The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post

REV_00023453

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

Bush Chooses 2 Federal Judges; Allard won't Block Colorado Picks

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

President Bush selected two Colorado Republicans on Monday from a bipartisan slate of nine judicial nominees for vacant seats on the U.S. District Court in Denver.

The appointments of Chief Bankruptcy Court Judge Marcia S. Krieger of Denver and state District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas to the federal bench are among the most prized nominations a president can make. If confirmed by the Senate, the two will receive lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary. Federal district judges are paid $ 145,100 a year.

Bush's selections should end a three-year standoff between the White House and Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Loveland, over who should sit on the federal bench in Colorado.

Allard, who blocked President Bill Clinton's Democratic judicial nominees for Colorado, expressed relief with the White House action. 'President Bush could not have selected two more qualified individuals to serve on the federal bench,' Allard said.

He and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Ignacio, called for quick confirmation of the nominees. 'The people of Colorado deserve to have these vacancies filled,' Allard said.

The selections also rebuffed a last-minute effort by Rep. Mark Udall, D-Boulder, to win one of the seats for Colorado Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello. She had been one of three Democratic lawyers that Clinton failed to get confirmed to the federal bench in Colorado. Krieger, 47, would replace Daniel B. Sparr, who recently moved to senior judge status. A 1979 graduate of the University of Colorado School of Law, she has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Denver since 1994 and the chief bankruptcy judge since last year.

Krieger, who was on a list of five potential judges that Allard recommended to Clinton in 1999, is a Denver native and graduate of Lewis and Clark College. The nomination of Blackburn, 51, fills a position that has been vacant since 1998, when District Judge Zita L. Weinshienk moved to senior judge status. Blackburn was named to Colorado's 16th Judicial District Court bench in 1988 by Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat.

A native of Lakewood, he, too, is a graduate of the University of Colorado law school, receiving his law degree in 1974. Blackburn received his undergraduate degree from Western State College and has served as Bent County attorney and municipal judge for the town of Kim. His current job has him holding court in the counties of Crowley, Otero and Bent.

'The White House seems to have given a preference to those who have existing judicial experience,' noted Phillip Figaf Englewood, one of the nine lawyers whose names were given to the White House by Allard and Campbell as potential judges.

The senators gave the White House the list in May, saying they were giving Bush nine names because there is a possibility that a third judgeship may become vacant. If U.S. District Judge Richard P. Matsch, until recently the chief judge f the Colorado district, elects to move to senior judge status, Bush could name his successor.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post Gazette
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023458

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

Bush Chooses 2 Federal Judges; Allard won't Block Colorado Picks

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

President Bush selected two Colorado Republicans on Monday from a bipartisan slate of nine judicial nominees for vacant seats on the U.S. District Court in Denver.

The appointments of Chief Bankruptcy Court Judge Marcia S. Krieger of Denver and state District Judge Robert E. Blackburn of Las Animas to the federal bench are among the most prized nominations a president can make. If confirmed by the Senate, the two will receive lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary. Federal district judges are paid $ 145,100 a year.

Bush's selections should end a three-year standoff between the White House and Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Loveland, over who should sit on the federal bench in Colorado.

Allard, who blocked President Bill Clinton's Democratic judicial nominees for Colorado, expressed relief with the White House action. 'President Bush could not have selected two more qualified individuals to serve on the federal bench,' Allard said.

He and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Ignacio, called for quick confirmation of the nominees. 'The people of Colorado deserve to have these vacancies filled,' Allard said.

The selections also rebuffed a last-minute effort by Rep. Mark Udall, D-Boulder, to win one of the seats for Colorado Deputy Attorney General Christine Arguello. She had been one of three Democratic lawyers that Clinton failed to get confirmed to the federal bench in Colorado. Krieger, 47, would replace Daniel B. Sparr, who recently moved to senior judge status. A 1979 graduate of the University of Colorado School of Law, she has been a federal bankruptcy judge in Denver since 1994 and the chief bankruptcy judge since last year.

Krieger, who was on a list of five potential judges that Allard recommended to Clinton in 1999, is a Denver native and graduate of Lewis and Clark College. The nomination of Blackburn, 51, fills a position that has been vacant since 1998, when District Judge Zita L. Weinshienk moved to senior judge status. Blackburn was named to Colorado's 16th Judicial District Court bench in 1988 by Gov. Roy Romer, a Democrat.

A native of Lakewood, he, too, is a graduate of the University of Colorado law school, receiving his law degree in 1974. Blackburn received his undergraduate degree from Western State College and has served as Bent County attorney and municipal judge for the town of Kim. His current job has him holding court in the counties of Crowley, Otero and Bent.

'The White House seems to have given a preference to those who have existing judicial experience,' noted Phillip Figaf Englewood, one of the nine lawyers whose names were given to the White House by Allard and Campbell as potential judges.

The senators gave the White House the list in May, saying they were giving Bush nine names because there is a possibility that a third judgeship may become vacant. If U.S. District Judge Richard P. Matsch, until recently the chief judge f the Colorado district, elects to move to senior judge status, Bush could name his successor.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post Gazette
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023467

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Lloyd N. Cutler was White House counsel in the Carter and Clinton administrations. He co-chairs the Constitution Project's Courts Initiative. Mickey Edwards is a former Republican representative in the House from Oklahoma who teaches at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023471

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

Bush Nominates Altoona Jurist for Appeals Court

President Bush yesterday nominated Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Smith, 49, of Altoona, was entertaining a group of Russian judges yesterday and couldn't be reached, but he said through a secretary that it wouldn't be appropriate for him to comment until his nomination is confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

That confirmation could take several weeks. The nomination was anticipated for some time and greeted with praise for Smith by his colleagues in U.S. District Court and others who have worked with him.

"I was chief judge when Smith was appointed to this court [in 1988] and I've been impressed with his work ever since," said Senior U.S. District Judge Maurice B. Cohill Jr. "I think he will be a wonderful addition to the circuit court. He's a calm, deliberate guy, very intelligent."

Smith's good friend, state Sen. Robert Jubelirer, R-Altoona, said Bush could not have made a better choice.

"This is wonderful for the entire system," said Jubelirer. "Everyone can be proud that Bush has nominated one of the most outstanding judges in the country. He was the second-youngest federal judge when he was appointed by President Reagan in 1988. He'll be one of the youngest [appellate] judges in the country at 49. I've known him since he was 15, and I could have predicted this back then."

Judge William Standish offered his congratulations to Smith and said he hopes he does well in the new job.

Smith became chief judge of the district court in January, replacing Donald Ziegler, and sits in Pittsburgh and Johnstown.

He started his law career in Altoona with the firm Jubelirer, Carothers, Krier & Halpern, and later became a managing partner there. During his years in private practice, he also served as an assistant district attorney in Blair County and a special assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania. In the early 1980s, he helped lead a grand jury investigation into organized crime in Blair County.

After serving as district attorney from 1983 to 1984, he was appointed judge in Common Pleas Court in 1984 and was elected to a full term the next year. In 1987, he was appointed administrative judge of the court. Cohill said the nomination is good news for Smith and the 3rd Circuit, but not for the federal bench in Pittsburgh.

U.S. District Court here has been handling its caseload with three vacancies in the 10 full-time judgeships it is supposed to have. The problem appears likely to get worse if new judges aren't appointed soon.

In addition to Smith's likely departure, Ziegler will go on senior status next month and Standish has said he'll take senior status in March -- leaving six vacancies.

Bush Nominates 3 Arizona Judges for Federal Spots

By Sergio Bustos
Gannett News Service
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

The White House on Monday nominated three Arizonans to serve as federal judges, including Arizona
Supreme Court Justice Frederick J. Martone and Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgenson.

The other nominee was David C. Bury, 58, a partner in the Tucson law firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage. The three were among 10 nominations announced Monday.

Martone, 57, a former Maricopa County Superior Court judge, was appointed to the state Supreme Court in 1992 by former Republican Gov. Fife Symington. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame law school.

Jorgenson, 48, a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been a Superior Court judge in Pima County since 1996. Prior to her appointment, she worked as a deputy attorney for Pima County and as an assistant U.S. attorney in Tucson.

Bury, also a University of Arizona College of Law graduate, has been an attorney in private practice for 34 years.

The Senate must confirm all three, a process that could take several months. This year, the Senate has confirmed only four federal judges even though 108 vacancies exist nationwide.

Arizona's two Republican senators, Jon Kyl and John McCain, urged Congress to approve the nominations as soon as possible.

"Arizona needs these judges quickly," the senators said in a joint statement. "The courts are understaffed and overburdened."

The shortage of judges is especially acute in Southwest border states, where a crackdown on illegal immigration and drug smuggling has caused the criminal caseload in federal courts to skyrocket in recent years.

The two senators said they also recommended to Bush the following people as federal court nominees in Arizona: Neil Wake, David Campbell, both of Phoenix; and Judge Bernardo Velasco, Judge Chris Browning, Lina Rodriquez, and Chuck Sabalos, all of Tucson.

Op/Eds

A Case of the Judgeless Benches

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
The Washington Times
Wednesday, September 12, 2001

Long before the president's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats and liberal and conservative organizations were already at their battle stations. And it appears they will remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as chief justice without even questioning him. The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept President Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Mr. Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Five, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Six, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates, therefore, should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges that are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Lloyd N. Cutler was White House counsel in the Carter and Clinton administrations. He co-chairs the Constitution Project's Courts Initiative. Mickey Edwards is a former Republican representative in the House from Oklahoma who teaches at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Bush Taps 2 Judges

The Denver Post
Tuesday, September 11, 2001

REV_00023480

The White House nominated two distinguished Colorado judges to the U.S. District Court yesterday, and both will receive the full support of U.S. Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

President Bush's nominations, as predicted in these pages Aug. 12, recommend U.S. Chief Bankruptcy Judge Marsha Krieger and 16th Judicial District Judge Robert Blackburn for the bench. We are delighted by the White House decision. Both judges have extensive experience, solid knowledge of the law and a reputation for fairness. They are widely respected by other judges and by lawyers who have appeared before them.

Both should prove extremely helpful to the federal court in Colorado, which hasn't added a judge since 1984 despite increasingly complex and mushrooming caseloads.

We commend Republicans Allard and Campbell, as well as the White House, for pushing to fill these vacancies quickly. We also congratulate the senators for zeroing in on such highly qualified candidates.

Krieger, daughter of retired Colorado Court of Appeals Judge Don Smith, has served on the Bankruptcy Court since 1994 and was unanimously chosen by the federal judges to become chief bankruptcy judge in January 2000.

Blackburn has been one of two district judges serving Bent, Crowley and Otero counties since 1988, having previously served simultaneously as a deputy district attorney, Bent County attorney, and municipal judge and attorney for the town of Kim.

Both judges are graduates of the University of Colorado School of Law.

The next step calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to send 'blue slips' to Colorado's senators. Allard and Campbell then will return the blue slips, signaling their approval of Krieger and Blackburn.

Next, the Judiciary Committee will independently investigate the candidates and vote on whether to approve them. The nominations then would be sent to the Senate floor, and approval there would result in 'judicial commissions' by the president.

The Senate process often drags on for months and months. We urge the committee and the full Senate to exercise all reasonable speed with the Krieger and Blackburn nominations. The long-overworked federal court of Colorado needs qualified new judges, and it needs them now.

Public Papers of the Presidents
January 14, 1991
CITE: 27 Weekly Comp. Pres. Doc. 48

LENGTH: 348 words

HEADLINE: Statement on Signing the Resolution Authorizing the Use of Military Force Against Iraq

BODY:
Today I am signing H.J. Res. 77, the "Authorization for Use of Military Force Against Iraq Resolution." By passing H.J. Res. 77, the Congress of the United States has expressed its approval of the use of U.S. Armed Forces consistent with U.N. Security Council Resolution 678. I asked the Congress to support implementation of U.N. Security Council Resolution 678. I asked the Congress to support implementation of U.N. Security Council Resolution 678 because such action would send the clearest possible message to Saddam Hussein that he must withdraw from Kuwait without condition or delay. I am grateful to those of both political parties who joined in the expression of resolve embodied in this resolution. To all, I emphasize again my conviction that this resolution provides the best hope for peace. The debate on H.J. Res. 77 reflects the profound strength of our constitutional democracy. In coming to grips with the issues at stake in the Gulf, both Houses of Congress acted in the finest traditions of our country. This resolution provides unmistakable support for the international community's determination that Iraq's ongoing aggression against, and occupation of, Kuwait shall not stand. As I made clear to congressional leaders at the outset, my request for congressional support did not, and my signing this resolution does not, constitute any change in the long-standing positions of the executive branch on either the President's constitutional authority to use the Armed Forces to defend vital U.S. interests or the constitutionality of the War Powers Resolution. I am pleased, however, that differences on these issues between the President and many in the Congress have not prevented us from uniting in a common objective. I have had the benefit of extensive and meaningful consultations with the Congress throughout this crisis, and I shall continue to consult closely with the Congress in the days ahead.

George Bush

The White House, January 14, 1991.

Note: H.J. Res. 77, approved January 14, was assigned Public Law No. 102-1.

The below excerpt from Post story today about 10 years of industry inaction against known security risks shows one likely line of lawsuit against the airlines by the families of those killed in World Trade Center and Pentagon. Note that the mere fact that the federal government did not require certain security steps will not immunize the airlines from state tort lawsuits (same as with auto manufacturer cases over the last 3 decades).

"Security enhancements, from criminal background checks on workers to fortifying cockpit doors against unauthorized entry, either withered or were bogged down in rulemaking."

This story is a roadmap for plaintiffs' suits. I would expect plaintiffs' lawyers to focus on the security of the cockpit doors, the failure to do sufficient background checks on passengers, and the failure to screen knives, among other theories. I think the cockpit doors' issue, like the variety of suits against car manufacturers re safety issues over the last 3 decades, could prove quite troublesome for the airlines in court and before juries.

I am not sure anyone wants a market where people try ex ante to value the risk and extent of terrorist attacks. Anyway, I was focusing on the airlines' ability to obtain loans/credit, which affects their continued operations, rather than the investors.

Our market works on the assumption of perfect information. In that hypothetical state, the investors that were in (and subsequently pulled out) should have calculated the risk of a major terrorist attack and subsequent gov't shut down. The pull out today suggests that that information was not properly taken into account ex ante, so the market is just going through an appropriate adjustment to revalue the stock.

Key Agency Nominees Will Receive Rapid Senate Action; Agreement Does Not Include Judicial Candidates

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 17, 2001

EXCERPT

Nickles said he has told Daschle that because of his assurances on nominations, there will be more Republican help on moving appropriations. That represents an about-face from the mood a week ago, when Senate Republicans were plotting to block spending bills to force votes on President Bush's agency and judicial nominees.

"There's more of a feeling of trying to help one another," Nickles said.

But that feeling is not expected to extend to judicial nominees, who serve lifetime appointments to the federal bench.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who maintains that he is moving judicial nominees faster than Republicans did when they were in power, said he will continue at his current pace. And he said Senators who have specific nominees they really want to see get moved should speak directly to him.

"If Senators have a real problem, come and see me. ... I am moving nominees in good faith," Leahy said.

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) agreed that the goodwill on agency nominations is "different"from lifetime positions on the federal bench, but predicted that judicial fights will not reach anywhere near the level of partisanship that had been building over the past few months.

Regardless of the pace that judicial nominations take, some Justice Department nominees have moved very quickly in recent days for positions that will be involved in the massive terrorist investigation. After Judiciary approved 12 nominees for U.S. attorney spots across the nation Thursday, the full Senate confirmed them the next day.

Jason: Can you please get Courtney and me copies of all recent major reports on terrorism, including Gilmore Commission, Rudman commission, Gore airport security commission, etc. Ask Library to help.
(Courtney has at least one recent report; please copy that ASAP for me before you get the rest.) Thanks.

Hi Brett - Thanks for coming out on Saturday night - it was good to see you.

I know you are in the midst of moving offices. But when you have a few minutes, I need guidance from you on a couple matters. My number is 6-0344, or let me know when it would be convenient for me to drop by.
Thanks.

Tim wants to make sure that rooms are chosen according to seniority based on when you graduated from law school. Kyle is to be included using the same formula.

Also, OA is refusing to release the floor plan tonight for copying, so I will check with them first thing in the morning. In the meantime, if you want to proceed with assignments, Counsel's Office will be occupying rooms 173, 171, 169, 167, 165, 163, 161, 160.5, 160A, 158, 157, 156, 155, 154, 152, 153, 151, 151A, and 149.

Our market works on the assumption of perfect information. In that hypothetical state, the investors that were in (and subsequently pulled out) should have calculated the risk of a major terrorist attack and subsequent gov't shut down. The pull out today suggests that that information was not properly taken into account ex ante, so the market is just going through an appropriate adjustment to revalue the stock.

Key Agency Nominees Will Receive Rapid Senate Action; Agreement Does Not Include Judicial Candidates

EXCERPT

Nickles said he has told Daschle that because of his assurances on nominations, there will be more Republican help on moving appropriations. That represents an about-face from the mood a week ago, when Senate Republicans were plotting to block spending bills to force votes on President Bush's agency and judicial nominees.

"There's more of a feeling of trying to help one another," Nickles said.

But that feeling is not expected to extend to judicial nominees, who serve lifetime appointments to the federal bench.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who maintains that he is moving judicial nominees faster than Republicans did when they were in power, said he will continue at his current pace. And he said Senators who have specific nominees they really want to see get moved should speak directly to him.

"If Senators have a real problem, come and see me. ... I am moving nominees in good faith," Leahy said.

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) agreed that the goodwill on agency nominations is "different"from lifetime positions on the federal bench, but predicted that judicial fights will not reach anywhere near the level of partisanship that had been building over the past few months.

Regardless of the pace that judicial nominations take, some Justice Department nominees have moved very quickly in recent days for positions that will be involved in the massive terrorist investigation. After Judiciary approved 12 nominees for U.S. attorney spots across the nation Thursday, the full Senate confirmed them the next day.

US Airways to Lay Off 11,000 Workers
By Brad Foss
AP Business Writer
Monday, Sept. 17, 2001; 4:49 p.m. EDT

NEW YORK)) The stocks of major airlines and travel-related companies fell sharply Monday, with Wall Street jittery about long-term financial woes and, in some cases, bankruptcies in the wake of last week's terrorist attacks.

The industry is lobbying for a $20 billion federal bailout, having lost $1 billion already because of weak demand from nervous travelers, a costly two-day shutdown of the nation's air system and higher security-related expenses.

US Airways said Monday it expects to lay off 11,000 employees, roughly one-fifth of its work force, and cut its nationwide service by 23 percent.

"The entire U.S. aviation system is in jeopardy, and without decisive actions the future of the system, along with its impact on the nation's economy, is imperiled," the company said in a statement.

Other major carriers have trimmed schedules by 20 percent and an industry group said as many as 100,000 airline layoffs are likely in coming weeks.

Subject: Room Assignments

Tim wants to make sure that rooms are chosen according to seniority based on when you graduated from law school. Kyle is to be included using the same formula.

Also, OA is refusing to release the floor plan tonight for copying, so I will check with them first thing in the morning. In the meantime, if you want to proceed with assignments, Counsel's Office will be occupying rooms 173, 171, 169, 167, 165, 163, 161, 160.5, 160A, 158, 157, 156, 155, 154, 152, 153, 151, 151A, and 149.

Key Agency Nominees Will Receive Rapid Senate Action; Agreement Does Not Include Judicial Candidates

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Monday, September 17, 2001

EXCERPT

Nickles said he has told Daschle that because of his assurances on nominations, there will be more Republican help on moving appropriations. That represents an about-face from the mood a week ago, when Senate Republicans were plotting to block spending bills to force votes on President Bush's agency and judicial nominees.

"There's more of a feeling of trying to help one another," Nickles said.

But that feeling is not expected to extend to judicial nominees, who serve lifetime appointments to the federal bench.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who maintains that he is moving judicial nominees faster than Republicans did when they were in power, said he will continue at his current pace. And he said Senators who have specific nominees they really want to see get moved should speak directly to him.

"If Senators have a real problem, come and see me. ... I am moving nominees in good faith," Leahy said.

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) agreed that the goodwill on agency nominations is "different"from lifetime positions on the federal bench, but predicted that judicial fights will not reach anywhere near the level of partisanship that had been building over the past few months.

Regardless of the pace that judicial nominations take, some Justice Department nominees have moved very quickly in recent days for positions that will be involved in the massive terrorist investigation. After Judiciary approved 12 nominees for U.S. attorney spots across the nation Thursday, the full Senate confirmed them the next day.

Key Agency Nominees Will Receive Rapid Senate Action; Agreement Does Not Include Judicial Candidates

By Paul Kane
Roll Call

EXCERPT

Nickles said he has told Daschle that because of his assurances on nominations, there will be more Republican help on moving appropriations. That represents an about-face from the mood a week ago, when Senate Republicans were plotting to block spending bills to force votes on President Bush's agency and judicial nominees.

"There's more of a feeling of trying to help one another," Nickles said.

But that feeling is not expected to extend to judicial nominees, who serve lifetime appointments to the federal bench.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who maintains that he is moving judicial nominees faster than Republicans did when they were in power, said he will continue at his current pace. And he said Senators who have specific nominees they really want to see get moved should speak directly to him.

"If Senators have a real problem, come and see me. ... I am moving nominees in good faith," Leahy said.

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) agreed that the goodwill on agency nominations is "different"from lifetime positions on the federal bench, but predicted that judicial fights will not reach anywhere near the level of partisanship that had been building over the past few months.

Regardless of the pace that judicial nominations take, some Justice Department nominees have moved very quickly in recent days for positions that will be involved in the massive terrorist investigation. After Judiciary approved 12 nominees for U.S. attorney spots across the nation Thursday, the full Senate confirmed them the next day.

Bush mulls airline aid
Commerce secretary says president is ready to back direct aid to carriers September 18, 2001: 9:25 a.m. ET
NEW YORK (CNNfn) - President Bush supports the concept of direct financial aid for the nation's airlines, U.S. Commerce Secretary Don Evans told CNN Tuesday.

"He understands what's happened to this sector of our economy, he understands that the rules have changed for them this last week and it is appropriate that the federal government step in and give them some support," Evans said in an interview on the White House lawn.

The nation's airlines have said they face a severe cash crunch due to the almost total absence of new ticket sales since last week's terrorist attack involving four hijacked jetliners. Most major airline stocks lost between 35 and 50 percent of their value in trading Monday, the first day of stock trading since the attack, although all the major airline stocks showed a slight rebound in early trading Tuesday.

AMR Corp. (AMR: up $1.85 to $19.85, Research, Estimates), the world's largest airline company, was up more than 10 percent in early trading, and No. 2 UAL Corp. (UAL: up $1.27 to $18.77, Research, Estimates) and No. 3 Delta Air Lines (DAL: up $1.27 to $21.91, Research, Estimates) also regained some of Monday's lost ground.

Most major airlines have cut their flight schedules by at least 20 percent in the wake of the attack. Continental Airlines (CAL: up $0.40 to $20.45, Research, Estimates) announced Saturday it would cut 12,000 jobs, or more than 20 percent of its staff, and warned Monday it would miss $70 million in payments on aircraft-backed loans. Other airlines, including US Airways (U: up $0.28 to $5.85, Research, Estimates), America West (AWA: up $0.42 to $3.42, Research, Estimates) and American Trans Air (AMTR: down $0.25 to $11.50, Research, Estimates) signaled staff cuts of their own Monday.

Evans said he couldn't put a number on the amount of the support for the airlines the President would back. Congressional leaders reached agreement on $2.5 billion in aid Friday, only to see it blocked by Rep. Lloyd Doggett, D-Texas, who objected to the hasty move to provide so much support. Congressional leaders again called for a bailout package Monday.

Airlines had been facing a difficult financial picture even before the terrorist attack, and only Continental and Southwest Airlines (LUV: up $0.64 to $13.64, Research, Estimates) had been expected by analysts to make money before the attack. The industry as a whole was on course for more than $3 billion in losses before the attack.

Thanks. Let me know if that changes. BTW, I heard that from LRD who said they heard it from someone in the COS office. That's the problem with "telephone" type messages.

LRD will send around a message that comments on ATA are due at 6:00 p.m. tonight.

Were any decisions made by the DCPC meeting at 10:30 a.m.?

Subject: personal family information

Mrs. Gonzales would like to contact the spouses of Counsel Office staff members to see about getting families together for dinner one night next week.

Will you please email to me the names and contact number(s) for your spouse? I think children may also be included in the evening so if you will tell me how many kids you have, and provide names if you wish, that would be helpful.

Also - I do not have home addresses/zips for most of you. If you want to send this to me as well I'll make a spread sheet of "personal info" that can be used by Counsel Office staff only for other purposes like Christmas cards, party invites, etc.

Staff Secretaries Office has only a few staff members so they may also be included in the evening.

Thanks!

I suggest no response. There's nothing wrong with saying he's a former White House staffer. His murder-for-hire scheme may be (or become) illegal, but I think DOJ probably has higher priorities right now than hare-brained schemes like this.

Kirk: Per our phone conversation, Lozzi was never a White House staffer, let alone during Deasert Storm. at best he drove a press car in a motorcade once. This letter and his web bio with photos of him at the White House and AF #1 is ridiculous. I just hope he isn't dumb enough to try something stupid.

I suggest no response. There's nothing wrong with saying he's a former White House staffer. His murder-for-hire scheme may be (or become) illegal, but I think DOJ probably has higher priorities right now than hare-brained schemes like this.

Kirk: Per our phone conversation, Lozzi was never a White House staffer, let alone during Deasert Storm. at best he drove a press car in a motorcade once. This letter and his web bio with photos of him at the White House and AF #1 is ridiculous. I just hope he isn't dumb enough to try something stupid.

Do you know whether they plan to move the furniture from our current offices to our new offices?

This will impact Noel's decision of what office to pick (which, of course, will impact my options).

I am told that this afternoon, you, your boxes, and your computer will be moved to your new office. Tomorrow, the furniture will be moved as you desire.

Re: phone and fax numbers, you will keep the same ones you are using now. Remember to pack your phone near the top of one of your boxes, and label that box with your phone number. Also, please leave the chord attached to your phone when packing it.

No one should be without a desk today in your new office. If you run into a problem, please track me down and we'll get one moved in for you.

Thank you all for your cooperation and patience.

There is a door between your new office and mine -- I'd like to ask GSA to lock that door so that there can't be entry from either side into the other office. That's what we've done in my current space with the doors from my office to Helgi's and Courtney's. Do you have any problem with

New Federal Judge Officially Gets His Robes

By Joseph Morton
Omaha World-Herald
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Judges, attorneys and lawmakers Tuesday celebrated the newest member of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Several hundred people attended a formal investiture ceremony for William Riley, an Omaha attorney. Riley, 54, was privately sworn into office a month ago and has been working since then.

Tuesday's ceremony at the Roman L. Hruska Federal Courthouse in Omaha was a formal recognition of Riley's appointment and a chance for friends to indulge in some good-natured ribbing and for everyone to reflect on the importance of the court system.

Riley's nomination to the bench sailed through the U.S. Senate with bipartisan support from Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson and Republican Sen. Chuck Hagel. Both attended Tuesday's ceremony, as did many federal and state judges, prominent attorneys and local politicians.

Last week's terrorist attacks in New York and Washington were on everyone's mind.

Federal appeals Judge Donald Lay was supposed to publicly administer the oath of office to Riley on Tuesday, but he has been stranded in Europe since the attacks. Judge Roger Wollman of Sioux Falls, S.D., chief judge of the 8th Circuit, did the honors.

Riley, a Lincoln native, was working in Omaha before his nomination to the federal bench.

Grassley Urges Action on Nominees

By Joseph Morton
The Associated Press
Thursday, September 20, 2001

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has urged prompt action by the Senate to confirm nominees for U.S. marshals, U.S. attorneys and federal judges.

Grassley said filling these jobs are another key component to defeat terrorism. "Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources," he said in a statement Tuesday. "We need to have everyone on the job and fully equipped to enhance our security, to investigate and to bring to justice those responsible for the heinous attacks last week."

Four Iowans are awaiting confirmation to federal posts. They are:

-Charles Larson Sr., of Cedar Rapids, U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa;

-Steve Colloton, of Des Moines, U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Iowa;

-James Gritzner, of West Des Moines, U.S. District Court, Southern District of Iowa;

-U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy, of Cedar Rapids, Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Bush's Dilemma; Will Fighting Abroad Mean Losing at Home?

By Byron York
The National Review
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Want to see how last week's terrorist attacks are affecting everything in Washington? Just look at the Bush administration's ongoing struggle to place judges on the federal bench.

According to the Justice Department, there are 108 vacancies on the federal courts. There are 53

REV_00064910

Bush judicial nominations pending before the Senate. And four judges have actually been confirmed. Republicans had hoped — perhaps naively — that slow-moving Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy might allow a significant number of nominations to go through this fall. But now, with members of Congress focused on issues like antiterrorism, airline bailouts, and economic stimulus — and anxious to finish their work and head home — there's little chance that will happen.

The rush to adjourn might deprive Republicans of a key weapon in the battle over judges. During the Clinton years, when Senate Democrats were in the minority, they were adept at holding up appropriations bills while demanding that Republicans approve the president's judicial nominations. It usually worked. This fall, minority Republicans had been planning to do the same thing as Congress worked its way through the 13 spending bills that must be passed to keep government departments running. But now, with all the other issues to consider, there is talk that, rather than debate each bill separately, Congress might combine all or most of them into an omnibus spending measure. That would mean greatly reduced bargaining power for Republicans. "If that happens, we lose leverage," says one aide. "It's really bad."

Further complicating matters is the White House's understandable focus on the terrorist crisis. The counsel's office, which handles judicial nominations, has new legal issues — war powers, assassinations, etc. — to consider as the president decides what actions to take against world terrorist networks. That will inevitably mean less emphasis on judges.

It's an enormous change from just two weeks ago. On September 6, at a meeting between Bush and congressional leaders, Republicans urged the president to take a get-tough stance with Leahy on the issue of judges. "If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," Republican Sen. Jeff Sessions told Roll Call, the Capitol Hill newspaper. That was then. Now, the bully pulpit is reserved for the war on terrorism, and judges will have to wait.

The situation underscores a new dilemma for Bush. Devoting every ounce of his administration's energy to the antiterrorism campaign might be the right thing to do, but it might also mean losing control of important parts of his domestic agenda. Even as his popularity rises to new heights, Bush might find himself with less influence on critical issues like judges. When the president said, the day after the attacks, that there would be no "business as usual," he was right — more so than anyone could have known.

New Federal Judge Officially Gets His Robes

By Joseph Morton
Omaha World-Herald
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Judges, attorneys and lawmakers Tuesday celebrated the newest member of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Several hundred people attended a formal investiture ceremony for William Riley, an Omaha attorney. Riley, 54, was privately sworn into office a month ago and has been working since then.

Tuesday's ceremony at the Roman L. Hruska Federal Courthouse in Omaha was a formal recognition of Riley's appointment and a chance for friends to indulge in some good-natured ribbing and for everyone to reflect on the importance of the court system.

Riley's nomination to the bench sailed through the U.S. Senate with bipartisan support from Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson and Republican Sen. Chuck Hagel. Both attended Tuesday's ceremony, as did many federal and state judges, prominent attorneys and local politicians.

Last week's terrorist attacks in New York and Washington were on everyone's mind.

Federal appeals Judge Donald Lay was supposed to publicly administer the oath of office to Riley on Tuesday, but he has been stranded in Europe since the attacks. Judge Roger Wollman of Sioux Falls, S.D., chief judge of the 8th Circuit, did the honors.

Riley, a Lincoln native, was working in Omaha before his nomination to the federal bench.

Grassley Urges Action on Nominees

By Joseph Morton
The Associated Press
Thursday, September 20, 2001

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has urged prompt action by the Senate to confirm nominees for U.S. marshals, U.S. attorneys and federal judges.

Grassley said filling these jobs are another key component to defeat terrorism. "Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources," he said in a statement Tuesday. "We need to have everyone on the job and fully equipped to enhance our security, to investigate and to bring to justice those responsible for the heinous attacks last week."

Four Iowans are awaiting confirmation to federal posts. They are:

-Charles Larson Sr., of Cedar Rapids, U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa;

-Steve Colloton, of Des Moines, U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Iowa;

-James Gritzner, of West Des Moines, U.S. District Court, Southern District of Iowa;

-U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy, of Cedar Rapids, Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Bush's Dilemma; Will Fighting Abroad Mean Losing at Home?

By Byron York
The National Review
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Want to see how last week's terrorist attacks are affecting everything in Washington? Just look at the Bush administration's ongoing struggle to place judges on the federal bench.

According to the Justice Department, there are 108 vacancies on the federal courts. There are 53

REV_00064927

Bush judicial nominations pending before the Senate. And four judges have actually been confirmed. Republicans had hoped — perhaps naively — that slow-moving Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy might allow a significant number of nominations to go through this fall. But now, with members of Congress focused on issues like antiterrorism, airline bailouts, and economic stimulus — and anxious to finish their work and head home — there's little chance that will happen.

The rush to adjourn might deprive Republicans of a key weapon in the battle over judges. During the Clinton years, when Senate Democrats were in the minority, they were adept at holding up appropriations bills while demanding that Republicans approve the president's judicial nominations. It usually worked. This fall, minority Republicans had been planning to do the same thing as Congress worked its way through the 13 spending bills that must be passed to keep government departments running. But now, with all the other issues to consider, there is talk that, rather than debate each bill separately, Congress might combine all or most of them into an omnibus spending measure. That would mean greatly reduced bargaining power for Republicans. "If that happens, we lose leverage," says one aide. "It's really bad."

Further complicating matters is the White House's understandable focus on the terrorist crisis. The counsel's office, which handles judicial nominations, has new legal issues — war powers, assassinations, etc. — to consider as the president decides what actions to take against world terrorist networks. That will inevitably mean less emphasis on judges.

It's an enormous change from just two weeks ago. On September 6, at a meeting between Bush and congressional leaders, Republicans urged the president to take a get-tough stance with Leahy on the issue of judges. "If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," Republican Sen. Jeff Sessions told Roll Call, the Capitol Hill newspaper. That was then. Now, the bully pulpit is reserved for the war on terrorism, and judges will have to wait.

The situation underscores a new dilemma for Bush. Devoting every ounce of his administration's energy to the antiterrorism campaign might be the right thing to do, but it might also mean losing control of important parts of his domestic agenda. Even as his popularity rises to new heights, Bush might find himself with less influence on critical issues like judges. When the president said, the day after the attacks, that there would be no "business as usual," he was right — more so than anyone could have known.

New Federal Judge Officially Gets His Robes

By Joseph Morton
Omaha World-Herald
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Judges, attorneys and lawmakers Tuesday celebrated the newest member of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Several hundred people attended a formal investiture ceremony for William Riley, an Omaha attorney. Riley, 54, was privately sworn into office a month ago and has been working since then.

Tuesday's ceremony at the Roman L. Hruska Federal Courthouse in Omaha was a formal recognition of Riley's appointment and a chance for friends to indulge in some good-natured ribbing and for everyone to reflect on the importance of the court system.

Riley's nomination to the bench sailed through the U.S. Senate with bipartisan support from Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson and Republican Sen. Chuck Hagel. Both attended Tuesday's ceremony, as did many federal and state judges, prominent attorneys and local politicians.

Last week's terrorist attacks in New York and Washington were on everyone's mind.

Federal appeals Judge Donald Lay was supposed to publicly administer the oath of office to Riley on Tuesday, but he has been stranded in Europe since the attacks. Judge Roger Wollman of Sioux Falls, S.D., chief judge of the 8th Circuit, did the honors.

Riley, a Lincoln native, was working in Omaha before his nomination to the federal bench.

Grassley Urges Action on Nominees

By Joseph Morton
The Associated Press
Thursday, September 20, 2001

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has urged prompt action by the Senate to confirm nominees for U.S. marshals, U.S. attorneys and federal judges.

Grassley said filling these jobs are another key component to defeat terrorism. "Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources," he said in a statement Tuesday. "We need to have everyone on the job and fully equipped to enhance our security, to investigate and to bring to justice those responsible for the heinous attacks last week."

Four Iowans are awaiting confirmation to federal posts. They are:

-Charles Larson Sr., of Cedar Rapids, U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa;

-Steve Colloton, of Des Moines, U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Iowa;

-James Gritzner, of West Des Moines, U.S. District Court, Southern District of Iowa;

-U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy, of Cedar Rapids, Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Bush's Dilemma; Will Fighting Abroad Mean Losing at Home?

By Byron York
The National Review
Wednesday, September 19, 2001

Want to see how last week's terrorist attacks are affecting everything in Washington? Just look at the Bush administration's ongoing struggle to place judges on the federal bench.

According to the Justice Department, there are 108 vacancies on the federal courts. There are 53

REV_00064937

Bush judicial nominations pending before the Senate. And four judges have actually been confirmed. Republicans had hoped — perhaps naively — that slow-moving Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy might allow a significant number of nominations to go through this fall. But now, with members of Congress focused on issues like antiterrorism, airline bailouts, and economic stimulus — and anxious to finish their work and head home — there's little chance that will happen.

The rush to adjourn might deprive Republicans of a key weapon in the battle over judges. During the Clinton years, when Senate Democrats were in the minority, they were adept at holding up appropriations bills while demanding that Republicans approve the president's judicial nominations. It usually worked. This fall, minority Republicans had been planning to do the same thing as Congress worked its way through the 13 spending bills that must be passed to keep government departments running. But now, with all the other issues to consider, there is talk that, rather than debate each bill separately, Congress might combine all or most of them into an omnibus spending measure. That would mean greatly reduced bargaining power for Republicans. "If that happens, we lose leverage," says one aide. "It's really bad."

Further complicating matters is the White House's understandable focus on the terrorist crisis. The counsel's office, which handles judicial nominations, has new legal issues — war powers, assassinations, etc. — to consider as the president decides what actions to take against world terrorist networks. That will inevitably mean less emphasis on judges.

It's an enormous change from just two weeks ago. On September 6, at a meeting between Bush and congressional leaders, Republicans urged the president to take a get-tough stance with Leahy on the issue of judges. "If this continues to get worse, the White House is going to have to use the bully pulpit to protect their nominees," Republican Sen. Jeff Sessions told Roll Call, the Capitol Hill newspaper. That was then. Now, the bully pulpit is reserved for the war on terrorism, and judges will have to wait.

The situation underscores a new dilemma for Bush. Devoting every ounce of his administration's energy to the antiterrorism campaign might be the right thing to do, but it might also mean losing control of important parts of his domestic agenda. Even as his popularity rises to new heights, Bush might find himself with less influence on critical issues like judges. When the president said, the day after the attacks, that there would be no "business as usual," he was right — more so than anyone could have known.

The EPA argues that this text is not as clear or comprehensive as it seems, because the title of õ 7511(a) reads "Classification and attainment dates for 1989 nonattainment areas," which suggests that Subpart 2 applies only to areas that were in nonattainment in 1989, and not to areas later designated nonattainment under a revised ozone standard. The suggestion must be rejected, however, because õ 7511(b)(1) specifically provides for the classification of areas that were in attainment in 1989 but have subsequently slipped into nonattainment. It thus makes clear that Subpart 2 is not limited solely to 1989 nonattainment areas. This eliminates the interpretive role of the title, which may only "shed light on some ambiguous word or phrase in the statute itself," Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 267, 147 L. Ed. 2d 203, 120 S. Ct. 2159 (2000) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Pennsylvania [*918] Dept. of Corrections v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. at 212, in turn quoting Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 331 U.S. 519, 528-529 (1947)).

The EPA argues that this text is not as clear or comprehensive as it seems, because the title of õ 7511(a) reads "Classification and attainment dates for 1989 nonattainment areas," which suggests that Subpart 2 applies only to areas that were in nonattainment in 1989, and not to areas later designated nonattainment under a revised ozone standard. The suggestion must be rejected, however, because õ 7511(b)(1) specifically provides for the classification of areas that were in attainment in 1989 but have subsequently slipped into nonattainment. It thus makes clear that Subpart 2 is not limited solely to 1989 nonattainment areas. This eliminates the interpretive role of the title, which may only "shed light on some ambiguous word or phrase in the statute itself," Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 267, 147 L. Ed. 2d 203, 120 S. Ct. 2159 (2000) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Pennsylvania [*918] Dept. of Corrections v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. at 212, in turn quoting Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 331 U.S. 519, 528-529 (1947)).

Please remember to keep cell phones and pagers with you, and turned on, when you are out of the office and/or away from your homes. This applies to all staff members - not just the lawyers.

Thanks!

PS - this is a reminder from Tim - not me:-)

Brett - my meeting notes indicate you were going to put together the guidelines for this. Folks are asking for this guidance so I am checking in on the status.

FYI that I talked to Mark Frownfelter in EOP security this morning and he said he would get for me the EO on this but I don't know if this is going to provide the guidance that staff members need to know how to store classified info including notes taken at meetings, etc.

Also - only certain people (Harriet, Tim, Judge, Blakeman) have original classification authority. If someone needs something classified in connection with the work they are doing should they go to one of these people? Courtney was asking about this...

Thanks!

My understanding and notes (both of which may be wrong, I suppose) reflect that I was to work with Political Affairs and others on the classified schedule issue, but do not mention this broader issue. MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
Re: The Freedom of Information Act

As you know, the Department of Justice and this Administration are committed to full compliance with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), and to maintaining an open and accountable government. The FOIA embodies the importance of disseminating government information in a democracy -- a core value of our society. Indeed, it is only through a well-informed citizenry that the leaders of our nation remain accountable to the governed and the American people can be assured that neither fraud nor government waste is concealed.

The Department of Justice and this Administration are equally committed to protecting other fundamental values that are held by our society. Among them are safeguarding our national security, enhancing the effectiveness of our law enforcement agencies, protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy. The right to privacy, in particular, must not be unduly infringed, especially in this time of rapidly advancing technology.

Our citizens have a strong interest as well in a government that is fully functional and efficient. Congress and the courts have long recognized that certain legal privileges ensure candid and complete agency deliberations without fear that these deliberations will be made public. Other privileges ensure that lawyers' deliberations and communications are kept private. No leader can operate effectively without confidential advice and counsel. Exemption 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), recognizes these privileges and the sound policy reasons underlying them.

I encourage your agency to carefully consider the protection of all such values and interests when making disclosure determinations under the FOIA. While your agency's FOIA officers may continue to make discretionary disclosures of exempt information, solely as a matter of administrative discretion, they should do so only with full regard for the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that can be implicated in sensitive information.

In making these decisions, you should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy when significant FOIA policy issues arise, as well as with our Civil Division on FOIA litigation matters. When you carefully consider FOIA requests and decide to withhold records, in whole or in part, please be assured that the Department of Justice will defend your decisions unless they lack a sound legal basis or present an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Re: The Freedom of Information Act

As you know, the Department of Justice and this Administration are committed to full compliance with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), and to maintaining an open and accountable government. The FOIA embodies the importance of disseminating government information in a democracy -- a core value of our society. Indeed, it is only through a well-informed citizenry that the leaders of our nation remain accountable to the governed and the American people can be assured that neither fraud nor government waste is concealed.

The Department of Justice and this Administration are equally committed to protecting other fundamental values that are held by our society. Among them are safeguarding our national security, enhancing the effectiveness of our law enforcement agencies, protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy. The right to privacy, in particular, must not be unduly infringed, especially in this time of rapidly advancing technology.

Our citizens have a strong interest as well in a government that is fully functional and efficient. Congress and the courts have long recognized that certain legal privileges ensure candid and complete agency deliberations without fear that these deliberations will be made public. Other privileges ensure that lawyers' deliberations and communications are kept private. No leader can operate effectively without confidential advice and counsel. Exemption 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), recognizes these privileges and the sound policy reasons underlying them.

I encourage your agency to carefully consider the protection of all such values and interests when making disclosure determinations under the FOIA. While your agency's FOIA officers may continue to make discretionary disclosures of exempt information, solely as a matter of administrative discretion, they should do so only with full regard for the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that can be implicated in sensitive information.

In making these decisions, you should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy when significant FOIA policy issues arise, as well as with our Civil Division on FOIA litigation matters. When you carefully consider FOIA requests and decide to withhold records, in whole or in part, please be assured that the Department of Justice will defend your decisions unless they lack a sound legal basis or present an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Office of the Attorney General
Washington, D.C. 20530

MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
Re: The Freedom of Information Act

The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), balances two competing and important objectives: (i) informing the public about the Executive Branch's policies, practices, and decisions; and (ii) ensuring protection of Executive Branch information that implicates privacy concerns or is otherwise privileged, or that relates to national security, law enforcement, and commercial secrets, among other protections. The Department of Justice and this Administration will comply fully with the FOIA and will respect the balance Congress has struck between these competing values.

Your agency should abide by the balance of competing values reflected in the FOIA. Any discretionary decision by your agency to disclose information protected under the FOIA should be made only after full and deliberate consideration of the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that could be implicated by disclosure of the information. You should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy, as well as with the Civil Division of the Department, when these and other significant FOIA policy issues and matters arise. When an agency has carefully considered a FOIA request and decided to withhold records, in whole or in part, the Department of Justice will defend your decision unless the decision lacks a sound legal basis or presents an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Bush to Nominate Clay Land to Federal Judgeship

The Associated Press
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush intends to nominate former state Sen. Clay D. Land of Columbus to be a federal judge in the Middle District of Georgia, the White House said. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia law school and since 1992 has been a partner in the firm Buchanan & Land. The Republican did not run for re-election to the Senate last year.

The White House announced the nomination on Friday.

The 70-county district stretches from Athens to Bainbridge. Chief Judge Duross Fitzpatrick created a vacancy by moving to senior status, and Judge J. Robert Elliott, left a vacancy when he retired Dec. 31, a day before his 91st birthday.

Quick Actions Urged on Judicial Openings

REV_00065200

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, September 21, 2001

An Iowa senator is urging Senate leaders to speed confirmation of dozens of federal prosecutors and judges so they can get to work on cases related to last week's terrorist attacks.

'Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources,' said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa. 'We need to have everyone on the job.'

In a letter to Senate leaders, Grassley requested that every Justice Department official and U.S. attorney nominee 'and as many federal judges as possible' be confirmed by the Senate before adjournment this fall.

Seven Justice Department nominees, 35 U.S. attorneys and 51 federal judges await confirmation, Grassley said.

Three Nevadans are among those awaiting Senate action. Reno attorney Larry Hicks and Clark County District Judge James Mahan have been nominated to federal judgeships while Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden has been chosen to be U.S. attorney.

Grassley sent his letter to Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and the leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mimi Devlin, a spokeswoman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said Leahy had not yet seen the request. She said the panel has kept to a 'brisk schedule of hearings and votes on the president's nominees.'

Besides handling nominations, the Judiciary Committee is involved heavily in forming anti-terrorist legislation requested by Attorney General John Ashcroft, Devlin said.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., said the Senate 'will move through (nominees) just as quickly as we can. I think we shouldn't give up our process.

'I think Pat Leahy's doing his best.'

Attorney Tapped for Judgeship

By Ed Asher
The Houston Chronicle
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush announced Friday that he has nominated McAllen attorney and Houston native

REV_00065201

Randy Crane for a federal judgeship being created in South Texas.

Crane, 36, specializes in commercial and personal injury cases. He has no experience as a judge, but said he is confident that he can fulfill the duties of the post.

"I am deeply honored that the president has placed his trust in me," Crane said.

The nomination must be approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate.

Crane would fill a second judgeship in McAllen. It is needed, he said, because the federal courthouse there is overcrowded.

"An increase in presence of law enforcement along the border has created a greater number of drug and immigration cases flooding the courts," Crane said.

"My father is a (immigration) lawyer, and most of my family's friends have been lawyers since I was a small child. I think every son looks up to their father."

Crane, who has lived in McAllen since he was 2, attended McAllen Memorial High School and graduated from the University of Texas at Austin with a bachelor's degree in economics at 19.

He received his law degree from UT in 1987.

Crane is married with an 8-year-old son.

Bush to Nominate Clay Land to Federal Judgeship

The Associated Press
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush intends to nominate former state Sen. Clay D. Land of Columbus to be a federal judge in the Middle District of Georgia, the White House said. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia law school and since 1992 has been a partner in the firm Buchanan & Land. The Republican did not run for re-election to the Senate last year.

The White House announced the nomination on Friday.

The 70-county district stretches from Athens to Bainbridge. Chief Judge Duross Fitzpatrick created a vacancy by moving to senior status, and Judge J. Robert Elliott, left a vacancy when he retired Dec. 31, a day before his 91st birthday.

Quick Actions Urged on Judicial Openings

REV_00065205

By Steve Tetreault
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, September 21, 2001

An Iowa senator is urging Senate leaders to speed confirmation of dozens of federal prosecutors and judges so they can get to work on cases related to last week's terrorist attacks.

'Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources,' said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa. 'We need to have everyone on the job.'

In a letter to Senate leaders, Grassley requested that every Justice Department official and U.S. attorney nominee 'and as many federal judges as possible' be confirmed by the Senate before adjournment this fall.

Seven Justice Department nominees, 35 U.S. attorneys and 51 federal judges await confirmation, Grassley said.

Three Nevadans are among those awaiting Senate action. Reno attorney Larry Hicks and Clark County District Judge James Mahan have been nominated to federal judgeships while Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden has been chosen to be U.S. attorney.

Grassley sent his letter to Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and the leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mimi Devlin, a spokeswoman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said Leahy had not yet seen the request. She said the panel has kept to a 'brisk schedule of hearings and votes on the president's nominees.'

Besides handling nominations, the Judiciary Committee is involved heavily in forming anti-terrorist legislation requested by Attorney General John Ashcroft, Devlin said.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., said the Senate 'will move through (nominees) just as quickly as we can. I think we shouldn't give up our process.

'I think Pat Leahy's doing his best.'

Attorney Tapped for Judgeship

By Ed Asher
The Houston Chronicle
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush announced Friday that he has nominated McAllen attorney and Houston native

REV_00065206

Randy Crane for a federal judgeship being created in South Texas.

Crane, 36, specializes in commercial and personal injury cases. He has no experience as a judge, but said he is confident that he can fulfill the duties of the post.

"I am deeply honored that the president has placed his trust in me," Crane said.

The nomination must be approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate.

Crane would fill a second judgeship in McAllen. It is needed, he said, because the federal courthouse there is overcrowded.

"An increase in presence of law enforcement along the border has created a greater number of drug and immigration cases flooding the courts," Crane said.

"My father is a (immigration) lawyer, and most of my family's friends have been lawyers since I was a small child. I think every son looks up to their father."

Crane, who has lived in McAllen since he was 2, attended McAllen Memorial High School and graduated from the University of Texas at Austin with a bachelor's degree in economics at 19.

He received his law degree from UT in 1987.

Crane is married with an 8-year-old son.

Bush to Nominate Clay Land to Federal Judgeship

The Associated Press
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush intends to nominate former state Sen. Clay D. Land of Columbus to be a federal judge in the Middle District of Georgia, the White House said. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia law school and since 1992 has been a partner in the firm Buchanan & Land. The Republican did not run for re-election to the Senate last year.

The White House announced the nomination on Friday.

The 70-county district stretches from Athens to Bainbridge. Chief Judge Duross Fitzpatrick created a vacancy by moving to senior status, and Judge J. Robert Elliott, left a vacancy when he retired Dec. 31, a day before his 91st birthday.

Bush to Nominate Clay Land to Federal Judgeship

The Associated Press
Saturday, September 22, 2001

President Bush intends to nominate former state Sen. Clay D. Land of Columbus to be a federal judge in the Middle District of Georgia, the White House said. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia law school and since 1992 has been a partner in the firm Buchanan & Land. The Republican did not run for re-election to the Senate last year.

The White House announced the nomination on Friday.

The 70-county district stretches from Athens to Bainbridge. Chief Judge Duross Fitzpatrick created a vacancy by moving to senior status, and Judge J. Robert Elliott, left a vacancy when he retired Dec. 31, a day before his 91st birthday.

An Iowa senator is urging Senate leaders to speed confirmation of dozens of federal prosecutors and judges so they can get to work on cases related to last week's terrorist attacks.

'Last week's attacks have burdened our law enforcement and judicial resources,' said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa. 'We need to have everyone on the job.'

In a letter to Senate leaders, Grassley requested that every Justice Department official and U.S. attorney nominee 'and as many federal judges as possible' be confirmed by the Senate before adjournment this fall.

Seven Justice Department nominees, 35 U.S. attorneys and 51 federal judges await confirmation, Grassley said.

Three Nevadans are among those awaiting Senate action. Reno attorney Larry Hicks and Clark County District Judge James Mahan have been nominated to federal judgeships while Reno prosecutor Daniel G. Bogden has been chosen to be U.S. attorney.

Grassley sent his letter to Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and the leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mimi Devlin, a spokeswoman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said Leahy had not yet seen the request. She said the panel has kept to a 'brisk schedule of hearings and votes on the president's nominees.'

Besides handling nominations, the Judiciary Committee is involved heavily in forming anti-terrorist legislation requested by Attorney General John Ashcroft, Devlin said.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., said the Senate 'will move through (nominees) just as quickly as we can. I think we shouldn't give up our process.

'I think Pat Leahy's doing his best.'

Attorney Tapped for Judgeship

President Bush announced Friday that he has nominated McAllen attorney and Houston native

REV_00065233

Randy Crane for a federal judgeship being created in South Texas.

Crane, 36, specializes in commercial and personal injury cases. He has no experience as a judge, but said he is confident that he can fulfill the duties of the post.

"I am deeply honored that the president has placed his trust in me," Crane said.

The nomination must be approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate.

Crane would fill a second judgeship in McAllen. It is needed, he said, because the federal courthouse there is overcrowded.

"An increase in presence of law enforcement along the border has created a greater number of drug and immigration cases flooding the courts," Crane said.

"My father is a (immigration) lawyer, and most of my family's friends have been lawyers since I was a small child. I think every son looks up to their father."

Crane, who has lived in McAllen since he was 2, attended McAllen Memorial High School and graduated from the University of Texas at Austin with a bachelor's degree in economics at 19.

He received his law degree from UT in 1987.

Crane is married with an 8-year-old son.

Tim brought it up with me this morning, on his own motion, because it presumably raises regulatory issues in the implemenation process, and I am regulatory gal. But I think you all should work on it too, because you have the substantive expertise, and I have no desire to tread on that ground of yours. That makes the most sense, don't you think?

Thanks, Tim:

Helgi, as you probably know, OMB has 14 days from the signing of the airline bill to issue regulations for the airline stabilization board, which is comprised of the Fed, DOT and Treasury (and GAO as a non-voting member).

We're having a meeting at 3:00 PM today with all relevant parties in room 9104 of the NEOB and you are invited to attend and participate. If you are unavailable, I'll keep you informed and let you know of future meetings and share drafts of the regs with you as they are developed. Because we're on such a tight schedule, we will probably be working on this and having meetings almost every day this week.

In today's admin meeting we discussed the recent move. Our team leader, Brent will be contacted to do a walk through of all of the offices and figure out what needs still have not been met. We are to remember to be patient about trash, burn bag and newspaper services. In the next few weeks we will be receiving a draft of the updated telephone directories.

Everyone should have received the Admin Alert that went out today regarding the use of Signal and the White House Operator. All boards have been very busy lately and we are encouraged to use our division staff directories as well as the telephone directory to help out. Unless you are a commissioned officer or calling on behalf of one, you should use the White House Operator (456-1414) for assistance instead of Signal. Some of the individuals that Signal was designed to assist have not been able to get through. Thanks in advance for your cooperation.

I'll be there. Tim has tasked me with handling the regulatory side of this, and that's what I will do. Would it also be a good idea to have the lawyers who worked on the substance of the bill and who understand the drafters' intent (Kavanaugh/Elwood) there?

Thanks, Tim:

Helgi, as you probably know, OMB has 14 days from the signing of the airline bill to issue regulations for the airline stabilization board, which is comprised of the Fed, DOT and Treasury (and GAO as a non-voting member).

We're having a meeting at 3:00 PM today with all relevant parties in room 9104 of the NEOB and you are invited to attend and participate. If you are unavailable, I'll keep you informed and let you know of future meetings and share drafts of the regs with you as they are developed. Because we're on such a tight schedule, we will probably be working on this and having meetings almost every day this week.

I'm happy to attend, but I do think that it would be important to have someone there who has been involved in the Hill discussions. I haven't been participating in leg. meetings so I wouldn't be helpful in identifying which concerns you want addressed in press briefings. If you're planning to be on the Hill today, maybe a quick conf. call between you, Mindy, Dan B., Jim and Scott M. would make sense? The important thing, I think, is just to have you and DOJ describe to WH communications what you're planning.

Jim asked about 2:00 - I have to be on the Hill at 2:30 so couldn't attend. I can be available any other time today and would be happy to help set it up.

Subject: Re: New time for Counsel staff meeting

Given the new real time rule, can we agree not have a race to the door at 8:05 or so? Not to micro-manage, but at this point, there is surely no need for anyone to get there 10 minutes early to demonstrate their commitment to punctuality, which simply encourages a few others to do the same, which simply moves the meetings back earlier and earlier because the Judge invites everyone in when a critical mass gathers rather than waiting until the appointed time to call people in. So I would say that we ALL try to arrive no earlier than 8:10 and no later than 8:14.
Any disagreements?

Given the new real time rule, can we agree not have a race to the door at 8:05 or so? Not to micro-manage, but at this point, there is surely no need for anyone to get there 10 minutes early to demonstrate their commitment to punctuality, which simply encourages a few others to do the same, which simply moves the meetings back earlier and earlier because the Judge invites everyone in when a critical mass gathers rather than waiting until the appointed time to call people in. Was the fight over formulas per se, or whether the Administration's hands should be tied by a formula set by Congress (particularly one that attempted to craft a formula that based a carrier's guarantee on its market share)? This is not meant to be rhetorical--I remember the latter fight on Friday afternoon (the America West debacle), but am not so familiar w/the debate on Thursday night/Fri. morning.

Talking Points re Administration's Anti-Terrorism Proposals

The Administration's proposed legislation represents a measured, careful, responsible, and constitutional approach to the threat of terrorist activities conducted in the United States and directed against United States citizens. The proposed legislation seeks to enhance both the government's ability (i) to detect and prevent terrorist acts; and (ii) for those terrorists who are brought to justice through a criminal process rather than a military process, to severely punish terrorists and those who support and harbor them.

- The Administration's primary legislative proposals seek to achieve four main goals:

    - First, the legislation would ensure that information that is important to both intelligence and criminal investigations can be easily shared so that vital information is available to all relevant federal agencies. The legislation will begin to break down the walls between law enforcement and intelligence agencies and thereby help both to prevent terrorist acts before they happen and to severely punish terrorists and those who harbor and support terrorists.

    - Second, the legislation would update laws authorizing government surveillance. These laws were enacted decades ago by Congress in an era of rotary telephones. These laws must be updated to account for e-mail, Internet usage, cellular phones, and other forms of modern communication.

        - The government is currently fighting a modern war -- a war that threatens our people and our way of life -- with antique weapons. Terrorists are taking advantage by using the Internet, e-mail, and multiple cellular telephones to escape and evade detection by United States agents.

        - The proposed legislation does not purport to change the legal standards that govern when and under what circumstances the government can seek such information. Rather, the proposed legislation merely seeks to ensure that the same legal standards that govern wiretaps on telephones, for example, also apply to modern forms of communication such as e-mail.

        - Consistent with the Constitution, the Administration believes that the law of search and surveillance should be technology neutral. The government's ability to detect and prevent crime should not depend on the technology used by the suspect. To do otherwise is a prescription for failure.

        - With respect to proposed section 153, which would allow surveillance of foreign agents if one purpose of the surveillance is to obtain intelligence information, it bears emphasis that the rules governing searches of United States citizens for criminal law enforcement purposes do not apply to searches for other lawful purposes (such as intelligence gathering) or to searches of foreign nationals or foreign agents. Therefore, the Administration is confident that Section 153, when applied to gather intelligence about foreign agents, will satisfy constitutional standards.

- Third, the legislation would ensure that certain categories of federal search warrants and surveillance orders are valid throughout the United States so that federal prosecutors and federal agents need not pointlessly seek re-authorization in multiple districts throughout the country. Eliminating these kinds of administrative burdens, which serve no discernible purpose, will allow federal agents to respond rapidly in fast-moving intelligence and criminal investigations so that agents can track and follow potential terrorists.

- Fourth, the legislation would establish tough new penalties and sanctions on terrorists and those who harbor and support terrorists.

    - The proposed legislation would:
        - impose new penalties for possession of biological weapons;
        - enhance the government's ability to seize assets of terrorists;
        - assist the government's ability to exclude and remove from the United States terrorists and those who support and harbor terrorists;
        - extend the statute of limitations on terrorist crimes; and
        - impose lengthy sentences for terrorist crimes, including on those who harbor and support terrorists.

Courtney,

My understanding is the Sunday Consensus draft is an internal Senate negotiation document and not a formal revision, right? Your call. Just let us know so we are on the same page. BTW, Southern Baptist Convention (orig. part of ACLU coaltion) will send us a letter of support today. At Ken Mehlman and Matt's request, I am going to Paul Weyrich's lunch today to take questions from the groups, including Eagle Forum.

That's exactly why we should establish now that 8:15 means 8:15. After all, we had no reason to think, at the outset of l'ancien regime, that 8:30 didn't mean anything other than 8:30 -- that is, until the meeting creep started, and ultimately a new rule was established. So we are now just trying to get an agreement to prevent meeting creep. . .

This is a new regime. We were told 8:15 means 8:15. I showed up at 8:14. Everything else is in the past, when everyone knew the rule was 8:30 means 8:20 although it could bean 8:15. I play by the rules.

As to those who are getting a little soft on me (Rachel), this is tough business, so I vote that we identify those who need some mild "encouragement," as the State Dept might phrase it. In that vein, there has been a secret motion to add one "H. Christopher Bartolomucci" to the bill.

Brett--
We started building a veteran's list, for obvious reasons, where I reached out to our Hispanic leadership who helped us during the campaign. Those I reached out to contacted Erwin Huelsewewede at Veteran's Affairs who ended up supplying us with a list of 600,000 Military voters he obtained through the Freedom of Information Act and incurred costs of $142.00 to the Office of the Secretary of Defense.
Before we move forward, are there any guidelines we need to be aware of?, Can we utilize this list?, Will I go to jail?

Thanks
Leonard

I tried general regulations. A bill of attainder appears necessary after today's outcry and allegations of sandbagging. Please vote if you so desire on the following bill: "Absent emergency or peculiar circumstances, Courtney S. Elwood is hereby prohibited from entering the second floor West Wing Counsel's Office before 8:13:50 each morning."

Courtney,

My understanding is the Sunday Consensus draft is an internal Senate negotiation document and not a formal revision, right? Your call. Just let us know so we are on the same page. BTW, Southern Baptist Convention (orig. part of ACLU coaltion) will send us a letter of support today. At Ken Mehlman and Matt's request, I am going to Paul Weyrich's lunch today to take questions from the groups, including Eagle Forum.

Some agencies are asking us if there is a version of the Administration's anti-terrorism bill being handed out that is later than the version I received from Viet on Thursday, September 20th. Can you tell me, and, if there is, can I be sent a copy of the later version?

For my part, I move to expand the scope of the Bill of Attainder. It is too narrowly targeted as currently drafted.

As to those who are getting a little soft on me (Rachel), this is tough business, so I vote that we identify those who need some mild "encouragement," as the State Dept might phrase it. In that vein, there has been a secret motion to add one "H. Christopher Bartolomucci" to the bill.

What's the penalty for violation?
I move that violators be punished by a one-day withdrawal of couch and upholstered-chair privileges (I'm sure Helgi will second this motion, as it will drastically increase her chances of sitting on the couch).

As to those who are getting a little soft on me (Rachel), this is tough business, so I vote that we identify those who need some mild "encouragement," as the State Dept might phrase it. In that vein, there has been a secret motion to add one "H. Christopher Bartolomucci" to the bill.

I tried general regulations. A bill of attainder appears necessary after today's outcry and allegations of sandbagging. Please vote if you so desire on the following bill: "Absent emergency or peculiar circumstances, Courtney S. Elwood is hereby prohibited from entering the second floor West Wing Counsel's Office before 8:13:50 each morning."

Subject: Urgent need for detailees to DOJ

The Department of Justice urgently needs two detailees from another department or agency to help with a fast-track process of preparing a public record to support regulations DOJ must promulgate within 90 days to administer financial assistance under the airline bailout bill. Because DOJ does not promulgate many regulations within the Civil Division, they do not have the necessary personnel to do this right. This would be a strictly temporary assigment, probably running 2-3 months.

According to Phil Perry, the detailees would be tasked with developing the action plan for running the regulatory process: soliciting public input, building and organizing an evidentiary record, drafting the regs. They would have support from other DOJ personnel, but they would be the administrative process experts. Phil thinks the Department of Labor is likely to have people who have specialized expertise in record relating to making financial disbursements of this kind, but any department or agency with the requisite personnel who are not too busy and willing to take this on would work. The key is that they should have substantial experience running the regulatory process.

Would you please put out an APB to the other departments or agencies and see who has a person or two who might be available and willing to help DOJ? Because of the compressed timetable, they need people very very soon. If you don't get volunteers, we may need to ask you to do a little arm-twisting.

Thanks very much. Please let me know if you have any questions.

The 48-hour provision was done through other means, I understand. And the good-faith provision was dropped by Nick et al. on the fateful Wednesday morning. I don't think it is something to be irritated about.

I view this obviously as good news (with the exception of his FISA discussion), but it also leaves me somewhat irritated that Senator Biden has previously proposed and is again proposing good, pro-law-enforcement ideas that either were not included in the Administration proposal (48 hour emergency provision) or were dropped (good faith provision).

FOR RELEASE: September 25, 2001 CONTACT: Norm Kurz, 202-224-8895

Biden Urges New Tools For Law Enforcement, Stresses Practical Measure to Combat Bioterrorism Threat

Emphasizing the importance of the threat of bioterrorism and our need to take practical measures to combat such concerns, U.S. Senator Joseph R. Biden, Jr. today indicated his support for strengthening counter-terrorism measures to enhance the safety and national security interests of the nation.

"The September 11 attacks have focused our collective minds and energies on the need to take steps to prevent such atrocities from ever occurring again," Biden said. "I'm pleased the President has submitted proposed legislation to enact many of the needed measures I first offered in the 1995 terrorism bill, though I think we ought to consider some further steps as well. We've also got to get ahead of the curve on taking practical steps to reduce the risk of biological weapons."

Quoting from a letter he received in his capacity as Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Biden shared the views of Nobel Laureate and noted expert on infectious diseases Dr. Joshua Lederberg, who wrote that biological warfare constitutes a serious and complex threat to national security because it is available even to "rank amateurs."

Dr. Lederberg said at least a dozen countries are thought to be developing biological weapons. "In the current world where major states sustain some equilibrium through mutual deterrence," he wrote, biological warfare "offers opportunity for grave harm on the part of lesser actors," making it "probably the most perplexing and gravest security challenge we face." Lederberg's letter was entered into the record during a Foreign Relations Committee hearing Biden chaired September 5 on the Homeland Threat and Biological Weapons.

Following today's Judiciary Committee hearing with Attorney General John Aschroft, Biden spoke of his backing for the Administration's efforts to enact a terrorism bill while pointing out measures he has long supported and that ought to be included to strengthen the legislation.

In 1995, Biden authored the Omnibus Counter-Terrorism Bill that would have enabled law enforcement to pursue leads pursuant to credible terrorist threats.

"My standard has long been 'what's good for the mafia is good for the terrorists'," Biden said. "There is no sensible reason why we should treat terrorists more leniently. It's been obvious to me for many years that we need to give law enforcement authorities investigating and prosecuting international terrorists the same tools they have to fight drug kingpins and organized crime."

The President's bill, like the Biden proposal several years ago, would extend current wiretap authority to include terrorist crimes, thereby giving law enforcement the same tools to pursue terrorists they have long had in narcotics and racketeering cases. However, two other Biden proposals have not been included in the Administration's bill.

"I think most Americans would agree an identical standard should apply to terrorists and the mob. We should provide emergency 48 hour wiretap authority without prior judicial authorization," Biden said. "This is exactly what law enforcement can do today in cases involving organized crime, so long as the court makes an after-the-fact determination that there was probable cause to get the emergency wiretap in the first place.

"I also think the 'good faith' standard the Supreme Court has long recognized in the criminal law field should be applied to wiretaps," Biden added. Terrorists and other criminals should not go free when the police make an honest mistake, if they were otherwise acting reasonably and in 'good faith.' The Court already has held that this sensible policy is constitutional.

"Finally, we need to use roving wiretaps to follow a suspect anywhere and everywhere rather than just on a telephone," Biden argued. I strongly supported this tool in 1995 and am pleased Congress has since enacted into law a roving wiretap provision. However, while law enforcement gained the right to use this technique in 1998, cops continue to be hobbled by a higher burden than that required to obtain a 'bug.' This disparity should be corrected. "

Biden also indicated his concern regarding two potential provisions - concerning the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) and measures relating to immigration - included in the Administration's terrorism bill.

"I agree the fight against international terrorism requires us to rethink whether the high wall we've erected separating the intelligence and law enforcement communities should be lowered," Biden said. "But historically we've been well-served by the bright line that divides our cops and spies. I have real concerns about ensuring that whatever we do in his area strikes the right balance between fighting terrorism and maintaining our civil liberties. There are genuine constitutional questions we must review.

"Similarly, tightening restrictions on non-citizens is one thing, but efforts to expand detentions should not cross the line and violate the rights of due process," Biden argued. "Legitimate and justified detentions, on a limited basis, will gain the approval of Americans. But law enforcement officials have the responsibility to act quickly to charge suspects with a crime, deport them, or release them.

"And all us must be vigilant in guarding the rights of fellow Americans who are in danger of discrimination on the basis of their name or skin color. Especially in a time of crisis, we cannot jettison our fundamental values and beliefs," Biden concluded.

This seems absolutely crazy. Several points. First, these regulations should not be difficult (at all). Second, the content of these regulations are critical to the process that we worked on last week and are the difference maybe between $1 billion and $20 billion out of the government's pocket. Third, any and all people involved in this process need to be very good in all respects.

Frankly, this is not at all how I envisioned DOJ would go about this based on my conversations, and this plea for help suggests that our worst fears and those of the few Republicans (Delay and Nickles) who objected to this are being realized. We should talk ASAP. I should be the point person on this to get DOJ in line. The tasking this morning was for me to work with Ciongoli on this to prevent exactly this sort of fiasco from developing.

Subject: Urgent need for detailees to DOJ

The Department of Justice urgently needs two detailees from another department or agency to help with a fast-track process of preparing a public record to support regulations DOJ must promulgate within 90 days to administer financial assistance under the airline bailout bill. Because DOJ does not promulgate many regulations within the Civil Division, they do not have the necessary personnel to do this right. This would be a strictly temporary assigment, probably running 2-3 months.

According to Phil Perry, the detailees would be tasked with developing the action plan for running the regulatory process: soliciting public input, building and organizing an evidentiary record, drafting the regs. They would have support from other DOJ personnel, but they would be the administrative process experts. Phil thinks the Department of Labor is likely to have people who have specialized expertise in record relating to making financial disbursements of this kind, but any department or agency with the requisite personnel who are not too busy and willing to take this on would work. The key is that they should have substantial experience running the regulatory process.

Would you please put out an APB to the other departments or agencies and see who has a person or two who might be available and willing to help DOJ? Because of the compressed timetable, they need people very very soon. If you don't get volunteers, we may need to ask you to do a little arm-twisting.

Thanks very much. Please let me know if you have any questions.

yes, sorry to be an elephant barging into the room, but there were lots of politics and lots of hard discussions last week that Joel and I had with lots of R's and D's -- and lots of late-night negotiations with Childress et al about precisely these issues; lots of water over the dam and Joel and I were/are very concerned about how this all proceeds to make sure it is consistent with the understanding that was reached among the Administration and the leadership

I'm not sure that "legitimate information" works. I think you can delete "legitimate" from the second sentence. As for the first sentence, perhaps it can just be reworked to summarize the structure of FOIA: It requires disclosure of all agency records subject to enumerated exceptions.

What the heck is "a philosophy of agency disclosure that prevents. . ."? The AG will chop my head off for suggesting his signature on that language. How about "FOIA provides for the disemmination of legitimate info to the public." And "about what its government is up to"? I suggest "about the conduct of government."

PRIVILEGED/DELIBERATIVE PROCESS

Office of the Attorney General
Washington, D.C. 20530

MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
Re: The Freedom of Information Act

The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), establishes a philosophy of agency disclosure that prevents agencies from denying legitimate information to the public. To achieve the critical goal of providing the public legitimate information about what its government is up to, the FOIA balances two competing and important objectives: (i) informing the public about the activities of the Executive Branch; and (ii) ensuring protection of Executive Branch information that implicates privacy concerns, is privileged, or relates to national security, law enforcement, or commercial secrets, among other protections. This Administration and the Department of Justice are committed to full compliance with the FOIA and the balance Congress has struck between these competing values. Any discretionary decision by your agency to disclose information otherwise protected under the FOIA should be made only after full consideration of the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that could be implicated by disclosure of the information. You should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy, as well as with the Civil Division of the Department, when any significant FOIA policy issues or matters arise. When an agency has carefully considered a FOIA request and decided to withhold records, in whole or in part, the Department of Justice will defend your decision unless the decision lacks a sound legal basis or presents an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Believe it or not, this is SHORTER than the last version. We have a fundamental problem with Leahy -- he wants to work off of his bill (the USA Act), and we want to work off the Administration's bill. That said, I think his staff understands that many of the provisions in his bill will not be included in the final package. It's just for posturing. In fact, Cohen told us last night to look at his bill and decide what provisions we could accept -- suggesting, of course, that they have no intention of trying to push the whole thing. Indeed, they have said precisely that in earlier discussions.

Washington, D.C. 20530

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF ALL FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

FROM: John Ashcroft
Attorney General

SUBJECT: The Freedom of Information Act

As you know, the Department of Justice and this Administration are committed to full compliance with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000). It is only through a well-informed citizenry that the leaders of our nation remain accountable to the governed and the American people can be assured that neither fraud nor government waste is concealed.

The Department of Justice and this Administration are equally committed to protecting other fundamental values that are held by our society. Among them are safeguarding our national security, enhancing the effectiveness of our law enforcement agencies, protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy.

Our citizens have a strong interest as well in a government that is fully functional and efficient. Congress and the courts have long recognized that certain legal privileges ensure candid and complete agency deliberations without fear that they will be made public. Other privileges ensure that lawyers' deliberations and communications are kept private. No leader can operate effectively without confidential advice and counsel. Exemption 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), incorporates these privileges and the sound policies underlying them.

I encourage your agency to carefully consider the protection of all such values and interests when making disclosure determinations under the FOIA. Any discretionary decision by your agency to disclose information protected under the FOIA should be made only after full and deliberate consideration of the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that could be implicated by disclosure of the information.

In making these decisions, you should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy when significant FOIA policy issues arise, as well as with our Civil Division on FOIA litigation matters. When you carefully consider FOIA requests and decide to withhold records, in whole or in part, you can be assured that the Department of Justice will defend your decisions unless they lack a sound legal basis or present an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes the Department of Justice's FOIA Memorandum of October 4, 1993, and it likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

PRIVILEGED/DELIBERATIVE PROCESS

Office of the Attorney General
Washington, D.C. 20530

MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
Re: The Freedom of Information Act

The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), establishes a philosophy of agency disclosure that prevents agencies from denying legitimate information to the public. To achieve the critical goal of providing the public legitimate information about what its government is up to, the FOIA balances two competing and important objectives: (i) informing the public about the activities of the Executive Branch; and (ii) ensuring protection of Executive Branch information that implicates privacy concerns, is privileged, or relates to national security, law enforcement, or commercial secrets, among other protections. This Administration and the Department of Justice are committed to full compliance with the FOIA and the balance Congress has struck between these competing values. Any discretionary decision by your agency to disclose information otherwise protected under the FOIA should be made only after full consideration of the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that could be implicated by disclosure of the information. You should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy, as well as with the Civil Division of the Department, when any significant FOIA policy issues or matters arise. When an agency has carefully considered a FOIA request and decided to withhold records, in whole or in part, the Department of Justice will defend your decision unless the decision lacks a sound legal basis or presents an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Attached is a revised version of DOJ's final draft. I think that all of the offending language has been removed, and it also includes some of the new language re discretionary disclosures. However, it still has "fluff" or "happy talk," which softens the impact.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF ALL FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

FROM: John Ashcroft
Attorney General

SUBJECT: The Freedom of Information Act

As you know, the Department of Justice and this Administration are committed to full compliance with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000). It is only through a well-informed citizenry that the leaders of our nation remain accountable to the governed and the American people can be assured that neither fraud nor government waste is concealed.

The Department of Justice and this Administration are equally committed to protecting other fundamental values that are held by our society. Among them are safeguarding our national security, enhancing the effectiveness of our law enforcement agencies, protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy.

Our citizens have a strong interest as well in a government that is fully functional and efficient. Congress and the courts have long recognized that certain legal privileges ensure candid and complete agency deliberations without fear that they will be made public. Other privileges ensure that lawyers' deliberations and communications are kept private. No leader can operate effectively without confidential advice and counsel. Exemption 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), incorporates these privileges and the sound policies underlying them.

I encourage your agency to carefully consider the protection of all such values and interests when making disclosure determinations under the FOIA. Any discretionary decision by your agency to disclose information protected under the FOIA should be made only after full and deliberate consideration of the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that could be implicated by disclosure of the information.

In making these decisions, you should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy when significant FOIA policy issues arise, as well as with our Civil Division on FOIA litigation matters. When you carefully consider FOIA requests and decide to withhold records, in whole or in part, you can be assured that the Department of Justice will defend your decisions unless they lack a sound legal basis or present an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes the Department of Justice's FOIA Memorandum of October 4, 1993, and it likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

Can you meet sometime after 4:45 PM or 5 this afternoon.

Looks like we're going to be able to go live with people signing up for e-mail updates via whitehouse.gov by midweek next week. There are some options that need to be hammered out, and Barry wanted to make sure you were there as we go over these options.

We'll focus on three main issues:
1. Options for the e-mail signup process
2. Data collection and potential methods of using that data
3. The effect of the privacy policy on potential options for sign-up, opt-out and to whom we send messages

I've attached another copy of a requirements document sent to OA. I'm working on more specific outlines of the issues we'll discuss, and will distribute those outlines as far prior to our meeting as possible.

Thanks,

OFFICE OF STRATEGIC INITIATVES

September 19, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR TIM CAMPEN

THROUGH: BARRY JACKSON AND TUCKER ESKEW

FROM: NEIL ZIMMERMAN, JIMMY ORR, AND JANE COOK

CC: BRETT KAVANAUGH AND MARCUS MOLLMANN

RE: WHITE HOUSE INTERNET CONTENT MANAGEMENT

The Office Media Affairs (OMA) will be responsible for the content management of the White House Web site. All posts to the Web site will need to be approved by OMA.

The Office of Strategic Initiatives (OSI) will be responsible for the content and database design for the White House Web site e-mail distribution system. All e-mail sends and database manipulation will need to be approved by OSI.

OMA and OSI will work closely on e-mail and Web site message coordination. The White House Counsel's office will be an integral part of all OMA and OSI Internet processes and planning to ensure White House Internet components (Web site and e-mail) receive continual ethical, legal, and privacy review.

The e-mail system should capture e-mail addresses, first name, last name, zip codes and issue categories. The database should be scalable so that additional personalization information can be collected.

Sign-up process attached.

The e-mail system will need to send general updates to the entire list (up to millions of addresses) as well as specialized updates based on user personalization (name, zip code, issue categories, etc.). The e-mail content will be original material, not the automatic generation of documents available on the White House Web site.

While it may not be possible now, the Web site and the E-mail system will need to interact with each other. They should operate from the same database and content management system. The goal: to have a personalization system allowing the Web site experience to mirror preferences indicated via e-mail (link usage, questionnaire responses, etc.) and vice-versa.

E-mail Sign-up Process

Sign-Up Box in Web site Header or Sidebar

I. Insert E-mail address and click submit
II. Pop-up confirmation box

            b. Be addressed by name
            c. Choose your own issue categories
III. End of process OR click through to personalization page (Item II,B below)

WH News Sign-Up Page

I. Insert E-mail address and click submit
II. Go to Confirmation page:
    A. Thank you for submitting (show address submitted)
    B. Want to personalize your updates?
        1. Zip Code
            a. Get information that is relevant to your area.
        2. First and Last Name
            a. Allow e-mails to be addressed to you by name.
        3. Issue Categories
            a. Get special updates based on the topics you choose.
III. End of process if no personalization
IV. Click through to personalization confirmation if personalization selected
    A. Show what personalization has been selected and the information that's been submitted
    B. Click OK to submit or GO BACK to correct
V. End of process once OK selected

Note: Whichever method is used to sign-up, a double opt-in process is required.

Mass Outbound E-mail

Phases:

I. Limited system
   A. Limited changes
      1. Current staff structure
      2. Current Web site and e-mail Listserv
   B. Basic Format
      1. Plain text
      2. E-mail content will be written specifically for e-mail delivery
      3. No automatic content generated based on Web site content
   C. Limited issue categories
      1. General agenda updates
      2. Only top issues available for specified issue updates
      3. Scheduled updates only, no real time content generation
   D. Little information collection, simple personalization
      1. E-mail address
      2. Personalization info: name, zip code and/or issue category

II. Comprehensive system
   A. Significant changes
      1. Structured Internet content and design teams (at least OSI and Media Affairs)
      2. Integrated Content Management system for Website and E-mail
   B. Dynamic Format
      1. Plain text
      2. HTML Web based
      3. AOL friendly HTML
   C. Multiple subject categories
      1. General agenda updates
      2. Specified issue updates, including a more comprehensive list of issues
      3. Automatic "filler" content generated based on personalization information, i.e. general information is replaced if specialized information is available either on the Web site or in original e-mail content
   D. Full Personalization
      1. Basic information collection (email, name, zip code, issue category)
      2. Format of e-mail (plain, html, etc.)
      3. Frequency of updates (scheduled, real time)
      4. Relationship Marketing Option to receive targeted information
      5. Ability for subscribers to view/alter their subscription (myWhiteHouse.gov)
      6. Ability to measure click through rate of each e-mail
      7. Ability to measure click through rate of individual accounts for message targeting

Bush Taps Columbus Lawyer for U.S. Bench

By Janet Conley
American Lawyer Media
Tuesday, September 25, 2001

President George W. Bush has nominated former State Sen. Clay D. Land to serve as a U.S. District judge for the Middle District of Georgia.

Land says a White House aide informed him Friday afternoon that his nomination had been sent to the Senate. If approved, he will replace Judge J. Robert Elliott, who retired in December. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia's law school and has had a civil litigation practice with Buchanan & Land in Columbus since 1992. He also has a long history of public service including chairmanship of the Georgia Indigent Defense Council and a stint as a Columbus city councilor.

Between 1995 and 2000, he was a Republican senator from Columbus and served on the Senate Judiciary Committee.
One bill he successfully defeated last year, and his argument in opposition to it, has an uncanny resonance today. The legislation, designed to discourage racial profiling, would have prevented officers from stopping drivers unless they had "articulable facts" not based on race or ethnicity, that the driver violated the law.

Land, at the time, argued that if law enforcement learned of a possible Middle East terrorist plot against the United States, that information could not be sent over a police radio under the bill. (Daily Report, April 4, 2000)

After three terms in the Legislature, Land decided not to run again, saying he wanted to spend more time with his three young children.

In a frank farewell speech to the Senate, excerpted in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, he said, "I will not miss decisions made solely for political reasons instead of what is the right thing to do," citing the Legislature's refusal at that time to change the state flag and its unwillingness to hold adults responsible for their children obtaining handguns.

Now, says Land of his judicial nomination, "I think there's a relief in that the position is not partisan. I think that is reassuring."

Bush Taps Columbus Lawyer for U.S. Bench

By Janet Conley

Tuesday, September 25, 2001

President George W. Bush has nominated former State Sen. Clay D. Land to serve as a U.S. District judge for the Middle District of Georgia.

Land says a White House aide informed him Friday afternoon that his nomination had been sent to the Senate. If approved, he will replace Judge J. Robert Elliott, who retired in December. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia's law school and has had a civil litigation practice with Buchanan & Land in Columbus since 1992. He also has a long history of public service including chairmanship of the Georgia Indigent Defense Council and a stint as a Columbus city councilor.

Between 1995 and 2000, he was a Republican senator from Columbus and served on the Senate Judiciary Committee.
One bill he successfully defeated last year, and his argument in opposition to it, has an uncanny resonance today. The legislation, designed to discourage racial profiling, would have prevented officers from stopping drivers unless they had "articulable facts" not based on race or ethnicity, that the driver violated the law.

Land, at the time, argued that if law enforcement learned of a possible Middle East terrorist plot against the United States, that information could not be sent over a police radio under the bill. (Daily Report, April 4, 2000)

After three terms in the Legislature, Land decided not to run again, saying he wanted to spend more time with his three young children.

In a frank farewell speech to the Senate, excerpted in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, he said, "I will not miss decisions made solely for political reasons instead of what is the right thing to do," citing the Legislature's refusal at that time to change the state flag and its unwillingness to hold adults responsible for their children obtaining handguns.

Now, says Land of his judicial nomination, "I think there's a relief in that the position is not partisan. I think that is reassuring."

President George W. Bush has nominated former State Sen. Clay D. Land to serve as a U.S. District judge for the Middle District of Georgia.

Land says a White House aide informed him Friday afternoon that his nomination had been sent to the Senate. If approved, he will replace Judge J. Robert Elliott, who retired in December. Land, 41, is a 1985 graduate of the University of Georgia's law school and has had a civil litigation practice with Buchanan & Land in Columbus since 1992. He also has a long history of public service including chairmanship of the Georgia Indigent Defense Council and a stint as a Columbus city councilor.

Between 1995 and 2000, he was a Republican senator from Columbus and served on the Senate Judiciary Committee.
One bill he successfully defeated last year, and his argument in opposition to it, has an uncanny resonance today. The legislation, designed to discourage racial profiling, would have prevented officers from stopping drivers unless they had "articulable facts" not based on race or ethnicity, that the driver violated the law.

Land, at the time, argued that if law enforcement learned of a possible Middle East terrorist plot against the United States, that information could not be sent over a police radio under the bill. (Daily Report, April 4, 2000)

After three terms in the Legislature, Land decided not to run again, saying he wanted to spend more time with his three young children.

In a frank farewell speech to the Senate, excerpted in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, he said, "I will not miss decisions made solely for political reasons instead of what is the right thing to do," citing the Legislature's refusal at that time to change the state flag and its unwillingness to hold adults responsible for their children obtaining handguns.

Now, says Land of his judicial nomination, "I think there's a relief in that the position is not partisan. I think that is reassuring."

Hello, all. I know we had tentatively scheduled our next meeting for 11:00 today. However, we are scheduled to meet with Sen. Leahy's staff at 11:00. I would suggest that we reschedule our meeting for 3pm this afternoon. At that time we ought to be able to give you a good read on where we are. Does that work?

Hello, all. I know we had tentatively scheduled our next meeting for 11:00 today. However, we are scheduled to meet with Sen. Leahy's staff at 11:00.
I would suggest that we reschedule our meeting for 3pm this afternoon. At that time we ought to be able to give you a good read on where we are. Does that work?

Can we move forward with encouraging an INS Spanish spokesperson to hit the Spanish airwaves on the following:

Immigrant communities to come forward to help identify victims and the missing without being reported to INS.

Commissioner Ziglar has already released a paper statement on the above mentioned, we suggest they should get a spokesperson to do some heavy Spanish TV and Radio.

I will not be able to attend this meeting.

On another note, I did speak with INS, Victor Cerda, and they did mention they released a paper statement on encouraging non-documented familes to come forward. My thoughts are that we should encourage an INS Spanish Spokesperson to do some heavy media time on Spanish TV and Radio. Additionally, encouraging them to come forward any information they may have on the terrorists

Yes, you can move forward with this assuming INS raises no objections.

I would like to keep Texas (5th Cir. + District Courts), which I inherited from Stuart. In return, I will give Kyle Utah.

I propose that Kyle take over on the district court states and other seats that had been assigned to Stuart. Any objection?

Please email me with day and times you think you will physically be in the office this weekend.

Cell phones and pagers are must. If you have a fax at home please let me know.

Apparently this is going to be a busy weekend and being able to find you at all times will save a lot of time.

If you know that you are going to be "unvailable" during certain times during the day please let me know so I don't even try to hunt you down and smoke you out of your....oh - sorry- got carried away..." You get my drift.

Thanks!

Not sure if this is public yet, but Jay Apperson on House Judiciary staff (Repub.) reports that Conyers agreed last night to co-sponsor Sensenbrenner's bill. This obviously should be good news. We should see the bill this evening. Jays says the contents will be as was last reported to us. The next hurdle is to control the amendment process at mark-up.

I paid for the hotel rooms for a number (about 10 rooms) of the United Airlines flight 93 families on the Sunday night beforethe event with the President (after United refused to cover this cost and many were upset). Many of these families ended up ordering food and movies in their rooms as well.

At the time, Hagin suggested that I should be reimbursed by an individual rather than the RNC so that nothing looked political. Kavanaugh has advised that it would be better for the RNC to reimburse from an ethics standpoint. Obviously, nothing about the event was political; it's just a question of covering costs. Are y'all comfortable with my receiving RNC reimbursement for these costs?

If you think we'll get resistance from Hyde et al, Mike Horowitz (Chief of staff of Crim) has thought of ways to try to reassure him. (For example, getting the USAttorney-designate from Chicago to call him, etc.)

>>> Dinh, Viet 10/01/01 12:04PM >>>
As I understand it, there is no McDade fix in the House. It was not included in our proposal, in deference to OLA's work with Leahy, and Leahy proposed that it be included in the Senate bill.

Brent and Jason,

For some reason, our office has begun to receive letters to the President relating to the U.S. response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. I am sure correspondence has generated one or more form letters on this subject, and there is no reason for us to reinvent the wheel. Would you please see what you can find so that you can prepare automatic responses for signature by members of our office to letters of this kind? Thanks.

Bush's Picks for 10th Circuit in Limbo

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Sunday, September 30, 2001

One said no to a high political job at the Interior Department. Another is a Utah law professor who has defended vouchers for religious schools.

A third is a retired state judge who flirted with running for the Wyoming Legislature as a write-in candidate. And the fourth was a New Mexico judge who left the bench three years ago to write rules for reforming the Teamsters union.

What these four Republican lawyers have in common is that President Bush has nominated them for seats on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That's the Denver-based court that has jurisdiction over Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Wyoming and Utah.

REV_00067220

With four of the Denver circuit's 12 judgeships vacant, Court Clerk Patrick Fisher says it may be one of the highest vacancy rates of any circuit in the nation. As a result, the court has had to depend heavily on its corps of eight senior judges, who are by definition semi-retired, for help with its caseload.

Yet as former President Clinton could testify, filling a judgeship in Denver isn't as simple as sending a name to Capitol Hill for confirmation. He tried to get Denver lawyer Jim Lyons, a longtime friend, on the circuit bench there, but Republican Sen. Wayne Allard of Colorado blocked his plans, calling Lyons too partisan for the job.

Now it's Bush's turn. And since the circuit's senators are overwhelmingly Republican, this time they're only too happy to promote their home-state nominees for the lifetime federal jobs. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate, however, only six of Bush's judicial nominees have managed to slip out of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

That's a pace that has some Republicans fuming, but you won't get any of the nominees to pop off. All have been instructed by the White House to keep quiet until their nominations clear the Senate.

Denver lawyer Timothy M. Tymkovich, who gave up a chance to be the No. 3 official at Interior, said last week that he still doesn't know when he'll get a confirmation hearing before the committee. "I suspect late in the year at the earliest," Tymkovich said.

He was nominated May 25, one of the first circuit nominees Bush sent to the Hill. While Tymkovich, 44, a former solicitor general on the Colorado state attorney general's staff, is well known to many in Colorado, the three other nominees to the Denver circuit probably are not.

Perhaps the most controversial of all four is Michael McConnell, a law professor at the University of Utah. In addition to defending the use of school vouchers for religious schools, McConnell has argued there is a need to reinterpret the constitutional mandate for a separation of church and state.

Utah's Sen. Orrin Hatch, the ranking Republican on judiciary, is supporting his nomination. But McConnell is likely to be opposed by groups such as Americans United for Separation of Church and
State. The Rev. Barry W. Lynn, executive director of that group, has said the Utah professor is "the religious right's dream court nominee, . . . a conservative Christian who's willing to use the force of government to impose his viewpoint."

A native of Louisville, Ky., McConnell clerked for Supreme Court Justice William Brennan, one of the most liberal members of the high court. Later, as an assistant solicitor general in the Reagan administration, he argued nine cases before the Supreme Court.

"By sheer intellect, compassion and judicial temperament, he is about the brightest the right wing has to offer," Ed Firmage, a college at the Utah law school told the Salt Lake Tribune when McConnell was nominated in May. "He will bring massive scholarship and a great deal of compassion."

Less is known about the legal philosophies of Terrence O'Brien of Gillette, who retired in 2000 after 20 years as a Wyoming district judge. After leaving the bench, O'Brien announced he would run as a Republican write-in candidate against an incumbent Democratic member of the Wyoming House. He later dropped out of the race, saying he didn't have enough time.

New Mexico's Harris Hartz won held a seat on the New Mexico Court of Appeals and was its chief judge before he resigned to join a New Jersey law firm that was drafting a reform program for the Teamsters Union. "I can't think of anything more exciting or important," he said at the time.

Now the Farmington native and Harvard law graduate has apparently decided that the federal bench would be more exciting. "I believe he has truly outstanding credentials and will make New Mexico proud as a new fixture on the 10th Circuit," Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M. said after Bush's announcement.

None of the four has a hearing date. A Republican aide at the Judiciary Committee said all their paperwork is completed.

Federal Bench: Evaluate Judicial Nominees Solely on Integrity, Intelligence, Good Faith, Scholar Says

AScribe Newswire
Friday, September 28, 2001

Judging the future actions of judges through the lens of today's "hot-button" political issues is not only unfair, it's not possible, a University of Illinois constitutional law scholar told a U.S. Senate subcommittee studying the judicial confirmation process.

Ronald D. Rotunda, the Albert E. Jenner, Jr. professor of law at the UI's College of Law, pointed out that "commentators, presidents and senators may think that they can predict how a nominee will vote once that person is confirmed, but our historical experience should teach us to be more humble."

History is replete with instances of Supreme Court nominees who make decisions that appear at odds with their record and perceived political leanings. A major reason for this, Rotunda said, is because "we do not know what will be the major legal issues 10, 15, or even five years from now, much less what might be the 'liberal' or 'conservative' answer to them." Hugo Black, a onetime member of the Ku Klux Klan, baffled commentators when he became one of the most vigorous supporters of racial justice on the Supreme Court. The same pattern emerges when one studies the decisions of modern-day judges,

according to the UI legal scholar. "Judge Antonin Scalia, whom the popular culture typically portrays as conservative, voted twice to protect burning the American flag as free speech. Justice John Paul Stevens, whom the media tells us is liberal, dissented in both of those two cases." Rotunda said the process of the law, such as the emphasis on resting a decision on the specific facts of a case, mitigates against cant and frees judges from being swept away by popular opinion.

The batting averages of commentators [as well as senators] in divining how judicial nominees will act once confirmed "have been remarkably poor," Rotunda said, adding, "If a lot of predictions are made, some will be correct. Even a stopped clock is right twice a day."

Instead of trying to set up litmus tests and trick questions about "the judicial philosophy" of a nominee, Rotunda urged the Senate to use its power of confirmation to examine a prospective judge in terms of his or her personal integrity, intellectual ability and good faith. "The Senate should continue to play the constitutionally mandated role of reasoned adviser to the president, not prophet, seer or investigative reporter. Further, nominees should only promise the faithful performance of their judicial duties. Hence, there should be no presumption against confirmation if a nominee chooses not to answer a politically charged question, or if a question requires [or appears to require] the nominee to promise to decide a legal question in a particular way, or if he or she believes an answer will compromise [or will appear to compromise] a judge's ability to later make an independent law-based decision."

Op/Eds

Time for Senate to Approve Judicial Nominees

By Mark Cernak
The Washington Times
Sunday, September 30, 2001

There are now 49 of President Bush's judicial nominees before the Senate - 29 nominated to fill district court vacancies and 20 nominated to fill appellate court vacancies. One-hundred six judgeships are currently vacant, 75 of them in the district courts and 31 in the appellate courts. Forty-one of those have been designated "judicial emergencies" because of their duration and caseload; 20 of Mr. Bush's nominees have been named to fill "emergency" vacancies.

Although Mr. Bush submitted his first 11 nominations on May 9, only six nominees have been confirmed this year. Just one from the initial group of 11 has been confirmed- a Clinton recess appointee whom Mr. Bush re-nominated. Of the 49 nominees before the Senate, only 3 - that is, 6 percent - have had a hearing.

In these times, I think that we need these positions filled immediately; we cannot wait until the war on terrorism is over.(spade)

Bush's Picks for 10th Circuit in Limbo

By Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
Sunday, September 30, 2001

One said no to a high political job at the Interior Department. Another is a Utah law professor who has defended vouchers for religious schools.

A third is a retired state judge who flirted with running for the Wyoming Legislature as a write-in candidate. And the fourth was a New Mexico judge who left the bench three years ago to write rules for reforming the Teamsters union.

What these four Republican lawyers have in common is that President Bush has nominated them for seats on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That's the Denver-based court that has jurisdiction over Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Wyoming and Utah.

REV_00067226

With four of the Denver circuit's 12 judgeships vacant, Court Clerk Patrick Fisher says it may be one of the highest vacancy rates of any circuit in the nation. As a result, the court has had to depend heavily on its corps of eight senior judges, who are by definition semi-retired, for help with its caseload.

Yet as former President Clinton could testify, filling a judgeship in Denver isn't as simple as sending a name to Capitol Hill for confirmation. He tried to get Denver lawyer Jim Lyons, a longtime friend, on the circuit bench there, but Republican Sen. Wayne Allard of Colorado blocked his plans, calling Lyons too partisan for the job.

Now it's Bush's turn. And since the circuit's senators are overwhelmingly Republican, this time they're only too happy to promote their home-state nominees for the lifetime federal jobs. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate, however, only six of Bush's judicial nominees have managed to slip out of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

That's a pace that has some Republicans fuming, but you won't get any of the nominees to pop off. All have been instructed by the White House to keep quiet until their nominations clear the Senate.

Denver lawyer Timothy M. Tymkovich, who gave up a chance to be the No. 3 official at Interior, said last week that he still doesn't know when he'll get a confirmation hearing before the committee. "I suspect late in the year at the earliest," Tymkovich said.

He was nominated May 25, one of the first circuit nominees Bush sent to the Hill. While Tymkovich, 44, a former solicitor general on the Colorado state attorney general's staff, is well known to many in Colorado, the three other nominees to the Denver circuit probably are not.

Perhaps the most controversial of all four is Michael McConnell, a law professor at the University of Utah. In addition to defending the use of school vouchers for religious schools, McConnell has argued there is a need to reinterpret the constitutional mandate for a separation of church and state.

Utah's Sen. Orrin Hatch, the ranking Republican on judiciary, is supporting his nomination. But McConnell is likely to be opposed by groups such as Americans United for Separation of Church and
State. The Rev. Barry W. Lynn, executive director of that group, has said the Utah professor is "the religious right's dream court nominee, . . . a conservative Christian who's willing to use the force of government to impose his viewpoint."

A native of Louisville, Ky., McConnell clerked for Supreme Court Justice William Brennan, one of the most liberal members of the high court. Later, as an assistant solicitor general in the Reagan administration, he argued nine cases before the Supreme Court.

"By sheer intellect, compassion and judicial temperament, he is about the brightest the right wing has to offer," Ed Firmage, a college at the Utah law school told the Salt Lake Tribune when McConnell was nominated in May. "He will bring massive scholarship and a great deal of compassion."

Less is known about the legal philosophies of Terrence O'Brien of Gillette, who retired in 2000 after 20 years as a Wyoming district judge. After leaving the bench, O'Brien announced he would run as a Republican write-in candidate against an incumbent Democratic member of the Wyoming House. He later dropped out of the race, saying he didn't have enough time.

New Mexico's Harris Hartz won held a seat on the New Mexico Court of Appeals and was its chief judge before he resigned to join a New Jersey law firm that was drafting a reform program for the Teamsters Union. "I can't think of anything more exciting or important," he said at the time.

Now the Farmington native and Harvard law graduate has apparently decided that the federal bench would be more exciting. "I believe he has truly outstanding credentials and will make New Mexico proud as a new fixture on the 10th Circuit," Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M. said after Bush's announcement.

None of the four has a hearing date. A Republican aide at the Judiciary Committee said all their paperwork is completed.

Federal Bench: Evaluate Judicial Nominees Solely on Integrity, Intelligence, Good Faith, Scholar Says

AScribe Newswire
Friday, September 28, 2001

Judging the future actions of judges through the lens of today's "hot-button" political issues is not only unfair, it's not possible, a University of Illinois constitutional law scholar told a U.S. Senate subcommittee studying the judicial confirmation process.

Ronald D. Rotunda, the Albert E. Jenner, Jr. professor of law at the UI's College of Law, pointed out that "commentators, presidents and senators may think that they can predict how a nominee will vote once that person is confirmed, but our historical experience should teach us to be more humble."

History is replete with instances of Supreme Court nominees who make decisions that appear at odds with their record and perceived political leanings. A major reason for this, Rotunda said, is because "we do not know what will be the major legal issues 10, 15, or even five years from now, much less what might be the 'liberal' or 'conservative' answer to them." Hugo Black, a onetime member of the Ku Klux Klan, baffled commentators when he became one of the most vigorous supporters of racial justice on the Supreme Court. The same pattern emerges when one studies the decisions of modern-day judges,

according to the UI legal scholar. "Judge Antonin Scalia, whom the popular culture typically portrays as conservative, voted twice to protect burning the American flag as free speech. Justice John Paul Stevens, whom the media tells us is liberal, dissented in both of those two cases." Rotunda said the process of the law, such as the emphasis on resting a decision on the specific facts of a case, mitigates against cant and frees judges from being swept away by popular opinion.

The batting averages of commentators [as well as senators] in divining how judicial nominees will act once confirmed "have been remarkably poor," Rotunda said, adding, "If a lot of predictions are made, some will be correct. Even a stopped clock is right twice a day."

Instead of trying to set up litmus tests and trick questions about "the judicial philosophy" of a nominee, Rotunda urged the Senate to use its power of confirmation to examine a prospective judge in terms of his or her personal integrity, intellectual ability and good faith. "The Senate should continue to play the constitutionally mandated role of reasoned adviser to the president, not prophet, seer or investigative reporter. Further, nominees should only promise the faithful performance of their judicial duties. Hence, there should be no presumption against confirmation if a nominee chooses not to answer a politically charged question, or if a question requires [or appears to require] the nominee to promise to decide a legal question in a particular way, or if he or she believes an answer will compromise [or will appear to compromise] a judge's ability to later make an independent law-based decision."

Time for Senate to Approve Judicial Nominees

By Mark Cernak
The Washington Times
Sunday, September 30, 2001

There are now 49 of President Bush's judicial nominees before the Senate - 29 nominated to fill district court vacancies and 20 nominated to fill appellate court vacancies. One-hundred six judgeships are currently vacant, 75 of them in the district courts and 31 in the appellate courts. Forty-one of those have been designated "judicial emergencies" because of their duration and caseload; 20 of Mr. Bush's nominees have been named to fill "emergency" vacancies.

Although Mr. Bush submitted his first 11 nominations on May 9, only six nominees have been confirmed this year. Just one from the initial group of 11 has been confirmed- a Clinton recess appointee whom Mr. Bush re-nominated. Of the 49 nominees before the Senate, only 3 - that is, 6 percent - have had a hearing.

In these times, I think that we need these positions filled immediately; we cannot wait until the war on terrorism is over.(spade)

I paid for the hotel rooms for a number (about 10 rooms) of the United Airlines flight 93 families on the Sunday night beforethe event with the President (after United refused to cover this cost and many were upset). Many of these families ended up ordering food and movies in their rooms as well.

At the time, Hagin suggested that I should be reimbursed by an individual rather than the RNC so that nothing looked political. Kavanaugh has advised that it would be better for the RNC to reimburse from an ethics standpoint. Obviously, nothing about the event was political; it's just a question of covering costs. Are y'all comfortable with my receiving RNC reimbursement for these costs?

There is no legal problem with requiring someone to submit a zip code in order to receive the e-mails.
There may be some people who are especially sensitive to privacy concerns who would choose not to receive the e-mail updates if they have to provide their zip code, but that would be their choice.

You might think about including a line on the form, below the zip code field, that explains that the ZIP will be used to tailor e-mails to their geographical area.

Brett,

I wanted to bring you up-to-date on the White House Web site e-mail updates progress. I've also cc'ed Rachel because I know she had a large role in the White House Internet team's drafting of the privacy policy.

In determining what information whitehouse.gov should require subscribers provide when signing-up for e-mail updates, OSI believes zip code is the only field essential enough to require (other than e-mail address). To that end, is there any privacy policy or other prohibition against the White House requiring subscribers submit their zip code when signing-up for White House e-mail updates? First and last name, as well as specified issue topics, would be optional fields.

We're vigorously analyzing required fields, so if you feel inclined, please include any other information, pro or con, you think would be helpful in deciding this issue.

If there is any information I can provide to help expedite your response, please don't hesitate to call me, x6-7465. OA is currently designing the Web forms for e-mail sign-up and need a final decision on what fields need to be required as soon as OSI can provide an answer.

Thanks,
NEIL

FYI
Why are zip codes essential? No other piece of information singularly assists to identify our audience. The more we know our audience, the more relevant information we can provide them. Otherwise we have little information about our subscribers or whether they might find the information we provide relevant. E-mail subscribers, more and more, are expecting the services they sign-up for to provide information catered to their interests. Better identifying our audience would also greatly improve the process of deciding what new services to offer.

What Now for Federalism, Judges, and Scandal?

Legal Times

Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) and AG John Ashcroft

It's been three weeks since terrorists struck at America on its home turf. The attack, and the government's response, has thrown usual political dynamics off balance. Below are explorations of the altered agenda as seen through the fight over the primacy of federal power, partisanship and the federal bench, and Washington's institutional interest in political scandal.

Federal Power: Washington's Return

A new office of homeland security will have untold powers to prevent terrorism within our borders. The Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Immigration and Naturalization Service are expanding their reach. The airlines are getting a multibillion-dollar federal bailout, and the federal government may take over airline safety.

Almost as suddenly as the hijacked airliners were wrenched off their flight paths and turned toward the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on Sept. 11, the tone in Washington has shifted dramatically. President George W. Bush's campaign statements about reducing the size of government and shifting power to the states are forgotten for now. Federal authority, which has suffered blows at the hands of the judiciary, is poised for a period of greater respect.

Of course, the true legacy of the attacks is at this point unknown. But political scientists, historians, and Washington legal observers say the events of the past three weeks have implications for the way government behaves, from the White House to the Supreme Court.

Christopher Landau, an appellate lawyer and constitutional specialist at the D.C. office of Kirkland & Ellis, is "skeptical that this is a whole new world," especially if there proves to be no more large-scale terrorist attacks. But Landau, a former clerk to Supreme Court Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia, says there may well be perceptible and long-lasting changes in judicial decision making.

"I expect changes in the courts' willingness to second-guess law enforcement agencies," says Landau. "Lately, the Supreme Court has been fairly undeferential to other branches of the government. I think there will be a lot more deference now. Claims regarding the need for law enforcement will be taken more seriously."

Landau says such an attitude is possible even in cases outside the national security realm. Supreme Court decisions in the string of states' rights cases following United States v. Lopez-the 1995 case that struck down a congressional anti-gun measure as beyond the scope of federal power-could be decided differently in an era in which expansive assertions of national authority are given more credence.

On the other hand, the judiciary may be reluctant to dial back its support of decentralized government power in anything but cases that involve the nation's security.

Lloyd Cutler, founding partner of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, says the "decisions that involve fighting the war will come out differently than in peacetime, as they did during World War II. But I don't think Lopez will change."

Adds Stephen Wayne, a professor of government at Georgetown University: "I think the accumulation of power in the federal government will remain, but only as long as there is a publicly perceived crisis. If there is evidence that we have reduced the terrorist threat and there is quiet abroad, I think American politics will move back to business as usual."

Wayne's view is echoed by others who attempt to place the attack and its immediate reverberations in Washington into broader trends.

"The president has made pretty dramatic adjustments in his presidency, and this is to be expected in a crisis," says Thomas Mann, a scholar at the Brookings Institution. "People rally round the flag and look to the executive. But I don't know how transforming this will be. There had already been a considerable move to relegitimate the utility of the federal government and a dampening of the reflexive free-market approach, in the form of Bill Clinton's balanced budgets and his successful confrontation with Newt Gingrich."

Ultimately, the shift may merely be along more prosaic ideological lines. Georgetown University Law Center constitutional law professor Mark Tushnet predicts that President Bush may have "a real opportunity to effect a substantial change in our constitutional government," but a change of a conservative stripe.

"If the president can show himself a successful leader in conducting activities against terrorism, and is successful on the rhetorical front as well-and this will take at least a year-he will have a chance to press the elements of his own conservative agenda that he had been having trouble moving [before the crisis]. My tests will be whether the Republicans gain in the 2002 off-year election and whether Bush can privatize Social Security," says Tushnet.

-Jonathan Groner

Judges: Business as Usual

While the events of Sept. 11 abruptly altered Washington policy agendas, the politics over the federal judiciary-for better or worse-have been barely affected.

On Oct. 4, the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee will host its second nominations hearing since the attacks. Just as before, Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) is favoring those nominees who are not mired in controversy, while administration officials continue to grumble that Leahy's pace could be faster.

To be sure, putting forth a united front to respond to the terrorist attacks has eclipsed any public bickering among key players at the White House, the Justice Department, and the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an example, last week Leahy warmly welcomed John Ashcroft to a hearing on anti-terrorism legislation, despite having been one of 42 Democrats who voted against Ashcroft's confirmation to be attorney general.

But the bipartisan spirit in Congress-which has put off debates on hot-button issues such as campaign finance reform, "faith-based" social programs, and changes in Social Security-has not spilled over into judicial politics.

Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts political science professor who has written extensively on judicial politics, says that right now would be a difficult time to deal with a contentious and ideological nomination.

"We've got to hope that a Supreme Court justice doesn't die," Goldman says. "A vacancy would make bipartisanship very fragile."

Since taking over the Judiciary Committee in June, Leahy has emphasized noncontroversialnominees who enjoy broad support from both Democrats and Republicans.

That approach is "all the more important now," says David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "To take a controversial nomination would suck the oxygen out of the process and reduce the number of nominees we can work on."

But one administration official says that Leahy let the administration know back in August that consensus nominees would fair better than controversial picks such as Jeffrey Sutton, whom President George W. Bush has selected for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, or Michael McConnell, whom Bush tapped for the 10th Circuit.

President Bush announced both nominees at a White House ceremony in May.

"Leahy never had any intention of having hearings on those nominees," says the official.

Accordingly, the administration official figures it is highly unlikely that Sutton, vigorously opposed by disability rights groups, and McConnell, opposed by proponents of abortion rights and a church-state separation group, will get a hearing this year.

Similarly, D.C. Circuit nominees John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner opposed by abortion rights groups, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher's Miguel Estrada may have to wait until next year.

Slated for this week's hearing is New Orleans U.S. District Judge Edith Brown Clement, nominated for the 5th Circuit in May, and some district court nominees who had not been scheduled by press time.

Clement enjoys the support of both home state senators, Democrats John Breaux and Mary Landrieu.

Under the Democrats' control, the Senate has confirmed three nominees to the courts of appeals and three to district courts. Two of those judges were confirmed by the full Senate after the terrorist attack, Sharon Prost for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Two more nominees, one each for the trial and appellate courts, are waiting for a vote by the Judiciary Committee.

Altogether, 53 Bush nominees are pending, There are 109 judicial vacancies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales pledged over the summer that the administration would nominate close to 100 judges by the end of the year. That effort could be hindered by the terrorism crisis as resources at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which conducts background checks, are diverted to the investigation.

One judicial nominee has been affected as well. Nebraska Deputy Attorney General Laurie Smith Camp, nominated for a district court seat, missed her Sept. 13 hearing because flights were still grounded and she could not get to Washington. It is not clear when she will be rescheduled.

I was told if we took part in a campaign activity on our own time we had to have it cleared by counsel. If this is correct, I was wondering who I should contact in your office? A friend of mine has asked me another person in my office to help him out this weekend at an Earley event. I just wanted to make sure it was okay.

Majority Leader Armey's staff has suggested that an amendment to Sec. 101 be incorporated into the PATRIOT Act (aka our ATA). Notwithstanding language they sent down earlier today, which led us to believe initially that what he wants to do is very problematic, the email below from his staff is intended to clarify this point.

We need to seriously consider, as quickly as is possible, whether or not we can live with what Armey wants to do. He is talking to Sensenbrenner today about wanting to get it offered at Committee during tomorrow's markup; everyone involved is asking, repeatedly, whether or not DOJ would oppose this. Dan Collins, could you work with CCIPS on this and get back to us? Thanks.

Subject: RE: Any reaction to that Carnivore language?

Taking a step back for a moment, let me explain the intent of the language. If the language I sent (earlier today (ct)) expands beyond the intent, it is because I am not a legislative counsel.

The goal is:
1) DOJ already keeps "an evidentiary log that records the setting of the device and any individuals that access the device" and "all information obtained from a pen register or trap and trace device is maintained in an evidentiary folder"(As sent to me by FBI leg affairs, Beth Beers)

2) In cases where Carnivore (or things like Carnivore) are used, instead of having the ISP provide the routing and addressing info, there is no third party verification.

3) Therefore, the intent of the language is to say that the evidentiary log is to be given to the court which has granted the trap and trace authority for the use of Carnivore -- after the fact, so there is not a delay in beginning the search.

It is not intended to cover all pen register requests for phones or in instances when the ISP provides the information on their own -- only when Carnivore-like devices are used by law enforcement.

I assume the language can be massaged to meet that goal. In retrospect, agreeing to attempt the first draft of the language was probably a mistake on my part out of deference to your busy schedules. Recognize that mine is busy too.

At today's admin meeting:

Security:

We are all to assume that people are listening to our cell phone conversations or intercepting pager messages so we must always be mindful of what we say or page. We are also to be careful about conversations in public places. Remember that White House badges must be worn at all times while in the complex and must be out of sight while off of the premises. Secret Service is beefing up security so they may be more strict with the rules than they have been in the past. We must be cooperative.

WAVES: If an event is going to be held that will allow for certain guests to be within arm's reach of the President, we must denote ARP on the WAVES form. Remember that any guests cleared into the complex are only cleared into that location. They are not to be walked over to attend events, etc. as they may pose as a danger to the President or some other WH staffer. WAVES makes a judgement call on allowing clearing based on the information provided and may have a different decision if the room number or guests was different.

We are to continue to contact Merrill Hughes if we need vehicles to enter the complex.

Phone Books:
We should be receiving drafts of the new phone books today. All changes are due by Friday.

I think we have some provision on the Senate side.

We need to find out what the state of play is on the House side on the education provision. Both Armey and DeLay were interested in having a strong provision in the bill. When I asked Phil abt it , he indicated it was not in the bill .. fallen out becuase of ed and labor, I am suspecting. The Speakers staff was trying to find out what had happened. Do you know ?
I think we have some provision on the Senate side.

Brett,

I remain in need of a short e-mail from you addressed to Stanley Carlson-Thies, to the effect that Jim Davids (my Duputy) will be acting under your directions to prepare a response to the ACLU FOIA letters directed at documents supporting the Audits at DOJ, HHS, DoL, HUD and DoEd. So far I "know" only of letters received by DOJ, DoEd and DoL, but I assume a similar letter is lodged in the bureaucratic bowels of HHS and HUD as well.

Further, Dr. Carlson-Thies gave mention of a FOIA letter at DoL by People for the American Way. Haven't seen the letter, and am uncertain if we at DOJ want to assist in the response (unless, of course, PFAW sent similar letters to the other four Centers).

Thanks,
Carl H. Esbeck

Carl's office (James Davids, PRA 6, james.davids@usdoj.gov) will get in touch directly with the agencies that have received the FOIA request and make recommendations to me on how to respond.

I think the lawyers need after hours access to the library. We often (or at least sometimes when it is most important) could use law books, treatises, etc. after hours. It is simply crazy that we cannot get in. If they won't give us all keys, how about one key that would be in a central place over here (Brent's desk, for example)? We could all sign pledges on taking books without sigining out, etc. Can we get this done?

treatises and certain other books are not on Lexis/Westlaw; also, statutes are much harder to research on computer; with books, you can leaf through an entire statute pretty quickly

How are y'all coming on your insurance pieces? I have a draft of the basic memo, which I would like to plug things into tomorrow. I think we need to meet Friday afternoon to go over the details. Josh would like us to present the plan at next Wednesday's DCPC. This means we should try to pre-clear with our bosses on Monday.

Center Directors:

Brett Kavanaugh, WH Counsel, has asked the Carl Esbeck and Jim Davids at Department of Justice to coordinate the administration's response to incoming FOIA requests concerning the departmental program audits sent to OFBCI at the end of July.

Jim Davids will be contacting you to find out if your department has received any such requests, what kind of response is being formulated, and who in the department handles such requests.

Whether or not any FOIA requests concerning the audits have been brought to your attention, please let Jim know who in the department handles the requests so that he can be sure to locate all that have arrived.

Carl will make a recommendation to Brett Kavanaugh about how the administration/departments should respond to the various requests.

Thank you.

SENATE SEALS DEAL AS HOUSE PANEL OKS
ANTI-TERROR BILL

Oct. 3, 2001 - One day after negotiations with the White House and the Justice

Department collapsed, the Senate Judiciary Committee reached an agreement on anti-terrorism legislation that would expand law enforcement powers.

Just before 10 p.m. Wednesday, Judiciary Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., and ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, Utah, announced the agreement, but details were not available.

"These have been complex and difficult negotiations, but after much hard effort we have completed work on this bipartisan agreement," Leahy said in a statement.

Hatch said the agreement "is based on our views on the proper balance between the role of law enforcement and our civil liberties."

Aides planned to work through the night drafting the anti-terrorism legislation, and the senators said they hoped to deliver the bill to Majority Leader Tom Daschle, S.D., on Thursday.

Daschle said the bill could move directly to the Senate floor, bypassing the Judiciary Committee.

"Whether we go through committee or go right to the floor, we'll be prepared to go to the floor next week if our progress can be locked in," he said.

Earlier this week, substantial progress toward a committee markup or floor debate was unexpected, especially after a deal tentatively brokered by staff aides fell apart Oct. 2. The agreement unraveled during a meeting of White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Leahy and Hatch. A Leahy aide said the administration backed off from an agreement on the sharing of grand jury information.

House Judiciary acts. Meanwhile, the House Judiciary Committee unanimously approved - to resounding cheers - an anti-terrorism bill that would make sweeping changes to how law enforcement agents investigate crimes and track suspects.

The committee approved the bill (HR 2975) 36-0 after five and a half hours of debate, adopting 18 amendments. But unanimity was achieved in part because Chairman F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., and ranking Democrat John Conyers Jr., Mich., agreed to iron out some issues before the bill comes to the House floor, which is likely to happen Oct. 9 or 10.

One of the issues deferred until later was how to write sufficiently narrow language to expand current law on devices that monitor phone numbers so the provisions apply to electronic communications. Many committee members have said that they would like to see the laws expanded, but would like to restrict the new provisions to cover information that doesn't reveal the content of communications.

Another difference that could be ironed out is how to ease the standards for foreign wiretapping under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

The most significant change made Wednesday came from an amendment offered by Rep. Jerrold Nadler, D-N.Y.

Nadler's amendment would limit the information the U.S. government could disclose to foreign governments when investigating the background of people applying for asylum in the United States.

"This makes no restraint on the information that can be gotten," said Rep. Howard L. Berman, D-Calif. "It just says, don't tell the foreign government that this person is seeking asylum."

Ultimately, the committee adopted the amendment by voice vote. It would strike the section of the bill that would have given the government broader authority to investigate if aliens are terrorists. The language was not requested by the Justice Department and was added during the bill's drafting.

The committee also adopted by voice vote an amendment offered by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., that would allow citizens or long-term permanent residents to sue under the Federal Tort Claims Act if any federal investigative or law enforcement officer unlawfully disclosed information about them obtained during surveillance.

The amendment also included language that would increase the minimum penalty that can be assessed in such cases from $1,000 to $100 a day for each day of violation or $10,000, whichever is greater.

Another amendment, offered by Rep. Anthony Weiner, D-N.Y., adopted 25-8, would allow the attorney general to impose greater fees on aliens entering the country on student visas if they come from countries that have repeatedly supported international terrorism.

Frank argued against the amendment, saying this would unfairly force students coming to the United States to pay for the sins of their governments. "We're singling out individuals because they're from bad countries."

Zoe Lofgren, D-Calif., questioned why the amendment would apply only to aliens on student visas. But Weiner said the measure was key to recouping the higher costs of investigating aliens from countries with terrorist links.

The committee defeated on a point of order an amendment from Sheila Jackson-Lee, D-Texas, that would add hate crimes language to the bill.

Other bills. In the middle of marking up the controversial anti-terrorism bill, the committee approved by voice vote a bill that would increase the recipients of federal long-term care insurance.

The bill (HR 2559), which was introduced in July by Rep. Joe Scarborough, R-Fla., would broaden the definition of "annuitants" in federal provisions to include government employees who meet some other conditions. The bill also would prohibit state and other governments from imposing any fees or taxes on the premiums paid for long-term care insurance policies.

The committee also quickly approved by voice vote a bill (HR 2336) sponsored by Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., that would repeal the sunset provision attached to portions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 that allow judge's disclosure reports to be redacted.

This is a follow-up to various e-mails from Jennifer and me today--apologies for all the activity, but you are all aware of the moving targets here.

We will in all likelihood not get final versions of the Senate and House bills until later tonight or early tomorrow morning. We will circulate both ASAP. We need to ask you to revise and complete your side-by-side analyses based on the final versions of the bills. For the "description" and "difference" columns, please include both a plain language explanation and a technical description. That would help both to compare the version and to effectuate any needed fixes. This is a critical document as we try to harmonize the two versions for quick passage, so we very much appreciate your help in this final putsch. The timing may change depending on when we get the bills, etc., but please plan on having your final s-b-s to Jennifer by noon tomorrow, Friday. Thank you so much.

RE: Conference Call with National Finance Committee

We would like to request your participation in an executive conference call with the RNC National Finance Committee on Monday, October 15, 2001 at 6:00 pm (EST). Participation is possible by calling in from any location, including a cellular phone. We'd like the call to last approximately 20-25 minutes. Either Governor Jim Gilmore or myself would introduce you.

Our Finance Committee Conference Call Series is an ongoing program to give members of our Regents, TEAM 100 and EAGLES programs the opportunity to exchange ideas with Republican leaders. Those who have also helped in generating support for the Bush Campaign are included in these conference calls. Approximately 150-200 people are on the line during an average Finance Committee conference call.

Thank you in advance for your consideration. At your convenience, please have your staff contact Steph Strategos at 202.863.8713 in regards to your participation. Additionally, I can be reached directly at 202.863.8552.

Yours,

Jack

This is okay as long as Larry does not specifically solicit money. Also, he should do the call off site and not on a government phone.

HOUSE AND SENATE TERRORISM BILLS MAY terrorists could arrive on the the House and Senate floors at the same time next week. The House bill (HR 2975) cleared the Judiciary Committee last night on a 36-0 vote and is expected to see floor action beginning Oct. 9 or Oct. 10. Negotiations on a Senate proposal produced a deal late last night that was delivered to Judiciary Committee members this morning. The compromise measure, once final, could bypass a committee markup and go straight to the Senate floor, most likely on Oct. 10. "Whether we go through committee or go right to the floor, we'll be prepared to go to the floor next week if our progress can be locked in," Majority Leader Tom Daschle, S.D., said yesterday. Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Utah, the Judiciary Committee's ranking Republican, said the deal worked out last night balances "the role of law enforcement and our civil liberties."

I have been getting a fair amount of correspondence relating to the war against terrorism from people expressing support for the Administration, suggesting various actions, or offering to help. What does the group think about responding to such letters by saying that they will be forwarded to OHS?

As you are aware, the majority of our advance staff work in other government agencies and the private sector etc. In fact of my database of 130+ advance personnel, only five are fulltime EOP employees. To take it a step further, had we left the Asia schedule intact with all 5 stops, I would have used more than 80 advance personnel.

Obviously, we like to make sure all advance personnel (volunteer and fulltime) are constantly kept up to date on the latest policies and procedures of this office. To that end, we have developed an advance newsletter. It is four pages in length and consists of a variety of stories.

My question is can we produce, print and mail the newsletter at government expense? Or must we resort to a political entity? I have a draft copy if anyone on your staff would like to review the content. Thanks for your assistance and I look forward to your response.

The OLP draft has been approved and is going out this week, I believe. No harm standard. That does not mean agency has to withhold info subject to exemption, but that is the general principle.

B'ham News--

MARY ORNDORFF
News Washington correspondent

WASHINGTON President Bush on Friday announced his intent to nominate Mobile judge William Steele to a federal appellate court, a controversial choice that Alabama Sen. Jeff Sessions immediately started defending against claims of racial insensitivity.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the NAACP already had voiced opposition to Steele. So Sessions, hoping to pre-empt a larger Democratic challenge to the nomination, briefed reporters Friday on Steele's record, calling him respectful, fair and non-political.

"His integrity is just of the highest order," said Sessions, who sits on the Senate Judiciary Committee that will review Steele's nomination.

Although Sessions and Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., did not recommend Steele for the post on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta, neither office objected when the White House first considered him several months ago.

If confirmed, Steele would replace Alabama native Emmett Ripley Cox on the court, which is one judicial rung below the U.S. Supreme Court. Cox stepped down from handling cases in December.

Steele has been a federal magistrate in Mobile since 1990.

But the nominations process for the lifetime appointments can be contentious, as Sessions personally witnessed several years ago when he was denied a federal judgeship.

"My experience is that a nominee has a difficult time getting his or her own story out, especially if they are a sitting judge," Sessions said.

The two black organizations opposing Steele point to an April opinion he issued in a racial harassment case filed by black employees at a Pennington paper mill.

Although Steele found evidence of racially insensitive remarks in the workplace, he dismissed the case in favor of the mill's owner because the employees failed to meet several legal requirements.

The employees' lawyer, Richard Meelheim of Birmingham, wrote Sessions in April to say the opinion, issued eight days earlier, was "absurd." He also notified the Democrats on the judiciary committee. In August, the SCLC and the NAACP issued their objections. The employment case remains on appeal.

On Friday, Sessions' office released letters of support for Steele, including one from a black lawyers' organization in Mobile.

"The association is convinced that Magistrate Steele has consistently demonstrated excellent judicial temperament and a genuine concern for African-American lawyers personally and professionally," wrote Willie J. Huntley Jr., president of the Vernon Z. Crawford Bay Area Bar Association.

Sessions said the White House investigated Steele's record on race, including the ruling in the paper mill case, and chose to go forward with the nomination.

Steele, 50, earned his law degree from the University of Alabama in 1980 and has experience as a county and federal prosecutor, including working for Sessions as an assistant U.S. attorney from 1987 to 1989.

Does the newsletter address cover advance issues for both political and non-political trips? To the extent it covers political advance issues, do those issues the pertain to the care, feeding and security of the President (which might be characterized as official business) or to organization of political events and other inherently political activities? This will affect the analysis as to who should pay for what.

I just connected w/ McCain. Told him I thought we're stuck on aviation security; seeing no flexibility in Sen for anything other than full federalization; seeing no flexibility in House R leadership toward accepting full federalization, and they've pressed hard for Pres to do his own plan by EO. McCain seemed sympathetic; said it's crazy for R's be seen as obstructing air security; reiterated that he personally is flexible on a solution; but didn't have any suggestions as to how to get out of the box. He said he'd be talking w/ colleagues tomorrow morning, and would let me know of any good ideas.

McCain also said he spoke w/ Daschle over the weekend; said Daschle is committed to working something out, and "willing to have a much smaller unemployment package to get that off the table." I wonder how much "smaller" really is; but it sounds like if Daschle floats a "smaller" unemployment package, discipline for keeping extraneous matter off the security bill may well disappear.

That is correct for us: WH officials can educate and explain President's position on legislation to outside groups and individuals; as a prudential matter, we advise simply to steer clear of specifically asking the outside parties to call/write Members of Congress on legislation. Some individual departments and agencies have special additional rules, however, and so I would suggest that Bruce consult with Commerce GC's office. Let me know what else I can do.

Agreed that strong fed rules would be better, but the best advice of OLA is that we're unlikely to succeed in winning some of them. Even best case, we're proposing very limited preemption. Other than venue and jurisdiction, joint and several, punitives, etc most areas will be left to state law.

Terrorism May Alter Bush, Court Mood on Federalism

REV_00068300

By Jonathan Ringel and Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Friday, October 5, 2001

EXCERPT

Judges: Business as Usual

While the events of Sept. 11 abruptly altered Washington policy agendas, the politics over the federal judiciary-for better or worse-barely have been affected.

On Thursday, the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee hosted its second nominations hearing since the attacks. Just as before, Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., favors those nominees who are not mired in controversy, while administration officials continue to grumble that Leahy's pace could be faster.

To be sure, putting forth a united front to respond to the terrorist attacks has eclipsed any public bickering among key players at the White House, the Justice Department and the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an example, last week Leahy warmly welcomed John Ashcroft to a hearing on anti-terrorism legislation, despite having been one of 42 Democrats who voted against Ashcroft's confirmation to be attorney general.

But the bipartisan spirit in Congress-which has put off debates on hot-button issues such as campaign finance reform, "faith-based" social programs, and changes in Social Security-has not spilled over into judicial politics.

Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts political science professor who has written extensively on judicial politics, says that right now would be a difficult time to deal with a contentious and ideological nomination.

"We've got to hope that a Supreme Court justice doesn't die," Goldman says. "A vacancy would make bipartisanship very fragile."

Since taking over the Judiciary Committee in June, Leahy has emphasized noncontroversial nominees who enjoy broad support from both Democrats and Republicans.

That approach is "all the more important now," says David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "To take a controversial nomination would suck the oxygen out of the process and reduce the number of nominees we can work on."

But one administration official says that Leahy let the administration know back in August that consensus nominees would fare better than controversial picks such as Jeffrey Sutton, whom President George W. Bush has selected for a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, or Michael McConnell, whom Bush tapped for the 10th Circuit.

REV_00068301

President Bush announced both nominees at a White House ceremony in May.

"Leahy never had any intention of having hearings on those nominees," says the official.

Accordingly, the administration official figures it is highly unlikely that Sutton, vigorously opposed by disability rights groups, and McConnell, opposed by proponents of abortion rights and a church-state separation group, will get a hearing this year.

Similarly, D.C. Circuit nominees John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner opposed by abortion rights groups, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher's Miguel Estrada may have to wait until next year.

Slated for this week's hearing was New Orleans U.S. District Judge Edith Brown Clement, nominated for the 5th Circuit in May, and some district court nominees who had not been scheduled by press time.

Clement enjoys the support of both home-state senators, Democrats John Breaux and Mary Landrieu.

Under the Democrats' control, the Senate has confirmed three nominees to the courts of appeals and three to district courts. Two of those judges were confirmed by the full Senate after the terrorist attack: Sharon Prost for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Two more nominees, one each for the trial and appellate courts, are waiting for a vote by the Judiciary Committee.

Altogether, 53 Bush nominees are pending. There are 109 judicial vacancies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales pledged over the summer that the administration would nominate close to 100 judges by the end of the year. That effort could be hindered by the terrorism crisis as resources at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which conducts background checks, are diverted to the investigation.

One judicial nominee has been affected as well. Nebraska Deputy Attorney General Laurie Smith Camp, nominated for a district court seat, missed her Sept. 13 hearing because flights were grounded and she could not get to Washington. It is not clear when she will be rescheduled.

Hearings Start for Federal Judge Nominee

By Matt Kelley
Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 5, 2001

So far, so good for U.S. District Court judge nominee Laurie Smith Camp, who won bipartisan plaudits Thursday during testimony before a Senate committee.

REV_00068302

Camp, nominated by President Bush to become Nebraska's first female federal judge, was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Nebraska Sens. Chuck Hagel, a Republican, and Ben Nelson, a Democrat.

"This is a unique candidate," Hagel told the committee, "a well-qualified candidate."

Barring unforeseen problems, Camp's nomination seems headed for Senate approval later this year.

Currently, Camp serves as a top aide to Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg, a stalwart Republican who has mounted Senate campaigns against both Nelson and Hagel.

On Thursday, Nebraska's senators praised Camp's professionalism and legal abilities. Nelson, who ran against Stenberg in his 2000 Senate race, noted that he worked extensively with Camp during his eight years as governor of Nebraska.

"I can attest to the quality of her work and the keenness of her intellect," Nelson said.

Camp's testimony before the committee was limited mostly to short answers to a few questions regarding privacy rights and congressional efforts to prevent terrorism.

Congress Back to Finger-Pointing Normal

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Monday, October 8, 2001

EXCERPT

Congress is returning to normal. Partisan finger-pointing is back, at least on home-front issues.

That isn't always unproductive, but it slows the process. Commercial airplanes may be packed again before Congress passes the security measures that are supposed to reassure passengers. For a couple of weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, President Bush and congressional leaders were remarkably adept at holding sniping to a minimum while they forged deals on a $40 billion emergency spending bill and a $15 billion airline rescue package.

But Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft signaled a return to the old ways last week when he joined Republican senators for their weekly lunch and afterwards complained about the "slow pace" of anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) also was upset about what he called the committee's "slow walking" of judicial nominees, so he decided to block votes on appropriations bills.

Part of Lott's pique is personal. Democrats are holding up a final vote on the nomination of Mississippi Supreme Court Justice Mike Mills to the U.S. District Court in North Mississippi because of objections from abortion rights groups. And the Judiciary Committee hasn't even scheduled a hearing on the nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Laurel to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Republican leaders also objected to a bipartisan plan to make baggage screeners at airports federal employees, as well as Democratic attempts to add benefits for laid-off aviation employees and security upgrades for Amtrak to the airport security bill. So they prevented action on the measure in both the House and Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) escalated the partisan rhetoric.

"I'm disappointed, obviously, that our Republican colleagues have chosen what has been clearly an obstructionist approach," Daschle told reporters.

Daschle said he would hold off on moving Ashcroft's anti-terrorism package until Congress acts on the airport security bill.

Senate Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) responded: "The reason we are not debating this issue on the floor this afternoon is not a matter of obstruction; it is a matter of getting it right before it is brought to the floor."

Officials Propose Federal Judge, U.S. Marshals

The Associated Press
Friday, October 5 2001

President Bush plans to nominate 327th state district judge Philip Martinez to be a U.S. district judge for Texas' western district.

Martinez had been recommended to Bush for the seat by Texas Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison in June. Martinez, 43, has served as the 327th district judge since 1991. He graduated from the University of Texas-El Paso in 1979 and received his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

After he is formally nominated by the president, the Senate must approve his nomination.

Through the week before the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon, Republicans had been complaining that the Senate was not moving fast enough on Bush's nominations.

The federal bench vacancy opened after U.S. District Judge Harry Hudspeth decided to take senior status.

Also Friday, Gramm and Hutchison, both Republicans, recommended four men to become U.S.

REV_00068304

marshals for the four judicial districts of Texas.

Those recommended are Fort Worth Deputy Police Chief Randy Ely for the northern district; Assistant U.S. Attorney Greg Anderson, western district; deputy U.S. Marshal John Moore, eastern district; and former Drug Enforcement Special Agent Ruben Monzon, southern district.

The responsibilities of U.S. marshals include pursuing and capturing federal fugitives, protecting federal witnesses, transporting and holding in custody criminal defendants and convicts, providing courtroom security and seizures and sales of criminal assets.

Ely, 49, oversees about 400 personnel and is responsible for administering a $29 million budget. During his career in Fort Worth, Ely has served as a detective, sergeant, lieutenant and captain. Ely earned his bachelor's degree in criminal justice and masters in urban affairs from the University of Texas at Arlington.

Anderson, 48, of San Antonio, has been a prosecutor in the western district for 14 years. He also has worked as a special agent of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, a criminal investigator for the Immigration and Naturalization Service and a highway trooper for the Texas Department of Public Safety. He earned a bachelor's degree from Texas Tech and his law degree from Texas Tech School of Law.

Moore, 50, of Tyler, has served in the marshal office in the eastern and northern districts for more than 18 years. A former Texas DPS trooper, he also was a patrol officer with the Amarillo, Plainview and Littlefield police departments and a deputy sheriff in Potter County (Amarillo). He also had a 15-year military career. He earned a bachelor's degree in occupational education and criminal justice from Wayland Baptist University.

Monzon, 58, of Houston, worked with the Drug Enforcement Administration for 26 years. He was a DEA chief inspector and agent in charge of the Houston office from 1990-95, when he retired. Recently, he had worked in private security. Monzon earned his bachelor of arts degree from Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

Bush Will Name Judge Gibbons to Appeals Bench

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Saturday, October 6, 2001

President Bush said Friday he will nominate U.S. Dist. Judge Julia Gibbons of Memphis to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

Her husband, Dist. Atty. Gen. Bill Gibbons, said the nomination would not affect his decision about whether to run for county mayor. The position does not require Judge Gibbons to move. The Sixth Circuit bench is one step below the Supreme Court and hears appeals from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan. Seven of its 16 judgeships are vacant.

Judge Gibbons said she was "honored to have been nominated" and then, as the White House requires of nominees, declined further comment until senators have a chance to question her at a confirmation hearing.

Bush only announced his "intention" to nominate Gibbons, so it could be days before her paperwork reaches the Senate and many weeks more until she gets a hearing and a vote.

This week, GOP senators began holding up action on appropriations bills to protest what they perceive as slow action by the Judiciary Committee on Bush's nominees.

Sen. Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) said he and the state's other Republican senator, Fred Thompson, will try to move her nomination quickly through the chamber.

"She's an outstanding person and jurist and I'm confident she will serve the court with dignity and distinction," said Thompson.

Gibbons, 50, was born in Pulaski, Tenn., and graduated from Vanderbilt University in 1972. She received her law degree from the University of Virginia.

In 1983, Gibbons was nominated by then-President Ronald Reagan for the district court seat vacated by Judge Harry Wellford after he went to the Sixth Circuit.

As a district judge, she ordered the violence-plagued Shelby County jail system to be put under court supervision in 1989 and in 1990 upheld a local ordinance restricting the locations of topless bars and adult bookstores. She rejected a new trial for convicted cop-killer Philip Workman and gave a life sentence to Auburn Calloway for trying to hijack a FedEx plane.

Her service has not been without controversy.

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has asked Gibbons to recuse herself from a case involving accusations of sex and race bias at AutoZone. The EEOC questions whether the judge can be fair because former AutoZone chairman J. R. 'Pitt' Hyde III was finance chairman of Bill Gibbons's campaign for district attorney general in 1998.

In Memphis, news of her pending nomination drew praise from legal circles.

"She has a keen mind and a good work ethic. I think she would be an excellent nominee," said Pat Arnoult, president of the Memphis Bar Association.

Leo Bearman Jr., a prominent Memphis trial lawyer, said Gibbons is a highly respected, experienced trial judge with a great temperament and ability.

The nomination comes as the normal complement of five federal judges in the Western District of Tennessee is down to three: Gibbons, Bernice Donald of Memphis and James D. Todd of Jackson. U.S. Dist. Judge Jon P. McCalla is in the second month of a six-month leave of absence, taken to avoid a hearing on judicial misconduct charges.

U.S. Dist. Judge Jerome Turner died on Feb. 12, 2000. Thompson and Frist recommended Memphis lawyer Hardy Mays for Turner's position, but Bush has yet to act.

LA. Court Nominee Quizzed on "Junkets"

By Joan McKinney
The Advocate
Monday, October 8, 2001

The question of "judicial junkets" was a tiny little ripple in the very calm waters at the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee last week, when Louisianan Edith "Joy" Brown Clement was questioned about her nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nothing is going to capsize Clement's boat. She'll be approved by the committee and confirmed by the full Senate, probably within a few weeks.

However, some Judiciary Committee members are trying to force all judgeship nominees on record as regards travel financed by special interests with cases before the federal courts. The private-property movement, in particular, has been aggressive about inviting federal judges to retreats where people debate the nuances of the U.S. Constitution and its provisions on property ownership and government "compensation" when property is seized for public uses.

Clement is a federal district judge based in New Orleans. Democratic Sen. Herb Kohl of Wisconsin noted that, on her disclosure forms submitted to Judiciary Committee, Clement reported "attending a number of these seminars in recent years." The seminars "are one-sided" and are "funded by groups with a stake in the outcome of court cases," Kohl said. So, will Clement keep attending such seminars, he asked. And what does she think about pending legislation, sponsored by Massachusetts Democrat Ted Kennedy and others, "to ban these types of (travel) opportunities" for federal judges?

Clement didn't answer regarding the proposed ban, and essentially said that she may continue to accept the subsidized travel. In her experience, Clement said, the seminar speakers are "very diverse" and the discussions are "very broad-based." In the future, "I would evaluate the opportunity if presented with the invitation," she said.

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., a leader of Congress' property-rights bloc, said, "I want to compliment you for attending the seminars. I also want to compliment you for not ruling them out in the future."

State District Judge to be Bush Nominee

REV_00068307

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram
Saturday, October 6, 2001

State District Judge Philip Martinez of El Paso will be nominated by President Bush to a federal judgeship in the Western District of Texas, the White House announced Friday.

The U.S. Senate must confirm the nomination. Martinez was out of town on Friday and could not be reached to comment.

U.S. District Judge David Briones, currently the only federal judge in El Paso, has been using federal judges from districts in other states to help him chip away at a huge caseload, mostly of drug-smuggling and immigration defendants. Martinez, 44, has served as the state's 327th District judge in El Paso since 1991.

"With his experience, he will be able to start right away," Briones said. "We'll have a docket waiting for him."

Martinez was recommended for the position by Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, both Texas Republicans.

Terrorism May Alter Bush, Court Mood on Federalism

REV_00068329

By Jonathan Ringel and Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Friday, October 5, 2001

EXCERPT

Judges: Business as Usual

While the events of Sept. 11 abruptly altered Washington policy agendas, the politics over the federal judiciary-for better or worse-barely have been affected.

On Thursday, the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee hosted its second nominations hearing since the attacks. Just as before, Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., favors those nominees who are not mired in controversy, while administration officials continue to grumble that Leahy's pace could be faster.

To be sure, putting forth a united front to respond to the terrorist attacks has eclipsed any public bickering among key players at the White House, the Justice Department and the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an example, last week Leahy warmly welcomed John Ashcroft to a hearing on anti-terrorism legislation, despite having been one of 42 Democrats who voted against Ashcroft's confirmation to be attorney general.

But the bipartisan spirit in Congress-which has put off debates on hot-button issues such as campaign finance reform, "faith-based" social programs, and changes in Social Security-has not spilled over into judicial politics.

Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts political science professor who has written extensively on judicial politics, says that right now would be a difficult time to deal with a contentious and ideological nomination.

"We've got to hope that a Supreme Court justice doesn't die," Goldman says. "A vacancy would make bipartisanship very fragile."

Since taking over the Judiciary Committee in June, Leahy has emphasized noncontroversial nominees who enjoy broad support from both Democrats and Republicans.

That approach is "all the more important now," says David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "To take a controversial nomination would suck the oxygen out of the process and reduce the number of nominees we can work on."

But one administration official says that Leahy let the administration know back in August that consensus nominees would fare better than controversial picks such as Jeffrey Sutton, whom President George W. Bush has selected for a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, or Michael McConnell, whom Bush tapped for the 10th Circuit.

REV_00068330

President Bush announced both nominees at a White House ceremony in May.

"Leahy never had any intention of having hearings on those nominees," says the official.

Accordingly, the administration official figures it is highly unlikely that Sutton, vigorously opposed by disability rights groups, and McConnell, opposed by proponents of abortion rights and a church-state separation group, will get a hearing this year.

Similarly, D.C. Circuit nominees John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner opposed by abortion rights groups, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher's Miguel Estrada may have to wait until next year.

Slated for this week's hearing was New Orleans U.S. District Judge Edith Brown Clement, nominated for the 5th Circuit in May, and some district court nominees who had not been scheduled by press time.

Clement enjoys the support of both home-state senators, Democrats John Breaux and Mary Landrieu.

Under the Democrats' control, the Senate has confirmed three nominees to the courts of appeals and three to district courts. Two of those judges were confirmed by the full Senate after the terrorist attack: Sharon Prost for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Two more nominees, one each for the trial and appellate courts, are waiting for a vote by the Judiciary Committee.

Altogether, 53 Bush nominees are pending. There are 109 judicial vacancies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales pledged over the summer that the administration would nominate close to 100 judges by the end of the year. That effort could be hindered by the terrorism crisis as resources at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which conducts background checks, are diverted to the investigation.

One judicial nominee has been affected as well. Nebraska Deputy Attorney General Laurie Smith Camp, nominated for a district court seat, missed her Sept. 13 hearing because flights were grounded and she could not get to Washington. It is not clear when she will be rescheduled.

Hearings Start for Federal Judge Nominee

By Matt Kelley

So far, so good for U.S. District Court judge nominee Laurie Smith Camp, who won bipartisan plaudits Thursday during testimony before a Senate committee.

REV_00068331

Camp, nominated by President Bush to become Nebraska's first female federal judge, was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Nebraska Sens. Chuck Hagel, a Republican, and Ben Nelson, a Democrat.

"This is a unique candidate," Hagel told the committee, "a well-qualified candidate."

Barring unforeseen problems, Camp's nomination seems headed for Senate approval later this year.

Currently, Camp serves as a top aide to Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg, a stalwart Republican who has mounted Senate campaigns against both Nelson and Hagel.

On Thursday, Nebraska's senators praised Camp's professionalism and legal abilities. Nelson, who ran against Stenberg in his 2000 Senate race, noted that he worked extensively with Camp during his eight years as governor of Nebraska.

"I can attest to the quality of her work and the keenness of her intellect," Nelson said.

Camp's testimony before the committee was limited mostly to short answers to a few questions regarding privacy rights and congressional efforts to prevent terrorism.

Congress Back to Finger-Pointing Normal

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Monday, October 8, 2001

EXCERPT

Congress is returning to normal. Partisan finger-pointing is back, at least on home-front issues.

That isn't always unproductive, but it slows the process. Commercial airplanes may be packed again before Congress passes the security measures that are supposed to reassure passengers. For a couple of weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, President Bush and congressional leaders were remarkably adept at holding sniping to a minimum while they forged deals on a $40 billion emergency spending bill and a $15 billion airline rescue package.

But Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft signaled a return to the old ways last week when he joined Republican senators for their weekly lunch and afterwards complained about the "slow pace" of anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) also was upset about what he called the committee's "slow walking" of judicial nominees, so he decided to block votes on appropriations bills.

Part of Lott's pique is personal. Democrats are holding up a final vote on the nomination of Mississippi Supreme Court Justice Mike Mills to the U.S. District Court in North Mississippi because of objections from abortion rights groups. And the Judiciary Committee hasn't even scheduled a hearing on the nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Laurel to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Republican leaders also objected to a bipartisan plan to make baggage screeners at airports federal employees, as well as Democratic attempts to add benefits for laid-off aviation employees and security upgrades for Amtrak to the airport security bill. So they prevented action on the measure in both the House and Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) escalated the partisan rhetoric.

"I'm disappointed, obviously, that our Republican colleagues have chosen what has been clearly an obstructionist approach," Daschle told reporters.

Daschle said he would hold off on moving Ashcroft's anti-terrorism package until Congress acts on the airport security bill.

Senate Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) responded: "The reason we are not debating this issue on the floor this afternoon is not a matter of obstruction; it is a matter of getting it right before it is brought to the floor."

President Bush plans to nominate 327th state district judge Philip Martinez to be a U.S. district judge for Texas' western district.

Martinez had been recommended to Bush for the seat by Texas Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison in June. Martinez, 43, has served as the 327th district judge since 1991. He graduated from the University of Texas-El Paso in 1979 and received his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

After he is formally nominated by the president, the Senate must approve his nomination.

Bush Will Name Judge Gibbons to Appeals Bench

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Saturday, October 6, 2001

President Bush said Friday he will nominate U.S. Dist. Judge Julia Gibbons of Memphis to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

Her husband, Dist. Atty. Gen. Bill Gibbons, said the nomination would not affect his decision about whether to run for county mayor. The position does not require Judge Gibbons to move. The Sixth Circuit bench is one step below the Supreme Court and hears appeals from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan. Seven of its 16 judgeships are vacant.

REV_00068334

Judge Gibbons said she was "honored to have been nominated" and then, as the White House requires of nominees, declined further comment until senators have a chance to question her at a confirmation hearing.

Bush only announced his "intention" to nominate Gibbons, so it could be days before her paperwork reaches the Senate and many weeks more until she gets a hearing and a vote.

This week, GOP senators began holding up action on appropriations bills to protest what they perceive as slow action by the Judiciary Committee on Bush's nominees.

Sen. Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) said he and the state's other Republican senator, Fred Thompson, will try to move her nomination quickly through the chamber.

"She's an outstanding person and jurist and I'm confident she will serve the court with dignity and distinction," said Thompson.

Gibbons, 50, was born in Pulaski, Tenn., and graduated from Vanderbilt University in 1972. She received her law degree from the University of Virginia.

In 1983, Gibbons was nominated by then-President Ronald Reagan for the district court seat vacated by Judge Harry Wellford after he went to the Sixth Circuit.

As a district judge, she ordered the violence-plagued Shelby County jail system to be put under court supervision in 1989 and in 1990 upheld a local ordinance restricting the locations of topless bars and adult bookstores. She rejected a new trial for convicted cop-killer Philip Workman and gave a life sentence to Auburn Calloway for trying to hijack a FedEx plane.

Her service has not been without controversy.

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has asked Gibbons to recuse herself from a case involving accusations of sex and race bias at AutoZone. The EEOC questions whether the judge can be fair because former AutoZone chairman J. R. 'Pitt' Hyde III was finance chairman of Bill Gibbons's campaign for district attorney general in 1998.

In Memphis, news of her pending nomination drew praise from legal circles.

"She has a keen mind and a good work ethic. I think she would be an excellent nominee," said Pat Arnoult, president of the Memphis Bar Association.

Leo Bearman Jr., a prominent Memphis trial lawyer, said Gibbons is a highly respected, experienced trial judge with a great temperament and ability.

of Tennessee is down to three: Gibbons, Bernice Donald of Memphis and James D. Todd of Jackson. U.S. Dist. Judge Jon P. McCalla is in the second month of a six-month leave of absence, taken to avoid a hearing on judicial misconduct charges.

LA. Court Nominee Quizzed on "Junkets"

By Joan McKinney
The Advocate
Monday, October 8, 2001

The question of "judicial junkets" was a tiny little ripple in the very calm waters at the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee last week, when Louisianan Edith "Joy" Brown Clement was questioned about her nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nothing is going to capsize Clement's boat. She'll be approved by the committee and confirmed by the full Senate, probably within a few weeks.

However, some Judiciary Committee members are trying to force all judgeship nominees on record as regards travel financed by special interests with cases before the federal courts. The private-property movement, in particular, has been aggressive about inviting federal judges to retreats where people debate the nuances of the U.S. Constitution and its provisions on property ownership and government "compensation" when property is seized for public uses.

Clement is a federal district judge based in New Orleans. Democratic Sen. Herb Kohl of Wisconsin noted that, on her disclosure forms submitted to Judiciary Committee, Clement reported "attending a number of these seminars in recent years." The seminars "are one-sided" and are "funded by groups with a stake in the outcome of court cases," Kohl said. So, will Clement keep attending such seminars, he asked. And what does she think about pending legislation, sponsored by Massachusetts Democrat Ted Kennedy and others, "to ban these types of (travel) opportunities" for federal judges?

Clement didn't answer regarding the proposed ban, and essentially said that she may continue to accept the subsidized travel. In her experience, Clement said, the seminar speakers are "very diverse" and the discussions are "very broad-based." In the future, "I would evaluate the opportunity if presented with the invitation," she said.

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., a leader of Congress' property-rights bloc, said, "I want to compliment you for attending the seminars. I also want to compliment you for not ruling them out in the future."

State District Judge to be Bush Nominee

REV_00068336

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram
Saturday, October 6, 2001

State District Judge Philip Martinez of El Paso will be nominated by President Bush to a federal judgeship in the Western District of Texas, the White House announced Friday.

The U.S. Senate must confirm the nomination. Martinez was out of town on Friday and could not be reached to comment.

U.S. District Judge David Briones, currently the only federal judge in El Paso, has been using federal judges from districts in other states to help him chip away at a huge caseload, mostly of drug-smuggling and immigration defendants. Martinez, 44, has served as the state's 327th District judge in El Paso since 1991.

"With his experience, he will be able to start right away," Briones said. "We'll have a docket waiting for him."

Martinez was recommended for the position by Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, both Texas Republicans.

Terrorism May Alter Bush, Court Mood on Federalism

Judges: Business as Usual

While the events of Sept. 11 abruptly altered Washington policy agendas, the politics over the federal judiciary-for better or worse-barely have been affected.

On Thursday, the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee hosted its second nominations hearing since the attacks. Just as before, Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., favors those nominees who are not mired in controversy, while administration officials continue to grumble that Leahy's pace could be faster.

To be sure, putting forth a united front to respond to the terrorist attacks has eclipsed any public bickering among key players at the White House, the Justice Department and the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an example, last week Leahy warmly welcomed John Ashcroft to a hearing on anti-terrorism legislation, despite having been one of 42 Democrats who voted against Ashcroft's confirmation to be attorney general.

But the bipartisan spirit in Congress-which has put off debates on hot-button issues such as campaign finance reform, "faith-based" social programs, and changes in Social Security-has not spilled over into judicial politics.

Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts political science professor who has written extensively on judicial politics, says that right now would be a difficult time to deal with a contentious and ideological nomination.

"We've got to hope that a Supreme Court justice doesn't die," Goldman says. "A vacancy would make bipartisanship very fragile."

Since taking over the Judiciary Committee in June, Leahy has emphasized noncontroversial nominees who enjoy broad support from both Democrats and Republicans.

That approach is "all the more important now," says David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "To take a controversial nomination would suck the oxygen out of the process and reduce the number of nominees we can work on."

But one administration official says that Leahy let the administration know back in August that consensus nominees would fare better than controversial picks such as Jeffrey Sutton, whom President George W. Bush has selected for a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, or Michael McConnell, whom Bush tapped for the 10th Circuit.

REV_00068341

President Bush announced both nominees at a White House ceremony in May.

"Leahy never had any intention of having hearings on those nominees," says the official.

Accordingly, the administration official figures it is highly unlikely that Sutton, vigorously opposed by disability rights groups, and McConnell, opposed by proponents of abortion rights and a church-state separation group, will get a hearing this year.

Similarly, D.C. Circuit nominees John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner opposed by abortion rights groups, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher's Miguel Estrada may have to wait until next year.

Slated for this week's hearing was New Orleans U.S. District Judge Edith Brown Clement, nominated for the 5th Circuit in May, and some district court nominees who had not been scheduled by press time.

Clement enjoys the support of both home-state senators, Democrats John Breaux and Mary Landrieu.

Under the Democrats' control, the Senate has confirmed three nominees to the courts of appeals and three to district courts. Two of those judges were confirmed by the full Senate after the terrorist attack: Sharon Prost for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Two more nominees, one each for the trial and appellate courts, are waiting for a vote by the Judiciary Committee.

Altogether, 53 Bush nominees are pending. There are 109 judicial vacancies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales pledged over the summer that the administration would nominate close to 100 judges by the end of the year. That effort could be hindered by the terrorism crisis as resources at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which conducts background checks, are diverted to the investigation.

One judicial nominee has been affected as well. Nebraska Deputy Attorney General Laurie Smith Camp, nominated for a district court seat, missed her Sept. 13 hearing because flights were grounded and she could not get to Washington. It is not clear when she will be rescheduled.

Hearings Start for Federal Judge Nominee

By Matt Kelley
Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 5, 2001

So far, so good for U.S. District Court judge nominee Laurie Smith Camp, who won bipartisan plaudits Thursday during testimony before a Senate committee.

REV_00068342

Camp, nominated by President Bush to become Nebraska's first female federal judge, was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Nebraska Sens. Chuck Hagel, a Republican, and Ben Nelson, a Democrat.

"This is a unique candidate," Hagel told the committee, "a well-qualified candidate."

Barring unforeseen problems, Camp's nomination seems headed for Senate approval later this year.

Currently, Camp serves as a top aide to Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg, a stalwart Republican who has mounted Senate campaigns against both Nelson and Hagel.

On Thursday, Nebraska's senators praised Camp's professionalism and legal abilities. Nelson, who ran against Stenberg in his 2000 Senate race, noted that he worked extensively with Camp during his eight years as governor of Nebraska.

"I can attest to the quality of her work and the keenness of her intellect," Nelson said.

Camp's testimony before the committee was limited mostly to short answers to a few questions regarding privacy rights and congressional efforts to prevent terrorism.

Congress Back to Finger-Pointing Normal

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal

EXCERPT

Congress is returning to normal. Partisan finger-pointing is back, at least on home-front issues.

That isn't always unproductive, but it slows the process. Commercial airplanes may be packed again before Congress passes the security measures that are supposed to reassure passengers. For a couple of weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, President Bush and congressional leaders were remarkably adept at holding sniping to a minimum while they forged deals on a $40 billion emergency spending bill and a $15 billion airline rescue package.

But Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft signaled a return to the old ways last week when he joined Republican senators for their weekly lunch and afterwards complained about the "slow pace" of anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) also was upset about what he called the committee's "slow walking" of judicial nominees, so he decided to block votes on appropriations bills.

Republican leaders also objected to a bipartisan plan to make baggage screeners at airports federal employees, as well as Democratic attempts to add benefits for laid-off aviation employees and security upgrades for Amtrak to the airport security bill. So they prevented action on the measure in both the House and Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) escalated the partisan rhetoric.

LA. Court Nominee Quizzed on "Junkets"

By Joan McKinney

The question of "judicial junkets" was a tiny little ripple in the very calm waters at the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee last week, when Louisianan Edith "Joy" Brown Clement was questioned about her nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nothing is going to capsize Clement's boat. She'll be approved by the committee and confirmed by the full Senate, probably within a few weeks.

However, some Judiciary Committee members are trying to force all judgeship nominees on record as regards travel financed by special interests with cases before the federal courts. The private-property movement, in particular, has been aggressive about inviting federal judges to retreats where people debate the nuances of the U.S. Constitution and its provisions on property ownership and government "compensation" when property is seized for public uses.

Clement is a federal district judge based in New Orleans. Democratic Sen. Herb Kohl of Wisconsin noted that, on her disclosure forms submitted to Judiciary Committee, Clement reported "attending a number of these seminars in recent years." The seminars "are one-sided" and are "funded by groups with a stake in the outcome of court cases," Kohl said. So, will Clement keep attending such seminars, he asked. And what does she think about pending legislation, sponsored by Massachusetts Democrat Ted Kennedy and others, "to ban these types of (travel) opportunities" for federal judges?

Clement didn't answer regarding the proposed ban, and essentially said that she may continue to accept the subsidized travel. In her experience, Clement said, the seminar speakers are "very diverse" and the discussions are "very broad-based." In the future, "I would evaluate the opportunity if presented with the invitation," she said.

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., a leader of Congress' property-rights bloc, said, "I want to compliment you for attending the seminars. I also want to compliment you for not ruling them out in the future."

State District Judge to be Bush Nominee

REV_00068347

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram
Saturday, October 6, 2001

State District Judge Philip Martinez of El Paso will be nominated by President Bush to a federal judgeship in the Western District of Texas, the White House announced Friday.

The U.S. Senate must confirm the nomination. Martinez was out of town on Friday and could not be reached to comment.

U.S. District Judge David Briones, currently the only federal judge in El Paso, has been using federal judges from districts in other states to help him chip away at a huge caseload, mostly of drug-smuggling and immigration defendants. Martinez, 44, has served as the state's 327th District judge in El Paso since 1991.

"With his experience, he will be able to start right away," Briones said. "We'll have a docket waiting for him."

Martinez was recommended for the position by Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, both Texas Republicans.

Terrorism May Alter Bush, Court Mood on Federalism

REV_00068351

By Jonathan Ringel and Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Friday, October 5, 2001

EXCERPT

Judges: Business as Usual

While the events of Sept. 11 abruptly altered Washington policy agendas, the politics over the federal judiciary-for better or worse-barely have been affected.

On Thursday, the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee hosted its second nominations hearing since the attacks. Just as before, Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., favors those nominees who are not mired in controversy, while administration officials continue to grumble that Leahy's pace could be faster.

To be sure, putting forth a united front to respond to the terrorist attacks has eclipsed any public bickering among key players at the White House, the Justice Department and the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an example, last week Leahy warmly welcomed John Ashcroft to a hearing on anti-terrorism legislation, despite having been one of 42 Democrats who voted against Ashcroft's confirmation to be attorney general.

But the bipartisan spirit in Congress-which has put off debates on hot-button issues such as campaign finance reform, "faith-based" social programs, and changes in Social Security-has not spilled over into judicial politics.

Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts political science professor who has written extensively on judicial politics, says that right now would be a difficult time to deal with a contentious and ideological nomination.

"We've got to hope that a Supreme Court justice doesn't die," Goldman says. "A vacancy would make bipartisanship very fragile."

Since taking over the Judiciary Committee in June, Leahy has emphasized noncontroversial nominees who enjoy broad support from both Democrats and Republicans.

That approach is "all the more important now," says David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "To take a controversial nomination would suck the oxygen out of the process and reduce the number of nominees we can work on."

But one administration official says that Leahy let the administration know back in August that consensus nominees would fare better than controversial picks such as Jeffrey Sutton, whom President George W. Bush has selected for a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, or Michael McConnell, whom Bush tapped for the 10th Circuit.

REV_00068352

President Bush announced both nominees at a White House ceremony in May.

"Leahy never had any intention of having hearings on those nominees," says the official.

Accordingly, the administration official figures it is highly unlikely that Sutton, vigorously opposed by disability rights groups, and McConnell, opposed by proponents of abortion rights and a church-state separation group, will get a hearing this year.

Similarly, D.C. Circuit nominees John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner opposed by abortion rights groups, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher's Miguel Estrada may have to wait until next year.

Slated for this week's hearing was New Orleans U.S. District Judge Edith Brown Clement, nominated for the 5th Circuit in May, and some district court nominees who had not been scheduled by press time.

Clement enjoys the support of both home-state senators, Democrats John Breaux and Mary Landrieu.

Under the Democrats' control, the Senate has confirmed three nominees to the courts of appeals and three to district courts. Two of those judges were confirmed by the full Senate after the terrorist attack: Sharon Prost for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Reggie Walton for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Two more nominees, one each for the trial and appellate courts, are waiting for a vote by the Judiciary Committee.

Altogether, 53 Bush nominees are pending. There are 109 judicial vacancies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales pledged over the summer that the administration would nominate close to 100 judges by the end of the year. That effort could be hindered by the terrorism crisis as resources at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which conducts background checks, are diverted to the investigation.

One judicial nominee has been affected as well. Nebraska Deputy Attorney General Laurie Smith Camp, nominated for a district court seat, missed her Sept. 13 hearing because flights were grounded and she could not get to Washington. It is not clear when she will be rescheduled.

Hearings Start for Federal Judge Nominee

By Matt Kelley
Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 5, 2001

So far, so good for U.S. District Court judge nominee Laurie Smith Camp, who won bipartisan plaudits Thursday during testimony before a Senate committee.

REV_00068353

Camp, nominated by President Bush to become Nebraska's first female federal judge, was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Nebraska Sens. Chuck Hagel, a Republican, and Ben Nelson, a Democrat.

"This is a unique candidate," Hagel told the committee, "a well-qualified candidate."

Barring unforeseen problems, Camp's nomination seems headed for Senate approval later this year.

Currently, Camp serves as a top aide to Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg, a stalwart Republican who has mounted Senate campaigns against both Nelson and Hagel.

On Thursday, Nebraska's senators praised Camp's professionalism and legal abilities. Nelson, who ran against Stenberg in his 2000 Senate race, noted that he worked extensively with Camp during his eight years as governor of Nebraska.

"I can attest to the quality of her work and the keenness of her intellect," Nelson said.

Camp's testimony before the committee was limited mostly to short answers to a few questions regarding privacy rights and congressional efforts to prevent terrorism.

Congress Back to Finger-Pointing Normal

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Monday, October 8, 2001

EXCERPT

Congress is returning to normal. Partisan finger-pointing is back, at least on home-front issues.

That isn't always unproductive, but it slows the process. Commercial airplanes may be packed again before Congress passes the security measures that are supposed to reassure passengers. For a couple of weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, President Bush and congressional leaders were remarkably adept at holding sniping to a minimum while they forged deals on a $40 billion emergency spending bill and a $15 billion airline rescue package.

But Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft signaled a return to the old ways last week when he joined Republican senators for their weekly lunch and afterwards complained about the "slow pace" of anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) also was upset about what he called the committee's "slow walking" of judicial nominees, so he decided to block votes on appropriations bills.

Part of Lott's pique is personal. Democrats are holding up a final vote on the nomination of Mississippi Supreme Court Justice Mike Mills to the U.S. District Court in North Mississippi because of objections from abortion rights groups. And the Judiciary Committee hasn't even scheduled a hearing on the nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Laurel to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Republican leaders also objected to a bipartisan plan to make baggage screeners at airports federal employees, as well as Democratic attempts to add benefits for laid-off aviation employees and security upgrades for Amtrak to the airport security bill. So they prevented action on the measure in both the House and Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) escalated the partisan rhetoric.

"I'm disappointed, obviously, that our Republican colleagues have chosen what has been clearly an obstructionist approach," Daschle told reporters.

Daschle said he would hold off on moving Ashcroft's anti-terrorism package until Congress acts on the airport security bill.

Senate Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (R-Idaho) responded: "The reason we are not debating this issue on the floor this afternoon is not a matter of obstruction; it is a matter of getting it right before it is brought to the floor."

Officials Propose Federal Judge, U.S. Marshals

The Associated Press
Friday, October 5 2001

President Bush plans to nominate 327th state district judge Philip Martinez to be a U.S. district judge for Texas' western district.

Martinez had been recommended to Bush for the seat by Texas Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison in June. Martinez, 43, has served as the 327th district judge since 1991. He graduated from the University of Texas-El Paso in 1979 and received his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

After he is formally nominated by the president, the Senate must approve his nomination.

Through the week before the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon, Republicans had been complaining that the Senate was not moving fast enough on Bush's nominations.

The federal bench vacancy opened after U.S. District Judge Harry Hudspeth decided to take senior status.

Also Friday, Gramm and Hutchison, both Republicans, recommended four men to become U.S.

REV_00068355

marshals for the four judicial districts of Texas.

Those recommended are Fort Worth Deputy Police Chief Randy Ely for the northern district; Assistant U.S. Attorney Greg Anderson, western district; deputy U.S. Marshal John Moore, eastern district; and former Drug Enforcement Special Agent Ruben Monzon, southern district.

The responsibilities of U.S. marshals include pursuing and capturing federal fugitives, protecting federal witnesses, transporting and holding in custody criminal defendants and convicts, providing courtroom security and seizures and sales of criminal assets.

Ely, 49, oversees about 400 personnel and is responsible for administering a $29 million budget. During his career in Fort Worth, Ely has served as a detective, sergeant, lieutenant and captain. Ely earned his bachelor's degree in criminal justice and masters in urban affairs from the University of Texas at Arlington.

Anderson, 48, of San Antonio, has been a prosecutor in the western district for 14 years. He also has worked as a special agent of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, a criminal investigator for the Immigration and Naturalization Service and a highway trooper for the Texas Department of Public Safety. He earned a bachelor's degree from Texas Tech and his law degree from Texas Tech School of Law.

Moore, 50, of Tyler, has served in the marshal office in the eastern and northern districts for more than 18 years. A former Texas DPS trooper, he also was a patrol officer with the Amarillo, Plainview and Littlefield police departments and a deputy sheriff in Potter County (Amarillo). He also had a 15-year military career. He earned a bachelor's degree in occupational education and criminal justice from Wayland Baptist University.

Monzon, 58, of Houston, worked with the Drug Enforcement Administration for 26 years. He was a DEA chief inspector and agent in charge of the Houston office from 1990-95, when he retired. Recently, he had worked in private security. Monzon earned his bachelor of arts degree from Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

Bush Will Name Judge Gibbons to Appeals Bench

By James Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
Saturday, October 6, 2001

President Bush said Friday he will nominate U.S. Dist. Judge Julia Gibbons of Memphis to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

Her husband, Dist. Atty. Gen. Bill Gibbons, said the nomination would not affect his decision about whether to run for county mayor. The position does not require Judge Gibbons to move. The Sixth Circuit bench is one step below the Supreme Court and hears appeals from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan. Seven of its 16 judgeships are vacant.

Judge Gibbons said she was "honored to have been nominated" and then, as the White House requires of nominees, declined further comment until senators have a chance to question her at a confirmation hearing.

Bush only announced his "intention" to nominate Gibbons, so it could be days before her paperwork reaches the Senate and many weeks more until she gets a hearing and a vote.

This week, GOP senators began holding up action on appropriations bills to protest what they perceive as slow action by the Judiciary Committee on Bush's nominees.

Sen. Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) said he and the state's other Republican senator, Fred Thompson, will try to move her nomination quickly through the chamber.

"She's an outstanding person and jurist and I'm confident she will serve the court with dignity and distinction," said Thompson.

Gibbons, 50, was born in Pulaski, Tenn., and graduated from Vanderbilt University in 1972. She received her law degree from the University of Virginia.

In 1983, Gibbons was nominated by then-President Ronald Reagan for the district court seat vacated by Judge Harry Wellford after he went to the Sixth Circuit.

As a district judge, she ordered the violence-plagued Shelby County jail system to be put under court supervision in 1989 and in 1990 upheld a local ordinance restricting the locations of topless bars and adult bookstores. She rejected a new trial for convicted cop-killer Philip Workman and gave a life sentence to Auburn Calloway for trying to hijack a FedEx plane.

Her service has not been without controversy.

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has asked Gibbons to recuse herself from a case involving accusations of sex and race bias at AutoZone. The EEOC questions whether the judge can be fair because former AutoZone chairman J. R. 'Pitt' Hyde III was finance chairman of Bill Gibbons's campaign for district attorney general in 1998.

In Memphis, news of her pending nomination drew praise from legal circles.

"She has a keen mind and a good work ethic. I think she would be an excellent nominee," said Pat Arnoult, president of the Memphis Bar Association.

Leo Bearman Jr., a prominent Memphis trial lawyer, said Gibbons is a highly respected, experienced trial judge with a great temperament and ability.

The nomination comes as the normal complement of five federal judges in the Western District of Tennessee is down to three: Gibbons, Bernice Donald of Memphis and James D. Todd of Jackson. U.S. Dist. Judge Jon P. McCalla is in the second month of a six-month leave of absence, taken to avoid a hearing on judicial misconduct charges.

Counsel's Office received 10 tickets for a memorial cermony on Thursday, Oct. 11 at 11:00 am in honor of employees and passengers of American flight #77 injured or lost. President Bush will be the keynote speaker.

These will be given to the lawyers on a first ones to email or call me that you will definitely go, first serve basis.

Seats/Tickets
Seating begins at 8:30 and locked down by 10:30 so they recommend arriving no later than 10:00 am. The tickets are for White House staff only and are non-transferrable. These are "general seating" - not VIP. Photo ID and ticket are required for entrance - no exceptions.

Transportation

Parking and Metro not availalbe so they recommend sharing cabs or being dropped off. The White House Car Service said they will be transporting folks but don't have the details on how this will work just yet. You will need to have Lori work this out for you - going as a group might work best. Judge is not going. Tim is going in the motorcade.

Judge:

You should have received an invitation to this year's Red Mass, which will be held on Sunday, October 28 at 10:00 a.m. at St. Matthew's Cathedral in downtown D.C. The Red Mass is held annually, ordinarily just before the start of the new Supreme Court term. (It was pushed back this year because of the planned IMF protests.) Cardinal McCarrick, the Archbishop of Washington, will be the celebrant.

The Red Mass is always well attended by judges, lawyers, and government officials. This year, most or many of the Justices will attend the Mass. President Clinton frequently went during his Administration. I think that as Counsel to the President it would send an important message if you attended.

Thanks.

HI. I wrote a fundraising letter from our finance committee team, on behalf of Thune, to all of our $1000 donors (on my lap top at home). Is it permissible for me to ask Matthew Scully or David Frum to come by and tweak it a bit, since they are excellent writers? Or should I not do that since they are not political staff? Thanks.

Such a strategy, if adopted by the Republican leadership, could paralyze the Senate and open the GOP up to charges of divisiveness and breaking the bipartisan spirit that has prevailed since the terrorist attacks of September 11. But some frustrated Republicans are ready to go ahead. "Is it breaking the bipartisan spirit?" asks one aide. "The question is what is more divisive, shutting down the confirmation process or complaining about the shutdown of the confirmation process."

Conservative Pow-Wow to go Back to Basics

REV_00068680

By Barbra Murray
White House Weekly
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

In the first national conservative gathering since last month's terrorist attacks, conservatives will get back to the business at hand from Oct. 25-27 at the Leadership Institute's annual Congressional Leadership Conference. While the attacks will color parts of the agenda, politics and campaigning issues will take center stage.

The three-day event is scheduled to take place in Arlington, Va., where a who's who list of conservative leaders will speak. Among the participants are: Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), Reps. Bob Barr (R-Ga.), Roscoe Bartlett (R-Md.), Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.), and Forbes Inc. President Steve Forbes. In addition to an array of speakers-who will lecture on topics such as campaign finance reform, the 2002 elections, the economy, and energy policy and environmentalism-attendees will also have the opportunity to choose among a variety of training sessions. Those sessions will cover aspects of campaign organization, communication, fund-raising, public relations and political technology.

"The program is unique among conservative national gatherings in that there is an equal balance between presentations on issues, current events and political philosophies on the one hand, and a practical training program on the other," said Leadership Institute President Morton Blackwell.

The state of judicial nominations is one of the big issues for conservatives to be discussed at the conference. "Judicial appointments are the single most important domestic issue because the kind of judge that sits on the bench will determine how the country is governed," explained Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Center for Law & Democracy. Jipping will cover the topic at the conference.

Jipping said there is a campaign of obstruction among Democrats to hinder confirmations of President Bush's judicial nominees. He said he will tell the conference attendees that there are three keys to turning around the situation. The first task, he explained, "is educating the public about the fundamental issues about the judiciary; second, telling the country the truth about the facts of the current situation and essentially what hypocrites the Senate Democrats are being; and third, urging Senate Republicans and the Republican administration to fight for the confirmations"

Specifically, Jipping will call for the president himself to get more involved in the nominations process. He said the audience of conservative movers and shakers are certain to understand and convey the message back in Washington. "[It is] going to require active presidential leadership on this to get them confirmed," Jipping explained. "Making good nominations is not good enough. That won't get judges appointed; you have to get them confirmed."

Speaking about public support for the president's judicial nominations and other conservative issues, Blackwell said there will be a new wave of conservatism on the president's side, partly due to his response to the terrorist attacks.

"I think we are in a new phase of politics in this country," he said. "George W. Bush is going to remain more popular for the balance of his term and certainly for the balance of the difficulty we will have with terrorists; more popular than he was on September 10. This is a different political environment."

He added that liberal lawmakers are straying away from the unity they showed with other lawmakers in the days immediately following the attacks. It is a change, he said, of which the patriotic American public will not approve.

"In the current environment, [liberals] are passe," Blackwell said. "There's going to be happening to the left what they have tried to do to conservatives for so long, and that is isolate us and make us appear to be the odd man out, and try to make our positions politically unacceptable. I think the reverse is happening."

The conference will not be all business; there will be gala events, as well. "What's on the minds of everybody is the fact that we're Americans, and we're going to celebrate that," said Conservative Leadership Conference Coordinator Mike Krempasky.

In addition to honoring firefighters from Arlington, Va. and New York who will attend as guests, the conference will also have a video tribute to Barbara Olson. Olson, a lawyer and conservative commentator who spoke at the conference in the past, perished in one of the hijacked airplanes that hit the Pentagon.

And while they are not expecting more than the 600 who attended last year's event due to many citizens' wariness of travel since the attacks, conference officials said they do expect a significant showing of students. "Since we confirmed [conservative author and actor] Ben Stein as our keynote speaker, students from all over the country have been registering," Krempasky said.

Metairie Lawyer Tapped for Judge Post; LA Delegation Backs US Court Nominee

By Bill Walsh
The T imes-Picayune
Thursday, October 11, 2001

President Bush on Wednesday nominated Metairie defense lawyer Jay Zainey to a vacancy on the U.S.
District Court in New Orleans.

Zainey, 50, had the backing of the Louisiana congressional delegation to fill one of two vacancies at the federal court. Metairie lawyer Kurt Engelhardt was tapped for the other post. A third seat will open up should U.S. District Judge Edith Clement be confirmed, as expected, by the U.S. Senate for a slot on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Senate Judiciary Committee considered her nomination last week.

REV_00068682

It's unclear when Bush will nominate a candidate for U.S. attorney in New Orleans. Gretna lawyer Fred Heebe is the choice of the delegation, but his background check reportedly has been stalled as the FBI focuses its attention on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Zainey, a graduate of the University of New Orleans and the Louisiana State University School of Law, was president of the Louisiana Bar Association from 1995 to 1996.

He has an unusual political pedigree among Bush judicial nominees. Five years ago, he managed the U.S. Senate campaign of Louisiana Attorney General Richard Ieyoub, a Democrat. He also worked on and contributed money to Ieyoub's races for attorney general. Ieyoub's office awarded Zainey state legal contracts collecting debts at Charity Hospital and pursuing polluters.

Two years ago, Zainey managed the unsuccessful congressional campaign of former Gov. David Treen, a Republican.

Between 1976 and 1986, Zainey worked with prominent defense lawyer James McPherson before striking out on his own. His most prominent client in recent years was Frank Bedell, the driver of the tour bus that crashed on Mother's Day 1999, killing 22 people.

Zainey's judicial experience includes posts as a traffic hearing officer and ad hoc assignments in First Parish Court and Juvenile Court in Jefferson Parish.

Mobile Judge Nominated to Circuit Court Post

The Associated Press
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

President Bush has nominated U.S. Magistrate Judge Williams Steele of Mobile, Ala., to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta.

The nomination was forwarded to the Senate on Tuesday. The Constitution requires the Senate to approve all federal judicial nominees, but a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee isn't expected until next year.

Forty-one Bush nominees are already awaiting hearings.

Steele, 50, has been a federal magistrate since 1990. He previously served as a state and federal prosecutor.

His formal nomination for the lifetime appointment had been delayed while the White House looked into complaints over Steele's dismissal of an employment discrimination lawsuit in April, said Sen. Jeff Sessions.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference had hoped to stop Steele's nomination.

REV_00068683

Steele didn't return a Tuesday phone call from the Mobile Register seeking comment.

If confirmed, Steele would earn $153,900 per year.

Bush Taps Two for 11th Circuit Appeals Court, Middle District

R. Robin McDonald
Fulton County Daily Report
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

The White House has nominated an Alabama federal magistrate to fill a vacant seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

William H. Steele, 50, is President George W. Bush's pick to replace Circuit Judge Emmett R. Cox, who took senior status last year. Steele still must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

Steele has been a federal magistrate in the Southern District of Alabama in Mobile since 1990. A native of Tuscumbia, Ala., Steele received his B.A. in political science from the University of Southern Mississippi in 1972. He was awarded his law degree at the University of Alabama in 1980. From 1972-1978, Steele was a Marine Corps pilot.

A year after he graduated from law school, Steele joined the district attorney's office in Mobile, Ala., as an assistant district attorney. He remained there for six years, then joined the staff of the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Alabama in 1987. President George Bush appointed Steele to the bench as a federal magistrate in 1990.

John Crowder Cunningham, a partner with Cunningham, Bounds, Yance, Crowder & Brown in Mobile, who knows Steele and has appeared before him in federal court, says Steele "will be a great judge. He has practiced law as an individual practitioner and handled a wide range of cases. He has an appreciation of what lawyers go through on a daily basis, how the average lawyer has to deal with cases."

"He's not a former white-shoe lawyer from a big firm who has no idea what goes on in real life in daily practice," Cunningham says.

Cunningham also says that Steele is thoughtful and measured in his deliberations. "I don't think he has an agenda, one way or the other," he says. "I don't think he has any political agenda that will impact his rulings. I'm a Democrat, and I feel perfectly comfortable having him decide any case."

Macon's Royal chosen for federal judgeship

The White House has nominated C. Ashley Royal to be U.S. District Judge for the Middle District of Georgia in Macon. Royal is an attorney with Jones, Cork & Miller, where he has been a partner since 1985.

If confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he would fill the slot vacated by U.S. District Judge DuRoss Fitzpatrick. Fitzpatrick, 66, was the Chief Judge of Georgia's Middle District until he took senior status in February. But Fitzpatrick has said that his new post as a senior judge won't affect his caseload, which he has said he does not plan to reduce for at least five years.

Royal, 52, is a graduate of the University of Georgia, where he earned a bachelor's and master's degree. He was awarded his J.D. from UGA in 1974.

That same year, he began his career as an assistant district attorney in the Augusta Judicial Circuit. After a year there, he became a partner at Howard, Howard & Royal and public defender of Glynn County.

He also has worked as a sole practitioner and at the firms of Falligant, Kent & Toporek; Fulcher, Fulcher, Hagler, Harper & Reed; and Kent, Barrow & Royal.

Republican Senators Push Judiciary Committee for More Judges, U.S. Attorneys

Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

Republicans pushed Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy to increase the speed of judicial and U.S. attorney confirmations, saying "there is no higher priority" - after fighting terrorism, that is.

Only six judges - three federal appeals court and three U.S. district judges - have been confirmed by the Senate this year. There are 107 vacancies and 48 Bush nominees who have not yet been confirmed. Bush sent four new nominations to the Senate on Friday:

-Julia S. Gibbons to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 6th Circuit.

-William H. Steele of Alabama to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 11th Circuit.

-C. Ashley Royal of Georgia to be a U.S. District Judge in Georgia.

-Phillip R. Martinez to be a U.S. District Judge in Texas.

"In our view, once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts," the nine GOP senators on the Judiciary Committee said. "And because of the recent tragic events, the other priority is confirmation of U.S. Attorney nominees."

Republicans have complained most of the year that the Senate has not moved quickly enough on

REV_00068685

Bush's nominations.

"At a time when we're fighting terrorism, we believe that it's important that our judiciary branch is fully staffed," said Ron Bonjean, spokesman for Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Democrats say the committee, now under their control, is moving more quickly on Bush's nominees than the GOP-controlled committee did with former President Clinton's nominees.

Leahy, D-Vt., has said that in 1993, Clinton's first year, the first U.S. Appeals Court judge was not confirmed until September.

"This has been a tumultuous and unprecedented year in the Senate but our numbers still compare favorably to recent years," Leahy spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said. "Despite the committee's focus on the anti-terrorism legislation, we are ahead of the pace for confirmation and hearings of judges during the first year of the Clinton and the first Bush administrations."

Leahy, Brock, and the FBI; The FBI Investigates David Brock's Accusations Against a Bush Nominee

By Byron York
National Review
Thursday, October 11, 2001

At the request of Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy, the FBI has begun an investigation of allegations made by former conservative writer David Brock against Terry Wooten, a Bush White House nominee to the United States District Court in South Carolina.

Last August, Brock sent a letter to the Judiciary Committee accusing Wooten of illegally giving out secret FBI files in the early 1990s, when Wooten was a top aide to Republicans on the committee. At the time, Brock was writing a book that was highly critical of Anita Hill, the woman who accused Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment. Brock, who has disavowed much of his old work and has admitted to knowingly publishing false information about the Thomas case, said Wooten gave him FBI material on Angela Wright, a woman who has said she was harassed by Thomas but did not testify at Thomas's confirmation hearings.

In his letter to the committee, Brock said, "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file....I removed the FBI material from his office and took it to my house in Northwest Washington, where I was writing the book."

At his confirmation hearing in late August, Wooten denied Brock's charge. "There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," he told the committee. A Washington Post account of the hearing reported that Leahy "indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed."

But on September 17, when much of the committee was deeply involved in antiterrorism legislation, Leahy sent a letter to Attorney General John Ashcroft requesting an FBI investigation of Brock's story. "This is a serious allegation requiring further investigation," Leahy wrote, adding that "the committee cannot continue to process [Wooten's] nomination without further investigation..."

One of the issues apparently involved in the probe is whether Brock has any documentary evidence to back up his accusations. It is not clear whether Brock has provided anything to the committee, but FBI agents have contacted R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr., the editor-in-chief of the Spectator, as well as Terry Eastland, the magazine's former publisher, to ask them if they know the whereabouts of Brock's notes.

When Brock and the magazine parted ways in late 1997, he left several boxes of materials at the Spectator's offices in Arlington, Virginia. The magazine's management sent him a number of written requests to pick up the materials. After several months, when Brock had not responded to the inquiries, the management threw the materials away. The FBI has asked Tyrrell and Eastland if they knew what was in the boxes, but it appears that neither they nor anyone else at the magazine knew the boxes' contents. Also, it is not known whether any of Brock's materials were sent to the Hoover
Institution, which is handling much of the Spectator's archives.

Finally, it is not clear how extensive the FBI investigation will be — and how long Wooten's confirmation will be delayed. Leahy's letter to the Justice Department asks only that the FBI interview Brock, Wooten, and "any other individuals as the Bureau deems necessary."

On Judges, Back to the Battle; The Renewed Fight Over Judicial Nominees

By Byron York
National Review
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

There are plenty of signs that pre-September 11 conflicts are re-emerging on Capitol Hill, but none is stronger than the renewed fighting that will likely erupt next week over the issue of President Bush's judicial nominations.

Last week Republicans sent Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy a letter saying that "once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts." The letter, signed by every Republican on the Judiciary Committee, reminds Leahy that the Senate has confirmed just six of the nearly 50 judicial nominees the president has sent to the Hill.

The GOP senators also stress that Majority Leader Tom Daschle made a commitment to Minority Leader Trent Lott in late September that the Senate would act on the more than three dozen nominees who had been sent to the Senate by the time of the August recess. And the Republicans use Leahy's own words to press the point that there are now 107 vacancies on the federal bench. "When Bill Clinton was president and there were fewer than 85 vacancies," the letter says, "you took the position that 'any week in which the Senate does not confirm three judges is a week in which the Senate is failing to address the vacancy crisis.'" The GOP senators offer to help Leahy schedule more hearings and executive sessions to consider nominations more quickly.

Also last week, Leahy received a stern letter from White House counsel Alberto Gonzales about an issue that threatens to become a major point of contention in coming days. It concerns the questionnaire that the Judiciary Committee requires each judicial nominee to complete. Leahy wants to change the questionnaire to include a number of queries that were previously handled only by the FBI during its extensive background check of nominees. For example, the new questionnaire asks candidates to list "prior use, possession, purchase or distribution of any illegal substance."

In the past, that information was contained in the FBI report on a candidate — a report that was closely guarded and available only to senators and a few top staff members. The questionnaire will be available to more staffers, and Republicans fear that will mean potentially embarrassing information about nominees will be more likely to leak than under the old system. In his letter, Gonzales urges Leahy to "consider that the FBI report is the proper vehicle, as it historically has been, to inform senators regarding nominees' sensitive personal information."

Gonzales is also concerned about a section of the questionnaire that asks nominees to disclose prior arrests or convictions, as well as another section that asks nominees whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative proceeding" — both questions that were handled by the FBI under the old system. "Because such information may include divorce or other private or family-related proceedings, it too may be highly sensitive for nominees and therefore is more appropriately disclosed in the confidential section [of the FBI report]," Gonzales writes.

Finally, Gonzales objects to the questionnaire's requirement that nominees "itemize all political contributions." "It is unclear how a nominee's history of political giving would bear on that nominee's fitness for office," Gonzales writes. "By asking this question, the questionnaire creates the invidious impression that such contributions are of great relevance in assessing a nominee's fitness for judicial office."

The conflict over nominations is likely to break into public view next week as Republicans debate strategies to pressure Democrats to hold more confirmation proceedings. The most potent weapon available to the GOP is the minority's power to hold up appropriations bills. An aide to one Republican senator says of his boss, "He firmly believes that's our only point of something every time we move an appropriations bill."

Such a strategy, if adopted by the Republican leadership, could paralyze the Senate and open the GOP up to charges of divisiveness and breaking the bipartisan spirit that has prevailed since the terrorist attacks of September 11. But some frustrated Republicans are ready to go ahead. "Is it breaking the bipartisan spirit?" asks one aide. "The question is what is more divisive, shutting down the confirmation process or complaining about the shutdown of the confirmation process."

Conservative Pow-Wow to go Back to Basics

REV_00068752

By Barbra Murray
White House Weekly
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

In the first national conservative gathering since last month's terrorist attacks, conservatives will get back to the business at hand from Oct. 25-27 at the Leadership Institute's annual Congressional Leadership Conference. While the attacks will color parts of the agenda, politics and campaigning issues will take center stage.

The three-day event is scheduled to take place in Arlington, Va., where a who's who list of conservative leaders will speak. Among the participants are: Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), Reps. Bob Barr (R-Ga.), Roscoe Bartlett (R-Md.), Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.), and Forbes Inc. President Steve Forbes. In addition to an array of speakers-who will lecture on topics such as campaign finance reform, the 2002 elections, the economy, and energy policy and environmentalism-attendees will also have the opportunity to choose among a variety of training sessions. Those sessions will cover aspects of campaign organization, communication, fund-raising, public relations and political technology.

"The program is unique among conservative national gatherings in that there is an equal balance between presentations on issues, current events and political philosophies on the one hand, and a practical training program on the other," said Leadership Institute President Morton Blackwell.

The state of judicial nominations is one of the big issues for conservatives to be discussed at the conference. "Judicial appointments are the single most important domestic issue because the kind of judge that sits on the bench will determine how the country is governed," explained Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Center for Law & Democracy. Jipping will cover the topic at the conference.

Jipping said there is a campaign of obstruction among Democrats to hinder confirmations of President Bush's judicial nominees. He said he will tell the conference attendees that there are three keys to turning around the situation. The first task, he explained, "is educating the public about the fundamental issues about the judiciary; second, telling the country the truth about the facts of the current situation and essentially what hypocrites the Senate Democrats are being; and third, urging Senate Republicans and the Republican administration to fight for the confirmations"

Specifically, Jipping will call for the president himself to get more involved in the nominations process. He said the audience of conservative movers and shakers are certain to understand and convey the message back in Washington. "[It is] going to require active presidential leadership on this to get them confirmed," Jipping explained. "Making good nominations is not good enough. That won't get judges appointed; you have to get them confirmed."

Speaking about public support for the president's judicial nominations and other conservative issues, Blackwell said there will be a new wave of conservatism on the president's side, partly due to his response to the terrorist attacks.

"I think we are in a new phase of politics in this country," he said. "George W. Bush is going to remain more popular for the balance of his term and certainly for the balance of the difficulty we will have with terrorists; more popular than he was on September 10. This is a different political environment."

He added that liberal lawmakers are straying away from the unity they showed with other lawmakers in the days immediately following the attacks. It is a change, he said, of which the patriotic American public will not approve.

"In the current environment, [liberals] are passe," Blackwell said. "There's going to be happening to the left what they have tried to do to conservatives for so long, and that is isolate us and make us appear to be the odd man out, and try to make our positions politically unacceptable. I think the reverse is happening."

The conference will not be all business; there will be gala events, as well. "What's on the minds of everybody is the fact that we're Americans, and we're going to celebrate that," said Conservative Leadership Conference Coordinator Mike Krempasky.

In addition to honoring firefighters from Arlington, Va. and New York who will attend as guests, the conference will also have a video tribute to Barbara Olson. Olson, a lawyer and conservative commentator who spoke at the conference in the past, perished in one of the hijacked airplanes that hit the Pentagon.

And while they are not expecting more than the 600 who attended last year's event due to many citizens' wariness of travel since the attacks, conference officials said they do expect a significant showing of students. "Since we confirmed [conservative author and actor] Ben Stein as our keynote speaker, students from all over the country have been registering," Krempasky said.

Metairie Lawyer Tapped for Judge Post; LA Delegation Backs US Court Nominee

By Bill Walsh
The T imes-Picayune
Thursday, October 11, 2001

President Bush on Wednesday nominated Metairie defense lawyer Jay Zainey to a vacancy on the U.S.
District Court in New Orleans.

Zainey, 50, had the backing of the Louisiana congressional delegation to fill one of two vacancies at the federal court. Metairie lawyer Kurt Engelhardt was tapped for the other post. A third seat will open up should U.S. District Judge Edith Clement be confirmed, as expected, by the U.S. Senate for a slot on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Senate Judiciary Committee considered her nomination last week.

REV_00068754

It's unclear when Bush will nominate a candidate for U.S. attorney in New Orleans. Gretna lawyer Fred Heebe is the choice of the delegation, but his background check reportedly has been stalled as the FBI focuses its attention on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Zainey, a graduate of the University of New Orleans and the Louisiana State University School of Law, was president of the Louisiana Bar Association from 1995 to 1996.

He has an unusual political pedigree among Bush judicial nominees. Five years ago, he managed the U.S. Senate campaign of Louisiana Attorney General Richard Ieyoub, a Democrat. He also worked on and contributed money to Ieyoub's races for attorney general. Ieyoub's office awarded Zainey state legal contracts collecting debts at Charity Hospital and pursuing polluters.

Two years ago, Zainey managed the unsuccessful congressional campaign of former Gov. David Treen, a Republican.

Between 1976 and 1986, Zainey worked with prominent defense lawyer James McPherson before striking out on his own. His most prominent client in recent years was Frank Bedell, the driver of the tour bus that crashed on Mother's Day 1999, killing 22 people.

Zainey's judicial experience includes posts as a traffic hearing officer and ad hoc assignments in First Parish Court and Juvenile Court in Jefferson Parish.

Mobile Judge Nominated to Circuit Court Post

The Associated Press
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

President Bush has nominated U.S. Magistrate Judge Williams Steele of Mobile, Ala., to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta.

The nomination was forwarded to the Senate on Tuesday. The Constitution requires the Senate to approve all federal judicial nominees, but a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee isn't expected until next year.

Forty-one Bush nominees are already awaiting hearings.

Steele, 50, has been a federal magistrate since 1990. He previously served as a state and federal prosecutor.

His formal nomination for the lifetime appointment had been delayed while the White House looked into complaints over Steele's dismissal of an employment discrimination lawsuit in April, said Sen. Jeff Sessions.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference had hoped to stop Steele's nomination.

REV_00068755

Steele didn't return a Tuesday phone call from the Mobile Register seeking comment.

If confirmed, Steele would earn $153,900 per year.

Bush Taps Two for 11th Circuit Appeals Court, Middle District

R. Robin McDonald
Fulton County Daily Report
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

The White House has nominated an Alabama federal magistrate to fill a vacant seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

William H. Steele, 50, is President George W. Bush's pick to replace Circuit Judge Emmett R. Cox, who took senior status last year. Steele still must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

Steele has been a federal magistrate in the Southern District of Alabama in Mobile since 1990. A native of Tuscumbia, Ala., Steele received his B.A. in political science from the University of Southern Mississippi in 1972. He was awarded his law degree at the University of Alabama in 1980. From 1972-1978, Steele was a Marine Corps pilot.

A year after he graduated from law school, Steele joined the district attorney's office in Mobile, Ala., as an assistant district attorney. He remained there for six years, then joined the staff of the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Alabama in 1987. President George Bush appointed Steele to the bench as a federal magistrate in 1990.

John Crowder Cunningham, a partner with Cunningham, Bounds, Yance, Crowder & Brown in Mobile, who knows Steele and has appeared before him in federal court, says Steele "will be a great judge. He has practiced law as an individual practitioner and handled a wide range of cases. He has an appreciation of what lawyers go through on a daily basis, how the average lawyer has to deal with cases."

"He's not a former white-shoe lawyer from a big firm who has no idea what goes on in real life in daily practice," Cunningham says.

Cunningham also says that Steele is thoughtful and measured in his deliberations. "I don't think he has an agenda, one way or the other," he says. "I don't think he has any political agenda that will impact his rulings. I'm a Democrat, and I feel perfectly comfortable having him decide any case."

Macon's Royal chosen for federal judgeship

The White House has nominated C. Ashley Royal to be U.S. District Judge for the Middle District of Georgia in Macon. Royal is an attorney with Jones, Cork & Miller, where he has been a partner since 1985.

If confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he would fill the slot vacated by U.S. District Judge DuRoss Fitzpatrick. Fitzpatrick, 66, was the Chief Judge of Georgia's Middle District until he took senior status in February. But Fitzpatrick has said that his new post as a senior judge won't affect his caseload, which he has said he does not plan to reduce for at least five years.

Royal, 52, is a graduate of the University of Georgia, where he earned a bachelor's and master's degree. He was awarded his J.D. from UGA in 1974.

That same year, he began his career as an assistant district attorney in the Augusta Judicial Circuit. After a year there, he became a partner at Howard, Howard & Royal and public defender of Glynn County.

He also has worked as a sole practitioner and at the firms of Falligant, Kent & Toporek; Fulcher, Fulcher, Hagler, Harper & Reed; and Kent, Barrow & Royal.

Republican Senators Push Judiciary Committee for More Judges, U.S. Attorneys

Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

Republicans pushed Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy to increase the speed of judicial and U.S. attorney confirmations, saying "there is no higher priority" - after fighting terrorism, that is.

Only six judges - three federal appeals court and three U.S. district judges - have been confirmed by the Senate this year. There are 107 vacancies and 48 Bush nominees who have not yet been confirmed. Bush sent four new nominations to the Senate on Friday:

-Julia S. Gibbons to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 6th Circuit.

-William H. Steele of Alabama to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 11th Circuit.

-C. Ashley Royal of Georgia to be a U.S. District Judge in Georgia.

-Phillip R. Martinez to be a U.S. District Judge in Texas.

"In our view, once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts," the nine GOP senators on the Judiciary Committee said. "And because of the recent tragic events, the other priority is confirmation of U.S. Attorney nominees."

Republicans have complained most of the year that the Senate has not moved quickly enough on

REV_00068757

Bush's nominations.

"At a time when we're fighting terrorism, we believe that it's important that our judiciary branch is fully staffed," said Ron Bonjean, spokesman for Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Democrats say the committee, now under their control, is moving more quickly on Bush's nominees than the GOP-controlled committee did with former President Clinton's nominees.

Leahy, D-Vt., has said that in 1993, Clinton's first year, the first U.S. Appeals Court judge was not confirmed until September.

"This has been a tumultuous and unprecedented year in the Senate but our numbers still compare favorably to recent years," Leahy spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said. "Despite the committee's focus on the anti-terrorism legislation, we are ahead of the pace for confirmation and hearings of judges during the first year of the Clinton and the first Bush administrations."

Leahy, Brock, and the FBI; The FBI Investigates David Brock's Accusations Against a Bush Nominee

By Byron York
National Review
Thursday, October 11, 2001

At the request of Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy, the FBI has begun an investigation of allegations made by former conservative writer David Brock against Terry Wooten, a Bush White House nominee to the United States District Court in South Carolina.

Last August, Brock sent a letter to the Judiciary Committee accusing Wooten of illegally giving out secret FBI files in the early 1990s, when Wooten was a top aide to Republicans on the committee. At the time, Brock was writing a book that was highly critical of Anita Hill, the woman who accused Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment. Brock, who has disavowed much of his old work and has admitted to knowingly publishing false information about the Thomas case, said Wooten gave him FBI material on Angela Wright, a woman who has said she was harassed by Thomas but did not testify at Thomas's confirmation hearings.

In his letter to the committee, Brock said, "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file....I removed the FBI material from his office and took it to my house in Northwest Washington, where I was writing the book."

At his confirmation hearing in late August, Wooten denied Brock's charge. "There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," he told the committee. A Washington Post account of the hearing reported that Leahy "indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed."

But on September 17, when much of the committee was deeply involved in antiterrorism legislation, Leahy sent a letter to Attorney General John Ashcroft requesting an FBI investigation of Brock's story. "This is a serious allegation requiring further investigation," Leahy wrote, adding that "the committee cannot continue to process [Wooten's] nomination without further investigation..."

One of the issues apparently involved in the probe is whether Brock has any documentary evidence to back up his accusations. It is not clear whether Brock has provided anything to the committee, but FBI agents have contacted R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr., the editor-in-chief of the Spectator, as well as Terry Eastland, the magazine's former publisher, to ask them if they know the whereabouts of Brock's notes.

When Brock and the magazine parted ways in late 1997, he left several boxes of materials at the Spectator's offices in Arlington, Virginia. The magazine's management sent him a number of written requests to pick up the materials. After several months, when Brock had not responded to the inquiries, the management threw the materials away. The FBI has asked Tyrrell and Eastland if they knew what was in the boxes, but it appears that neither they nor anyone else at the magazine knew the boxes' contents. Also, it is not known whether any of Brock's materials were sent to the Hoover
Institution, which is handling much of the Spectator's archives.

Finally, it is not clear how extensive the FBI investigation will be — and how long Wooten's confirmation will be delayed. Leahy's letter to the Justice Department asks only that the FBI interview Brock, Wooten, and "any other individuals as the Bureau deems necessary."

On Judges, Back to the Battle; The Renewed Fight Over Judicial Nominees

By Byron York
National Review
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

There are plenty of signs that pre-September 11 conflicts are re-emerging on Capitol Hill, but none is stronger than the renewed fighting that will likely erupt next week over the issue of President Bush's judicial nominations.

Last week Republicans sent Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy a letter saying that "once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts." The letter, signed by every Republican on the Judiciary Committee, reminds Leahy that the Senate has confirmed just six of the nearly 50 judicial nominees the president has sent to the Hill.

The GOP senators also stress that Majority Leader Tom Daschle made a commitment to Minority Leader Trent Lott in late September that the Senate would act on the more than three dozen nominees who had been sent to the Senate by the time of the August recess. And the Republicans use Leahy's own words to press the point that there are now 107 vacancies on the federal bench. "When Bill Clinton was president and there were fewer than 85 vacancies," the letter says, "you took the position that 'any week in which the Senate does not confirm three judges is a week in which the Senate is failing to address the vacancy crisis.'" The GOP senators offer to help Leahy schedule more hearings and executive sessions to consider nominations more quickly.

Also last week, Leahy received a stern letter from White House counsel Alberto Gonzales about an issue that threatens to become a major point of contention in coming days. It concerns the questionnaire that the Judiciary Committee requires each judicial nominee to complete. Leahy wants to change the questionnaire to include a number of queries that were previously handled only by the FBI during its extensive background check of nominees. For example, the new questionnaire asks candidates to list "prior use, possession, purchase or distribution of any illegal substance."

In the past, that information was contained in the FBI report on a candidate — a report that was closely guarded and available only to senators and a few top staff members. The questionnaire will be available to more staffers, and Republicans fear that will mean potentially embarrassing information about nominees will be more likely to leak than under the old system. In his letter, Gonzales urges Leahy to "consider that the FBI report is the proper vehicle, as it historically has been, to inform senators regarding nominees' sensitive personal information."

Gonzales is also concerned about a section of the questionnaire that asks nominees to disclose prior arrests or convictions, as well as another section that asks nominees whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative proceeding" — both questions that were handled by the FBI under the old system. "Because such information may include divorce or other private or family-related proceedings, it too may be highly sensitive for nominees and therefore is more appropriately disclosed in the confidential section [of the FBI report]," Gonzales writes.

Finally, Gonzales objects to the questionnaire's requirement that nominees "itemize all political contributions." "It is unclear how a nominee's history of political giving would bear on that nominee's fitness for office," Gonzales writes. "By asking this question, the questionnaire creates the invidious impression that such contributions are of great relevance in assessing a nominee's fitness for judicial office."

The conflict over nominations is likely to break into public view next week as Republicans debate strategies to pressure Democrats to hold more confirmation proceedings. The most potent weapon available to the GOP is the minority's power to hold up appropriations bills. An aide to one Republican senator says of his boss, "He firmly believes that's our only point of something every time we move an appropriations bill."

Such a strategy, if adopted by the Republican leadership, could paralyze the Senate and open the GOP up to charges of divisiveness and breaking the bipartisan spirit that has prevailed since the terrorist attacks of September 11. But some frustrated Republicans are ready to go ahead. "Is it breaking the bipartisan spirit?" asks one aide. "The question is what is more divisive, shutting down the confirmation process or complaining about the shutdown of the confirmation process."

Conservative Pow-Wow to go Back to Basics

REV_00068765

By Barbra Murray
White House Weekly
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

In the first national conservative gathering since last month's terrorist attacks, conservatives will get back to the business at hand from Oct. 25-27 at the Leadership Institute's annual Congressional Leadership Conference. While the attacks will color parts of the agenda, politics and campaigning issues will take center stage.

The three-day event is scheduled to take place in Arlington, Va., where a who's who list of conservative leaders will speak. Among the participants are: Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), Reps. Bob Barr (R-Ga.), Roscoe Bartlett (R-Md.), Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.), and Forbes Inc. President Steve Forbes. In addition to an array of speakers-who will lecture on topics such as campaign finance reform, the 2002 elections, the economy, and energy policy and environmentalism-attendees will also have the opportunity to choose among a variety of training sessions. Those sessions will cover aspects of campaign organization, communication, fund-raising, public relations and political technology.

"The program is unique among conservative national gatherings in that there is an equal balance between presentations on issues, current events and political philosophies on the one hand, and a practical training program on the other," said Leadership Institute President Morton Blackwell.

The state of judicial nominations is one of the big issues for conservatives to be discussed at the conference. "Judicial appointments are the single most important domestic issue because the kind of judge that sits on the bench will determine how the country is governed," explained Thomas Jipping, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Center for Law & Democracy. Jipping will cover the topic at the conference.

Jipping said there is a campaign of obstruction among Democrats to hinder confirmations of President Bush's judicial nominees. He said he will tell the conference attendees that there are three keys to turning around the situation. The first task, he explained, "is educating the public about the fundamental issues about the judiciary; second, telling the country the truth about the facts of the current situation and essentially what hypocrites the Senate Democrats are being; and third, urging Senate Republicans and the Republican administration to fight for the confirmations"

Specifically, Jipping will call for the president himself to get more involved in the nominations process. He said the audience of conservative movers and shakers are certain to understand and convey the message back in Washington. "[It is] going to require active presidential leadership on this to get them confirmed," Jipping explained. "Making good nominations is not good enough. That won't get judges appointed; you have to get them confirmed."

Speaking about public support for the president's judicial nominations and other conservative issues, Blackwell said there will be a new wave of conservatism on the president's side, partly due to his response to the terrorist attacks.

"I think we are in a new phase of politics in this country," he said. "George W. Bush is going to remain more popular for the balance of his term and certainly for the balance of the difficulty we will have with terrorists; more popular than he was on September 10. This is a different political environment."

He added that liberal lawmakers are straying away from the unity they showed with other lawmakers in the days immediately following the attacks. It is a change, he said, of which the patriotic American public will not approve.

"In the current environment, [liberals] are passe," Blackwell said. "There's going to be happening to the left what they have tried to do to conservatives for so long, and that is isolate us and make us appear to be the odd man out, and try to make our positions politically unacceptable. I think the reverse is happening."

The conference will not be all business; there will be gala events, as well. "What's on the minds of everybody is the fact that we're Americans, and we're going to celebrate that," said Conservative Leadership Conference Coordinator Mike Krempasky.

In addition to honoring firefighters from Arlington, Va. and New York who will attend as guests, the conference will also have a video tribute to Barbara Olson. Olson, a lawyer and conservative commentator who spoke at the conference in the past, perished in one of the hijacked airplanes that hit the Pentagon.

And while they are not expecting more than the 600 who attended last year's event due to many citizens' wariness of travel since the attacks, conference officials said they do expect a significant showing of students. "Since we confirmed [conservative author and actor] Ben Stein as our keynote speaker, students from all over the country have been registering," Krempasky said.

Metairie Lawyer Tapped for Judge Post; LA Delegation Backs US Court Nominee

By Bill Walsh

President Bush on Wednesday nominated Metairie defense lawyer Jay Zainey to a vacancy on the U.S.
District Court in New Orleans.

Zainey, 50, had the backing of the Louisiana congressional delegation to fill one of two vacancies at the federal court. Metairie lawyer Kurt Engelhardt was tapped for the other post. A third seat will open up should U.S. District Judge Edith Clement be confirmed, as expected, by the U.S. Senate for a slot on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Senate Judiciary Committee considered her nomination last week.

REV_00068767

It's unclear when Bush will nominate a candidate for U.S. attorney in New Orleans. Gretna lawyer Fred Heebe is the choice of the delegation, but his background check reportedly has been stalled as the FBI focuses its attention on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Zainey, a graduate of the University of New Orleans and the Louisiana State University School of Law, was president of the Louisiana Bar Association from 1995 to 1996.

He has an unusual political pedigree among Bush judicial nominees. Five years ago, he managed the U.S. Senate campaign of Louisiana Attorney General Richard Ieyoub, a Democrat. He also worked on and contributed money to Ieyoub's races for attorney general. Ieyoub's office awarded Zainey state legal contracts collecting debts at Charity Hospital and pursuing polluters.

Two years ago, Zainey managed the unsuccessful congressional campaign of former Gov. David Treen, a Republican.

Between 1976 and 1986, Zainey worked with prominent defense lawyer James McPherson before striking out on his own. His most prominent client in recent years was Frank Bedell, the driver of the tour bus that crashed on Mother's Day 1999, killing 22 people.

Zainey's judicial experience includes posts as a traffic hearing officer and ad hoc assignments in First Parish Court and Juvenile Court in Jefferson Parish.

Mobile Judge Nominated to Circuit Court Post

The Associated Press
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

President Bush has nominated U.S. Magistrate Judge Williams Steele of Mobile, Ala., to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta.

The nomination was forwarded to the Senate on Tuesday. The Constitution requires the Senate to approve all federal judicial nominees, but a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee isn't expected until next year.

Forty-one Bush nominees are already awaiting hearings.

Steele, 50, has been a federal magistrate since 1990. He previously served as a state and federal prosecutor.

His formal nomination for the lifetime appointment had been delayed while the White House looked into complaints over Steele's dismissal of an employment discrimination lawsuit in April, said Sen. Jeff Sessions.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference had hoped to stop Steele's nomination.

REV_00068768

Steele didn't return a Tuesday phone call from the Mobile Register seeking comment.

If confirmed, Steele would earn $153,900 per year.

Bush Taps Two for 11th Circuit Appeals Court, Middle District

R. Robin McDonald
Fulton County Daily Report
Wednesday, October 10, 2001

The White House has nominated an Alabama federal magistrate to fill a vacant seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

William H. Steele, 50, is President George W. Bush's pick to replace Circuit Judge Emmett R. Cox, who took senior status last year. Steele still must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

Steele has been a federal magistrate in the Southern District of Alabama in Mobile since 1990. A native of Tuscumbia, Ala., Steele received his B.A. in political science from the University of Southern Mississippi in 1972. He was awarded his law degree at the University of Alabama in 1980. From 1972-1978, Steele was a Marine Corps pilot.

A year after he graduated from law school, Steele joined the district attorney's office in Mobile, Ala., as an assistant district attorney. He remained there for six years, then joined the staff of the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Alabama in 1987. President George Bush appointed Steele to the bench as a federal magistrate in 1990.

John Crowder Cunningham, a partner with Cunningham, Bounds, Yance, Crowder & Brown in Mobile, who knows Steele and has appeared before him in federal court, says Steele "will be a great judge. He has practiced law as an individual practitioner and handled a wide range of cases. He has an appreciation of what lawyers go through on a daily basis, how the average lawyer has to deal with cases."

"He's not a former white-shoe lawyer from a big firm who has no idea what goes on in real life in daily practice," Cunningham says.

Cunningham also says that Steele is thoughtful and measured in his deliberations. "I don't think he has an agenda, one way or the other," he says. "I don't think he has any political agenda that will impact his rulings. I'm a Democrat, and I feel perfectly comfortable having him decide any case."

Macon's Royal chosen for federal judgeship

The White House has nominated C. Ashley Royal to be U.S. District Judge for the Middle District of Georgia in Macon. Royal is an attorney with Jones, Cork & Miller, where he has been a partner since 1985.

If confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he would fill the slot vacated by U.S. District Judge DuRoss Fitzpatrick. Fitzpatrick, 66, was the Chief Judge of Georgia's Middle District until he took senior status in February. But Fitzpatrick has said that his new post as a senior judge won't affect his caseload, which he has said he does not plan to reduce for at least five years.

Royal, 52, is a graduate of the University of Georgia, where he earned a bachelor's and master's degree. He was awarded his J.D. from UGA in 1974.

That same year, he began his career as an assistant district attorney in the Augusta Judicial Circuit. After a year there, he became a partner at Howard, Howard & Royal and public defender of Glynn County.

He also has worked as a sole practitioner and at the firms of Falligant, Kent & Toporek; Fulcher, Fulcher, Hagler, Harper & Reed; and Kent, Barrow & Royal.

Republican Senators Push Judiciary Committee for More Judges, U.S. Attorneys

Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

Republicans pushed Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy to increase the speed of judicial and U.S. attorney confirmations, saying "there is no higher priority" - after fighting terrorism, that is.

Only six judges - three federal appeals court and three U.S. district judges - have been confirmed by the Senate this year. There are 107 vacancies and 48 Bush nominees who have not yet been confirmed. Bush sent four new nominations to the Senate on Friday:

-Julia S. Gibbons to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 6th Circuit.

-William H. Steele of Alabama to be a U.S. Appeals Court Judge in the 11th Circuit.

-C. Ashley Royal of Georgia to be a U.S. District Judge in Georgia.

-Phillip R. Martinez to be a U.S. District Judge in Texas.

"In our view, once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts," the nine GOP senators on the Judiciary Committee said. "And because of the recent tragic events, the other priority is confirmation of U.S. Attorney nominees."

Republicans have complained most of the year that the Senate has not moved quickly enough on

REV_00068770

Bush's nominations.

"At a time when we're fighting terrorism, we believe that it's important that our judiciary branch is fully staffed," said Ron Bonjean, spokesman for Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Democrats say the committee, now under their control, is moving more quickly on Bush's nominees than the GOP-controlled committee did with former President Clinton's nominees.

Leahy, D-Vt., has said that in 1993, Clinton's first year, the first U.S. Appeals Court judge was not confirmed until September.

"This has been a tumultuous and unprecedented year in the Senate but our numbers still compare favorably to recent years," Leahy spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said. "Despite the committee's focus on the anti-terrorism legislation, we are ahead of the pace for confirmation and hearings of judges during the first year of the Clinton and the first Bush administrations."

Leahy, Brock, and the FBI; The FBI Investigates David Brock's Accusations Against a Bush Nominee

By Byron York
National Review
Thursday, October 11, 2001

At the request of Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy, the FBI has begun an investigation of allegations made by former conservative writer David Brock against Terry Wooten, a Bush White House nominee to the United States District Court in South Carolina.

Last August, Brock sent a letter to the Judiciary Committee accusing Wooten of illegally giving out secret FBI files in the early 1990s, when Wooten was a top aide to Republicans on the committee. At the time, Brock was writing a book that was highly critical of Anita Hill, the woman who accused Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment. Brock, who has disavowed much of his old work and has admitted to knowingly publishing false information about the Thomas case, said Wooten gave him FBI material on Angela Wright, a woman who has said she was harassed by Thomas but did not testify at Thomas's confirmation hearings.

In his letter to the committee, Brock said, "Mr. Wooten handed me copies of several pages of Ms. Wright's raw FBI file....I removed the FBI material from his office and took it to my house in Northwest Washington, where I was writing the book."

At his confirmation hearing in late August, Wooten denied Brock's charge. "There is not one scintilla or one iota of truth to that allegation," he told the committee. A Washington Post account of the hearing reported that Leahy "indicated that he believed Wooten would be confirmed."

But on September 17, when much of the committee was deeply involved in antiterrorism legislation, Leahy sent a letter to Attorney General John Ashcroft requesting an FBI investigation of Brock's story. "This is a serious allegation requiring further investigation," Leahy wrote, adding that "the committee cannot continue to process [Wooten's] nomination without further investigation..."

One of the issues apparently involved in the probe is whether Brock has any documentary evidence to back up his accusations. It is not clear whether Brock has provided anything to the committee, but FBI agents have contacted R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr., the editor-in-chief of the Spectator, as well as Terry Eastland, the magazine's former publisher, to ask them if they know the whereabouts of Brock's notes.

When Brock and the magazine parted ways in late 1997, he left several boxes of materials at the Spectator's offices in Arlington, Virginia. The magazine's management sent him a number of written requests to pick up the materials. After several months, when Brock had not responded to the inquiries, the management threw the materials away. The FBI has asked Tyrrell and Eastland if they knew what was in the boxes, but it appears that neither they nor anyone else at the magazine knew the boxes' contents. Also, it is not known whether any of Brock's materials were sent to the Hoover
Institution, which is handling much of the Spectator's archives.

Finally, it is not clear how extensive the FBI investigation will be — and how long Wooten's confirmation will be delayed. Leahy's letter to the Justice Department asks only that the FBI interview Brock, Wooten, and "any other individuals as the Bureau deems necessary."

On Judges, Back to the Battle; The Renewed Fight Over Judicial Nominees

By Byron York
National Review
Tuesday, October 9, 2001

There are plenty of signs that pre-September 11 conflicts are re-emerging on Capitol Hill, but none is stronger than the renewed fighting that will likely erupt next week over the issue of President Bush's judicial nominations.

Last week Republicans sent Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy a letter saying that "once the anti-terrorism legislation is completed, there is no higher priority than filling the vacancies that exist in our federal courts." The letter, signed by every Republican on the Judiciary Committee, reminds Leahy that the Senate has confirmed just six of the nearly 50 judicial nominees the president has sent to the Hill.

The GOP senators also stress that Majority Leader Tom Daschle made a commitment to Minority Leader Trent Lott in late September that the Senate would act on the more than three dozen nominees who had been sent to the Senate by the time of the August recess. And the Republicans use Leahy's own words to press the point that there are now 107 vacancies on the federal bench. "When Bill Clinton was president and there were fewer than 85 vacancies," the letter says, "you took the position that 'any week in which the Senate does not confirm three judges is a week in which the Senate is failing to address the vacancy crisis.'" The GOP senators offer to help Leahy schedule more hearings and executive sessions to consider nominations more quickly.

Also last week, Leahy received a stern letter from White House counsel Alberto Gonzales about an issue that threatens to become a major point of contention in coming days. It concerns the questionnaire that the Judiciary Committee requires each judicial nominee to complete. Leahy wants to change the questionnaire to include a number of queries that were previously handled only by the FBI during its extensive background check of nominees. For example, the new questionnaire asks candidates to list "prior use, possession, purchase or distribution of any illegal substance."

In the past, that information was contained in the FBI report on a candidate — a report that was closely guarded and available only to senators and a few top staff members. The questionnaire will be available to more staffers, and Republicans fear that will mean potentially embarrassing information about nominees will be more likely to leak than under the old system. In his letter, Gonzales urges Leahy to "consider that the FBI report is the proper vehicle, as it historically has been, to inform senators regarding nominees' sensitive personal information."

Gonzales is also concerned about a section of the questionnaire that asks nominees to disclose prior arrests or convictions, as well as another section that asks nominees whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative proceeding" — both questions that were handled by the FBI under the old system. "Because such information may include divorce or other private or family-related proceedings, it too may be highly sensitive for nominees and therefore is more appropriately disclosed in the confidential section [of the FBI report]," Gonzales writes.

Finally, Gonzales objects to the questionnaire's requirement that nominees "itemize all political contributions." "It is unclear how a nominee's history of political giving would bear on that nominee's fitness for office," Gonzales writes. "By asking this question, the questionnaire creates the invidious impression that such contributions are of great relevance in assessing a nominee's fitness for judicial office."

The conflict over nominations is likely to break into public view next week as Republicans debate strategies to pressure Democrats to hold more confirmation proceedings. The most potent weapon available to the GOP is the minority's power to hold up appropriations bills. An aide to one Republican senator says of his boss, "He firmly believes that's our only point of something every time we move an appropriations bill."

(1) LAW ENFORCEMENT.—Section 2517 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(6) Any investigative or law enforcement officer, or attorney for the Government, who by any means authorized by this chapter, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire, oral, or electronic communication, or evidence derived therefrom, may disclose such contents to that is required to be submitted to Congress by an element of the intelligence community during the effective period of this section.

(2) Any report or other matter that is required to be submitted to the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives by the Department of Defense or the Department of Justice during the effective period of this section.

(c) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN REPORTS.—For purposes of subsection (a), any report required by section 502 or 503 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 413a, 413b) is not a covered intelligence report.

(d) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—Upon deferring the date of submittal to Congress of a covered intelligence report under subsection (a), the official deferring the date of submittal of the covered intelligence report shall submit to Congress notice of the deferral. Notice of deferral of a report shall specify the provision of law, if any, under which the report would otherwise be submitted to Congress.

(e) EXTENSION OF DEFERRAL.—(1) Each official specified in subsection (a) may defer the date of submittal to Congress of a covered intelligence report under the jurisdiction of such official to a date after February 1, 2002, if such official submits to the committees of Congress specified in subsection (b)(2) before February 1, 2002, a certification that preparation and submittal of the covered intelligence report on February 1, 2002, will impede the work of officers or employees who are engaged in counterterrorism activities.

(2) A certification under paragraph (1) with respect to a covered intelligence report shall specify the date on which the covered intelligence report will be submitted to Congress.

(f) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—The effective period of this section is the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on February 1, 2002.

(g) ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY DEFINED.—In this section, the term "element of the intelligence community" means any element of the intelligence community specified or designated under section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)).

SEC. 905. DISCLOSURE TO DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE-RELATED INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 402 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection 105B as section 105C; and

(2) by inserting after section 105A the following new section 105B:

"DISCLOSURE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE ACQUIRED IN CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS; NOTICE OF CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SOURCES

"SEC. 105B. (a) DISCLOSURE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—(1) Except as otherwise provided by law and subject to paragraph (2), the Attorney General, or the head of any other department or agency of the Federal Government with law enforcement responsibilities, shall expeditiously disclose to the Director of Central Intelligence, pursuant to guidelines developed by the Attorney General in consultation with the Director, foreign intelligence acquired by an element of the Department of Justice or an element of such department or agency, as the case may be, in the course of a criminal investigation.

"(2) The Attorney General by regulation and in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence may provide for exceptions to the applicability of paragraph (1) for one or more classes of foreign intelligence, or foreign intelligence with respect to one or more targets or matters, if the Attorney General determines that disclosure of such foreign intelligence under that paragraph would jeopardize an ongoing law enforcement investigation or impair other significant law enforcement interests.

"(b) PROCEDURES FOR NOTICE OF CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Attorney General, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, shall develop guidelines to ensure that after receipt of a report from an element of the intelligence community of activity of a foreign intelligence source or potential foreign intelligence source that may warrant investigation as criminal activity, the Attorney General provides notice to the Director of Central Intelligence, within a reasonable period of time, of his intention to commence, or decline to commence, a criminal investigation of such activity.

"(c) PROCEDURES.—The Attorney General shall develop procedures for the administration of this section, including the disclosure of foreign intelligence by elements of the Department of Justice, and elements of other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, under subsection (a) and the provision of notice with respect to criminal investigations under subsection (b).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents in the first section of that Act is amended by striking the item relating to section 105B and inserting the following new items:

REV_00069627

"Sec. 105B. Disclosure of foreign intelligence acquired in criminal investigations; notice of criminal investigations of foreign intelligence sources.
"Sec. 105C. Protection of the operational files of the National Imagery and Mapping Agency.".

SEC. 906. FOREIGN TERRORIST ASSET TRACKING CENTER.

(a) REPORT ON RECONFIGURATION.—Not later than February 1, 2002, the Attorney General, the Director of Central Intelligence, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly submit to Congress a report on the feasibility and desirability of reconfiguring the Foreign Terrorist Asset Tracking Center and the Office of Foreign Assets Control of the Department of the Treasury in order to establish a capability to provide for the effective and efficient analysis and dissemination of foreign intelligence relating to the financial capabilities and resources of international terrorist organizations.

(b) REPORT REQUIREMENTS.—(1) In preparing the report under subsection (a), the Attorney General, the Secretary, and the Director shall consider whether, and to what extent, the capacities and resources of the Financial Crimes Enforcement Center of the Department of the Treasury may be integrated into the capability contemplated by the report.

(2) If the Attorney General, Secretary, and the Director determine that it is feasible and desirable to undertake the reconfiguration described in subsection (a) in order to establish the capability described in that subsection, the Attorney General, the Secretary, and the Director shall include with the report under that subsection a detailed proposal for legislation to achieve the reconfiguration.

SEC. 907. NATIONAL VIRTUAL TRANSLATION CENTER.

(a) REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) Not later than February 1, 2002, the Director of Central Intelligence shall, in consultation with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report on the establishment and maintenance within the intelligence community of an element for purposes of providing timely and accurate translations of foreign intelligence for all other elements of the intelligence community. In the report, the element shall be referred to as the ''National Virtual Translation Center''.

(2) The report on the element described in paragraph (1) shall discuss the use of state-of-the-art communications technology, the integration of existing translation capabilities in the intelligence community, and the utilization of remote-connection capacities so as to minimize the need for a central physical facility for the element.

(b) RESOURCES.—The report on the element required by subsection (a) shall address the following:

(1) The assignment to the element of a staff of individuals possessing a broad range of linguistic and translation skills appropriate for the purposes of the element.

(2) The provision to the element of communications capabilities and systems that are commensurate with the most current and sophisticated communications capabilities and systems available to other elements of intelligence community.

(3) The assurance, to the maximum extent practicable, that the communications capabilities and systems provided to the element will be compatible with communications capabilities and systems utilized by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in securing timely and accurate translations of foreign language materials for law enforcement investigations.

(4) The development of a communications infrastructure to ensure the efficient and secure use of the translation capabilities of the element.

(c) SECURE COMMUNICATIONS.—The report shall include a discussion of the creation of secure electronic communications between the element described by subsection (a) and the other elements of the intelligence community.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—The term ''foreign intelligence'' has the meaning given that term in section 3(2) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(2)).

(2) ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY.—The term "element of the intelligence community" means any element of the intelligence community specified or designated under section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)).

SEC. 908. TRAINING OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS REGARDING IDENTIFICATION AND USE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

(a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—The Attorney General shall, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, carry out a program to provide appropriate training to officials described in subsection (b) in order to assist such officials in—

(1) identifying foreign intelligence information in the course of their duties; and

(2) utilizing foreign intelligence information in the course of their duties, to the extent that the utilization of such information is appropriate for such duties.

(b) OFFICIALS.—The officials provided training under subsection (a) are, at the discretion of the Attorney General and the Director, the following:

REV_00069631

(1) Officials of the Federal Government who are not ordinarily engaged in the collection, dissemination, and use of foreign intelligence in the performance of their duties.

(2) Officials of State and local governments who encounter, or may encounter in the course of a terrorist event, foreign intelligence in the performance of their duties.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Justice such sums as may be necessary for purposes of carrying out the program required by subsection (a).

any other Federal law enforcement, intelligence, protective, immigration, national defense, or national security official to the extent that such contents include foreign intelligence or counterintelligence (as defined in section 3 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a)), or foreign intelligence information (as defined in subsection (19) of section 2510 of this title), to assist the official who is to receive that information in the performance of his official duties. Any Federal official who receives information pursuant to this provision may use that information only as necessary in the conduct of that person's official duties subject to any limitations on the unauthorized disclosure of such information.''.

(2) DEFINITION.—Section 2510 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(A) in paragraph (17), by striking ''and'' after the semicolon;

(B) in paragraph (18), by striking the period and inserting ''; and''; and

(C) by inserting at the end the following:

''(19) 'foreign intelligence information' means—

(2) by inserting ", routing, addressing," after "dialing"; and

(3) by striking "call processing" and inserting "the processing and transmitting of wire or electronic communications so as not to include the contents of any wire or electronic communications".

(b) ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 3123(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) ATTORNEY FOR THE GOVERNMENT.—Upon an application made under section 3122(a)(1), the court shall enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device anywhere within the United States, if the court finds that the attorney for the Government has certified to the court that the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation. The order, upon service of that order, shall apply to any person or entity providing wire or electronic communication service in the United States whose assistance may facilitate the execution of the order. Whenever such an order is served on any person or entity not specifically named in the order, upon request of such person or entity, the attorney for the Government or law enforcement or investigative officer that is serving the order shall provide written or electronic certification that the order applies to the person or entity being served.

"(2) STATE INVESTIGATIVE OR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER.—Upon an application made under section 3122(a)(2), the court shall enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device within the jurisdiction of the court, if the court finds that the State law enforcement or investigative officer has certified to the court that the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation.

"(3)(A) Where the law enforcement agency implementing an ex parte order under this subsection seeks to do so by installing and using its own pen register or trap and trace device on a packet-switched data network of a provider of electronic communication service to the public, the agency shall ensure that a record will be maintained which will identify—

"(i) any officer or officers who installed the device and any officer or officers who accessed the device to obtain information from the network;

"(ii) the date and time the device was installed, the date and time the device was uninstalled, and the date, time, and duration of each time the device is accessed to obtain information;

"(1) the offense involves an access device issued, owned, managed, or controlled by a financial institution, account issuer, credit card system member, or other entity within the jurisdiction of the United States; and

"(2) the person transports, delivers, conveys, transfers to or through, or otherwise stores, secrets, or holds within the jurisdiction of the United States, any article used to assist in the commission of the offense or the proceeds of such offense or property derived therefrom.".

TITLE IV—PROTECTING THE BORDER

Subtitle A—Protecting the Northern Border

SEC. 401. ENSURING ADEQUATE PERSONNEL ON THE NORTHERN BORDER.

The Attorney General is authorized to waive any FTE cap on personnel assigned to the Immigration and Naturalization Service to address the national security needs of the United States on the Northern border.

SEC. 402. NORTHERN BORDER PERSONNEL.

There are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) such sums as may be necessary to triple the number of Border Patrol personnel (from the number authorized under current law), and the necessary personnel and facilities to support such personnel, in each State along the Northern Border;

(2) such sums as may be necessary to triple the number of Customs Service personnel (from the number authorized under current law), and the necessary personnel and facilities to support such personnel, at ports of entry in each State along the Northern Border;

(3) such sums as may be necessary to triple the number of INS inspectors (from the number authorized on the date of enactment of this Act), and the necessary personnel and facilities to support such personnel, at ports of entry in each State along the Northern Border; and

(4) an additional $50,000,000 each to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the United States Customs Service for purposes of making improvements in technology for monitoring the Northern Border and acquiring additional equipment at the Northern Border.

SEC. 403. ACCESS BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE AND THE INS TO CERTAIN IDENTIFYING INFORMATION IN THE CRIMINAL HISTORY RECORDS OF VISA APPLICANTS AND APPLICANTS FOR ADMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.—Section 105 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) in the section heading, by inserting "; DATA EXCHANGE" after "SECURITY OFFICERS";

(2) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 105.";

(3) in subsection (a), by inserting "and border" after "internal" the second place it appears; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) The Attorney General and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall provide the Department of State and the Service access to the criminal history record information contained in the National Crime Information Center's Interstate Identification Index (NCIC-III), Wanted Persons File, and to any other files maintained by the National Crime Information Center that may be mutually agreed upon by the Attorney General and the agency receiving the access, for the purpose of determining whether or not a visa applicant or applicant for admission has a criminal history record indexed in any such file.

"(2) Such access shall be provided by means of extracts of the records for placement in the automated visa lookout or other appropriate database, and shall be provided without any fee or charge.

"(3) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall provide periodic updates of the extracts at intervals mutually agreed upon with the agency receiving the access. Upon receipt of such updated extracts, the receiving agency shall make corresponding updates to its database and destroy previously provided extracts.

"(4) Access to an extract does not entitle the Department of State to obtain the full content of the corresponding automated criminal history record. To obtain the full content of a criminal history record, the Department of State shall submit the applicant's fingerprints and any appropriate fingerprint processing fee authorized by law to the Criminal Justice Information Services Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"(c) The provision of the extracts described in subsection (b) may be reconsidered by the Attorney General and the receiving agency upon the development and deployment of a more cost-effective and efficient means of sharing the information.

"(d) For purposes of administering this section, the Department of State shall, prior to receiving access to NCIC data but not later than 4 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, promulgate final regulations—

"(1) to implement procedures for the taking of fingerprints; and

"(2) to establish the conditions for the use of the information received from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in order—

"(A) to limit the redissemination of such information;

"(B) to ensure that such information is used solely to determine whether or not to issue a visa to an alien or to admit an alien to the United States;

"(C) to ensure the security, confidentiality, and destruction of such information; and

"(D) to protect any privacy rights of individuals who are subjects of such information.".

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General and the Secretary of State jointly shall report to Congress on the implementation of the amendments made by this section.

(c) TECHNOLOGY STANDARD TO CONFIRM IDENTITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary of State jointly, through the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), and in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and other Federal law enforcement and intelligence agencies the Attorney General or Secretary of State deems appropriate, shall within 2 years after the date of enactment of this section, develop and certify a technology standard that can confirm the identity of a person applying for a United States visa or such person seeking to enter the United States pursuant to a visa.

(2) INTEGRATED.—The technology standard developed pursuant to paragraph (1), shall be the technological basis for a cross-agency, cross-platform electronic system that is a cost-effective, efficient, fully integrated means to share law enforcement and intelligence information necessary to confirm the identity of such persons applying for a United States visa or such person seeking to enter the United States pursuant to a visa.

(3) ACCESSIBLE.—The electronic system described in paragraph (2), once implemented, shall be readily and easily accessible to—

(A) all consular officers responsible for the issuance of visas;

(B) all Federal inspection agents at all United States border inspection points; and

(C) all law enforcement and intelligence officers as determined by regulation to be responsible for investigation or identification of aliens admitted to the United States pursuant to a visa.

(4) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 2 years thereafter, the Attorney General and the Secretary of State shall jointly, in consultation with the Secretary of Treasury, report to Congress describing the development, implementation and efficacy of the technology standard and electronic database system described in this subsection.

(d) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section, or in any other law, shall be construed to limit the authority of the Attorney General or the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to provide access to the criminal history record information contained in the National Crime Information Center's (NCIC) Interstate Identification Index (NCIC-III), or to any other information maintained by the NCIC, to any Federal agency or officer authorized to enforce or administer the immigration laws of the United States, for the purpose of such enforcement or administration, upon terms that are consistent with the National Crime Prevention and Privacy Compact Act of 1998 (subtitle A of title II of Public Law 105–251; 42 U.S.C. 14611–16) and section 552a of title 5, United States Code.

(1) in subparagraph (B)—

(A) in clause (i)—

(i) by amending subclause (IV) to read as follows:

"(IV) is a representative (as defined in clause (v)) of—

"(aa) a foreign terrorist organization, as designated by the Secretary of State under section 219, or

"(bb) a political, social or other similar group whose public endorsement of acts of terrorist activity the Secretary of State has determined undermines United States efforts to reduce or eliminate terrorist activities,";

(ii) in subclause (V), by inserting "or" after "section 219,"; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subclauses:

"(VI) has used the alien's position of prominence within any country to endorse or espouse terrorist activity, or to persuade others to support terrorist activity or a terrorist organization, in a way that the Secretary of State has determined undermines United States efforts to reduce or eliminate terrorist activities, or

"(VII) is the spouse or child of an alien who is inadmissible under this section, if the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible occurred within the last 5 years,";

(B) by redesignating clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) as clauses (iii), (iv), and (v), respectively;

(C) in clause (i)(II), by striking "clause (iii)" and inserting "clause (iv)";

(D) by inserting after clause (i) the following:

"(ii) EXCEPTION.—Subclause (VII) of clause (i) does not apply to a spouse or child—

"(I) who did not know or should not reasonably have known of the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible under this section; or

"(II) whom the consular officer or Attorney General has reasonable grounds to believe has renounced the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible under this section.";

(E) in clause (iii) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B))—

(i) by inserting "it had been" before "committed in the United States"; and

(ii) in subclause (V)(b), by striking "or firearm" and inserting ", firearm, or other weapon or dangerous device";

(F) by amending clause (iv) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) to read as follows:

"(iv) ENGAGE IN TERRORIST ACTIVITY DEFINED.—As used in this chapter, the term 'engage in terrorist activity' means, in an individual capacity or as a member of an organization—

"(I) to commit or to incite to commit, under circumstances indicating an intention to cause death or serious bodily injury, a terrorist activity;

"(II) to prepare or plan a terrorist activity;

"(III) to gather information on potential targets for terrorist activity;

"(IV) to solicit funds or other things of value for—

"(aa) a terrorist activity;

"(bb) a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

would further the organization's terrorist activity;

"(V) to solicit any individual—

"(aa) to engage in conduct otherwise described in this clause;

"(bb) for membership in a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

"(cc) for membership in a terrorist organization described in clause (vi)(III), unless the solicitor can demonstrate that he did not know, and should not reasonably have known, that the solicitation would further the organization's terrorist activity; or

"(VI) to commit an act that the actor knows, or reasonably should know, affords material support, including a safe house, transportation, communications, funds, transfer of funds or other material financial benefit, false documentation or identification, weapons (including chemical, biological, or radiological weapons), explosives, or training—

"(aa) for the commission of a terrorist activity;

"(bb) to any individual who the actor knows, or reasonably should know, has committed or plans to commit a terrorist activity;

"(cc) to a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

"(dd) to a terrorist organization described in clause (vi)(III), unless the actor can demonstrate that he did not know, and should not reasonably have known, that the act would further the organization's terrorist activity.

This clause shall not apply to any material support the alien afforded to an organization or individual that has committed terrorist activity, if the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, or the Attorney General, after consultation with the Secretary of State, concludes in his sole unreviewable discretion, that this clause should not apply.''; and

(G) by adding at the end the following new clause:

''(vi) TERRORIST ORGANIZATION DEFINED.—As used in clause (i)(VI) and clause (iv), the term 'terrorist organization' means an organization—

''(I) designated under section 219;

''(II) otherwise designated, upon publication in the Federal Register, by the Secretary of State in consultation with or upon the request of the Attorney General, as a terrorist organization, after finding that it engages in the activities described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (iv), or that it provides material support to further terrorist activity; or

REV_00069530

"(III) that is a group of two or more individuals, whether organized or not, which engages in the activities described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (iv)."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(F) ASSOCIATION WITH TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS.—Any alien who the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, or the Attorney General, after consultation with the Secretary of State, determines has been associated with a terrorist organization and intends while in the United States to engage solely, principally, or incidentally in activities that could endanger the welfare, safety, or security of the United States is inadmissible.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 237(a)(4)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(B)) is amended by striking "section 212(a)(3)(B)(iii)" and inserting "section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv)".

(2) Section 208(b)(2)(A)(v) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(A)(v)) is amended by striking "or (IV)" and inserting "(IV), or (VI)".

(c) RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply to—

(A) actions taken by an alien before, on, or after such date; and

(B) all aliens, without regard to the date of entry or attempted entry into the United States—

(i) in removal proceedings on or after such date (except for proceedings in which there has been a final administrative decision before such date); or

(ii) seeking admission to the United States on or after such date.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR ALIENS IN EXCLUSION OR DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, sections 212(a)(3)(B) and 237(a)(4)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended by this Act, shall apply to all aliens in exclusion or deportation proceedings on or after the date of enactment of this Act (except for proceedings in which there has been a final administrative decision before such date) as if such proceedings were removal proceedings.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR SECTION 219 ORGANIZATIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS DESIGNATED UNDER SECTION 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II).—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2), no alien shall be considered inadmissible under section 212(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(3)), or deportable under section 237(a)(4)(B) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(B)), by reason of the amendments made by subsection (a), on the ground that the alien engaged in a terrorist activity described in subclause (IV)(bb), (V)(bb), or (VI)(cc) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a group at any time when the group was not a terrorist organization designated by the Secretary of State under section 219 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1189) or otherwise designated under section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II).

(B) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to prevent an alien from being considered inadmissible or

(B) providing support to counter, investigate, or prosecute domestic or international terrorism, including, without limitation, paying rewards in connection with these activities; and

(C) conducting terrorism threat assessments of Federal agencies and their facilities; and

(2) to reimburse any department or agency of the Federal Government for any costs incurred in connection with detaining in foreign countries individuals accused of acts of terrorism that violate the laws of the United States.

(b) NO EFFECT ON PRIOR APPROPRIATIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to affect the amount or availability of any appropriation to the Counterterrorism Fund made before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 102. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONDEMNING DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ARAB AND MUSLIM AMERICANS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Arab Americans, Muslim Americans, and Americans from South Asia play a vital role in our deportable for having engaged in a terrorist activity—

(i) described in subclause (IV)(bb), (V)(bb), or (VI)(cc) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a terrorist organization at any time when such organization was designated by the Secretary of State under section 219 of such Act or otherwise designated under section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II); or

(ii) described in subclause (IV)(cc), (V)(cc), or (VI)(dd) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a terrorist organization described in section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(III).

(4) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, may determine that the amendments made by this section shall not apply with respect to actions by an alien taken outside the United States before the date of enactment of this Act upon the recommendation of a consular officer who has concluded that there is not reasonable ground to believe that the alien knew or reasonably should have known that the actions would further a terrorist activity.

(c) DESIGNATION OF FOREIGN TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 219(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1189(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(B), by inserting "or terrorism (as defined in section 140(d)(2) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989 (22 U.S.C. 2656f(d)(2)), or retains the capability and intent to engage in terrorist activity or terrorism)" after "212(a)(3)(B)";

(2) in paragraph (1)(C), by inserting "or terrorism" after "terrorist activity";

(3) by amending paragraph (2)(A) to read as follows:

"(A) NOTICE.—

"(i) TO CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS.—Seven days before making a designation under this subsection, the Secretary shall, by classified communication, notify the Speaker and Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore, Majority Leader, and Minority Leader of the Senate, and the members of the relevant committees, in writing, of the intent to designate an organization under this subsection, together with the findings made under paragraph (1) with respect to that organization, and the factual basis therefor.

"(ii) PUBLICATION IN FEDERAL REGISTER.—The Secretary shall publish the designation in the Federal Register seven days after providing the notification under clause (i).";

(4) in paragraph (2)(B)(i), by striking "subparagraph (A)" and inserting "subparagraph (A)(ii)";

(5) in paragraph (2)(C), by striking "paragraph (2)" and inserting "paragraph (2)(A)(i)";

(6) in paragraph (3)(B), by striking "subsection (c)" and inserting "subsection (b)";

(7) in paragraph (4)(B), by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The Secretary also may redesignate such organization at the end of any 2-year redesignation period (but not sooner than 60 days prior to the termination of such period) for an additional 2-year period upon a finding that the relevant circumstances described in paragraph (1) still exist. Any redesignation shall be effective immediately following the end of the prior 2-year designation or redesignation period unless a different effective date is provided in such redesignation.";

(8) in paragraph (6)(A)—

(A) by inserting "or a redesignation made under paragraph (4)(B)" after "paragraph (1)";

(B) in clause (i)—

(i) by inserting "or redesignation" after "designation" the first place it appears; and

(ii) by striking "of the designation"; and

(C) in clause (ii), by striking "of the designation";

(9) in paragraph (6)(B)—

(A) by striking "through (4)" and inserting "and (3)"; and

(B) by inserting at the end the following new sentence: "Any revocation shall take effect on the date specified in the revocation or upon publication in the Federal Register if no effective date is specified.";

(10) in paragraph (7), by inserting ", or the revocation of a redesignation under paragraph (6)," after "paragraph (5) or (6)"; and

(11) in paragraph (8)—

(A) by striking "paragraph (1)(B)" and inserting "paragraph (2)(B), or if a redesignation under this subsection has become effective under paragraph (4)(B)";

(B) by inserting "or an alien in a removal proceeding" after "criminal action"; and

(C) by inserting "or redesignation" before "as a defense".

SEC. 412. MANDATORY DETENTION OF SUSPECTED TERRORISTS; HABEAS CORPUS; JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 236 the following:

"MANDATORY DETENTION OF SUSPECTED TERRORISTS; HABEAS CORPUS; JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 236A. (a) DETENTION OF TERRORIST ALIENS.—

"(1) CUSTODY.—The Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who is certified under paragraph (3).

"(2) RELEASE.—Except as provided in paragraphs (5) and (6), the Attorney General shall maintain custody of such an alien until the alien is removed from the United States. Except as provided in paragraph (6), such custody shall be maintained irrespective of any relief from removal for which the alien may be eligible, or any relief from removal granted the alien, until the Attorney General determines that the alien is no longer an alien who may be certified under paragraph (3).

"(3) CERTIFICATION.—The Attorney General may certify an alien under this paragraph if the Attorney General has reasonable grounds to believe that the alien—

"(A) is described in section 212(a)(3)(A)(i), 212(a)(3)(A)(iii), 212(a)(3)(B), 237(a)(4)(A)(i), 237(a)(4)(A)(iii), or 237(a)(4)(B); or

"(B) is engaged in any other activity that endangers the national security of the United States.

"(4) NONDELEGATION.—The Attorney General may delegate the authority provided under paragraph (3) only to the Commissioner. The Commissioner may not delegate such authority.

REV_00069539

"(5) COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS.—The Attorney General shall place an alien detained under paragraph (1) in removal proceedings, or shall charge the alien with a criminal offense, not later than 7 days after the commencement of such detention. If the requirement of the preceding sentence is not satisfied, the Attorney General shall release the alien.

"(6) LIMITATION ON INDEFINITE DETENTION.—An alien detained under paragraph (1) who has not been removed under section 241(a)(1)(A), and whose removal is unlikely in the reasonably foreseeable future, may be detained for additional periods of up to six months if the release of the alien will not protect the national security of the United States or adequately ensure the safety of the community or any person.

"(b) HABEAS CORPUS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Judicial review of any action or decision relating to this section (including judicial review of the merits of a determination made under subsection (a)(3) or (a)(6)) is available exclusively in habeas corpus proceedings consistent with this subsection. Except as provided in the preceding sentence, no court shall have jurisdiction to review, by habeas corpus petition or otherwise, any such action or decision.

"(2) APPLICATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including section 2241(a) of title 28, United States Code, habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1) may be initiated only by an application filed with—

"(i) the Supreme Court;

"(ii) any justice of the Supreme Court;

"(iii) any circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; or

"(iv) any district court otherwise having jurisdiction to entertain it.

"(B) APPLICATION TRANSFER.—Section 2241(b) of title 28, United States Code, shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) APPEALS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including section 2253 of title 28, in habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1) before a circuit or district judge, the final order shall be subject to review, on appeal, by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. There shall be no right of appeal in such proceedings to any other circuit court of appeals.

"(4) RULE OF DECISION.—The law applied by the Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall be regarded as the rule of decision in habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1).

"(c) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—The provisions of this section shall not be applicable to any other provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents of the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 236 the following:

"Sec. 236A. Mandatory detention of suspected terrorist; habeas corpus; judicial review.".

(c) REPORTS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, the Attorney General shall submit a report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, with respect to the reporting period, on—

(1) the number of aliens certified under section 236A(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as added by subsection (a);

(2) the grounds for such certifications;

(3) the nationalities of the aliens so certified;

(4) the length of the detention for each alien so certified; and

(5) the number of aliens so certified who—

(A) were granted any form of relief from removal;

(B) were removed;

(C) the Attorney General has determined are no longer aliens who may be so certified; or

(D) were released from detention.

SEC. 413. MULTILATERAL COOPERATION AGAINST TERRORISTS.

Section 222(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1202(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''except that in the discretion of'' and inserting the following: ''except that—

''(1) in the discretion of''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) the Secretary of State, in the Secretary's discretion and on the basis of reciprocity, may provide to a foreign government information in the Department of State's computerized visa lookout database and, when necessary and appropriate, other Nation and are entitled to nothing less than the full rights of every American.

(2) The acts of violence that have been taken against Arab and Muslim Americans since the September 11, 2001, attacks against the United States should be and are condemned by all Americans who value freedom.

(3) The concept of individual responsibility for wrongdoing is sacrosanct in American society, and applies equally to all religious, racial, and ethnic groups.

(4) When American citizens commit acts of violence against those who are, or are perceived to be, of Arab or Muslim descent, they should be punished to the full extent of the law.

(5) Muslim Americans have become so fearful of harassment that many Muslim women are changing the way they dress to avoid becoming targets.

(6) Many Arab Americans and Muslim Americans have acted heroically during the attacks on the United States, including Mohammed Salman Hamdani, a 23-year-old New Yorker of Pakistani descent, who is believed to have gone to the World Trade Center to offer rescue assistance and is now missing.

records covered by this section related to information in the database—

"(A) with regard to individual aliens, at any time on a case-by-case basis for the purpose of preventing, investigating, or punishing acts that would constitute a crime in the United States, including, but not limited to, terrorism or trafficking in controlled substances, persons, or illicit weapons; or

"(B) with regard to any or all aliens in the database, pursuant to such conditions as the Secretary of State shall establish in an agreement with the foreign government in which that government agrees to use such information and records for the purposes described in subparagraph (A) or to deny visas to persons who would be inadmissible to the United States.".

Subtitle C—Preservation of Immigration Benefits for Victims of Terrorism

SEC. 421. SPECIAL IMMIGRANT STATUS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), the Attorney General may provide an alien described in subsection (b) with the status of a special immigrant under section

101(a)(27) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a(27)), if the alien—

(1) files with the Attorney General a petition under section 204 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) for classification under section 203(b)(4) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(b)(4)); and

(2) is otherwise eligible to receive an immigrant visa and is otherwise admissible to the United States for permanent residence, except in determining such admissibility, the grounds for inadmissibility specified in section 212(a)(4) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(4)) shall not apply.

(b) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—

(1) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—An alien is described in this subsection if—

(A) the alien was the beneficiary of—

(i) a petition that was filed with the Attorney General on or before September 11, 2001—

(I) under section 204 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) to classify the alien as a family-sponsored immigrant under section 203(a) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)) or as an employment-based immigrant under section 203(b) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(b)); or

(II) under section 214(d) (8 U.S.C. 1184(d)) of such Act to authorize the issuance of a nonimmigrant visa to the alien under section 101(a)(15)(K) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(K)); or

(ii) an application for labor certification under section 212(a)(5)(A) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(5)(A)) that was filed under regulations of the Secretary of Labor on or before such date; and

(B) such petition or application was revoked or terminated (or otherwise rendered null), either before or after its approval, due to a specified terrorist activity that directly resulted in—

(i) the death or disability of the petitioner, applicant, or alien beneficiary; or

(ii) loss of employment due to physical damage to, or destruction of, the business of the petitioner or applicant.

(2) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An alien is described in this subsection if—

(i) the alien was, on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child of a principal alien described in paragraph (1); and

(ii) the alien—

(I) is accompanying such principal alien; or

(II) is following to join such principal alien not later than September 11, 2003.

(B) CONSTRUCTION.—For purposes of construing the terms "accompanying" and "following to join" in subparagraph (A)(ii), any death of a principal alien that is described in paragraph (1)(B)(i) shall be disregarded.

(3) GRANDPARENTS OF ORPHANS.—An alien is described in this subsection if the alien is a grandparent of a child, both of whose parents died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, if either of such deceased parents was, on September 10, 2001, a citizen or national of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

(c) PRIORITY DATE.—Immigrant visas made available under this section shall be issued to aliens in the order in which a petition on behalf of each such alien is filed with the Attorney General under subsection (a)(1), except that if an alien was assigned a priority date with respect to a petition described in subsection (b)(1)(A)(i), the alien may maintain that priority date.

(d) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS.—For purposes of the application of sections 201 through 203 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151–1153) in any fiscal year, aliens eligible to be provided status under this section shall be treated as special immigrants described in section 101(a)(27) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(27)) who are not described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), or (K) of such section.

SEC. 422. EXTENSION OF FILING OR REENTRY DEADLINES.

(a) AUTOMATIC EXTENSION OF NONIMMIGRANT STATUS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 214 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1184), in the case of an alien described in paragraph (2) who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, the alien may remain lawfully in the United States in the same nonimmigrant status until the later of—

(A) the date such lawful nonimmigrant status otherwise would have terminated if this subsection had not been enacted; or

(B) 1 year after the death or onset of disability described in paragraph (2).

(2) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—

(A) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien was disabled as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(B) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien was, on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child of—

(i) a principal alien described in subparagraph (A); or

(ii) an alien who died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(3) AUTHORIZED EMPLOYMENT.—During the period in which a principal alien or alien spouse is in lawful nonimmigrant status under paragraph (1), the alien shall be provided an ''employment authorized'' endorsement or other appropriate document signifying authorization of employment not later than 30 days after the alien requests such authorization.

(b) NEW DEADLINES FOR EXTENSION OR CHANGE OF NONIMMIGRANT STATUS.—

(1) FILING DELAYS.—In the case of an alien who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, if the alien was prevented from filing a timely application for an extension or change of nonimmigrant status as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien's application shall be considered timely filed if it is filed not later than 60 days after it otherwise would have been due.

(2) DEPARTURE DELAYS.—In the case of an alien who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, if the alien is unable timely to depart the United States as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien shall not be considered to have been unlawfully present in the United States during the period beginning on September 11, 2001, and ending on the date of the alien's departure, if such departure occurs on or before November 11, 2001.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR ALIENS UNABLE TO RETURN FROM ABROAD.—

(A) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—In the case of an alien who was in a lawful nonimmigrant status on September 10, 2001, but who was not present in the United States on such date, if the alien was prevented from returning to the United States in order to file a timely application for an extension of nonimmigrant status as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity—

(i) the alien's application shall be considered timely filed if it is filed not later than 60 days after it otherwise would have been due; and

(ii) the alien's lawful nonimmigrant status shall be considered to continue until the later of—

(I) the date such status otherwise would have terminated if this subparagraph had not been enacted; or

(II) the date that is 60 days after the date on which the application described in clause (i) otherwise would have been due.

(B) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—In the case of an alien who is the spouse or child of a principal alien described in subparagraph (A), if the spouse or child was in a lawful nonimmigrant status on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child may remain lawfully in the United States in the same nonimmigrant status until the later of—

(i) the date such lawful nonimmigrant status otherwise would have terminated if this subparagraph had not been enacted; or

(ii) the date that is 60 days after the date on which the application described in subparagraph (A) otherwise would have been due.

(4) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING TIMELY ACTION.—

(A) FILING DELAYS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), circumstances preventing an alien from timely acting are—

(i) office closures;

(ii) mail or courier service cessations or delays; and

(iii) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(B) DEPARTURE AND RETURN DELAYS.—For purposes of paragraphs (2) and (3), circumstances preventing an alien from timely acting are—

(i) office closures;

(ii) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(iii) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(c) DIVERSITY IMMIGRANTS.—

(1) WAIVER OF FISCAL YEAR LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding section 203(e)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(e)(2)), an immigrant visa number issued to an alien under section 203(c) of such Act for fiscal year 2001 may be used by the alien during the period beginning on October 1, 2001, and ending on April 1, 2002, if the alien establishes that the alien was prevented from using it during fiscal year 2001 as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(2) WORLDWIDE LEVEL.—In the case of an alien entering the United States as a lawful permanent resident, or adjusting to that status, under paragraph (1), the alien shall be counted as a diversity immigrant for fiscal year 2001 for purposes of section 201(e) of the Immigration and Nationality

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the civil rights and civil liberties of all Americans, including Arab Americans, Muslim Americans, and Americans from South Asia, must be protected, and that every effort must be taken to preserve their safety;

(2) any acts of violence or discrimination against any Americans be condemned; and

(3) the Nation is called upon to recognize the patriotism of fellow citizens from all ethnic, racial, and religious backgrounds.

SEC. 103. INCREASED FUNDING FOR THE TECHNICAL SUPPORT CENTER AT THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the Technical Support Center established in section 811 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (Public Law 104–132) to help meet the demands for activities to combat terrorism and support and enhance the technical support and tactical operations of the FBI, $200,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004.

Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(e)), unless the worldwide level under such section for such year has been exceeded, in which case the alien shall be counted as a diversity immigrant for fiscal year 2002.

(3) TREATMENT OF FAMILY MEMBERS OF CERTAIN ALIENS.—In the case of a principal alien issued an immigrant visa number under section 203(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(c)) for fiscal year 2001, if such principal alien died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the aliens who were, on September 10, 2001, the spouse and children of such principal alien shall, if not otherwise entitled to an immigrant status and the immediate issuance of a visa under subsection (a), (b), or (c) of section 203 of such Act, be entitled to the same status, and the same order of consideration, that would have been provided to such alien spouse or child under section 203(d) of such Act if the principal alien were not deceased.

(4) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING TIMELY ACTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), circumstances preventing an alien from using an immigrant visa number during fiscal year 2001 are—

(A) office closures;

(B) mail or courier service cessations or delays;

(C) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(D) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(d) EXTENSION OF EXPIRATION OF IMMIGRANT VISAS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the limitations under section 221(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1201(c)), in the case of any immigrant visa issued to an alien that expires or expired before December 31, 2001, if the alien was unable to effect entry into the United States as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, then the period of validity of the visa is extended until December 31, 2001, unless a longer period of validity is otherwise provided under this subtitle.

(2) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING ENTRY.—For purposes of this subsection, circumstances preventing an alien from effecting entry into the United States are—

(A) office closures;

(B) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(C) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(e) GRANTS OF PAROLE EXTENDED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any parole granted by the Attorney General under section 212(d)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(d)(5)) that expires on a date on or after September 11, 2001, if the alien beneficiary of the parole was unable to return to the United States prior to the expiration date as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the parole is deemed extended for an additional 90 days.

(2) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING RETURN.—For purposes of this subsection, circumstances preventing an alien from timely returning to the United States are—

(A) office closures;

(B) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(C) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(f) VOLUNTARY DEPARTURE.—Notwithstanding section 240B of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1229c), if a period for voluntary departure under such section expired during the period beginning on September 11, 2001, and ending on October 11, 2001, such voluntary departure period is deemed extended for an additional 30 days.

SEC. 423. HUMANITARIAN RELIEF FOR CERTAIN SURVIVING SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.

(a) TREATMENT AS IMMEDIATE RELATIVES.—

(1) SPOUSES.—Notwithstanding the second sentence of section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(b)(2)(A)(i)), in the case of an alien who was the spouse of a citizen of the United States at the time of the citizen's death and was not legally separated from the citizen at the time of the citizen's death, if the citizen died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien (and each child of the alien) shall be considered, for purposes of section 201(b) of such Act, to remain an immediate relative after the date of the citizen's death, but only if the alien files a petition under section 204(a)(1)(A)(ii) of such Act within 2 years after such date and only until the date the alien remarries. For purposes of such section 204(a)(1)(A)(ii), an alien granted relief under the preceding sentence shall be considered an alien spouse described in the second sentence of section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) of such Act.

(2) CHILDREN.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an alien who was the child of a citizen of the United States at the time of the citizen's death, if the citizen died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien shall be considered, for purposes of section 201(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(b)), to remain an immediate relative after the date of the citizen's death (regardless of changes in age or marital status thereafter), but only if the alien files a petition under subparagraph (B) within 2 years after such date.

(B) PETITIONS.—An alien described in subparagraph (A) may file a petition with the Attorney General for classification of the alien under section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(b)(2)(A)(i)). For purposes of such Act, such a petition shall be considered a petition filed under section 204(a)(1)(A) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1154(a)(1)(A)).

(b) SPOUSES, CHILDREN, UNMARRIED SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF LAWFUL PERMANENT RESIDENT ALIENS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any spouse, child, or unmarried son or daughter of an alien described in paragraph (3) who is included in a petition for classification as a family-sponsored immigrant under section 203(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)(2)) that was filed by such alien before September 11, 2001, shall be considered (if the spouse, child, son, or daughter has not been admitted or approved for lawful permanent residence by such date) a valid petitioner for preference status under such section with the same priority date as that assigned prior to the death described in paragraph (3)(A). No new petition shall be required to be filed. Such spouse, child, son, or daughter may be eligible for deferred action and work authorization.

(2) SELF-PETITIONS.—Any spouse, child, or unmarried son or daughter of an alien described in paragraph (3) who is not a beneficiary of a petition for classification as a family-sponsored immigrant under section 203(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act may file a petition for such classification with the Attorney General, if the spouse, child, son, or daughter was present in the United States on September 11, 2001. Such spouse, child, son, or daughter may be eligible for deferred action and work authorization.

(3) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien—

(A) died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity; and

(B) on the day of such death, was lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

(c) APPLICATIONS FOR ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS BY SURVIVING SPOUSES AND CHILDREN OF EMPLOYMENT-BASED IMMIGRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any alien who was, on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child of an alien described in paragraph (2), and who applied for adjustment of status prior to the death described in paragraph (2)(A), may have such application adjudicated as if such death had not occurred.

(2) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien—

(A) died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity; and

(B) on the day before such death, was—

(i) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States by reason of having been allotted a visa under section 203(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(b)); or

(ii) an applicant for adjustment of status to that of an alien described in clause (i), and admissible to the United States for permanent residence.

(d) WAIVER OF PUBLIC CHARGE GROUNDS.—In determining the admissibility of any alien accorded an immigration benefit under this section, the grounds for inadmissibility specified in section 212(a)(4) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(4)) shall not apply.

SEC. 424. "AGE-OUT" PROTECTION FOR CHILDREN.

For purposes of the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), in the case of an alien—

(1) whose 21st birthday occurs in September 2001, and who is the beneficiary of a petition or application filed under such Act on or before September 11, 2001, the alien shall be considered to be a child for 90 days after the alien's 21st birthday for purposes of adjudicating such petition or application; and

(2) whose 21st birthday occurs after September 2001, and who is the beneficiary of a petition or application filed under such Act on or before September 11, 2001, the alien shall be considered to be a child for 45 days after the alien's 21st birthday for purposes of adjudicating such petition or application.

SEC. 425. TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATIVE RELIEF.

The Attorney General, for humanitarian purposes or to ensure family unity, may provide temporary administrative relief to any alien who—

(1) was lawfully present in the United States on September 10, 2001;

(2) was on such date the spouse, parent, or child of an individual who died or was disabled as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity; and

(3) is not otherwise entitled to relief under any other provision of this subtitle.

SEC. 426. EVIDENCE OF DEATH, DISABILITY, OR LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General shall establish appropriate standards for evidence demonstrating, for purposes of this subtitle, that any of the following occurred as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity:

(1) Death.

(2) Disability.

(3) Loss of employment due to physical damage to, or destruction of, a business.

(b) WAIVER OF REGULATIONS.—The Attorney General shall carry out subsection (a) as expeditiously as possible. The Attorney General is not required to promulgate regulations prior to implementing this subtitle.

SEC. 427. NO BENEFITS TO TERRORISTS OR FAMILY MEMBERS OF TERRORISTS.

(a) PAYMENTS.—Section 1201(a) of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796) is amended by striking "$100,000" and inserting "$250,000".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to any death or disability occurring on or after January 1, 2001.

SEC. 614. OFFICE OF JUSTICE PROGRAMS.

Section 112 of title I of section 101(b) of division A of Public Law 105–277 and section 108(a) of appendix A of Public Law 106–113 (113 Stat. 1501A–20) are amended—

(1) after "that Office", each place it occurs, by inserting "(including, notwithstanding any contrary provision of law (unless the same should expressly refer to this section), any organization that administers any program established in title 1 of Public Law 90–351)"; and

(2) by inserting "functions, including any" after "all".

Subtitle B—Amendments to the Victims of Crime Act of 1984

SEC. 621. CRIME VICTIMS FUND.

(a) DEPOSIT OF GIFTS IN THE FUND.—Section 1402(b) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(b)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(5) any gifts, bequests, or donations to the Fund from private entities or individuals.".

(b) FORMULA FOR FUND DISTRIBUTIONS.—Section 1402(c) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) FUND DISTRIBUTION; RETENTION OF SUMS IN FUND; AVAILABILITY FOR EXPENDITURE WITHOUT FISCAL YEAR LIMITATION.—

"(1) Subject to the availability of money in the Fund, in each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 2003, the Director shall distribute not less than 90 percent nor more than 110 percent of the amount distributed from the Fund in the previous fiscal year, except the Director may distribute up to 120 percent of the amount distributed in the previous fiscal year in any fiscal year that the total amount available in the Fund is more than 2 times the amount distributed in the previous fiscal year.

"(2) In each fiscal year, the Director shall distribute amounts from the Fund in accordance with subsection (d). All sums not distributed during a fiscal year shall remain in reserve in the Fund to be distributed during a subsequent fiscal year. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all sums deposited in the Fund that are not distributed shall remain in reserve in the Fund for obligation in future fiscal years, without fiscal year limitation.".

(c) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR COSTS AND GRANTS.—Section 1402(d)(4) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(d)(4)) is amended—

(2) in subparagraph (A), by striking "48.5" and inserting "47.5";

(3) in subparagraph (B), by striking "48.5" and inserting "47.5"; and

(4) in subparagraph (C), by striking "3" and inserting "5".

(d) ANTITERRORISM EMERGENCY RESERVE.—Section 1402(d)(5) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(d)(5)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5)(A) In addition to the amounts distributed under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), the Director may set aside up to $50,000,000 from the amounts transferred to the Fund for use in responding to the airplane hijackings and terrorist acts that occurred on September 11, 2001, as an antiterrorism emergency reserve. The Director may replenish any amounts expended from such reserve in subsequent fiscal years by setting aside up to 5 percent of the amounts remaining in the Fund in any fiscal year after distributing amounts under paragraphs (2), (3) and (4). Such reserve shall not exceed $50,000,000.

"(B) The antiterrorism emergency reserve referred to in subparagraph (A) may be used for supplemental grants under section 1404B and to provide compensation to victims of international terrorism under section 1404C.

"(C) Amounts in the antiterrorism emergency reserve established pursuant to subparagraph (A) may be carried over from fiscal year to fiscal year.

Notwithstanding subsection (c) and section 619 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (and any similar limitation on Fund obligations in any future Act, unless the same should expressly refer to this section), any such amounts carried over shall not be subject to any limitation on obligations from amounts deposited to or available in the Fund.''.

(e) VICTIMS OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001.—Amounts transferred to the Crime Victims Fund for use in responding to the airplane hijackings and terrorist acts (including any related search, rescue, relief, assistance, or other similar activities) that occurred on September 11, 2001, shall not be subject to any limitation on obligations from amounts deposited to or available in the Fund, notwithstanding—

(1) section 619 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001, and any similar limitation on Fund obligations in such Act for Fiscal Year 2002; and organization, or information on any other person, entity, or group (including a foreign government) engaged in harboring, comforting, financing, aiding, or assisting a terrorist or terrorist organization.

(2) subsections (c) and (d) of section 1402 of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601).

SEC. 904. TEMPORARY AUTHORITY TO DEFER SUBMITTAL TO CONGRESS OF REPORTS ON INTELLIGENCE AND INTELLIGENCE-RELATED MATTERS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO DEFER.—The Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, and Director of Central Intelligence each may, during the effective period of this section, defer the date of submittal to Congress of any covered intelligence report under the jurisdiction of such official until February 1, 2002.

(b) COVERED INTELLIGENCE REPORT.—Except as provided in subsection (c), for purposes of subsection (a), a covered intelligence report is as follows:

(1) Any report on intelligence or intelligence-related activities of the United States Government that is required to be submitted to Congress by an element of the intelligence community during the effective period of this section.

(2) Any report or other matter that is required to be submitted to the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives by the Department of Defense or the Department of Justice during the effective period of this section.

(c) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN REPORTS.—For purposes of subsection (a), any report required by section 502 or 503 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 413a, 413b) is not a covered intelligence report.

(d) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—Upon deferring the date of submittal to Congress of a covered intelligence report under subsection (a), the official deferring the date of submittal of the covered intelligence report shall submit to Congress notice of the deferral. Notice of deferral of a report shall specify the provision of law, if any, under which the report would otherwise be submitted to Congress.

(e) EXTENSION OF DEFERRAL.—(1) Each official specified in subsection (a) may defer the date of submittal to Congress of a covered intelligence report under the jurisdiction of such official to a date after February 1, 2002, if such official submits to the committees of Congress specified in subsection (b)(2) before February 1, 2002, a certification that preparation and submittal of the covered intelligence report on February 1, 2002, will impede the work of officers or employees who are engaged in counterterrorism activities.

(2) A certification under paragraph (1) with respect to a covered intelligence report shall specify the date on which the covered intelligence report will be submitted to Congress.

(f) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—The effective period of this section is the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on February 1, 2002.

(g) ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY DEFINED.—In this section, the term "element of the intelligence community" means any element of the intelligence community specified or designated under section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)).

SEC. 905. DISCLOSURE TO DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE-RELATED INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 402 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection 105B as section 105C; and

(2) by inserting after section 105A the following new section 105B:

"DISCLOSURE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE ACQUIRED IN CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS; NOTICE OF CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SOURCES

"SEC. 105B. (a) DISCLOSURE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—(1) Except as otherwise provided by law and subject to paragraph (2), the Attorney General, or the head of any other department or agency of the Federal Government with law enforcement responsibilities, shall expeditiously disclose to the Director of Central Intelligence, pursuant to guidelines developed by the Attorney General in consultation with the Director, foreign intelligence acquired by an element of the Department of Justice or an element of such department or agency, as the case may be, in the course of a criminal investigation.

"(2) The Attorney General by regulation and in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence may provide for exceptions to the applicability of paragraph (1) for one or more classes of foreign intelligence, or foreign intelligence with respect to one or more targets or matters, if the Attorney General determines that disclosure of such foreign intelligence under that paragraph would jeopardize an ongoing law enforcement investigation or impair other significant law enforcement interests.

"(b) PROCEDURES FOR NOTICE OF CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Attorney General, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, shall develop guidelines to ensure that after receipt of a report from an element of the intelligence community of activity of a foreign intelligence source or potential foreign intelligence source that may warrant investigation as criminal activity, the Attorney General provides notice to the Director of Central Intelligence, within a reasonable period of time, of his intention to commence, or decline to commence, a criminal investigation of such activity.

"(c) PROCEDURES.—The Attorney General shall develop procedures for the administration of this section, including the disclosure of foreign intelligence by elements of the Department of Justice, and elements of other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, under subsection (a) and the provision of notice with respect to criminal investigations under subsection (b).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents in the first section of that Act is amended by striking the item relating to section 105B and inserting the following new items:

"Sec. 105B. Disclosure of foreign intelligence acquired in criminal investigations; notice of criminal investigations of foreign intelligence sources.
"Sec. 105C. Protection of the operational files of the National Imagery and Mapping Agency.".

SEC. 906. FOREIGN TERRORIST ASSET TRACKING CENTER.

(a) REPORT ON RECONFIGURATION.—Not later than February 1, 2002, the Attorney General, the Director of Central Intelligence, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly submit to Congress a report on the feasibility and desirability of reconfiguring the Foreign Terrorist Asset Tracking Center and the Office of Foreign Assets Control of the Department of the Treasury in order to establish a capability to provide for the effective and efficient analysis and dissemination of foreign intelligence relating to the financial capabilities and resources of international terrorist organizations.

(b) REPORT REQUIREMENTS.—(1) In preparing the report under subsection (a), the Attorney General, the Secretary, and the Director shall consider whether, and to what extent, the capacities and resources of the Financial Crimes Enforcement Center of the Department of the Treasury may be integrated into the capability contemplated by the report.

(2) If the Attorney General, Secretary, and the Director determine that it is feasible and desirable to undertake the reconfiguration described in subsection (a) in order to establish the capability described in that subsection, the Attorney General, the Secretary, and the Director shall include with the report under that subsection a detailed proposal for legislation to achieve the reconfiguration.

SEC. 907. NATIONAL VIRTUAL TRANSLATION CENTER.

(a) REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) Not later than February 1, 2002, the Director of Central Intelligence shall, in consultation with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report on the establishment and maintenance within the intelligence community of an element for purposes of providing timely and accurate translations of foreign intelligence for all other elements of the intelligence community. In the report, the element shall be referred to as the ''National Virtual Translation Center''.

(2) The report on the element described in paragraph (1) shall discuss the use of state-of-the-art communications technology, the integration of existing translation capabilities in the intelligence community, and the utilization of remote-connection capacities so as to minimize the need for a central physical facility for the element.

(b) RESOURCES.—The report on the element required by subsection (a) shall address the following:

(1) The assignment to the element of a staff of individuals possessing a broad range of linguistic and translation skills appropriate for the purposes of the element.

(2) The provision to the element of communications capabilities and systems that are commensurate with the most current and sophisticated communications capabilities and systems available to other elements of intelligence community.

(3) The assurance, to the maximum extent practicable, that the communications capabilities and systems provided to the element will be compatible with communications capabilities and systems utilized by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in securing timely and accurate translations of foreign language materials for law enforcement investigations.

(4) The development of a communications infrastructure to ensure the efficient and secure use of the translation capabilities of the element.

(c) SECURE COMMUNICATIONS.—The report shall include a discussion of the creation of secure electronic communications between the element described by subsection (a) and the other elements of the intelligence community.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—The term ''foreign intelligence'' has the meaning given that term in section 3(2) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(2)).

(2) ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY.—The term ''element of the intelligence community'' means any element of the intelligence community specified or designated under section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)).

SEC. 908. TRAINING OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS REGARDING IDENTIFICATION AND USE OF FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

(a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—The Attorney General shall, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, carry out a program to provide appropriate training to officials described in subsection (b) in order to assist such officials in—

(1) identifying foreign intelligence information in the course of their duties; and

(2) utilizing foreign intelligence information in the course of their duties, to the extent that the utilization of such information is appropriate for such duties.

(b) OFFICIALS.—The officials provided training under subsection (a) are, at the discretion of the Attorney General and the Director, the following:

(1) Officials of the Federal Government who are not ordinarily engaged in the collection, dissemination, and use of foreign intelligence in the performance of their duties.

(2) Officials of State and local governments who encounter, or may encounter in the course of a terrorist event, foreign intelligence in the performance of their duties.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 1001. PAYMENTS.

(c)(1) Chapter 121 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 2712. Civil actions against the United States

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who is aggrieved by any violation of this chapter or of chapter 119 of this title or of sections 106(a), 305(a), or 405(a) of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) may commence an action in United States District Court against the United States to recover money damages. In any such action, if a person who is aggrieved successfully establishes a violation of this chapter or of chapter 119 of this title or of the above specific provisions of title 50, the Court may assess as damages—

"(1) actual damages, but not less than $10,000, whichever amount is greater; and

"(2) litigation costs, reasonably incurred.

"(b) PROCEDURES.—(1) Any action against the United States under this section may be commenced only after a claim is presented to the appropriate department or agency under the procedures of the Federal Tort Claims Act, as set forth in title 28, United States Code.

"(2) Any action against the United States under this section shall be commenced within the time period set forth in section 2401(b) of title 28, United States Code. The claim shall accrue on the date upon which the claimant first discovers the violation.

"(3) Any action under this section shall be tried to the court without a jury.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the procedures set forth in section 106(f), 305(g), or 405(f) of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) shall be the exclusive means by which materials governed by those sections may be reviewed.

"(5) An amount equal to any award against the United States under this section shall be reimbursed by the department or agency concerned to the fund described in section 1304 of title 31, United States Code, out of any appropriation, fund, or other account (excluding any part of such appropriation, fund, or account that is available for the enforcement of any Federal law) that is available for the operating expenses of the department or agency concerned.

"(c) ADMINISTRATIVE DISCIPLINE.—If a court determines that the United States or any of its departments or agencies has violated any provision of this chapter, and the court finds that the circumstances surrounding the violation raise serious questions about whether or not an officer or employee of the United States acted willfully or intentionally with respect to the possible violation, the department or agency shall promptly initiate a proceeding to determine whether disciplinary action against the officer or employee is warranted. If the head of the department or agency involved determines that disciplinary action is not warranted, he or she shall notify the Inspector General with jurisdiction over the department or agency concerned and shall provide the Inspector General with the reasons for such determination.

"(d) EXCLUSIVE REMEDY.—Any action against the United States under this subsection shall be the exclusive remedy against the United States for any claims within the purview of this section.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 121 is amended to read as follows:

"2712. Civil action against the United States.".

SEC. 2. CONSTRUCTION; SEVERABILITY.

Any provision of this Act held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to give it the maximum effect permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event such provision shall be deemed severable from this Act and shall not affect the remainder thereof or the application of such provision to other persons not similarly situated or to other, dissimilar circumstances.

TITLE I—ENHANCING DOMESTIC SECURITY AGAINST TERRORISM

SEC. 101. COUNTERTERRORISM FUND.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT; AVAILABILITY.—There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a separate fund to be known as the "Counterterrorism Fund", amounts in which shall remain available without fiscal year limitation—

(1) to reimburse any Department of Justice component for any costs incurred in connection with—

(A) reestablishing the operational capability of an office or facility that has been dam-

"(2) Such access shall be provided by means of extracts of the records for placement in the automated visa lookout or other appropriate database, and shall be provided without any fee or charge.

"(3) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall provide periodic updates of the extracts at intervals mutually agreed upon with the agency receiving the access. Upon receipt of such updated extracts, the receiving agency shall make corresponding updates to its database and destroy previously provided extracts.

"(4) Access to an extract does not entitle the Department of State to obtain the full content of the corresponding automated criminal history record. To obtain the full content of a criminal history record, the Department of State shall submit the applicant's fingerprints and any appropriate fingerprint processing fee authorized by law to the Criminal Justice Information Services Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"(c) The provision of the extracts described in subsection (b) may be reconsidered by the Attorney General and the receiving agency upon the development and deployment of a more cost-effective and efficient means of sharing the information.

"(d) For purposes of administering this section, the Department of State shall, prior to receiving access to NCIC data but not later than 4 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, promulgate final regulations—

"(1) to implement procedures for the taking of fingerprints; and

"(2) to establish the conditions for the use of the information received from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in order—

"(A) to limit the redissemination of such information;

"(B) to ensure that such information is used solely to determine whether or not to issue a visa to an alien or to admit an alien to the United States;

"(C) to ensure the security, confidentiality, and destruction of such information; and

"(D) to protect any privacy rights of individuals who are subjects of such information.".

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General and the Secretary of State jointly shall report to Congress on the implementation of the amendments made by this section.

(c) TECHNOLOGY STANDARD TO CONFIRM IDENTITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary of State jointly, through the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), and in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and other Federal law enforcement and intelligence agencies the Attorney General or Secretary of State deems appropriate, shall within 2 years after the date of enactment of this section, develop and certify a technology standard that can confirm the identity of a person applying for a United States visa or such person seeking to enter the United States pursuant to a visa.

(2) INTEGRATED.—The technology standard developed pursuant to paragraph (1), shall be the technological basis for a cross-agency, cross-platform electronic system that is a cost-effective, efficient, fully integrated means to share law enforcement and intelligence information necessary to confirm the identity of such persons applying for a United States visa or such person seeking to enter the United States pursuant to a visa.

(3) ACCESSIBLE.—The electronic system described in paragraph (2), once implemented, shall be readily and easily accessible to—

(A) all consular officers responsible for the issuance of visas;

(B) all Federal inspection agents at all United States border inspection points; and

(C) all law enforcement and intelligence officers as determined by regulation to be responsible for investigation or identification of aliens admitted to the United States pursuant to a visa.

(4) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 2 years thereafter, the Attorney General and the Secretary of State shall jointly, in consultation with the Secretary of Treasury, report to Congress describing the development, implementation and efficacy of the technology standard and electronic database system described in this subsection.

(d) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section, or in any other law, shall be construed to limit the authority of the Attorney General or the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to provide access to the criminal history record information contained in the National Crime Information Center's (NCIC) Interstate Identification Index (NCIC-III), or to any other information maintained by the NCIC, to any Federal agency or officer authorized to enforce or administer the immigration laws of the United States, for the purpose of such enforcement or administration, upon terms that are consistent with the National Crime Prevention and Privacy Compact Act of 1998 (subtitle A of title II of Public Law 105–251; 42 U.S.C. 14611–16) and section 552a of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 404. LIMITED AUTHORITY TO PAY OVERTIME.

The matter under the headings ''Immigration And Naturalization Service: Salaries and Expenses, Enforcement And Border Affairs'' and ''Immigration And Naturalization Service: Salaries and Expenses, Citizenship And Benefits, Immigration And Program Direction'' in the Department of Justice Appropriations Act, 2001 (as enacted into law by Appendix B (H.R. 5548) of Public Law 106–553 (114 Stat. 2762A–58 to 2762A–59)) is amended by striking the following each place it occurs: ''Provided, That none of the funds available to the Immigration and Naturalization Service shall be available to pay any employee overtime pay in an amount in excess of $30,000 during the calendar year beginning January 1, 2001:''.

SEC. 405. REPORT ON THE INTEGRATED AUTOMATED FINGERPRINT IDENTIFICATION SYSTEM FOR POINTS OF ENTRY AND OVERSEAS CONSULAR POSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the appropriate heads of other Federal agencies, including the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Transportation, shall report to Congress on the feasibility of enhancing the Integrated Automated Fingerprint Identification System (IAFIS) of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other identification systems in order to better identify a person who holds a foreign passport or a visa and may be wanted in connection with a criminal investigation in the United States or abroad, before the issuance of a visa to that person or the entry or exit by that person from the United States.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated not less than $2,000,000 to carry out this section.

Subtitle B—Enhanced Immigration Provisions

SEC. 411. DEFINITIONS RELATING TO TERRORISM.

(1) in subparagraph (B)—

(A) in clause (i)—

(i) by amending subclause (IV) to read as follows:

"(IV) is a representative (as defined in clause (v)) of—

"(aa) a foreign terrorist organization, as designated by the Secretary of State under section 219, or

"(bb) a political, social or other similar group whose public endorsement of acts of terrorist activity the Secretary of State has determined undermines United States efforts to reduce or eliminate terrorist activities,";

(ii) in subclause (V), by inserting "or" after "section 219,"; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subclauses:

"(VI) has used the alien's position of prominence within any country to endorse or espouse terrorist activity, or to persuade others to support terrorist activity or a terrorist organization, in a way that the Secretary of State has determined undermines United States efforts to reduce or eliminate terrorist activities, or

"(VII) is the spouse or child of an alien who is inadmissible under this section, if the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible occurred within the last 5 years,";

(B) by redesignating clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) as clauses (iii), (iv), and (v), respectively;

(C) in clause (i)(II), by striking "clause (iii)" and inserting "clause (iv)";

(D) by inserting after clause (i) the following:

"(ii) EXCEPTION.—Subclause (VII) of clause (i) does not apply to a spouse or child—

"(I) who did not know or should not reasonably have known of the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible under this section; or

"(II) whom the consular officer or Attorney General has reasonable grounds to believe has renounced the activity causing the alien to be found inadmissible under this section.";

(E) in clause (iii) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B))—

(i) by inserting "it had been" before "committed in the United States"; and

(ii) in subclause (V)(b), by striking "or firearm" and inserting ", firearm, or other weapon or dangerous device";

(F) by amending clause (iv) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) to read as follows:

"(iv) ENGAGE IN TERRORIST ACTIVITY DEFINED.—As used in this chapter, the term 'engage in terrorist activity' means, in an individual capacity or as a member of an organization—

"(I) to commit or to incite to commit, under circumstances indicating an intention to cause death or serious bodily injury, a terrorist activity;

"(II) to prepare or plan a terrorist activity;

"(III) to gather information on potential targets for terrorist activity;

"(IV) to solicit funds or other things of value for—

"(aa) a terrorist activity;

"(bb) a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

"(cc) a terrorist organization described in clause (vi)(III), unless the solicitor can demonstrate that he did not know, and should not reasonably have known, that the solicitation would further the organization's terrorist activity;

"(V) to solicit any individual—

"(aa) to engage in conduct otherwise described in this clause;

"(bb) for membership in a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

"(cc) for membership in a terrorist organization described aged or destroyed as the result of any domestic or international terrorism incident;

(B) providing support to counter, investigate, or prosecute domestic or international terrorism, including, without limitation, paying rewards in connection with these activities; and

(C) conducting terrorism threat assessments of Federal agencies and their facilities; and

(2) to reimburse any department or agency of the Federal Government for any costs incurred in connection with detaining in foreign countries individuals accused of acts of terrorism that violate the laws of the United States.

(b) NO EFFECT ON PRIOR APPROPRIATIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to affect the amount or availability of any appropriation to the Counterterrorism Fund made before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 102. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONDEMNING DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ARAB AND MUSLIM AMERICANS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

in clause (vi)(III), unless the solicitor can demonstrate that he did not know, and should not reasonably have known, that the solicitation would further the organization's terrorist activity; or

"(VI) to commit an act that the actor knows, or reasonably should know, affords material support, including a safe house, transportation, communications, funds, transfer of funds or other material financial benefit, false documentation or identification, weapons (including chemical, biological, or radiological weapons), explosives, or training—

"(aa) for the commission of a terrorist activity;

"(bb) to any individual who the actor knows, or reasonably should know, has committed or plans to commit a terrorist activity;

"(cc) to a terrorist organization described in clauses (vi)(I) or (vi)(II); or

"(dd) to a terrorist organization described in clause (vi)(III), unless the actor can demonstrate that he did not know, and should not reasonably have known, that the act would further the organization's terrorist activity.

This clause shall not apply to any material support the alien afforded to an organization or individual that has committed terrorist activity, if the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, or the Attorney General, after consultation with the Secretary of State, concludes in his sole unreviewable discretion, that this clause should not apply."; and

(G) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(I) designated under section 219;

"(II) otherwise designated, upon publication in the Federal Register, by the Secretary of State in consultation with or upon the request of the Attorney General, as a terrorist organization, after finding that it engages in the activities described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (iv), or that it provides material support to further terrorist activity; or

"(III) that is a group of two or more individuals, whether organized or not, which engages in the activities described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (iv)."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(F) ASSOCIATION WITH TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS.—Any alien who the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, or the Attorney General, after consultation with the Secretary of State, determines has been associated with a terrorist organization and intends while in the United States to engage solely, principally, or incidentally in activities that could endanger the welfare, safety, or security of the United States is inadmissible.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 237(a)(4)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(B)) is amended by striking "section 212(a)(3)(B)(iii)" and inserting "section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv)".

(2) Section 208(b)(2)(A)(v) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(A)(v)) is amended by striking "or (IV)" and inserting "(IV), or (VI)".

(c) RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply to—

(A) actions taken by an alien before, on, or after such date; and

(B) all aliens, without regard to the date of entry or attempted entry into the United States—

(i) in removal proceedings on or after such date (except for proceedings in which there has been a final administrative decision before such date); or

(ii) seeking admission to the United States on or after such date.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR ALIENS IN EXCLUSION OR DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, sections 212(a)(3)(B) and 237(a)(4)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended by this Act, shall apply to all aliens in exclusion or deportation proceedings on or after the date of enactment of this Act (except for proceedings in which there has been a final administrative decision before such date) as if such proceedings were removal proceedings.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR SECTION 219 ORGANIZATIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS DESIGNATED UNDER SECTION 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II).—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2), no alien shall be considered inadmissible under section 212(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(3)), or deportable under section 237(a)(4)(B) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(B)), by reason of the amendments made by subsection (a), on the ground that the alien engaged in a terrorist activity described in subclause (IV)(bb), (V)(bb), or (VI)(cc) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a group at any time when the group was not a terrorist organization designated by the Secretary of State under section 219 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1189) or otherwise designated under section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II).

(B) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to prevent an alien from being considered inadmissible or deportable for having engaged in a terrorist activity—

(i) described in subclause (IV)(bb), (V)(bb), or (VI)(cc) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a terrorist organization at any time when such organization was designated by the Secretary of State under section 219 of such Act or otherwise designated under section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II); or

(ii) described in subclause (IV)(cc), (V)(cc), or (VI)(dd) of section 212(a)(3)(B)(iv) of such Act (as so amended) with respect to a terrorist organization described in section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(III).

(4) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, may determine that the amendments made by this section shall not apply with respect to actions by an alien taken outside the United States before the date of enactment of this Act upon the recommendation of a consular officer who has concluded that there is not reasonable ground to believe that the alien knew or reasonably should have known that the actions would further a terrorist activity.

(c) DESIGNATION OF FOREIGN TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 219(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1189(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(B), by inserting "or terrorism (as defined in section 140(d)(2) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1988 and 1989 (22 U.S.C. 2656f(d)(2)), or retains the capability and intent to engage in terrorist activity or terrorism)'' after ''212(a)(3)(B)'';

(2) in paragraph (1)(C), by inserting ''or terrorism'' after ''terrorist activity'';

(3) by amending paragraph (2)(A) to read as follows:

''(A) NOTICE.—

''(i) TO CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS.—Seven days before making a designation under this subsection, the Secretary shall, by classified communication, notify the Speaker and Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore, Majority Leader, and Minority Leader of the Senate, and the members of the relevant committees, in writing, of the intent to designate an organization under this subsection, together with the findings made under paragraph (1) with respect to that organization, and the factual basis therefor.

''(ii) PUBLICATION IN FEDERAL REGISTER.—The Secretary shall publish the designation in the Federal Register seven days after providing the notification under clause (i).";

(4) in paragraph (2)(B)(i), by striking "subparagraph (A)" and inserting "subparagraph (A)(ii)";

(5) in paragraph (2)(C), by striking "paragraph (2)" and inserting "paragraph (2)(A)(i)";

(6) in paragraph (3)(B), by striking "subsection (c)" and inserting "subsection (b)";

(7) in paragraph (4)(B), by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The Secretary also may redesignate such organization at the end of any 2-year redesignation period (but not sooner than 60 days prior to the termination of such period) for an additional 2-year period upon a finding that the relevant circumstances described in paragraph (1) still exist. Any redesignation shall be effective immediately following the end of the prior 2-year designation or redesignation period unless a different effective date is provided in such redesignation.";

(8) in paragraph (6)(A)—

(A) by inserting "or a redesignation made under paragraph (4)(B)" after "paragraph (1)";

(B) in clause (i)—

(i) by inserting "or redesignation" after "designation" the first place it appears; and

(ii) by striking "of the designation"; and

(C) in clause (ii), by striking "of the designation";

(9) in paragraph (6)(B)—

(A) by striking "through (4)" and inserting "and (3)"; and

(B) by inserting at the end the following new sentence: "Any revocation shall take effect on the date specified in the revocation or upon publication in the Federal Register if no effective date is specified.";

(10) in paragraph (7), by inserting ", or the revocation of a redesignation under paragraph (6)," after "paragraph (5) or (6)"; and

(11) in paragraph (8)—

(A) by striking "paragraph (1)(B)" and inserting "paragraph (2)(B), or if a redesignation under this subsection has become effective under paragraph (4)(B)";

(B) by inserting "or an alien in a removal proceeding" after "criminal action"; and

(1) Arab Americans, Muslim Americans, and Americans from South Asia play a vital role in our Nation and are entitled to nothing less than the full rights of every American.

(2) The acts of violence that have been taken against Arab and Muslim Americans since the September 11, 2001, attacks against the United States should be and are condemned by all Americans who value freedom.

(3) The concept of individual responsibility for wrongdoing is sacrosanct in American society, and applies equally to all religious, racial, and ethnic groups.

(4) When American citizens commit acts of violence against those who are, or are perceived to be, of Arab or Muslim descent, they should be punished to the full extent of the law.

(5) Muslim Americans have become so fearful of harassment that many Muslim women are changing the way they dress to avoid becoming targets.

(6) Many Arab Americans and Muslim Americans have acted heroically during the attacks on the United States, including Mohammed Salman Hamdani, a 23-year-old New Yorker of Pakistani descent, who is believed to have gone to the World

(C) by inserting "or redesignation" before "as a defense".

SEC. 412. MANDATORY DETENTION OF SUSPECTED TERRORISTS; HABEAS CORPUS; JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 236 the following:

"MANDATORY DETENTION OF SUSPECTED TERRORISTS; HABEAS CORPUS; JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 236A. (a) DETENTION OF TERRORIST ALIENS.—

"(1) CUSTODY.—The Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who is certified under paragraph (3).

"(2) RELEASE.—Except as provided in paragraphs (5) and (6), the Attorney General shall maintain custody of such an alien until the alien is removed from the United States. Except as provided in paragraph (6), such custody shall be maintained irrespective of any relief from removal for which the alien may be eligible, or any relief from removal granted the alien, until the Attorney General determines that the alien is no longer an alien who may be certified under paragraph (3).

"(3) CERTIFICATION.—The Attorney General may certify an alien under this paragraph if the Attorney General has reasonable grounds to believe that the alien—

"(A) is described in section 212(a)(3)(A)(i), 212(a)(3)(A)(iii), 212(a)(3)(B), 237(a)(4)(A)(i), 237(a)(4)(A)(iii), or 237(a)(4)(B); or

"(B) is engaged in any other activity that endangers the national security of the United States.

"(4) NONDELEGATION.—The Attorney General may delegate the authority provided under paragraph (3) only to the Commissioner. The Commissioner may not delegate such authority.

"(5) COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS.—The Attorney General shall place an alien detained under paragraph (1) in removal proceedings, or shall charge the alien with a criminal offense, not later than 7 days after the commencement of such detention. If the requirement of the preceding sentence is not satisfied, the Attorney General shall release the alien.

"(6) LIMITATION ON INDEFINITE DETENTION.—An alien detained under paragraph (1) who has not been removed under section 241(a)(1)(A), and whose removal is unlikely in the reasonably foreseeable future, may be detained for additional periods of up to six months if the release of the alien will not protect the national security of the United States or adequately ensure the safety of the community or any person.

"(b) HABEAS CORPUS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Judicial review of any action or decision relating to this section (including judicial review of the merits of a determination made under subsection (a)(3) or (a)(6)) is available exclusively in habeas corpus proceedings consistent with this subsection. Except as provided in the preceding sentence, no court shall have jurisdiction to review, by habeas corpus petition or otherwise, any such action or decision.

"(2) APPLICATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including section 2241(a) of title 28, United States Code, habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1) may be initiated only by an application filed with—

"(i) the Supreme Court;

"(ii) any justice of the Supreme Court;

"(iii) any circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; or

"(iv) any district court otherwise having jurisdiction to entertain it.

"(B) APPLICATION TRANSFER.—Section 2241(b) of title 28, United States Code, shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) APPEALS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including section 2253 of title 28, in habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1) before a circuit or district judge, the final order shall be subject to review, on appeal, by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. There shall be no right of appeal in such proceedings to any other circuit court of appeals.

"(4) RULE OF DECISION.—The law applied by the Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall be regarded as the rule of decision in habeas corpus proceedings described in paragraph (1).

"(c) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—The provisions of this section shall not be applicable to any other provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents of the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 236 the following:

"Sec. 236A. Mandatory detention of suspected terrorist; habeas corpus; judicial review.".

(c) REPORTS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, the Attorney General shall submit a report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, with respect to the reporting period, on—

(1) the number of aliens certified under section 236A(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as added by subsection (a);

(2) the grounds for such certifications;

(3) the nationalities of the aliens so certified;

(4) the length of the detention for each alien so certified; and

(5) the number of aliens so certified who—

(A) were granted any form of relief from removal;

(B) were removed;

(C) the Attorney General has determined are no longer aliens who may be so certified; or

(D) were released from detention.

SEC. 413. MULTILATERAL COOPERATION AGAINST TERRORISTS.

Section 222(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1202(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''except that in the discretion of'' and inserting the following: ''except that—

''(1) in the discretion of''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) the Secretary of State, in the Secretary's discretion and on the basis of reciprocity, may provide to a foreign government information in the Department of State's computerized visa lookout database and, when necessary and appropriate, other records covered by this section related to information in the database—

''(A) with regard to individual aliens, at any time on a case-by-case basis for the purpose of preventing, investigating, or punishing acts that would constitute a crime in the United States, including, but not limited to, terrorism or trafficking in controlled substances, persons, or illicit weapons; or

"(B) with regard to any or all aliens in the database, pursuant to such conditions as the Secretary of State shall establish in an agreement with the foreign government in which that government agrees to use such information and records for the purposes described in subparagraph (A) or to deny visas to persons who would be inadmissible to the United States.".

Subtitle C—Preservation of Immigration Benefits for Victims of Terrorism

SEC. 421. SPECIAL IMMIGRANT STATUS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), the Attorney General may provide an alien described in subsection (b) with the status of a special immigrant under section 101(a)(27) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a(27)), if the alien—

(1) files with the Attorney General a petition under section 204 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) for classification under section 203(b)(4) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(b)(4)); and

(2) is otherwise eligible to receive an immigrant visa and is otherwise admissible to the United States for permanent residence, except in determining such admissibility, the grounds for inadmissibility specified in section 212(a)(4) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(4)) shall not apply.

(b) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—

(1) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—An alien is described in this subsection if—

(A) the alien was the beneficiary of—

(i) a petition that was filed with the Attorney General on or before September 11, 2001—

(I) under section 204 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) to classify the alien as a family-sponsored immigrant under section 203(a) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)) or as an employment-based immigrant under section 203(b) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(b)); or

(II) under section 214(d) (8 U.S.C. 1184(d)) of such Act to authorize the issuance of a nonimmigrant visa to the alien under section 101(a)(15)(K) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(K)); or

(ii) an application for labor certification under section 212(a)(5)(A) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(5)(A)) that was filed under regulations of the Secretary of Labor on or before such date; and

(B) such petition or application was revoked or terminated (or otherwise rendered null), either before or after its approval, due to a specified terrorist activity that directly resulted in—

(i) the death or disability of the petitioner, applicant, or alien beneficiary; or

(ii) loss of employment due to physical damage to, or destruction of, the business of the petitioner or applicant.

(2) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An alien is described in this subsection if—

(i) the alien was, on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child of a principal alien described in paragraph (1); and

(ii) the alien—

(I) is accompanying such principal alien; or

(II) is following to join such principal alien not later than September 11, 2003.

(B) CONSTRUCTION.—For purposes of construing the terms "accompanying" and "following to join" in subparagraph (A)(ii), any death of a principal alien that is described in paragraph (1)(B)(i) shall be disregarded.

(3) GRANDPARENTS OF ORPHANS.—An alien is described in this subsection if the alien is a grandparent of a child, both of whose parents died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, if either of such deceased parents was, on September 10, 2001, a citizen or national of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

(c) PRIORITY DATE.—Immigrant visas made available under this section shall be issued to aliens in the order in which a petition on behalf of each such alien is filed with the Attorney General under subsection (a)(1), except that if an alien was assigned a priority date with respect to a petition described in subsection (b)(1)(A)(i), the alien may maintain that priority date.

(d) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS.—For purposes of the application of sections 201 through 203 of the Immigra-

Trade Center to offer rescue assistance and is now missing.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the civil rights and civil liberties of all Americans, including Arab Americans, Muslim Americans, and Americans from South Asia, must be protected, and that every effort must be taken to preserve their safety;

(2) any acts of violence or discrimination against any Americans be condemned; and

(3) the Nation is called upon to recognize the patriotism of fellow citizens from all ethnic, racial, and religious backgrounds.

SEC. 103. INCREASED FUNDING FOR THE TECHNICAL SUPPORT CENTER AT THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the Technical Support Center established in section 811 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (Public Law 104–132) to help meet the demands for activities to combat terrorism and support and enhance the technical support and tactical operations of the FBI, $200,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004.

tion and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151–1153) in any fiscal year, aliens eligible to be provided status under this section shall be treated as special immigrants described in section 101(a)(27) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(27)) who are not described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), or (K) of such section.

SEC. 422. EXTENSION OF FILING OR REENTRY DEADLINES.

(a) AUTOMATIC EXTENSION OF NONIMMIGRANT STATUS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 214 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1184), in the case of an alien described in paragraph (2) who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, the alien may remain lawfully in the United States in the same nonimmigrant status until the later of—

(A) the date such lawful nonimmigrant status otherwise would have terminated if this subsection had not been enacted; or

(B) 1 year after the death or onset of disability described in paragraph (2).

(2) ALIENS DESCRIBED.—

(A) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien was disabled as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(B) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien was, on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child of—

(i) a principal alien described in subparagraph (A); or

(ii) an alien who died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(3) AUTHORIZED EMPLOYMENT.—During the period in which a principal alien or alien spouse is in lawful nonimmigrant status under paragraph (1), the alien shall be provided an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate document signifying authorization of employment not later than 30 days after the alien requests such authorization.

(b) NEW DEADLINES FOR EXTENSION OR CHANGE OF NONIMMIGRANT STATUS.—

(1) FILING DELAYS.—In the case of an alien who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, if the alien was prevented from filing a timely application for an extension or change of nonimmigrant status as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien's application shall be considered timely filed if it is filed not later than 60 days after it otherwise would have been due.

(2) DEPARTURE DELAYS.—In the case of an alien who was lawfully present in the United States as a nonimmigrant on September 10, 2001, if the alien is unable timely to depart the United States as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien shall not be considered to have been unlawfully present in the United States during the period beginning on September 11, 2001, and ending on the date of the alien's departure, if such departure occurs on or before November 11, 2001.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR ALIENS UNABLE TO RETURN FROM ABROAD.—

(A) PRINCIPAL ALIENS.—In the case of an alien who was in a lawful nonimmigrant status on September 10, 2001, but who was not present in the United States on such date, if the alien was prevented from returning to the United States in order to file a timely application for an extension of nonimmigrant status as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity—

(i) the alien's application shall be considered timely filed if it is filed not later than 60 days after it otherwise would have been due; and

(ii) the alien's lawful nonimmigrant status shall be considered to continue until the later of—

(I) the date such status otherwise would have terminated if this subparagraph had not been enacted; or

(II) the date that is 60 days after the date on which the application described in clause (i) otherwise would have been due.

(B) SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.—In the case of an alien who is the spouse or child of a principal alien described in subparagraph (A), if the spouse or child was in a lawful nonimmigrant status on September 10, 2001, the spouse or child may remain lawfully in the United States in the same nonimmigrant status until the later of—

(i) the date such lawful nonimmigrant status otherwise would have terminated if this subparagraph had not been enacted; or

(ii) the date that is 60 days after the date on which the application described in subparagraph (A) otherwise would have been due.

(4) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING TIMELY ACTION.—

(A) FILING DELAYS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), circumstances preventing an alien from timely acting are—

(i) office closures;

(ii) mail or courier service cessations or delays; and

(iii) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(B) DEPARTURE AND RETURN DELAYS.—For purposes of paragraphs (2) and (3), circumstances preventing an alien from timely acting are—

(i) office closures;

(ii) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(iii) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(c) DIVERSITY IMMIGRANTS.—

(1) WAIVER OF FISCAL YEAR LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding section 203(e)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(e)(2)), an immigrant visa number issued to an alien under section 203(c) of such Act for fiscal year 2001 may be used by the alien during the period beginning on October 1, 2001, and ending on April 1, 2002, if the alien establishes that the alien was prevented from using it during fiscal year 2001 as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity.

(2) WORLDWIDE LEVEL.—In the case of an alien entering the United States as a lawful permanent resident, or adjusting to that status, under paragraph (1), the alien shall be counted as a diversity immigrant for fiscal year 2001 for purposes of section 201(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(e)), unless the worldwide level under such section for such year has been exceeded, in which case the alien shall be counted as a diversity immigrant for fiscal year 2002.

(3) TREATMENT OF FAMILY MEMBERS OF CERTAIN ALIENS.—In the case of a principal alien issued an immigrant visa number under section 203(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8

U.S.C. 1153(c)) for fiscal year 2001, if such principal alien died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the aliens who were, on September 10, 2001, the spouse and children of such principal alien shall, if not otherwise entitled to an immigrant status and the immediate issuance of a visa under subsection (a), (b), or (c) of section 203 of such Act, be entitled to the same status, and the same order of consideration, that would have been provided to such alien spouse or child under section 203(d) of such Act if the principal alien were not deceased.

(4) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING TIMELY ACTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), circumstances preventing an alien from using an immigrant visa number during fiscal year 2001 are—

(A) office closures;

(B) mail or courier service cessations or delays;

(C) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(D) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(d) EXTENSION OF EXPIRATION OF IMMIGRANT VISAS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the limitations under section 221(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1201(c)), in the case of any immigrant visa issued to an alien that expires or expired before December 31, 2001, if the alien was unable to effect entry into the United States as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, then the period of validity of the visa is extended until December 31, 2001, unless a longer period of validity is otherwise provided under this subtitle.

(2) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING ENTRY.—For purposes of this subsection, circumstances preventing an alien from effecting entry into the United States are—

(A) office closures;

(B) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(C) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(e) GRANTS OF PAROLE EXTENDED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any parole granted by the Attorney General under section 212(d)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(d)(5)) that expires on a date on or after September 11, 2001, if the alien beneficiary of the parole was unable to return to the United States prior to the expiration date as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the parole is deemed extended for an additional 90 days.

(2) CIRCUMSTANCES PREVENTING RETURN.—For purposes of this subsection, circumstances preventing an alien from timely returning to the United States are—

(A) office closures;

(B) airline flight cessations or delays; and

(C) other closures, cessations, or delays affecting case processing or travel necessary to satisfy legal requirements.

(f) VOLUNTARY DEPARTURE.—Notwithstanding section 240B of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1229c), if a period for voluntary departure under such section expired during the period beginning on September 11, 2001, and ending on October 11, 2001, such voluntary departure period is deemed extended for an additional 30 days.

SEC. 423. HUMANITARIAN RELIEF FOR CERTAIN SURVIVING SPOUSES AND CHILDREN.

(a) TREATMENT AS IMMEDIATE RELATIVES.—

(1) SPOUSES.—Notwithstanding the second sentence of section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(b)(2)(A)(i)), in the case of an alien who was the spouse of a citizen of the United States at the time of the citizen's death and was not legally separated from the citizen at the time of the citizen's death, if the citizen died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien (and each child of the alien) shall be considered, for purposes of section 201(b) of such Act, to remain an immediate relative after the date of the citizen's death, but only if the alien files a petition under section 204(a)(1)(A)(ii) of such Act within 2 years after such date and only until the date the alien remarries. For purposes of such section 204(a)(1)(A)(ii), an alien granted relief under the preceding sentence shall be considered an alien spouse described in the second sentence of section 201(b)(2)(A)(i) of such Act.

(2) CHILDREN.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an alien who was the child of a citizen of the United States at the time of the citizen's death, if the citizen died as a direct result of a specified terrorist activity, the alien shall be considered, for purposes of section 201(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151(b)), to re-

SEC. 104. REQUESTS FOR MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO ENFORCE PROHIBITION IN CERTAIN EMERGENCIES.

Section 2332e of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "2332c" and inserting "2332a"; and

(2) by striking "chemical".

SEC. 105. EXPANSION OF NATIONAL ELECTRONIC CRIME TASK FORCE INITIATIVE.

The Director of the United States Secret Service shall take appropriate actions to develop a national network of electronic crime task forces, based on the New York Electronic Crimes Task Force model, throughout the United States, for the purpose of preventing, detecting, and investigating various forms of electronic crimes, including potential terrorist attacks against critical infrastructure and financial payment systems.

SEC. 106. PRESIDENTIAL AUTHORITY.

Section 203 of the International Emergency Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1702) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1)—

(A) at the end of subparagraph (A) (flush to that subparagraph), by striking "; and" and inserting a comma and the following:

Something is jiggy with Title VIII: Looks like 302 is an earlier version of 805 and 303-304 are identical to 806-807. And the definition of domestic terrorism (803 from the Senate bill) has been deleted from these House bills.

One (28.PDF) is if Conyers agrees to co-sponsor. One (29.PDF) is if he does not. As of this moment, per Steve Pinkos, Conyers has NOT agreed to co-sponsor.

Thanks - that's great. We may be off the hook for Saturday. Marc wants to be able to reach one of us by phone, but may not need us here to draft. I will let him know that you're available if necessary -- albeit under protest.

The next session of ethics training will be held on Tuesday, Oct 16, in OEOB Room 450 at 10-11.

This training, which is mandatory, is for all WHO, OPD, and OVP employees who did not receive ethics training in the large sessions in Room 450 that were held last February and April.

Thank you.

Paper Counsels The President To Go It Alone On Aviation Security, If Need Be. In an editorial today (10/14), the Saint Paul Pioneer Press writes, & President Bush prefers the House GOP model8 of an aviation security bill, & but has suggested he could sign the Senate bill. He has also said he will improve aviation security single-handedly, by executive order, if Congress gets bogged down on the issue. The president's flexibility and sense of urgency both seem sound. (Congressional negotiators need to work out their differences promptly and get a new security structure in place. If they don't, the president should not hesitate to make good his threat to act alone.8

Is one of us going to attend the 8:00 a.m. meeting in the Senate? If so, this won't be a great time. I think we're better off trying a 6:00 p.m. time again -- very few folks have conflicts around then.

still would like to do that quick internal judges meeting to go over remaining vacancies; how about tomorrow right after staff meeting? And we can vow to make the staff meeting itself as quick as possible?

CCIPS Comments on H.R. 2975

The following are proposed technical amendments to the House Bill. Page and line numbers refer to House Bill circulated on October 15, 2001.

I. Important Technical Amendments

A. Section 216(5), page 44, after line 3:
Proposed change: Insert:

> "(6) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.– Section 3124(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or other facility" after "the appropriate line"."

Reason: The amendments contained in the bill insert "or other facility" after "line" throughout the statute to reflect the fact that pen/trap devices are no longer used only on telephone lines (see, e.g., page 40, line 20; page 41, line 13). This change to 3124(b) was inadvertently left out.

B. Section 220(3), page 47, after line 9:
Proposed change: Insert:

> "(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.– Section 2703(d) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "described in section 3127(2)(A)"."

Reason: In order for the amendment in Section 220(2) to have the intended effect of modifying the definition of "court of competent jurisdiction," the 2703(d) cross-reference to another section of title 18 must be struck.

C. Section 814(a)(4), page 155, line 12-15.
Proposed change: Strike "(B) caused (or, in the" and all that follows through "resulted in–" and insert the following:

> "(B) by conduct described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A), caused (or in the case of an attempted offense, would, if completed, have caused)–"

Reason: The language in the bill does not make sense. The above text was taken from the proposed Senate manager's amendment.

D. Section 814(c)(1), page 158, lines 1-3.
Proposed change: Strike subsection (c)(1) and insert the following:

"(1) in subsection (e)(2) after "means a computer" insert "including a computer located outside of the United States"

Reason: Moving the phrase to a different place in the same subsection reduces the risk that the amendment will have negative implications on other statutes that contain this language.

II. Technical Changes To Frank Amendment To Which Rep. Frank Already Agreed

A. Section 223(b)(3), page 51, line 24.
Proposed change: Strike "duties" and insert "functions".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

B. Section 223(c)(1), page 52, line 8.
Proposed change: After "any" insert "willful".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

C. Section 223(c)(1), page 52, line 14.
Proposed change: After "successfully establishes" insert "such".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

D. Section 223(c)(1), page 53, lines 1-5.
Proposed change: Strike "(2) Any action against" and all that follows through "discovers the violation." and insert the following new paragraph (2):

> "(2) Any action against the United States under this section shall be forever barred unless it is presented in writing to the appropriate Federal agency within two years after such claim accrues or unless action is begun within six months after the date of mailing, by certified or registered mail, of notice of final denial of the claim by the agency to which it was presented. The claim shall accrue on the date upon which the claimant first has a reasonable opportunity to discover the violation."

Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

III. Report Language

A. Section 222, page 49, line 6-15:
Proposed change: If possible, insert the following report language:

> "The Act does not require providers to spend money to develop, design, or implement technical capabilities or facilities. Providers must, of course, continue to comply with obligations imposed by court orders to assist in the interception or collection of evidence in criminal investigations."

I seem to be striking out all over the place. The library only has the 2000 version of the civil rules, but that's checked out (although Brad has a copy of the 2000 book in his office).

If you need the text of the rules (since I know a bunch of them changed in the fall of 2000), I can either print them from the internet for you or get them from the US code volumes.

If you really want that 2001 book quickly, I can go to the GWU law school bookstore and buy it.

Let me know what you want me to do.

CCIPS Comments on H.R. 2975

The following are proposed technical amendments to the House Bill. Page and line numbers refer to House Bill circulated on October 15, 2001.

I. Important Technical Amendments

A. Section 216(5), page 44, after line 3:
Proposed change: Insert:

> "(6) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.– Section 3124(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or other facility" after "the appropriate line"."

Reason: The amendments contained in the bill insert "or other facility" after "line" throughout the statute to reflect the fact that pen/trap devices are no longer used only on telephone lines (see, e.g., page 40, line 20; page 41, line 13). This change to 3124(b) was inadvertently left out.

B. Section 220(3), page 47, after line 9:
Proposed change: Insert:

> "(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.– Section 2703(d) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "described in section 3127(2)(A)"."

Reason: In order for the amendment in Section 220(2) to have the intended effect of modifying the definition of "court of competent jurisdiction," the 2703(d) cross-reference to another section of title 18 must be struck.

C. Section 814(a)(4), page 155, line 12-15.
Proposed change: Strike "(B) caused (or, in the" and all that follows through "resulted in–" and insert the following:

> "(B) by conduct described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A), caused (or in the case of an attempted offense, would, if completed, have caused)–"

Reason: The language in the bill does not make sense. The above text was taken from the proposed Senate manager's amendment.

D. Section 814(c)(1), page 158, lines 1-3.
Proposed change: Strike subsection (c)(1) and insert the following:

"(1) in subsection (e)(2) after "means a computer" insert "including a computer located outside of the United States"

Reason: Moving the phrase to a different place in the same subsection reduces the risk that the amendment will have negative implications on other statutes that contain this language.

A. Section 223(b)(3), page 51, line 24.
Proposed change: Strike "duties" and insert "functions".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

B. Section 223(c)(1), page 52, line 8.
Proposed change: After "any" insert "willful".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

C. Section 223(c)(1), page 52, line 14.
Proposed change: After "successfully establishes" insert "such".
Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

D. Section 223(c)(1), page 53, lines 1-5.
Proposed change: Strike "(2) Any action against" and all that follows through "discovers the violation." and insert the following new paragraph (2):

> "(2) Any action against the United States under this section shall be forever barred unless it is presented in writing to the appropriate Federal agency within two years after such claim accrues or unless action is begun within six months after the date of mailing, by certified or registered mail, of notice of final denial of the claim by the agency to which it was presented. The claim shall accrue on the date upon which the claimant first has a reasonable opportunity to discover the violation."

Reason: Rep. Frank agreed to change, but it inadvertently does not appear in the text.

III. Report Language

A. Section 222, page 49, line 6-15:
Proposed change: If possible, insert the following report language:

> "The Act does not require providers to spend money to develop, design, or implement technical capabilities or facilities. Providers must, of course, continue to comply with obligations imposed by court orders to assist in the interception or collection of evidence in criminal investigations."

Today is the primary run-off for the election to replace Asa Hutchinson in Arkansas. The NRCC would like to run ads and drop mail using photographs of former Congressman Hutchinson in support of the Republican nominee for the upcoming general election (November 20).

Ken asked me to check with both of you to determine first if it is legal and second if it's appropriate for this to take place given Cong. Hutchinsons position at DEA.

at this point, it is almost certainly a non-starter; I was just thinking about this some more last night. But on this proposal, primary insurers would pay all life & health claims to their insureds. Injured but uninsured people would be taken care of by government out of general revenues. Property insurers and reinsurers would cover the property claims of their insureds, and government would either kick in on the 80/20 formula or, better yet, simply provide a backstop over a certain aggregate amount for property insurers/reinsurers. Problem is that it would be a hard sell to eliminate tort suits altogether, even though this system would ensure both compensation for victims and stability for insurance, real estate, and construction markets. Anyway, onward . . .

It may make sense. The reaction of the leg team when we raised it last time was that it would be a non-starter on the Hill, but maybe if we describe it as something akin to workers comp -- no fault coverage for certain types of injuries-- it wouldn't seem as controversial. How would the pool be funded?

LEAHY, FEINSTEIN PATCH UP SPAT OVER HER REQUEST FOR NEW JUDGESHIPS
By Amy Fagan, CQ Staff Writer
Oct. 15, 2001 - A month after an angry public spat, Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., and committee member Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., seem ready to bury the hatchet.
Leahy promised Feinstein he would make room in a manager's amendment to the Department of Justice authorization bill (S 1319) for five new U.S. District Court judgeships she wants to create in Southern California.
Feinstein has held off further criticism of the chairman while she awaits markup of the bill, which had been scheduled for last week but was postponed to speed floor consideration of the anti-terrorism bill. The bill now is expected to come up at a markup tentatively set for Oct. 18.
The two Democrats got into a nasty quarrel over Feinstein's judgeship proposal during an initial markup session on the DOJ authorization bill Sept. 13. Feinstein said then she planned to offer her proposal as an amendment to the bill.
Leahy said he would back her effort, but Feinstein was clearly angry he had not offered his support earlier. She said she had written repeatedly to Leahy and other senators to enlist their help on the issue, but received no response.
"I have tried and I have tried and I have tried and now I fight," she said.
"I think everyone knows I support this amendment except the senator from California," Leahy retorted.
The tension crackled throughout the markup. As Feinstein conferred with an aide at one point, Leahy asked her if he was interrupting her discussion with a "higher authority."
Since then, tempers seem to have cooled. Feinstein and Leahy have discussed the issue more than once, and Leahy continues to support the proposal, an aide to Leahy said.
Feinstein says more judges are desperately needed because the eight currently serving in the Southern California district are overwhelmed with thousands of drug and immigration-related cases. Her proposal would automatically create a new federal district judgeship any time the average yearly caseload for each judge in a district exceeds twice the maximum set by the Judicial Conference. This would result in five new judgeships for Southern California and two for the western district of Texas.
The issue was complicated further when other Judiciary members piped up Sept. 13 arguing for judgeships in their states as well. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., and John Edwards, D-N.C., all want to extend or make permanent temporary judgeships in their states.
An aide said Leahy's manager's amendment would likely also include proposals from these three senators.

That is the way it was growing up in Georgia. When someone down the road fell upon hard times, or when sickness beset a family, or when a hurricane or fire destroyed or damaged someone,s house, people instinctively helped in whatever small way they could. Not helping was unthinkable. Good people practiced good deeds, which helped provide for the community,s temporal needs and, in the long run, created an atmosphere that encouraged hard work, integrity, and charity among the young.

Now let us imagine a world where most of us looked to someone else, such as government, to do what we as neighbors, family, friends, and citizens ought to do. Who, may I ask, becomes more virtuous? Such a dependency on the state severs those ties that bind us together and that make each of us more virtuous. That would be a world where, unfortunately, the opportunities to lead by example and thereby inculcate virtues would seem less important. An essential element of the human spirit would be lost.

SENATE ACRIMONY OVER NOMINEES RISES, LEAVES FOREIGN OPS COLD

By Jennifer A. Dlouhy, Noella Kertes and Emily Pierce, CQ Staff Writers

Oct. 16, 2001 - The Senate will try again Wednesday to move forward with the fiscal 2002 foreign operations spending bill, but the chamber's Republicans are showing no signs of breaking their vow to block all appropriations bills until the Senate confirms more of President Bush's judicial nominees.

GOP Policy Committee Chairman Larry E. Craig, Idaho, said Republican senators "are unanimous in their resolve" to stall further floor action on more spending bills.

A vote Wednesday to limit debate on a motion to consider the $15.5 billion foreign operations spending bill (HR 2506) is expected to fail. The first cloture vote that would have allowed the Senate to proceed to the bill failed Oct. 15, after Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., and Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., spent the weekend lobbying their GOP colleagues to continue their delaying tactics.

The pace of judicial nominations was high on the list of topics at the GOP policy lunch Tuesday, said Senate Republican staffers. Judiciary Committee ranking Republican Orrin G. Hatch, Utah, told his colleagues that Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., had warned that senators who voted against cloture Oct. 15 would not have judges from their states confirmed, the aides said. That prompted a heated discussion between at least six senators about Leahy and the speed of confirmations, the aides said.

After the Oct. 15 vote, Democratic leaders immediately filed another cloture motion. Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, S.D., said Tuesday that leaders will continue to ask for cloture until Republicans ease up.

"We will continue to have votes on cloture for whatever length of time it takes to get the job done," Daschle said, expressing frustration with Republican tactics that he called "counter-productive."

The stalemate shows no immediate signs of breaking, as Republicans continue to insist that the Senate vote on more judicial nominees, and Democrats refuse to negotiate.

"There's nothing to negotiate," Daschle said. "All we'll do is continue to do our work in the Judiciary Committee." This week, the Senate is expected to vote on five more judicial nominees -- one circuit court judge and four district court judges. The Senate Judiciary Committee also has scheduled a hearing on as many as five judicial nominees for Thursday.

But that might not be enough to appease Republican senators, who say the Senate has confirmed far fewer judges this year than when the GOP had control of the Senate during the Clinton administration. So far this year, President Bush has made 60 judicial nominations. Of those, 44 had been made before the August recess, Kyl said. The Senate has confirmed eight.

Democrats counter that the Senate has confirmed twice as many judges as it had at similar points during previous administrations.

Republicans want votes on the 44 nominees that had made it to the Senate during the summer, said Senate Minority Whip Don Nickles, Okla.

"Leaders can get together and we can come to a mutually acceptable resolution, which basically means that we can confirm most everybody that was sent up prior to August," Nickles said. "[Under] the previous three presidents we've confirmed almost everybody that was nominated prior to August or at least voted on them. I think we should do the same thing."

Nickles said votes don't have to occur on the judicial nominees before Republicans allow the Senate to move on appropriations bills -- but the GOP wants "a commitment to get it done over the next several weeks." Craig said Republicans won't be satisfied until Daschle instructs Judiciary Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., to pick up the pace on hearings and committee votes on nominees.

Democrats and Republicans stepped up their rhetoric Tuesday on the Senate floor. "This isn't the time to dilly-dally," said Majority Whip Harry Reid, Nev. "We have very important things we need to do for this country, and we are in here in quicksand on judges ... These tactics are not simply dilatory, they're obstructionist."

Reid pledged that the Senate would work to confirm more judges.

"I'm going to do everything that I can to move the judicial nominations along, but we can't do it with this hammer to our head," Reid said. "We're doing the best we can."

Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said the strategy of blocking appropriations bills was one Republicans learned from Democrats when the GOP had control of the Senate. When in the minority, "you use whatever weapon you have," Stevens said.

As a general rule, whoever has those nominees and is familiar with them should attend. If you only have one of the nominees, then at least one other lawyer from our office ought to be attending.

On Thursday morning between 9:00 and 11:00 am you need to go to room 48 in the OEOB.

You will fill out a short form, recieve a quick informational briefing and be test (swabbing of nasal cavity).

Your visit should only take about five minutes total but be prepared to spend a little more time there if there is a bit of a line.

Thanks for the ethics briefing.

I have a few questions regarding our work in intergovernmental affairs. Who do you suggest I talk to regarding our work in support of the President's agenda on capitol hill?

For example, can we encourage state or local officials (who agree with our position) to "educate" members of congress about a particular bill?

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible. Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

REV_00070749

"Because of the Republican filibuster, $42 million that would be available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases, as we fight the war in Afghanistan, is not being provided; $5 billion in direct military assistance to those allies in the region is not being provided; and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided," Daschle said.

Republicans say the anti-terrorist efforts in America need judges to work effectively. The House and Senate are working on an anti-terrorism bill to give law enforcement more power to track down and prosecute suspected terrorists.

But "law enforcement can't make cases to empty courtrooms," Hatch said.

Senate Stalemate Growing More Personal

Congress Daily
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Senate remained at a standstill Tuesday, as the battle over judicial nominees took on an increasingly personal tone and threatened not only FY02 appropriations measures but other initiatives of congressional leaders and the Bush administration.

The dispute is expected to drag into today, as Majority Leader Daschle again tries to invoke cloture to move to the FY02 Foreign Operations appropriations bill.

Senate Republicans vowed to hang tough today and block movement of that bill until they are satisfied that the pace will quicken on processing President Bush's judicial nominations.

Several Republican senators have begun to focus their ire on Judiciary Chairman Leahy, whom they fault for holding up the president's nominees. A senior GOP leadership aide said that several senators had "blasted" Leahy at Tuesday's meeting of the GOP Conference. Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., said he took particular offense at Leahy's conduct during a cloture vote Monday on the Foreign Operations bill. Republicans were able to defeat cloture in protest at what they consider a lack of progress on nominations.

Allard said he and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo., approached Leahy during the vote to tell him they would like to see three Colorado nominees move.

"He indicated that just because of the way both Ben and I voted, that it wasn't going to move," Allard said.

Allard, who had already voted against cloture, said he was not swayed.

"I'm going to vote my conscience," he said. "I'm not going to be blackmailed. I just think it's bad that we're to the point that people like the chairman of Judiciary aren't moving our nominees....

REV_00070750

I'm disappointed that the chairman is being so partisan, at a time when bipartisanship is so important."

Judiciary ranking member Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said Leahy "made some threats" Monday, in particular to block nominations.

"He has to come off that high-horse approach," Hatch said. "There is a belief [within the GOP Conference] that there is a political lack of good faith here."

A spokesman for Leahy unequivocally denied that any threats had been made and said Leahy had personally assured Hatch that he would continue pushing nominations through the committee despite the hang-ups on the floor.

The spokesman said the Judiciary Committee would vote on "four or five" nominees Thursday and hold hearings on another four nominees the same day.

"Some of those are from states represented by a senator who voted against cloture [on the Foreign Operations bill]," the Leahy spokesman said. "The committee has kept up a brisk pace on nominations."

Hatch, the former Judiciary chairman, noted that the GOP- controlled Senate passed nearly as many Clinton administration judicial nominees as a Democratic Senate had passed Reagan nominees.

"I bent over backwards to take care of Leahy and every other Democrat on that committee," Hatch said. "It's a tough job and I commiserate with Sen. Leahy, but our Conference doesn't appreciate threats and bullying."

Aides and senators said no negotiations were taking place to try to settle the nominations issue and free appropriations.

"There's nothing to negotiate," said Daschle. "What we'll do is continue to do our work in the Judiciary Committee."

Daschle also said he was "frankly disappointed that the administration has not spoken out," pointing out that the administration shared his interest in moving spending bills.

Minority Leader Lott defended the GOP's approach. "This is not some new tactic that is being employed on our side.... When you're majority leader, you can huff and puff and talk about how you're not going to negotiate," he said, but "you are in charge of the agenda."

Lott said he and Daschle had tried to resolve the issue. But, Lott said, "The problem is not at the top. It's down the line a little bit, without blaming anybody."

"We're going to stick together," a GOP leadership aide said of Republicans going into today's

cloture vote.

The source also discounted the idea that blocking action on the Foreign Operations bill could be a political liability for Republicans. "Our connection is to terrorism--we need to have as many judges in place as possible," the aide said.

On Tuesday, Daschle vowed to continue filing cloture motions to break the GOP's appropriations filibuster strategy, while holding up key GOP priorities like energy and trade.

Daschle blamed the logjam on "the intransigency of our colleagues on the other side." In addition to the $15.5 billion Foreign Operations bill, the Senate also has not yet considered the FY02 Agriculture, Labor-HHS and District of Columbia spending bills.

GOP Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig of Idaho said Republicans were seeking action on "about 40" nominees whom the Judiciary Committee had been considering before the August break. Craig added that Republicans would be "very resolute" in opposing Democratic efforts to invoke cloture on other pending legislation.

But Daschle enumerated some of the items funded in the Foreign Operations bill as losses to the nation.

"Because of the Republicans' filibuster, $42 million that would have been available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases ... $5 billion in direct military assistance to allies in the region ... and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided."

But Craig said the quagmire on the Senate floor would "drag on until there appears to be a systematic resolution" on moving judicial nominees through the process. And Judiciary member Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., defended GOP tactics from the Senatefloor. "What we're saying is that this is serious business. Moving judges is serious business."

Leahy, who as chairman of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee is the author of the stalled spending bill, told CongressDaily: "I feel sorry for President Bush and Secretary [of State] Powell. Members of their own party are holding the foreign aid bill hostage," while the administration is trying to assemble a broad international coalition to fight terrorism.

"I hope they will talk to members of their party," Leahy said. "We could finish it this afternoon if Republicans would let us."

Appropriations Chairman Byrd and ranking member Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, both expressed frustration that so many FY02 spending bills are stalled as a result of the nominations impasse--but both endorsed their respective leaders' floor strategy.

While Byrd said he believed Daschle "is doing everything he can to move [appropriations bills], Stevens said that despite the delay, "As far as I'm concerned, [the appropriations bills] can wait until they meet us halfway."

Meanwhile, House and Senate appropriators finished work Tuesday on the second FY02 appropriations measure, approving a $10.5 billion request to improve the military's housing and medical facilities, National Journal News Service reported.

The legislation, which would provide $1.5 billion over FY01 amounts and about $529 million over the president's request, should be on the House floor this afternoon, with passage in the Senate to follow.

Conferees noted that money to rebuild the section of the Pentagon destroyed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attack would come from the previously enacted supplemental spending bill passed in the wake of the attack. Additional anti-terrorist measures for the Pentagon and other military installations also will be paid for with funds from that supplemental bill, according to conferees.

GOP 'Hardball' Ploy Aims to Fill Benches; Action Demanded on Bush Nominees

By Donald Lambro
The Washington Times
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

Senate Republican leaders said yesterday they will block action on the foreign aid bill and other legislation until Democrats agree to end their holdup of President Bush's long-stalled judicial nominations.

Their decision to "play hardball" came at yesterday's weekly policy luncheon meeting of Republican senators. Many of them attacked Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy as a "vindictive" partisan who is trying to slow down or block Republican appointments to the bench. A Senate Republican leadership official said the strategy had "the full backing" of the White House.

"They are concerned that the holdup of these nominees threatens the war on terrorism because these judicial vacancies need to be filled as soon as possible to act on law enforcement requests," the official said.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, the committee's ranking Republican, led the attack on Mr. Leahy, telling his colleagues that the Vermont Democrat is threatening to get even with Republican members if they follow through on their legislative blocking strategy.

"Last night he Leahy was pretty irritated and not in a mood to be helpful. If anything, he was threatening. I've heard payback talk," Mr. Hatch told reporters yesterday.

The backroom political struggle over judicial nominees has been simmering ever since the

REV_00070753

Democrats took control of the Senate in July. That was when Mr. Leahy took over the committee and confirmation hearings on Mr. Bush's nominees ground to a halt. The backup now totals 52 nominees, 46 of whom have had no hearings.

But the struggle broke into open warfare when Mr. Hatch told his colleagues at yesterday's meeting that Mr. Leahy had told him that any Republican who voted not to take up the foreign operations bill today "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed."

Mr. Leahy denied the charge.

"The senator said we will continue to move on judicial nominees as we have been, even though many come from states of obstructionist Republicans," his spokesman said.

Calling Mr. Leahy's tactics "purely partisan," Mr. Hatch said, "They're blaming Republicans for holding up the Senate when it seems to me the Democrats have their foot on the brake."

Yet the Republicans' pressure tactics may be working. Mr. Leahy's spokesman announced that his committee would be "voting on many more nominees on Thursday and that afternoon there will be a hearing on four more nominees."

That may not be enough to mollify Republicans who emerged from their luncheon "united that they will vote against taking up the foreign operations bill until we get an agreement from the Democratic leadership," a Republican official said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat, insisted that "we're doing all that we can. As much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The federal judiciary system has at least 108 vacancies, including 39 posts that have been vacant so long that the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies." The Senate has approved only eight judges this year.

Some Republicans suggested yesterday that the White House should get more actively involved in the fray to break the political logjam. "It would be helpful if the president spoke up, but he shouldn't have to," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican, a member of the committee.

Lawyers' Panel Nixes Bunning

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

An American Bar Association panel has told the Senate that the son of Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., is not qualified for the federal bench, an assessment the elder Bunning disagreed with Tuesday.

REV_00070754

Roscoe Trimmier, chairman of the ABA panel that advises the Senate on judicial nominees, said that a majority of the 15-member panel found David Bunning to be unqualified.

Trimmier didn't say why, but it may come down to the federal prosecutor's experience. The bar association recommends that nominees have at least 12 years of experience, but Bunning, of Fort Thomas, Ky., has been a lawyer for 10 years.

In a letter Tuesday to Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., Sen. Bunning said he was surprised and disappointed to hear about the ABA finding. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., also signed the letter.

"We strongly believe that a full and fair hearing is necessary for the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate to effectively exercise its constitutional role of 'advise and consent,'" the senators wrote.

Committee spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said a decision on a hearing had not been made. "We are considering the senators' request for a hearing at this point," she said.

Devlin said Bunning was the only judicial nominee under Senate consideration to receive an unqualified rating. She said it was one of several factors lawmakers would consider.

"Sen. Leahy has always said that each senator should weigh the ABA rating in his or her mind," she said.

Sen. Bunning said he thought his son still had a good shot at being confirmed. "People have become federal district judges even with unfavorable ratings from the ABA," he said.

David Bunning did not return a call seeking comment Tuesday.

While the bar association reviews judicial nominees for the Senate, the Bush administration has decided not to rely on the ABA to investigate lawyers before naming them. That ended a practice dating back to the Eisenhower administration.

Judge Nominee Pulls Out of Club; Questions Raised About Racial Bias

By Bill Walsh
The Times-Picayune
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Jay Zainey, a Metairie lawyer nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against African-Americans.

REV_00070755

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Zainey said that he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries at a time when he is being considered for the federal appointment. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation. "Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

He said in the letter, which he authorized be released to the press, that he was dropping out "with great regret."

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any African-Americans among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and be approved by a committee.

A decade ago, the former club president told The Times-Picayune that there were no black members. Three years ago, a group of civic and church leaders in New Orleans complained to the state Judiciary Commission that a local judge violated ethical standards by belonging to the club, which they called "an all-white institution that had repeatedly denied membership to African-Americans."

However, when the FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey, the agency concluded that the club doesn't discriminate in "policy or in practice."

Still, Zainey was urged by Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, the dean of the Louisiana delegation, to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democratic-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

A spokesman for Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, called Zainey "a fair-minded individual," but said "the membership issue needed to be resolved to remove any doubt."

Rep. David Vitter, R-Metairie, said Zainey "doesn't have a malicious or racist bone in his body" and said it was "a shame" that The Times-Picayune had raised questions about his membership in the country club.

Vitter said Zainey had little choice but to resign because "you would have written a story about it every other day."

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which considers all potential judges, has rejected nominees because of membership in clubs with reputations for discriminating. Nominees generally have been cleared by the panel if they relinquish their memberships.

Judicial Fight Stymies Tense Capitol

By P. Mitchell Prothero
United Press International
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Republican Senate leaders Tuesday continued their refusal to allow spending bills to be considered until they receive promises from the Democratic majority on the future of Bush administration judicial nominees.

Republicans claim that the Democrats have been slow to consider Bush administration nominees for federal judgeships.

The fight -- which had been brewing for several weeks -- exploded Monday evening when a Republican filibuster succeeded in stopping debate on a $15 billion foreign aid bill. The 50-to-46 vote, in which Democrats failed to get the 60 votes necessary to defeat a filibuster, set off a debate that strains the bipartisan mode that has characterized the Senate since Sept. 11. "We'll continue to file cloture motions and try to maintain the comity and keep the spirit we've had in place the last five weeks in place," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said of his party's strategy for dealing with the delays.

Besides the Foreign Operations spending bill, Republicans have vowed to block three other major spending bills, including the agriculture bill, a District of Columbia appropriations bill and the Labor-HHS-Education bill until Democrats agree to a hearing and vote schedule for the 108 unfilled federal judgeships that remain open.

"I don't remember a log-jam like this one before," said Republican Orrin Hatch of Utah, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, of the vacancies.

Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., spoke from the Senate floor about the responsibilities of the upper chamber. "This is an essential part of our job here in the Senate, the confirming of these judges," he said.

"We must use all the time left until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetrated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice. That should be a top priority for the Senate for the rest of the year."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., dismissed the claim that his party has mistreated Bush administration nominees, arguing that current events and the change-over of the majority party in the Senate earlier this year have slow the pace. He also claimed that Bush's nominees would receive fair consideration, particularly compared with the Clinton administration's judges.

"I think that when we're done ... they'll see that President Bush's nominees were treated more fairly that President Clinton's were. Having said that, I wonder what in heaven's name this masochistic attitude (is) that is holding up this bill so they can make political points on Sunday morning talk shows," Leahy said from the Senate floor.

"We had 34 months when they didn't even have hearings on judges," he added later. "We've been doing hearings every single month, whether we've been in recess or not."

Leahy and Democratic staff have also said that some nominees have been slow to return confirmation information to the committees and that standard background checks have also been delayed.

But although Republican senators continue to hold enough votes to maintain a filibuster -- at least for now -- Daschle said that some of their favorite legislation could lose a chance at consideration should the delays continue.

When asked by a reporter if he planned to schedule a debate on comprehensive energy legislation -- a topic dear to many prominent Republicans, including the president -- Daschle reminded his GOP colleagues about the power of the majority leader to control the floor.

"I am most amused about the question regarding the scheduling of energy legislation given the current tactics by our Republicans on appropriations bills," Daschle said. "As soon as they tell me when they'll stop this counter-productive effort to stop consideration of appropriations bills, I might be able to tell you when we will schedule an energy bill."

GOP Seeks Action on Bush Nominees

The Washington Post
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Senate Republicans blocked a $ 15.5 billion foreign aid bill yesterday in an effort to force Democrats to step up the pace of confirmations for President Bush's judicial nominees.

On a 50 to 46 party-line vote, the Democrats fell 10 votes short of the 60 needed to break a GOP filibuster and force consideration of a relatively noncontroversial foreign aid measure.

Republicans said they would continue to block some necessary spending bills until Democrats agreed to hit the accelerator on Bush's pending judicial nominations. "We've got to speed up the process here," said Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.). "Let's call a timeout, let's go to nominations, and when there are a sufficient number of nominations completed, we'll go back to other priorities."

But Democrats questioned why Republicans would hold up a key foreign aid bill at a time Bush was trying to galvanize international support for the war on terrorism. The foreign aid bill includes funds for key Middle East allies the United States is relying on during its military operations against Afghanistan.

"This is not the time to horse trade on judges," said Democratic Whip Harry M. Reid (Nev.), calling the move "wrong-headed."

The Senate has approved eight of Bush's 60 judicial nominations, a rate that Republicans say badly lags behind the first-year confirmation totals of the three previous administrations.

"We're way behind. We've got a lot of catching up to do," said Sen. Don Nickles (Okla.), the chamber's second-ranking Republican.

But Senate Democrats harshly disputed claims they were deliberately slowing the process, pointing out that Republicans controlled the Senate during the first four months of the administration and never held a confirmation hearing on a judge.

Democrats took a one-seat margin of power in the Senate in June when Vermont Republican James M. Jeffords became an independent.

"No one is saying we aren't going to confirm judges," said Reid. "Let us do our work here. This is a matter of common sense."

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations foreign operations subcommittee, was even more harsh, likening Republicans to "petulant children in the schoolyard."

The dispute marked another step back into the partisan skirmishing prevalent in the Senate prior to the deadly Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington.

Kyl said Republicans would not hold up all House-Senate conference reports on completed spending bills. Five spending bills -- foreign aid, agriculture, labor and education, the District of Columbia and defense -- have not been taken up by the full Senate.

Senate Still Battling Over Bush's Judicial Nominees

By Jonathan Ringel
American Lawyer Media
Thursday, October 18, 2001

In between enduring anthrax exposure, passing anti-terrorism bills and considering measures to fund the government, senators still have found time this week to bicker about judicial confirmations.

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a foreign aid appropriation bill in an effort to force the

REV_00070759

Democratic majority to confirm dozens of President George W. Bush's nominees.

Democrats say they are moving as fast as they can-and if the Senate stays in session through November, that as many as 25 to 30 Bush picks could be confirmed.

Bush so far has made 60 nominations to the lifetime posts on the federal bench, 25 for the circuit courts and 35 for the district courts. Since the Democrats took over the Senate in June, eight judges have been confirmed, four each for the appeals courts and the district courts.

Another five-one circuit nominee and four district nominees-have had hearings and are expected to move through the Judiciary Committee and on to confirmation soon.

Yet another circuit nominee and three district nominees were scheduled to have hearings today. Those hearings may be postponed, however, as authorities Wednesday were considering shutting the Capitol complex down to test for anthrax exposure.

A spokeswoman to Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who chairs the Judiciary Committee, reported that two more hearings - in addition to the one scheduled for today - will occur if the Senate stays in session through November. If five nominees appear at each hearing, that would mean 27 nominees would have had hearings.

"The numbers show that the committee's record meets or exceeds the pace of previous years, despite the limited amount of time it has had to consider nominees," said Mimi Devlin, the spokeswoman.

Devlin reported that in 1989, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 15 judicial nominees during the first year under President George Bush. In 1993, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 27 of President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees.

But in a floor debate last week, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, accused Leahy and the Democrats of moving too slowly on Bush's judges.

Hatch pointed out that most judges nominated by the time of the August recess in the first year of a presidency usually get confirmed. Bush made 44 nominations before the August recess - far more than any president in recent memory.

The confirmation rate of circuit court judges particularly vexed Hatch, who said that Clinton got three of his five circuit court nominees through in his first year.

"That is 60 percent," said Hatch, arguing that 60 percent of Bush's 25 circuit court nominees should get through by the end of the year.

The Democrats' claim that they're keeping up with recent confirmation paces, he said, "is an unfair comparison when you take into account the fact that President Bush has chosen to nominate 20 more circuit court nominees than President Clinton did in his first year."

REV_00070760

During the last six years of the Clinton administration, Hatch drew fire from Democrats for allowing some Republicans to block nominees, particularly circuit court picks. In 1996, a spat between Hatch and the White House led to no circuit court nominees getting hearings. Nonetheless, Clinton ended up nearly tying Ronald Reagan's all-time record for placing the most judges on the federal bench.

During the brief floor debate, which occurred between the Senate's handling aviation security bills and anti-terrorism bills, Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., acknowledged that this is an old fight.

"It is amazing how history repeats itself," he said. "What you were saying last year, we are saying this year. I guess before that, we were saying it or you were saying it."

The circuit nominee scheduled for today's hearing is Charles Pickering Sr., a Mississippi federal district judge tapped for the Fifth Circuit.

Hispanic National Bar Association Endorses Appointment of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Hispanic National Bar Association, national voice of over 25,000 Hispanic lawyers in the United States, issues its endorsement of President George W. Bush's nominee, Mr. Miguel Estrada, to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Estrada would be the first Hispanic to sit in the D.C. Circuit, widely regarded as the second most important appellate court in the nation. Estrada, who emigrated from Honduras at seventeen, is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP. A member of the firm's Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group and its Business Crimes and Investigations Practice Group, Estrada clerked for the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy in the U.S. Supreme Court from 1988-1989, and has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

A 1983 magna cum laude graduate of Columbia College in New York, Estrada received a J.D. degree magna cum laude in 1986 from Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the Harvard Law Review.

President Bush nominated Estrada in May of this year. "Mr. Estrada's distinguished and impressive career illustrates the promise and opportunity that America offers to all immigrants, specially Hispanic immigrants. It is encouraging that President Bush has started tapping in the substantial pool of Hispanic legal talent throughout the country. Mr. Estrada's confirmation will break new ground for Hispanics in the judiciary. The time has come to move on Mr. Estrada's nomination. I urge the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to schedule a hearing on Mr. Estrada's nomination and the U.S. Senate to bring this highly qualified nominee to a vote." said Rafael A. Santiago, of Hartford, Connecticut, National

Leahy's War Cover

The Wall Street Journal
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Senate Republicans are a tower of babblers, so when nearly all of them agree on something it's news. This week they've been riled into a rare burst of unity by Democrat Pat Leahy's unprecedented stonewalling on judges.

Simply put, the Senate Judiciary Chairman is using the war on terrorism as cover to slow roll the confirmation of President Bush's judicial nominees. In normal times, the media might report his delaying tactics and Mr. Bush might make them an issue. But the White House, now in bipartisan war mode, doesn't want to make a fuss over anything outside its anti-terror campaign. Mr. Leahy is exploiting that good will for his own partisan ends.

There's really no other way to explain that 10 months into this Administration Mr. Leahy has confirmed a mere eight of the 60 judicial nominations Mr. Bush has made, including 44 by the August recess. With only weeks to go before Congress goes home for the year, only 14 have even had a hearing. This kind of delay typically occurs only in the final year of a Presidency, before an election. It's unheard of in first years, when Ronald Reagan had 41 judges confirmed, George H.W. Bush 15, and Bill Clinton 28.

Mr. Leahy knows this, or at least he did when Mr. Clinton was President. In 1999, when the federal courts had a mere 59 unfilled seats, he wailed about a "crisis." Yet now, thanks to his foot-dragging, there are 109 vacancies, nearly 13% of the entire federal bench. It is true enough that some Republicans abused their advise and consent power under Bill Clinton, but Pat Leahy makes Jesse Helms look like Little Lord Fauntleroy.

We might even credit Mr. Leahy's excuse that he's been busy with anti-terror legislation. But then what to make of the fact that, despite GOP objections, he is also changing the long-time questionnaire for judicial nominees? From now on nominees will have to disclose any previous drug charges and whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative hearing." Senators can already see all of this information in confidential FBI files. But Mr. Leahy's revised questionnaire means that the stuff of bad divorces and teenage marijuana busts will be available to Judiciary staff. The chances of this stuff leaking to the press are 110%.

Mr. Leahy, a self-styled privacy advocate, is also demanding that nominees itemize "all political contributions." These are the same nominees that Mr. Leahy insists must be non-ideological and non-political. Imagine the uproar if former GOP Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch had pulled a stunt like this.

REV_00070762

In an October 1 letter to Mr. Leahy, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales wrote that this new questionnaire "may have the likely effect of unnecessarily invading a candidate's personal privacy" without adding any more information for Senators. "If we go down this road, I fear that many qualified people will elect not to participate in this process," Mr. Gonzales added. Which may be exactly what Mr. Leahy intends. If anyone the least bit controversial -- i.e., conservative -- is nominated, Mr.
Leahy may want them to know they could face public embarrassment and a political torching. By any definition, this is an abuse of Senate power, rendering meaningless the debate over judges in a Presidential election.

Which is why fed-up Republicans are fighting back with their own Senate prerogatives. They're uniting to slow down spending bills until Mr. Leahy decides to move more judges. The strategy was invented by current Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle in the final year of the Clinton Presidency. But Mr. Leahy's calm, adult response this week was to call Republicans "petulant children in the school yard." Well, he ought to know.

It's about time someone blew away Mr. Leahy's war-time political cover.

End the Leahy Stall; 'Sen. Leahy Should Stop Playing Partisan Politics With the Federal Courts,' AR's Richard Lessner

PR Newswire
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

American Renewal today issued a statement of support for the effort by Republicans in the U.S. Senate to break the blockade on President Bush's judicial nominations.

"Sen. Patrick Leahy is stalling," American Renewal executive director Richard Lessner said, noting that vacancies on the federal bench have increased to 110 from 67 the day President Bush took office.
"The chairman of the Judiciary Committee is engaged in a sophisticated slowdown. The vacancy crisis in the federal courts continues to worsen, yet Sen. Leahy refuses to follow long established Senate procedures and move nominees through the confirmation process in an expeditious manner.

"When Bill Clinton occupied the White House, Sen. Leahy and other Democrats declared far fewer vacancies to be a national crisis," Lessner said. "But now that George W. Bush is president, Sen. Leahy seems to be in no hurry to confirm judges despite the growing backlog of nominees and increasing number of court vacancies."

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a vote on a foreign aid bill in an effort to force Majority Leader Tom Daschle to act to break the blockade in the Judiciary Committee.

"It is unfortunate that it had to come to this," Lessner said, "but the minority Republicans have few other options under Senate rules to force Sen. Leahy's hand. The pace of confirmations is lagging far behind that in any of the three previous administrations. And it is clear that Sen. Leahy is cherry-picking for hearings those nominees he personally finds politically acceptable, while stalling superbly qualified nominees he opposes for ideological reasons.

"Sen. Leahy should stop playing partisan politics with the federal courts and start giving President Bush's judicial nominees the fair hearings they deserve."

NARAL Opposes Confirmation Of Charles Pickering and Tactic Of Blocking Appropriations Bills For Court- Packing Plan

Lott Leads Anti-Choice Strategy

NARAL President Kate Michelman announced today that NARAL opposes the confirmation of Charles Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"Judge Pickering is a staunch opponent of Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose. He was a prime architect of the 1976 Republican Party platform plank that protested the Roe decision and called for a constitutional amendment banning abortion," said Michelman.

"Judge Pickering is the first demonstrably anti-choice judicial nominee to the Court of Appeals to get a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. He has been nominated for a lifetime position on the bench. If confirmed, the decisions he makes could affect the reproductive rights of women for generations to come. "

Thursday on his nomination to the appellate court.

"Even in these trying times, opponents of a woman's right to freedom of choice continue to press their goal of packing the court with anti-choice judges. They are willing to risk funding of our national government in order to short circuit the judicial confirmation process in the U.S. Senate. It is unconscionable that the Senate Republican Leadership would hold up the entire appropriations process to impose their own ideological agenda upon the nation's courts," said Michelman.

Potential Closed-Door Hearing on Judicial Nominees Today "Would be Undemocratic and Unacceptable," Says PFAW's Neas

People for the American Way

REV_00070764

Thursday, October 18, 2001

There are indications that the Senate Judiciary Committee plans to consider this afternoon several judicial nominees, including a controversial nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Charles Pickering, at a hearing that could be in effect closed to the public due to security measures on Capitol Hill. People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas today urged Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy not to hold closed-door hearings on any judicial nominees.

"De facto closed-door hearings on federal judicial nominees are undemocratic and unacceptable," said Neas. "People For the American Way urges Senator Leahy not to establish a precedent that undermines the principles of open and accountable government and shuts the public out of this critically important process."

Reportedly the hearing might be inaccessible to the public due to security precautions that have shut Senate office buildings temporarily and put restrictions on public access to the Capitol. Neas said the hearing on nominations to lifetime positions on the federal bench should be postponed if the public cannot be guaranteed access to the hearing. "Considering these judicial nominees is not a matter of national security, or of such great urgency that we must violate fundamental principles of democratic government," said Neas. "In particular, there are many reasons to postpone the hastily scheduled hearing on Judge Pickering so that the public can make sure that senators have time to thoroughly consider the nominee's record." Neas said that if the hearing goes forward, the Judiciary Committee must hold a second hearing, accessible to the public, after the transcript of the first hearing is made available.

"It is particularly important in this time of crisis that we affirm, rather than abandon, the principles of democratic self-governance," said Neas.

Clash Coming on GOP Showdown for Bush Judicial Nominees

CNN.com
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

REV_00070741

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-South Dakota, planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible.

Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Kentucky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Arizona, says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

"Because of the Republican filibuster, $42 million that would be available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases, as we fight the war in Afghanistan, is not being provided; $5 billion in direct military assistance to those allies in the region is not being provided; and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided," Daschle said.

Republicans say the anti-terrorist efforts in America need judges to work effectively. The House and Senate are working on an anti-terrorism bill to give law enforcement more power to track down and prosecute suspected terrorists.

But "law enforcement can't make cases to empty courtrooms," Hatch said.

Republicans, Leahy Continue to Clash

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Despite growing anxiety about the threat of anthrax, Senate and House leaders said yesterday that business will continue to proceed as normally as possible and that there will still be serious policy disputes over critical issues in the coming days and weeks.

"We will not let this stop the work of the Senate," Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) said at a press conference in which he announced that 31 individuals, mostly members of his staff, had tested positive for anthrax exposure.

As if to prove the point, the Senate went ahead and overwhelmingly approved the Interior appropriations conference report late Wednesday afternoon and is expected to pass the military construction conference report today. And with serious prodding from the White House, House and Senate negotiators were very close to reaching bipartisan consensus on an anti-terrorism package that would reconcile the previously vast differences between the bills passed by the two chambers, aides said.

But the Senate remained gridlocked over how to move the remaining appropriations bills it needs to move to House-Senate conferences, as Republicans maintained that they would continue blocking the spending bills because of the slow pace on judicial nominations.

If anything, that dispute has grown more bitter and partisan in recent days.

Colorado GOP Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell this week accused Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) of threatening the future prospects of their home-state judicial nominees.

According to Allard, he and Campbell approached Leahy during a cloture vote Monday night on the foreign operations spending bill and asked the Vermont Senator if he could quickly bump up three judicial nominees from their state close to the top of the list of nominees being considered.

At that point Leahy, who also chairs the foreign operations subcommittee, wanted to know if the pair was supporting the GOP blockade on appropriations, according to Allard. "Well, he asked, 'How did you vote on that bill?,'" Allard said.

"If I go ahead and vote for cloture, you'd move my judges to the top?" Allard recalled asking Leahy. "He said, 'Yep.'"

Campbell stood by that account of events yesterday, adding, "It's just unfortunate that Senator Leahy is holding up these nominations."

Leahy did not specifically deny the conversation with Allard and Campbell, but his staff hinted that the Colorado Senators may have misinterpreted comments that were intended to be a joke.

"He's one of the senators from the old school who does not discuss conversations with other senators," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "But it's probably fair to say that if Senator Allard approached Senator Leahy right then to talk about any newly received nominations, the opportunity for irony would have been especially high."

Leahy plans to hold an executive meeting today in one of the meeting rooms off the Senate floor, since the regular hearing room in the Dirksen building will be closed. He expects the committee to approve five judicial nominations as well as 13 U.S. attorneys and one post related to the Justice Department.

After the executive meeting, the Judiciary panel plans to hold a nomination hearing for another four judges. Of those judicial nominees who will be approved or have their hearing, most come from states with Senators who voted against cloture on the spending bill.

"That kind of says it all," Carle said.

Some GOP Senators, however, said they view Leahy's comments to Allard and Campbell as part of an overall effort to slow the nomination process. "This is too important a process to play that kind of political game," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), ranking Member on Judiciary's subcommittee overseeing the federal bench.

Sen. Larry Craig (Idaho), chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said Leahy so far had made a "meager effort" in approving judges, eight of whom have been confirmed by the full Senate with almost another 50 awaiting action. Craig said Daschle has "failed to instruct" Leahy to pass more judges out of his committee, noting that the Majority Leader has forced chairmen to pass key bills out of their panels or risk having them brought to the floor without committee approval.

"I see that as a disconnect of leadership or at least an inconsistency," Craig said.

REV_00070744

At Tuesday's GOP luncheon, at least half a dozen Senators stood up to complain in highly personal terms about Leahy's handling of the judicial process, according to a GOP aide who was present.

Democrats, however, are standing solidly behind the Vermont lawmaker.

Daschle said Tuesday he was "very appreciative" of Leahy's work in handling the nomination process, saying any delays were due to paperwork problems and the White House's decision to not first vet nominees through the American Bar Association, a process that now takes place once a nomination arrives on Capitol Hill.

"We're doing the best we can," he added.

Daschle also said there was nothing to negotiate about with Republicans and Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) as far as the pace of judicial nominees is concerned, setting up a potentially lengthy standoff over judges and appropriations. "We talk about it a lot, but there are no negotiations," he said.

On the House side, Appropriations Chairman Bill Young (R-Fla.) said his committee would continue to move bills and conference reports on a "regular" basis. He said further delays caused by safety precautions may force Congress to pass another continuing resolution at the end of this month to fund government operations, but said passing an "omnibus" bill with all remaining spending measures was not something he predicted would happen.

Daschle had planned to hold another cloture vote on foreign operations yesterday morning, but that was canceled after the revelations about the number of staffers who initially tested for anthrax exposure.

This prompted Senate leaders to hold a bipartisan conference in the Senate dining room, the third such extraordinary gathering of all Senators since the Sept. 11 attacks. The Senators received a briefing from top medical experts in the administration on the threats from the deadly chemical.

Exiting the meeting, Senators said there was a unanimous feeling of support for Daschle and for maximizing the safety of staffers and others in the Capitol complex.

"There's total unity here. There's total support for Daschle," Craig said.

"Everybody feels very together now. Whether that applies to other issues, I don't know," said Sen. Paul Wellstone (D-Minn.).

The second cloture vote on foreign operations is expected to come early next week. Because of all the distractions that Daschle has faced this week, Craig said it made sense to put off this contentious bill for now and allow less controversial legislation to move this week.

REV_00070745

When the more divisive issues are revisited next week, the fighting is expected to resume. Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.), a senior Judiciary member, said he fully expects the Republicans to block the foreign operations bill.

"It'll be the same vote as before," he said. "Nothing has changed."

Report Documents Unprecedented Situation with Federal Judiciary, Calls for Unprecedented Bipartisan Solution

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

People For the American Way Foundation President Ralph G. Neas today called on President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate to engage in an unprecedented bipartisan approach to judicial nominations in order to minimize the number of divisive nomination battles and to prevent a complete takeover of the federal judiciary by right-wing ideologues.

In a report released today, he also urged Senators to resist right-wing pressure to confirm nominees without sufficient opportunity to consider their qualifications and judicial philosophy.

"President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate must recognize that we face an unprecedented situation in the federal judiciary," said Neas, "one that calls for an unprecedented bipartisan solution."

The PFAWF report debunks accusations that Bush administration's nominees are being treated unfairly by the Senate, and documents the unprecedented blockade waged by some Senate Republicans, many of whom now clamor for immediate votes on Bush administration judicial nominees, against highly qualified Clinton administration nominees, especially to the critical federal appeals courts. That campaign set the stage for all thirteen of the federal appeals courts to be dominated by judges appointed by a single political party by the end of the Bush administration, an unprecedented situation. If President Bush follows the urging of right-wing advocates to appoint only far-right ideologues to those positions, the impact on Americans' rights and freedoms could be devastating for decades. People For the American Way Foundation researchers reviewed Congressional Research Service statistics, comparing the Senate record on judicial nominations during 1995-2000, when Republicans controlled the Senate and President Clinton submitted nominees, and 1987-1992, when Republican presidents submitted nominees to a Democratic-majority Senate. The results are stark and clear:

-- During the years Republicans controlled the Senate, 45.3 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were returned to the White House, a rate 72 percent higher than the 26.3 percent return rate for Presidents Reagan and Bush when Democrats controlled the Senate. (None of the returned Clinton appellate court nominees were voted down -- not a single one of them was allowed to come up for a vote.)

REV_00070746

-- During the final two years of Clinton's term, the blockade was even tighter, with less than half of Clinton's appeals courts nominees being confirmed. More specifically, during the 106th Congress, 56 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were blocked. This failure rate for President Clinton's appeals court nominees was 60 percent higher than for Presidents Reagan or George H.W. Bush, each of whom saw only 35 percent of his appeals court nominees go unconfirmed in the 101st and 102nd Congresses, respectively.

If numbers are calculated so as to eliminate the effect of multiple nominations of individual nominees, serious discrepancies remain. Under this analysis, appeals court nominees were blocked during the six years Republicans controlled the Senate under President Clinton at a rate nearly 40 percent higher than during the six years Democrats controlled the Senate under Presidents Reagan and Bush -- 35 percent under Clinton vs. 25 percent under Reagan and Bush. See the full report for a further note on methodology.

Neas noted that Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott recently threatened to hold up the appropriations process if Bush judicial nominees were not given swift consideration, and yesterday Senate Republicans blocked action on a foreign aid bill. Neas said such calls for action by Lott and other right-wing leaders, including Attorney General John Ashcroft, showed "remarkable chutzpah, if not outright hypocrisy," given their involvement in the stalling campaign against Clinton administration nominees.

Neas also noted that, in the face of pressure from Lott and others, one judicial nominee was recently approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee in closed session and by the full Senate despite pending concerns about his record, and a controversial nominee was scheduled for a hearing with five working days' notice, making it impossible for senators to conduct a thorough review of his record. Neas called such actions "unfortunate and unacceptable."

The report calls on both President Bush and the Senate to act in accordance with their constitutional roles and with recognition of the unprecedented situation facing the federal judiciary. Among the report's recommendations:

-- President Bush should work closely with Senate Democrats in an attempt to repair the damage done by six years of Republican obstruction, restore the pre-nomination role of the ABA, and seek out nominees who are not right-wing ideologues and who demonstrate an understanding of and commitment to civil and constitutional rights.

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy should move judicial nominations only when the committee has had time to give them sufficient consideration.

-- The Senate should carefully and thoroughly review the President's nominees, particularly for the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court. They should hold out a clear standard of commitment to civil and constitutional rights, as more than 200 law professors have recently suggested. Mainstream nominees that reflect genuine bipartisan consideration should receive priority in processing.

REV_00070747

-- The Senate should not hesitate to fulfill its constitutional responsibility of rejecting and withholding its consent from nominees who do not demonstrate qualifications that include a firm commitment to broad principles of equality and individual rights and an abiding respect for the Constitution and for the constitutional authority of the Congress.

Lawyer Quits Country Club After Nomination

The Advocate
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A Metairie lawyer, nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against black people.

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Jay Zainey said he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries while he is being considered for U.S. Senate confirmation. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation.

"Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any black people among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and must be approved by a committee.

The FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey and concluded that the club does not discriminate, an FBI spokesman said.

U.S. Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, urged Zainey to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democrat-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible. Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

REV_00070788

"Because of the Republican filibuster, $42 million that would be available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases, as we fight the war in Afghanistan, is not being provided; $5 billion in direct military assistance to those allies in the region is not being provided; and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided," Daschle said.

Republicans say the anti-terrorist efforts in America need judges to work effectively. The House and Senate are working on an anti-terrorism bill to give law enforcement more power to track down and prosecute suspected terrorists.

But "law enforcement can't make cases to empty courtrooms," Hatch said.

Senate Stalemate Growing More Personal

Congress Daily
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Senate remained at a standstill Tuesday, as the battle over judicial nominees took on an increasingly personal tone and threatened not only FY02 appropriations measures but other initiatives of congressional leaders and the Bush administration.

The dispute is expected to drag into today, as Majority Leader Daschle again tries to invoke cloture to move to the FY02 Foreign Operations appropriations bill.

Senate Republicans vowed to hang tough today and block movement of that bill until they are satisfied that the pace will quicken on processing President Bush's judicial nominations.

Several Republican senators have begun to focus their ire on Judiciary Chairman Leahy, whom they fault for holding up the president's nominees. A senior GOP leadership aide said that several senators had "blasted" Leahy at Tuesday's meeting of the GOP Conference. Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., said he took particular offense at Leahy's conduct during a cloture vote Monday on the Foreign Operations bill. Republicans were able to defeat cloture in protest at what they consider a lack of progress on nominations.

Allard said he and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo., approached Leahy during the vote to tell him they would like to see three Colorado nominees move.

"He indicated that just because of the way both Ben and I voted, that it wasn't going to move," Allard said.

Allard, who had already voted against cloture, said he was not swayed.

"I'm going to vote my conscience," he said. "I'm not going to be blackmailed. I just think it's bad that we're to the point that people like the chairman of Judiciary aren't moving our nominees....

REV_00070789

I'm disappointed that the chairman is being so partisan, at a time when bipartisanship is so important."

Judiciary ranking member Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said Leahy "made some threats" Monday, in particular to block nominations.

"He has to come off that high-horse approach," Hatch said. "There is a belief [within the GOP Conference] that there is a political lack of good faith here."

A spokesman for Leahy unequivocally denied that any threats had been made and said Leahy had personally assured Hatch that he would continue pushing nominations through the committee despite the hang-ups on the floor.

The spokesman said the Judiciary Committee would vote on "four or five" nominees Thursday and hold hearings on another four nominees the same day.

"Some of those are from states represented by a senator who voted against cloture [on the Foreign Operations bill]," the Leahy spokesman said. "The committee has kept up a brisk pace on nominations."

Hatch, the former Judiciary chairman, noted that the GOP- controlled Senate passed nearly as many Clinton administration judicial nominees as a Democratic Senate had passed Reagan nominees.

"I bent over backwards to take care of Leahy and every other Democrat on that committee," Hatch said. "It's a tough job and I commiserate with Sen. Leahy, but our Conference doesn't appreciate threats and bullying."

Aides and senators said no negotiations were taking place to try to settle the nominations issue and free appropriations.

"There's nothing to negotiate," said Daschle. "What we'll do is continue to do our work in the Judiciary Committee."

Daschle also said he was "frankly disappointed that the administration has not spoken out," pointing out that the administration shared his interest in moving spending bills.

Minority Leader Lott defended the GOP's approach. "This is not some new tactic that is being employed on our side.... When you're majority leader, you can huff and puff and talk about how you're not going to negotiate," he said, but "you are in charge of the agenda."

Lott said he and Daschle had tried to resolve the issue. But, Lott said, "The problem is not at the top. It's down the line a little bit, without blaming anybody."

"We're going to stick together," a GOP leadership aide said of Republicans going into today's

cloture vote.

The source also discounted the idea that blocking action on the Foreign Operations bill could be a political liability for Republicans. "Our connection is to terrorism--we need to have as many judges in place as possible," the aide said.

On Tuesday, Daschle vowed to continue filing cloture motions to break the GOP's appropriations filibuster strategy, while holding up key GOP priorities like energy and trade.

Daschle blamed the logjam on "the intransigency of our colleagues on the other side." In addition to the $15.5 billion Foreign Operations bill, the Senate also has not yet considered the FY02 Agriculture, Labor-HHS and District of Columbia spending bills.

GOP Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig of Idaho said Republicans were seeking action on "about 40" nominees whom the Judiciary Committee had been considering before the August break. Craig added that Republicans would be "very resolute" in opposing Democratic efforts to invoke cloture on other pending legislation.

But Daschle enumerated some of the items funded in the Foreign Operations bill as losses to the nation.

"Because of the Republicans' filibuster, $42 million that would have been available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases ... $5 billion in direct military assistance to allies in the region ... and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided."

But Craig said the quagmire on the Senate floor would "drag on until there appears to be a systematic resolution" on moving judicial nominees through the process. And Judiciary member Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., defended GOP tactics from the Senatefloor. "What we're saying is that this is serious business. Moving judges is serious business."

Leahy, who as chairman of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee is the author of the stalled spending bill, told CongressDaily: "I feel sorry for President Bush and Secretary [of State] Powell. Members of their own party are holding the foreign aid bill hostage," while the administration is trying to assemble a broad international coalition to fight terrorism.

"I hope they will talk to members of their party," Leahy said. "We could finish it this afternoon if Republicans would let us."

Appropriations Chairman Byrd and ranking member Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, both expressed frustration that so many FY02 spending bills are stalled as a result of the nominations impasse--but both endorsed their respective leaders' floor strategy.

While Byrd said he believed Daschle "is doing everything he can to move [appropriations bills], Stevens said that despite the delay, "As far as I'm concerned, [the appropriations bills] can wait until they meet us halfway."

Meanwhile, House and Senate appropriators finished work Tuesday on the second FY02 appropriations measure, approving a $10.5 billion request to improve the military's housing and medical facilities, National Journal News Service reported.

The legislation, which would provide $1.5 billion over FY01 amounts and about $529 million over the president's request, should be on the House floor this afternoon, with passage in the Senate to follow.

Conferees noted that money to rebuild the section of the Pentagon destroyed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attack would come from the previously enacted supplemental spending bill passed in the wake of the attack. Additional anti-terrorist measures for the Pentagon and other military installations also will be paid for with funds from that supplemental bill, according to conferees.

GOP 'Hardball' Ploy Aims to Fill Benches; Action Demanded on Bush Nominees

Senate Republican leaders said yesterday they will block action on the foreign aid bill and other legislation until Democrats agree to end their holdup of President Bush's long-stalled judicial nominations.

Their decision to "play hardball" came at yesterday's weekly policy luncheon meeting of Republican senators. Many of them attacked Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy as a "vindictive" partisan who is trying to slow down or block Republican appointments to the bench. A Senate Republican leadership official said the strategy had "the full backing" of the White House.

"They are concerned that the holdup of these nominees threatens the war on terrorism because these judicial vacancies need to be filled as soon as possible to act on law enforcement requests," the official said.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, the committee's ranking Republican, led the attack on Mr. Leahy, telling his colleagues that the Vermont Democrat is threatening to get even with Republican members if they follow through on their legislative blocking strategy.

"Last night he Leahy was pretty irritated and not in a mood to be helpful. If anything, he was threatening. I've heard payback talk," Mr. Hatch told reporters yesterday.

The backroom political struggle over judicial nominees has been simmering ever since the

REV_00070792

Democrats took control of the Senate in July. That was when Mr. Leahy took over the committee and confirmation hearings on Mr. Bush's nominees ground to a halt. The backup now totals 52 nominees, 46 of whom have had no hearings.

But the struggle broke into open warfare when Mr. Hatch told his colleagues at yesterday's meeting that Mr. Leahy had told him that any Republican who voted not to take up the foreign operations bill today "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed."

Mr. Leahy denied the charge.

"The senator said we will continue to move on judicial nominees as we have been, even though many come from states of obstructionist Republicans," his spokesman said.

Calling Mr. Leahy's tactics "purely partisan," Mr. Hatch said, "They're blaming Republicans for holding up the Senate when it seems to me the Democrats have their foot on the brake."

Yet the Republicans' pressure tactics may be working. Mr. Leahy's spokesman announced that his committee would be "voting on many more nominees on Thursday and that afternoon there will be a hearing on four more nominees."

That may not be enough to mollify Republicans who emerged from their luncheon "united that they will vote against taking up the foreign operations bill until we get an agreement from the Democratic leadership," a Republican official said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat, insisted that "we're doing all that we can. As much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The federal judiciary system has at least 108 vacancies, including 39 posts that have been vacant so long that the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies." The Senate has approved only eight judges this year.

Some Republicans suggested yesterday that the White House should get more actively involved in the fray to break the political logjam. "It would be helpful if the president spoke up, but he shouldn't have to," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican, a member of the committee.

Lawyers' Panel Nixes Bunning

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

An American Bar Association panel has told the Senate that the son of Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., is not qualified for the federal bench, an assessment the elder Bunning disagreed with Tuesday.

REV_00070793

Roscoe Trimmier, chairman of the ABA panel that advises the Senate on judicial nominees, said that a majority of the 15-member panel found David Bunning to be unqualified.

Trimmier didn't say why, but it may come down to the federal prosecutor's experience. The bar association recommends that nominees have at least 12 years of experience, but Bunning, of Fort Thomas, Ky., has been a lawyer for 10 years.

In a letter Tuesday to Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., Sen. Bunning said he was surprised and disappointed to hear about the ABA finding. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., also signed the letter.

"We strongly believe that a full and fair hearing is necessary for the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate to effectively exercise its constitutional role of 'advise and consent,'" the senators wrote.

Committee spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said a decision on a hearing had not been made. "We are considering the senators' request for a hearing at this point," she said.

Devlin said Bunning was the only judicial nominee under Senate consideration to receive an unqualified rating. She said it was one of several factors lawmakers would consider.

"Sen. Leahy has always said that each senator should weigh the ABA rating in his or her mind," she said.

Sen. Bunning said he thought his son still had a good shot at being confirmed. "People have become federal district judges even with unfavorable ratings from the ABA," he said.

David Bunning did not return a call seeking comment Tuesday.

While the bar association reviews judicial nominees for the Senate, the Bush administration has decided not to rely on the ABA to investigate lawyers before naming them. That ended a practice dating back to the Eisenhower administration.

Judge Nominee Pulls Out of Club; Questions Raised About Racial Bias

By Bill Walsh
The Times-Picayune
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Jay Zainey, a Metairie lawyer nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against African-Americans.

REV_00070794

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Zainey said that he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries at a time when he is being considered for the federal appointment. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation. "Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

He said in the letter, which he authorized be released to the press, that he was dropping out "with great regret."

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any African-Americans among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and be approved by a committee.

A decade ago, the former club president told The Times-Picayune that there were no black members. Three years ago, a group of civic and church leaders in New Orleans complained to the state Judiciary Commission that a local judge violated ethical standards by belonging to the club, which they called "an all-white institution that had repeatedly denied membership to African-Americans."

However, when the FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey, the agency concluded that the club doesn't discriminate in "policy or in practice."

Still, Zainey was urged by Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, the dean of the Louisiana delegation, to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democratic-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

A spokesman for Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, called Zainey "a fair-minded individual," but said "the membership issue needed to be resolved to remove any doubt."

Rep. David Vitter, R-Metairie, said Zainey "doesn't have a malicious or racist bone in his body" and said it was "a shame" that The Times-Picayune had raised questions about his membership in the country club.

Vitter said Zainey had little choice but to resign because "you would have written a story about it every other day."

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which considers all potential judges, has rejected nominees because of membership in clubs with reputations for discriminating. Nominees generally have been cleared by the panel if they relinquish their memberships.

Judicial Fight Stymies Tense Capitol

By P. Mitchell Prothero
United Press International
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Republican Senate leaders Tuesday continued their refusal to allow spending bills to be considered until they receive promises from the Democratic majority on the future of Bush administration judicial nominees.

Republicans claim that the Democrats have been slow to consider Bush administration nominees for federal judgeships.

The fight -- which had been brewing for several weeks -- exploded Monday evening when a Republican filibuster succeeded in stopping debate on a $15 billion foreign aid bill. The 50-to-46 vote, in which Democrats failed to get the 60 votes necessary to defeat a filibuster, set off a debate that strains the bipartisan mode that has characterized the Senate since Sept. 11. "We'll continue to file cloture motions and try to maintain the comity and keep the spirit we've had in place the last five weeks in place," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said of his party's strategy for dealing with the delays.

Besides the Foreign Operations spending bill, Republicans have vowed to block three other major spending bills, including the agriculture bill, a District of Columbia appropriations bill and the Labor-HHS-Education bill until Democrats agree to a hearing and vote schedule for the 108 unfilled federal judgeships that remain open.

"I don't remember a log-jam like this one before," said Republican Orrin Hatch of Utah, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, of the vacancies.

Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., spoke from the Senate floor about the responsibilities of the upper chamber. "This is an essential part of our job here in the Senate, the confirming of these judges," he said.

"We must use all the time left until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetrated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice. That should be a top priority for the Senate for the rest of the year."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., dismissed the claim that his party has mistreated Bush administration nominees, arguing that current events and the change-over of the majority party in the Senate earlier this year have slow the pace. He also claimed that Bush's nominees would receive fair consideration, particularly compared with the Clinton administration's judges.

"I think that when we're done ... they'll see that President Bush's nominees were treated more fairly that President Clinton's were. Having said that, I wonder what in heaven's name this masochistic attitude (is) that is holding up this bill so they can make political points on Sunday morning talk shows," Leahy said from the Senate floor.

"We had 34 months when they didn't even have hearings on judges," he added later. "We've been doing hearings every single month, whether we've been in recess or not."

Leahy and Democratic staff have also said that some nominees have been slow to return confirmation information to the committees and that standard background checks have also been delayed.

But although Republican senators continue to hold enough votes to maintain a filibuster -- at least for now -- Daschle said that some of their favorite legislation could lose a chance at consideration should the delays continue.

When asked by a reporter if he planned to schedule a debate on comprehensive energy legislation -- a topic dear to many prominent Republicans, including the president -- Daschle reminded his GOP colleagues about the power of the majority leader to control the floor.

"I am most amused about the question regarding the scheduling of energy legislation given the current tactics by our Republicans on appropriations bills," Daschle said. "As soon as they tell me when they'll stop this counter-productive effort to stop consideration of appropriations bills, I might be able to tell you when we will schedule an energy bill."

GOP Seeks Action on Bush Nominees

The Washington Post
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Senate Republicans blocked a $ 15.5 billion foreign aid bill yesterday in an effort to force Democrats to step up the pace of confirmations for President Bush's judicial nominees.

On a 50 to 46 party-line vote, the Democrats fell 10 votes short of the 60 needed to break a GOP filibuster and force consideration of a relatively noncontroversial foreign aid measure.

Republicans said they would continue to block some necessary spending bills until Democrats agreed to hit the accelerator on Bush's pending judicial nominations. "We've got to speed up the process here," said Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.). "Let's call a timeout, let's go to nominations, and when there are a sufficient number of nominations completed, we'll go back to other priorities."

But Democrats questioned why Republicans would hold up a key foreign aid bill at a time Bush was trying to galvanize international support for the war on terrorism. The foreign aid bill includes funds for key Middle East allies the United States is relying on during its military operations against Afghanistan.

"This is not the time to horse trade on judges," said Democratic Whip Harry M. Reid (Nev.), calling the move "wrong-headed."

The Senate has approved eight of Bush's 60 judicial nominations, a rate that Republicans say badly lags behind the first-year confirmation totals of the three previous administrations.

"We're way behind. We've got a lot of catching up to do," said Sen. Don Nickles (Okla.), the chamber's second-ranking Republican.

But Senate Democrats harshly disputed claims they were deliberately slowing the process, pointing out that Republicans controlled the Senate during the first four months of the administration and never held a confirmation hearing on a judge.

Democrats took a one-seat margin of power in the Senate in June when Vermont Republican James M. Jeffords became an independent.

"No one is saying we aren't going to confirm judges," said Reid. "Let us do our work here. This is a matter of common sense."

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations foreign operations subcommittee, was even more harsh, likening Republicans to "petulant children in the schoolyard."

The dispute marked another step back into the partisan skirmishing prevalent in the Senate prior to the deadly Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington.

Kyl said Republicans would not hold up all House-Senate conference reports on completed spending bills. Five spending bills -- foreign aid, agriculture, labor and education, the District of Columbia and defense -- have not been taken up by the full Senate.

Senate Still Battling Over Bush's Judicial Nominees

By Jonathan Ringel
American Lawyer Media
Thursday, October 18, 2001

In between enduring anthrax exposure, passing anti-terrorism bills and considering measures to fund the government, senators still have found time this week to bicker about judicial confirmations.

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a foreign aid appropriation bill in an effort to force the

REV_00070798

Democratic majority to confirm dozens of President George W. Bush's nominees.

Democrats say they are moving as fast as they can-and if the Senate stays in session through November, that as many as 25 to 30 Bush picks could be confirmed.

Bush so far has made 60 nominations to the lifetime posts on the federal bench, 25 for the circuit courts and 35 for the district courts. Since the Democrats took over the Senate in June, eight judges have been confirmed, four each for the appeals courts and the district courts.

Another five-one circuit nominee and four district nominees-have had hearings and are expected to move through the Judiciary Committee and on to confirmation soon.

Yet another circuit nominee and three district nominees were scheduled to have hearings today. Those hearings may be postponed, however, as authorities Wednesday were considering shutting the Capitol complex down to test for anthrax exposure.

A spokeswoman to Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who chairs the Judiciary Committee, reported that two more hearings - in addition to the one scheduled for today - will occur if the Senate stays in session through November. If five nominees appear at each hearing, that would mean 27 nominees would have had hearings.

"The numbers show that the committee's record meets or exceeds the pace of previous years, despite the limited amount of time it has had to consider nominees," said Mimi Devlin, the spokeswoman.

Devlin reported that in 1989, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 15 judicial nominees during the first year under President George Bush. In 1993, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 27 of President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees.

But in a floor debate last week, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, accused Leahy and the Democrats of moving too slowly on Bush's judges.

Hatch pointed out that most judges nominated by the time of the August recess in the first year of a presidency usually get confirmed. Bush made 44 nominations before the August recess - far more than any president in recent memory.

The confirmation rate of circuit court judges particularly vexed Hatch, who said that Clinton got three of his five circuit court nominees through in his first year.

"That is 60 percent," said Hatch, arguing that 60 percent of Bush's 25 circuit court nominees should get through by the end of the year.

The Democrats' claim that they're keeping up with recent confirmation paces, he said, "is an unfair comparison when you take into account the fact that President Bush has chosen to nominate 20 more circuit court nominees than President Clinton did in his first year."

REV_00070799

During the last six years of the Clinton administration, Hatch drew fire from Democrats for allowing some Republicans to block nominees, particularly circuit court picks. In 1996, a spat between Hatch and the White House led to no circuit court nominees getting hearings. Nonetheless, Clinton ended up nearly tying Ronald Reagan's all-time record for placing the most judges on the federal bench.

During the brief floor debate, which occurred between the Senate's handling aviation security bills and anti-terrorism bills, Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., acknowledged that this is an old fight.

"It is amazing how history repeats itself," he said. "What you were saying last year, we are saying this year. I guess before that, we were saying it or you were saying it."

The circuit nominee scheduled for today's hearing is Charles Pickering Sr., a Mississippi federal district judge tapped for the Fifth Circuit.

Hispanic National Bar Association Endorses Appointment of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Hispanic National Bar Association, national voice of over 25,000 Hispanic lawyers in the United States, issues its endorsement of President George W. Bush's nominee, Mr. Miguel Estrada, to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Estrada would be the first Hispanic to sit in the D.C. Circuit, widely regarded as the second most important appellate court in the nation. Estrada, who emigrated from Honduras at seventeen, is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP. A member of the firm's Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group and its Business Crimes and Investigations Practice Group, Estrada clerked for the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy in the U.S. Supreme Court from 1988-1989, and has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

A 1983 magna cum laude graduate of Columbia College in New York, Estrada received a J.D. degree magna cum laude in 1986 from Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the Harvard Law Review.

President Bush nominated Estrada in May of this year. "Mr. Estrada's distinguished and impressive career illustrates the promise and opportunity that America offers to all immigrants, specially Hispanic immigrants. It is encouraging that President Bush has started tapping in the substantial pool of Hispanic legal talent throughout the country. Mr. Estrada's confirmation will break new ground for Hispanics in the judiciary. The time has come to move on Mr. Estrada's nomination. I urge the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to schedule a hearing on Mr. Estrada's nomination and the U.S. Senate to bring this highly qualified nominee to a vote." said Rafael A. Santiago, of Hartford, Connecticut, National

Leahy's War Cover

The Wall Street Journal
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Senate Republicans are a tower of babblers, so when nearly all of them agree on something it's news. This week they've been riled into a rare burst of unity by Democrat Pat Leahy's unprecedented stonewalling on judges.

Simply put, the Senate Judiciary Chairman is using the war on terrorism as cover to slow roll the confirmation of President Bush's judicial nominees. In normal times, the media might report his delaying tactics and Mr. Bush might make them an issue. But the White House, now in bipartisan war mode, doesn't want to make a fuss over anything outside its anti-terror campaign. Mr. Leahy is exploiting that good will for his own partisan ends.

There's really no other way to explain that 10 months into this Administration Mr. Leahy has confirmed a mere eight of the 60 judicial nominations Mr. Bush has made, including 44 by the August recess. With only weeks to go before Congress goes home for the year, only 14 have even had a hearing. This kind of delay typically occurs only in the final year of a Presidency, before an election. It's unheard of in first years, when Ronald Reagan had 41 judges confirmed, George H.W. Bush 15, and Bill Clinton 28.

Mr. Leahy knows this, or at least he did when Mr. Clinton was President. In 1999, when the federal courts had a mere 59 unfilled seats, he wailed about a "crisis." Yet now, thanks to his foot-dragging, there are 109 vacancies, nearly 13% of the entire federal bench. It is true enough that some Republicans abused their advise and consent power under Bill Clinton, but Pat Leahy makes Jesse Helms look like Little Lord Fauntleroy.

We might even credit Mr. Leahy's excuse that he's been busy with anti-terror legislation. But then what to make of the fact that, despite GOP objections, he is also changing the long-time questionnaire for judicial nominees? From now on nominees will have to disclose any previous drug charges and whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative hearing." Senators can already see all of this information in confidential FBI files. But Mr. Leahy's revised questionnaire means that the stuff of bad divorces and teenage marijuana busts will be available to Judiciary staff. The chances of this stuff leaking to the press are 110%.

Mr. Leahy, a self-styled privacy advocate, is also demanding that nominees itemize "all political contributions." These are the same nominees that Mr. Leahy insists must be non-ideological and non-political. Imagine the uproar if former GOP Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch had pulled a stunt like this.

REV_00070801

In an October 1 letter to Mr. Leahy, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales wrote that this new questionnaire "may have the likely effect of unnecessarily invading a candidate's personal privacy" without adding any more information for Senators. "If we go down this road, I fear that many qualified people will elect not to participate in this process," Mr. Gonzales added. Which may be exactly what Mr. Leahy intends. If anyone the least bit controversial -- i.e., conservative -- is nominated, Mr.
Leahy may want them to know they could face public embarrassment and a political torching. By any definition, this is an abuse of Senate power, rendering meaningless the debate over judges in a Presidential election.

Which is why fed-up Republicans are fighting back with their own Senate prerogatives. They're uniting to slow down spending bills until Mr. Leahy decides to move more judges. The strategy was invented by current Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle in the final year of the Clinton Presidency. But Mr. Leahy's calm, adult response this week was to call Republicans "petulant children in the school yard." Well, he ought to know.

It's about time someone blew away Mr. Leahy's war-time political cover.

End the Leahy Stall; 'Sen. Leahy Should Stop Playing Partisan Politics With the Federal Courts,' AR's Richard Lessner

PR Newswire
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

American Renewal today issued a statement of support for the effort by Republicans in the U.S. Senate to break the blockade on President Bush's judicial nominations.

"Sen. Patrick Leahy is stalling," American Renewal executive director Richard Lessner said, noting that vacancies on the federal bench have increased to 110 from 67 the day President Bush took office.
"The chairman of the Judiciary Committee is engaged in a sophisticated slowdown. The vacancy crisis in the federal courts continues to worsen, yet Sen. Leahy refuses to follow long established Senate procedures and move nominees through the confirmation process in an expeditious manner.

"When Bill Clinton occupied the White House, Sen. Leahy and other Democrats declared far fewer vacancies to be a national crisis," Lessner said. "But now that George W. Bush is president, Sen. Leahy seems to be in no hurry to confirm judges despite the growing backlog of nominees and increasing number of court vacancies."

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a vote on a foreign aid bill in an effort to force Majority Leader Tom Daschle to act to break the blockade in the Judiciary Committee.

REV_00070802

"It is unfortunate that it had to come to this," Lessner said, "but the minority Republicans have few other options under Senate rules to force Sen. Leahy's hand. The pace of confirmations is lagging far behind that in any of the three previous administrations. And it is clear that Sen. Leahy is cherry-picking for hearings those nominees he personally finds politically acceptable, while stalling superbly qualified nominees he opposes for ideological reasons.

"Sen. Leahy should stop playing partisan politics with the federal courts and start giving President Bush's judicial nominees the fair hearings they deserve."

NARAL Opposes Confirmation Of Charles Pickering and Tactic Of Blocking Appropriations Bills For Court- Packing Plan

Lott Leads Anti-Choice Strategy

NARAL President Kate Michelman announced today that NARAL opposes the confirmation of Charles Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"Judge Pickering is a staunch opponent of Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose. He was a prime architect of the 1976 Republican Party platform plank that protested the Roe decision and called for a constitutional amendment banning abortion," said Michelman.

"Judge Pickering is the first demonstrably anti-choice judicial nominee to the Court of Appeals to get a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. He has been nominated for a lifetime position on the bench. If confirmed, the decisions he makes could affect the reproductive rights of women for generations to come. "

Thursday on his nomination to the appellate court.

"Even in these trying times, opponents of a woman's right to freedom of choice continue to press their goal of packing the court with anti-choice judges. They are willing to risk funding of our national government in order to short circuit the judicial confirmation process in the U.S. Senate. It is unconscionable that the Senate Republican Leadership would hold up the entire appropriations process to impose their own ideological agenda upon the nation's courts," said Michelman.

Potential Closed-Door Hearing on Judicial Nominees Today "Would be Undemocratic and Unacceptable," Says PFAW's Neas

People for the American Way

REV_00070803

Thursday, October 18, 2001

There are indications that the Senate Judiciary Committee plans to consider this afternoon several judicial nominees, including a controversial nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Charles Pickering, at a hearing that could be in effect closed to the public due to security measures on Capitol Hill. People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas today urged Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy not to hold closed-door hearings on any judicial nominees.

"De facto closed-door hearings on federal judicial nominees are undemocratic and unacceptable," said Neas. "People For the American Way urges Senator Leahy not to establish a precedent that undermines the principles of open and accountable government and shuts the public out of this critically important process."

Reportedly the hearing might be inaccessible to the public due to security precautions that have shut Senate office buildings temporarily and put restrictions on public access to the Capitol. Neas said the hearing on nominations to lifetime positions on the federal bench should be postponed if the public cannot be guaranteed access to the hearing. "Considering these judicial nominees is not a matter of national security, or of such great urgency that we must violate fundamental principles of democratic government," said Neas. "In particular, there are many reasons to postpone the hastily scheduled hearing on Judge Pickering so that the public can make sure that senators have time to thoroughly consider the nominee's record." Neas said that if the hearing goes forward, the Judiciary Committee must hold a second hearing, accessible to the public, after the transcript of the first hearing is made available.

"It is particularly important in this time of crisis that we affirm, rather than abandon, the principles of democratic self-governance," said Neas.

Clash Coming on GOP Showdown for Bush Judicial Nominees

CNN.com
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

REV_00070780

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-South Dakota, planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible.

Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Kentucky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Arizona, says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

"Because of the Republican filibuster, $42 million that would be available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases, as we fight the war in Afghanistan, is not being provided; $5 billion in direct military assistance to those allies in the region is not being provided; and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided," Daschle said.

Republicans say the anti-terrorist efforts in America need judges to work effectively. The House and Senate are working on an anti-terrorism bill to give law enforcement more power to track down and prosecute suspected terrorists.

But "law enforcement can't make cases to empty courtrooms," Hatch said.

Republicans, Leahy Continue to Clash

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Despite growing anxiety about the threat of anthrax, Senate and House leaders said yesterday that business will continue to proceed as normally as possible and that there will still be serious policy disputes over critical issues in the coming days and weeks.

"We will not let this stop the work of the Senate," Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) said at a press conference in which he announced that 31 individuals, mostly members of his staff, had tested positive for anthrax exposure.

As if to prove the point, the Senate went ahead and overwhelmingly approved the Interior appropriations conference report late Wednesday afternoon and is expected to pass the military construction conference report today. And with serious prodding from the White House, House and Senate negotiators were very close to reaching bipartisan consensus on an anti-terrorism package that would reconcile the previously vast differences between the bills passed by the two chambers, aides said.

But the Senate remained gridlocked over how to move the remaining appropriations bills it needs to move to House-Senate conferences, as Republicans maintained that they would continue blocking the spending bills because of the slow pace on judicial nominations.

If anything, that dispute has grown more bitter and partisan in recent days.

Colorado GOP Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell this week accused Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) of threatening the future prospects of their home-state judicial nominees.

According to Allard, he and Campbell approached Leahy during a cloture vote Monday night on the foreign operations spending bill and asked the Vermont Senator if he could quickly bump up three judicial nominees from their state close to the top of the list of nominees being considered.

At that point Leahy, who also chairs the foreign operations subcommittee, wanted to know if the pair was supporting the GOP blockade on appropriations, according to Allard. "Well, he asked, 'How did you vote on that bill?,'" Allard said.

"If I go ahead and vote for cloture, you'd move my judges to the top?" Allard recalled asking Leahy. "He said, 'Yep.'"

Campbell stood by that account of events yesterday, adding, "It's just unfortunate that Senator Leahy is holding up these nominations."

Leahy did not specifically deny the conversation with Allard and Campbell, but his staff hinted that the Colorado Senators may have misinterpreted comments that were intended to be a joke.

"He's one of the senators from the old school who does not discuss conversations with other senators," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "But it's probably fair to say that if Senator Allard approached Senator Leahy right then to talk about any newly received nominations, the opportunity for irony would have been especially high."

Leahy plans to hold an executive meeting today in one of the meeting rooms off the Senate floor, since the regular hearing room in the Dirksen building will be closed. He expects the committee to approve five judicial nominations as well as 13 U.S. attorneys and one post related to the Justice Department.

After the executive meeting, the Judiciary panel plans to hold a nomination hearing for another four judges. Of those judicial nominees who will be approved or have their hearing, most come from states with Senators who voted against cloture on the spending bill.

"That kind of says it all," Carle said.

Some GOP Senators, however, said they view Leahy's comments to Allard and Campbell as part of an overall effort to slow the nomination process. "This is too important a process to play that kind of political game," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), ranking Member on Judiciary's subcommittee overseeing the federal bench.

Sen. Larry Craig (Idaho), chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said Leahy so far had made a "meager effort" in approving judges, eight of whom have been confirmed by the full Senate with almost another 50 awaiting action. Craig said Daschle has "failed to instruct" Leahy to pass more judges out of his committee, noting that the Majority Leader has forced chairmen to pass key bills out of their panels or risk having them brought to the floor without committee approval.

"I see that as a disconnect of leadership or at least an inconsistency," Craig said.

REV_00070783

At Tuesday's GOP luncheon, at least half a dozen Senators stood up to complain in highly personal terms about Leahy's handling of the judicial process, according to a GOP aide who was present.

Democrats, however, are standing solidly behind the Vermont lawmaker.

Daschle said Tuesday he was "very appreciative" of Leahy's work in handling the nomination process, saying any delays were due to paperwork problems and the White House's decision to not first vet nominees through the American Bar Association, a process that now takes place once a nomination arrives on Capitol Hill.

"We're doing the best we can," he added.

Daschle also said there was nothing to negotiate about with Republicans and Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) as far as the pace of judicial nominees is concerned, setting up a potentially lengthy standoff over judges and appropriations. "We talk about it a lot, but there are no negotiations," he said.

On the House side, Appropriations Chairman Bill Young (R-Fla.) said his committee would continue to move bills and conference reports on a "regular" basis. He said further delays caused by safety precautions may force Congress to pass another continuing resolution at the end of this month to fund government operations, but said passing an "omnibus" bill with all remaining spending measures was not something he predicted would happen.

Daschle had planned to hold another cloture vote on foreign operations yesterday morning, but that was canceled after the revelations about the number of staffers who initially tested for anthrax exposure.

This prompted Senate leaders to hold a bipartisan conference in the Senate dining room, the third such extraordinary gathering of all Senators since the Sept. 11 attacks. The Senators received a briefing from top medical experts in the administration on the threats from the deadly chemical.

Exiting the meeting, Senators said there was a unanimous feeling of support for Daschle and for maximizing the safety of staffers and others in the Capitol complex.

"There's total unity here. There's total support for Daschle," Craig said.

"Everybody feels very together now. Whether that applies to other issues, I don't know," said Sen. Paul Wellstone (D-Minn.).

The second cloture vote on foreign operations is expected to come early next week. Because of all the distractions that Daschle has faced this week, Craig said it made sense to put off this contentious bill for now and allow less controversial legislation to move this week.

REV_00070784

When the more divisive issues are revisited next week, the fighting is expected to resume. Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.), a senior Judiciary member, said he fully expects the Republicans to block the foreign operations bill.

"It'll be the same vote as before," he said. "Nothing has changed."

Report Documents Unprecedented Situation with Federal Judiciary, Calls for Unprecedented Bipartisan Solution

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

People For the American Way Foundation President Ralph G. Neas today called on President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate to engage in an unprecedented bipartisan approach to judicial nominations in order to minimize the number of divisive nomination battles and to prevent a complete takeover of the federal judiciary by right-wing ideologues.

In a report released today, he also urged Senators to resist right-wing pressure to confirm nominees without sufficient opportunity to consider their qualifications and judicial philosophy.

"President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate must recognize that we face an unprecedented situation in the federal judiciary," said Neas, "one that calls for an unprecedented bipartisan solution."

The PFAWF report debunks accusations that Bush administration's nominees are being treated unfairly by the Senate, and documents the unprecedented blockade waged by some Senate Republicans, many of whom now clamor for immediate votes on Bush administration judicial nominees, against highly qualified Clinton administration nominees, especially to the critical federal appeals courts. That campaign set the stage for all thirteen of the federal appeals courts to be dominated by judges appointed by a single political party by the end of the Bush administration, an unprecedented situation. If President Bush follows the urging of right-wing advocates to appoint only far-right ideologues to those positions, the impact on Americans' rights and freedoms could be devastating for decades. People For the American Way Foundation researchers reviewed Congressional Research Service statistics, comparing the Senate record on judicial nominations during 1995-2000, when Republicans controlled the Senate and President Clinton submitted nominees, and 1987-1992, when Republican presidents submitted nominees to a Democratic-majority Senate. The results are stark and clear:

-- During the years Republicans controlled the Senate, 45.3 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were returned to the White House, a rate 72 percent higher than the 26.3 percent return rate for Presidents Reagan and Bush when Democrats controlled the Senate. (None of the returned Clinton appellate court nominees were voted down -- not a single one of them was allowed to come up for a vote.)

REV_00070785

-- During the final two years of Clinton's term, the blockade was even tighter, with less than half of Clinton's appeals courts nominees being confirmed. More specifically, during the 106th Congress, 56 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were blocked. This failure rate for President Clinton's appeals court nominees was 60 percent higher than for Presidents Reagan or George H.W. Bush, each of whom saw only 35 percent of his appeals court nominees go unconfirmed in the 101st and 102nd Congresses, respectively.

If numbers are calculated so as to eliminate the effect of multiple nominations of individual nominees, serious discrepancies remain. Under this analysis, appeals court nominees were blocked during the six years Republicans controlled the Senate under President Clinton at a rate nearly 40 percent higher than during the six years Democrats controlled the Senate under Presidents Reagan and Bush -- 35 percent under Clinton vs. 25 percent under Reagan and Bush. See the full report for a further note on methodology.

Neas noted that Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott recently threatened to hold up the appropriations process if Bush judicial nominees were not given swift consideration, and yesterday Senate Republicans blocked action on a foreign aid bill. Neas said such calls for action by Lott and other right-wing leaders, including Attorney General John Ashcroft, showed "remarkable chutzpah, if not outright hypocrisy," given their involvement in the stalling campaign against Clinton administration nominees.

Neas also noted that, in the face of pressure from Lott and others, one judicial nominee was recently approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee in closed session and by the full Senate despite pending concerns about his record, and a controversial nominee was scheduled for a hearing with five working days' notice, making it impossible for senators to conduct a thorough review of his record. Neas called such actions "unfortunate and unacceptable."

The report calls on both President Bush and the Senate to act in accordance with their constitutional roles and with recognition of the unprecedented situation facing the federal judiciary. Among the report's recommendations:

-- President Bush should work closely with Senate Democrats in an attempt to repair the damage done by six years of Republican obstruction, restore the pre-nomination role of the ABA, and seek out nominees who are not right-wing ideologues and who demonstrate an understanding of and commitment to civil and constitutional rights.

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy should move judicial nominations only when the committee has had time to give them sufficient consideration.

-- The Senate should carefully and thoroughly review the President's nominees, particularly for the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court. They should hold out a clear standard of commitment to civil and constitutional rights, as more than 200 law professors have recently suggested. Mainstream nominees that reflect genuine bipartisan consideration should receive priority in processing.

REV_00070786

-- The Senate should not hesitate to fulfill its constitutional responsibility of rejecting and withholding its consent from nominees who do not demonstrate qualifications that include a firm commitment to broad principles of equality and individual rights and an abiding respect for the Constitution and for the constitutional authority of the Congress.

Lawyer Quits Country Club After Nomination

The Advocate
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A Metairie lawyer, nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against black people.

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Jay Zainey said he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries while he is being considered for U.S. Senate confirmation. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation.

"Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any black people among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and must be approved by a committee.

The FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey and concluded that the club does not discriminate, an FBI spokesman said.

U.S. Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, urged Zainey to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democrat-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible. Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

Senate Stalemate Growing More Personal

Congress Daily
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Senate remained at a standstill Tuesday, as the battle over judicial nominees took on an increasingly personal tone and threatened not only FY02 appropriations measures but other initiatives of congressional leaders and the Bush administration.

The dispute is expected to drag into today, as Majority Leader Daschle again tries to invoke cloture to move to the FY02 Foreign Operations appropriations bill.

Senate Republicans vowed to hang tough today and block movement of that bill until they are satisfied that the pace will quicken on processing President Bush's judicial nominations.

Several Republican senators have begun to focus their ire on Judiciary Chairman Leahy, whom they fault for holding up the president's nominees. A senior GOP leadership aide said that several senators had "blasted" Leahy at Tuesday's meeting of the GOP Conference. Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., said he took particular offense at Leahy's conduct during a cloture vote Monday on the Foreign Operations bill. Republicans were able to defeat cloture in protest at what they consider a lack of progress on nominations.

Allard said he and Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo., approached Leahy during the vote to tell him they would like to see three Colorado nominees move.

"He indicated that just because of the way both Ben and I voted, that it wasn't going to move," Allard said.

Allard, who had already voted against cloture, said he was not swayed.

"I'm going to vote my conscience," he said. "I'm not going to be blackmailed. I just think it's bad that we're to the point that people like the chairman of Judiciary aren't moving our nominees....

REV_00070817

I'm disappointed that the chairman is being so partisan, at a time when bipartisanship is so important."

Judiciary ranking member Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said Leahy "made some threats" Monday, in particular to block nominations.

"He has to come off that high-horse approach," Hatch said. "There is a belief [within the GOP Conference] that there is a political lack of good faith here."

A spokesman for Leahy unequivocally denied that any threats had been made and said Leahy had personally assured Hatch that he would continue pushing nominations through the committee despite the hang-ups on the floor.

The spokesman said the Judiciary Committee would vote on "four or five" nominees Thursday and hold hearings on another four nominees the same day.

"Some of those are from states represented by a senator who voted against cloture [on the Foreign Operations bill]," the Leahy spokesman said. "The committee has kept up a brisk pace on nominations."

Hatch, the former Judiciary chairman, noted that the GOP- controlled Senate passed nearly as many Clinton administration judicial nominees as a Democratic Senate had passed Reagan nominees.

"I bent over backwards to take care of Leahy and every other Democrat on that committee," Hatch said. "It's a tough job and I commiserate with Sen. Leahy, but our Conference doesn't appreciate threats and bullying."

Aides and senators said no negotiations were taking place to try to settle the nominations issue and free appropriations.

"There's nothing to negotiate," said Daschle. "What we'll do is continue to do our work in the Judiciary Committee."

Daschle also said he was "frankly disappointed that the administration has not spoken out," pointing out that the administration shared his interest in moving spending bills.

Minority Leader Lott defended the GOP's approach. "This is not some new tactic that is being employed on our side.... When you're majority leader, you can huff and puff and talk about how you're not going to negotiate," he said, but "you are in charge of the agenda."

Lott said he and Daschle had tried to resolve the issue. But, Lott said, "The problem is not at the top. It's down the line a little bit, without blaming anybody."

"We're going to stick together," a GOP leadership aide said of Republicans going into today's

cloture vote.

The source also discounted the idea that blocking action on the Foreign Operations bill could be a political liability for Republicans. "Our connection is to terrorism--we need to have as many judges in place as possible," the aide said.

On Tuesday, Daschle vowed to continue filing cloture motions to break the GOP's appropriations filibuster strategy, while holding up key GOP priorities like energy and trade.

Daschle blamed the logjam on "the intransigency of our colleagues on the other side." In addition to the $15.5 billion Foreign Operations bill, the Senate also has not yet considered the FY02 Agriculture, Labor-HHS and District of Columbia spending bills.

GOP Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig of Idaho said Republicans were seeking action on "about 40" nominees whom the Judiciary Committee had been considering before the August break. Craig added that Republicans would be "very resolute" in opposing Democratic efforts to invoke cloture on other pending legislation.

But Daschle enumerated some of the items funded in the Foreign Operations bill as losses to the nation.

"Because of the Republicans' filibuster, $42 million that would have been available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases ... $5 billion in direct military assistance to allies in the region ... and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided."

But Craig said the quagmire on the Senate floor would "drag on until there appears to be a systematic resolution" on moving judicial nominees through the process. And Judiciary member Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., defended GOP tactics from the Senatefloor. "What we're saying is that this is serious business. Moving judges is serious business."

Leahy, who as chairman of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee is the author of the stalled spending bill, told CongressDaily: "I feel sorry for President Bush and Secretary [of State] Powell. Members of their own party are holding the foreign aid bill hostage," while the administration is trying to assemble a broad international coalition to fight terrorism.

"I hope they will talk to members of their party," Leahy said. "We could finish it this afternoon if Republicans would let us."

Appropriations Chairman Byrd and ranking member Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, both expressed frustration that so many FY02 spending bills are stalled as a result of the nominations impasse--but both endorsed their respective leaders' floor strategy.

While Byrd said he believed Daschle "is doing everything he can to move [appropriations bills], Stevens said that despite the delay, "As far as I'm concerned, [the appropriations bills] can wait until they meet us halfway."

Meanwhile, House and Senate appropriators finished work Tuesday on the second FY02 appropriations measure, approving a $10.5 billion request to improve the military's housing and medical facilities, National Journal News Service reported.

The legislation, which would provide $1.5 billion over FY01 amounts and about $529 million over the president's request, should be on the House floor this afternoon, with passage in the Senate to follow.

Conferees noted that money to rebuild the section of the Pentagon destroyed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attack would come from the previously enacted supplemental spending bill passed in the wake of the attack. Additional anti-terrorist measures for the Pentagon and other military installations also will be paid for with funds from that supplemental bill, according to conferees.

GOP 'Hardball' Ploy Aims to Fill Benches; Action Demanded on Bush Nominees

By Donald Lambro
The Washington Times
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

Senate Republican leaders said yesterday they will block action on the foreign aid bill and other legislation until Democrats agree to end their holdup of President Bush's long-stalled judicial nominations.

Their decision to "play hardball" came at yesterday's weekly policy luncheon meeting of Republican senators. Many of them attacked Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy as a "vindictive" partisan who is trying to slow down or block Republican appointments to the bench. A Senate Republican leadership official said the strategy had "the full backing" of the White House.

"They are concerned that the holdup of these nominees threatens the war on terrorism because these judicial vacancies need to be filled as soon as possible to act on law enforcement requests," the official said.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, the committee's ranking Republican, led the attack on Mr. Leahy, telling his colleagues that the Vermont Democrat is threatening to get even with Republican members if they follow through on their legislative blocking strategy.

"Last night he Leahy was pretty irritated and not in a mood to be helpful. If anything, he was threatening. I've heard payback talk," Mr. Hatch told reporters yesterday.

The backroom political struggle over judicial nominees has been simmering ever since the

REV_00070820

Democrats took control of the Senate in July. That was when Mr. Leahy took over the committee and confirmation hearings on Mr. Bush's nominees ground to a halt. The backup now totals 52 nominees, 46 of whom have had no hearings.

But the struggle broke into open warfare when Mr. Hatch told his colleagues at yesterday's meeting that Mr. Leahy had told him that any Republican who voted not to take up the foreign operations bill today "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed."

Mr. Leahy denied the charge.

"The senator said we will continue to move on judicial nominees as we have been, even though many come from states of obstructionist Republicans," his spokesman said.

Calling Mr. Leahy's tactics "purely partisan," Mr. Hatch said, "They're blaming Republicans for holding up the Senate when it seems to me the Democrats have their foot on the brake."

Yet the Republicans' pressure tactics may be working. Mr. Leahy's spokesman announced that his committee would be "voting on many more nominees on Thursday and that afternoon there will be a hearing on four more nominees."

That may not be enough to mollify Republicans who emerged from their luncheon "united that they will vote against taking up the foreign operations bill until we get an agreement from the Democratic leadership," a Republican official said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat, insisted that "we're doing all that we can. As much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The federal judiciary system has at least 108 vacancies, including 39 posts that have been vacant so long that the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies." The Senate has approved only eight judges this year.

Some Republicans suggested yesterday that the White House should get more actively involved in the fray to break the political logjam. "It would be helpful if the president spoke up, but he shouldn't have to," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican, a member of the committee.

Lawyers' Panel Nixes Bunning

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
The Associated Press
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

An American Bar Association panel has told the Senate that the son of Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., is not qualified for the federal bench, an assessment the elder Bunning disagreed with Tuesday.

REV_00070821

Roscoe Trimmier, chairman of the ABA panel that advises the Senate on judicial nominees, said that a majority of the 15-member panel found David Bunning to be unqualified.

Trimmier didn't say why, but it may come down to the federal prosecutor's experience. The bar association recommends that nominees have at least 12 years of experience, but Bunning, of Fort Thomas, Ky., has been a lawyer for 10 years.

In a letter Tuesday to Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., Sen. Bunning said he was surprised and disappointed to hear about the ABA finding. Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., also signed the letter.

"We strongly believe that a full and fair hearing is necessary for the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate to effectively exercise its constitutional role of 'advise and consent,'" the senators wrote.

Committee spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said a decision on a hearing had not been made. "We are considering the senators' request for a hearing at this point," she said.

Devlin said Bunning was the only judicial nominee under Senate consideration to receive an unqualified rating. She said it was one of several factors lawmakers would consider.

"Sen. Leahy has always said that each senator should weigh the ABA rating in his or her mind," she said.

Sen. Bunning said he thought his son still had a good shot at being confirmed. "People have become federal district judges even with unfavorable ratings from the ABA," he said.

David Bunning did not return a call seeking comment Tuesday.

While the bar association reviews judicial nominees for the Senate, the Bush administration has decided not to rely on the ABA to investigate lawyers before naming them. That ended a practice dating back to the Eisenhower administration.

Judge Nominee Pulls Out of Club; Questions Raised About Racial Bias

By Bill Walsh
The Times-Picayune
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Jay Zainey, a Metairie lawyer nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against African-Americans.

REV_00070822

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Zainey said that he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries at a time when he is being considered for the federal appointment. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation. "Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

He said in the letter, which he authorized be released to the press, that he was dropping out "with great regret."

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any African-Americans among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and be approved by a committee.

A decade ago, the former club president told The Times-Picayune that there were no black members. Three years ago, a group of civic and church leaders in New Orleans complained to the state Judiciary Commission that a local judge violated ethical standards by belonging to the club, which they called "an all-white institution that had repeatedly denied membership to African-Americans."

However, when the FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey, the agency concluded that the club doesn't discriminate in "policy or in practice."

Still, Zainey was urged by Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, the dean of the Louisiana delegation, to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democratic-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

A spokesman for Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, called Zainey "a fair-minded individual," but said "the membership issue needed to be resolved to remove any doubt."

Rep. David Vitter, R-Metairie, said Zainey "doesn't have a malicious or racist bone in his body" and said it was "a shame" that The Times-Picayune had raised questions about his membership in the country club.

Vitter said Zainey had little choice but to resign because "you would have written a story about it every other day."

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which considers all potential judges, has rejected nominees because of membership in clubs with reputations for discriminating. Nominees generally have been cleared by the panel if they relinquish their memberships.

Judicial Fight Stymies Tense Capitol

By P. Mitchell Prothero
United Press International
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Republican Senate leaders Tuesday continued their refusal to allow spending bills to be considered until they receive promises from the Democratic majority on the future of Bush administration judicial nominees.

Republicans claim that the Democrats have been slow to consider Bush administration nominees for federal judgeships.

The fight -- which had been brewing for several weeks -- exploded Monday evening when a Republican filibuster succeeded in stopping debate on a $15 billion foreign aid bill. The 50-to-46 vote, in which Democrats failed to get the 60 votes necessary to defeat a filibuster, set off a debate that strains the bipartisan mode that has characterized the Senate since Sept. 11. "We'll continue to file cloture motions and try to maintain the comity and keep the spirit we've had in place the last five weeks in place," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said of his party's strategy for dealing with the delays.

Besides the Foreign Operations spending bill, Republicans have vowed to block three other major spending bills, including the agriculture bill, a District of Columbia appropriations bill and the Labor-HHS-Education bill until Democrats agree to a hearing and vote schedule for the 108 unfilled federal judgeships that remain open.

"I don't remember a log-jam like this one before," said Republican Orrin Hatch of Utah, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, of the vacancies.

Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., spoke from the Senate floor about the responsibilities of the upper chamber. "This is an essential part of our job here in the Senate, the confirming of these judges," he said.

"We must use all the time left until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetrated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice. That should be a top priority for the Senate for the rest of the year."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., dismissed the claim that his party has mistreated Bush administration nominees, arguing that current events and the change-over of the majority party in the Senate earlier this year have slow the pace. He also claimed that Bush's nominees would receive fair consideration, particularly compared with the Clinton administration's judges.

"I think that when we're done ... they'll see that President Bush's nominees were treated more fairly that President Clinton's were. Having said that, I wonder what in heaven's name this masochistic attitude (is) that is holding up this bill so they can make political points on Sunday morning talk shows," Leahy said from the Senate floor.

"We had 34 months when they didn't even have hearings on judges," he added later. "We've been doing hearings every single month, whether we've been in recess or not."

Leahy and Democratic staff have also said that some nominees have been slow to return confirmation information to the committees and that standard background checks have also been delayed.

But although Republican senators continue to hold enough votes to maintain a filibuster -- at least for now -- Daschle said that some of their favorite legislation could lose a chance at consideration should the delays continue.

When asked by a reporter if he planned to schedule a debate on comprehensive energy legislation -- a topic dear to many prominent Republicans, including the president -- Daschle reminded his GOP colleagues about the power of the majority leader to control the floor.

"I am most amused about the question regarding the scheduling of energy legislation given the current tactics by our Republicans on appropriations bills," Daschle said. "As soon as they tell me when they'll stop this counter-productive effort to stop consideration of appropriations bills, I might be able to tell you when we will schedule an energy bill."

GOP Seeks Action on Bush Nominees

The Washington Post
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

Senate Republicans blocked a $ 15.5 billion foreign aid bill yesterday in an effort to force Democrats to step up the pace of confirmations for President Bush's judicial nominees.

On a 50 to 46 party-line vote, the Democrats fell 10 votes short of the 60 needed to break a GOP filibuster and force consideration of a relatively noncontroversial foreign aid measure.

Republicans said they would continue to block some necessary spending bills until Democrats agreed to hit the accelerator on Bush's pending judicial nominations. "We've got to speed up the process here," said Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.). "Let's call a timeout, let's go to nominations, and when there are a sufficient number of nominations completed, we'll go back to other priorities."

But Democrats questioned why Republicans would hold up a key foreign aid bill at a time Bush was trying to galvanize international support for the war on terrorism. The foreign aid bill includes funds for key Middle East allies the United States is relying on during its military operations against Afghanistan.

"This is not the time to horse trade on judges," said Democratic Whip Harry M. Reid (Nev.), calling the move "wrong-headed."

The Senate has approved eight of Bush's 60 judicial nominations, a rate that Republicans say badly lags behind the first-year confirmation totals of the three previous administrations.

"We're way behind. We've got a lot of catching up to do," said Sen. Don Nickles (Okla.), the chamber's second-ranking Republican.

But Senate Democrats harshly disputed claims they were deliberately slowing the process, pointing out that Republicans controlled the Senate during the first four months of the administration and never held a confirmation hearing on a judge.

Democrats took a one-seat margin of power in the Senate in June when Vermont Republican James M. Jeffords became an independent.

"No one is saying we aren't going to confirm judges," said Reid. "Let us do our work here. This is a matter of common sense."

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations foreign operations subcommittee, was even more harsh, likening Republicans to "petulant children in the schoolyard."

The dispute marked another step back into the partisan skirmishing prevalent in the Senate prior to the deadly Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington.

Kyl said Republicans would not hold up all House-Senate conference reports on completed spending bills. Five spending bills -- foreign aid, agriculture, labor and education, the District of Columbia and defense -- have not been taken up by the full Senate.

Senate Still Battling Over Bush's Judicial Nominees

By Jonathan Ringel
American Lawyer Media
Thursday, October 18, 2001

In between enduring anthrax exposure, passing anti-terrorism bills and considering measures to fund the government, senators still have found time this week to bicker about judicial confirmations.

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a foreign aid appropriation bill in an effort to force the

REV_00070826

Democratic majority to confirm dozens of President George W. Bush's nominees.

Democrats say they are moving as fast as they can-and if the Senate stays in session through November, that as many as 25 to 30 Bush picks could be confirmed.

Bush so far has made 60 nominations to the lifetime posts on the federal bench, 25 for the circuit courts and 35 for the district courts. Since the Democrats took over the Senate in June, eight judges have been confirmed, four each for the appeals courts and the district courts.

Another five-one circuit nominee and four district nominees-have had hearings and are expected to move through the Judiciary Committee and on to confirmation soon.

Yet another circuit nominee and three district nominees were scheduled to have hearings today. Those hearings may be postponed, however, as authorities Wednesday were considering shutting the Capitol complex down to test for anthrax exposure.

A spokeswoman to Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who chairs the Judiciary Committee, reported that two more hearings - in addition to the one scheduled for today - will occur if the Senate stays in session through November. If five nominees appear at each hearing, that would mean 27 nominees would have had hearings.

"The numbers show that the committee's record meets or exceeds the pace of previous years, despite the limited amount of time it has had to consider nominees," said Mimi Devlin, the spokeswoman.

Devlin reported that in 1989, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 15 judicial nominees during the first year under President George Bush. In 1993, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 27 of President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees.

But in a floor debate last week, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, accused Leahy and the Democrats of moving too slowly on Bush's judges.

Hatch pointed out that most judges nominated by the time of the August recess in the first year of a presidency usually get confirmed. Bush made 44 nominations before the August recess - far more than any president in recent memory.

The confirmation rate of circuit court judges particularly vexed Hatch, who said that Clinton got three of his five circuit court nominees through in his first year.

"That is 60 percent," said Hatch, arguing that 60 percent of Bush's 25 circuit court nominees should get through by the end of the year.

The Democrats' claim that they're keeping up with recent confirmation paces, he said, "is an unfair comparison when you take into account the fact that President Bush has chosen to nominate 20 more circuit court nominees than President Clinton did in his first year."

REV_00070827

During the last six years of the Clinton administration, Hatch drew fire from Democrats for allowing some Republicans to block nominees, particularly circuit court picks. In 1996, a spat between Hatch and the White House led to no circuit court nominees getting hearings. Nonetheless, Clinton ended up nearly tying Ronald Reagan's all-time record for placing the most judges on the federal bench.

During the brief floor debate, which occurred between the Senate's handling aviation security bills and anti-terrorism bills, Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., acknowledged that this is an old fight.

"It is amazing how history repeats itself," he said. "What you were saying last year, we are saying this year. I guess before that, we were saying it or you were saying it."

The circuit nominee scheduled for today's hearing is Charles Pickering Sr., a Mississippi federal district judge tapped for the Fifth Circuit.

Hispanic National Bar Association Endorses Appointment of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

The Hispanic National Bar Association, national voice of over 25,000 Hispanic lawyers in the United States, issues its endorsement of President George W. Bush's nominee, Mr. Miguel Estrada, to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Estrada would be the first Hispanic to sit in the D.C. Circuit, widely regarded as the second most important appellate court in the nation. Estrada, who emigrated from Honduras at seventeen, is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP. A member of the firm's Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group and its Business Crimes and Investigations Practice Group, Estrada clerked for the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy in the U.S. Supreme Court from 1988-1989, and has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

A 1983 magna cum laude graduate of Columbia College in New York, Estrada received a J.D. degree magna cum laude in 1986 from Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the Harvard Law Review.

President Bush nominated Estrada in May of this year. "Mr. Estrada's distinguished and impressive career illustrates the promise and opportunity that America offers to all immigrants, specially Hispanic immigrants. It is encouraging that President Bush has started tapping in the substantial pool of Hispanic legal talent throughout the country. Mr. Estrada's confirmation will break new ground for Hispanics in the judiciary. The time has come to move on Mr. Estrada's nomination. I urge the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to schedule a hearing on Mr. Estrada's nomination and the U.S. Senate to bring this highly qualified nominee to a vote." said Rafael A. Santiago, of Hartford, Connecticut, National

Leahy's War Cover

The Wall Street Journal
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Senate Republicans are a tower of babblers, so when nearly all of them agree on something it's news. This week they've been riled into a rare burst of unity by Democrat Pat Leahy's unprecedented stonewalling on judges.

Simply put, the Senate Judiciary Chairman is using the war on terrorism as cover to slow roll the confirmation of President Bush's judicial nominees. In normal times, the media might report his delaying tactics and Mr. Bush might make them an issue. But the White House, now in bipartisan war mode, doesn't want to make a fuss over anything outside its anti-terror campaign. Mr. Leahy is exploiting that good will for his own partisan ends.

There's really no other way to explain that 10 months into this Administration Mr. Leahy has confirmed a mere eight of the 60 judicial nominations Mr. Bush has made, including 44 by the August recess. With only weeks to go before Congress goes home for the year, only 14 have even had a hearing. This kind of delay typically occurs only in the final year of a Presidency, before an election. It's unheard of in first years, when Ronald Reagan had 41 judges confirmed, George H.W. Bush 15, and Bill Clinton 28.

Mr. Leahy knows this, or at least he did when Mr. Clinton was President. In 1999, when the federal courts had a mere 59 unfilled seats, he wailed about a "crisis." Yet now, thanks to his foot-dragging, there are 109 vacancies, nearly 13% of the entire federal bench. It is true enough that some Republicans abused their advise and consent power under Bill Clinton, but Pat Leahy makes Jesse Helms look like Little Lord Fauntleroy.

We might even credit Mr. Leahy's excuse that he's been busy with anti-terror legislation. But then what to make of the fact that, despite GOP objections, he is also changing the long-time questionnaire for judicial nominees? From now on nominees will have to disclose any previous drug charges and whether they have ever been "a party in any civil or administrative hearing." Senators can already see all of this information in confidential FBI files. But Mr. Leahy's revised questionnaire means that the stuff of bad divorces and teenage marijuana busts will be available to Judiciary staff. The chances of this stuff leaking to the press are 110%.

Mr. Leahy, a self-styled privacy advocate, is also demanding that nominees itemize "all political contributions." These are the same nominees that Mr. Leahy insists must be non-ideological and non-political. Imagine the uproar if former GOP Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch had pulled a stunt like this.

REV_00070829

In an October 1 letter to Mr. Leahy, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales wrote that this new questionnaire "may have the likely effect of unnecessarily invading a candidate's personal privacy" without adding any more information for Senators. "If we go down this road, I fear that many qualified people will elect not to participate in this process," Mr. Gonzales added. Which may be exactly what Mr. Leahy intends. If anyone the least bit controversial -- i.e., conservative -- is nominated, Mr.
Leahy may want them to know they could face public embarrassment and a political torching. By any definition, this is an abuse of Senate power, rendering meaningless the debate over judges in a Presidential election.

Which is why fed-up Republicans are fighting back with their own Senate prerogatives. They're uniting to slow down spending bills until Mr. Leahy decides to move more judges. The strategy was invented by current Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle in the final year of the Clinton Presidency. But Mr. Leahy's calm, adult response this week was to call Republicans "petulant children in the school yard." Well, he ought to know.

It's about time someone blew away Mr. Leahy's war-time political cover.

End the Leahy Stall; 'Sen. Leahy Should Stop Playing Partisan Politics With the Federal Courts,' AR's Richard Lessner

PR Newswire
Tuesday, October 16, 2001

American Renewal today issued a statement of support for the effort by Republicans in the U.S. Senate to break the blockade on President Bush's judicial nominations.

"Sen. Patrick Leahy is stalling," American Renewal executive director Richard Lessner said, noting that vacancies on the federal bench have increased to 110 from 67 the day President Bush took office.
"The chairman of the Judiciary Committee is engaged in a sophisticated slowdown. The vacancy crisis in the federal courts continues to worsen, yet Sen. Leahy refuses to follow long established Senate procedures and move nominees through the confirmation process in an expeditious manner.

"When Bill Clinton occupied the White House, Sen. Leahy and other Democrats declared far fewer vacancies to be a national crisis," Lessner said. "But now that George W. Bush is president, Sen. Leahy seems to be in no hurry to confirm judges despite the growing backlog of nominees and increasing number of court vacancies."

On Monday, Senate Republicans blocked a vote on a foreign aid bill in an effort to force Majority Leader Tom Daschle to act to break the blockade in the Judiciary Committee.

REV_00070830

"It is unfortunate that it had to come to this," Lessner said, "but the minority Republicans have few other options under Senate rules to force Sen. Leahy's hand. The pace of confirmations is lagging far behind that in any of the three previous administrations. And it is clear that Sen. Leahy is cherry-picking for hearings those nominees he personally finds politically acceptable, while stalling superbly qualified nominees he opposes for ideological reasons.

"Sen. Leahy should stop playing partisan politics with the federal courts and start giving President Bush's judicial nominees the fair hearings they deserve."

NARAL Opposes Confirmation Of Charles Pickering and Tactic Of Blocking Appropriations Bills For Court- Packing Plan

Lott Leads Anti-Choice Strategy

NARAL President Kate Michelman announced today that NARAL opposes the confirmation of Charles Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"Judge Pickering is a staunch opponent of Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose. He was a prime architect of the 1976 Republican Party platform plank that protested the Roe decision and called for a constitutional amendment banning abortion," said Michelman.

"Judge Pickering is the first demonstrably anti-choice judicial nominee to the Court of Appeals to get a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. He has been nominated for a lifetime position on the bench. If confirmed, the decisions he makes could affect the reproductive rights of women for generations to come. "

Anti-choice Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-MS) is holding up the entire congressional appropriations process until Charles Pickering, Sr., a judge from his home state, receives a hearing this Thursday on his nomination to the appellate court.

"Even in these trying times, opponents of a woman's right to freedom of choice continue to press their goal of packing the court with anti-choice judges. They are willing to risk funding of our national government in order to short circuit the judicial confirmation process in the U.S. Senate. It is unconscionable that the Senate Republican Leadership would hold up the entire appropriations process to impose their own ideological agenda upon the nation's courts," said Michelman.

Potential Closed-Door Hearing on Judicial Nominees Today "Would be Undemocratic and Unacceptable," Says PFAW's Neas

People for the American Way

REV_00070831

Thursday, October 18, 2001

There are indications that the Senate Judiciary Committee plans to consider this afternoon several judicial nominees, including a controversial nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Charles Pickering, at a hearing that could be in effect closed to the public due to security measures on Capitol Hill. People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas today urged Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy not to hold closed-door hearings on any judicial nominees.

"De facto closed-door hearings on federal judicial nominees are undemocratic and unacceptable," said Neas. "People For the American Way urges Senator Leahy not to establish a precedent that undermines the principles of open and accountable government and shuts the public out of this critically important process."

Reportedly the hearing might be inaccessible to the public due to security precautions that have shut Senate office buildings temporarily and put restrictions on public access to the Capitol. Neas said the hearing on nominations to lifetime positions on the federal bench should be postponed if the public cannot be guaranteed access to the hearing. "Considering these judicial nominees is not a matter of national security, or of such great urgency that we must violate fundamental principles of democratic government," said Neas. "In particular, there are many reasons to postpone the hastily scheduled hearing on Judge Pickering so that the public can make sure that senators have time to thoroughly consider the nominee's record." Neas said that if the hearing goes forward, the Judiciary Committee must hold a second hearing, accessible to the public, after the transcript of the first hearing is made available.

"It is particularly important in this time of crisis that we affirm, rather than abandon, the principles of democratic self-governance," said Neas.

Clash Coming on GOP Showdown for Bush Judicial Nominees

CNN.com
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A battle over President Bush's judicial nominations is intensifying in the Senate.

REV_00070808

Republicans have been blocking legislation to call attention to the small number of judges approved by the Senate this year.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-South Dakota, planned to force a vote on a foreign aid bill past the Republicans on Wednesday. He says Democrats are doing what they can to get as many judges through as possible.

Republicans disagree, and say they have enough votes to continue stalling the Senate until they get a guarantee that senators will accept more judges before leaving for the year.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has a hearing Thursday for an U.S. Appeals Court judge and four U.S. District Court judges, Daschle said.

"I think we're doing all that we can," he said. "The point is that, as much as our Republican colleagues have complained, their tactic is counterproductive."

The Democratic-led Senate has approved eight judges this year, with 52 nominees still pending. There are 110 vacancies in the federal judiciary system, including 39 positions that have been open so long the courts have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

"I don't think we're doing the job, and I think the American people are going to suffer because of it," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

To call attention to their point, Republicans have been holding up the Senate's consideration of the foreign aid bill. It is one of the 13 spending bills that were supposed to be finished by Oct. 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, but were not.

"Regretfully, this seems to be the only tool with which we are left to try to advance the president's judicial nominations," said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Kentucky.

The government is operating in the meantime under the same priorities established by former President Clinton and lawmakers a year ago.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Arizona, says Democrats claim that they've been too busy taking care of other Senate business to get more judges through. "For those who say we are just so busy doing other things, then I am forced to say, fine," Kyl said. "Then let's stop until we can get some of these nominations to the floor for a vote and acted on."

Democrats and Republicans are accusing each other of hurting America's war against terrorists because of the fight over judicial nominees.

Democrats say the war effort needs the money in the foreign aid spending bill.

"Because of the Republican filibuster, $42 million that would be available to help countries strengthen their borders is not being provided; $175 million to fight infectious diseases, as we fight the war in Afghanistan, is not being provided; $5 billion in direct military assistance to those allies in the region is not being provided; and $255 million to assist Afghan refugees is not being provided," Daschle said.

Republicans say the anti-terrorist efforts in America need judges to work effectively. The House and Senate are working on an anti-terrorism bill to give law enforcement more power to track down and prosecute suspected terrorists.

But "law enforcement can't make cases to empty courtrooms," Hatch said.

Republicans, Leahy Continue to Clash

By Paul Kane
Roll Call
Thursday, October 18, 2001

Despite growing anxiety about the threat of anthrax, Senate and House leaders said yesterday that business will continue to proceed as normally as possible and that there will still be serious policy disputes over critical issues in the coming days and weeks.

"We will not let this stop the work of the Senate," Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) said at a press conference in which he announced that 31 individuals, mostly members of his staff, had tested positive for anthrax exposure.

As if to prove the point, the Senate went ahead and overwhelmingly approved the Interior appropriations conference report late Wednesday afternoon and is expected to pass the military construction conference report today. And with serious prodding from the White House, House and Senate negotiators were very close to reaching bipartisan consensus on an anti-terrorism package that would reconcile the previously vast differences between the bills passed by the two chambers, aides said.

But the Senate remained gridlocked over how to move the remaining appropriations bills it needs to move to House-Senate conferences, as Republicans maintained that they would continue blocking the spending bills because of the slow pace on judicial nominations.

If anything, that dispute has grown more bitter and partisan in recent days.

Colorado GOP Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell this week accused Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) of threatening the future prospects of their home-state judicial nominees.

According to Allard, he and Campbell approached Leahy during a cloture vote Monday night on the foreign operations spending bill and asked the Vermont Senator if he could quickly bump up three judicial nominees from their state close to the top of the list of nominees being considered.

At that point Leahy, who also chairs the foreign operations subcommittee, wanted to know if the pair was supporting the GOP blockade on appropriations, according to Allard. "Well, he asked, 'How did you vote on that bill?,'" Allard said.

"If I go ahead and vote for cloture, you'd move my judges to the top?" Allard recalled asking Leahy. "He said, 'Yep.'"

Campbell stood by that account of events yesterday, adding, "It's just unfortunate that Senator Leahy is holding up these nominations."

Leahy did not specifically deny the conversation with Allard and Campbell, but his staff hinted that the Colorado Senators may have misinterpreted comments that were intended to be a joke.

"He's one of the senators from the old school who does not discuss conversations with other senators," said David Carle, Leahy's spokesman. "But it's probably fair to say that if Senator Allard approached Senator Leahy right then to talk about any newly received nominations, the opportunity for irony would have been especially high."

Leahy plans to hold an executive meeting today in one of the meeting rooms off the Senate floor, since the regular hearing room in the Dirksen building will be closed. He expects the committee to approve five judicial nominations as well as 13 U.S. attorneys and one post related to the Justice Department.

After the executive meeting, the Judiciary panel plans to hold a nomination hearing for another four judges. Of those judicial nominees who will be approved or have their hearing, most come from states with Senators who voted against cloture on the spending bill.

"That kind of says it all," Carle said.

Some GOP Senators, however, said they view Leahy's comments to Allard and Campbell as part of an overall effort to slow the nomination process. "This is too important a process to play that kind of political game," said Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), ranking Member on Judiciary's subcommittee overseeing the federal bench.

Sen. Larry Craig (Idaho), chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said Leahy so far had made a "meager effort" in approving judges, eight of whom have been confirmed by the full Senate with almost another 50 awaiting action. Craig said Daschle has "failed to instruct" Leahy to pass more judges out of his committee, noting that the Majority Leader has forced chairmen to pass key bills out of their panels or risk having them brought to the floor without committee approval.

"I see that as a disconnect of leadership or at least an inconsistency," Craig said.

REV_00070811

At Tuesday's GOP luncheon, at least half a dozen Senators stood up to complain in highly personal terms about Leahy's handling of the judicial process, according to a GOP aide who was present.

Democrats, however, are standing solidly behind the Vermont lawmaker.

Daschle said Tuesday he was "very appreciative" of Leahy's work in handling the nomination process, saying any delays were due to paperwork problems and the White House's decision to not first vet nominees through the American Bar Association, a process that now takes place once a nomination arrives on Capitol Hill.

"We're doing the best we can," he added.

Daschle also said there was nothing to negotiate about with Republicans and Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) as far as the pace of judicial nominees is concerned, setting up a potentially lengthy standoff over judges and appropriations. "We talk about it a lot, but there are no negotiations," he said.

On the House side, Appropriations Chairman Bill Young (R-Fla.) said his committee would continue to move bills and conference reports on a "regular" basis. He said further delays caused by safety precautions may force Congress to pass another continuing resolution at the end of this month to fund government operations, but said passing an "omnibus" bill with all remaining spending measures was not something he predicted would happen.

Daschle had planned to hold another cloture vote on foreign operations yesterday morning, but that was canceled after the revelations about the number of staffers who initially tested for anthrax exposure.

This prompted Senate leaders to hold a bipartisan conference in the Senate dining room, the third such extraordinary gathering of all Senators since the Sept. 11 attacks. The Senators received a briefing from top medical experts in the administration on the threats from the deadly chemical.

Exiting the meeting, Senators said there was a unanimous feeling of support for Daschle and for maximizing the safety of staffers and others in the Capitol complex.

"There's total unity here. There's total support for Daschle," Craig said.

"Everybody feels very together now. Whether that applies to other issues, I don't know," said Sen. Paul Wellstone (D-Minn.).

The second cloture vote on foreign operations is expected to come early next week. Because of all the distractions that Daschle has faced this week, Craig said it made sense to put off this contentious bill for now and allow less controversial legislation to move this week.

REV_00070812

When the more divisive issues are revisited next week, the fighting is expected to resume. Sen. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.), a senior Judiciary member, said he fully expects the Republicans to block the foreign operations bill.

"It'll be the same vote as before," he said. "Nothing has changed."

Report Documents Unprecedented Situation with Federal Judiciary, Calls for Unprecedented Bipartisan Solution

U.S. Newswire
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

People For the American Way Foundation President Ralph G. Neas today called on President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate to engage in an unprecedented bipartisan approach to judicial nominations in order to minimize the number of divisive nomination battles and to prevent a complete takeover of the federal judiciary by right-wing ideologues.

In a report released today, he also urged Senators to resist right-wing pressure to confirm nominees without sufficient opportunity to consider their qualifications and judicial philosophy.

"President Bush and members of the U.S. Senate must recognize that we face an unprecedented situation in the federal judiciary," said Neas, "one that calls for an unprecedented bipartisan solution."

The PFAWF report debunks accusations that Bush administration's nominees are being treated unfairly by the Senate, and documents the unprecedented blockade waged by some Senate Republicans, many of whom now clamor for immediate votes on Bush administration judicial nominees, against highly qualified Clinton administration nominees, especially to the critical federal appeals courts. That campaign set the stage for all thirteen of the federal appeals courts to be dominated by judges appointed by a single political party by the end of the Bush administration, an unprecedented situation. If President Bush follows the urging of right-wing advocates to appoint only far-right ideologues to those positions, the impact on Americans' rights and freedoms could be devastating for decades. People For the American Way Foundation researchers reviewed Congressional Research Service statistics, comparing the Senate record on judicial nominations during 1995-2000, when Republicans controlled the Senate and President Clinton submitted nominees, and 1987-1992, when Republican presidents submitted nominees to a Democratic-majority Senate. The results are stark and clear:

-- During the years Republicans controlled the Senate, 45.3 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were returned to the White House, a rate 72 percent higher than the 26.3 percent return rate for Presidents Reagan and Bush when Democrats controlled the Senate. (None of the returned Clinton appellate court nominees were voted down -- not a single one of them was allowed to come up for a vote.)

REV_00070813

-- During the final two years of Clinton's term, the blockade was even tighter, with less than half of Clinton's appeals courts nominees being confirmed. More specifically, during the 106th Congress, 56 percent of President Clinton's nominations to the courts of appeals were blocked. This failure rate for President Clinton's appeals court nominees was 60 percent higher than for Presidents Reagan or George H.W. Bush, each of whom saw only 35 percent of his appeals court nominees go unconfirmed in the 101st and 102nd Congresses, respectively.

If numbers are calculated so as to eliminate the effect of multiple nominations of individual nominees, serious discrepancies remain. Under this analysis, appeals court nominees were blocked during the six years Republicans controlled the Senate under President Clinton at a rate nearly 40 percent higher than during the six years Democrats controlled the Senate under Presidents Reagan and Bush -- 35 percent under Clinton vs. 25 percent under Reagan and Bush. See the full report for a further note on methodology.

Neas noted that Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott recently threatened to hold up the appropriations process if Bush judicial nominees were not given swift consideration, and yesterday Senate Republicans blocked action on a foreign aid bill. Neas said such calls for action by Lott and other right-wing leaders, including Attorney General John Ashcroft, showed "remarkable chutzpah, if not outright hypocrisy," given their involvement in the stalling campaign against Clinton administration nominees.

Neas also noted that, in the face of pressure from Lott and others, one judicial nominee was recently approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee in closed session and by the full Senate despite pending concerns about his record, and a controversial nominee was scheduled for a hearing with five working days' notice, making it impossible for senators to conduct a thorough review of his record. Neas called such actions "unfortunate and unacceptable."

The report calls on both President Bush and the Senate to act in accordance with their constitutional roles and with recognition of the unprecedented situation facing the federal judiciary. Among the report's recommendations:

-- President Bush should work closely with Senate Democrats in an attempt to repair the damage done by six years of Republican obstruction, restore the pre-nomination role of the ABA, and seek out nominees who are not right-wing ideologues and who demonstrate an understanding of and commitment to civil and constitutional rights.

-- Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy should move judicial nominations only when the committee has had time to give them sufficient consideration.

-- The Senate should carefully and thoroughly review the President's nominees, particularly for the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court. They should hold out a clear standard of commitment to civil and constitutional rights, as more than 200 law professors have recently suggested. Mainstream nominees that reflect genuine bipartisan consideration should receive priority in processing.

REV_00070814

-- The Senate should not hesitate to fulfill its constitutional responsibility of rejecting and withholding its consent from nominees who do not demonstrate qualifications that include a firm commitment to broad principles of equality and individual rights and an abiding respect for the Constitution and for the constitutional authority of the Congress.

Lawyer Quits Country Club After Nomination

The Advocate
Wednesday, October 17, 2001

A Metairie lawyer, nominated by President Bush for a federal judgeship, has withdrawn his family's membership from a Jefferson Parish country club after questions were raised about whether it discriminates against black people.

In an Oct. 12 letter to the Metairie Country Club, Jay Zainey said he felt pressured to drop his membership because of media inquiries while he is being considered for U.S. Senate confirmation. He was nominated Oct. 10 for a vacancy on the U.S. District Court in New Orleans after being touted by Republican members of the state's congressional delegation.

"Although I know of no discriminatory practices at the club, a fact which reportedly has been confirmed by an FBI background investigation, I feel compelled to resign," Zainey wrote.

Officials at the country club say they don't discriminate. They declined to say whether there are any black people among the 1,270 families who belong. Potential members must be invited to join and must be approved by a committee.

The FBI recently checked the club as part of its background investigation of Zainey and concluded that the club does not discriminate, an FBI spokesman said.

U.S. Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay, urged Zainey to drop his membership because of the potential political backlash at a time when the pace of Bush administration judicial nominees being approved by the Democrat-controlled Senate is already slow.

A spokesman for Tauzin said Monday that Zainey decided to drop out before Tauzin urged him to do so.

"It was a decision he made on his own after sounding out a few close friends," Ken Johnson said. "No one pressured him, absolutely no one."

I think the only way to have this kind of breakfast (and not have it paid for by the individual attendees themselves) is to charge the White House entertainment account. The problem with this is that there is only a few thousand dollars in this account. Generally, it is not appropriate for outside groups to pay for official activities being conducted at the White House. What is the Republican National Hispanic Assembly, and what would be its involvement other than paying for the breakfast?

I think the only way to have this kind of breakfast (and not have it paid for by the individual attendees themselves) is to charge the White House entertainment account. The problem with this is that there is only a few thousand dollars in this account. Generally, it is not appropriate for outside groups to pay for official activities being conducted at the White House. What is the Republican National Hispanic Assembly, and what would be its involvement other than paying for the breakfast?

We are proposing to Karl Rove that the White House monthly convene Hispanic Appointees from throughout the Administration to create a forum to discussing the President's Agenda.

Would we be allowed to have the Republican National Hispanic Assembly sponsor this event and pay for the breakfast, but us send out the invitations, tend to the details and host the group?

If not, how might we structure something like this?

John Wood had mentioned the same to me - he also wondered whether there were any APA risks to asking for general comment w/o giving the public notice of the government's actual resolution of that issue. Do you have any thoughts, Brett?

Thanks for the ethics briefing.

I have a few questions regarding our work in intergovernmental affairs.
Who do you suggest I talk to regarding our work in support of the President's agenda on capitol hill?

For example, can we encourage state or local officials (who agree with our position) to "educate" members of congress about a particular bill?

New Mexico Court of Appeals Judge M. Christina Armijo, 50, of Las Vegas, N.M., was introduced to the committee Thursday by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who recommended Armijo to President Bush.

"I thought we were very well received," New Mexico's senior senator said by phone Thursday. Domenici said that he and Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., got an opportunity to speak on Armijo's behalf. Armijo, accompanied by her mother and brother, also testified before the committee, Domenici said. The committee did not vote on whether to recommend to the full Senate that she be confirmed. No schedule was announced.

Domenici said the committee was told about her 22 years of law experience, including her service on the state appeals court since 1996, and about her family's long history in northern New Mexico. Armijo's grandfather, for instance, was a judge for 35 years, Domenici said.

"As she put it, her family has lived for 12 generations in New Mexico and lawyers and judges are part of the family tradition," Domenici said. "I concluded ... that she will be a fair yet firm judge and urged that her confirmation be done quickly. I am very enthusiastic we will have her within the next couple of weeks."

Domenici also said that he expects the confirmation of former New Mexico Court of Appeals Judge Harris Hartz, whom Bush nominated for a post on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit, to go smoothly.

"There's an opportunity for contention on circuit judges, but I don't think that's going to be the case," Domenici said.

He also said he had "no idea why we won't have (William P.) 'Chip' Johnson on soon."

Johnson, a state district judge in Roswell, was nominated along with Armijo by Bush to become a U.S. district judge. Domenici recommended all three judges to Bush for the lifetime appointments.

Domenici said he assumes that it won't be too long before a U.S. district judge's post is created in Las Cruces, where immigration and drug cases overload the docket. Five U.S. district judges from Albuquerque and Santa Fe have been rotating to southern New Mexico to help with the caseload.

Reno Lawyer Hicks Looks for Quick Senate Confirmation as Judge

The Associated Press
Friday, October 19, 2001

Sens. Harry Reid and John Ensign said they are optimistic the Senate will confirm Reno lawyer Larry Hicks as a new federal judge in Nevada within the next two weeks. Hicks went before the

REV_00070939

Senate Judiciary Committee Thursday for a confirmation hearing on his appointment as a U.S. district court judge. Both Nevada senators spoke on his behalf.

Hicks worked in the Washoe County District Attorney's Office before he became a partner in one of Nevada's largest law firms - McDonald, Carano, Wilson, McCune, Bergin, Frankovich & Hicks. He's a past president of the state bar association's board of governors.

Senate Panel Approves Two State Judicial Nominees

By Jim Myers
Tulsa World
Friday, October 19, 2001

Two nominees for judicial posts in Oklahoma won Senate Judiciary Committee approval Thursday.

Nominations for U.S. Magistrates Claire V. Eagan of Tulsa and James P. Payne of Muskogee now head for confirmation by the full Senate, a vote that could take place next week. Eagan was nominated for a position in the state's northern district, while Payne will divide his time among Oklahoma's three districts.

Meanwhile, the Senate panel held a hearing for a third Oklahoman, Stephen Friot of Oklahoma City. Friot, 54, is headed for a slot in the western district.

Responding to questions by a panel of senators, Friot vowed to uphold Americans' right to privacy and a woman's right to an abortion as defined by the U.S. Supreme Court. Only the Supreme Court can undo one of its previous rulings, he testified.

Asked about the controversial practice of racial profiling and whether judges could do more to respond to that issue, Friot referred to a body of law he said addressed selective prosecution.

He said in response to a question about whether he would be a strict constructionist that he would not be limited to one narrow approach but instead would look for a guidance from a number of sources.

President Bush nominated the three Oklahomans at the recommendation of the state's two senators, Republicans Don Nickles and Jim Inhofe.

These individuals are exceptionally well-qualified and will prove to be great assets to the judicial system in Oklahoma and our country," Nickles said.

A fourth judicial nominee, Assistant U.S. Attorney Joe Heaton of Oklahoma, is awaiting his confirmation hearing.

Senate Panel Oks Four Judges

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
Friday, October 19, 2001

Four district judges were unanimously approved yesterday by the Senate Judiciary Committee after Republicans complained that President Bush's nominees were being treated unfairly by Democrats.

Republicans are insisting that the 44 judges nominated by Mr. Bush before the August recess be voted on before Congress adjourns for the year. To date, eight judges have been confirmed.

"It's a good step in the right direction, but it doesn't make much of a dent," Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican, said after the vote.

Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, is blocking a spending bill for foreign operations to force a vote on the pending judges.

Committee negotiations were halted after an anthrax attack on Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle's office Monday exposed staffers and Capitol Police officers; a total of 31 persons.

"We've not been able to discuss the judges for obvious reasons," said Mr. Lott, who predicted that a vote to move forward on the spending bill Tuesday would fail.

The committee unanimously passed without debate Karen K. Caldwell as U.S. district judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky; Laurie Smith Camp as U.S. district judge for the District of Nebraska; Claire V. Eagan as U.S. district judge for the Northern District of Oklahoma, and James H. Payne as U.S. district judge for the Northern, Eastern, and Western Districts of Oklahoma.

"It's a beginning, but let it not be something to pacify us and move on. That won't work," Sen. Larry E. Craig, Idaho Republican, said of yesterday's action.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, committee chairman and Vermont Democrat, said, "I am fully committed to the process of confirming judges and filling vacancies. I will not be pressured to proceed on nominees whose records are not complete to the satisfaction of this committee.

"It is painfully clear to me that in this time of national challenge, the message must be sent that the United States Senate should be working as a unified team to respond to the violent attacks against our country," Mr. Leahy said. "We should be avoiding petty partisanship. This is hardly the time for divisive bickering."

His plea did not prevent Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., Delaware Democrat, from calling Republicans

REV_00070941

"phonies" for saying Mr. Bush's nominees were being treated unfairly by Democrats.

Sen. Arlen Specter, Pennsylvania Republican, told the committee he will bring a measure to the floor forcing a vote on the nominees.

The committee also held hearings on the nominations of Charles W. Pickering Sr. for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals; M. Moment of Decision for Law Enforcement

By Donald Lambro
The Washington Times
Monday, October 22, 2001

With America's homeland enduring the deadliest terrorist attacks in our history, every law enforcement weapon and tool at our disposal needs to be fully operational and running at peak performance.

Yet, incredibly, there is a gaping hole in the government's judicial defenses - the heart of the nation's law enforcement army - because of persistent and deliberate delays by the Senate Judiciary Committee to fill dozens of vacancies in our court system.

The courts are being inundated with law enforcement requests and cases. There are not enough judges to handle them all quickly. The dire result: dangerous backlogs and delays that prevent the swift and sure delivery of decisions needed to protect all of us from the threats that now loom over our country. Right now, there are at least 108 vacancies in our federal courts, including 30 posts that have been vacant for so long that federal judicial officials have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

With our law-enforcement agencies needing rapid-fire responses from the courts for a broad range of court-approved surveillance actions and other legal requests in their war on the murderous terrorists in our midst, this is no time for our court system to be operating at half-speed.

"We need federal judges monitoring and helping to support the anti-terrorism efforts and law-enforcement requests from the various agencies of government," Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi told me.

REV_00070942

"The Senate is at its lowest confirmation rate of federal judges in recent history, and we need to pick up the pace immediately," he said.

The man most responsible for this state of affairs is Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, a deeply partisan Vermont Democrat who Republicans say has been working overtime to hold up or at least slow down President Bush's judicial nominations.

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the committee's ranking Republican, has been complaining about the lack of action by Mr. Leahy ever since Democrats took control of the Senate last July, when hearings on Mr. Bush's nominees virtually ground to a halt. At present, there are 52 judicial nominees who are trapped in Leahy limbo, 46 of whom have had no hearings.

Many of them have been fully approved by the American Bar Association, but not by Mr. Leahy and the Democratic members on his committee.

At the heart of the judicial dispute, as always, is ideology. After eight years of liberal appointments to the courts under the Clinton administration, Mr. Leahy and friends recoil at the prospect of eight years of more conservative judges who aren't as likely to let criminals go free on legal technicalities.

Hatch, Lott and other Republican senators have been complaining for months about the delays in the confirmation process, but without success. But then, in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, the complaints began pouring out of the White House, the Justice Department and elsewhere in law enforcement and in intelligence circles.

That's when the backroom political struggle broke into open warfare on the Senate floor.

Declaring that they were ready "to play hardball" to get action on the judgeship nominees, Republicans blocked action last week on the foreign aid bill and said that it and other bills would not move until Mr. Leahy lifted his judicial blockade. Notably, Republican leaders said that the White House was fully behind their move.

But the battle really exploded into all-out warfare when Mr. Hatch told his colleagues at last Tuesday's closed Republican policy luncheon that Mr. Leahy had told him that any senator who voted to block the aid bill "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed."

Enraged, Republican senators, including many who work with Mr. Leahy on the committee, rose at the meeting to excoriate the Vermonter, attacking him as a "vindictive partisan" bent on blocking President George W. Bush "anyway he can," according to my sources.

Mr. Leahy denied that he threatened retribution against Republican senators, but that is not the way Mr. Hatch tells it. "If anything, he Mr. Leahy was threatening. I've heard payback talk," Mr. Hatch said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota weakly argues that judicial confirmations are moving at roughly the same pace under the Democrats as they did under Republican rule. In fact, Republicans moved 88 percent of Mr. Clinton's nominees in his first year in office, compared with a snail-paced 13 percent approval rate thus far in Mr. Bush's first year.

But finger pointing and comparisons to past senatorial records is irrelevant in the dangerous life-and-death struggle in which our country is now engaged.

This is a time when the United States needs all of its law enforcement resources fully staffed and working together against an elusive and deadly enemy that threatens our way of life.

It is certainly not a time for petty, left-leaning judicial politics, nor the usual time-consuming procedures. Mr. Leahy and Mr. Daschle need to get with the program and approve these nominees as soon as possible.

Take Action on Judicial Nominees

St. Petersburg Times
Saturday, October 20, 2001

When Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., was the ranking minority member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he accused the committee chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, of stalling then-President Clinton's judicial nominations for political and ideological reasons.

Leahy was certainly justified in his criticism. With dozens of judgeships vacant, Hatch held up confirmation hearings for nominees he thought were too liberal and used his position as chairman to cut deals to get his own people federal judgeships. Now with Leahy sitting in the chairman's seat, Hatch and other Republicans are accusing the Democrats of stalling President Bush's nominations to the federal bench. What goes around comes around, as they say. Hatch, along with the other Republicans on the committee, sent a letter to Leahy earlier this month complaining about the slow pace of confirmation hearings and threatening to delay passage of a foreign-aid bill until the logjam is broken. So far, only eight of 60 Bush nominees have been confirmed and only 14 hearings have been held.

Meanwhile, the federal judiciary is being severely handicapped by this foot-dragging. It has 109 vacancies, about 13 percent of the bench, and a case backlog that has been building for more than a decade. With Congress insisting on federalizing more crimes every year, and the endless burden of federal drug cases, the federal judiciary couldn't keep its docket current even if it were at full strength.

There is no question that the vacancies need to be filled, and it is Leahy's duty to move the process along. Any nominees who are clearly outside the mainstream of current legal thought should be rejected. The Democrats are in the majority and can block Bush's worst choices. But it's time to pick up the pace. Confirmation hearings should be scheduled and votes should be taken. Both parties are hypocrites on this issue. Both are guilty of using obstructionist tactics to stall or defeat judicial nominees who are viewed as either too liberal or too conservative.

REV_00070944

At some point, for the sake of the country, the partisan warfare over judicial nominations has to end. Vote them up, or vote them down. But it's time to start voting.

Justice Delayed

Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 19, 2001

They're at it again. Senators are foot-dragging on approving federal judicial nominees. The last time we complained editorially about such procrastination, it was Republicans stalling Bill Clinton's choices. Now it seems to be mostly Democrats stiff-arming George W. Bush's. No matter. Whichever party is wielding the gavel, such lassitude ill-serves the public.

There are 110 openings on the federal bench, of which 39 have sat vacant so long that the judiciary has officially classified them as "judicial emergencies." President Bush has put forward 60 nominations - enough to fill just more than half of the vacancies. Of his 60, the Senate has approved:

Eight.

Senate Republicans, frustrated at the pace, have begun protesting by logjamming other legislation. One such measure is the foreign-aid bill that would free billions of dollars that directly or indirectly relate to pressing the fight against terrorism. Stalling a bill so crucial perhaps is a dubious tactic, but it is an attention-getter.

The federal judiciary has been short-handed for years because of such tactics, harming the quality and pace of the administration of justice. Democrats should loosen their hold on the Senate Judiciary Committee, just as in recent years it would have been the right thing for the Republicans to have done. (They didn't.)

We are not suggesting rubber-stamping nominees. Where legitimate objections arise, they should be taken seriously. But delaying appointments over predictable differences in ideology is a petty tactic, one that should have been discarded years ago. Let's get moving.

Fighting Over Judges

Minneapolis-St. Paul Star Tribune
Friday, October 19, 2001

For a moment, Sept. 11 seemed to change the way Washington works. It kindled a bipartisan fervor in the pettiest of political hearts, spurring even fierce foes to sing and legislate in unison. The magic couldn't last forever, of course, and it hasn't. This week the Senate is up to its old tricks, squabbling over judicial appointments. Not even Capitol Hill's anthrax panic has calmed this schoolyard scrap. Insisting that Democrats are dawdling on filling vacant judgeships, Senate

REV_00070945

Republicans are holding up a crucial foreign-aid bill. They say they won't allow a vote on it until Democrats promise to approve a throng of President Bush's judicial nominees.

Coming from the folks who spent eight years blocking Bill Clinton's judicial appointments, this procrastination charge is a little amusing. It's also baffling, for there's no proof that Democrats have been stalling. Republicans controlled the Senate during the first four months of the Bush administration and held not a single judicial-confirmation hearing. Democrats took over only in June and have approved eight nominees in the months since. They're preparing to examine and approve more soon.

But as new chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., notes, the Senate Judiciary Committee hasn't exactly been sloughing off under Democratic leadership. In the weeks before the August recess it expedited confirmations for numerous judges and several high executive-branch nominees. Less than a week after the break's end came the terrible havoc of Sept. 11 - and the flood of emergency lawmaking it unleashed.

So if the confirmation process is backed up, it's hard to see how Democrats can be blamed. Whatever problem exists is more likely due to the confluence of a power shift and a tragedy. But even if Democrats had adopted the GOP's old obstructionist tactics, the current Republican filibuster wouldn't be justified at all. Its unbecoming purpose is to bully the Judiciary Committee into rubber-stamping judicial candidates before taking time to assess them. That's a deal the Democrats ought to refuse.

If the Republicans' demand is unreasonable, their tactic is outrageous. The foreign-aid measure they're blocking may be the most important bit of legislation on Capitol Hill right now. Indeed, it's not too much to say that its passage is the Senate's patriotic duty.

This is the bill, after all, that can show a shaken world that Americans are givers - that they're eager to help their struggling neighbors overseas. As the United States drops bombs on Kabul, it's essential to prove that point.

Why should Republicans want to contradict it? Holding up the $15.5 billion foreign-aid bill will do nothing to get judges onto the bench. All it will do is slow the flow of humanitarian relief and military support to U.S. allies in the war against terrorism. Surely Republicans aren't really against helping refugees, fighting disease and strengthening democracies around the world. Since they're not, they ought to loosen their grip on the foreign-aid bill. It promises to buy health and life for faraway friends - and perhaps a glimmering of good will for the United States.

Leahy Doctrine Ensures Judicial Gridlock

The Washington Times
Monday, October 22, 2001

The war over the nation's judiciary is a familiar battleground, but one whose recent skirmishes are failing to generate the usual noise and headlines. Maybe it's because of the unexpected camouflage of the war on terrorism that Senate Democrats are now unleashing a kind of ferocity and vindictiveness which just doesn't seem to count as "politics-as-usual" anymore.

Call it the Leahy doctrine. Jealously guarding the political logjam that is keeping nearly all of President Bush's nominations from the federal bench, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy seems to be following a strategy to prevent any appeals court nominee committed to the legal doctrine of judicial restraint from even having a hearing, let alone a floor vote. The deadlock over the D.C. Court of Appeals offers a case in point. Now down to eight active judges, the circuit requires 10 active judges to carry its workload. Following Judge Stephen Williams' decision to retire from active service, Chief Judge Douglas H. Ginsberg informed Mr. Leahy and Sen. Charles E. Schumer in August that, without the confirmation of two new judges by Sept. 30, "the court will likely find it necessary to delay until next term September 2002-June 2003 hearing cases that would otherwise be argued and decided this winter and spring." Mr. Bush has already named two conservative nominees with sterling credentials to the D.C. circuit, Miguel Estrada and John Roberts. So, what has Mr. Leahy done about these two excellent nominees for those two urgent vacancies? Zip.

Senate Republicans are now taking action. With "the full backing" of the White House - as this newspaper's Donald Lambro reported, quoting a Senate Republican leadership official - they have devised a tough strategy to force Senate Democrats to break up the Leahy logjam. Republicans hope that, by blocking action on the foreign aid bill and other legislation, they can make Senate Democrats move on the 52 judges Mr. Bush has nominated, 44 of whom were named before the August recess, including Messrs. Estrada and Roberts.

To date, only eight of the president's nominees have been confirmed. This works out to a measly 15 percent confirmation rate for the president - not too good compared with his predecessors' success rates of 93 percent and up. No wonder the White House supports playing "hardball" against Mr. Leahy's nasty stall strategy. As the Republican leadership official explained, the White House is "concerned that the holdup of these nominees threatens the war on terrorism, because these judicial vacancies need to be filled as soon as possible to act on law-enforcement requests."

So, the Senate war relates back to the terrorism war, after all. Even so, and despite 108 vacancies in the federal judiciary (with 39 of them classified as "judicial emergencies"), all Mr. Leahy and his staff seem to do about it is keep the logjam in place. According to Sen. Orrin Hatch, Mr. Leahy has been "pretty irritated, and not in the mood to be helpful. If anything," he added, "he was threatening. I've heard payback talk."

Frankly, this sounds more like "The Sopranos" than the U.S. Senate. Mr. Hatch went on to say that Mr. Leahy told him that any Republican voting against the foreign aid bill "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed." While Mr. Leahy has denied Mr. Hatch's charge - one senator's word against another - he hasn't gone so far as to deny a corroborating charge leveled by two Colorado Republicans, Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell. They told Roll Call that, in response to their recent request to expedite hearings for three nominees from their state, Mr. Leahy asked about their votes on the foreign aid bill. "If I go ahead and vote for cloture, you'd move my judges to the top?" Mr. Allard recalled asking Mr. Leahy. "He said, 'Yep.' " His staff actually suggested Mr. Leahy's comments were meant as a joke.

Ha ha. But who gets the last laugh? On Thursday, four district judges were unanimously approved by the committee, so maybe the Republicans' tactics are working. But there is much more to do. Scores of able judges are still waiting to don their robes. The spiteful partisanship of Mr. Leahy shouldn't stand in their way.

PLEASE WRITE YOUR SENATOR AND ASK THEM TO OPPOSE THE NOMINATION OF LAURA CAMP!

Laurie Smith Camp, who is currently Nebraska's Chief Deputy Attorney General in charge of criminal matters, has been nominated for a seat on the federal bench.

Because she has been nominated for a district court position -- i.e. trial level -- she is unlikely to encounter opposition.

However, several aspects of her professional record cause concern, and we wanted to share two, in particular, with you.

During her testimony against a bill that would have banned executions of mentally retarded people in Nebraska, Camp first asserted that no such law was necessary, as the current law assured fairness in capital cases. When pressed, Camp admitted that the current law did not prohibit the execution of the mentally retarded, but she repeated the assertion of the fairness of Nebraska law and then went so far as to claim that banning such executions would be an affront to the retarded: "I believe LB 1266 [the bill that would ban the executions] is an insult to retarded people.

They have the ability to tell right from wrong. That's not a matter of IQ. Some people have high IQs - but low moral IQs. There are a lot of people on death row with very high IQs."

This statement, and her position on this issue overall, suggests that she is far out of the mainstream and supports a position opposed by the vast majority of Americans, including those who support the death penalty in general.

In addition, she supported a bill that would require, rather than permit, juveniles accused of violent crimes to be tried and sentenced as adults.

Attorney general Don Stenberg, who had, along with Omaha Mayor Daub, endorsed the bill as an "anti-crime" measure, asserted that it would help law enforcement officials deal with "the violent juveniles of today."

As we said, opposition to a district court nominee is not common. In this case, however, we feel that it is important that the Senators who will vote on whether to give Camp a lifetime appointment to a federal court must be fully informed about her background and views and must carefully consider these issues when voting. We are asking you to call, email or write your Senator asking them to vote against Laurie Smith Camp's confirmation. If you need any information on how to reach your senator, please email ksderby@afj.org.

GOP Wants Judge Picks Confirmed; Democrats Accused of Dragging Their Feet

Neil Lewis
The New York Times
Sunday, October 21, 2001

Senate Republicans are engaged in a full-scale campaign to press Democrats to confirm President Bush's judicial nominees quickly, with some asserting that a failure to do so could harm the war on terrorism.

With more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench -- about 12 percent of the total judgeships -- Republicans argue that Democrats have slowed the confirmation process to avoid approving Bush's choices, many of whom are staunch conservatives.

In a late-night debate on anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate this month, the Republicans took an unusual break from the business at hand to make speeches saying that the Democrats were delaying action on Bush's judicial nominees.

REV_00070931

Over the next several days, the Republicans pressed the Democrats to move quickly on the Bush nominees. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said, "Anyone who is interested in helping the president in the war on terrorism should support the president's judicial nominees."

Asked to explain, Hatch argued that a federal bench that was less than full strength could not process warrants and subpoenas aimed at terrorists as quickly as it should. He acknowledged, however, that there was no evidence of a slowdown in the consideration of such matters.

This is all infuriating to the Democrats, who spent the last years of the Clinton administration arguing that Republicans were slowing consideration of the nominees of a Democratic administration. Sen.
Harry Reid of Nevada, the Democrat whip, said there were so many vacancies because so many nominees of former President Bill Clinton had not been confirmed.

Each side has produced a wealth of statistics to demonstrate its own fine behavior on this issue and the other's perfidy.

Democrats have produced charts to show that, on the average, a Clinton nominee for a judgeship had to wait more than 330 days to get a hearing after being nominated. David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the average for Bush's nominees had been less than 100 days.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., a member of the committee, said in rebuttal that only eight, or 13.3 percent, of Bush's 60 nominees had been acted upon by the Senate. In the first year of the three previous administrations, almost all of the judicial nominees who were submitted to the Senate before the August recess were approved, Kyl said.

The numbers from both sides are usually fashioned from time periods that are not precisely comparable. The problem with the Democratic numbers generally is that they deal with the far longer period of Clinton's presidency, and the problem with the Republican numbers is that they generally deal with a short period in which first control of the Senate shifted, then Congress has been tied up with anti-terrorism bills.

GOP Slows Foreign Aid Bill to Speed Judicial Choices

REV_00070932

By Joan Biskupic
USA Today
Monday, October 22, 2001

Senate Republicans have tried to speed up consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees by blocking action on a key foreign aid bill and by casting the need for more judges as critical in the fight against terrorism.

The clash last week, one of the first examples of partisan wrangling here since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, came as Capitol Hill was riveted by an anthrax scare. Another foreign aid bill vote is set for Tuesday. The dispute reflects the stakes in the battle over the makeup of the 862-seat federal bench, which has 110 vacancies and includes district courts that hear trials and the influential courts of appeals. There haven't been as many vacancies on the bench since March 1994, according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The bench makeup can make a vast difference in an array of individual rights. But with the new focus on terrorism, judges are likely to play an increasingly essential role in deciding how far police can go in conducting warrantless searches, determining whether certain immigrants should be deported and defining the breadth of civil liberties.

Determined to tilt federal courts to the right, the Bush administration has made judicial nominations much more of a priority than the Clinton administration. Early last week, GOP senators voted together to prevent floor consideration of a $ 15.6 billion foreign aid bill. They said they were protesting the slow pace of nomination hearings.

This year, the Senate has approved eight judges, and 52 names are pending, most from midsummer nominations. The pace of committee hearings has not been swift, but it also has not entailed record delays.

"Law enforcement is going to suffer" unless the Senate's pace in deciding judicial nominations picks up, says Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, pointing particularly to courts along the U.S.-Mexico border that are short-staffed. Hatch noted that some federal judges could end up handling key cases related to terrorism.

Neither Hatch, the ranking Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, nor Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., would say whether the GOP would help move the foreign aid bill when it comes up for another vote Tuesday.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., says the panel is moving as quickly as possible on judges, and passage of the foreign aid bill is critical to the country's anti-terrorism efforts.

The proposal would send $ 5 billion in military and economic aid to U.S. allies in the Middle East and set aside hundreds of millions of dollars to detect infectious diseases overseas. "It is absurd to hold these funds hostage when practically every day there is a report of a new case of anthrax," Leahy says.

REV_00070933

Democrats have been slow to move on several of Bush's judicial nominations, particularly some conservative favorites.

Among the more controversial nominees are Jeffrey Sutton, a Columbus, Ohio, lawyer who is a strong states-rights advocate; University of Utah professor Paul Cassell, who is known particularly for his legal work against the Miranda rights that police read to suspects; and federal magistrate Terry Wooten, who was once a top aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

Thursday, the Judiciary Committee recommended Senate approval of four nominees and held a hearing on five others, including U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, who has been appointed to a three-state appeals court and is the father of U.S. Rep. Charles "Chip" Pickering, R-Miss.

Lott has been seeking a deal for votes on "a significant number" of nominees in the coming weeks.

Senate Committee Advances 2 Federal Judge Nominations

By Chris Casteel
The Daily Oklahoman
Friday, October 19, 2001

The Senate Judiciary Committee, meeting despite a shutdown of its hearing room, approved two Oklahomans for federal judgeships Thursday and heard from attorney Stephen P. Friot, who has been nominated for the federal bench in Oklahoma City.

Sen. Don Nickles, R-Ponca City, has been pushing the committee to move judicial nominations, including those from his state. He got some response Thursday as the committee reported to the full Senate the nominations of Claire V. Eagan to be a U.S. district judge in Tulsa and James P. Payne to be a U.S. district judge for the Muskogee and Tulsa regions.

Eagan is a U.S. magistrate in the Northern District, based in Tulsa, and Payne is a magistrate in the Eastern District, based in Muskogee.

"These individuals are exceptionally well-qualified and will prove to be great assets to the judicial system in Oklahoma and our country," Nickles, the Senate minority whip, said. "It is good news for Oklahoma that they are moving through the nomination process. I hope and expect they will be confirmed by the full Senate in short order."

REV_00070934

Friot's nomination is pending before the committee, as is the nomination of former U.S. Attorney Joe Heaton to be a U.S. district judge in Oklahoma City.

An aide to Nickles said none of the questions asked of Friot by the committee Thursday could be considered hostile or aggressive. Friot has been practicing law since 1972 and is a partner in the Oklahoma City firm of Spradling, Alpern, Friot & Gum. He is a past president of the Oklahoma County Bar Association and an adjunct law professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Camp's Nomination Goes to the Full Senate

Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 19, 2001

The Senate Judiciary Committee voted unanimously Thursday to recommend the nomination of Nebraskan Laurie Smith Camp to become a U.S. District Court Judge.

Thursday's vote should clear the way for easy confirmation by the full Senate, perhaps as early as next week. Once confirmed, Camp will become the first female federal judge in Nebraska. A longtime aide to Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg, she was appointed to the federal bench in June by President Bush.

Although some judicial nominations linger for months in the Senate, Camp had support from both of Nebraska's senators, Republican Chuck Hagel and Democrat Ben Nelson.

Camp will fill the vacancy created when Judge William Cambridge retired. She worked for 11 years as general counsel for the Nebraska Department of Corrections. In 1991, she joined Stenberg's staff. She is a graduate of Stanford University and the University of Nebraska College of Law.

A Bench Full of Holes; Vacancies in the N.J. Federal District Court Could Reach 30 Percent

By Tim O'Brien
New Jersey Law Journal
Friday, October 19, 2001

With U.S. District Judge Alfred Lechner Jr. leaving for private practice this month, New Jersey's district court is down by three judges. That's a vacancy rate of 17.7 percent, based on a full complement of 17 judges, and it could climb to almost 30 percent in the next three months.

Judge Nicholas Politan will be eligible to retire in mid-December, and two other district judges, Garrett Brown and William Bassler, are widely believed to be the leading candidates to take the Third U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals seat that became available in June 2000 when Morton Greenberg took senior status. Two sources familiar with the process say Brown and Bassler have been interviewed by the White House counsel's office.

REV_00070935

If Politan retires, and either Brown or Bassler moves up to the Third Circuit, the district court would be down to 12 judges, leaving five seats vacant. The current judge shortage isn't causing a calendar problem, according to John Bissell, who became chief judge in June when U.S. District Judge Anne Thompson retired. In part that's because the district has seven senior judges, most of whom carry substantial caseloads. Judges Thompson and John Lifland both went on senior status in June.

But the vacancies may not be filled for a long time. The combination of a Republican White House and a Democratic-controlled Senate has slowed confirmation hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee. That, along with the slowdown of all appointments after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and President George Bush's stated priority of filling circuit vacancies first, will ensure the judicial pipeline will be sluggish at best.

Even when the White House agrees on a name, the FBI's background checks have been placed on a back burner as the agency puts its resources into the terrorist investigation.

New Jersey's nomination process is moving slower than many states due to the absence of a GOP leader with clout. Acting Gov. Donald DiFrancesco, the state's ranking Republican, is a lame duck, having decided not to run. The state's two senators, Robert Torricelli and Jon Corzine, are both Democrats.

Two sources familiar with the judge-picking process say that because of the political climate in the Senate -- Democrats have been itching for some payback for the loss of the presidency in the U.S. Supreme Court and eight years of what they perceive as GOP stall tactics on judicial nominations -- Torricelli and Corzine could get one or even two Democratic nominations.

That possibility is magnified by a mood in the Capitol to minimize partisan battles during the war on terrorism. Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., earlier this month reiterated his position that noncontroversial nominations will move. Most of the fights have been over circuit seats, or in states where the two parties couldn't agree on names.

Who's in Contention

Three candidates are considered the strongest to fill the three existing vacancies: Magistrate Judge Stanley Chesler, McCarter & English partner William Greenberg and Essex County Superior Court Judge Jose Linares.

Greenberg, a Democrat, enjoys a good relationship with Torricelli. He was an assistant counsel under Gov. Richard Hughes and served as a commissioner of the State Commission of Investigations from 1982 to 1987. A well-regarded civil litigator, he is a past president of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America-NJ.

He is a big Democratic contributor. According to the Federal Election Commission and the state Commission, Greenberg and his wife have contributed $81,000 since 1998, primarily to the Democrats.

That includes $47,000 to the Democratic National Committee and $10,000 to the State Democratic Committee. The contributions also include $4,000 to Torricelli, but none to Corzine, as Greenberg backed former Gov. Jim Florio against Corzine in the Senate Democratic primary last year. The Greenbergs gave Florio $4,000, the maximum contribution.

Greenberg, 58, is a retired brigadier general of the National Guard who has just volunteered to be reactivated. He is now serving as a special assistant for homeland security to the adjutant general of New Jersey's National Guard.

On the Republican side, a top candidate is Chesler, 54, who sits in Newark. Chesler, who has been on the bench for 14 years, is a former Bronx County assistant district attorney who later served as deputy chief of the federal Organized Crime Strike Force in Newark.

In the Law Journal's January 2001 survey of the federal bench, Chesler earned the second-highest score -- 8.84 out of a possible 10 -- among the state's eight magistrates. He finished first in four categories and was just .11 behind the highest score.

Another potential GOP nominee is Linares, who went on the bench last December. Linares practiced personal injury law, primarily medical malpractice and product liability cases, before his nomination by Gov. Christine Todd Whitman. He was active with the Essex County Bar Association.

Cuban-born, Linares is also a former president of the New Jersey Hispanic Bar Association. This is seen by some as a plus with the Bush White House, which has been making special efforts to court the Hispanic vote for the 2004 election.

The names of two other federal magistrates are also being floated as potential nominees to move up the district court: Republican Robert Kugler and Democrat John Hughes.

Logjam in Washington

Nationally, there are 30 circuit court and 75 district court vacancies, for a vacancy rate of 12.32 percent.

However, the White House has been much more aggressive in sending to the Senate nominations for the circuit courts where case law is written, as opposed to the district courts.

As of last week, the Senate Judiciary Committee had 22 pending circuit court nominations for confirmation to those 30 vacancies. By contrast, there were only 32 pending nominations before the committee to fill the 75 district slots.

Put another way, the White House has moved on more than 73 percent of the current circuit vacancies, but only 42.7 percent of the current district vacancies. And obviously, there have been no nominations for New Jersey. Even the Third Circuit vacancy created by Greenberg's departure is now 16 months old, in large measure because the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee never moved on the nomination of U.S. District Judge Stephen Orlofsky to move up to the Third Circuit.

And while the noncontroversial candidates will eventually get a hearing, Democrats are prepared to do battle over nominations, particularly for circuit seats, that they perceive as too ideological or conservative.

Within hours after Vermont's Sen. Jim Jeffords gave the Democrats control of the Senate last May by switching from being a Republican to being an Independent, Torricelli bragged, "This isn't about a single Senate seat ... it's about the federal judiciary."

So, while the committee is moving names and the Senate is confirming -- a circuit court and a district court nominee both received Senate confirmation on Oct. 10 -- nominations for New Jersey's district bench will most probably have to get in a long line.

The fact that Torricelli no longer sits on the Judiciary Committee, where he used to be able to expedite New Jersey candidates because of a good relationship with Utah Republican Orin Hatch, then committee chairman, doesn't help.

Three additional factors could combine to keep New Jersey with five vacancies.

First, there are many judges around the country who have indicated they will retire soon, leading to a bigger backlog in the process. Second, 40 vacancies around the nation have been declared judicial emergencies by the U.S. Judicial Conference, giving those vacancies a higher priority. Third, the caseload nationwide is growing, with 320,200 district cases and 56,600 circuit cases added over the past year, according to court figures.

"Nothing is happening," says one lawyer who has been following the judicial appointments process, while another lawyer agrees, saying, "I haven't the slightest feeling D.C. is moving on district seats, not until they are done with the Third Circuit."

Assistant White House Counsel Rachel Brand, who has been involved in screening names for the New Jersey bench, says only, "We're aware of the issues, and vacancies, and we're working on them."

New Mexico Court of Appeals Judge M. Christina Armijo, 50, of Las Vegas, N.M., was introduced to the committee Thursday by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who recommended Armijo to President Bush.

"I thought we were very well received," New Mexico's senior senator said by phone Thursday. Domenici said that he and Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., got an opportunity to speak on Armijo's behalf. Armijo, accompanied by her mother and brother, also testified before the committee, Domenici said. The committee did not vote on whether to recommend to the full Senate that she be confirmed. No schedule was announced.

Domenici said the committee was told about her 22 years of law experience, including her service on the state appeals court since 1996, and about her family's long history in northern New Mexico. Armijo's grandfather, for instance, was a judge for 35 years, Domenici said.

"As she put it, her family has lived for 12 generations in New Mexico and lawyers and judges are part of the family tradition," Domenici said. "I concluded ... that she will be a fair yet firm judge and urged that her confirmation be done quickly. I am very enthusiastic we will have her within the next couple of weeks."

Domenici also said that he expects the confirmation of former New Mexico Court of Appeals Judge Harris Hartz, whom Bush nominated for a post on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit, to go smoothly.

"There's an opportunity for contention on circuit judges, but I don't think that's going to be the case," Domenici said.

He also said he had "no idea why we won't have (William P.) 'Chip' Johnson on soon."

Johnson, a state district judge in Roswell, was nominated along with Armijo by Bush to become a U.S. district judge. Domenici recommended all three judges to Bush for the lifetime appointments.

Domenici said he assumes that it won't be too long before a U.S. district judge's post is created in Las Cruces, where immigration and drug cases overload the docket. Five U.S. district judges from Albuquerque and Santa Fe have been rotating to southern New Mexico to help with the caseload.

Reno Lawyer Hicks Looks for Quick Senate Confirmation as Judge

The Associated Press
Friday, October 19, 2001

Sens. Harry Reid and John Ensign said they are optimistic the Senate will confirm Reno lawyer Larry Hicks as a new federal judge in Nevada within the next two weeks. Hicks went before the

REV_00070962

Senate Judiciary Committee Thursday for a confirmation hearing on his appointment as a U.S. district court judge. Both Nevada senators spoke on his behalf.

Hicks worked in the Washoe County District Attorney's Office before he became a partner in one of Nevada's largest law firms - McDonald, Carano, Wilson, McCune, Bergin, Frankovich & Hicks. He's a past president of the state bar association's board of governors.

Senate Panel Approves Two State Judicial Nominees

By Jim Myers
Tulsa World
Friday, October 19, 2001

Two nominees for judicial posts in Oklahoma won Senate Judiciary Committee approval Thursday.

Nominations for U.S. Magistrates Claire V. Eagan of Tulsa and James P. Payne of Muskogee now head for confirmation by the full Senate, a vote that could take place next week. Eagan was nominated for a position in the state's northern district, while Payne will divide his time among Oklahoma's three districts.

Meanwhile, the Senate panel held a hearing for a third Oklahoman, Stephen Friot of Oklahoma City. Friot, 54, is headed for a slot in the western district.

Responding to questions by a panel of senators, Friot vowed to uphold Americans' right to privacy and a woman's right to an abortion as defined by the U.S. Supreme Court. Only the Supreme Court can undo one of its previous rulings, he testified.

Asked about the controversial practice of racial profiling and whether judges could do more to respond to that issue, Friot referred to a body of law he said addressed selective prosecution.

He said in response to a question about whether he would be a strict constructionist that he would not be limited to one narrow approach but instead would look for a guidance from a number of sources.

President Bush nominated the three Oklahomans at the recommendation of the state's two senators, Republicans Don Nickles and Jim Inhofe.

These individuals are exceptionally well-qualified and will prove to be great assets to the judicial system in Oklahoma and our country," Nickles said.

A fourth judicial nominee, Assistant U.S. Attorney Joe Heaton of Oklahoma, is awaiting his confirmation hearing.

Senate Panel Oks Four Judges

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
Friday, October 19, 2001

Four district judges were unanimously approved yesterday by the Senate Judiciary Committee after Republicans complained that President Bush's nominees were being treated unfairly by Democrats.

Republicans are insisting that the 44 judges nominated by Mr. Bush before the August recess be voted on before Congress adjourns for the year. To date, eight judges have been confirmed.

"It's a good step in the right direction, but it doesn't make much of a dent," Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican, said after the vote.

Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, is blocking a spending bill for foreign operations to force a vote on the pending judges.

Committee negotiations were halted after an anthrax attack on Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle's office Monday exposed staffers and Capitol Police officers; a total of 31 persons.

"We've not been able to discuss the judges for obvious reasons," said Mr. Lott, who predicted that a vote to move forward on the spending bill Tuesday would fail.

The committee unanimously passed without debate Karen K. Caldwell as U.S. district judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky; Laurie Smith Camp as U.S. district judge for the District of Nebraska; Claire V. Eagan as U.S. district judge for the Northern District of Oklahoma, and James H. Payne as U.S. district judge for the Northern, Eastern, and Western Districts of Oklahoma.

"It's a beginning, but let it not be something to pacify us and move on. That won't work," Sen. Larry E. Craig, Idaho Republican, said of yesterday's action.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, committee chairman and Vermont Democrat, said, "I am fully committed to the process of confirming judges and filling vacancies. I will not be pressured to proceed on nominees whose records are not complete to the satisfaction of this committee.

"It is painfully clear to me that in this time of national challenge, the message must be sent that the United States Senate should be working as a unified team to respond to the violent attacks against our country," Mr. Leahy said. "We should be avoiding petty partisanship. This is hardly the time for divisive bickering."

His plea did not prevent Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., Delaware Democrat, from calling Republicans

REV_00070964

"phonies" for saying Mr. Bush's nominees were being treated unfairly by Democrats.

Sen. Arlen Specter, Pennsylvania Republican, told the committee he will bring a measure to the floor forcing a vote on the nominees.

The committee also held hearings on the nominations of Charles W. Pickering Sr. for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals; M. Christina Armijo for U.S. District Court for the District of New Mexico; Karon O. Bowdre to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Alabama; Stephen P. Friot for U.S. District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, and Larry R. Hicks for U.S. District Court for the District of Nevada.

Op/Eds

Moment of Decision for Law Enforcement

By Donald Lambro
The Washington Times
Monday, October 22, 2001

With America's homeland enduring the deadliest terrorist attacks in our history, every law enforcement weapon and tool at our disposal needs to be fully operational and running at peak performance.

Yet, incredibly, there is a gaping hole in the government's judicial defenses - the heart of the nation's law enforcement army - because of persistent and deliberate delays by the Senate Judiciary Committee to fill dozens of vacancies in our court system.

The courts are being inundated with law enforcement requests and cases. There are not enough judges to handle them all quickly. The dire result: dangerous backlogs and delays that prevent the swift and sure delivery of decisions needed to protect all of us from the threats that now loom over our country. Right now, there are at least 108 vacancies in our federal courts, including 30 posts that have been vacant for so long that federal judicial officials have classified them as "judicial emergencies."

With our law-enforcement agencies needing rapid-fire responses from the courts for a broad range of court-approved surveillance actions and other legal requests in their war on the murderous terrorists in our midst, this is no time for our court system to be operating at half-speed.

"We need federal judges monitoring and helping to support the anti-terrorism efforts and law-enforcement requests from the various agencies of government," Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi told me.

REV_00070965

"The Senate is at its lowest confirmation rate of federal judges in recent history, and we need to pick up the pace immediately," he said.

The man most responsible for this state of affairs is Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, a deeply partisan Vermont Democrat who Republicans say has been working overtime to hold up or at least slow down President Bush's judicial nominations.

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the committee's ranking Republican, has been complaining about the lack of action by Mr. Leahy ever since Democrats took control of the Senate last July, when hearings on Mr. Bush's nominees virtually ground to a halt. At present, there are 52 judicial nominees who are trapped in Leahy limbo, 46 of whom have had no hearings.

Many of them have been fully approved by the American Bar Association, but not by Mr. Leahy and the Democratic members on his committee.

At the heart of the judicial dispute, as always, is ideology. After eight years of liberal appointments to the courts under the Clinton administration, Mr. Leahy and friends recoil at the prospect of eight years of more conservative judges who aren't as likely to let criminals go free on legal technicalities.

Hatch, Lott and other Republican senators have been complaining for months about the delays in the confirmation process, but without success. But then, in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, the complaints began pouring out of the White House, the Justice Department and elsewhere in law enforcement and in intelligence circles.

That's when the backroom political struggle broke into open warfare on the Senate floor.

Declaring that they were ready "to play hardball" to get action on the judgeship nominees, Republicans blocked action last week on the foreign aid bill and said that it and other bills would not move until Mr. Leahy lifted his judicial blockade. Notably, Republican leaders said that the White House was fully behind their move.

But the battle really exploded into all-out warfare when Mr. Hatch told his colleagues at last Tuesday's closed Republican policy luncheon that Mr. Leahy had told him that any senator who voted to block the aid bill "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed."

Enraged, Republican senators, including many who work with Mr. Leahy on the committee, rose at the meeting to excoriate the Vermonter, attacking him as a "vindictive partisan" bent on blocking President George W. Bush "anyway he can," according to my sources.

Mr. Leahy denied that he threatened retribution against Republican senators, but that is not the way Mr. Hatch tells it. "If anything, he Mr. Leahy was threatening. I've heard payback talk," Mr. Hatch said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota weakly argues that judicial confirmations

are moving at roughly the same pace under the Democrats as they did under Republican rule. In fact, Republicans moved 88 percent of Mr. Clinton's nominees in his first year in office, compared with a snail-paced 13 percent approval rate thus far in Mr. Bush's first year.

But finger pointing and comparisons to past senatorial records is irrelevant in the dangerous life-and-death struggle in which our country is now engaged.

This is a time when the United States needs all of its law enforcement resources fully staffed and working together against an elusive and deadly enemy that threatens our way of life.

It is certainly not a time for petty, left-leaning judicial politics, nor the usual time-consuming procedures. Mr. Leahy and Mr. Daschle need to get with the program and approve these nominees as soon as possible.

Take Action on Judicial Nominees

St. Petersburg Times
Saturday, October 20, 2001

When Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., was the ranking minority member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he accused the committee chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, of stalling then-President Clinton's judicial nominations for political and ideological reasons.

Leahy was certainly justified in his criticism. With dozens of judgeships vacant, Hatch held up confirmation hearings for nominees he thought were too liberal and used his position as chairman to cut deals to get his own people federal judgeships. Now with Leahy sitting in the chairman's seat, Hatch and other Republicans are accusing the Democrats of stalling President Bush's nominations to the federal bench. What goes around comes around, as they say. Hatch, along with the other Republicans on the committee, sent a letter to Leahy earlier this month complaining about the slow pace of confirmation hearings and threatening to delay passage of a foreign-aid bill until the logjam is broken. So far, only eight of 60 Bush nominees have been confirmed and only 14 hearings have been held.

Meanwhile, the federal judiciary is being severely handicapped by this foot-dragging. It has 109 vacancies, about 13 percent of the bench, and a case backlog that has been building for more than a decade. With Congress insisting on federalizing more crimes every year, and the endless burden of federal drug cases, the federal judiciary couldn't keep its docket current even if it were at full strength.

There is no question that the vacancies need to be filled, and it is Leahy's duty to move the process along. Any nominees who are clearly outside the mainstream of current legal thought should be rejected. The Democrats are in the majority and can block Bush's worst choices. But it's time to pick up the pace. Confirmation hearings should be scheduled and votes should be taken. Both parties are hypocrites on this issue. Both are guilty of using obstructionist tactics to stall or defeat judicial nominees who are viewed as either too liberal or too conservative.

REV_00070967

At some point, for the sake of the country, the partisan warfare over judicial nominations has to end. Vote them up, or vote them down. But it's time to start voting.

Justice Delayed

Omaha World-Herald
Friday, October 19, 2001

They're at it again. Senators are foot-dragging on approving federal judicial nominees. The last time we complained editorially about such procrastination, it was Republicans stalling Bill Clinton's choices. Now it seems to be mostly Democrats stiff-arming George W. Bush's. No matter. Whichever party is wielding the gavel, such lassitude ill-serves the public.

There are 110 openings on the federal bench, of which 39 have sat vacant so long that the judiciary has officially classified them as "judicial emergencies." President Bush has put forward 60 nominations - enough to fill just more than half of the vacancies. Of his 60, the Senate has approved:

Eight.

Senate Republicans, frustrated at the pace, have begun protesting by logjamming other legislation. One such measure is the foreign-aid bill that would free billions of dollars that directly or indirectly relate to pressing the fight against terrorism. Stalling a bill so crucial perhaps is a dubious tactic, but it is an attention-getter.

The federal judiciary has been short-handed for years because of such tactics, harming the quality and pace of the administration of justice. Democrats should loosen their hold on the Senate Judiciary Committee, just as in recent years it would have been the right thing for the Republicans to have done. (They didn't.)

We are not suggesting rubber-stamping nominees. Where legitimate objections arise, they should be taken seriously. But delaying appointments over predictable differences in ideology is a petty tactic, one that should have been discarded years ago. Let's get moving.

Fighting Over Judges

Minneapolis-St. Paul Star Tribune
Friday, October 19, 2001

For a moment, Sept. 11 seemed to change the way Washington works. It kindled a bipartisan fervor in the pettiest of political hearts, spurring even fierce foes to sing and legislate in unison. The magic couldn't last forever, of course, and it hasn't. This week the Senate is up to its old tricks, squabbling over judicial appointments. Not even Capitol Hill's anthrax panic has calmed this schoolyard scrap. Insisting that Democrats are dawdling on filling vacant judgeships, Senate

REV_00070968

Republicans are holding up a crucial foreign-aid bill. They say they won't allow a vote on it until Democrats promise to approve a throng of President Bush's judicial nominees.

Coming from the folks who spent eight years blocking Bill Clinton's judicial appointments, this procrastination charge is a little amusing. It's also baffling, for there's no proof that Democrats have been stalling. Republicans controlled the Senate during the first four months of the Bush administration and held not a single judicial-confirmation hearing. Democrats took over only in June and have approved eight nominees in the months since. They're preparing to examine and approve more soon.

But as new chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., notes, the Senate Judiciary Committee hasn't exactly been sloughing off under Democratic leadership. In the weeks before the August recess it expedited confirmations for numerous judges and several high executive-branch nominees. Less than a week after the break's end came the terrible havoc of Sept. 11 - and the flood of emergency lawmaking it unleashed.

So if the confirmation process is backed up, it's hard to see how Democrats can be blamed. Whatever problem exists is more likely due to the confluence of a power shift and a tragedy. But even if Democrats had adopted the GOP's old obstructionist tactics, the current Republican filibuster wouldn't be justified at all. Its unbecoming purpose is to bully the Judiciary Committee into rubber-stamping judicial candidates before taking time to assess them. That's a deal the Democrats ought to refuse.

If the Republicans' demand is unreasonable, their tactic is outrageous. The foreign-aid measure they're blocking may be the most important bit of legislation on Capitol Hill right now. Indeed, it's not too much to say that its passage is the Senate's patriotic duty.

This is the bill, after all, that can show a shaken world that Americans are givers - that they're eager to help their struggling neighbors overseas. As the United States drops bombs on Kabul, it's essential to prove that point.

Why should Republicans want to contradict it? Holding up the $15.5 billion foreign-aid bill will do nothing to get judges onto the bench. All it will do is slow the flow of humanitarian relief and military support to U.S. allies in the war against terrorism. Surely Republicans aren't really against helping refugees, fighting disease and strengthening democracies around the world. Since they're not, they ought to loosen their grip on the foreign-aid bill. It promises to buy health and life for faraway friends - and perhaps a glimmering of good will for the United States.

Leahy Doctrine Ensures Judicial Gridlock

The Washington Times
Monday, October 22, 2001

The war over the nation's judiciary is a familiar battleground, but one whose recent skirmishes are failing to generate the usual noise and headlines. Maybe it's because of the unexpected camouflage of the war on terrorism that Senate Democrats are now unleashing a kind of ferocity and vindictiveness which just doesn't seem to count as "politics-as-usual" anymore.

Call it the Leahy doctrine. Jealously guarding the political logjam that is keeping nearly all of President Bush's nominations from the federal bench, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy seems to be following a strategy to prevent any appeals court nominee committed to the legal doctrine of judicial restraint from even having a hearing, let alone a floor vote. The deadlock over the D.C. Court of Appeals offers a case in point. Now down to eight active judges, the circuit requires 10 active judges to carry its workload. Following Judge Stephen Williams' decision to retire from active service, Chief Judge Douglas H. Ginsberg informed Mr. Leahy and Sen. Charles E. Schumer in August that, without the confirmation of two new judges by Sept. 30, "the court will likely find it necessary to delay until next term September 2002-June 2003 hearing cases that would otherwise be argued and decided this winter and spring." Mr. Bush has already named two conservative nominees with sterling credentials to the D.C. circuit, Miguel Estrada and John Roberts. So, what has Mr. Leahy done about these two excellent nominees for those two urgent vacancies? Zip.

Senate Republicans are now taking action. With "the full backing" of the White House - as this newspaper's Donald Lambro reported, quoting a Senate Republican leadership official - they have devised a tough strategy to force Senate Democrats to break up the Leahy logjam. Republicans hope that, by blocking action on the foreign aid bill and other legislation, they can make Senate Democrats move on the 52 judges Mr. Bush has nominated, 44 of whom were named before the August recess, including Messrs. Estrada and Roberts.

To date, only eight of the president's nominees have been confirmed. This works out to a measly 15 percent confirmation rate for the president - not too good compared with his predecessors' success rates of 93 percent and up. No wonder the White House supports playing "hardball" against Mr. Leahy's nasty stall strategy. As the Republican leadership official explained, the White House is "concerned that the holdup of these nominees threatens the war on terrorism, because these judicial vacancies need to be filled as soon as possible to act on law-enforcement requests."

So, the Senate war relates back to the terrorism war, after all. Even so, and despite 108 vacancies in the federal judiciary (with 39 of them classified as "judicial emergencies"), all Mr. Leahy and his staff seem to do about it is keep the logjam in place. According to Sen. Orrin Hatch, Mr. Leahy has been "pretty irritated, and not in the mood to be helpful. If anything," he added, "he was threatening. I've heard payback talk."

Frankly, this sounds more like "The Sopranos" than the U.S. Senate. Mr. Hatch went on to say that Mr. Leahy told him that any Republican voting against the foreign aid bill "would not get the federal judges from their state confirmed." While Mr. Leahy has denied Mr. Hatch's charge - one senator's word against another - he hasn't gone so far as to deny a corroborating charge leveled by two Colorado Republicans, Sens. Wayne Allard and Ben Nighthorse Campbell. They told Roll Call that, in response to their recent request to expedite hearings for three nominees from their state, Mr. Leahy asked about their votes on the foreign aid bill. "If I go ahead and vote for cloture, you'd move my judges to the top?" Mr. Allard recalled asking Mr. Leahy. "He said, 'Yep.' " His staff actually suggested Mr. Leahy's comments were meant as a joke.

Ha ha. But who gets the last laugh? On Thursday, four district judges were unanimously approved by the committee, so maybe the Republicans' tactics are working. But there is much more to do. Scores of able judges are still waiting to don their robes. The spiteful partisanship of Mr. Leahy shouldn't stand in their way.

PLEASE WRITE YOUR SENATOR AND ASK THEM TO OPPOSE THE NOMINATION OF LAURA CAMP!

Laurie Smith Camp, who is currently Nebraska's Chief Deputy Attorney General in charge of criminal matters, has been nominated for a seat on the federal bench.

Because she has been nominated for a district court position -- i.e. trial level -- she is unlikely to encounter opposition.

However, several aspects of her professional record cause concern, and we wanted to share two, in particular, with you.

During her testimony against a bill that would have banned executions of mentally retarded people in Nebraska, Camp first asserted that no such law was necessary, as the current law assured fairness in capital cases. When pressed, Camp admitted that the current law did not prohibit the execution of the mentally retarded, but she repeated the assertion of the fairness of Nebraska law and then went so far as to claim that banning such executions would be an affront to the retarded: "I believe LB 1266 [the bill that would ban the executions] is an insult to retarded people.

They have the ability to tell right from wrong. That's not a matter of IQ. Some people have high IQs - but low moral IQs. There are a lot of people on death row with very high IQs."

This statement, and her position on this issue overall, suggests that she is far out of the mainstream and supports a position opposed by the vast majority of Americans, including those who support the death penalty in general.

In addition, she supported a bill that would require, rather than permit, juveniles accused of violent crimes to be tried and sentenced as adults.

Attorney general Don Stenberg, who had, along with Omaha Mayor Daub, endorsed the bill as an "anti-crime" measure, asserted that it would help law enforcement officials deal with "the violent juveniles of today."

As we said, opposition to a district court nominee is not common. In this case, however, we feel that it is important that the Senators who will vote on whether to give Camp a lifetime appointment to a federal court must be fully informed about her background and views and must carefully consider these issues when voting. We are asking you to call, email or write your Senator asking them to vote against Laurie Smith Camp's confirmation. If you need any information on how to reach your senator, please email ksderby@afj.org.

GOP Wants Judge Picks Confirmed; Democrats Accused of Dragging Their Feet

Neil Lewis
The New York Times
Sunday, October 21, 2001

Senate Republicans are engaged in a full-scale campaign to press Democrats to confirm President Bush's judicial nominees quickly, with some asserting that a failure to do so could harm the war on terrorism.

With more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench -- about 12 percent of the total judgeships -- Republicans argue that Democrats have slowed the confirmation process to avoid approving Bush's choices, many of whom are staunch conservatives.

In a late-night debate on anti-terrorism legislation in the Senate this month, the Republicans took an unusual break from the business at hand to make speeches saying that the Democrats were delaying action on Bush's judicial nominees.

REV_00070954

Over the next several days, the Republicans pressed the Democrats to move quickly on the Bush nominees. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said, "Anyone who is interested in helping the president in the war on terrorism should support the president's judicial nominees."

Asked to explain, Hatch argued that a federal bench that was less than full strength could not process warrants and subpoenas aimed at terrorists as quickly as it should. He acknowledged, however, that there was no evidence of a slowdown in the consideration of such matters.

This is all infuriating to the Democrats, who spent the last years of the Clinton administration arguing that Republicans were slowing consideration of the nominees of a Democratic administration. Sen.
Harry Reid of Nevada, the Democrat whip, said there were so many vacancies because so many nominees of former President Bill Clinton had not been confirmed.

Each side has produced a wealth of statistics to demonstrate its own fine behavior on this issue and the other's perfidy.

Democrats have produced charts to show that, on the average, a Clinton nominee for a judgeship had to wait more than 330 days to get a hearing after being nominated. David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the average for Bush's nominees had been less than 100 days.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., a member of the committee, said in rebuttal that only eight, or 13.3 percent, of Bush's 60 nominees had been acted upon by the Senate. In the first year of the three previous administrations, almost all of the judicial nominees who were submitted to the Senate before the August recess were approved, Kyl said.

The numbers from both sides are usually fashioned from time periods that are not precisely comparable. The problem with the Democratic numbers generally is that they deal with the far longer period of Clinton's presidency, and the problem with the Republican numbers is that they generally deal with a short period in which first control of the Senate shifted, then Congress has been tied up with anti-terrorism bills.

GOP Slows Foreign Aid Bill to Speed Judicial Choices

Senate Republicans have tried to speed up consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees by blocking action on a key foreign aid bill and by casting the need for more judges as critical in the fight against terrorism.
