to that I decided to 'come forward.' Obviously I did not come forward with anything. I am just answering questions that are just being asked of me."

Even after that point is made, however, Wooten continued to use the term. After Wright informed the Senate staffers that a friend of hers exists whom she had contemporaneously informed of Thomas' allegedly harassing behavior, Wooten said, "I think it may be helpful if you would check with that friend to see if he or she is willing to come forward."

"I will be glad to do that," Wright said. "But you keep using the term 'come forward.' I can pretty much assure you that this person is not going to 'come forward' or want to be very involved in this at all."

Wright ultimately told them how Thomas would "consistently pressure me to date him," how he hit on other women in the office, how he "made comments about my anatomy and ... about women's anatomy quite often," and how "at one point, Clarence Thomas came by my apartment at night, unannounced and uninvited."

Then, Wooten asked Wright about other employers with whom she's had a problem, citing the name of a former Wright boss whom Wright accused of racism. He then asked Wright, a registered Republican, "who you voted for in the '80, '84 and '88," a question she doesn't answer.

Wright was hardly a perfect witness, having been fired by Thomas six years beforehand for being "ineffective" and, Thomas claimed, for calling a fellow employee a "faggot," which Wright denied. Then-Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., later told the Washington Post that he was ready to put Wright through the wringer she wanted to put Thomas through. "I felt that when you are assassinating someone's character, you bring your own to the fore," Simpson said. "All I know is that if she wanted to expose herself to the committee with damaging information about Clarence Thomas ... I was fully ready to damage her character in the process."

In the end, curiously and to this day without a clear explanation, Wright was never called to testify before the Senate. Thus, a vast majority of the Senate remained ignorant of her story when Thomas was confirmed on Oct. 15. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the committee, told the Washington Post in 1994 that he had no idea Wright existed to offer a similar story to Hill's. Had she been permitted to testify, Simon said, she "could have toppled Thomas."

It is unclear what role Wooten played in keeping Wright from the microphone, but it clearly was not in Thomas' best interest to have her testify. And, Wooten has said, he did his part to keep her story under wraps. In an interview for the book "Strange Justice," by Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Wooten allowed that he even kept Hill's charges -- which had been privately divulged to the Senate Judiciary Committee staffers in August and September 1991 -- from his then-boss Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., as well as from other Republicans on the committee.

"Washington is the rumor mill of the world," he told them. "It didn't look like it was going to develop into any big deal. There was an effort to control the damage." Wooten has admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had a brief conversation with Brock after Thomas had been confirmed on Oct. 15. "Whether or not Wright's name came up, I can't say that it did or didn't," Wooten said. But if it did, "there was no confidential information that was released or that was made available to him." He had access to the confidential materials about Wright from both FBI and Judiciary Committee files, but it was information he only discussed with his boss, Thurmond, and a committee investigator, Duke Short.

Leahy based his questions on the Times story, since at the time of the hearing he hadn't yet even seen Brock's affidavit. Speaking to reporters after the hearing, Leahy seemed to imply that, barring any new information, the "he said/he said" would culminate in a Wooten confirmation. "Mr. Wooten is under oath and he understands very well the importance of being accurate," Leahy said. "I can't believe that he would lie before the committee."

Brock disagrees, and thinks the committee should investigate. "The issue is obviously resolvable by the committee if it wants to resolve it," Brock tells Salon. "One of us has already committed perjury." Brock says that the dispute "doesn't have to remain 'he said/he said.' In the context of some kind of investigation there are potential witnesses and potential evidence."

Such as? Brock says his lawyers have 10 to 12 boxes of material from his days with the American Spectator. If Wright's FBI file is there, and Brock is telling the truth, Wooten's fingerprints could at least lend his story some credence.

But the Judiciary Committee has yet to contact Brock. When the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday, Leahy and Hatch will confer and decide how to proceed with the Wooten nomination, says Leahy spokesman David Carle.

Established procedures on the committee would have the chief investigators for both the Democrats and the Republicans working together to get to the bottom of the charges, but Hatch and Leahy would have to agree to such cooperation. In May, before the Senate fell into Democratic hands, then-Chairman Hatch declined to invoke those procedures when Brock raised questions about the role played by Olson in the Spectator's "Arkansas Project," a multi-year, multimillion-dollar investigation into the lives of the Clintons. Despite serious questions about how forthcoming Olson was being before the Senate, he was confirmed on May 25 on a 51-47 vote.

Senate insiders predict a similar result with the Wooten nomination. It's not that members of the Judiciary Committee don't take Brock's charges seriously, a Senate Democratic source told Salon. But those who believe Anita Hill shouldn't get their hopes up for a showdown. There doesn't appear to be any evidence or witness who can corroborate Brock's story, the source says, apparently unaware that Brock believes he may have some evidence locked away with his lawyers.

But so far, only the liberal Alliance for Justice has issued any sort of public position against Wooten, saying in a statement that he's "been accused of a serious ethical impropriety" and calling for the "committee's bipartisan investigative staff (to) ... fully look into these charges before deciding whether to confirm Judge Wooten." Moreover, the Senate source says, the credibility of the contradictory witnesses is at play. Wooten is a judge whom many of the committee members remember from when he worked as chief GOP counsel on the committee. Brock, on the other hand, has since renounced his political alliances and admitted lying in some of his past reporting.

In the August Talk magazine excerpt of his forthcoming book "Blinded by the Right," Brock wrote that he "lost my soul" printing things he knew to be untrue, both in favor of Thomas and against Hill, her collaborating witnesses and the rival book, "Strange Justice," by Mayer and Abramson. He also detailed his 1994 intimidation of Kaye Savage, a woman who'd supported Hill and her story, meeting her armed with "unverified embarrassing personal information ... that Thomas claimed had been raised against her in a divorce proceeding." Brock claimed he'd gotten the information from Thomas through an intermediary, former White House assistant counsel Mark Paoletta. "Thomas was playing dirty, and so was I," Brock wrote.

But Abramson, the New York Times Washington bureau chief, is quoted in the Washington Post as pointing out that the "problem with Brock's credibility" is that "once you admit you've knowingly written false things, how do you know when to believe what he writes?" Paoletta, now counsel to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has denied Brock's charges, while Thomas has refused comment.

The Bush administration has already begun to assault Brock's credibility. In the Los Angeles Times story, Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker ascribed fiduciary motives to Brock's allegation. "I think it would be unfortunate if the desire for book sales promulgated a charge involving a man's integrity, such as this might," Tucker said.

Brock insists that "the Wooten thing has no connection to any kind of book publication strategy." Still uncompleted, his book has been pushed back until November at the earliest and more likely January 2002, he says, and "the only relationship at all between Wooten and the book is in the process of writing the book obviously I've revisited this issue. The fact that Wooten was nominated to a judgeship is just a coincidence."

What about the fact that the Los Angeles Times apparently knew about Brock's affidavit long before Leahy did? Brock says that reporter David Savage had been contacting him for days, not the other way around, which Savage confirms. Brock hadn't been paying attention to Wooten's nomination, he says, until Savage -- informed by a third party that Brock had said Wooten had leaked him Wright's FBI file -- contacted him. After speaking to Savage, Brock faxed his affidavit to Leahy's Senate office late Friday, after 6:50 p.m. Leahy didn't receive the affidavit until after the Monday hearing.

Does there exist evidence in those files to prove Brock right and Wooten wrong? That remains to be answered, as do questions about how willing Leahy and the Senate Democrats are to engage in a confirmation fight.

Schumer Says Bush's Nominees Should Have To Persuade Senators To Give Them Judgeships

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, September 4, 2001

President Bush's judicial nominees should have to fight to get lifetime federal judgeships instead of senators having to find reasons to keep them off the federal bench once they're nominated, a top Judiciary Committee Democrat said Tuesday.

"Given the stakes at hand, it makes sense that the burden should rest with the nominees," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., head of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on judges. "We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case. It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same." Conservatives immediately accused Schumer of trying to find ways to keep Bush's nominees from being confirmed in the Democrat-controlled Senate by changing the traditional deference senators give most presidential nominees.

"Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee if he doesn't share their politics," said Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project. "In advocating a shifting of the burden of proof, Democrats want an excuse to vote against a qualified nominee who doesn't answer their political questions."

The GOP has been complaining about the pace of approval of judicial nominations under the Democrat-controlled Senate. There are at least 107 vacancies in the federal court system, and there are 44 judicial nominations pending.

Only four judges have been confirmed by the Senate this year.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the subcommittee said he could see that very thing happening.

"The Democrats could say that they would vote against a nominee if he answers a question in a manner that shows he is conservative," he said. "On the other hand, the Democrats could say they would vote against a nominee if he refuses to answer their questions because he hasn't borne his burden."

Schumer, who held a hearing to explore whether nominees should have to prove they're worthy to get a lifetime judgeship, said forcing candidates to defend their nominations would net more qualified judges.

"Imagine a job interview where you walk in and it's up to the interviewer to either automatically hire you or find something in your past that disqualifies you," Schumer said. "Provided you sit there with your mouth shut, or at the most, voice meaningless platitudes, and as long as there's no major skeleton in your closet, you're a shoo-in for the job. Is that the best way to find the best person for the job? Of course not."

Republicans disagreed. "The most significant burden born by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's top Republican.

Added Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ken.: If nominees "are men and women of integrity, are qualified, have a judicial temperament, and will follow the Constitution and statutes as they are written and intended, then we should confirm them."

Bar Questions Bush Nominee About Ethics

By Courtney Kinney
The Kentucky Post
Friday, August 31, 2001

The American Bar Association is asking questions about the ethics of a Lexington lawyer whose nomination for a federal judgeship by President Bush could station him in Covington.

Prestonsburg lawyer Ned Pillersdorf said an attorney from the ABA called him earlier this week asking about Danny Reeves, 44, a judicial nominee who defended environmental lawsuits against Ashland Inc. in the 1990s.

The ABA caller wanted more information about a letter Pillersdorf wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee last month saying Reeves negotiated a settlement in 1997 that required several plaintiffs' lawyers to agree not to sue Ashland Inc. in the future with new clients.

The cases involved nearly 40 residents of Lawrence and Johnson counties who claimed Ashland harmed their health and property when it dredged up radioactive material in the Martha oil field.

Shortly before the cases were to go to trial, a confidential settlement agreement giving residents an undisclosed amount of money was signed.

REV_00022336

A Kentucky Supreme Court rule says lawyers can't make part of a settlement any agreement that would keep another lawyer from practicing.

"I don't think this is a trivial ethical violation," said Pillersdorf, who is representing a second batch of residents suing Ashland, now based in Covington. "There's a reason the Supreme Court has that rule."

Because the settlement was confidential, it is not known whether such a provision was actually in the agreement. But Pillersdorf said the lawyers' deal not to sue again has been common knowledge.

"I'm kind of surprised to see Ashland disputing it. It's not been a secret," he said.

Shortly after the March 1997 settlement, several dozen more residents of the Martha area filed their own suits against Ashland Inc.

No lawyer from the first group of cases is handling cases for the second.

"It's quite odd," Pillersdorf said.

The ABA will not say whether it is investigating Reeves, said Boston lawyer Roscoe Trimmier Jr., chairman of the ABA standing committee on the federal judiciary. The ABA has been asked by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which confirms appointments, to review all judicial nominations.

Ashland spokesman Stan Lampe said Pillerdorf's allegation is bogus and no one at Ashland has been contacted by the ABA regarding Reeves.

"The charge is unwarranted and groundless," he said.

Reeves did not return calls made to his Lexington office.

He is one of three lawyers nominated by Bush to fill judicial vacancies in the Eastern District. One vacancy is in Covington.

The other nominees are attorney Karen Caldwell of Lexington and David Bunning, an assistant U.S. attorney in Covington and son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., of Southgate.

Hispanic Leaders Rally In Support of Judicial Nominee

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

Area Hispanic leaders are urging Colorado's senators to push for the appointment of Chief Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello as a U.S. District judge in Denver.

REV_00022337

Arguello was appointed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Clinton, but that appointment lapsed because the Senate never held confirmation hearings before Clinton left office.

She was among a group of nine people nominated for the federal judgeship by U.S. Sens. Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard, both R-Colo. During a rally Thursday at the state Capitol, about 60 people including leaders of the Hispanic community demanded her appointment to the federal bench.

"There has never been a Latino appointed to a federal judgeship in Colorado," said Awilda Marquez, a lawyer and political activist. "One of the country's best and brightest attorneys, Christine Arguello, is a candidate for such a historic opportunity."

Allard said there might not be much he and Campbell can do. He said while President Bush has not made an announcement, the two most likely nominees are Robert Blackburn of Las Animas, a former state prosecutor who is now a state district judge; and Marcia Krieger of Littleton, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for Colorado.

"It's the president's decision at this point," Allard said. "We've done our part."

Allard said he supported Arguello's appointment to the federal appeals court during the Clinton administration.

"The bottom line is this president has made it fairly clear to our office that he's interested in putting Republicans in the judiciary," Allard said.

Arguello is a Democrat.

Marquez said Allard and Campbell still should urge Bush to appoint Arguello.

"They have the power to do something about it," she said. "The White House will do whatever the senators want."

Arguello, 46, graduated first in her class at the University of Colorado in Boulder and was the first Hispanic woman admitted to Harvard Law School.

Trial Lawyer Blasts Judge Nomination

Maria Titze
The Deseret News
Friday, August 31, 2001

In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a Salt Lake City defense attorney is harshly critical of U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch's latest nomination to the federal bench -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

REV_00022338

"He's not a practicing Utah lawyer, and I believe that there are lots of trial lawyers in the state who deserve consideration of this judgeship," defense attorney Ron Yengich told the Deseret News.

Cassell practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the faculty at the U.

News of Yengich's letter to Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy came after the American Bar Association made public a mixed review of Cassell's qualifications. While the majority of the 14-member ABA rating committee called Cassell "well qualified," a few called him "not qualified."

Senior administration officials took the ABA to task Thursday, calling the mixed rating "bizarre," and hinting that the entire rating system was unfair.

Roscoe Trimmier Jr., head of the ABA rating committee, insisted the ratings aren't political, but said the committee normally wants a nominee to have been a member of the bar for 12 years.

Yengich agrees, but doesn't hold his criticism to Cassell's lack of courtroom experience in Utah.

With a growing Hispanic community, Yengich said, "it would be nice to have a little diversity."

There is only one minority magistrate -- Samuel Alba -- and no minority judges on Utah's federal bench.

Yengich roundly criticized Hatch for making federal judge nominations without more input from local attorneys.

"I don't believe that belonging to the Federalist Society and espousing a conservative law-and-order agenda automatically qualifies you to be a federal judge, just because we have a conservative Republican president," Yengich said.

But Makan Delrahim, the Republican staff director for the Senate Judiciary committee, said Cassell has bipartisan support in Washington.

"This guy's been a litigator, worked at the justice department, and is one of the most prolific (legal) writers," Delrahim said. "And he's a Utahn."

Cassell clerked for former Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger and for current Justice Antonin Scalia when he served on a lower court.

Utah Defense Attorneys Oppose Nomination of Cassell To Federal Court

The Associated Press
Friday, August 31, 2001

REV_00022339

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench is being opposed by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Ron Yengich, one of Utah's most prominent defense attorneys, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"The fact of the matter is that (President) Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance ... is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench - he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime," he said.

Cassell, an advocate of victims' rights and an opponent of requiring suspects be read their Miranda rights, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the university faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is listed as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released American Bar Association rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the rating committee found him highly qualified. A minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh called the minority opinion "irrational and bizarre."

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society.

Salt Lake defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

REV_00022340

Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association, said, "Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights. He's anti-defendant - it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

U. Prof's Bench Nomination Questioned; Cassell 's Road To Federal Bench Full Of Potholes

By Greg Burton and Michael Vigh
The Salt Lake Tribune
Friday, August 31, 2001

The nomination of University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell to the federal bench, already threatened by the U.S. Senate's political shift, now has been blindsided by a mixed review from the American Bar Association and a negative campaign by a group of Utah defense lawyers.

Utah's most prominent defense attorney, Ron Yengich, challenged Cassell's courtroom credentials in a letter this week to the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy.

Leahy seized agenda-setting power from U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on June 6, after Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords ended his affiliation with the Republican Party and gave Democrats a Senate majority and the right to name committee heads.

"The fact of the matter is that Bush's appointments are being scrutinized more carefully for ideological bent by the people who are now heading the Judiciary Committee," Yengich said Thursday. "And Cassell's ideological stance, vis-a-vis John Q. Public, is such that he doesn't deserve to be on the bench -- he has never stood up for the rights of the dispossessed or for those charged with a crime." Cassell, a high-profile advocate of victims' rights and one of the nation's harshest critics of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Miranda ruling, declined comment, referring questions to the Justice Department.

"All of our candidates are highly qualified," said Viet Dinh, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. "He has relevant legal experience; I cannot see a reason that anyone would question his ability."

In taking aim at Cassell, Yengich also bemoaned the lack of racial diversity on the federal bench in Utah, which has no minority judges and just one minority magistrate, Samuel Alba.

Cassell, who practiced law in Virginia and Washington, D.C., before joining the U. faculty, never has argued a case in Utah's federal court as either a plaintiff or defense attorney, according to U.S. District Court records. He has intervened in five cases, arguing each time that defendants' statements should not be suppressed.

He is, however, listed by the ABA as a member of the Salt Lake City law firm of Sen. Hatch's son, Brent Hatch of Hatch James & Dodge.

"This is a Utah seat and it should be filled by a Utah lawyer, someone who is steeped in Utah's history, not somebody who just comes in here and carpetbags into a federal judgeship," Yengich said. "And besides, we already have enough representation from the Scotch-Irish; maybe we should consider somebody whose name ends in a vowel."

The U.S. Justice Department held a briefing Thursday on the recently-released ABA rating report on Cassell, in which a majority of the 14-member rating committee found him highly qualified, a minority rated him qualified and a small minority rated him not qualified.

Dinh blasted the minority opinion, calling it "irrational and bizarre."

The committee, which evaluates litigation, experience and temperament, does not release the numerical breakdown of its votes.

Dinh and Cassell are both members of the conservative Federalist Society. Before his appointment to the Justice Department, Dinh investigated Hillary Rodham Clinton, Whitewater and served as a special counsel to U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici during the impeachment trial of President Clinton.

Salt Lake City defense attorney Greg Skordas, a Cassell supporter, said he believes "the inexplicable rating was the result of a somewhat aggressive letter-writing campaign by a minority of defense lawyers in Utah."

The nine-member board of directors of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers voted unanimously to oppose Cassell's nomination. But Skordas, an association member, claims most lawyers in Utah support Cassell.

He said Yengich and Cassell once clashed over the latter's intervention in a criminal prosecution against a defendant represented by Yengich. "I'm only trying to make sense of the rating," Skordas said. "He has somehow gotten sideways with Ron."

Concern runs much deeper than a single personal quarrel, said Mark Moffat, president-elect of the defense lawyers association.

"Cassell has been at the forefront of limiting or doing away with a whole host of constitutional rights," Moffat said. "He's anti-defendant -- it's a very deep-rooted belief in Professor Cassell's psyche and I'm afraid one he can't divorce himself from when he assumes the bench."

Cassell has been a law professor at the U. for the past nine years. Before that, he spent three years as an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia, and he had previously worked for two years as an associate deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department.

I am concerned that people who submit the travel form in connection with political speech will say that counsel's office approved their participation, even if their participation extends into areas not allowed under the Hatch Act, such as direct solicitation of funds. Brett has prepared a political activity memo; maybe that should be accompany the travel approvals. I would think a shorter memo that identifies the primary pitfalls would be better. As I understand it, the primary pitfalls are allowing the use of one's White House title in connection with political fundraising events (especially on invitations) and the direct solicitation of funds. Since BRETT is the expert here, his two cents worth should be considered.

Noel:

The President attended the President's Dinner June 27, which, I believe, was a fund-raiser for the RNC. The film is restricted, but we have a request from the office of Management and Administration for a personal photo an attendee who met the President. They would like to send it to the President for signing and then send it to the person.

This is their second request for photos from this event. We ordered two photos for them previously.

My understanding is that if it's a political event, no photos can be ordered either for media or personal use.

questions:

Did we make a mistake when we initially ordered the photos?
Should we fulfill their second order for another photo?

Do I have a correct understanding of the policy?

thank you,

tjipping@freecongress.org has sent you an article from The Washington Times.

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE

Thomas L. Jipping

On the Senate's first day back from the August recess, Sen. Charles Schumer chaired another of his hearings designed to change the confirmation rules and stack the deck against President Bush's nominees.

At the first hearing, left-wing academics and lawyers told senators to base their votes on a nominee's ideology; that is, the rulings they will likely render once on the bench. At this hearing, left-wing academics and lawyers told senators to base their votes on whether nominees have made the case for confirmation rather than in deference to the president. As Mr. Schumer put it, "the burden should rest with the nominee."

This new rule would certainly facilitate Mr. Schumer's goal of defeating nominees; senators need only say that a nominee did not meet his burden. While this may be the system Mr. Schumer prefers, however, it is not the one America's Founders established.

In Article II, Section 2, the Constitution gives the president both the power to nominate and, subject to the Senate's "advice and consent," the power to appoint federal judges. As Alexander Hamilton put it in "The Federalist," No.65, "In the business of appointments the executive will be the principal agent." That's why there's not a word about appointments in Article I, which outlines the powers of the legislative branch.

The Senate is a check on the president's appointment power, as Hamilton wrote in "The Federalist," No. 76, to "prevent the appointment of unfit characters." A primary power ? in this case, appointing judges ? carries more weight than a check on that power. Therefore, the Senate must show that a president's nominees are unfit in order to reject them; the burden is on the Senate, not on the nominee. That's the system of checks and balances America's Founders established, the one we all learned about in junior high civics class.

At the hearing, Mr. Schumer said America's Founders would be shocked at the state of the confirmation process today. Indeed, they would. Those who crafted the Constitution, who believed that the president would be the "principal agent" in judicial selection, would be shocked at Mr. Schumer insisting that the Senate is a co-equal partner with the president. Those who created the process of presidential nomination and appointment would be shocked at Mr. Schumer insisting that the Senate instead treat nominees as if they were applying for the job.

Sen. Strom Thurmond voiced the position America's Founders would recognize. He said the deference owed to a president should not change when the political party controlling the Senate or the White House changes. The Senate's constitutional responsibilities, Mr. Thurmond said, must remain consistent.

Consistency requires that Mr. Schumer practice what he has preached. In January 1998, for example, he called on the Senate leadership to "work with the president to confirm more judges."

Consistency means he should direct this at leaders such as Sen. Patrick Leahy, chairman of the Judiciary Committee on which Mr. Schumer serves. Mr. Leahy said on July 25, 2000, that it is the Senate's "constitutional responsibility" to "redouble our efforts to work with the president" to confirm more judges. That was when there were just 59 judicial vacancies. With nearly 110 vacancies today, you'd think Mr. Leahy would re-quadruple his efforts to confirm even a few of the 40 nominees currently at his doorstep.

Consistency requires that Mr. Schumer direct this at senior Democrats such as Sen. Ted Kennedy, who in September 1999 said it was the Senate's "constitutional responsibility to work with the president" to confirm more judges. That was when there were just 68 vacancies.

Perhaps it just depends on the meaning of the word

"president." Perhaps the only presidents senators such as Messrs. Schumer, Leahy and Kennedy want to work with are Democrats who nominate the liberal activist judges they need to impose their political agenda on the country.

This is all part of the same obstruction campaign Democrats have used in the past. The Sept. 1, 1992, edition of the New York Times reported that "the Democrats who control the Senate have begun to delay confirming some of President Bush's nominees for major judgeships to preserve the vacancies for to fill if he is elected president." As Ronald Reagan would say, there they go again.

Public presidential leadership is necessary to break this logjam. Judicial vacancies are the highest in more than seven years and confirmations are the slowest in recent memory. Just wait, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle will soon say, the press of legislative business leaves no time to consider judicial nominees. The clock is ticking, and Mr. Bush must turn up the heat and tell Americans the truth about the Democrats' obstruction campaign.

The Bush judicial selection who has attracted the greatest opposition is Jeffrey S. Sutton, appointed to the Ohio-based 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. His nomination has prompted an aggressive campaign by civil rights groups. Several other court appointees -- including Miguel Estrada and John Robert Jr., nominated to the D.C. Circuit -- also face uncertain prospects before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sensitive to any appearance that he is delaying the confirmation of judges for political purposes -- a strategy Democrats accused Republicans of using during the Clinton administration -- Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) has said he will move swiftly this fall to confirm as many judges as possible, as long as they are relatively uncontroversial. As a result, congressional aides say, more polarizing figures such as Sutton may not come before the committee this year.

These were my thoughts in response to that e-mail.

Suppose, for example, that an individual agency employee were detailed to the White House; the employee's work at the White House then would not be subject to FOIA. If so, then perhaps this situation is equivalent. In other words, although agencies themselves are still subject to FOIA even when they perform specific functions that include advice to the President, individual Executive Branch employees arguably could have an on-again/off-again status -- whether by details to the White House or by the effective equivalent of a detail (as here). Maybe that is slicing it too thin, but it may be worth exploring.

Also, I thought Meyer was supportive in that it ruled that the work of certain Cabinet members as part of the Task Force on Regulatory Relief was not subject to FOIA.

The other thing that would be helpful to know is if an in-kind contribution to a political party - say for use of an airplane - is a flat amount of money or if the entity has to in-kind based on the number of people flying.

For example, the respective political RPDs typically travel with Karl. If someone in-kinds a plane to the Party to fly Karl home, can they also fly us home at no extra cost to either the entity making the in-kind contribution or the political organization?? That would be great for us, but we would fly commercial if it were going to cost a political organization several thousand additional dollars.
Thanks - please advise.

Conceptually, yes, the RNC can pay for this. A few questions:
Who is coming? If we have some political invitees, then that would be helpful if the political entity is paying. Also, is the President

Bush Pressed On Nominees

GOPSenators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.
At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, the more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOPsource.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," Craig said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

Ed Henry contributed to this report.

No, I've never seen anything other than this. Have you been invited to the 2:00 p.m. session this afternoon with the AG? If you haven't, I'll get you an invite.

I got your message and am proceeding accordingly. What time do you plan to arrive Friday and will you have any help (e.g. Helgi)?

Alex asked that the Chief of Staff to HHS be invited:

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wood
Chief of Staff
200 Independence Avenue, S.W.
Washington, DC 20201

If it is easier for me to send these out, I will, but I need invitations.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00022922

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00022923

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00022916

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00022917

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00022919

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00022938

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00022939

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00022932

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00022933

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00022934

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00022935

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00022964

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00022965

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00022958

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00022959

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00022960

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00022961

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00022980

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00022981

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00022974

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00022975

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00022976

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00022977

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00022996

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00022997

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

REV_00022987

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00022990

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00022991

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00022992

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00022993

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00023012

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00023013

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

Op/Eds

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

REV_00023003

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00023007

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00023008

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00023009

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

On Sept. 4, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) held his second judiciary subcommittee hearing on the nominations process and declared that the nominees themselves bear the burden of proving their worthiness for lifetime appointments to the bench.

"We require parties who appear before a court to prove their case," said Schumer. "It is not unreasonable to ask those who come before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment to the federal bench to do the same."

Schumer and Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois represented the Democrats at the hearing, which featured liberal and conservative scholars discussing how the Senate has and should approach confirmations. While the experts addressed the issue, the hearing was instructive mostly as an illustration of the partisan divide among Judiciary Committee members as the nominations process heats up.

Five Republicans showed up-Sens. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, and Jon Kyl of Arizona. Each declared in his own way that the Senate should generally defer to the president's choice of nominees.

"The most significant burden borne by a candidate for a judgeship is to convince the president that he or she is the best person for the job," said Hatch. "In other words, the burdens of the judicial nomination process do not begin when the Senate Judiciary Committee receives the official nomination from the White House."

Schumer will get a chance to test out his new burden of proof Sept. 13, when he presides over a Judiciary Committee hearing of U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker Jr., who's been nominated for a seat on the 2nd Circuit.

In 1994, then-President Bill Clinton nominated Parker to the federal trial court for the Southern District of New York. Bush tapped Parker for the 2nd Circuit in May, a move seen largely to placate Democrats who had been pressing for the White House to moderate his judicial picks.

On Sept. 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee moved two Bush nominees-Sharon Prost for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for a district court seat in the District of Columbia-ahead for votes by the full Senate.

If confirmed, they would be the fifth and sixth of Bush's 48 nominees approved. One more has had a hearing, not including Parker and any other nominees who get a hearing this week.

Bush to Nominate Mahan for Federal Bench

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal

REV_00023028

Friday, September 7, 2001

President Bush today will nominate District Judge James C. Mahan to fill the final vacancy on Nevada's expanded federal court bench, Sen. John Ensign said.

Ensign said he was informed Thursday that Mahan, his pick for the post, has passed White House muster. Mahan has been a Clark County District Court judge since February 1999. 'The White House is going to send his name to the Senate Judiciary Committee,' Ensign said. 'This very much pleases us. He will make an incredible federal judge.'

Mahan's nomination completes White House activity on Nevada judicial and law enforcement vacancies, Ensign spokesman Traci Scott said.

On Wednesday, Bush formally nominated Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden to become U.S. attorney for Nevada. On Aug. 2, Reno attorney Larry Hicks was nominated for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on any of the nominees. Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said he expects to move noncontroversial candidates this fall.

None of the Nevada picks has drawn controversy, and enjoy support from both Ensign, R-Nev., and Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

'I feel very good about our chances,' Ensign said, predicting the new officers should be in place by November.

'Nothing moves fast in the Senate,' he said.

'Jim Mahan is exceptionally well-qualified to serve as a federal judge,' Reid said. 'I am pleased the president has forwarded his name to the Senate.'

Mahan was the local court's highest-rated jurist in the 2000 Judicial Performance Evaluation, conducted by the Las Vegas Review-Journal and the Clark County Bar Association. Ninety-five percent of the participating lawyers said he should be retained.

A White House spokesman said he could not confirm Mahan's nomination.

'The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make,' press officer Ken Lisaius said.

Mahan also got the news on Thursday.

'It's a pinnacle for a judge to serve on the federal bench,' Mahan, 57, said from his chambers on Thursday. 'It's a tremendous honor and it's also humbling, because there are a lot of qualified people.'

REV_00023029

As part of the Bush administration's vetting process, Mahan was called to the White House in May to meet with Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to the president.

'He asked my philosophy about being a judge, how do you reach decisions, how do you use your law clerks,' Mahan recalled. He said he was not asked his opinions on specific cases.

'They didn't ask me about any specifics, and for a judge that would be unethical for me to say,' Mahan said.

End the Impasse, Put a Judge in the Federal Courthouse

By Donald Russo
The Morning Call
Saturday, September 8, 2001

After another time-consuming and hair-raising trip to the federal courthouse in Philadelphia, having once again survived the rigors of the Schuylkill Expressway, I had to reflect upon the present state of our beautiful federal courthouse. There it stands, in all its opulence, magnificence and glory, at the corner of Fifth and Hamilton streets in Allentown. Nearly $20 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this striking edifice. Sadly, it now serves only as a monument to the poisonous state of American public affairs. The muted interior of this otherwise awe-inspiring structure reminds us of the price we pay for elevating partisan gamesmanship over constitutional concerns.

Unlike the building itself, the behind-the-scenes maneuvering to appoint a judge to work in it has not been pretty. Pennsylvania has two Republican Senators, Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum. Mr.
Santorum's fingerprints can be found all over one of the earlier debacles that prevented the Lehigh Valley from getting a replacement for outgoing Chief Judge Edward N. Cahn. Beyond that, President Clinton's pique over former U.S. Rep. Paul McHale's vocal revulsion for his Oval Office antics signaled the second death knell to any follow-up presidential efforts to appoint a federal judge for Allentown. In the midst of all of this, several excellent local jurists remain waiting in the wings. Exactly what, if anything, is really going on down there is somewhat murky to an ordinary citizen such as myself. Perhaps the politically powerful Sen. Specter could inform his Lehigh Valley constituency where this matter now stands in his Judiciary Committee. Are we getting a judge, or not? If so, will it be in my lifetime?

Until the recent party switch of Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont, Sen. Specter was the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. If anyone is in a position to illuminate us about the current status of this matter, it would be a senator who has his finger on the pulse of the committee that handles judicial appointments. But unless I have missed something over these last few months -- there have been no informative press releases on the subject emanating from Sen. Specter's office. Closer to home, Rep. Pat Toomey claims that this is strictly a Senatorial matter.

Amid the silence, however, it is not as if the U.S. Congress is ignoring the Allentown federal courthouse. Legislation will be implemented naming the building after Judge Cahn.

This is a fitting tribute to a top-shelf jurist and an all-around gentleman. Judge Cahn was always fair, compassionate, and courteous to the lawyers who appeared in his courtroom. Even when he ruled against one of my clients, I always felt that he had listened to my arguments and had ruled on them according to his own interpretation of the law.

Everyone can agree that naming the courthouse after one of the Lehigh Valley's own was a nice touch. After sending out a heartfelt thank you to the politicians in Washington who came up with the idea, though, one is tempted to stop, and say: Excuse me Congress, didn't you forget something?

As a result of the continuing impasse, federal cases arising in Lehigh County are being assigned to federal judges sitting in Philadelphia. This burns up time, energy and money, and it is an imposition to litigants. Local witnesses must be transported to Philadelphia, hotel rooms must be rented, and the overall logistics involved in trying a case down there become problematic and attenuated. Local companies involved in federal cases lose more money because their personnel have to spend more time away from the office. And, Lehigh Valley residents who get picked for federal jury duty now have little chance of being selected for an Allentown trial.

Last but not least, the judges themselves are not happy with this current state of affairs. More and more cases are being assigned to fewer judges. This is wrong.

Try this: do an Internet search under findlaw.com. After reading the average federal court decision, you will get a feel for the hours of research and the extraordinary amount of mental effort a judge and his or her staff will expend to write an opinion. How many opinions can a judge be expected to hand down in a year? And, if a judge is forced by circumstances to start churning them out like cheeseburgers at McDonald's, what is going to happen to the quality of the work? This situation guarantees that everyone comes out a loser.

The impasse also forces the court to set aside a specific rule of civil procedure, known as Local Rule 40.1(b). This rule states that parties in Lehigh and Northampton counties must have their cases heard in their home counties. Rule 40.1(b) is not being enforced, and it appears that no one has any good ideas what to do about it. To borrow a term that you are not going to find in any law dictionary, the Lehigh Valley is being dissed.

Perhaps this is something to bear in mind when Sens. Specter and Santorum come begging for your votes the next time they are up for re-election. President Bush also must nominate a moderate judge who will be acceptable to Senate Democrats. The President has to realize that he can no longer pay abject homage to the right-wing fringe of his party that wants to impose a Jesse Helms-type litmus test on all his judicial appointments.

Bush Pressed on Nominees; GOP Senators Urge Public Push for Judges

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 10, 2001

Seeking to raise the stakes in the confirmation process, Senate Republicans and some conservative activists are actively encouraging President Bush to mount a more forceful attack

REV_00023019

against Democrats over the judicial nomination process.

At a Thursday meeting between Bush and Congressional GOP leaders, Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said he and Minority Whip Don Nickles (Okla.) pointedly raised the judicial nomination issue, along with a list of other "must do's and priorities."

Craig said they asked Bush to become more engaged in the process by pressuring Senate Democrats to confirm judges and by accelerating the pace of appointments.

"I didn't hear any objection at all," Craig said, adding, "You're going to find the White House increasingly involved. What I heard [from White House officials] was the intent to become increasingly involved."

A week before the Craig-Nickles plea on judges, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer signaled that Bush was not yet ready for a full-scale fight with Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) over the thorny issue.

"It's only fair to allow the Senate its due deliberation," Fleischer told Roll Call.

Fleischer didn't blame Leahy, whom he called "thoughtful" and "fair," for holding up the process, noting that "many of the judicial nominations were made towards the end of July."

At the same time, though, Fleischer said Bush would be prepared to fight if Democrats drag their feet. "He'll make the case for his nominees."

The debate over how to push for confirmation of judicial nominees has become a central focus in GOP quarters, intertwined with the appropriations process and potentially a major roadblock to the efforts to conclude the Congressional session.

Republicans blocked Daschle's effort to move the Commerce, Justice, State and the judiciary appropriations bill last week until Democrats gave an assurance that Leahy would move judicial nominees in a "regular" order.

Democrats contend they are moving judges as swiftly as possible, having already confirmed two circuit court judges with another on the verge of passing this week and several more possible before the year ends. In the first year of the Clinton administration, just three circuit court judges were confirmed. In 1989 then President George Bush saw five of his circuit court nominees confirmed.

"The Democratic leadership has been very accommodating, very cooperative," Daschle said Friday.

And Leahy said more nominees could have been confirmed if not for Bush's decision to remove the American Bar Association from the initial rating process for prospective judges, a step that is now handled once the nomination is sent to the panel.

Republican delays in the committee reorganization process after Democrats seized the majority took a month out of the committee calendar, Leahy contends.

"The Judiciary Committee has made up for lost time," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman.

Carle warned that a rhetorical war from the White House would only hamper the confirmation process, making consensus difficult on some of the most controversial nominees. "The more consensus building there is, more nominees the Senate will be able to confirm," he said.

"The polarization that some Republicans seem to be calling for is a prescription for fewer confirmations, not more."

However, Republicans countered that they want to see all 44 of the judicial nominees who were sent to Capitol Hill prior to the August recess confirmed before adjournment, a standard they say applied to past administrations in their first year.

To date, just four of those 44 nominees have been confirmed, leaving Republicans complaining that there isn't enough time to have hearings on the nominees and confirm them.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) said he had to approach Leahy directly Thursday to ask about the status of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was nominated to be a United States circuit judge for the Fifth Circuit. Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), received a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association on July 23, but has yet to have his hearing scheduled, according to a GOP source.

Lott said he is not happy about the status of Pickering and state Supreme Court Justice Michael P. Mills, up for a district court slot.

"I talked to [Leahy Thursday], and he said, 'Well, you hadn't talked to me!' I said, 'First of all, I don't want to ask for preferential treatment for our judges in Mississippi. Secondly, I'd assumed you'd get around to it. But I'm going to notice now that you may not. And I need to know what's going on,'" Lott said.

That's why some conservatives are calling for Bush to use the presidential powers of political persuasion on the issue, hoping he will emulate former President Bill Clinton, who often accused Senate Republicans of extremism for moving slow on female and minority nominees.

"If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on the courts.

"We're very exited about his nominees. But a president who is very serious about his nominees will not only nominate them but he will fight for them," said Thomas L. Jipping, director of the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the Free Congress Foundation.

Jipping said most conservative activists have little faith in the Senate Republican leadership's ability to, on its own, create enough political pressure to pass the nominees, having seen Daschle and the Democrats win many of the endgame battles of the past few years.

"If the President leaves it up to the Republicans in the Senate, he's not going to be successful," Jipping predicted.

But Senate Republicans say they are ready to do battle for their nominees, with or without a frontal attack by the White House. Craig said the GOP is ready to block more appropriations bills if Daschle and Leahy don't live up to their agreement to move more nominees.

"We don't want to do that, but that certainly is the right of the minority," said. "I believe we have the 41 votes to cause certain actions."

District Bench May Lose Another Bush; May Tap Smith for U.S. Appeals Court

By Rachel Smolkin and Torsten Ove
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Saturday, September 8, 2001

President Bush is expected to nominate Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the federal appeals court, a move that could leave the federal bench in the Western District of Pennsylvania even more short-handed.

Although the White House made no official comment, Bush's nomination of Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is anticipated as early as next week.

"My hope is that he will be announced shortly," said U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. "I have been advocating very strongly on his behalf. ... I think he'd be a good addition to the court." State Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, a friend of Smith's, said he didn't know when Bush would make the announcement but confirmed that Smith, 49, also of Altoona, is in line for the job.

"I know he's the guy. The FBI has been doing background checks for several months. I think it's coming very, very soon," he said.

"The president will never make a better choice than this one," Jubelirer said. "He's very knowledgeable. He's prepared. He truly is someone who is a role model."

After his nomination, Smith will have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a process that could require several weeks.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

REV_00023022

He was out of town yesterday and couldn't be reached. Staff members said they knew he was a candidate for the circuit court but said they didn't know he was soon to be nominated.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel declined to confirm that Smith would be nominated but said the administration is moving swiftly to fill judicial vacancies.

"The president is moving forward with selecting candidates for judicial slots, selecting candidates who are of high character who have wide experience in the judicial system," Stanzel said. "President Bush has nominated judges at a record pace for a president in his first year."

Before the August congressional recess, Bush had nominated 44 federal circuit and district court judges, compared with former President Ronald Reagan's 13 nominations in 1981, the eight nominations in 1989 by Bush's father, and former President Bill Clinton's 13 in 1993, Stanzel said.

So far this year, the Senate has confirmed four of Bush's choices.

Of the 179 circuit judgeships nationwide, about 31 are vacant. There are 68 seats unfilled in federal district courts, Stanzel said.

Santorum said the lengthy background-check process for nominees has slowed the administration's effort to advance nominations. "They're so backed up because they can't get their background checks [completed] in a prompt fashion," he said. "It's just gotten more and more complex as time went on."

For years, U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Judge Donald Ziegler will go on senior status in October and Judge William Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving a total of six vacancies.

For years, judicial appointments have languished nationwide as nominees were held up in partisan disputes in Washington. Many of Clinton's nominees never even received a hearing.

When Bush assumed the presidency, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed poised to offer a smoother ride to Bush's nominees. But James Jeffords, I-Vt., bolted from the Republican Party and handed control of the Senate to the Democrats.

"Everything was going swimmingly" until Jeffords' defection, said William J. Green, a GOP consultant based in Pittsburgh. "That plowed up everything."

The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Santorum and Arlen Specter.

REV_00023023

U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, a member of the bench in Pittsburgh, was among those nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit. Clinton also nominated then-U.S. Attorney Harry Litman, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone and Downtown attorney Lynette Norton for district judgeships.

None of them cleared the Senate.

Santorum has complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three nominations the president made, he and Specter would get one.

This spring, a merit selection committee prepared a list of judicial nominees for Bush. Although the list is confidential, these names are believed to be on it: Joy Flowers Conti and Arthur J. Schwab, both attorneys at the Downtown firm Buchanan Ingersoll; Alexander H. Lindsay Jr., a Butler attorney; Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry; and Cercone.

Cercone, Schwab and McVerry didn't return calls. Conti and Lindsay said they couldn't comment.

Smith, a federal judge since 1988, has served as chief judge since January, replacing Ziegler in that role. By statute, the chief judge serves a seven-year term.

Smith started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court.

Senators: Bush Intends to Nominate Bankruptcy Judge Julie Robinson

By Libby Quaid
The Associated Press
Friday, September 7, 2001

U.S. bankruptcy Judge Julie A. Robinson is officially President Bush's choice to be the next federal judge in Kansas, the two Kansas senators said.

The White House expects to announce Robinson's nomination on Monday, according to GOP Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts. Bush has appointed several women to serve on federal appellate courts, but Robinson would become his first black female nominee. Robinson, 44, has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Topeka, Kan. since 1994 and is a former assistant U.S.

REV_00023024

attorney in Kansas City, Kan. She holds a 1981 law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I was deeply impressed with both her professional qualifications and her absolute fitness for elevation to the federal District Court in Kansas," Brownback said Friday. "I have known her to be a person of the highest honor and integrity, as well as a fine lawyer and jurist."

The president chooses nominees but tends to follow the wishes of his party's senior senator. That means Brownback named Robinson and two others for the post. The other candidates were Wichita attorney Eric Melgren, a political ally and contributor of Brownback's, and Overland Park attorney Bruce Keplinger.

Roberts said Robinson has "a long list of awards and honors."

"With her record, not only as a bankruptcy judge but as an individual person, she can certainly avoid a confirmation logjam," the senator said. "I believe very strongly that she's going to be one of the chosen few who we might be able to get confirmed on more of a fast track than all the rest."

Both parties have skirmished over judicial nominees since the Democrats' Senate takeover in June. Republicans complain the Senate has not moved fast enough, while Democrats have labeled some nominees as too divisive.

The last vacancy in Kansas went in 1999 to U.S. District Judge Carlos Murguia, who had been a Wyandotte County district judge.

The current opening came when U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber took senior status. President Clinton tried unsuccessfully last year to name attorney Gary Sebelius, who is married to Democratic state Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. But his nomination died because Brownback apparently refused to let it move forward.

White House Meets With Sutton's Foes; Wary about 6th Circuit Nominee and the Administration's ADA Efforts, Disability Rights Groups Air Their Concerns

By Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
Monday, September 10, 2001

In May they marched to the White House in protest. Three months later they were invited inside the gates to air their grievances.

So it went for about 10 disability rights advocates who bitterly oppose the nomination of states' rights expert Jeffrey Sutton to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.

The Aug. 23 meeting was unusual because foes in the judicial nominations battle rarely meet face to face to discuss their differences. The ideological fights usually take place over the

REV_00023025

airwaves and on the
Senate floor, and are not taken up in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building.

Sutton has drawn the ire of the disabled community for arguing a series of Supreme Court cases that scaled back civil rights laws, including the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton's arguments and the Court's rulings were based on federalism, the principle that the Constitution limits Congress' power over the states. The high court is deeply divided over the subject, splitting 5-4 in case after case, including last term's ADA matter, Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett.

From descriptions of the meeting, the disability rights advocates and the Bush administration sound similarly at odds over Sutton, a partner at the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue.

But neither side expected to change the other's minds.

"We weren't going in there for the purpose of convincing the disability rights groups to change their public position on any nominee," says Brad Berenson, the associate White House counsel who argued the administration's point of view. "The agenda was broader than that."

The two-hour meeting went beyond judicial selections and into the administration's enforcement of the remaining parts of the ADA and other civil rights laws.

Berenson also says that he wanted to explain that while federalist principles may occasionally conflict with acts of Congress-and the policy goals of the disabled rights community-that does not mean that President George W. Bush or his judicial nominees are hostile to disabled people.

"It's just a matter of applying the law," says Berenson, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Jim Ward of ADA Watch, an umbrella organization of disabled rights groups, says, "It's great that they're reaching out to us."

But, Ward adds, "We can't have these intellectual debates about federalism without putting a human face on how people with disabilities are impacted" by Sutton's victories.

For example, Ward notes that Patricia Garrett, the plaintiff in the ADA case, sued the state of Alabama because she lost her job as a nurse at a state hospital after taking work off to get breast cancer treatments. Garrett lost her bid for redress when the high court majority said Congress overstepped the 11th Amendment by subjecting states to ADA lawsuits.

Berenson told the group that neither Sutton nor other nominees are picked because they pass any litmus test-on anything from abortion to their views on federalism.

Responds Ward: "They say ideology is not a factor, but they're putting forth nominees who strongly support federalist views."

Other Bush nominees with particularly conservative reputations give the ADA community pause. Ward says he personally is concerned about Judge Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, Judge Carolyn Kuhl for the 9th Circuit, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit, and appellate advocate Miguel Estrada for the D.C. Circuit.

None has received a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sutton and Cook also have a separate problem: a fight over 6th Circuit nominees going on between the White House and the two Democratic senators from Michigan, which is one of the states covered by the 6th Circuit.

Andrew Imperato of the American Association of People With Disabilities says he pressed Berenson and Alex Acosta, deputy assistant attorney general for civil rights, for the administration's point of view of the Garrett decision.

If Bush views Garrett as wrongly decided, says Imperato, "we can work together to build a fire wall around this decision."

However, Imperato says, Berenson and Acosta weren't prepared to discuss the administration's stance on that specific case. Further meetings with Acosta and Ralph Boyd, assistant attorney general for civil rights, are in the works.

The contacts between the White House and advocates for disabled people started earlier this summer, when Berenson saw in The Washington Post that Imperato, a fellow alum of Beverly Hills High and
Yale University, was a leading ADA advocate.

Justin Dart, a longtime disability rights activist who helped get the ADA passed and signed by Bush's father in 1990, calls the meeting "a very good example of democracy in action."

Nonetheless, he adds, "I'm deeply concerned about the possible appointment of people like Jeff Sutton and [Justices] Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia who don't believe in . . . the authority of the government of the United States to protect the rights of its citizens no matter what state they live in."

Rules of the Game

Before getting to the business of confirming any more judicial nominees, senators last week argued again over how they should go about doing so.

I have an inquiry in to Office of Special Counsel on this.

2 questions: Is this event still on and, if so, when do you absolutely need an answer?

Jennifer Azar is notifying most; I am doing the rest.

Postponed, I would say. I do not think we should give people a new date now but should simply say that we intend to re-schedule for sometime in the fall. As to the date, even though we will not notify them now, how does October 19 sound?

Brett:

The Interagency Task Force on the UN World Conference Against Racism is preparing to close the Office in the EEOB.

Russell Loiselle of Records Management suggested we contact WH Counsel if we had questions about what constitutes a Presidential Record. We have a pretty good idea after reading the relevant statute and guidance from the Records Management Office. We would, however, appreciate clarification on the following materials:

Handwritten notes of meetings/telephone calls
Lists of contacts (mailing lists for meetings, mailings, etc.)

Thank you.

Bush Chooses 2 Federal Judges; Allard won't Block Colorado Picks

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

President Bush selected two Colorado Republicans on Monday from a bipartisan slate of nine judicial nominees for vacant seats on the U.S. District Court in Denver.

The appointments of Chief Bankruptcy Court Judge Marcia S. Krieger of Denver and state District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas to the federal bench are among the most prized nominations a president can make. If confirmed by the Senate, the two will receive lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary. Federal district judges are paid $ 145,100 a year.

Bush's selections should end a three-year standoff between the White House and Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Loveland, over who should sit on the federal bench in Colorado.

Allard, who blocked President Bill Clinton's Democratic judicial nominees for Colorado, expressed relief with the White House action. 'President Bush could not have selected two more qualified individuals to serve on the federal bench,' Allard said.

He and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Ignacio, called for quick confirmation of the nominees. 'The people of Colorado deserve to have these vacancies filled,' Allard said.

The selections also rebuffed a last-minute effort by Rep. Mark Udall, D-Boulder, to win one of the seats for Colorado Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello. She had been one of three Democratic lawyers that Clinton failed to get confirmed to the federal bench in Colorado. Krieger, 47, would replace Daniel B. Sparr, who recently moved to senior judge status. A 1979 graduate of the University of Colorado School of Law, she has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Denver since 1994 and the chief bankruptcy judge since last year.

Krieger, who was on a list of five potential judges that Allard recommended to Clinton in 1999, is a Denver native and graduate of Lewis and Clark College. The nomination of Blackburn, 51, fills a position that has been vacant since 1998, when District Judge Zita L. Weinshienk moved to senior judge status. Blackburn was named to Colorado's 16th Judicial District Court bench in 1988 by Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat.

A native of Lakewood, he, too, is a graduate of the University of Colorado law school, receiving his law degree in 1974. Blackburn received his undergraduate degree from Western State College and has served as Bent County attorney and municipal judge for the town of Kim. His current job has him holding court in the counties of Crowley, Otero and Bent.

'The White House seems to have given a preference to those who have existing judicial experience,' noted Phillip Figaf Englewood, one of the nine lawyers whose names were given to the White House by Allard and Campbell as potential judges.

The senators gave the White House the list in May, saying they were giving Bush nine names because there is a possibility that a third judgeship may become vacant. If U.S. District Judge Richard P. Matsch, until recently the chief judge f the Colorado district, elects to move to senior judge status, Bush could name his successor.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post Gazette
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023402

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

REV_00023403

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Lloyd N. Cutler was White House counsel in the Carter and Clinton administrations. He co-chairs the Constitution Project's Courts Initiative. Mickey Edwards is a former Republican representative in the House from Oklahoma who teaches at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023406

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

Bush Chooses 2 Federal Judges; Allard won't Block Colorado Picks

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

President Bush selected two Colorado Republicans on Monday from a bipartisan slate of nine judicial nominees for vacant seats on the U.S. District Court in Denver.

The appointments of Chief Bankruptcy Court Judge Marcia S. Krieger of Denver and state District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas to the federal bench are among the most prized nominations a president can make. If confirmed by the Senate, the two will receive lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary. Federal district judges are paid $ 145,100 a year.

Bush's selections should end a three-year standoff between the White House and Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Loveland, over who should sit on the federal bench in Colorado.

Allard, who blocked President Bill Clinton's Democratic judicial nominees for Colorado, expressed relief with the White House action. 'President Bush could not have selected two more qualified individuals to serve on the federal bench,' Allard said.

He and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Ignacio, called for quick confirmation of the nominees. 'The people of Colorado deserve to have these vacancies filled,' Allard said.

The selections also rebuffed a last-minute effort by Rep. Mark Udall, D-Boulder, to win one of the seats for Colorado Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello. She had been one of three Democratic lawyers that Clinton failed to get confirmed to the federal bench in Colorado. Krieger, 47, would replace Daniel B. Sparr, who recently moved to senior judge status. A 1979 graduate of the University of Colorado School of Law, she has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Denver since 1994 and the chief bankruptcy judge since last year.

Krieger, who was on a list of five potential judges that Allard recommended to Clinton in 1999, is a Denver native and graduate of Lewis and Clark College. The nomination of Blackburn, 51, fills a position that has been vacant since 1998, when District Judge Zita L. Weinshienk moved to senior judge status. Blackburn was named to Colorado's 16th Judicial District Court bench in 1988 by Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat.

A native of Lakewood, he, too, is a graduate of the University of Colorado law school, receiving his law degree in 1974. Blackburn received his undergraduate degree from Western State College and has served as Bent County attorney and municipal judge for the town of Kim. His current job has him holding court in the counties of Crowley, Otero and Bent.

'The White House seems to have given a preference to those who have existing judicial experience,' noted Phillip Figaf Englewood, one of the nine lawyers whose names were given to the White House by Allard and Campbell as potential judges.

The senators gave the White House the list in May, saying they were giving Bush nine names because there is a possibility that a third judgeship may become vacant. If U.S. District Judge Richard P. Matsch, until recently the chief judge f the Colorado district, elects to move to senior judge status, Bush could name his successor.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post Gazette
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023431

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

REV_00023432

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

Op/Eds

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Lloyd N. Cutler was White House counsel in the Carter and Clinton administrations. He co-chairs the Constitution Project's Courts Initiative. Mickey Edwards is a former Republican representative in the House from Oklahoma who teaches at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023435

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

Bush Chooses 2 Federal Judges; Allard won't Block Colorado Picks

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

President Bush selected two Colorado Republicans on Monday from a bipartisan slate of nine judicial nominees for vacant seats on the U.S. District Court in Denver.

The appointments of Chief Bankruptcy Court Judge Marcia S. Krieger of Denver and state District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas to the federal bench are among the most prized nominations a president can make. If confirmed by the Senate, the two will receive lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary. Federal district judges are paid $ 145,100 a year.

Bush's selections should end a three-year standoff between the White House and Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Loveland, over who should sit on the federal bench in Colorado.

Allard, who blocked President Bill Clinton's Democratic judicial nominees for Colorado, expressed relief with the White House action. 'President Bush could not have selected two more qualified individuals to serve on the federal bench,' Allard said.

He and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Ignacio, called for quick confirmation of the nominees. 'The people of Colorado deserve to have these vacancies filled,' Allard said.

The selections also rebuffed a last-minute effort by Rep. Mark Udall, D-Boulder, to win one of the seats for Colorado Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello. She had been one of three Democratic lawyers that Clinton failed to get confirmed to the federal bench in Colorado. Krieger, 47, would replace Daniel B. Sparr, who recently moved to senior judge status. A 1979 graduate of the University of Colorado School of Law, she has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Denver since 1994 and the chief bankruptcy judge since last year.

Krieger, who was on a list of five potential judges that Allard recommended to Clinton in 1999, is a Denver native and graduate of Lewis and Clark College. The nomination of Blackburn, 51, fills a position that has been vacant since 1998, when District Judge Zita L. Weinshienk moved to senior judge status. Blackburn was named to Colorado's 16th Judicial District Court bench in 1988 by Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat.

A native of Lakewood, he, too, is a graduate of the University of Colorado law school, receiving his law degree in 1974. Blackburn received his undergraduate degree from Western State College and has served as Bent County attorney and municipal judge for the town of Kim. His current job has him holding court in the counties of Crowley, Otero and Bent.

'The White House seems to have given a preference to those who have existing judicial experience,' noted Phillip Figaf Englewood, one of the nine lawyers whose names were given to the White House by Allard and Campbell as potential judges.

The senators gave the White House the list in May, saying they were giving Bush nine names because there is a possibility that a third judgeship may become vacant. If U.S. District Judge Richard P. Matsch, until recently the chief judge f the Colorado district, elects to move to senior judge status, Bush could name his successor.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post Gazette
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023440

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

REV_00023441

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Lloyd N. Cutler was White House counsel in the Carter and Clinton administrations. He co-chairs the Constitution Project's Courts Initiative. Mickey Edwards is a former Republican representative in the House from Oklahoma who teaches at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023444

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots
