BUENO is currently a first year law student at the George Washington University National Law Center, WDC. He graduated from the University of Chicago in Chicago, Illinois, with an undergraduate degree in political science in June 1992. BUENO then held an unpaid internship at the National Governors Association in WDC. BUENO volunteered to work in the BILL CLINTON presidential campaign in 1992, and he began working at the campaign headquarters at 1317 F Street, N.W., WDC. In late November 1992, BUENO took a paid job in the transition counsel's office at 1120 Vermont Avenue, N.W., WDC, which was the office where vetting was conducted for potential high-level appointees in the incoming CLINTON Administration. The position of transition counsel was held by JIM HAMILTON, and other attorneys in the office included WARREN CHRISTOPHER and GARY GINSBURG. BUENO was asked by GINSBURG to perform tasks such as copying SF-86 forms, which were background questionnaires completed by candidates for appointments, and sending out such forms as these to potential appointees.

Although BERNARD NUSSBAUM was White House Counsel, Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. was also making many decisions during the early days of the CLINTON Administration. During either the last week of January 1993 or the first week of February 1993, GINSBURG and BUENO went to the White House to attempt to determine whether they would be given permanent positions in the Administration once the transition period was over. They met with FOSTER to discuss their interest, and they were both moved into permanent positions. BUENO became a paralegal working directly for Associate White House Counsel WILLIAM H. KENNEDY III. GINSBURG, LIZ FINE and STEVE SILVERMAN transferred over from the transition office to the White House, where they continued the vetting process for potential appointees. GINSBURG and FINE have left the White House and are currently working at the United States Department of Justice (DOJ). SILVERMAN continues to work at the White House.

Although GINSBURG and FINE worked with the White House Counsel's Office in vetting candidates and processing nominees toward their confirmation hearings, GINSBURG and FINE knew that they did not formally have positions as Associate White House Counsels. BUENO's office was in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB) so he was never physically located in the offices of the White House Counsel's Office in the West Wing of the White House. FOSTER's office was in the West Wing, and he would typically call BUENO's office in the OEOB to inquire about the status of the appointment process for specific candidates, e.g., to inquire how close the background investigation was to being completed. FOSTER might have also called to ask for the latest statistics on how many positions had been filled in relation to the number of available positions to be filled. BUENO was not familiar with any of the other work being performed by FOSTER.

KENNEDY had not sought a position in the CLINTON Administration but was asked to join. FOSTER's presence in the CLINTON Administration was part of what attracted KENNEDY to join the White House staff. KENNEDY was unable to participate in a large portion of the process for nominating appointees until he became familiar with it. KENNEDY was clearly assigned to get people through the appointment process during the time that BUENO worked for KENNEDY.

BUENO served at the White House from February 1993 through August 1994. After the death of FOSTER on July 20, 1993, BUENO began working for Associate White House Counsel BETH NOLAN.

BUENO first heard of Whitewater during the campaign, but he is not certain of the context in which he heard of it. He recalls that Whitewater was mentioned in connection with a report issued by attorney JIM LYONS.

BUENO did go to work at the White House compound on July 20, 1993. He believes that he arrived at work that day at his usual time, which would have been between 8:00 and 8:30 a.m. BUENO did not see FOSTER during the last ten days to two weeks prior to FOSTER's death.

In previous weeks, whenever BUENO passed FOSTER in a hallway, FOSTER would always greet him or somehow acknowledge BUENO's presence. However, when BUENO last saw FOSTER, which was approximately two weeks before FOSTER's death, FOSTER did not even say hello to BUENO. On that occasion, FOSTER was exiting NOLAN's room when BUENO saw him. Although FOSTER looked at BUENO, he did not greet BUENO, which BUENO thought was very unusual under the circumstances.

BUENO is certain that he did not see FOSTER on July 20, 1993. BUENO does not recall any instances of KENNEDY attempting to reach or speak with FOSTER on July 20, 1993. BUENO left work at the White House that evening sometime between 6:30 and 7:30 p.m.

BUENO did not learn of FOSTER's death until the morning of July 21, 1993 when BUENO was still at home preparing to go to work. On that date at approximately 7:15 a.m., BUENO happened to turn on his television, which was tuned to the "Today" show. BUENO saw a photograph of FOSTER displayed on his television screen but the audio portion of the program was not yet audible on BUENO's television so BUENO could not hear why FOSTER's photograph was being shown. BUENO later switched channels to another station and eventually heard a story about FOSTER's death the preceding night.

BUENO believes that he arrived at work at the White House between 8:00 and 8:30 a.m. on July 21, 1993. When BUENO arrived at his office, MARTHA STANLEY, who was the secretary for both KENNEDY and NOLAN, was the only person in the suite (Room 136 of the OEOB). BUENO and STANLEY sat at STANLEY's desk and spoke with each other until other people began to come into the office. At approximately 9:00 or 9:30 a.m., BUENO learned that there was going to be a White House staff meeting with President CLINTON on the fourth floor of the OEOB. Just prior to the start of this meeting, BUENO observed WEBB HUBBELL, MARSHA SCOTT, and KENNEDY holding hands with each other.

In terms of KENNEDY's actions following the death of FOSTER, BUENO knows that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and KENNEDY went somewhere, possibly the morgue, to identify FOSTER's body the night of July 20, 1993. BUENO himself had no assignments relating to FOSTER's death.

BUENO has not wanted to immerse himself in the details of how FOSTER died. He has spoken with another White House staff member, PETER PAPPAS, about the rumors surrounding FOSTER's death, but he has only spoken about the rumors and has not attempted to investigate them or their validity. At the time of BUENO's conversation with PAPPAS, PAPPAS was serving as an Assistant Counsel to the President on a temporary basis, but he is currently working at the United States Department of State. BUENO does not recall hearing of anyone being assigned to handle FOSTER's documents after FOSTER's death.

On July 21, 1993, LIVINGSTONE came to Room 136 in the OEOB looking for KENNEDY. BUENO believes that LIVINGSTONE came to this office between 9:00 and 9:15 a.m. but probably closer to 9:15. LIVINGSTONE's visit occurred sometime before the meeting of the White House staff with President CLINTON. BUENO told LIVINGSTONE that KENNEDY was not in the office yet. During this exchange, LIVINGSTONE was actually in the reception area of the suite, which is the area where STANLEY sits. LIVINGSTONE did not mention what he had done that morning or why he was looking for KENNEDY. LIVINGSTONE told BUENO that he and KENNEDY had driven somewhere the previous night to identify FOSTER's body. BUENO does not recall how LIVINGSTONE was dressed that morning or whether his clothing was unusually rumpled or casual. BUENO does recall that LIVINGSTONE appeared distraught.

BUENO did not have to prepare a chronology of his activities on or about July 20, 1993. He cannot recall if LIVINGSTONE or anyone else mentioned anything about a chronology at that time. BUENO believes LIVINGSTONE may have prepared a chronology but he is not certain of this recollection. BUENO considers it most likely that he heard about the chronology through a conversation, but he cannot recall with whom he may have been speaking. BUENO thinks that he may have heard about the chronology from LIVINGSTONE. BUENO does not know if someone told LIVINGSTONE to prepare the chronology. BUENO believes it is likely that the chronology was prepared in anticipation of inquiries from the press. LIVINGSTONE is the type of person who would have prepared such a document on his own initiative and without being instructed by someone else to do so.

BUENO was present during a conversation on July 22 or July 23, 1993 in which KENNEDY complimented LIVINGSTONE for doing a good job on the night of July 20, 1993. KENNEDY told BUENO that BUENO would have been proud of the way LIVINGSTONE had performed that evening.

BUENO has no knowledge of anyone removing documents from the White House. BUENO was not asked to remove documents or assist LIVINGSTONE in any other way during the time period around July 20, 1993.

While BUENO was employed as KENNEDY's paralegal, one of his tasks was to send forms related to background investigations both to appointees as well as to other agencies such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Internal Revenue Service. BUENO also reviewed the completed forms to ensure that they had been completed correctly. BUENO was also responsible for hand-carrying the completed background investigation reports to the Senate so that these reports could be reviewed by the appropriate senators involved in confirmation hearings for appointees. BUENO received his work assignments from KENNEDY himself. During the course of his work, BUENO would see LIVINGSTONE on a day-to-day basis. BUENO had kept a mailbox in LIVINGSTONE's office downstairs in the OEOB so he had to go to LIVINGSTONE's office to check his mail each day.

If a background investigation on an appointee had been initiated by someone in the transition office, e.g., an early appointee such as NUSSBAUM, then the transition office staff member who moved to an assignment at the White House was still responsible for the completion of that background investigation. For the first month of his tenure as KENNEDY's paralegal, BUENO continued to check on the status of background investigation forms as he had done in the transition office.

BUENO does not know how LIVINGSTONE obtained a job in the White House Office of Personnel Security. Once LIVINGSTONE was hired, BUENO turned over responsibility for background investigations being conducted on White House employees to LIVINGSTONE.

KENNEDY had three safes in his office, and each of the safes had five drawers. The background investigation reports were maintained in green legal size folders and were kept locked in KENNEDY's safes. Only KENNEDY knew the combinations to these safes. BUENO is not aware of any system used to track the exact location of individual background investigation files once they were removed from KENNEDY's safes, e.g., when BUENO brought a file up to Capitol Hill to be reviewed by a senator.

BUENO does not recall LIVINGSTONE mentioning going to FOSTER's house the night of July 20, 1993 or the morning of July 21, 1993. BUENO does not recall whether LIVINGSTONE was in attendance at the meeting of the White House staff with President CLINTON on July 21, 1993.

BUENO last spoke to LIVINGSTONE and KENNEDY when BUENO completed his employment at the White House on August 15, 1994. BUENO went back to the White House on approximately September 15, 1994 to see KENNEDY but he did not have an opportunity to speak with KENNEDY because KENNEDY was on the telephone.

Based on observation and interview, BUENO is described as follows:

DALE BRENT BUMPERS, born FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C) currently employed as Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA) for the Eastern District of Arkansas, was contacted at his place of employment at the TCBY Building, 5th Floor, was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent, the purpose of the interview, and the fact that the interview was being conducted at the direction of Independent Counsel ROBERT B. FISKE, JR.

Mr. BUMPERS confirmed that he was employed as AUSA in the Little Rock United States Attorney's Office during 1993. He stated he does not remember if AUSA FLETCHER JACKSON spoke to him in July of 1993 or at any other time about the investigation of DAVID HALE's business, CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES, being conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) at that time, nor does he remember if AUSA JACKSON ever mentioned to him that a search warrant was being planned or was about to be executed on HALE's business. BUMPERS said he believes that AUSA JACKSON never spoke to him about the investigation or the search warrant and that he was not aware of either at the time the search warrant was executed.

BUMPERS said he believes that the first time he heard about the search warrant for CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES was from someone not affiliated with the U.S. Attorney's Office or the FBI, but someone on the street. He declared he cannot remember who talked to him but believes it was at least a week to a month after the suicide of VINCENT FOSTER. This person mentioned a speculation about a possible connection between FOSTER's suicide and the search of CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES. The remarks were made in passing, and BUMPERS said he could not remember who mentioned this or why the subject came up. He declared he did not speak with anyone in the U.S. Attorney's Office, the FBI, or anyone else about the investigation and search warrant involving DAVID HALE and CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES prior to July 20, 1993.

CHARLES WILLIAM "BILL" BURTON, Deputy Assistant to the President and Policy and Staff Director for the Chief of Staff, the White House, Washington, D.C., was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 10:30 a.m. MR. BURTON was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Assisting with the interview was CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. Also present during the interview was MR. BURTON's attorney, CHARLES M. CARBERRY, from the law firm JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE. MR. BURTON provided the following information:

He started at the White House officially on May 10, 1993. Prior to that time, he assisted at the White House on a consulting basis since the transition. BURTON grew up in Texarkana, Arkansas and was back in that town from 1976 through 1977. He spent the years 1975 through 1984 in Hope, Arkansas. From 1983 through 1984, he owned a newspaper in Hope. It was during this period of time that he knew VINCE FOSTER's father who was a "city father" in Hope. BURTON said VINCE himself was not much of a public persona in Arkansas. He is not sure when he first met VINCE FOSTER, but it may have been in court. After selling the Hope newspaper, BURTON went to Little Rock and worked for the Associated Press. He then enrolled in law school at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock and during the school year clerked at the Rose Law Firm (RLF). While at RLF, BURTON had a professional relationship with FOSTER. He said he primarily worked with associates who worked with FOSTER while at RLF. During the campaign and extending into the new administration prior to his permanent employment, BURTON assisted with energy policy. White House Chief of Staff MCLARTY had come to the White House out of the energy industry and often turned to BURTON for assistance in this area. BURTON moved to Washington, D.C. during the transition and had been considered for a number of other posts within the administration.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

Following law school graduation, BURTON worked until May 1993 at the JONES DAY law firm in Austin, Texas, handling primarily litigation work. BURTON received a letter from VINCE FOSTER as an endorsement to join the Arkansas Bar Association.

BURTON said he knew President CLINTON since CLINTON had been a candidate for the Attorney General in Arkansas.

BURTON described FOSTER with the following adjectives: best reputation; integrity; ethical; brilliant lawyer who had scored first on the Bar exam; not a real colorful fellow; and someone who had not had his name in the paper except for charitable work.

BURTON said he did not socialize with FOSTER. He could only remember having lunch with him on one occasion during the transition. BURTON never attended the weekly dinners with the Arkansas group in Washington, D.C. after CLINTON became President.

BURTON said he had occasional day-to-day contact with VINCE FOSTER at the White House. He said these occasions totaled no more than six to ten during the period May through July 1993.

At this point, BURTON noted that he sometimes had difficulty in separating what is known today versus what he knew at the time of FOSTER's death.

Asked if he had noticed any changes in VINCE FOSTER just prior to his death, BURTON answered that FOSTER always seemed like a pretty serious fellow, down to business. BURTON's sense was that FOSTER had more concentration and furrowed brow in the weeks prior to his death. BURTON did not recall discussing this with anyone.

BURTON saw FOSTER for the last time two weekends before FOSTER's death. The occasion was a Saturday or Sunday at the White House when both were working. They had come to the White House independently but FOSTER, BURTON and someone else whose name BURTON could not recall, ended up being together and perhaps discussing the Travel Office situation. They were trying to do the right thing and it wasn't coming out that way. FOSTER was concerned about his reputation.

FOSTER had been concerned about how DAVID WATKINS was being treated by the press. BURTON didn't recall FOSTER saying he was concerned about BILL KENNEDY.

When asked if VINCE FOSTER was working on Whitewater-related matters prior to his death, BURTON answered that he didn't know. BURTON knew FOSTER did some personal legal work for the CLINTONS while at RLF. FOSTER would have continued some of this work at the White House, particularly as it related to.. financial disclosure forms, etc.

On the evening of July 20, 1993, just prior to 9:00 p.m., BURTON received a telephone call from DAVID WATKINS, Assistant to the President for Management and Administration. WATKINS was calling the Chief of Staff's office and BURTON was sitting in the reception area when he received the call. WATKINS reported that he had learned from the duty officer of the U.S. Park Police (USPP) that VINCENT FOSTER had died. BURTON said his memory was hazy because of the flurry of activity that followed, but he could recall walking to the residence of the White House where the President and others from the Senior White House Staff were. The President was appearing on the LARRY KING show live that evening from 9:00-10:00 p.m. BURTON pulled MCLARTY out of the room where he was watching the show and informed MCLARTY of FOSTER's death. MCLARTY was visibly affected by this news.

BURTON then went to further confirm the death and circumstances surrounding it. With his newspaper reporter background, he ended up calling several USPP investigators, the hospital, an ambulance company and also BRUCE BABBIT, Secretary for the Interior. He called BABBIT to offer White House help and cooperation in the FOSTER death investigation by the USPP. BABBIT reacted, as others had, by being shocked and was also appreciative and understanding. BURTON remembers he told BABBIT the White House wanted no special treatment from the Park Police. BURTON did not recall the FBI/DOJ involvement being discussed at this point. He termed the call to BABBIT as a "courtesy call."

When asked to describe what he had learned of FOSTER's death at this point, BURTON said he spoke with the lead investigative officer at the scene who described the appearance, wallet and scene of the death as a classic suicide. He said FOSTER's thumb was in the trigger and blood under FOSTER not in the grass nearby the body. He said the thumb being in the trigger was a classic key indicator to the USPP of suicide. Not many people know that this is how a gun is held to commit this type of suicide. BURTON asked and was told that no note was found, but that FOSTER's car, a Honda, had been found.

Just past 9:30 p.m., BURTON returned to tell MCLARTY that it was clear that it was FOSTER and appeared to be a suicide. It was apparent to BURTON at this point that DEE DEE MYERS, GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, MARK GEARAN and others present from the White House had been told of FOSTER's death by MCLARTY. At that point, BILL KENNEDY and CRAIG LIVINGSTONE called to their location indicating they had identified FOSTER's body at the hospital. BURTON said this group was in one of the "colored rooms" on the ground floor of the White House, and at times used the U.S. Secret Service telephone at the station located in that hallway.

BURTON remembered people asking at various times about the presence of a note and the answer always being no. There was no discussion at this point of searching FOSTER's White House office.

MCLARTY asked the President to terminate his interview with LARRY KING. The President, MCLARTY, BURTON and perhaps a Secret Service agent rode from the library of the White House on the elevator to the second floor residence of the President and met in a private room. It was at this point, approximately 10:00 p.m. or shortly thereafter, that MCLARTY formally advised the President that his friend, VINCENT FOSTER, had committed suicide. The President reacted with shock. BURTON described his conversation with Park Police regarding the death scene and thereafter excused himself and returned to the ground floor. MCLARTY and the President stayed in the room.

BURTON could recall no discussions regarding a note or search of FOSTER's office. He recalled the topics being discussed as (1) notification of FOSTER's relatives and friends; and (2) a press statement. BURTON himself handled some of the White House contacts for funeral arrangements and the obtaining of FOSTER's personal effects.

BURTON went back to the Chief of Staff's suite. SYLVIA MATHEWS of the Office of Economic Counsel had volunteered to sit at PATTY's desk in the foyer of MCLARTY's office to answer telephones. BURTON himself used MCLARTY's office to notify FOSTER's friends and relatives. BURTON noted that he called mutual friends in Hope, Arkansas, of himself and VINCE FOSTER's mother, GEORGE and EFFIE FRASIER. The FRASIERS told MRS. FOSTER (ALICE MAE) in person of her son's death.

At one point, BURTON saw SYLVIA MATHEWS on the floor going through a sack of trash. She had determined on her own, apparently, that FOSTER's office may have been cleaned and had somehow asked for the trash from the cleaning ladies and had been told what she had was from FOSTER's office. BURTON could not recall how she knew, but MATHEWS also reported that the burn bag in FOSTER's office was empty. BURTON's memory was hazy, but he said there was not much trash from FOSTER's office. BURTON said the trash was of "some concern to me." He said he told MATHEWS it was important to keep the trash together. MATHEWS sealed the trash with masking tape and put it in ROY NEAL'S office for safekeeping.

The President and MCLARTY and others from the White House went to see LISA FOSTER at her residence that evening. BURTON stayed at the White House during that time to handle matters from that location. DEE DEE MYERS and MARK GEARAN were working on a press release.

BURTON was asked if he went to FOSTER's office that evening. He answered that he did not recall leaving the first floor of the West Wing. FOSTER's office is on the second floor of the West Wing. BURTON said he went home about somewhere between 2:00 a.m. and 5:00 a.m., probably 4:00 a.m.

BURTON returned to the White House on the morning of July 21, 1993 in time for the 8:00 a.m. Senior Staff Meeting. He said nothing memorable occurred at that meeting. He also said the days are "telescoped." BURTON's normal day at the White House is from 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 or 10:00 in the evening. On the morning of July 21, 1993, BURTON again called BRUCE BABBIT at Interior. BURTON said he now understood from the White House Counsel's office, that the USPP would be officially investigating the FOSTER death. BURTON said there had been some discussion of having the Department of Justice (DOJ) come in to act as facilitator with the White House to avoid the appearance of any coverup during the investigation. BURTON offered that BABBIT should call the Chief of Staff's office at the White House and let them know of any roadblocks occurring during the investigation. BURTON said he did not recall attending a USPP briefing on the investigation to date on the morning of July 21, 1993.

BURTON had several conversations with the USPP over the next several days. He said it was hard to recall the time and content of any one of these meetings. He also cautioned that during this time period, he was doing other things. BURTON was talking with the family, helping with funeral arrangements, arranging for Air Force One and a plane for FOSTER's body to be sent to Arkansas, working with the Park Police and for a while it seemed like acting as Park Police contact with the White House. This contact duty eventually shifted to the White House Counsel's office. Basically, BURTON was assisting with logistics.

BURTON did not recall a meeting on the afternoon of July 21, 1993 with Park Police and other investigators regarding how VINCENT FOSTER's office would be searched. BURTON did recall talking with MCLARTY and NUSSBAUM about the search. He said MCLARTY ran the Chief of Staff's office as a "broker" in dealing with overlapping responsibilities in the White House. BURTON participated in the decision for the search which had been primarily determined by NUSSBAUM. Concerns voiced were that the search be completely as open as possible and yet preserve the confidentiality and privileges of the Presidency; basically protecting the Presidency. BURTON did not recall who among the group was where on the spectrum of concerns. He did recall that nobody took the position that "let them have at it" with respect to law enforcement entering FOSTER's office without restriction. BURTON knew of discussions in NUSSBAUM's office with the Park Police, etc. BURTON was in MCLARTY's office and remembers a discussion concerning bringing JACK QUINN in for his viewpoint.

DAVID MARGOLIS, DOJ attorney, was the USPP agent with the White House. BURTON recalls that the Park Police thought the terms of the search were almost an overkill. As an example, concerning some of FOSTER's private papers, MARGOLIS raised an issue and the Park Police volunteered that these documents could be taken home by FOSTER's family attorney. The Park Police were there to find out if the death had been a suicide or if there was a note present in the office. The process followed was that NUSSBAUM would describe a folder or document to let the investigators know what it was. BURTON said there weren't half a dozen times that it came up that anything was of interest to them (law enforcement). He gave an example - telephone logs. BURTON said the USPP got to see everything they wanted to see. BURTON said he was at the search partly as MCLARTY's representative to report back to the Chief of Staff. BURTON did not recall how it came that he would be at the search. BURTON had no knowledge of the President and/or First Lady being consulted regarding issues surrounding the search and he said it seems like he would have known if this had occurred. BURTON knew that MAGGIE WILLIAMS was involved in some conversations, as FOSTER had acted as personal lawyer for the President in the past.

When questioned, BURTON said that he was not aware of any documents being removed from FOSTER's office on the evening of July 20, 1993 and the early morning hours of July 21, 1993. He does not recall any reference or accusations or rumors to such removals.

BURTON said he was at the search of the FOSTER office at the start and conclusion and also there most of the time. He left the room on a couple of occasions to take unrelated phone calls.

BURTON remembers that one of the first items to be searched in FOSTER's office was a briefcase. He said that White House staff consisting of STEVEN NEUWIRTH, CLIFF SLOAN and himself surrounded NUSSBAUM behind the desk with the investigators and attorneys from DOJ in front of the desk. The desk surface was actually reviewed first and then two briefcases. BURTON remembered an accordion-style briefcase and a catalog-style briefcase. He said the pile of personal documents was created from items taken out of the briefcases. BURTON saw no more files in the briefcases and doesn't recall seeing otherwise. He said he had been previously interviewed concerning the search of FOSTER's office and referred the interviewers to this earlier recorded interview as it had occurred closer to the time of the events in question. BURTON did not recall NUSSBAUM looking into the briefcase. BURTON never heard any rumors or discussion concerning the torn up note which was eventually found being returned to FOSTER's office after the search on July 22, 1993. BURTON was asked if FOSTER was the kind of person who ripped stuff up prior to throwing it away. BURTON said he did not know but cited FOSTER as being a careful attorney. BURTON said it was his understanding that the burn bag system in the White House was primarily for Top Secret and Military Secret material which was to be thrown away.

BURTON was asked to further described his six to ten contacts noted earlier with FOSTER during the course of their dealings from May to July, 1993. BURTON said that FOSTER was always courteous. As an example, FOSTER always called first to arrange an appointment with Chief of Staff MCLARTY. FOSTER would check with BURTON regarding legal issues and status of appointment matters.

BURTON said he could not think of anything else relevant to the investigation.

BURTON was asked if he was aware of anyone from the Park Police or Interior contacting the White House regarding the conduct of the USPP investigation of the death of VINCENT FOSTER. BURTON replied that in an "after the fact manner" TOM COLLIER, Chief of Staff for BRUCE BABBIT, Secretary of Interior, had called him (BURTON). Allegations were made by COLLIER that the White House was mishandling and blocking the investigation. BURTON said he felt these issues were being raised only after bad publicity had surfaced. They were also raised when most of the investigation had been done and the note found. BURTON said he turned COLLIER's complaints over to ROY NEAL. BURTON said his conversation with COLLIER was a "heated" discussion. BURTON said he probably wasn't as polite to COLLIER as he should have been. BURTON said as far as he knew, there were no changes following his discussion with COLLIER, other than it seemed that the DOJ went into "ascendancy as lead agency."

Following a break with his attorney, BURTON returned to the interview with the following two issues, stating that he had conferred with his attorney regarding relevancy of these issues.

BURTON had handled the rings and FOSTER personal affects to include a watch, wallet and beeper. With respect to the beeper, BURTON checked it upon receiving it from investigators and noted that FOSTER's name showed up on the readout, indicating there were no pages on it. He said as follow-up, the White House Communication Agency perhaps could determine whether or not additional paging records are kept. BURTON said that PATSY THOMASSON or DAVID WATKINS or JOEL KLEIN would be the link with the White House Communication Agency to follow-up on this issue, if necessary.

BURTON also reported that some period of time after the death of FOSTER and the note being located, perhaps in the Fall of 1993, before Whitewater was back in the news, he spoke with JIM BLAIR, an attorney, about a friend of his, SAM HEAUR, who was MCDOUGAL's attorney. MCDOUGAL had acquired CLINTON's Whitewater interest. Shortly before FOSTER died, he was in the process of trying to get corporate records from the CLINTONS. BRUCE LINDSEY and MAGGIE WILLIAMS were contacted by BURTON and the matter was left with WILLIAMS.

BURTON was asked if he knew the attorneys BARNETT and/or KENDALL. BURTON said he had met BARNETT at FOSTER's funeral on the bus ride from Hope to Little Rock.

The following description of BURTON was obtained through observation and interview:

HARRIET E. BYNUM telephonically contacted the interviewing agent in response to a call placed to BYNUM by the interviewing agent earlier on May 25, 1994. BYNUM is employed as an insurance sales agent by MAZZANTI, BYNUM & ASSOCIATES, 2 Convention Center Place, Suite 102, Convention Center Holiday Inn, Pine Bluff, Arkansas 71601, telephone number (501) 536-8058. BYNUM resides at 315 Martin Street, Pine Bluff, Arkansas, telephone number (501) 534-6334. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and that the interview pertained to the circumstances of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. on July 20, 1993, BYNUM provided the following information:

BYNUM was the writing agent who sold a universal life insurance policy, policy number L011391790 with a value of $700,000.00, to VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. The policy was issued by the North American Company for Life and Health Insurance (NACOLAH), Chicago, Illinois, and the anniversary date on the policy was July 14, 1990.

BYNUM does not recall exactly why NACOLAH documents reflect three different annual premium amounts ($2421.00, $2618.00 and $3857.00) for FOSTER's flexible premium adjustable life insurance policy, but she believes the annual premium rates were increased due to a decline in prevailing interest rates. In order to ensure the ability of NACOLAH to pay the full $700,000.00 in the event of FOSTER's death, NACOLAH had to make assumptions about the rate of return on NACOLAH's investments during the life of FOSTER's policy with NACOLAH. When prevailing interest rates began to decline, NACOLAH had to increase the amount of FOSTER's annual premium because NACOLAH would need to invest more money at the lower than projected rates of interest in order to have enough funds accumulated to pay FOSTER's survivors the full $700,000.00.

BYNUM recalls being contacted by FOSTER when he was notified of the increase in the amount of the annual premium.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

BYNUM had previously discussed with FOSTER the possibility of the premium changing from the figure she had originally furnished him, and she simply explained to him about the decline in interest rates at that time.

The annual premium payment is normally due on the anniversary date of the policy each year. In the case of FOSTER's policy, his premium for 1993 was due on July 14, 1993. Bills to remind the policy holder of the upcoming anniversary date are normally sent out by NACOLAH approximately three to four weeks before the due date. When she was asked by the interviewing agent whether June 22, 1993 could have been the date when NACOLAH last sent a bill to FOSTER, BYNUM concurred and noted that date was, in fact, approximately three to four weeks before the due date on FOSTER's policy.

The date June 22, 1993 had been reflected as the last billing date on a NACOLAH document which had been reviewed by the interviewing agent prior to the interview.

On a term insurance policy, the premium must normally be paid within thirty-one days of the due date or the policy is considered lapsed and no benefits are payable. However, in the case of a universal life policy such as the policy purchased by FOSTER, the due date holds less significance. FOSTER had paid $5,021.00 to NACOLAH when he purchased the policy. BYNUM recalls that this $5,021.00 represented money which FOSTER had received from either Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company or The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York when FOSTER had closed out a policy with one of these two companies. BYNUM had applied $3,857.00 of FOSTER's $5,021.00 to FOSTER's premium payment for the first year, leaving FOSTER substantially in advance of his premium payments due with NACOLAH. As a result of this early payment as well as the return NACOLAH had been able to earn on FOSTER'S premium payments, FOSTER may not have needed to make any premium payment in 1993. FOSTER did not have to make a premium payment in 1993 as long as the interest rates for the returns to NACOLAH from the investment of FOSTER's premiums remained higher than the mortality cost to NACOLAH. In short, FOSTER could have made no premium payments for as long as eighteen to twenty-four months after the premium was due in July 1993, yet the full $700,000.00 face amount of his policy would have been paid upon FOSTER's death.

BYNUM is familiar with the clauses pertaining to suicide in FOSTER's policy since the terms of FOSTER's policy were quite standard. If FOSTER had committed suicide within two years of the anniversary date of his policy, i.e., on or before July 14, 1992, then FOSTER's survivors would only have received the amount of the premiums paid to NACOLAH by FOSTER up to that time. However, since FOSTER died after July 14, 1992, his survivors were entitled to the full $700,000.00 amount of the policy.

BYNUM knew FOSTER for many years, and she traveled to Washington, D.C. following his death on July 20, 1993. BYNUM considered FOSTER a friend, but they had limited contact with each other after FOSTER left Arkansas and went to Washington, D.C. in January 1993. BYNUM considers FOSTER's widow, LISA FOSTER, to be her best friend. BYNUM spoke with LISA FOSTER in Washington, D.C. shortly after FOSTER's death in an effort to assist LISA FOSTER in whatever ways she could, including the filing of a claim with NACOLAH. During her conversations with LISA FOSTER, BYNUM learned that LISA FOSTER had made a premium payment to NACOLAH shortly before FOSTER's death. Based on her previously described knowledge that the prompt payment of FOSTER's insurance premium in July 1993 was not necessary to ensure that NACOLAH would pay off on the policy, BYNUM is quite certain that the payment of the premium by LISA FOSTER on the day before FOSTER's death was strictly coincidental. BYNUM is not certain when LISA FOSTER's premium payment was received by NACOLAH, but she believes it was in relatively close proximity in time to the date of FOSTER's death.

BYNUM knows of no concerns held by anyone at NACOLAH regarding the timing of the payment of the premium on FOSTER's policy. Following FOSTER's death, BYNUM contacted NACOLAH to request prompt processing of the death claim. BYNUM took this action on her own initiative because she knew the difficulties LISA FOSTER was encountering in moving from Washington back to Little Rock.

HARRIET EASON BYNUM was interviewed at her place of business, Bynum Investment Services, 415 West 6th Avenue, Suite B, Pine Bluff, Arkansas 71611, telephone number (501) 541-9094. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, BYNUM provided the following information:

BYNUM has known VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. since she was approximately fourteen years old. BYNUM grew up in Clarendon, Arkansas, while FOSTER lived in Hope, Arkansas. BYNUM and FOSTER attended Presbyterian churches, and they met at church-related activities during the summers when they were in junior high and high schools. FOSTER was one year older than BYNUM.

BYNUM later had contact with FOSTER during one of the summers between FOSTER's college years. FOSTER lived with a relative in Little Rock during that summer, and BYNUM saw FOSTER often as part of a large group of people who socialized together.

When FOSTER and his wife moved to Fayetteville, Arkansas, for FOSTER to attend law school, BYNUM went up to Fayetteville to see them the first week they were there. BYNUM's husband, F. WILSON BYNUM, also studied law at the University of Arkansas School of Law in Fayetteville but was one semester behind FOSTER. The BYNUMs and FOSTERs have remained the closest of friends since leaving Fayetteville.

The BYNUMs spent election night in November 1992 with the FOSTERs at the FOSTERs' house in Little Rock.

The BYNUMs know President BILL CLINTON and First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, but their only social contacts with the CLINTONs have been through the FOSTERs. WILSON BYNUM has worked with HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON on legal matters, but these matters preceded the election of President CLINTON. BYNUM has worked with HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON on social and community issues such as child advocacy.

by SA RUSSELL T. BRANSFORD RTB:rtb Date dictated 2/13/95

BYNUM did not see FOSTER in the last few months preceding his death on July 20, 1993. The BYNUMs had airplane reservations and tickets to travel to Washington, D.C. (WDC), in October 1993, but these plans were changed due to FOSTER's death.

ROSEMARY CONRAD, who is a friend of both the BYNUMS and the FOSTERs, travelled to WDC during the first two weeks of June 1993 and visited with FOSTER. CONRAD may be able to provide information about FOSTER's behavior on that occasion.

BYNUM did not travel to WDC to visit FOSTER after he moved there following the inauguration of President BILL CLINTON in January 1993. BYNUM probably spoke to FOSTER a couple of times after he went to WDC. On one occasion, FOSTER called BYNUM shortly after the inauguration with a question about life insurance. FOSTER, along with other new White House employees, had recently attended an orientation meeting about benefits available to federal government employees. BYNUM was in the insurance business at that time and she had already sold a life insurance policy to FOSTER. FOSTER called BYNUM to ask her advice about whether the premium on the government life insurance plan was competitively priced. BYNUM obtained the facts on the government plan from FOSTER, and she compared the government plan with other insurance plans available through insurance brokers in Arkansas. BYNUM later recommended to FOSTER that he enroll in the government plan since the government rate was better than BYNUM had been able to find in the private sector. These contacts with FOSTER probably occurred in late January or early February of 1993. BYNUM probably last spoke to FOSTER sometime prior to April 1, 1993.

BYNUM has two children who are very close in age to two of FOSTER's children. One of BYNUM's children is approximately one month older than LAURA FOSTER, while BYNUM's other child is approximately three months older than BRUGH FOSTER.

BYNUM recalls that FOSTER used to have severe mood swings even while he was still living in Little Rock and working at the Rose Law Firm. BYNUM and her husband would occasionally travel to Little Rock from Pine Bluff and spend a weekend with the FOSTERs. For example, on Saturday they might go to a sports event and go out to dinner. The BYNUMs would then spend the night at the FOSTERs' residence rather than drive back to Pine Bluff. BYNUM recalls that FOSTER would sometimes be extremely quiet on Sunday morning, staying mostly to himself. Even if the BYNUMs and LISA FOSTER became loud or excited, FOSTER would remain quiet and either read the newspaper or study documents from work, especially if he were preparing for a major trial. FOSTER would never be hostile to his guests, and he would not ask them to quiet down, but it was clear to BYNUM that he wanted no part of what was going on in his own house. If the noise and revelry grew too distracting, FOSTER would pick up his things and go into another room without saying anything to his guests.

BYNUM has observed the video tape of FOSTER delivering the commencement address at the University of Arkansas School of Law in May 1993. BYNUM believes that FOSTER's spirit was clearly absent as he delivered the address, but she does not mean this comment in a religious sense. FOSTER's personality was not inside his body as he gave the speech. FOSTER's image on the video tape appeared "ghostly" to BYNUM.

On one occasion, BYNUM watched the video tape of the commencement address with FOSTER's daughter, LAURA FOSTER. LAURA FOSTER commented to BYNUM that the person on the tape was not her father. LAURA FOSTER said that though the person delivering the address looked like her father on the outside, the traits she knew within him were not evident as he made that speech.

BYNUM has viewed photographs of FOSTER taken during the last two months of his life, and she recalls that in these photographs FOSTER had very puffy eyes and a glazed expression on his face.

On July 20, 1993, at approximately 9:00 p.m., WILSON BYNUM answered the telephone at home and was told by the caller, JOHN SLOAN, that FOSTER was dead. WILSON BYNUM hung up the phone and told BYNUM that FOSTER had died. BYNUM was incredulous and asked her husband to repeat what he had just said. WILSON BYNUM repeated that FOSTER had died. There was no mention of how FOSTER had actually died during this conversation. JOHN SLOAN and his wife HELEN did not believe FOSTER had died by suicide, and they called the BYNUMs again approximately forty-five to sixty minutes after the first call to further discuss what had happened to FOSTER.

BYNUM also spoke by telephone with ROSEMARY CONRAD that same night about FOSTER's death. CONRAD had been called by SKIP RUTHERFORD, who notified her of FOSTER's death. During their telephone conversation with each other, neither CONRAD not BYNUM mentioned suicide. That night BYNUM also arranged plane reservations to WDC aboard United Airlines using the tickets BYNUM had planned to use for the trip to WDC in October 1993.

On July 21, 1993, at approximately 8:00 a.m., WILSON BYNUM received a telephone call from DOUG BUFORD, who said there was room for BYNUM on a private aircraft which would be flying friends of the FOSTER family to WDC. BYNUM called United Airlines back and canceled her earlier reservations. The private airplane left Little Rock around 11:30 a.m. and flew to Fayetteville, Arkansas, to pick up CONRAD and her son. The airplane with BYNUM aboard eventually arrived in WDC around 4:00 that afternoon.

BYNUM knows of no money problems or other personal or family problems which may have led FOSTER to suicide.

FOSTER was right-handed.

BYNUM believes that FOSTER killed himself because of the intense personal criticism to which he had been subjected, particularly by writers of the Wall Street Journal. BYNUM believes FOSTER would have regarded the critical articles as a form of personal character assassination. FOSTER also likely felt intense pressure about his options in terms of resigning his post at the White House Counsel's Office. FOSTER felt there was no way out of his position at the White House, and he felt he could not return to Little Rock even though he could have. FOSTER was such a perfectionist that he would have found it intolerable that he had not been successful in his work in WDC. The pressure on himself may have been mostly or totally self-imposed.

BYNUM's comments about FOSTER's state of mind prior to his death are based solely on her knowledge of FOSTER and are not based on anything he said to her.

BYNUM recalls hearing that a professor from either Georgetown University or George Washington University in WDC called the FOSTER house after FOSTER's death and spoke about Type A personalities. BYNUM recalls being told that suicides among Type A personalities are rare, occurring at a rate of approximately three percent. BYNUM regarded FOSTER as having a Type A personality, i.e., FOSTER was constantly driven and was always striving for success and perfection.

BYNUM is not certain in her own mind how FOSTER was able to commit suicide without leaving a note explaining his actions to his family or without having some sort of final conversation with his children. BYNUM believes that FOSTER felt the personal pressure so intensely that he just blocked out of his mind the likely effects of his death on his wife and children.

WILLIAM MICHAEL CAHILL was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. CAHILL is an officer with the United States Secret Service (USSS), Uniform Division, White House Branch. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, CAHILL provided the following information:

CAHILL is currently assigned to the USSS Control Center for the White House Branch, which is where he was assigned on July 20, 1993, the date of the death of White House Deputy Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. CAHILL is assigned to the C Section of the White House Branch, and his normal hours of work are from 2:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. CAHILL believes he was assigned to monitor alarms on the alarm board in the USSS Control Center on July 20, 1993.

When an officer of the USSS is assigned to monitor the alarm board at the USSS Control Center, the officer is responsible for receiving telephone calls from persons securing or opening offices within the White House. If the alarm board reflects that an alarm has been tripped in one of the offices in the White House, the officer on the alarm board position is responsible for calling the office in which the alarm has been activated to determine the reason for the alarm being triggered. The officer assigned to the alarm board is also responsible for having an officer of the USSS sent to the site of the alarm to check on the cause of the alarm. The officer who responds to the site of the alarm is, in turn, responsible for radioing the USSS Control Center to confirm that anyone found at the site of the alarm is named on the list of persons authorized to be in the space where the alarm was activated. If no person is still at the site of the alarm, the responding officer is responsible for verifying that the location is secure and radioing the USSS Control Center that nothing was found. If the responding officer finds someone at the site of the alarm who is not on the authorized access list, the officer will detain that person and have that person call the White House staff member on the authorized access list who authorized entry for this person to verify that such access was authorized by the staff member.

Typically, there are four officers and one sergeant assigned to the USSS Control Center at any given time. CAHILL does not recall with certainty which other officers were assigned with him in the USSS Control Center on July 20, 1993. Based on his knowledge of which officers are assigned to C Section with him, CAHILL believes that USSS Officers MATT DRISCOLL and TIM SCHMIDT were working with him in the USSS Control Center on July 20, 1993. CAHILL believes that the fourth officer assigned to that group could have been either STEVE McCORMACK, TRENT KELTNER or C.B. BROWN.

CAHILL does not recall receiving an alarm call at the suite of the White House Counsel's Office on July 20, 1993. It is very possible that another officer within the USSS Control Center could have received a call from someone at the Counsel's office suite without CAHILL's knowledge.

At this point in the interview, CAHILL was asked to review a single sheet of paper labeled an "on-line activity report" which is a log that reflects intrusion detection events in the office suite of White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM on July 20 and 21, 1993. After CAHILL reviewed the document, the interview continued.

The log reflects that on July 20, 1993 at 2004 hours (8:04 p.m.), the alarm in the White House Counsel's Office suite, which had been in "access" mode, i.e., employees were free to move about the suite as during the business day, was placed into alarm mode by an individual named CASTLETON. The next entry on the log reflects that, again at 2004 hours, the alarm was placed into secure mode, meaning the alarm was turned on and would signal an intrusion into the office suite. The log reflects the entrant/operator on this event as CASTLETYON, which is likely a misspelling of the name CASTLETON. CAHILL believes that the reason for the alarm being triggered may be that CASTLETON reentered the office suite after the alarm had been turned on or CASTLETON had not yet left the suite when the alarm system was reset.

The log further reflects that on July 20, 1993 at 2114 hours (9:14 p.m.), the alarm in the White House Counsel's Office suite was shown as secure and then reset. CAHILL is unfamiliar with this particular sequence of events. In his experience, the log should reflect an access event, rather than a secure event, before a reset event. CAHILL cannot account for the fact the log does not reflect an access event between 8:04 p.m. and 9:14 p.m. on July 20, 1993.

CAHILL does not know if the White House Counsel's Office suite currently has a motion detector as part of the alarm system or if it was so equipped on July 20, 1993.

CAHILL has not been into either the White House Counsel's Office suite or the office of First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON since the CLINTON Administration took office. There is no video camera system set up in either of these two offices. CAHILL is only aware of one video camera location in the White House, and that camera is located in the basement of the mansion.

CAHILL has no knowledge of any documents being taken from FOSTER's office on or about July 20, 1993. CAHILL does not know MARGARET "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS, Chief of Staff for the First Lady.

CAHILL does not know CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, but he knows that LIVINGSTONE is head of White House security and his office may be in Room 84. CAHILL does not have any interaction with LIVINGSTONE, but he recalls seeing a USSS memorandum in which USSS officers are directed not to use LIVINGSTONE's name in their reports. CAHILL has no knowledge of LIVINGSTONE taking any documents out of the west wing of the White House.

Based on observation and interview, CAHILL is described as follows:

PAUL R. CAREY, Special Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, the White House, (202) 456-6493, was interviewed at his office at the White House. After being advised of the nature and purpose of the interview and the identity of the interviewing agent, CAREY provided the following information:

CAREY advised that he remembers the night of July 20, 1993, the night that VINCE FOSTER, JR. killed himself. CAREY advised that he did not come into the White House at all.

The following morning, he had responsibilities in connection with being confirmation coach for newly appointed FBI Director, LOUIS FREEH. He was busy with those duties the entire morning of July 21, 1993. He probably arrived to his office in the West Wing between 7:30 and 8:30 a.m. He may have gone over to the West Wing to his boss, HOWARD PASTER's office for a staff meeting at approximately 8:30 a.m., but because of his duties on the Hill later that morning, he is absolutely positive that he would have been wearing his suit and tie. He and LOUIS FREEH met with Senator BIDEN and Senator HATCH. They met in the anteroom of Senate Judiciary Committee at approximately 11:30 a.m.

CAREY advised that the earliest person in the Legislative Affairs Office in the West Wing would probably arrive approximately 7:30 in the morning. He further advised that it is extremely rare for him to ever be in his office earlier than 7:30 in the morning and he goes directly to his office in the East Wing.

As part of the interview, CAREY provided the following personal information:

On May 17, 1994, JOHN PHILLIP CARROLL, Senior Law Partner, Rose Law Firm, Little Rock, Arkansas appeared at the offices of the FBI together with his attorney C. MICHAEL BUXTON of the law firm VINSON and ELKINS, the Willard Office Building, 1455 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 639-6571. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, CARROLL provided the following information:

CARROLL advised that he had known VINCE FOSTER, JR. since FOSTER came to the firm approximately 20 years ago. He "bonded with him" and has been close to the family as well. He is the godfather of VINCENT, III, VINCE FOSTER, JR.'s son. Their homes are approximately 3 blocks apart from one another in Little Rock and he considers himself close to the whole family. CARROLL characterized FOSTER as "prince of the world". He noted that FOSTER had graduated from law school first in his class in 1970 or 1971, had been editor of the law review, and was a very, very, fine lawyer. He was smart and he wrote beautifully.

CARROLL said when FOSTER told him he was going to Washington, D.C., it came as a bolt of lightning for him. CARROLL simply was not expecting such a move. FOSTER had announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Arkansas Bar Association and CARROLL was so disappointed that FOSTER was leaving the firm for Washington, D.C. that he actually commented that he wished former President Bush had won the election because then he wouldn't have lost FOSTER. But CARROLL said he understood that it was like being drafted and that FOSTER couldn't really refuse such an honor.

CARROLL advised that FOSTER's suicide is a complete mystery to him. The commencement address that FOSTER gave in May, 1993 seems to tell so much about FOSTER to people who will listen. FOSTER himself had prosecuted law suits representing insurance companies whose interest it was to prove that a decedent had committed suicide but he was not aware that FOSTER had any particular empathy for people who committed suicide or otherwise was involved emotionally with the topic.

In his experience, FOSTER handled stress wonderfully and had no problems tackling difficult problems. He said that FOSTER had good stamina, physically and mentally. He knew FOSTER to work out every day, and described him as strong and good looking.

As far as CARROLL knew, FOSTER's family life was ideal. He had a happy marriage. He was happy with his children, in fact, CARROLL opined that FOSTER had "perfect children".

Asked about possible stress points in FOSTER's life, CARROLL advised that before the election, FOSTER told CARROLL about the rumor that he believed was about to hit the press that he and HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON were having an affair. He advised CARROLL that he was having his telephone number changed and would not be at the office for a couple of days. He seemed shocked and concerned about it. He was making the changes because he did not want to run into the press. He was telling CARROLL in order to give CARROLL and others at the law firm some kind of forewarning as to what was coming. As it turned out, it was not such a public furor as FOSTER expected and he came back within about a week. CARROLL said that he had no knowledge of any extramarital affair between FOSTER and any person, nor did he believe it was possible. He believes that FOSTER was a very moral man and a family man.

CARROLL was not aware that FOSTER had any financial problems. He knew that FOSTER had a good income from the Rose Law Firm. As far as he could remember, FOSTER's father had been moderately well off, so as far as he knew, there should not have been any financial difficulties. He advised that there was no Rose Law Firm subsidy to any country club membership or anything else that he was specifically aware of.

CARROLL knows LISA FOSTER and her children to be of the Catholic religion. VINCE FOSTER himself came to mass with the family only on high holidays, otherwise FOSTER did not attend church.

CARROLL suggested that possible confidants of FOSTER would have included a young architect who is also executor of FOSTER's estate, JOHN SLOAN and his wife HELEN, 4014 South Lookout, Little Rock, Arkansas 72205, work telephone: 501-376-6681, residence telephone: 501-663-5556; also possibly BILL WOODYARD (with the MITCHELL Law Firm in Little Rock); JERRY ATCHLEY (who owns a radio station and whose wife is a psychiatrist); WEBB HUBBELL; and BILL and HILLARY CLINTON.

The only case that CARROLL was ever aware of that FOSTER was not able to handle well was a case involving a client who was extremely difficult. FOSTER eventually came to CARROLL and said that he simply could not deal with the client. Figuratively speaking, he threw up his hands and asked CARROLL to take it over for him and complete it. CARROLL did so.

FOSTER left Little Rock in January 1992 for the inauguration. CARROLL did not attend the inauguration ceremonies and he did not see VINCE FOSTER until May of 1992 when FOSTER returned to Little Rock for commencement ceremonies of his law school. At that time CARROLL did not observe any change in FOSTER's appearance or any change in his demeanor. CARROLL said that at the commencement ceremony at University of Arkansas Law School, FOSTER gave a splendid delivery with no stress showing during the speech.

Asked about anything he may have heard concerning FOSTER's state of mind, he advised that LISA told him, or perhaps he read it, that FOSTER had spent some time just sitting or lying in a darkened room. He knows no more than that. He advised that WEBB HUBBELL told him that the FOSTERs and the HUBBELLs had gone for a weekend away from Washington, D.C. just before FOSTER died and that they had all had a wonderful time. During that weekend, FOSTER himself seemed quite "chipper".

CARROLL observed that FOSTER never had a defeat. He had handled a case for HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON with regard to her health care task force that the Wall Street Journal was critical of. He also commented that BILL KENNEDY had gotten censured for the Travelgate matter. He read these things in the press and doesn't know anything about these things firsthand.

CARROLL is not aware of any history of suicide or depression in the FOSTER family. He commented that all the members of FOSTER's family are successful. It appears to be an ideal family. FOSTER's father was a successful real estate person and therefore a political force in Arkansas. FOSTER's sister is a successful attorney and his other sister who resides in Arkansas was a beauty queen. FOSTER had not seemed overwrought over his father's death and he was closer to his father than to his mother.

FOSTER's hobbies included, swimming and gardening. CARROLL never knew anything about FOSTER's having anything to do with guns.

CARROLL thinks that young VINCENT, FOSTER's son, is taking his father's suicide very hard. There is some concern that he is not talking to his mother LISA about it. He knows that DREW is graduating from High School about now and LAURA has transferred colleges. He knows no additional information.

CARROLL advised that he heard of FOSTER's death on July 20, late in the evening. Judge ARNOLD called him about midnight. Somebody (CARROLL does not know who) from Washington, D.C. had called Judge ARNOLD. A little later that night WEBB HUBBELL called him and notified him. On July 21, both CARROLL and his wife flew to Washington, D.C. He discussed the death with HUBBELL and HUBBELL himself communicated no suspicions to him at the time that FOSTER's death was anything but a suicide. During the interview CARROLL provided the following personal information:

JOHN PHILLIP CARROLL, who is also known as PHILLIP CARROLL, was interviewed in a conference room in the offices of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 10825 Financial Centre Parkway, Building 2, Suite 200, Little Rock, Arkansas. CARROLL was formerly a senior partner at the Rose Law Firm (RLF) in Little Rock, but he took the status "of counsel" on February 1, 1995. Also present during the interview was DAVID L. WILLIAMS, who is an attorney with RLF and who was representing CARROLL. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, CARROLL provided the following information:

CARROLL first learned of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. on the night of July 20, 1993, several hours after FOSTER's body was found. CARROLL was at home and had already gone to bed when he received a telephone call from Judge RICHARD ARNOLD, who is a judge on the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. CARROLL does not recall whether he received the call from Judge ARNOLD before or after midnight. CARROLL thinks he was asleep and was awakened by the ringing of his telephone. Judge ARNOLD advised CARROLL that FOSTER had killed himself in Washington, D.C. (WDC). CARROLL does not recall who notified Judge ARNOLD of FOSTER's death, but he recalls Judge ARNOLD saying that he had learned of the death from someone in WDC. CARROLL knows Judge ARNOLD because CARROLL's wife DIANE was a childhood friend of Judge ARNOLD in Texarkana, Arkansas. Judge ARNOLD later served as administrative secretary to Senator DALE BUMPERS.

WEBB HUBBELL also called CARROLL that same night and confirmed for CARROLL that FOSTER was dead. CARROLL recalls that HUBBELL said that CARROLL should not believe FOSTER died by suicide because that could not have been the case. Neither HUBBELL nor CARROLL could believe that FOSTER had committed suicide. CARROLL does not recall HUBBELL's exact words, but he recalls that HUBBELL said in some way that FOSTER's death could not have been suicide.

On July 21, 1993, CARROLL spoke with a number of people about flying to WDC in response to FOSTER's death. When CARROLL first made plans to go to WDC, he intended to return to Little Rock that same night, i.e., July 21, 1993, by commercial airliner. Instead, CARROLL and his wife flew to WDC aboard a private aircraft owned by Stephens, Incorporated, which had offered the use of the plane and crew to a number of FOSTER's friends. Other people who flew to WDC with the CARROLLs on the Stephens, Incorporated aircraft were JOHN and HELEN SLOAN, HARRIET BYNUM from Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and a woman and her son from Fayetteville, Arkansas. CARROLL does not recall who told him that Stephens, Incorporated was making an airplane available, but he believes he was told by either JESS ASKEW or AMY STEWART, both of whom are attorneys at RLF. CARROLL presumes that WARREN STEPHENS would have been responsible for making the decision to make the airplane available.

The airplane arrived at Dulles Airport outside WDC in mid- to late-afternoon. CARROLL's party was met at the airport by White House official CAROLYN HUBER, who was waiting with a van to transport the party from the airport to the White House. CARROLL has the impression that the route of the van to the White House passed by the park where FOSTER's body had been found. The van arrived at the White House at approximately 4:30 p.m.

In discussing the events of July 1993 with his wife in preparation for the instant interview, CARROLL was reminded by his wife that he called RLF from the White House shortly after his arrival there on July 21, 1993. Telephone records should be able to reflect what time that call was made.

Once at the White House, CARROLL learned that he and his wife had been invited to have dinner and stay there that night. The CARROLLs called to cancel the reservations they had previously made for return flights to Little Rock by commercial airline that night. After spending a period of time at the White House, CARROLL, his wife and other members of their party were driven by van to the FOSTER residence.

CARROLL recalls seeing LISA FOSTER, FOSTER's widow, and BRUGH FOSTER, FOSTER's son, at the house. CARROLL does not recall seeing VINCENT W. FOSTER III at the house. CARROLL and his party were at the FOSTER house for several hours. After HUBBELL came to the FOSTER house, CARROLL and HUBBELL went out into the garden and talked. HUBBELL told CARROLL about the past weekend when the FOSTERs joined the HUBBELLs on a trip to the coast, and HUBBELL said that FOSTER had appeared cheerful during the trip. HUBBELL said nothing to CARROLL which would indicate HUBBELL suspected foul play was involved in the death of FOSTER. President BILL CLINTON also visited the FOSTER house that night and spoke with everyone there.

Among the people CARROLL recalls seeing at the FOSTER house were BILL WOODYARD, who is a lawyer in Little Rock, and BECKY CARROLL, who is the CARROLLs' daughter and who knew the FOSTERs as she was growing up. CARROLL also saw the ATCHLEYs at the FOSTER house that night. Mrs. ATCHLEY is a psychologist at the medical school in Little Rock and Mr. ATCHLEY runs a radio station in Little Rock. Mrs. ATCHLEY was very supportive to LISA FOSTER that night and made suggestions to her about how to handle the grief. BRUGH FOSTER sat with his arm around his mother. HUBBELL's wife SUSIE visited the FOSTER house, and CARROLL recalls that she came and went. DONNA McLARTY and HARRIET BYNUM were also at the house. Most of the people at the FOSTER house were personal friends of the FOSTERs. Also present was a young lady whose name CARROLL cannot recall but who works on the White House staff and who rode in the van from the White House to the FOSTERs' house. The daughter of this young lady from the White House also works at the White House. CARROLL cannot recall the daughter's name, but he recalls that this mother and daughter used to live next door to the FOSTERs in Little Rock. Perhaps twenty to thirty people were at the FOSTERs' house.

Sometime that evening, CARROLL spoke with JOHN GILL, who had formerly been president of the Arkansas Bar Association. GILL wanted to discuss with CARROLL a plan to have the bar association honor FOSTER's memory in some fashion. GILL wanted to clear this proposal through LISA FOSTER, and he asked CARROLL for his assistance. LISA FOSTER did not like GILL and she was somewhat hostile to this proposal.

CARROLL had no conversation with LISA FOSTER about the events leading up to the death of FOSTER. LISA FOSTER said nothing to CARROLL about the reasons why FOSTER may have taken his life. Since the time of FOSTER's death, LISA FOSTER has been to the CARROLLs' house several times, but the occasion has never been appropriate to discuss FOSTER's death, and LISA FOSTER has never volunteered any information about the death to CARROLL.

CARROLL does not recall any discussion while he was at the FOSTER house that night of a suicide note or any other note having been found. CARROLL has no recollection of any discussion that night about the note which was later found torn up in the bottom of FOSTER's briefcase. CARROLL may have asked HUBBELL about the existence of a note, but he has no recollection of asking such a question or of receiving such an answer. CARROLL heard no discussion about a search being conducted of FOSTER's office at the White House. CARROLL's only knowledge of such a search being conducted comes from what has appeared in newspapers. CARROLL may have engaged in a discussion about the gun found with FOSTER and about how FOSTER obtained the gun. CARROLL wondered for a long time about the origin of the gun found with FOSTER's body. CARROLL has since read that the gun may have belonged to FOSTER's father.

CARROLL cannot believe he heard any discussion about sealing FOSTER's office. He does not believe that such a subject would have been discussed at that time. The conversations that evening were solicitous and were concerned with being nice to LISA FOSTER.

CARROLL does not recall what time he and his wife left the FOSTER house that night, but it was dark out. There had been food at the house and guests had eaten snacks. BILL WOODYARD had a chauffeur-driven automobile, and he offered use of the car to the CARROLLS. The CARROLLs accepted WOODYARD's hospitality and were driven back to the White House in this automobile, probably arriving at approximately 8:30 or 9:00 p.m. When they arrived at the White House, the CARROLLs were told by one of the ushers that their bags had been moved from their original guest room to the Lincoln bedroom. CARROLL and his wife spent their first hour in the Lincoln bedroom just looking around and appreciating its history.

When the CARROLLS awoke the following morning (July 22, 1993), they ate breakfast at the White House and later visited briefly with President CLINTON. CAROLYN HUBER showed the CARROLLs some of the other rooms in the residence portion of the White House. Later in the day, the CARROLLs were driven to Andrews Air Force Base whence they flew home to Little Rock aboard a military aircraft.

The aircraft on which the CARROLLs flew was one of the two or three presidential aircraft which were flown from WDC to Little Rock that day. Others on the plane included BILL KENNEDY and his wife; DAVID WATKINS; the ATCHLEYs; and the flight crew, composed of United States Air Force personnel. CARROLL does not know whether HUBBELL was on that airplane. The plane was not full, but there was a "healthy size" group aboard. CARROLL believes his wife spoke with BILL KENNEDY on the plane. CARROLL's conversations with the KENNEDYs were very casual. CARROLL did not overhear or participate in a discussion about a note.

On that same day, the CARROLLs conversed with Mrs. ATCHLEY, who advised them of the problems overcoming feelings of grief after a suicide. Mrs. ATCHLEY spoke with them about what LISA FOSTER would be going through.

CARROLL does not recall any specific details about FOSTER's last weekend, but he remembers that it was generally known at that time that the FOSTERs and HUBBELLs had gone to the Eastern Shore and FOSTER had a good time there.

When FOSTER returned to Arkansas to present the commencement address at the University of Arkansas School of Law, he stopped by the RLF offices to work on some late revisions to his address and he visited with CARROLL. This was the last time CARROLL ever saw FOSTER alive. FOSTER was absolutely normal and cheerful and he spoke about how busy he was. FOSTER did not seem at all suicidal.

CARROLL heard no discussion at FOSTER's funeral about the reasons for FOSTER committing suicide.

At this point in the interview, CARROLL was provided with a typewritten transcript of the torn, handwritten note which had been found in FOSTER's briefcase six days after his death. CARROLL was asked to read the transcript of the note and offer his observations about the remarks in the note. CARROLL then advised the following:

CARROLL has no reason to believe that FOSTER did not write the note. CARROLL had no conversations with FOSTER, either in detail or in passing, about any of the issues mentioned in the note.

FOSTER was very ethical, moral, conscientious and modest. CARROLL cannot believe FOSTER would do anything illegal or unethical. CARROLL never saw FOSTER do anything which he regarded as unethical or illegal. As a lawyer and as a person, FOSTER was as close to being perfect as CARROLL has seen. CARROLL would have been proud to have FOSTER as his son.

During FOSTER's conversation with CARROLL at RLF when FOSTER was in Arkansas for the commencement address, FOSTER did not express any problems to CARROLL. Sometime after FOSTER left RLF to join the CLINTON administration in January 1993, CARROLL received a letter from FOSTER in which FOSTER wrote of the pressure he was feeling. CARROLL later drew quotes from this letter in an article about FOSTER which CARROLL wrote for the magazine of the Arkansas Bar Association. CARROLL does not now recall when he received that letter from FOSTER, but CARROLL's magazine article may mention that date.

When FOSTER came to CARROLL to tell him that he was leaving RLF to go join the CLINTON administration in WDC, CARROLL said to FOSTER, "Damn, I wish BUSH had won." CARROLL regretted the remark, and he later sent a letter to FOSTER in WDC in which he apologized for responding in that manner to FOSTER's announcement.

When FOSTER told CARROLL he was going to take a job in WDC, it hit CARROLL like a bolt from the blue. CARROLL feels that FOSTER did his patriotic duty in going to join the administration since he had been asked to join by President CLINTON. CARROLL compares FOSTER's situation to being asked to defend the country in time of war, and CARROLL believes that FOSTER could not have put his own career in Little Rock ahead of service to his country. CARROLL had a tremendous admiration for FOSTER, and there was no period of estrangement after FOSTER left RLF. CARROLL does not recall how many weeks in advance that FOSTER came to CARROLL to tell him of FOSTER's imminent departure from RLF. FOSTER announced his departure to CARROLL in a conversation in which FOSTER clearly was not seeking CARROLL's advice and counsel. CARROLL believed that FOSTER's mind was already made up.

FOSTER's announcement of his departure allowed sufficient time for other partners at RLF to smoothly take over FOSTER's cases. The only case which CARROLL personally took over from FOSTER was a libel case involving a television station in Texarkana.

CARROLL is not certain whether FOSTER maintained contact with anyone else at RLF after his departure from the firm. GEORGE CAMPBELL of RLF may have told CARROLL that he visited FOSTER in WDC. CARROLL does not think he ever called FOSTER at the White House.

CARROLL and FOSTER had both worked in the litigation section of RLF along with HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, WEBB HUBBELL, JERRY JONES, KEN SCHIEMAN, JESS ASKEW and AMY STEWART. FOSTER was generally closest to Mrs. CLINTON and HUBBELL.

CARROLL has never heard that FOSTER may have wanted to leave his post at the White House.

Several months prior to Christmas of 1993, CARROLL learned of HUBBELL's legal problems relating to his false billings of RLF clients and embezzlement of RLF funds. Some of the people in Little Rock traveled to WDC for a Christmas party. Among these people were JERRY JONES and RON CLARK from RLF, who spoke to HUBBELL in WDC and left a packet of documents with HUBBELL when they left. The packet contained documents relating to HUBBELL's practice of paying off his personal credit cards with RLF checks. At the time of FOSTER's death, CARROLL had no knowledge of HUBBELL's legal difficulties.

CARROLL has no information that FOSTER knew of HUBBELL's embezzlement from RLF and false billings of RLF clients at the time of FOSTER's death. CARROLL did not have any discussions with FOSTER about HUBBELL's embezzlement and false billings.

CARROLL has no recollection of the search warrants which were executed on July 21, 1993, in connection with DAVID HALE.

CARROLL only recalls having three contacts with FOSTER after FOSTER left RLF to join the CLINTON administration. These three contacts were: FOSTER's personal visit with CARROLL at RLF in May 1993 in connection with FOSTER's commencement address; the letter to FOSTER from CARROLL in which CARROLL apologized to FOSTER for his outburst when FOSTER announced his departure from RLF; and the letter to CARROLL from FOSTER in which FOSTER mentioned the pressure he was experiencing in WDC.

CARROLL's daughter, BECKY CARROLL, resides at 3420 38th Street, N.W., Unit E419, WDC 20016, telephone number (202) 244-2163.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

REBECCA ELIZABETH CARROLL was interviewed in an office at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, CARROLL provided the following information:

CARROLL has a private practice as a psychotherapist and maintains an office at 8525 Colesville Road, Suite 1, Silver Spring, Maryland 20910, telephone number (301) 589-4210. CARROLL has completed her course work for her PhD at Howard University and only has to successfully defend her doctoral dissertation in order to receive her degree.

CARROLL has not lived full-time in Little Rock, Arkansas since 1972. She has lived in WDC since 1981.

CARROLL knew former Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. since the time she was a child. She does not recall her age when she first met FOSTER, but it occurred when FOSTER joined the Rose Law Firm (RLF) in Little Rock. CARROLL's father, JOHN PHILLIP CARROLL, was a partner at RLF and seemed to view FOSTER as the son he never had.

CARROLL does not recall with certainty when she last saw FOSTER prior to his death on July 20, 1993, but she believes it was on an occasion when VINCENT W. FOSTER III was visiting his father in WDC during the younger FOSTER's spring break in 1993. CARROLL went with the FOSTERs to a meal at the Cactus Cantina Restaurant in WDC. FOSTER engaged in typical family-type conversation and did not appear any different than when CARROLL had seen him on other occasions.

CARROLL had fewer than ten contacts with FOSTER from the time FOSTER arrived in WDC as a member of the CLINTON administration until his death. A number of these contacts occurred when CARROLL was visiting LISA FOSTER at the FOSTER home and saw FOSTER briefly at the house. CARROLL also encountered

FOSTER on occasion by happenstance when they would both go to the same restaurant for a meal. CARROLL's residence is located very close to the home of one of FOSTER's sisters, SHEILA F. ANTHONY. CARROLL did not see FOSTER at all in the last month of his life.

When CARROLL telephoned the FOSTER residence, she generally spoke with LISA FOSTER because FOSTER was usually busy or at work. CARROLL recalls one telephone conversation she had with LISA FOSTER about FOSTER's condition prior to his death. This telephone conversation occurred at about the time of Father's Day in 1993 (Sunday, June 20). CARROLL called LISA FOSTER for some suggestions on what to get for CARROLL's father as a Father's Day gift. During the course of the conversation, LISA FOSTER mentioned to CARROLL how tired and overworked FOSTER had been. LISA FOSTER said that FOSTER had recently lost weight and had experienced difficulty sleeping. CARROLL did not interpret LISA FOSTER's comments as a request for professional advice and CARROLL did not offer any such advice since she regarded the conversation as personal rather than professional. Because the conversation was personal and CARROLL was in that mode of thinking, she did not associate LISA FOSTER's comments with possible symptoms of depression at that time.

Following FOSTER's death, CARROLL spoke to one of her sisters, who recalled earlier unusual behavior on the part of FOSTER when the FOSTERs still lived in Little Rock. CARROLL's sister related that she had visited at the FOSTERs' house on several occasions and had been taken aback at outbursts by FOSTER directed at his wife. FOSTER had grown angry and shouted at LISA FOSTER even though CARROLL's sister was present at the time. CARROLL's sister recalled such incidents because they seemed so out of character for FOSTER because FOSTER was typically quiet and well-mannered in front of guests.

CARROLL believes such incidents could be consistent with the behavior of someone who was depressed since irritability can frequently be a symptom of depression. CARROLL herself recalls that FOSTER was quiet and moody while he was still living in Arkansas. These observations lead CARROLL to speculate that FOSTER may have been suffering from depression for a period of years before his death. FOSTER's behavior during that period may have been consistent with that of someone suffering from depression because such people have highs and lows which can be affected by events in the normal courses of their lives. Exceptionally high achievers such as FOSTER who suffer from depression can sometimes continue to function for extended periods of time if they can make it through the lowest emotional points. Suicide is the final resort such people turn to as a way to get away from their pain.

FOSTER never asked CARROLL for her professional assistance, and he never asked her to make a professional referral. No one ever asked CARROLL to make a referral on behalf of FOSTER. CARROLL has no knowledge that FOSTER ever sought or received mental health care. Such matters were simply not discussed at the time CARROLL was still living in Arkansas. Because she did not know FOSTER as a peer, CARROLL has no idea of the identities of people in whom FOSTER would confide because she does not know who would be regarded as FOSTER's closest friends. CARROLL knows of no other professionals in her field who may have been close friends with FOSTER or might be able to offer insights into FOSTER's state of mind.

CARROLL first learned of FOSTER's death when she saw a story about it on the front page of the newspaper on July 21, 1993. CARROLL believes she saw the newspaper story at approximately 7:00 that morning. CARROLL telephoned her parents to tell them what happened but they had already learned of FOSTER's death. CARROLL's parents were still in shock about FOSTER's death, and her father could not believes that FOSTER had taken his own life. CARROLL briefly discussed with her parents their plans to fly to WDC that day.

During that time in 1993, CARROLL had a job on Tuesday nights so she would not have been home on the night of July 20, 1993, until approximately 9:30 p.m. CARROLL was not contacted by anyone about FOSTER's death that night.

CARROLL called LISA FOSTER's house on the morning of July 21, 1993, to offer condolences and she went to the FOSTER residence sometime in the early afternoon that day. CARROLL does not recall whether she arrived at the FOSTER house prior to the arrival there of her parents, but she recalls being told by White House staff that her parents would be picked up at the airport and brought into WDC. CARROLL recalls seeing ROBIN DICKEY, MARSHA SCOTT, and GAIL and BILL KENNEDY at the FOSTER house as well as all three of the FOSTER children. CARROLL attended high school with GAIL KENNEDY, whose maiden name was GAIL GREEN. CARROLL was introduced to a number of other people at the FOSTER house but they were not people she had met before or has seen since that time. CARROLL only recalls that there was a large number of people there whom she did not know. CARROLL has no specific recollection of any discussion of a note by FOSTER having been found or of any effort being made to find such a note.

CARROLL did not know many of the people at the FOSTER house, including the younger people who were friends of the FOSTER children, because she did not fit into the age groups which were represented there. CARROLL is approximately ten years younger than LISA FOSTER so she does not have many friends from that generation. Similarly, she is older than the FOSTER children and does not have much in common with their friends.

CARROLL has maintained contact with LISA FOSTER and has had a number of conversations with her about FOSTER's death and his condition prior to his death. Based on LISA FOSTER's descriptions of FOSTER as well as information CARROLL has read in the press, she believes FOSTER suffered from depression. CARROLL has no doubt that FOSTER died as the result of suicide and she has no knowledge which would lead her to conclude otherwise.

PAUL CASTELLITTO, Attorney at Law, was contacted at the offices of his firm, SHARP & LANKFORD, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 745-1700. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents, CASTELLITTO provided the following information:

As a result of previous discussions involving WILLIAM H. KENNEDY, III, V. THOMAS LANKFORD, Jr., who is KENNEDY's attorney, and representatives of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC) in Washington, D.C., an agreement was reached that KENNEDY would turn over to representatives of OIC a number of articles which were found in a Honda automobile previously operated by Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. The automobile and its contents had been found in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia during an investigation there by the United States Park Police of the circumstances of FOSTER's death on July 20, 1993. The below described articles were still in FOSTER's automobile when it was released to White House staff by USPP personnel. KENNEDY has retained the articles since the automobile was retrieved from the USPP, and he has turned over the articles to his attorney with the knowledge that the articles would be provided to representatives of OIC.

Prior to the arrival of the interviewing agents, CASTELLITTO prepared a memorandum containing a detailed inventory of the articles provided by KENNEDY. Special Agent RUSSELL T. BRANSFORD signed the memorandum and received a copy of the signed original. After the interviewing agents confirmed the accuracy and completeness of the inventory memorandum, CASTELLITTO turned over the items described in the memorandum to the interviewing agents.

A copy of the memorandum describing the items received from CASTELLITTO is attached and incorporated herein.

Thomas Edward Castleton (date of birth, SSAN: [redacted], Special Assistant to the Counsel to the President of the United States, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Mr. Castleton was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed in his current position since June 16, 1993 and was so employed on July 20, 1993, the date of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death. Mr. Castleton stated that his responsibilities during July, 1993 were primarily to "staff documents". He explained that his duties at that time involved tracking incoming documents and responses to these documents from either Bernard Nussbaum, his immediate superior, or on some occasions from Vincent Foster, Jr. As part of his duties, he was responsible for following up on correspondence that required action and/or an answer and performing liaison contacts throughout The White House to facilitate such answers/actions. He stated that all communications coming through the Counsel to the President's office were logged in and tracked via computer to include the logging and computer listing of the outgoing answer to incoming communications. He advised that the only exception to this was internal memoranda which was not logged or tracked via computer for reasons of expediency.

Mr. Castleton advised that he had only worked in the Counsel's suite approximately four and one half weeks prior to Vincent Foster's death. He therefore did not feel that he knew Vincent Foster well enough to evaluate his personality although he did say that he noticed a gradual change in his demeanor. Castleton explained that Foster seemed more quiet, more withdrawn, less sociable, and generally tired. He said that although he talked with Foster on a daily basis, their conversations were almost entirely about business related matters. He advised however that it was his sense that Foster was frustrated with Washington life and was homesick for Little Rock.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

Castleton advised that he last saw Vincent Foster at approximately 1:00 pm on July 20, 1993. He said that Foster had asked Linda Tripp, another Special Assistant in the Counsel's office to pick up lunch for him and bring it to his office. He then sat at the coffee table in his office, ate his sandwich, then took his briefcase and his suit jacket and left the office saying "I'll be back later". Castleton said that it was his belief that Foster was going to a meeting or an appointment. He said that he assumed this because Foster usually did not take his suit jacket when he was going anywhere else within The White House. He also said that Foster seemed to be in good spirits when he left the office. Mr. Castleton said that primarily because of the lunch hour, he (Castleton) and Linda Tripp were the only two persons in the office at the time Foster departed.

Thomas Castleton stated that he knows of no problems of any sort that Vincent Foster had that would have caused him to take his life. He said that he cannot recall Foster mentioning any physical ailments or pain and the only thing physical he can recall was that he either heard Foster say or heard someone else in the office comment that he was losing weight.

Castleton was asked how he felt about Vincent Foster and responded that he "looked up to him" and that he felt that Foster was a "model lawyer". He explained that Foster was restrained, not impulsive, professional, careful, very bright and reflective, and a man who cared greatly for his family. Castleton said that he recalls meeting Foster's wife on one occasion when Foster brought her into the office and introduced her to the workers in the Nussbaum/Foster suite. He said that while he could "just tell" that Foster's family was important to him, he did not feel that he could offer a substantial opinion regarding Foster's relationship with his wife, having only met her one time.

Thomas Castleton said that he does not recall Foster ever discussing any hobbies or leisure time activities although he does recall that Foster took a "short vacation" about a week before his death.

Mr. Castleton was asked who most often visited Foster in his office. He responded that Webb Hubbell, Cliff Sloan, and Steve Neuwirth were seen in Foster's office on a fairly regular basis. He said that he saw Hillary Clinton in Foster's office approximately four times during the five weeks he was employed prior to Foster's death. Castleton said that Marcia Scott was probably closer to Vincent Foster than many and visited with him fairly often. He said that while Deborah Gorham, Foster's secretary, appeared more upset than any other employee in the Nussbaum/Foster suite following his death, both Neuwirth and Scott were also visibly shaken by his death.

Mr. Castleton stated that the Counsel to the President suite was a place of intense and, at times, frenetic activity and that the demands of the job had placed great stress on Foster. He was asked to elaborate as to what particular aspects of Foster's job were placing the greatest stress on him. He responded by saying that The White House Travel Office scandal was the "crisis of the month" and that it and its surrounding issues and heavy news media criticism regarding the Travel Office were all very troubling issues to Foster.

On July 20, 1993, Castleton arrived at work at approximately 8:00 am. He said that he recalls leaving that evening at approximately 8:00 pm and did not come back to work until the next morning. Castleton said that approximately 5:30-5:45 am on July 21, he was awakened at his residence by a phone call from Betsy Pond, Executive Assistant to Bernard Nussbaum, who advised him that Foster had been found dead the night before of an apparent suicide. He said that it is his belief that Ms. Pond was phoning him from her residence. Castleton said that he was surprised but not shocked by this news because he was well aware of the heavy workload, stress, and pressures he was dealing with in the Counsel's office and he was also aware that Foster had been dealing with this for months before he (Castleton) arrived. Castleton explained that, at that point in time, Bill Clinton's popularity ratings were very low, there were numerous derogatory articles in national newspapers regarding the administration, and they had not been able to locate Foster by phoning his residence or by electronically paging him the night before. He stated that because of these facts, he was not totally surprised to hear that Foster was dead. He said that he recalled Betsy Pond phoning Foster's residence during the late afternoon of July 20 and he also recalls Foster's wife phoning the Counsel suite that same afternoon trying to locate him. Castleton said that Betsy Pond made no special request of him (Castleton) including coming in early that day during her telephone call. He stated that he arrived at the Counsel's suite at approximtely 8:00 am on July 21.

Thomas Castleton stated that shortly after he arrived at work on July 21, 1993, he began hearing discussion in the office about having the Secret Service "seal Foster's office". He said that at about 10:30 - 11:00 am a Secret Service Uniform Officer was posted outside Foster's door to restrict entry to that office. He said that he heard later during the afternoon of July 21, that Betsy Pond had gone into Foster's office to "straighten up a pile of papers on his desk" shortly after her arrival at work that morning and prior to the Secret Service officer being posted outside Foster's door. He said that he is aware of no one else entering Foster's office on July 21 prior to the Secret Service officer being posted.

Thomas Castleton said that he is aware of black ring type binders that Vincent Foster used for various purposes and kept in his office. He said that while he is not aware of the contents of all of these binders, it is his belief that some contained information on judicial candidates/nominees and some contained information on medical malpractice, issues that Foster was researching.

Castleton said that he was aware that an inventory/search of Foster's office took place during the afternoon of July 22, 1993, but he was not present during that search and can therefore not comment as to what happened.

Date of transcription 6/12/94

THOMAS EDWARD CASTLETON, Special Assistant to the Counsel to the President, voluntarily appeared at the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, and was interviewed. With Mr. CASTLETON and representing him were attorneys CHRIS TODD and MIRIAM FISHER of the law firm of JOHNSON and GIBBS, Washington, D.C. (202-682-4514). Also present during the interview and directing the majority of questions to Mr. CASTLETON was Associate Special Counsel CARL STICH. Mr. CASTLETON was advised as to the official identity of the interviewing Associate Special Counsel and of the agent present. This was a follow-up interview to a previous interview of Mr. CASTLETON (5/3/94) with this interview being conducted at Mr. CASTLETON's request. Mr. CASTLETON provided the following information:

During the evening hours of a day shortly after VINCENT FOSTER, Jr.'s death, Mr. CASTLETON was working in the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite of offices when he was asked to carry a box and other items from the 2nd floor of The White House west wing to the residence portion of The White House. Mr. CASTLETON said that while he cannot be certain of the date or time of day, he remembers that this incident took place after FOSTER's death and before White House staffers went to Arkansas to attend FOSTER's funeral. He said it is quite possible that this took place on July 22, 1993 and while he cannot recall the precise time of day, he does remember that it was getting dark outside.

Mr. CASTLETON said that MARGARET "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS came into the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite reception area and asked if someone could help her move a box from HILLARY CLINTON's office to the residence portion of The White House. CASTLETON said that since he was the youngest and most junior staffer in that office at the time, the job fell to him. He accompanied MAGGIE WILLIAMS to HILLARY CLINTON's office on the 2nd floor of The White House west wing where he was shown a box measuring approximately 3 feet long by 2 feet wide by 18 inches deep sitting either on or near a couch. He carried this box and two evening gowns to the residence area of The White House accompanied by MAGGIE WILLIAMS.

by FOIA(b)(7) - (C) Date dictated 6/10/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

He cannot recall if WILLIAMS carried anything as they walked. MAGGIE WILLIAMS directed him to a room in the residence area that, to CASTLETON, appeared to be used, at that time, primarily as a storage area. CASTLETON explained that this room had little furniture and what furniture was there was unarranged. He said that the room also contained many boxes of what appeared to be CLINTON family memorabilia stacked and placed here and there. MAGGIE WILLIAMS directed him to put the box and the two gowns into a closet in this room which he did.

Mr. CASTLETON said that MAGGIE WILLIAMS or someone else told him later that same day that the box contained personal documents belonging to the CLINTON's that had been held in VINCENT FOSTER's office. CASTLETON does not know exactly what was in the box nor does he recall MAGGIE WILLIAMS or anyone else advising him as to how, by whom, or when the material in the box was moved from FOSTER's office to HILLARY CLINTON's office. CASTLETON advised that he cannot even be certain who told him that the documents belonged to the CLINTON's and had previously been in FOSTER's office.

In response to a question from Associate Special Counsel STICH regarding CASTLETON's knowledge of CHRIS CERF, CASTLETON said that he had met CERF in early 1994 but had not met him or known who he was at the time of FOSTER's death.

Associate Special Counsel STICH displayed copies of 4 documents to CASTLETON asking him if he could identify these documents and/or if he had personally prepared any of these documents. One of the documents was handwritten, 2 appeared to be type-written, and one appeared to be computer/printer generated. CASTLETON said that he had seen all four of these documents before but had only had personal dealings with two of them. He said he believed the document captioned "Volume in Drive A has no label" was a printout of items on file in DEBORAH GORHAM's White House office computer. He said that he believed the handwritten document was possibly prepared by STEPHEN NEUWIRTH although he could not be certain.

Mr. CASTLETON, referring to a document captioned "Office of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.", beginning with page 6 and going through page 8 said that this was part of a document he had obtained from DEBORAH GORHAM and used during an "inventory" that he was asked to make of VINCENT FOSTER's office. CASTLETON said that the check marks and handwritten notations on this document were place there by him. In the presence of the interviewing agent and at the request of Mr. STICH, CASTLETON wrote the following on this document: "From DEBORAH GORHAM document w/TOM CASTLETON handwritten notes."

THOMAS CASTLETON referring to an 8 page typewritten document with the first page captioned "DEBORAH GORHAM's desk" said that he had personally generated this document during the "inventory" that he was asked to perform on items in FOSTER's office and in GORHAM's office area. As he went through desks and cabinets during this "inventory" in FOSTER and GORHAM's work areas, he noted on this document what he found. Everything on this list and on the 3 page list given to him by DEBORAH GORHAM was moved by him to BILL KENNEDY's White House office during November and December 1993 after DEBORAH GORHAM had left her White House employment. In the presence of the interviewing agent and at the request of Mr. STICH, CASTLETON wrote the following on this document: "Generated by TOM CASTLETON."

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 9/21/94

THOMAS EDWARD CASTLETON was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. Also present during the interview was CASTLETON's attorney, K. CHRIS TODD, of the law firm JOHNSON & GIBBS, 1301 K Street, N.W., Suite 800 East, Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 682-4500. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, CASTLETON provided the following information:

CASTLETON received his undergraduate from Harvard University in the spring of 1993 and began working at the White House within a matter of a few days. CASTLETON had applied for a position at the White House in April 1993 by sending copies of his resume to a number of White House offices, including the White House Counsel's Office (WHCO). VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr., Deputy White House Counsel, responded to CASTLETON's application by telephoning CASTLETON and speaking with him for approximately twenty minutes. FOSTER advised CASTLETON that there could be a position opening up shortly in the WHCO, and he encouraged CASTLETON to join the WHCO since the experience would be beneficial, given CASTLETON's intent to return to school to study law.

CASTLETON did not have detailed knowledge of the nature of the work being performed by FOSTER prior to FOSTER's death on July 20, 1993. There were aspects of FOSTER's work, e.g., issues pertaining to staffing and matters involving pro se litigation filed against the President of the United States, which dovetailed with the work being performed by CASTLETON. FOSTER was the person in the WHCO who had been designated to deal with the pro se matters, and he was responsible for reviewing the filings to determine whether they had any merit. If the filings had merit, FOSTER was then responsible for determining if there was a need for the WHCO to respond to the filings or if the matters would be handled more appropriately by referring them to the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) or some other agency of the executive branch. During the period of four to five weeks in which CASTLETON worked with FOSTER, CASTLETON had no knowledge of any matter which FOSTER would have referred to a private attorney or to an attorney outside the federal government.

The workload of the WHCO was heavy and FOSTER's share of the workload would have been substantial. CASTLETON also knew that FOSTER was involved with matters relating to the regular White House deputies meetings. CASTLETON had no knowledge in July 1993 about the body of work FOSTER was performing as a senior White House official.

On July 20, 1993, one of the members of the WHCO staff went to the White House Mess at FOSTER's request to get his lunch. Approximately five minutes after the staff member had left, FOSTER emerged from his office and asked CASTLETON if the staff member had returned yet. CASTLETON volunteered to go to the White House Mess to check on the status of the meal. FOSTER did not ask CASTLETON to check on the meal, and FOSTER did not give any indication that there was an urgency to his eating the meal. CASTLETON recalls that FOSTER left the WHCO between approximately 12:50 p.m. and 1:40 p.m. on July 20, 1993.

In the late afternoon of July 20, 1993, LISA FOSTER called the WHCO at least twice in an effort to reach FOSTER. CASTLETON believes there were also a number of people inside the White House who were trying to reach FOSTER and who may have attempted to page him, but CASTLETON does not recall the identities of any of these individuals. CASTLETON does not recall whether these other people were employed in the WHCO or just within the White House. CASTLETON did not field any of the calls from people trying to reach FOSTER so he has no firsthand knowledge of the identities of these people. CASTLETON cannot rule out WILLIAM H. KENNEDY III or MARGARET "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS as persons who were trying to contact FOSTER that day, but he does not recall with certainty that either of them was among the people trying to reach FOSTER.

On July 20, 1993, the location of CASTLETON's desk within the WHCO suite was in the back left hand corner of the reception area, which was also known as the front office. Since March 1994, CASTLETON's has been working in room 140 of the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB).

At this point in the interview, CASTLETON was asked to view a set of keys which had been in FOSTER's possession on July 20, 1993. CASTLETON viewed the larger key and stated that this key had a shape which resembles the shape of keys used for many of the locks in the White House compound. CASTLETON was unable to positively identify any of the specific keys or the locks which these keys operate.

CASTLETON does not know if FOSTER had a locking filing cabinet in his office within the WHCO suite. CASTLETON does know that there were locking cabinets located near his own desk in the front office. On July 20, 1993, FOSTER had two filing cabinets which were for his use and were located in the front office on the side of DEBORAH GORHAM's desk furthest from FOSTER's office. The fronts of these filing cabinets faced the entrance to the WHCO suite and were approximately two to three feet inside the threshold to the suite. These cabinets were approximately the same height as the adjacent desk and were probably cabinets with two drawers. CASTLETON did not take note at that time where FOSTER's files were kept in FOSTER's office.

CASTLETON mostly worked with White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM but also worked indirectly with FOSTER through GORHAM. CASTLETON never observed FOSTER using any file drawers in NUSSBAUM's office. CASTLETON knows of no drawer in NUSSBAUM's office which was used by or set aside exclusively for FOSTER. There was a safe located in NUSSBAUM's office which was used by a number of people in the WHCO, and GORHAM knew the combination for this safe. CASTLETON does not know if FOSTER knew the combination to this safe.

On July 21, 1993, BETSY POND called CASTLETON at his residence between 5:30 a.m. and 6:30 a.m. CASTLETON was living in the Merrifield, Virginia area at that time but he has since moved to Arlington, Virginia. POND told CASTLETON about FOSTER's death and said that she had not wanted CASTLETON to learn about the incident from another source. POND also told CASTLETON that people in the WHCO would have to pull it together. CASTLETON arrived for work at the White House that day at approximately 8:00 a.m. after traveling into the city by Metro subway. At that point in his employment at the White House, CASTLETON had a temporary hard pass which permitted him to enter the White House compound. CASTLETON entered the compound via the northwest gate, where he simply displayed his pass to the United States Secret Service (USSS) officers on duty and entered.

CASTLETON is familiar with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, whom he met had met prior to July 20, 1993 through work-related contacts at the White House. CASTLETON did not know LIVINGSTONE prior to becoming employed at the White House, and he does not regard LIVINGSTONE as a close friend.

When CASTLETON entered the WHCO suite the morning of July 21, 1993, LIVINGSTONE was not in the suite. CASTLETON does not know if LIVINGSTONE entered the WHCO suite on July 21, 1993 but he can deduce that, based on the circumstances of FOSTER's death, it is likely that LIVINGSTONE would have come into the WHCO suite that day, probably during the morning. Since LIVINGSTONE was chief of security for the White House and there was a concern about sealing FOSTER's office prior to the arrival of law enforcement authorities, CASTLETON deduces that it is not unlikely that LIVINGSTONE would have come to the WHCO suite on July 21, 1993. However, CASTLETON himself did not observe LIVINGSTONE in the WHCO suite on July 21, 1993.

CASTLETON has no knowledge of any documents being removed from the WHCO suite or, more specifically, from FOSTER's office on July 21, 1993. During the time that CASTLETON was present in the WHCO suite on July 21, 1993, he saw no one go in or out of FOSTER's office. During the first few days immediately after FOSTER's death, once FOSTER's office had been sealed, the only occasion when CASTLETON saw anyone enter FOSTER's office was when officials of the United States Park Police, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, DOJ, and members of the White House security staff entered FOSTER's office and conducted a review of documents with NUSSBAUM and others. CASTLETON saw no one removing or examining documents from the file drawers near GORHAM's desk. CASTLETON did not observe or hear any reports of documents being removed from the safe in NUSSBAUM's office.

To the best of his recollection, CASTLETON did not observe LIVINGSTONE carrying any boxes or briefcases at the White House compound on July 21, 1993. CASTLETON notes for the record that he does not recall seeing LIVINGSTONE under any circumstances on that date. CASTLETON can affirm that he did not assist LIVINGSTONE or anyone else in moving documents from FOSTER's office or the WHCO suite to any other location on July 21, 1993. CASTLETON did not assist or participate in any way in taking documents or items from the offices of either MAGGIE WILLIAMS or HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON to any other location on July 21, 1993.

CASTLETON has not had any conversations with LIVINGSTONE in the last three or four months. CASTLETON has no knowledge of LIVINGSTONE appearing to be upset or distraught on July 21, 1993. There is nothing CASTLETON can point to in that regard.

At this point in the interview, CASTLETON was asked why his involvement in assisting WILLIAMS in moving a box of documents was not discussed during the initial interview of CASTLETON by OIC investigators. CASTLETON's attorney, Mr. TODD, provided his recollection about how this matter was brought to the attention of OIC investigators. CASTLETON resumed with the interview and furnished the following information:

In CASTLETON's first interview by OIC investigators, the focus of the interview was on identifying any possible motives which may have driven FOSTER to commit suicide. As a result, CASTLETON's involvement in moving the documents did not leap out at him. CASTLETON does not presently recall the circumstances of how the issue of him moving the documents came to light.

CASTLETON does not recall if WILLIAMS asked CASTLETON directly or through an intermediary to assist her in moving the documents. He does not recall if the box of documents was in the office of WILLIAMS or First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON when he picked it up. If CASTLETON had to guess, he would guess that the box was in the office of HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON. The box was closed but was not taped shut. CASTLETON does not recall if the box had a lid on it or if it was a self-closing box, but he is confident that the box was not the type of box used for copier paper. There were no markings or writing on the box. CASTLETON could not see inside the box, but he recalls that the box weighed between ten and seventeen pounds. When CASTLETON carried the box, he carried it with both his hands and he had two gowns draped over the top of the box. CASTLETON carried these items as he and WILLIAMS went to the residence portion of the White House and rode up in an elevator. CASTLETON and WILLIAMS walked out of the elevator into a hallway where CASTLETON observed two doors, both of which were open. The door to CASTLETON's right opened into a room which was furnished like a study or library. The other door opened into a storage room in which boxes, pictures and other items were apparently stored in no discernible pattern.

Officers and agents of the USSS did not examine or open the box when CASTLETON brought it into the residence portion of the White House. CASTLETON did not have to display a special pass or sign a log in order to enter the residence portion of the White House. WILLIAMS did not make any remarks to CASTLETON about secrecy in general or about keeping the movement of the documents a secret. One person, whose identity CASTLETON cannot recall, told CASTLETON that the box contained files which involved personal issues pertaining to the CLINTONs. This person did not say to CASTLETON, as has been reported in a Newsweek magazine article, that the files would be reviewed by the CLINTONs' personal attorney. CASTLETON was told by this person that HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, and possibly President BILL CLINTON, would review the materials and make a determination what had to be done with them. CASTLETON cannot recall the identity of this person, but he is able to eliminate a number of people as having been the person who made this remark to him. The person was not BERNARD NUSSBAUM because he was not present. The person could have been BETSY POND, LINDA TRIPP or possibly MAGGIE WILLIAMS but was probably not DEBORAH GORHAM.

CASTLETON still does not know if the files contained in the box were personal in the sense of being documents such as tax returns or something similar. CASTLETON is not even certain at this time if there was only one box of documents. However, if there was a second box, CASTLETON is confident that such a box was moved at the same time as the other box. If there were a second box, it is possible CASTLETON carried both the boxes or WILLIAMS may have carried one of them. CASTLETON has no impression that there was still a box left behind in the office after he and WILLIAMS left the office and went to the residence portion of the White House. No one else was with CASTLETON and WILLIAMS when they went to the residence.

CASTLETON does not know who removed FOSTER's computer from FOSTER's office after his death.

Of the people who work in LIVINGSTONE's office, CASTLETON is familiar with MARI ANDERSON and LISA WENZL (as spelled by CASTLETON). CASTLETON also recalls an older male named TONY (Last Name Unknown) (LNU) who had an Italian surname and worked in LIVINGSTONE's office. CASTLETON does not know if TONY (LNU) is still working in LIVINGSTONE's office.

CASTLETON met JOHN CAREY, who was a member of the White House staff, on only one occasion, which may have been CAREY's last day of work at the White House. CAREY came to the WHCO suite to say farewell to a number of people but particularly to BETSY POND, whom he appeared to know well. CAREY is possibly now serving as General Counsel at the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

WEBB HUBBELL was a regular visitor to the WHCO suite, primarily due to his position at DOJ as well as his role in the judicial selection process. HUBBELL and FOSTER had a close relationship and appeared to be good friends. CASTLETON does not recall any occasions on which HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON visited FOSTER in the WHCO suite, but he does recall FOSTER visiting her in the First Lady's office.

CASTLETON is aware that FOSTER used black binders to store documents because CASTLETON handled several such black binders in the course of clearing FOSTER's office in November 1993. CASTLETON recalls that most of these binders contained information relating to judicial selections. He has no knowledge regarding the contents of the remaining binders.

SA WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL advised CHRISTOPHER D. CERF, General Counsel, Executive Office of the President, White House, Washington, D.C. that the purpose of his visit to The White House was to have FBI laboratory agents search specific computer data banks located in The White House in an effort to retrieve a two-page document prepared by Mr. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, White House Security Office back on July 21, 1993. General Counsel CERF accompanied the agents and had complete oversight of the agent's activities while they searched computers in The White House Security Office located in the Old Executive Office Building and computers located in the Chief Counsel to the President suite of offices on the west wing of The White House (July 12, 1994). General Counsel CERF also accompanied the agents as they conducted searches of computers located in The White House Office of Management and Administration, Old Executive Office Building (July 13, 1994). The document in question was located in a computer found in The White House Office of Management Administration and a separate report regarding the search of these computers has been prepared by the FBI laboratory.

Captain JAMES M. CHARRON, Fairfax County Police Department (FCPD), was contacted at his place of business, the Public Safety Communications Center (PSCC), 3911 Woodburn Road, Annandale, Virginia, telephone number (703) 280-0527, where he serves as Commander for Emergency Operations. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, Captain CHARRON allowed the interviewing agent to listen to two (2) 911 calls which had been placed to the PSCC on July 20, 1993, which was the date of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER Jr. The calls had been recorded on a MAGNASYNC MOVIOLA Logging Audio Communications Tape which had a capacity of forty (40) tracks for recording calls.

The first call, which was placed at approximately 5:59 p.m., pertained to the finding of a body in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia. The male caller declined to identify himself, and an attempt was made to refer the call to the United States Park Police (USPP) Communications Center after the calltaker, MARIANNE WHITE, determined that the body had apparently been found in a National Park. However, on this call WHITE was unable to transfer the call through to the USPP Communications Center since the call was not answered there. This call was recorded on track 12 of the tape.

The second call, which was placed at approximately 6:00 p.m., pertained to an apparent traffic accident on George Washington National Parkway near Route 123 in Fairfax County, Virginia. This call was successfully transferred by the calltaker, CHRISTOPHER FOX, to the USPP Communications Center after he determined the accident had also occurred in USPP jurisdiction. This call was recorded on track 15 of the tape.

After listening to the two calls, the interviewing agent furnished Captain CHARRON with an original signed letter from RODERICK C. LANKLER, Office of the Independent Counsel, requesting custody of the original forty track tape. Captain CHARRON accepted the letter and produced a letter of receipt prepared by FCPD, which was then signed by Captain CHARRON and

Brent J. Chenery, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. Officer Chenery was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for four years, all of which have been at The White House compound. For the past two years, he has been assigned to post "E-4" which is also known as the "west lobby" post on the 1st floor of the west wing of The White House. He was so employed at the time of Vincent Foster Jr.'s death on July 20, 1993. His office is located at 1310 L Street NW and his telephone number is 202-395-2020.

Officer Chenery stated that he did not know Vincent Foster either personally or professionally and had never spoken to him prior to his death. Mr. Chenery stated that he worked the 2:30 pm - 11:00 pm shift at post E-4 on July 20, 1993. He said that this was a "routine, ordinary" day where he was aware of nothing extraordinary happening in the west of The White House. He advised that he does not recall any White House staffers passing through post E-4 that evening entering the west wing of The White House. He stated that he specifically does not recall seeing Bernard Nussbaum, Patsy Thomasson, or Maggie Williams enter or leave The White House through the west lobby entrance that evening. Mr. Chenery explained that it is not unusual to not see few, if any, White House staffers entering or leaving The White House through the west lobby entrance because this entrance is used by visitors with prearranged appointments and by people being brought through The White House on special public tours. White House staffers, therefore, routinely avoid using the west lobby entrance to enter or leave the west wing. Mr. Chenery stated that most White House staffers either enter or leave the west wing of The White House through the "E-1" entrance which is off of West Executive Avenue, thus avoiding any congestion caused by people awaiting appointments or awaiting tours in The White House's west wing lobby. Mr. Chenery reiterated that he noted nothing unusual happening at The White House during his shift on July 20.

On July 21, 1993, Officer Chenery reported to post E-4 as usual at approximately 2:30 pm. At approximately 4:30 pm he was ordered to report to a temporarily established post in The White House counsel's suite of offices "to make sure that no one took anything out of Mr. Foster's office". He reported to that location at approximately 5:30 pm where he relieved USSS officer Joe Phillips. He had also been advised that he was to check with Bernard Nussbaum for allowing anybody entrance into Vincent Foster's office.

At 6:34 pm an individual known to Chenery as Cliff Sloan, a White House staffer came to the door of Vincent Foster's office and wanted to enter. Chenery advised him that he could not enter without prior approval. At that point Nussbaum walked out of his office and told Officer Chenery that it was o.k. for Mr. Sloan to go into the office because he only wanted to place a bag of trash back into the office that had been previously removed. Chenery stated that Nussbaum said that this trash could be evidentiary regarding Foster's death. The trash was contained in a clear plastic "zip-top" bag about the size of a football allowing one to easily see the contents. Mr. Chenery stated that the entire time that Sloan was in Foster's office (10-15 seconds) he was with him and was watching the bag. Chenery stated that he opened the door to the office and Sloan took one or two steps into the office and placed the plastic bag against the wall near the door. The only thing Sloan said to him was that "GSA" had picked up this trash the night before. Sloan did not say how he had managed to retrieve the trash or from whom he had obtained it. Mr. Nussbaum never entered the office at this time and Sloan exited the office after placing the bag on the floor. Shortly thereafter, USS Sergeant Callahan came to Foster's office to check on Chenery to see if he needed a break. Chenery told Sergeant Callahan about Nussbaum authorizing Sloan to enter the office to place a trash bag on the floor. Callahan advised that he in turn would tell USSS Assistant Special Agent in Charge, Don Flynn about this. Chenery stated that through observation he could see that the bag contained what appeared to be several wrappers from candy bars and a small amount of what looked like dark brown or black dirt, perhaps from a spilled potted plant or perhaps coffee grounds. Officer Chenery stated that he was relieved from this post at approximately 7-7:15 pm by USSS Officer Robert Almasy and that he (Chenery) went back to his regularly assigned post (E-4) on the 1st floor. Officer Chenery stated that no one else, other than Sloan, entered Foster's office or tried to enter the office while he was on duty in front of the office door.

Officer Chenery stated that during his tour of duty in front of Foster's office door he did not see any other USSS personnel except those mentioned hereinbefore. He further advised once he returned to post E-4, nothing out of the ordinary happened that night that he observed. He specifically said that he saw no one installing a lock on Foster's door or coming to the door to survey it in preparation of a lock installation. He advised that he has not returned to Vincent Foster's office since the evening July 21, 1993.

M. Morgan Cherry, Investigator, M. Morgan Cherry & Associates, Ltd., came to the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. to provide information possibly related to the Whitewater investigation. Cherry asked to be interviewed in the presence of a white male individual who would only identify himself as Mr. Walters (not his true name). Walters described himself as an attorney and business acquaintance of Cherry for years. Walters said he did not wish to be further identified as he is a lobbyist on Capitol Hill. Cherry declined to be interviewed without Mr. Walters present. Cherry provided the following information:

He is a licensed investigator in the State of Virginia and for more than twenty years has performed White Collar Crime investigations throughout the United States. He said that perhaps 5% of his business was in the Washington, D.C. area. His company assists business and non-law enforcement investigators with matters having an interstate nature. He advised his company's network of sources has also provided information which has generally been accurate to Federal law enforcement, such as the FBI and Customs in the past. He named FBI agents [redacted] (while assigned to the Brooklyn/Queens office), [redacted] (WMFO) and [redacted] (now retired - Atlanta) as individuals who could speak to his reliability in the past. FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

Both Cherry and Walters advised they were not looking for anything in return for providing this information. They were not "brokering" for the source of the information or employed as his agents. Their motivation was described as "just to get the story out." Walters further commented that he doesn't want to participate beyond this meeting.

The source's motivation to have Cherry contact law enforcement was to "clean" or "seal" source's record. Cherry explained his introduction to the source. About two weeks ago, an "asset" of Cherry's called and advised Cherry that a long-term friend (the Source) had called him and advised that he was in Broward County Jail (Florida) on a probation violation in connection with bad checks. This source also needed to post bond in two other jurisdictions on similar bad check pending matters: a $3,500 check written to a car dealership being prosecuted in Hillsboro County, Florida and a $1,000 bad check matter being prosecuted in Pinellas County, Florida. Appearance dates for these two matters were uncertain. The source's worry was that he would have to do actual time for one or both of these offenses. His situation relative to the probation violation in Broward County was most likely going to result in a house detention deal.

Cherry's asset, who Cherry described as reliable in the past, said that he had trained the source and that whenever the source gets in trouble, the Source calls him (Cherry's asset).

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 9/12/94

KENNETH R. CHITESTER, Director Office of News Analysis, (202) 456-5693, was interviewed at the Office of Independent Counsel on September 7, 1994. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, CHITESTER provided the following information:

CHITESTER advised that his employment with The White House began in January 1993 when he was Deputy Director of the Office of News Analysis in the Office of Media Affairs, Office of Communications in The White House. He was Deputy Director from January 1993 until April 1994 when he assumed the position of Director for the Office of News Analysis. He explained that the office monitors news media, prepares approximately 40 weekly reports and summaries, and assembles daily newspaper clippings and summaries of newscasts. They also prepare weekly editorial compilations and political cartoon packages and provide on-site news analysis when the President travels. These items are distributed to all the offices throughout The White House. Much of the work in the office is done during the early morning hours as newspapers come out as early as 2:00 am but the bulk of them are delivered to The White House at 4:30 am. It is between that time and 6:00 am that newspaper articles are clipped and assembled. They are delivered to the Printing Office at 6:00 am. The Office of News Analysis is most busy from 4:30 am until the completion of the press clippings. This work is all completed in the Old Executive Office Building.

CHITESTER explained that originally the Office of News Analysis had three staff members, Director KEITH BOYKIN, himself and an Assistant Director, JULIE OPPENHEIMER. LARRY SAMPUS worked the night shift on a volunteer basis for approximately 10 months. He was on the staff during the time frame of VINCE FOSTER's suicide but CHITESTER could not recall whether he was there on July 20 and 21 of 1993 or not. OPPENHEIMER was in charge of scheduling volunteers and interns to assist with the News Analysis chores. She left in approximately December 1993. LARRY SAMPUS left for a brief period (possibly October 1993) and returned several months later to take JULIE's place as the third staff member.

CHITESTER advised that he has no specific recollection of July 20, 1993. He also has no specific recollections with regard to Wednesday, specifically Wednesday morning, July 21, 1993. During that time period, it was his pattern to arrive at The White House and go directly to the Old Executive Office Building where the Media Affairs Office is located. He generally arrived there between 6:30 and 7:00 in the morning. KEITH BOYKIN arrived somewhat later, usually between 7:00 and 7:30. He advised that JULIE OPPENHEIMER was probably the first to arrive and guessed that at that time she was arriving at approximately 4:30 in the morning. She would work with various interns and volunteers to assemble the press clippings and get them to the print shop at 6:00 am. Generally the first 20 copies are assembled and available for the 7:30 meeting which is held daily at the Communications Office at the West Wing at The White House.

CHITESTER advised that OPPENHEIMER advised him of VINCE FOSTER's death when he arrived to work on Wednesday, July 21, 1993. He does not recall if FOSTER's death was on the news channels or not. He estimated that he would have left the Old Executive Office Building at approximately 7:25 in order to make his way over to the West Wing to the Communications Office meeting at 7:30.

CHITESTER said that he did not know who VINCE FOSTER was. The News Analysis Department has nothing to do with the Counsel's office and he does not recall any discussion of the presence of press at the FOSTER residence on Wednesday morning, July 21, 1993. The only specific recollection he has of July 21 is a staff meeting held at which the President spoke at approximately 12:30 pm. He does not recall hearing of an individual outside the Communications Office helping with press matters. He does not recall anything about the Communications Office sending anybody to assist with handling the press to the FOSTER residence and he does not recall hearing anything concerning CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. He knows who CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is but deals with him only with regard to passes for the volunteers and interns assigned to the News Analysis Office.

CHITESTER advised that although he has no specific recollection of Wednesday, July 21, in July of 1993 his job was monitoring wire services and he was beginning to do some travelling with the President. He therefore did not generally participate in the distribution of reports and news clippings to The White House proper. He advised that his recollection is that usually two interns per session (there are three sessions per year) and about three dozen volunteers are assigned to the News Analysis Department. The volunteers generally work anywhere from 4 to 40 hours per week and are "groupies" who help monitor the network for White House related information. OPPENHEIMER did all the work coordinating work hours with interns and volunteers. CHITESTER said he is not absolutely sure they had interns at the time of VINCE FOSTER's death and he could not recall any names of them. He did however provide to the interviewing agents some copies of in-house White House memorandum which had names of individuals and looked like a schedule for volunteers.

CHITESTER advised that News Analysis personnel would be distributing press clippings in The White House West Wing as early as 7:00 am. There was a period (he cannot remember when) when they had an abundance of volunteers and were able to get the job done early and be delivering the clippings sometime between 6:30 and 7:00 am.

People distributing the clippings generally carried them in their arms. They were stacks of legal-sized materials stapled together. They do not ever use binders for this. Originals of a five-day summary are kept in black binders but the supply store is downstairs in the Old Executive Office Building. There is no occasion when News Analysis individuals would be carrying a box of empty binders from the West Wing over to the Old Executive Office Building.

The only other individual who is known to be around the West Wing early in the morning is GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS.

CHITESTER has no memory of contact with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE during that entire week and no specific memory of contact on July 21, 1993 and he added that such contact would be unlikely given his patterns of going directly to the Old Executive Office Building and being focused on monitoring news media.

As part of the interview CHITESTER provided the following personal information:

FLOYD CLARKE, former Acting Director of the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION (FBI), was interviewed at his current place of employment, MacANDREWS & FORBES, 1455 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 575, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 628-2600. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, CLARKE was asked to review an article entitled "EX-CHIEF: POLITICS KEPT FBI OFF FOSTER CASE," which was written under the byline of CHRISTOPHER RUDDY and was printed in the NEW YORK POST newspaper on Thursday, February 3, 1994. CLARKE read the newspaper article, which contained statements by former FBI Director WILLIAM S. SESSIONS about the role of the FBI in the investigation of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER Jr. CLARKE then provided the following information:

CLARKE was Acting Director of the FBI on July 20, 1993, which was the date of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER Jr., Deputy Counsel to the President. CLARKE had been appointed Acting Director on July 19, 1993 following the removal from office of the former FBI Director, WILLIAM S. SESSIONS. On July 19, 1993, CLARKE was called over to the UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE (DOJ) to meet with Attorney General JANET RENO and Deputy Attorney General PHILLIP HEYMANN, and they advised CLARKE that Director SESSIONS was going to be removed from office at 3:00 p.m. that same day. CLARKE and HEYMANN then went to FBI Headquarters where they were present with Director SESSIONS when he received a telephone call from President BILL CLINTON advising Director SESSIONS of his removal from office. Former Director SESSIONS remained in the FBI Headquarters building that afternoon, and he returned to the building several times later to review documents. However, during these later visits to the building, former Director SESSIONS was kept in an isolated area and he was not allowed to take official FBI documents from the building with him.

During the earlier meeting at DOJ between Attorney General RENO, HEYMANN and CLARKE, a determination was made that JOSEPH R. DAVIS, Assistant Director of the FBI Legal Counsel

Division, would act to interface between former Director SESSIONS and the FBI. CLARKE has never discussed the matters surrounding the death of FOSTER with either former Director SESSIONS or DAVIS, and CLARKE has not had any substantive conversations with SESSIONS since SESSIONS was removed from office.

CLARKE recalls receiving a telephone call from either HEYMANN or DAVID MARGOLIS at DOJ and being told by the caller that media inquiries were being received at DOJ about a slowing of the investigation into the circumstances of FOSTER's death. CLARKE then spoke with LARRY A. POTTS, Assistant Director of the Criminal Investigative Division of the FBI, and was advised that the FBI was strictly monitoring the investigation being conducted primarily by the UNITED STATES PARK POLICE (USPP). POTTS further assured CLARKE that there were no encumbrances to the investigation whatsoever.

In his role as Acting Director of the FBI, CLARKE was not aware of any indication of resistance from either DOJ or the White House to the FBI becoming involved in the investigation of FOSTER's death. CLARKE believes that any restraint on the FBI's involvement was imposed by officials of the FBI in an effort to ensure that the FBI would be acting within its lawful authority. During this same time period, CLARKE spoke with ROBERT M. BRYANT, who was then the Special Agent in Charge of the Washington Metropolitan Field Office (WMFO) of the FBI, in whose territory the death of FOSTER was believed to have occurred. BRYANT had spoken earlier with USPP Chief ROBERT E.LANGSTON, and he assured CLARKE that neither WMFO nor USPP were being hindered in their investigations.

CLARKE perceived the role of the FBI in the initial investigation of FOSTER's death to be one of consulting with and supporting USPP, i.e. the FBI was monitoring the USPP investigation and providing assistance as requested. Once a handwritten note believed to have been written by FOSTER was discovered, the role of the FBI became more active as the FBI Laboratory was asked to perform a number of examinations.

CLARKE believes the FBI was not more active initially in the investigation of FOSTER's death because no specific jurisdiction authorizing the involvement of the FBI was apparent.

CLARKE believes there is no merit to the statement by former Director SESSIONS that the FBI's investigative role in the FOSTER death was compromised. Based on the fact that former Director SESSIONS left office the day before FOSTER's death, CLARKE does not know how former Director SESSIONS can speak knowledgeably about the FBI's role in the FOSTER death investigation.

CLARKE concluded by stating there is no basis in fact for the proposition that either the White House or DOJ exerted influence to keep the FBI from becoming involved in the investigation of FOSTER's death.

PAUL CLARKE, Captain United States Air Force was interviewed telephonically at his current duty station at Davis Montahn Air Force Base, Tucson, Arizona, address 612 AIF-INA, 5340 East Gufford Way, Davis Montahn Air Force Base, Tucson, Arizona 85707-4224, telephone (602) 750-3856. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, CLARKE provided the following information:

CLARKE advised that in July 1993, he was Director of Public Affairs for the National Security Counsel and/or Assistant Press Secretary for Foreign Affairs (it was the same position). He did not normally have anything to do with White House affairs per se, but confined himself to the National Security Counsel issues. On the night of July 20, 1993, CLARKE was substituting for his immediate supervisor as Press Office Duty Person for that night. The switchboard of The White House called him at his residence between 9:00 and 11:00 pm to notify him that VINCE FOSTER's body had been found in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia. At the time, CLARKE did not know who VINCE FOSTER was. In response to the notification by the switchboard, CLARKE telephoned Press Secretary DEE DEE MYERS at The White House. She gave him, over the phone, the text of a written statement that could be released to press persons.

PAUL remained at his residence the entire evening, never leaving. He got only a few telephone calls and he guessed that most calls were being taken directly by The White House since so many people were there that night. He has no specific recollection of the night but he does not believe that he was up all night taking telephone calls.

CLARKE explained that Foreign Affairs was his area of responsibility and interest. To his knowledge VINCE FOSTER did not have anything to do with National Security Counsel issues.

Additionally, CLARKE advised that he does not know who CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is. His only recollection of the following day

LORAINE WOLFE CLINE, Secretary at the Rose Law Firm, Little Rock, was interviewed on May 18, 1994 at the FBI offices in Little Rock, Arkansas. Also present during the interview was C. MICHAEL BUXTON, Attorney at Law with VINSON and ELKINS, The Willard Office Building, 1455 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 639-6613. After being advised of the nature and purpose of the interview and the identity of the interviewing agents, CLINE provided the following information:

CLINE advised that she had known VINCE FOSTER, JR. since September 2, 1986 when she came to work at the ROSE LAW FIRM as FOSTER's legal secretary. She described FOSTER as a wonderful person and said that she had adored him. She said he was ethical, moral, a good family man and, above all, a perfectionist. She described him as "a prince of a fellow". She added that he was a workaholic but that he nevertheless seemed to have balance in his life. He was active in the bar and in other community activities and in sports. He worked out every morning but was at his desk between 9:00 and 9:30 every morning. He stayed at work typically until 6:30-7:30 at night.

The only time CLINE saw VINCE FOSTER lose his temper was an occasion in 1992 when her computer was not functioning right and he let out a curse word. He later apologized to her although he had not swore at her personally, merely in her presence. He had been under pressure and had to get a brief out and she was having difficulty typing it because of the computer problem.

She further described him as an intense person. He was a perfectionist but not abnormally so. He was moody but that was just his personality. She thought he was reserved and quiet but not depressed. She was surprised to read in the media that he had been depressed. She has no idea why he would have committed suicide. She learned of his suicide when CAROLYN HUBER called her from Washington, D.C. at 10:21 Little Rock time on the evening of July 20, 1994. HUBER characterized the death as a suicide. CLINE said it was very traumatic for her.

CLINE advised that FOSTER always worked very long hours. LISA FOSTER would occasionally call him during the day and CLINE never got any inkling that LISA was trying to find out if FOSTER was alright. She was not aware of any difficulties that they may have been having financial or otherwise.

CLINE advised that there were never any bad rumors about VINCE FOSTER whatsoever. There were rumors about others in the ROSE LAW FIRM, but never about FOSTER. He had a happy marriage and he loved his family very much. He loved to cook, he did some gardening, he liked to swim. She is not aware that he collected anything and based on a visit or two to his home, did not observe any guns in his residence. She noted that he was not the gun type, meaning not an outdoorsman.

With regard to rumors about an extra-marital affair between FOSTER and HILLARY CLINTON, CLINE said that she knew nothing about it until FOSTER himself told her that there were such rumors. He was telling people about it because he wanted his family and her and others at the law firm to hear it before they read about it in the press. She believes that there is absolutely no truth to the rumors.

CLINE saw FOSTER on May 8, 1993, as he gave the commencement address at his old Law School. He acted excited and "up" and looked good. CLINE last saw FOSTER on May 22, 1993 when she travelled to Washington, D.C. for a weekend with other secretaries from the ROSE LAW FIRM. The group had lunch with FOSTER at The White House Monday before they left. At that time, CLINE observed no personality changes in FOSTER but noticed that he had lost some weight. The only conversation she recalls having with him during the lunch at The White House was an exchange where she asked him, "Are you having fun yet?", and he responded, "Well it's an experience. We have one 'gate' after another." She was aware that there had been critical articles in the Wall Street Journal about FOSTER. She knew them to be lies and they did not discuss the article. She observed that FOSTER was not accustomed to being criticized. He wanted to serve his country and give back what society had given to him. It seemed that he was bound to have been hurt and disappointed. She last spoke with him, by telephone, the later part of June. She still did not note any changes in him at all.

CLINE observed that in the secretary/lawyer relationship, he was very good about keeping in touch with her. He would always let her know where he was and when he was going to be back. He was meticulous about keeping an accurate and complete calendar. With regard to how he handled trash, if he didn't need something he would crumple it up and pitch it in the wastebasket. He generally did not tear things up. She knew him to make lists of things--not lists of things that were bothering him, but lists of things to do. In that respect he was very organized.

CLINE advised that she could not picture FOSTER as having a problem which he could not figure out how to solve. She concluded by saying that FOSTER was the very best lawyer at the ROSE LAW FIRM. He had no need of confidants. His closest friends at ROSE LAW FIRM were PHILIP CARROLL, WEBB HUBBELL, and HILLARY CLINTON. Close personal friends would have included, JERRY ACHLEY (PHONETIC), JOHN SLOAN, JUDGE WILSON, and LISA's sister KATHY.

WILLIAM COBBS, GSA Building Manager for The White House Field Office, Old Executive Office Building, Room 48, telephone (202) 395-3154 was interviewed at his place of work. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, COBBS provided the following information:

COBBS advised that he has held his current position as GSA Building Manager for The White House Field Office since April 1989. He has responsibility for all operations and maintenance services for all the 16 buildings which make up The White House complex. It involves overseeing approximately 220 employees, including all housekeeping, mechanical and moving service employees. Some of the work that their office is responsible for is provided by contract employees and some is done by GSA employees.

COBBS advised that he has a general recollection of the time period on or about July 20, 1993, when VINCE FOSTER, JR. was found dead. He did not know VINCE FOSTER and did not have any direct involvement with the activities of that night or the following day. His only connection with the events surrounding VINCE FOSTER's death was a memo he received dated March 7 from JOEL KLEIN advising them to cease the removal of all wastebasket trash containers effective March 7, 1994.

COBBS advised that he knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE professionally and deals with his office primarily regarding the update of building passes for GSA employees. He has almost daily contact with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE in that regard. They do not have personal conversations at any time and there have been no special requests from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. The normal course of their business relationship is that COBBS will need something from LIVINGSTONE's office, not the reverse.

On the subject of who might be present during early morning hours in the West Wing, COBBS advised that the cleaning crew, that works all night, gets off at 6:00 am in the morning.

He speculated that perhaps the Navy Mess personnel were getting ready to serve breakfast. He did not know how early they started and pointed out that their activities would be confined to the basement level of the West Wing where the mess is located. In addition, GSA mechanics, who service the rest of The White House, start their shift at 7:30 am. Some of them start arriving about 7:00 am but they are located over in the Old Executive Office Building and would not be moving over to the west wing until after 7:30 am. The U.S. Secret Service, however, is probably a more important point of contact on this topic since no GSA or contract employee goes anywhere in the West Wing without a Secret Service person being with them.

Secret Service also handles all the locks in the West Wing except those denying access to mechanical space (meaning electrical vaults and such).

In the writer's presence, COBBS examined a log book kept by the Engineer's Shop for July 20 & 21, 1993 and found no entries providing any significant information regarding activities by GSA or contract employees in or around the West Wing. COBBS advised that when safes need to be moved normally a contract moving company is utilized for that purpose. They are also used for moving furniture. Moving furniture is a constant requirement. Nothing of any significant size is ever moved without a written request and subsequent work order through GSA. COBBS has no recollection of any requests for moving filing cabinets, desks, safes or any other large items from, or within the Counsel's office or elsewhere close by in the West Wing on or about July 20-21, 1993. COBBS advised that he will speak with appropriate subordinates and have the records checked for July and August 1993 to see if there were such work orders.

As part of the interview COBBS provided the following personal information:

TERRI L. COBEY, who resides at Box 58C, Route 427, Nanjemoy, Maryland, 20662 was advised of the identities of FBI Agents Colombell and Gillis and that they wished to ask her some follow-up questions regarding her recollection of events that took place on the Second Floor, West Wing of the White House on July 20, 1993, the night that VINCENT FOSTER died.

MS. COBEY is unable to recall if there were any staffers present in the Chief Counsel's suite of offices when she, the U.S.S.S. Officer and the other cleaning lady (MS. WALTERS) arrived to clean the office. She also could not recall if the U.S. Secret Service Officer had to use his key to open the office for them. Usually, there is no one in the Second Floor, West Wing of the White House late in the evening when they do their cleaning. On this particular night, there were White House staffers present although she is not sure whether they were there when they (the cleaning crew) first arrived or whether they came in shortly thereafter. She recalls that there was a white male (middle age, medium build, dark hair, clean shaven) and at least two women; one was a black female (short in stature, kind of heavy), the second a white female (young, shoulder length hair). She was unable to provide any additional descriptive data regarding these parties.

She and the other cleaning lady picked up the regular trash out of the wastepaper baskets, adding that both of them emptied trash in the secretary's area, with WALTERS emptying the trash in the Chief Counsel's office, and herself emptying trash in the office that belonged to VINCENT FOSTER. She recalled that there was what she described as a light blue tablet or folder in the regular trash basket in MR. FOSTER's office. She removed the plastic trash container, containing the light blue tablet, and placed it with the regular trash on her cart out in the hall.

Shortly thereafter, the white female approached her and asked her if she had taken any trash from FOSTER's office. She was able to retrieve the light blue tablet and gave it to this woman, adding that it was never returned to her to be put back in the trash. She explained that she never observed either of these women or the white male actually in MR. FOSTER's office. She did see them enter and exit the doorway to the Chief Counsel's suite of offices.

Later, after she had left the Chief Counsel's suite of offices and returned to the hallway, she observed both the black female and the white female walking on at least two separate occasions back and forth between the Chief Counsel's suite of offices and the First Lady's Office. She clearly remembers the black female going into the First Lady's Office at least two times. She was unable to state whether either of these women were carrying any type of paper or documents or files while they were walking between the two offices. She concluded by stating that she doubts that she would be able to identify these two women or the white male from a spread of photographs.

Terri L. Cobey was advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and as to the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

Her address is Box 58C, Route 425, Nanjemoy, Maryland 20662 and her telephone number is 301-743-9271. She said that her telephone number at work is 202-395-3270.

Ms. Cobey advised that she is employed by the General Services Administration (GSA) as a cleaning employee and routinely works the 9:30 pm - 5:45 am shift at The White House. She said that her responsibilities are to clean, dust, vacuum, and remove non-confidential trash from bathrooms and offices located on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House.

Ms. Cobey was asked if she recalled working the evening of July 20, 1993. She stated that she could not remember if she worked that evening or not. She said that she recalled learning of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death but she could not recall when or how she learned of his death. In response to a specific question, she said that she can not recall any male or female staffers entering the suite of offices occupied by Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster on the evening of July 20, 1993. She similarly advised that she can not recall if she cleaned that suite of offices or removed any trash from those offices during her shift on July 20. She also stated in response to a specific question that she does not recall seeing anybody remove anything from those offices on that evening.

Thomas C. Collier, Jr. appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 1:00 p.m. for interview. Mr. Collier was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and that the purpose of the interview was to discuss his involvement in the U.S. Park Police investigation of the death of Vincent Foster. In addition to the interviewing agents, Roderick C. Lankler and Carl Stich, Assistants to Independent Counsel, Robert B. Fiske, Jr., also assisted with the interview. Also present during the interview was Edward B. Cohen, Special Assistant and Counselor to the Secretary, U.S. Department of Interior. Mr. Collier provided the following information:

He is presently Chief of Staff for Mr. Bruce Babbit, the Secretary for the U.S. Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C. He advised that he would be speaking from recollection, as he had no notes or diaries associated with the Vincent Foster death investigation.

Collier advised, by way of background, that at the time of Vincent Foster's death on July 20, 1993, the Park Service did not have a Director. Therefore, it was not clear among investigators assigned to the matter as to where to go in the Interior Department hierarchy for assistance with problems with White House access to persons or documentation. Collier advised these investigators did not call him at the time the death investigation was initiated.

Collier's involvement began with the public disclosure that a Foster note had been found. Collier first learned about the discovery of the Foster note from the newspaper. The following day, or if it was on a weekend, the following Monday, Collier called the U.S. Park Police Chief (Langston) in charge of the investigation. Langston and two other officers then met with Collier. He asked the Chief if he was concerned with his access to information, and the Chief answered that he was very concerned that he had not had the proper access and was very exercised about the matter. The Chief was embarrassed that they had not seen the note during their earlier investigation and had not been allowed to conduct their investigation in an appropriate way.

During the discussion, it became clear to Collier that no one had challenged Bernie Nussbaum, White House Counsel, regarding the manner of the investigation. He asked if the Chief's concerns were regarding previous events or still occurring. The Chief replied he was still having trouble regarding ground rules and access to needed persons and paper. The Chief had been dealing with Nussbaum primarily and understood that the Department of Justice people were also dealing with Nussbaum. It was at this point that Collier decided that he should intervene.

He spoke with Secretary Babbit concerning the situation and it was agreed that Babbit would stay out of it and Collier follow up on the matter.

The following morning, Collier called Mack McLarty. McLarty, in turn, had Bill Burton return the call to Collier within the hour. Collier expressed the following concerns to Burton: (1) the fact that he disagreed with the process in place for U.S. Park Police access to documents; (2) the cooperation the U.S. Park Police were getting concerning ground rules to be followed, etc.; and (3) a concern that the White House people involved in the decision making concerning this case were too close to Foster and as a result, grieving and not making rational decisions. Burton took exception with each of Collier's concerns. Burton advised that he also had worked at the Rose Law Firm and asked if Collier believed he too should be excluded from the matter. Collier said yes.

At this point, Collier again spoke to Secretary Babbit to relay White House reaction to his concerns. This meeting was interrupted by a call from Roy Neal. Collier advised that Roy was "hot," and told Collier that this was "none of his damn business." Neal also said that the White House was not going to deal with Collier on the issue. Collier responded that the U.S. Park Police did report to him and that he had discussed the matter with Secretary Babbit and he felt the matter was very much his business.

Collier thereafter had a telephone conversation and meeting with Phil Heyman, Deputy Attorney General, U.S.

Department of Justice, to express his concerns regarding the Park Police investigation. Collier "found a sympathetic ear" with Heyman. He advised that when he met with Heyman, David Margolis was also present, as were a couple of others, perhaps FBI agents. Heyman said he would handle the concerns expressed by Collier with the White House.

Collier advised he had no prior knowledge of the search procedure which had been used when Vincent Foster's White House office had been searched a day or two after his death. When asked why there had been no objections by the U.S. Park Police, the response Collier had received was that it was the Counsel to the President.

Collier told Heyman that he wanted someone at the White House not close to Vince Foster who could help the U.S. Park Police get appropriate access. That same afternoon or the next morning, David Gergen called Collier and they met. Collier again explained to Gergen that his concern was: (1) access to documents so that the U.S. Park Police could see all the documents they needed; (2) access to all witnesses; and (3) ground rules acceptable to the U.S. Park Police to include no White House Counsel being present during interviews. Access and scheduling had been made difficult to this point in the investigation. Collier explained that he was at least as much concerned with political ramifications as well as legal implications as he was raising these concerns. He wanted to avert a U.S. Park Police scene. Gergen responded favorably to Collier's concerns and said the White House would comply completely. Gergen said "we'll open the Oval Office" if necessary for interviews.

Gergen had agreed with everything Collier suggested to him. Collier said he did not know of another single problem from that point forward with the investigation and that he had been proactive in trying to find out about any further problems. He felt that the conversation Heyman had had with the White House "had taken." Webb Hubbell had had early access issues involvement in this matter but had moved out of the investigation.

For the following three to four days, Collier spoke with Chief Langston on a daily basis concerning the conduct of the investigation. Each time, he received a positive response from the Chief that everything was going well. Collier also spoke with Gergen on three to five occasions the next few days for follow-up.

When asked if he (Collier) thought the investigation should remain a U.S. Park Police investigation, Collier responded that he recommended it be merged with the DOJ investigation concerning the Foster note, so that just one investigation would be done. He wanted his Park Police to work with the FBI, whom he believed had a little more experience.

With respect to the search of Foster's office, Collier said that he had a fuzzy recollection concerning the distribution of documents to three piles during the search and that he had had a concern that the "personal" documents hadn't been made available to the U.S. Park Police.

Collier said he never discussed the Foster investigation with Nussbaum, even though he had had a lot of dealings with him. He felt they both consciously avoided discussing the issue.

Collier said that he had come to know Vince Foster during the period of time that Secretary Babbit had been a candidate for the U.S. Supreme Court. Foster had been a major player in the vetting process. He had also dealt with Foster on four or five other appointments. He had noted no change in Foster's emotional or mental condition. Foster did not appear to be any more or less intense during the occasions they had dealings. When asked to objectively characterize Foster, Collier stated that Foster was "not gregarious" and at a large meeting concerning a critical issue, Foster had little to say, but that people listened when he spoke, not because of his closeness to the President, but because of the merits of what he had to say. He didn't notice anything unusual about Foster.

When asked if anyone else at Interior had been contacted by Chief Langston concerning frustrations with the investigation, Collier answered that he thought perhaps Assistant Secretary George Frampton may have been in on a discussion concerning Park Police concerns. Collier said he was not sure of this, but the normal course of events would be for the Chief to go to a career employee in charge of the Park Service, then to the Director of the Park Service, which was vacant at the time, and then to Frampton.

Collier did not recall expressing an option that the Park Police would pull out of the Foster investigation. He said that he wouldn't deny having said this either. He did not believe Chief Langston had suggested this.

Collier's follow-up to his intervention in this matter included an assumption on his part that all documents necessary for the investigation, such as those received by Jim Hamilton, attorney for the Foster family and the Presidential Counsel, had been produced, as necessary, to the Park Police investigators. Collier explained that it was not his intention to be another roadblock in the Chief's investigation. He was not concerned with what they were finding or where they were heading, but rather with any access problems they might be having.

When asked about his understanding concerning the search of Foster's office, Collier said that he was told that it was not a homicide investigation, but rather verification of a him what that meant. His concern was who was making the determination concerning the documents. He left the investigation up to the Chief. He does not recall any discussion regarding the security of Foster's office.

Collier said that it was clear to him in reflection that Burton was grieving and not being rational during their conversation concerning the conduct of the White House in this investigation. Burton had strongly objected to Collier's concerns regarding witness and document access and people at the White House being too close to Foster to make decisions. Burton said that the matter was being handled as it should be and that's the way it would be handled. Conversations with both Burton and Neal had said that the matter was a White House issue and it didn't need Collier's assistance. Collier, in reply, had said that the matter was his business.

Dennis M. Condon, Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., as scheduled at 2:00 p.m. for interview. Agent Condon was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Agent Condon provided the following information:

He was involved in the Vincent Foster death investigation only on July 21st and 22nd, 1993. As of 5:00 p.m. on July 22, 1993, he was on vacation for a period of three weeks, and therefore not involved in the Obstruction of Justice (OOJ) case opened on the turning over of the note found in the office of Vincent Foster.

On July 21, 1993, he and Agent Scott Salter were asked by their supervisor, John Danna, to go to the White House to assist the U.S. Park Police in their investigation of the death of Vincent Foster. Agent Condon did not recall the times associated with his activity on July 21, 1993, but only remembered "sitting around" at the office of U.S. Secret Service Agent Don Flynn. Condon estimates that it was probably late morning or early afternoon when he was asked to go to the White House. Nothing much was accomplished on July 21, 1993 that Condon can remember except that it was agreed that Vincent Foster's office would be sealed and that the Park Police and FBI would come back the following day to conduct interviews and search Foster's office. It was Condon's understanding at that time that the FBI would be observers. He believed the FBI was involved "in case" the Foster death was more than a suicide or otherwise involved something within the jurisdiction of the FBI. Condon believed the case was clearly a U.S. Park Police matter as the death had occurred in a Federal park.

On the morning of Thursday, July 22, 1993, at approximately 9:00 a.m., Condon met at the White House with two Department of Justice (DOJ) attorneys, Dave Margolis and Roger Adams; two U.S. Park Police investigators, Hume and Markland; and U.S. Secret Service Agent, Don Flynn. Again, there was a lot of "waiting around."

With respect to the morning of July 22, 1993, Condon said that several interviews were done with White House secretaries concerning the Foster death. He remembers Foster's office was locked up on July 22, 1993. All of the interviews were done with White House attorneys present. Condon described their involvement in the interviews as passive; they did not ask questions or object to questions being asked.

Sometime on the afternoon of July 22, 1993, the FBI agents, DOJ attorneys, U.S. Park Police and Secret Service walked to Foster's office to conduct a search of that office. At this point in the interview, Condon was shown an FD-302 written by himself and Scott Salter (attached) regarding the search of Vincent Foster's office on July 22, 1993. Condon reviewed this FD-302 and stated that the facts were as stated. He noted in response to a question that in the last paragraph of the FD-302 referring to items which were found or not found during the search, that this paragraph could be clarified by adding that relevant or non-relevant items were identified by Bernard Nussbaum, White House Counsel.

Agent Condon elaborated on the search of Foster's office by saying that Nussbaum sat at Foster's desk with Neuwirth and Sloan, also of the White House, standing behind him, looking over his shoulder. Margolis was sitting in front of the desk with the rest of the group sitting or standing behind Margolis. He remembered Nussbaum reviewing documents and deciding whether they would be put in a pile of Foster's personal papers or Presidential-related papers. Condon also noted that as Nussbaum reviewed the items, he would place them face down in a particular pile. None of the investigators present were permitted to look at anything. Condon remembers thinking "why are we here" and also realizing that they had no search warrant for Foster's office and therefore would be limited by the ground rules set.

At one point during the search, Agent Salter stood to stretch and either Neuwirth or Sloan made the comment to Salter to the effect that, excuse me agent, are you standing because you're trying to look at documents on the desk? Salter responded to the admonition with a comment such as, let's not get carried away. At the end of the search, the attorney who had made this statement apologized to Salter.

Condon understood that the search of Foster's office was an effort to locate a suicide note or any other indication that Foster had met with foul play or anything else bearing on Foster's death.

Condon said that the search was limited to the Foster office space. No other areas, such as the reception room, were searched. Condon did not recall if there was a computer in Foster's office. He did not recall any safe or the searching of any safe. Condon also said that because of his location in the room and the fact that he was sitting, he wasn't sure if everything was removed from desk drawers or other cabinets or not. This was left up to Nussbaum, who was conducting the search. Condon also remembered some bookcases on the right side of the room and indicated they had been searched by Nussbaum. Condon believed that everything in the Foster office was searched.

Condon said the briefcase found in Foster's office was searched by Nussbaum but that no suicide note had been seen at the time of the search. The details of the briefcase search are in the attached FD-302 previously referred to.

Condon said that the trash in Foster's office had been searched by Nussbaum and Nussbaum may have put something from the trash in one of the piles.

Agent Condon said that he and Salter were taking their cue from the DOJ people during the search. David Margolis was the most vocal of the departmental attorneys. Margolis did question Nussbaum on occasion during the search about the placement of documents in any particular pile. Condon described the exchange between Nussbaum and Margolis as friendly and never being really confrontational. Condon sensed that Margolis was not content with how the search was going. Margolis seemed surprised at the procedure followed and was not entirely happy with it. Condon also had the sense that Margolis had questioned the methodology of the search with Nussbaum.

Condon advised that the pile of personal papers located during the search was given to the Foster family attorney who was present at the search. Condon could not recall his name, but described him as being in his early 40's. Condon believed that his supervisor, John Danna, would perhaps remember the name.

Condon believed the FBI was involved in this case to assist the U.S. Park Police and not be the lead agency. Assaults and killings of certain government figures are handled by the squad to which Condon is assigned and, therefore, he and Salter were selected to assist the Park Police in this matter.

Condon felt the FBI had been used. He found it insulting that FBI agents had not been allowed to at least review White House level documents. He said that had he seen anything concerning Whitewater and/or Madison, he would not have considered it significant at the time of the search in July, 1993.

Special Agent Condon entered on duty with the FBI on February 21, 1984. He is currently assigned to Squad C-4, a reactive criminal squad. His work telephone number is (202) 252-7876.

Officer Corum was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for seven years, the last three of which have been at The White House compound. He is normally assigned to USSS guard post E-6 which is located outside the entrance to the Oval Office in The White House. He advised, however, on July 20, the date of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death, and on the following day July 21, he was assigned to USSS guard post E-1 at the ground floor side entrance to the west wing of The White House. Officer Corum's office is located at 1310 L Street NW and his telephone number is 202-395-2020.

Officer Corum said that he knew Vincent Foster only by his title and the fact that he was the Associate Counsel to the President under Bernard Nussbaum and that he occupied an office on the 2nd floor of The White House's west wing. He said that he did not know Foster personally or professionally but did recognize him visually when he saw him on The White House compound. Officer Corum said that only a few of The White House staffers come and go from the Oval Office. He said that Bernard Nussbaum was a "regular" but that he only saw Vincent Foster enter the Oval Office on three or four occasions.

On July 20, 1993, Officer Corum worked the 2:30 - 11:00 pm shift on post E-1. He said that he could recall nothing unusual or out of the ordinary about that day. He specifically said that although he saw numerous White House staffers come and go through post E-1, he could recall no specifics about these individuals.

DEBORAH L. COYLE, Personal Secretary to the President, was interviewed in a ground floor conference room in the west wing of The White House. Prior to any questions being asked of Mrs. COYLE she was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. She provided the following information:

While her official title is Personal Secretary to the President, she also works for BRUCE LINDSEY, Assistant to the President and Senior Advisor. Prior to assuming her current position at The White House, she was employed at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Arkansas for many years and thereafter worked as Assistant to the Chief of Staff for then Arkansas Governor BILL CLINTON. Following BILL CLINTON's election to the Presidency, she worked on the Presidential Transition Team for MAC MCLARTY. In early 1993, NANCY HERNRAICH, Deputy Assistant to the President for appointments and scheduling, whom she haS known since 1987, asked her if she would like to take the position of Personal Secretary to the President. She agreed and has been so employed since early 1993.

Prior to his death, she had known VINCENT FOSTER since 1986, having met him at the Rose Law Firm. She described their relationship as "business associates and friends". She knew FOSTER's wife and had met various members of his family. While she had never been directly supervised by FOSTER, she recalled working with him and other Rose Law Firm attorneys on numerous large projects. She described FOSTER as being "very much in control and a take charge man". She said that he was "very methodical and organized". She advised that she has no idea why VINCENT FOSTER decided to take his own life and that his doing so came as a complete surprise and shock to her. Mrs. COYLE said that during the first four or five months of 1993 when she, FOSTER, and other Arkansans in the administration were working in Washington before their spouses joined them, they would often go out to dinner on Tuesdays as a group. After their spouses joined them the Arkansan members of the administration and their spouses tried to get together for dinner on a monthly basis. She usually organized/arranged these dinners at various restaurants in the Washington, D.C. area. The regular attendees at these dinners were: VINCENT FOSTER, WEBB HUBBELL, MARSHA SCOTT, BILL KENNEDY, JOHN EMERSON, NANCY HERNRAICH, and DEBORAH COYLE, although others joined them on some occassions.

Mrs. COYLE last saw VINCENT FOSTER alive on Monday, July 19, 1993. Although she can not recall the circumstances of this meeting, she believes it was a casual contact, perhaps in a hallway. She did recall that the "Arkansas group" had no plans to go to dinner on Tuesday, July 20. She first learned of VINCENT FOSTER's death in a telephone call to her residence on the evening of July 20, 1993. This telephone call came from BRUCE LINDSEY at approximately 10-10:30 pm who advised her that VINCENT FOSTER was dead and "had shot himself". While LINDSEY did not ask her to come to The White House or give her any type of instructions, she asked if there was anything she could do. After a brief conversation, she and LINDSEY agreed that there would probably be a large number of news media telephone calls coming into The White House and there were people who needed to be notified of FOSTER's death. She therefore went to The White House to help accomplish these tasks, arriving at approximately 11:00 pm.

Upon arriving at The White House she entered the west wing and went to her 1st floor office where she encountered BRUCE LINDSEY. While she was at The White House until approximately 2-3:00 am the next morning, time seemed compressed and events seemed to blur and run together. Shortly after arriving at her office, she went upstairs to the 2nd floor suite of NUSSBAUM/FOSTER. From the entrance to the suite she could see that this was "a busy place and it was crowded". She recognized BERNARD NUSSBAUM but can not recall the names of anyone else she saw inside the suite. She said that she did not go into the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite once she realized that the people inside were not immediately recognizable to her. She explained that her reason for going to the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite was to see if she could offer any help or sympathy to the persons who normally work in that suite of offices whom she knew. She cannot recall having seen anyone in the office who normally worked there except BERNARD NUSSBAUM. She was on the 2nd floor of the west wing for "less than a minute" before she went back to her office. She stayed in her office the remainder of the evening answering incoming telephone calls and making a series of "notification calls" to people in the Washington area and in Arkansas regarding FOSTER's death. Shortly after she returned to her office from the 2nd floor (perhaps 11:30 - 11:45 pm) BERNARD NUSSBAUM came to her office and she, NUSSBAUM, and LINDSEY talked for approximately 20 minutes. Their conversation centered on FOSTER's state of mind, the tragedy of his death, and any potential "signals" that he may have been giving off that they perhaps missed. Numerous news media calls began coming in at approximately midnight. She also recalls numerous people stopping by her office that evening to include, MARSHA SCOTT, PATSY THOMASSON, and others. She does not recall seeing TIMOTHY KEATING at The White House that evening or during the early morning hours of July 21. She recalled CRAIG LIVINGSTONE coming by her office late on the evening of July 20 (perhaps around midnight). She recalls LIVINGSTONE coming by because they discussed his having gone to the hospital with BILL KENNEDY to identify FOSTER's body and the emotional impact that this experience had had on him. She does not recall them discussing any other matters.

Mrs. COYLE did not go to the FOSTER residence during the evening hours of July 20 or the early morning hours of July 21, 1993. She does recall, however, being aware that numerous White House employees had gone there to express their condolences. She has no knowledge of anyone being at the FOSTER residence during the 5:30-7:30 am time frame on the morning of July 21, 1993 for the purpose of handling news media inquiries.

She has no knowledge of anyone removing any items or documents from VINCENT FOSTER's office on the evening of his death or during the early morning hours of July 21, 1993. No one at The White House has discussed any such thing with her and she can recall no one having told her that they had been in VINCENT FOSTER's office during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993. She further recalls no conversations wherein anyone said that they had been in or near FOSTER's office looking for a suicide note although she does seem to recall people indicating at some point in time, that such a note had not been found. She has not been asked to handle, move, transport or mail any items or documents that she believes came from VINCENT FOSTER's office. Similarly, she has not done so.

DEBORAH L. COYLE, Personal Secretary to the President, The White House, Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 456-2668 was interviewed just outside the West Executive Avenue entrance to the west wing of The White House. The interview was conducted at this outside location as COYLE could not locate any interior White House space which could provide privacy for the interview. COYLE was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. This was a follow-up to COYLE's interview on June 8, 1994. COYLE provided the following information:

She was asked to focus on the time she was at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993 through the early morning hours of July 21, 1993 just after the death of VINCENT FOSTER, JR., Deputy White House Counsel. She had previously advised in an interview conducted June 8, 1994 that she was at The White House from approximately 11:00 pm on the evening of July 20, 1993 until approximately 2:00 or 3:00 am the next morning. COYLE was asked who she saw at The White House during this period of time and she provided the following names in response to this question: BRUCE LINDSEY, BERNARD NUSSBAUM, CHERYL MILLS, KIMBERLY MARTEAU and her husband JOHN EMMERSON, CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, and MARSHA SCOTT. She said there may have been others but those were the names that she could recall at this time.

COYLE was asked to describe the circumstances in which she saw each of these people. She saw LINDSEY in his office on the 1st floor of the west wing of The White House. She had seen NUSSBAUM and MILLS in LINDSEY's office. She had seen MARTEAU and EMMERSON in the hallway outside her office door. She had seen SCOTT also in the hallway.

COYLE advised she had seen LIVINGSTONE when he "put his head in my door". She recalled talking with LIVINGSTONE about his (LIVINGSTONE's) identifying the FOSTER body that evening. She described the discussion with LIVINGSTONE as an "unloading sort of thing" by him with her. She said LIVINGSTONE, on occasion, comes to her with such "unloading" discussions. When asked if LIVINGSTONE was an emotional person, she said it would be best to describe him as a "sensitive person". COYLE said her meeting with LIVINGSTONE that evening was some time just after midnight. She did not recall discussing with LIVINGSTONE what else he was doing that night or planned to do either that night or the next day. She had no conversation with him regarding any press involvement by him the next morning at the FOSTER residence. She was asked if she remembered receiving a phone call during the evening or early morning hours of July 20-21, 1993 from WEBSTER HUBBELL concerning White House presence at the FOSTER residence early on July 21, 1993, in connection with press concerns. She answered she did not remember such a contact by HUBBELL.

COYLE was asked what time she arrived at The White House on the morning of July 21, 1993. She said it would have been between 7:30 and 8:00 am. She did not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE on the morning of July 21, 1993.

COYLE volunteered at the end of the interview that her encounter with LIVINGSTONE "could have been the next morning" but her recollection was that she had seen him at The White House at about midnight on July 20, 1993.

John K. Danna, Supervisory Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 2:00 pm for interview. Supervisor Danna was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview. Supervisor Danna provided the following information:

He first became involved in the death investigation of Vincent Foster at the request of the U.S. Park Police (USPP) on 7/21/93. A Captain Hume, USPP, called Danna and asked for the FBI's assistance. At approximately 12:30 pm, 7/21/93, Danna and two agents from his squad, Scott Salter and Dennis Condon, arrived at The White House to provide assistance.

They were advised by Captain Hume that David Margolis, an attorney from the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), would also be joining them. It was clear that Hume felt his investigation concerning the death of Vincent Foster, was being delayed and that he was being given the run around. Danna's feeling was that things were not going the way Hume wanted it to go and therefore he had called the FBI. Sometime during this initial meeting with Hume, a U.S. Secret Service Agent advised that the Vincent Foster office had been sealed.

At about 3:00 pm, David Margolis and Roger Adams, DOJ attorneys, arrived.

This group then met with Bernard Nussbaum, White House Counsel, in Nussbaum's office. They were advised that the office of Vincent Foster had been sealed until 10:00 am the following day (7/22/93). Items in Foster's office would be "gone over" at that time. The purpose would be to look for a suicide note and to examine documents in Foster's office and segregate any privileged documents between the President and The White House counsel office. It was also agreed at this meeting with Nussbaum, that interviews of White House secretaries would begin on 7/22/93 at approximately 8:30 am.

Danna described this meeting on 7/21/93 as a preliminary, quick meeting. He said it was clear that Nussbaum was in charge. Margolis was making decisions and talking with Nussbaum on behalf of the DOJ. The procedure agreed to was that Margolis and Adams would review the documents in Foster's office with Nussbaum. Danna could not recall any comment being made at this meeting on who had been in Foster's office prior to its being sealed.

Danna added that a second short meeting between Nussbaum and most of the others occurred immediately after the first meeting, but that Captain Hume and himself stayed out of this second meeting as they had already left Nussbaum's office. Danna said this second meeting was simply Nussbaum asking some of the people who were still in the office to stay a minute.

Danna said the FBI had no predication to be involved in the Foster death investigation other than assisting at the request of the USPP. Based upon this, a preliminary inquiry was opened because of who the person involved was. The USPP was the lead agency.

Danna offered FBI laboratory assistance to Captain Hume. Hume said that the USPP didn't need this assistance, that it was being handled. Danna said that he had offered this assistance because of the good relationship which existed between the USPP and the FBI.

The U.S. Attorney's Office, Eastern District of Virginia, had been advised of the FBI's participation in the investigation. Danna said the AUSA involved was probably AUSA Larry Leiser.

At the time of the Foster investigation, Danna said that the terms Whitewater and Madison were not mentioned.

Danna had no further involvement, apart from 7/21/93, in the Foster investigation or related matters. He was aware of an obstruction of justice case being opened on July 30, 1993 and being supervised by FBIHQ Supervisor, Patrick Foran.

Danna was asked if he was aware of any instance of indented writing being identified in connection with the Foster matter. He replied that it sounds familiar but he could not remember any specifics.

Supervisory Special Agent Danna entered on duty with the FBI as an agent on June 16, 1975; he was first employed by the FBI on January 31, 1972. He is currently serving as the Supervisor of Squad C-4, Washington Metropolitan Field Office. His work telephone number is (202) 252-7844.

On May 12, 1994, Supervisor JOHN K. DANNA, Squad C4, Washington Metropolitan Field Office, telephone (202) 252-7844, was interviewed regarding the FBI's jurisdiction in the VINCENT FOSTER death investigation. FOSTER, Deputy White House Counsel, died July 20, 1993.

DANNA advised that the FBI's jurisdiction in this matter was Title 18, United States Code, Section 1751, Presidential and Presidential Staff Assassination, Kidnapping and Assault (PPSAKA). VINCE FOSTER, as a Presidential staff member, was believed to be covered under this statute.

A preliminary inquiry versus an investigation was opened at the time of FOSTER's death to determine FBI interest in the matter.

If it had been ascertained that FOSTER was killed, the FBI would have conducted a full investigation of the death. The FBI assisted the U.S. Park Police during the period of the "preliminary inquiry" which was opened in the matter long enough to determine that the death of FOSTER was a suicide. DAVID MARGOLIS, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) attorney, asked the FBI to stay in the case initially to see if anything else surfaced regarding this death/suicide.

On May 19, 1994, Supervisory Special Agent ANDREAS STEPHENS, Violent Crimes Unit, Criminal Investigative Division, FBI Headquarters, telephone (202) 324-4294, provided FBI manual citations regarding preliminary inquiries and the PPSAKA violation. STEPHENS had been the FBI Headquarters Supervisor at the time of VINCE FOSTER's death on July 20, 1993.

This documentation indicated that a "preliminary inquiry" should be conducted solely to obtain the information necessary to make an informed judgment as to whether an investigation is warranted . . . Once a "reasonable indication" of criminal activity has been developed during a "preliminary inquiry," an investigation may be instituted. When a "preliminary inquiry" fails to disclose a "reasonable indication" of criminal activity to justify an investigation, the "preliminary inquiry" should be terminated.

Once it was determined that the FOSTER death was a suicide, the FBI's "preliminary inquiry" was closed. Primary jurisdiction was then properly that of the U.S. Park Police (USPP) since the death had occurred in a U.S. park, Fort Marcy Park, under USPP jurisdiction.

Additional documentation provided by STEPHENS indicated that Title 18, U.S.C., Section 1751, as amended October 6, 1982, makes it a Federal offense to assassinate, kidnap, assault, attempt to kill or kidnap, or conspire to kill or kidnap, certain Presidential and Vice-Presidential staff members. This statute is entitled the "Presidential and Presidential Staff Assassination, Kidnapping and Assault Statute." The Amendment also provided that the government need not prove the subject in such an investigation knew that the victim was protected under this statute.

The amendment of October 6, 1982 extended protection under the statute to an additional thirty Presidential and Vice-Presidential staff members. The documentation provided by STEPHENS indicated that these individuals have titles such as Counselor to the President, Chief of Staff, Assistant to the President (for a particular expertise), and certain Deputies of these officials. It is not practical to identify these protected individuals by name or title, as the list may change periodically in accord with personnel actions of the President or Vice-President. Furthermore, during a change of administration, the number of protected staff members may increase or decrease and their job titles may differ from the previous administration. STEPHENS indicated it was believed that VINCE FOSTER, as Deputy Counsel of the White House, was covered under this statute.

When the FOSTER note was found and turned over to law enforcement (July 26 & 27, 1993, respectively), an FBI Obstruction of Justice (OOJ) case was opened. This matter was supervised by Supervisory Special Agent, PATRICK J. FORAN. The OOJ investigation was predicated upon a request from the U.S. Department of Justice to enter the investigation being conducted by the U.S. Park Police and to focus FBI efforts on the turning over of a note found in the office of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. The note was turned over to law enforcement officials on July 27, 1993, approximately thirty hours after being found. The report of the FBI's OOJ investigation was sent to the DOJ, and no further action was taken as there was no indication of any wrongdoing. White House personnel never had any intention of not turning the FOSTER note over to investigators.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 1/17/95

JANE MARIE DANNENHAUER was interviewed in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, DANNENHAUER provided the following information:

DANNENHAUER formerly was employed at the White House for a total of approximately sixteen years. She was first employed in the White House Office of Security (WHOS) from 1972 through 1977 where she served as a staff assistant. DANNENHAUER remained in this post for the first few months of the administration of President JIMMY CARTER before she took a position on Capitol Hill, where she worked in a congressional office from 1977 through 1981. DANNENHAUER rejoined the staff at the WHOS in 1981 as Assistant to the Counsel to the President for Security, and she remained there until March 1, 1993. While she was in this position, DANNENHAUER had four women working for her.

When DANNENHAUER left the White House staff in 1993, she was replaced in her post by CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. Several changes occurred after the administration of President BILL CLINTON took office. The WHOS was renamed the White House Office of Personnel Security (WHOPS). The processing and review of background investigations for presidential appointees were removed from the responsibilities of WHOPS. WHOPS continues to handle typical White House employees, and DANNENHAUER believes WHOPS continues to handle the processing of White House staff below the level of presidential appointees.

DANNENHAUER left her post in 1993 as the result of an involuntary termination. After the election of the Democratic Party candidate in November 1992, DANNENHAUER knew that she would be leaving her post on the White House staff. Positions in DANNENHAUER's office have always been considered political appointments, probably because the office handles the processing of presidential appointees.

When DANNENHAUER served the CARTER administration during its first three months, she trained her replacements. Members of the CARTER administration made changes in some of the WHOS office procedures but also kept some of the existing policies in place.

When the CLINTON administration took office, presidential appointments were no longer within the purview of WHOPS. DANNENHAUER assumes that matters pertaining to presidential appointments were then handled within the White House Counsel's Office (WHCO). WHOPS continued to make requests for background investigations, even for presidential appointees, through the Special Inquiry (SPIN) unit of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

WHOPS is physically located in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB) adjacent to the White House. The WHOS office was formerly in the White House but grew too large for the space available there and was moved to the OEOB. WHOS was already located in the OEOB when DANNENHAUER arrived there in 1972.

During DANNENHAUER's tenure with WHOS and WHOPS, documents were always hand-carried from WHOPS to the WHCO due to the sensitivity of these papers. Documents were taken to the WHCO fairly often, sometimes daily, and only WHOPS personnel who had White House passes would transport them.

During her tenure at WHOS, DANNENHAUER was not aware of anyone other than her assistant or herself seeing the background investigation reports in her office since these reports were regarded as highly sensitive. WHOS had a check-out system for the reports, and a card file was maintained to show who had each of the files at any given time. These files were stored in folders in a Diebold filing device with revolving drawers. DANNENHAUER sealed all these files, and the files were sent to the National Archives sometime prior to January 20, 1993.

DANNENHAUER is not totally familiar with the organizational structure of WHOPS, but she believes White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM and Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. would have had responsibility over WHOPS. Prior to her departure from the White House staff, DANNENHAUER briefed five attorneys from the incoming White House staff about the operation of WHOPS, but none of these attorneys had responsibility over WHOPS at that time. Among these five attorneys were BETH NOLAN, CHRISTINE VARNEY and STEPHEN NEUWIRTH. DANNENHAUER again briefed NOLAN later in addition to another female attorney whose name DANNENHAUER does not recall. A decision was made that neither the White House Counsel or the Deputy White House Counsel would have administrative responsibility for WHOPS.

The last person DANNENHAUER spoke to about WHOPS prior to her departure was Associate White House Counsel WILLIAM H. KENNEDY III. DANNENHAUER briefed KENNEDY more than LIVINGSTONE about the operation of WHOPS because LIVINGSTONE had indicated to DANNENHAUER that he was not certain he would be remaining in WHOPS since he was seeking another position on the White House staff. DANNENHAUER made a suggestion about limiting the number of White House passes issued, but she does not know if this suggestion was ever followed.

During the transition period prior to January 20, 1993, attorney JAMES HAMILTON handled contacts between the transition office and the FBI. DANNENHAUER's office at WHOPS remained the point of contact for the security offices of all other agencies within the executive branch.

DANNENHAUER does not know which attorney actually handled the documents pertaining to presidential appointees but it was possibly BRUCE LINDSEY, who headed the presidential personnel office. DANNENHAUER regards it as possible that documents pertaining to presidential appointees were not sent to DANNENHAUER's office following the inauguration because DANNENHAUER was still there and there may have been a feeling that DANNENHAUER could not be trusted since she was a holdover employee from the previous administration. Officials at the White House wanted DANNENHAUER to leave her post at the end of February 1993, but DANNENHAUER asked to remain until March 1, 1993, since that would be an easier date of retirement for her to later recall.

LIVINGSTONE was not at WHOPS on January 20, 1993. During later days and weeks, LIVINGSTONE would come to his office at WHOPS, but he would leave and be out of his office for the remainder of the day. At the end of January 1993 and the beginning of February 1993, LIVINGSTONE began coming to his office but he was not in his office on a steady basis. During this time period, LIVINGSTONE told DANNENHAUER that he was interested in serving as the military assistant in the White House military office, which was a position usually held by a civilian, making LIVINGSTONE eligible for the post. Because of this desire to leave his post in WHOPS, LIVINGSTONE did not appear to want to devote much time to learning about WHOPS operations or to being trained about the operations of other agencies with whom he would be interacting at WHOPS. DANNENHAUER briefed LIVINGSTONE during her last two weeks on the job at the White House.

NANCY GEMMELL, who had worked with DANNENHAUER for twelve years, was allowed to remain in her position in WHOPS until she reached eligibility for retirement. GEMMELL stayed at WHOPS a final few months until she achieved twenty-five years of service, which made her eligible for retirement. GEMMELL had to remain on the job until May or June of 1993 to reach retirement eligibility, and she retired from her position sometime during the summer months of 1993. Three other holdover employees of WHOS also left after the election in 1992. BETTY MARY CHILDS retired from her position on January 20, 1993, while KAREN JOHNSON found another position outside the White House and left the WHOS staff prior to January 20, 1993. A third employee, LESLIE MERKLE, who is married to attorney PATRICK MERKLE, was a part-time employee who also left the WHOS staff. GEMMELL and DANNENHAUER were the only holdover employees still on the staff of the WHOS (or WHOPS) after January 20, 1993. DANNENHAUER was the only WHOS or WHOPS employee considered a presidential appointee.

LIVINGSTONE did not yet have an official title during the period when DANNENHAUER worked with him on the WHOPS staff. DANNENHAUER does not know if LIVINGSTONE holds the rank of assistant to the president. DANNENHAUER does not think LIVINGSTONE was serving under a presidential appointment while DANNENHAUER was on the WHOPS staff.

DANNENHAUER never met either NUSSBAUM or FOSTER. DANNENHAUER speculates that they saw no need to meet her, perhaps because no presidential appointments were processed through DANNENHAUER's office.

LIVINGSTONE has called DANNENHAUER several times since she retired, and all of these calls have pertained to routine work-related questions such as where to route specific matters. LIVINGSTONE has probably called DANNENHAUER several times since the death of FOSTER on July 20, 1993. LIVINGSTONE placed possibly a dozen calls to DANNENHAUER during 1993, and the purpose of the calls was usually mundane, e.g., WHOPS received a letter from the Department of Defense and LIVINGSTONE needed to know how to respond to the letter. In none of these calls did LIVINGSTONE tell DANNENHAUER anything about his personal situation, and LIVINGSTONE only asked about routine matters pertaining to the operation of WHOPS. DANNENHAUER has not been contacted by LIVINGSTONE, LIVINGSTONE's attorneys, or any member of the White House staff regarding the death of FOSTER.

DANNENHAUER may have spoken with former Deputy White House Counsel JOHN SCHMITZ in relation to FOSTER's death. Following media accounts referring to a safe in FOSTER's office, SCHMITZ telephoned DANNENHAUER to inquire whether there had been a safe in SCHMITZ's office, which would likely have been the office later occupied by FOSTER. DANNENHAUER did not recall a safe in the Deputy White House Counsel's Office, only file cabinets. There may have been a file safe, i.e., a safe configured like a file cabinet with drawers in it, in the office but DANNENHAUER does not recall ever seeing such an object in the office. Any important documents were kept in a safe in DANNENHAUER's office.

Upon her departure from the White House staff, DANNENHAUER had several concerns about how the WHOPS would be operated once she left. DANNENHAUER was concerned that there was a lack of control over the FBI background investigation reports. DANNENHAUER does not know if the entire WHCO staff had access to these reports or if there were internal controls limiting access. DANNENHAUER was also disturbed that volunteers were brought in to work at WHOPS. When DANNENHAUER ran WHOPS, she only used volunteers to type cards, and she did not allow the volunteers to look at any of the files. Further, all of the volunteers who worked for DANNENHAUER underwent background investigations.

In addition to DANNENHAUER, other holdover officials who had worked at the White House during DANNENHAUER's tenure included TERRY GOOD, who was director of Records Management for the White House, and LEE JOHNSON, who was GOOD's assistant and who had come to the position from the National Archives approximately one year before DANNENHAUER left the White House staff. Another such White House employee was MAUREEN HUDSON, who worked in the correspondence office under SHIRLEY GREEN.

LIVINGSTONE mainly handled the staff of WHOPS.

DANNENHAUER knows very little about LIVINGSTONE's background or personal life. DANNENHAUER believes LIVINGSTONE is from the local area around Washington, D.C., and his mother or parents may live in Chevy Chase. LIVINGSTONE has told DANNENHAUER that he is a friend of President CLINTON.

There were two volunteers working in the WHOPS when DANNENHAUER left: MARI ANDERSON and a white male whose name DANNENHAUER is unable to recall. MARI ANDERSON began as a volunteer but eventually was employed in a paid position. There was also a black male whose name DANNENHAUER does not know who worked in WHOPS, but he was only at WHOPS rarely, coming in and out of the office only as the workload required.

DANNENHAUER will be moving in mid-March 1995 to a new residence in the Timbers Edge condominiums, where her address will be 2468 Timberside Drive, Columbus, Ohio. DANNENHAUER does not yet know what her telephone number will be at her new address but she will call the interviewing agents with that information when it becomes available.

DANNENHAUER knows of no other information which may be of assistance to OIC investigators.

Based on observation and interview, DANNENHAUER is described as follows:

ROBERT ARTHUR DENNING, Security Officer at the Saudi Arabian Ambassador's residence, 6050 Chain Bridge Road, McLean, Virginia, was advised of the identities of FBI Agents William E. Colombell and H. Alexis Suggs, and was further informed that the FBI was conducting an ongoing investigation into the death of Vincent Foster at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993 and wished to interview him regarding any possible information or assistance he could furnish.

MR. DENNING stated that he was working a day shift on that particular day and would have been present at the Saudi Arabian compound during the hours of 12:00 noon through 6:00 p.m. He stated that he would have spent a significant portion of the day on the security gates adjoining Chain Bridge Road.

MR. DENNING stated that he did not observe any unusual activities, nor did he hear any possible gunshots emanating from For Marcy Park. He pointed out that if such incidents occurred, there would have been a recording made and a log maintained by the security force. MR. DENNING pointed out that on occasion, the security force will hear car and truck backfires that echo off the Potomac River. He also pointed out that for the past year dating back to before July 20, 1993, considerable heavy construction has been ongoing at the Saudi Arabian compound. He said this construction, coupled with traffic noise from Chain Bridge Road and aircraft noise from overhead, makes it difficult to carry on normal conversations. He stated that in his opinion, under the circumstances described above, it would be highly unlikely that he or other security officers would have overheard a loud retort or gunshot from the park. He again noted that if such an occurrence had occurred, it would require a written notation in the security log. He stated that based on conversations he had with his supervisor, MR. BAILEY, no such notations were recorded on that particular date.

Mr. Barry H. Deutschman, R. Ph, owner of Morgan Pharmacy, 3001 P Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20007, was interviewed at the Morgan Pharmacy. Mr. Deutschman was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and informed of the nature of the inquiry. He then provided the following information:

Mr. Deutschman stated that a review of his records reflects that based on a July 1993 telephonic request by a Dr. Larry Watkins, Little Rock, Arkansas, the Morgan Pharmacy filled a prescription for Mr. Vincent Foster. Morgan Pharmacy records according to Mr. Deutschman indicate that the prescription for Mr. Foster was for 30 tablets of DESYREL, generic name Trazodone. A further review of these records reflect that one to three tablets or 50 to 150 milligrams was prescribed to be taken prior to bedtime.

While pharmacy records did not indicate time of the receipt of this prescription request by Dr. Watkins, it was Mr. Deutschman's recollection that the request was received by his pharmacy late morning or early afternoon of July 19, 1993 and that the medication was delivered by one of his employees to the Foster residence later that afternoon and certainly before closing time of 6:00 pm on July 19, 1993. According to Mr. Deutschman available pharmacy records failed to indicate any prior medication being prescribed for Mr. Vincent Foster.

Mr. Deutschman advised that while Mrs. Foster had an account at his pharmacy he had no personal relationship with any members of the Foster family. Mr. Deutschman also advised that he was seriously concerned about the confidentiality of his records and any public release of the above furnished information. He maintained that any future requests specifically obtaining more details regarding this particular prescription would require a subpoena. He however reiterated his prior comment that his records fail to reflect any prior prescribed medication being dispensed at his pharmacy for Mr. Vincent Foster.

Robert J. Dillon, Lieutenant, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Lt. Dillon was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for eleven years and is currently assigned to the USSS Foreign Missions Branch. He was, however, in July, 1993, working the "midnight" shift serving as the Deputy Watch Commander overseeing activities of all USSS Uniform Division Officers on The White House compound during that shift. As such, he was the immediate supervisor of the USSS Sergeant in Charge of the USSS White House Control Center.

He first learned of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death at approximately 9:30 pm, shortly after he came on duty. He did not, at first, recognize Foster's name as being that of a high ranking White House staffer. He had not known Foster.

Lt. Dillon said he does not recall his July 20-21, 1993 shift being particularly busy or eventful for USSS employees on duty that night. He said he does not recall any unusual west wing alarm activity that evening and does not recall anyone requesting access to the Bernard Nussbaum/Vincent Foster suite of offices. He further advised that he does not believe he had occasion to go to the west wing of The White House that night. He said that while there was talk during his shift of the USSS possibly being asked to secure the Nussbaum/Foster suite the next day, nothing was done during his shift in this regard.

Lt. Dillon said that he is familiar with Officer Henry O'Neill and his duties. He is aware that O'Neill escorts a GSA cleaning crew into alarmed areas of The White House west wing and that he (O'Neill) is personally responsible for picking up "burn bag" trash in the west wing during his shift. Lt. Dillon said he does not recall Officer O'Neill advising him that he (O'Neill) had seen White House staffers in the Nussbaum/Foster suite during the late evening or early morning hours of July 20-21. He further advised that he does not recall Officer O'Neill telling him that he (O'Neill) had decided that this suite should not be cleaned by the GSA employees during that particular shift and that no trash was picked up in that suite during the "midnight" July 20-21 shift.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

LINDA A. DONAGHY was interviewed in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel, (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, DONAGHY provided the following information:

DONAGHY currently serves as Deputy General Counsel of the Justice Management Division at the United States Department of Justice (DOJ), where her telephone number is (202) 514-3452.

DONAGHY has worked almost continuously at DOJ since 1971. The only breaks in DONAGHY's service occurred when DONAGHY took time off for the birth of her son and for two brief tours of duty at the White House Counsel's Office (WHCO).

DONAGHY served in the WHCO for periods of time under both the BUSH and CLINTON administrations. During May and June of 1989, DONAGHY served at the White House on the Presidential Ethics Commission. DONAGHY most recently served in the WHCO from approximately February 1, 1993, through May 3, 1993. It is DONAGHY's understanding that MICHAEL CARDOZO and WEBSTER "WEBB" HUBBELL were responsible for some of the staffing decisions regarding DOJ. CARDOZO and HUBBELL contacted DONAGHY's superior at that time, JANIS SPOSATO, and SPOSATO recommended DONAGHY for an assignment as a detailee to the WHCO. DONAGHY went to the WHCO at the same time as another DOJ official, ROGER ADAMS.

Upon her arrival at the WHCO, DONAGHY initially did not have a supervisor or a clear sense of what her duties were. Within a matter of a few days, Associate White House Counsel BETH NOLAN reported for duty at the WHCO. Shortly thereafter, Associate White House Counsel WILLIAM H. KENNEDY III also assumed his duties. The offices used by DONAGHY and her co-workers were located in WHCO offices in room 126 1/2 in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB).

DONAGHY's duties required her to review copies of the federal government's Standard Form 278 (SF-278), which is a financial disclosure form filed by nominees and appointees. DONAGHY would review the forms to identify any financial conflicts between the individuals' personal holdings and the positions for which they were being considered. There were very few nominees when DONAGHY began working at the WHCO because the administration was still in its early stages. Once the number of nominees increased and the nominees actually submitted their SF-278s to the WHCO, DONAGHY and her colleagues reviewed the forms and attempted to resolve any conflicts through consultations with the designated agency officials (DAOs) for ethics matters in the agencies where the nominees would be working.

DONAGHY had no role in the nomination process for WEBSTER HUBBELL since, DONAGHY believes, HUBBELL was not even nominated for the post of Associate Attorney General until after DONAGHY had completed her assignment at the WHCO. However, DONAGHY was involved in reviewing the SF-278 forms of most of the nominees for positions at DOJ during her tenure at the WHCO.

As part of her duties and responsibilities at the WHCO, DONAGHY was occasionally asked for legal opinions and legal memoranda regarding ethics issues. DONAGHY usually gave oral legal advice to NOLAN, who may have incorporated the advice into memoranda she later wrote. On occasion, DONAGHY would also receive telephone inquiries from White House employees who were attempting to learn the types of outside activities in which they could engage without violating the new restrictions on sources of outside income.

DONAGHY saw FOSTER very rarely since her office was in the OEOB while FOSTER's office was in the West Wing. DONAGHY recalls that she was introduced to FOSTER during the first few days of her assignment at the WHCO. FOSTER had come to the WHCO offices in the OEOB to meet the new WHCO staff members, and DONAGHY was among the people FOSTER met. DONAGHY later observed FOSTER at a birthday party for White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM sometime in March 1993.

DONAGHY did not attend the daily meetings of the WHCO associate counsels because the detailees were not invited to do so. There were no regularly scheduled meetings which the WHCO detailees were required to attend, but KENNEDY and NOLAN would occasionally convene meetings of the members of their staff.

DONAGHY had no telephone conversations with FOSTER.

DONAGHY recalls that several other people were detailed from a number of outside agencies to the WHCO staff. JACKIE WASHINGTON arrived at the WHCO late in DONAGHY's tenure there and was still on the WHCO staff when DONAGHY left to return to DOJ. WASHINGTON may have served on the WHCO staff for a year. WASHINGTON had come to the WHCO staff from the Department of Labor, possibly from the office of the solicitor there, and she was back at the Labor Department in January 1994. FRANK SOBOL was a detailee who seemed to have more of a close working relationship with FOSTER. The other detailees whom DONAGHY recalls serving at the WHCO were ADAMS, RICHARD WERKSMAN and PHYLLIS ANDERSON.

ADAMS and DONAGHY joined the WHCO staff on the same day and also left on the same day. ADAMS and DONAGHY went to the WHCO suite in the West Wing shortly before their departure from the WHCO staff to have their pictures taken with NUSSBAUM. ADAMS later related to DONAGHY that FOSTER had been in the WHCO suite while their photographs were being taken, but DONAGHY does not recall seeing FOSTER that day.

DONAGHY regarded FOSTER as being very self-confident, almost to the point of arrogance. However, DONAGHY also believes that FOSTER's confidence could have masked shyness. DONAGHY has no direct knowledge of FOSTER's character or state of mind, but SOBOL told her that FOSTER was extremely conscientious and very much a perfectionist.

Prior to FOSTER's death on July 20, 1993, DONAGHY did not engage in any discussion about FOSTER's mental state. Prior to FOSTER's death, DONAGHY did not hear any remarks regarding FOSTER's mood or state of mind.

DONAGHY had no involvement in the White House Travel Office matter.

On July 21, 1993, DONAGHY was at home preparing to go away on a family trip for several days. At approximately 8:00 or 9:00 a.m., DONAGHY heard a radio report concerning FOSTER's death. DONAGHY did not go to the White House that day, and she was out of town for the next several days. Upon returning to work, DONAGHY discussed FOSTER's death with ADAMS and MARTHA STANLEY, who was secretary to KENNEDY and NOLAN. DONAGHY probably spoke with STANLEY on the Monday following FOSTER's death.

DONAGHY did not have any knowledge of or involvement in the finding of a note in FOSTER's briefcase .

Two other DOJ employees who were detailed to the WHCO staff were CYNTHIA McMANUS and HELEN JONES. JONES worked in the WHCO suite in the West Wing of the White House. JONES was detailed to the WHCO staff for a shorter period of time than McMANUS. DONAGHY does not recall the length of the period that JONES served on the WHCO staff. JONES currently works in the office of the Deputy Attorney General (DAG) at DOJ.

Among other White House staff members who worked with the WHCO staff were GARY GINSBURG, LIZ FINE and PETER PAPPAS. GINSBURG and FINE were both involved in political vetting of nominees. GINSBURG and FINE left the White House staff and went to work at DOJ, where GINSBURG worked in the Office of Legislative Affairs and FINE worked in the DAG's office. GINSBURG has since left DOJ, and DONAGHY is not certain where he is currently working. DONAGHY believes FINE is currently on maternity leave from the DAG's office. PAPPAS left the White House staff and took a position at the United States Department of State.

Based on observation and interview, DONAGHY is described as follows:

CHARLES K. "CHARLIE" DORSEY, Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., as scheduled at 1:00 p.m. for interview. DORSEY was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. Agent DORSEY provided the following information:

He first became involved in the VINCENT FOSTER matter at the request of his supervisor, JOHN DANNA, when the FBI re-entered the investigation from an Obstruction of Justice (OOJ) standpoint when the FOSTER note was found and revealed to the public on July 27, 1993. DORSEY understood that the purpose of the investigation was to trace the evolution process of the note found by STEVEN NEUWIRTH. DORSEY conducted or assisted with a total of twelve interviews in the OOJ matter. He also initiated the Behaviorial Science Unit, FBI Academy, input into this investigation. He was also involved with the FBI Laboratory Division's aspect.

DORSEY was asked about White House cooperation during the OOJ investigation. He responded that all White House personnel interviewed were totally "forthwith" and did not try to pull rank. He could not recall any evasive conduct by anyone during the investigation. There was no stonewalling by anyone. DORSEY stated that the cooperation of the U.S. Secret Service during this investigation was particularly noteworthy, especially the assistance provided by Agent DON FLYNN.

DORSEY was asked if anyone during the course of the investigation objected to the term "obstruction of justice" being used. He said the only instance he could recall was during the first interview of the investigation. He said that the investigation was initiated with an interview of STEVEN NEUWIRTH, Assistant White House Counsel, who had found the FOSTER note. When NEUWIRTH was advised by the interviewing agents, DORSEY and SCOTT SALTER, that an investigation had been requested by the Department of Justice concerning an obstruction of justice matter pertaining to the FOSTER note, NEUWIRTH responded by questioning whether he was a subject and did he need a lawyer. He was told that he was not a subject of the investigation at this point and was being interviewed in the normal course of the investigation. He was the first interview being conducted as he was the individual who had found the FOSTER note. NEUWIRTH thereafter excused himself. The agents then waited for approximately one hour before resuming their interview of NEUWIRTH. It is DORSEY's belief that BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief White House Counsel, must have been out of pocket during this time period and that NEUWIRTH was waiting to discuss the interview with him. During the course of the interview, it was obvious that NEUWIRTH was not enjoying the interview. NEUWIRTH said he found the FOSTER note in a briefcase in FOSTER's office as he was packing items from the office. He had turned the briefcase upside down or on its side. NEUWIRTH was surprised to find the FOSTER note in the briefcase.

NEUWIRTH's reaction to the OOJ inquiry was tempered with NUSSBAUM's activities. NUSSBAUM seemed genuine and was the White House point of contact. He was "the guy" to make available whoever, whenever. Everything flowed from NUSSBAUM. He facilitated the White House interviews for the FBI. DORSEY said it was obvious NUSSBAUM ran a tight ship and had his finger in everything.

DORSEY was asked about his interviews of BERNARD NUSSBAUM, MARGARET WILLIAMS, and PATSY THOMASSON. He was asked if these individuals had been questioned during their interviews regarding personally taking anything from VINCENT FOSTER's White House office after his death and also whether they were aware of anyone else who had done so. DORSEY stated that the THOMASSON FD-302 and interview notes reflect that she was asked these questions and answered no to both. DORSEY said he would be surprised if WILLIAMS and NUSSBAUM had not been asked these same questions, but could not specifically recall that the questions had been asked.

DORSEY was asked about the indented writing found on a pad of paper taken from FOSTER's office. He said that on July 30, 1993, at the end of the day, or on August 3, 1993, he and Agent SALTER went to the White House to actually see FOSTER's office. NUSSBAUM opened the office for them and during the course of looking at the office, DORSEY noticed a pad of paper and asked NUSSBAUM if he could have it. DORSEY said "we'll see if this is what he (FOSTER) wrote it (the note) on." NUSSBAUM agreed and was given a receipt for the pad. DORSEY then turned this pad of blank paper over to the FBI Laboratory's Document Section at the same time as he turned over the FOSTER note. DORSEY understood that some indented writing was located on this pad, but he never saw the pad again or the indented words raised and understood that the pad and results of the examination were sealed. It was DORSEY's understanding that this writing dealt with a trust fund concerning the President's daughter and had been considered privileged information.

FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

DORSEY was asked about information he received concerning the presence of "a second letter," allegedly involving FOSTER's death. This information had been provided to DORSEY through another FBI agent, [redacted] and had been reported in the OOJ report concerning the FOSTER note. DORSEY said that this information had been received from ROGER KAMMERDEINER, a Physical Security Specialist, U.S. Secret Service. DORSEY said it had been determined that there was no second letter. DORSEY also said that he had heard this was not the first time that KAMMERDEINER had embellished a story.

DORSEY stated all investigation conducted regarding the FOSTER matter had been reported in either the U.S. Park Police Report or the FBI's OOJ Report.

SA DORSEY entered on duty with the FBI as a Special Agent on January 4, 1987 and is currently assigned to Squad C-4, a reactive criminal squad, Washington Metropolitan Field Office. His work telephone number is (202) 252-7786.

MATTHEW JOHN DRISCOLL, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). DRISCOLL is an Officer with the United States Secret Service (USSS), Uniformed Division, White House Branch. After being apprised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose of the interview, DRISCOLL thereafter provided the following information:

DRISCOLL is currently assigned to the Control Center and also serves on the USSS Advanced Team. On the evening of July 20, 1993, DRISCOLL was working in the Control Center further described to be working on "the board." From this position DRISCOLL handled telephone and radio traffic into the Control Center. On the evening of July 20, 1993, DRISCOLL remembers working a 3:00 pm to 11:00 pm shift in the Control Center.

DRISCOLL first heard of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. on a commercial radio station. He later heard on a CNN News television broadcast that FOSTER was dead. This broadcast was believed to have occurred between 7:00 and 7:30 pm on July 20, 1993.

DRISCOLL does not recall receiving any special instructions in the Control Center with regard to responding to the death of FOSTER. He recalls no incoming telephone or radio traffic addressing the death of FOSTER. DRISCOLL knew who FOSTER was by name and also knew him through visual recognition. They had no formal relationship.

Regarding alarms within The White House complex, DRISCOLL was aware that upon entering an alarmed area, an individual has approximately 30 seconds after the alarm is set to call the USSS Control Center. Once the individual calls into the Control Center he provides his or her name which is then checked against an access roster maintained within the Control Center. If for some reason the staffer forgot to call the Control Center, a USSS Officer would telephone the office. If no answer was received, an officer was sent to investigate. A violation of the aforementioned procedure with regard to the alarms was written up on a security violation form, Secret Service Form 2046. This form was also utilized to record radiation reports, fire, and alarms. The form 2046 is maintained in central files for storage. USSS records are stored in Room 560 of the Old Executive Office Building which is an alarmed area.

DRISCOLL was unaware of any cameras being located within the Counsel's office or within the interior portions of The White House mansion.

DRISCOLL was unaware of any documents being moved from the Counsel's office and more specifically the office of FOSTER on the evening of July 20, 1993. He also had no knowledge of documents being moved from the west wing of The White House on the morning of July 21, 1993. DRISCOLL did hear rumors several days later about documents being removed from FOSTER's office.

DRISCOLL did know the name of MARGARET WILLIAMS, and was aware that she is the Chief of Staff to the First Lady. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE was known to DRISCOLL as The Chief of White House Security. He was aware that this was a political appointment. DRISCOLL had no information regarding LIVINGSTONE or the possibility that LIVINGSTONE may have removed documents from the west wing of The White House on the morning of July 21, 1993.

DRISCOLL was aware that a USSS guard post was eventually established outside FOSTER's office subsequent to his death on July 20, 1993.

DRISCOLL advised that orange grounds passes for The White House complex allow unescorted access to the Old Executive Office Building only. A blue White House compound pass provides unescorted access to both the Old Executive Office Building and to the west wing of The White House. With each pass, White House staffers are given a personal identification number to be utilized upon entry into the White House complex. This PIN number is in effect for a one year period of time. DRISCOLL did note that if a staffer were allowed automobile access within The White House complex on Old Executive Office Drive, there would be no record of the individual being on The White House grounds.

CHARLES C. EASLEY, Security Officer for the Executive Office of the President (EOP), was interviewed at his office in the New Executive Office Building, 725 17th St., N.W., Washington, D.C., (202) 395-6206. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, EASLEY provided the following information:

EASLEY advised that he is Security Officer for the "career side" of the White House personnel. He has held this position since October 1, 1986. He advised that part of his job responsibilities is to monitor the safes in all of the White House offices, including keeping records of their combinations. He advised that the Secret Service used to handle the safes, but they started to use a private contractor and that situation was unacceptable. EASLEY picked up the responsibilities for them in the very beginning of the Bush administration.

EASLEY advised that he works for PATSY THOMASSON with MARY BECK and JOHN KRESMEN (phonetic) in his chain of command in between himself and PATSY THOMASSON. He is not in any way associated with the National Security Council. He advised that he holds the combinations for any safe that he has changed the combination of. He advised that this administration has been somewhat remiss about following procedures for the frequency of changing combinations but conceded that the documents held in these safes are not necessarily classified.

EASLEY advised that he has a general recollection of the time period on and about July 20, 1993 when VINCE FOSTER, JR. committed suicide. He did not have any direct involvement in any of the activities surrounding VINCE FOSTER's death, including the disposition of his office or the safes in the General Counsel's office following his death.

EASLEY advised that there used to be three two-door safes in the General Counsel's office. They were all in what was BERNARD NUSSBAUM's office. There has never been a safe in the secretary's areas or in what was VINCE FOSTER's office. One safe was removed early in the Clinton administration because everybody seemed to be having problems opening it. BERNARD NUSSBAUM had it taken out.

The Facilities Management Officer, JOHN DAWSON, would have had GSA movers remove it from the office. The Facilities Management Officer himself would have a record of any requests to move a safe out of the office.

EASLEY believes that there are two safes in the General Counsel's office currently. He has not changed the combinations on those safes since VINCE FOSTER's death. LLOYD CUTLER wanted to keep everything the same as it was when FOSTER died. Referring to his records, EASLEY advised that the bar code for both safes in CUTLER's office (formerly BERNARD NUSSBAUM's office) reads February 10, 1993 which was the last time the combinations were changed. He does not know when the previous change was, but guesses it was sometime in the beginning of 1985. Such records are destroyed.

EASLEY said he has had telephone calls from the New York Post and the Washington Post, asking him about safes in the General Counsel's office and he has not answered any of their questions. However, after the Washington Post telephone call, there had been numerous meetings with DEE DEE MYERS, PATSY THOMASSON, WILLIAM KENNEDY, DAVID GERGEN, and DAVID WATKINS, starting in March and April 1994 with regard to passes and other security matters relating to passes. None of these discussions had to do with safes or with VINCE FOSTER's office. One of the incidents that caused some stir was when DEE DEE MYERS said that she had access to classified information without having been granted a clearance. Numerous meetings followed her disclosure of that fact.

With regard to the safes in the Counsel's suite, he advised that these are small, two-door safes, but they are not readily movable, weighing approximately 620 pounds. In order to move such a safe you would need a special dolly and it would be a rather major endeavor that would take several people.

EASLEY said that he is acquainted with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. Approximately two to three months ago, LIVINGSTONE asked EASLEY, "Did I tell you I had taken a box of something out of VINCE FOSTER's office?" EASLEY said, "No, I don't think so, why?" and LIVINGSTONE proceeding to tell him that somebody from the Park Police or Secret Service had turned him in for taking a box out of VINCE FOSTER's office. Again approximately a month or so ago, LIVINGSTONE again asked EASLEY if he had asked him whether or not he had told him he had taken a box of something out of the office and said that somebody had "finked on" or "ratted on" him.

As an aside EASLEY said that LIVINGSTONE likes to boast about how important he is and likes to get involved in things other than what other security officers have handled. He said that LIVINGSTONE wanted to be head of the White House military office. He also boasts that his mother knows the First family really well. He claims that HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON is "always stopping him" in the hall and asking him how his mother is.

EASLEY advised that most classified information in the White House comes from either the National Security Council or the Situation Room. He further advised that there is no systematic use of polygraph exams at the White House for security or other reasons. Employees are not required to sign anything giving the White House the right to polygraph them.

As part of the interview, EASLEY provided the following personal information:

DOB:	November 23, 1939
POB:	Portageville, Missouri
SSN:	496-40-0743
Address:	4131 Pinewood Terrace Chesapeake Beach, MD 20732

On June 6, 1994, MARVIN KRISLOV Assistant Counsel and NEIL EGGLESTON Associate Counsel to the President, both individuals from The White House, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel and was interviewed by MARK STEIN of the Office of the Independent Counsel and SA H. ALEXIS SUGGS with regard to a production that The White House had made in response to a subpoena. The production that we asked them about was broken into 4 parts.

Part 1 KRISLOV and EGGLESTON identified (a 3-page item which lists cabinets and their contents and is titled on the first page, "Office of VINCE W. FOSTER, JR." with a 6 at the top of the page) as a document which was located in the files moved by TOM CASTLETON from the West Wing to the Old Executive Office Building. CASTLETON advised them that it came from DEBORAH GORHAM's desk and that the handwriting is CASTLETON's. Neither individual had any idea what pages 1-5 would have been.

Part 2 (an 8-page assortment of typed lists, the first page of which is entitled, "DEBORAH GORHAM's desk" contents:) KRISLOV and EGGLESTON recognized as lists compiled by TOM CASTLETON and confirmed that the description of them in JOEL KLEIN's cover letter was in error. KRISLOV said that they will be different from GORHAM's list of files. They were compiled at the time that the boxes were brought to the Old Executive Office Building sometime mid-November when JOEL KLEIN was moving into FOSTER's office. Each list corresponds to a box which held documents. They therefore do not hold any documents that were given to the CLINTON's private attorney.

Part 3 is a hand-written listing of VINCE FOSTER's working files. KRISLOV and EGGLESTON both confirmed that it was handwritten by STEPHEN NEUWIRTH. They believe it was done shortly after VINCE FOSTER's death.

Part 4 of the production is an 11-page handout with what appears to be computer printout listings of directories. KRISLOV and EGGLESTON explained that these were the indexes of KRISLOV advised that nothing has been erased from the directories and that the check marks on the list correspond to documents which were printed into hard copies so that people could continue working with them.

At the conclusion of the interview, MARK STEIN advised KRISLOV and EGGLESTON that the Office of the Independent Counsel wanted hard copies of select documents from part 4, disks 4 and 5. KRISLOV and EGGLESTON agreed to produce the requested documents as soon as possible, meaning the next day or so.

NEIL EGGLESTON, Associate White House Counsel, telephonically contacted the interviewing agent from EGGLESTON's office in the White House, where his telephone number is (202) 456-7901. EGGLESTON placed the call in response to an inquiry from the interviewing agent regarding records of a blood pressure check obtained by VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. on July 16, 1993. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent, EGGLESTON provided the following information:

EGGLESTON was assigned to follow up on the matter of the blood pressure check by JOEL KLEIN, Deputy Counsel to the President. EGGLESTON obtained from KLEIN a copy of a document which reflected that FOSTER's blood pressure was checked at the White House Medical Unit on July 16, 1993. Using the document, EGGLESTON went to the Medical Unit in the Old Executive Office Building and displayed the document in an effort to identify its author. DEBBIE BEATTY, a nurse in the Medical Unit, recognized the handwriting on the document as her own.

BEATTY advised EGGLESTON that she had no recollection of measuring FOSTER's blood pressure. She reviewed the records maintained within her office and found no record of FOSTER visiting the office on July 16, 1993 or any other date. BEATTY advised EGGLESTON that each instance of a patient visiting the office is normally recorded in her office's computerized record-keeping system so that the Medical Unit can compile statistics on the number of patients treated. While BEATTY could not provide a specific reason why her office had no record of a visit by FOSTER, she offered one possible explanation. According to BEATTY, her office is frequently visited by White House employees whose physicians have directed them to have their blood pressures measured periodically. These employees usually bring forms provided by their personal physicians, and the Medical Unit staff will normally record the blood pressure readings on these forms, which are them turned over to the personal physicians by their patients. In such instances, no record of the office visit is made by the Medical Unit staff. If a patient comes in for a blood pressure check but does not have a form from the personal physician, then the staff will normally record the reading on a form like the form shown to BEATTY by EGGLESTON. In these instances as well, the Medical Unit would not necessarily generate a record of a patient visit, usually due to the press of time and the number of other patients awaiting treatment.

JEFF L. ELLER, Director for Media Affairs at The White House, work number 202-456-5650, home address 140D Kentucky Avenue, SE, Washington, DC, residence phone 202-544-4662 was interviewed at his office in the Old Executive Office Building Number 170. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, ELLER provided the following information:

ELLER advised that he was at home on the evening of July 20, 1993 when he received a telephone call notifying him of the death of VINCE FOSTER, JR. He said that he came into The White House in response to the call and estimated his time of arrival between 10:00 and 11:00 pm. He first went to MARK GEARAN's office in the west wing. Having learned that the President had already left The White House to go to the FOSTER residence and anticipating that there may be press presence at the residence as well, ELLER had a White House driver and car drive him to the FOSTER residence. ELLER was unaccompanied except for the driver of the vehicle (a log of who signs out cars may provide the exact time of departure and arrival back to The White House if that is necessary.)

ELLER advised that on the way to the FOSTER residence he was in telephonic contact with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE who was in another vehicle. They were both trying to find their way in unfamiliar neighborhoods in order to find FOSTER's residence. They arrived at FOSTER's residence at approximately the same time and parked near one another. ELLER said that he himself was only there about 30 minutes during the time that the President was there. His only focus and reason for being there was to deal with the press in case the press found out that the President was there and converged on the area. He estimated his time at the residence as being approximately 11:00 to 11:30 pm. As soon as the President left ELLER returned to The White House going first go GEARAN's office and then over to his own office in the Old Executive Office Building. He stayed there for a while reading press clippings and went home sometime between 1:00 and 2:00 am on the morning hours of 7/21/93.

ELLER advised that he did not have any conversations that he can recall with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE while at the residence the night of July 20 nor with anybody else. He remembers standing alone. He doesn't remember any conversations with anybody about potential press problems the following day at the FOSTER residence.

ELLER advised that his usual time of arrival at The White House is between 6:45 and 7:00 in the morning. He does not recall specifically what time he arrived on July 21, 1993 but advised that his normal routine was to pick up DAVID DREYER who lives very close to him, drive into The White House, check into his office at the Old Executive Office Building and read press clippings until the 7:30 staff meeting which is held in the West Wing Communications Office. The duration of that 7:30 meeting varies depending upon what is going on in the world and at The White House. It is not uncommon for him to remain in the West Wing Press Office for a little while after and talk with people, so he may have been over in the Press Office around 8:00 that morning. He does not, however, recall any telephone calls from anybody at the FOSTER residence or any telephone calls concerning the issue of the press presence at the FOSTER residence. He also does not recall if that issue was discussed during 7:30 staff meeting.

ELLER advised that he and his staff manages contacts with local and state reporters who do not normally cover The White House everyday. That does not include reporters located in the District of Columbia itself. He advised that assigning somebody to go out to the FOSTER residence to deal with the press was not something he would have been responsible for. He went to the Foster residence the night before only because it needed to be covered and not because it was part of his normal job responsibilities. It also would not be an area of responsibility that he would have carried through to the next day. In any case, he knows that he did not participate in any assignment of that nature, either himself nor did he delegate anyone of his staff to do an errand of that nature. He would have remembered it if he had. He also has no knowledge of anyone else having responsibility for such a task.

ELLER advised that an individual named LARRY SAMPAS handles the overnight shift in the Office of Communications which ends at 7:30 in the morning and supervises the printing and assembly of The White House press clippings that is done during the overnight shift. They are rarely printed before 7:00 am but occasionally they are. When finished, the stacks of legal sized white colored press clippings are distributed throughout The White House. ELLER does not remember their ever being put in binders and cannot recall their ever being carried around in boxes. It is sometimes a two person job to distribute them. The West Wing receives them first. If two people are doing the distribution at least one has to have a blue pass which allows free access back and forth between The White House and the Old Executive Office Building.

ELLER advised that SAMPAS first started at The White House in January, 1993 as a volunteer who was unpaid. He had to leave for a paying job but returned at a later time. ELLER was not able to recall whether or not SAMPAS was at The White House in July, 1993. ELLER also advised that he does not keep a list of the interns who served in his own office in July, 1993.

ELLER recalls seeing MARK GEARAN, RICKI SIEDMAN, DAVID GERGAN and DEE DEE MYERS the night of July 20, 1993, at The White House. He does not recall seeing MAGGIE WILLIAMS nor PATSY THOMASSON nor SUSAN THOMASES.

ELLER advised that there are approximately three individuals who work for the Presidential Protective Detail (PPD) who bear a reasonable physical resemblence to CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. The PPD office is in W16 in the west wing of The White House and he knows they have a spread of photographs of each individual. ELLER advised that shifts of these individuals change sometime around 6:30 - 7:00 am and there is a good deal of movement of these individuals in the West Wing of The White House and elsewhere at that time. He did not know what other offices in the West Wing or the OEOB normally have activities very early in the morning. The Press Office is generally the most active office at that time of the morning. He said that the Office of Management and Administration (DAVID WATKINS old office) was not generally up and running early in the morning.

As part of the interview, ELLER provided the following personal information:

JOHN B. EMERSON, Deputy Director of White House personnel, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel. EMERSON's work telephone number is 202-456-7953. He was told of the identities of the interviewers and nature of the interview.

EMERSON first met VINCENT FOSTER after the presidential inauguration on January 20, 1993. EMERSON had recently moved from California to Washington, DC and was alone. DEB COYLE and BRUCE LINDSEY, EMERSON's superior, would arrange social occasions such as dinners for the new people at The White House, especially those from Arkansas. EMERSON would talk to FOSTER at these events as well as at work. KIMBERLY MARTEAU, EMERSON's wife, also attended these functions when she moved to Washington in late April or early May 1993.

EMERSON said he spoke to VINCE FOSTER on Monday, July 19, 1993 as well as on the day of FOSTER's death, July 20th. EMERSON related that he saw FOSTER on Monday at the regularly scheduled Department Deputy's meeting. FOSTER appeared, in EMERSON's words, "lackluster." EMERSON next saw FOSTER on July 20 at lunch time. EMERSON, whose office at the time was on the first floor of The White House west wing, walked to FOSTER's office on the second floor of the west wing to ask FOSTER a question. FOSTER was eating lunch and, in EMERSON's words, "really looked down." EMERSON commented on that and FOSTER told him about "how tough things were" and about having a fun weekend with his friends, the HUBBELL's, on the Eastern Shore. FOSTER mentioned a recent editorial that appeared in the Wall Street Journal that was critical of him. EMERSON said FOSTER seemed to "shrug it off" and said he realized the importance of getting out of town "to clear your head." EMERSON agreed, asked his question and returned to his office.

That night, at about 10:30 pm, EMERSON received a telephone call at his home from BRUCE LINDSEY. LINDSEY told EMERSON that VINCE FOSTER was dead, and that it appeared to be a suicide. EMERSON hung up the phone and he and his wife, KIMBERLY

MARTEAU, drove to The White House. They wanted to be with people they knew both to receive and provide comfort and consolation. They arrived around 11:00 pm and went to BRUCE LINDSEY's office on the first floor of the west wing. EMERSON recalled seeing DEB COYLE, BRUCE LINDSEY, BILL BURTON, CHERYL MILLS, DANA LAWRENCE and possibly MARK GEARAN. BRUCE LINDSEY made many phone calls to notify people about the death. EMERSON and MARTEAU remained in LINDSEY's office or in the hallway outside it until they exited The White House at about 1:00 am.

EMERSON said he never heard any conversation about FOSTER's office, papers, etc. Most conversation was in shocked and grieving tones. EMERSON pointed out that he stayed on the first floor, while FOSTER's office was on the second floor. EMERSON was not able to see the elevator or stairs to the second floor. Most people at The White House that evening left at about the time EMERSON did.

The next day, July 21, 1993, EMERSON arrived at work shortly before a senior staff meeting at 8:00 am. He noted everyone was depressed and dazed. He doesn't recall many details about that day. Later he recalled, a meeting was called for the entire staff in room 450 of the Old Executive Office Building. President CLINTON, Chief of Staff MCLARTY and Counsel NUSSBAUM spoke.

EMERSON said he was not coached, or told what to say to investigators. He never heard anyone give directions about FOSTER's office, documents or belongings.

JOE ERRERA, Supervisory Special Agent, FBI Laboratory, DNA unit; (202) 324-4364, was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose for the interview. ERRERA provided the following information:

ERRERA examined the underwear of VINCENT W. FOSTER. One of the examinations that ERRERA conducted was for semen. ERRERA stated that this is not a routine exam, and that he was simply attempting to isolate any DNA material that was foreign to the decedent.

ERRERA located a three to four inch semen stain on the inside front of the decedent's underwear. ERRERA also located a small unconfirmed blood smear on the right front of the underwear. ERRERA stated that it is his opinion that the stain is a blood stain, as the stain did not test positive for blood. ERRERA stated that this stain is attributable to through-the-pants seepage, or handling of the body.

The semen stain could have survived laundry, but that is unlikely due to the condition of the underwear. ERRERA stated that the underwear contained an amount of starch, which indicates that the underwear was fresh, as well as the solubility of the stain, which was difficult to isolate from the underwear due to the amount of starch. Additionally, the semen stain would have been more degraded if it had passed through the laundry. ERRERA stated that the stain was consistent with after laundering.

ERRERA stated that the stain was probably due to spontaneous ejaculation resulting from the nature of the wound; the decedent died of a head wound. However, ERRERA stated that the pathologist would need to confirm this.

ERRERA stated that he did not test the underwear for urine, but observed a yellowish stain on the underwear which was consistent with urine.

EVANTASH does not recall any specific details about her activities on July 20, 1993, which was the date of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. Although EVANTASH never met FOSTER, she recalls that people who knew FOSTER were very sad once news of his death spread.

EVANTASH performed a variety of tasks at the Office of Personnel Security, including such duties as typing, filing and working on specific projects. EVANTASH typed a large number of memoranda during her work at the White House but she has "no clue" whether she typed or read a memorandum bearing a chronology of the activities of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE on and about July 21, 1993. LIVINGSTONE's requests for typing of memoranda and other documents were typically distributed to various members of the staff at the Office of Personnel Security. Any documents containing information of a more sensitive nature would have been typed by LIVINGSTONE's assistant, MARI ANDERSON.

RODGER L. FIRESTONE, Jr. was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. FIRESTONE is a sergeant with the United States Secret Service (USSS), Uniform Division, White House Branch. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, FIRESTONE provided the following information:

FIRESTONE is currently a supervisor in the K-9 section of the USSS Uniform Division. On July 20, 1993, which was the date of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr., FIRESTONE worked a shift from 2:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. in the USSS Control Center.

At the outset of the interview, FIRESTONE was asked to review a single sheet of paper labeled an "on-line activity report" which is a log that reflects intrusion detection events in the office suite of White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM on July 20 and 21, 1993. After FIRESTONE reviewed the document, the interview continued.

The log reflects that on July 20, 1993 at 2004 hours (8:04 p.m.), the alarm in the White House Counsel's Office suite, which had been in "access" mode, i.e., employees were free to move about the suite as during the business day, was placed into alarm mode by an individual named CASTLETON. FIRESTONE believes that the intrusion alarm for the suite was in access mode just prior to CASTLETON departing the suite. When CASTLETON was preparing to leave the suite, he apparently called the USSS Control Center and told the officer who answered the telephone that he was leaving the suite. FIRESTONE surmises that one of two events probably then occurred: either CASTLETON did not leave the suite immediately or the officer in the USSS Control Center immediately set up (turned on) the alarm for the suite, i.e. immediately after CASTLETON hung up the telephone but before CASTLETON had an opportunity to depart the suite. As a result, when CASTLETON left the suite, the alarm was triggered, sending a signal to the USSS Control Center and causing an entry to be generated on the log about the alarm.

Between the hours of 8:04 p.m. and 9:14 p.m. on July 20, 1993, the White House Counsel's Office suite was not protected by the alarm system because the alarm had already been triggered when CASTLETON departed. Since the alarm remained triggered during this seventy (70) minute period, any authorized entries or unauthorized intrusions into the suite during that period would not have been detected by the alarm system.

FIRESTONE has no direct knowledge regarding the actions of the officer monitoring the alarm board at the USSS Control Center on the night of July 20, 1993. However, based on his review of the log and his knowledge of how the USSS Control Center operates, FIRESTONE offered the following description of how events may have transpired in relation to the alarm at 8:04 p.m. on that date:

The officer monitoring the alarm board at the USSS Control Center received the signal that the alarm at the White House Counsel's Office suite had been triggered at 8:04 p.m. Knowing that CASTLETON had just called the USSS Control Center to report that he was about to depart the suite, the monitoring officer assumed the signal reflecting an activated alarm in the suite was a malfunction caused by CASTLETON failing to set up the alarm properly. No USSS officer was sent to the suite because such malfunctions are quite common, with one or more sometimes occurring per shift. Since the USSS officers' shift ended at 10:00 p.m., the officer monitoring the alarm board probably began to check the alarm board at approximately 9:00 p.m. so that he could turn over the board to the officer relieving him without any unresolved matters. At or about 9:14 p.m., the officer monitoring the alarm board observed that the alarm in the White House Counsel's Office suite was still activated from the event at 8:04 p.m. Therefore, at 9:14 p.m. the officer monitoring the alarm board was able to reset the alarm in the suite from his remote location in the USSS Control Center.

The audible alert sound on the alarm board, which is designed to alert the monitoring officer that an alarm has been triggered, may have been silenced inadvertently by the monitoring officer during the course of his work. If the audible alert were silenced, the screen monitored by the officer at the alarm board would have shown the phrase "acknowledged time out."

Since the USSS officers' shift ended at 10:00 p.m., the officer monitoring the alarm board probably began to check the alarm board at approximately 9:00 p.m. so that he could turn over the board to the officer relieving him without any unresolved matters. At or about 9:14 p.m., the officer monitoring the alarm board observed that the alarm in the White House Counsel's Office suite was still activated from the event at 8:04 p.m. Therefore, at 9:14 p.m. the officer monitoring the alarm board was able to reset the alarm in the suite from his remote location in the USSS Control Center.

The audible alert sound on the alarm board, which is designed to alert the monitoring officer that an alarm has been triggered, may have been silenced inadvertently by the monitoring officer during the course of his work. If the audible alert were silenced, the screen monitored by the officer at the alarm board would have shown the phrase "acknowledged time out."

RODGER L. FIRESTONE, JR. was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). FIRESTONE is a Sergeant with the United States Secret Service (USSS), Uniformed Division, White House Branch. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview, FIRESTONE thereafter provided the following information:

On July 20, 1993, FIRESTONE was assigned as the Control Center Supervisor, in the Old Executive Office Building. In this capacity, FIRESTONE oversaw operations of the shift to which he was assigned. The shift was composed of four other USSS officers. These officers were responsible for maintaining White House compound alarms, setting up of protective details, and scheduling. FIRESTONE worked a 2:00 pm to 10:00 pm shift on July 20, 1993, the date of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.

FIRESTONE had no specific recollection regarding any activities related to the death of FOSTER. Control Center personnel may have first become aware of FOSTER's death through the monitoring of network television sets carrying network programming within the Control Center. He could not recall if the announcement of FOSTER's death was part of a network or local television newscast. FIRESTONE recalls receiving no special instructions with regard to the handling of FOSTER's death. According to FIRESTONE there was no official White House notification of FOSTER'S death while he was on duty on the evening of July 20, 1993.

FIRESTONE did not know VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. Officers working with him in the Control Center may have recognized FOSTER's name. FIRESTONE noted that the USSS Control Center is in a separate building from the Office of the Counsel to the President, the office in which VINCENT FOSTER worked.

According to FIRESTONE, when an individual departs an area containing an alarm, the individual would call into the Control Center within a two minute time period of the alarm being tripped. If no one calls the Control Center after an alarm indication has been received, a USSS officer would be sent to investigate the location of the alarm. If an unauthorized person was entering the scene or an area is unsecure, a security violation form is filled out (SSF-2046). FIRESTONE had no recollection of an alarm going off on the evening of July 20, 1993. FIRESTONE advised that copies of form SSF-2046 are maintained for past and current years by the USSS. Previous years are maintained in a central filing system.

FIRESTONE was not aware of any cameras being located within the Counsel's office suite at The White House.

FIRESTONE had no knowledge of documents being removed from the Counsel's office suite on the evening of July 20, 1993. His only knowledge of documents possibly being removed from FOSTER's office is from news reports. He had no knowledge of any documents being moved from either FOSTER's office or subsequently being moved from the west wing of The White House on the morning of July 21, 1993.

FIRESTONE did not know MARGARET WILLIAMS, Chief of Staff to the First Lady. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE was somewhat familiar to FIRESTONE. LIVINGSTONE may have had an office in the west wing of The White House.

Subsequent to the death of VINCENT FOSTER, JR., FIRESTONE was aware that a USSS post was set up outside FOSTER's office. Officer PHILLIPS, was one of the Officers assigned to that post.

RODGER L. FIRESTONE, JR. is described from observation in interview as follows:

Sex:	Male
Race:	White
Date of Birth:	FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C)
Place of Birth:
Social Security Number:
Work Telephone Number:	(202) 395-4342

FIRESTONE does not recall which officer was monitoring the alarm board in the USSS Control Center on the night of July 20, 1993. Although there may be USSS records which reflect the name of the officer assigned to monitor the alarm board that night, these records would only reflect the assignments which were made and not necessarily the assignments actually worked by the officers that night.

FIRESTONE knows of no documents or reports, other than the log shown to him by the interviewing agents, which would have been generated regarding the fact that the alarm system was not functioning to detect intrusions at the White House Counsel's Office suite between 8:04 p.m. and 9:14 p.m. on July 20, 1993.

Based on observation and interview, FIRESTONE is described as follows:

Donald A. Flynn, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service, (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. ASAC Flynn was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for 12 years and is currently in charge of USSS agent liaison with the Uniform Division of USSS concerning security matters at The White House. He has been in his current position for approximately two and one half years and was so employed at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death on July 20, 1993. His office is located in the Old Executive Office Building, Room 150 and his telephone number is 202-456-2443.

On the evening of July 20, 1993, he was contacted at his residence and informed of Vincent Foster's apparent suicide. On the morning of July 21, he was on duty at The White House when he was telephonically contacted by the USSS Director's Office at approximately 10-10:30 am. Linda Tripp, a Special Assistant to White House Counsel, Bernard Nussbaum, had contacted the USSS Director's Office on behalf of Mr. Nussbaum requesting that USSS provide appropriate means to secure Vincent Foster's office. ASAC Flynn proceeded immediately to Bernard Nussbaum's office where he spoke with Ms. Tripp and Mr. Nussbaum and was told that an investigation would shortly be underway regarding Mr. Foster's death and that he should "seal this office". ASAC Flynn looked into Foster's office, saw no one and positioned himself at a point in the Counsel reception area that allowed him a view of the entrances of both Nussbaum and Foster's offices. He thereafter telephonically requested sufficient uniformed USSS personnel to establish an hour-by-hour watch on Mr. Foster's office door. He assumed that these watch shifts would continue indefinitely until USSS was advised that they were no longer necessary. USSS Officer, Michelle Macon, took over this newly established guard post at approximately 11 am and ASAC Flynn left the area. Prior to leaving, however, he explained to Macon and instructed her to explain to subsequent officers relieving her that it would be necessary for them to make note of anyone entering Foster's office and to ascertain why they were so entering. ASAC Flynn was shown a copy of a handwritten document captioned "log of persons entering Mr. Foster's office" with entries for July 21, 1993 and July 22, 1993. He advised that this is a copy of the handwritten log that he kept with entries given to him by various USSS employees who were on duty at the entrance to Foster's office. ASAC Flynn stated that other than this temporary log, USSS also has, for years, maintained an on-going log showing access to the Presidential Counsel suite of offices before and after normal working hours. Since the door to the Presidential Counsel suite is alarmed and monitored by a 24-hour a day USSS center, the first person entering this space in the early morning and the last person leaving this space in the late evening are required to check in with the USSS monitoring center. ASAC Flynn stated that USSS Inspector, Dennis Martin, could make available copies of this alarm log for pertinent dates.

ASAC Flynn said that shortly after positioning a uniformed USSS officer outside Foster's door, he briefed the USSS Director on requests made of USSS and actions taken to that point. During that conversation he was advised that USSS and Department of Justice (DOJ) officials had discussed the possibility of putting a lock on Foster's door to seal it for investigation.

At approximately 1:00 pm Captain Hume and Detective Pete Markland of the United States Park Police and Special Agent (SA) Scott Salter and SA John Danna of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) came to USSS Inspector Dennis Martin's office. They had come to The White House for the purpose of searching Foster's office but apparently did not believe that they, at that time, had proper authorization to conduct the search. A lengthy series of telephone calls ensued to Park Police and FBI officials seeking this authority and at approximately 4:30-5:00 pm two DOJ attorneys, David Margolis and Roger Adams, arrived at the west wing lobby of The White House to join this group. ASAC Flynn escorted the four Law Enforcement Officials and two DOJ attorneys to the office of Bernard Nussbaum at approximately 5 pm where they met Mr. Nussbaum, Cliff Sloan, Steve Neuwirth and James Hamilton who was identified as the Foster family's attorney. ASAC Flynn noted that a USSS uniformed officer was on duty outside the door to Foster's office when they arrived.

Once the group was inside Mr. Nussbaum's office, a meeting took place that involved considerable conversation as to how and when a search/inventory of Foster's office would take place in an attempt to find any indication as to why Foster may have committed suicide. During this meeting Mr. Nussbaum said that he, Maggie Williams and Patsy Thomasson had been in Foster's office during the evening of July 20, following his death. He also mentioned that he (Nussbaum) and his secretary, Betsy Pond had been in Foster's office during the morning hours of July 21. After considerable conversation regarding a potential search for a "suicide note" in Foster's office, Flynn recalled a telephone call being made to Phil Heyman at the Department of Justice. During this telephone call the DOJ and Nussbaum apparently agreed that a search of Foster's office would take place on July 22. Mr. Nussbaum also said to the group that a lock was to be placed on Foster's office following the July 21 meeting. The meeting then broke up with the attendees agreeing to meet in Nussbaum's office the next afternoon to conduct the search/inventory.

ASAC Flynn stated that when the meeting was over he began making telephone calls to arrange to have a lock placed on Foster's door. During these conversations he learned that USSS Technical employees Roger Kammerdiner and John Wills had at approximately 4-5:00 pm come by Foster's office to survey the door for the purpose of determining what type of lock would best secure it. USSS Security Specialist, Kevin Robbins and a USSS contract employee, Kenneth Blair arrived at Foster's office at approximately 8 pm where they met with ASAC Flynn and began installing the lock. ASAC Flynn dismissed the USSS uniformed officer from the Foster post at approximately 8 pm. The lock installation and door alterations were accomplished by approximately 10:30 pm at which time ASAC Flynn and all USSS personnel departed the 2nd floor of The White House west wing. ASAC Flynn advised that the lock that was placed on Foster's door was property of the USSS and was a unique lock in that it had only one master key and one copy rather than being a series key lock. ASAC Flynn explained that most locks that are placed on doors have a series key and that anyone having a copy within the series, which is relatively easy to obtain, could open the lock. When ASAC Flynn and the other USSS personnel departed the 2nd floor that night, Flynn had the master key and only copy to the lock in his possession.

At approximately 1 pm on July 22, 1993, a group of men met in the office of Bernard Nussbaum, as previously agreed, for the purpose of searching/inventorying Foster's office. ASAC Flynn described the group as: Mr. Nussbaum, Steve Neuwirth, Cliff Sloan, and Bill Burton, all members of The White House staff; Michael Spafford, an attorney representing the Foster family; David Margolis and Roger Adams, DOJ attorneys; Captain Charles Hume and Detective Pete Markland, U.S. Park Police; SAs Scott Salter and Dennis Condon, FBI; and ASAC Paul Imbordino and himself (Flynn). At approximately 1:15 pm Flynn unlocked the door to Foster's office and the group entered. Bernard Nussbaum sat at Foster's desk with Burton, Neuwirth and Sloan all behind Foster's desk. The remainder of the group either sat or stood in front of Foster's desk. Nussbaum then proceeded to go through Foster's desk, his brief case, and papers on the top of his desk and various papers and binders in a filing cabinet and book shelves. In the process of going through these documents, Nussbaum was placing them in 3 stacks: personal items, items of privileged information relating to President and Mrs. Clinton, and White House related papers. Throughout this process Nussbaum generally decided which stack each document went in to, but from time to time Burton, Neuwirth, or Sloan would look at a document and whisper advice to Nussbaum. At no time were the law enforcement officials or DOJ attorneys present allowed to peruse the documents. There seemed to a general understanding that the purpose of this search was to hopefully find a suicide note or other items that would indicate why Foster may have committed suicide. The sorted items were placed in cardboard boxes with the items in the "personal" stack given to Michael Spafford for the Foster family. At the conclusion of this meeting, Mr. Nussbaum advised ASAC Flynn that there was no further need to secure the Foster office. He asked for and was given the keys to Foster's office. At 2:49 pm the search of Foster's office ended and everyone exited the Foster office. ASAC Flynn stated that while he does not recall anything specific being said during or after the meeting, regarding the method of the search, the Park Police Law Enforcement personnel present appeared surprised and displeased at the way the search had been conducted and that they were not given any material located during the search.

ASAC Flynn stated that he did not know Foster prior to his death and that he has not been in the Foster office since the "search" ended on July 22, 1993. He further stated that to the best of his knowledge, the USSS has not been asked to further secure Foster or Nussbaum's offices since July 22, 1993.

ASAC Flynn was specifically asked if there was a safe or safe-type cabinet in Foster's office. He stated that he does not recall seeing one and does not believe that there was a safe in the office.

Donald A. Flynn, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service, (USSS) was contacted in his office. ASAC Flynn, having previously been advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview provided the following information:

At approximately 10:30 pm on the evening of July 21, 1993, USSS Security Specialist, Kevin Robbins and a USSS contract employee, Kenneth Blair completed the installation of a deadbolt lock on the door of Vincent Foster's office. ASAC Flynn had remained throughout the installation process, had supervised same, and was given the only two keys to this lock upon the completion of its installation. Flynn said that he locked the door and that he, Robbins, and Blair all left the suite at approximately 10:30 pm and went home. He said that he does not recall moving the alarm switch in Foster's office into the "secure" position, thus activating the alarm for the Nussbaum/Foster suite, prior to leaving. He further advised that he does not believe that he did place this alarm in an active mode and he does not recall making any telephone calls to the USSS White House Control Center to advise them that he, Robbins and Blair were leaving the suite for the evening. He said that this would explain why a USSS Control Center test on the suite's alarm system at 11:20 pm on July 21 (as reflected on USSS alarm control log) showed the suite's alarm system in an "access" mode.

Inspector PATRICK J. FORAN Federal Bureau of Investigation, was interviewed regarding his recollection of the number of United States Park Police (USPP) investigative reports received by the FBI regarding the investigation into the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, FORAN thereafter provided the following information:

FORAN recalls reviewing one copy of the USPP report related to the investigation of the death of FOSTER. FORAN did not make any copies of the Park Police report. He was not aware of whether or not anyone else within the FBI made a copy of the Park Police report. After FORAN reviewed the Park Police report, it was then sent to FBI Headquarters investigative files.

FORAN thought that DAVID MARGOLIS, of the United States Department of Justice (DOJ), might be a point of contact regarding the number of copies of the USPP report that was provided to DOJ. Another individual who may be able to provide information regarding the number of USPP reports provided to DOJ might be ROGER ADAMS. ADAMS serves as an assistant to MARGOLIS.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

ELIZABETH BRADEN FOSTER was interviewed in the offices of her attorney, JAMES HAMILTON, who is associated with the law firm of Swidler & Berlin, 3000 K Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. ELIZABETH FOSTER, who is also known as LISA FOSTER, is the widow of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., former Deputy Counsel to the President, who will be referred to as FOSTER in the remainder of this report of interview. Also participating in the interview of LISA FOSTER was RODERICK C. LANKLER, Deputy Counsel, Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. After LISA FOSTER was advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, she furnished the following information:

LISA FOSTER arrived in Washington, D.C. to set up a permanent residence for her family on June 5, 1993. After her arrival, she and FOSTER went jogging along Rock Creek Parkway in the vicinity of Dumbarton Oaks. FOSTER appeared to LISA FOSTER to be jogging at his normal pace that day. After they finished jogging, LISA FOSTER and FOSTER went to a small neighborhood store, purchased orange juice and bagels, and went home and had breakfast. LISA FOSTER recalls that day as being a day of fun and one of their best days together in recent times.

When LISA FOSTER and FOSTER still lived in Arkansas, FOSTER used to jog approximately three to four times per week. LISA FOSTER also began to play tennis at that time. LISA FOSTER and FOSTER would frequently go to a nearby track where each of them would jog at his or her own pace.

When LISA FOSTER saw FOSTER after she arrived in Washington, D.C., she believed that he appeared awful. She believed that most of the weight which FOSTER had lost by that time had been lost prior to his arrival in Washington, D.C.

On June 8, 1993, LISA FOSTER noticed that FOSTER was emotionally down and was slumped in his chair just as his father had been when his father was ill. LISA FOSTER recalls that FOSTER always was worried and stressed. FOSTER told LISA FOSTER that nothing at the White House was going right and he mentioned the example of the ZOE BAIRD nomination.

LISA FOSTER recalls that FOSTER did go jogging on Monday, July 19, 1993 but did not go jogging on July 20, 1993.

FOSTER complained to LISA FOSTER that he was suffering from insomnia, but he did not want to take sleeping pills because he was afraid that he would become addicted to them. FOSTER would get up in the morning and say to LISA FOSTER that he had not slept at all. FOSTER's typical work day began at 8:00 or 8:30 a.m. and continued until 9:30-10:00 p.m.

LISA FOSTER is aware that FOSTER had his blood pressure checked at the White House infirmary on or about July 16, 1993. FOSTER had complained to LISA FOSTER that his heart had been pounding. LISA FOSTER recalls that the blood pressure reading taken on FOSTER on July 16, 1993 did not sound particularly high. FOSTER told her that the White House medical personnel had taken his blood pressure again the same day, approximately ten minutes after the first reading. LISA FOSTER recalls that the initial blood pressure reading was approximately 160/100 and that the later reading was approximately 140/90. After FOSTER related the results of these blood pressure readings to LISA FOSTER, she told him that she would call DR. LARRY WATKINS, their family physician back in Little Rock, Arkansas. LISA FOSTER is not aware of any other time when FOSTER may have gone to have his blood pressure checked. LISA FOSTER is aware that FOSTER's father had suffered a stroke and his mother takes medication for high blood pressure.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any history of depression within the FOSTER family. No one has ever mentioned such a family history to LISA FOSTER. LISA FOSTER is aware that an aunt of FOSTER had some sort of problem and never got married, but LISA FOSTER is not aware of any more specific information about the nature of this problem.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of FOSTER ever having been treated for depression previously or having had medication for depression prescribed for him.

When asked why she and her son called FOSTER's office at the White House on several occasions to ask about FOSTER's well-being, LISA FOSTER responded that she used to call her husband when he worked at the Rose Law Firm all the time, especially if she wanted money. VINCENT FOSTER was very quiet, and LISA FOSTER may have called his secretary just to get a better feel for his condition and state of mind. LISA FOSTER believes that her son, VINCENT W. FOSTER, III, may have called BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Counsel to the President, to confirm whether NUSSBAUM would be speaking to a group of legal aides who were working on Capitol Hill. VINCENT W. FOSTER, III was working for Arkansas Senator DALE BUMPERS at the time and was interested in trying to attend such a speech by NUSSBAUM. LISA FOSTER does not specifically recall any other occasions when she may have called FOSTER's office.

When LISA FOSTER was asked whether FOSTER ever experienced anxiety as a component of his depression, she responded by recalling the night that ZOE BAIRD withdrew from consideration to become Attorney General of the United States. LISA FOSTER recalls that FOSTER came to bed at approximately 2:30 a.m. and he was sweating profusely and just sick. FOSTER felt that everyone was criticizing him, even at home. FOSTER did not enjoy being in the public eye. As an indication of FOSTER's anxiety, LISA FOSTER cites the fact that he told her that he didn't have time to do the taxes. LISA FOSTER recalls that he began to start more of his sentences with the phrase "I just can't handle...." While the FOSTER family was still living in Little Rock, if FOSTER became anxious, he would just go out to his swimming pool in the backyard and work by the pool, particularly if there was a trial approaching. FOSTER was very intense. If an upcoming trial involved a major case, then preparation for that trial would be all that FOSTER would do. FOSTER had a one-track mind when he was preparing for or engaged in a trial. Once FOSTER began working at the White House, there were no breaks in his effort and also no successes. FOSTER was used to always winning, and LISA FOSTER does not recall any instances of FOSTER losing before he joined the administration.

FOSTER has had panic attacks in the past and LISA FOSTER thinks that he had one at least five years ago. At that time, FOSTER told LISA FOSTER that his heart was acting up. FOSTER had a heart monitor attached to him for 24 hours but no abnormalities were found. FOSTER also told LISA FOSTER that he was afraid to speak before crowds, and he said that his knees would shake under such circumstances. LISA FOSTER counseled him to work through his anxiety and ignore its effects simply by anticipating he would feel anxious whenever he spoke before a crowd. LISA FOSTER recalls that when FOSTER spoke before a crowd, he would sweat and turn slightly green in color. LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER's commencement speech at the University of Arkansas Law School is a very good example of how FOSTER appeared when he was suffering such an anxiety attack. LISA FOSTER recalls that he appeared very stiff while making that address. LISA FOSTER recalls three other occasions when FOSTER appeared to be suffering from some sort of panic attack. On one such occasion, FOSTER called the FOSTER residence in Little Rock and left a recorded message on the answering machine about the need for him to resign from the Little Rock Country Club because of its alleged discriminatory practices. LISA FOSTER recalls that the sound of FOSTER's voice on the tape made her believe that FOSTER had been crying. The other two occasions when FOSTER sounded choked up and tense were when the Branch Davidian complex near Waco, Texas had burned, and the occasion of the issuance of the White House report on the Travel Office affair in which FOSTER was reprimanded.

LISA FOSTER does not recall any incidents in which FOSTER was hospitalized for physical or mental ailments. She recalls that FOSTER once cut his chin and received stitches as an outpatient. She cannot recall any other instances when FOSTER received care at a hospital.

FOSTER was greatly affected by the death of his father, VINCENT FOSTER, SR. FOSTER did not sob when his father died, but he also did not remain unaffected by the death. FOSTER cared for his father during the last few months of his father's life when he was suffering from cancer. LISA FOSTER recalls that she and FOSTER were told by the doctors that FOSTER's father would live approximately six to eighteen months. As soon as the FOSTER family left Arkansas and arrived in Michigan for a vacation, they learned that FOSTER's father was dying. FOSTER attempted to return to Arkansas from Michigan quickly, but he did not arrive home in time to be with his father before his father passed away. After the funeral for FOSTER's father had been held, FOSTER returned to Michigan with the intention of spending spend time with his family. Instead, he used his time with the family in Michigan to write thank you notes to people who had offered condolences to the other members of his family and himself.

LISA FOSTER did have contact with DR. LARRY WATKINS subsequent to FOSTER's death. DR. WATKINS was the first person she called after she learned of her husband's death. She called DR. WATKINS the night of July 20, 1993 and asked him what in the hell happened. She also asked DR. WATKINS, "Could it have been the pill?" DR. WATKINS responded to LISA FOSTER that the pill could not have been the cause of the suicide and he further stated that FOSTER's depression must have been acute. DR. WATKINS is an internist who provided full physical examinations to both LISA FOSTER and FOSTER every two years.

In speaking with DR. WATKINS, LISA FOSTER learned that FOSTER had called DR. WATKINS and told him that he thought he was fighting depression. DR. WATKINS related to LISA FOSTER that he had then called in a prescription for an anti-depressant drug. LISA FOSTER did not know ahead of time that FOSTER was going to call DR. WATKINS, and she did not overhear the conversation between FOSTER and DR. WATKINS.

When LISA FOSTER was asked whether it would have been uncharacteristic of FOSTER to reach out to someone regarding a problem such as depression, she replied that FOSTER would have reached out if he were really scared or were at home rather than at the White House. During one conversation, FOSTER told LISA FOSTER that SHEILA (FOSTER's sister, SHEILA ANTHONY) says sometimes that "it" is chemical. FOSTER did not explain to LISA FOSTER what he was referring to when he talked about "it" or "this thing." LISA FOSTER did not understand what his reference meant when he referred to it as being chemical. LISA FOSTER offered to call a doctor for FOSTER but he said that he would make the call.

FOSTER had a prescription for a sleeping pill called Restoril (phonetic). LISA FOSTER had filled a new prescription for this sleeping pill, but she is now unable to find the pills. LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER threw the pills away so that she would not be able to consume them once she learned of his death.

Prior to FOSTER's death, SHEILA ANTHONY never mentioned depression to LISA FOSTER in relation to FOSTER.

When asked whether FOSTER had ever approached LISA FOSTER for help in dealing with his problem with depression, LISA FOSTER recalls that he mentioned his depression to her on approximately July 16, 1993. LISA FOSTER then arranged to go away for the weekend with FOSTER to the Tidewater Inn on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. LISA FOSTER made all the arrangements for the weekend and asked FOSTER to be home by 3:00 p.m. that Friday, which was July 16, 1993. Instead, FOSTER arrived home at approximately 4:00 p.m., and she and FOSTER had to drive through terrible traffic to reach the inn. Because FOSTER appeared to be under stress to her, LISA FOSTER offered to drive. FOSTER agreed to have her drive, but there was no opportunity to pull over and change drivers so FOSTER ended up driving the entire way to the Tidewater Inn.

LISA FOSTER has no knowledge of any available records which might indicate that her husband had previously received psychiatric counseling.

FOSTER did not experience either stress or depression while he was studying in law school. FOSTER never had to study at night because he was able to do his studying during the morning hours prior to class. After rising in the morning and driving LISA FOSTER to her place of employment, FOSTER would return home and study.

FOSTER did not attend his graduation from law school for a number of reasons. FOSTER graduated during the middle of the school year, i.e., in the month of January. Because of the timing of his graduation and because FOSTER had already begun work at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Arkansas, FOSTER would have had to take off time from work in order to attend graduation. Other reasons why the FOSTERS did not attend the graduation were that the trip back to Fayetteville, Arkansas would have involved significant expenses and LISA FOSTER was pregnant at the time. LISA FOSTER recalls that the graduation ceremony was nothing special because it was conducted as part of the same ceremony held for other schools within the University.

LISA FOSTER has many copies of the text of FOSTER's commencement address to the University of Arkansas School of Law. She also has a copy of the videotape of that address by FOSTER. The text of FOSTER's speech is contained in the most recent copy of the University of Arkansas Law Review.

During the last few months of his life, FOSTER was reading such books as The Making of a President, Ross Perot's book, a book entitled Putting People First, and other books, titles unrecalled, on the subject of ethics. LISA FOSTER is unable to recall the titles of any of the books which FOSTER may have been reading for pleasure just prior to his death.

LISA FOSTER and her family did employ housekeepers in their residences in both Little Rock and Washington. In Little Rock, LISA FOSTER employed a housekeeper for approximately 22 years. In Washington, LISA FOSTER employed a woman named LORETTA SEARS who came to clean the FOSTER residence once a week. SEARS had worked for the tenants who had resided previously in the FOSTER house. LISA FOSTER does not believe that SEARS ever saw FOSTER because he typically left for work prior to her arrival at the house and he always returned home after SEARS had already departed.

When asked whether NUSSBAUM had given her an envelope in his office at the White House, LISA FOSTER responded yes, that he had given her a number of torn pieces of yellow in a white envelope. The envelope was already in the office when LISA FOSTER arrived there. NUSSBAUM showed the contents of the envelope to LISA FOSTER, and he assembled the pieces of yellow paper so that she could read the writing on it. NUSSBAUM had already had a transcript prepared of the content of this note. LISA FOSTER believes that she saw this torn note on the evening of July 26, 1993. When she saw the note, LISA FOSTER recognized the writing as being the handwriting of FOSTER. LISA FOSTER was not allowed to touch the note, and there was no other envelope or note.

LISA FOSTER's attorney, JAMES HAMILTON, interjected at this point in the interview that he had been at the White House when LISA FOSTER examined the note.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any other note relating to the death of FOSTER.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any personal or family reason which would account for FOSTER researching medical malpractice issues. First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON had asked FOSTER to write the malpractice section of the newly proposed health care plan. In addition, one of FOSTER's first legal cases had been a case involving medical malpractice.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any indication, nor does she suspect, that her husband had become aware of anything illegal or highly damaging to either the CLINTONS or the White House which would have presented him with irreconcilable pressures. LISA FOSTER notes that FOSTER never told her anything about his clients.

FOSTER never expressed any concern to LISA FOSTER about either Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. LISA FOSTER had never even heard of either of these entities at that point in her life.

When asked to furnish an opinion as to what FOSTER may have been working on that caused him stress or might explain his condition of depression, LISA FOSTER responded that the Travel Office fiasco may have been the source of the stress. She noted that if the Travel Office had been the only difficulty facing FOSTER, it would not have been so bad. At one point, FOSTER called the family together and warned his family that the next six months might be particularly difficult. Toward the end of his life, FOSTER had no sense of joy or elation at work. The Branch Davidian incident near Waco, Texas was also causing him a great deal of stress. LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER was horrified when the Branch Davidian complex burned. FOSTER believed that everything was his fault. On such issues as the ZOE BAIRD nomination and gays in the military, it seemed that the White House Counsel's Office was not doing a particularly good job, although LISA FOSTER felt that the attorneys themselves were doing good work. FOSTER was extremely fond of NUSSBAUM. If either President CLINTON or NUSSBAUM was being criticized, FOSTER felt that he was also being criticized. FOSTER was very happy about the nominations of JANET RENO as Attorney General of the United States and RUTH BADER GINSBURG as a Supreme Court Justice.

At this point in the interview, HAMILTON interjected that he sat next to Justice GINSBURG when she was first nominated for her position, and he noted that FOSTER was very touched by Justice GINSBURG's speech.

LISA FOSTER stayed home and did not attend the nomination ceremony for Justice GINSBURG.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of what may have been in her husband's office at the White House that led White House staff to search FOSTER's office immediately after her husband's death. LISA FOSTER also does not know anything about what may have caused NUSSBAUM to conduct an official search of her husband's office in a manner which excluded investigators from law enforcement agencies.

LISA FOSTER is not exactly aware of what role her husband played in the firing of the seven individuals from the White House Travel Office. FOSTER was distressed because he felt that if he had spoken first with WILLIAM KENNEDY, who was also an attorney in the White House Counsel's Office, then the Federal Bureau of Investigation would not have been called into the case. However, no one heeded FOSTER's advice on this matter.

LISA FOSTER is aware that FOSTER was compiling a list of attorneys to represent him regarding the White House Travel Office matter. FOSTER wanted to have an attorney represent him because he did not have time to do his work at the White House and prepare a defense for himself. LISA FOSTER recalls that Senator DOLE had written a letter on July 15, 1993 requesting a Congressional investigation of the Travel Office matter. VINCENT W. FOSTER, III had attended a Senate Judiciary Committee meeting when an investigation of the Travel Office matter was called for but the motion to conduct such an investigation was tabled. VINCENT FOSTER, III told LISA FOSTER about the proposal for Congressional hearings, but she did not think that it was a big deal.

LISA FOSTER does not think that FOSTER contacted any of the attorneys on the list of attorneys which had been furnished to him by BERYL ANTHONY. LISA FOSTER is aware that FOSTER contacted her attorney, JAMES HAMILTON, as well as attorney JAMES LYONS and, although she was not privy to the conversations, she believes that these conversations related to the Travel Office matter.

FOSTER had not kept a diary during the course of his relationship with LISA FOSTER. He used to keep trip logs whenever the family went on vacation. At the end of each day of a trip, FOSTER would write down what the family had done that day while on vacation. However, FOSTER did not keep such notes when he was at home or in relation to his work. LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER may have begun to keep a diary on election night of 1992 because he believed that from that time period forward would be a period worth remembering.

LISA FOSTER does not believe it would have been uncharacteristic of her husband to maintain such a diary because he was very excited about the formation of the new administration. As an indication of this excitement, she notes that he chose to write about election night, the inauguration, and the nomination of Attorney General JANET RENO.

LISA FOSTER's daughter, LAURA FOSTER, was the primary driver of the Honda automobile which was found at Fort Marcy Park, Virginia on July 20, 1993. The Honda automobile belonged to LAURA FOSTER and also to one of LISA FOSTER's sons. The son and daughter shared the automobile. LAURA FOSTER had used the Honda while she was attending Vanderbilt University and then had driven it to Washington. The Honda automobile was the only car which FOSTER and LAURA FOSTER had with them in Washington until LISA FOSTER arrived with the other family members and with the Lexus automobile owned by their family.

It was not only typical for FOSTER to drive the Honda to work at the White House, it was imperative.

The contents found in the Honda on July 20, 1993, e.g., the cigarette pack, beer cans, and corkscrew, belonged to LISA FOSTER's son. FOSTER himself did not smoke. FOSTER's sons had gone to the beach the weekend preceding July 20, 1993, and the refuse from the weekend was still in the passenger compartment of the Honda when it was searched by police at Fort Marcy Park.

The Honda is no longer in the possession of LISA FOSTER because she sold the car to her brother-in-law, who in turn is leasing the car to her brother in Nashville, Tennessee.

LISA FOSTER describes the color of the Honda as taupe or grayish. She further describes it as a light color.

FOSTER had not made specific plans for the weekend which followed his death. He had spoken with LISA FOSTER about going away for that weekend and about coming home early from work so they could get an early start on the weekend. LISA FOSTER had talked to him about trying to go away every weekend. They had spoken about trying to go to Pennsylvania the following weekend but had not made any reservations.

There were no domestic problems between LISA FOSTER and FOSTER during the entirety of their twenty-five year relationship.

In terms of people in whom her husband would confide, LISA FOSTER believes that he would have confided in herself and his sister, SHEILA ANTHONY. FOSTER would also be likely to confide in his children, particularly his daughter LAURA. FOSTER would also confide in his son, VINCENT FOSTER, III, and he would have confided in his father if his father were still alive.

On the evening of July 19, 1993, LISA FOSTER cooked dinner at home. When FOSTER returned home from work, he came into the house and smiled at LISA FOSTER while saying that a quarter to eight was not bad. LISA FOSTER responded to him that she was thinking that he would be home at 6:30 or 7:00 p.m. That night, FOSTER received a call from President CLINTON, who invited FOSTER to come to the White House to watch a movie. When FOSTER turned down the invitation from the President, LISA FOSTER was happy. She prepared scallops for all of the family members except for her son BRUGH, who was eating spaghetti.

FOSTER did not mention any conversations from earlier in the day of July 19, 1993 which might have disturbed him.

LISA FOSTER has some knowledge of three letters which were sent out by FOSTER from his office on July 19, 1993. LISA FOSTER is aware of a letter from FOSTER to his mother regarding some leases for mineral rights. LISA FOSTER only saw this letter after FOSTER's death because, as a result of FOSTER's mother signing the letter, LISA FOSTER inherited the mineral rights. LISA FOSTER does not recall exactly how she saw these mineral leases. One of the remaining two letters may have been for payment of a life insurance premium, but LISA FOSTER does not recall whether she or FOSTER mailed this letter.

FOSTER had never spoken to LISA FOSTER about visiting Fort Marcy Park in the past, and she had never heard of the park prior to her husband's death.

LISA FOSTER does not know whether VINCENT FOSTER ever visited Fort Marcy Park prior to the day of his death but she doubts it.

LISA FOSTER has no idea what her husband did after he left the White House on July 20, 1993. She has checked both gas receipts and credit card receipts, but no purchases or other clues have been identified.

LISA FOSTER had no contact, including telephone calls, with her husband after he left their home on the morning of July 20, 1993. LISA FOSTER recalls one unusual event that morning which was that FOSTER asked her what she was going to be doing that day. It was uncommon for FOSTER to ask her about her plans, and it was also memorable to her that he asked because she was unusually busy that day.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of FOSTER returning home after leaving his office at the White House on July 20, 1993. It is her opinion that he did not return home on that date.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any particular local spots frequented by FOSTER, such as restaurants or bars, which might assist investigators in attempting to trace FOSTER's activities on July 20, 1993. A Washington restaurant, La Tomate, was the only place where FOSTER would eat out during the business day.

On July 20, 1993, LISA FOSTER played tennis at approximately 8:30 a.m. At 11:45 a.m., she attended a meeting relating to multiple sclerosis. Prior to attending the meeting, LISA FOSTER woke her son so that he could drive her to the meeting. DONNA KAY MCLARTY had also invited LISA FOSTER out. LISA FOSTER had been in Washington for approximately six weeks, but she and MCLARTY had not seen each other much, so they agreed to go to a restaurant at the Four Seasons Hotel for lunch. At approximately 3:30 p.m., LISA FOSTER and MCLARTY took a taxi back to FOSTER's house. From there, LISA FOSTER and MCLARTY went to the MCLARTY residence where their respective sons met with each other. At approximately 5:00 p.m., LISA FOSTER returned home and called the White House to speak to her husband. LISA FOSTER thought that it was NANCY HEMREICH's week to be at the office, but she was told by DEBORAH GORHAM that HEMREICH's week would be the following week. GORHAM told LISA FOSTER that FOSTER was unavailable to come to the phone.

When asked whether she had made a remark about FOSTER putting the gun in his mouth, LISA FOSTER replied that when she was notified of his death, someone kept saying that FOSTER had shot himself in the head. LISA FOSTER recalls that she was very concerned about how FOSTER had shot himself because she was trying to imagine what he looked like and wondering whether he had suffered. She further said that she was concerned about whether he had blown his head off.

FOSTER had never spoken with LISA FOSTER before about suicide and he had never attempted suicide before. LISA FOSTER believes that her husband took his life because he was so terribly depressed.

LISA FOSTER has no doubts that her husband took his own life and she had no such doubts on the night of July 20, 1993.

LISA FOSTER was concerned about the autopsy being performed on her husband because she wanted to know his mental state at the time that he died. She also wanted to know if he had taken the sleeping pills or if he had been consuming alcohol or was drunk. She did not have any influence or input into causing the autopsy to be conducted so promptly.

In terms of other drugs which may have been prescribed for FOSTER in the past, LISA FOSTER is aware of the sleeping pill Restoril having been prescribed. She also recalls that an antibiotic was prescribed for FOSTER in approximately December 1992. LISA FOSTER recalls that Feldene was prescribed for treatment of FOSTER's tennis elbow.

LISA FOSTER is aware that her husband took one 50 milligram dose of Trazadone on the evening of July 19, 1993 because she told her husband to take one pill and she watched him take it. She does not know if he took any sleeping pills on that evening. On the morning of July 20, 1993, FOSTER told LISA FOSTER that he did not go out for a jog because it would take him too long to cool off. LISA FOSTER notes that her house has only one bathroom for such a large family. She notes further that, due to her relatively early departure from home on July 20, 1993, there were several family members attempting to use the single bathroom during the same period of time.

FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

At this point in the interview, LISA FOSTER was asked to examine a pair of eyeglasses which had been found in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. LISA FOSTER held the glasses, examined them, and then stated that the eyeglasses appeared to be those of her husband. LISA FOSTER noted that the tips of the stems of the eyeglasses had bite marks on them, which was an observation consistent with one of her husband's habits. FOSTER had frequently chewed on the tips of his eyeglasses as a nervous habit.

LISA FOSTER then examined a revolver which had been brought to the interview by the interviewing agents. FOSTER examined the revolver, which had also been found at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993, and stated that she believed it may be a gun which she formerly saw in her residence in Little Rock, Arkansas.

LISA FOSTER then examined a photocopy of a handwritten note which has previously been identified as having been written by her late husband. LISA FOSTER believes that the original note was written on or about July 11, 1993. LISA FOSTER is not entirely certain of this date and believes that the note was written sometime during the period between July 4 and July 20, 1993. She believes that the note was written by FOSTER in their Washington residence on a day when there were a number of young people in her house. Her son was working as a Senate aide and there were a number of other aides visiting him on that day. LISA FOSTER invited FOSTER to go with her to the store, but he declined to accompany her. FOSTER was upstairs in bed, alternately trying to sleep and work. LISA FOSTER suggested to FOSTER that he write down everything that "they" did wrong. She suggested to FOSTER that he go on the offensive and not continue to take responsibility for every mistake which was made in the White House. FOSTER agreed with LISA FOSTER's suggestion, and he sat up in bed and appeared energized. FOSTER told LISA FOSTER that he had not resigned yet, and he said that he had already written his opening argument in his defense. LISA FOSTER believes that the torn note which was found was actually FOSTER's opening argument in the event he had to testify before Congress.

Although LISA FOSTER did not view or read the note on the day that FOSTER appeared to be energized by her remarks, she is confident that the comments written in the note were written on that same day. LISA FOSTER knows that FOSTER was upset about the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) being called in regarding the Travel Office matter, but she does not believe that FOSTER believed that the FBI had lied. People know that representatives of the media were getting deals through the White House Travel Office. LISA FOSTER is aware that people knew of these deals, but she herself knew nothing about FOSTER's remarks in the note pertaining to the Republicans or the usher's office. LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER was concerned about excessive costs being incurred by the usher's office, but FOSTER never discussed these matters with her.

On Tuesday night, July 13, 1993, FOSTER spoke with LISA FOSTER about resigning. LISA FOSTER encouraged him to stay in his position in the White House Counsel's office. She advised him that Congress would take a recess in August 1993. LISA FOSTER then suggested to FOSTER that he should stay in his current post until Christmas of 1993. LISA FOSTER understood clearly that FOSTER was speaking about the Travel Office when he was speaking of his depression and his concerns.

LISA FOSTER is aware of the whereabouts of some ammunition which was kept at the FOSTER residence in Little Rock prior to her husband's death. She recalls finding a number of shotgun shells in the top drawer of her dresser. She also recalls that there were a number of shotgun shells kept in a closet. In searching her house, LISA FOSTER found a number of 20 gauge and 12 gauge shotgun shells, some .22 caliber ammunition, and possibly some small handgun ammunition. LISA FOSTER does not recall seeing any such ammunition at her house in Washington, D.C.

LISA FOSTER believes that she may have seen the handgun which she examined previously during the interview at her residence in Washington. LISA FOSTER recalls that as she was packing her belongings in Little Rock in preparation for coming to Washington, D.C., she found a handgun inside a travel trunk which had been packed by FOSTER prior to his departure for Washington. Specifically, as LISA FOSTER was packing in Little Rock, she came across a silver-colored gun, which she then packed in with her other property. When LISA FOSTER unpacked the gun in Washington, FOSTER saw the gun and commented on it. LISA FOSTER had not had a prior conversation with FOSTER about bringing a gun to Washington, D.C., but she argued with FOSTER when the gun was unpacked. LISA FOSTER told FOSTER that she did not want any guns in her house in Washington.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any photographs which may be kept in Arkansas which would depict the guns owned by FOSTER's late father. She is only aware of snapshots of family members going hunting.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any records from the elder MR. FOSTER's estate which might describe the firearms he had owned. She is aware of a handwritten note from the elder MR. FOSTER regarding the disposition of his property after he passed away. According to this note, all of the elder MR. FOSTER's guns were left to FOSTER and a diamond was left to LISA FOSTER. After the funeral for FOSTER's father, FOSTER went down to his father's house and retrieved the guns. LISA FOSTER believes that there were approximately three to five handguns included in the guns retrieved by her husband. She believes that her husband obtained all of the guns which were left by FOSTER's father.

LISA FOSTER does not know where her husband kept the guns left to him by his father while the FOSTERS were still living in Little Rock.

LISA FOSTER believes that the shotguns from the estate of the elder MR. FOSTER are currently in the possession of her brother-in-law, who is the husband of her sister. SHARON BOWMAN, FOSTER's sister, has one handgun. LISA FOSTER believes that BERYL ANTHONY has one of the handguns from the estate here in Washington, D.C., but she has not asked ANTHONY that specific question.

FOSTER himself did not like guns. FOSTER's father had given guns to LISA FOSTER's sons, which displeased LISA FOSTER. LISA FOSTER also knows that FOSTER kept a gun in a closet in their home in Washington, D.C. LISA FOSTER was aware of the location of one gun inside her residence in Washington and she found that gun still in its usual location on the night of July 20, 1993. The gun which she found on that date was not the silver gun which she had earlier found in the trunk in Little Rock. LISA FOSTER believes that the gun found at Fort Marcy Park may be the silver gun which she brought up with her other belongings when she permanently moved to Washington. LISA FOSTER does not know with certainty, but she suspects that there were some bullets at the house in Washington, D.C.

Sometime within the last two weeks prior to July 20, 1993, LISA FOSTER told FOSTER to remove the guns from their house in Washington. FOSTER told LISA FOSTER not to remark about the guns in front of the boys. LISA FOSTER believes that she may have told her husband twice during that time to remove the guns, but she never checked to see if the guns had actually been removed.

LISA FOSTER assumes that ammunition was given to her husband in conjunction with his receipt of the guns from his father's gun collection, but she does not know for certain. She never knew FOSTER to buy any ammunition except for shotgun shells when he went hunting.

To the best of LISA FOSTER's knowledge, FOSTER never carried a handgun in his automobile. She never knew FOSTER to carry a gun with him to work. FOSTER parked his automobile in slot 16 on Executive Boulevard West whenever he was at the White House. LISA FOSTER knows that the trunks of vehicles are checked when the vehicles are driven onto the White House grounds. When not in use, the Honda was typically parked on the street adjacent to the FOSTER residence while the FOSTER family's Lexus was -- parked in a space behind their house.

LISA FOSTER believes that the guns which were brought by her family from Little Rock to Washington were transported on the moving van with their other belongings.

LISA FOSTER does not know where her husband might have obtained the two loose bullets which were discovered in the handgun found at Fort Marcy Park.

LISA FOSTER is not aware of any background information regarding her husband's possession of guns which could assist in tracing the gun found in his hand at Fort Marcy Park. SHARON BOWMAN told LISA FOSTER that FOSTER's father kept a gun by his bed while he was still living, and LISA FOSTER believes that that gun may be the same revolver she was shown by the interviewing agents.

FOSTER's father served in the United States Navy during the World War II period and may have been stationed in California.

It is difficult for LISA FOSTER to believe that FOSTER may have come home on July 20, 1993 to get a gun.

LISA FOSTER still remembers her last contact with FOSTER on the morning of July 20, 1993 in their kitchen. She recalls that FOSTER was standing very stiffly in the kitchen prior to departing for work. LISA FOSTER now believes that he may have had the gun with him in his briefcase at that time. FOSTER did not kiss her goodbye before he left for work, but she notes that his not kissing her was not unusual for him. She believes that her son was at home and sleeping until approximately 2:00 p.m. on that afternoon. However, she has not questioned her son about whether he was asleep that afternoon because she has not wanted to expose her children to too many of the circumstances of their father's death.

LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER was suffering from a major depression which was brought about by working too hard for such a long period of time away from his family. She believes that no one loved his children more than her husband.

FOSTER was unable to attend the ceremony in which the Arkansas Bar Association named him the Lawyer of the Year because he had to go to Boston, Massachusetts that same day to interview Judge STEPHEN BREYER. Judge BREYER was a candidate for a vacancy on the United States Supreme Court, but he was bedridden as a result of a traffic accident.

At this point in the interview, Attorney JAMES HAMILTON interjected that he had traveled to Boston to interview Judge BREYER with FOSTER on that occasion.

LISA FOSTER believes that FOSTER thought he would be able to attend the Arkansas Bar Association ceremony up until the very last minute. Both LISA FOSTER and FOSTER were very upset that they were unable to attend. She believes that his inability to attend the ceremony would have weighed very heavily on FOSTER and would have caused him to feel embarrassed before his peers in Arkansas.

At the conclusion of the interview, HAMILTON, on behalf of LISA FOSTER, again asked that the original handwritten note which had been torn up be turned over to LISA FOSTER at the conclusion of the investigation. HAMILTON also reiterated his request that a photograph of the note not be released by the Office of the Independent Counsel should such a request be received under the Freedom of Information Act.

BRIAN FOUCART, former Acting Director of The White House Office of Administration, was interviewed by conference call with his attorney RANDALL TURK (202) 833-5127. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, FOUCART provided the following information:

FOUCART advised that his current position is Special Assistant to the Bureau Chief of Cable Services Bureau in the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). His address and telephone are 2033 M Street, NW, (202) 416-1135.

FOUCART advised that he remembers July 21, 1993, the day after VINCE FOSTER, JR.'s death, only vaguely. He does not remember it as any different than any other day except that there was a pervasive focus on the news of VINCE FOSTER's death. No requests for action came into his department that related to VINCE FOSTER's death that he was aware of, either that day or in the following weeks.

FOUCART advised that any requests for the movement of safes or filing cabinets or any other such items within or out of the Counsel's office would have been initiated on a "Facilities Request Form" which would have had to come across his desk for his signature so that he could authorize payment to GSA for those services. FOUCART advised that The White House would pay GSA to provide such services and therefore the vehicle for getting those tasks done is the work order that is generated in response to a facilities request form. FOUCART said there was no such form to request the movement of a safe or filing cabinet or any other items from VINCE FOSTER's office or from The White House Counsel's office following VINCE FOSTER's death. He advised that the best way to double check his memory would be to check with GSA to see if they had any work orders for such a task.

FOUCART advised that he knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and that LIVINGSTONE did not make any requests of any kind of connection with VINCE FOSTER's death. The only conversation they ever had on the topic of VINCE FOSTER came later in the Summer and occurred in passing at the doorway of the West Wing where FOUCART was standing, having a cigarette. FOUCART commented to LIVINGSTONE that FOSTER's car was taking up two parking spots in the Executive parking area and since spaces were limited, could LIVINGSTONE see if it were possible to have it moved. FOUCART said that he could not remember any other personal conversations between himself and LIVINGSTONE.

As part of the interview, FOUCART provided the following personal information:

MARY KATHERINE FRIEDRICH was interviewed in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). FRIEDRICH is currently a personnel assistant (payroll technician) in the Executive Office of the President of the United States (EOP), Office of Administration (OA), Personnel Management Division (PMD), and her office is in the New Executive Office Building (NEOB), 725 17th Street, N.W., WDC, telephone number (202) 395-1143. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, FRIEDRICH provided the following information:

In July 1993, FRIEDRICH served as a security assistant in the PMD security office, which is administratively located within OA and EOP. Her office was physically located in the NEOB. On approximately July 15, 1993, FRIEDRICH was notified that she had been named to fill the position in which she currently serves. FRIEDRICH had to train her replacement in the security office so she was unable to move into her current post until August 1993. The PMD security office performs a number of functions: conducting of pre-employment interviews pertaining to a candidate's suitability; submitting requests for Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) name checks; performing drug tests; processing of SF-86 forms, which are standard personnel questionnaires; granting of security clearances; performing monthly security briefings; initiating five-year renewals on background investigations; sending requests for White House passes to the United States Secret Service (USSS); and monitoring of the thirty day rule to ensure that new employees submit all required paperwork necessary to conduct a background investigation within the first thirty days of their employment.

The White House Counsel's Office (WHCO) typically receives the final background investigation reports once they have been completed by the FBI. Staff members of the WHCO then review the reports to identify or resolve any remaining issues. Associate White House Counsel WILLIAM H. KENNEDY III was usually the person who would review these reports and provide notification of approval of the appointee to FRIEDRICH's office, which would then issue a White House pass to the appointee.

FRIEDRICH's responsibilities required her to have somewhat frequent contact with the WHCO. For example, FRIEDRICH would pass along the completed SF-86 forms to the White House Office of Personnel Security (WHOPS). She would also carry completed forms for Internal Revenue Service (IRS) record checks to the WHCO. Most calls to FRIEDRICH's office from the WHCO were made by EDGAR BUENO.

On the night of July 20, 1993, FRIEDRICH was at home when she learned of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. She believes she learned of FOSTER's death on a television newscast. FRIEDRICH learned further details about FOSTER's death the following day because it was a major news item. FRIEDRICH was not contacted by anyone from either the White House or the WHCO that night about either FOSTER's death or any related duties or tasks.

FRIEDRICH rarely has occasion to enter the West Wing of the White House, and she has only been in the West Wing perhaps twice in the past few months.

FRIEDRICH is aware through press accounts that BERNARD NUSSBAUM, PATSY THOMASSON and MAGGIE WILLIAMS were at the White House the night of July 20, 1993. FRIEDRICH now knows each of these people but she has not discussed their activities that night with them.

FRIEDRICH has not heard anything about anyone being asked to open safes in the WHCO offices on July 20, 1993.

CHUCK EASLEY was FRIEDRICH's supervisor in July 1993. EASLEY exclusively handled matters relating to safes on the White House compound, and EASLEY would have been the person to have been called to open a safe. FRIEDRICH's office received such calls for assistance in opening a safe on a frequent basis. Staff members of the WHCO, including BETSY POND and FLORENCE CHAMPAGNE, called EASLEY's office several times for assistance in opening safes. DEB GORHAM from the WHCO also called with such a request a couple times.

If someone called EASLEY's office and requested assistance in opening a safe when EASLEY was not in the office, FRIEDRICH would write a note to EASLEY on a message pad telling him who had called and what the caller had wanted. FRIEDRICH does not recall writing a note to EASLEY that a safe needed to be opened on or about July 20, 1993.

FRIEDRICH does not recall receiving a telephone call to open a safe in the WHCO suite after FOSTER's death. FRIEDRICH is only aware of requests to open safes being made by telephone call. FRIEDRICH is not aware of her office ever receiving any written requests to open a safe. FRIEDRICH does not recall receiving any calls to open safes the week of FOSTER's death. FRIEDRICH does not recall receiving a telephone call, e-mail or any other form of communication to request assistance in opening a safe in the WHCO suite that week.

FRIEDRICH did not keep a detailed calendar in July 1993. Her calendar would typically reflect matters pertaining to personnel issues such as when certain forms pertaining to appointees were submitted. When FRIEDRICH left her former post to take her current position, she left her 1993 calendar with EASLEY so that he could use it as a reference for pending personnel matters. FRIEDRICH would not have recorded on her calendar a call from someone at the WHCO requesting assistance with opening a safe. FRIEDRICH would have left EASLEY a message written on a "while you were out" slip of paper.

When FRIEDRICH leaves a telephone message for EASLEY, it is written on a single slip of paper, i.e., no carbon copy of the message slip is generated. EASLEY discards the message slips after he is through with them.

FRIEDRICH has been telephoned by a female reporter, name not recalled, from the Washington Post newspaper. The reporter said she wanted to get together with FRIEDRICH for about ten minutes to talk about FOSTER. FRIEDRICH told the reporter she had nothing to say to her and eventually hung up the phone after declining to meet with the reporter. FRIEDRICH subsequently reported the reporter's call to FRIEDRICH's supervisor, AL RODRIGUEZ, and to MARY BECK, Director of PMD. FRIEDRICH knows of no other calls or attempts to contact FRIEDRICH by this reporter. There were no repercussions for FRIEDRICH from reporting the call from the reporter to RODRIGUEZ.

FRIEDRICH does not know how the female reporter learned FRIEDRICH's name or decided to call her. It is possible someone could have looked in a White House telephone book and seen from the listings that FRIEDRICH was working for EASLEY during July 1993.

Prior to the instant interview, FRIEDRICH advised BECK that she was going to be interviewed by OIC staff. BECK told FRIEDRICH that BECK had been interviewed by OIC staff and it had not been a bad experience. BECK did not give FRIEDRICH any instructions about how to respond to questions posed by OIC staff.

FRIEDRICH was the only person working with EASLEY during July 1993, and EASLEY was the sole custodian of the safes. No one else in the White House complex has access to the combinations to safes in the complex. EASLEY has confirmed, when asked by FRIEDRICH, that no one else, including USSS officials, can open safes in the White House compound.

FRIEDRICH has not seen any White House memoranda with instructions about the OIC investigation.

FRIEDRICH has no knowledge about anyone being called to open White House safes on or about July 20, 1993. It is possible that WHOPS could have been called by someone seeking access to a White House safe. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE was director of WHOPS at that time, and he continues to hold that post. Other members of the WHOPS staff at that time were MARI ANDERSON and LISA WETZL, who were both security assistants. NANCY (LAST NAME UNKNOWN) (LNU) also worked in WHOPS in 1993 and she had worked there during the prior administration as well. NANCY LNU no longer works at WHOPS because she retired in either May 1993 or May 1994.

Offices at the White House normally maintain rosters of interns since there are no applicable payroll records because the interns are not paid. These rosters should reflect which interns were working during a given period of time. No interns work in FRIEDRICH's office.

FRIEDRICH had no contact with WHOPS in relation to FOSTER's death. FRIEDRICH has not spoken with anyone at WHOPS about whether anyone at WHOPS was asked to open WHCO safes on or about July 20, 1993.

FRIEDRICH knows of no other information which could be of assistance to OIC investigators.

In July 1993, FRIEDRICH was living at 12316 Village Square Terrace, Apartment 202, Rockville, Maryland 20852. She is unable to recall what her telephone number was at that time, but she will attempt to retrieve it from her records and provide it to the interviewing agents.

Based on observation and interview, FRIEDRICH is described as follows:

Following an interview conducted earlier in the day at the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC) in Washington, D.C. (WDC), MARY KATHERINE FRIEDRICH telephonically contacted the interviewing agent and provided the following information:

Upon returning to her office, FRIEDRICH retrieved her calendar for 1993 from her former supervisor, CHUCK EASLEY. FRIEDRICH will retain the calendar until a determination can be made as to the appropriate manner in which the calendar can be reviewed by OIC investigators.

FRIEDRICH has not yet reviewed her records to identify her home telephone number during July 1993. She will furnish this number to the interviewing agent when she is able to find it.

Based on a review of her work calendar and her attendance records, FRIEDRICH believes she was called by a female reporter from the Washington Post newspaper on either February 16 or February 17, 1995. FRIEDRICH does not recall specifically how the reporter referred to FRIEDRICH, e.g., by calling her MARY or KATE. FRIEDRICH typically answers her telephone "Hi, this is KATE FRIEDRICH," so the reporter could have learned from that greeting that FRIEDRICH uses "KATE" as her first name. Only close family members refer to FRIEDRICH as "MARY." FRIEDRICH has used the first name "KATE" for all her adult life.

At approximately 3:07 p.m., MARY KATHERINE FRIEDRICH telephonically contacted the investigating agent at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. FRIEDRICH was familiar with the investigating agent from previous contacts, and she provided the following information:

Approximately ten minutes before FRIEDRICH's call to the investigating agent, FRIEDRICH was approached by her former supervisor, CHUCK EASLEY, regarding her 1993 calendar. EASLEY said that the calendar was his property and he asked FRIEDRICH to return the calendar to him. EASLEY explained that he had been under the belief that FRIEDRICH was only borrowing the calendar for a short period of time but, since she might need the calendar for a longer period, he asked FRIEDRICH to return the calendar to him and she complied with his request.

EASLEY maintains all the old calendars from the Office of Security, and FRIEDRICH is confident that EASLEY will take care to preserve and safeguard her 1993 calendar.

BARBARA L. GAGE, Administrative Manager, Office of the Chief Medical Examiner, Northern Virginia District, 9797 Braddock Road, Suite 100, (703) 764-4640 was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose for the interview. GAGE provided the following information:

GAGE recalled numerous problems with the office's x-ray machine in the early summer of 1993. GAGE would call the company regarding the problems when the doctors asked her, or told her of them. GAGE does not specifically recall telephoning the company during this time. However, GAGE identified a handwritten note referencing telephone calls she made to an individual named "KEITH" at the x-ray machine company on 6/8/93 and on 8/5/93.

GAGE stated that the x-ray machine was purchased in May, and delivered to the Northern Virginia Medical Examiner's Office in June 1993.

Subsequent to the interview GAGE provided the date of birth, address, and social security number for JAMES BURGESS, who was formerly employed at the Northern Virginia Medical Examiner's office as a Medical Examiner's Technician, and who assisted Dr. BEYER in the FOSTER autopsy. JEREMY M. GAINES, Press Assistant The White House Press Office, telephone 202-456-2580 was interviewed at The White House on September 21, 1994. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, GAINES provided the following information:

GAINES advised that he was on duty at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993. He was present because the President was doing the LARRY KING Live Show from The White House and he was assisting with that. He recalls that the program was cut short because of the death of VINCE FOSTER and he recalls sitting in the Press Office when he heard the news. He stayed that evening until approximately 11:00 pm and he was the individual who put out the press release to members of the press regarding the death of VINCE FOSTER. He knew who VINCE FOSTER was but he didn't have a personal relationship with him at all.

GAINES has no specific recollection of the morning of July 21, 1993. His normal arrival time during that time period was between 8-8:30. It was his job to coordinate the setting up of all Presidential activities with regard to the press. He was not involved in any events or discussions concerning VINCE FOSTER that he can recall. In addition he doesn't recall anything regarding the FOSTER residence or press presence or Press Office coverage of that location.

GAINES advised that he knows who CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is and characterized their relationship as merely a business acquaintance. He does not see CRAIG LIVINGSTONE often in the Press Office and he has never heard his name in connection with the death of VINCE FOSTER or activities at the FOSTER residence. Asked if he would recognize CRAIG LIVINGSTONE's voice on the phone, GAINES advised that he probably would, however, GAINES said that after VINCE FOSTER's death, he was not working the phones and does not have any recollection of taking a phone call from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at any time. He said he believes that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE oversees security issues but does not know what he does on a day-to-day basis.

GAINES further advised that he knows he did not have job duty the morning of 7/21/93. He does not normally attend early Press Office meetings in the upper Press Office. He does attend the lower Press Office meeting somewhat later but has absolutely no recall of any of the meetings following VINCE FOSTER's death or any other discussion related to VINCE FOSTER or his residence.

As part of the interview GAINES provided the following personal information:

MARK D. GEARAN, Assistant to the President, Communications, The White House, Washington, D.C., was interviewed via telephone conference call while he was traveling with the Presidential party in Bonn, Germany. GEARAN's attorneys, JUSTIN SIMON and JUDY HAMMERSCHMIDT were parties on this conference call, as was MARK STEIN, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agent and Counsel from the Office of the Independent Counsel and the purpose of the interview, GEARAN provided the following information:

GEARAN was asked when was the first time he saw a chronology prepared by CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, dated July 21, 1993 regarding events at the time of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.'s death on July 20, 1993. GEARAN said he did not recall the first time he saw this chronology. He said it was in a collection of documents that had been compiled during a March 1994 file review. The topics of this review concerned White House documents, Whitewater documents and VINCENT FOSTER related documents. He did not remember seeing the document necessarily at the time of the March file review but this document was in the pile of segregated documents when he had gone back to look through this pile concerning questions on VINCENT FOSTER.

At this point in the discussion, Attorney SIMON interjected that there had been a subpoena to GEARAN regarding Whitewater and FOSTER material. At that time, they had "picked out everything," whether or not it was responsive to the subpoena. Some documentation was actually sent in March of 1994 and some of it kept segregated. The chronology in question was then later found in connection with a request received from Capitol Hill. The chronology document had been kept in GEARAN's file from the March review.

In an effort to further clarify the time period in which he first saw this chronology, GEARAN recalled reviewing documents for in-house committees and remembered observing a copy of the chronology with a handwritten phone extension on the top right-hand corner. He said this review was "relatively recently" and he could provide further information regarding the actual timeframe from records he had available back in Washington, D.C. GEARAN said the chronology was found in a pile of VINCENT FOSTER segregated files. He said he maintained the documents, along with some Whitewater-related material, in a credenza behind his desk in his West Wing office of the White House.

GEARAN was asked if he had previously seen the chronology with the handwritten telephone extension in the upper right-hand corner before the time of the review for the in-house committees. He answered he didn't remember specifically seeing the document at the time of the review in March 1994.

GEARAN was asked if he saw a copy of the chronology without the handwritten telephone extension on it at any time. GEARAN answered that he was aware of the chronology at a prior time (before seeing the copy with the handwritten notation). He was not sure of the timeframe, but that it was before seeing the copy with the telephone extension written on it. GEARAN did not know why he had two copies of this same chronology. He did not recall actually receiving the document.

GEARAN said that a telephone extension number on the document was typical for him if someone personally gave the document to him. He could then contact the originator of the document for additional information for press inquiries, etc. However, he cannot specifically recall that this was done in the instance of the chronology. GEARAN could not recall the time it was received, but noted that in July of 1993, the White House was providing information to the press on this matter.

GEARAN was asked if there had been press inquiries at a later time and he answered that there had been "scattered" press inquiries until last week.

GEARAN was asked if he possibly received the chronology at a time later than July 1993. His attorney interjected that he was reluctant to let GEARAN "speculate" and reminded that GEARAN "doesn't remember" the time he received the document.

Attorney SIMON responded to a question regarding the strength of the belief that the chronology was received in July 1993 by saying that the events of the night in the detail presented in the chronology were only relevant in July 1993. A later period would not have required this detail of information.

GEARAN was asked that based on this did he believe he received the chronology on or about July 21, 1993. GEARAN answered that he didn't "have a hard recollection." He said it was "more logical than not" in that time period for press briefing purposes.

GEARAN was asked if he had requested the document and he answered that he didn't remember asking for it. He was asked if it was typical that he would ask for such chronologies and he said that no, it was not typical; he would request information for guidance but not in the form of a chronology.

GEARAN was asked if he had any information concerning CRAIG LIVINGSTONE going to the VINCENT FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993. GEARAN answered that "I can't tell you that was." GEARAN was asked if he remembered LIVINGSTONE calling the Communications Office at the White House that morning and he answered "no, I don't recall."

MARK D. GEARAN, Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff, telephone 456-2140 was interviewed at his office in The White House. Also present were his attorneys JUSTIN SIMON and JUDY HAMMERSCHMIDT of DICKSTEIN SHAPIRO & MORIN Attorneys at Law, 2101 L Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20037-1526, telephone 202-828-2211. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, GEARAN provided the following information:

GEARAN confirmed he was at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993 when VINCENT FOSTER, JR. committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia. GEARAN advised that he remained at The White House until very late that night dealing with the crisis. He said that he did not recall receiving any call from the FOSTER residence that evening. Specifically he does not recall any call having to do with dealing with press problems either that night or the following morning at the FOSTER residence. He also does not recall any telephone call from WEBB HUBBELL that evening. He knows that earlier in the evening, GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS spoke to WEBB HUBBELL advising him of FOSTER's death. GEARAN said he was sitting next to STEPHANOPOULOS when that call was made earlier in the evening. The issue of handling the press at the residence was not discussed. The only other conversation that night of possible relevance was a conversation GEARAN believes he may have been having with DAVID WATKINS on the issue of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE accompanying WILLIAM KENNEDY to the hospital to identify FOSTER's body.

GEARAN advised that the morning of July 21, 1993 he would have arrived at his office no later than 7:30 am. He knows he was not present at The White House as early as 6-6:45. It was not an extraordinarily early morning for him. There's a staff meeting every morning at 7:30 and that is why he knows he would not have arrived later than 7:30 am. There is a senior staff meeting held at 8:00 am every morning. People typically at the senior staff meeting include LORRAINE VOLES, ARTHUR JONES, STEVE COHEN, DAVID LEVY and CHAD GRIFFEN.

Because of these meetings GEARAN advised that virtually everybody in the press office was at the office usually by 7:30 am. He further advised that the whole issue of dealing with the press at the FOSTER residence has "merged" and he cannot remember whether discussions of the issue date to July 21 or subsequent conversations.

GEARAN said that he does not recall any person, in particular, any female being sent to the FOSTER residence to deal with potential press problems on the morning of July 21, 1993. He said that no authorized spokesperson was sent but he qualified that by saying GEARAN himself would not have been the person to handle that issue. It would have been more likely LORRAINE VOLES or ARTHUR JONES or DEE DEE MYERS.

GEARAN reaffirmed the fact that he does not recall seeing LIVINGSTONE the morning of July 21 and doesn't remember when he first saw LIVINGSTONE after FOSTER's death. He does not recall seeing him on July 20 in the evening at The White House.

GEARAN also advised that he does not recall seeing PATSY THOMASSON, SUSAN THOMASSES or MAGGIE WILLIAMS the evening of July 20 at The White House.

Also participating in the interview was MARK STEIN, Associate Independent Counsel, Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, GEARAN provided the following information:

On the evening of July 20, 1993, GEARAN was on the ground floor of the White House as President BILL CLINTON was being interviewed on the "Larry King Live" television program on the Cable News Network (CNN). While he was monitoring the President's performance, GEARAN was told by Deputy Chief of Staff BILL BURTON about the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. A number of other people were also on the ground floor of the White House during the broadcast of the President's interview. Among these people were MACK McLARTY, GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, DEE DEE MYERS, RICKI SEIDMAN, DAVID DREYER, BRUCE LINDSEY and BERNARD NUSSBAUM of the White House staff. Also present were a number of CNN employees including WENDY WALKER WHITWORTH, who is a producer for CNN, and another CNN producer whose name GEARAN cannot recall. This second producer was in the CNN truck parked outside the White House. Several other CNN employees were also present, including the usual CNN make-up artist, whose name GEARAN also cannot recall.

At some point after he learned of FOSTER's death, GEARAN returned to his office in the west wing of the White House. Among the people who visited GEARAN's office during this period of time that night were MYERS, STEPHANOPOULOS, DREYER, SEIDMAN, LINDSEY and BURTON. GEARAN does not recall seeing MAGGIE WILLIAMS in his office. GEARAN recalls seeing HOWARD PASTER in GEARAN's office but not in the residence portion of the White House. GEARAN believes that PASTER was dressed in casual clothes rather than in business attire.

The members of GEARAN's staff were putting together a statement for the President to deliver about the death of FOSTER. DREYER was in GEARAN's office working on the statement and was attempting to include in the statement the few details known at that time. GEARAN did not coordinate the production of this statement with LISA CAPUTO, Press Secretary for the First Lady. GEARAN does not recall giving a copy of this statement to MAGGIE WILLIAMS.

GEARAN does not recall seeing White House Counsel NUSSBAUM in GEARAN's office, only on the ground floor of the residence portion of the White House. GEARAN does not recall seeing NUSSBAUM carrying anything in his hands or arms.

GEARAN does not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE on the night of July 20, 1993. GEARAN has infrequent contact with LIVINGSTONE because he only talks with LIVINGSTONE whenever there are security-related matters to discuss. GEARAN knows LIVINGSTONE, however, having met him during the presidential campaign. GEARAN did not ask LIVINGSTONE for a copy of a chronology of LIVINGSTONE's activities on or about July 20, 1993.

GEARAN recalls that the issue arose of the need for someone to view the decedent's body and identify it as that of FOSTER. Either LIVINGSTONE or DAVID WATKINS called GEARAN and raised the issue of positively identifying the body as that of FOSTER. GEARAN was in the basement of the residence at the White House when this issue was raised and McLARTY, STEPHANOPOULOS, and MYERS were also there. GEARAN thought someone should go with White House Associate Counsel BILL KENNEDY to identify the body since performing that task was a lot to ask of KENNEDY, who had been a close friend of FOSTER for a number of years. GEARAN may have spoken with LIVINGSTONE about this issue but he doubts that he would have instructed LIVINGSTONE to accompany KENNEDY to the hospital for the identification.

At this point in the interview, GEARAN was asked to review a copy of the memorandum which had been prepared by LIVINGSTONE as a chronology of his activities on or about July 20, 1993.

GEARAN does not recall leaving MYERS's telephone number at the hospital as a point of contact. GEARAN recalls learning that the body had been positively identified as that of FOSTER, but he does not recall how he acquired this knowledge. GEARAN also does not recall receiving a telephone call from either LIVINGSTONE or KENNEDY while they were still at the hospital to which FOSTER's body had been taken.

GEARAN does not recall having a conversation with LIVINGSTONE about what LIVINGSTONE should do the morning of July 21, 1993. GEARAN does not recall ordering or suggesting on July 20, 1993 that LIVINGSTONE go to the FOSTER residence the following day to assist in dealing with the media. GEARAN did not learn subsequently that LIVINGSTONE had been at the White House on the evening of July 20, 1993 or early in the morning of July 21, 1993.

GEARAN typically arrives at the White House between 7:00 and 7:30 a.m. each business day.

GEMMELL was born on [redacted] in [redacted] GEMMELL was formerly employed in the White House Office of Personnel Security as an executive assistant/administrative assistant. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, GEMMELL provided the following information:

GEMMELL retired from her position at the White House on August 14, 1993. During her period of service in the White House Office of Personnel Security under the CLINTON Administration, GEMMELL's immediate supervisor was CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. LIVINGSTONE's assistant was MARI ANDERSON.

GEMMELL cannot recall with certainty whether she was at work at the White House on July 20 and 21, 1993. One of her aunts passed away in Pennsylvania during the summer of 1993 so it is possible she was out of town on those dates. However, GEMMELL was trying consciously not to miss any work days at that time since she knew her retirement was imminent. GEMMELL is inclined to believe she was at the White House on those dates.

GEMMELL never met Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. during her service at the White House.

GEMMELL was not involved in the preparation of a chronology of the activities of LIVINGSTONE on and about July 21, 1993. To the best of GEMMELL's knowledge, LIVINGSTONE would have prepared such a chronology for himself.

The Office of Personnel Security occupied one room with several desks in it. There was also a vault where sensitive personnel files were stored.

Other than ANTHONY AOUDE, LUIS COLON and STEVE POLLACK, GEMMELL can only recall one other male who worked in the office. TONY (Last Name Unknown) (LNU) was a civilian employee of the Department of Defense who was detailed over to the White House. TONY LNU was a male in his early fifties, and he arrived at the Office of Personnel Security at approximately the same time that GEMMELL departed the office upon her retirement.

When asked who in the office would likely have prepared a document for LIVINGSTONE on short notice, GEMMELL responded that POLLACK was very good at doing things quickly.

AOUDE was an unpaid intern in the Office of Personnel Security.

POLLACK began working in the Office of Personnel Security as an unpaid intern and later returned as a volunteer. GEMMELL knew POLLACK to prepare documents for LIVINGSTONE on a word processor. POLLACK was also employed in an unknown capacity at a pilots association in the Washington, D.C. area.

LISA WETZL started working in the Office of Personnel Security as a volunteer but worked her way up into a paid position. WETZL was brought onto the rolls as a paid employee at approximately the time that GEMMELL was retiring.

GEMMELL's routine was not altered by the death of FOSTER, but MARI ANDERSON told GEMMELL that LIVINGSTONE was very upset about FOSTER's death.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 3/28/95

TERRY WARREN GOOD was interviewed in a conference room in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). Participating in the interview was OIC Associate Counsel BRETT M. KAVANAUGH. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, GOOD provided the following information:

GOOD is the Director of the Office of Records Management (ORM) at the White House, and his office is located in Room 80 of the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB), telephone number (202) 456-2240. GOOD came to the White House in January 1969 from his position at the National Archives, and he was part of a group charged with developing plans for the first presidential library. When President RICHARD M. NIXON resigned, GOOD stayed on with the National Archives staff. In 1975, GOOD joined the Central Files operation at the White House, which was later renamed the Office of Records Management. GOOD has been in charge of this office since shortly before the end of President RONALD REAGAN's second term in office.

ORM receives papers and documents when the White House staff no longer has a need for them. Materials are usually sent to ORM in boxes if there is a large quantity of documents. ORM encourages the contributors of documents to enclose an inventory of the contents of these boxes when they are submitted to ORM. Such an inventory would typically consist of a list of the file labels in each box but would not reflect each and every document contained in the file folders inside the box.

Under the Presidential Records Act, members of the White House staff cannot take original documents or even copies thereof with them when they leave government service.

After a document has been sent to the White House and after it is no longer being used by White House staff, the document is forwarded to ORM. Staff members at ORM evaluate the importance of the document, index it, and then optically scan the document. They then code the document using one or more of the three thousand codes available to denote agencies or subjects mentioned in the document. The document is then filed using the primary subject code, i.e., the code which best reflects the primary subject matter of the document. Letters of response to the document as well as back-up letters and related documents are filed later with the first document as they are received at ORM.

At this point in the interview, GOOD was asked to review a memorandum for the record, dated May 27, 1994, which GOOD had prepared regarding a typewritten chronology and handwritten notes provided to him by CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. GOOD then provided the following information:

GOOD does not normally write a memorandum for the file when documents are received at ORM. LIVINGSTONE came to ORM perhaps one to two months before the date reflected on GOOD's memorandum. LIVINGSTONE asked GOOD to conduct a search for a chronology which LIVINGSTONE had prepared regarding his actions on and about July 20, 1993. LIVINGSTONE told GOOD that he had given copies of the chronology to three or four people. LIVINGSTONE said that he was going to be interviewed and he needed a copy of the chronology in order to prepare for his interview. LIVINGSTONE may have said that he was going to be interviewed by OIC staff.

The staff at ORM was unable to find a copy of LIVINGSTONE's chronology anywhere in their files. GOOD first saw the chronology when it was later brought to him by LIVINGSTONE.

GOOD was familiar with LIVINGSTONE because the ORM office and the office in which LIVINGSTONE works, the White House Office of Personnel Security (WHOPS), are adjacent and share a walk-in vault.

When ORM staff could not find a copy of LIVINGSTONE's chronology, LIVINGSTONE appeared to be worried, concerned and maybe even frightened. LIVINGSTONE told GOOD that someone claimed to have seen LIVINGSTONE leaving the West Wing with a box. GOOD believes LIVINGSTONE also told GOOD that none of the three or four people to whom LIVINGSTONE had furnished copies of the chronology were forthcoming with LIVINGSTONE in terms of producing a copy for LIVINGSTONE. GOOD believes that one of these three or four people told LIVINGSTONE that LIVINGSTONE's attorney would have to contact that person's attorney regarding the document. GOOD does not know the identity of the person who made that remark to LIVINGSTONE. GOOD does not recall the identities of the three or four people to whom LIVINGSTONE reportedly furnished the chronology. GOOD believes MARK GEARAN's office may have been one place where LIVINGSTONE furnished his chronology. GOOD does not recall any of the names mentioned by LIVINGSTONE in this context.

LIVINGSTONE is in the business of dealing with records and would have an awareness about the propriety of moving records. Based on his limited knowledge of LIVINGSTONE, GOOD believes there is no basis for believing that LIVINGSTONE has done something illegal.

When LIVINGSTONE found a copy of his chronology, he said to GOOD that ORM should have a copy of it. After GOOD received the chronology on behalf of ORM and reviewed it, he also thought it was important for ORM to have the document. GOOD viewed the chronology more as a legal matter than as a historical matter.

GOOD does not know if LIVINGSTONE had been looking for a handwritten or typed version of the chronology when he first approached ORM. GOOD guesses that LIVINGSTONE was looking for the handwritten version but he would not swear to that recollection.

GOOD does not know whether LIVINGSTONE signed and dated the handwritten chronology in GOOD's presence in May 1994 but GOOD does not believe LIVINGSTONE did so.

GOOD has no knowledge of the removal of any documents from the office of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. prior to the official search of FOSTER's office.

GOOD and his assistant, LÉE JOHNSON, are the ORM officials who go to West Wing offices each morning to pick up mail and documents being routed to ORM. The White House Counsel's Office (WHCO) suite is one of the offices they visit each day. Each West Wing office has a box, called a Federal Records Center (FRC) box, where documents to be picked up by ORM staff are placed. These FRC boxes typically contain pieces of mail while memoranda and larger quantities of documents are usually sent in boxes or cartons to ORM.

The mail in these FRC boxes can be divided into two types: mail which is not worth responding to and mail which requires a response. Mail which requires a response usually is abstracted and routed to the appropriate people. Often, such mail and documents are sent from the WHCO suite in the West Wing through ORM to the WHCO offices in the OEOB.

There is no log kept which would identify which ORM employee went to the West Wing to pick up mail and documents there on a given day. GOOD and JOHNSON are usually the people who perform this task. If GOOD and JOHNSON are both absent from work on the same day, there are two other ORM employees who have blue passes which enable them to enter the West Wing. When GOOD and JOHNSON go to the West Wing offices to pick up documents, they do not dawdle or converse with the employees in the offices other than to exchange greetings.

JOHNSON is a male, 50 years old, 5'10" tall, 145 pounds, thin-boned, wears glasses, has a moustache, and has light brown thinning hair.

If materials sent to ORM are contained in binders, the documents are removed and put into an expansion folder.

GOOD never actually met FOSTER, but he did see him on occasion. FOSTER appeared to be a nice, quiet individual.

GOOD recalls that the door to FOSTER's office was closed in the days after FOSTER's death, but he does not recall if he first noticed the door closed on July 21 or July 22, 1993. GOOD recalls that the door remained closed for some time but he does not recall how long.

After the documents have been picked up from the West Wing offices, the documents which need to be tracked are processed very quickly. The documents which will be filed rather than tracked may be filed the same day they were picked up or may be filed within two or three days. Mail for which no response is necessary will just be filed.

When a document is received at ORM, the date it was received by ORM is entered automatically in the records of the filing system. It is not always apparent from which staff office a document may have been received, but by and large all documents can be traced back to their sources.

At this point in the interview, GOOD referred back to his memorandum of May 27, 1994, and advised the following:

The letters C.F. indicate that the document was considered confidential.

The number 065740 on the document is a computer-generated number issued for that particular document.

The letters JL indicate that the document refers to a Justice or Legal matter since these are the principal subject codes assigned to the document.

The initials EF on the upper left corner of the document reflect the initials of the person who put the document into the computer, in this case EVERLENE FISHER.

The interview of GOOD then resumed, and GOOD provided the following information:

All confidential files are kept in a vault which is shared by ORM and WHOPS. LIVINGSTONE occupies an office which was formerly part of the ORM office space. There are four mechanical filing machines in the vault, two of which belong to ORM and two of which belong to WHOPS.

Confidential documents are not optically scanned because the scanning machine is not sufficiently secure.

ORM hours of operation are typically from 7:30 a.m. to 10:30 or 11:00 at night. The ORM office is also open on Saturdays, usually from 7:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. GOOD typically works from 9:00 a.m. to 5:30 or 6:00 p.m. JOHNSON is usually in the ORM offices until 7:00 or 8:00 p.m. at least two nights per week. These hours of operation are the same as the hours worked by ORM staff in 1993.

GOOD had perhaps three to four encounters with LIVINGSTONE over a period of weeks. During the course of these encounters, LIVINGSTONE told GOOD he thought he was being set up by someone. LIVINGSTONE said he just wanted to clear himself and get out of his position at WHOPS. He also spoke about having to retain an attorney and the resultant expense. LIVINGSTONE stated to GOOD that he had not moved the boxes about which he had been interviewed.

LIVINGSTONE did not deal with anyone at ORM other than GOOD and JOHNSON. GOOD has not been contacted by LIVINGSTONE's attorney.

ORM did not receive many documents from FOSTER's office following FOSTER's death. GOOD was not surprised at the dearth of such documents because he would have expected any pending matter assigned to FOSTER to have been reassigned to another WHCO staff member. GOOD would have been surprised if the WHCO had sent many of FOSTER's documents to ORM. GOOD understands that the FOSTER documents are kept in a separate location.

JOHN PODESTA is GOOD's immediate supervisor. PODESTA is Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary.

One copy each of GOOD's memorandum of May 27, 1994, and LIVINGSTONE's typed and handwritten chronologies are attached and incorporated herein.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

FROM: TERRY GOOD

RE: REPORT OF CRAIG LIVINGSTON

A000276

Today, Mr. Livingston gave to me a copy of his handwritten notes and a copy of a more formalized typed version of these notes outlining his recollection of events from the evening of July 20 into the early morning hours of July 21, 1993, relating to the death of Vincent Foster.

He dated and signed the handwritten notes 7/23/93. There is no signature nor date on the typed version.

REPORT FROM CRAIG LIVINGSTONE

July 21, 1993 A00027

I arrived home from the White House approximately 9:00 p.m. on Tuesday, July 20, 1993.

As I was walking through my door my phone was ringing. When I answered it a male identified himself as U.S. Secret Service and asked me to stand by for Inspector Dennis Martin.

Inspector Martin identified himself to me. The Inspector informed me that the Park Police had called to inform them that apparently Vincent Foster had committed suicide on GW Parkway at around 6:00 p.m. that evening.

I had just left the Larry King set with POTUS and was concerned that POTUS might learn about this on live TV. I called White House Operator to page Mark Gearan. Gearan told me that they were advised of the issue. I told Gearan that I was going to Fairfax Hospital to identify the body. Gearan instructed me to do so.

I then called Bill Kennedy who said he would meet me at Fairfax Hospital. I did this because Kennedy is a close friend of the Foster Family and I thought it would help them if he said he saw the body.

I left my home and proceeded to Fairfax Hospital. I met Bill Kennedy at approximately 9:30 p.m. at the ER of Fairfax Hospital.

Kennedy and I met with a Fairfax Police Officer at the Hospital. I spoke to the White House to let them know Kennedy and I were at the scene.

While the Fairfax Police Officer attempted to secure permission for us to view the body. I called the Hospital switchboard to see if anyone was making any unusual inquiries about patients. They responded no.

During this time period (9:30 - 9:45 p.m.) phone calls were received/exchanged between Kennedy -- Bernard Nussbaum -- Webster Hubbell from my location. These calls were informational and attempted to determine if the Foster family had been notified, what their location was, etc.

At approximately 9:45 p.m. we were escorted to a viewing room by a Senior Nurse. We stopped at a glass partitioner with a curtain behind it which was opened. At this time Kennedy and I confirmed to the Nurse that the body was Vincent Foster. We returned to a consultation room where upon I called Thomas (Mack) McClarty -- I handed the phone to Kennedy who informed McClarty that Vincent Foster was dead. (Approximately 9:55 p.m.)

I suggested to Mark Gearan that before I leave I give the hospital a contact name for inquiries. He said to give Dee Dee Meyers number. I did this and drove Kennedy to Vincent Foster's home.

We were at the Foster home until approximately 2:00 a.m. At around 1:30 a.m. several vehicles responded to the address. They "sprayed" the block and left at about 1:45 a.m.

On Wednesday, July 21, 1993, I drove by the house at 6:30 a.m. and stayed until 8:00 a.m. There was no press activity.

At 11:00 a.m. on July 21, 1993, I met with:

Bernard Nussbaum
George Stephanopoulos
Webster Hubbell
David Watkins
Bill Kennedy
Robert Langston, Chief, U.S. Park Police
Robert Hines, Commander, U.S. Park Police
Don Flynn, USSS
Arnie Cole, USSS

At this briefing informal discussion took place as to the nature of the investigation. Nussbaum said that the Attorney General's Office would be contacted to oversee investigation. Stephanopoulos restated to the U.S. Park Police to "follow whatever the normal course of investigation is and the White House would assist as required."

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 6/7/94

On June 1, 1994, DEBORAH GORHAM former Executive Assistant to VINCE FOSTER, Jr. and currently a legal secretary at the law firm of DOW, LOHNES and ALBERTSON, 1255 23rd Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20037, telephone 202-857-2865 was interviewed with regard to a production of materials made by The White House that involved files of hers. Also present during the interview was DAVID E. MILLS of the law firm DOW, LOHNES and ALBERTSON. Having been advised of the nature and purpose of the interview and being already acquainted with the interviewing special agent, GORHAM provided the following information:

GORHAM advised that she was not a part of the inventory of FOSTER's office on July 23, 1993, either before or after it took place, and she therefore knows nothing about what materials were placed in what piles. Later the following week, possibly the following Tuesday, BERNARD NUSSBAUM called GORHAM into FOSTER's office and asked her to help NUSSBAUM figure out what was in each drawer. GORHAM advised that two drawers in FOSTER's office had an index list which she was responsible for preparing and maintaining. The location of the first drawer was in the large cabinet to the left as one is sitting at FOSTER's desk in the bottom of the cabinet. It is the top right drawer of the four in that location. GORHAM advised that there should have been a file index list in the very front of the drawer and it was missing. The second drawer that usually has an index list is one containing what GORHAM characterized as slightly sensitive documents pertaining to individuals. For example, MAC MCLARTY and WEBB HUBBELL.

GORHAM said that when she was helping NUSSBAUM go through the file drawers, she read off "1992 1040", the "Arkansas Bar Continuing Legal Education Program", at which point NUSSBAUM told her to stop and he said that he would have MAGGIE WILLIAMS take a look at what was there and take what she wanted. A little later, after GORHAM had gotten NUSSBAUM's lunch and he had eaten it, WILLIAMS came into the office and took two boxes of documents away. GORHAM also recalls that it was at that time that she looked in the middle drawer of FOSTER's desk and found numerous personal papers including an insurance policy at which time she asked NUSSBAUM if they had looked in that drawer. He said, "No. What's in there?" and she concluded from that that those papers had not been included during the inventory.

With regard to black binders in FOSTER's office, GORHAM said she had a very vague recollection that perhaps there were black binders which contained materials used in preparing the health care report for HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON. She said that an unidentified young lady who said she was working on health care matters came and got the binders. She could not recall if this was before or after FOSTER's death.

GORHAM said that it was more likely that people were refering to black binders holding names and backgrounds of potential appointees to judgeships which the office of RON KLAIN, Associate Counsel, had sent over to the Counsel's office. One binder held Supreme Court candidates or nominees and the other held Circuit Court of Appeals candidates or nominees. GORHAM considered them sensitive in the sense that they held background information on the individuals and the very fact that the individuals names were in the binders was in itself sensitive. But they were not kept under lock and key. She has no idea who else would have an interest in having those binders. She made a set of binders for FOSTER and also for NUSSBAUM. She assumes that RON KLAIN's office kept a set for themselves. She also typed up an index for the front of each binder. She does not remember seeing the binders on or about July 20 and so does not recall whether or not they were in FOSTER's office immediately after his death.

With regard to the production of documents made by The White House, GORHAM noted that she left the West Wing on September 4, 1993 and from then until November (when she left the employ of The White House), any lists that she had been responsible for were not updated by her or to her knowledge. She questioned whether or not there was any kind of an accounting of what documents were added or subtracted from the inventory.

With regard to the first document in the production, comprised of three pages beginning with a page number 6 at the top and titled, "OFFICE OF VINCE W. FOSTER, Jr." and ending on the third page with a notation updated 10/25/93 (tagged "Part 1"), GORHAM said that she recognized this document as a font that she used in order to create the indexes. She did not recognize the fax information listed across the top of the page except to recognize one of the fax numbers as The White House Counsel's office fax number. She said that pages 1-4 would have listed outer cabinet contents and she does not know what page 5 would have been. GORHAM said that cabinet 1 was the cabinet on the left in FOSTER's office and was the cabinet that held the documents on people that she considered slightly sensitive. Cabinet 2 was the cabinet holding documents relating to the First Family's personal and legal materials. She noted that she has a firm recollection of the first 11 entries but starting with the 12th (which reads CLINTON-Campaign 92' correspondents), she does not have a firm recollection of the following documents being in that particular drawer. In addition she did not recall typing the word "remove" after the documents which have that notation following it.

With regard to the listing under cabinet 3 and cabinet 4, GORHAM does not recall the location of these cabinets but recalled the files were, indeed, kept in the cabinets in FOSTER's office.

The way that GORHAM would use this list which comprises Part 1 would be to insert a "hard return" to generate separate pages to put individual indexes in the front of each file drawer. When she wanted to update the list she would simply delete the "hard returns", update the list, print new pages and use them to replace the old ones. She was unable to tell if the production corresponded to the list as she had last updated it. She noted that the date 10/25/93, was after she had already left the West Wing, and so she suspected that it was updated after she left.

Part 2 of the production is an 8 page collection of typed lists of various lengths. The first one reads "DEBORAH GORHAM's desk contents:" and is followed by 7 items. GORHAM explained that CLIFF SLOAN asked her to listen to all of FOSTER's tapes that she could find and transcribe whether they were garbled or not. She does not know what they were looking for. "VINCE's tapes" were transcriptions of all of the micro-cassette dictation tapes which she could locate. She does not recall what the following three items were. She did not comment on the "travel" file or the "miscellaneous" file and she said that "FOSTER Printed Rolodex" was maintained in a black binder. The 2nd page, entitled "VINCE FOSTER's desk files" were the files located in the large bottom right desk drawer filled with numerous manila folders. She said that she herself did not create this list and does not know who did.

All of the subsequent lists to the end of part 2 are lists of files which were located in the cabinets in front of DEBORAH GORHAM's desk outside of FOSTER's office. With regard to box number 4 which lists, among other things, the RTC, GORHAM said that these files would have held things that were non-sensitive in nature, perhaps newspaper clippings.

Part 3 of the production is a handwritten list entitled, "Privileged and confidential attorney/client work product VWF-working files-desk-right middle drawer". GORHAM was not able to identify the handwriting, but guessed that possibly it was STEPHEN NEUWIRTH's. It looks like it might be an approximate duplicate to what was in the large bottom right desk drawer but not exactly, citing, as an example, item number 12 - "DEBORAH GORHAM" (her own name), which is not on the typewritten listing in part 2 of the production. She was unable to comment further on what this document may have entailed. This part of the production was 6 pages long.

Part 4 of the production is comprised of 11 pages and appears to be hard copy printouts of directories from floppy disks. At first, GORHAM suggested that the entries for circuit lists and district lists are possibly the indexes which were kept in front of the black binders holding the lists of nominees or candidates received from RON KLAIN's office. She advised that the document called Fayette was a copy of FOSTER's commencement speech that he made at the Arkansas Law School.

The 2nd page is a file called "Medical" and she advised that it was the final Medical report which was sent to HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON. The 3rd directory holds "Budget VWF" and "Budget 1 VWF". GORHAM advised that this was the budget for the Counsel's Office and it was outdated in that FOSTER stopped editing it to update it as of April 1993.

The next two, titled Disk 4 and 5 respectively, begin lists of entries which GORHAM suggested are back-up files to documents which were on the hard drive to her stand-alone computer. She characterized them as various letters memos and itineraries, etc. which GORHAM typed for FOSTER. She recognized most, but not all, titles as her work, noting that she started work on 3/8/93 and left the West Wing on 9/4/93. She also did not recognize documents from 7/19/93 to 9/2/93, and 10/6/93 to 10/25/93.

Disk 6 hold printouts of sub-directories, CLINTON, Health, and Speeches. Disk 7 holds Data (calendars), and PL, which are execution files, never actually used at all. She was not able to identify the significance of any of the check marks by the file titles.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

HELAINE A. GREENFELD, Civil Rights Division, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), was interviewed in a conference room in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC), regarding her knowledge of events surrounding the death of VINCENT FOSTER, JR. FOSTER was the former Deputy Counsel to the President of the United States. After being apprised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview, GREENFELD thereafter provided the following information:

GREENFELD worked with The White House on the nomination process regarding current Supreme Court Justice RUTH BADER GINSBURG. She graduated from Georgetown University Law School circa 1992. GREENFELD's husband, RICHARD MINTZ (phonetic), worked on the 1992, CLINTON Presidential Election campaign. From February 1993, until June 1993, GREENFELD volunteered in the office of the First Lady of the United States, serving in the correspondence unit. GREENFELD was looking for employment during this time period. GREENFELD departed The White House on June 18, 1993, with June 24, 1993, being her first day at DOJ. Her first assignment at DOJ dealt with the GINSBURG nomination. GREENFELD's work on the nomination required her to work within The White House until August, 1993. A DOJ secretary, MARTHA (LNU) was detailed to The White House along with GREENFELD. This secretary was known to have worked for ANN BINGAMAN, Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division, DOJ.

In preparing for the Judicial Committee's hearings regarding the nomination of Justice GINSBURG, GREENFELD put together the Congressional questionnaire that would be utilized by the Senate Judiciary Committee in its evaluation of nominee GINSBURG. GREENFELD also coordinated meetings related to the nomination and conducted moot hearings in order to prepare nominee GINSBURG for the hearings.

The hearings regarding the nomination of GINSBURG to the Supreme Court commenced on July 20, 1993. The hearings were scheduled to run for four days. GREENFELD may have been at The White House on July 19, 1993, but does not believe she went to The White House on days that the hearings were scheduled.

In the course of her work at The White House, GREENFELD had no involvement in any issues related to FOSTER's death.

GREENFELD noted that documents were couriered from The White House to Capitol Hill during the entire course of the confirmation process related to GINSBURG. She was specifically aware of two bulk transfers of documents related to the GINSBURG nomination. One transfer of documents consisted of looseleaf binders some time in late June, 1993. The second bulk transfer of documents occurred the night before the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings. This transfer included personal files that GREENFELD would use throughout the course of the hearings.

The binders were described to be large, black, three-ring binders that had clear, plastic identification windows on the spine of the binders. Labels were subsequently prepared to insert into the identification windows. The binders were prepared in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB). White House messengers were believed to be the individuals handling the transfer of documents from The White House to Capitol Hill. GREENFELD does not recall any occasion where she would have had to call The White House in the course of the GINSBURG hearings.

Two interns assisted GREENFELD in preparing GINSBURG for the hearings. One intern, CARLOS (LNU), was from The White House Counsel's office. SAMANTHA ROSENBERG (PHONETIC) was hired by GREENFELD. ROSENBERG was a student at the University of Maryland Law School. GREENFELD noted that JENNIFER MILLER (phonetic) currently believed to be a student at Stanford University Law School, may know the whereabouts of CARLOS LNU.

GREENFELD has no reason to believe any documents that were assembled by her regarding the GINSBURG nomination were at any time in FOSTER'S office. GREENFELD had no knowledge of what documents may have been in FOSTER's office. GREENFELD noted that FOSTER was involved in the vetting process related to the selection of GINSBURG for a seat on the Supreme Court, prior to her nomination.

GREENFELD learned of the death of Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., on the morning of July 21, 1993. GREENFELD had met FOSTER on one occasion, in a line at The White House mess. She was introduced to FOSTER by a friend of hers from the Counsel's office.

GREENFELD did not go to the FOSTER residence on the night of FOSTER's death nor the day after the death. GREENFELD did not attend FOSTER's funeral.

GREENFELD was aware that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE worked in the area of security, related to The White House. She met LIVINGSTONE through her husband during the course of the CLINTON Presidential campaign. She remembers having to go through LIVINGSTONE in order to get her White House pass for access to White House offices. She has had no other professional contacts with LIVINGSTONE. GREENFELD did not remember having any contact with LIVINGSTONE or needing his services during the week of July 19, 1993, although she does not rule out the possibility of having seen him that week. GREENFELD did not believe LIVINGSTONE would have visited her on Capitol Hill during that week. GREENFELD may have had contact with LIVINGSTONE since the GINSBURG hearings but does not recall that being the case.

GREENFELD's husband, RICHARD MINTZ, is an Assistant to the Secretary of Transportation in the area of public affairs.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

He then provided the following information:

DR. HEDAYA is a practicing psychiatrist specializing in depression matters and confirmed the fact that he had telephonically informed representatives of the U.S. Park Police that he had not treated MR. VINCENT FOSTER but did provide the following chronology of events relative to MR. FOSTER's death:

HEDAYA advised that on Friday, July 16, 1993, he received a telephonic request from MRS. BARBARA PRYOR, the wife of U.S. SENATOR DAVID PRYOR, Arkansas, if he, DR. HEDAYA, would be available to discuss with a MRS. SHEILA ANTHONY a problem associated with a relative of MRS. ANTHONY who was in "a crisis situation." DR. HEDAYA agreed to this request by MRS. PRYOR and shortly thereafter received a telephone call from MRS. SHEILA ANTHONY who called to his attention that her brother was extremely depressed and in need of psychological counseling. MRS. ANTHONY also informed him at this time that her brother occupied a very sensitive position at the White House and was dealing on a daily basis with Top Secret matters and that his depression was directly related to highly sensitive and confidential matters. It was DR. HEYDAYA's distinct impression that MRS. ANTHONY's brother was in a bind, needed desperately to talk to someone but had grave concerns about discussing these issues with a doctor, believing he could not speak freely since his depression was a direct result of sensitive and confidential issues. It was also DR. HEDAYA's impression in his discussion with MRS. ANTHONY that her brother's depression was a relatively recent event in his life and that MRS. ANTHONY did not mention, nor did he question her, as to what specific Top Secret or Confidential matters were directly causing his depression.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

Based on the above factors, DR. HEDAYA informed MRS. ANTHONY that he would see her brother "off the record" for one counseling session. DR. HEDAYA characterized "off the record" as meaning no record would be maintained in his office relative to the counseling of MRS. ANTHONY's brother but can't recall whether MRS. ANTHONY or he (DR. HEDAYA) suggested a "off the record" counseling session. DR. HEDAYA advised that although he would have been faced with a difficult counseling session, i.e., providing medical advice when the cause of the depression was in fact confidential or sensitive, he agreed to the counseling session with the hope that at a minimum, he could have provided basic educational therapy regarding the causes of depression and suggested ways to cope with this disease. After MRS. ANTHONY informed DR. HEDAYA of the identity of her brother as MR. VINCENT FOSTER, she informed DR. HEDAYA that MR. FOSTER would be in contact with him that day.

DR. HEDAYA advised that he is positive that MR. FOSTER never contacted his office for an appointment and he had no contact with any member of the FOSTER family or any family associates until he believes the evening of July 21, 1993 when he received on his voice mail a telephonic message from SENATOR DAVID PRYOR informing him that MR. VINCENT FOSTER had apparently taken his life and would he (DR. HEDAYA) contact him relative to [redacted] - He - - - - - FOIA(b)(7) - (C) immediately placed a call to SENATOR PRYOR's office or residence and left a message on SENATOR PRYOR's voice mail that he would be glad to render such services. However, SENATOR PRYOR never re-contacted him and therefore DR. HEDAYA did not provide the requested services. DR. HEDAYA does recall, however, receiving a telephone call from MRS. SHEILA ANTHONY approximately two days after the death of her brother asking him whether or not her brother had ever contacted him for consultation services. Additionally, DR. HEDAYA advised that the last contact he had with any member of the FOSTER family was approximately two to three weeks after the death of VINCENT FOSTER. At that time, MRS. SHEILA ANTHONY, in the company of SENATOR DAVID PRYOR, visited his office to discuss with him general issues pertaining to depression. He advised that there was no specific issues raised as to the exact cause of MR. FOSTER's depression and apparent suicide, but does recall MRS. ANTHONY informing him that "there was something going on in his life" but it was not sinister as being reported in the media.

DR. HEDAYA, who was extremely cooperative and candid during this interview, advised, however, that the information he furnished should be treated in a confidential manner and requested the professional courtesy of being informed if the FBI was going to use his statement in a future interview of either SENATOR PRYOR or his wife-or, for that matter, a re-interview of SHEILA ANTHONY.

NANCY V. HERNREICH, Deputy Assistant to the President for Appointments and Scheduling, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Ms. HERNREICH was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

She has handled appointments and scheduling for BILL CLINTON since 1985, having first taken this job while CLINTON was Governor of the state of Arkansas. While she was not involved in BILL CLINTON's Presidential campaign, once he was elected to the Presidency, she was asked to come to Washington, D.C. and assume her current position in the CLINTON Administration as of January 20, 1993. When asked to describe her position, she said that she is often regarded as "somewhat of a gate keeper" for BILL CLINTON.

Ms. HERNREICH said that she had known VINCE FOSTER since 1991 but did not know him very well at all while they were in Little Rock. She got to know VINCENT FOSTER much better once the two of them moved to Washington, D.C. to take positions in the Administration. She explained that she was part of a group of "Arkansans" working within the Administration who regularly went to dinner as a group after work on Tuesdays. She said that VINCENT FOSTER was also a member of this group and she would describe their relationship as "friendly but not close". She said that while she can recall seeing no changes in VINCENT FOSTER's physical of psychological presence, she does not feel comfortable making such judgements considering that their relationship was not particularly close. She added that FOSTER had been working very long hours and was "under constant pressure" as many members of the Administration were doing that period. She said that, in retrospect, she can see how the long hours and constant pressure could have bothered him a great deal. She described FOSTER as a "private man who didn't let many people in". She further described him as being "handsome, shy, and an elegant man". She said that FOSTER had a "self deprecating sense of humor" and was at times seen by some people as being "arrogant". She said that he was a strong family man who was very proud of his children and appeared to have loved them very much.

On July 20, 1993, at approximately 11:00 pm, Ms. HERNREICH first learned of VINCENT FOSTER's death via a telephone call at her residence from DEBORAH COYLE, another White House staffer. She said that COYLE was calling her from The White House and that COYLE said that there were "quite a few" people at The White House handling incoming calls and notifying various people of FOSTER's death. HERNREICH said that she asked COYLE if there was anything she could do and then asked if COYLE thought she should come to The White House to help. After being told by COYLE that there was really no need for her to come in, she decided not to go to The White House on that evening. She further advised that she also did not go to the FOSTER residence on the evening of July 20, 1993. She arrived at work the next morning (July 21, 1993) at approximately 7:00-7:30 am and after meeting with her staff, began working on funeral plans and also making various travel arrangements and schedules for the President and White House staffers who were planning to attend FOSTER's funeral in Arkansas.

Mr. HERNREICH advised that she was never asked to handle, transport, store, mail, or move any documents, papers, or items from VINCENT FOSTER's office following his death. Not only was she never asked to do any of these things she never did them. She further advised that she has no knowledge of any other White House staffers or anyone else being asked or doing any such things regarding FOSTER's documents, papers, or items.

PHILIP HEYMANN, former Deputy Attorney General, was interviewed at his office in Georgetown Law School on June 21, 1994. Also present during the interview was ROD C. LANKLER and MARK STEIN, attorneys with the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C.

HEYMANN advised that he first learned of VINCE FOSTER, JR's death on Wednesday, July 21, 1993. He recalls having discussions with ROGER ADAMS of his staff explaining to him that he needed somebody to go to The White House to supervise or to take part in the search of documents in FOSTER's office. HEYMANN said that he does not remember why he thought the Department of Justice should be involved. His main thought was that the Park Police might need help with executive privilege related issues. He does not recall that there were any requests from The White House, Attorney General JANET RENO, or the Park Police that the Department of Justice should become involved. He explained that he had chosen ROGER ADAMS to be involved because he felt he was the perfect person for the job. He was discreet and very professional and it would have been no question at all that a media leak or any other indiscretion would have resulted.

ADAMS told HEYMANN at that time that there might be a problem with his performing this assignment because ADAMS had been temporarily assigned to The White House and involved in transition activities earlier that year. HEYMANN told ADAMS to check with the Attorney General to see if there was indeed a problem. HEYMANN said that about 3:00 that afternoon he found out from ADAMS that there was not a problem, so he told ADAMS that he wanted DAVID MARGOLIS (also on HEYMANN's staff) and ADAMS to be the two people from Department of Justice to become involved. He chose these people primarily because they were career Department of Justice professionals. HEYMANN specifically did not want anybody selected who was a political appointee.

There was a general sense that the purpose of their involvement would be that they would see enough of any particular document from FOSTER's office to identify if the document was relevant to explaining whether or not FOSTER had committed suicide, and if so, why. HEYMANN said that it was his understanding that the objective of the inventory was to satisfy themselves that FOSTER's death was a suicide and to find anything that would shed light on the reason for it. He does not think that there was a specific discussion on the objective of the inventory. He did not consider the purpose to determine what VINCE FOSTER was working on at the time of his death.

HEYMANN advised that with regard to the afternoon of July 21, 1993, he believed that he had spoken with BERNARD NUSSBAUM, then White House Counsel, but had no specific recollection of the discussion. He remembers that he had an agreement with NUSSBAUM--it could have been made by phone with NUSSBAUM or it could have been his understanding from MARGOLIS and ADAMS who returned from The White House later that afternoon. He remembers chafing at the delays that had occurred during the day--that MARGOLIS and ADAMS had the issue of the inventory to settle and he also remembers waiting for the Park Police to arrive, which they had not. His understanding was that the Department of Justice was to act as a sort of mediator for the Park Police regarding the executive privilege issues because the Park Police would have a lack of familiarity in that area. With regard to FBI involvement, Department of Justice had asked them to be there on July 22. MARGOLIS said that he wanted the FBI there because of the expertise the FBI would bring to the situation and because he had worked with the FBI in previous matters and was comfortable with them.

HEYMANN characterized his primary concern as wanting the right investigative agency to handle the matter so that it wouldn't appear that the investigation was being handled in any irregular fashion. That was why the Park Police was the appropriate lead investigative agency at that time.

Late in the afternoon of July 21, MARGOLIS and ADAMS returned from The White House. MARGOLIS told HEYMANN that they had agreed on a procedure for the search (or inventory), that FOSTER's office had been sealed, and that they had agreed to do the inventory the following day, July 22, 1993. HEYMANN could not recall whether MARGOLIS told him then, or somewhat later, that STEPHEN NEUWIRTH had not agreed that the Department of Justice should be able to look at the documents. MARGOLIS and ADAMS said to NUSSBAUM that it had been agreed that they could look at the documents and they recalled NUSSBAUM saying, "Yes, it

With regard to the issue of whether or not somebody would put a hand over something on the first page, HEYMANN said that he discussed covering up part of the document (which would have been of a substantive nature) in order to protect the information, but would otherwise enable onlookers to see that a document was what it was purported to be (i.e. a communication from somebody to somebody on an identified topic). He said that nobody was thinking about Whitewater as an issue, and that they probably would not have remembered it as having been an issue from the Presidential campaign.

With regard to events that occurred in the morning of July 22, 1993, at The White House, HEYMANN said that MARGOLIS and ADAMS went to The White House about 10:00 in the morning. HEYMANN said that he got a call from MARGOLIS advising him that NUSSBAUM had changed signals and that they (MARGOLIS and ADAMS) were to see nothing at all, merely be present during the inventory. At that time HEYMANN and MARGOLIS discussed whether or not Department of Justice should withdraw their participation, meaning HEYMANN would pull MARGOLIS and ADAMS out. HEYMANN said that he got NUSSBAUM on the line and told him that it was a total mistake for The White House to have changed the procedure and that he was considering withdrawing DOJ presence from the inventory. He specifically remembers NUSSBAUM saying in response to that, "I have to talk to some people about this" and telling HEYMANN that he would call him back. HEYMANN remembers that his own tone during the conversation was angry. NUSSBAUM did not sound angry but acted sufficiently alarmed at HEYMANN's posture to rethink his decision to change the procedure. The conversation was held at 10:30 in the morning and lasted about 10 minutes.

Explaining his thinking on the matter, HEYMANN said that he knew there was no precedent for this sort of situation. The Department of Justice wanted to scan every document in FOSTER's office. HEYMANN felt it was an intelligent, professional way of doing it, and that was to have two discreet, highly professional career Department of Justice employees look at the documents. He felt that it put the Department of Justice in a compromising position if they were present but not doing anything or actively participating in the inventory. He stated these issues in the strongest of terms to NUSSBAUM. HEYMANN said he had the vague sense that NUSSBAUM was not happy about the change in the agreement and that NUSSBAUM was not in control.

HEYMANN remembers telling NUSSBAUM during that telephone conversation at 10:30 am that HEYMANN would have to make a decision whether or not to leave Department of Justice individuals there if NUSSBAUM decided to proceed with the altered procedure of not allowing them to look at the documents. He has a clear impression that he had put in abeyance his decision as to whether or not to pull MARGOLIS and ADAMS out, and was waiting for NUSSBAUM to call him back. NUSSBAUM had specifically promised that he would call and then HEYMANN would decide what to do. HEYMANN believes that MARGOLIS remembers something less clear on that topic.

The next thing HEYMANN knew MARGOLIS and ADAMS had returned from The White House to Department of Justice and he remembers feeling a little put out that MARGOLIS and ADAMS had not called him to let him know that the inventory was proceeding without NUSSBAUM having called him. HEYMANN's primary anger, however, was targeted at NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM had promised that he would call HEYMANN and HEYMANN describes his feeling as "furious". With regard to MARGOLIS, HEYMANN said that he didn't know why MARGOLIS had gone ahead with the inventory, but he trusted that he had done so in good faith and he didn't verbally criticize him at the time because he doesn't normally "beat on subordinates". HEYMANN advised that the issue of the inventory was not his main issue that he was dealing with on July 22, other things were going on that kept his attention.

MARGOLIS and ADAMS returned somewhere between 5:00 and 6:00 in the evening. What they described to him at that time was a situation that left them feeling misused and manipulated. They described how CLIFFORD SLOAN had told an FBI agent to sit down when he thought he was trying to look at one of the documents. They felt they'd been treated like furniture. HEYMANN told them at the time that he had had a deal with NUSSBAUM and HEYMANN thinks that they said that they thought HEYMANN had talked with NUSSBAUM. HEYMANN did not confront MARGOLIS and ADAMS (meaning asking them why they didn't leave) because he figured it was "spilled milk" and there was nothing to be gained by such a confrontation. HEYMANN called NUSSBAUM about 9:00 that evening and expressed his outrage to NUSSBAUM in the clearest of terms. NUSSBAUM did not deny that he had failed to call HEYMANN as agreed. HEYMANN recalls asking NUSSBAUM, "BERNIE, are you hiding something?" NUSSBAUM answered, "No. I promise you, PHIL, there's nothing we're hiding."

There was no discussion about redoing the search. HEYMANN was not sure but what The White House was within their rights to do the search the way they had done it. It was stupid, but not illegal, and it was not a situation where HEYMANN would have sent in individuals to stop the inventory from occurring if he had known what was going on at the time. As of July 22, he washed his hands of the matter.

With regard to the procedure actually followed, HEYMANN was told that the individuals from the investigating agencies sat there while NUSSBAUM went through papers and said what category they belong to. For instance, "executive privilege" or "private papers", and sometimes NUSSBAUM gave a minor description. HEYMANN did not remember being told of any description that described in detail what the document was. Some papers were put aside to be given to the CLINTONs' private attorney. HEYMANN did not recall if the Park Police got anything.

HEYMANN and MARGOLIS and ADAMS had nothing further to do with the inventory or the aftermath until the following Tuesday. In the interim days, the Park Police began to feel very manipulated. MARGOLIS may have had some conversations with Captain HUGHS to this effect. MARGOLIS told HEYMANN that the Park Police were not happy but that things were "going o.k." HEYMANN remembers asking "Is this being handled as any other suicide investigation would be handled?" The Park Police answered, "No. But you can't do it the same way when it deals with The White House". It was left at that.

The following Tuesday HEYMANN went to The White House when they were turning over the torn up note that had been found when NEUWIRTH searched FOSTER's briefcase. MARGOLIS and ADAMS remembers NUSSBAUM looking into the briefcase. HEYMANN said that MARGOLIS and ADAMS did not say to him at any point that they found it inconceivable that NUSSBAUM would not have seen the torn up note in the bottom of the briefcase. HEYMANN also has no recollection of any rumors about any other note having been found.

With regard to a conversation with THOMAS COLLIER, Chief of Staff to Secretary of Interior, BRUCE BABBITT. HEYMANN recalls that this conversation took place on Thursday, July 29, 1993. The background for this was as follows. The previous day, the 28th, HEYMANN had sent the FBI back into the investigation full speed to determine how the note had been found and every aspect of how FOSTER'S papers had been handled. He was extremely angry and was done "messing around" and giving The White House reign to handle the matter. HEYMANN explained that first there was the mess about the procedure for the search, where he had felt abused, and then he discovered that The White House had waited 27 hours before they turned over a note that should have been found during the initial inventory. HEYMANN discussed this decision about re-activating the FBI with MARGOLIS and ADAMS. He did not discuss it with JANET RENO. He also did not discuss it with WEBB HUBBELL, saying that he made a point of never discussing anything having to do with The White House or the selection of cabinet officials with WEBB HUBBELL, simply because the connection to CLINTON was too close.

The conversation on July 29 with TOM COLLIER occurred at approximately 8:25 in the morning and HEYMANN remembers that COLLIER was disturbed. COLLIER said that the Park Police were nearing the point where they were going to pull out of the investigation. Apparently they had not actually been denied anything by The White House, but they felt like they were being treated unprofessionally. The finding of the note after the controvercial inventory, and the delayed turning over of it pushed them over the edge and made them look foolish.

Apparently, WILLIAM BURTON and ROY NEAL had treated COLLIER "shabbily" and "yelled at him". HEYMANN called DAVID GERGEN at approximately 10:37 on July 29 because he knew GERGEN and trusted him. GERGEN was also the only person that HEYMANN felt would see what a mess The White House was creating for themselves in the way they were acting. GERGEN called HEYMANN back at about 11:00 am. HEYMANN recalls that they were on the speaker phone and got the impression that perhaps 8 to 10 people were there. GERGEN was there, as was BURTON and some of the people from The White House Press Office. HEYMANN told them that the Park Police were "in rebellion". He told them that he had tasked the FBI to investigate possible obstruction of justice and that he wanted "no holds barred". He remembers telling them that there was a 50/50 chance that The White House would be able to avoid a major credibility problem as a result of what was going on.

The only other talks with The White House that HEYMANN had subsequent to this was with regard to the timing of the release of the final report. GERGEN very diffidently asked HEYMANN if it was inappropriate for them to request that they be given 24 hours notice of when the press conference would be held.

HEYMANN advised that he did not know that COLLIER subsequently met with GERGEN. He remembers being told that White House cooperation levels turned around 180 degrees and he remembers Secretary of Interior BABBITT thanking him later.

HEYMANN does not know on what the FBI based their preliminary findings that the death was a suicide.

With regard to how WILLIAM BURTON acted during the speakerphone conversation on July 29, HEYMANN said BURTON's behavior did not constitute obstruction. Things were supposed to go through BURTON, and HEYMANN had ignored him and he was probably irritated for that reason. HEYMANN said that overall he did not suspect obstruction on the part of The White House but he felt there was reason to suspicious that irregularities in the handling of the papers were mounting and that somebody had to do an investigation to see if The White House was purposely hiding something.

HEYMANN was subsequently interviewed by ROD LANKLER and writer by conference call on June 22, 1994 to clear up some items. The purpose was to clarify whether or not MARGOLIS and HEYMANN had an understanding that they would attempt to get NUSSBAUM to agree to the previously agreed procedure to allow MARGOLIS and ROGERS to actually view the documents themselves by bluffing, saying they would leave if they could not do it that way when they actually intended that if NUSSBAUM insisted on the new procedure, they would stay anyway. HEYMANN knows that MARGOLIS remembers that that was the understanding. HEYMANN said that he himself was not at all sure that he would let it go forward, and that he might indeed have pulled ROGERS and MARGOLIS out. HEYMANN remembers saying. "If push comes to shove, I think we should go through with it." It's possible that HEYMANN and MARGOLIS had discussed the matter of whether pulling out would be a bluff or would they actually pull them out.

LANKLER read the text of MARGOLIS' interview and HEYMANN said that he did not remember agreeing that they would bluff-trying to get NUSSBAUM to change his mind, but that they would actually stay in the end. HEYMANN remembers specifically that he was waiting to get NUSSBAUM's call and then he would make the decision. He said that , in any case, he would not have felt bound by any agreement previously reached during a discussion with MARGOLIS.

With regard to ADAMS' interview and his assertion that there had been a discussion on this issue earlier in HEYMANN's office between HEYMANN and MARGOLIS, HEYMANN said that that recollection is simply incorrect, that there was no agreement between the Department of Justice and The White House that the Department of Justice would stay.

HEYMANN explained that there were two different types of conversation at issue here. One was the one with NUSSBAUM about the relationship between The White House and the Department of Justice. The point was that The White House could not count on Department of Justice staying unless The White House changed back to the original procedure allowing them to look at documents. The other was HEYMANN and MARGOLIS trying to anticipate losing that argument and trying to deal with a hypothetical situation where they had to proceed under circumstances they didn't approve of.

HEYMANN said that he recalls a chronology prepared in rough form by CYNTHIA MONACO and remembers that it resulted in approximately six pages of handwritten notes and was prepared about the same time that HEYMANN did his notes on the matter which would have been in early February, 1994, shortly before HEYMANN left the Department of Justice.

PHILIP HEYMAN, former Deputy Attorney General, currently teaching at Harvard Law School, telephone 617-495-3137 was interviewed telephonically by writer on July 20, 1994. Being acquainted with the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, HEYMAN provided the following information:

HEYMAN said that he recalls receiving a copy of the U.S. Park Police report on the death of VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in August, 1993. He said that he got his copy from DAVID MARGOLIS who had received it the Friday or Saturday before the press conference, which was held with the Park Police and ROBERT "BEAR" BRYANT of the Washington Metropolitan Field Office of the FBI on Tuesday, August 10, 1993. HEYMAN explained that at that stage there was only one copy in The Department of Justice and that was the one that he and DAVID MARGOLIS shared. HEYMAN said he wanted to read the report over the weekend before the press conference.

HEYMAN advised that the report was not released to the public at the time of the press conference. At the conference they said that any inquiries would have to go through the Department of Justice and they had to have time for their Freedom of Information Act experts to redact from the report that material which was inappropriate for public dissemination. HEYMAN said that that process could take as long as six weeks but he actually has no idea whether the report was ever released.

HEYMAN believes that four copies existed in the Department in all. One was the original that he shared with MARGOLIS, a second was given to the FOIA office at DOJ, a third one was given to DOJ's criminal division with instructions from HEYMAN to follow-up on one of the items found in FOSTER's note found on July 26, 1993 in which he listed things that were bothering him, and the fourth was given to DOJ's OPR office in order to follow-up on another item listed in the same note by FOSTER.

HEYMAN advised that at the time he received the Park Police report, no photographs accompanied the report. Moreover,

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 4/12/95

PHILLIP HEYMANN was interviewed in a conference room within the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC) located at 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 490-North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). HEYMANN was represented in the course of the interview by Attorney ROBERT D. LUSKIN, of the law firm, COMEY, BOYD & LUSKIN, Suite 200, 2828 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, WDC 20007-3763, telephone number (202) 625-1200. Participating in the interview from OIC-WDC, were Deputy Independent Counsel MARK H. TUOHEY, III and Associate Counsel BRETT M. KAVANAUGH. After being apprised of the purpose of the interview and the identities of all participants, HEYMANN thereafter provided the following information:

As a matter of record, HEYMANN had previously requested that instant interview be audio recorded. TUOHEY noted that the request was denied, at which time HEYMANN requested that his prior request be entered into the official record of the investigation.

It is to be noted that TUOHEY provided HEYMANN with copies of his (HEYMANN's) 302s regarding the investigation related to the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. FOSTER who died on July 20, 1993, was the former Deputy Counsel to the President of the United States. Upon reviewing the aforementioned 302s, HEYMANN advised that he found no problem with results as reported within the documents.

In the course of the interview, HEYMANN referred to personal handwritten notes that chronicled events related to FOSTER's death. Participants of the interview were provided with a copy of referenced notes and it is to be noted that a copy of those notes are attached and made a part of the record hereto. HEYMANN noted that the notes were written in February 1994, during a meeting with CINDY MONACO, ROGER ADAMS and DAVID MARGOLIS.

Referring to his notes, HEYMANN recalled that on July 20, 1993, he received information regarding FOSTER's death and that it was a suicide. HEYMANN did not recall being notified of FOSTER's death on July 20th. HEYMANN may have learned of FOSTER's death from newspaper accounts or other news reports. Someone could have told him of FOSTER's death but he does not have a specific recollection of how he learned of the death.

In reviewing an entry dated July 21st, it is noted that in the late morning, HEYMANN talked to ROGER ADAMS. HEYMANN did not recall how the issue of handling documents in FOSTER's office first came up. HEYMANN probably had in mind the notion that Department of Justice (DOJ) individuals should be at the White House during any review of documents in FOSTER's office. The triggering event regarding HEYMANN's thoughts related to document review may have been a telephone call received from White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM.

HEYMANN had a procedure in mind for review of documents in FOSTER's office which he discussed with NUSSBAUM. HEYMANN recalled that DAVID MARGOLIS, DOJ, had a desire for the FBI to be involved in a review of documents in FOSTER's office. HEYMANN recalls that he and MARGOLIS wanted the FBI involved in the search of FOSTER's office. HEYMANN expressed to CHARLES HUME, United States Park Police (USPP), a desire to have the FBI brought into the investigation related to FOSTER's office. HUME then advised HEYMANN that the FBI was already involved.

HEYMANN recalls his desire that FOSTER's death be handled in the manner that any death on U.S. National Park property would be handled. HEYMANN did not think that USPP had the wherewithal or experience to deal with issues related to executive privilege regarding documents in FOSTER's office. This feeling on the part of HEYMANN was further justification for FBI involvement.

MARGOLIS and ADAMS were the DOJ officials selected to oversee the review of documents in FOSTER's office. The criteria with regard to the selection of MARGOLIS and ADAMS were that HEYMANN wanted to have career personnel who could be trusted to be absolutely discreet in reviewing documents where executive privilege might become an issue; Career DOJ personnel would not undermine the credibility of any investigation conducted related to FOSTER's death. HEYMANN noted that he explained his rationale for sending MARGOLIS and ADAMS to the White House to the Counsel's Office.

HEYMANN was sure that the procedures for the review of documents in FOSTER's office were set up in advance of MARGOLIS and ADAMS going to the White House on July 22, 1993. According to HEYMANN, once any questions regarding the handling of documents in FOSTER's office arose, NUSSBAUM could have telephoned him or HEYMANN could have telephoned NUSSBAUM.

HEYMANN was not sure whether the USPP had telephoned him regarding any problems related to the search of FOSTER's office. HEYMANN noted that MARGOLIS did most of the liaison with USPP. HEYMANN thought it was possible that the USPP could have telephoned MARGOLIS and then MARGOLIS would have telephoned HEYMANN regarding problems related to the search of FOSTER's office. HEYMANN could then have telephoned NUSSBAUM with regard to problems related to the search of the office.

An entry on the attached log for Wednesday, July 21st at 5:00 P.M. regarded information provided by MARGOLIS to HEYMANN, related to FBI Special Agents, USPP officers, DAVID MARGOLIS, ROGER ADAMS and STEVEN NEUWIRTH, all being in NUSSBAUM's office with an agreement to return the next morning to conduct the document review in FOSTER's office. It was noted that USPP Officers were not allowed into the office, which by that time had been secured. Also noted in the July 21st entry, was that the method for the conduct of the search was agreed upon by the parties present and would be utilized in the document review. HEYMANN had no memory of NUSSBAUM objecting to the plan that was agreed upon for the search. According to the attached notes, NUSSBAUM agreed to the terms for the search, NEUWIRTH did not. MARGOLIS advised that the search procedure was a "done deal" and that NUSSBAUM had agreed with the terms. Also listed in the attached note is that HEYMANN was briefed regarding the aforementioned meeting.

HEYMANN had no sense of what the USPP was looking for in FOSTER's office other than the obvious, a suicide note. HEYMANN also was of the belief the the USPP would have been looking for goodbye letters and anything else that may have been clues as to why FOSTER committed suicide. HEYMANN did not suggest to either ADAMS, MARGOLIS, or the USPP what they should be looking for in the course of searching FOSTER's office. He wanted the USPP to be the investigative body and not the Deputy Attorney General of the United States or related entities.

When MARGOLIS and ADAMS returned to DOJ from the search of FOSTER's office, HEYMANN believes that MARGOLIS and ADAMS told him they were not allowed to look around FOSTER's office during the search, nor was the USPP allowed to inspect the office during the search. HEYMANN thought that the criteria previously agreed upon for the search called for MARGOLIS, ADAMS and the USPP to look at the documents being reviewed and make a determination as to the relevancy of those documents. Disputed documents would be set aside and handled later. The FBI would also be there to participate in the search. HEYMANN noted that NUSSBAUM had agreed to all of the above related to the search, particularly the handling of documents in FOSTER's office.

If HEYMANN had known how things were going to turn out, he would not have sent ADAMS and MARGOLIS over to the White House by themselves. HEYMANN noted to NUSSBAUM that he thought the manner in which the search was conducted was "folly." HEYMANN noted that he would be skeptical about exercising the powers of DOJ with regard to the search of FOSTER's office. On July 21, 1993, HEYMANN was reluctant to have anyone other than the FBI and USPP jointly handle the investigation related to FOSTER's death. ADAMS' and MARGOLIS' role at the White House was strictly supervisory in nature with regard to the search. The purpose of the investigation to this point was to determine whether or not FOSTER's death was a suicide or a homicide. If the White House had said no to the terms agreed upon on July 21, 1993, regarding the search of FOSTER's office, HEYMANN would have disagreed with any decision to change the intended search parameters. The terms of the search related to FOSTER's office had been discussed with NUSSBAUM at approximately 5:00 P.M. on July 21, 1993, by ADAMS and MARGOLIS. On July 21st, in addition to arrangements that were made related to the search of FOSTER's office, a specific time was set for the review of documents within the office for July 22, 1993. HEYMANN believed that the search would take place on that date.

On July 22, 1993, HEYMANN received a telephone call from MARGOLIS advising that plans had changed. MARGOLIS was calling with regard to the search of FOSTER's office. MARGOLIS noted in the course of the telephone call that he had been informed that the White House would be the only entity allowed to physically look at documents in FOSTER's office. HEYMANN recalls being angry, in that he thought the proposed change was a mistake. HEYMANN believed that MARGOLIS was told of the change by NUSSBAUM. In the course of this conversation with MARGOLIS, HEYMANN discussed the folly of the changes. HEYMANN also discussed with MARGOLIS what MARGOLIS and ADAMS should do at that point. HEYMANN noted that he would not have made a decision during a telephone call with regard to MARGOLIS and ADAMS leaving the search. HEYMANN had a desire to speak with NUSSBAUM on the telephone.

HEYMANN noted that his intentions were to be accessible to MARGOLIS and ADAMS regarding any problems that might arise in the course of searching FOSTER's office. HEYMANN recalls talking to both MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM on the telephone with regard to the search of FOSTER's office.

HEYMANN recalls the telephone call to NUSSBAUM to be heated in nature. HEYMANN noted that MONACO had walked by the location where HEYMANN was conversing with NUSSBAUM and was thought to have been struck by the seriousness of tone between NUSSBAUM and HEYMANN. HEYMANN told NUSSBAUM that he was making a mistake with regard to changing the search procedures. NUSSBAUM expressed that he would have to talk to some people about this. NUSSBAUM was taken aback that HEYMANN thought the search procedure as agreed to had been changed. After speaking with NUSSBAUM, HEYMANN continued talking to MARGOLIS, describing to MARGOLIS, his (HEYMANN's) conversation with NUSSBAUM. HEYMANN informed MARGOLIS that NUSSBAUM would later get back in touch with him (HEYMANN). HEYMANN, at some later time, spoke with NUSSBAUM, stating that he could not believe that he had been doublecrossed by NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM may have apologized without giving any explanation for the change to HEYMANN. HEYMANN asked NUSSBAUM if he had something to hide to which NUSSBAUM replied absolutely nothing.

Also in the course of the telephone call between HEYMANN and MARGOLIS, MARGOLIS advised that he and ADAMS would "hang out" until the dispute over the search procedure had been worked out. At that point, HEYMANN continued about his day and received no further calls from either NUSSBAUM or MARGOLIS. HEYMANN thought he would hear back from NUSSBAUM. Had NUSSBAUM later telephoned HEYMANN, he (HEYMANN) would have then telephoned MARGOLIS and provided him with advice for what should be done.

The July 22nd entry for 1:00 P.M. on the attached set of notes, represents what HEYMANN was told at a later time regarding interactions between NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS. The 9:00 P.M. entry on the attached set of notes reveals a telephone call between HEYMANN and NUSSBAUM.

HEYMANN remembers both MARGOLIS and ADAMS coming to his office on July 23, 1993. HEYMANN was surprised to hear what took place in the course of the document review in FOSTER's office. He was also surprised that neither MARGOLIS nor ADAMS had telephoned him while all of the disputed activity related to the search took place.

HEYMANN was surprised and angry regarding events related to the document review in FOSTER's office. He wanted to avoid the appearance that DOJ looked like it was providing supervision of an investigative responsibility. HEYMANN had a vague memory that NUSSBAUM contacted him (HEYMANN) regarding a White House statement related to the FOSTER death investigation being a DOJ supervised investigation.

One concern that HEYMANN had concerning the FOSTER death investigation was that ADAMS worked on the CLINTON Presidential Transition Team. HEYMANN noted that the Attorney General (AG) was informed of this fact and that the AG knew ADAMS and MARGOLIS would be going to the White House to participate in the search related to FOSTER's office.

ADAMS and MARGOLIS described NUSSBAUM and CLIFF SLOAN as being upset in the course of the search. NUSSBAUM and SLOAN were afraid that ADAMS and MARGOLIS would leave FOSTER's office rather than participate in the search. MARGOLIS thought that he (MARGOLIS) and ADAMS served as window dressing during the course of the search. MARGOLIS recounted for HEYMANN the now familiar story regarding the FBI Special Agent who was rebuked in the course of the search.

MARGOLIS and ADAMS may have assumed after being informed by NUSSBAUM of changes in procedure, that HEYMANN was in contact with NUSSBAUM and that the decision to continue overseeing the search would be okay. On July 23rd, the FBI "pulled back" from the investigation into FOSTER's death. HEYMANN was not sure why. HEYMANN was not contacted by the FBI regarding treatment of its personnel during the search. HEYMANN noted that he saw "FBI brass" on a regular basis during that time period. He may have casually mentioned to someone the appearance that the FBI had somehow pulled back from the investigation although he could not specifically recall if in fact he had done so.

MARGOLIS and ADAMS plainly thought they were supposed to stay for the search. HEYMANN was not sure if this was a function of MARGOLIS and ADAMS thinking HEYMANN and NUSSBAUM had changed plans. MARGOLIS and ADAMS were probably under the impression that they were supposed to stay for the search. Someone at the White House may have suggested that NUSSBAUM had talked to HEYMANN regarding a change of plans. As far as HEYMANN was concerned, after the search of FOSTER's office, DOJ was no longer part of the investigation. The USPP was serving as the lead investigative agency. HEYMANN recalls that the USPP was getting all the cooperation that was needed with regard to the investigation.

HEYMANN did not think that MARGOLIS asked for any documents he was not allowed to see. During the course of the search, there was no discussion regarding the computer in FOSTER's office. There was probably no discussion among parties witnessing the search regarding how documents would be handled after the search.

The mechanics of the search dictated that JAMES HAMILTON, of the law firm of Swidler & Berlin, was to get personal documents related to VINCENT FOSTER, should these documents not be relative to the cause of death. Other than the computer, HEYMANN was not aware of any files or other areas that should have been searched.

On July 27, 1993, HEYMANN first learned of a note believed to have been written by FOSTER having been found. At the time, HEYMANN was meeting with the U.S. Attorney's Advisory Committee. HEYMANN got a note in the course of the meeting stating that NUSSBAUM wanted to talk to him. HEYMANN subsequently telephoned NUSSBAUM who had already asked the Attorney General (AG) to come over. NUSSBAUM asked HEYMANN to come to the Counsel's office as well. HEYMANN rode over to the White House with the AG.

Upon arriving at the White House, HEYMANN and the AG went into the office of THOMAS F. "MACK" MCLARTY. MCLARTY at the time was the President's Chief of Staff. In MCLARTY's office were DAVID GERGEN, MCLARTY, BILL BURTON, and after their arrival, NUSSBAUM entered the office. NUSSBAUM then pulled out an envelope with pieces of a torn up note. NUSSBAUM had made a photocopy of the note. NUSSBAUM explained that in the recent handling of a briefcase in FOSTER's office, a note was found. NUSSBAUM advised that the note had been found on a previous date.

NUSSBAUM and the White House staff asked what should be done with the note. The AG responded that the note should be turned over to the USPP immediately. The AG also asked why the note had not been turned over when it was initially found 24 hours ago. NUSSBAUM replied that they wanted to inform both the President and LISA FOSTER of the note. After issuing the order that the note should be immediately turned over to the USPP, the AG departed the meeting.

HEYMANN contacted MARGOLIS and requested MARGOLIS have the USPP come to the White House to collect the note. After completing his telephone call with MARGOLIS, GERGEN asked HEYMANN to speak with him. Everyone else departed the room.

Representatives of the USPP then came to the White House. The White House was in no hurry to meet with the USPP. The USPP officers had no prior involvement with the FOSTER investigation. HEYMANN met the officers at the White House and tried to make them feel comfortable. At a later time, NUSSBAUM and other staffers gathered. NUSSBAUM assembled the note and asked the USPP officers to write down what the note said. HEYMANN encouraged the USPP officers to ask any questions they might have. HEYMANN noted that the officers asked no questions.

After the note was collected by the USPP officers, HEYMANN rode back to DOJ with the aforementioned officers.

On July 28, 1993, HEYMANN requested that the FBI conduct an obstruction of justice investigation. HEYMANN was of the belief that the White House found the note on the day, and in the manner in which was represented previously to HEYMANN. The purpose of the FBI investigation was to ensure that nothing untoward had taken place.

In making his request for an FBI investigation, HEYMANN noted that he wanted an "aggressive" FBI investigation related to possible obstruction of justice. The FBI later reported back that there was no evidence of obstruction of justice on the part of White House officials. HEYMANN was of the belief that there was no attempt to obstruct justice with regard to the FOSTER death, but felt that the White House Counsel's Office was very clumsy in its handling of the note related to FOSTER's death.

During the course of the search of FOSTER's office on July 22, 1993, NUSSBAUM looked into the interior of a briefcase that was in the office, noting he saw nothing. Both ADAMS and MARGOLIS saw that NUSSBAUM had inspected a briefcase in FOSTER's office on that date. HEYMANN did have a concern based upon this information that a note was not found in the briefcase during the July 22nd, search.

HEYMANN thought that if either MARGOLIS or ADAMS had seen the interior of the briefcase they would have recalled doing so. It would have been a strong indication of obstruction of justice if they had seen the briefcase and it was empty during the July 22nd, search.

On July 29, 1993, THOMAS COLLIER, United States Department of Interior, telephoned HEYMANN and shortly thereafter visited HEYMANN for approximately 45 minutes. In the course of the visit, COLLIER noted that the USPP officers involved in the FOSTER death investigation were being "shabbily" treated by the White House. HEYMANN and COLLIER also discussed the possibility of the USPP pulling out of the investigation. COLLIER contacted the White House and was treated brusquely and impatiently by Deputy White House Counsel, ROY NEEL and BILL BURTON. After the discussion with HEYMANN, COLLIER was passed to MARGOLIS and ADAMS. By this time, GERGEN had become the White House point of contact with regard to the FOSTER death investigation. HEYMANN telephoned GERGEN to express his dismay at treatment of USPP officers. HEYMANN expressed to GERGEN that it would be a disaster if the USPP pulled out based on shabby treatment and a lack of cooperation from the White House. HEYMANN further indicated to GERGEN that the FBI would be allowed to conduct interviews of the White House staffers without the presence of attorneys from the White House Counsel's office. Approximately 90 minutes later, in a conference telephone call between HEYMANN, GERGEN, BURTON, MARK GEARAN, and other individuals from the White House, GERGEN promised cooperation on the part of the White House in the USPP investigation into the death of FOSTER. In the course of the conversation, HEYMANN expressed his displeasure with the actions of White House personnel. BURTON argued with HEYMANN and HEYMANN remembers that the rest of the staffers remained silent.

USPP officers later informed HEYMANN that previous problems with the White House had turned themselves around. HEYMANN was later thanked by Interior Department Secretary BRUCE BABBIT for his intervention in this matter.

On July 27, 1993, HEYMANN had in his possession, a copy of handwritten transcription of the FOSTER note. MARGOLIS displayed the note to WEBSTER HUBBELL. HUBBELL was taken aback because he knew the handwriting was not FOSTER's. The transcription may have been done by the USPP.

HEYMANN has only discussed issues related to the search of FOSTER's office with ADAMS, MARGOLIS and CYNTHIA MONACO. He did not discuss the search of FOSTER's office with White House Counsel LLOYD CUTLER as CUTLER had requested. CUTLER was the successor to NUSSBAUM as White House Counselor.

James Ernest Hobbs, Sergeant, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Sergeant Hobbs was advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for 22 years and is currently employed as a Shift Duty Sergeant in the USSS White House Control Center which is located in the Old Executive Office Building next to the west wing of The White House. He currently works the 10:00 pm - 6:00 am shift as he did in July, 1993 at the time of Vincent Foster's death. As the Shift Duty Sergeant, he is the immediate supervisor of Uniform USSS officers working in the Control Center on the 10:00 pm - 6:00 am shift, overseeing security within The White House including operation of alarms and access to secure areas.

On July 20, 1993, he came to work at 10:00 pm and went home the next morning (7/21/93) at 6:00 am when his shift was done. At the beginning of his shift (approximately 10:00 pm on 7/20/93), he was advised by the USSS Watch Commander, Captain Roland Beatty that a White House staffer named Vincent Foster had committed suicide earlier that day. Sergeant Hobbs said that his immediate superior on that particular day was Lieutenant Robert Dillon. Hobbs had not known Foster.

Sergeant Hobbs said that he does not recall his July 20-21, 1993 shift being particularly busy or eventful in the USSS Control Center. He said that he does not recall any unusual alarm activity on that evening. He specifically said that he does not recall any unusual alarm or access activity during that particular shift involving the Bernard Nussbaum/Vincent Foster suite of offices. He recalls no request from anyone asking for access to that suite.

Sergeant Hobbs said that he knows Officer Henry O'Neill and is aware that O'Neill worked the "midnight" shift escorting

LOUIS HUPP, Latent Fingerprint Examiner, FBI Identification Division, Latent Fingerprint Section, advised that the latent fingerprint recovered on the note written by VINCENT W. FOSTER, is a latent print of the outside area of a palm. The latent print is located entirely on one of the ripped pieces of paper; the print could have been made before or after the note was ripped up.

HUPP stated that all of the latent prints in this case are sufficient enough to make a positive identification to a known set of prints. Latent prints in this case are from FOSTER's vehicle or items from FOSTER's vehicle, one latent finger print from inside of the grip on the revolver which was in FOSTER's hand, and the latent palm print on one of the sections of the ripped up note.

WEBB HUBBELL, former Deputy Assistant Attorney General, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel with his attorney JOHN W. NIELDS, JR. of the law firm HOWREY & SIMON, 1299 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C., (202) 383-6639. Present representing the Office of the Independent Counsel were MARK STEIN and BETH GOLDEN. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, HUBBELL provided the following information:

HUBBELL advised that he is acquainted with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE having seen him several times at the Old Executive Office Building on The White House grounds. He also said that WILLIAM KENNEDY would refer people to him including HUBBELL himself if they needed to get White House passes for any reason. He does not recall any other dealings that he had with LIVINGSTONE.

HUBBELL said he remembers talking with LIVINGSTONE the night of July 20, 1993 at the FOSTER residence. HUBBELL was making a lot of telephone calls that evening and they were having a problem getting enough telephones. There was only one telephone available for use in the FOSTER kitchen. MAC MCLARTY had his cellular telephone with him which he was using. HUBBELL said that the battery on his phone was weakening and therefore he was using the telephone in LIVINGSTONE's car. It was the type of cellular phone which could plug into the lighter. He recalls calling JIM HAMILTON and a lot of individuals were calling from Arkansas. HUBBELL advised that LIVINGSTONE was showing him how to use the phone and stayed with him in the car while he made telephone calls.

HUBBELL advised that there had been a concern that the press was going to show up at the FOSTER residence the following morning. When asked to explain who was concerned, he responded the "collective we". He recalled KENNEDY suggesting that LIVINGSTONE could help if the press became a problem. As it turned out, only one reporter showed and HUBBELL said he does not know if LIVINGSTONE helped with the press that following morning

by SSA H. ALEXIS SUGGS Date dictated 7/20/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; or not. He recalls a discussion on the night of July 20 about LIVINGSTONE going to the residence on the morning of July 21. He had this conversation, he believed, with MCLARTY or DAVID WATKINS. HUBBELL said that he himself raised the subject to the FOSTER family and then discussed it with MCLARTY or WATKINS. He recalls that the response he received was "we'll get somebody". HUBBELL took the initiative of making calls to The White House to pass this message on. He made the call either from LIVINGSTONE's car phone or the kitchen phone. If he made the call from the car phone, LIVINGSTONE would probably have overheard it there.

He cannot recall specifically who he talked with on this matter at The White House but he believes it was probably MARK GEARAN. It was not DEE DEE MYERS or RICKI SEIDMAN.

HUBBELL said that to the best of his memory, there was somebody there between 7:00 and 8:00 am the morning of 7/21. The best he can recall, when he and his wife showed up at the FOSTER residence early that morning, there was a woman standing by the sidewalk just outside the FOSTER gate. He had never seen before at The White House and did not recognize her. He has a vague recollection of asking "can I help you" and her responding, "I'm (she gave her name) from The White House". If asked to speculate, he guessed that she may have been with the Communications Office. He described her as having brown hair, being of medium of height, perhaps 5'5" or 5'6" and young, meaning under 30. His memory of her is very unclear.

With regard to what time the HUBBELL's arrived at the FOSTER residence on the morning of 7/21, HUBBELL said that they called LISA FOSTER before going over and believes that it may have been closer to 8:00 than 7:00 because where he comes from in Arkansas you generally did not even call people until after 8:00 in the morning and he knew that everyone had been up very late the night before (as he had, not getting home until about 2:00 am on the morning of July 21, 1993) and that LISA FOSTER had been given a sleeping pill. From that he guesses that he would have arrived there closer to 8 am. When he arrived with his wife SUSAN HUBBELL, he does not recall seeing any press people. He was surprised at this. HUBBELL said that he remained at the FOSTER residence for the entire day except for a brief period in the afternoon when he went to The White House for a meeting with the Park Police.

HUBBELL said that LISA FOSTER and her children were at the residence and he thinks there was some other female (possibly a relative) who had spent the night with LISA but he could not recall who it was.

He has no recollection of seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at the FOSTER residence, either parked outside of it or standing outside of it or in the residence the morning of July 21, 1993. He has no information about LIVINGSTONE's having been there. HUBBELL explained that he could have been there but he has no affirmative memory of it. He does not remember one way or the other whether KENNEDY, LIVINGSTONE and HUBBELL himself had talked about LIVINGSTONE being there that morning. He said that the statement that they had discussed it in a prior interview was incorrect.

He went on to explain that the previous evening, July 20, LIVINGSTONE stayed outside the residence. HUBBELL said that he remembers KENNEDY and HUBBELL himself discussing whether or not LIVINGSTONE should be there and conceded that maybe it had been in LIVINGSTONE's presence.

Returning to the subject of the morning of the 21. HUBBELL said that SHEILA ANTHONY came over later in the morning and MARSHA SCOTT came even later than that when it was time to pick HUBBELL up to take him to The White House for the meeting with the Park Police. He advised that nobody from The White House was there at the house that morning.

HUBBELL said that parking on the street in front of the FOSTER residence was not a problem at all in the morning when they arrived. It had been the night before. It was very crowded and they had had to park around the corner but the following morning there were plenty of spaces. He does not recall seeing any car with any individual sitting in it at or near the FOSTER residence. SUSAN HUBBELL parked their car on the street near the residence.

Webster Lee Hubbell appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 2:00 p.m. for interview. Mr. Hubbell was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and that the purpose of the interview was to discuss his personal knowledge of Vincent Foster, his weekend at the shore with the Vincent Fosters on the weekend just prior to Vincent Foster's death, and his knowledge regarding a meeting on July 21, 1993 with the U.S. Park Police concerning their investigation of Foster's death. In addition to the interview agents, Carl Stich, Assistant to Independent Counsel, Robert B. Fiske, Jr., also assisted with the interview. Also present during the interview was John Nieldes, attorney for Hubbell. Mr. Hubbell provided the following information:

Personal Knowledge of Vincent Foster:

He had known Vincent Foster for about 20 years, having worked with him at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Arkansas. He explained that Foster started at this firm in January, 1971, and that he (Hubbell) started work there in May of 1973. He said that Foster was a graduate of the Arkansas Law School.

After coming to Washington, D.C. with the President in January, 1993, he said he spoke with Foster on a daily basis, at least concerning business matters. He advised that when Foster first came to Washington, he stayed with his (Foster's) sister, Sheila Anthony. Hubbell's wife came to Washington in March of 1993 and Foster's family joined him permanently in June of 1993. Foster's wife had rented temporary quarters in Washington in March or April, but continued to reside in Little Rock. The Foster children came to Washington in May or June of 1993.

Hubbell described his relationship with Foster as being "best friends."

The last time Hubbell saw Foster was the Monday before Foster died (7/19/93). He saw Foster in Foster's office and can't remember the business matter discussed, if any, but does remember discussing the previous weekend the Foster and Hubbell families had spent together.

Hubbell described Foster in the following terms: reserved; not loud, held everything inside; loved his children more than anything, very close to them; had no weaknesses; very smart; quiet; meticulous in his work; spent time gathering facts before drawing conclusions; frustrated with White House Travel Office issues - attention in the media, unhappy with the FBI and internal report on the Travel Office matter; someone who worked until 10:00 to 11:00 p.m. each night and also on Saturdays and Sundays; hadn't gotten away from his White House work. When asked if he had observed any noticeable behavioral or emotional changes in Vincent Foster prior to his death, Hubbell said that in hindsight, he realized that the no time off from work was wearing on us all. Hubbell described a "once a week" dinner or "Arkansas night" frequently attended by Foster. Others who would often join the group included Deb Coyle (phonetic), Bruce Lindsey, Marsha Scott, John Emerson, Sheila and Burl Anthony and other out-of-town friends. Hubbell said Foster was a great friend, but not the life of the party. He did not notice Foster acting differently in the days or weeks before his death.

Hubbell said that Foster would cope with problems in his life, both professionally and personally, by relaxing by the pool, reading and jogging, although he had done the latter less since coming to D.C. and was not able to relax by a pool at all. His reading included everything such as novels, history, newspapers, etc.

Hubbell said that he was not aware of any problems or difficulties Foster was experiencing prior to his death. He said Foster never talked about money concerns and had successfully rented his house in Little Rock and that this was not a concern for him. When asked if there may be any stress associated with working on Whitewater tax returns, Hubbell answered that he was not sure - Vince never mentioned this as a point of stress. He said Foster felt responsible for the Travel Office matter and didn't like the criticism being received on this issue.

When asked if Vincent Foster had an individual in his life in whom he could confide, Hubbell replied that Foster wasn't the type of person to say let's go for an hour or two and unload, but rather during five minute breaks in business discussions, he would confide in Hubbell concerning matters on his mind. In addition to Hubbell, Hubbell believed Foster confided with his wife, Lisa, and his sister, Sheila Anthony, but he really wasn't someone to often do this.

Hubbell never remembered statements by Foster such as "I can't stand it anymore" or "I'd be better off dead" or other similar statements.

Hubbell answered no to all questions concerning any noticeable changes in Foster's personal appearance, physical ailments, headaches, loss of appetite or any kind of stomach trouble. He said, however, that both he and Foster had confided in each other about sleep difficulties. Foster had said on occasion that he had been up all night or didn't sleep well the previous night or that he had awakened in the middle of the night. Hubbell said that Foster had lost approximately 10-15 pounds prior to his death. At the time, Hubbell associated Foster's weight loss with work and the fact that they were eating lunch at the desk or not eating regularly. He and Foster had discussed that the new administration had walked into an "empty office." They compared it to a law office where "the clients were ready and you have nothing." Newspaper accounts concerning the previous administration's removal of office items was termed by Hubbell as accurate.

Hubbell said that he was not aware that Foster was experiencing any type of stress. Foster never talked to Hubbell about missing the comfort zone of the Rose Law Firm where they had worked for more than 20 years. They just never talked about it one way or the other. Rather, Foster talked about being on this great adventure in Washington, D.C. Hubbell said he and Foster were very close to the President and First Lady and discussed with each other, prior to coming to Washington, that I'll go if you go. Hubbell believed that Foster thought that the option of going back to Little Rock or the Rose Law Firm would have been an acknowledgement of failure. This was during the time of the Travel Office situation. Hubbell said if you really want to understand Foster, to look at his recent speech at the University of Arkansas. He believed Foster wrote the speech after someone else had worked on it. Foster rewrote the speech himself on the plane.

Hubbell described Foster's reputation as being "impeccable." He said Foster could have run for President of the Bar Association in Little Rock and nobody would have run against him. Foster was an anchor, a rock, in the White House Counsel office. Everybody felt they could go to him for advice. As examples, Foster assisted/counseled George Stephanopoulos, the Domestic Policy Council, the lawsuit against the Healthcare Advisory Group and the Department of Justice.

Hubbell did not believe that Foster himself relied upon religion. Lisa Foster is Catholic and their children were raised Catholic. Hubbell believes Foster attended church at times with his family.

When asked if he had noticed any changes in interests or hobbies by Foster prior to his death, Hubbell replied that Foster continued to relax by reading. He had no knowledge of Foster having any firearms. He said he was not a hunter and only rarely participated in Arkansas duck hunt trips, if at all. Hubbell was very surprised to learn that Foster had any guns. "It just wasn't in his (Foster's) personality."

Hubbell described Foster's relationship with his wife as good. As with most people, there had perhaps been some stress adjusting to their new world; however, this was helped as Lisa became closer to other White House wives, to include Hubbell's. There may also have been some stress associated with Foster not being home often. Hubbell believed Lisa Foster was in favor of moving to Washington, D.C. with her husband. Again, as with anyone, perhaps with some reservations. However, they were all excited about joining the President.

Weekend of 7/17-18/93:

Hubbell was asked about the weekend before Foster's death. He explained that he and his wife were supposed to go to dinner with the Fosters on Friday evening, but that Foster had called him (Hubbell) in Miami and said that he and his wife were planning to go to the Eastern Shore.

Hubbell explained that both he and Foster knew Mike Cardoza, who had been Deputy White House Counsel in the Carter administration. During the transition, Cardoza had been asked by Zoe Baird for his help with personnel issues. Cardoza ended up spending four months at the Department of Justice with Hubbell prior to Janet Reno being in place as Attorney General. Foster had met Cardoza in this same transition period. Cardoza's wife, Harolyn, was originally from the Washington, D.C. area and both families relied upon her and Mike for advice about household matters such as what plumber to call or otherwise how to get things done for the family. Hubbell and the Cardozas left Saturday morning for the Cardozas' house near Easton, Maryland. Hubbell told them that Vincent Foster and his wife were "somewhere close" and let's invite them over. They called the Fosters and found that they were, in fact, only 15 minutes away. The Fosters came over for dinner. The families spent a good relaxing evening together. It was arranged that both Mrs. Hubble and Mrs. Foster would receive a tennis lesson from nationally famous tennis instructor Nick Boliterri (phonetic), a friend of Harolyn's father, Nate Landow, a developer in the Washington, D.C./Baltimore area. Both Boliterri and Landow also spent the weekend with the Hubbells and Cardozas at the Cardozas' house. Following their Saturday get together, Vincent Foster and his wife went back to the hotel and Foster went on a long jog. During their association on both Saturday and Sunday, Foster spent his time reading the paper, boating, hitting some golf balls and being introduced to eating fresh crab. They talked about how their lifestyles had changed and how they needed to have a life outside of work. Foster talked about taking June/July off when he was employed at the Rose Law Firm to visit his house in Michigan and how he missed doing that. They had agreed to not talk about work-related matters. Hubbell said both he and Foster were concerned about each other but that the weekend was very relaxing. The Monday before he died, Foster said he was making arrangements to take the next weekend off similar to the one they had just spent to get away from Washington, D.C.

Other Comments Regarding Foster and Events Surrounding the Day of Death:

Hubbell was asked about comments by anyone concerning Vincent Foster and his well being in the days before his death. Hubbell said he could not recall any specifics, but that Foster had been working too hard and some of his friends were worried about Foster being under too much stress. Hubbell said it is hard to read your name in the paper so often.

Hubbell said he was notified of Foster's death while at dinner with his family and Marsha Scott on the evening of July 20, 1993. George Stephanopoulos called him and asked him to get to a phone where he could talk. Stephanopoulos told him that Foster had been found dead and indicated that it was thought it might be a suicide. At first, Hubbell believed Stephanopoulos was referring to young Vince Foster, Foster's son. Hubbell told his wife and Marsha that they had to leave dinner and the kids were left in the restaurant to finish their dinner.

Hubbell said that Bill Kennedy had gone to identify the body and that Foster's car and White House pass had been found. Hubbell said he wanted to be at the Foster residence when the U.S. Park Police came to tell Foster's wife, Lisa. Hubbell lives on McComb Street, near Sheila Anthony, Foster's sister. On this particular night, Foster's other sister, Sharon Bowman, a Little Rock housewife, happened to be visiting at Sheila Anthony's home. Hubbell knew he had to go to Sheila's home and also find her husband, Beryl. Hubbell and his wife, Susie, went to the Foster residence.

Foster was asked about what kind of car Foster was driving while in Washington. Hubbell said that he believed it was a Honda or similar car that was used on a regular basis by Foster. He said this car was Foster's daughter Laura's car and that Foster had left his car, an older model Olds Toronado, in Little Rock. Hubbell was asked if he knew how Foster had brought his gun up to the D.C. area from Arkansas. Hubbell said he did not know when Foster brought the gun to Washington. He was aware that Foster was concerned with the crime rate in the D.C. area. Hubbell did not know that Foster even had a gun until the night of Foster's death. He said Lisa Foster believed that Vince had two guns and maybe more. Foster had been given these guns when his father died. On the night of Foster's death, they found only one gun at the Foster residence and no ammunition.

Foster had talked with friends about being upset. Foster felt that people were being unfairly criticized. Hubbell gave as an example that Bill Kennedy had been reprimanded by an internal report concerning the Travel Office and that Foster viewed this as a "bum rap." Hubbell said that everyone at the Foster residence that evening was trying to make logic out of the death, trying to pinpoint some event, but that they could not do so.

When the U.S. Park Police advised Lisa Foster of her husband's death, Lisa responded by screaming, "It can't be true, it can't be true."

Hubbell said he had no knowledge of any prior history of clinical depression for Vincent Foster or anyone in the Foster family.

Foster's mother still resides in Hope, Arkansas and Hubbell was aware that Vince talked with her frequently on the telephone. Foster did not return to Arkansas on a regular basis since coming to Washington. Hubbell was asked to recall the times Foster may have returned to Arkansas. He said for Mr. Rodham's funeral, perhaps at Easter time, and for the University of Arkansas graduation commencement speech, were probably Foster's only times back to Arkansas.

Hubbell was asked if he had received any letters or other correspondence from Foster immediately preceding or just following Foster's death. He answered no.

Individuals present at the Foster residence on the night of Foster's death included the following: Bruce Lindsey; Bill Kennedy; Marsha Scott; David Watkins and his wife (Watkins was Operations for the White House); Mack McLarty and his wife, Donna; Senator Pryor; Burl Anthony; Foster's daughter, Laura; and then later the two boys were located and on one of the nights, President Clinton. Hubbell noted that Mrs. Clinton was out of town at the time, maybe in Arkansas. Hubbell identified Foster's children as son Vincent, age 22-23; daughter Laura, age 21; and son Brugh, 17-18.

Hubbell was not aware of any particular projects on which Marsha Scott was working, other than that she was working on Clinton work. Hubbell also knew that Foster was setting up a blind trust for the Clintons with the help of outside counsel. Brantley Buck, of the Rose Law Firm, was working on this project with Vince.

Hubbell said that the hours immediately after Foster's death were busy with making arrangements for the funeral and family and friend notifications. On the night of Foster's death, he left Foster's residence sometime after midnight, perhaps even as late as two or three in the morning.

Meeting with U.S. Park Police 7/21/93:

On the evening of July 20th or early morning of July 21st, Hubbell can't remember which, he was notified of a meeting at the White House where the U.S. Park Police would provide a report concerning the circumstances of Foster's death. Hubbell remembers possibly getting a ride to the White House after stopping that morning at the Foster residence. The meeting with the Park Police was held in David Watkins' office early on the morning of July 21, 1993. He said Watkins' office is on the ground floor of the West Wing of the White House. He could remember that the meeting was attended by David Watkins, two U.S. Park Police investigators, Bill Kennedy, and perhaps George Stephanopoulos and Bernie Nussbaum. The Park Police provided a report of what they had found. The Park Police wanted to know who the point person would be at the White House during the investigation. Hubbell's memory was that initially this individual was identified to be David Watkins. Hubbell said that no White House instructions were given to the U.S. Park Police concerning the conduct of their investigation at that meeting. Hubbell said he was at the meeting as a representative of the Foster family. He wanted to obtain information regarding the suicide that he could relay back to the family.

It was at this time that Jim Hamilton was hired as the Foster family attorney. Hubbell told Lisa she would need an attorney to assist with details regarding transfer of the body back to Arkansas, the autopsy and someone who knew the Washington, D.C. climate. Vince Foster knew Jim Hamilton and had great regard for him.

When asked about the search of Foster's office, Hubbell replied that someone might have mentioned it. Hubbell himself may have asked Nussbaum if there had been a note. Hubbell could not recall other discussions regarding a search for a suicide note. He also did not visit the Foster office himself. Hubbell had been told that Foster's office had been locked. Hubbell remembered calling Bill Burton regarding the question of locking the door.

Hubbell said he did not find out about the note until after he got back from the Foster funeral. When he was shown the note by David Margolis of the Department of Justice, his first reaction was that it was not in Foster's handwriting. However, he later learned that this was simply a transcription of the original note which had been torn. He eventually saw the torn note and agreed that it was Foster's handwriting. Hubbell said that the contents of the note were "not atypical" of Foster. He said it was common for Foster to prepare "to do" and other lists. Hubbell understood that Lisa Foster had told her husband to make a list of the things that were bothering him. He also said that Foster had called for medication and had some psychiatrists' names.

Hubbell was asked who else should be talked to concerning this investigation. His immediate reply was that was assuming investigators "ought to be talking to anybody." Hubbell then said that he was not aware of any information out there to draw any other conclusion other than what has already been done.

Hubbell described Hillary Clinton's relationship with Vince Foster as being close friends. He said Hillary, Vince and I were very, very close. He also described Mrs. Clinton and Foster as co-workers. They had had a fifteen year close working relationship at the Rose Law Firm. He said there was no truth to reported rumors of anything more than this.

At the conclusion of the interview, Hubbell's attorney wanted to bring up two items. The first, some information provided to Hubbell from the son of a writer in Fayetteville, Arkansas. This individual, Sean Harrison, had provided Hubbell with information that Foster may have been murdered by a Navy hit squad. Prior to his death, Foster had been furnished information regarding unexplained suicides of two Arkansas military men. This information was provided for the record.

Secondly, Nieldes wanted Hubbell to comment regarding his (Hubbell's) earlier comments at the time of Foster's death that it may not have been a suicide. Hubbell explained that that comment was only an immediate reaction. He now believed that Foster's death was a suicide and had no doubt that it had been done at Fort Marcy Park, even though he (Hubbell) has never been there.

The following description of Hubbell was obtained through observation and interview:

On April 14, 1994, John Nieldes telephonically contacted attorney Carl Stich with the following information:

Hubbell would like to add that he now recalls that there was an issue shortly after Vince Foster's death that Vince had sent a package to his mother shortly before his death, perhaps the Monday before. The package contained some legal materials related to a family trust or something like that. There was no personal letter included, so far as Hubbell knows. This information came to Hubbell from Foster's sister, Sheila Anthony.

WEBSTER LEE HUBBELL, former Associate Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), telephone (202) 363-0743 (home), (202) 429-1780 (work), was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. MR. HUBBELL was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. This was a follow-up interview to his interview by the FBI and the Office of Independent Counsel on April 13, 1994. CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR., assisted with the interview. Also present during the interview was JOHN NIELDES, attorney for HUBBELL. MR. HUBBELL provided the following information:

His first recollection of VINCENT FOSTER discussing the White House Travel Office matter with him was right after his (HUBBELL's) confirmation hearing in mid-May, 1993. HUBBELL recalled that the hearing was on a Wednesday and that on a Thursday or Friday night dinner after this, FOSTER told him that the Travel Office situation "looks like a mess." FOSTER indicated to HUBBELL that this was another matter starting to hit. FOSTER expressed a concern regarding whether the White House had acted properly in contacting the FBI. The issue was whether BILL KENNEDY, Associate Counsel to the President, should have called the FBI directly. FOSTER's reaction was that he didn't know what had been wrong with this. KENNEDY dealt with the FBI on a daily basis regarding nominations and it seemed reasonable he would contact the FBI with a new issue asking who it should be referred to. FOSTER didn't see anything wrong with this and discussed what the future White House policy should be as the White House was being criticized. FOSTER was upset, but not terribly so, about the criticism.

FOSTER's concern over the Travel Office matter "got worse." FOSTER expressed concern to HUBBELL that he shouldn't have handed the matter off. FOSTER wanted to take responsibility. He was not happy that the FBI report had criticized KENNEDY.

by SA William T. Guyton WTG:deg Date dictated 6/7/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

The White House report on the Travel Office had censured BILL KENNEDY. FOSTER was very upset about this. FOSTER felt that KENNEDY was being made a "scapegoat." FOSTER had asked KENNEDY to handle the matter and felt personal responsibility.

HUBBELL was asked if he believed KENNEDY pressured the FBI. HUBBELL replied that this statement was in the FBI report but that it was hard to recall when he had first heard this. FOSTER had told HUBBELL that KENNEDY wouldn't have done this. FOSTER didn't believe that KENNEDY had pressured anybody or had threatened IRS involvement.

HUBBELL was asked about FOSTER's statement that the FBI had lied. HUBBELL answered that "lied" is "not a word that VINCE used."

HUBBELL was asked if he had noticed any change in FOSTER concerning the Travel Office matter. HUBBELL replied that FOSTER continued to be upset, focused on the matter and concerned that Congress was talking about holding hearings on the issue. FOSTER expressed concern that people should be hired to represent the White House. HUBBELL explained it was not that FOSTER had done anything wrong, but that he was just focused on the matter. HUBBELL said he would not describe FOSTER's reaction as anger, as he never saw FOSTER "blow up." FOSTER was "upset" that the Travel Office matter couldn't be put to bed or die and be over with. Newspaper articles, particularly the Wall Street Journal, were continuing over this issue. There were calls for files and Congressional hearings.

HUBBELL said he thought that FOSTER was overreacting to this. HUBBELL advised FOSTER to get outside counsel if that was what was needed. FOSTER was trying to get BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Counsel, to hire outside counsel.

FOSTER was never concerned for his personal exposure on the issue. He wanted the outside lawyer to give the matter a "fresh look."

When asked if FOSTER had hired an attorney personally, HUBBELL said that he knew FOSTER had talked with JIM LYONS and JIM HAMILTON regarding representation. HUBBELL believes he found out about this afterwards. HUBBELL said he did not know why--

FOSTER would personally need an attorney. HUBBELL said it was hard to remember when you first knew about some of these things.

FOSTER had talked to HUBBELL about wanting to get outside counsel for the White House Counsel's office.

HUBBELL was questioned again about FOSTER's statement that the FBI had lied to the Attorney General. HUBBELL said that FOSTER was probably referring to the FBI report on the Travel Office with that statement. HUBBELL could not recall or think of anything else FOSTER may have been referring to.

HUBBELL was asked if he knew the name CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. HUBBELL replied that "the name sounds familiar." When LIVINGSTONE was further described as a White House employee, HUBBELL asked if he was a heavyset guy and then said he could recall LIVINGSTONE. HUBBELL saw LIVINGSTONE at FOSTER's residence on the evening of July 20, 1993. LIVINGSTONE worked for BILL KENNEDY. LIVINGSTONE may have gone to identify FOSTER's body with KENNEDY but HUBBELL said he didn't know that. HUBBELL recalled sitting in LIVINGSTONE's car, using his car phone. LIVINGSTONE also came to FOSTER's residence on the morning of July 21, 1993 to assist with press control. He may also have helped on the evening of July 20, 1993 at the residence with press control. HUBBELL said that White House communications people had also been called for someone to be at the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993. HUBBELL could not recall exactly who he talked to about this; it may have been MCLARTY, BILL BURTON, DAVID WATKINS and he could not recall if MARK GEARAN was there yet or not. HUBBELL said that either he or BILL KENNEDY would have asked LIVINGSTONE "can you be here in the morning?" referring to the FOSTER residence. HUBBELL said he could not recall anything further, other than he thought there had been some press at the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993. He cannot remember White House presence. HUBBELL is not sure if White House personnel showed up. He can just remember the issue being discussed.

HUBBELL said he would like to correct the date on which JIM HAMILTON had been hired from what he said in his previous interview. He now remembered a call being made to HAMILTON on the evening of July 20, 1993. HUBBELL believed he previously stated that HAMILTON had been contacted the following day (July 21, 1993).

HUBBELL was asked if there was anything about the Travel Office matter that was similar to anything which FOSTER had experienced in the past and, therefore, caused him so much concern. HUBBELL replied that you "can't make logic out of an illogical act." FOSTER had become focused on the Travel Office issue and blown it out of proportion. HUBBELL had told FOSTER that you have the Travel Office matter and I have Waco. HUBBELL believes that FOSTER would have told him if he had done anything wrong in connection with the Travel Office situation. FOSTER always wanted a secondary role and wanted to avoid the spotlight.

SUZANNA WARD HUBBELL, wife of former Associate Deputy Attorney General WEBB HUBBELL, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel with her and WEBB's attorney JOHN W. NIELDS, JR. Howrey & Simon, 1299 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, 202-383-6639. Also present representing the Office of the Independent Counsel was Attorney MARK STEIN. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, HUBBELL provided the following information:

HUBBELL advised that she and her husband, WEBB, went together to the FOSTER residence both the night of 7/20/93 and the morning 7/21/93. Mrs. HUBBELL advised that she drove because Mr. HUBBELL does not drive. They went to the residence on both occasions because they were the FOSTER's closest friends and it was unthinkable not to be there.

To the best of HUBBELL's recollection, they had gotten home at approximately 2:00 am on 7/21/93 and slept heavily-being very tired. Mrs. HUBBELL called the FOSTER residence at approximately 8:00 am the following morning. To the best of her recollection, SHEILA ANTHONY, who had spent the night at the FOSTER residence, answered the phone and said that LISA and the rest of the household was still asleep.

Mrs. HUBBELL said that she and her husband got up and got dressed and got to the FOSTER residence at approximately 9:00 am. She parked the car fairly close to the residence. She does not recall exactly where, but said that she usually parks around the corner. She does not recall one way or the other if any member of the press was there. She also does not recall anybody else at or near the residence. In particular she does not recall one way or the other whether or not there was a young woman in front of the residence. HUBBELL advised that when they arrived at the residence, the only people there were SHEILA ANTHONY, LISA FOSTER and the FOSTER children. She said that EILEEN WATKINS and DONNA MCLARTY arrived later in the morning. She does not recall anyone there from The White House or anybody acting in a security capacity that she was aware of. She remembers seeing MARSHA

Carolyn J. Huber was interviewed at the office of her attorney, Henry F. Schuelke, III, 1728 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C. In addition to the interviewing agents, attorney Schuelke was present at this interview. Ms. Huber was advised that the interview was in connection with allegations concerning the shredding of documents at the Rose Law Firm (RLF) in Little Rock, Arkansas. After being advised of this and of the identity of the interviewing agents and she provided the following information:

She was first employed by the RLF from April 1976 through December 31, 1978 as a secretary to Law Firm Associate Allen Bird and Law Firm Partner Hebert Rule. From January 1979 through January 15, 1981 she was Mansion Administrator at the Arkansas State Governor's Mansion. Thereafter, she served as Office Manager at RLF from January 17, 1981 through January 31, 1993. Her duties as Office Manager included all personnel work with regard to the clerical staff, the day-to-day matters in connection with the building, and the approval of office procurements. On February 1, 1993 she assumed the duties of Special Assistant to the President at the White House.

When questioned regarding the process used to maintain, and, as necessary, shred documents at the RLF, Ms. Huber advised that because of space concerns, inactive files were transferred from the main offices of RLF to a remote storage area on Cantrell Road. This space was a warehouse owned by Capital Properties. When it was determined by RLF attorneys that files were no longer needed at the main office, files were transferred to this remote storage area. At this location two file clerks had custody of these records. They were Ricki Stacy and Ann Walker. She believed Ms. Stacy had been employed at RLF for a period of about nine years and Ms. Walker, who was primarily in charge of the microfilming of records, for four or five years. Periodically a list was created by one of these two individuals and sent to Mary Russell at RLF who in turn provided the list to each attorney for a determination of whether the files being held in storage should be (1) destroyed, (2) microfilmed, or (3) kept. She did not believe there was a fourth option for the attorneys to elect to personally keep the files or documents. This list created by the file clerks at Cantrell Road was often a copy of a list originally prepared when the files were boxed from the main RLF office location and sent to storage. This original list was created by RLF secretaries. Ms. Huber believes these listings by the secretary and the file clerks at the remote location are kept forever. In addition documentation concerning every file was made on a card system. She was not sure if this system has been computerized yet or not. Again, these cards were maintained indefinitely. She added that lawyers "can't throw anything away".

When questioned about the files of Mrs. Hillary Clinton during the 1992 Presidential campaign, Ms. Huber advised that these files stayed at RLF. Mrs. Clinton's office was maintained intact during the campaign year. Ms. Huber does not know who took over Mrs. Clinton's files when Mr. Clinton was elected President and the Clinton's moved to Washington.

Ms. Huber could provide no information concerning documents transferred from the governor's mansion back to RLF or any other location for destruction. She understood there were mail runs between the governor's mansion and RLF, but was not aware of any file destruction transfer while an employee of RLF.

When shown a copy of a memorandum to Mrs. Clinton from Mary Russell dated July 21, 1988, Ms. Huber indicated that the "C" written on this document referred to a Cheryl Park. It is Ms. Huber's understanding that Park only stayed at RLF one year (1988). She believes Park now lives in Conway, Arkansas and if it becomes necessary, she could find her telephone number, but believes that it would be available from directory assistance. She also advised that the additional writing on this memorandum was that of Mrs. Hillary Clinton. The "address to line" was in Mary Russell's handwriting. With respect to the attached listing of four Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan files, Ms. Huber said that she did not recognize this listing. She said the listing for files to be reviewed for disposition was usually a typed list. Again, often a xerox list of the original file contents prepared by the attorney's secretary.

When Ms. Huber left RLF they were trying to set up a numbering system on the computer regarding files sent to storage.

She is not sure if this has been done yet or not. She advised that as files were sent to storage, they were taken from the boxes in which they were received and shelved according to a predetermined numbering system. Any files still in boxes while in storage were only held in this condition because they had not yet been filed.

Business files of RLF were kept by the attorneys versus specific files related to clients were maintained in the office filing system as well as sent to storage at Cantrell Road.

By way of background Ms. Huber provided the following recollections concerning file disposition at RLF. In 1976 files were maintained at the original office space on Third Street and also at an off-site location. In approximately June 1981 the firm moved to a Fourth Street location and at that time hired a person to take care of the files. At this time the files were filed in a room in the basement of the building as well as a Third Street storage location and also in 1981 and 1983 in the Spring building. The Cantrell Road location for in-active file storage was rented approximately eight years ago. The person hired in 1981-82 to maintain RLF files was Patti Piedscalski. She is no longer with RLF, her duties were assumed in 1982-83 by Mary Russell who was first hired as a part-time employee and then as a full-time employee to maintain the files. In the mid 1980s files no longer needed by the firm were sold to the dump for the value of the paper, and then later BFI, a waste disposal company, picked up these records and destroyed them via a truck shredder. In approximately 1990, RLF purchased a shredder which was capable of small volume shredding of documents. Bob Boucher was in charge of picking up these documents for destruction. Finally, she added that there were locked boxes available for extremely sensitive material that was picked up on a daily basis by Boucher. He was the only one allowed to pick up this material.

Ms. Huber has no first hand knowledge regarding the shredding of documents concerning Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, Whitewater, James or Susan McDougal, or Vince or Lisa Foster. She noted no change in volume for destruction of records during the campaign year or any change with respect to the volume of mail exchanged with the governor's mansion.

In her opinion there has been no coverup at RLF with respect to any abnormal file destruction. Any files destroyed were done so during the normal course of business for space considerations as these files were no longer needed. She commented the attorney's at the firm wouldn't even know how to run the shredder or, in fact, may not have known where it was located.

RICHARD HUFF, of the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), Office of Information and Privacy, telephone number 202-514-4233, was interviewed regarding his knowledge related to the dissemination of the United States Park Police (USPP) report concerning the death investigation related to VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose of the interview, HUFF thereafter provided the following information:

HUFF advised that the DOJ Office of Information and Privacy did not disclose the Park Police report to The White House nor did other divisions within DOJ disclose the USPP report to The White House.

HUFF was aware that the DOJ Office of Information and Privacy was in the process of responding to Freedom of Information Act requests related to the USPP report regarding FOSTER's death, circa September - November, 1993. HUFF believes that the USPP may have shared part of the report with The White House in order to determine what could be disseminated pursuant to FOIA requests at DOJ. HUFF recalls the USPP informing DOJ of disclosing to The White House, information from the FOSTER report in order to comply with incoming FOIA requests.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

Captain Charles W. Hume, Assistant Commander, Criminal Investigations Branch, U.S. Park Police, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., as scheduled at 1:00 p.m. for interview. Capt. Hume was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and that the purpose of the interview was to discuss his involvement in the U.S. Park Police investigation of the death of Vincent Foster on July 20, 1993, particularly with respect to the search of Foster's office and events surrounding that search. In addition to the interviewing agents, Carl Stich, Assistant to Independent Counsel, Robert B. Fiske, Jr., also assisted with the interview. Capt. Hume provided the following information:

Capt. Hume advised that he was not at the Vincent Foster death scene investigation on the afternoon and evening of July 20, 1993. He understood he had been paged that evening but he did not receive the page. His first involvement in the Vincent Foster death investigation was at 6:30 a.m. (approximately) on the morning of July 21, 1993. The previous night's shift commander, a lieutenant whose name Hume could not recall, had been in charge of the Foster investigation to that point. Capt. Hume assumed control on the morning of July 21, 1993. Hume and Detective Pete Markland went to the White House. Markland had set up an appointment to visit the White House for them. Capt. Hume himself decided to go with Markland to establish liaison with the White House and later with the Chief of the Park Police. He told Markland to do what was standard in these types of investigations - such things as bullet recovery, autopsy and the need to get into Foster's office to look for a suicide note. At about 10:00 a.m., July 21, 1993, Hume told Markland to have Foster's office sealed.

Hume noted that at approximately 11:00 or 11:15 a.m., he made an official request for the sealing of Foster's office to the U.S. Secret Service, perhaps Inspector Martin after arriving at the West Wing of the White House. He later found out that Nussbaum had had the office sealed by approximately 10:00 a.m.

tigation on 4/15/94 at Washington, D.C. File # 29D-LR-35063

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

Upon arriving at the White House at about 10:00 a.m., he and Markland unexpectedly saw Chief Langston and Major Hines (Office of Special Services, U.S. Park Police) at the gate. He explained that they (Langston and Hines) had a different mission. They were talking with George Stephanopoulos there and then went to do a briefing with Stephanopoulos and others from the White House. Markland and Hume were put on hold in the West Wing. They waited there with Inspector Martin from the U.S. Secret Service.

Hume said that as they waited, he received several pages and telephone calls to include several inquiries from the Eastern District of Virginia Assistant United States Attorney, wanting to be briefed on the case. This AUSA wanted to be involved as he was concerned about the political angle and media inquiries on the matter. He was finally referred to Phil Heyman at the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ).

Prior to lunchtime, Langston and Hines returned from their briefing with senior White House officials. Hines spoke with Hume to let him know what was going on. He told Hume he would get into Foster's office, but he would have to wait for the FBI. After Langston and Hines left, and still before lunch, Nussbaum and Maggie Williams stopped to see Hume and Markland in the West Wing. Hume described Nussbaum as being in overdrive or high gear all the time. Nussbaum asked, "Where are the DOJ guys?" And there was an exchange as to who should call DOJ. Nussbaum finally told the Park Police that they should call the DOJ. Earlier, Hume had called the FBI field office. After lunch, at about 1:00 p.m., Hume and Markland met with Inspector Martin in the Executive Office Building. Don Flynn from the U.S. Secret Service was also possibly there. Hume advised his Chief and Major Hines that he had still not been in the Foster office and at that point, the Major advised Hume that he (Hines) was going to call the Attorney General, Janet Reno. Hume later learned that the Chief had spoken with Reno. FBI Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon also joined Hume and Markland at the Executive Office Building. Hume also talked with Phil Heyman, Deputy Attorney General, at least twice. Heyman briefed Hume on what was going to happen. Two career DOJ attorneys would be sent over. Hume later learned that these attorneys were David Margolis and Roger Adams. It was clear to him that the investigation would follow DOJ ground rules. Heyman went on to tell him that Margolis and Adams would go into the office, look at the documents, and if there was no national security interest, the documents would be shown to the Park Police. Heyman told Hume to handle this investigation like a normal case. At about 4:00 or 5:00 p.m. in the afternoon, Hume learned from Heyman that he would not see the documents and Hume wondered "what was the point of all of this?" Heyman was more clear on a second call to Hume, apparently getting his game plan together with the Attorney General. The actual mechanics in the search were given in the second call. It became clear that Margolis would lead the DOJ team and decide if there was law enforcement interest.

Hume and Markland and two U.S. Secret Service Agents, including Paul Imbordino and maybe Don Flynn, went to the West Wing of the White House to the White House Counsel offices. Hume let Markland take lead for the Park Police and Scott Salter took the FBI lead and went into Bernie Nussbaum's office with the two DOJ attorneys. Agent Condon and Hume were not in on this meeting. He could not recall if the Secret Service Agent(s) went into the Nussbaum office or not.

While talking with the U.S. Secret Service employee on duty at the door to Vince Foster's office which had been sealed, Hume got the impression that anybody that was anybody would go into Foster's office if they wanted to.

When Markland came out of the meeting, he still did not seem to know when the search of the office would occur. Markland also reported that Nussbaum had been in Foster's office for approximately two hours on the night before.

At about 6:00 p.m., all agreed to meet the next morning at about 8:00 a.m. to conduct interviews with the secretaries. Again, it was not clear when the search would be conducted. Hume believed that Margolis and Adams were also not sure of the plan at this point.

Cliff Sloan asked Hume and Markland to return to their office and secure the personal affects of Vincent Foster so that they could be returned that evening by the President to Foster's widow. John Rolla had put these affects in a "bus station type locker" at the U.S. Park Police the night before and had to be contacted for access to this locker. Markland and Hume returned to the White House in time to meet a 7:00 p.m. deadline for giving this property to Sloan. Sloan signed for Foster's affects. Hume remembered these items included a ring and wallet and its contents which the Park Police had photocopied. He believed Foster's pager and White House pass had been turned over to White House officials by the Shift Commander on the evening of July 20, 1993. Hume also recalled finding the names of three psychiatrists in Foster's wallet.

Hume was also told that the White House wanted the autopsy hurried up and Dr. Byers (phonetic) was called and Hume's recollection is the autopsy was performed on July 22, 1993, a day or two before it had actually been scheduled. Throughout the actual investigation, Hume said it was clear, "I was doing what DOJ wanted me to do."

At 8:00 a.m. on July 22, 1993, Hume and Markland met with Agents Salter and Condon and U.S. Secret Service Agents Flynn and Imbordino. Margolis and Adams were not yet there. After some down time, interviews of secretaries at the White House began. Either Sloan or Neuwirth were present for all interviews. Hume remembers one interview where Nussbaum burst into the room during the interview, asked if everything was okay in a very agitated way, and then left.

Margolis and Adams joined Hume after lunch.

Hume said the actual search of Foster's office was documented in the Park Police Report and that he had not refreshed his memory by looking at that report recently. His recollection was that the search began at approximately 1:00 p.m. and lasted until 3:00 p.m. He considered it a waste of time. At the search, and not before, he found out that Nussbaum only would look at the documents and not Margolis and/or Adams. Hume remembered Nussbaum finding a newspaper article and citing some kind of privilege and being questioned on this decision by Margolis. The article remained in the privilege pile of papers. Hume said at this point, most present in the room were beaten into the ground. It was a case of what we wanted to do versus what we were actually going to do. Margolis had said that if this was a normal case, we would have all the documents and Nussbaum answered, "Not if I'm the family attorney. I'd have all the stuff in my office." Nussbaum said that it was a suicide investigation and not a criminal investigation. It was clear Nussbaum wasn't going to let Margolis change his mind in this exchange.

Present at the search were two U.S. Secret Service Agents, Flynn and Imbordino; two FBI Agents, Salter and Condon; two DOJ attorneys, Margolis and Adams; two U.S. Park Police investigators, Hume and Markland; and five others - Spafford, a family attorney from Hamilton's law firm; Bill Burton; Neuwirth and Sloan and Nussbaum from the White House.

Hume said he saw nothing during the search. He was not familiar with the terms Whitewater and Madison at the time of the search.

Hume said Nussbaum created a pile of papers for the investigators to look at. It was the smallest pile and it was not reviewed during or immediately after the search. Hume also recalls a notebook being picked up by Nussbaum and Nussbaum mentioning it was something about a development. Hume remembered getting the impression it was something to do with a land, housing or real estate development, but did not remember the term Whitewater. Other notebooks on health care issues were also located during the search. Salter, Margolis and Adams had front row seats and Markland was in a position to see under the desk. At this point, Hume was given a diagram (attached) of the Foster office and indicated on this diagram exactly where everyone was sitting. Hume noted that Burton left the Foster office once or twice during the search. He didn't remember any other interruptions, except Burton leaving. Folding chairs had been brought in to accommodate the crowd.

At one point during the search, Sloan insulted FBI Agent Salter by questioning him on trying to "sneak a peak at the papers" being reviewed. Nussbaum tried to mediate the exchange, but it was clear Sloan had been serious. Salter responded in a polite and appropriate way to Sloan's charges. Hume said that all of us felt the search was a waste of time at this point. He also had vibes that he did not like Neuwirth.

Hume remembered a search of the briefcase in Foster's office. It had been next to the desk and ultimately put back against the wall. Hume recalled that it was a Wall Street lawyer type case and all leather. He particularly remembered that Nussbaum "went into" the briefcase three times. Hume delineated these occasions as the first time being when Nussbaum pulled a file of papers from the briefcase, the second time being when he looked down into the briefcase later during the search, and the third time being when Nussbaum reached down to put it against the wall. Hume was of the opinion that if there had been a note in the briefcase the day of the search, Nussbaum would have seen it. Again, Hume said Nussbaum was always in motion/hyper.

The search ended at 3:00 p.m. with a discussion concerning the turning over of personal material found to the family attorney, Spafford. Margolis had suggested that this personal documentation be given to Spafford and law enforcement could get it from him.

Hume could not recall trash being searched during the search of Foster's office. He remembered it had been brought back into the office, but could not remember if this was during the search or before or after it began. They did not search the computer and were advised that this information would be looked at later. He was told by Nussbaum that they would get back to them regarding any information found. He was later advised that there had been nothing on the computer. Hume said that he was not aware of any safe or search of any safe. He also said the search had been limited to Vincent Foster's office.

On July 23, 1994, Hume and another detective (Markland was off that day) returned to the White House, based on a call from Cliff Sloan. There had been a Washington Post article regarding the U.S. Park Police not seeing any White House documents. Sloan gave Hume some yellow phone slips dating back to January, 1993, as well as telephone logs containing date and time and messages. Sloan called to Nussbaum to clear the release of this material. Hume also recalled some calls from July 20, 1993 on the telephone log. He said these would be in the Park Police report.

Two or three days after the Foster note was found and this fact made public, Hume and Markland returned to the White House to interview Nussbaum and Neuwirth regarding how the note had been found. They agreed the two obvious questions to be answered were why had the note been kept so long and why didn't Nussbaum see the note the day of the search? Nussbaum questioned the three motions remembrance of Hume concerning the briefcase. Nussbaum said he couldn't recall this and he particularly took exception with Hume remembering that he (Nussbaum) had looked back into the briefcase. Neuwirth said that he was making an inventory of Foster's property and using the briefcase to pack diplomas and pictures, when he turned the briefcase on its side and saw the torn paper which turned out to be the note.

The note was picked up by Joe Megby, U.S. Park Police, who had duty on the night it was found, sealed and given to Hume. The note was eventually given to the FBI as part of its obstruction of justice case.

Hume noted that when the Park Police looked at Foster's personal affects at Hamilton's office, there was an opportunity there to only see what they wanted us to see.

The lead received in the case regarding two bullets being purchased by Foster had been left up to Markland and Hume had not been involved in this issue.

At the conclusion of the interview, Hume discussed afterthoughts concerning the Foster investigation.

Hume said that on the day of his death, Foster had attended the swearing in or nomination of the FBI Director, had eaten lunch in his office and returned some phone calls.

He said that he had never been allowed to interview the youngest son of Vincent Foster regarding any recollection the son may have had concerning his father returning to his home on July 20, 1993, just prior to his death.

Hume also indicated that the Park Police interview with Lisa Foster seemed to be "rehearsed." Hume also commented that he wished the following questions had been asked of Mrs. Foster: (1) Why did she make the comment "did he put the gun in his mouth?" when she was informed of Foster's death? (2) Why did she and her son call the White House office on different occasions asking the question "How is he (Foster) today?" (3) Were there any domestic problems? (4) Had Foster talked about suicide before, or had he attempted suicide before? Hume said that Jim Hamilton, Beryl Anthony and another Sloan, not Cliff Sloan, were present during the interview of Lisa Foster. Hume identified the Sloan at the Lisa Foster interview as being an architect from Arkansas who was executor of the Foster will.

Hume is satisfied that the Foster death was a suicide and did occur at Fort Marcy Park based upon the U.S. Park Police investigation.

Hume theorized that Foster had talked with Jim Lyons on the day of his death and Lyons had given him some kind of depressing news that tipped the scale of balance for Foster. It was just one more thing from the list of things Foster had put on his note that troubled him.

Captain CHARLES W. HUME, Assistant Commander, Criminal Investigations Branch, U.S. Park Police (USPP), telephone (202) 690-5054 was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. Captain HUME was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. assisted with the interview. Captain HUME provided the following information:

On the morning of July 21, 1993, he did not expect to see U.S. Park Police Chief LANGSTON or Major HINES at The White House. He saw them coming out of the west wing. Detective PETE MARKLAND and DENNIS MARTIN from the U.S. Secret Service were with HUME at the time of this meeting. LANGSTON spoke primarily with MARTIN and HINES with HUME. HINES didn't mention the Department of Justice (DOJ) to HUME but indicated that the FBI would "mediate" in the FOSTER investigation. HINES did not explain why the FBI would be involved. HUME formed no impression regarding what HINES was thinking about this involvement. HUME had no objection to the FBI involvement. HUME himself called the FBI after HINES mentioned that they would assist. Later in the morning of 7/21, BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Counsel and an individual HUME has later identified as MAGGIE WILLIAMS also met with HUME and the others asking if DOJ was there.

HUME understood that the purpose of the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office was to look for a) a suicide note or b) anything damaging that would make a person "go over the edge". They were looking for something that would make a person get up from his office at about 1:00 in the afternoon and commit suicide and/or why this time of day.

HUME was asked what he would have done if NUSSBAUM had granted him unlimited access to FOSTER's office. HUME answered that he would have preferred looking through FOSTER's office himself with Detective MARKLAND. He perhaps would have asked NUSSBAUM to send in one of his associates to be present during the search. He would have asked NUSSBAUM's associate about the significance of items located. He would have been looking for something "apparent" versus a full analysis of the FOSTER office records. As an example, the binders in the office dealing with health care would have been left alone. HUME would have viewed these as strictly White House business. It would not have piqued his interest. He would have to have located something obvious. The briefcase would have been looked at. FOSTER came to work with the briefcase in the morning with it and therefore it would have been of interest to HUME. If he had found anything suspicious, he would have called in his identification people to assist with the evidence handling.

HUME said he had not done a search of an attorney's office in the past. He would have had no problem with either SLOAN or NEUWIRTH being in the office at the time of the search.

HUME has reviewed or supervised cases involving national security documents. He cited a previous death investigation as an example of this.

HUME said there was no established protocol regarding a USPP death investigation versus a case involving protected classified documents. He said the conduct of the investigation depended upon the aggressiveness and tenacity of the detective involved. It was an individual thing. With respect to the FOSTER investigation itself he said, "We were in a new area".

HUME was comfortable with the DOJ handling the ground rules for the FOSTER investigation. He could say very clearly that DOJ was calling the shots. The USPP were "working for" DOJ. In some senses we (the USPP) were out of our league in dealing with The White House. HUME commented that he was "amazed" that DAVID MARGOLIS, DOJ attorney, could not, at his level, look at the documents in FOSTER's office during the search. HUME said he was still concerned about this.

LARRY LEISER was the Assistant United States Attorney who was calling HUME early on in the FOSTER investigation for updated information.

After lunch on 7/21/93, HUME had a telephone discussion with PHIL HEYMAN who was the number two man at the DOJ. HEYMAN had called HUME following Chief LANGSTON's call to JANET RENO. HEYMAN made it clear to HUME that he was the number two man at Justice and that HUME could call him with any problems during the FOSTER investigation. During this first call, HEYMAN said he would be sending two career employees from DOJ to assist. The game plan or names of these employees were not provided to HUME during this first call although HEYMAN may have mentioned MARGOLIS name. HUME said this was a very busy time and that this phone call simply served as an introduction by HEYMAN. A second phone call with HEYMAN occurred at about 5:00 on the afternoon of July 21. During this call HEYMAN identified the DOJ employees who would be assisting as DAVID MARGOLIS and ROGER ADAMS. HEYMAN also made it clear what would take place during the search of FOSTER's office. At least MARGOLIS would look at the documents; set aside national security or White House business related items; and anything of interest to law enforcement would be shown to the Park Police. HEYMAN made it clear that HUME wouldn't see anything during the initial inspection. HUME did still believe that MARGOLIS would see all of the items.

HUME did not attend a meeting that was held that afternoon (7/21/93) in NUSSBAUM's office. When Detective MARKLAND came out of this meeting and was questioned by HUME, MARKLAND did not have answers to many of HUME's questions. HUME believes MARKLAND went back in for some clarifications. It was HUME's feeling that MARKLAND had been "overwhelmed" and "put in the background" during the meeting. HUME never understood why ADAMS and MARGOLIS did not return on July 22 until after lunch. HUME said they must have understood the game plan from their meeting with NUSSBAUM. No 1-2-3 game plan was articulated to HUME by anyone. It was clear to HUME they would be looking for a suicide note.

HUME was asked if the search procedure was acceptable to HINES. HUME responded that he dealt more and more with Chief LANGSTON on the FOSTER issue and answered LANGSTON did "not really think so". LANGSTON had been clear with HUME on the fact that the Park Police were having trouble doing their job.

HUME and Detective RAYFIELD met with COLLIER (Chief of Staff) at Interior on July 30, 1993. HUME described the meeting as "no big deal". It was simply and articulation of some Park Police concerns regarding the investigation.

Only after the search of FOSTER's office began on July 22, 1993, did HUME realize that MARGOLIS had had a discussion with NUSSBAUM regarding a change of procedure for the search. Nobody had consulted with HUME. HUME believed that MARGOLIS was surprised that the privilege issue was "carried to the nth degree" by NUSSBAUM but otherwise MARGOLIS did not appear to be surprised by the procedure followed. It was clear that NUSSBAUM was number one and MARGOLIS number two during the search.

It was made clear that investigators would not see any documents from FOSTER's office the day of the search. The personal FOSTER documents were sent with the family attorney, SPAFFORD. The Park Police had indicated their interest in FOSTER's phone calls on the day of his death. During the search itself, NUSSBAUM located items where he said, "The police may be interested in this." There was also some dialogue during the search between NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS. HUME never "called" NUSSBAUM on the choice of pile for documents located. HUME did not remember any challenge of any significance by anyone to NUSSBAUM's placement of the documents. HUME felt he didn't have the "privilege" to ask to see something. The Park Police had been "intimidated" pretty good to this point. As an example, HUME mentioned that he had seen a post-it note by the telephone in FOSTER's office but didn't feel comfortable in picking it up and looking at it. HUME felt that the search of the office on July 22 had been a "charade". NUSSBAUM made the call on everything first. MARGOLIS would turn to MARKLAND at times and ask about law enforcement interest. HUME did not recall NUSSBAUM refusing to put any documents in the review pile if an interest was expressed or if there was an indication that it may have been relevant. HUME understood that a pile of documents was set aside during the search that would be available for Park Police review at a later time. It was not clear when this would be or why immediate review had been denied.

HUME was asked if he believed the Park Police had been allowed to see all items set aside for their review. He answered that after the Washington Post article, CLIFF SLOAN called and was "different". SLOAN then made telephone logs and phone messages available. HUME was surprised the USPP were not just given the logs, messages and FOSTER calendar. SLOAN called NUSSBAUM every time the Park Police wanted to take a copy of something. HUME described it as "like pulling jaw teeth".

HUME was asked if he any contact with The White House between the day of the search (July 22, 1993) and July 30, 1993, the day he and RAYFIELD picked up the phone logs. HUME answered that he and MARGOLIS kept in touch frequently during the investigation but that he did not talk to The White House.

NUSSBAUM was not talking to the Park Police; The White House was not talking to the Park Police. The Park Police were dealing strictly with the DOJ. HUME did not recall any discussions with MARGOLIS regarding seeing documents.

HUME was asked his sense of whether The White House engaged in any obstruction of the USPP investigation of the FOSTER death. HUME answered that it was more the case of The White House controlling or running the investigation versus an obstruction. HUME said if they had taken something from FOSTER's office or had concocted a story regarding the suicide note, he would have viewed this as an obstruction. He described what they did as "arrogant", "damage control", or "a bunch of people who didn't know what they were doing". HUME thought that The White House or NUSSBAUM made decisions first as a sort of damage control and then they called the DOJ and the DOJ in turn called the Park Police. As an example, HUME cited the necessity for a second phone call from HEYMAN regarding the details or procedure of the search and who would be assisting. It was apparent to HUME that HEYMAN was getting instructions.

It was obvious to HUME that the search could be a situation where the Park Police saw what they (The White House) wanted us to see. HUME said that eventually they did get to see everything they thought was obvious to see. The Park Police were looking for the truth. In the discussion regarding the privilege issue, NUSSBAUM thought it was important to protect his client. HUME believes NUSSBAUM took this too far. As an example, HUME would have distinguished in the case of financial matters the difference between attorney involvement and a financial investment of FOSTER himself, and handled the situation accordingly.

HUME was asked if investigators ever considered a second look at any documents found in FOSTER's office. HUME answered that this was not an issue. The Park Police were doing what the DOJ wanted them to do. The USPP were doing what MARGOLIS told them to do. DOJ never gave them permission to ask for things. The Park Police were resigned to being "scapegoats" if there was going to be one.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 6/16/94

Captain CHARLES W. HUME, United States Park Police (USPP) was reinterviewed at the Annocostia Operations Facility, Washington, D.C. for the purpose of verifying the fact that all investigative notes taken by USPP officials during the course of the VINCENT FOSTER death investigation had been submitted to Office of the Independent Counsel. Captain HUME provided the following information to include copies of the below cited investigative notes:

Captain HUME advised that based on a prior request by Special Agent (SA) LAWRENCE J. MONROE he had thoroughly reviewed all investigative notes in his possession and personally contacted all USPP officials who were involved in the death investigation to determine if any investigative notes were still outstanding. Based on this review, Captain HUME furnished a series of investigative notes which, in his opinion, might not have been included in the initial submission of investigative notes to the Office of the Independent Counsel. Captain HUME stated that he feels confident that with the submission of these notes, that all available investigative notes have been made available to the Office of the Independent Counsel and further stated that the original notes will be maintained in the official case folder.

A review of the above cited investigative notes by SA LAWRENCE J. MONROE reflect miscellaneous notes by Captain HUME, Investigator JOHN ROLLA, Officer CHRIS HODAKEVIC and Detective JOSEPH MEGBY. These notes were reviewed by SA MONROE and contain no information not already in the possession of investigative personnel.

Captain CHARLES HUME, Detective, JOHN ROLLA, and Identification Technician LARRY ROMANS, were contacted at the U.S. Park Police office in Annocostia. All of the individuals were advised of the identity of the investigating agent.

The original U.S. Park Police file of the VINCENT W. FOSTER death investigation is in HUME's possession, including original detectives notes and original copies of tapes of radio calls and 911 calls in the case.

HUME advised that all U.S. Park Police Identification Technicians have gray hard case briefcases for their equipment; including cameras, fingerprint equipment, and miscellaneous items that they would use at a crime scene. ROMANS confirmed this, and escorted the investigating agent into the Identification Technician area, which was located next to the detective's squad area in the Annacostia office. Gray hard case briefcases were observed next to each technicians' desk. Identification Technician SIMONELLO, who was the only U.S. Park Police Identification Technician on scene at the FOSTER death scene, also had a gray hard case briefcase next to his desk, in addition to several other briefcases of different sizes and colors.

HUME and ROMANS provided a tour of the Park Police Detective area, Identification Technician area, Evidence storage room, and Photography room, which is also used as their Evidence Drying room. The following observations were made: the evidence and photo/drying room are located immediately adjacent to each other, off of a small utility area that is used for storage of various cleaning supplies and equipment. The U.S. Park Police have no drying room for wet evidence items. Several items of clothing were observed drying in the photo room. The evidence and photo/drying rooms are adjacent to the Identification Technician area, which is adjacent to the Detective squad area. The rear exit to the parking lot from the Detective's squad area leads directly past the outside lead exhaust for the U.S. Park Police indoor range. (Several barrels of lead waste were observed next to the lead exhaust.) Also noted on the outside of the building next to the rear exit was a large vent for the range.

Detective ROLLA made numerous statements regarding the death of FOSTER. ROLLA is convinced that FOSTER committed suicide. ROLLA stated that he has obtained no other evidence or information to the contrary. ROLLA expressed his frustration regarding the on-going investigation.

FOIA(b)(3) - Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 6(e) - Grand Jury

HUME also requested that if a critique is prepared which identifies particular discrepancies or lack of investigation by the Park Police, that he be provided with a copy. HUME expressed concern at preventing the same mistakes from happening again. HUME stated that he realizes that his detectives could have done a more thorough job of documenting the death scene. HUME stated that all death scenes should be investigated as a homicide until proven otherwise. HUME did not think that his detectives worked the FOSTER death scene in that manner, since it seemed to be an apparent suicide.

Re: Whitewater Investigation

Dear Mr. Kavanaugh:

As you know, I have requested on behalf of [redacted] a copy of [redacted] testimony before the grand jury [redacted]. I expect that [redacted] will be named in the Final Report to be issued by the Independent Counsel's Office in connection with the second phase of the above investigation, as [redacted] in the first phase. I also expect that [redacted] will testify in connection with the Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Whitewater Development Corporation and Related Matters, on the same matters about which [redacted] testified before the grand jury. I am sure your Office appreciates the importance to any witness of having the opportunity to review prior sworn statements before testifying under oath on the same subject before a different governmental body.

As you explained, your Office has denied [redacted] request for [redacted] own grand jury testimony (and will deny other witnesses' requests) because (1) your investigation is not complete, and (2) you wish to avoid any appearance that the Independent Counsel's Office is assisting witnesses in preparation for Senate hearings. We disagree on the applicability of In Re Sealed Motion, 880 F.2d 1367 (D.C. Cir. 1989), which you contend does not apply because [redacted] does not seek [redacted] transcript in connection with a "judicial proceeding." It is my position that both the issuance of a Final Report by the Independent Counsel and the hearings in the Senate are "judicial proceedings" as that term is broadly defined.

In any event, I believe [redacted] has a general right to a copy of [redacted] own testimony, and, as a matter of due process, [redacted] should not be placed in a position where [redacted] will be examined under oath by the government on the same subject twice without any opportunity to review [redacted] prior testimony. This is true notwithstanding the fact that [redacted] is neither a subject nor a target of the grand jury investigation. Frankly, I do not understand the rationale for refusing to release to [redacted] a copy of [redacted] own testimony, even while your investigation is on-going. If [redacted] had any desire to disclose [redacted] testimony, [redacted] would be free to do so at any time regardless of whether [redacted] had a copy of the transcript.

Please consider [redacted] request for a copy of [redacted] testimony to be continuing in nature, so that, in the event the Independent Counsel determines that its investigation is complete, that a Final Report will be issued, or that grand jury transcripts will be released for any other reason, I will be immediately notified and provided a copy of [redacted] transcript.

I appreciate your courtesy and timely attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

David E. Mills

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 4/1/94

Paul B. Imbordino, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service, (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue N.W. ASAC Imbordino was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for 22 years and is currently in charge of USSS agent liaison with the Uniform Division of USSS at The White House. His office is located in the Old Executive Office Building, room 150 and his telephone number is 202-456-2443. He has been in his current position for approximately one year and was so employed at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death on July 20, 1993.

ASAC Imbordino was shown a diagram of offices located on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House. This diagram is dated 1/25/93 and was obtained from the United States Park Police. Individual offices on this diagram are labeled with the names of their 1993 occupants including names such as, "Bernie Nussbaum, Vince Foster, Maggie Williams, the First Lady", and others. Mr. Imbordino stated that this diagram is an accurate representation of the location and occupancy of second floor offices at the time of Foster's death. Mr. Imbordino was asked to refer to this diagram and explain USSS standard operating procedures and staffing regarding the uniformed guard force located in the west wing area of The White House at the time of Vincent Foster's death.

Mr. Imbordino stated that it was not in 1993 and is not now USSS policy to have uniformed officers stationed on the 2nd floor of the west wing. He said that the nearest regularly scheduled USSS guard post to what was then Vincent Foster's office is located on the 1st floor of the west wing and is called the "west lobby post". This is the nearest access entrance to the 2nd floor and is used by some White House staffers but is mostly used by individuals having appointments to meet with people on the 2nd floor of the west wing. The next nearest guard post to what was Vincent Foster's office is located on the ground floor, one level below the west lobby post and is referred to as "Post E-1". E-1 is a "sit-down" desk post that allows entrance into the west wing from West Executive Avenue. This post is staffed 24 hours per day while the "west lobby post" is staffed from 6 am to 10 pm daily. Mr. Imbordino stated that once an individual is cleared through either of these posts and goes to the 2nd floor of the west wing, that individual is no longer tracked or monitored by USSS. He reiterated that there are no guard posts on the 2nd floor of the White House's west wing. Both posts (E-1 and west lobby) are staffed by one uniformed USSS officer with relief officers available to allow for lunch and other breaks. Post E-1, a 24-hour post, has three shifts per day, while the west lobby post has two shifts per day. Since both of these posts are inside The White House compound, a secure area, staff persons and guests reaching either of these posts have been pre-cleared by White House perimeter guard posts when they reach either the E-1 or west lobby entrances. Individuals, therefore, need only show appropriate White House credentials and/or temporary passes to enter the 2nd floor area through either of these posts. ASAC Imbordino does not believe that logs are routinely kept at either of these posts.

Mr. Imbordino stated that, to the best of his knowledge, no USSS personnel were on the 2nd floor of the west wing the entire day of July 20, 1993. He stated, however, that on July 21, 1993, Mr. Nussbaum or a member of his staff contacted the Director of USSS at approximately 10-10:30 am requesting assistance in securing Vincent Foster's office. This message was relayed to the Presidential Protective Division of USSS and was in turn relayed to The White House Security Coordinator of USSS, ASAC Don Flynn. A decision was made to post a uniformed USSS officer at the entrance to the "Counsel reception" area located in the southwest corner of the west wing's 2nd floor, the only entrance to the suite of offices occupied by Mr. Foster and Mr. Nussbaum. ASAC Flynn, himself, established this post almost immediately and had a uniformed officer on duty at that location by approximately 11-11:30 am on July 21. A meeting was held in Mr. Nussbaum's office later that day, attended by Mr. Nussbaum, USSS personnel, and US Park Police personnel. It was decided that it was necessary to place a lock on Mr. Foster's office to further secure it for investigation. USSS personnel were brought in to place a lock on the Foster office door that evening and at approximately 10-10:30 pm the work was finished, the door was locked and all USSS personnel departed the 2nd floor with ASAC Flynn having the only key to the lock. No uniformed USSS officer or any other USSS personnel remained on duty on the 2nd floor past approximately 10:30 pm on July 21. ASAC Imbordino said that, to the best of his knowledge, USSS was not asked to post any guards or further secure any other area of the 2nd floor after that time. Mr. Imbordino said that he does not know of any log that was kept regarding the comings and goings of individuals in the area of Vincent Foster's office following his death.

Mr. Imbordino stated that there are no surveillance cameras, motion detectors, or other security devices employed by the USSS on the 2nd floor of the west wing. He advised, however, that the door to the reception area of The White House Counsel suite of offices is alarmed and that it had been so alarmed for quite some time prior to Foster's death. There are other offices on the 2nd floor (but not all) that are similarly alarmed. These alarms are monitored at the USSS Uniform Control Center located in the Old Executive Office Building next door to The White House.

On July 22 at approximately 1:00 pm, ASAC Don Flynn opened the lock of the door of the Foster office for a group of individuals, including law enforcement personnel and Mr. Nussbaum who went into the office to search it. Following this search, ASAC Flynn gave the only key to the Foster door lock to Mr. Nussbaum on July 22. Mr. Imbordino stated that while he does not know for sure what prompted Flynn to give this key to Nussbaum, he assumes that there was a consensus opinion that there was no further reason to secure Foster's office. Mr. Imbordino states that he knows of nothing the United States Secret Service was asked to do during the period July 22 through July 31 regarding the 2nd floor of the west wing. He stated that to the best of his knowledge, no additional officers were posted on the 2nd floor and no additional locks were placed on other doors.

Mr. Imbordino volunteered that he did not know Vincent Foster prior to his death and does not believe that he would have recognized him had he seen him on or near The White House compound. Mr. Imbordino also volunteered that individuals who work on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House have designated secured parking spaces located on West Executive Avenue, within The White House compound area.

ASAC Imbordino was asked to provide a list of all USSS uniformed officers who were assigned to post E-1 and the west lobby post during the period July 20 through July 31, 1993. He was also asked to designate to which of these two posts the listed uniformed officers were assigned during that period. Mr. Imbordino was further asked to identify and make available the following USSS personnel for interview regarding this matter: ASAC Don Flynn, Roger Kammerdiner, Jospeh Phillips, James Young, (FNU) Wills-technical employee, and Roger (LNU)-technical employee.

Paul B. Imbordino, Assistant Special Agent in Charge, (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. ASAC Imbordino was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

His office is located in The Old Executive Office Building, Room 150 and the telephone number is 202-456-2443. In his current capacity with USSS, he is responsible for USSS agent liaison with the Uniform Division of USSS at The White House.

On July 20, 1993, at approximately 9-10:00 pm, he received a telephone call at his residence from USSS Inspector Dennis Martin, who is in charge of the Uniform Division USSS officers at The White House, advising him that he (Martin) had just been informed by the U.S. Park Police that a White House staff member by the name of Vincent Foster, Jr. had been found dead in a Washington area park of an apparent suicide. Imbordino said that Martin went on to tell him the name of the park and said the Park Police had indicated there were very good reasons to believe that this was a suicide. Imbordino stated that he thereafter telephonically advised USSS ASAC Don Flynn, who is in charge of White House Security, of the Foster information as it had been related to him by Martin. Imbordino said that it is his understanding that the USSS Deputy Assistant Director to whom he and Flynn answer, was notified that evening. He advised that, to the best of his knowledge, the USSS took no further action regarding this matter on the evening of July 20.

ASAC Imbordino stated that on July 21, 1993, he went to USSS Headquarters at 1800 G Street NW where he met with Deputy Assistant Director Griffin at approximately 9-10:00 am. He there learned that the Chief of the U.S. Park Police would be coming to The White House later that day to begin an investigation regarding the Foster death. It is Imbordino's understanding that a meeting took place later that afternoon at The White House that involved USSS and U.S. Park Police personnel regarding a proposed search of Vincent Foster's White House west wing office. Imbordino said that he was not present during this meeting. He said that in the late afternoon of July 21 or July 22 (not certain of date) U.S. Park Police Officers and FBI Special Agents interviewed some "secretaries" who worked near Foster's office. ASAC Imbordino said that both he and ASAC Flynn were in the area of these interviews when they took place. He explained that they were both present during these interviews solely for USSS liaison/facilitation reasons. ASAC Imbordino said that during the late evening hours of July 21, Vincent Foster's office door was secured with a new lock and that he and ASAC Flynn went home with Flynn having the only keys to the lock.

During the morning hours of July 22, 1993, Imbordino was advised by ASAC Don Flynn that he had learned that law enforcement personnel investigating the Foster death would search Vincent Foster's office that afternoon. Both he and ASAC Flynn were present when this inventory/search began at approximately 1-1:30 pm and ended at 2:30-3:00 pm. At approximately 1-1:30 pm, ASAC Flynn unlocked the door to Vincent Foster's office and the following individuals entered and were present during the inventory/search: Bernard Nussbaum, Steve Neuwirth, Cliff Sloan, Bill Burton, all of whom were members of The White House staff; David Margolis and Roger Adams, who are attorneys at the Department of Justice; Captain Charles Hume and Pete Markland of the U.S. Park Police; Special Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon of the FBI; and an Attorney representing the Foster family (name unrecalled); Paul Imbordino and Don Flynn. ASAC Imbordino said that it was his understanding that the purpose for this inventory/search was to try to find a suicide note or anything bearing on Vincent Foster's death. Imbordino said that he and Flynn sat in the back of the group near the door. He recalls looking around the office, which was very crowded with this many persons present. He recalls few details but he saw several photographs of Foster and his family members as well as photographs of President Bill Clinton. ASAC Imbordino said that during the inventory/search he was paged two or three times regarding other USSS work matters and therefore was in and out of Vincent Foster's office several times.

ASAC Imbordino said that at the beginning of the inventory/search, Nussbaum positioned himself in Vincent Foster's desk chair behind the desk with White House Attorneys Steve Neuwirth, Cliff Sloan and Bill Burton standing behind him. He said that from time to time during the search one or more of these three men would, after viewing a particular document, whisper into Nussbaum's ear. He said that the methodology of the inventory involved Nussbaum going through documents and papers found in various receptacles (Foster's desk, cabinets and book shelves) throughout Foster's office. Nussbaum and the three White House Attorneys behind him would view each document and then place each face down on Foster's desk in a series of piles. Imbordino said that it is his recollection that these piles were representative of categories such as Presidential documents, Foster personal matters, etc. Imbordino was asked if anyone present questioned this methodology. He said that it was clear that "Nussbaum was absolutely running the show". He said no, that he assumes the primary reason that no one questioned the methodology was that all present were keenly aware that they were in the office of the counsel to the President and that Nussbaum was in charge of proceedings in that office.

ASAC Imbordino said that he cannot recall any law enforcement personnel or Department of Justice people present during this process ever being allowed to see any of the documents. He said that at one point, during this process, White House Attorney Cliff Sloan asked FBI Special Agent Scott Salter, who had been standing throughout the inventory/search, if he was standing to try to see the documents that were being reviewed. Imbordino says that he recalls Special Agent Salter's reply indicating that Sloan was perhaps "getting carried away". He then recalls David Margolis saying something to the effect that "we're all on the same team here, lighten up!" Imbordino said that while nothing was said in this regard, he had the feeling that Margolis was the informal and unofficial spokesman for the Government Law Enforcement employees present. Imbordino was specifically asked if he recalled Bernard Nussbaum searching a briefcase (allegedly Foster's) located in the office. He stated that he does not recall any briefcase being searched. In response to another question, ASAC Imbordino said that he recalls a computer being in Vincent Foster's office but he does not recall it ever being turned on or utilized in any way during this search.

Toward the end of this process Imbordino once again left the office and this time returned with cardboard boxes that were to be used to contain the piles of documents. ASAC Imbordino advised however that he cannot recall seeing anyone leave Vincent Foster's office with any documents or any boxes. He said that he and ASAC Don Flynn escorted the Law Enforcement and Department of Justice people out of The White House after the group left Vincent Foster's office. He said that he cannot recall any comments about the methodology of the search. He said however that the process he observed would be much more accurately described as a "inventory" then a traditional Law Enforcement search.

Paul D. Imbordino, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. ASAC Imbordino, having previously been advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, provided the following information regarding Hillary Clinton's whereabouts during July, 1993 and the status of an alarm on the White House west wing offices of Hillary Clinton during that period:

Mrs. Clinton departed Washington, D.C. in mid-July, 1993 enroute to various scheduled locations, including Hawaii and Los Angeles, California. After a stopover in Hawaii with President Clinton and their daughter, she proceeded to Los Angeles. Upon learning of the death of Vincent Foster, Jr., she proceeded to Little Rock, Arkansas where she again met with the President and remained in Arkansas for the Foster funeral. USSS records indicate that she did not return to Washington, D.C. during this entire period but did return to Washington following the Foster funeral late on July 23, 1993.

The first USSS alarm/access log records regarding The White House west wing offices of Hillary Clinton begin on July 22, 1993. USSS records indicate no alarm log activity prior to that date. ASAC Imbordino explained that prior to January, 1993, The White House west wing offices currently occupied by Hillary Clinton were not alarmed. In February, 1993, following the inauguration of Bill Clinton, Hillary Clinton's White House staff made a request of USSS to place an alarm on the Hillary Clinton office suite. The USSS installed this alarm in March, 1993 but was unable to activate it until July 22, 1993. ASAC Imbordino explained that the installation, maintenance, and monitoring of White House alarms is the responsibility of the USSS. However, the actual wiring of the alarms and thus their initial activation is the responsibility of the local telephone company and, per standard operating procedure, The White House contact and coordination with the phone company is the responsibility of White House staffers. For reasons unknown to USSS the telephone

PAUL B. IMBORDINO, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) came to the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW and made available two documents that had previously been requested by the investigating agent on behalf of the Office of the Special Counsel. These two documents are described as follows: a one page document captioned "Alarm log for Mr. WATKINS' office" showing USSS alarm log activity for The White House west wing office of DAVID WATKINS and PATSY THOMASSON for the period July 20-21, 1993. Some of the numerous entries on this document show, among other things: THOMASSON entering the office at 7:16 am on July 20; leaving the office at 7:10 pm on July 20 with the office door alarm being reset; THOMASSON re-entering the office at 10:48 pm; and then leaving the office shortly after midnight (12:12) am on July 21, 1993 with the door alarm being reset.

The second document made available by ASAC IMBORDINO consists of 92 pages showing various individuals entering and/or exiting a gate to The White House compound onto West Executive Avenue (USSS guard post B4). This log gives the date, time, name of entrant, entrant's White House badge number, and whether entering or exiting. ASAC IMBORDINO provided the following information regarding limitations of this document. When a White House staffer-badge holder enters or exits The White House compound through this gate in a vehicle, no USSS computer entry is generated and therefore no entry would appear on this log--only staffers who either enter or exit The White House compound through this gate by means of walking would generate an entry on this log. IMBORDINO further advised, however, that individual staffers walking into or out of the compound through this gate do not always generate an entry on this log. He explained that if a staffer is very well known by USSS personnel on the gate, the officers may well simply wave him through without generating an entry. Also, when traffic is extremely heavy at this gate, walking staffers often need only show their badge to be waved through, again not generating an entry on this log. IMBORDINO further advised that this is an old system which is in the

Each of these logs give the date, time, name of entrant, entrance White House badge number, and whether entering or exiting.

Mr. IMBORDINO, commenting on another request made previously by the Office of the Special Counsel regarding a similar log for the "North side gate" allowing access onto The White House compound from Pennsylvania Avenue, advised that no USSS entry/exit log is kept at that gate. He explained that the North side gate is most often used by members of the news media and is seldom used by White House staffers.

ASAC PAUL IMBORDINO, United States Secret Service (USSS), assigned to The White House, Washington, D.C. (WDC), contacted the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC) regarding several OIC requests for information related to White House compound security measures. After being apprised of the identity of the interviewing Agent, IMBORDINO thereafter provided the following information:

According to IMBORDINO, the Movement Log for USSS post F1, adjacent to the library at The White House, was released by the Secret Service to The White House. USSS Standard Operating Procedure dictates that the log for the F1 post as well as logs concerning appointments are turned over to The White House every 30 days for disposition. The F1 post is located adjacent to the elevator leading from the basement level of The White House to the residence quarters. Guests of the First Family who utilize the elevator are routinely listed on the Movement Log before accessing the elevator.

IMBORDINO caused a review to be made of security violation records for The White House compound. No security violations were noted for July 20 or July 21, 1993 regarding the Executive Mansion or White House compound.

ASAC IMBORDINO noted that as per prior agreement, photographs of USSS personnel will be provided by the Secret Service. Photographs of White House staff and friends of the President must be acquired from The White House. IMBORDINO reiterated this request based on a previous request of the Office of the Independent Counsel to locate a photograph of SUSAN THOMASSES.

PAUL B. IMBORDINO, Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), White House Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. ASAC IMBORDINO was familiar with the interviewing agents from prior interviews. He was informed that the nature of this interview was to secure additional information regarding his activities and knowledge of events that took place at The White House in the early morning hours of July 21, 1993.

IMBORDINO stated that he arrived at The White House on July 21, 1993 at approximately 7:30/8:00 am. He went briefly to his office in Room 150 of the Old Executive Office Building and then proceeded to USSS Headquarters on 1800 G Street, NW. While there, he spoke to Deputy Assistant Director RICHARD GRIFFIN of the USSS regarding FOSTER's suicide. He stated that to the best of his recollection, he then went back to The White House to assist Secret Service Agent DON FLYNN, The White House Security Coordinator. Primarily, he was assisting FLYNN in meeting and accompanying Park Police detectives and the Chief of the Park Police who were expected to arrive at The White House that morning for meetings with DAVID WATKINS. IMBORDINO has no recollection of seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at The White House when he first arrived at approximately 7:30 am.

IMBORDINO was unable to recall, from his own independent recollection, the names of any USSS Officers observed by him at The White House complex following his arrival at work on 7/21/93. He pointed out that the USSS uses two rooms in The White House complex for roll call briefings which are held for USSS officers at the beginning of each shift. The larger roll call room is located in the basement of the Old Executive Office Building near the USSS Command Center. A smaller roll call room, used primarily by USSS officers who conduct White House tours, is located in the east wing of The White House.

IMBORDINO was informed by SA COLOMBELL that sometime between 6:30 am and 9:30 am on July 21, 1993, one of the Uniformed Secret Service guards had reported to a Secret Service superior, Inspector DENNIS MARTIN, his observation of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and a second white male carrying a briefcase and a large box from the elevator coming down from the 2nd floor of the west wing. Agent IMBORDINO was specifically asked whether he had become aware of this report during the morning hours of July 21, 1993 and also whether he had in any way discussed this report with any other individuals, including CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. Agent IMBORDINO stated that he was not aware of this information back on July 21, 1993 and thus could not have had any conversation with anyone including CRAIG LIVINGSTONE regarding the nature of these observations.

Agent IMBORDINO stated that because of his responsibilities at The White House, he still has occasional contacts with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. However, during these contacts he has never engaged in conversation nor has Mr. LIVINGSTONE ever made any remarks to him regarding the ongoing Independent Counsel investigation or aspects of the investigation that may pertain to Mr. LIVINGSTONE.

At the conclusion of the interview, the assistance of Agent IMBORDINO was requested in securing the names of all Secret Service Officers, including agents, who were on duty and present at The White House during the hours of 6:00 am to 9:00 am on July 21, 1993 and the obtaining of copies of all alarm logs for offices in The White House that have alarms for the period beginning 8:00 pm, July 20, 1993 through 8:00 am, July 21, 1993. Assistance was also requested in identifying keys that were found on FOSTER's body the day of his death and photo copies of these keys with the markings and numbers appearing thereon were provided to Agent IMBORDINO.

PAUL IMBORDINO, Special Agent with the United States Secret Service assigned to the White House was interviewed by phone. He was familiar with the interviewing agent based on prior investigative interviews conducted by SA COLOMBELL. MR. IMBORDINO advised that he was unable to find any record indicating that the pager found on VINCENT FOSTER's body was turned over by the US Park Police to Secret Service representatives on the night of FOSTER's death. He stated that as best he can determine, the pager was never given to the United States Secret Service. MR. IMBORDINO did confirm that on the night of FOSTER's death, specifically at appproximatley 1:20 a.m. on July 21, 1993, a representative of the Secret Service did take possession of FOSTER's White House identification, but not the pager.

Sergeant ALBERT JEZ, Investigator, U.S. Park Police (USPP), Internal Affairs Office, Annocostia Operations Facility, Washington, D.C. (telephone number 690-5050) was advised of the identity of Special Agent WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL of the FBI. Sergeant JEZ provided the following information regarding his handling of Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests received by the USPP concerning the death investigation of VINCENT FOSTER.

The only USPP records relating to the VINCENT FOSTER death investigation that he provided to Mr. BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Legal Counsel Office, related to a number of FOIA requests received by the USPP beginning in August of 1993.

By cover letter dated 9/3/93 (attachment #1), Mr. NUSSBAUM was provided with four pages of records previously provided to the USPP by the White House described as follows: FOSTER's personal calendar (two pages); FOSTER's phone log (one page), and a note left by FOSTER (one page). The USPP cover letter explained that the above documents were considered White House documents. The USPP requested White House recommendations as to the releasability under FOIA of these specific documents.

By letter dated 11/8/93 (attachment #2), Mr. NUSSBAUM responded, stating that in the opinion of The White House Legal Counsel Office, the above four pages of records should not be disclosed. Mr. NUSSBAUM's letter also included legal justifications under FOIA for withholding release of such documents.

The USPP sent a second letter to The White House Legal Counsel Office dated 12/13/93 (attachment #3), adding that this second letter also related to USPP efforts to respond to these pending FOIA requests. Sergeant JEZ stated that this letter was sent after consultation between Sergeant JEZ and Ms. PEGGY IRVING, FOIA Section, Department of Justice (DOJ). Additional USPP FOSTER death report documents were sent to The White House as enclosures to this second letter, including three pages from the USPP investigative report (marked as items 36, 50 and 52) and

by SSA WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL WEC Date dictated 6/24/94

a U.S. Secret Service log of persons entering Mr. FOSTER's office on 7/21/93 (marked as item 87).

Items 36, 50 and 52 are not White House documents but rather the written result of USPP investigative efforts. Items 50 and 52 reflect the USPP follow-up investigation generated from a review of the FOSTER phone log. Items 36 reflects USPP investigation generated from a review of U.S. Secret Service log of persons entering FOSTER's office on 7/21/93. It was the USPP position, after consultation with the FOIA section of the DOJ, that these items, although not White House documents, related to the previously described White House documents and thus White House views and legal opinion were necessary prior to any release under FOIA.

To his knowledge, Mr. NUSSBAUM, White House Legal Counsel's office, never did send a response back to the USPP letter dated 12/13/93.

With the appointment of Mr. ROBERT FISKE as Independent Counsel in Whitewater related matters, all pending FOIA requests re the FOSTER death investigation were denied based on exemption 7A (pending investigation).

The decision to send the above portions of the USPP report to The White House was based on recommendations to his department made by Ms. PEGGY IRVING, FOIPA, DOJ.

Normally, if he has legal issues to resolve re handling of FOIA requests, he checks with the Solicitor's Office for the U.S. Department of Interior (Attorneys RICK ROBBINS or RANDY MYERS). In this case, he was told by his superior, Commander HINES, to work with Department of Justice, FOIA section re all FOIA requests received by USPP relating to FOSTER's death. It was his understanding that this decision was based on a letter, dated August 20, 1994 from Ms. PEGGY IRVING, Department of Justice, (attachment #4) citing the need for coordination and consultation between the various federal entities that had received FOIA requests re FOSTER's death.

He had also discussed with Ms. IRVING, those portions of the USPP FOSTER death report dealing with interviews of White House staff persons and assistants, specifically the issue of referring those parts of the report to The White House Legal Counsel Office for their input prior to any FOIA release. It was his understanding that the Department of Justice, FOIA section would handle this matter and that prior to any release, the Department of Justice would make those portions of the report (interviews of White House staff) available to The White House Legal Counsel's Office for its legal opinion regarding release of this material under FOIA. He has no knowledge whether the FOIA section, Department of Justice, subsequently provided these portions of the USPP report to The White House or not.

Sergeant JEZ concluded by stating that in early April, 1994, he was contacted by Mr. RICHARD ROBBINS, an attorney with the Solicitor's Office, Department of Interior, adding that ROBBINS instructed him to make a copy of both the unredacted and redacted portions of the USPP FOSTER investigation dealing with interview of White House staffers and assistants. Sergeant JEZ assumed that Mr. ROBBINS wanted to review those sections of the report to ensure that FOIA exemptions and exceptions were properly applied. On April 7, 1994, he provided Mr. ROBBINS with both clear and redacted copies of those portions of the report dealing with interviews of all White House staffers and assistants (attachment #5).

Sergeant JEZ stated that the above information represents the totality of his knowledge concerning who was provided portions of the USPP FOSTER death investigation by the FOIA unit of the USPP.

Re: FOIA Request of William Neumann Dated August 11, 1993

Dear Major Hines:

You have asked for our opinion regarding the above-referenced request, under the Freedom of Information Act, for documents previously forwarded to the National Park Service by the White House Counsel's Office. We have reviewed these documents, and, for the reasons stated below, have concluded that such documents should not be disclosed.

First, the documents requested are not "agency records" subject to the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The Office of the President, including the President's immediate personal staff and units in the Executive Office whose sole function is to advise and assist the President, does not constitute an "agency" for the purposes of FOIA. See, e.g., Kissinger v. Reporters Committee, 445 U.S. 136, 156 (1980); National Security Archive v. Archivist of the United States, 909 F.2d 541, 545 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Counsel's Office exempt from FOIA). Although the documents requested were forwarded to the Park Service, they remain White House documents not subject to the provisions of the FOIA. See, e.g., Goland v. CIA, 607 F.2d 339, 347 (D.C. Cir. 1978), vacated in part on other grounds, 607 F.2d 367 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 927 (1980) (Congress' retention of control over documents turned over to agency).

Second, the requested documents do not qualify as "agency records" since they were primarily personal documents prepared for the convenience of an employee and were not distributed. See, e.g., Bureau of National Affairs v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1485-96 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (personal diary, appointment calendars, phone logs not "agency records.")

Third, even assuming arguendo that these White House documents are "agency records", they are exempt from disclosure both under FOIA's exemption 6 (the privacy exemption) and exemption 7(c) (the privacy exemption in the context of a law enforcement investigation). See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) & (b)(7)(c). Disclosure of these documents would violate the privacy rights of a former White House employee and his family, and would not serve any significant public interest. As the D.C. Circuit has cautioned, "[T]he legitimate and substantial privacy interests of individuals . . . cannot be overridden by general public curiosity." Fund for Constitutional Government v. National Archives and Records Service, 656 F.2d 856, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

The privacy provisions of FOIA exemptions 6 and 7(c) apply fully to Mr. Foster's handwritten note. As has been publicly stated, the Foster family has requested that the handwritten version of the note not be released. That the note is handwritten only confirms the significant privacy interest in that note. Moreover, any public interest in release of the handwritten note is minimized because the complete contents of the note have been previously released and widely reported. See, e.g., New York Times Co. v. NASA, 920 F.2d 1002, 1004 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (en banc) (finding, under exemption 6, personal information in tape recording of astronauts' last conversation where transcript already published).

As you have requested, enclosed please find the copies of the documents you provided for our consideration. We appreciate your cooperation with this matter.

Sincerely,

Bernard W. Nussbaum
Counsel to the President

On Friday, July 30th, Detective [redacted] and I responded to the Executive Office Building (EOB) Room 128 to meet with [redacted] The purpose of the meeting was to examine the telephone message log of Vincent Foster during the month of July and in particular to attempt to determine if he had gotten a call just prior to his departure on July 20, 1993. We learned that the phone logs were just a message log of calls he received when he was absent or unable to take the call. The administrative assistants would type time, person's name, phone number, and messages if one was left. The log was no assistance in determining if anyone had called him just prior to 1300 hours on July 20, 1993, if the call had been put through. There was one notation of interest on July 19, 1993. A [redacted] had called at 1047 hours and left his phone number [redacted] There were no messages. Prior to 1300 hours on July 20, he had received several phone messages. Some of the messages were from his staff. There were two calls made from Arkansas from the same person and one call from Colorado. Attempts will be made to contact these people and see if either reached Vincent prior to 1300 hours.

[redacted] requested if any information about the phone logs is contemplated being released, [redacted] would like to have the counsel's office notified at the White House prior to any release. I told [redacted] that I would put his request in my report. This caused [redacted] some concern because [redacted] didn't want special or unusual attention drawn to his request.

"Review of Documents from Vincent Foster's Office"

On Thursday, July 22, 1993, in the afternoon the following persons met in the office of Vincent Foster to attempt to determine if he left a suicide note or if there were any other information that might have led him to take his own life.The very limited examination of the documents and notes were done by the [redacted]. The following people were also present during this meeting: [redacted]; Attorney representing the Foster family, Captain [redacted] and Detective [redacted]; U.S. Park Police, Special Agents [redacted]; Federal Bureau of Investigation, [redacted], Deputy Assistant Attorney General Criminal Division; and [redacted] Department of Justice Attorney, [redacted] U.S. Secret Service.

Originally, we had responded to the White House on Wednesday morning, July 21, to examine his office. As soon as we arrived and met with Inspector [redacted] of the U.S. Secret Service Uniform Division, we had requested a guard be posted at the door of the office to prevent anyone from removing anything from the office. As the day progressed we were not permitted to examine the room. We departed the White House sometime around 1830 - 1900 hours. The U.S. Secret Service log of persons entering the office after 1100 hours on Wednesday, July 21, showed Bernard Nussbaum entering the office at 1110 hours to remove a small photo and Cliff Sloan entering at 1334 hours same day to replace a bag of trash previously removed from Mr. Foster's trash can.

At 1315 hours, Thursday, July 22, all 13 of us entered the office of Vincent Foster. [redacted] took a seat at Foster's desk, [redacted] was surrounded by [redacted] with [redacted] near [redacted] side and [redacted] at the end of the desk.

ULTS OF INVESTIGATION

7/21/93: Bernard Nussbaum

After negotiations between the White House Counsel's Office and the Department of Justice were completed at approximately 1700 hours on 7/21/93, S/A Condon, S/A Salter, Captain Hume, and Detective Markland responded to the West Wing and spoke with Mr. Nussbaum to make arrangements for interviews and a search of Mr. Foster's office on 7/22/93. Mr. Nussbaum is Chief Counsel to the President. S/A Salter and Det. Markland obtained the following information from Mr. Nussbaum as a result of that meeting:

-Mr. Nussbaum had determined that Mr. Foster had left his office after lunch at 1310 hours on 7/20/93. Mr. Foster had not exhibited any unusual behavior on that day. Mr. Nussbaum tried to page Mr. Foster at approximately 1830 hours. After waiting a brief period of time without receiving a response, Mr. Nussbaum left and proceeded to his domicile, arriving at approximately 1900 hours.

-On 7/20/93 after Vincent Foster's death became known to him, Mr. Nussbaum responded back to the White House where he went through Mr. Foster's office with Patsy Thomassen and Maggie Williams. Mr. Foster stated that they conducted a brief, quick search to see if Mr. Foster may have left a suicide note on his desk. This search lasted from 2200 to 2400 hours. Mr. Nussbaum stated that no documents were removed from the office.

-Mr. Nussbaum stated that he learned that from about 0700-0715 hours one of the secretaries had entered Mr. Foster's office and "piled papers" on his desk top "to make it neat".

-At approximately 0900 hours Mr. Nussbaum again entered the office to look around.

-It was determined that the cleaning lady had emptied Mr. Foster's trash. The trash was retrieved and returned to the office.

-Mr. Nussbaum requested that the U.S.S.S. secure the office and the room was posted at approximately 1015 hours.

Investigation continues.

ULTS OF INVESTIGATION

On Thursday, August 22, 1993, Detective Pete Markland and I responded to the White house to meet with Special Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon of the FBI to conduct interviews. The purpose of the interviews were to reconstruct the final hours of Vincent Foster's life.

Myself and Special Agent Condon interviewed Ms. Betsy L. Pond; Staff Assistant to Bernard Nussbaum, Chief Counsel for the White House. The interview took place in an office that was unoccupied for the day. Present in the room during the entire interview were Clifford Sloan; associate counsel to Nussbaum, and Paul Imbordino; assistant Special Agent in Charge, Office of Protective Operation, U.S. Secret Service. Clifford Sloan took notes throughout the interview. During the interview Bernard Nussbaum burst into the room and demanded "is everything all right?"

We started the interview at approximately 0900 hours. Ms. Pond got in to work at around 0900 hours on Tuesday, July 20th. Usually here is a staff meeting of the counsel's office from 0900 to 0945 ours each morning that Vincent Foster would attend. She assumed he was at the staff meeting as she didn't see him when she arrived at work. She first recalled seeing him outside in the Rose Garden. The President was nominating Judge Freeh at the ceremony as the new director of the FBI.

She doesn't recall Vincent Foster having any visitors on Tuesday. The first conversation she had with him was about lunch around 1200-1230 hours. He said he would eat at his desk. He ordered a medium rare cheeseburger, french fries and coke. She and Linda Tripp went to the cafeteria and ordered his lunch. She recalled there were M & M's on the tray with the food because Linda wanted them. He sat on his sofa and ate lunch in his office.

At around 1300 hours he came out of the office and stated "I'll be back, there are M & M's left in my office". Ms. Pond recalled that she and Linda were in the office when he left. She wasn't sure if Tom was in the office or not. Tom Castleton is a young college graduate working in the office. There was nothing unusual about his emotional state. In fact, over the last several weeks she did not notice any changes, either physically or emotionally. She noticed no weight lost. She was unaware of him taking any medication or seeing any doctors. I asked here would she be surprised if I found out he was seeing a psychiatrist. She said es. She was not aware of any depression problems. She had no nformation whether he owned any weapons.

ULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Ms. Pond said she left work at approximately 1845-1850 hours on Tuesday; but, before she left at around 1820 or so, Maggie Williams (Mrs. Clinton's Chief of Staff) called for Vincent. She paged Vincent and left the White House number for him to call. She recalled no other phone messages for Vincent.

She learned about Vincent's death from messages on her home answering machine around 0500-0600 hours on Wednesday, July 21. She came into work at 0700 hours and was the first person in. The door to Vincent's office was closed when she arrived at work. She believed that Tom Castleton or Bernard Nussbaum were the last persons out of the complex on Tuesday and one of them would have closed the door to Vincent's office. She went into his office and "squashed" the papers together that were on his desk. She realized that she shouldn't have touched the papers as soon as she did it but probably did it out of habit.

When I questioned her if she had been told how to respond to our questions, she stated that Clifford Sloan (who was present during our interview) and Steve Neuwirth, both associate counselors, had called them all together on Wednesday evening and told them they would be questioned by the police and for them to tell the truth.

Interview: Deborah Gorham

Deborah Gorham is the Executive Assistant that was assigned to Vincent W. Foster. Her desk is located in the common area between the two offices in the West Wing of the White House occupied by Mr. Bernard Nussbaum and Mr. Foster, respectively. Other persons occupying this common office space are Betsy Pond (Executive Assistant to Mr. Nussbaum), Linda Tripp (Executive Assistant), Tom Castleton (Staff Assistant), and Marlene McDonald (Volunteer).

The interview took place in a West Wing office at approximately 0900 hours and was attended by Det. Markland (USPP), S/A Salter (FBI), and Assistant White House Counsel Steven Neuwirth.

Ms. Gorham stated that she did not know Mr. Foster before she was hired on March 8, 1993 and had no social relationship with either Mr. Foster or any member of his family. On 7/20/93 she left the office at approximately 1130 hours, which is the last time she saw Mr. Foster alive. She stated that she did not note any unusual behavior by Mr. Foster on that day.

Ms. Gorham recalled a conversation with Mr. Foster on Thursday, 7/15/93 when he discussed the differences in working for a law firm and working for the government. She placed no significance on the conversation at the time and, in retrospect, it still seemed to be a normal comparison.

Ms. Gorham was asked if Mr. Foster would have any reason to deal with physicians directly on a professional basis due to his involvement with the Health Care Reform proposals under consideration. Ms. Gorham stated that there was no reason whatsoever for Mr. Foster to deal with physicians professionally.

The interview was about to be terminated when Mr. Neuwirth asked us to remain and took Ms. Gorham out of the room to speak to her. A very short time later they returned and Ms. Gorham stated that there was one thing she thought may be important that she recalled. On Thursday, 7/15/93, Mrs. Foster had called her and asked for Mr. Foster's pay schedule, explaining that she believed their checking account was overdrawn. The Credit Union was contacted and they stated that they would work with Mrs. Foster on a weekly, instead of a biweekly, basis. After that conversation Ms. Gorham was authorized by Mr. Foster to pick up a statement every Friday for Mrs. Foster. Ms. Gorham did not see this as a real problem or place any significance on it.

SULTS OF INVESTIGATION

This initial interview was concluded at approximately 0930 hours.

At approximately 1450 hours, immediately after the inventory of Mr. Foster's Office by White House Counsel (reference report under this case file number by Capt. Hume), Det. Markland and S/A Salter were asked to remain and were ushered into Mr. Nussbaum's office by Mr. Neuwirth. Ms. Gorham was brought in and she stated that she had just remembered some conversations that she thought were important to our investigation. Within the last two weeks Ms. Gorham had received calls from Mr. Foster's eldest son and Mrs. Foster inquiring about Vincent Foster's mood. They specifically asked how "he" was doing, not how the work was going, and seemed genuinely concerned.

Investigation continues.

Office Personnel Interviews

The following two people were interviewed at the West Wing of the White House by Detective Markland and Special Agent Salter on 7/22/93. The information provided by these two individuals was brief.

Tom Castleton (Staff Assistant) @ 1000 hours:

Mr. Castleton stated that he worked on 7/20/93 and remembers that Mr. Foster ate lunch at the office, although he could not place the time. Mr. Castleton was present when Mr. Foster left the office after eating lunch and said "So Long". Mr. Foster did not respond and seemed to Mr. Castleton to be "In his own world", focused, disturbed.

Linda Tripp (Executive Assistant) @ 1150 hours:

Ms. Tripp stated that she began her workday on 7/20/93 at 0800 hours. Mr. Foster's demeanor seemed normal to her, however, she had no personal dealings with him on that day.

Ms. Tripp makes it a habit to notice what the staff members are taking with them when they leave the office in order to determine for herself how long she may expect them to be away from the office. Ms. Tripp was absolutely certain that Mr. Foster did not carry anything in the way of a briefcase, bag, umbrella, etc... out of the office.

Investigation continues.

"Review of Documents from Vincent Foster's Office"

On Thursday, July 22, 1993, in the afternoon the following persons met in the office of Vincent Foster to attempt to determine if he left a suicide note or if there were any other information that might have led him to take his own life.The very limited examination of the documents and notes were done by the Chief Counsel, Bernard Nussbaum. The following people were also present during this meeting: William Burton, Deputy Chief of Staff for the President, Clifford Sloan and Steven Neuwirth; Associate Legal Counselors, Michael L. Spafford; Attorney representing the Foster family, Captain Charles Hume and Detective Pete Markland; U.S. Park Police, Special Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon; Federal Bureau of Investigation, David Margolis, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Criminal Division; and Roger Adams; Department of Justice Attorney, Paul Imbordino and Donald Flynn; U.S. Secret Service.

Originally, we had responded to the White House on Wednesday morning, July 21, to examine his office. As soon as we arrived and met with Inspector Dennis Martin of the U.S. Secret Service Uniform Division, we had requested a guard be posted at the door of the office to prevent anyone from removing anything from the office. As the day progressed we were not permitted to examine the room. We departed the White House sometime around 1830 - 1900 hours. The U.S. Secret Service log of persons entering the office after 1100 hours on Wednesday, July 21, showed Bernard Nussbaum entering the office at 1110 hours to remove a small photo and Cliff Sloan entering at 1834 hours same day to replace a bag of trash previously removed from Mr. Foster's trash can.

At 1315 hours, Thursday, July 22, all 13 of us entered the office of Vincent Foster. Bernard Nussbaum took a seat at Foster's desk, He was surrounded by his two associates, Sloan and Neuwirth, with Burton near his side and Spafford at the end of the desk.

6 RECLASSIFICATION OF INCIDENT

SULTS OF INVESTIGATION

The eight law enforcement officers were gathered on the opposite side of the desk and room in a position where we couldn't examine any documents. Eventually all law enforcement were seated, either on the sofa or in chairs provide by the U.S. Secret Service. During the process Bill Burton left the office on at least two occasions and returned. Bernard Nussbaum did the actual review of the documents in a very hurried and casual fashion. There was some conversation between Nussbaum and Margolis as what constituted privileged communication. Nussbaum carried his interpretation of what was considered privileged to the extreme; one example was when he picked up a xeroxed copy of a newspaper article and declared that it was privileged communication even though it had been in the newspapers. Nussbaum would move papers about declaring what might be of interest to the police and what was strictly White House business.

Also, he decided what was Foster's personal papers and put those in a separate pile for the family attorney. Occasionally, Detective Markland or Margolis would ask him to place a certain note or document in a pile for possible police examination. At one point, Nussbaum pulled some papers out of a leather valise/briefcase that was sitting on the floor behind the desk. He put them on the desk and went through them. He then looked in the valise/briefcase again, but did not take anything out of it. A little later he moved the valise/briefcase away from the desk and placed it on the floor adjacent to the exterior wall directly behind him and the desk. At no time during the approximate one hour and 35 minutes we were in Foster's office where we allowed to examine any documents. At one point Special Agent Scott Salter got up to stretch and Clifford Sloan challenged him and asked him if he was standing up in an attempt to get a look at the documents.

The documents that Nussbaum had separated out were left in the office with the exception of the pile containing what Mr. Nussbaum determined to be personal papers of Foster. It was agreed between Margolis and Nussbaum that the family lawyer could take those papers and after getting approval from Mrs. Foster the police could examine them. The telephone logs were not turned over to us. We cleared the office at approximately 1450 hours. Margolis cautioned Nussbaum and his staff not to remove anything from the office. Nussbaum stated he could not leave the office secured any longer. The lock remained on the door that had been installed by the U.S. Secret Service on Wednesday, and Nussbaum was given the key after we cleared the office on Thursday at 1449 hours.

On 7-27-93 at approx. 2115 hours I met with Mr. Bernard Nussbaum in the Chief of Staff's Office in the West Wing of the White House. Also present were a representative from Department of Justice, Mr. Phillip Heymann, as well as Asst. Chief of Staff Bill Burton, also Mr. Gergen and Mr. McLarty.

Mr. Nussbaum had before him on the table small pieces of yellow lined note paper which he was assembling into a whole page. The assembled pieces revealed a note, identified to be in the handwriting of the deceased Vincent Foster. Mr. Nussbaum read the contents of the notes to the undersigned of which I took notes. He then placed the pieces back into a white legal White House envelope and handed them over to me. The notes appeared to be on 3 hole yellow lined paper of approx. 2/3 page length.

According to Mr. Nussbaum, on Monday 7-26-93 he directed one of his assistants, Mr. Steven Neuwirth enter Mr. Foster's Office and take a detailed inventory of the files and material in there. In a brief case, known to be in the office and thought to be empty, he found the torn pieces of a hand written page. The scraps were dumped out and then taken to Mr. Nussbaum's Office where they were assembled and Mr. Nussbaum was notified. Mr. Nussbaum then went through notification procedure, to Bill Burton, to the Chief of Staff, and finally to the President today 7-27-93 at about 1700 hours when he returned to Washington, D.C. and at about 1800 hours today's date to the family of Mr. Foster when they returned to the city.

Also present outside the meeting, but who did speak to me about the notes was Mr. Jim Hamilton, the attorney for the Foster Family. They are very concerned about the confidential nature of the note and other news leaks attributed to the U.S. Park Police.

According to Mr. Bill Burton 202-456-6798 Mr. Steven Neuwirth will be available for an interview on 7-28-93. Also handwriting samples will be available.

Cleared at 2200.

Interview: Steven Neuwirth

Steven Neuwirth is an Assistant White House Counsel and the person reported to have found the note presumably written by Vincent W. Foster that was turned over to Detective L. J. Megby on 7/27/93. The note had been discovered by Mr. Neuwirth during the packaging of Mr. Foster's personal effects on 7/26/93. On 7/29/93 at approximately 1130 hours, Steven Neuwirth was interviewed in Bernard Nussbaum's office by Detective Peter W. Markland and Captain Charles Hume. Mr. Nussbaum was also present and became a subject of the interview.

The following questions were posed to the two gentlemen regarding the note in question:

How could this note have avoided detection during the search of Mr. Foster's office by Mr. Nussbaum and other members of the White House Counsel's office in our presence on 7/22/93?

If the note was found on 7/26/93 why were the police not notified of it's existence until approximately 8:00 P.M. on 7/27/93?

Mr. Nussbaum stated it was his recollection that he removed materials from the briefcase, which remained on the floor, and placed them on the desk in front of him. He then went through the materials. He inferred that because of this he had missed the small scraps of yellow paper that obviously remained in the bottom of the briefcase. I informed Mr. Nussbaum that I was seated on the small couch directly across from and facing him and that I had a clear view of the briefcase when he removed it's contents, also that after the contents were removed I could see that he spread open the briefcase and visually inspected it as if to confirm that it was, indeed, empty. Mr. Nussbaum did not recall doing what I described. Captain Hume stated that he observed that Mr. Nussbaum handled the briefcase a third time when he slid it back towards the wall behind him in order to access the desk's file drawer. Mr. Nussbaum agreed with Captain Hume's recollection of sliding the case to the rear.

Mr. Nussbaum then related that the following people were contacted to view the document before a determination could be made to disclose it to the U. S. Park Police:

Bill Burton (Deputy Chief of Staff)
Thomas F. McLarty (Chief of Staff)
Lisa Foster (wife of Vincent Foster)
Phillip Heymann (Deputy Attorney General)
Janet Reno (Attorney General)

7 RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

President Clinton was made aware of the existence of the document. Only Mr. Neuwirth and Mr. Nussbaum handled the document.

Mr. Neuwirth then related his recollection of the discovery of the document. He stated that he was in the process of gathering and packaging Mr. Foster's personal affects for delivery to the family when he turned the briefcase sideways in order to fit it into a box without causing damage to a photograph of the President with Mr. Foster's daughter, Laura. When he did this some torn yellow paper scraps fell out of the briefcase and he noticed handwriting on them. He then retrieved a number of other similar scraps from the bottom of the case and took them to the table in Mr. Nussbaum's office where he assembled the document which was, ultimately, turned over to Detective Megby.

Mr. Nussbaum was asked if he could clarify two entries on the handwritten note. "HRC" refers to the first lady; "KAKI" refers to an interior decorator employed by Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. Nussbaum stated that there were only "three or four" work related documents on Mr. Foster's computer.

Inquiries were made regarding the phone logs kept at the office. Mr. Neuwirth stated that they had been assembled and that they will review them and contact us.

The interview concluded at approximately 1230 hours.

[redacted] said [redacted] left work at approximately 1845-1850 hours on Tuesday; but, before [redacted] left at around 1820 or so, [redacted] ([redacted]) called for Vincent. [redacted] paged Vincent and left the White House number for him to call. [redacted] recalled no other phone messages for Vincent.

[redacted] learned about Vincent's death from messages on [redacted] home answering machine around 0500-0600 hours on Wednesday, July 21. [redacted] came into work at 0700 hours and was the first person in. The door to Vincent's office was closed when [redacted] arrived at work. [redacted] believed that [redacted] or [redacted] were the last persons out of the complex on Tuesday and one of them would have closed the door to Vincent's office. [redacted] went into his office and "squashed" the papers together that were on his desk. [redacted] realized that [redacted] shouldn't have touched the papers as soon as [redacted] did it but probably did it out of habit.

When I questioned [redacted] if [redacted] had been told how to respond to our questions, [redacted] stated that [redacted] (who was present during our interview) and [redacted], both [redacted], had c ed them all together on Wednesday evening and told them they would be questioned by the police and for them to tell the truth.

Interview: [redacted]

[redacted] Deborah Gorham is the [redacted] who was employed in the correspondence [redacted]. [redacted] desk is located in the corridor area between the two offices in the West Wing of the White House occupied by Mr. Bernard Nussbaum and Mr. Foster, respectively. Other persons occupying offices in the same office space are Betty Pond (Executive Assistant to Mr. Nussbaum), [redacted] (Executive Assistant), [redacted] (Staff Assistant), and [redacted] (Volunteer).

The interview took place in a West Wing office at approximately 0900 hours and was attended by Det. [redacted] (USPP), S/A Salter (FBI), and [redacted] (Assistant White House Counsel).

[redacted] stated that she did not know Mr. Foster before she was hired on March 5, 1993 and had no social relationship with either Mr. Foster or any member of his family. On 7/20/93 she left the office at approximately 1130 hours, which is the last time she saw Mr. Foster alive. She stated that she did not note any unusual behavior by Mr. Foster on that day.

[redacted] recalled a conversation with Mr. Foster on Thursday, 7/15/93 when he discussed the differences in working for a law firm and working for the government. She placed no significance on the conversation at the time and, in retrospect, it still seemed to be a normal comparison.

Ms. Gorham was asked if Mr. Foster would have any reason to deal with physicians directly on a professional basis due to his involvement with the Health Care Reform proposals under consideration. Ms. Gorham stated that there was no reason whatsoever for Mr. Foster to deal with physicians professionally.

The interview was about to be terminated when [redacted] asked us to remain and took Ms. Gorham out of the room to speak to her. A very short time later they returned and Ms. Gorham stated that there was one thing she thought may be important that she recalled. On Thursday, 7/15/93, [redacted] had called her and asked for Mr. Foster's pay schedule, explaining that she believed their checking account was overdrawn. The Credit Union was contacted and they stated that they would work with Mr. Foster on a weekly, instead of a biweekly, basis. After that conversation Ms. Gorham was authorized by Mr. Foster to pick up a statement every Friday for [redacted]. [redacted] did not see this as a real problem or place any significance on it.

[redacted] and S/A [redacted] were asked to remain and were ushered into Mr. Nussbaum's office by [redacted]. [redacted] was brought in and [redacted] stated that [redacted] had just remembered some conversations that [redacted] thought were important to our investigation. Within the last two weeks [redacted] had received calls from [redacted] and [redacted] inquiring about Vincent Foster's mood. They specifically asked how "he" was doing, not how the work was going, and seemed genuinely concerned.

Office Personnel Interviews

The following two people were interviewed at the West Wing of the White House by Detective [redacted] and Special Agent [redacted] on 7/22/93. The information provided by these two individuals was brief.

[redacted] (Staff Assistant) @ 1000 hours:

[redacted] stated that [redacted] worked on 7/20/93 and remembers that Mr. Foster ate lunch at the office, although [redacted] could not place the time. [redacted] was present when Mr. Foster left the office after eating lunch and said "So Long". Mr. Foster did not respond and seemed to [redacted] to be "In his own world", focused, disturbed.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] began [redacted] workday on 7/20/93 at 0800 hours. Mr. Foster's demeanor seemed normal to [redacted], however, [redacted] had no personal dealings with him on that day.

[redacted] makes it a habit to notice what the staff members are taking with them when they leave the office in order to determine for [redacted] how long [redacted] may expect them to be away from the office. [redacted] was absolutely certain that Mr. Foster did not carry anything in the way of a briefcase, bag, umbrella, etc... out of the office.

"Review of Documents from Vincent Foster's Office"

On Thursday, July 22, 1993, in the afternoon the following persons met in the office of Vincent Foster to attempt to determine if he left a suicide note or if there were any other information that might have led him to take his own life.The very limited examination of the documents and notes were done by the [redacted] The following people were also present during this meeting: [redacted] the President, [redacted]; [redacted]; Attorney representing the Foster family, Captain [redacted] and Detective [redacted]; U.S. Park Police, Special Agents [redacted] and [redacted]; Federal Bureau of Investigation, [redacted], Deputy Assistant Attorney General Criminal Division; and [redacted]; Department of Justice Attorney, [redacted] and [redacted]; U.S. Secret Service.

As the day progressed we were not permitted to examine the room. We departed the White House sometime around 1830 - 1900 hours. The U.S. Secret Service log of persons entering the office after 1100 hours on Wednesday, July 21, showed Bernard Nussbaum entering the office at 1110 hours to remove a small photo and Cliff Sloan entering at 1834 hours same day to replace a bag of trash previously removed from Mr. Foster's trash can.

At 1315 hours, Thursday, July 22, all 13 of us entered the office of Vincent Foster. [redacted] took a seat at Foster's desk, [redacted] was surrounded by [redacted], with [redacted] near [redacted] side and [redacted] at the end of the desk.

ESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

The eight law enforcement officers were gathered on the opposite side of the desk and room in a position where we couldn't examine any documents. Eventually all law enforcement were seated, either on the sofa or in chairs provide by the U.S. Secret Service. During the process [redacted] left the office on at least two occasions and returned. [redacted] did the actual review of the documents in a very hurried and casual fashion. There was some conversation between [redacted] and [redacted] as what constituted privileged communication. [redacted] carried [redacted] interpretation of what was considered privileged to the extreme; one example was when [redacted] picked up a xeroxed copy of a newspaper article and declared that it was privileged communication even though it had been in the newspapers. [redacted] would move papers about declaring what might be of interest to the police and what was strictly White House business.

Also, [redacted] decided what was Foster's personal papers and put those in a separate pile for the family attorney. Occasionally, Detective [redacted] or [redacted] would ask [redacted] to place a certain note or document in a pile for possible police examination. At one point, [redacted] pulled some papers out of a leather valise/briefcase that was sitting on the floor behind the desk. [redacted] put them on the desk and went through them. [redacted] then looked in the valise/briefcase again, but did not take anything out of it. A little later [redacted] moved the valise/briefcase away from the desk and placed it on the floor adjacent to the exterior wall directly behind [redacted] and the desk. At no time during the approximate one hour and 35 minutes we were in Foster's office where we allowed to examine any documents. At one point Special Agent [redacted] got up to stretch and [redacted] challenged him and asked him if he was standing up in an attempt to get a look at the documents.

The documents that [redacted] had separated out were left in the office with the exception of the pile containing what [redacted] determined to be personal papers of Foster. It was agreed between [redacted] and [redacted] that the family lawyer could take those papers and after getting approval from [redacted] the police could examine them. The telephone logs were not turned over to us. We cleared the office at approximately 1450 hours. [redacted] cautioned [redacted] and [redacted] staff not to remove anything from the office. [redacted] stated [redacted] could not leave the office secured any longer. The lock remained on the door that had been installed by the U.S. Secret Service on Wednesday, and [redacted] was given the key after we cleared the office on Thursday at 1449 hours.

On 7-27-93 at approx. 2115 hours I met with ~~Mr. Bernard Nussbaum~~ in the Chief of Staff's Office in the West Wing of the White House. Also present were a representative from Department of Justice, ~~Mr. Phillip Heyman~~, as well as ~~Asst. Chief of Staff Bill Burton~~, also ~~Mr. Gergen~~ and ~~Mr. Neuwirth~~.

~~Mr. Nussbaum~~ had before ~~him~~ on the table small pieces of yellow lined note paper which ~~he~~ was assembling into a whole page. The assembled pieces revealed a note, identified to be in the handwriting of the deceased Vincent Foster. ~~Mr. Nussbaum~~ read the contents of the notes to the undersigned of which I took notes. ~~He~~ then placed the pieces back into a white legal White House envelope and handed them over to me. The notes appeared to be on 3 hole yellow lined paper of approx. 2/3 page length.

According to ~~Mr. Nussbaum~~, on Monday 7-26-93 ~~he~~ directed one of ~~his~~ assistants, ~~Mr. Steven Neuwirth~~ enter Mr. Foster's Office and take a detailed inventory of the files and material in there. In a brief case, known to be in the office and thought to be empty, ~~he~~ found the torn pieces of a hand written page. The scraps were dumped out and then taken to Mr. Nussbaum's Office where they were assembled and ~~Mr. Nussbaum~~ was notified. ~~Mr. Nussbaum~~ then went through notification procedure, to ~~Bill Burton~~, to the Chief of Staff, and finally to the President today 7-27-93 at about 1700 hours when he returned to Washington, D.C. and at about 1800 hours today's date to the family of Mr. Foster when they returned to the city.

Also present outside the meeting, but who did speak to me about the notes was ~~Mr. Jim Hamilton~~, the attorney for the Foster Family. They are very concerned about the confidential nature of the note and other news leaks attributed to the U.S. Park Police.

According to ~~Mr. Bill Burton 202-456-6703~~ ~~Mr. Steven Neuwirth~~ will be available for an interview on 7-28-93. Also handwriting samples will be available.

Cleared at 2200.

Interview: [redacted]

[redacted] is an [redacted] and the person reported to have found the note presumably written by Vincent W. Foster that was turned over to Detective [redacted] on 7/27/93. The note had been discovered by [redacted] during the packaging of Mr. Foster's personal effects on 7/26/93. On 7/29/93 at approximately 1130 hours, [redacted] was interviewed in Bernard Nussbaum's office by Detective [redacted] and Captain [redacted]. [redacted] was also present and became a subject of the interview.

The following questions were posed to the two [redacted] regarding the note in question:

How could this note have avoided detection during the search of Mr. Foster's office by Mr. Nussbaum and other members of the White House Counsel's office in our presence on 7/22/93?

If the note was found on 7/26/93 why were the police not notified of it's existence until approximately 8:00 P.M. on 7/27/93?

[redacted] stated it was [redacted] recollection that [redacted] removed materials from the briefcase, which remained on the floor, and placed them on the desk in front of [redacted] then went through the materials. [redacted] inferred that because of this [redacted] had missed the small scraps of yellow paper that obviously remained in the bottom of the briefcase. I informed [redacted] that I was seated on the small couch directly across from and facing [redacted] and that I had a clear view of the briefcase when [redacted] removed it's contents, also that after the contents were removed I could see that [redacted] spread open the briefcase and visually inspected it as if to confirm that it was, indeed, empty. [redacted] did not recall doing what I described. Captain [redacted] stated that [redacted] observed that Mr. [redacted] handled the briefcase a third time when [redacted] slid it back towards the wall behind [redacted] in order to access the desk's file drawer. [redacted] agreed with Captain [redacted] recollection of sliding the case to the rear.

Mr. [redacted] then related that the following people were contacted to view the document before a determination could be made to disclose it to the U. S. Park Police:

[redacted] (Deputy Chief of Staff)
[redacted] (Chief of Staff)
[redacted] (wife of Vincent Foster)
[redacted] (Deputy [redacted])
Janet Reno (Attorney General)

President Clinton was made aware of the existence of the document. Only [redacted]h and [redacted] handled the document.

[redacted] then related [redacted] recollection of the discovery of the document. [redacted] stated that [redacted] was in the process of gathering and packaging Mr. Foster's personal affects for delivery to the family when [redacted] turned the briefcase sideways in order to fit it into a box without causing damage to a photograph of the President with [redacted] When he did this some torn yellow paper scraps fell out of the briefcase and he noticed handwriting on them. [redacted] then retrieved a number of other similar scraps from the bottom of the case and took them to the table in Mr. Nussbaum's office where [redacted] assembled the document which was, ultimately, turned over to Detective [redacted]

[redacted] was asked if [redacted] could clarify two entries on the handwritten note. "HRC" refers to the first lady; "KAKI" refers to an interior decorator employed by Mrs. Clinton.

[redacted] stated that there were only "three or four" work related documents on Mr. Foster's computer.

Inquiries were made regarding the phone logs kept at the office. [redacted]n stated that they had been assembled and that they will review them and contact us.

The interview concluded at approximately 1230 hours.

) RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

On Friday, July 30th, Detective [redacted] and I responded to the Executive Office Building (EOB) Room 128 to meet with [redacted]. The purpose of the meeting was to examine the telephone message log of Vincent Foster during the month of July and in particular to attempt to determine if he had gotten a call just prior to his departure on July 20, 1993. We learned that the phone logs were just a message log of calls he received when he was absent or unable to take the call. The administrative assistants would type time, person's name, phone number, and messages if one was left. The log was no assistance in determining if anyone had called him just prior to 1300 hours on July 20, 1993, if the call had been put through. There was one notation of interest on July 19, 1993. A [redacted] had called at 1047 hours and left his phone number [redacted]. There were no messages. Prior to 1300 hours on July 20, he had received several phone messages. Some of the messages were from his staff. There were two calls made from Arkansas from the same person and one call from Colorado. Attempts will be made to contact these people and see if either reached Vincent prior to 1300 hours.

[redacted] requested if any information about the phone logs is contemplated being released, [redacted] would like to have the counsel's office notified at the White House prior to any release. I told [redacted] that I would put his request in my report. This caused [redacted] some concern because [redacted] didn't want special or unusual attention drawn to his request.

Special Agent WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL of the Federal Bureau of Investigation telephonically contacted Identification Technician, WAYNE JOHNSON at his place of employment, the U.S. Park Police (USPP), Anacostia Operation Facility, Washington, D.C. 20224. Agent COLOMBELL informed Officer JOHNSON that he needed to ask some clarifying questions regarding the manner in which the Medical Examiner's Office and USPP officers handled evidentiary items of clothing removed from the body of VINCENT FOSTER.

Officer JOHNSON stated that he, along with other USPP officers, was present on July 21, 1993, at 10:00 a.m., when the Fairfax Medical Examiner's Office performed an autopsy on the body of VINCENT FOSTER. Officer JOHNSON stated that he specifically took custody of all items of clothing removed from the body of VINCENT FOSTER. Officer JOHNSON stated that in preparation for the autopsy, all items of clothing, including a dress shirt, t-shirt, boxer shorts, pants, belt, shoes and socks, were removed by personnel at the Medical Examiner's Office and placed in a pile on an adjoining table or gurney. He stated that these individual items of clothing were not segregated and packaged separately at that time. He stated that following the autopsy, all of the items of clothing, collectively, were taken by him to the USPP Anacostia Operations Facility. JOHNSON stated that upon arrival at the USPP facility, he took the items of clothing into the rear lab area and spread each item of clothing out on paper for drying purposes.

Officer JOHNSON stated that it is his understanding that the items of clothing were left to dry for several days and that he was not involved in the later wrapping or packaging of these items of clothing. JOHNSON stated that because of the way the items of clothing were removed from the body and placed collectively in a pile and in the manner in which they were transported back to the USPP, evidentiary items such as hair, carpet fibers, etc., could easily have been transferred from one item of clothing to another item of clothing.

ARTHUR LEWIS JONES, Deputy Press Secretary at The White House, work telephone 202-456-6639 was interviewed at his office in The White House. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, JONES provided the following information:

JONES advised that on July 20, 1993, he was holding the same position at The White House Communications Office that he currently holds and he was at home the entire evening. He received a telephone call at approximately 12:30 am on July 21, 1993, from JEFF ELLER who was calling him from his office at The White House to ask JONES if he was the Duty Officer for The White House Press Office that night. JONES answered that he was not, and asked what the problem was. It was at that time that ELLER notified him that VINCE FOSTER, JR. had been found dead earlier that evening.

The Press Office Duty Agent for the week of July 19-24, 1993 was DON STEINBERG, whose daytime position was Press Liaison for the National Security Counsel (NSC). JONES later found out that DON STEINBERG had been unable to carry out the duty responsibilities on the night of 7/20 and it had been delegated to his assistant, PAUL CLARK, also with the NSC. JONES advised that the position of Duty Officer was rotated among JEFF ELLER, LORRAINE VOLES, DON STEINBERG and himself. STEINBERG is still with the NSC but is no longer press liaison. He is currently the director of the African desk and his phone number is 395-3391.

PAUL CLARK has left The White House and JONES does not know his current position. JONES described CLARK as a white male, 5'9" to 10" in height, a rugged build, muscular in a "squat sort of way". He advised that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is larger in the sense that he is heavier and taller. Both men are fair complected but CLARK has the kind of skin that does not tan whereas CRAIG LIVINGSTONE does. He said that mistaking one for the other would be "a stretch".

JONES advised that he did not go into The White House or to the FOSTER residence or anywhere else the night of July 20, 1993. The following morning, JONES advised he probably arrived at The White House approximately 7:30 in the morning. He does not recall who else was there but advised that since there is a 7:30 am staff meeting, most of the Communications Office people were probably there. Everybody was feeling very down and misty because of the FOSTER death. Many people did not hear of the death until they arrived to work at The White House and some people heard it on the radio on their way to work.

He advised that the Communications Office begins daily operations earlier than any other office in The White House. In July 1993 "pool calls" (meaning press pool gatherings) for the morning job of accompanying the President on his jogging route used to assemble around 6:15 in the morning. There was very little activity anywhere else in the West Wing and the only people in the Old Executive Office Building at that time would have been the people who were assembling the press clippings. To his knowledge, there is no movement of supplies or other activity normally at that time in the morning.

On the issue of a press representative being at the FOSTER residence, JONES recalls ELLER having a discussion with him which is a blur now to him. He knows that the President went to the residence that night and JEFF went also. The press pool always accompanies the President wherever he goes, either because they take them with him or they follow. JONES recalls (but he doesn't know where he learned this) that there was some press people out at the FOSTER residence July 20 in the evening and they were holding "at bay".

The following morning JONES was not involved in any issue of how to handle press coverage at the FOSTER residence. He would have remembered it if he had been responsible for telling somebody to go out there. He recalls nothing of that nature and doesn't recall any discussion of it. JONES said that GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, MARK GEARAN, DEE DEE MYERS or LORRAINE VOLES may have been the individual who might have handled any issue about sending someone from the Communications Office out to the FOSTER residence.

He learned later in the morning that somebody was sent to the FOSTER residence. He does not recall who he heard that from but he heard about it second hand that somebody had been out there and it had been very quiet. His sense is that it was early in the morning, perhaps 8:30 am and possibly earlier. He has no idea whether it was a male or female but opined that it was most likely to have been a guy. He has no memory whatsoever of any involvement of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE in any of these affairs or activities and he does not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE that morning at The White House.

JONES advised that some time during the morning of July 21, a fellow Communications Office individual told him that their spouse had telephoned them and told them that a neighbor of theirs who is, by coincidence, a reporter had told them that they had noticed activity on their street and that something was going on at the FOSTER residence.

JONES advised that several weeks ago (some time in July 1994) LLOYD CUTLER's secretary telephoned him and inquired who had been Duty Agent from the Press Office the night of VINCE FOSTER's death. JONES does not know why the inquiry was being made. He further explained that the National Security Counsel is an entity within The White House that deals with all matters of a non-domestic nature. He advised that their Staff Director is NANCY SODERBERG, telephone 456-2224.

JONES advised that he is familiar with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and characterized him physically as a remarkable person not likely to be confused with others. There are no "look-alikes" that he could think of. He subsequently called the writer after the appointment and said that he had just spoken with an individual who looked quite a bit like CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and identified that individual as PAUL CAREY with the Congressional Affairs Office at The White House, telephone 456-6493.

JONES advised that the current head of what is left of CLINTON's campaign committee in Little Rock, Arkansas, a woman by the name of SUSIE WHITACRE was visiting The White House the evening of July 20, 1993. She stayed in the residence portion of The White House that night and he assisted her with getting in touch with people who would make sure that she was present for the Larry King Show. He does not know whether she watched it live or on a monitor. He does not know anything about her activities that evening, but it was unusual for her to be in town and she was, indeed, at The White House that night. He does not know if she has any relevant information to provide to us. Her telephone number in Little Rock, Arkansas is (501) 372-5500.

Roger N. Kammerdeiner II, Physical Security Specialist, Technical Security Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania NW. Mr Kammerdeiner was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for 2 years at The White House compound and was so employed on July 20, 1993 at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death. In his job he is responsible for seeing that locks, alarms, videos, and various countermeasures concerning fire prevention, etc. are in good working order within The White House compound.

On July 21, 1993, at approximately 4:30-5:00 pm he was sent to the office of Vincent Foster on the 2nd floor in the west wing of The White House to do a survey to determine what type of lock would be necessary to secure Vincent Foster's office door. Another USSS Physical Security Specialist, John Wills, went with him.

Upon arriving at the office of Vincent Foster they observed a USSS uniformed officer, whose name he does not recall, standing in front of the office door. They identified themselves to the uniformed officer as USSS employees, conducted a quick observation of the inside and outside of Vincent Foster's office door and departed the area. Mr. Kammerdeiner stated that they were near Vincent Foster's door for only approximately 2-3 minutes. John Wills then telephonically contacted a USSS locksmith, Kevin Robbins, to report their observations and discuss the type of lock required to secure the door.

Mr. Kammerdeiner stated that he took no further action regarding this matter and left work at approximately 5:00 pm that afternoon. He volunteered that while he was near Vincent Foster's office he did not observe anyone go in or come out of that office. Mr. Kammerdeiner stated that during the brief look he made into Foster's office, it appeared to him to be very neat and orderly with a small stack of papers on the desk. He stated that he could not recall anything else regarding the inside of the office other than it seemed neat and orderly. He advised that he had never seen this office prior to this date during the period of time that it was occupied by Vincent Foster but he had seen this office on one occasion during the Bush Administration and thought that it looked neater and cleaner on July 21, 1993 than the previous time he had seen it.

Mr. Kammerdeiner stated that he knew who Vincent Foster was, by title, but did not know him personally or professionally. He stated that he, therefore, does not feel qualified to comment on Foster's demeanor or his personality.

Mr. Kammerdeiner said that the suite of offices occupied by Mr. Nussbaum and Mr. Foster had a "day-night" alarm switch that was deactivated by the first person entering the office in the morning and activated by the last person leaving the office in the evening. He stated that he believed this alarm to be functional at the time of Vincent Foster's death and that this alarm is monitored by a USSS control center when activated.

Mr. Kammerdeiner stated that his office is located at 1709 New York Avenue on the 6th floor and his telephone number is 202-395-6074.

TIMOTHY J. KEATING, Special Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Ave., NW. Mr. KEATING was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He came to Washington, D.C. in 1985 to take a job with the House of Representatives. From 1985 to 1992, he held various staff positions within the House of Representatives and in December, 1992 was Assistant Manager of the House Democratic Cloak Room at the time of BILL CLINTON's election to the Presidency. Although he did not work on the BILL CLINTON Presidential Campaign, he had known HOWARD PASTER, who for a time was in charge of legislative affairs in the CLINTON White House. After BILL CLINTON's election, HOWARD PASTER asked him if he would come to work on the CLINTON Administration "Confirmation Team" during the period of transition from the BUSH Administration to the CLINTON Administration. He accepted and began working at The White House in December, 1992.

Mr. KEATING first met VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in late January, 1993 at a meeting of senior White House staffers. He described his relationship with Mr. FOSTER as being "professional" and he advised that he did not know FOSTER personally. He said that he dealt with FOSTER only on "a handful of matters" but that he saw FOSTER on almost a daily basis since they both had offices on the 2nd floor of The White House west wing. He described FOSTER as being "very professional and a strong individual". He said that he was "very shocked" to learn of FOSTER's death, not only because he admired and respected FOSTER but also because FOSTER seemed "so together and on top of his game". KEATING said that one "doesn't think of someone like that taking his own life". He added that he has no idea, nor can he offer speculation as to FOSTER's reasons for taking his life. He said that he last saw VINCENT FOSTER on July 19, 1993 on the 2nd floor of the White House west wing. He added, however, he believes this was a casual encounter although he can not recall the circumstances of the meeting.

Mr. KEATING advised that he left Washington, D.C. on July 20, 1994 at approximately 1:00 pm enroute to Scranton Pennsylvania to be with his mother the next day while she underwent surgery. KEATING said that he recalled watching the Cable News Network (CNN) on television on the night of July 20, 1993. He explained that he remembers this because BILL CLINTON was interviewed live that night on CNN and perhaps an hour or so after the interview CNN carried the story announcing VINCENT FOSTER's "apparent suicide." That was his first knowledge of FOSTER's death and he received no phone calls or messages from The White House during the entire day and night of July 20, 1993. He advised that after his mother's surgery on July 21, he telephoned The White House for messages at "mid-afternoon". Although he recalls some talk with White House staffers by phone regarding FOSTER's death, he was not asked to promptly return to The White House nor was he given any instructions regarding the VINCENT FOSTER matter.

Mr. KEATING said that he returned to Washington, D.C. late on the evening of July 22, 1993 and returned to work at The White House on the morning of July 23. In response to a direct question, he advised that he was never asked to carry, transport, move, store, mail, or take control of any documents, papers, or items from VINCENT FOSTER's office. He added that not only was he never asked to do such a thing, he never did so. He further advised that he knows of no White House staffers or anyone else who was asked or did such things.

WILLIAM H. KENNEDY, Associate Counsel to the President, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 1:00 p.m. MR. KENNEDY was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Assisting with the interview was CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. Also present during the interview were MR. KENNEDY's attorneys, V. THOMAS LANKFORD, JR. and PAUL V. CASTELLITTO, from the law firm Sharp & Lankford. MR. KENNEDY provided the following information:

He first met VINCENT FOSTER in 1976 while employed immediately after graduation for a period of four months at the Rose Law Firm (RLF), Little Rock, Arkansas. During that four-month period, he worked some with FOSTER. KENNEDY then worked in Washington, D.C. on the staff of Senator JOHN McCLELLAN from 1977 through 1978 and thereafter rejoined the RLF. KENNEDY worked extensively with FOSTER upon his return to RLF. KENNEDY described FOSTER as his mentor and they were best friends. KENNEDY said VINCENT FOSTER was probably the prime reason he (KENNEDY) was in Washington, D.C.

KENNEDY said he worked with VINCENT FOSTER on a daily basis after coming to the White House in February, 1993.

KENNEDY last saw VINCENT FOSTER at a staff meeting in the White House at 9:00 a.m., July 20, 1993. KENNEDY said this meeting was not memorable except he remembered talking with FOSTER after the staff meeting regarding jogging and asking him about his wife and perhaps children. He said FOSTER was working on an analysis of tort reform implications of the health care plan (malpractice, etc.) and also Travel Office matters, primarily dealing with press reports. KENNEDY said he didn't know on a daily basis all that FOSTER was working on. He said he and FOSTER exchanged missed calls about three times on the morning of July 20, 1993, but never caught up with each other. FOSTER had initially called KENNEDY. KENNEDY did not know what FOSTER was calling him about, other than the possible explanations that it could have concerned managing the clearance process for Presidential nominees or status reports on White House pass issues. He said he and FOSTER mostly talked about nominations. FOSTER could also have been calling about lunch.

KENNEDY answered yes when asked if he and FOSTER were social friends. He said they did not see all that much of each other while in Arkansas, as he (KENNEDY) was single at the time versus FOSTER was married. He described his relationship with FOSTER as being close.

KENNEDY described FOSTER as a person you could trust and respect. He was an individual who, if you obtained his approval, it meant something. FOSTER was a real force at RLF. FOSTER was a private, closed-mouth individual. He was calm, measured, hardly ever got excited. FOSTER was good on his feet; a good trial lawyer. He generally had the respect of everyone in RLF. When asked if FOSTER had any weaknesses, KENNEDY said that FOSTER was difficult to get close to. He would not open up, which was "off-putting" to some people.

KENNEDY was asked if FOSTER's departure from RLF created any problems. KENNEDY answered yes. RLF was a partnership of 55-60 partners and FOSTER, WEBB HUBBELL and HILLARY CLINTON were thought of as the senior litigators of the firm. KENNEDY said the Litigation Section of RLF "took a hit" with the departure of these three individuals. There was a perception among clients that RLF was not as strong and lacked experience after these three left for Washington, D.C. KENNEDY believed that PHILLIP CARROLL, another RLF partner and mentor of FOSTER, was disappointed when FOSTER left RLF, but would not describe it as a "falling out." It was a feeling of the loss of a powerful part of the firm. KENNEDY did not believe the circumstances under which FOSTER left the firm would have made it difficult for FOSTER to come back. Normal politics in RLF and feelings of abandonment were there but it didn't rise to the level where FOSTER thought he couldn't go back. KENNEDY noted, however, that he did not recall in conversations with FOSTER that he (FOSTER) wanted to go back.

KENNEDY was asked if he observed any noticeable behavioral or emotional changes in FOSTER. KENNEDY said yes, he had noticed immediately upon arriving in Washington, D.C. that FOSTER had lost weight and seemed exhausted. He became more fretful and was not quite as calm and measured as in RLF. FOSTER seemed to be under stress and pressure. KENNEDY believed FOSTER had come to Washington, D.C. in late November or December. It was a surprise to KENNEDY that FOSTER had left Arkansas. KENNEDY came to Washington on February 10, 1993. KENNEDY said the pace and demands of the White House are astounding. He said the pressures weighed on everyone. They were constantly being asked questions they hadn't seen before, with no rule book available. FOSTER was not able to operate as he had at RLF. KENNEDY believed the increase in stress for FOSTER was a cumulative thing.

KENNEDY did not believe FOSTER's stress to be entirely related to his job. KENNEDY said FOSTER's wife, LISA, was a "burden" to FOSTER. She was a demanding, insecure woman and during the move to Washington, D.C., "she wore VINCE out." Her contact was constant. She needed a lot of "reassurance and stroking." He remembers FOSTER's comments that LISA was "chewing on him" and FOSTER saying "you can imagine what I'm going through." FOSTER's White House job was all-consuming. There wasn't room for much else. KENNEDY said the words demanding and insecure describing LISA FOSTER were his (KENNEDY's) words. He further described LISA FOSTER as "high maintenance." She was married to someone who did not easily give, someone not outgoing, not a warm person, while being an individual that needed reassurance about her relationship.

KENNEDY was questioned regarding whether FOSTER had concern for the personal affairs of the First Family. KENNEDY answered no, that FOSTER's concerns were White House job related only. Exceptions KENNEDY could think of were that FOSTER had a pattern with the CLINTONS for years of doing personal things for them and assisting them as needed such as with tax returns. KENNEDY did not view Whitewater or Madison matters as being White House related. FOSTER also "interfaced" with the ushers; however, KENNEDY regarded that as White House job related. As an example, FOSTER assisted MRS. CLINTON with the office decorator.

KENNEDY said that FOSTER never discussed Whitewater or Madison with him. KENNEDY did not know FOSTER had anything to do with Whitewater until after Foster's death and it was reported in the press.

KENNEDY said that FOSTER coped with problems in his life by internalizing them. KENNEDY said FOSTER's hobbies included "puttering in the kitchen," family activities, visiting in Hot Springs, Arkansas and tennis. KENNEDY noted that FOSTER loved his children.

KENNEDY did not think FOSTER had any immediate financial problems and was not a gambler. He said that like others who had moved to Washington, D.C. from Arkansas, they had housing expense increases and in FOSTER's case, also children in college.

KENNEDY said he "had no indication" of extra-marital relationships of FOSTER. KENNEDY said the rumors regarding FOSTER and MRS. CLINTON had kicked around in Arkansas for years. Their origin was probably political enemies. It was no secret that VINCE FOSTER, WEBB HUBBELL and HILLARY CLINTON were good friends. FOSTER "hated" the rumors regarding himself and MRS. CLINTON. KENNEDY remembered a 1992 campaign comment FOSTER made that he (FOSTER) was considering not talking to the press because of these rumors. KENNEDY said MRS. FOSTER had to have heard these rumors.

KENNEDY said that FOSTER really had no one in his life in whom he would confide completely. KENNEDY listed FOSTER's closest confidants as HILLARY CLINTON, WEBB HUBBELL, LISA FOSTER, PHILLIP CARROLL, a partner at RLF and mentor of FOSTER, and other friends - BILL WOODYARD and WALTER HUSSMAN.

KENNEDY cannot recall VINCENT FOSTER ever making statements such as "I can't stand it anymore" or "I'd be better off dead." KENNEDY did recall FOSTER making one comment to him in the second week of June saying "he (FOSTER) was thinking about finding a job with less pressure." Another job in the administration with not as much strain. KENNEDY noted this was an amazing comment for FOSTER to have made to anyone. In hindsight, KENNEDY realizes that FOSTER was trying to tell him he needed help. Unfortunately, KENNEDY did not understand at the time and told FOSTER that he was invaluable in his present position. KENNEDY was unaware of FOSTER making similar statements to anyone else. KENNEDY said this was during the time period of the Travel Office matter and that the "Who is Vince Foster?" article in the Wall Street Journal was upsetting to FOSTER. Even though the assertions in the article were ludicrous, FOSTER realized that Arkansas people read the Wall Street Journal and being trashed in the Wall Street Journal meant being trashed in Arkansas. FOSTER lived his life to maintain his reputation.

KENNEDY was asked if he was aware if FOSTER was experiencing any symptoms related to depression, such as changes in personal appearance, sleep difficulties, physical ailments, headaches, loss of appetite, indigestion or the like. KENNEDY replied that he knew FOSTER had lost weight but was unaware of any of the other symptoms. He said FOSTER was drawn and frowned and was working too many hours. FOSTER was working on the run and he was working under stress, as most in the White House were. At the time, it didn't surprise KENNEDY that FOSTER was losing weight. You could see someone beaten down, but those seeing it also were beaten down. Asked if he was aware if FOSTER had seen a physician, KENNEDY answered he could only recall FOSTER seeing a dentist on one occasion.

KENNEDY said FOSTER's reputation in Arkansas was excellent. The main reason KENNEDY was surprised FOSTER had gone to Washington with the President was that KENNEDY had seen FOSTER posturing himself for the position of President of the Arkansas Bar Association. KENNEDY expected FOSTER to run in 1993. KENNEDY said FOSTER was active in the Arkansas Repertory Theatre and fundraising projects, etc. FOSTER was extremely well thought of in the Arkansas community. KENNEDY felt FOSTER's reputation in Washington was becoming what it had been in Arkansas.

KENNEDY was asked about FOSTER cancelling his appearance to accept an award from the Arkansas Bar Association the day before the award was to be presented. KENNEDY said he had asked FOSTER about this and had received the reply that FOSTER had "too much to do." At the time, this explanation made sense to KENNEDY.

KENNEDY did not see any changes in FOSTER's desire to be around other people. However, FOSTER's work kept him pinned in place a lot of the time.

KENNEDY described FOSTER as not being a very religious person. FOSTER's religion was not manifested outwardly.

KENNEDY described the White House routine for FOSTER as arriving at the White House about 8:00 a.m., attending a staff meeting at 9:00 a.m. and the day being filled with meetings or spent in his office. FOSTER would stay at the White House on many occasions until 10:00 or 11:00 p.m. On April 15, 1993, KENNEDY's family came to Washington and KENNEDY began the pattern of leaving the White House at about 7:00 p.m. with take-home work in his briefcase. When asked if FOSTER would leave the White House at mid-day, KENNEDY said that he and FOSTER would sometimes have lunch outside the complex with people from Arkansas, but that that was a rarity. Most of the time was spent in the White House. Lunch was taken at the White House mess or at a local nearby restaurant.

On the day of VINCENT FOSTER's death, KENNEDY got home at about 7:15-7:20 p.m. He received a telephone call between 8:15 and 8:30 p.m. from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, Director of White House Personnel Security. LIVINGSTONE worked for KENNEDY at that time. LIVINGSTONE had gotten a call from "an inspector" that FOSTER was dead. KENNEDY said he was "stunned" at the news. LIVINGSTONE had been advised of the FOSTER death by law enforcement because of his title and job responsibility. KENNEDY said he didn't believe the news and told LIVINGSTONE he needed confirmation. LIVINGSTONE called back to say he had confirmed the death and reported that the death was thought to be a suicide in a park. The body was enroute to a hospital (name not recalled by KENNEDY). KENNEDY said that he (KENNEDY) had to go to the hospital. KENNEDY did not notify anyone else at the time. Shortly after his arrival at the hospital, LIVINGSTONE also arrived. They confirmed with a policeman on duty at the hospital that the FOSTER body was there and that the matter involved the U.S. Park Police. Hospital officials finally allowed LIVINGSTONE and KENNEDY to view the body and they confirmed that it was VINCENT FOSTER. KENNEDY tried to notify MCLARTY but couldn't get through to him at first but finally was successful in reaching him at the White House. MCLARTY had already been informed of the death. KENNEDY also believes that he made a telephone call to his boss, BERNARD NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM told him he was going to the FOSTER house and KENNEDY decided to go also. KENNEDY said that he was trying to convey that he was very upset on the night of FOSTER's death.

KENNEDY and LIVINGSTONE went to KENNEDY's residence to get KENNEDY's wife and the three of them drove to FOSTER's residence. KENNEDY put the time at midnight or later. He said there was mass confusion and everybody was upset at the FOSTER residence. He and the others stayed for approximately two hours. NUSSBAUM had just left when KENNEDY arrived but the President was still there. Others KENNEDY could recall as being present were GERGIN and VERNON JORDAN. KENNEDY recalled that the President had asked him to come back to the White House but he was non-committal and ultimately did not accept the President's invitation. KENNEDY described himself as a "mess" and returned home with his wife.

KENNEDY said he did not know anything regarding the events of the evening of July 20, 1993 regarding VINCENT FOSTER's office other than what he had read in the newspaper. He knew nothing regarding anything being removed from the FOSTER office.

On July 21, 1993, KENNEDY believes he arrived at work at about 9:00 a.m. KENNEDY was told by NUSSBAUM that there was going to be a briefing by the U.S. Park Police regarding what they had found. Because of KENNEDY's great disbelief and astonishment, he insisted that he be at this briefing and was allowed to attend. KENNEDY recalls those in attendance as being NUSSBAUM, WEBB HUBBELL, two U.S. Park Police officers and other White House personnel whom he could not recall. He said the meeting was held in DAVID WATKINS' office. He thought perhaps WATKINS and maybe ROY NEAL also attended. He said PATSY THOMASSON and BILL BURTON were not there. The U.S. Park Police presented a chronology of the FOSTER death:

FOSTER's body was found at Fort Marcy Park; an anonymous telephone call reported finding the body; the police found the body and FOSTER's car; FOSTER was not wearing a coat; his wallet and White House pass were found; a gun and powder burns existed and all indications were that the death was a suicide. There was no discussion which KENNEDY could recall concerning a suicide note at this time.

NUSSBAUM told KENNEDY he should not be part of the investigation as NUSSBAUM believed that KENNEDY was too close to FOSTER. After the morning briefing on July 21, 1993 by U.S. Park Police, KENNEDY had nothing to do with the FOSTER death investigation per agreement with NUSSBAUM.

KENNEDY could only recall discussing what had occurred at staff meetings in a general manner, with no specific details. He had no discussion with NUSSBAUM regarding what NUSSBAUM found in FOSTER's office. NUSSBAUM told KENNEDY after the FOSTER note was found about the note. NUSSBAUM described the circumstances under which the note was found and showed KENNEDY a copy in NUSSBAUM's handwriting. KENNEDY said that NUSSBAUM was doing this as a courtesy to him after showing the note to MRS. FOSTER and the President and before its location had been made known to the public. KENNEDY remembers discussing the note with NUSSBAUM and NUSSBAUM saying "isn't it sad." They talked about the FBI reference and realized it would lead to a later investigation. NUSSBAUM turned the note over to the U.S. Park Police.

KENNEDY said there was no discussion at the FOSTER residence on the evening of July 20, 1993 regarding a suicide note or the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office. KENNEDY had heard some discussion before the July 21, 1993 meeting regarding sealing FOSTER's office. He had heard no discussion regarding a tasking of anyone for the removal of FOSTER's office contents. He remembered a discussion at one or two staff meetings regarding what had been done with FOSTER's office.

KENNEDY was asked for his opinion regarding how the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office had been conducted. KENNEDY said he thought at the time what NUSSBAUM had done was proper. It was a unique circumstance with no guidebook available. Because of national security and executive privilege issues, NUSSBAUM had to do what he did.

KENNEDY was asked if he knew whether or not FOSTER was aware of the search warrant issued in Arkansas regarding DAVID HALE. KENNEDY said he did not know if FOSTER knew but that it was his opinion that FOSTER did not know. KENNEDY was not aware of the search warrant at the time.

KENNEDY was asked if he was aware of any discussion regarding the torn up FOSTER note. KENNEDY said he was not in FOSTER's office at the time of the search. It was his understanding NUSSBAUM had missed the pieces of the note during the search. STEPHEN NEUWIRTH hasn't discussed the note or finding it with KENNEDY.

KENNEDY was asked to suggest other individuals who should be talked to concerning the FOSTER investigation. KENNEDY named the following individuals: LISA FOSTER; at least the two older FOSTER children who are now adults; BERNARD NUSSBAUM, who spent more time with FOSTER than KENNEDY did; WEBB HUBBELL; MACK MCLARTY; BRUCE LINDSEY; and when questioned, added the name HILLARY CLINTON. When asked why he did not originally list MRS. CLINTON, KENNEDY said he had omitted her name because of the demands on her time at the time of FOSTER's death. She did not have a great deal of contact with FOSTER at that time.

KENNEDY said he knew of a phone call between FOSTER and BRANT BUCK. BUCK was the primary draftsman for a blind trust for the President and First Lady. FOSTER had acted as the go between by being the carrier of information to BUCK. BETH NOLAN was also assisting with this matter. BUCK has told KENNEDY that he called FOSTER because he wanted FOSTER to "bug" the President to sign transmittal documents for the trust.

KENNEDY said he did not know the purpose or content of JIM LYONS' call to FOSTER.

KENNEDY was asked about FOSTER's view of KENNEDY's involvement in the Travel Office matter. KENNEDY said that FOSTER was very upset that KENNEDY got reprimanded. FOSTER had been heavily involved and felt strongly regarding the FBI leaks in this case. FOSTER came to the conclusion that he couldn't trust anyone in Washington, D.C. He was worried about KENNEDY's emotional health.

KENNEDY was asked to characterize three individuals at the White House. In response, KENNEDY said that STEPHEN NEUWIRTH worked with VINCENT FOSTER on health care task force litigation. NEUWIRTH came to the White House with NUSSBAUM. He believes FOSTER met NEUWIRTH during the transition but did not know him before that time. VINCE FOSTER knew PATSY THOMASSON from Arkansas. They were friends but not close. They worked together in the White House. MARSHA SCOTT was a former Arkansian in that she had moved from Arkansas to California prior to coming to Washington. KENNEDY believes FOSTER knew her before the campaign. Her father was the famous football player, CLYDE SCOTT. KENNEDY said SCOTT and FOSTER were good friends; part of the Tuesday night dinner group.

When asked if he could add anything else, KENNEDY said that it was his belief that VINCENT FOSTER killed himself. He said that even in Arkansas, FOSTER was "close to the vest" and FOSTER was "fighting his demons back then." Arkansas allowed FOSTER time to deal with things on a measured basis. At the White House, this concept was "out the window." FOSTER was forced to "fire from the hip" on things he "didn't have a clue about."

At the prompting of his attorney, TOM LANKFORD, KENNEDY also added the following concerning files in FOSTER's office. About the time JOEL KLEIN came to the White House as Deputy Counsel, probably in November 1993, TOM CASTLETON brought boxes full of documents from FOSTER's office into KENNEDY's office. KLEIN was moving in and had directed CASTLETON to bring the fifteen boxes to KENNEDY. These boxes sat in KENNEDY's office until approximately two weeks ago with inventories on each of the boxes. In addition, a red file with an inventory was also there, as well as a tax return for the FOSTER family trust. KENNEDY remembers trying to reach NUSSBAUM that day in November 1993. KENNEDY talked to NUSSBAUM and he (NUSSBAUM) said he told CASTLETON to bring the boxes over. KENNEDY also reported that backup disks and tapes from DEBORAH GORHAM, FOSTER's secretary, had been put into the red file folder. KENNEDY said that he personally has never reviewed the files in these boxes. Approximately three weeks ago, an individual by the name of MARVIN CRISLOFF (phonetic) inquired about the boxes. Two weeks ago, CHRIS CERF, an attorney, came and looked at the boxes and arranged for them to be picked up. It is KENNEDY's understanding that they are now locked up somewhere, but he does not know where they have been taken. KENNEDY asked CRISLOFF and CERF if a memorandum should be created by TOM CASTLETON concerning the movement of these boxes, and it was. KENNEDY does not know what the memo says. KENNEDY said that during the period he had the boxes in his office, his office door would be locked at night. KENNEDY said that the inventory for the boxes which had been in his office had been prepared, as far as he knew, at the time the documents were put in the boxes. Ongoing paperwork in FOSTER's office at the time of his death had been parceled out. As an example, STEVE NEUWIRTH got the tort reform health care issues. KENNEDY himself didn't get any of the paperwork from FOSTER's office.

FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

KENNEDY did not know for a fact of any safes used by VINCENT FOSTER. KENNEDY was sure there was no safe in FOSTER's office.

As a final note, KENNEDY said that it had been difficult for him to stand on the sidelines during the FOSTER death investigation. As an effort to help the FOSTER family, he retrieved FOSTER's car from the U.S. Park Police approximately one and one-half to two months after FOSTER's death. LIVINGSTONE got the car and it was parked on West Executive Avenue by the White House for about two weeks. Thereafter, it was moved for a two-month period of time to the New Executive Office Building basement, while a dialogue continued with LISA FOSTER regarding the final disposition of the car. It was agreed that the car would be sold to MRS. FOSTER's brother. When the brother and his wife came to Washington to pick up the car, KENNEDY retrieved miscellaneous items from the vehicle. He described the car as being "trashed" with family junk such as M&Ms, plastic cups, class notes, CD player, shoes, Ray Ban sunglasses, books, etc.

KENNEDY said he threw most of these items away but still has some items in his possession.

WILLIAM H. "BILL" KENNEDY, Associate Counsel to the President, The White House, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 456-6229, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. KENNEDY was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. This was a follow-up interview to KENNEDY's original interview with the Office of Independent Counsel on May 9, 1994. CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR., assisted with the interview. Also present during the interview were V. THOMAS LANKFORD, JR. and PAUL V. CASTELLITTO, attorneys for KENNEDY from the law firm SHARP & LANKFORD, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, telephone (202) 745-1700. KENNEDY provided the following information:

KENNEDY was asked about FOSTER's comments in the note found after his death concerning the FBI lying in its report to the Attorney General. KENNEDY said the first time FOSTER spoke to him about the FBI report on the Travel Office was the day before the first news story ran in the Washington Post. FOSTER called KENNEDY when he learned that the Post had leaked information from the FBI. The information concerned KENNEDY threatening the FBI. FOSTER was asking KENNEDY if this really happened. FOSTER knew of inaccuracies from his own personal knowledge. KENNEDY said timeframes for his discussions with FOSTER were "elusive" at this point in time. They had agreed that the press was "way off base." KENNEDY said he was surprised to see the word "lie" in FOSTER's note. He said he and FOSTER had discussed the issue in terms of differences in interpretation versus a lie. KENNEDY doesn't think the FBI lied, but just remembered things differently. FOSTER was upset by what was coming out of the FBI. The inaccuracies, the factual and opinions expressed didn't agree with FOSTER's view of what had happened. KENNEDY was asked if FOSTER ever used the term "lied" in describing any matters. KENNEDY said he never recalled FOSTER calling someone a liar.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

There was at least one meeting in which FOSTER was with KENNEDY and the FBI concerning the Travel Office matter. KENNEDY explained that he had been visited by "two different sets" of FBI agents. Initially, KENNEDY had been looking for advice from the FBI on the Travel Office situation. It was a complex issue and weak allegations had surfaced which could not be ignored. KENNEDY was looking for FBI advice in the terms that it was a problem which the White House did not know how to deal with. KENNEDY had dealt with the FBI daily, five or six times per day, and therefore felt comfortable in calling to ask who at the FBI he should talk to concerning this matter. The first set of agents who responded referred the matter to others in the FBI. During this second meeting with FBI agents, FOSTER "popped in." KENNEDY was in the process of meeting with the agents in his office and "getting them up to speed" on the problem. The allegation concerning these meetings which surfaced later concerned the "huge orchestration going on" by the White House. The issue concerned a leak which appeared in the paper that the White House had arranged for KATHERINE CORNELIUS to be interviewed by the FBI. KENNEDY said in fact the FBI requested this interview versus the version reported. Both KENNEDY and FOSTER agreed that the reported version was not as they had remembered. KENNEDY said this was perhaps the only meeting which FOSTER attended in person with the FBI on the issue. FOSTER, however, had several other conversations on the telephone with the FBI concerning its predication, etc., for being in on the Travel Office investigation. FOSTER had also spent an entire Saturday meeting with the audit team from Peat Marwick concerning the issue. KENNEDY added that despite this disagreement on opinion concerning the facts regarding CORNELIUS that the FBI had acted in a professional manner and had done a "bang up job." However, KENNEDY to this day believes the FBI report on the Travel Office matter is self-serving and has some inaccuracies. He said he felt the FBI may feel the same concerning his position. FOSTER believed KENNEDY's version of things.

KENNEDY was asked if FOSTER may have been referring to anything else when he said the FBI lied. KENNEDY answered that in his mind, it was all related to the Travel Office. FOSTER believed KENNEDY's version versus the FBI version concerning threats to the FBI about bringing IRS into the matter, etc.

FOSTER felt that if KENNEDY had been reprimanded on the Travel Office issue, that he (FOSTER) should also be. FOSTER was worried about KENNEDY. He felt that KENNEDY had been treated unfairly and FOSTER was sorry that KENNEDY had been singled out. Nevertheless, KENNEDY was of the opinion that they should "drive on."

KENNEDY was asked if he ever heard FOSTER say that there were very few people in Washington, D.C. whom you could trust. KENNEDY answered "yes."

FOSTER had mentioned to KENNEDY that he was thinking about asking for a lower pressure job at the White House. FOSTER never said he couldn't do this; that would have been out of character for him.

KENNEDY said that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE was not at the White House on the evening of July 20, 1993, as far as he knew. LIVINGSTONE, after identifying FOSTER's body at the hospital, had gone with KENNEDY in KENNEDY's car to the FOSTER residence that evening and stayed for quite a long time. Thereafter, LIVINGSTONE and KENNEDY left the FOSTER residence to go home. LIVINGSTONE and KENNEDY talked about the press being at FOSTER's residence the night of July 20, 1993. KENNEDY had asked LIVINGSTONE to get a police car to the neighborhood to keep the press and gawkers from being "obtrusive." LIVINGSTONE made calls to do that. KENNEDY could not recall a specific conversation with LIVINGSTONE regarding LIVINGSTONE returning to the FOSTER residence in the early morning of July 21, 1993. It is reasonable to believe that LIVINGSTONE had done this as this is the type of thing he had done in handling a lot of White House events.

KENNEDY was shown a copy of a document captioned "Report from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE," dated July 21, 1993. KENNEDY said he thought this was what LIVINGSTONE had prepared a "couple of days" after FOSTER's death. LIVINGSTONE had given KENNEDY a copy, but KENNEDY does not have it now. KENNEDY explained that for all of 1993 and two months into 1994, he did not have a secretary. His job was paper intensive and he himself would come to the office on weekends to do his own filing. It was all he could do to keep the paperwork moving. KENNEDY described it as a nightmare. He said the LIVINGSTONE document was either "tossed" or "misfiled." KENNEDY does not know why LIVINGSTONE prepared the document. He thinks LIVINGSTONE had said he did it to help regarding press inquiries on the FOSTER death. KENNEDY did not remember receiving it from LIVINGSTONE the day following FOSTER's death. KENNEDY's attention was directed to the third paragraph on page 2 of this memorandum stating that on Wednesday, July 21, 1993, LIVINGSTONE drove by the house (FOSTER's residence) at 6:30 a.m. and stayed until 8:00 a.m. KENNEDY said that he had no independent knowledge of this fact. KENNEDY said the only conclusion he could draw would be that LIVINGSTONE was concerned about the press being intrusive at the FOSTER residence.

On 4/12/94, David E. Kendall, Attorney at the law firm of Williams and Connolly, 725 Twelfth Street NW, Washington, D.C., in his capacity of personal attorney for Bill and Hillary Clinton, telephoned writer and offered to make available certain materials made public by the Clintons through a press briefing given by Kendall on 4/12/94. His offer was unsolicited by the Office of the Independent Counsel.

The materials were uncovered by Kendall as a result of Mrs. Hillary Clinton's instructions to review certain records from 1979 and revealed the underpayment of taxes, which the Clintons voluntarily paid, with appropriate penalties.

Writer picked up copies of documents on 4/14/94 which were purported to be by Kendall's cover letter dated 4/13/94:

1) Statement from Kendall to the press concerning the documents.

2) A collection of historical data concerning payment of back taxes by other Presidents.

3) Certain REFCO trading records.

4) Certain CLAYTON trading records.

5) Certain PEAVEY trading records.

6) Certain ACLI trading records.

The materials were offered to writer in anticipation that, like other tax related materials made public by the Clintons through Kendall and previously requested by the Office of the Independent Counsel, Mr. Fiske would also be desiring copies of this most recent release.

DAVID KENDALL of the law firm Williams & Connolly, 725 12th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. (WDC), telephone number (202) 434-5145 was interviewed along with ROBERT BARNETT also of the law firm of Williams & Connolly. KENDALL and BARNETT were interviewed in the presence of Julie L. Ferguson, of the law firm of Williams & Connolly. Participating in the interview was Carl Stich, Attorney, Office of the Independent Counsel, WDC. After being appraised of the purpose of the interview and the identities of all participants, KENDALL and BARNETT thereafter provided the following information:

BARNETT was initially summoned to the White House by the First Lady's Chief of Staff, MARGARET (Maggie) WILLIAMS. BARNETT was informed that a file box was to be picked up from the White House. BARNETT travelled to the White House to pick up the box which was sealed upon his acquisition. BARNETT opened the box, inspected its contents and resealed it in the residential area of the White House. BARNETT contacted PETER BARLOW the Comptroller of the law firm of Williams & Connolly to pick up the box.

The aforementioned box, was picked up from the White House on a date recalled to be July 27, 1993. The date of July 27 is based upon a review of tab receipts reviewed in the course of preparing for the initial document production during January, 1994.

After the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., former Deputy Counsel, The White House, BARNETT was to become lead counsel in handling the personal affairs of the President. BRANTLEY BUCK was known to be handling the overall legal affairs for President Clinton. FOSTER was described by BARNETT to be a "point man" inside the White House regarding the personal affairs of the President and the First Family. BARNETT did not discuss with MAGGIE WILLIAMS where the files came from that were in the box picked up on July 27. BARNETT was of the personal impression that the files came from FOSTER's office based on his earlier review.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

BARNETT believes that matters within the files were best handled outside the White House. BARNETT wanted to know immediately what was within the files in order to get a handle on the information. Subsequently, the documents were indexed, sealed and preserved by Williams & Connolly.

Back at Williams & Connolly, BARNETT reviewed copies of the documents that were picked up from the White House. BARNETT does not recall any formal requests regarding work to be done based on the contents of the files maintained in the box. BARNETT's goal was to make sure that "no balls were dropped" and there was a sense of continuity with regard to the President's personal legal affairs. PETER BARLOW arrived at the firm of Williams & Connolly and delivered the box to BARNETT's office.

While at the White House, BARNETT received a green file folder from a secretary who informed him it was personal information related to the President. The file contained amendment pages related to financial disclosures for the President done by BRANTLEY BUCK. The papers were routed to the President and the First Lady for signature; the file was in transit at the time of FOSTER's death.

DENISE ZEDLAR of Williams & Connolly was responsible for indexing the papers removed from FOSTER's office. ZEDLAR did the indexing within her private office at the firm of Williams & Connolly.

Once indexed, the documents were eventually placed in a separate, locked drawer at the law firm. Nothing was taken out of the files or placed in the files once they had been indexed. The documents were Bates stamped during the process of production pursuant to the December, 1993 subpoena.

A Washington Post story dated October 21, 1993 regarding RTC criminal referrals was the catalyst of discussions at the firm of Williams & Connolly regarding DAVID KENDALL replacing BARNETT as the President's personal attorney. KENDALL took control of the Clinton affairs circa November/December, 1993 when he began to be briefed on the case. KENDALL did not recall much being in the files at that time. He did recall seeing one Whitewater file in the documents possessed by Williams & Connolly.

JOEL IRWIN KLEIN, Deputy Counsel to the President, The White House, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC). Participating in the interview was MARK STEIN, Attorney for the OIC. After being apprised of the identities of all parties participating, and the purpose of the interview, KLEIN thereafter provided the following information:

KLEIN began working at The White House on December 1, 1993. KLEIN first worked on the CLINTON Presidential Election Campaign performing unspecified legal taskings. KLEIN had met CLINTON several times at Renaissance weekends down at Hilton Head Island, South Carolina. During the CLINTON Presidential Campaign, KLEIN headed one of several vetting teams. KLEIN also played a role in researching nominees to fill a Supreme Court vacancy. Prior to his arrival at The White House, KLEIN was a partner in the appellate law practice of KLEIN, FARR, SMITH and FARLINGTON.

KLEIN recalled that former Deputy Counsel to the President, VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., killed himself during the nomination process surrounding current Supreme Court Justice, RUTH BADER GINSBURG.

In November, 1993, KLEIN was selected to serve as the Deputy Counsel to the President. He noted that his precise role as Deputy Counsel has not been clearly defined. KLEIN recalls having several discussions with White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM regarding executive power issues prior to his (KLEIN's) selection as Deputy Counsel. KLEIN had seen FOSTER during briefings on Supreme Court nominees to fill the seat vacated by Justice BYRON WHITE. KLEIN was not at The White House on July 20, 1993, the date of FOSTER's death. He played no role in going through documents in FOSTER's office subsequent to his death. KLEIN recalls meeting FOSTER approximately three to four times before his death.

KLEIN has had several conversations with members of The

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

White House Counsel's office regarding the death of FOSTER. KLEIN recalls speaking to BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Counsel; CLARISSA CERDA and CHERYL MILLS, both of the Counsel's office.

KLEIN was not aware of meetings between White House and Treasury officials on September 29, 1993, or October 14, 1993 until February 25, 1994, when he first became aware of the September and October meetings between White House and Treasury Department officials.

KLEIN's first awareness of the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) investigation into Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan was in late January or early February, 1994. His awareness is based on discussions in the Counsel's office regarding the statute of limitations related to civil suits filed against Madison Guaranty.

Circa mid-December, 1993, KLEIN was placed on a response team related to an article in American Spectator magazine. KLEIN subsequently began an assignment working on a response team regarding the Whitewater inquiry. KLEIN later worked on documents from FOSTER's office that had been placed in the custody of DAVID KENDALL. KENDALL is the personal attorney for the President, and works for the Law Firm of Williams and Connolly, WDC. With regard to the decision that was finally made to turn documents over to federal investigators circa December, 1993, KLEIN participated in discussions with NUSSBAUM and NEIL EGGLESTON. EGGLESTON also works in the Counsel's office. KLEIN's advice was that the documents be turned over to the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ). He was involved in a discussion process with both the President and the First Lady. KLEIN told the CLINTONs that the FOSTER documents should be turned over to DOJ. This would reduce the clamor for an independent counsel. Others in The White House thought failure to disclose might cause The White House to be "nickled and dimed to death." KLEIN subsequently received the FOSTER file.

In January, 1994, discussions began to take place regarding whether or not a special counsel should be appointed. At this time KLEIN began to look at relationships between the special counsel and legislation regarding an independent counsel that was pending on Capitol Hill. A response team was formed made up of HAROLD ICKES, BRUCE LINDSEY, NUSSBAUM, and EGGLESTON to respond to Whitewater related issues. After the special counsel was called for, KLEIN returned to the task of looking at judicial and executive power issues.

NUSSBAUM had spoken to KLEIN regarding the recusal issue centering around ROGER ALTMAN. ALTMAN is Deputy Treasury Secretary and was serving, for a time, as the Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of the RTC. ALTMAN had expressed his concern that he recuse himself regarding any matters related to Madison Guaranty while acting in the capacity as CEO of the RTC. KLEIN was aware that ALTMAN came over to The White House and had discussions regarding his recusal. KLEIN was aware that ALTMAN was still thinking about recusal. NUSSBAUM was upset with ELLEN KULKA, Counsel, RTC. KLEIN believed it was clear that NUSSBAUM was against KULKA "running the show." NUSSBAUM described KULKA to be aggressive and lacking judgement. KLEIN believed NUSSBAUM was of the opinion that KULKA would be "unfair." KLEIN recalls discussions of ALTMAN's recusal had been held during the daily 9:00 am meeting of the Counsel's office staff.

BETH NOLAN had raised at a morning staff meeting, that she had received a call from DENNIS FOREMAN, the Ethics Officer at the Treasury Department. NOLAN was going to discuss legal issues regarding recusal. No further discussion ensued. NOLAN's conversation with the Counsel's office staff was held subsequent to the February 2, 1994 meeting between Treasury Department officials and White House staff.

Regarding the February 2, 1994 meeting where recusal was discussed, KLEIN felt that The White House should not be involved in the recusal discussions in that, the recusal of ALTMAN for issues related to Madison Guaranty was not a White House issue.

KLEIN expressed the opinion that The White House could not be viewed as having had a role in the selection process of the Special Prosecutor.

KLEIN took no steps to find out what happened at the February 2nd meeting between Treasury Department officials and White House staff. It was clear to KLEIN that the February 2nd meeting was confidential and should not be discussed. He believes that DAVID GERGEN may have been informed of the meeting.

Between February 2, 1994 and February 24, 1994, KLEIN had no conversations with Treasury Department officials regarding Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan or Whitewater Development Corporation. KLEIN was not aware of the contact between The White House and Treasury. He was not involved in the preparation of ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee.

On the day of ALTMAN's testimony, KLEIN was aware that NUSSBAUM was unavailable in Mexico. KLEIN became concerned regarding the recusal issue during ALTMAN's testimony on February 24, 1994, before the Banking Committee.

On March 25, 1994, CLIFF SLOAN visited KLEIN. SLOAN was concerned that he had knowledge of additional contacts between Treasury officials and The White House. This information was released to the media on March 25th, regarding ALTMAN's recusal concerning issues related to Madison Guaranty.

On February 25, 1994, KLEIN thinks he may have had conversations with people in The White House related to the Treasury Department White House meetings. KLEIN was not aware of how JAY STEPHENS was hired by the RTC.

At this point KLEIN began to become more concerned regarding the Treasury Department/White House staff meetings. KLEIN entered discussions with GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, asking STEPHANOPOULOS the status of his comments regarding JAY STEPHENS. STEPHANOPOULOS did not ask anyone if STEPHENS could be released.

On February 25, 1994, KLEIN held a discussion with BRUCE LINDSEY. KLEIN advised that NUSSBAUM had told him that ALTMAN was going to recuse himself regarding issues related to Madison Guaranty. KLEIN became concerned regarding the recusal issue and how it would play out. He could not understand why JEAN HANSON, General Counsel, The Treasury Department, didn't correct ALTMAN at the Oversight Hearing.

Tuesday and Wednesday KLEIN was in meetings in JOHN PODESTA's office regarding the recusal issue. Others in the office were TODD STERN and PODESTA. PODESTA led the meetings.

KLEIN was involved in producing a firewall memo regarding press inquiries related to the October 14th Treasury Department/White House staff meeting. KLEIN was involved in trying to get information regarding the October 14th meeting. ALTMAN was going to go back and testify before the Senate Banking Committee regarding the recusal issue. KLEIN spoke to Communications Director MARK GEARAN regarding the October 14th meeting. KLEIN was of the belief that the October 14th meeting covered how to handle press inquiries. KLEIN was not aware that on February 2, 1994, ALTMAN had informed White House officials that he was going to recuse himself from matters related to Madison Guaranty in his capacity as Acting Head of the RTC.

In way of background, KLEIN advised that Renaissance weekend was started by PHIL LADER. The purpose of the weekend was to go down to Hilton Head Island, South Carolina, for discussions at the end of the year on a variety of topics. From 1979 to 1992 the event grew in stature. The CLINTONs began to attend Renaissance weekends back in 1985. The weekend is made up of panels on politics, the future of the two-party system, etc.

KLEIN viewed documents from the Thursday before the subpoena date in March of 1994. KLEIN was aware that the Office of Government Ethics was to evaluate the propriety of Treasury/White House meetings.

With regard to ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, questions arose regarding the appropriateness of BERNIE NUSSBAUM working on Whitewater issues. A determination was in order as to what should The White House Counsel's office handle and what should CLINTON's personal attorney KENDALL handle. The question regarding the appropriateness of NUSSBAUM being connected to Whitewater matters may have been a reporter's question. According to KLEIN, BETH NOLAN was putting a paper together regarding those issues.

On March 5, 1994, PAUL TOBACK, wanted to know who ALTMAN had an appointment with on February 2, 1994. HANSON had a 1:20 appointment with MAGGIE WILLIAMS and a 5:00 pm meeting with Mac, believed to be MACK MCLARTY.

FOSTER, Jr., Dr. KLEINMAN provided a briefing to the OIC staff members about the nature and symptoms of clinical depression. He also stressed the importance of identifying such factors as a family history of depression or suicide in order to assess the likelihood of a patient suffering depression or committing suicide.

A copy of Dr. KLEINMAN's curriculum vitae is attached and incorporated into this report of interview.

Mr. Patrick J. Knowlton, 2424 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (Apt 810, telephone number 296-3989/703-923-4596) was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. Mr. Knowlton was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the inquiry. He then provided the following information.

Mr. Knowlton advised that on July 20, 1993, he terminated work on a construction site in Chevy Chase, Maryland and travelled North on the George Washington Memorial Parkway enroute to his residence in Sperryville, Virginia. He stated that at approximately 4:15 pm while approaching Fort Marcy Park he had to urinate and entered Fort Marcy Park in order to relieve himself. He indicated that he was somewhat familiar with Fort Marcy Park since in, 1991, he had toured this particular park in the company of his girlfriend. He stated that upon entering the parking area, he immediately noticed an unoccupied vehicle parked front end in facing the park in one of the first parking slots on the left-hand side. He identified this particular vehicle as a 1988-1990 brown or rusty brown in color Honda with Arkansas plates. He stated that he could not remember whether this vehicle was a two door or four door sedan and outside of the letter H predominantly displayed on the trunk of the vehicle could furnish no other identifying information regarding this vehicle. Mr. Knowlton, however, was positive that this vehicle had Arkansas plates since the Arkansas designation is easily identifiable.

Mr. Knowlton further indicated that a second vehicle, located approximately three spaces past the above mentioned Honda, was observed backed into a parking space in the immediate area of a path leading to the northern section of the park. This vehicle was described by Mr. Knowlton as a Japanese make vehicle, metallic blue in color, with Virginia license plates and in his opinion was considerable newer than the previously described Honda. Knowlton described the occupant of this vehicle as a male in his late twenties, probably Mexican or Cuban, with dark complexion, dark brown or black curly hair worn short, 5'10" to 5'11" in height. Knowlton stated that he specifically remembers this individual since when he, Knowlton, departed his vehicle, this male exited his vehicle and was closely watching him as he proceeded into the park to urinate. He further mentioned that this male was staring at him making him, Mr. Knowlton, feel extremely nervous and uneasy. He could not further identify this particular individual nor his attire and stated that he would be unable to recognize him in the future.

Mr. Knowlton continued by stating that he proceeded into the park for approximately 200 feet where he relieved himself to the right of a trail. He then returned to his vehicle, which was a rental vehicle from Thrifty Rental, and once again observed the occupant of the second vehicle now inside the vehicle with the driver's window slightly down continuing to stare at him. Mr. Knowlton stated, however, that upon returning to the parking lot, he walked behind the brown Honda and peered inside the vehicle where he observed a dark-blue jacket draped over the driver's seat. He further stated that he observed in this Honda a leather briefcase or leather folder on the passenger side seat. He specifically recalls that this particular briefcase or folder was darker than the interior of the vehicle which, according to his recollection, was beige or light in color. Knowlton further added that he specifically remembers being surprised that anyone would leave a briefcase or folder on the front seat of an unattended vehicle. He could furnish no other descriptive data regarding this vehicle or for that matter the contents located within the vehicle.

Knowlton advised that, in his opinion, he was in the Fort Marcy Park no more than five minutes and remembers exiting Fort Marcy Park at approximately 4:30 pm and proceeding North on the George Washington Memorial Parkway. He stated he specifically remembers the time being 4:30 pm since the rental vehicle he was driving had a relatively large clock on the dash board. He advised that upon exiting Fort Marcy Park he did view in the right hand lane of the North bound George Washington Parkway a Ford passenger van which was slowing down and possibly could have made a right hand turn into Fort Marcy Park. Mr. Knowlton was unable to furnish any description of the occupant of this van nor any other identifying data regarding this vehicle.

Mr. Knowlton was shown a series of photographs depicting Mr. Vincent Foster's four door Honda, Arkansas license plates RCN-504. After closely scrutinizing the photographs he stated that while he was positive this vehicle had Arkansas license plates, as depicted in the photographs, it was his opinion that this vehicle was either brown or rust brown in color and appeared to be an older vehicle than the photographs he was exhibited. In fact, Mr. Knowlton stated that after viewing television reports the evening of July 20, 1993 in which Mr. Foster was identified as a White House lawyer, he remembered thinking to himself that due to the age of this vehicle it was not, in his opinion, a vehicle typically driven by a lawyer. Based on these observations, he called the U.S. Park Police around midnight on July 20, 1993 and within the next day or two telephonically provided his observations to a U.S. Park Police Officer.

Mr. Knowlton reiterated his description of this Honda as a 1988-1990 Honda sedan with Arkansas plates but could furnish no information relative to whether it was a two or four door vehicle nor furnish any additional information relative to any distinguishing marks, dents, or external stickers on the vehicle. Additionally, he advised that with the exception of the two vehicles previously identified and the occupant of the metallic blue vehicle, he did not observe any other vehicles or individuals in Fort Marcy Park and denied hearing any unusual noises or sounds.

Mr. Patrick J. Knowlton, 2424 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (Apt 810, telephone number 296-3989/703-923-4596) was reinterviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. Mr. Knowlton was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and specifically informed of the nature of the inquiry. He then provided the following information:

Mr. Knowlton was informed that in light of additional information being obtained by interviewing agent relative to the description of Mr. Vincent Foster's 1989 Honda Accord, that it was necessary to reinterview him relative to his observations at Fort Marcy Park, Virginia on July 20, 1993. Mr. Knowlton maintained that, to the best of his recollection, the observations previously furnished to interviewing agents on April 15, 1994 were still consistent with his observations of the two vehicles he observed at approximately 4:15 pm on July 20, 1993 at Fort Marcy Park.

In an attempt to further clarify Mr. Knowlton's observations on that day, he was informed that the official note taker for the U.S. Park Police in describing Mr. Foster's four door Honda, Arkansas license plates RCN-504, notes that the vehicle examined at the Fort Marcy parking lot on July 20, 1993, was "gray/brown" in color. Mr. Knowlton was also advised that the second USPP officer to arrive at the death scene also described Mr. Vincent Foster's vehicle as, "a gray/brown Nissan four door with Arkansas registration RCN-504 parked in the 4th space from the front of the parking lot." Additionally Mr. Knowlton was informed that a witness who was in the Fort Marcy parking lot at approximately 5:45 pm on July 20, 1993, described what eventually turned out to be Mr. Foster's Honda vehicle as a "Japanese model, brown in color." In addition to furnishing this background information to Mr. Knowlton, he was also exhibited a 35mm photograph (partially underexposed) which was taken by Officer Peter Simonello, USPP at the Fort Marcy parking lot on July 20, 1993. The photograph of Mr. Foster's Honda when viewed next to a light colored USPP vehicle appears extremely dark in

After being informed of the above cited information to include viewing the 35mm photograph, Mr. Knowlton still believes that the vehicle he observed during the period of time he was in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993 was brown in color and still believes looked "older" than Mr. Foster's 1989 four door Honda Accord. In a further effort to clarify this situation, Mr. Knowlton in the company of the interviewing agents physically viewed a series of automobile color panels at the FBI laboratory, Hoover Building, Washington, D.C. During this review of automobile panels, he identified panels numbered 3499 and 3500 as closely approximating the color of the vehicle he observed at Fort Marcy Park. During this review of color panels as well as a brochure of Honda vehicles stated that he definitely believes that the vehicle he observed was a four door Honda Accord. The vehicle in his opinion, appeared to be shorter in length or more compact than the photographs of Mr. Foster's 1989 Honda and further believed that the color of the vehicle had a flat finish and was not glossy or clear coated as represented in the photographs of Mr. Foster's 1989 Honda. However, Knowlton did indicate that while he still believes the vehicle had an Arkansas license plate, he doesn't recall that the plate he observed had as many letters preceeding the numbers as depicted on the Arkansas plate on Mr. Foster's 1989 Honda.

Mr. Knowlton reiterated his previous observations, that this vehicle was unoccupied and was parked front end in facing the park in one of the first parking slots on the left hand side of the Fort Marcy parking lot. He reemphasized the fact that, in his opinion, this vehicle had an Arkansas plate and that he observed a dark blue jacket draped over the driver's seat of this vehicle. Mr. Knowlton stated that all other information furnished by him to interviewing agents on 4/15/94 were consistent with his recollection of what he personally observed during the period of time he was at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993.

On June 6, 1994, MARVIN KRISLOV Assistant Counsel and NEIL EGGLESTON Associate Counsel to the President, both individuals from The White House, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel and was interviewed by MARK STEIN of the Office of the Independent Counsel and SA H. ALEXIS SUGGS with regard to a production that The White House had made in response to a subpoena. The production that we asked them about was broken into 4 parts.

Part 1 KRISLOV and EGGLESTON identified (a 3-page item which lists cabinets and their contents and is titled on the first page, "Office of VINCE W. FOSTER, JR." with a 6 at the top of the page) as a document which was located in the files moved by TOM CASTLETON from the West Wing to the Old Executive Office Building. CASTLETON advised them that it came from DEBORAH GORHAM's desk and that the handwriting is CASTLETON's. Neither individual had any idea what pages 1-5 would have been.

Part 2 (an 8-page assortment of typed lists, the first page of which is entitled, "DEBORAH GORHAM's desk" contents:) KRISLOV and EGGLESTON recognized as lists compiled by TOM CASTLETON and confirmed that the description of them in JOEL KLEIN's cover letter was in error. KRISLOV said that they will be different from GORHAM's list of files. They were compiled at the time that the boxes were brought to the Old Executive Office Building sometime mid-November when JOEL KLEIN was moving into FOSTER's office. Each list corresponds to a box which held documents. They therefore do not hold any documents that were given to the CLINTON's private attorney.

Part 3 is a hand-written listing of VINCE FOSTER's working files. KRISLOV and EGGLESTON both confirmed that it was handwritten by STEPHEN NEUWIRTH. They believe it was done shortly after VINCE FOSTER's death.

Part 4 of the production is an 11-page handout with what appears to be computer printout listings of directories. KRISLOV and EGGLESTON explained that these were the indexes of everything that had been in DEBORAH GORHAM's hard drive as of the time it was downloaded onto floppy disks. The floppy's are maintained in MARVIN KRISLOV's office. KRISLOV advised that nothing has been erased from the directories and that the check marks on the list correspond to documents which were printed into hard copies so that people could continue working with them.

At the conclusion of the interview, MARK STEIN advised KRISLOV and EGGLESTON that the Office of the Independent Counsel wanted hard copies of select documents from part 4, disks 4 and 5. He stated that in early August, 1993, after there had been considerable news coverage in the media concerning the unknown driver of the white van, he contacted a woman friend of his whom he described as an attorney who works at the Department of Justice. Chief Robert E. Langston, United States Park Police (USPP) in the company of Major Robert Hines, USPP, were interviewed at the USPP headquarters, Washington, D.C. and advised as to the identity of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the inquiry. Chief Langston and Major Hines then provided the following information:

In light of the fact that Mr. Vincent Foster's body was discovered on federal property, specifically Fort Marcy National Park, Fairfax County, Virginia, both Chief Langston and Major Hines were informed that the focus of this interview was to determine the jurisdictional authority of USPP in criminal matters and specifically policy, procedures or current Memorandums Of Understanding (MOU) outlining the jurisdictional authority and investigative coordination with the FBI regarding violations of federal law. Additionally both Chief Langston and Major Hines were asked to relate their comments and observations of the meeting they attended at The White House the morning of July 21, 1993.

In regards to the jurisdiction issue, Chief Langston advised that based on long established procedures the USPP have historically had primary investigative jurisdiction for crimes committed on federal parks under the control of the U.S. Park Service. Notwithstanding this jurisdictional authority, exceptions to this authority have developed over the years to include, for example, a "long standing practice" that the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) is the lead agency for all death investigations which occur on U.S. Park property located within the confines of the District of Columbia. Local police jurisdiction, however, does not extend to U.S. Park property located in Virginia or Maryland in which jurisdictions, USPP retains primary investigative authority.

In regards to FBI-USPP jurisdictional authority and coordination and specifically the circumstances of the Vincent Foster death matter, Langston advised that there exists a clear understanding between the FBI and the USPP that unless the provisions of the Assassination Statute are operative, which statute designates the FBI as lead investigative agency, the USPP functions as the lead investigative agency for all other crimes committed on National Park property. Since, according to Chief Langston, all preliminary investigation reflected suicide as the cause of Mr. Foster's death, the provisions of the Assassination Statute were not applicable and, the USPP maintained primary investigative authority. Langston further stated, however, that in the Vincent Foster case as in other cases, he did inform FBI authorities of this matter and advised FBI authorities that he could be seeking FBI investigative assistance.

In regards to contact with White House officials regarding the death of Vincent Foster, Major Hines advised that he was telephonically informed by Lieutenant Pat Gavin, Shift Commander USPP the evening of 7/20/93 of the preliminary facts and circumstances of the death of Vincent Foster with the suggestion that Major Hines contact Mr. Bill Burton, White House staff, relative to this matter. Mr. Hines subsequently telephonically contacted Mr. Burton and during their discussion advised that USPP officials would be available to brief White House officials regarding their preliminary investigative findings. Mr. Burton accepted this invitation resulting in Major Hines in the company of Chief Langston briefing selected White House officials the morning of July 21, 1993.

According to both of their recollections, this briefing took place in Mr. David Watkins' office in The White House and in addition to Mr. Watkins included, Mr.'s Webster Hubbell, Bernie Nussbaum, William Kennedy, Craig Livingston, George Stephanopoulos, Bill Burton and James Hamilton. Major Hines informed this group of officials that USPP preliminary investigation indicated that Mr. Foster committed suicide at Fort Marcy Park but emphasized to these officials that according to standard USPP procedures, all death investigations are handled as potential homicides, advising these officials that a search of Vincent Foster's office would be critical to their investigation. To the best of Major Hines recollection, Mr. Nussbaum stated words to the effect that "all you'll find are lawyer things." Mr. Nussbaum also stated that this investigation should be coordinated through the Office of the Attorney General and was followed by a comment by Mr. Stephanopoulos that the investigation should be handled in a routine manner according to USPP procedures. To the best of their recollection, no other individual present at this briefing made any comment or posed any questions and it was their collective opinion that based on Nussbaum's directive, that the FBI would join the USPP in the search of Mr. Foster's office. Immediately after the conclusion of this meeting, Mr. Nussbaum informed Chief Langston and Major Hines that he would immediately "post" Mr. Foster's office and in turn was advised by either Chief Langston or Hines that they would contact the FBI to ensure that FBI representatives were present during the search of Mr. Foster's office. According to both Chief Langston and Major Hines, it was their definite impression that Nussbaum's comment about "posting" Mr. Foster's office implied that the office would be physically secured and entry denied to all White House personnel. Both left The White House believing that no one had previously entered Mr. Foster's office since the death notification and that the search of Mr. Foster's office would take place on 7/21/93.

After leaving The White House, Chief Langston advised that he telephonically informed FBI Special Agent in Charge (SAC) Robert Bryant, Washington Metropolitan Field Office (WMFO) of the facts and circumstances surrounding the death of Vincent Foster and the request that FBI representatives be at The White House for the search of Mr. Foster's office. He also informed Mr. Bryant that he might be requesting, in the future, additional FBI investigative assistance. He further related that late the evening of 7/21 he discovered to his surprise that the search of Vincent Foster's office was not conducted and was subsequently informed on 7/22 by Captain Charles Hume (USPP) of the manner in which Mr. Nussbaum coordinated the search of Mr. Foster's office on 7/22. According to both Chief Langston and Major Hines, these factors when coupled with the fact that White House officials were not being cooperative in the release of Mr. Foster's telephone logs served as the basis for Captain Charles Hume personally contacting Mr. Tom Collier, Chief of Staff to the Secretary of the Interior for his assistance in securing White House cooperation in their investigative pursuits.

Both Langston and Hines were specifically questioned as to any additional details they could recall from their 7/21/93 meeting at The White House. They both advised that the only thing they found to be unusual was the presence of Mr. Jim Hamilton since he was representing the Foster family and had no official position in the administration. It was also their collective opinion that with the exception of Mr. Nussbaum who took a strict business approach at the meeting the other individuals present exhibited genuine grief and sorrow over

Mr.Foster's death. Both Langston and Hines were adamant in their belief that under no circumstances did White House officials present at this meeting attempt to direct or influence their investigation or exclude the FBI from rendering investigative assistance.

ROBERT E. LANGSTON, Chief of Police, United States Park Police (USPP), and Major ROBERT HINES, USPP, were interviewed at USPP Headquarters, 1100 Ohio Drive, Washington, D.C. (WDC), regarding the USPP investigation into death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. FOSTER was the former Deputy Counsel to the President, who died on July 20, 1993. After being appraised of the purpose of the interview and the identities of the interviewing agents, LANGSTON and HINES thereafter provided the following information:

HINES was aware that a box had been taken out of FOSTER's office in the Counsel's office suite, the White House, that was given to JAMES HAMILTON. HAMILTON is an attorney of the law firm of Swidler & Berlin, 3000 K Street, N.W., WDC. Prior to the box being provided to HAMILTON, HINES recalls viewing the contents of that box about a week after they had been turned over to HAMILTON. HINES was aware of a bag of trash that was also taken out of FOSTER's office on the evening of July 20. HINES recalled this to have been a document burn bag. He did not know what the contents of that bag were. HINES did not know about any other boxes that were taken out of FOSTER's office. He did not know when the box was taken out of FOSTER's office.

LANGSTON was shown a copy of a newspaper article from the New York Times in which comments were attributed to him regarding the USPP investigation into FOSTER's death. On page 2 of the article the reference to a box that was moved from FOSTER's office could possibly have been about the burn bag that was removed from the office. LANGSTON advised that he responded to a reporter's question regarding articles being removed from FOSTER's office based on information that he had on hand at the time he answered the question. LANGSTON recalls information that the USPP had knowledge of materials being removed from FOSTER's office the night of July 20, 1993. LANGSTON did not recall the basis of that information. He had no recollection of where the information came from regarding the materials that were removed from FOSTER's office. Neither LANGSTON nor HINES had a recollection of a box being removed from FOSTER's office on the evening of July 20, 1993. HINES believed the material that

DAVID C. LEAVY, Press Assistant (for MARGARET "DEE DEE" MYERS) at The White House, telephone 202-456-2673 was interviewed at The Office of the Independent Counsel. Also present and representing the Office of the Independent Counsel was attorney MARK STEIN. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, LEAVY provided the following information:

LEAVY advised that his position as Press Assistant to Press Secretary DEE DEE MYERS is similar to an "information traffic top". Many of the telephone calls coming in to the press office are handled by LEAVY and he also deals with many problems related to press issues. LEAVY advised that he knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and sees him once or twice a month and has dealt with him on a significant level approximately six times since the CLINTONs took office.

LEAVY advised that on the evening of July 20, 1993, he recalled that they had made preparations for The Larry King Live Show and had spent the day preparing President CLINTON for his appearance on the show. LEAVY himself did not stay for the broadcast but went home and watched The Larry King Live Show there.

A co-worker named JEREMY GAINES telephoned him later that evening to let him know of the death of VINCE FOSTER, JR. The only information GAINES told him about on the telephone the night of July 20, 1993 was that DAVID DREYER was working on a press statement regarding FOSTER's death and that everybody was very upset.

LEAVY did not go into The White House at all that evening and he had no recollection of discussing the issue of press presence at the FOSTER residence either that evening or after with GAINES or any other individual except by telephone the following morning with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. LEAVY did not know whether or not there had been a pool of news people available to try to accompany the President out to the FOSTER residence that night. LEAVY explained that there is usually a pool of news people (they call themselves the "death watch") that hovers near the President so they do not miss anything. This has been a custom ever since the attempted assassination of President RONALD REAGAN at the Hilton Hotel in Washington, D.C. They generally disband if it is known that President CLINTON will not be going out again that evening. LEAVY believes that the pool would probably have been let go on the evening of July 20, 1993 as the President was not expected to go out again after the Larry King Show.

On the morning of July 21, 1993, LEAVY recalled that he made a point of getting to the office very early. He arrived at approximately 7:00 am and was the first to get there. As people arrived and the news spread about FOSTER's death, everybody was shocked and very saddened. At approximately 7:30 they held, as usual, the Communications Office staff meeting. He recalls there being some concern about "hounding" at the FOSTER residence but he doesn't recall anymore specifics. He does not recall hearing about anybody in the Press Office other than himself receiving telephone calls from anybody outside The White House regarding press at the FOSTER residence.

He recalls two separate telephone conversations with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE that morning. He believes that the first conversation came when CRAIG LIVINGSTONE called into the Press Office to LEAVY's private line approximately two hours after LEAVY had arrived to work (which would put the time at approximately 9:00). LIVINGSTONE said he was calling from the FOSTER residence and said there was alot of media interest at the house and it was becoming a problem. He asked what should be done. LEAVY does not recall what he answered, but guessed that he would have had to check with DEE DEE MYERS about what to do. LEAVY said he seemed to recall that LIVINGSTONE called a second time later that morning, at least an hour later and probably closer to two hours later, at which time LIVINGSTONE said that the press interest had died down and nothing was going on. LEAVY felt that it was very unlikely that the first call came in between 8:00 and 8:30 but he said he couldn't rule it out. He thought the second call came in at approximately 11:30. The only other person answering phones that morning who may have taken other calls was an individual named HEATHER BECKEL (currently working for GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS). LEAVY said there were no interns working in the Press Office at that time.

LEAVY said that he was positive about at least the first call from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and fairly positive there was a second call and that there was at least one hour, but probably closer to two hours, between the calls he received. It was LEAVY's understanding that LIVINGSTONE was calling from a cellular phone into LEAVY's direct line. He is not sure of that recollection, however, and said that LIVINGSTONE may have been using "Signal", which would mean that LIVINGSTONE himself just called the main White House line and "Signal" directed the call into his private line.

LEAVY had no recollection of seeing LIVINGSTONE at any time in the morning on July 21. He remembers thinking that it was strange that LIVINGSTONE was out at the FOSTER residence and he thought it was even odder that he had been involved in identifying FOSTER's body the night before. LEAVY said that LIVINGSTONE is not a person who was known to help with things at the Press Office. LEAVY advised that he first saw CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at the staff meeting for all White House personnel that was held with the President and MACK MCLARTY at approximately 12 noon possibly shortly thereafter in the Old Executive Office Building.

LEAVY advised that he has not spoken with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE about any of these issues. LEAVY realizes that LIVINGSTONE seems to be at the center of something that's going on. He figured it was because LIVINGSTONE was the point of contact for all law enforcement officials contacting The White House. LEAVY was under the impression that LIVINGSTONE got the initial call to The White House about FOSTER's death and that it was LIVINGSTONE that called WILLIAM KENNEDY for them to make a positive identification of FOSTER's body.

After being shown the chronology prepared by LIVINGSTONE, LEAVY said that he is positive he has never seen the document. He advised that LIVINGSTONE asked him for a copy of it a couple months ago and he did not have a copy in his file. LEAVY is sure that he has never seen it and had never received the document.

LEAVY said that although LIVINGSTONE is not from Arkansas, he associates LIVINGSTONE with that group of individuals.

During the interview LEAVY provided the following personal information:

REPORT OF INTERVIEW

Interview of: Anonymous WITNESS

Interviewed by: G. Gordon LIDDY

Date of Interview: 22 March 1994

Transcribed: 27 March 1994

WITNESS had previously contacted LIDDY and interview was conducted at WITNESS' home by appointment , commencing 1744 hours. LIDDY's notes were taken at kitchen table on a spiral ring pad provided by WITNESS.

At request of LIDDY, WITNESS identified himself but exacted a promise that LIDDY would never identify him.

WITNESS advised that between 1730 and 1745 hours of 20 July 1993 he was proceeding northwest in his white utility van along the George Washington memorial Parkway in Virginia on his way home from work. There was a traffic jam and traffic was barely moving. The outside temperature was approximately 100 degrees Fahrenheit and he felt an urgent need to urinate. He pulled off the parkway at the entrance to Fort Marcy Park and proceeded to the parking lot. There were two automobiles parked in the lot when he arrived.

CONFIDENTIAL

The first of the two cars was parked on the left, near the end, in the second or third parking place from the end. It was a small, two door, Japanese make sedan, either light blue or light tan in color. At the other end of the parking spaces, at about the second space from the end, to his right, was a white colored Honda two door sedan with a blue colored interior. WITNESS parked his van approximately in the middle of the lot between the two automobiles already there.

WITNESS stated that he left his van and began walking, looking for someplace to urinate where there would be no one around to see him. At this point, LIDDY advised witness that he, LIDDY, had never been to Ft. Marcy Park and requested WITNESS to draw a map thereof so that LIDDY could follow WITNESS' narration. WITNESS complied, drawing the map on a separate sheet of the spiral pad, which map LIDDY retained. WITNESS lightly traced the route he walked in pencil on the map he had drawn.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

WITNESS advised further that he walked into the woods to urinate and noticed something in the bushes to his left. He walked over to it, thinking it at first to be trash. When he got to within ten feet of what had attracted his attention, WITNESS states that he recognized the object as a body. At that point, WITNESS said that he thought the person might be asleep. He started to walk away, but then, noticed that the face was swollen, so he moved in close, stepping to where his foot was within three feet of the man's head and looked straight down into his face to see if that was the case. He found the body of a white male dressed in what he described as an pensive suit, jacket missing. The trousers were of gray color, the shoes black. WITNESS states that he stood over the body for several minutes, observing it.

According to WITNESS the body was lying on its back on a "12/12" or 45 degree angle slope, head uphill, body straight, feet together, hands at its sides, palms open and angled upwards. WITNESS held his own hands out and demonstrated how the hands of the body were positioned.

CONFIDENTIAL

WITNESS states that at the bottom of the slope the brush was "trampled" as if someone had been walking back and forth at that t. At the top of the slope, behind the man-made revetment of which the slope was a part, was an old cannon, one of at least two in the park. WITNESS marked the spot on the map he had drawn, then drew another diagram showing a cross section of the revetment and the position of the body on the forward slope thereof as he found it.

WITNESS advised further that the body was bloating in the heat. There were traces of blood around the nostrils and mouth and flies were crawling over those areas of the body. The eyes were only partially closed and were already glazed. On the body's right shoulder were light purple colored stains of what appeared to be vomitus induced by death. WITNESS said he took the stains to be from what he described as a bottle of "wine cooler" which was lying o his right a couple of feet away. The body looked as if it had slid down the slope a bit before coming to rest.

At this point, LIDDY asked witness if he had seen the published photograph of what purported to be Mr. Foster's hand with its thumb in the trigger guard of a handgun. WITNESS stated that he had not seen such a photograph and appeared surprised, stating that he had observed both the hands of the body and that neither held a gun. He stated that, in his opinion, had a shot been fired, it would have been heard by the guards across the road at the home of a "rich Saudi Arabian" which building he had observed from near the cannon.

LIDDY pressed witness, asking whether he was sure there was no firearm in evidence. WITNESS was emphatic, stating that he had spent several minutes observing the body closely and there was absolutely no firearm there. LIDDY then picked up from the table a wristwatch with a metal band and inserted his thumb through the band in the manner LIDDY recalled seeing the thumb in the published photograph and asked WITNESS again was he sure he saw no handgun in association with the body in the manner LIDDY demonstrated. WITNESS stated that he was absolutely positive that there was no firearm with the body in that or any other fashion.

WITNESS then picked up what appeared to LIDDY to be a rubber utility glove, light purple in color, and said that that was the color of the stain on the shoulder of the body.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

WITNESS states that he then walked back to his van to drive to a telephone to call the police to report the body. Again, WITNESS traced his line of walk, this time back to his van. He pointed out that his walk took him to a position near and above the Honda automobile and, as he walked past it, he looked inside. He observed a suitcoat which matched in color the trousers on the body he had found. The coat was light gray, appearing to be thrown, not neatly folded, over the back of the seat on the passenger's side. The coat was barely over the top of the seat-back.

WITNESS thinks he saw a briefcase on the passenger's side on the floor, although he is not certain. He stated that he is certain, however, that there was a "Four pack" of "wine cooler" in there. WITNESS stated that he observed the interior of the Honda from approximately eight feet above and twenty-five feet laterally in distance.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

WITNESS re-entered his van, then drove to park headquarters. There he saw two males dressed in what appeared to him to be park service uniforms. They were leaning against the tailgate of a truck. One was about fifty years old and black, the other was white and about thirty to thirty-five years old. From the driver's seat of his van, he waved to them to come over. The white man came over to the driver's side of the van. WITNESS asked for access to a telephone. The park service employee asked him what for?

WITNESS told the employee about his finding of a body and its location, using the cannon as a reference mark. The employee said that he knew exactly what he was talking about and which cannon to look for. WITNESS asked, "Do you mind making the call?" The em employee replied, "Not at all." and left. WITNESS says he then left the park, "praying that they wouldn't get his license plate number." LIDDY asked him why and WITNESS replied, "Because I don't want to end up like that guy I found." He stated that fear was why he had exacted LIDDY's promise not to reveal his identity. He stated that LIDDY had his permission to reveal everything he had told him except his identity. He stated that he decided to come forward to this extent because the stories that he has been reading about the body and its discovery are "not right." WITNESS stated that he chose to disclose his story through LIDDY because he was certain that LIDDY would never "give him up."

Mr. G. Gordon Liddy was interviewed at his place of employment, radio station WJFK, 10800 Main Street, Fairfax, Virginia. He was advised of the identities of FBI Agents William E. Colombell and Lawrence J. Monroe and that they wished to interview him regarding an ongoing FBI investigation into the death of Vincent Foster. The agents confirmed receipt by the Office of the Independent Counsel of Mr. Liddy's letter dated April 5, 1994, including a six-page interview report of information provided to Liddy by an anonymous witness who claimed to have been the first to have discovered the body of Vincent Foster at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993.

At the outset, Mr. Liddy stated that this six-page report, along with a two-page report (copy provided by Liddy) of the interview of a Fairfax County Fire Department employee named Cory Ashford, conducted on March 4, 1994 by Congressional staffers, would soon be publicly released to subscribers of his regular newsletter.

Mr. Liddy agreed that he would make no comment about the specifics of this current interview with the FBI, except to acknowledge on his radio show that the FBI had contacted him and that he had agreed to keep the specifics of that contact confidential.

Mr. Liddy then stated that he would assist the FBI in any manner he could, but had given the anonymous witness his assurances that he would not reveal his identity and could not go back on this promise. He did agree to recontact the party as soon as possible and provide him with the names and telephone numbers of the interview agents and attempt to persuade him that it was in his best interest to call and identify himself and cooperate fully with the FBI. He provided the following phone numbers where he could be reached, office (703) 691-1900, home (301) 567-3080, car phone (301) 518-2539. It was understood that if the witness did come forward, any future FBI interview or evaluation concerning his credibility would be directly with the FBI and that Mr. Liddy would not be involved. Mr. Liddy then provided the following additional information concerning the manner in which he first came in touch with this witness and other specifics that would assist the FBI in evaluating the witness' credibility.

Liddy advised that on March 22, 1994, he was telephonically contacted at his radio station in Fairfax City, Virginia by a male caller who identified himself as the individual in the "white van" who observed the body of Vincent Foster at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. Pursuant to this telephone call, Mr. Liddy drove to the caller's residence, which according to Liddy was "not far" from the radio station where he interviewed the caller in depth regarding his observations of July 20, 1993.

Liddy stated that in order to protect the identity of the caller, he maintained no notes of his discussion and due to the press of business commitments, he did not transcribe his account of this interview until March 27, 1994. In order to refresh his recollection, Mr. Liddy during this interview referred to a six-page report of the March 22 interview which he, Liddy, had previously mailed to Mr. Roderick Lankler with a cover letter on April 5, 1994.

Mr. Liddy advised that in addition to the information contained in the referenced interview report, he is convinced that this individual he interviewed on March 22 is legitimate; that he was in Fort Marcy Park the evening of July 20, 1993; did, in fact, observe the dead body of Vincent Foster and did report this sighting to two Park Service employees that same evening. According to Liddy, this anonymous witness expressed to him a fear of some type of retaliation if his identity is surfaced, based primarily on observations that neither of Mr. Foster's hands held a gun at the time and location of his sighting by this witness. This particular observation, according to Liddy, is contrary to the media reports and for whatever reason has instilled in this anonymous witness a strongly expressed fear for his life.

In an effort to ascertain the reliability of this anonymous witness, Mr. Liddy voluntarily described him as a white/male; mid-40s; 5 foot, 9 inches; stocky or beefy build, normal hair length, predominantly grey; clean shaven with a square or rugged face configuration; wearing eyeglasses with silver metallic frames. He was further described as possessing a Virginia accent, possibly from Southwest Virginia or the Roanoke, Virginia area and as "having lived a tough life." Liddy could not furnish any specific details regarding this witness' attire, believing he was wearing, at the time of his interview, "typical work clothes," not further described and an inexpensive wrist watch with a metal band. He was further described by Liddy as a "hard working family man," most likely employed in the construction business and residing in an extremely modest house.

During the interview on March 22, 1994, Liddy also met a white female, age 35-40 with brunette hair, believed to be the witness' wife or a female companion. Liddy did report observing a white van at this anonymous witness' residence which he described as a "basic service type van, probably engaged in the construction business." He could not recall any additional details or state of registration. It was Mr. Liddy's opinion that this anonymous witness was a "typical low-waged laborer," who on a daily basis terminates his employment at 4:00 p.m. and regularly drives past Fort Marcy Park either to his residence or place of employment.

In response to questions posed regarding the purpose of the anonymous witness' presence in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993, Liddy stated that witness informed him that he stopped at Fort Marcy Park to urinate. This biological requirement, combined with the suffocating heat and traffic snarls on the George Washington Parkway, according to Liddy, was the sole reason for witness' presence at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. Furthermore, Liddy advised that the anonymous witness informed him on March 22, 1994, that the reason he was supplying his observations to Liddy was that he had considered either Rush Limbaugh, the syndicated newscaster and commentator, or Mr. Liddy and felt that he, Liddy, "wouldn't give him up."

In a further effort to determine the specific reasons for this witness' insistence on anonymity, Liddy reiterated that while it might appear irrational, the fact that this witness insists that the Foster body was devoid of any weapon and that the initial media reports either ignored or downplayed the existence of the "white van," has led this witness to believe there is some "government conspiracy" to cover up the actual cause of Mr. Foster's death.

In regard to follow-up questions regarding the specifics of his March 22, 1994 interview with this witness, Liddy stated that the witness actually provided him a sketch of Fort Marcy Park, outlining his route to the second cannon embankment where he discovered the body and his exit route to his vehicle in the Fort Marcy parking lot. Although this sketch was not available at this time since it was being duplicated for inclusion in Mr. Liddy's newsletter, Liddy stated that he personally visited Fort Marcy Park to verify the sketch provided by this particular witness. In this regard, Mr. Liddy supplied three polaroid photographs he took, depicting the apparent residence of the Saudi Ambassador to the United Nations and two photographs depicting the sight where Mr. Foster's body was retrieved. He reiterated the witness' insistence that the body was lying at a 45 degree angle, eyes slightly glazed and face swollen. Liddy believes however, that the witness' observation of Mr. Foster's body was confined to a view "looking down at the body" but did state that the witness believed he had ample time to determine that the palms of the victim's hands were open and raised upward and that neither hand contained a weapon.

Furthermore, Liddy advised that according to this witness, he then returned to the parking area by a separate route and at the far end of the lot he observed a White Honda from an elevation of approximately eight feet and a distance of 20 feet. In this vehicle, he observed a suit jacket (unfolded) on the rear seat and a four-pack of wine coolers. According to Liddy, this witness thought that a briefcase was also situated on the floor of the front seat of the passenger side. According to Liddy, this witness then departed Fort Marcy Park, enroute to a public telephone which he knew was located in the general vicinity of Fort Marcy. Upon reaching this location, witness advised that he reported his findings to uniformed U.S. Park Service employees with the request that they notify police authorities.

Mr. Liddy reiterated his interest in assisting the FBI investigation in this matter; maintained that the initial contact with this witness was unsolicited and agreed to recontact this witness and solicit witness' cooperation in submitting to an FBI interview.

BRUCE ROBERT LINDSEY, Assistant to the President and Senior Advisor, was interviewed at his White House office on June 22, 1994, also present was MARK STEIN of the Office of the Independent Counsel. Having been advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, LINDSEY provided the following information:

LINDSEY advised that he is a partner in WRIGHT, LINDSEY and JENNINGS, attorneys at law in Little Rock, Arkansas. He advised that he practiced law in Little Rock at the same time that VINCE FOSTER was a partner practicing with the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock. WATKINS explained that the Rose Law Firm represented WRIGHT, LINDSEY and JENNINGS as corporate counsel and VINCE FOSTER, JR. acted as the attorney who handled those matters and it was primarily through that conduit that LINDSEY and FOSTER dealt with one another. In addition, in 1992, LINDSEY was the legal counsel to the Democratic Party (he has known the CLINTONs for years) and he sometimes would consult FOSTER on legal matters relevant to that position LINDSEY was holding at the time.

After beginning their respective terms at The White House, they saw one another fairly frequently, and since they were both married but living the life of bachelors (since both their families had remained in Little Rock), there were nights when they would eat dinner together. In addition, the two of them belonged to the informal Tuesday night group of Arkansans who tried to get together on a weekly basis to have dinner together and they also attended the Friday night movie nights with the CLINTONs in The White House residence theater. LINDSEY estimated that during the six month period that he and FOSTER worked at The White House at the same time, they socialized together separately about a half dozen times. They did not have the kind of close friendship that gave rise to close confidences or philosophical discussions. LINDSEY said that FOSTER was a fairly regular attendee at the informal group meetings on Tuesday and Friday night and said that he and FOSTER were friends but not close friends. They had superficial things in common. They were both from Arkansas; they had similar families who were still in Arkansas and they would talk about what their life was like. LINDSEY estimated that FOSTER's level of anxiety and loneliness in connection with what he was experiencing as about comparable to what LINDSEY was experiencing and did not consider it to be inordinate.

The only time that LINDSEY recalls an incident where FOSTER seemed inordinately upset about something was the day that The Wall Street Journal published an article on either FOSTER himself or the Rose Law Firm that showed no picture of him in the usual box where The Wall Street Journal likes to put a sketch of the individual being discussed. The criticism that appeared in that article painted a shady, if not unethical, image of FOSTER and FOSTER found it extremely irritating. FOSTER had initially refused to send them a photograph but then did so but not in time for it to appear with the article. LINDSEY recalls FOSTER saying to him, "The damn thing is that I sent them a picture". LINDSEY said that by his way of thinking, it was not that big of a deal, but it appeared that FOSTER had no sense of resilience or sense of humor on the matter. The article implied that FOSTER and The White House was willing to play "fast and loose" with the rules.

LINDSEY said that he knew FOSTER had lost some weight, but that he did not attribute it to anything of significance. He noted that he himself had lost 25 pounds since coming to work at The White House. He remembers one night shortly before FOSTER's death when HUBBELL, the President and himself were going to watch a movie at The White House and the President called FOSTER to invite him to come. Foster declined saying that his wife LISA was already ready for bed. His refusal to come to the movie did not seem significant. He remembers discussing FOSTER with WEBB HUBBELL and could only recall the sense that FOSTER needed a good weekend to rest.

At the initial meeting regarding the Travel Office, VINCE FOSTER was most defensive about WILLIAM KENNEDY's participation in the matter. FOSTER was very unhappy that KENNEDY was reprimanded with regard to the Travel Office matter. LINDSEY said that MACK MCLARTY, JOHN PODESTA, VINCE FOSTER, MARK GEARAN and possibly LEON PANETTA and BERNARD NUSSBAUM were at that meeting. The purpose of the meeting was to develop a strategy prior to the press release of the Travel Office report. FOSTER was angry about the letters of reprimand. KENNEDY was also very unhappy and LINDSEY said he thought he remembered that KENNEDY was feeling as though perhaps he should resign. LINDSEY thought that he remembered FOSTER's opinion being that if one person in the Counsel's Office received a reprimand then they should all receive letters of reprimand because they were all equally responsible and accountable for what occurred.

LINDSEY could not remember anything else that FOSTER found disturbing. LINDSEY does not recall FOSTER being upset about Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan issues. He did not recall ever having a conversation with FOSTER about Whitewater or Madison and he does not recall anybody talking about ever having a conversation with FOSTER in which he was known to have been upset about Whitewater or Madison.

The only way that Whitewater surfaced in any way was the issue of evaluation and disclosure of the Whitewater stocks after they had been sold on the President's disclosure forms. LINDSEY said that FOSTER did not discuss the issue with him. He just knew that it was a matter that was handled around the end of May when the disclosure forms for the First Family were due.

LINDSEY advised that he has no idea why FOSTER may have killed himself. The most important things to FOSTER were his family, especially LAURA, his daughter.

LINDSEY advised that he was notified of FOSTER's death by WILLIAM BURTON. LINDSEY was in his office at The White House at the time because the President was doing the Larry King Show. BILL BURTON stuck his head in the door and said that someone with VINCE FOSTER's White House tag and FOSTER's vehicle had been shot. Later in the evening LINDSEY heard that it was an apparent suicide. LINDSEY advised that he stayed at his desk and in his office area for most of the evening. Many individuals were coming and going. At some point he went to The White House residence. Towards the end of the Larry King Show, he saw GEAREN, RICKI SIDEN, RANDY GROMWALD and PAUL SEGALA (individuals who were helping with the taping). He walked over to that area with MAC MCLARTY. He does not know if GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS was there and he does not remember seeing DEE DEE MYERS.

LINDSEY advised that during that evening of July 20, 1993 he did not hear any conversation about anybody having found a note that might shed light on why FOSTER might have committed suicide, nor did he hear any conversation about anybody looking for a note. He also did not hear any conversation about anybody going into VINCE FOSTER's office. After the Larry King Show was completed, the President and MAC MCLARTY went to the FOSTER residence.

With regard to activity in and around the room known as "the map room", LINDSEY advised that the President never came into the map room and to his knowledge, they never shut the door of it and never talked about any note while the door was shut.

LINDSEY speculated that no one thing pushed VINCE FOSTER "over the edge". In a conversation between himself and WEBB HUBBELL, HUBBELL remarked, "If you lined up 20 people in a row in order of their likelihood of committing suicide, VINCE FOSTER would be last in line". LINDSEY agrees with this.

After the President left for the FOSTER residence, LINDSEY returned to his office. He decided to go home sometime between 1:00 and 2:00 am. He does not think that he saw either PATSY THOMASSON or MAGGIE WILLIAMS at The White House that night.

With regard to CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, LINDSEY advised that LIVINGSTONE had called him because of The White House pass having been found. LINDSEY recommended that KENNEDY accompany LIVINGSTONE to identify the body. He advised that he never physically saw CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at The White House that night but must have spoken to him on the phone. He does not recall who called whom. LINDSEY does not recall anything about a written memo that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE produced which chronicles his (LIVINGSTONE's) activities on July 20 and 21, 1993. He had a vague recollection, however, of LIVINGSTONE telling him on the morning of July 21 that LIVINGSTONE had earlier that morning gone to the FOSTER residence to help deal with the press should it be necessary.

LINDSEY said he never heard of any documents being removed from FOSTER's office nor did he ever talk to THOMASSON or NUSSBAUM about it. He also did not talk to them or hear about a note being found.

With regard to the inventory, LINDSEY said that NUSSBAUM was concerned about the issues of executive privilege. He recalled that BURTON, LINDSEY and NUSSBAUM discussed that issue on the afternoon of July 21 while individuals from the Department of Justice were waiting for them. The end result that LINDSEY remembers was that NUSSBAUM would use his best judgement as to what the Department of Justice people would see and what they would not. They did not want to be too free in the access they allowed, but on the other hand did not want to be too rigid. By the end of the meeting, LINDSEY said that he was still not sure what decision was going to be made on the matter. He said he had a brief conversation with NUSSBAUM after the inventory had been conducted and NUSSBAUM told him that things had "gone smoothly".

During the interview LINDSEY provided the following personal information about himself:

Inspector JAMES LINGERFELT, Information Services Division of the Metropolitan D.C. Police Department, 300 Indiana Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20001, work phone 202-727-4138, was informed of Agent COLOMBELL's identity and that Agent COLOMBELL was part of the investigative staff of the Office of the Independent Counsel, Whitewater matters. Inspector LINGERFELT was also informed that Agent COLOMBELL was attempting to determine if Metropolitan Police units were dispatched to the residence of VINCENT FOSTER, 3027 Cambridge Place, Georgetown, Washington, D.C. on July 20-21, 1993, the evening of VINCE FOSTER's death.

Inspector LINGERFELT stated that based on a review of "radio run records", contained in the computer assisted dispatch system (CAD), he was unable to locate any record reflecting that Metropolitan Police units were dispatched to the above Cambridge Place address. He was unable to find any records confirming that a telephone call was received by the police communications center asking for assistance at 3027 Cambridge Place. He was also unable to locate any record confirming that police cars were dispatched to that address over Metropolitan Police radio channels. He concluded by stating that there could have been a radio communication overheard by other officers that originated from a car to car transmission or a radio transmission from the District Two Watch Commander's office to one of the District Two vehicles.

David Craig Livingstone, Director of White House Personnel Security, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW in the presence of his attorney, Paige E. Reffe. Also present during this interview was Associate Special Counsel Carl Stitch. Mr. Livingstone was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and Mr. Stitch and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has held his present position at The White House since February, 1993. He first met Vincent Foster, Jr. when he (Livingstone) came to work at The White House and he therefore knew Foster for only five months prior to his death. His contacts with Foster were sporadic and brief. He seldom had occasion to talk with Foster and when he did their relationship was professional rather than social. He noticed no change, either emotional or physical, in Foster during the time he knew him before his death. He described Foster as professional, soft spoken, intelligent and controlled. He last saw Foster in a White House west wing hallway on July 20, 1993, the day of his death. They exchanged greetings as they passed.

In July, 1993 his (Livingstone) office was, as it is now, in the Old Executive Office Building. Bill Kennedy was his immediate superior at that time with Kennedy reporting directly to Vincent Foster. He recalls that period as being an extremely busy time with people in The White House being under considerable stress. In that regard, approximately one week prior to Foster's death, he (Livingstone) went to Foster expressing concern about the welfare of Bill Kennedy in that he was working very long hours, was under pressure, and seemed tired. Foster said to him "he's going to be fine and we're all going to be o.k.". Prior to Foster saying this, Livingstone had related to him comments by Bill Kennedy concerning their large workload, the stress of the job, and their need for more employees.

Craig Livingstone said that he can recall nothing unusual or significant about July 19, 1993. He said that July

20, however, was a very eventful and, in some ways, tragic day that he remembers well. He explained that members of The White House staff had been very busy with events leading up to the President naming Louis Freeh to be the new FBI Director on that day and with plans for the President to appear on the Cable News Network, Larry King Show that night starting at 9:00 pm. Livingstone had arrived at The White House early that morning and left at approximately 8:15 pm after watching the CNN crew prepare The White House library for the President's interview with Larry King.

He arrived home at approximately 9:00 pm and received an electronic page as he was about to enter his residence. He contacted the indicated telephone number and spoke with United States Secret Service (USSS) Inspector Dennis Martin, who told him "I have bad news-Vincent Foster has apparently killed himself." Livingstone said that he believes Martin told him that he had been advised of the death by the United States Park Police (USPP) and was advising Livingstone because of his position as Director of White House personnel security. Inspector Martin said that he had also notified another White House staffer, David Watkins.

After his conversation with Martin he noticed that it was approximately 9:05 - 9:10 pm, and realized that the President was, at that time, involved with his live television interview. Livingstone, not wanting Bill Clinton to be advised of the death of his friend Foster while on live television, immediately tried to contact Mark Gearan at The White House. Gearan said that he was aware of Foster's death and that he was with the President and would advise him when the opportunity presented itself. He (Livingstone) offered his assistance and offered to go to Fairfax Hospital where Inspector Martin had told him the body was to be taken. Gearan said that another White House staffer, Bill Burton was going to the hospital to identify the body. Later in their conversation, however, Gearan requested that Livingstone proceed to the hospital to identify the body. Before this conversation was over, Livingstone had also spoken with White House Chief of Staff Mac McLarty. McLarty was also aware of the death prior to Livingstone's call but neither he nor Gearan advised how they had learned of Foster's death. Livingstone said that he, at that point, thought of notifying his superior, Bill Kennedy and remembered that Kennedy was a family friend of Foster's. When he notified Kennedy he "seemed genuinely shocked and grief stricken". Kennedy insisted on going to the hospital with Livingstone. They agreed to meet there at 10:00 pm.

Once arriving at the hospital, it took approximately 30-40 minutes before they were allowed to see and identify Foster's body. During that period, Livingstone met with a police officer at the hospital and recommended that any news media calls coming to the hospital regarding Foster's death should be referred to The White House press office. He (Livingstone) contacted USSS Inspector Martin asking that he call the USPP to get authority for he and Kennedy to view the body for identification. Also during their wait, Livingstone and Kennedy made several calls to The White House where they talked with Mac McLarty, Bernard Nussbaum, Mark Gearan, and Dee Dee Myers. By that time they had seen the body and confirmed that it was indeed Foster. They were therefore able to advise those at The White House of their identification. They were told that Webb Hubbell had gone to the Foster residence and was with Mrs. Foster. During one of these conversations, at approximately 10:45 - 11:00 pm, Bernard Nussbaum asked him if a note had been found at the death scene. He advised Nussbaum that the police officer they had conferred with had said no note had been found.

He and Bill Kennedy left the hospital in his car and went to Kennedy's home. Once there, they met with Mrs. Kennedy and all went to the Foster's residence in Bill Kennedy's family car arriving at approximately midnight. Upon arrival, they saw Webb Hubbell, David Watkins, and others on the sidewalk in front of the Foster's residence engaged in conversation. Part of this conversation concerned the fact that a suicide note had yet to be found. He does not recall anybody mentioning that they or any other White House staffers had been in Foster's office that evening after learning of his death. There were many people at the Foster's residence that night, including President Clinton. Livingstone, having assisted with news media matters during the 1992 Presidential campaign, had during conversations at the Foster residence, offered to help with anticipated news media inquiries the next day.

He left the Foster residence at approximately 2:00 am, went to the Kennedy residence, got his car, and drove Bill Kennedy back to the hospital where Kennedy picked up his car he had left there earlier. Livingstone then went home arriving at approximately 2:30 am on July 21 and went to bed.

He awakened at approximately 5:00 am and drove to the Foster residence arriving at approximately 5:30 as had been agreed during his discussion with White House staffers the night before. By coming there early he hoped to assure that any members of the media who were present gave appropriate understanding and consideration to the Foster family. He said that there were only "a few press types" there and that he left the Foster residence at approximately 7-7:30 am to go to The White House. He does not believe any member of the Foster family or any of their friends saw him at the Foster residence between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30 am. He also said that he cannot recall the names of any individual reporters at the scene that morning and can also not recall the names of any news media organizations represented there.

Upon arriving at The White House at 7-7:30 am, he either went to his office or to the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices. He explained that his memory was not clear on this point but that he recalled going to the counsel suite at one point during the morning and seeing Betsy Pond and Linda Tripp there when he arrived. He said that he did not go into Vincent Foster's office that morning nor did he go into Maggie Williams office that morning. He went on to say that he has never been in Maggie Williams office.

At this point of the interview, Mr. Livingstone was specifically asked if he and/or another man with him carried a briefcase and a box out of the west wing of The White House on the morning of July 21, 1993 at approximately 6:30 - 6:45 am. He said that he "may have" removed something that morning. He then said that he does recall moving boxes "around that time period" and he "may have moved something that morning" but he "does not remember moving any boxes or a briefcase out of the west wing that morning". When advised that his statements appeared to be somewhat contradictory and not a direct answer to the question, Livingstone said that he was having trouble remembering exactly what he did that morning. He went on to say that he recalled talking to Bill Kennedy and Bernard Nussbaum on the evening of July 20, 1993 about the need to seal Foster's office but that he does not recall anyone asking him to remove anything from that office. He said he did not go into The White House Counsel's suite on 7/21/93 "with the specific intent of taking stuff out." When asked exactly what offices he went into on the morning of July 21, he said that he went to the "press office" and then went to the counsel office. Livingstone never said that he did not take or assist in taking boxes and a briefcase out of the west wing during the early morning hours of July 21. Rather, he reiterated that he could not remember having done this. When told that information in the possession of the Special Counsel's investigative staff indicated that he was seen removing a box and briefcase that morning, he offered that there are others employed at The White House who look like him.

DAVID CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, Security, The White House, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 456-2345 (work) and (301) 654-5478 (home) was interviewed in Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. MARK STEIN Assistant to Independent Counsel ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. assisted with the interview. Also present during the interview was DAVID S. COHEN, attorney for LIVINGSTONE from the law firm MILLER, CASSIDY, LARROCA and LEWIN, 2555 M Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20037, telephone (202) 833-6503. Mr. LIVINGSTONE was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and Mr. STEIN and of the purpose of the interview. LIVINGSTONE provided the following information:

He has spoken several times with Inspector DENNIS MARTIN, Uniform Division, U.S. Secret Service (USSS), formerly assigned to The White House, Washington, D.C., about various officers of the Uniform Division. LIVINGSTONE stated he would discuss their attitude and/or "something they said" with MARTIN. LIVINGSTONE said it was his job to receive and handle complaints regarding White House staff who may have been "out of line" in their dealings with the Uniform Division of the USSS and vice versa report any instances of any discourteous or inappropriate conduct by Uniform Division personnel in dealing with White House staff. When a complaint was made against a White House staffer, LIVINGSTONE would take appropriate action. He assumed Inspector MARTIN did the same when an indescretion of one of the Uniform Division officers was reported to him. LIVINGSTONE stated he was trying to encourage and support an "amicable" relationship between The White House staff and the Uniform Division of the USSS. LIVINGSTONE would work with Inspector MARTIN on these situations. As an example of the type of problems he would deal with, LIVINGSTONE cited the situation early in the administration where MACK MCLARTY, the Chief of Staff at The White House was having "gate problems" wherein he was being delayed at the gate by Secret Service personnel for screening purposes. LIVINGSTONE at the time met with MARTIN to advise him that search of MCLARTY's car etc. was not necessary as he was Chief of Staff at The White House. LIVINGSTONE advised that as a result of his contact the situation was rectified.

by SA WILLIAM T. GUYTON Date dictated 7/12/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

At this point in the interview, LIVINGSTONE was shown ten pictures of Uniform Division USSS personnel in an effort to identify any individuals that may have been involved previously with LIVINGSTONE in a dispute or grievance. The original photographs shown to LIVINGSTONE were provided by USSS agent TOM FARRELL, telephone (202) 456-2443. FARRELL has requested that these original photographs be returned to him at The White House. As a record of the photographs shown xerox copies of these photographs are attached to this FD-302. The first copy of the photographs depicts the condition in which the photographs were shown to LIVINGSTONE with the names of the individuals deleted. The second copy of the ten photographs depict the photographs with the names of the individuals.

The photographs were spread on the table in front of LIVINGSTONE and his attorney in the order shown on the xerox copy. LIVINGSTONE, after reviewing each photograph noted that he was familiar with the individuals shown as numbers five and nine and possibly ten, but LIVINGSTONE was not positive about number ten. These three individuals were JOHN S. SKYLES (number five), JOHN D. CORUM (number nine) and BRUCE E. ABBOTT (number ten).

LIVINGSTONE said he didn't know any of their names. LIVINGSTONE also said he had "no trouble with any" of these individuals. He said what he remembered about number five (JOHN SKYLES) was that he may have had a complaint with a White House staffer. He also remembered that this individual worked at the west gate of The White House. He said he recognized number nine (JOHN CORUM) as being someone who had done "rotation" and he had "seen him around". He said he could not remember where he had seen number ten (BRUCE ABBOTT) and may be confusing him with someone else. LIVINGSTONE had no other information or comments regarding any of the individuals shown.

In an effort to assist him with his recall of events in July, 1993, LIVINGSTONE stated he has asked the USSS to check their entry records for his comings and goings at the time of VINCENT FOSTER's death. LIVINGSTONE's attorney advised it was his understanding that the FBI had these entry records.

At this point in the interview, MARK STEIN began his questioning of LIVINGSTONE.

LIVINGSTONE did not remember who he asked to type his chronology dated July 21, 1993 (captioned "REPORT FROM CRAIG LIVINGSTONE"). He said there were possibilities in and out of his office at The White House. He said it was most likely the report had been done in The White House complex. LIVINGSTONE said he was "fairly sure" he had asked someone's secretary to type the document. He was sure he didn't ask someone senior to assist him with this typing.

LIVINGSTONE was asked to identify potential people or places where the chronology could have been typed, and he answered as follows:

Old Executive Office Building

Counsel's office room 136 (2 secretaries)

LIVINGSTONE's office room 84 (2 or 3 staff and 2 or 3 interns) LIVINGSTONE advised these names have previously been supplied to the Office of the Independent Counsel

DAVID WATKINS office located in the basement of the west wing of The White House--now HAROLD ICKES office. LIVINGSTONE said this was a possibility but not likely

West Wing of The White House

Counsel's office 2nd floor of the west wing (assistants in the reception area)
Communications office (2 or 3 assistants)

LIVINGSTONE was asked who he had asked to do computer reviews in an effort to find the chronology. LIVINGSTONE advised he had requested STEVEN WAUBDY (extension 6229) room 136 OEOB and his staff MARI ANDERSON and LISA WETZEL. He said his office had gotten new computers two or three months ago but that ANDERSON had told him that all information from the previous machines had been downloaded to the new equipment. When asked why they had gotten new equipment, he said they had gotten "better equipment". LIVINGSTONE has also asked BETSY POND to review her computer files and had hoped to ask LINDA TRIPP to do the same but has not yet gotten in contact with her. In the communications office he has asked DAVE LEVY (DEE DEE MYERS assistant) and CHAD GRIFFIN (GEARAN's assistant) to look for the document.

LIVINGSTONE said that he himself is not computer literate and that he has "never produced" a computer document during his tenure at The White House.

LIVINGSTONE said he was "running around" on July 21, 1993 and that's the reason he can't remember who typed the document for him. He is sure that he hand wrote the document and gave it to someone to be typed. He said it would have been done sometime after the morning meeting with U.S. Park Police (USPP) Chief LANGSTON and before the end of the day on July 21, 1993. He said based on his notes in the chronology, the meeting with LANGSTON occurred at 11 am but that it may have been earlier.

LIVINGSTONE was asked if he remembered a hallway contact on July 21, 1993 with the USPP and/or a Sergeant MARKLAND from the Park Police. He first answered no to this question and then remembered talking to someone from the Park Police regarding a question concerning carrying a box of documents from FOSTER's office. He remembered being asked this but then didn't hear any more about it. At the time he "laughed it off", thought it was "ridiculous" and "absurd". He said he had made it clear to the questioner that the question was "absurd" but had clearly answered "no" regarding carrying a box from The White House. LIVINGSTONE said he didn't take the question seriously at the time.

Having been advised of the identity of the interviewing agent from a previous interview with the same agent on May 12, 1994 and being advised of the nature and purpose of the telephonic interview, LYONS provided the following information:

Asked whether he had ever discussed Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan with VINCENT FOSTER, Jr.'s, LYONS said that he was sure that they had discussed Whitewater at some time. He explained that he had prepared a report (known as the LYONS report) concerning Whitewater during the Presidential campaign. That was the time period when he remembered some discussion with FOSTER about Whitewater although he had no specific recollection of specific conversation. He advised that the last time they spoke about it was in the context of FOSTER's preparing corporate tax returns which included statements on the Whitewater properties. Nothing was ever discussed about Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

FOSTER wanted to wrap and conclude the CLINTONs' interest in Whitewater Development Corporation and there were loose ends to attend to with regard to JAMES MCDOUGAL because he had the physical records pertaining to the company. It was not, however, a burning issue or one that presented the possibility of a scandal as evidenced by the fact that FOSTER took approximately six months to get around to tying up these administrative matters and getting to MCDOUGAL for his signature on the tax return.

LYONS advised that he had no discussions whatsoever with VINCE FOSTER about Whitewater after approximately March, 1993, because that marked the end of the first quarter of 1993 when the forms were due. LYONS further advised that he never had any discussion with VINCE FOSTER indicating that FOSTER was concerned about Whitewater or that he was concerned that there was any other scandal related to Whitewater that he needed to keep a lid on or otherwise protect the CLINTONs from.

On May 12, 1994, JAMES M. LYONS, 4880 South Fairfax Street, Littleton, Colorado 80121, telephone (303) 721-9813, was interviewed in Washington, D.C. where he had come for a business trip. LYONS advised that he is an attorney with the law firm of ROSSBERGER, APPEL, POWERS, and JOHNSON, 1 Tabor Center, Suite 3000, 1200 17th Street, Denver, Colorado 80202, telephone (303) 623-9000. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, LYONS provided the following information:

LYONS advised that he met FOSTER sometime in 1987 through HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON and then Governor CLINTON. At the time FOSTER was Senior Litigator with the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Arkansas. LYONS' own background was that from July 1992 to November 1992, he was Counsel to the CLINTON-GORE Presidential Transition Planning Foundation; and from November 1992 to February 1993, LYONS worked for WARREN CHRISTOPHER, who was Counsel to the Office of the President elect. LYONS explained that there were two or three attorneys working in a legal function for CHRISTOPHER and he was one of those. At the time FOSTER was winding up his legal practice in preparation for coming to Washington, D.C.

LYONS characterized his relationship with FOSTER as primarily a personal one although they worked together frequently on various legal matters. LYONS had had occasion to be in Little Rock on a temporary basis, although for many weeks at a time and he came to be quite good friends with FOSTER and the FOSTER family. They had much in common, they were the same age, they were both attorneys, they both had children, and shared a lot of interests and concerns. They enjoyed each other's company very much.

LYONS advised that he travels to Washington, D.C. quite frequently and saw FOSTER every few weeks. He had noticed that FOSTER had had a weight loss after he came to Washington. He characterized FOSTER as a very hard worker and LYONS believed that it was stress induced weight loss. He noted that FOSTER did not normally carry a lot of weight and so any small loss was relatively noticeable.

LYONS said that it seemed that the press had been particularly vicious in their attacks on the members of the Rose Law Firm individually. The Wall Street Journal, in particular, had begun a series of articles, first criticizing WEBB HUBBELL and then FOSTER himself, particularly with regard to the Health Care Task Force. The task force was sued on the issue of whether or not their proceedings should operate openly or behind closed doors. FOSTER won a victory for the Task Force (and by association, for HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON) on that matter and the Wall Street Journal accused him of "sharp tactics". LYONS advised that that allegation really bothered FOSTER.

FOSTER called the LYONS Wednesday or Thursday the week before his death. LYONS returned his call and FOSTER asked him if LYONS would be available to come to Washington on short notice. LYONS asked FOSTER, "what does short notice mean? Do you need me to come today?" FOSTER said, "No. I just needed to know you could come on short notice." FOSTER was evidentially anticipating a legal attack in connection with the Travelgate scandal.

FOSTER again called LYONS the Sunday night before his death after FOSTER and his wife LISA had returned from their weekend. FOSTER told LYONS about the weekend. He said he had had a great a weekend and agreed that he ought to do it more often. They confirmed that LYONS was coming to Washington, D.C. the following Wednesday, July 21, 1993.

LYONS was coming to D.C. for other business also, but one of the primary reasons for coming was to meet with FOSTER with regard to representing FOSTER as a personal attorney on Travelgate matters. LYONS advised that FOSTER was anticipating further investigation on the Travelgate issue and he was considering asking LYONS to be his personal attorney. LYONS advised that he had read Chief of Staff, MAC MCLARTY's report on the Travelgate matter and felt that the report pretty well put the matter to rest. FOSTER didn't think so and he told LYONS that, "I'd like you to take a look at it." For this reason LYONS read the report again in order to give FOSTER his perspective on it. LYONS said that he felt it possible that FOSTER knew he needed a perspective other than his own, but it was unclear whether that was just his professional common sense or whether he sensed he was losing perspective himself

LYONS felt that FOSTER believed that the allegation that BILL KENNEDY acted inappropriately when he called DOJ or the FBI directly when he first uncovered and feared financial improprieties in The White House Travel Office was unfair. There was a question whether KENNEDY should have gone through a different chain-of-command. There was a question whether the FBI agents, allegedly sensitive to the argument that they had made a mistake in responding to KENNEDY's call, had reason to mischaracterize the nature of their initial meetings at The White House. LYONS advised that the Department of Justice has also interviewed him with regard to possible OPR infractions. Essentially, the FBI Special Agent's account of those initial conversations differs from KENNEDY's account and when FOSTER had a choice between believing his friend or believing the FBI, he believed KENNEDY. That is what LYONS believes lies at the core of the notation in FOSTER's list of things that were bothering him where he says that the FBI lied.

FOSTER was clearly distressed about the "Travelgate" matter. He felt that he and KENNEDY had become, essentially, witnesses with regard to Travelgate and that The White House would need counsel to deal with the matter who weren't in that category. He felt strongly that The White House should hire outside counsel to be handling the Travelgate matter for this reason. He also believed that he would be needing a personal attorney to represent him in the matter.

After FOSTER's death, LYONS found out that FOSTER had also talked to JAMES HAMILTON, an attorney in Georgetown, Washington, D.C. who also represented his family and also to SUSAN THOMASES of the New York firm WILKEY, FARR and GALLAGHER (phonetic) as possible attorneys to represent him in the Travelgate matter.

LYONS advised that during the telephone conversation on Sunday, July 18, 1993, they confirmed that LYONS was coming to Washington, D.C. on the following Wednesday and they would get together. It was anticipated that they would leave The White House and discuss the matter of private representation and also have dinner together. LYONS had insisted on not doing the interview in The White House. He called FOSTER again on July 20 late in the morning. He was simply calling to confirm when he was coming in and final arrangements for meeting. He thinks he possibly saw FOSTER on CNN, during the report of The Rose Garden Ceremony of appointing LOUIS FREEH to be Director of the FBI, but he is not certain. FOSTER was not available to take his call.

BRUCE LINDSEY's office called him later that night about 7:00 pm Denver time (9:00 pm D.C. time) to tell him of FOSTER's apparent suicide. LYONS said that he was terribly shocked at the news of FOSTER's death but has subsequently come to terms with the fact that it seems to be in the nature of the disease of depression that these things sometimes happen, very quickly and without much warning. LYONS' wife is a psychiatric nurse and they have discussed depression a good deal as a result of FOSTER's death. He is currently of the opinion that FOSTER probably suffered from chronic untreated depression.

LYONS observed that the West Wing of The White House was an absolutely terrible place to work, with a great deal of intense pressure and public criticism. FOSTER was accustomed to being in control. He was the most well respected litigator in his firm in Little Rock. By contrast, in Washington, D.C. he was being pounded away at every day and was coping with an environment where he lacked control.

FOSTER believed that private sector attorneys should be handling many of the matters they were handling, both for ethical and workload reasons. The CLINTON Administration had called for a 25 percent cut. Under the BUSH Administration the Counsel's office had 18 to 20 lawyers at its peak and when CLINTON took office there were only 6 or 7. There were many discussions about the composition and the character of the associates in the Counsel's office and everybody was spread incredibly thin.

LYONS was not aware of any matter which caused FOSTER to be working very closely with PATSY THOMASSON or MAGGIE WILLIAMS.

It is LYONS' opinion that FOSTER had a very strong and very stable marriage with LISA FOSTER. He does not know who FOSTER may have regarded as a confidant but he would guess that it was LISA FOSTER. LYONS further advised that rumors of an affair between FOSTER and HILLARY CLINTON had no basis in fact. He speculated that the rumors were fueled by the fact that they traveled together as attorneys must sometimes. FOSTER never discussed the rumors with LYONS. There did not appear to be a need to do so because they both understood that such tawdry rumors were just an unfortunate effect of professionals, men and women, working and traveling together.

LYONS also could not provide any information with regard to the handling of FOSTER's papers in his office following his death.

In closing, LYONS said that he never saw any indication whatsoever of "unbalance" in FOSTER. They had spent a lot of time together in Little Rock and had much in common. They shared similar wedding anniversaries and had talked about going together on a joint trip to celebrate those anniversaries. LYONS had seen no evidence of depression or psychiatric imbalance. He described FOSTER as very self-possessed and concluded that FOSTER had apparently been so good at appearing to cope with life that nobody noticed that he was ill.

JAMES M. LYONS, Attorney at Law, 1200 17th Street, Suite 3000, Denver, Colorado was telephonically contacted by writer in order to clarify some issues regarding the so-called LYONS report which appeared in the production of documents made by The White House. Being acquainted with the identity of the interviewing agent, LYONS provided the following information:

The purpose of the interview was to clarify the nature of three documents which had been found in VINCE FOSTER's office which are identical to exhibits number 10, 10A and 10B produced by The White House to the Office of the Independent Counsel on June 12, 1994. These three exhibits were described in detail by the writer to LYONS telephonically. LYONS advised that exhibit 10 (dek 004327) and 10A (dek 004329) comprised what is commonly known as "the LYONS report" as released to the public. Missing from what is in the current possession of the OIC from this report are two pages of sheets with financial data on them. One page is a balance sheet and the other is a statement of relative contributions. These missing sheets are in the possession of OIC but can be found in exhibit 10B (the first and third page of that exhibit with the three pages of financial data).

LYONS explained that exhibit 10B (dek 004332) is not a draft. It is a longer and more detailed version of the published LYONS report. It was issued the same day as the shorter version. It has more information in it than the LYONS report. For example, it talks about a $9,000 contribution made by the CLINTONs to Whitewater which CLINTON characterized as an interest payment. LYONS could not find supporting documentation for that characterization but he advised that the actual characterization of the money did not matter inasmuch as the aim of the report was simply to determine the total monies contributed. It also has an additional page (the second page of exhibit 10B's 3 page exhibit of financial data).

LYONS advised that he produced the longer report to include those items that did not have to be released to the public.

by SSA H. ALEXIS SUGGS Date dictated 6/29/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

LYONS advised that VINCE FOSTER, Jr. asked for and got both the shorter published LYONS report and the longer unpublished report in order to help him have the information he needed in order to file the CLINTONs' tax returns for Whitewater for '89, '90 and '91. VINCE never asked for or was given drafts of the LYONS report.

LYONS advised that there were a series of drafts which had been produced for the Office of the Independent Counsel based on subpoenas delivered to DONALD KAY and LYONS himself back in February, 1994. He advised that he was aware of one of the draft reports having been leaked to the press some time within the last month. He has no idea how or who leaked the draft to the press.

JAMES LAWRENCE MACDONALD, JR., Director of Information Systems and Technology for the Office of Administration of the Executive Office of the President was interviewed in his office in the New Executive Office Building. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, MACDONALD provided the following information:

MACDONALD advised that he has worked at The White House since August of 1991 and was then Assistant Information Resource Management Director. He was Co-Director at the Department as of July 1993 and has held the current position as Director since September 1993.

MACDONALD advised that he remembers hearing of VINCE FOSTER, JR.'s death. He did not know him and had no direct personal or professional involvement in the events surrounding FOSTER's death at the time that it occurred, except that on July 21, 1993, the day after VINCE FOSTER's death, MACDONALD called BRUCE OVERTON in the Office of Administration Counsel's Office and suggested that a back-up should be made of anything on VINCE FOSTER's computer if he had one. MACDONALD believes that OVERTON called The White House Counsel to make such an offer but MACDONALD's office never got a return call asking them to do anything. This was not unusual.

Months later, at the request of The White House Counsel's office in May or early June of 1994, current White House Counsel LLOYD CUTLER's office called the Office of Administration General Counsel CHRIS CERF, phone number 395-6963, in order to request that a study be conducted of any and all aspects of VINCE FOSTER's use or access to computers.

MACDONALD explained that he was an auditor for years and so he tackled the task with a great deal of thoroughness and experience. He tracked every single personal computer (hereinafter PC) that VINCE FOSTER may have had access to in order to track every computer he may have used and where those computers ended up. He determined that there was no E-mail activity on the computer in VINCE FOSTER's office and, in fact, there were unopened messages on the computer indicating that FOSTER, in fact, never used his computer.

MACDONALD advised that as a general rule, if computers need to be moved, MACDONALD's department does the work. It happens occasionally that people move their own computers although they should not. MACDONALD's office periodically does physical audits of what equipment is located where and who is using it. This is done on an annual basis as a courtesy to The White House. There are six computers in The White House Counsel's office.

MACDONALD advised that Help Desk activity (the problem resolution tracking system referred to as CZAR) showed that in October 1993, DEBORAH GORHAM called the Help Desk and asked that someone come by and make back-up tapes from the hard drive in her computer. An individual in MACDONALD's office named PAULA SHERRY completed the service request and reported in her notes that GORHAM had mentioned that the PC hard drive she was making tapes of had been utilized for VINCE FOSTER's work.

The only "anomaly" that MACDONALD observed in the course of his study of VINCE FOSTER's use of electronic data was a disruption in accounting for the chain of custody of the machine in his office. He explained that in the final weeks of the BUSH Administration, all the hard drives in the Counsel's office had been removed from the machines in order to turn them over to the FBI in connection with a criminal investigation that they were conducting. At that time a fresh hard drive was inserted into all computers and a log of custody was begun. The log for the machine in VINCE FOSTER's office shows that in February 1993 there was a request to MACDONALD's office to install E-mail onto VINCE FOSTER's personal computer. MACDONALD recalls that his service person found the computer buried with paper, obviously not in constant use and connected the E-mail. There is no electronic record of VINCE FOSTER ever using his E-mail or his computer.

There then occurred what MACDONALD characterized loosely as a break in custody when the PC was found later on the floor outside TOM CASTELTON's office in the Old Executive Office Building. The machine was not being used and the break in custody arises from the fact that there is no record of who disconnected the machine from FOSTER's office and moved into the Old Executive Office Building. MACDONALD speculated that it could have been done by one of the contractors used by his office who for some reason neglected to do the paperwork showing the service. MACDONALD said that this breakdown of the system bothered him a little bit, but he conceded that it frequently happens. He advised that it would have been possible to tamper with the machine during this period. Someone could have switched hard drives. It would also be very easy to erase all data on the hard drive and there would be no way to know that had happened. He said that TOM CASTELTON eventually inherited that machine some time in November 1993, and that the hard drive broke a couple months later (possibly January) and was scrapped.

Everything that MACDONALD picked up in the course of his study indicates that DEBORAH GORHAM did all of VINCE FOSTER's work on her computer in the Counsel's office. In November of 1993, GORHAM was evidently leaving government employ and, according to appropriate procedures, cassettes were made of all the work on her computer. Two sets were made. One was for DEBORAH GORHAM herself. The White House kept the other set. MACDONALD verified that both tapes representing The White House's copies are still being maintained in a locked cabinet. MACDONALD further advised that just a couple of months ago, The White House Counsel asked for hard copies of the taped backup which produced hard copies of all the directories. Subsequent to that certain letters were requested from those directories. As far as MACDONALD knows, the hard drive that DEBORAH GORHAM used to do VINCE FOSTER's work is still in place in the Counsel's office. Any files in existence on the hard drive which had been deleted are currently still there but are being written over as the hard drive is used.

MACDONALD advised that he saw nothing in the course of doing his study that indicated any activity showing unusual requests for deleting documents or retrieving deleted documents or any other kind of activity that might be the least bit irregular. There are also no other relevant Help Desk records.

MACDONALD advised that should the Office of the Independent Counsel wish to get a copy of the study that he conducted for LLOYD CUTLER's office, he said that it could be described as a white binder of service activities created by the Office of Administration for The White House Counsel regarding computer equipment used by VINCE FOSTER and associated counsel in the 2nd floor of the West Wing. It was created approximately May or June 1994. MACDONALD further advised that it is a compilation of service records. There is no explanatory summary that accompanies those documents. Requests for the contents of the white binder should be made to the Office of Administration General Counsel, CHRIS CERF.

MACDONALD advised that he knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE professionally and has had only limited contact with him on the subject of building passes.

MARLENE A. MACDONALD, Staff Assistant for the Counsel to the President, (see below for address and telephone information) was interviewed at the Office of Independent Counsel in Washington D.C. where she arrived for a prearranged appointment. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, MACDONALD provided the following information:

MACDONALD was a volunteer in the Office of the Counsel to the President beginning the third week in June 1993. She worked in the office space with the BERNARD NUSSBAUM, VINCE FOSTER JR, Executive Assistants BETSY POND, LINDA TRIPP, and DEBORAH GORHAM, and Special Assistant TOM CASTLETON. As of July 20, 1993 she was volunteering her time on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays doing some drafting and typing of letters for NUSSBAUM (never for FOSTER), answering phones, and occasionally some minor task, such as photocopying, for FOSTER. GORHAM did everything for FOSTER.

MACDONALD only knew FOSTER for a month, and explained that he never warmed up to her. She advised that he never acknowledged her presence, much less was friendly or warm. In his defense, she said that he did not appear to be a very outgoing person even with other people. But she was nonetheless hurt and insulted by his behavior towards her. The stories she heard about FOSTER after his death did not comport with the man she had known.

She also remarked that he appeared extremely skinny to her. POND and TRIPP commented that he had lost weight. MACDONALD could not understand it, because he ate a lot of cheeseburgers and liked M&Ms. MACDONALD believed that you have to order onions on the cheeseburgers in the White House mess if you want them. She did not know if FOSTER liked them or not.

The Friday before his death, FOSTER left early because he was going away for the weekend. He was asked where he was going, and he answered, "Wherever my wife takes me." MACDONALD got the impression that he had wanted to work that Saturday, but that his wife had insisted they go away.

Because of her work schedule, MACDONALD was not at work on Tuesday, July 20, 1993. At 8:00am on the morning of 7/21/93, POND called her and notified her of FOSTER's death. POND asked her to come in early to help with the phone calls, so MACDONALD arrived at work at 9:00am. GORHAM, CASTLETON, POND, and TRIPP were there. The door to the entire suite was closed, as was the door to FOSTER's office. The entire day's events are fuzzy. She recalled that FOSTER's office was sealed later in the morning. President CLINTON came by. A Secret Service guard (in a suit, not a uniform) who was guarding the door to FOSTER's office pumped her for information about what she knew about what might have happened. She said she did not know anything, but was alarmed by his questions and complained to a secretary in an adjoining office named Pan Ronet (phonetic).

Because of the unusual situation, MACDONALD worked Thursday that week. She does not remember anybody going into FOSTER's office, except on Thursday, when NUSSBAUM went in with nine other men. It struck her as "crazy" for all those men to be crammed in such a small office. She does not recall anything having been moved in FOSTER's office on Wednesday, the 21st except POND said she'd straightened some papers out of habit.

On Friday, July 23, 1993 CASTLETON and MACDONALD were the only two in the office, the rest having gone to FOSTER's funeral in Little Rock. A secretary from Correspondence (a "career person" who had been at the White House for years) sat in with them and helped them with phone calls. FOSTER's office remained closed and she did not see anybody go into it.

On Monday, July 26, 1993, approximately 8-8:30pm she recalls that NUSSBAUM, NEUWIRTH, and CLIFF SLOAN were in NUSSBAUM's office. MACDONALD and TRIPP were the only support staff still there. The atmosphere was tense. One could tell that they had something--the air was tense. At one point they wanted to use the typewriter, which was in TRIPP's desk area, and she said to them "So there's no record on the computer?!" MACDONALD advised that in her opinion, TRIPP was not joking with them. After that, they had her type it on her computer. MACDONALD does not know what it was, maybe a press release. She advised that it was not the text of the torn up note they'd found in the briefcase.

Finally, MACDONNALD does not know what FOSTER was working on when he died. She also does not recall seeing MARSHA SCOTT anytime in the office right before or following his death.

MACDONALD provided the following personal information about herself:

Michelle DeAnne Macon, Officer, Uniform Division (Special Operations section), United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. Officer Macon was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

She has been employed by USSS for four and one half years and is currently responsible for leading both public and congressional tours through portions of The White House. She was performing the same duties on July 20, 1993 at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death. Her office is located at 1310 L Street NW, and her telephone number is 202-395-4418.

On July 20, 1993, she worked the 6:30 am - 2:30 pm shift at The White House giving tours. She stated that she can recall nothing unusual or out of the ordinary about July 20 except that they were very busy with tours on that day, since that is the peak tourist season in Washington, D.C. and at The White House.

On July 21, 1993, Officer Macon reported to work at approximately 6:15 am at which time she, watching a television news announcement just prior to USSS role call, became aware of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death on July 20. She went to her regularly assigned post and began giving tours at approximately 7:30 am that day. At approximately 10:00 am that morning, she was approached by USSS Inspector Dennis Martin and another USSS official, perhaps Assistant Special Agent in Charge Paul Imbordino. They advised her that an investigation would shortly be underway concerning Foster's death and that a USSS post was being established outside Vincent Foster's office door. She was to be the first USSS uniform officer placed on that post. She and the two men immediately began walking towards the west wing of The White House while they continued to advise her regarding instructions. She was told that she was to see to it that no one went into Foster's office and that nothing was taken out of or put into Foster's office. It was her understanding that if a high ranking White House official insisted on going into Foster's office, she was to advise him that this was not allowed but was to also allow entry and to make a note of it. She assumed the new post outside Vincent Foster's door at approximately 10:10-10:15 am. She noted that she had never been to Vincent Foster's office before that time and has not been there since July 21, 1993.

Upon assuming this post Officer Macon made sure that the door to Foster's office was closed and stood in front of it. She was permanently relieved from this post at approximately 12 noon by USSS Officer Robert Popic. Officer Macon stated that shortly after she took her post, Bernard Nussbaum, Counsel to the President, approached the door to the office and told her he wished to go in. She advised him that no one was allowed in Foster's office at which time he told her that he understood that but that he simply wanted to get a photograph from the office to show to the President. Officer Macon opened the door and allowed Nussbaum in and went inside with him. She advised that Nussbaum was only inside Vincent Foster's office a matter of seconds in that he walked directly to the photograph as if he had seen it before and knew exactly where it was. She stated that while she cannot recall the exact location of the photograph, she believes that it was an unframed photograph measuring approximately five inches by seven inches that was sitting on either the bookshelf, table, or desk in the office. She observed Nussbaum pick up the photograph and turn and leave the office. She stated that Nussbaum did not bring anything into the office, did not leave anything in the office, and did not take anything else from the office other than the one photograph. After a brief time, both he and Officer Macon exited the office with her closing the door behind them. Nussbaum then went into his office and she reassumed her stance in front of Foster's door. Officer Macon stated that she believed that one of the secretary's in the reception area could probably tell that she felt uncomfortable with Nussbaum entering the office in that it was counter to the orders that she had been given. She advised that this secretary (name unknown) told her that the photograph taken by Nussbaum was a photograph of President Clinton and Vincent Foster when they were children. She advised that she had briefly seen the photograph and that it was of a group of people (possibly six-eight) that appeared to be perhaps school-age boys.

Officer Macon advised that shortly after Nussbaum obtained the photograph and went into his office the President of

The United States, Bill Clinton, entered the reception area outside Nussbaum and Foster's office. She stated that President Clinton made "small talk" with the secretary's present in the room and then went into Bernard Nussbaum's office and stayed approximately 5 to 10 minutes. She stated that she was aware that there were other people in Nussbaum's office with he and the President but she could not identify these people and can not recall any of the conversation that took place in the office. She said that at no time while the President was in the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices did the President, Nussbaum, nor anyone else go into Foster's office.

Officer Macon said that after the President had been in Nussbaum's office approximately 5-10 minutes he left and shortly thereafter all of the employees in the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices also left to go to what she understood was a hastily called White House staff meeting. She said that she overheard Mr. Nussbaum's secretary saying that he was going to a meeting on The White House west wing first floor although no further details were given.

Once relieved from this post in front of Vincent Foster's door, she returned to her regular duties of giving White House tours and ended her shift that day at 2:30 pm and went home.

Michelle Macon stated that she never knew Vincent Foster, Jr. either personally or professionally and to the best of her knowledge had never seen nor spoken to him prior to his death.

"MAIL CLERKS"

4/29/94

On 2/28/94, writer, SSA H. Alexis Suggs, conducted inquiries at the White House regarding the mail pick-ups from VINCE FOSTER JR's office in the White House Counsel's Office in the West Wing of the White House. MANUEL ANTHONY MENDOZA, Manager, Customer Services, United States Postal Service Mail Section, and JAMES M. REAGAN, Assistant Superintendent, White House Mail Section (both individuals are U.S. Postal employees detailed to the White House) provided procedural information and a partial physical tour of the facilities.

On or about July 20, 1993 couriers, also called mail clerks, made their rounds of the Offices in the West Wing every 1 hour and 45 minutes. They used carts which separated internal White House mail from regular mail going to addresses outside the White House. The pace of their pickups is not condusive to scrutiny of individual pieces of mail. External mail is jumbled into huge baskets which, at the Mail Section in the Old Executive Office Building, are again sorted into White House return addresses (processed for franking and subsequent mailing) and personal pieces of mail which are already stamped. The latter are quickly separated and placed into the regular mail as a courtesy to employees.

The process and volume of mail is such that unless the individual couriers would happen to remember seeing FOSTER's mail at the time of pick-up and have occassion to remember it because of his later death, individual pieces of personal mail which FOSTER mailed prior to his death are untraceable.

The following White House Mail Clerks were interviewed on 4/28/94 at the Old Executive Office Building, White House Mail Section, The White House, Washington D.C. 20500-0049 by SSA H. Alexis Suggs and were unable to provide any information regarding three items of personal mail allegedly placed in VINCE FOSTER JR's outgoing mail in the Office of Cousel for the White House on July 19 or 20, 1993:

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 10/18/94

MR. ANTHONY (TONY) MARCECA was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and further informed that the agents wished to speak to him regarding his responsibilities and association with MR. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, when he, MARCECA, worked for LIVINGSTONE in the office of White House security in 1993.

MARCECA stated that he first met CRAIG LIVINGSTONE in 1984 when both of them worked on the campaign of SENATOR GARY HART. Their supervisor at that time was a woman named CARLA REAM (phonetic). MS. REAM is also a very close friend of the current first family, in particular, MRS. CLINTON. It is his understanding that MR. LIVINGSTONE became acquainted with the CLINTON's and involved in the CLINTON campaign because of his prior association with MS. REAM.

In November of 1992 following CLINTON's election to the Presidency, LIVINGSTONE called him, informing him that PRESIDENT CLINTON wanted LIVINGSTONE to be his Director of White House security. LIVINGSTONE asked him to assist, informing him that he would have the White House send a letter to the U.S. Army asking, that he, MARCECA, be detailed over to the White House. Initially, the U.S. Army refused this request and MARCECA, since he was very interested in assisting LIVINGSTONE, independently decided to take extended annual leave for a period of six to eight weeks. During this time, he reported to the White House without pay, under the direction of MR. LIVINGSTONE and assisted him in security matters, primarily the review of applications for people seeking employment in the new administration. In March of 1993, White House presidential assistant BILL KENNEDY again wrote to the U.S. Army asking that he, MARCECA, be detailed over to the White House and the U.S. Army agreed to this second request.

MARCECA began to report full-time in this new position in early August of 1993, noting that at the time of VINCENT FOSTER's death, July 20, 1993, he was not on board. His job consisted primarily of reviewing background investigations for applicants who were applying for lower level staff positions. Review of background investigations for high-level political appointees was handled by a MR. BUENO (phonetic) who worked on the staff of presidential assistant BILL KENNEDY. MR. MARCECA pointed out that he is a handwriting expert, having taken numerous courses in this field while employed with the U.S. Army, CID. He noted that as part of his review of background applications, he would attempt to uncover possible problems with applicants based on an analysis of handwriting samples that were often available, adding that he would advise MR. LIVINGSTONE of the results of his analysis for whatever action or follow up MR. LIVINGSTONE deemed appropriate. He continued in this role till February 15, 1994, the date that the special detail concluded. He stated that MR. LIVINGSTONE tried to have the detail extended but the U.S. Army refused.

MR. MARCECA stated that he considers MR. LIVINGSTONE one of his closest friends. He stated that within a couple of weeks of FOSTER's death, he had occasion to talk to MR. LIVINGSTONE. He recalled LIVINGSTONE telling him how he was asked to assist presidential assistant BILL KENNEDY in identifying the body. He also recalled asking LIVINGSTONE about what the scene looked like, stating that LIVINGSTONE choked up, remarking it was the first time he had to identify a body and he found it difficult to talk about it. MARCECA stated that it was his impression that LIVINGSTONE had gone out to Ft. Marcy Park and had identified the body at the park. MARCECA stated it was during this conversation that he attempted to console MR. LIVINGSTONE telling him that he should have called him, MARCECA, for help and advice. He remembers LIVINGSTONE asking him what he, MARCECA, would have done and he responded that it would have been best to call the FBI. MARCECA stated that LIVINGSTONE shrugged his shoulders and had no further comment regarding the matter.

MARCECA stated the only other conversations or information that he was aware of concerning the FOSTER death investigation and the events of July 20, and 21, 1993, involved a conversation he had with BETSY POND, one of the secretarial support persons who worked in Chief Counsel NUSSBAUM's office. In December of 1993, he had given MS. POND a ride out to a local shopping center during which time she had remarked that she had been at the Chief Counsel's office when VINCE FOSTER left around 1:00 p.m. on the afternoon of July 20, 1993. POND remarked to him that when leaving, FOSTER seemed to be "OK." POND also related to him how she was present at the Chief Counsel's office later that evening when PRESIDENT CLINTON came up. The PRESIDENT gave her a hug and attempted to comfort her. POND also remarked that after everyone had left, she went into VINCE FOSTER's office and just sat there for a few minutes in a chair and cried by herself.

MARCECA stated that it was his understanding, based on his conversations with LIVINGSTONE, that LIVINGSTONE also was involved in having the body taken back to Arkansas for burial and played some role in providing security regarding the funeral services in Little Rock, Arkansas. MARCECA was asked specifically whether LIVINGSTONE had ever mentioned going to the FOSTER home on July 20-21, 1993, to control or run interference regarding the media and ensure that the FOSTER family was protected. He stated that LIVINGSTONE never commented on those matters to him. MARCECA was also specifically asked whether LIVINGSTONE had ever talked to him regarding his activities or responsibilities on the morning of July 21, 1993. MR. MARCECA replied that LIVINGSTONE never specifically mentioned any activities or responsibilities other than to say that he had been asked by PRESIDENT CLINTON to assist and help with funeral arrangements. MARCECA was also asked whether LIVINGSTONE had ever made any remarks regarding allegations that records relating to FOSTER's work had been removed from FOSTER's office the night of his death. MARCECA stated that LIVINGSTONE never made any comment regarding such allegations or records. At the conclusion of the interview, the following background information was obtained.

David Margolis appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 1:30 p.m. for interview. Mr. Margolis was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and that the purpose of the interview was to discuss his involvement in the search of Vincent Foster's White House office on July 22, 1993 and events surrounding that search. In addition to the interviewing agents, Carl Stich, Assistant to Independent Counsel, Robert B. Fiske, Jr., also assisted with the interview. Mr. Margolis provided the following information:

He is presently Associate Deputy Attorney General, United States Department of Justice (DOJ), Washington, D.C. He learned of Vincent Foster's death the day after the apparent suicide from newspaper articles. He did not personally know Vincent Foster.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, July 21, 1993, while he was attending a meeting in the DOJ Executive Offices, he was interrupted with the message that the Deputy Attorney General, Phillip Heyman, his direct boss, wanted to talk with him. He was thereafter advised by Heyman that he and Roger Adams would be going over to the White House to participate in a search of Vincent Foster's office. This search would be limited to a search for a possible suicide note. Originally, it had been planned that Adams would go by himself but in view of the fact that Adams had been detailed to the White House office concerning ethics matters in the past, it was decided that someone else from the DOJ should also attend. Margolis had also had previous dealings with the White House. They were to meet with Bernard Nussbaum, White House Counsel. It was understood that the U.S. Park Police would conduct the investigation. Margolis asked that the FBI be included, as he was familiar with their resources and abilities. Heyman checked with the U.S. Park Police concerning this recommendation and they indicated that working with the FBI was done routinely anyway and that this would be no problem. Heyman had talked with Nussbaum and had worked out a procedure for the search so that White House Presidential documents could be protected. The plan, as explained, included that Adams and Margolis would look at the first page of each document to make a determination as to its relevancy. Margolis was not sure if Heyman and Nussbaum had agreed to this.

Meeting with Nussbaum on the Afternoon of July 21, 1993:

Once at the White House, this plan was presented to Nussbaum and after some discussion, Nussbaum accepted it. However, a White House staff member, Steven Neuwirth, raised the issue that the DOJ representatives and agents should just sit there. The original discussion concerning the procedure had included privacy issues of the first couple, Presidential papers, and even executive privilege. Nussbaum, who was the boss, agreed to the original plan despite Neuwirth's recommendation. Margolis therefore "blew off" Neuwirth's suggestion. Margolis had been annoyed by it. All parties agreed that it was getting too late to start the search for that day, and therefore the search would be done the following day. Margolis and Adams had arrived at the White House at approximately 4:30 p.m., July 21, 1993, for these preliminary discussions. They stayed approximately 45 minutes, leaving at approximately 6:30 or 6:45 p.m. The time difference being travel and waiting time.

Those present for these discussions on July 21, 1993 included Charlie Hume and Pete Markland from the U.S. Park Police; Scott Salter and one other agent, perhaps Dennis Condon, from the FBI; Nussbaum and Neuwirth from the White House and Adams and Margolis. The negotiations ended with the understanding that Adams and Margolis would look at the first page of the documents. Neither the U.S. Park Police nor the FBI would have to be present for this procedure and could use their time conducting other interviews.

It was also agreed during the July 21, 1993 meeting that a lock would be placed on the door to Vincent Foster's office. Therefore, an officer from the U.S. Secret Service would no longer have to be posted outside this office.

Margolis was asked whether it was discussed who had been in and out of the Foster office. He said that it had not been mentioned who had been in the office since the death, except that Nussbaum had said that he had been in there. He (Margolis) was not told that either Patsy Thomasson or Betsy Pond had been in the office. There was no discussion of a search at a location other than Vincent Foster's office.

Margolis noted that if this case had involved IBM, he would have insisted on looking at everything. But given the sensitivity of Presidential documents and First Family privacy and the fact that the Foster office was not a crime scene, and Nussbaum and the White House were not suspects, he agreed to the search as planned. He didn't expect a suicide note to be hidden elsewhere.

Upon returning to the Department of Justice, Margolis advised Heyman of the meeting. This had been Margolis' first exposure to Nussbaum and he described him as being peripatetic.

Meeting with Nussbaum on Morning of July 22, 1993:

Upon arrival at the White House at approximately 10:00 a.m., July 22, 1993, Nussbaum told Margolis there had been a change of plan for the search of Vincent Foster's White House office. Nussbaum explained that Margolis and the officers would come in and Nussbaum, with his associates, would do the search. Margolis recognized this as a complete change of plan, no question about it.

Margolis remembered telling Nussbaum that if this case had involved IBM or Xerox, he would be back with a subpoena for all of the documents. Nussbaum noted that this was the White House and that if this was IBM or Xerox, they would have smart lawyers and the documents would be gone before you get there.

When asked about Nussbaum's comment, Margolis noted a newspaper account of Nussbaum as having a "tin ear for appearances." He would say the wrong thing to the wrong person at the wrong time.

Margolis asked Nussbaum if Deputy Attorney General Heyman had agreed to this change. Nussbaum answered something like "not exactly." Immediately thereafter, Margolis called Heyman and advised him that he didn't want to be a party to the search if conducted under the changed procedure. He said that the new procedure would be no different than if he (Margolis) returned to his office and had Nussbaum mail him the results of the search. His being there didn't add anything, and it was a change in decision that Nussbaum couldn't articulate a reason for. Nussbaum was not present during this telephone conversation between Margolis and Heyman.

Heyman and Margolis agreed that Margolis would argue for the original plan and that Heyman would also call Nussbaum. Margolis would threaten to leave if the original plan was not followed. Margolis explained that if there could be no agreement, he had two choices: (1) walk away, or (2) conduct the search under his (Nussbaum's) terms. Number 2 was the bottom-line choice if no agreement could be reached, as at least the search would get done. Timing-wise and thoroughness-wise, Margolis had no confidence that Nussbaum would get it done. If he just walked away, Nussbaum would perhaps respond in two weeks or so. Heyman had exploded like Margolis did when he learned of the proposed change in plan. Heyman called Nussbaum. Margolis was not in the room when they talked. He had stepped out.

The bottom line explained to Nussbaum was that it was a huge mistake to change the plan and have only White House people review the documents. It was explained to Nussbaum that it would be his (Nussbaum's) mistake and not DOJ's. Margolis told Nussbaum that he would have to accept responsibility.

During the negotiations, Nussbaum was vacillating with both Margolis and Heyman. At one point, Nussbaum indicated that he and his people would have to caucus regarding the matter. Margolis indicated that along the way, he bluffed that he would go back to his office and Nussbaum should call him. He believed this made an impact on Nussbaum.

Margolis and Adams waited two hours while Nussbaum considered the matter. The stalemate ended at approximately 1:30 p.m. From 1:30 until 2:00 p.m., Margolis and Adams had lunch. Since there was no smoking in the building, Margolis went outside at one point with Adams. He noted that Nussbaum panicked when he came to look for them and explained that he thought that they had left. It was indicated that at 2:00 p.m. the search would be conducted and that Margolis and Adams would watch with the agents. Margolis told Nussbaum that this adjusted plan wasn't going to work and that he was going back to his office. In reply, Nussbaum said, "I know this is more for show, but I really think you should be here."

Search of Vincent Foster's White House Office, July 22, 1993:

The search of Foster's office was attended by Adams and Margolis from the Department of Justice; Scott Salter and Dennis Condon from the FBI; Charlie Hume and other U.S. Park Police personnel name(s) not recalled; a U.S. Secret Service person that had only a security interest in the matter; and Nussbaum, Sloan, Neuwirth, Burton and Neill (?), and a young associate from Attorney Hamilton's office by the name of Spafford. Margolis indicated that Spafford was a non-person until the end of the search at which time he was identified as being from Hamilton's law firm.

At this point in the interview, Margolis was shown a diagram (attached to this FD-302) of Foster's White House office and was asked to note the seating arrangement during the search on the diagram and he did so. He noted that the wing-backed chairs in the diagram would have been closer to the desk than indicated. This diagram indicates that Nussbaum was seated at Vince Foster's chair behind the desk flanked by Neuwirth and Sloan and that Margolis was sitting in the wing-backed chair to the left of the desk and Roger Adams in the wing-backed chair to the right of the desk. The FBI agents were seated on the loveseat in front of the desk but to the rear of the wing-backed chairs. Spafford and Burton were standing on the periphery and the U.S. Park Police were in the back of the room or perhaps even in the hallway. Burton was in and out of the room as was an individual by the name of Neill.

The search commenced at 2:00 p.m. and the following procedures followed: Nussbaum picked up things in Foster's office and assigned them to the following categories - Presidential documents; First Family personal records; Vincent Foster personal papers; and items given to law enforcement, such as calendars. There was also a category described as junk by Margolis which was shown to DOJ and the agents. These included such things as law books and other items not relative to the case.

Items on the bookcase were reviewed for relevancy.

Also, Margolis recalled computer documentation becoming a topic of discussion. Nussbaum was asked to turn the computer on but declined, saying that Foster was not computer literate.

Nussbaum agreed to do a review of the computer later and was adamant that it be done this way as there was no way to filter the computer information at this time.

During the search, Sloan and Neuwirth were continually whispering in Nussbaum's ear. Margolis described it as a "Wall Street discovery procedure." He noted it was driving the agents crazy, as they felt that if there was whispering, there was something to hide. It was being viewed as an adversary proceeding.

At one point during the search, FBI agent Scott Salter stood up to stretch and Cliff Sloan asked if he was not trying to read the documents. Later, Margolis remarked to Sloan as he was peering over Nussbaum's shoulder was he (Sloan) trying to read over Nussbaum's shoulder and Sloan, being a "nervous Nelly" stammered in response and then said, "of course I am."

Margolis advised that the briefcase in which the torn up note was eventually found in pieces several days later was out in plain view during the search. During a natural progression of the search, Nussbaum took items from the briefcase and, at one point, indicated that it was empty. However, he did not show the group that it was empty, but simply put the briefcase back against the wall.

Margolis noted that in Nussbaum's paranoia, he would perhaps miss something at that time. Nussbaum was guarded and less than open. There should be no false illusion about that. At the time, Margolis assumed the reason for this was to protect the First Family and the privacy of documents. However, after the note was found, he reached a different conclusion.

When asked if there had been discussion regarding documents going beyond a suicide note, Margolis answered that yes, it had been discussed that judgment would be needed. And with the change of rules for the search, that they would be looking not for just a note, but for something "irregular." Something which would shed light on why Foster would commit suicide, like a compromising photograph or blackmail letter, etc.

There were reams of paper, both handwritten and typed, in Foster's office. They were divided by Nussbaum into three piles - the real personal were given to Spafford, a huge pile of Presidential documents and First Family papers kept, and other items, such as calendars, termed by Margolis as "worthless," given to investigators. Margolis suggested that the Presidential documents and First Family papers be kept by Nussbaum for now and then inventoried. Nussbaum said he would consider this. Margolis also noted that a question occurred to him of whether White House Counsel should be working on Presidential personal matters. However, he was not at the White House at that time to consider this question.

The amount of documentation given to the investigators amounted to about two or three inches of piled papers. The personal Foster documents amounted to less than a box and the Presidential and First Family documents amounted to the equivalent of about ten Xerox-type boxes full. Margolis could not remember the breakdown between Presidential and First Family documentation. Foster's pictures remained on the wall. Margolis' assumption is that if there was something that cast a reason for the suicide, Nussbaum would have told those present.

When asked about Nussbaum's statement that he would admit the search was primarily for show, Margolis replied that he took it as a true statement. When it later appeared in news accounts that the search had been conducted "under the supervision of" the Department of Justice, etc., Margolis told Carl Stern, DOJ Public Affairs, to get the word out that the search had been "in the presence of" the DOJ, rather than under their supervision. Margolis said he had had the feeling of being used, but didn't know how at the time. When asked if anyone in the party had objected to the procedure followed, Margolis said that he was viewed by the investigators as the point man on the procedure. He also viewed the FBI as backup to the U.S. Park Police who actually had the investigation.

Margolis noted that during the search on two or three occasions he told Nussbaum to look at documentation more closely in making his determination as to which pile he would place the paper. He also noted the existence of telephone logs. When asked about a search of trash, Margolis said that Nussbaum had ordered a bag of trash brought back to Foster's office and Nussbaum went through this bag during the search. Margolis did not remember any incoming or outgoing mail being present.

At the end of the search, they simply walked out of the office. Margolis accompanied Spafford to his car along with the agents who helped him with his box of material.

Later, Margolis was contacted by Hamilton who advised that Nussbaum had made a mistake by giving him some Presidential or personal documentation. Margolis noted that he called Nussbaum on only one occasion after this search and it had not been related to the Foster matter, but rather in connection with an Attorney General nominee.

When Margolis returned to his office following the search, he told Heyman what had transpired and Heyman was just as displeased as Margolis was with how the search had been conducted. It was Margolis' understanding that Heyman had asked Nussbaum for a call back when Heyman suggested that the original plan be adhered to. Heyman was annoyed that he had not received a call back. It was his (Heyman's) intention that when and if Nussbaum called back not agreeing to the original plan, that he would tell "the tall lady" (the Attorney General) and have her call the President, knowing that Nussbaum was scared to death of the Attorney General.

A week to ten days following the search of Foster's office, Heyman called Margolis from the White House and advised that they had found a note in Foster's briefcase "all torn up." The U.S. Park Police took possession of this note. Margolis called FBI Assistant Director Larry Potts and requested that an obstruction of justice case be opened and instructed that the FBI not show any unwarranted courtesy in this matter. Later during the investigation, Heyman asked about the obstruction of justice phraseology, apparently upon being questioned on this by Nancy McFadden, an individual who had worked for the Clinton campaign. Margolis did not answer Heyman regarding this in the presence of McFadden, as he viewed it as a possible investigative technique that would lose its advantage if discussed in her presence.

Margolis was asked about any involvement by Webb Hubbell in this matter. Margolis answered that the day after the note was found, Hubbell came down very shook up and wanted to see the note. When shown Margolis' copy of the note, he (Hubbell) said it was not in Vincent's handwriting. This matter was resolved when it was learned that the transcription that Margolis had had been written by Neuwirth from the original torn note.

One other important area noted by Margolis, and he could not remember if it was after or before the note was found, concerned Collier, Chief of Staff for the Department of the Interior, coming to see Phil Heyman and Roger Adams. Collier was making a complaint concerning the White House treating the U.S. Park Police like dirt and "bullying" them. Collier viewed this as unfair and was on the verge of a pull-out because of White House Counsel behavior. Heyman said that he would talk to those guys and ultimately contacted Gergen and Nussbaum and read the "riot act" to them. Neill and Burton, White House Staff, reacted to these allegations by saying that they "had done everything right" and anything wrong was the fault of the U.S. Park Police. Margolis explained the problem as a cavalier attitude and partially a New York attitude. He advised that Adams took notes regarding the Collier visit with Heyman and Adams.

Mention was also made of an indented writing analysis conducted on a pad of paper found in Vincent Foster's office. It was a letter to Nussbaum and determined to be a White House privileged communication. This documentation was turned over by the FBI to Margolis to handle. He, in turn, sent it to Nussbaum. He did not break the seal on the document and doesn't know what was on it.

Margolis said that during the search the name "Madison" would have been a signal to him but not "Whitewater."

Before Heyman left the Department of Justice, he, Adams and Margolis dictated notes to Cynthia Monaco at the Department regarding a chronology of events concerning this matter. Since Heyman left the Department on February 14th, it was done prior to this time. Margolis knows that she has these notes, but does not believe that she has transcribed them, but could be contacted for a copy of them.

Margolis speculated that one of his hypothesis was that the suicide note had been found prior to the search of Foster's office but that he just doesn't know.

Margolis also speculated that during his two hour wait to begin the search of Foster's office, that Nussbaum had been on the phone to the First Lady regarding the procedure to be followed. Margolis said there was no question they didn't trust any of us. We were "career humps." Heyman had selected Margolis and Adams in particular because they were career personnel.

Margolis noted that Foster's sister, Sheila Anthony, is an Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs at the U.S. Department of Justice.

The following description of Margolis was obtained through observation and interview:

On April 11, 1994, Margolis telephoned SA William T. Guyton to be sure he had mentioned what Heyman had done after being contacted by Collier. He said Heyman had called Gergen and Nussbaum. Margolis had the "sense" that Heyman was put on the speaker phone and others at the White House were in the room during this phone conversation. Cindy Monaco may have been there.

Also on April 11, 1994, Margolis provided the attached notes/"hostile" questions prepared for the Deputy's press conference in connection with the Foster suicide. No proposed answers to these questions were prepared by Margolis. Margolis will provide a videotape or transcript of this press conference through Carl Stern if it is still available. Margolis kept no other notes regarding the search of Foster's office.

DAVID MARGOLIS, Associate Deputy Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), telephone (202) 514-4945 (work), (703) 264-0483 (home), was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. MARGOLIS was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview, which was a follow-up to his original interview with the Office of the Independent Counsel on April 11, 1994. CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR., assisted in this interview. MARGOLIS provided the following information:

In connection with the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office on July 22, 1993, following FOSTER's death, MARGOLIS and ROGER ADAMS represented the DOJ during the U.S. Park Police (USPP) investigation. When asked what understanding the Park Police may have had concerning the procedure for the search of FOSTER's office, MARGOLIS answered that the original plan was that he and ROGER ADAMS would look at the first page of any documents located in FOSTER's office. It was MARGOLIS' sense that BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief Counsel at the White House, and PHIL HEYMAN of the DOJ, had discussed this procedure. When MARGOLIS met with NUSSBAUM, there was an "unequivocal" agreement that this procedure would be followed. MARGOLIS could not recall if Captain CHARLES HUME, USPP, was in on this original meeting with NUSSBAUM or not. MARGOLIS said that the room where they met was small and there were people in the hallway. MARGOLIS was not sure if HUME was one of these individuals or not.

MARGOLIS understood his function at the White House to be two roles: (a) solidify the agreement with NUSSBAUM for the search and thereafter he and ROGER ADAMS look at documents located in FOSTER's office for privilege concerns, and (b) speaking on behalf of the Attorney General of the United States.

MARGOLIS felt there was a clear understanding with Captain HUME and the USPP that the Park Police would defer to the DOJ. MARGOLIS said that the Captain was glad that DOJ was there and wanted DOJ involvement. It was MARGOLIS' understanding that HUME had talked with PHIL HEYMAN regarding the DOJ participation. NUSSBAUM may also have been making this request.

The USPP looked to MARGOLIS for guidance. MARGOLIS described the first meeting on July 21, 1993 with NUSSBAUM as going as "smooth as glass." The next day, the USPP were caught by surprise. NUSSBAUM announced new rules for the search of FOSTER's office too late for anyone to object. It was a fait accompli.

The original procedure agreed to was that the USPP would spend the morning of July 22, 1993 conducting interviews of White House personnel and, at the same time, ADAMS and MARGOLIS would review FOSTER documents with NUSSBAUM. MARGOLIS believed this "pre-review" was okay with law enforcement. MARGOLIS said that he himself tossed and turned the night before the search regarding his involvement with making "calls" of privilege. The ground rules agreed to were that he would look at the "first page or so" of documents to determine privilege and relevance. MARGOLIS was concerned with the problem of "buried" relevant information within those documents.

MARGOLIS said it was not much of an oversimplification to say that during the search of VINCE FOSTER's office, they were looking for a "smoking gun." He elaborated by saying they were looking for pictures or a suicide note or anything else that would help explain FOSTER's death.

One of NUSSBAUM's errors in judgment concerning the search was that NUSSBAUM considered the investigators "gumshoes" who would be trampling through every detail of First Family records found in FOSTER's office. MARGOLIS said that this was not the case. They were not there for a full analysis of documents in FOSTER's office. They were "evidence casting" for the reason for FOSTER's death, like a note regarding a planned meeting he had for Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993, or something of this nature.

The USPP reaction to the change in procedure for the search of July 22, 1993 was one of puzzlement and an attitude of let's get it done.

MARGOLIS speculated there may have been someone else calling the shots for NUSSBAUM. He made this comment in explaining NUSSBAUM's change of plans for the search.

At either 1:30 p.m. or 2:00 p.m. on July 22, 1993, MARGOLIS could not remember the exact time, he was advised by NUSSBAUM that we have a "slight change" in ground rules for the search. At that point, the search was to begin at 2:00 p.m. MARGOLIS was not sure if the Park Police had been kept advised with a current status report of this change or not.

At the start of the search, NUSSBAUM announced that "I (NUSSBAUM) will look at the documents and decide if privilege exists, either Presidential or lawyer/client, in connection with personal documents or other stuff you can look at." Concerning the latter category, NUSSBAUM did locate such items. As an example, MARGOLIS cited a calendar. As an example of an overreaction to the privilege issue, MARGOLIS again mentioned NUSSBAUM locating a newspaper article and placing it in a privilege pile, saying that from looking at this article, investigators could tell an "executive agenda" and, therefore, this article should be placed in the privilege pile. The privilege issue was given a "very stringent test" by NUSSBAUM. Essentially, four piles of documents resulted: (a) Presidential material; (b) CLINTON family documents; (c) HAMILTON stuff (FOSTER personal documentation); and (d) total innocuous documents or a "you can see this" pile.

MARGOLIS was asked if there was an occasion where investigators would express an interest in documents after NUSSBAUM described the papers. MARGOLIS answered that this worked both ways. Sometimes the Park Police would express an interest and sometimes NUSSBAUM would say that an item located was something that may be relevant. MARGOLIS recalled telling NUSSBAUM "a couple of times" to read more of the document. MARGOLIS explained his concern as being one where he thought NUSSBAUM would miss some information because he was being too careless or too much in a hurry. MARGOLIS described this as "being BERNIE." MARGOLIS said "cops being cops" were suspicious of NUSSBAUM's motives from the "get go." MARGOLIS said they did not articulate these concerns, other than through their body language and groans at some of NUSSBAUM's jokes.

Following the search of FOSTER's office, MARGOLIS was worried that NUSSBAUM had "played him for a fool" as part of a "coverup." MARGOLIS spoke with HEYMAN regarding this and HEYMAN called NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM answered this charge with something like, "PHIL, how could you ask that?"

MARGOLIS could not remember an instance where the Park Police asked for an item during the search that they didn't get. There may have been some items that could have gone to JIM HAMILTON for a decision which they had expressed in, but MARGOLIS understood investigators later reviewed documents in HAMILTON's possession.

MARGOLIS recalled NUSSBAUM searching FOSTER's briefcase on July 22, 1993. He said NUSSBAUM was in a position to see if it was empty. MARGOLIS was satisfied through NUSSBAUM's "motions" and "eyes" and his (NUSSBAUM's) decision to discard it, that the briefcase was empty. He said to miss a torn up note in the briefcase, at best, was humiliating. MARGOLIS recalled NUSSBAUM looking into the briefcase and holding it up for the group as empty "in BERNIE style."

MARGOLIS said that at the time of the search, he "would like to think" that the mention of Whitewater or Madison would have "triggered me." MARGOLIS doesn't recall seeing or hearing any statements regarding Whitewater or Madison during the search on July 22, 1993. He explained his familiarity with Madison as being his involvement with a previous USA declination concerning Madison.

MARGOLIS was asked how many copies of the USPP report of the FOSTER death investigation were received by the DOJ. MARGOLIS answered that the DOJ received one, maybe two, copies of the report. There would have been one for MARGOLIS and one for the Deputy, PHIL HEYMAN. He said copies could have been reproduced at his or HEYMAN's direction. He believes he authorized copies for the FBI and DOJ Office of Professional Responsibility. MARGOLIS believed he gave a copy to the FBI, although the FBI may have also received a copy directly from the Park Police. MARGOLIS said that ADAMS or special assistants at DOJ would have used existing copies of the report. MARGOLIS said the Department does not have a system to sign for such items or numbered copies. MARGOLIS also recalled that prior to the press conference on the FOSTER investigation, that CARL STERN had wanted to give out copies of this report at the press conference. MARGOLIS was able to prevail upon him to not do so.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 3/2/95

DAVID MARGOLIS (DOB: FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C)) Associate Deputy Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), (202) 514-4945, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel - Whitewater, in the presence of Deputy Independent Counsel MARK TUOHEY, Associate Independent Counsel BRETT KAVANAUGH and JOHN BATES. This interview is a supplement to two previous interviews conducted on 4/11/94 and 6/8/94, and was conducted to review his recollection of events concerning the search of VINCENT W. FOSTER's office at the White House subsequent to FOSTER's death in July of 1993. MARGOLIS was advised of the identities of all the individuals present in the interview.

MARGOLIS provided the following additional information:

MARGOLIS was treated poorly by the White House Counsel's Office during the search of FOSTER's office. MARGOLIS told NUSSBAUM that he was making a mistake, but NUSSBAUM would not listen to him. NUSSBAUM may have been "just doing what he was told to do."

MARGOLIS did not personally know VINCENT FOSTER, and only learned of his death through the newspapers on the following day.

PHIL HEYMAN directed MARGOLIS and ADAMS to coordinate the details of the office search with NUSSBAUM. Capt. HUME from the U.S. Park Police was going to be present for the search. MARGOLIS requested that the FBI also become involved in the search.

There was an agreement reached on July 21 with NUSSBAUM regarding the procedure to search the office. MARGOLIS and ADAMS, in conjunction with members of the White House Counsel's Office would make decisions regarding the relevance of each document to the death investigation. Privileged documents would be culled out by MARGOLIS, ADAMS, and members of the White House Counsel, specifically NUSSBAUM. The next day, which was to be the day of the search, NUSSBAUM unilaterally changed the procedure for the search. NUSSBAUM stated that he personally would review each document to determine any privilege. This review would be done in the presence of MARGOLIS and ADAMS. MARGOLIS was of the opinion that NEUWIRTH may be partly responsible for the switch in plans. MARGOLIS recalled that NEUWIRTH told them that "BERNIE will review the documents in your presence." This surprised MARGOLIS, because NEUWIRTH was present when the original procedure was agreed upon. MARGOLIS suspected that privacy issues and a lack of trust of MARGOLIS and ADAMS prompted the switch in procedures.

MARGOLIS stated that there was no tension or rivalry between the FBI and the Park Police. It appeared as though it was their usual practice to work together during these types of cases.

MARGOLIS stated that there was never any misunderstanding or lack of knowledge regarding the original procedures for the search. The procedures were unilaterally changed. NUSSBAUM and NEUWIRTH specifically used the phrase "there's been a change in plans."

MARGOLIS telephoned PHIL HEYMANN on July 22 from the White House to inform him of the change. HEYMANN was just as mad and frustrated as MARGOLIS. HEYMANN wanted MARGOLIS to argue for the original agreement. They considered walking out of the situation, but MARGOLIS believes the final decision was to go forward with the search even if he was unable to convince NUSSBAUM to go back to the original plan. MARGOLIS was not confident that NUSSBAUM would complete the search in a timely fashion if they were to leave. However, HEYMANN had a different impression. HEYMANN expected a telephone call from NUSSBAUM if MARGOLIS was unable to convince him to return to the original agreement. HEYMANN wanted to talk with NUSSBAUM prior to the search.

Due to NUSSBAUM's attitude, demeanor, and mannerisms, MARGOLIS thinks that he was ordered to change the original agreement. NUSSBAUM was very uncomfortable, and seemed to be impressed by MARGOLIS advising him that he was making a big mistake.

There was approximately a two hour delay prior to the start of the search on July 22. NUSSBAUM was considering all of the issues. The agents and officers were involved in interviews of White House personnel; the information they were learning indicated that FOSTER's death was a suicide. FOSTER seemed to have a mental health problem. As a result, the FBI was taking a back seat to the Park Police.

ROGER ADAMS was of the opinion that the two hour delay was caused by NUSSBAUM attempting to contact the First Lady.

At approximately 2:00 p.m., NUSSBAUM reached a final decision and announced that he would be reviewing the documents in the presence of MARGOLIS and ADAMS. MARGOLIS threatened to leave. NUSSBAUM told him that the whole procedure was "just for show", but it was important for appearances that MARGOLIS and ADAMS stay. MARGOLIS had the impression that NUSSBAUM "knew he was jerking us around," but that they needed them to be present.

NUSSBAUM would not have contacted HUBBELL at DOJ. He would have been sensitive to any White House-DOJ contact. Additionally, HUBBELL would have had no authority; this was clearly HEYMANN's responsibility.

MARGOLIS was shown a previously drawn sketch of FOSTER's office depicting the locations of all the individuals in the room at the time of the search. MARGOLIS identified the sketch and stated that it was accurate.

NUSSBAUM conducted a nonmethodical, careless search of FOSTER's documents. NUSSBAUM would determine the nature of the document and state that the document was a "sensitive issue", "irrelevant", or that the item was something FOSTER was working on for the White House or the First Family. Some items NUSSBAUM labeled as VINCE's personal items", he gave to an individual named SPAFFORD, who was an attorney with a law firm representing LISA FOSTER.

NUSSBAUM first started searching the papers on top of FOSTER's desk, then to the desk drawers, and next he went through the bookcases along the walls. MARGOLIS had the impression that NUSSBAUM went through all of the drawers and cabinets.

MARGOLIS stated that the Park Police and FBI had no access to items not specifically given to them by NUSSBAUM. The ground rules for the search had been established; everyone understood that items that were identified as "privileged" by NUSSBAUM, for whatever reason, were not going to be given to the investigators, whether they asked for them or not. MARGOLIS would occasionally ask NUSSBAUM look closer at a particular document, and not to be so hasty in keeping it from the investigators. Very few items were offered to them, and only a few of those items were requested by the investigators. They were specifically looking for a suicide note, but they would have taken anything that would help establish FOSTER's state of mind.

MARGOLIS was shown FOSTER's briefcase. MARGOLIS was unable to positively identify the briefcase, but stated that it looked similar to the one that was in FOSTER's office and was searched by NUSSBAUM. MARGOLIS recalled FOSTER's briefcase as appearing "stiffer". The briefcase was sitting upright on the floor immediately adjacent to FOSTER's desk. MARGOLIS did not pay particular attention to the appearance of the briefcase.

During the search, NUSSBAUM picked up the briefcase. It was full of files and papers. NUSSBAUM went through each file and document, identified what category it belonged in, and set it on one of the piles. NUSSBAUM opened and reopened the briefcase to take items out and appeared to look in the briefcase each time. At a point, the briefcase appeared to be empty. NUSSBAUM looked inside the briefcase, closed it, and held it up indicating it was empty, and then set it on the floor. MARGOLIS thought the briefcase was empty; he was satisfied that NUSSBAUM had determined that nothing else was in the briefcase. However, MARGOLIS was unable to look into the briefcase.

Subsequently, MARGOLIS learned that NEUWIRTH had discovered the note while packing up the briefcase with FOSTER's other belongings. MARGOLIS was very surprised. He knew NUSSBAUM had searched the briefcase in their presence, unless there was another briefcase or NUSSBAUM had missed it or concealed it. MARGOLIS wanted the Park Police to take custody of the note immediately, and began making the necessary arrangements.

HEYMANN went to the White House and stayed there until the note was released to the Park Police. The Attorney General personally directed NUSSBAUM to turn over the note. NUSSBAUM still wanted to discuss the situation, and the disposition of the note. NUSSBAUM did not seem to grasp the seriousness of the situation; the note was clearly evidence, and definitely important to the Park Police investigation.

MARGOLIS is convinced that if the note had been in the briefcase on that first day, NUSSBAUM would have found it.

The following morning after the note was released to the Park Police, HEYMANN provided MARGOLIS with a handwritten reconstruction of the note. MARGOLIS showed it to HUBBELL, who gasped when he saw it; the reconstruction was not in FOSTER's handwriting. MARGOLIS explained to HUBBELL that it was not the actual note, just a handwritten reconstruction. HUBBELL was very "shaken"; it was apparent to MARGOLIS that HUBBELL was previously unaware of the contents of the note.

MARGOLIS subsequently contacted LARRY POTTS at the FBI to initiate an obstruction of justice case regarding the circumstances of the handling of the note. Supervisory Special Agent PAT FORAN coordinated the investigation. FORAN directed agents from the Washington Field Office to do the interviews. MARGOLIS reviewed the report of the investigation. The case had a very narrow focus, but MARGOLIS was satisfied. They were unable to prove obstruction in the handling of the note.

MARGOLIS had some concerns regarding reports in the press about the obstruction investigation; it appeared as though the FBI had undertaken an investigation of the White House.

MARGOLIS suspects NUSSBAUM of not providing the note when it was first found. One of the White House secretaries who entered FOSTER's office may have located the note. MARGOLIS does not believe the note was in the briefcase during the initial search.

MARGOLIS is very confident that NUSSBAUM looked at all the files and documents in FOSTER's office, but not very confident that NUSSBAUM looked at each document in terms of its relevance to the suicide investigation. MARGOLIS expressed his concern and frustration at the possibility that other relevant items were withheld from investigators; items that would have provided insight into FOSTER's state of mind.

MARGOLIS stated that he has had no additional conversations with the White House Counsel's Office regarding this matter. MARGOLIS could only recall one other unrelated conversation with NUSSBAUM regarding a background investigation.

Sgt. Peter W. Markland, U.S. Park Police, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., as scheduled at 5:30 p.m. for interview. Sgt. Markland was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and that the interview was in connection with the search of Vincent Foster's White House office on July 22, 1993 and other events in connection with this search and the investigation by the U.S. Park Police of Foster's death on July 20, 1993. The agents were also assisted in this interview by Carl Stich and Mark Stein, Assistants to Independent Counsel, Robert B. Fiske, Jr. Sgt. Markland provided the following information:

He was not at the death scene of Vincent Foster in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. He found out about the Foster death and being assigned to the case when he reported for duty at 6:00 a.m. on July 21, 1993. He was a detective at the time. That morning, he thought that he would be going to the office of Vincent Foster at the White House to search for any possible note or anything else that would confirm a suicide or not. He would be going to the Foster office with Capt. Charles Hume, who had decided to go to assist in dealing with ranking officials at the White House.

Upon arriving at the White House at about 8:00 a.m., Markland found that U.S. Park Police Chief Langston and Major Hines, Park Police Public Information Officer, were already at the White House speaking with Bernie Nussbaum, White House Counsel. He noted that Hume and himself did not talk at this time with Nussbaum and were not even introduced to him out of courtesy. It was obvious he and Hume were cut out. The Chief had all Park Police reports done to that point in time in his hand while meeting with Nussbaum.

Markland had been under the impression that the Foster office had been sealed immediately after Foster's death. However, he determined that the investigators working the night before hadn't made this request.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

Even though arrangements had been made to go through the office before Hume and Markland went to the White House, they never made it beyond the first floor on July 21, 1993. The bottom line was they waited all day. Individuals they had met at the South End of West Executive Avenue upon arriving at the White House included a U.S. Secret Service Uniform Division Inspector, two other U.S. Secret Service Agents and FBI Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon.

When they finally had a chance to speak to Nussbaum, at about 11:00 a.m. in the lobby of the Old Executive Office Building, they were asked by him what they were doing there and when it was explained that their purpose was to search Foster's office, they were told by Nussbaum that they should make this request to Attorney General Janet Reno. Markland said apparently Nussbaum had already told this to the U.S. Park Police or the FBI. It became obvious that they would see only whatever Nussbaum wanted them to see and that would be it. Markland described the situation as ridiculous. The Park Police were there to investigate a death but they had no control. They were not privy to any information regarding what was going on. He said they complained among themselves (Hume, Markland, U.S. Secret Service Agents and FBI Agents). They were not looking to Chief Langston for direction.

Nussbaum said he had asked that Foster's office be sealed. Markland noted that he didn't believe Nussbaum. It was his feeling that the Park Police and others were there to do "whatever Nussbaum wanted us to do." He understood that Nussbaum and others had gone through the Foster office before it had been sealed.

The U.S. Park Police Major assigned to this matter was Major Holmes of Criminal Investigations. The situation concerning the White House attitide was conveyed to Major Holmes through Capt. Hume. Major Holmes never came down to the White House on July 21, 1993. Markland did not see the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) attorneys until the next day. Capt. Hume had been making telephonic contact with DOJ while they waited. Markland was provided no other information regarding meetings and left the White House on July 21, 1993 at about 3:00 p.m.

Markland obtained U.S. Secret Service records regarding alarms for Foster's office.

On July 22, 1993, at approximately 10:00 a.m., Markland and Hume met with David Margolis and Roger Adams of DOJ, Don Flynn and Paul Imbordino of the U.S. Secret Service, and Scott Salter and Dennis Condon of the FBI at the West Wing entrance to the White House. Markland noted that all times could be verified by referring to the Park Police report.

Again, there was a wait of an hour or so while there was discussion between DOJ and Nussbaum regarding how the search of Foster's office would be handled. Margolis had said in front of Nussbaum that this would be handled as a normal investigation. Markland's reaction to that was that it was ridiculous and absurd. If it had been a normal investigation, Markland said that "everything would have been boxed up in my car yesterday." In addition to those individuals previously mentioned, Steve Neuwirth and Cliff Sloan, as well as a Foster family attorney by the name of Spafford, were present in Foster's office during the search. The U.S. Secret Service Agents were at the door.

Approximately one-half hour into the search, FBI Agent Scott Salter stood to stretch. Markland noted that he is very tall. Somebody in the room accused him of "peeking." He said this was a serious comment and not meant to be humorous. He said that Salter "got mad" at the reaction. Markland said he got tired during the search of Nussbaum looking through things; that this could have been done by mail. He said Nussbaum just picked up documents and said "you don't need to see this." The other White House people stood near Nussbaum and whispered in his ears.

When asked if anyone in the room had objected to the procedure being followed, Markland answered no. He said that would be like stating the obvious. He felt that it was not the Park Police place to do so, that DOJ was there.

The terms of the search had been decided by Margolis with Nussbaum and perhaps Neuwirth prior to the actual search.

Markland said any Whitewater or Madison documents wouldn't have meant anything to him at the time of the search.

Markland watched carefully while Nussbaum went through everything. He did not believe there were any areas in the Foster office not searched. There were no areas outside the Foster office included in the search.. In addition to the desk, bookcase and shelves and other cabinets searched, Nussbaum also searched an old briefcase. This briefcase had been at the right side of the desk and Nussbaum pulled papers from it. Markland noted that Nussbaum carefully looked into the briefcase and that anything in there he would have seen. He tilted it from side to side. Markland did not believe anyone else in the room saw that the briefcase was empty but Nussbaum had indicated that that was all there was and returned the briefcase to the side of the desk. Later during the investigation, after the Foster note had been found, Markland questioned both Nussbaum and Neuwirth regarding the search of the briefcase. Neuwirth told them that he hadn't seen the scraps of paper. When Nussbaum was questioned, he just said "That's what happened."

During his exchange with Nussbaum on the briefcase, Markland asked Nussbaum "how could you not see yellow paper." Nussbaum's reply was "well, I didn't." Markland felt that this was impossible. He said the briefcase being empty or not was obvious.

Markland said the search took from one to two hours. Nussbaum divided the documents into personal papers which were given to the Foster attorney and papers to be kept by the White House. The Park Police and other investigators got nothing that day. Markland estimated that the White House kept approximately two Xerox-type boxes of documents and the private attorney got approximately one-half Xerox-type box of papers.

Markland said that they knew he was agitated during the search as he was looking pretty mean. Markland said that even before the search, it was obvious papers had been gone through as four people, besides Nussbaum, had been in the Foster office the previous day or the night of the death. Additional individuals recalled doing this included Patsy Thomasson and Betsy Pond. Markland also made note that their "real quick" search for a suicide note had lasted for two hours.

Markland noted there had been a search of the trash in Foster's office, but recalled that the housekeeper had taken the trash out and the trash was brought back in during the time of the search. He said that the individual looking for the trash at the time of the search was out and back with a bag of trash in less than two minutes. Markland was skeptical that the trash had been taken out of a "sealed office" in the first place.

Markland said his follow-up conversation with Nussbaum regarding the briefcase was probably sometime during Park Police interviews of the White House secretaries. He said these interviews with the secretaries were private, but it was obvious that people were told what they could tell the Park Police. During the interviews, there was no thinking and reflecting. It was "like they had studied for a test." Interviews were always with White House Counsel, such as Cliff Sloan and others present. During one interview, Markland recalled that Nussbaum burst into the room to check on things. It was obvious to Markland that those being interviewed knew what to say and said it. Any additional questions asked were not responded to.

Markland was asked to describe Bernie Nussbaum and provided the following descriptors: arrogant; obnoxious; pushy little guy; clear he was in charge of everything; New York character; made point of saying how close he had been to Vince Foster and what a great guy Foster was, yet did not seem overcome with emotion over Foster's death.

Markland said it was his feeling that Nussbaum was not helping the Park Police determine Foster's state of mind. It seemed nobody was allowed to tell them. Rather, the Park Police were told there was no problem; that Foster handled pressure well.

A change to this occurred when Neuwirth brought Betsy Pond to Markland and said she had something she remembered. This is the first the Park Police were told about Foster's depression.

Markland was asked to review handwritten Park Police notes regarding their investigation and indicate whose notes they were. While doing this, Markland made some comments. He said the Park Police had received a lot of "nut calls" during the investigation. All of these were filtered through the detectives in charge, but no summary of these had been produced.

With regard to an allegation received on two bullets being purchased, Markland said that a follow-up had been done with Mike Hedges of the Washington Times and that Hedges had received a phone call or heard of this, but that the source of the information had not been identified.

Markland said that no information had been developed during the investigation regarding Foster mailing letters on the morning of his death.

Markland said that during the investigation, the Park Police tried to account for the hours between Foster's death and the time he left his office. However, they were never able to narrow this down.

Markland was asked about Lisa Foster saying that the Foster note had been prepared a week or so before Foster's death. Markland said she was able to do this because the content of the note were items she and her husband had discussed during the time period approximately a week to a week and a half before his death.

Markland said the keys found on Foster were identified as house and car keys. Markland also reported he had personally searched the trunk of Foster's car and had found nothing of a compromising nature, such as evidence of an affair or any homosexual activity. He found nothing at all to assist in the investigation. It was mostly college stuff from Foster's daughter.

Markland was asked to characterize Fort Marcy Park. He said that people went there for the view and history. When questioned about homosexual activity in the park, he said that was true of every park and that there had been some arrests at Fort Marcy. He said that wherever there were secluded areas in parks, there were arrests. He said that Turkey Run and Columbia Island (D.C.) were bigger spots for homosexual activity. He noted that Fort Marcy had no restrooms and, therefore, not a big homosexual area. Markland said that the U.S. Park Police patrol Fort Marcy Park in both marked cars and with plain clothes on the paths. There is another entrance to Fort Marcy Park off Route 123. Markland said that radar units from the U.S. Park Police and the County also sit at the entrance to the park and he believes FOIA(b)(7) - (E) patrols in the park. He said he had uncovered nothing during the Park Police investigation from these law enforcement agencies to assist in the Foster suicide investigation or concerning incidents at the park on July 20, 1993.

In summary, Markland said that he felt he had been "stonewalled" during the Park Police investigation of Foster's death. Markland is convinced that there was no note in the briefcase in Foster's office on the day of the search or that if there was, Nussbaum knew about it. He said if the note had been in there, Nussbaum couldn't have missed it. His theory is that the note was found by someone, ripped up, and then later given to the Park Police.

Markland is satisfied that the Foster death was a suicide that had been done at Fort Marcy Park.

The following description of Markland was obtained through observation and interview:

Sergeant PETER W. MARKLAND, U.S. Park Police (USPP) District Two, Glen Echo, telephone (202) 619-7105 or (301) 492-6293 (work) or (703) 690-3021 (home) was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. Sergeant MARKLAND was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. CARL STICH Assistant to Independent Counsel ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. assisted in this interview. Sergeant MARKLAND provided the following information:

He was asked his understanding regarding the procedure to be followed during the search of VINCE FOSTER's White House office on July 22 following FOSTER's death on July 20. MARKLAND responded that it was more like watching what was going on more than anything else. He was under the impression he couldn't do anything without the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ). MARKLAND believed that his captain, CHARLES HUME, and BERNARD NUSSBAUM (Chief White House Counsel) had "worked out" the details of the search. He understood that he should "sit down" and "shut up". He was told several times by DAVID MARGOLIS from the DOJ to treat the investigation as a "normal investigation". MARKLAND said it wasn't. MARGOLIS did not consult with the Park Police regarding what they wanted. The Park Police wanted to search FOSTER's office and the way it turned out, they might as well have "mailed" the information. MARKLAND did say that he felt MARGOLIS understood the law enforcement interest. Everything needed didn't have to be spelled out as MARGOLIS was an intelligent, experienced individual. MARGOLIS understood what "unusual" items the Park Police were looking for. As an example MARKLAND cited any indication of bad medical news.

MARKLAND was asked if during the search, he came across a tax file would he pass over it quickly, glance at it for any indications of the suicide or relevant information, or thoroughly analyze the document. MARKLAND replied that he would take it to the second step of looking over the item for unusual notations or markings. He wouldn't, or even feel qualified to, analyze the document.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

MARKLAND's understanding was that MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM had agreed on the first day (7/21/93) that MARGOLIS would review the documentation in FOSTER's office for privilege issues. MARKLAND understood, because of the security question issue, that MARGOLIS would review the items located in FOSTER's office first versus law enforcement looking at the documentation initially. MARKLAND said that on July 21 the Park Police were "out of everything" except getting the word that they would start the next day. On July 21 NUSSBAUM did most of the talking assuring the Park Police and others of his cooperation and commenting on what a great guy VINCE FOSTER had been. MARKLAND could not recall if Captain HUME was in the meeting with NUSSBAUM on July 21 or not. MARKLAND did not recall ending the meeting and then going back in, but he said he may have done this.

MARKLAND was asked if he understood he would be physically present during the first screening of documents. He said he knew the Park Police would be in there for the whole thing.

MARKLAND first found out about the change of procedure for the search of FOSTER's office at the search itself on July 22, 1993. NUSSBAUM sat down at FOSTER's desk to do the search and announced the procedure he would follow. MARKLAND knew that NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS had had discussions regarding the search. MARKLAND also knew that MARGOLIS didn't agree with NUSSBAUM on some points and had fought NUSSBAUM on the points of disagreement. MARKLAND knew that MARGOLIS was retreating from looking at the documents.

MARKLAND was asked if it had been made clear by NUSSBAUM or anyone that the Park Police would have to speak up to see or set aside any documentation found in FOSTER's office. He answered no. NUSSBAUM made comments during the search while he was looking at documents such as, this is none of your business, this is private, this doesn't matter. MARKLAND said it was clear that the Park Police and other investigators present weren't going to review anything there. The things excluded by NUSSBAUM had to do with Presidential issues, etc.

MARKLAND was asked if he could think of anything which he wanted to see that he couldn't see and he answered no. MARKLAND said, "Who knows what we were going to see out of the review pile anyway". MARKLAND understood that even though FOSTER's office had been secured by the U.S. Secret Service that NUSSBAUM could go in and out of the office anyway. When asked how he knew this, he said that either a U.S. Secret Service agent or NUSSBAUM had told him that NUSSBAUM could go into the office. He believed it was probably NUSSBAUM himself who had told him this. MARKLAND recalled asking to see the trash during the course of the search and that somebody got up at that point and brought a bag of trash in for review. It was during this exchange that NUSSBAUM possibly mentioned that the FOSTER office had been posted but that he (NUSSBAUM) could go in.

MARKLAND was asked regarding the search of the briefcase in FOSTER's office. MARKLAND remembered NUSSBAUM looking into the briefcase twice. NUSSBAUM looked quite satisfied that there was nothing in the briefcase. MARKLAND had a "clear shot" through the opening in FOSTER's desk as NUSSBAUM was pulling documents from the briefcase. MARKLAND was asked that during the review of FOSTER personal documents, one week after the search, did he have any reason to believe that the documentation provided by FOSTER's attorney was not complete. MARKLAND answered, "No". He added, "only in that he didn't like how the whole thing went". MARKLAND was asked how this review of documents at HAMILTON's law firm came about. MARKLAND answered that they had a specific time to go over to the attorney's office but that he didn't think he had set that meeting up and cannot further recall how it had been arranged.

MARKLAND was asked if there had been any discussion among the non-White House group to terminate the search process and get a search warrant or subpoena for documents in FOSTER's office. MARKLAND answered, "No". MARKLAND said he kept telling MARGOLIS, and believed that the feeling was mutual among those involved, that the search was "ridiculous" and a "farce". MARKLAND understood that everything was to be worked out between MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM. MARKLAND again mentioned that he was told to treat this investigation like any other investigation. After hearing this several times, he had had it and said that if it had been like any other investigation, the documents "would have been in my truck yesterday".

Sergeant PETER W. MARKLAND, U.S. Park Police (USPP), District 2, Glen Echo, telephone number (301) 492-6293, was interviewed on the telephone as a follow-up to his interview of June 9, 1994. Sergeant MARKLAND provided the following information:

He was asked about his handwritten notes (copy attached) taken during the USPP investigation of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. on July 20, 1993. The notes indicate that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, White House Security, "responded to Fairfax Hosp. - ID body." The notations continue, "came down stairs (Bruce Abbott observed) with box (records?)."

MARKLAND identified BRUCE ABBOTT as a Uniformed Division U.S. Secret Service "guy" who had been posted at the desk in the White House. MARKLAND said ABBOTT told him "on the side" he had observed LIVINGSTONE with a box as indicated in MARKLAND's handwritten notes.

MARKLAND said he later asked LIVINGSTONE about this. LIVINGSTONE told him he had not gone into VINCENT FOSTER's office but had taken records. LIVINGSTONE said he had come from the second floor of the West Wing of the White House with a box. LIVINGSTONE had done this "early" on the morning of July 21, 1993. When asked if he could further pinpoint the time, MARKLAND replied he could not except to say that it occurred sometime before the USPP got to the White House that day. MARKLAND said the information provided by LIVINGSTONE seemed "inconsequential" at the time and he did not pursue it further. MARKLAND said he did not get the feeling that LIVINGSTONE was someone any one would have confided in. He felt LIVINGSTONE was "on the level."

Sergeant PETER W. MARKLAND, U.S. Park Police (USPP), District 2, Glen Echo, telephone number (301) 492-6293, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. MARK STEIN, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR., assisted in this interview. Sergeant MARKLAND was advised of the identities of the interviewing agent and the OIC Counsel and of the purpose of the interview. Sergeant MARKLAND provided the following information:

He was asked about his handwritten notes (copy attached) taken during the USPP investigation of the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. on July 20, 1993. The notes indicate that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, White House security, "responded to Fairfax Hosp. - ID body." The notations continue, "came down stairs (Bruce Abbott observed) with box (records?)."

MARKLAND said there were additional notations in his notes regarding CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. He reviewed copies of his notes and located a notation stating, "LIVINGSTONE said he was not in office today" (copy attached).

MARKLAND said that BRUCE ABBOTT, Uniformed Division, U.S. Secret Service, was on the desk at the West Executive Avenue entrance to the West Wing of the White House. ABBOTT approached MARKLAND as he apparently remembered him (MARKLAND) from his previous employment at the White House. ABBOTT told MARKLAND that LIVINGSTONE came down from the second floor of the White House West Wing with a box. MARKLAND could not remember the exact time he received this information from ABBOTT but said it was about 10:00 a.m. on July 21, 1993. He said it was at the same time that the Chief of the USPP and Major HINES had walked down the hall as they were talking with BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief White House Counsel. At the time, MARKLAND was not sure if this information was a big deal or not. He said he mentioned the information provided by ABBOTT to his Captain, CHARLES HUME.

Sometime between 1:00 p.m. and 1:30 p.m., LIVINGSTONE came up to MARKLAND and introduced himself to MARKLAND. MARKLAND recalled this being somewhere in the West Wing on the ground floor. He said LIVINGSTONE gave him his card as he knew MARKLAND was involved in the FOSTER death investigation. LIVINGSTONE volunteered that he was at the FOSTER house the previous night and said he was available if there was anything he could do to help. At this time, MARKLAND asked LIVINGSTONE about carrying the box from the West Wing and whether or not he was in FOSTER's White House office. MARKLAND could not recall the exact words to his question, nor could he remember any of the words used by LIVINGSTONE to answer the question. MARKLAND said it was clear from the exchange that LIVINGSTONE had not been in FOSTER's office and had not taken anything from FOSTER's office. MARKLAND told LIVINGSTONE something along the lines that he had been seen coming from the second floor carrying a box. LIVINGSTONE replied along the lines (but not his words) that it was some kind of routine stuff. Livingstone didn't deny coming from the second floor. LIVINGSTONE specifically said he had not been in FOSTER's office. MARKLAND was asked if LIVINGSTONE said anything affirmative regarding the box question. MARKLAND"s answer was that it was clear in his mind after the exchange that LIVINGSTONE agreed with having come down with a box. He was asked if he followed up on LIVINGSTONE's routine comment. MARKLAND answered yes, but said he could not recall the specifics. He said LIVINGSTONE did answer in the affirmative in some way. He didn't remain silent. He did say something. It was clear from LIVINGSTONE's answer that it had nothing to do with FOSTER's office.

MARKLAND had not asked ABBOTT or LIVINGSTONE about the time of the incident other than to understand that it had been "earlier that morning."

MARKLAND said LIVINGSTONE had said something to say he was carrying a box. LIVINGSTONE had not been adversarial in the exchange. LIVINGSTONE in no way denied carrying something down from the second floor.

MARKLAND had no further conversations with LIVINGSTONE about this matter. He received subsequent phone calls from LIVINGSTONE regarding FOSTER's property being returned to the family and/or thank you comments from LIVINGSTONE regarding the handling of this property or other aspects of the investigation.

MARKLAND was asked if he contacted ABBOTT again regarding this matter and he answered no. He said ABBOTT did not say that LIVINGSTONE was with somebody else. He said ABBOTT didn't mention anyone else, or he would have put that person's name in his notes. LIVINGSTONE himself did not mention anyone else being with him on that morning. MARKLAND said LIVINGSTONE reacted to the news that he had been seen carrying a box from the second floor with "no surprise or apprehension." LIVINGSTONE's name did not come up otherwise during the course of the USPP investigation. LIVINGSTONE had nothing to do with other meetings concerning this investigation.

KIMBERLY MARTEAU was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel. She is employed as the Director of Public Liaison, United States Information Agency (USIA), 301 4th Street, S.W., Washington, DC. Her work telephone is 202-619-4355. MARTEAU is married to JOHN B. EMERSON, Deputy Director of White House personnel.

MARTEAU said she met VINCENT FOSTER through her husband, and saw FOSTER at occasional social events and dinners. She first met him during a visit to Washington in February, 1993, and then again after she moved to Washington in late April, 1993. She saw FOSTER about three weeks before FOSTER's death during a brunch at MARTEAU's house. They sat next to each other but did not engage in deep or intimate conversation. She noted FOSTER always appeared reserved and "sober."

On the evening of VINCE FOSTER's death, July 20, 1993, MARTEAU and her husband received a telephone call from BRUCE LINDSEY, EMERSON's superior. During this call, at about 10 pm, they were told of FOSTER's death. EMERSON and MARTEAU decided to go to The White House to be near friends and give and receive consolation. They did this on their own initiative, and were not directed to do so. They parked on West Executive Drive and went to BRUCE LINDSEY's office, remaining there, or in the hallway directly outside it until about 1:00 am. She noted EMERSON used his building pass and MARTEAU "had to be called in" for access to The White House. She recalls only seeing DEB COYLE, CHERYL MILLS, RICKI SEIDMAN, BILL BURTON, DANA LAWRENCE and BRUCE LINDSEY. Other people were present but MARTEAU was not familiar with them. She doesn't recall anyone saying anything about FOSTER'S office or property.

MARTEAU has not received any instructions on answering investigator's questions.

Dennis Stephen Martin, Inspector, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was contacted in his office. Inspector Martin, having been previously advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and nature of the interview, provided the following information:

Inspector Martin was shown a copy of a one-page document captioned "On-line activity report" dated 7/21/93, showing the activation and deactivation of an alarm on the Nussbaum/Foster suite on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House for the period 7/20/93-7/21/93. Inspector Martin said that when a door giving access to an alarmed area of The White House is opened an audible alarm sounds in the USSS White House Control Center, a light on a wall board flashes and a computer starts automatically entering data onto the "On-line activity report". The data that is automatically entered and printed by the computer includes: date, time, USSS zone number, location (e.g. west wing, 2nd floor, room 208), a description of the area (e.g. "Nussbaum's office"), and the event (e.g. "access alarm"). This sequence alerts the personnel on duty in the USSS Control Center who then wait a short time for the person who has "set off" the alarm to telephone the Control Center to identify themselves as required by standard operating procedure. Once the parties name is obtained, it is manually typed in by the USSS employee answering the phone and then becomes a permanent part of the log. Martin explained that should a telephone call not be received in a short amount of time, a USSS uniformed officer is dispatched to the scene to investigate.

In response to specific questions, Inspector Martin said that once an entry is made onto the "On-line activity report" either automatically by the computer when an alarm is "set off" or manually by a USSS employee, it can not be deleted or erased from the log. Similarly, USSS employees are not able to prevent an "event" from being entered on the log because the computer software is designed in such a way as to make automatic entries, as previously explained, when the alarm is "set" or "tripped". Further, if a USSS employee were asked by a White House staffer or employee to prevent an entry being made on the log or to attempt to delete an entry from the log, this would be seen as very suspicious and highly irregular. Such a request would surely be reported "up the chain of command" within the USSS. Inspector Martin said that he is aware of no such requests ever being made of the USSS.

Dennis Stephen Martin, Inspector, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania NW. Inspector Martin was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for twenty years and his office is located at 1310 L Street NW, Washington, D.C. His office telephone numbers are 202-435-7575 and 202-435-7209. He is currently assigned as the Uniform Division Commander of USSS Professional Responsibility and Internal Affairs Investigations.

At the time of Vincent Foster's death on July 20, 1993, he was the Deputy Commander of the USSS White House branch and as such was the commanding officer of all Uniform Division employees working within The White House compound. In that capacity, his responsibility was to oversee and coordinate access and control of physical security for The White House. He came to work on the morning of July 20, 1993, at approximately 7:30 am and left work that day at approximately 5:30 pm after a busy but otherwise uneventful day. At approximately 8-9:00 pm, he received a phone call from Lieutenant David Wultz at the USSS White House Control Center advising him that the United States Park Police had just notified him that a body, believed to be that of Vincent Foster, had been found dead at Fort Marcy Park of an apparent suicide. Inspector Martin said that he made the appropriate notifications within the USSS chain of command and also decided to notify Craig Livingstone, a non law enforcement White House staffer who, at that time, held the title of White House Security Coordinator. He said that he decided to notify Craig Livingstone because he believed that notification of the hierarchy of The White House staff was appropriate and he thought it possible that The White House staff would want to decide who should identify the body. He said that when he contacted Livingstone at his (Livingstone's) residence, he seemed quite shocked and upset but said that he would contact the Park Police and that he would go to either the hospital or the morgue to identify the body. Inspector Martin said that it is his understanding that Livingstone did identify the body that night.

On July 21, 1993, Inspector Martin arrived at work at approximately 6:30 am and shortly thereafter met with USSS Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC) Paul Imbordino. It was decided that Inspector Martin would meet and escort U.S. Park Police (USPP) investigators and FBI agents who were expected at The White House shortly to conduct an investigation regarding Foster's death. Inspector Martin said that at approximately 8:00 am USPP Chief Langston and a Deputy Chief (name unrecalled) arrived at The White House saying that they had an appointment with David Watkins whom Martin knew to be a White House staffer for whom Craig Livingstone worked. Inspector Martin said that he escorted the Chief and Deputy Chief to a suite of offices on the ground floor of The White House west wing that was occupied by Watkins and his superior, Patsy Thomasson.

At approximately 8:30-8:45 am a USPP Captain (name unrecalled) and Detective Pete Markland of the USPP arrived about the same time that Chief Langston and the Deputy Chief were leaving The White House compound. Inspector Martin said that these four men spoke briefly outside the building and then the Chief and Deputy Chief departed The White House grounds. Shortly thereafter, two Special Agents of the FBI, Scott Salter and another (name unrecalled) arrived. Inspector Martin escorted them to The White House west wing where they briefly met with Bernard Nussbaum. Inspector Martin said that he cannot recall if he escorted the four law enforcement officers to Nussbaum's office or if Nussbaum came down to the ground floor to talk to them. He advised, however, that the conversation was regarding arrangements for the law enforcement officers to be allowed access to Vincent Foster's 2nd floor office. Nussbaum said that he wanted to check with other members of The White House legal counsel staff and the First Family before any access to Vincent Foster's office was allowed. The four investigators and Inspector Martin waited on a couch located on the ground floor of The White House west wing for approximately 2 hours and then moved to Inspector Martin's office where they waited several more hours into the afternoon. Martin said that during the time in his office, several telephone calls were made by the investigators to FBIHQ and USPPHQ. Martin said that he was not privy to these conversations but was able to discern that the investigators were most unhappy about being kept waiting but could not seem to gain appropriate authority to search Foster's office.

Inspector Martin said that he went home that evening at approximately 5:30 to 6:00 pm after ASAC Paul Imbordino invited the investigators to continue their wait with him. Martin said that it is his understanding that the investigators went back to the west wing of The White House where they again met with Nussbaum. He said that although he was not present during the meeting, it is his understanding that the investigators were not allowed to see Foster's office that day but agreed to return the next day to conduct the search of that office.

Inspector Martin said that while the investigators were waiting with him, at approximately 11:00 am, a decision was made to begin posting a series of USSS Uniform Division officers outside Vincent Foster's door to secure it for investigation. These shifts went on for the remainder of July 21, 1993 and a locksmith was called in to place a lock on Vincent Foster's door that evening. Inspector Martin said that he was advised that the Uniform Division officers were removed from this newly established post at approximately 8:00 pm that evening when the door was secured with a lock.

Inspector Martin was asked if he recalls USSS Uniformed Officer Bruce Abbott relating any observations regarding Craig Livingstone and another man. Inspector Martin said that he does so recall that at approximately 8-9:00 am on July 21, 1993 as he was escorting USPP officers either in or out of the west wing, Officer Abbott approached. He said that Abbott spoke to him in a low confidential voice relating to him that earlier that morning (approximately 6:30 - 7:00 am) he had seen Craig Livingstone and another man (identity unknown) on the ground floor of The White House west wing having just gotten off the elevator or having just come down the staircase from the upper floors of the west wing. Abbott said that he saw these two men carrying a briefcase and some boxes and that he was relating this information to Inspector Martin because he thought it was unusual that these men were in the west wing at that hour removing items before an investigation of the Foster death to be conducted. Inspector Martin said that he does not recall if he related this information to anyone else or not. He said that he is certain that the Park Police officers were present at the time he was told this but he can not be sure if they overheard any or all of this information at that time.

Inspector Martin was asked to explain the USSS Standard Operating Procedure for picking up and disposing of "burn bag" trash from the west wing. He said that this type of trash is picked up daily from west wing offices during the midnight shift by a USSS Uniform Division employee. He said that it is then taken to Room. 096 in the basement of the Old Executive Office Building (known as the Macerating Room) where it is shredded and then burned by GSA employees who have appropriate security clearances. Inspector Martin was asked to explain the standard operating procedure for picking up regular non burn bag trash from the west wing. He said that this type of trash is also picked up on a daily basis during the midnight shift but is picked up by GSA cleaning employees who are escorted by USSS Uniform Division officers. This trash is then taken to the same room in the Old Executive Office Building and from there thrown away in a dumpster behind the Old Executive Office Building. Inspector Martin said that, in his opinion, it is highly improbable that a specific bag of trash from a specific waste basket could be identified and retrieved the next day after it had been picked up by the GSA employees and combined with all other trash picked up on a given day. He also said that he does not recall hearing about any White House staffer asking to retrieve trash from Vince Foster's waste basket that had been previously picked up.

Inspector Martin was shown a copy of a one page document captioned "On-line Activity Report" dated 7/21/93, that had been previously obtained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Inspector Martin said that this is a log showing the activation and deactivation of an alarm on the Nussbaum/Foster suite on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House for the period 7/20/93 - 7/21/93. Inspector Martin explained the columns on this log reading left to right: date of activity; time of activity; the zone of this activity (number 561, west wing, 2nd floor, room 208-Nussbaum's office). The next column shows the entrant or operator's name and the last column shows the event, that is the alarm either being activated or deactivated or tested. Inspector Martin explained that an entry on this log reading "secure alarm" either means that the alarm for the Nussbaum/Foster suite had been intentionally set (activated) or that the alarm had been tripped or set off. He explained that an entry in the event column reading "access set" means that the alarm for this suite had been deactivated thus allowing people access to the suite. He said that an entry reading "access alarm" has the very same meaning as "access set".

He explained that an entry reading "secure reset" is a check of the alarm system to make sure that the alarm is on. He explained that this is done periodically, remotely, and electronically by the USSS White House Control Center. Inspector Martin was asked to explain his understanding of entries on this log. He said that according to the log, at 8:03 am on 7/20/93, the alarm had been tripped and deactivated. He said that the operator's name on the log which reads "Castle" is probably the same as later entries that same day on the log reading "Castleton". He said that according to the log, the alarm remained in a deactivated mode the remainder of the day of 7/20/93. At 8:04 pm on 7/20/93, the alarm was put in secure mode or activated by "Castleton". At 10:42 pm on 7/20/93, the alarm was tripped when USSS Officer O'Neill went into the suite. It remained deactivated until 11:41 pm when O'Neil activated it again. One minute later at 11:42 pm, the USSS Control Center electronically checked the alarm status and found that it was in secure mode (activated).

DENNIS STEPHEN MARTIN, Inspector, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), telephone numbers (202) 435-7575 or 435-7209 was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose of the interview. MARTIN provided the following information:

MARTIN was asked if CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, White House Security, had filed any grievances against any Uniform Division USSS employees with MARTIN. MARTIN answered, "Not on behalf of himself" (LIVINGSTONE). MARTIN said that LIVINGSTONE's duties included keeping security and the staff "on an even keel". MARTIN could remember no grievance being filed formally by LIVINGSTONE. MARTIN could recall LIVINGSTONE coming to him on only one occasion concerning a minor problem with a Uniform Division employee, Lieutenant LAURIE RICH. This minor incident involved some comments made by RICH while LIVINGSTONE was touring a group on the south grounds of The White House. LIVINGSTONE asked that MARTIN have RICH "chill out". MARTIN said there was no documentation regarding this incident and viewed it as very minor.

MARTIN said that on occasion LIVINGSTONE would be "out working the crowd" on the grounds of The White House. He was viewed as a CLINTON appointee playing a security role. The Uniform Division of USSS viewed LIVINGSTONE as being "on our side". They felt that LIVINGSTONE would be "responsive to any of our problems". MARTIN said he could not think of one person "who would finger LIVINGSTONE".

MARTIN said that last Sunday night at about 6:30 pm (July 10, 1994) LIVINGSTONE called him. When MARTIN returned the call to LIVINGSTONE, LIVINGSTONE asked MARTIN if he had legal counsel. MARTIN responded by saying that he no longer worked at The White House and would not discuss investigations with LIVINGSTONE. At that point in the telephone conversation he made "small talk" with LIVINGSTONE. He said eventually LIVINGSTONE got around to asking if MARTIN knew of any Uniform Division USSS officers who had a vendetta or a run in with LIVINGSTONE.

LIVINGSTONE advised MARTIN that he believed some officer was "fingering me" coming out of the west wing. MARTIN said he kept the discussion "general" with LIVINGSTONE and advised him that he didn't remember having a problem with him personally and told him he would not comment on any others. MARTIN referred LIVINGSTONE to Deputy Chief DAN JENKINS who, in turn, referred LIVINGSTONE to the USSS Legal Counsel. MARTIN also advised his immediate supervisor of the call from LIVINGSTONE. MARTIN believed that LIVINGSTONE wanted him to name BRUCE ABBOTT but he did not do so. MARTIN said that during his (MARTIN's) tenure at The White House, ABBOTT normally worked at the Control Center. In July of 1993 he was working "out of shift" to be at the post in the west wing of The White House. ABBOTT had only limited contact with LIVINGSTONE.

MARTIN said the attorney representing LIVINGSTONE, who had been identified to him as White House Legal Counsel, was RANDY or ROB TURK.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 9/8/94

DENNIS STEPHEN MARTIN, Inspector, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), was reinterviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel in Washington, D.C. At the outset, Inspector MARTIN was advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, specifically to seek clarification of certain issues that may not have previously been covered. MARTIN stated that in July of 1993 he was serving as the USSS Deputy Branch Commander responsible for all Uniform Division employees working within the White House compound. He stated that in this capacity he had established a regular working relationship with Mr. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE whose title was Director of White House Security. Any problems having to do with White House access, passes, parking or misunderstandings between USSS uniformed personnel and White House staffers would come to his attention and he and Mr. LIVINGSTONE would resolve such matters. It was because of this close working association with LIVINGSTONE that he, upon learning of FOSTER's death, on the night of July 20, 1993, telephoned for LIVINGSTONE and informed him of the tragedy. He stated that to his knowledge LIVINGSTONE was the only White House staff person that he called adding that he didn't reach him directly but left a message and LIVINGSTONE later called him back at home on his car phone.

Inspector MARTIN stated that he arrived at the White House on the morning of July 21, 1993 at approximately 6:30 a.m. and went directly to his office located on the fourth floor of the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB). To the best of his recollection, USSS Agent PAUL IMBORDINO was either up at MARTIN's office on the fourth floor or arrived shortly thereafter. IMBORDINO's office is on the 1st floor of the OEOB and LIVINGSTONE's office in on the ground floor, OEOB. IMBORDINO asked him if MARTIN would assist in meeting some Park Police Officers that would be arriving early that morning to conduct follow-up investigation. MARTIN stated that after meeting briefly with IMBORDINO, he went to the West Executive entrance gate to await the arrival of U.S. Park Police Officers MARKLAND and HUME. While he was there, he was surprised to see Chief LANGSTON of the Park Police and his top assistant, Major HINES, arrive at the gate. He estimated their arrival at sometime between 7:00 and 7:30 a.m. He stated that he assisted them in parking in the secured lot between the White House and the OEOB, an area normally reserved for White House staffers. He escorted LANGSTON and HINES to DAVID WATKINS' office in the White House, stating that Chief LANGSTON, who he had previously known, informed him that he had an appointment with DAVID WATKINS to brief him regarding the FOSTER matter. Inspector MARTIN stated that he cannot be sure of the exact arrival time of Chief LANGSTON since he did not follow the normal procedures for logging a guest in since he was familiar with Chief LANGSTON. Inspector MARTIN stated that he then returned to the West Executive entrance gate and awaited the arrival of the other two Park Police Officers stating that to the best of his recollection they arrived sometime around 7:30 a.m. He escorted them to the West Basement area and waited there with them in the vicinity of Post E-1. He stated it was during this time, which he estimates was between 7:30 and 8:00 a.m., that he saw CRAIG LIVINGSTONE going by. He can't recall how LIVINGSTONE was dressed or whether he might have been carrying anything or whether he was in the company of any other individuals. He reiterated that as best as he recalls he saw LIVINGSTONE between 7:30 and 8:00 a.m., adding that it would not have been earlier but could possibly have been later in the morning.

MARTIN was asked if there were any other USSS or White House employees that would normally be in the West Basement of the White House near Post E-1 early in the morning. He responded by stating that as a general rule there are very few people in at that time in the morning, adding that the only other USSS employees that he could think of would have been the agents and uniformed officers that would have been staffing Post W-16, located down the hall from Post E-1.

MARTIN reiterated that it was in the time frame of 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. when USSS uniformed officer BRUCE E. ABBOTT approached him and mentioned that he had observed LIVINGSTONE and another man at approximately 6:30 a.m. carrying some boxes and a briefcase. MARTIN further stated that because of his position, it was logical for ABBOTT to have passed this information on to him. He was not sure whether ABBOTT had reported these observations to anyone else in the Secret Service but to his knowledge he had not. MARTIN stated that he was not sure whether he, MARTIN, had passed this information on to the U.S. Park Police , explaining that he may have told MARKLAND or MARKLAND may have overheard ABBOTT speaking to him.

MARTIN was unable to recall whether he passed this information on to anyone else in the USSS, adding that he may have mentioned it to USSS Agent PAUL IMBORDINO but he can't be sure. He knows for certain that he did not mention the information provided by ABBOTT to CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and at no point later in the day did LIVINGSTONE ever bring it up or attempt to discuss it with him. He stated that he was unaware of any problems or conflicts between Officer ABBOTT and CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and could suggest no reason why Officer ABBOTT would have made up such a story, explaining that ABBOTT realizes that providing false information would result in his immediate termination from the USSS.

MARTIN stated that approximately two months ago, on a weekend, LIVINGSTONE did have him paged through the White House and he called LIVINGSTONE back at his residence. LIVINGSTONE asked him over the phone if he, MARTIN, was represented by an attorney and then remarked that someone in the Secret Service had reported observing LIVINGSTONE taking "stuff" out of FOSTER's office and he, LIVINGSTONE, wanted to know the name of the officer who filed such a report. LIVINGSTONE went on the say that he wanted MARTIN to talk to LIVINGSTONE's attorney regarding the matter. MARTIN stated that as a result of this conversation, he, MARTIN, felt that LIVINGSTONE might have suspected him of making the report. MARTIN advised that he told LIVINGSTONE that he and/or his attorney would have to go through the USSS legal counsel before MARTIN could be interviewed or discuss the matter. MARTIN stated that nothing else ever developed from this phone call and he has never been interviewed by an attorney representing LIVINGSTONE.

JOSEPH A. MASONIS, Deputy Special Agent in Charge, Technical Security Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed at the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Also present during the interview was WILLIE J. CHEATHAM, Branch Chief, Physical Security Branch, Technical Security Division, USSS and Associate Special Counsel MARK STEIN. MESSERS, MASONIS and CHEATHAM were advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agent and Mr. STEIN. They were also advised of the nature of the interview. They then provided the following information:

Deputy Special Agent in Charge (DSAC) MASONIS advised that he has been with USSS 22 years and his current telephone number is 202-395-5330. Officer CHEATHAM advised that he has been with USSS for 12 years and his current telephone number is 202-395-9226.

DSAC MASONIS and Officer CHEATHAM were each given copies of a document captioned "On-line activity report" which shows USSS alarm log activity for the BERNARD NUSSBAUM/VINCENT FOSTER White House suite of offices for the period of July 20, 1993 through July 21, 1993. They were asked to explain the various entries on this log. DSAC MASONIS said that on 7/20/93 at 8:03 am, someone opened the alarmed door to the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite. At that time the computer in the USSS White House Control Center printed out the date, time, location "NUSSBAUM's office", and the event occurring "secure alarm". He explained that "secure alarm" meant that a door that had been intentionally alarmed had been opened thus activating the alarm in the USSS Control Center. Per standard operating procedure the Control Center waited and moments later the entrant "CASTLE" (White House staffer THOMAS CASTLETON) telephoned the USSS Control Center identifying himself as the entrant. After verifying that CASTLETON was on the USSS access list for that suite, the Officer in the Control Center pressed a button which caused the phrase "control center" to be printed and the event "access set" to be printed. These two entries meant that the USSS Control Center was allowing access to that area. At 8:04 pm on July 20, 1993, the log shows that "CASTLETON" moved the alarm switch in the suite. DSAC MASONIS said that the entry reading "access alarm" means that someone is accessing the alarm system from that point or, in other words, is moving the alarm switch from one position to another. He said that the alarm log also shows that when CASTLETON moved the alarm switch from one position to another to place it in a secure mode, he had the door to the suite closed. DSAC MASONIS said that he was able to tell this because the system once again showed that the alarm had been tripped, "secure alarm" at 8:04 pm. He said that it can be logically assumed that this entry "secure alarm" was caused by CASTLETON opening the suite door to exit the suite for the evening.

The next entry on the log at 9:14 pm could not be explained by either DSAC MASONIS or Officer CHEATHAM. They explained that, according to the log, the alarm for the suite's door should have been sounding in the USSS Control Center from 8:04 pm until 9:14 pm when the USSS Control Center pressed a button causing "secure reset", the reactivation of the door's alarm. Both men said that they could offer no explanation why it apparently took one hour and ten minutes to reset the alarm on the suite door to a secure mode.

DSAC MASONIS said that the log showed USSS Officer O'NEILL entering the suite at 10:42 pm and securing the suite at 11:41 pm. DSAC MASONIS said that O'NEILL, like CASTLETON, moved the suite's alarm switch while the door was closed, thus setting off the alarm at 11:41 when he exited the suite. That explains the USSS Control Center pressing "secure reset" at 11:42. The system and the suite was secure, showing no entrance or exit between 11:42 pm on July 20, 1993 and 7:01 am on July 21, 1993. At that time "POND" entered the suite and deactivated the alarm. Neither DSAC MASONIS nor Officer CHEATHAM were able to explain the reason for the log entry at 11:20 am on July 21, 1993 which reads "Control Center test". Both men advised that the system was checked from time to time by the USSS and also by the telephone company to ensure that it was working properly.

Sylvia M. Mathews, Special Assistant to the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW in the presence of her attorney, Michael B. Waitzkin. Ms. Mathews was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

During 1992, she worked for the Clinton/Gore Presidential campaign committee in Little Rock, Arkansas. During that time, she worked with Gene Sperling with whom she had previously worked during the Mondale for President campaign. This led to her current employment. Both she and Sperling have worked at The White House since January, 1993 for Robert Rubin, the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy.

Her office is on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House on the same hallway as a suite of offices that during 1993 was occupied by Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster. She first met Foster in February, 1993 and "barely knew him", never met any members of his family, and for the most part only saw him in the hallway where they exchanged greetings. She said that she therefore does not feel qualified to comment on any possible changes relative to Foster's demeanor or his psychological or physical condition prior to his death.

On July 20, 1993, shortly after 9:00 pm she was in a room near The White House library where Bill Clinton was being interviewed by Larry King for a live Cable News Network television program. She was in this room, watching the ongoing interview on a television monitor, because she and Gene Sperling had previously compiled briefing material for the President to prepare him for his live television interview. They were therefore nearby if needed. She does not recall specifically who told her about Vincent Foster's death, but she recalls overhearing parts of a conversation between several senior White House staffers in a hallway outside the room in which she was watching the monitor. She learned of Foster's death shortly before the end of the President's television interview, was saddened, and wanted to do something to help.

Believing that Foster's death would bring about many telephone calls to The White House staff, she volunteered to go to Mac McLarty's office on the first floor of the west wing to assist with answering incoming calls. She thinks that she arrived McLarty's office at approximately 10:00 pm. Shortly after she arrived at McLarty's empty office, several White House staffers began arriving there. She recalled that one of the first to arrive was Bill Burton. She then made a "quick trip" to her office on the 2nd floor, picked up some of her pending work that she could do while answering phones, and return to McLarty's office. When she returneded she noted that Bill Burton was in McLarty's office making telephone calls. After approximately 30-45 minutes, she overheard Burton's part of a telephone call that she believes was with the United States Park Police. She heard Burton say that no suicide note had yet been found and the thought came to her that the trash from Foster's office should be obtained and searched for such a note before it was destroyed. After Burton finished his telephone call, she mentioned her idea to him in the presence of Dee Dee Myers and David Dreyer, a Deputy to Mark Gearan. She asked if she should go upstairs and attempt to retrieve the trash. All three staffers indicated that her idea was sound and indicated that she should go. She said that while there were no specific instructions, there was no mention of "burn bag" trash and it was her understanding that she was to obtain Foster's regular trash. As she left McLarty's suite of offices, she encountered two GSA cleaning ladies and asked them if the trash had already been picked up on the 2nd floor. They said it had been and indicated that it was still in the large collection bags in the hallway of the 2nd floor. She went upstairs with one or both of the GSA cleaning employees where they showed her the three large bags of consolidated trash in the hallway next to the elevator. Each of these three large bags contained numerous smaller clear plastic bags with trash from the various offices on the 2nd floor.

As she began going through the individual plastic trash bags within the large collection bags, she noted one bag containing "at least one document" with a White House interoffice mail address label containing Vincent Foster's name inside the bag. She retrieved this bag which was approximately 1/3 full of papers, a wooden coffee stirrer, and some wrappers and returned to Mac McLarty's office with it.

She said she recalls seeing Bill Burton and some other staffers whom she cannot recall. She told them that she had what she believed to be Vincent Foster's trash and asked if she should go through it. She was told "yes" by Burton and began going through it "one item at a time" on the floor in Mac McLarty's outer office. As she was doing so, it occurred to her that she should make an inventory of her findings. She made a handwritten "inventory" on a piece of 5 by 7 lined paper. Ms. Mathews gave this document, a copy of which is incorporated hereinafter to the interviewing agents. Upon completing her review she returned all items to the bag and told Bill Burton and other staffers present what she had found to include "a handful" of Vincent Foster's credit card receipts. She stated that they had no response that she can recall, except to suggest that the bag should be placed in Roy Neel's office for safe keeping and so that it would not be in McLarty's office where it might serve as a reminder of his friend Foster's recent death. She went to Roy Neel's unoccupied office and left the bag of trash on the floor and returned to answering phones in Mac McLarty's office.

Shortly thereafter, she thought of the burn bag trash that could have been picked up in Vincent Foster's office. As before, she received concurrence from staffers present and contacted a U.S. Secret Service officer at a nearby post inquiring as to how the burn bag could be obtained. A telephone call was made and shortly thereafter a "commingled burn bag" that was said to contain burn bag trash from the 2nd floor was brought to Mac McLarty's office by a Secret Service employee. She began removing items from the burn bag and stopped abruptly realizing how sensitive these documents were. She began to feel nervous about reviewing these documents and asked Gene Sperling, who had been in and out of McLarty's office that evening if he believed it was proper for her to be reviewing this material. Sperling agreed with her that she should not be reviewing these documents. At that point, she returned the items that she had previously removed to the burn bag. She then asked Bernard Nussbaum, who had come to Mac McLarty's office, what should be done with the burn bag. Nussbaum told her that there was not a burn bag in Vincent Foster's office and therefore there was no reason to keep this burn bag trash. It was her understanding that Nussbaum was telling her that Vincent Foster did not keep a burn bag in his office and did not use one. She contacted a Secret Service officer who picked up the burn bag and took it away.

At no time during the evening of July 20 or the early morning hours of July 21, 1993, did she go into the Nussbaum/Foster suite. Further, she did not see any White House staffers or anyone else, other than the GSA cleaning ladies, on the 2nd floor of the west wing. She also did not see anyone in the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices. Although she cannot be sure, she believes that the door to the Nussbaum/Foster suite was closed when she was on the 2nd floor. In an answer to a specific question, she said that she does not recall seeing Patsy Thomasson, Margaret "Maggie" Williams, Martha Scott, or Craig Livingston on the evening of July 20 or the early morning of July 21, 1993. She saw Bernard Nussbaum in Mac McLarty's office but did not see him on the 2nd floor of the west wing. She left The White House and went home at approximately 1:30 am.

On the morning of July 21, 1993, shortly after she arrived at work, she telephoned Roy Neel's office and left a message for him advising that the bag of trash on the floor of his office was trash that she believed had been removed from Vincent Foster's office. She advised that Neel never returned her call.

About "a week or ten days" after Vincent Foster's death, she began typing a chronology of the events of 7/20-21/93 into her office computer. The press of business precluded her from ever completing this chronology. She made this partial chronology available to the interviewing agents. Ms. Mathews stated that she had never advised any White House staffers as to her preparation of the partial chronology or an "inventory" of the items she found in the plastic bag that evening until May, 1994 when she made a copy of the "inventory" and partial chronology available to White House staffers to assist in their response to a subpoena from the Office of the Special Counsel.

Ms. Mathews stated that the only other discussion regarding the Foster trash that she can recall, occurred during August, 1993, when she was asked to come to Mark Gearan's office where she recalls seeing Cliff Sloan and Dee Dee Myers also present. They asked her to explain how she had obtained the bag of trash that she thought to be Foster's trash on the evening of July 20, 1993. She did so. They did not ask for and she did not think to offer the handwritten inventory of the bag's contents that she had previously prepared.

Ms. Mathews said that she knows of no other information that she could provide that could possibly be helpful with this investigation.

Ms. KELLI RACHAEL MCCLURE 6516 Alopex Road, Waldorf, Maryland, work number (202) 456-2014, home number (301) 843-9224 was advised of the identities of Special Agent's WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL and [redacted] and informed that they wished to interview her for possible information that would assist in tracing the source of a particular White House document. At the outset, it was agreed that Mr. CHRISTOPHER D. CERF, General Counsel for the Executive Office of the President would be present during the interview. Ms. MCCLURE provided the following information:

In 1986, she began employment with the Executive Office of the President, Office of Administration. In May of 1993, she was assigned over to The White House Management and Administration office, working for Mr. DAVID WATKINS. Her new office was located in the west wing of The White House.

Ms. MCCLURE stated that she recalls typing a document for CRAIG LIVINGSTONE back in July of 1993, specifically the day after VINCE FOSTER committed suicide (7/21/93). She did not use her own personal computer in typing the document but for some reason, used the computer at the desk of an employee named TRISHA NORTHCUTT. She feels certain that this same personal computer is currently being used by TRACY BECKETT who currently works with her in The White House Office of Administration and Management, Room 145, Old Executive Office Building.

At this point in the interview, Ms. MCCLURE was shown a copy of the two-page memo that was provided to the Office of the Independent Counsel bu Mr. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and after reviewing it, identified it, without question, as the document that she had typed for him back on July 21, 1993.

Ms. MCCLURE stated that some time around lunch, Mr. LIVINGSTONE came into her office and asked her if she could, as soon as possible, type up a rough draft memo for him. She recalls specifically that it was precisely at the time that President CLINTON was talking to the entire White House staff regarding the tragic death of VINCE FOSTER. As she recalls, just about everyone in The White House and Old Executive Office Building had gone over to hear the President's comments. She had been asked to remain in The White House Administration and Management Office to answer the phones. LIVINGSTONE had stopped by her office and asked her to type a handwritten rough draft since he did not have anyone in his office since they'd all gone over to hear President CLINTON.

MCCLURE stated that LIVINGSTONE had remarked that he had been asked to prepare this document and that he needed it typed as soon as possible. To the best of her recollection, he did not make any comment as to who had instructed him to prepare the document. She typed the document quickly and gave him the original without any copies and also returned the written rough draft to him. She can not recall if he later made any changes, deletions, corrections, or additions but to the best of her recollection, he did not and she had no further contact with this document. As best she recalls, the rough draft he gave her had not been edited, reviewed or written on by a third party. She stated that until being interviewed by Agent COLOMBELL, she has never had any inquiries from anyone, including Mr. LIVINGSTONE, regarding her preparation of this document. Within the recent past, (last two months), no one has spoken to her or inquired or made efforts to locate this document. Mr. LIVINGSTONE has not, to her knowledge, spoken to anyone else in her office and she was unaware of any efforts by him to find the person who had typed this document. MCCLURE concluded by stating that to her knowledge, no one other than TRACY BECKETT has been using or working on that particular computer in the past two months.

Upon conclusion of the interview, agents of the FBI Lab, searched the computer in question and successfully located and removed from the computer memory bank, an exact copy of the document in question which matched word for word the document that had been provided to the Office of the Independent Counsel by Mr. LIVINGSTONE's attorney. FBI lab personnel will prepare a separate report relating to the specific type of search that was conducted.

STEPHEN G. MCCORMACK was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC) regarding his knowledge of events surrounding the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., on July 20, 1993. After being apprised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview, MCCORMACK thereafter provided the following information:

MCCORMACK is an officer with the United States Uniformed Secret Service, serving as a Senior Alternate in The White House Secret Service Control Center. The Control Center is located in the Old Executive Office Building. MCCORMACK also serves as Senior Alternate in a Secret Service Surveillance Vehicle assigned to The White House. MCCORMACK's primary function in his capacity as a Senior Alternate in the Control Center is that of Administrative Clerk. As Administrative Clerk for the Control Center, MCCORMACK is responsible for typing memos related to incidents occurring within The White House and Old Executive Office Building compound. This paperwork specifically includes information related to security violations within the compound. MCCORMACK had no recollection of any paperwork completed that night related to FOSTER's office or The White House Counsel's office suite. MCCORMACK believes that he was on duty in the Control Center between the hours of 2 pm and 10 pm on the evening of July 20, 1993.

MCCORMACK believes he learned of FOSTER's death while watching the evening news. He could not say with conviction whether he recalls learning of the death on the evening of July 20 or July 21 while on duty at The White House Operations Center. This information was gathered from what MCCORMACK believed to be a local television newscast.

MCCORMACK advised that he had never met VINCENT FOSTER.

With regard to alarm procedures utilized by the Secret Service, MCCORMACK advised that if an alarm were to be set off within The White House, an audible signal would go off in the Control Center. The Control Center would allow one minute to receive a telephonic response from the space in which the alarm was set off before a Secret Service Officer would telephonically contact that location. If no response is received, Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) dictates that the Secret Service would send someone to that location to physically determine the cause of the alarm. Results surrounding the alarm and any actions taken by the Secret Service would be recorded on a Form 2046 which is utilized to record security violations within The White House. Security violations forms are maintained in the Control Center of the Secret Service Operations Center at The White House.

MCCORMACK did not know what type of alarm system was in the Counsel's office suite and specifically in FOSTER's office. MCCORMACK did know that there were no television cameras or monitors located within the suite that were maintained by the Secret Service.

The name of MAGGIE WILLIAMS was unfamiliar to MCCORMACK. He noted that he had never even heard the name at all. MCCORMACK had no knowledge of WILLIAMS being associated with documents being removed from FOSTER's office on July 20, 1993.

MCCORMACK had heard rumors that documents had been removed from FOSTER's office. The rumors were produced by fellow Secret Service officers who were talking among themselves a week or so after FOSTER's death. The rumors by those officers were nothing more than that, in that none of the officers involved with the rumors specifically saw anything come out of FOSTER's office or the Counsel's office suite on the night of the death.

MCCORMACK had met CRAIG LIVINGSTONE a couple of times during out of town White House trips. He was aware that LIVINGSTONE is the head of White House security. MCCORMACK had no knowledge of LIVINGSTONE having custody of documents on the morning of July 21. He was unaware of whether or not LIVINGSTONE may have taken documents from the west wing of The White House on the morning of July 21.

MCINERNEY is a Deputy Assistant General Counsel (Banking and Finance) at the Department of Treasury. She stated that she routinely talks to CAROLYN LIEBERMAN, General Counsel's Office for the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), on issues of mutual concern. She didn't recall speaking to LIEBERMAN about Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan (MGSL) or a Freedom Of Information (FOIA) request filed by Congressman JIM LEACH. She stated that she was interested in the legal issues raised by his request and related matters she read about in newspapers, but was never assigned to do any work on the matter. She did not recall talking to JEAN HANSEN, Treasury Department General Counsel about this matter.

KATHLEEN M. MCKIERNEN, Press Assistant to The White House Press Office, was interviewed at The White House on September 16, 1994. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, MCKIERNEN provided the following information:

MCKIERNEN advised that she has held the position of Press Assistant since January of 1993. She works directly with JEREMY GAINES, CHAD GRIFFIN and DAVID SELDIN (no longer at The White House). All of them function as coordinators to assist the Press Corp who are there at The White House in a lower press office.

MCKIERNEN advised that she has a vague recollection of the day following the death of VINCE FOSTER, JR. She believes she saw the news in the newspaper on her way in to work. She does not recall events of that morning. She did not know who VINCE FOSTER was although his name was familiar.

MCKIERNEN remembers the topic of press coverage at the FOSTER residence being discussed that day (July 21, 1993) among individuals working in the lower press office, but is pretty certain that no one from the Press Office was sent. She merely remembers there being some concern about the press converging on the FOSTER residence. She does not recall who specifically expressed those concerns. It was a general discussion that she has no specific recollection of.

MCKIERNEN advised that she "sort of recalls" that somebody from The White House (not the Press Office itself) had been out at the FOSTER residence, but she could not recall if the time frame was the night of FOSTER's death or the following morning. She had the feeling that something was done but it didn't involve herself, GAINES, GRIFFIN or SELDIN. She seems to remember something about the street on which FOSTER lived being blocked off or something like that.

MCKIERNEN advised that she knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and that she associates his name with possibly having been somebody who would have been at the FOSTER residence. She advised that LIVINGSTONE does some "advance" [work]. She said that on a couple of occasions when she worked Sundays LIVINGSTONE functioned as the staff link between the President and the Press Office. Usually an advance person does that function and she advised that CRAIG LIVINGSTONE fills in sometimes. His name sounded familiar to her in connection with her vague recollection that somebody may have been out at the FOSTER residence the morning of July 21. She was unable to be more specific.

Asked her opinion as to who may have been sent to the residence, she said that it was possibly LIVINGSTONE, possibly Secret Service or possibly press advance people such as DAVID NESLIN, KARE MCGUIRE and others. She advised that the person in charge of advance people are ISABEL TAPIA or ANNE EDWARDS.

MCKIERNEN advised that she did not take any telephone calls from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE the morning of July 21, 1993. She may have heard from somebody in the Press Office that press was not a problem but she knows that there was no follow-up that affected her or the individual she was working with. As part of the interview, MCKIERNEN provided the following personal information:

THOMAS F. "MACK" MCLARTY, Chief of Staff for President BILL CLINTON, was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. Present during the interview were MCLARTY's attorneys, WILLIAM TAYLOR and LESLIE M. BERGER, from the law firm of Zuckerman, Stader, Goldstein, Taylor & Kolker, 1201 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. (WDC) 20036, telephone number (202) 778-1848. Participating in the interview were attorneys MARK STEIN and CARL STICH, Associate Counsels, OIC, WDC. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the purpose of the interview, MCLARTY thereafter provided the following information:

MCLARTY and VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. were from the same home town and attended church together as children. FOSTER was a year older than MCLARTY. They both attended the same Junior High and High School. MCLARTY did not have much contact with FOSTER after they went to college. FOSTER attended Davidson College in North Carolina, while MCLARTY attended the University of Arkansas. After graduating from Davidson College, FOSTER then went on to law school; MCLARTY went into his family's business.

Once MCLARTY and FOSTER returned to the Little Rock area, their friendship continued. MCLARTY noted that he and FOSTER had children that were the same age. During the last five years, their relationship became much closer. The relationship between MCLARTY and FOSTER was described at this point to have been a renewed friendship. There was no professional relationship between MCLARTY and FOSTER prior to President CLINTON's campaign and election.

While in Little Rock, MCLARTY had no previous indication that FOSTER was under stress or was suffering from depression. MCLARTY did note that upon renewal of their friendship, FOSTER was more reserved than he previously recalled. FOSTER was characterized as being a devoted husband and father.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

Upon arriving in WDC, MCLARTY describes FOSTER to be a good and trusting friend. He had some interface with FOSTER based upon FOSTER's role as Deputy White House Counsel. Most of MCLARTY's dealings with the White House Counsel's office were with White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM. MCLARTY did note that he would see FOSTER a couple of times per week.

MCLARTY does not recall specific matters on which he touched base with FOSTER. MCLARTY did consult FOSTER on the Travel Office matter before it broke in the press. During this consultation, FOSTER urged a more deliberate course of action in dealing with employees of the Travel Office. It was FOSTER who recommended that the accounting firm of PEAT-MARWICK conduct an auditing review of the Travel Office. MCLARTY noted that both himself and LEON PANETTA, Budget Director, asked JOHN PODESTA to head the review of events surrounding the Travel Office matter. MCLARTY did not have many dealings with FOSTER regarding PODESTA's pending report.

In the course of conducting the internal White House probe into the Travel Office matter, MCLARTY summoned a number of White House officials to his office to discuss the affair. MCLARTY recalls that WILLIAM (BILL) KENNEDY appeared to have much more involvement than any other White House staffer in this matter. He did not feel that FOSTER was at the center of the controversy surrounding the Travel Office. MCLARTY did not recall any specific comments made by FOSTER regarding stress he was feeling related to the Travel Office matter.

During the transition between President CLINTON's election and taking the oath of office in January of 1993, a number of proposals were received from individuals offering a second home for the President. A couple of referrals were made to MCLARTY that were subsequently discussed with FOSTER. This is one of the matters that MCLARTY was aware of that FOSTER was working on, on behalf of the President. MCLARTY is now aware that there was a file in FOSTER's office that was related to Whitewater. MCLARTY was not aware of this particular file on the date of FOSTER's death, July 20, 1993. MCLARTY was not aware of FOSTER working on Whitewater until it became somewhat public and an internal White House meeting was held in December, 1993, to discuss the issue. Other than handling proposals for a second home for the President, MCLARTY was not aware of any personal matters of the President that FOSTER was working on prior to December, 1993. After FOSTER's death, MCLARTY became aware that FOSTER was doing personal work for the CLINTONS. MCLARTY currently believes that FOSTER was working on tax returns with regards to the Whitewater Development for the CLINTONS. MCLARTY understands that the Whitewater file is limited in size and scope. He believes that a report done by Colorado attorney, JIM LYONS, was part of the Whitewater file.

MCLARTY had no discussions of any length or substance regarding deep feelings of stress and frustration on the part of FOSTER. FOSTER did let MCLARTY know of his frustration with the slowness of getting things accomplished within the Federal bureaucracy and the large volume of work. MCLARTY noted the only concern expressed by FOSTER regarding the Travel Office episode was that FOSTER wished he had provided better counsel. MCLARTY was aware that FOSTER was bothered by a series of Wall Street Journal articles pertaining to him (FOSTER). MCLARTY did not note anything out of the ordinary with regard to FOSTER and, in hindsight, feels that FOSTER's feelings at the time were understandable.

No one conversation with FOSTER sticks out in MCLARTY's mind with regard to the issues of stress and depression. While in Washington, MCLARTY did not see FOSTER that frequently. They did not have any sort of regular breakfast or dinner meetings where they could compare notes. There was not much social interaction between MCLARTY's family and the FOSTERs in either Little Rock or WDC. MCLARTY was not aware that there was a group of Arkansans working at the White House who went out to dinner every now and then.

MCLARTY was unaware that FOSTER was considering the possibility of resigning his position as Deputy Counsel to the President. Other than reports subsequent to FOSTER's death, MCLARTY did not recall anyone expressing to him a desire by FOSTER to resign. A factor of concern for FOSTER was a call for Congressional Hearings regarding the Travel Office matter. MCLARTY did not recall a letter that was allegedly written by Senator DOLE requesting Congressional Hearings. MCLARTY was aware of FOSTER's concern regarding increased scrutiny related to the Travel Office matter.

According to MCLARTY, there was no formal meeting among White House personnel to discuss factors that may have caused

FOSTER to take his own life. He is positive that informal discussions were held amongst White House staffers related to FOSTER's death. To date, there have been no insights gleaned from others as to why FOSTER committed suicide. MCLARTY did not feel it was productive to dwell on whatever those reasons were. He can think of no specific reason that would have let someone make the decision to take their own life.

At some point, MCLARTY observed a personality change within FOSTER. He noticed, on occasion, that FOSTER was more reserved than previously remembered. Although there was a personality change, MCLARTY did not recall any marked features of that change.

MCLARTY last saw FOSTER on July 20, 1993, the date of his death. FOSTER met LOUIS FREEH on July 19, 1993, prior to FREEH's being nominated as the new Director of the FBI. MCLARTY recalls a personal exchange with FOSTER after 3:00 p.m. on July 19, 1993. MCLARTY approached FOSTER for small talk. He does not recall if he made any telephone calls to FOSTER on the 19th or the 20th.

On July 20, 1993, MCLARTY met with BILL BURTON of the White House staff sometime after 8:00 p.m. This meeting occurred at the White House during the taping of an interview with talk show host, LARRY KING. WENDY WALKER, KING's Executive Producer, and a couple of other guests to include KING's first wife, SHARON, were part of a group invited to watch the taping of the show at the White House. DAVID DREIER, White House Communications; RICKI TIEGERT; GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, DEE DEE MYERS and MARK GEARAN were in an adjacent room watching the show on a monitor. After taping of the interview, MCLARTY's intention was to return home. BURTON headed to his office with the intent of going home.

Sometime after 9:00 p.m. on July 20, 1993, BILL BURTON reported that he had been called by DAVID WATKINS, Head of Management and Administration, The White House. WATKINS informed BURTON that a person, believed to be FOSTER, had been found dead. BURTON did not recall where the body was located. MCLARTY may have asked what he (BURTON) planned to do next. BURTON returned to MCLARTY's office to monitor the situation. MCLARTY talked to others about how best to notify the family as well as HILLARY CLINTON and the President, who was in the middle of a live television interview. HILLARY CLINTON was in Little Rock. MCLARTY recalls that she may have been in Little Rock regarding her father's illness. MCLARTY believes that he may have instructed that Deputy Attorney General WEBB HUBBELL be contacted and told because he thought HUBBELL might have insight regarding FOSTER.

During this time period, STEPHANOPOULOS and GEARAN began to sense that something was amiss. STEPHANOPOULOS, GEARAN and MCLARTY had a discussion to determine how best to inform HILLARY CLINTON and the President. MCLARTY did not recall people walking back and forth in the area, or in other rooms adjacent to the hallway. When HUBBELL was informed, MCLARTY remembers HUBBELL to have been shocked. HUBBELL had no particular insight regarding why FOSTER might have taken his life. MCLARTY thought HUBBELL may have had knowledge as to where FOSTER had gone that day. HUBBELL was asked to travel to the FOSTER home to be with LISA FOSTER.

MCLARTY then decided to call HILLARY CLINTON in Little Rock. MCLARTY also talked to WENDY WALKER to try to find out what could be done to inform the President, given that he was in the middle of a live interview. MCLARTY believed WALKER was approached after the conversation ensued between himself, STEPHANOPOULOS and GEARAN.

MCLARTY, GEARAN and STEPHANOPOULOS decided amongst-themselves not to interrupt the interview between KING and the President until FOSTER's identity could be confirmed. MCLARTY did talk to HILLARY CLINTON in Little Rock. MCLARTY did not recall any discussions regarding a search of FOSTER's office or discussions of a suicide note with GEARAN or STEPHANOPOULOS. In the contact with HILLARY CLINTON, MCLARTY noted that there was no positive identification of FOSTER at that time. HILLARY CLINTON was shocked and stunned and could not believe that FOSTER had taken his life. MCLARTY described the conversation to be short in duration.

MCLARTY believes HILLARY CLINTON may have been called a second time, but could not recall with certainty. MCLARTY recalls no statements from HILLARY CLINTON regarding possible reasons for FOSTER to have taken his life.

MCLARTY did talk to the CLINTONS in general on the night of the death, after visiting the FOSTER residence. Others at the residence while MCLARTY was there included MICKEY KANTOR, VERNON JORDAN and DAVID GERGEN. Conversation at the FOSTER residence centered around memories of FOSTER. MCLARTY did not recall exact comments regarding why FOSTER might have committed suicide.

MCLARTY talked with WENDY WALKER, a producer for the LARRY KING Show, after his telephone conversation with HILLARY CLINTON. During his conversation with WALKER, they were trying to determine what steps could be taken in order to inform the President of FOSTER's death with the least amount of disruption to the airing of the LARRY KING Show. The major concern for MCLARTY at this time, was having a viewer place a call to the show and inform the President, on air, of FOSTER's death. BILL BURTON later provided MCLARTY with additional information that led him to believe that FOSTER was dead. BURTON informed MCLARTY that BILL KENNEDY probably identified FOSTER's body.

MCLARTY talked to WALKER in that she was probably aware that something was going on. MCLARTY noted that WALKER was cooperative throughout the course of the evening. At this point, MCLARTY noted that the President had agreed to continue his interview on the LARRY KING Show for an extra thirty minutes. MCLARTY indicated to STEPHANOPOULOS that they had to keep the President from staying that extra thirty minutes. During a break in the telecast, MCLARTY informed KING that the extended interview could not take place.

MCLARTY and the President departed the library of the White House where the interview was being conducted. In a hallway on the way to the residence area of the White House, MCLARTY informed the President that he had a serious matter to discuss with him. At that point, MCLARTY and the President go to the second floor of the residence and sit down in one of the bedrooms. The President was then informed of FOSTER's death. MCLARTY believes that by this point, FOSTER's identity had been confirmed. The President's reaction was described as being grieved. MCLARTY recalls the President saying, "Oh, no." After informing the President of FOSTER's death, MCLARTY's focus turned toward taking the President to the FOSTER residence. The President was told that Deputy Attorney General WEBB HUBBELL was at the FOSTER residence to inform the family. MCLARTY now had to determine how best to transport the President to the FOSTERS' residence without causing a big commotion. During this time period, the President telephoned HILLARY CLINTON.

In the ensuing minutes, MCLARTY contacted the Secret Service about how best to accomplish the transport of the President to the FOSTER residence. It was decided by the Secret Service to take one car and one van. MCLARTY and the President got into the van and proceeded to the residence.

MCLARTY had no recollection of discussions with any White House staff while at the FOSTER residence.

While at the FOSTER home, MCLARTY recalls the following individuals to be there: SHEILA ANTHONY, SHARON BOWMAN, SENATOR DAVID PRYOR, DAVID WATKINS' wife, EILEEN, and a number of other Arkansas types. MCLARTY was at the FOSTER residence with the President for approximately one hour. LISA FOSTER, who was sitting on a couch, was described by MCLARTY to be devastated. MCLARTY did not recall seeing any U.S. Park Police personnel while he was at the FOSTER home. While at the FOSTER residence, MCLARTY recalls talking to BURTON who was at the White House. BURTON was at MCLARTY's office at the time and MCLARTY noted that BERNIE NUSSBAUM was in his (NUSSBAUM's) office.

After dealing with getting the President to the FOSTER residence, the next issue of concern for MCLARTY became proper notification of the press. MCLARTY did not recall LISA FOSTER asking about a suicide note during his stay at the residence. MCLARTY recalls going outside to talk to SHEILA ANTHONY to express a sense of loss, as well as to discuss FOSTER's feelings of frustration at the White House.

MCLARTY talked to DAVID GERGEN regarding press notification. A major concern for MCLARTY was to insure that FOSTER's mother had been informed back in Hope, Arkansas. MCLARTY recalls that both sisters may have told him that FOSTER's mother had not been informed of the death. It was MCLARTY who had informed both SHEILA ANTHONY and SHARON BOWMAN of the need to disclose the death of their brother to the press. MCLARTY recalls that BILL BURTON may have called Hope, Arkansas to contact FOSTER's mother. DAVID GERGEN and GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, through MARK GEARAN, released information regarding the FOSTER death.

MCLARTY did not specifically recall who he talked to at the FOSTER home but believes he could have talked to BILL BURTON. He did not recall focusing in on a suicide note the night of FOSTER's death. Further, up until leaving FOSTER's home, MCLARTY did not recall any discussions regarding a suicide note.

Back at the White House, MCLARTY and GEARAN had a discussion. MCLARTY was aware that NUSSBAUM and GEARAN could handle whatever came up at the White House. VERNON JORDAN and GERGEN may have ridden back to the White House with the President and MCLARTY. He does not recall the President asking about a suicide note.

Back at the White House, a discussion was held in the residence kitchen among KANTOR, STEPHANOPOULOS, JORDAN, GERGEN and the President. The discussion centered around remembrances of FOSTER in a positive light. MCLARTY did not recall a note being discussed during this conversation. MCLARTY asked GERGEN if the press release had been done appropriately. GERGEN told MCLARTY that matters regarding FOSTER's office were being properly handled. GERGEN and MCLARTY talked to GEARAN regarding how things were in the office. He did not recall specifics. MCLARTY cannot recall if FOSTER's office had been sealed. There was no recollection on MCLARTY's part regarding a note during the conversations back at the White House. He does not recall meeting anyone else that night at the White House. MCLARTY did not recall either PATSY THOMASSON or MAGGIE WILLIAMS going into FOSTER's office.

DAVID WATKINS could have informed MCLARTY of activities related to FOSTER's office. According to MCLARTY, SYLVIA MATHEWS, who works for the National Economic Council, may have been associated with recovering trash that had been removed from FOSTER's office. That trash was then believed to have been taken by MATHEWS and secured in ROY NEEL's office. NEEL, at the time, was the Deputy Chief of Staff for the White House.

MCLARTY was not aware of others who might have met in his office that evening. BURTON would have been coordinating activities from MCLARTY's office. MCLARTY described his office suite as having an administrative area with two to three desks. NEEL's office was located on one side of the suite and MCLARTY's office was located on the other.

MCLARTY had no concern that after informing WALKER that CNN would break the story regarding FOSTER's death. He did not suggest to her that the story not be put out. When talking to WALKER, MCLARTY stressed that the death had not been confirmed and their discussion primarily centered around the dilemma regarding altering the KING/CLINTON interview.

On July 21, 1993, MCLARTY did not recall any specific meetings related to FOSTER's death. The only meeting that in any way discussed the FOSTER death was a staff meeting with all White House staffers plus the President's public statement on the FOSTER death. He does not recall a note coming up in either of those conversations. MCLARTY may have learned the next day that trash from FOSTER's office had been recovered.

At some point, MCLARTY became aware that no suicide note was found. He does not recall how he learned this. MCLARTY does not recall when he would have learned that FOSTER's office was searched on July 22, 1993. Based on the context of the search, MCLARTY was of the impression that it was properly conducted. MCLARTY is not sure when he learned that THOMASSON and WILLIAMS had been in FOSTER's office. MCLARTY believes that NUSSBAUM was in the office with him. SYLVIA MATHEWS could have been in the office regarding the recovery of the trash bags from FOSTER's office. MCLARTY did recall a general meeting with NUSSBAUM regarding responsibilities related to cooperation with legal authorities in connection with the FOSTER death. MCLARTY was aware that the United States Park Police (USPP) was involved in the investigation.

MCLARTY did not discuss with the CLINTONS whether or not documents in FOSTER's office may have some interest to them. MCLARTY may have known when the search of FOSTER's office was to have taken place, but could not specifically recall. MCLARTY did not discuss Whitewater documents or anything related to the disposition of same during this period of time. MCLARTY was aware that contacts had been made with the proper authorities regarding the search of FOSTER's office. MCLARTY is aware that meetings took place with TOM COLLIER from the U.S. Department of Interior and other authorities regarding the search/inventory of FOSTER's office. He was aware that there was some sort of disagreement but did not know specifics. He was also aware that the disagreement concerned cooperation between agencies involved in the search. MCLARTY did not learn specifics regarding the procedure of the document inventory. There was no mention of a note being found in the course of the review of documents in FOSTER's office. MCLARTY recalls meeting on either Wednesday or Thursday after FOSTER's death, about how the search/inventory was to take place. He has no recollection of meetings regarding changes in the inventory procedure on July 22, 1993. MCLARTY learned of safes in the Counsel's office from press accounts. He was not aware of the status of FOSTER's office with regard to safes.

On the Monday after the funeral, MCLARTY was traveling with the President. Late in the afternoon, NUSSBAUM related that scraps of paper had been located in a briefcase in FOSTER's office. MCLARTY had no recollection that the briefcase had been previously searched. NUSSBAUM advised that STEVEN NEUWIRTH of the Counsel's office had located the note. NUSSBAUM related to MCLARTY what the contents of the list were. The contents did not have a solution with regard to why FOSTER killed himself. It was also not signed and appeared to be composed of unsubstantiated allegations. MCLARTY informed NUSSBAUM that the President must be informed regarding the list. NUSSBAUM's concern was legal in nature and centered on privacy issues that had to be addressed. They were also concerned with the reaction of HILLARY CLINTON in that issues involving the decorating of the White House and perceived animosity between the White House Usher's office and HILLARY CLINTON were listed on the note. NUSSBAUM's concern throughout the review of documents in FOSTER's office revolved around executive and attorney/client privileges. He was of the opinion that the President should be informed first of the contents of this list. He does not recall conversations regarding turning the note over to the USPP. MCLARTY was aware that HILLARY CLINTON and the President were both close to FOSTER and this weighed heavily in deciding to inform them of the list that was found.

MCLARTY held a second conversation with NUSSBAUM where he felt appropriate issues had been raised. There was an understanding that there were legal issues to be evaluated. On July 26, 1993, the President was in Chicago when the note was located. The President was not told that the note was found until he returned to Washington. MCLARTY believes NUSSBAUM may have been the individual to inform Attorney JAMES HAMILTON of the note. HAMILTON was, at the time, representing LISA FOSTER. On Tuesday, a decision was made that NUSSBAUM had to inform LISA

FOSTER of the note and that she was arriving in Washington that day. LISA FOSTER actually came to the White House and the note was discussed in NUSSBAUM's office. She was informed the note would have to be provided to the proper investigative authorities. MCLARTY does not recall if he actually saw LISA FOSTER being shown the note. MCLARTY does not recall LISA FOSTER making any comments regarding the content of the list. It was determined that the list would be turned over to the Justice Department for further action. The President was informed and MCLARTY believes the President told LISA FOSTER that a transcript was available. The discussion was not lengthy. MCLARTY recalled no other comments regarding what was to be done with the note.

A meeting scheduled for early evening with the Attorney General concerned when the note was to be provided. Attorney General JANET RENO and Deputy Attorney General PHILLIP HEYMANN, as well as DAVID GERGEN were present during this meeting. RENO wanted the note turned over properly to the United States Park Police. The meeting concluded. RENO may have asked questions as to why the note had not been previously turned over.

According to MCLARTY, at some point, two members of the USPP came to his office to receive the note. NUSSBAUM explained to the two Park Police officers how the note was found and how the note had been put together. MCLARTY recalls NUSSBAUM, GERGEN and himself being interviewed by Park Police regarding the circumstances related to the note. MCLARTY had no knowledge of any other notes in the White House related to the death of FOSTER.

MCLARTY talked to BURTON to refresh his memories regarding events surrounding FOSTER's death and the search of his office prior to meeting with officials of the OIC. He had no discussions with others at the White House as to why the note was not found the night of FOSTER's death.

There was no reason to believe that there was any intimate relationship between FOSTER and HILLARY CLINTON. MCLARTY made this assumption based on his knowledge of both individuals.

THOMAS F. "MACK" McLARTY, Chief of Staff for President BILL CLINTON, was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. Present during the interview were McLARTY's attorneys, BILL TAYLOR and LESLIE M. BERGER, of the law firm of ZUCKERMAN, SPAEDER, GOLDSTEIN, TAYLOR & KOLKER, 1201 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, telephone number (202) 778-1848. Also participating in the interview were attorneys MARK STEIN and CARL STICH, Associate Independent Counsels, OIC, Washington, D.C. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, McLARTY provided the following information:

McLARTY first became aware of the issues surrounding Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan (MGSL) and the Whitewater Development Corporation (Whitewater) when the Special Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, Jr., was appointed. MCLARTY was aware of these entities prior to FISKE's appointment, but the appointment of FISKE highlighted or cemented in McLARTY's mind the fact that there was an investigation underway.

Prior to serving as President CLINTON's Chief of Staff, McLARTY had served as Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of Arkla, which is a Fortune 500 company. McLARTY was not part of the CLINTON campaign team, and he only visited the CLINTON campaign headquarters once.

McLARTY has known President CLINTON since they attended kindergarten together in Hope, Arkansas. McLARTY and President CLINTON are good friends and share a respect for each other, but McLARTY does not regard their relationship as close, personal or intimate.

McLARTY's own political history includes service as an Arkansas state representative at the age of 23 as well as later service as treasurer for the Arkansas gubernatorial campaign of current United States Senator DAVID PRYOR and the first Arkansas gubernatorial campaign of BILL CLINTON.

by SAs DANA M. GILLIS and RUSSELL T. BRANSFORD RTB:rtb Date dictated 5/6/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

During the 1992 presidential campaign, once BILL CLINTON had been nominated as the Democratic candidate, McLARTY attended three or four meetings with the CLINTON campaign staff and provided a business viewpoint on various issues. McLARTY was also semi-active in corporate fund-raising for the campaign, and he met with business people from outside Arkansas who came to Arkansas to learn about CLINTON's attitudes toward business. McLARTY joined the transition board approximately four weeks before the election of President CLINTON. The transition board, whose function was to prepare for a CLINTON Administration in the event candidate CLINTON won the election, only met once prior to the election. However, the board then met on the day after the election and President-elect CLINTON asked McLARTY to serve in the CLINTON Administration.

McLARTY was quite surprised to be offered a position as Chief of Staff in the CLINTON White House since his main experience had been as CEO of Arkla. McLARTY and WARREN CHRISTOPHER, currently the Secretary of State, were particularly involved in the process for selecting Cabinet secretaries.

McLARTY was remotely aware of the MGSL and Whitewater issues during the campaign through press accounts. His reading of these accounts was casual because he was engaged in pursuing his business responsibilities at the time.

McLARTY does not recall engaging in any specific conversations regarding the investigation of MGSL by the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) but there could have been such a conversation. McLARTY was very involved in concentrating on the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the Vancouver summit meeting at that time. McLARTY was not aware of any meetings at the White House in late September 1993 or early October 1993 concerning criminal referrals by the RTC. He does not believe he knew of the meeting held at the White House on or about September 29, 1993 at the time it occurred. McLARTY now knows that Department of the Treasury General Counsel JEAN HANSON met with BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Counsel to the President, at that meeting. MCLARTY may have learned of this meeting between HANSON and NUSSBAUM after this and other meetings became issues in the media.

McLARTY believes he learned of the meeting between HANSON and NUSSBAUM sometime after February 24, 1994, which was when ROGER ALTMAN, Acting CEO of the RTC, testified before the Senate Banking Committee.

As Chief of Staff, McLARTY is responsible for managing the White House and supporting the President. McLARTY also performs an outreach function and has become more of a public figure in reaching out to various constituencies. McLARTY's job is shaped by the personality and the wishes of the President. Another of McLARTY's responsibilities is to furnish information to the President in a timely manner. McLARTY also has frequent contact with the three main councils at the White House, the National Security Council, the National Economic Council and the Domestic Policy Council, and he provides counsel to the President on domestic policy issues. McLARTY conducts liaison with members of Congress, and he uses the Cabinet secretaries as his points of contact with other agencies of the executive branch.

Because of his background, McLARTY tends to be more of a common sense type of counselor who provides a "reality check" to the President.

Prior to the appointment of the Independent Counsel, the Whitewater issue had been handled primarily by the White House Counsel's Office and by Senior Advisor BRUCE LINDSEY. Just after January 1, 1994, HAROLD ICKES joined the White House staff as Deputy Chief of Staff. As President CLINTON and McLARTY were preparing to leave Washington for a trip, McLARTY asked ICKES to take over primary responsibility for dealing with Whitewater-related issues.

Staff secretary JOHN PODESTA handles the daily flow of information to the President. Currently, Special Counsel LLOYD CUTLER and Deputy Counsel to the President JOEL KLEIN have direct responsibility for handling matters relating to Whitewater. Since approximately March 1, 1994, ICKES and CUTLER have been asked to report any information about Whitewater to McLARTY on a daily basis. These reports usually consist of information about potential press stories and the appropriate responses to these stories. PODESTA, Director of Communications MARK GEARAN, and Counselor DAVID R. GERGEN may also be involved in reporting to McLARTY and preparing responses to the media.

Mr. PAT GRIFFIN, who is responsible for legislative affairs, may become involved in these reports to McLARTY if there are issues involving Congress.

McLARTY does not recall the RTC criminal referrals being brought to his attention in September 1993, and he does not recall any specific meetings about the RTC referrals at that time. He would have to review his notes to determine whether he attended any meetings with President CLINTON or First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON during the fall of 1993 in which the referrals might have been discussed.

The allegations by Arkansas state troopers about former Governor CLINTON's conduct came to light just before the Christmas holiday in December 1993. There were a number of other significant issues with which McLARTY was involved at that time, such as NAFTA and the need to replace ROY NEEL and HOWARD PASTER on the White House staff. There were no meetings during that period which raised Whitewater to a level where decisions had to be made or where there was any need for follow-up of the issue on an ongoing basis.

McLARTY is certain there had been discussions regarding the RTC, MGSL and Whitewater prior to the appointment of Independent Counsel FISKE. The CLINTONs had already turned over material sought by the United States Department of Justice (DOJ). All of the requested material had been turned over and there had been full compliance with the DOJ request although there was a minor issue raised over the timeliness of the response. The DOJ officials reviewing the CLINTON documents were career employees. A Republican from Illinois and a higher-ranking DOJ official with a reputation for thoroughness and objectivity were overseeing the review of the CLINTON documents.

McLARTY was aware of a DOJ investigation in January 1994. He had not examined the facts of the Whitewater issue in a broad way and he was not conscious of the status of the civil case relating to Whitewater. McLARTY may have been remotely aware of this civil case but he does not currently recall. He may have been generally aware of the actions of Senator ALFONSE D'AMATO regarding the issue of the impending expiration of the civil statute of limitations. McLARTY did not have any discussions with President CLINTON regarding the statute of limitations issue.

McLARTY believed that the Whitewater issue was being discharged and handled in the appropriate way during this time period because DOJ was involved in the investigation. In addition, NUSSBAUM was handling the matter at the White House and keeping McLARTY apprised.

McLARTY had no knowledge of a meeting between White House and Treasury officials on October 14, 1993 until ALTMAN testified about this meeting on February 24, 1994.

ALTMAN had been active in the CLINTON presidential campaign and had made presentations regarding the CLINTON economic plan on behalf of candidate CLINTON. Approximately sixty days before the presidential election, ALTMAN and economic advisor ROBERT RUBIN spoke at a business conference in Chicago, Illinois. ALTMAN's name came up later as a candidate to become Deputy Secretary of the Treasury when discussions were being held about Cabinet posts. President CLINTON had known ALTMAN for a number of years but had not known him well.

McLARTY had relatively regular contact with ALTMAN during the course of normal meetings. McLARTY's contacts with the Department of the Treasury were primarily through Secretary of the Treasury LLOYD BENTSEN. ALTMAN became an articulate spokesman for the Administration concerning the CLINTON economic plan and engaged in discussions with LEON PANETTA, Director of the Office of Management and Budget. Secretary BENTSEN was receptive to the idea of ALTMAN, assisted by RICKI SEIDMAN, leading the Administration's effort on behalf of the CLINTON economic plan. McLARTY had no role in the selection of ALTMAN as Acting CEO of RTC, and he was not in any meetings where the appointments at RTC were discussed.

McLARTY believes that after the appointment of Independent Counsel FISKE, ALTMAN called McLARTY about the RTC matter. McLARTY does not specifically recall this telephone call, but he believes that he would have referred such a call to ICKES. McLARTY believes this to be so because ICKES was handling issues pertaining to Whitewater, MGSL and the RTC at the time.

McLARTY believes there is a high likelihood, although he does not recall specifically, that the meeting was requested by ALTMAN and that ICKES set up the meeting on February 2, 1994. McLARTY was invited to the meeting and was aware of the general subject matter, but he was not briefed on the meeting in advance and he did not learn any specifics. He did know that the discussion was on RTC and MGSL matters. McLARTY probably knew then, though he is now uncertain whether he actually knew, that RTC was investigating MGSL at that time. ICKES may have asked to use McLARTY's office for the meeting. McLARTY was not attending the meeting because he was at a meeting involving President CLINTON and members of Congress in the Cabinet Room. He does not believe he was still in his office when the meeting began. It happens quite often that meetings are held in McLARTY's office without McLARTY being personally present. McLARTY remembers that the meeting was scheduled for late in the afternoon at approximately 5:00 or 6:00 p.m. No one who had attended the meeting was still in McLARTY's office when he returned there. McLARTY may have received a briefing about the meeting in passing.

McLARTY had not remembered receiving a telephone call from ALTMAN after this meeting until McLARTY was reminded of it by a reference to the call in a letter from ALTMAN to Senator DONALD RIEGLE. McLARTY received the call from ALTMAN sometime in early February 1994, possibly several days after the meeting had occurred. The call was short, and ALTMAN told McLARTY that he was attempting to do everything in a proper manner. McLARTY recalls that ALTMAN had been deliberating about whether to recuse himself at that time. McLARTY appreciated ALTMAN's dilemma and he expressed a sympathetic view to ALTMAN during the call but provided no opinion about what ALTMAN should do. McLARTY did not discuss the content of the meeting with ALTMAN during this call. McLARTY did not interpret the call from ALTMAN as a matter of ALTMAN asking for advice.

Specific discussion of ALTMAN recusing himself from any RTC decisions pertaining to MGSL may have occurred prior to the meeting in February, but McLARTY does not recall specifically. McLARTY understood at that time that RTC was still investigating MGSL. MCLARTY did not have a sufficient level of detail in his understanding of the RTC investigation to know that the RTC investigation was a civil case at that time. McLARTY does not recall any distinction being made between recusal from the RTC civil investigation versus the criminal investigation.

McLARTY does not recall discussing ALTMAN's consideration of the recusal issue with anyone in the White House including President CLINTON.

McLARTY did not have conversations with ALTMAN, anyone at RTC or anyone at the White House about the recusal issue between the time of ALTMAN's call to him and ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee. There could have been some discussion in White House staff meetings about ALTMAN's testimony and how potential questions from senators would be handled.

McLARTY does not believe he was aware that ALTMAN had decided to recuse himself and had changed his mind from his previous view. McLARTY did not watch ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee or receive a transcript of the testimony.

McLARTY has been involved in meetings in which the Treasury contacts were discussed. McLARTY may have been aware of these contacts perhaps one to two days before the controversy over the contacts received attention in the press. McLARTY became aware of the contacts in a retrospective way. If he had known about the contacts earlier, he would have referred the matter over to ICKES and NUSSBAUM. He does not recall assigning anyone to be the point person on this issue. McLARTY recalls general discussion about the meeting between ALTMAN and White House officials on February 2, 1994, and this discussion probably was with ICKES and NUSSBAUM. The meeting on February 2, 1994 was an informational meeting since the information had already been publicly disseminated. ALTMAN had received an opinion prior to attending the meeting that his attendance at such a meeting would not be improper.

McLARTY does not recall ICKES or NUSSBAUM telling him that recusal had been discussed at the meeting on February 2, 1994. McLARTY does recall there had been some discussion as to whether ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate committee had been complete and accurate.

McLARTY does not recall specific discussions about the meetings which had occurred in the fall of 1993. There may have been general discussions about the meetings during that time. Obviously, ALTMAN's testimony raised some questions at the White House because it had to be amended several times through correspondence with the Senate. McLARTY is not aware of anyone at the White House calling ALTMAN regarding the issue of ALTMAN amending his testimony before the Senate committee.

McLARTY has no recollection of discussing ALTMAN's Senate testimony with either the President or the First Lady. One discussion McLARTY did have with President CLINTON was about determining the appropriate posture for a response to inquiries. McLARTY believes ICKES and NUSSBAUM would have briefed the President and told him that nothing improper had occurred. McLARTY does not recall being present at that meeting. The President held the opinion that it would have been better if the meetings had not occurred but that nothing improper had occurred.

McLARTY has never met JAY STEPHENS and he was not initially aware of the fact when STEPHENS was hired by the RTC to investigate the MGSL matter. McLARTY has never had a detailed discussion with anyone at the White House about the hiring of STEPHENS by the RTC. McLARTY was not part of any White House effort to contact Treasury officials about removing STEPHENS from his position at the RTC. McLARTY was not aware of a telephone call from advisor GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS to either ALTMAN or JOSH STEINER at Treasury prior to the call being made. McLARTY has since spoken to STEPHANOPOULOS, who said that he made the call because he was angry but he has since regretted making the call. McLARTY believes that STEPHANOPOULOS called STEINER. McLARTY does not know, other than through press accounts, whether STEPHANOPOULOS spoke to the President about the hiring of STEPHENS. McLARTY believes that STEPHANOPOULOS may have acted in a rash manner when he called STEINER but not with any ill intent.

McLARTY believes he may have had a conversation in passing with the President about the STEPHANOPOULOS call to the Treasury official. McLARTY recalls believing that STEPHANOPOULOS should not have called STEINER but it was understandable why he did so. He also recalls that the matter was receiving serious attention in the press so it was decided that LLOYD CUTLER would handle the issue since that appeared to be the most appropriate response.

STEPHANOPOULOS has been able to remain on the White House staff despite the call to STEINER because he underscored that he had acted in a hasty manner. NUSSBAUM, in contrast, had become involved in handling issues which had become controversial and were hurting the agenda of the Administration. NUSSBAUM had said he had attended the meeting with Treasury officials and he continued to say it had been proper to have done so.

McLARTY does not recall how he learned of ALTMAN's recusal, and he did not discuss ALTMAN's recusal with the President. McLARTY did not become aware of a letter of apology sent by ALTMAN to the President until after McLARTY received a copy of the letter. McLARTY does not recall discussing the letter with the President or anyone else. McLARTY sent a note back to ALTMAN in which he acknowledged that ALTMAN's position was difficult and ALTMAN was trying to handle the situation appropriately. McLARTY wrote that this response was "vintage ALTMAN." McLARTY believed that ALTMAN's note to the President was appropriate and demonstrated that ALTMAN was attempting to deal with a difficult situation in a constructive manner.

McLARTY recalls an occasion in the Oval Office at the White House at which the President expressed amusement and concern about the hiring of STEPHENS by the RTC. McLARTY does not recall when this occasion in the Oval Office occurred. McLARTY recalls the President's mood as being one of concern, frustration and amusement. The appointment of STEPHENS to such a position with the RTC did not seem logical to McLARTY. McLARTY recalls that senior advisor BRUCE LINDSEY was already in the Oval Office prior to McLARTY's arrival there. LINDSEY was preparing to leave the Oval Office as McLARTY was coming in. McLARTY now believes that LINDSEY remained in the Oval Office while McLARTY discussed the hiring of STEPHENS with the President. The President did not ask for any action to be taken in regard to the hiring of STEPHENS.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 1/30/95

CYNTHIA HOWARD McMANUS was interviewed in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, McMANUS provided the following information:

McMANUS currently serves as a program support specialist with the United States Department of Justice (DOJ), Office of Justice Programs, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, 633 Indiana Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 307-5911. McMANUS's immediate superior is SHELDON C. "SHAY" BILCHIK.

McMANUS has been in government service for twenty-eight years and has worked for a number of those years at either DOJ or at the White House. In 1978, during the administration of President JIMMY CARTER, McMANUS worked for MICHAEL CARDOZO for one year when he was an associate counsel and the number three person in the White House Counsel's Office (WHCO). McMANUS later worked in the office of the White House chief of staff when EDWIN MEESE held that post. When MEESE left the White House staff to become attorney general, McMANUS remained at the White House. In June 1988, McMANUS went to work at DOJ in the office of the deputy attorney general, where she remained until 1993.

On January 22, 1993, McMANUS began serving as executive assistant and office manager in the WHCO in the administration of President BILL CLINTON. McMANUS was asked to come to work in the WHCO by CARDOZO. CARDOZO had most recently served on the CLINTON transition team, and he was serving as liaison between the White House and DOJ while the administration vetted candidates for the post of attorney general. White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM met with CARDOZO and asked CARDOZO to suggest the name of someone who could come in and set up the operation of the WHCO. CARDOZO recommended McMANUS to NUSSBAUM, who asked CARDOZO to offer the post in the WHCO to McMANUS.

McMANUS met NUSSBAUM for the first time when she reported for work at the WHCO. Her responsibilities included setting up of the WHCO office, cleaning up what had been left by the previous occupants, overseeing the installation of computers and office equipment, and maintaining NUSSBAUM's work schedule and personal calendar. McMANUS worked mostly with NUSSBAUM, and she had little interaction with Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. NUSSBAUM was very warm and congenial to McMANUS and the other employees in the WHCO. McMANUS observed that FOSTER also seemed to relate well with NUSSBAUM and the other WHCO employees. However, while FOSTER and McMANUS treated each other in a professional manner, McMANUS felt that FOSTER seemed distant and cool toward her. One manifestation of this distance was that FOSTER did not want McMANUS to come into his office. McMANUS complied with FOSTER's request even though her desk in the reception area of the WHCO suite was immediately outside and closest to FOSTER's office. McMANUS does not know the reason for FOSTER's coolness toward her, but she believes FOSTER may have acted differently around her because McMANUS is African-American.

McMANUS came to the WHCO with the understanding that she would only set up the office and not remain there to oversee its operation. McMANUS had originally agreed to remain at the WHCO for thirty days, and she was anxious to leave once the attorney general and deputy attorney general were named. However, NUSSBAUM asked McMANUS to remain until the office could become fully functioning, and McMANUS agreed to do so. McMANUS agreed to remain until the end of July 1993, but she ended up actually leaving in May 1993.

In approximately April 1993, McMANUS contacted the White House security officer, whose name she cannot recall, and asked him for his assistance in opening the WHCO safes because they were locked shut and no one in the WHCO knew the combinations. The safes had been emptied by members of the previous administration and then locked shut, but no record of the safes' combinations had been left for the incoming administration. The security officer and his staff removed the locks from these safes, installed new locks on the safes, and provided the new combinations to McMANUS. The removal of the locks was made more difficult by the old age and poor condition of the safes. The entire process of replacing the old locks on the safes in the WHCO suite with new locks took about a week.

McMANUS recalls that there were three two-drawer safes in NUSSBAUM's office when she left the WHCO. As of that time, none of the safes had been assigned for the exclusive use of any particular individuals. The safes were located under a stand-up desk, and McMANUS believes there was some type of covering over the fronts of the safes so they would not be visible to visitors to NUSSBAUM's office.

Because McMANUS did not go into FOSTER's office, she does not recall whether there were any safes in that office. The safes in NUSSBAUM's office were empty from the time McMANUS began working in the WHCO until sometime in April 1993. At that time, NUSSBAUM, who had not used any of the safes previously, used one safe to store the background investigation report on Attorney General Janet RENO. Although NUSSBAUM put this file into the safe, he still did not lock the safe.

When McMANUS left the White House in the first or second week of May 1993 to return to DOJ, DEBORAH GORHAM and BETSY POND were the only two people on the WHCO administrative staff.

In May 1993, as McMANUS was preparing to leave the WHCO, GORHAM asked McMANUS about several matters about which GORHAM would need to be knowledgeable. GORHAM asked for the combinations to the WHCO safes, explaining that FOSTER might have some work for First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON which may need to be stored securely. McMANUS knows no further details about the nature of the work being done by FOSTER because McMANUS does not know what matters were being worked on by FOSTER. GORHAM came to McMANUS with her question about the safe combinations because GORHAM had previously worked in the private sector and she wanted to be certain she correctly followed government procedures.

Later in the instant interview, McMANUS clarified her earlier remark by stating GORHAM told McMANUS she needed to know the safe combinations in case FOSTER worked on something which needed to be stored securely. While McMANUS was still working in the WHCO suite, she observed that First Lady CLINTON was coming to see FOSTER fairly often. McMANUS has no reason to believe that FOSTER was working on anything for First Lady CLINTON.

After McMANUS left the White House, she called back to the WHCO and spoke to both POND and GORHAM of the WHCO staff. The purpose of McMANUS's call was to ensure that POND and GORHAM had taken the appropriate steps which should be taken whenever a staff member in a sensitive office leaves the staff. These steps included, in this instance, changing the combinations on the safes, changing the locks on the WHCO doors and changing the access list at the United States Secret Service (USSS) Control Center to reflect the names of only those current members of the WHCO staff who were authorized to be in the WHCO suite.

Approximately one year after McMANUS had left the WHCO staff and returned to DOJ, she received a call at her DOJ office from a White House telephone operator. The operator said she was calling on behalf of President CLINTON and was attempting to locate White House Special Counsel LLOYD CUTLER. McMANUS responded that she no longer worked at the White House and had no idea how to reach CUTLER. The operator was apologetic and explained that she had thought it strange to be calling McMANUS at a DOJ telephone number. The operator related that McMANUS's name was still reflected on a White House list as a point of contact for the WHCO staff.

McMANUS has not received any telephone calls asking for assistance in opening a safe in the WHCO suite. She has not been called or otherwise contacted by any member of the media.

During the early morning hours of July 21, 1993, McMANUS learned of FOSTER's death when she was called at home by another White House employee, ROSLYN MILLER. McMANUS was asleep when she received the call from MILLER, and she estimates that she received the call sometime between 12:00 midnight and 3:00 a.m. MILLER told McMANUS that FOSTER had committed suicide, and she said that she was calling McMANUS in the middle of the night because she did not want McMANUS to learn of FOSTER's death from the media. MILLER had learned of FOSTER's death when she was telephoned and told about it by CAROL RASCO. MILLER was also calling McMANUS with flight information for MILLER's upcoming trip since McMANUS had agreed to assist MILLER in getting to and from the airport.

MILLER works for CAROL RASCO, who is assistant to the president for domestic policy, and both RASCO and MILLER are from Arkansas. McMANUS met MILLER when McMANUS was serving on the staff of the WHCO, which is on the same floor as the offices of RASCO and MILLER. McMANUS has remained in touch with MILLER since returning to DOJ and she regards MILLER as a friend. Both McMANUS and MILLER worked long hours at the White House, rarely leaving before 10:00 p.m. each night.

McMANUS used to see NUSSBAUM and FOSTER first thing in the morning almost every day. McMANUS typically arrived at the WHCO suite each day at approximately 7:00 a.m., which was the same time when FOSTER and usually NUSSBAUM would arrive there.

McMANUS was involved with drafting responses to five hundred to eight hundred congratulatory letters which had been received by NUSSBAUM after he was named White House Counsel. Because of the number of acknowledgements which needed to be written, McMANUS created a log to keep track of the letters of thanks she sent out. There were two temporary people who came to the WHCO staff to assist McMANUS on this project of responding to NUSSBAUM's congratulatory letters and other correspondence. These women, SHERRY FLOWER and HELEN JONES, were both DOJ employees who were detailed to the WHCO staff solely for that assignment, and they were only at the White House for a few weeks. They arrived at the White House in March 1993 but departed prior to McMANUS's departure from the WHCO staff. FLOWER left the White House first, in either March or April 1993, and she is now working in the office of the attorney general. JONES left in April 1993 and she now works in the deputy attorney general's office. ELLEN BURKE, who is also a DOJ employee, was detailed to the WHCO staff for approximately one month during McMANUS's tenure, and her primary duty was to answer telephones. BURKE was a young intern and she was only on the WHCO staff for two to three weeks. She left, possibly earlier than planned, because she did not get along well with POND. BURKE can be reached at DOJ, telephone number (202) 514-3872.

McMANUS knows of no log being kept for incoming mail received at the WHCO suite. Each of the members of the WHCO staff had an individual mailbox, and the staff member was responsible for picking up his or her mail from the mailbox, i.e., mail was not delivered to the staff member's desk. McMANUS did not see any documents which were sent to FOSTER. McMANUS did not see or touch any of the mail sent to FOSTER since it was delivered to his mailbox rather than to her. At no time did McMANUS observe any documents which contained references to Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

McMANUS is not aware of any real or perceived conflicts between herself and any other member of the White House staff.

McMANUS was not assigned to the White House on either July 20 or 21, 1993, and she did not go to the White House on either date. McMANUS has not been back to the White House since the end of her temporary assignment there in May 1993.

During her period of assignment at the White House, McMANUS knew CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, who had replaced JANE DANNENHAUER. When DANNENHAUER left White House employment, the amount of her former salary was divided into three parts, meaning that three positions were funded to handle the workload formerly handled just by DANNENHAUER. Most of McMANUS's contacts with LIVINGSTONE occurred just after Attorney General JANET RENO had been named to her post and there was a transition period in which new people were being appointed to the attorney general's staff. During this period, LIVINGSTONE came to the WHCO suite and introduced himself to McMANUS. LIVINGSTONE remarked to McMANUS he was not interested in remaining in his position at the White House Office of Personnel Security, but McMANUS does not now recall what post LIVINGSTONE expressed interest in filling. McMANUS has not spoken with LIVINGSTONE since she left the White House. McMANUS has not received any business-related calls from the White House or the WHCO staff since her departure.

When McMANUS left the WHCO, the only person to whom she had given the safe combinations was GORHAM. Although NUSSBAUM and FOSTER were authorized to know the combinations based on their official positions, McMANUS had not given them the combinations because there had been no apparent need to do so.

Based on observation and interview, McMANUS is described as follows:

The below-listed individuals met on March 30, 1994 at the George Washington National Park Headquarters, located off the George Washington Memorial Parkway, Fairfax County, Virginia.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss/resolve issues relating to the FBI request to conduct a crime scene investigation at Fort Marcy National Park. Of major concern to park authorities was the extent of digging and ground disturbance that would be necessary. These issues were resolved to the satisfaction of U.S. Park Service authorities, including the National Park Service archeologists that were present.

Monday, April 4, 1994, weather permitting, was set as a target date, with the understanding that no digging or excavation would be conducted without the presence and oversight of National Park Service archeologists.

Cynthia M. Monaco, Special Assistant to the Deputy Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 2:00 p.m. for interview. Ms. Monaco was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Ms. Monaco provided the following information:

She has been employed as Special Assistant to the Deputy Attorney General, DOJ, since May 3, 1993. As such, she was employed as Special Assistant to Phillip Heyman, Deputy Attorney General, DOJ, at the time of his resignation from the DOJ. Heyman announced his resignation from the DOJ on January 21, 1994 and his last day at the Department was February 14, 1994. On or about February 11, 1994, Monaco participated in a meeting with Heyman and others to assist him with various administrative details relative to his resignation. As part of this meeting, it was decided to set forth a chronology of the events involving DOJ personnel during the time period surrounding the death of Vincent Foster. In addition to Heyman and Monaco, those present at this meeting were DOJ employees Roger Adams (Counsel - DOJ), David Margolis (Associate Deputy Attorney General), Pat Binninger (a Confidential Assistant to the Deputy Attorney General) and possibly Rod Rosenstein (now a Special Assistant to the Assistant Attorney General - Criminal Matters and formerly a line attorney in the DOJ Criminal Division - Public Integrity).

Ms. Monaco provided six pages of yellow-lined, handwritten notes produced at the February 11, 1994 meeting concerning the chronology surrounding Foster's death. Monaco noted that it had been intended that these notes be typed, but that Heyman had left the Department prior to this being done and she has since not seen the need to do this.

A transcription of the chronology as provided by Ms. Monaco is as follows:

Nancy McFadden notes that N McF.
DM told FBI

Monaco noted that this last referrence in the chronology referred to an occasion when Nancy McFadden, who worked for Webb Hubbell, came into Margolis' office while Monaco was present to express concern over the phrase "obstruction of justice" being used by the FBI in their investigation following the discovery of the Foster note. Monaco said that Heyman and Rod Rosenstein were also present at the time in Margolis' office. McFadden requested that "someone straighten this out," referring to the "obstruction of justice" terminology. McFadden said the situation was way out of hand. It was Monaco's understanding that Hubbell had asked McFadden to come down to discuss this matter. Monaco remembers that Margolis did not say a word. Margolis was asked by Heyman to call the FBI.

When asked if she could add any other detail regarding the chronology, Ms. Monaco said she remembered Deputy Attorney General Heyman returning from the White House to the DOJ at about 10:00 p.m. on the night of July 27, 1993. This was the evening that the White House turned the Foster note over to investigators. Monaco said that she, Heyman, Rod Rosenstein and Gary Katzmann (Associate Deputy Attorney General) discussed the finding of the Foster note. Monaco remembered Heyman saying how wonderful it was to watch the Attorney General handle the situation at the White House that evening. The Attorney General had reacted to the news of the note being located by saying that the White House should call the U.S. Park Police and give the note to them. Heyman commented on how upright the Attorney General was and what a pleasure it was to work with her. Monaco said Heyman did not express an opinion concerning the events of that evening other than this. She noted that he was extremely tired and exhausted.

In addition to the handwritten chronology, Ms. Monaco also provided a three-page transcription (attached) from a "journal" which Monaco herself maintains. She said most of the information contained in these journal pages is second and third hand. It consists of notes she kept and dictated late at night, her intention being to create a "great journal" of her experiences. She said no one had seen these journal pages prior to them being turned over during this interview. She asked that if these journal entries were ever to be released in the future, that she have an opportunity to clarify certain inaccuracies such as incorrect dates and run-together material. As an example of necessary changes, she cited the third paragraph on the first page that reads "The Attorney General made"... and clarified this should read "The Attorney General's Office made..."

Monaco said she remembers speaking with Vincent Foster on perhaps one or two occasions. These occasions would have been telephone calls from Foster concerning the nomination of Jo Ann Harris. Monaco said Foster was business-like and limited the call, or calls, to an inquiry concerning the progress of an announcement on Harris.

Monaco said she could provide no other information of value. She has searched her files for other handwritten notes but has located nothing else.

The following description of Monaco was obtained through observation and interview:

 Back Chronology ***

On Tuesday July 20, the White House announced the pick in the Rose Garden of the new FBI Director. Phil, the Attorney General, and Dave Margolis were there. On Tuesday afternoon, Vince Foster left the White House and killed himself. He shot himself in the head in a park.

On Wednesday July 21, the White House realized that someone would have to come and take a look at the records in Vince Foster's office as part of a preliminary inquiry to rule out -- for suicide. Phil Heymann and Janet Reno decided that Roger Adams would go. Roger suggested that maybe there was a problem because he had worked at the White House for several months.

During this period of time, the Attorney General made a big deal about getting a hold of Phil while he was speaking at the Marriot while he was speaking at a Youth Violence Symposium. In any event, it was decided that Dave Margolis and Roger Adams would go over to the White House. David and Roger did go over. I believe it was on Wednesday briefly just to put a yellow tape on the door with the Park Police in the regular course of business. They determined at that time that they would come back and search the office the next day.

Thursday, July 22, 1993

The next day was a disaster. I first realized there was a problem when I saw Phil Heymann on the phone with Bernie Nussbaum. I walked into the conference room and sat down. This was probably about 10:30 or 11 in the morning when he should have been in the Crime Bill pre-meeting in room 4118. Phil was on the phone with Bernie Nussbaum and he said: "You are messing this up very badly. I think you are making a terrible mistake." And what I took it to mean, in the context of the general conversation was that Bernie had refused to let David and Roger take a look at the documents.

I later heard from David that in fact what had happened was that Bernie looked at the documents and told him that a privilege was asserted or was not asserted. This was in contrast to what Phil and Bernie had decided the day before. Only I and Phil were present.

Phil and Bernie seemed to be in agreement on the entire thing but probably were not. Phil later suggested at the end of that day when David returned -- this was when CBS News was calling regularly that the fact . . . . He [David] was very angry that he had been made to cool his heels in the Executive Office Building for hours before they were called at something like quarter to one and told they would have fifteen minutes to get a bite to eat in the cafeteria before they actually went over to seacrh Vince's office. He was very irritated with that. And then when he got to Vince's office, he just sat there and Bernie Nussbaum picked up each document and looked at it while over his shoulder stood Steve and Cliff Sloan. And each of them regularly whispered in Bernie's ear as to whether or not he should assert some privilege or work product or executive or attorney-client priviledge. David was particularly galled when one agent stood up to stretch and Cliff Sloan said: "You're not trying to look over his shoulder are you?" David keeps repeating this story and I think he was very, very insulted that Cliff would make that accusation against one of his agents. I think the agent's name was Scott.

When David came back that evening, Dean St. Dennis was looking for a status report. Dean had sort of promised the press that morning that there would be a status report. He had gone too far.

Phil had pretty clearly explained to Dean, in my presence, that morning what he had wanted Dean to say to the press namely that it was just a routine inquiry. He may not have used the word " inquiry. He wasn' so clear on inquiry versus investigation but that it was just a routine questioning of circumstances into his death and that this would be handled like any other inquiry. I think that Dean was just way to specific with the press and said things like: "We are looking at the motive for the suicide and we a looking at the 1 in 100 chance that it could have been murder." I think that was very irritating for Phil Heymann to read in the papers the next morning.

In any event. Carl Stern returned that Monday and tried to set things straight. He had a meeting with Phil first thing in the morning when Phil laid the whole thing out. But that's getting ahead of ourselves.

That Friday there were articles back and forth on Vince Foster being despondent. On Monday, there were articles about the President, who I think had spoken to him. On Tuesday, the Attorney General and Phil Heymann were very quickly summoned to the White House. They were summoned . .. I specifically remember that Phil was summoned at about 5:15 and I don't know how much time it took for the Attorney General to convey that message but I know we went and got him out of the Advisiory Committee Meeting which he was at from about 4:30 to 5:00 and told that he had to come back immediately and go to the White House. He did come back immediately and he did go to the White House. He was there until about 10:00 at night. When I had sent him a burrito. He told Gary Katzmann, Rod and me of what had happened.

Vince Foster's Death. Last night there was the news that Rita Braver was onto the Judge Freeh story. Also the news about Doris Meissner. This morning the Department of Commerce person Tom Collier came in and said that he wanted to pull the Park Police out of it. Phil had a meeting. Phil spoke with me, David, and Roger and in the presence of David, Roger and me called over to the White House in the morning and told them he wanted a "vigorous investigation" and that the Park Police would do it with the FBI.

He met with Peter Edelman and Eldie and is worried that he is part of a discussion group that is going nowhere, Second Monday.

Phil Heymann told the Attoney Genral, actually told Webb Hubbell that he was furious about the White House's refusal to approve his staff. He added that the only people on his staff who were approved were Shay Bilchik and someone who works for Shay. Drew Days was so moved that he went out and bought Phil a sanswich and the two of them has lunch in Phil's office. The rest of the day packed wall to wall with meetings. I continue to be astonished at the amount of information Phil Heymann can absorb. He agrees that he is upposed to have lunch with some journalists at some point.

I had dinner with Phil last night at Kramer books. Yesterday, we had dinner with Bill Geller at AV Ristorante and Bill Geller spent a lot of time complaining about the AG -- that there is a perception about her that her mind is already made up and he complained a lot about Gail Hoffman.

August 6
Mary Jo White rushed in the documents on the Nosair case. That's the killing of Kahane. I left it on Phil's chair. Phil Baridon prepared some notes at the very last minute for the AG's speech. Nancy McFadden, it turns out had not needed a formal report. At yesterday's news conference, Nancy McFadden who was standing in the back of the room talking to Cliff Sloan ordered me to be quiet and to leave the room immediately after the press conference and said she was justtelling that to people because there was press in the room. It was way out of line. She had no business being there nor did she have any business taking notes for whom we wonder.

They put a good spin on the question of why it was that the the DOJ was in at the beginning and then out in the middle then in again at the end of the investigation. The explanation whcih is a bit of a gloss but is close to true is that the DOJ was in at the beginning because it was a question of why a high federal official was murdered or died by his own hand but that when it became clear that it was a suicide they withdrew but then after there was concern over the handling of the note by Foster which was found torn up in a suitcase, the Department of Justice again reentered the investigation.

MARGARET JANE ("DEE DEE") MYERS was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. (WDC), regarding her knowledge of events occurring at the White House on the evening of July 20,. 1993, subsequent to the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. FOSTER was the former Deputy Counsel to the President of the United States. Participating in the interview was attorney, Peter J. Romatowski of the law firm of Crowell & Moring, 1001 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., WDC, telephone number (202) 624-2745. After being appraised of the purpose of the interview and the identities of all parties participating, MYERS thereafter provided the following information:

On the evening of July 20, 1993, MYERS was in the White House on the ground floor of the residence watching an interview of President Clinton being conducted by Larry King. Other members of the White House staff were with her. MARK GEARAN of the White House Communications Office informed her during the interview, sometime during the first half of the one hour show, that VINCENT FOSTER had committed suicide. GEARAN informed MYERS of this event down the hall from the room in which they had previously been monitoring the telecast of the Larry King Show. MYERS noted that the interview took place in the library of the White House and that the monitoring room was across from the library. MYERS recalled the following individuals being in the monitoring room during the taping of the Larry King show: GENE SPURLING (phonetic), MANDY GRUNWALD and MARK BEGALA.

After being informed by GEARAN of FOSTER's death, people began coming up to MYERS to try to get the status regarding the disposition of FOSTER's body and its identification as well as information regarding the procedure through which the family was to be notified of the death. Through GEARAN, MYERS learned that FOSTER had taken his life, but had no further information. At that point in time, GEARAN was awaiting a positive identification of FOSTER's body. MYERS telephoned JEFF ELLER, Director of Media Affairs regarding the death. This was the only telephone call MYERS remembers making from the White House. According to MYERS, ELLER was the press duty officer on the evening of July 20, 1993. Sometime after making the telephone call to ELLER, MYERS went to MACK MCLARTY's office with BILL BURTON.

At this point in time, MYERS was concerned that some caller would talk to the President while he was on the air and inform him of FOSTER's death. MYERS then spoke to WENDY WALKER the producer of the Larry King Show about what could be done regarding the possibility of a caller to the show informing the President of FOSTER's death. WALKER and MYERS then went to the production van which was located outside the White House mansion to screen incoming telephone calls.

MYERS was aware that at the end of the Larry King show, the President and MACK MCLARTY, the President's Chief of Staff, went to the upstairs residence area of the White House. After the taping of the Larry King show, MYERS and BURTON went back to MCLARTY's office to contact the United States Park Police (USPP) regarding the procedures relating to the investigation of FOSTER's death. MYERS recalls making a conference call to the wire services regarding the White House statement related to the death of FOSTER.

According to MYERS, there were meetings on the evening of the 20th, after being informed of FOSTER's death. These meetings were not formal in nature but described to be a shifting cluster of individuals. MYERS did not recall going to any gathering that could be defined as a meeting. MYERS noted that White House Counsel, BERNARD NUSSBAUM, came into BURTON's office at some point. NUSSBAUM had looked in FOSTER's office and had not found any sort of note left by FOSTER. MYERS did not recall any statements being made on the night of July 20 that a note had been found regarding FOSTER's death. MYERS did not go to the FOSTER residence on the evening of July 20.

MYERS did not recall talking to CRAIG LIVINGSTONE on the evening of FOSTER's death. She was aware that WILLIAM KENNEDY of the White House Counsel's office and CRAIG LIVINGSTONE had gone to visually identify FOSTER's body at the hospital. DAVID WATKINS of the Office of Management and Administration went to the FOSTER residence to be there when the family was notified by USPP officers of FOSTER's death. MYERS had no recollection of any face to face contact with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE on the evening of July 20, 1993.

MYERS was displayed a copy of a chronology authored by LIVINGSTONE regarding his actions on the evening of July 20, 1993. MYERS did not recall when she first saw this document.

MYERS advised that she may have contacted LIVINGSTONE the day after FOSTER's death or a couple of days after his death to try to reconstruct events for the purpose of briefing the press. MYERS noted that past practice dictates that LIVINGSTONE would have given to her in person information regarding issues that would have been of interest to the press. LIVINGSTONE would have given both oral and written documentation depending upon the likelihood of future of press inquiries. MYERS had no specific recollection regarding the contents of LIVINGSTONE's chronology. MYERS also had no recollection of LIVINGSTONE being at the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993, other than as set forth in the chronology that was displayed to her in the course of the interview.

MYERS did not go to the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

MARGARET "DEE DEE" MYERS, Deputy Assistant to the President and Press Secretary, was interviewed at her offices in The White House on 7/27/94. Also present were her attorney PETER J. ROMATOWSKI and KAREN DEAKINS of CROWELL & MORING Attorneys at Law, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 624-2745. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, MYERS provided the following information:

MYERS confirmed that she was at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993 when the news broke that VINCENT FOSTER, JR. had committed suicide. She advised that she was there the entire evening until approximately 2:00 am on the morning of July 21, 1993. Asked if she could recall a telephone call to The White House from WEBB HUBBELL anytime during the evening on July 20, she responded that she herself did not take such a call but she recalls that possibly GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS had called WEBB HUBBELL from the basement of the residence in The White House in order to tell WEBB what had happened. That was the only telephonic contact involving WEBB HUBBELL on the evening of July 20 that she could recall.

Asked if she recalls any involvement by the Press Office on the evening of July 20, she said she thinks she recalls that JEFF ELLER from her staff came into The White House that evening and then went out to the FOSTER residence. She believes that ELLER volunteered to do so. He is the Director of Media Affairs. She believes that this occurred after the President left The White House to go to the residence. She also advised it would not be unusual for ELLER to have followed-up with the suggestion that somebody go to the FOSTER residence the following morning in order to handle press inquiries. She does not know that that happened, but it would not be unusual for ELLER to have arranged for that. Two other individuals who would have had the authority to designate somebody to go out to the residence aside from herself would be, MARK GEARAN, and LORRAINE VOLES, who at the time was Deputy Press Secretary (she is currently Special Assistant to Vice President GORE). MYERS advised that she does not remember if anybody from the Press Office was sent to the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993. She also advised that it would be unusual for anybody to have gone to the residence to help handle the press without letting the Press Office know.

MYERS advised that she probably arrived at her office in The White House at about 7:00 in the morning on July 21, 1993. She does not recall if anybody was already in the office when she arrived. Asked if she recalls anything with regard to a telephone call to the Press Office in the early morning time frame from the FOSTER residence, specifically from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, saying there was no press there and did they want to send anybody else out, MYERS said that the scenario "sounds kind of familiar". She advised that she has no specific memory of a telephone call coming in and she has no memory of meeting with LIVINGSTONE but she knows that somehow they were aware that there was no press problem at the FOSTER residence and she has a vague memory of having a conversation with LIVINGSTONE at some time in her office in The White House during which she "sort of remembers" that LIVINGSTONE went by the residence on the way in to The White House. She was not able to be anymore specific than that.

MYERS advised that LIVINGSTONE would not normally augment the Press Office staff by way of helping them with their duties, but this situation on the night of VINCE FOSTER's death and the days following was not normal. She explained that CRAIG would often step forward to assist the Press Office, for example, giving them a heads up when he became aware of something that might become an issue for the press. He understood how Press Office activities worked and how the press worked having handled such matters during CLINTON's presedential campaign. He was sensitive to their needs and assisted occassionaly.

MYERS advised that there was no activity generating from the Press Office in the early morning hours (after 6am) of July 21, 193 which called for the movement of binders or other materials of a substantial nature to some other office in The White House or to the Old Executive Office Building.

Shown a list of White House Communications Office (Press Office) active employees as of July 17, 1995, MYERS identified the following individuals as not being likely candidates to have been sent out to the FOSTER residence to deal with the press: LAVORA BARNES, PAT COGOELL, AMANDA CRUMLEY, CAROLYN CURIEL, JULIA MOFFETT, ALYSON MUSCATINE, JULIE OPPENHEIMER, KIM TILLEY, LORRAINE BOLES, ANN WALKER, and NANCY WARD.

Females from the same office who are possible candidates to have been sent to the FOSTER residence if that had been done were: ANN EDWARDS, KIM HOPPER, KATHLENE MCKIERMAN, LISA MORTMAN, KATHLEEN NEUGOLD, VICKI RIVAS VAZQUEZ, JESSAMYN SARMIENTO, MARIA MERCEDES TIO, and ELIZABETH BOWYER. MYER further advised that EDWARDS, MCKIERMAN, and HOPPER are the most likely to have been sent out if anyone was and advised that HOPPER currently works for KATHLENE BROWNS' campaign for Governor of California and can be reached by contacting CLINT REILLY in California at 415-673-6873.

MR. NEEL was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Assisting with the interview was CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. MR. NEEL provided the following information:

He is currently President and CEO of the U.S. Telephone Association, 1401 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005, telephone (202) 326-7244. Prior to this employment, he had been in government service for 17 years. He had served with Vice President ALBERT GORE during GORE's senate years. From the time of the inauguration on January 20, 1993 through about May 1, 1993, NEEL served as Assistant to the President and Chief of Staff to the Vice President. NEEL advised that he left government service so that he could spend more time on other personal matters.

NEEL first met VINCENT FOSTER during the transition in Little Rock. On January 14 or 15, 1993, he was with FOSTER at the Governor's Mansion during an introduction of the White House staff. At that time, he discussed their mutual interest in Vanderbilt. NEEL said there was an overall euphoria among those in attendance, as they were about to build the White House. NEEL described FOSTER as private, circumspect, reserved and as an individual who radiated a kind of strength. He was not superficial and was quiet about his work. FOSTER was not a "backslapping" type of individual. NEEL described himself as a "colleague" of FOSTER while serving with the Vice President. NEEL noted that FOSTER had stature at the White House that exceeded that of other deputies and at least equalled that of an Assistant to the President. FOSTER was not viewed simply as NUSSBAUM's deputy. NEEL noted that in addition to being close to the President and First Lady, that FOSTER quickly earned this stature. While with the Vice President, NEEL said he did not have a lot of dealings with FOSTER. NEEL noted that JACK QUINN, who also worked for the Vice President, worked with FOSTER more than he did, particularly regarding ethics issues.

On May 5 or 6, 1993, NEEL assumed his new role as Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff to MACK MCLARTY. NEEL wore "both hats," working for the President and Vice-President through the end of June 1993. NEEL said his duties included convening morning staff meetings for the Assistants to the President. FOSTER would often represent BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief Counsel for the White House, at these meetings. NEEL's other dealings with FOSTER included ethics issues, such as gifts to the President, and the President's family. FOSTER would assess the propriety of such issues. NEEL said he saw less of FOSTER in the weeks just prior to FOSTER's death. NEEL cannot attribute this to anything other than the fact that they were working on unrelated issues. NEEL's other associations with FOSTER included seeing him two or three times in the White House mess and discussing Arkansas/Vanderbilt basketball games. He described FOSTER as being quite a basketball fan.

NEEL saw VINCE FOSTER for the last time on the afternoon of July 19, 1993. The occasion was a meeting of the Deputy Chief of Staff concerning either rules which affected White House contact with agencies or ethics rules. NEEL said the first issue concerned how the White House contacts agencies. To that point in time, the White House staff had been "a little loose" in their contacts, and this situation needed a "fix." The issue rose out of the Travel Office matter. FOSTER was asked for a report on how the White House staff was being informed on the issue. When called upon, FOSTER had nothing to say and referred the question to CLIFF SLOAN. FOSTER was quiet throughout the meeting. He had previously been an active participant on this issue and attending meetings on the issue, but had not been to meetings on the topic since approximately mid-June. Morale issues were also discussed in an attempt to find ways for the White House staff to enjoy themselves more. This attempt to "knit the staff together" had appealed to FOSTER in the beginning but FOSTER had lost interest.

NEEL was informed of FOSTER's death at approximately 8:00 p.m. on the evening of July 20, 1993 when BILL BURTON, Executive Assistant to MCLARTY, called his residence. BURTON advised that the police had just found FOSTER's body and it appeared he had shot himself. BURTON said he would call back later. BURTON did not ask NEEL to do anything during the call. NEEL did not do anything as a result of the call. It occurred to him to call MCLARTY but he did not do so as MCLARTY was either at home or on his way to the FOSTER home.

BURTON told NEEL during the initial call or later that someone had taken the trash out of VINCENT FOSTER's office and put it in NEEL's office so that nothing would happen to it. NEEL was advised that it would be picked up the following morning. NEEL explained that the trash had been left in his office because he was the Deputy Chief of Staff at the White House. Nothing else was said about the trash, other than it was possibly taken out of the trash can in Foster's office or the slight chance it had been retrieved from cleaning personnel. NEEL did not feel that the latter would have been the case because of the early hour - 8:00 or 8:30 p.m. - involved.

When NEEL arrived at his office the following morning (July 21, 1993), he found an opaque plastic bag of trash which had been tied up in the middle of his desk. NEEL said his particular office had not been locked, but the outer office to the suite had been locked. He did not have a safe in his office.

NEEL described the morning of July 21, 1993 at the White House as "hushed" and with the expected pall over it. He said a typical 7:30 - 9:00 a.m. period at the White House on any given day is full of bustle, jocular comments, catching up and other loud conversation. There was none of that on the morning of July 21, 1993. People were huddled in hallways and offices, sharing their grief.

Any conversations NEEL had regarding FOSTER's death were of a "personal nature." They were sharing disbelief about FOSTER's death with others. There was no discussion of a suicide note or anything else related to the death. NEEL did not attend a U.S. Park Police briefing on their investigation to date that morning and did not attend any other meetings concerning the FOSTER investigation with one exception. At a senior staff meeting, MCLARTY confirmed what had happened and discussed matters related to the family. NEEL did not take notes during the episode and avoided keeping a diary throughout his White House career. NUSSBAUM also spoke on July 21, 1993 regarding the investigation, indicating that no one knows why this happened.

NEEL noted that he remembered "big things" and "benchmarks" regarding the FOSTER death. NEEL does not remember specific dates and times. The tone at the time at the White House was severe concern for the FOSTER family and a shared sense of tragedy. NEEL did not learn of any aggravation associated with the investigation process and/or dealings with the White House for several days.

On July 22, 1993, NEEL was not involved in the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office. NEEL stated that he did not enter FOSTER's office the entire time he was at the White House. NEEL said he was not involved in procedural discussions regarding the search of FOSTER's office. He did not even know that the search had been done until later.

NEEL did not attend the FOSTER funeral in Arkansas.

NEEL said that he was not aware of conversations between the White House Counsel's office and the U.S. Park Police or what was done in FOSTER's office.

NEEL's first point of concern that the FOSTER death and subsequent investigation was more than working through a personal tragedy of a staff member occurred with his reading of press accounts concerning comments appearing to be made by the U.S. Park Police regarding lack of White House cooperation. The newspaper articles contained leaks which seemed to NEEL to be inappropriate. It appeared to NEEL that once the U.S. Park Police came under criticism, there appeared to be "ass covering" by the U.S. Park Police going up to the Interior Chief of Staff, TOM COLLIER. It seemed there was "laying off blame to the White House." At that point, NEEL was not familiar and did not know of the White House actions to date. He was concerned with the Park Police and Interior "pointing a finger" at the White House. NEEL said he did not do anything right away after reading such articles. Within perhaps a day of the articles appearing, he had a telephone conversation with TOM COLLIER at Interior, the gist of which was to ask COLLIER if the White House was doing anything or not doing anything which was the basis of the stories in the newspapers. COLLIER discounted the newspaper articles and said that the Park Police investigation was ongoing. NEEL described the conversation with COLLIER as "perfunctory." NEEL simply wanted to find out what the stories were about. COLLIER was not a personal friend, but NEEL wanted to know if he had any idea where the stories were coming from. COLLIER was defensive at that point, but the conversation simply ended with NEEL saying "let us know if there is anything the White House should be doing or know about." The newspaper articles were quoting sources as saying that the White House was standing in the way of the FOSTER investigation and the U.S. Park Police were not doing their job in a professional way. NEEL had called COLLIER on his own initiative. He was aware that BURTON had had a conversation with COLLIER, but was not sure of the timing of his call versus BURTON's. NEEL said BURTON's conversation with COLLIER would not have stimulated his call to COLLIER. NEEL said he would never have called an official at the U.S. Park Police, as that would have been irregular and been misunderstood. The attitude at the White House was that agencies were working for the President. NEEL said COLLIER was not held in particular high regard at the White House and there may have been some tension between him and BURTON. NEEL's motivation for his call to COLLIER was to insure that there was not a "disconnect."

The various involvements at the time concerned MARK GEARAN and DEE DEE MYERS on the communications aspect; the legal issues aspect assumed by NUSSBAUM; and occasional ad hoc meetings. NEEL explained that during this time at the White House, anyone could conduct a meeting, with a "small m," at any time. It was a "brainstorming" process.

At some point after the torn-up FOSTER note was found, NUSSBAUM informed NEEL that the note had been turned over to proper officials. NUSSBAUM commented to NEEL that the note was "obviously a note that VINCE had not intended anyone to read" because it had been torn up into little pieces.

The only note issue in which NEEL was involved was the comment concerning the ushers. This comment was that "The ushers office plotted to have excessive costs incurred, taking advantage of Kaki and HRC." Before the note was made public, NEEL convened a meeting of the White House ushers staff to tell them about this comment in the note. NEEL assured them at that time that the language FOSTER had used did not reflect the senior White House staff view of the ushers' performance. NEEL became the self-appointed stability between the ushers office and the White House, except as to issues pertaining to the First Lady and her staff. NEEL advised the ushers to come to him with future issues. FOSTER had reviewed the ushers' performance and there had been a disagreement regarding expenses of the designer Kaki Hockersmith. Afterwards, it had been determined there had been a misunderstanding. The money for redecoration of the White House comes from a foundation fund and eyebrows had been raised because an Arkansas designer had been employed. NEEL described the ushers staff, which totalled six to eight people, as house managers who run the White House and may oversee such things as the cooks and gardeners. NEEL's concern in meeting with the usher staff was that they "didn't go off the deep end" when the note was made public. The comment in FOSTER's note had to be taken in context. The ushers are not official appointments by an incoming administration but do serve at the pleasure of the President.

Once the FOSTER note was revealed, "it was a mess." The sense of speculation was uncontrollable and there was frustration that there was no way to get matters under control. A press frenzy was underway. The "inventory of concerns" contained in FOSTER's note grew like "gremlins" and created "centers of controversy." The White House was saying that the note issues were the observations of a disturbed man and not the views of the White House, but the White House felt vulnerable and helpless. NEEL said it was his impression that NUSSBAUM had turned the torn-up note over to authorities within hours of finding it. He did not know that NUSSBAUM kept it for a time.

Up until the time of the location of the FOSTER note, the tension with the U.S. Park Police was an "inside thing" and "not a dogfight." The tension was associated with the nature of the event. After the FOSTER note was located, it became a question of how to get the issue "behind us." The White House was involved in many things at the time to include a budget fight. The discovery of the note came on the heels of the "Travel Office fiasco" and involved some of the same people. NEEL digressed to say that you have to understand the "bunker mentality" at the White House magnifies every emotion that pops up. NEEL said he had experienced nothing similar since Viet Nam. Individuals become not even certain of what has been done or not and seem to do nothing right. To that point, NEEL had assumed that NUSSBAUM was managing with the U.S. Park Police. NEEL's contact with COLLIER at Interior had been spontaneous. NEEL did not talk to COLLIER other than in that one telephone conversation concerning issues related to the FOSTER incident. There was no other follow-up on COLLIER's part with NEEL. No follow-up calls from COLLIER or Interior were referred to NEEL.

When describing the atmosphere at the White House, NEEL said that until DAVID GERGEN joined the White House staff on Memorial Day of 1993, no one was there who had worked at the White House. To that point, FOSTER was one of those individuals on the White House staff who had exuded self-confidence. He was a solid guy. FOSTER was one of those individuals that if you were in a fight, you would want him to be on your team. NEEL said that NUSSBAUM was the reverse case. NUSSBAUM did not demonstrate competence in Washington terms and had been tainted by the handling of the Travel Office. In many White House issues, "anyone can play" but in legal matters, interest was directed to the Counsel's office. NEEL described the Travel Office matter as a "scape goat thing" for Counsel. The Travel Office situation had been an aggravation for FOSTER. FOSTER had not expected to work on such matters. He was not pleased to work on the firings. The Travel Office was a minor action which had been blown into a major political problem for the White House.

When asked, NEEL said he was not aware of the removal of any documents from FOSTER's office. He had not heard any speculation regarding a suicide note being found earlier than the discovery of the torn-up note. NEEL said he had never questioned the condition in which the note was found. NEEL thought that the FOSTER note represented "random musings" by FOSTER of "things that piss me off." NEEL speculated that FOSTER had prepared this list in a place where he couldn't throw it away and as a result had torn it up and put it in his briefcase. NEEL said that a lot of people empathized with what FOSTER said in the note. It is hard to understand how deeply hurt FOSTER was by the Wall Street Journal articles. Others in Washington can ignore this. FOSTER could not. Being from Arkansas, the articles had been deeply hurtful to FOSTER and had been a challenge to his reputation.

On May 10 and 11, 1994, SAs COLOMBELL and MONROE conducted a neighborhood investigation in the vicinity of 3027 Cambridge Place, Georgetown, Washington, D.C., the former residence of VINCENT FOSTER and family. He stated that the next morning, he got up at the usual time, 6:00 a.m., and went out to get the paper sometime between 7:00 and 7:30 a.m. He stated that he did not see anyone on the street, either media, camera trucks or reporters with the exception of what appeared to be a black government limousine which was parked at the west end of Cambridge Place with the driver sitting inside. He was unable to say whether the limousine was there to provide service to the FOSTER family or not, adding that limos of that type are frequently seen in the neighborhood. He left for work at approximately 7:45 a.m. and did not see any media or camera trucks or anyone else on the street at that time. Because of the commotion the night before, and out of curiosity, he recalled that he did check the street out very carefully that morning to see if there was a Secret Service or media presence.

The next morning, he left his home at approximately 7:30 a.m. and feels fairly certain that the street was perfectly quiet with no media presence or Secret Service presence. He stated that if they was someone on the street at that time in the morning, he would have noticed, given the quiet, secluded type of street.

On June 7, 1994, BETH NOLAN, Associate Counsel at The White House, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel. Also present was her attorney RANDALL J. TURK, of MILLER, CASSIDY, LARROCA and LEWIN, 2555 M Street, NW, Washington, D.C., telephone 202-833-5127. Present, and representing the Office of the Independent Counsel, was CARL STICH. After being advised of the nature and purpose of the interview and the identities of the interviewing agent, NOLAN provided the following information:

NOLAN is currently on leave from the faculty of George Washington Law School. She was at the Department of Justice in the Office of Legal Counsel from 1981-1985 and she has been teaching at George Washington Law School since 1985. She graduated from Georgetown Law School. She was contacted by The White House because they needed somebody who had expertise in Government Ethics. She had done some work on the vetting teams during the transition and several people at Justice recommended her to The White House. BERNARD NUSSBAUM contacted her and she first met VINCE FOSTER, JR. the Saturday after the inauguration. It was he who interviewed her for the job she holds.

Asked what she could remember about FOSTER's feelings about the Travel Office matter, NOLAN said that it has been so long that she cannot recall any specific discussions with FOSTER. She advised that FOSTER believed that WILLIAM KENNEDY had not (as the report implied) threatened the FBI, meaning, had not threatened to "sic the IRS" on The White House Travel Office if the FBI didn't respond to the matter. She recalls a newspaper article on the matter and she recalls that FOSTER believed KENNEDY's version of events rather than the FBI's. FOSTER believed that the statement in the newspaper article with regard to siccing the IRS on anybody was inaccurate but she doesn't recall any specific comments that he made verbatim. She also did not recall FOSTER saying that "the FBI lied" about anything.

Asked what her relationship was with FOSTER, NOLAN explained that he was "the Deputy" and regarded as a high-ranking person for that reason. She saw him during daily staff meetings but had no other daily contact with him per se. She was the Alternate Designated Ethics Official for The White House and so she had periodic dealings with FOSTER on those matters. She worked with him on some matters having to do with the blind trust for the First Family's assets and also with regard to the Travel Office matter. She had no direct contact with BRANT BUCK of the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Arkansas.

NOLAN said that with regard to matters that FOSTER was handling for the First Family she had a general understanding that FOSTER was handling matters pertaining to the First Family White House residence, their financial disclosure forms and the setting up of the blind trust. With regard to the financial disclosure forms there was an issue of HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON's ownership of health care stock and having to determine whether or not she was subject to conflict of interest laws and whether or not they applied generally. As it turned out it was not a legal problem and they never uncovered any scandalous or potentially explosive issues with regard to that or the financial disclosure statement generally. She said Whitewater was only peripherally noted because she needed to verify that they no longer owned the company. She does not recall any concern about the matter on Foster's part. NOLAN said that she had not even heard about Madison Guaranty at the time.

She considered herself close to VINCE FOSTER in a professional sense only. She worked on the Presidential Financial Disclosure statements, which were due May 14, 1993. She had worked on ethics issues with regard to the Travel Office report with FOSTER until it was "taken out of our hands" by the Government Accounting Office (GAO) Audit and the Department of Justice OPR investigation on the matter. In addition, there were all sorts of minor issues that she dealt with FOSTER on regarding people disqualifying themselves or needing waivers for various things. She explained that anything that was not routine she would refer to FOSTER. She described the dynamics of when that would happen as like a law firm would operate--the Associate Counsel had access to NUSSBAUM and FOSTER when they needed it but were generally empowered to operate on a routine basis on their own.

NOLAN said that it was a very difficult time and that nobody was accustomed to the spotlight and nobody was accustomed to not succeeding in their endeavors. This was a period when nobody on The White House staff had adjusted to the kinds of work and criticism and frustration that they were experiencing in their jobs. She knew that FOSTER was upset about KENNEDY and the Travel Office matter but explained that, "We were all upset. It was a rough six months".

NOLAN seemed to recall that soon after July 4, 1993, NUSSBAUM went on vacation and she had a few more conversations about The White House Travel Office report with FOSTER than she might have otherwise had. She remembered that he was most upset about KENNEDY having been reprimanded. She said that when she heard that FOSTER had used the term "lied" his use of the word did not strike her as notable. With regard to the statement, "the FBI lied" NOLAN said that she assumed that it pertained to the Travel Office but she doesn't know that for a fact.

Asked to give her opinion of The White House Management report on the Travel Office matter, NOLAN said that she didn't know what the facts were and cannot remember the details. STICH read to her the portion of the OPR report on the Travel Office matter that pertained to her observations to the OPR investigators. She said that it was not inconsistent with her recollection although she doesn't have a specific memory of having said any of that except she does remember FOSTER's feeling that it would have been easier if he had been reprimanded also. NOLAN said that FOSTER was upset, but did not seem to be inordinately upset about the Travel Office or any other matter. She realizes with hindsight that he must have been upset about something. She does not consider herself a confidant or close enough to have been privy to what was bothering him on a very private level. She had normal contact with him and a good working relationship.

She last saw FOSTER in the Rose Garden ceremony celebrating LOUIS FREEH's appointment as Director of the FBI. Her observation of him at that time was that perhaps his mood had lifted a little in the last couple of days of his life and she bases that on some joking around that had occurred during the previous Friday staff meeting. She saw him Monday, July 19, 1993 for just a few minutes and he did not seem distracted and handled the exchange normally. She said that she did not recall anybody ever remarking about FOSTER holding up or not holding up, and she did not herself notice that there had been any weight loss.

With regard to the torn up note that was found in FOSTER's briefcase after his death, that is the only note that NOLAN is aware and she is not aware of any other having been found. She never heard anything about documents having been removed from FOSTER's office before the inventory of the office.

With regard to the staff meeting that was held following FOSTER's death, she said that somebody said that they should secure the office and there was the discussion regarding who they should call to get that done. There was general agreement that it should be done, but the question was whether they should contact RON NOBLE who was the U.S. Treasury Department contact for the Counsel's office (the connection being that the Secret Service in under U.S. Treasury) or whether MAC MCLARTY should handle it.

Other individuals whom NOLAN speculated might have been considered confidants of FOSTER's included everybody in "the Arkansas group" especially those individuals from the Rose Law Firm--WEBB HUBBELL, WILLIAM KENNEDY and HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON. NOLAN said that she didn't know about the personal lives of these individuals including VINCE FOSTER. Asked if she thought he had a confidant, she said, "I don't know that he had one".

She learned of FOSTER's death when NUSSBAUM telephoned her at her home at approximately 11:00 pm on July 20, 1993. She stayed at home that evening and did not go to The White House at all.

Henry Peter O'Neill, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW on 4/28/94. Officer O'Neill was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He was again interviewed by SA McElhaney on 5/1/94 with Attorney Mark Stein present. He provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for 17 years. His office is located at 1310 L Street, NW Washington, D.C. and his office telephone number is 202-395-2020. His home telephone number is 301-262-0095. For the last three years he has been assigned as an escort officer on the 10:30 pm - 7:00 am shift with his primary responsibilities being the escorting of GSA cleaning crews into alarmed office areas of the west wing of The White House. He is also personally responsible for picking up "burn bags" from west wing offices. He explained that, sensitive and/or classified waste paper material is to be placed in special bags rather than the regular trash receptacles in offices. During his shifts, he is also responsible for responding to alarms, escorting authorized persons into their offices when they forget a key, and security patrol to ensure that classified material is not left inappropriately secured or unattended.

Officer O'Neill was asked to explain the USSS standard operating procedure regarding the pick up and handling of regular and "burn bag" trash from west wing offices. He said that both regular trash and burn bag trash are picked up from every office in the west wing every night with regular trash and burn bag trash being placed in separate large pick-up bags. These trash receptacles are then taken to a specially designated secure room in the Old Executive Office Building and the burn bag trash is destroyed by the USSS approximately three times a week. He said that every office in the west wing is routinely vacuumed, dusted and receives trash pick up on a daily basis. He said that regular trash pick ups are handled by the GSA cleaning crews in his presence from individual trash baskets that are routinely lined with a clear plastic bag. He said that at the time of pick up the plastic bag and its entire contents are thrown into a 50 gallon bag that is carried from room to room by the cleaning crew. When asked, he said that, in his opinion, it would be almost impossible for anyone to identify the regular trash from a particular waste basket or office and to retrieve it after it had been picked up and combined with all other trash picked up on a given day. He explained that the clear plastic bags in the regular trash cans are not marked or designated in any way to show from which office they came. He said that he seldom, if ever, found any burn bag trash in Foster's office to be picked up.

Officer O'Neill advised that he first learned of Vincent Foster's death shortly after 11:00 pm on July 20, 1993. He said that prior to his learning of Foster's death, he had not known Foster either professionally or personally and could only recall having seen him one time, shortly after President Bill Clinton's inauguration. Officer O'Neill said that on July 20, 1993, at approximately 10:40 - 11:00 pm he had just unlocked the door to the suite of offices occupied by Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster. He said that he stepped into the office with the GSA cleaning crew, turned on the light, and deactivated the alarm when he became aware that there were other people entering the office behind him. He said that he turned to see a man that he recognized as Bernard Nussbaum, another man whom he did not recognize, Margaret "Maggie" Williams, of Hillary Clinton's staff, and another woman whom he thinks was Patsy Thomasson. Officer O'Neill said that it was highly unusual to see White House staffers entering an office at that hour of the night and that he "just sensed" that something was wrong because they all seemed "on edge". He and the cleaning crew stepped out of the suite into the hall and he asked the man who was a part of this group "what seems to be the problem"? He said that this man introduced himself as a White House staffer in charge of legislative affairs and indicated that his office was just down the hall on the 2nd floor of the west wing. O'Neill said that he has since looked at White House staff photographs and now knows that this man was Howard Paster. This man then advised Officer O'Neill "something terrible has happened-Vince Foster has taken his own life." This man, Nussbaum, and the two women went into Nussbaum's office. O'Neill said that he has not seen Paster since that time. Shortly after this encounter, the second woman (not Maggie Williams) introduced herself to him. He said that, while he is not entirely certain, he believes that she said her name was Patsy Thomasson. She also told him Maggie Williams' name and that Williams was a staffer for Hillary Clinton.

The GSA cleaning crew with O'Neill that night consisted of two women, Terri Cobey, who usually cleans the second floor restrooms, and Diane Walters, who usually cleans the second floor offices. Officer O'Neill said that it is USSS standard operating procedure for escort officers such as himself and cleaning crews to stop what they are doing and immediately leave an office when White House staffers come into the office as if for work. He said that therefore, he and the GSA cleaning crew went down the hallway when Bernard Nussbaum, the other man, and the two women entered the suite. He advised however, that after learning that Vincent Foster had been found dead and deeming this situation to be extremely unusual, he reentered the suite.

Officer O'Neill said that when he reentered the suite, (approximately five to ten minutes after the group first arrived and entered Nussbaum's office) he saw a third woman sitting behind Vincent Foster's desk in a chair going through papers on his desk as if she were looking for something. He said that this woman was alone in Vincent Foster's office when he saw her. He advised that he did not recognize this woman and added that it was not Maggie Williams nor was it the woman he had met and thought to be Patsy Thomasson. He described this third woman as follows:

Sex:	Female
Race:	Caucasian
Height:	Approximately 5'6" - 5'8"
Build:	Slender to medium
Hair:	Dark brown/black
Complexion:	Light
Age:	Mid 40's

Officer O'Neill advised that having just learned of Vincent Foster's death and then seeing this third woman in his office, whom he had not previously seen, he assumed that this woman could be Vincent Foster's wife. He therefore decided that the correct course of action was for him to again leave the suite. He did so and advised the GSA cleaning crew in the hall that they were not to vacuum, dust, nor were they to pick up any trash in that suite of offices that evening. He stated that there was no trash, regular or burn bag, picked up in the Bernard Nussbaum, Vincent Foster suite of offices on the evening of 7/20 or the morning of 7/21, 1993 during his shift. Officer O'Neill said that at this point and with his permission, the two GSA cleaning ladies left the area of Foster's office and continued on their regular rounds elsewhere on the second floor without him.

Officer O'Neill said that he saw the woman that he believed to be Patsy Thomasson come and go from the suite several times. At one point, about 30 minutes after he saw the woman behind Foster's desk, while he was standing in the hallway outside the entrance to the suite, he observed Patsy Thomasson and Maggie Williams walking out of the suite and turn toward the office of the First Lady next door to the suite. He said that while Patsy Thomasson's hands were empty, Maggie Williams was carrying a significant quantity of "office stuff". Officer O'Neill said that she "had her arms full" of papers, folders, perhaps accordion files, and other office related paper products. He advised that he watched Maggie Williams walk into her (Williams) office with these items. He then saw her exit her office almost immediately with nothing in her hands and re-enter the Counsel suite. Patsy Thomasson did not go into Williams' office with her but went elsewhere down the hall.

Officer O'Neill advised that after perhaps forty to forty five minutes, but less than one hour, he observed Bernard Nussbaum, Maggie Williams, and the woman he thought to be Patsy Thomasson exit the suite. Bernard Nussbaum went down the staircase. He said that at that point the woman he thinks to have been Patsy Thomasson asked him to lock up the suite which he did. He then rode down on the elevator with her and Maggie Williams to the ground level and watched them exit the west wing.

Officer O'Neill was asked what other activity he observed on the part of the man who identified himself as being in charge of legislative affairs. He said that after he met this man in the hallway he cannot recall seeing him again that evening. He described this individual as follows: sex, male; race, caucasian; height, approximately 5'8"; weight, approximately 165 lbs.; hair, brown-short with receding hair line; dress, business suit. He stated that this man was wearing glasses with brown plastic frames and was approximately 40-45 years of age.

Officer O'Neill said that after he accompanied Maggie Williams and Patsy Thomasson to the ground floor on the elevator, he then went back upstairs to the first floor continuing with his security patrol functions. It was then, at approximately 1:00 am, that he noticed that a meeting was going on in Mack McLarty's office. He could not identify any of those in attendance. He was standing in the hallway outside Mclarty's office when he was contacted via radio, by the USSS Control Center instructing him to bring all of the west wing burn bag trash that had been picked up that evening to McLarty's office. He said that he was not asked if any of this trash had come from Foster's or Nussbaum's offices and he did not volunteer that it had not. He said that he gave the burn bag trash to a caucasian woman at McLarty's office who was approximately 25-30 years old and attractive. He had not seen her before and does not know her name. He said that she returned the bag to him about 30 minutes later without comment. He said that he assumed that this woman was an employee of McLarty rather than a member of either Vince Foster or Bernard Nussbaum's staff.

O'Neill was continuing his security patrol rounds and at approximately 1:45 - 2:00 am, on the ground floor of the west wing, when he again saw the woman that he had previously seen sitting behind Vince Foster's desk in his office. He said that he saw this woman standing in the doorway of an office suite that is now occupied by Harold Ickes but was then occupied by David Watkins and another staffer. He said that he remembers this because he had not seen this woman when she entered the Nussbaum/Foster suite but had first seen her seated behind Foster's desk and that she was now standing in the doorway to an office two levels below Foster's office. He said that seeing her there he no longer believed it possible that she was Foster's wife but now thought she was probably an assistant of Watkins or the other occupant of that suite. He said that this woman was crying and appeared to be looking for someone up and down the hallway and it was at that time that he said to her "they're all upstairs in Mr. McLarty's office". He recalls her then getting on the elevator and going upstairs.

Officer O'Neill said that per standard operating procedure of USSS, he, at 5:00 am, assumed post "E-10" on the first floor of the west wing. He stated that he did not return to the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices that evening and did not go there the next day on his shift because it was locked. He said that he therefore is not aware of anyone else who may have gone to that suite or other offices on the second floor after 5:00 am. He said that the only way he would have known if anybody had gone to the second floor during the early morning hours of July 21, 1993, would have been if a particular individual or the USSS Control Center had asked him to escort them there. He stated that this did not happen.

Officer O'Neill described the woman he met that night whose name he believes is Patsy Thomasson as follows:

Sex:	Female
Race:	Caucasian
Age:	40-45 years
Height:	5'5" - 5'6"
Build:	Slender to medium
Hair:	Brown with some gray (neatly arranged)
Complexion:	Medium with somewhat blemished appearance

He described Margaret Williams as follows:

Sex:	Female
Race:	Black
Complexion:	Tan
Height:	5'7" (approximately)
Build:	Large
Age:	40's
Wears glasses

Officer O'Neill said that he made no written report of the forgoing observations but that he does recall verbally advising the USSS Lieutenant on duty in the USSS Control Center (name unrecalled) as to what and who he had seen.

HENRY P. O'NEILL, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. This was a follow-up interview conducted at the request of Assistant Special Counsel RODERICK D. LANKLER and Associate Special Counsel MARK STEIN. Present, and directing questions to Officer O'NEILL were Assistant Special Counsel LANKLER, Associate Special Counsel STEIN, and Associate Special Counsel CARL STICH. Officer O'NEILL, prior to answering any questions, was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing attorneys and of the agents present. He also was informed of the nature of the interview by Mr. LANKLER. He then provided the following information:

For the last three years he has been assigned as an escort officer on the 10:30 pm - 7:00 am shift with his primary responsibilities being the escorting of GSA cleaning crews into alarmed office areas of the west wing of The White House. He is also personally responsible for picking up "burn bags" containing sensitive and/or classified waste paper material from west wing offices.

On July 20, 1993, at approximately 10:45 pm, he had just unlocked the door to the suite of offices occupied by BERNARD NUSSBAUM and VINCENT FOSTER. He stepped into the suite with the GSA cleaning crew, turned on the lights, and deactivated the alarm for the suite by throwing a switch located in the VINCENT FOSTER office. Prior to entering the suite, he had, per USSS standard operating procedure, notified the USSS White House Control Center, via two-way radio, that he was about to enter the suite and deactivate the alarm. He recalls one of the GSA cleaning crew reaching for a trash bag in the reception area and the other cleaning crew member standing nearby shortly after they entered. It was at that point that he turned to see a man whom he recognized as BERNARD NUSSBAUM walking into his (NUSSBAUM) office. He then also heard other voices coming from within NUSSBAUM's office and it therefore "seemed as if there were some other persons" in NUSSBAUM's office, although he cannot recall actually seeing other persons at that time. In response to a specific question from Mr. STEIN, O'NEILL said he does not remember seeing PATSY THOMASSON and/or "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS entering the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite at that time. He and the cleaning crew exited the suite into the hall, per standard operating procedure. O'NEILL explained that any time he and/or his cleaning crew is in an area and White House staffers enter, they are to exit the area.

Upon entering the hallway the GSA cleaning crew went elsewhere to continue their duties. O'NEILL then saw a man, whom he recognized as a White House staffer and now knows to be HOWARD PASTER, in the hallway "just outside" the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite. O'NEILL walked to the end of the hallway away from the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite thinking that it was highly unusual to see White House staffers on the second floor of the west wing at that hour of the night and that something abnormal was going on. He also noted that HOWARD PASTER seemed "nervous and anxious". He again saw PASTER in the hall and asked him "what seems to be the problem?" PASTER introduced himself as an Assistant to the President in charge of legislative affairs and said that "something terrible" had happened--VINCENT FOSTER "took his life".

About the same time that he was talking to PASTER, O'NEILL saw a woman standing in the entrance to the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite. "Within minutes" after he spoke to PASTER, this woman introduced herself to him (O'NEILL) in the hallway as PATSY THOMASSON. Shortly thereafter, O'NEILL decided to report what he had seen and heard regarding FOSTER's death to his USSS Watch Commander. He rode down the elevator to the ground floor with PATSY THOMASSON. About the time that he was making his call to his watch commander, he recalls THOMASSON mentioning to either him or the USSS Uniform Officer at the ground floor west wing entrance that the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite should be kept locked. O'NEILL later went back up to the 2nd floor to see if the individuals had departed from the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite. He walked into the suite and into the doorway of VINCENT FOSTER's office. At that point, he saw a woman sitting behind VINCENT FOSTER's desk "looking at something on the desk". He said that he had never seen this woman before but that he was "100 percent sure this woman was not PATSY THOMASSON". In response to a specific question from Mr. LANKLER, he said that he was also certain that this woman was not LISA CAPUTO. O'NEILL described the woman that he saw behind FOSTER's desk as follows: race-caucasian; sex-female; build-slender; age-35 to 45 years; hair-black (short and straight); complexion-light; characteristics-"matronly/homely looking". When asked about this woman's clothing, O'NEILL first said that she was wearing a red dress and later during the interview he said that he believed she was wearing a dark blue dress.

O'NEILL said that he did not see PATSY THOMASSON in FOSTER's office on the evening of July 20, 1993. When asked to describe PATSY THOMASSON he provided the following information: race-caucasian; sex-female; height-approximately 5'6"; build-medium; hair-light color with dark highlights and graying; complexion-somewhat blemished with "acne" appearance; age-45 to 46 years. When asked about her attire, O'NEILL said that he believed that THOMASSON was wearing a light color, perhaps white, "sack style" dress. He said that she had a definite accent and that it was perhaps an "eastern" accent.

Officer O'NEILL advised that after seeing the woman behind the desk, he immediately exited the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite and returned to the hallway but "stayed in the area" on the 2nd floor. A short time later, he observed BERNARD NUSSBAUM exit the suite and go down the stairs. He said that he can not recall if NUSSBAUM had anything in his hands or not. A short time later, he saw "two women come out". He identified the two women as PATSY THOMASSON and "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS. This was the first time he had seen MAGGIE WILLIAMS that night. MAGGIE WILLIAMS was "carrying something cumbersome--possibly files or folders--cradled in her two arms". The stack was approximately one or two "phone books" high. PATSY THOMASSON was carrying nothing. O'NEILL said that he was approximately 15 feet away from the door way when THOMASSON and WILLIAMS exited the suite. He heard MAGGIE WILLIAMS say to PATSY THOMASSON that she was going to "put these things away in my office". He then saw MAGGIE WILLIAMS go down the hall and enter her office while PATSY THOMASSON waited in the hallway. He watched MAGGIE WILLIAMS unlock her office door, enter, then come out "a few seconds later" and relocked the door. In response to a specific question from Mr. STEIN, O'NEILL said the two women did not appear to be acting suspiciously or secretively. He recalls the door to HILLARY CLINTON's office as being closed and locked. O'NEILL advised that he believed he recalls that PATSY THOMASSON told him who MAGGIE WILLIAMS was while she (THOMASSON) was waiting in the hallway for WILLIAMS. O'NEILL was asked to describe MAGGIE WILLIAMS and provided the following information: race-black; sex-female; age-mid 30's to 40; build-heavy. He believes that PATSY THOMASSON told him that MAGGIE WILLIAMS was the "First Lady's secretary".

Shortly after MAGGIE WILLIAMS came out of her office and rejoined PATSY THOMASSON, THOMASSON directed him (O'NEILL) to "lock-up" the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite. O'NEILL did so and reset the alarm for the suite's door. He said that he can not recall what PATSY THOMASSON and MAGGIE WILLIAMS did at that point and that he does not recall seeing BERNARD NUSSBAUM, PATSY THOMASSON, or MAGGIE WILLIAMS again that evening.

A short time thereafter, O'NEILL was continuing his rounds on the ground floor of The White House west wing when he again saw the woman whom he had previously seen sitting in a chair behind FOSTER's desk. He saw this woman in the doorway to DAVID WATKINS' office. O'NEILL said that she "seemed to have been crying and looked lonely". O'NEILL had, at approximately 12:30 - 12:45 am noted that people had been in MAC MCLARTY's office on the 1st floor of the west wing. He noted this because the door to MCLARTY's office had been opened, the light had been on, and he heard voices coming from within MCLARTY's office although he can not specifically recall seeing people going in and out. Since the woman he saw standing in WATKINS office door seemed so sad and "a little lost" he told her "they are all up in MCLARTY's office". She nodded to him, walked down the hall and got on the elevator to go upstairs. He did not see that woman again that evening and does not recall having seen her since.

At approximately 12:45 am O'NEILL received a radio call from the USSS Control Center directing him to take his "burn bag" trash to MCLARTY's office. He did so and a "young secretary" met him at the door to MCLARTY's office, said "thank you very much" and took the bag. O'NEILL left that area and did not return until he received another radio call somewhat later that evening directing him to pick up the burn bag at that office.

In response to specific questions from Associate Special Counsel Stein regarding trash being picked up in the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite on the evening of July 20, 1993, O'NEILL said he believes the trash was not picked up in VINCENT FOSTER's office that night. He said that while he cannot recall telling the cleaners not to take the trash out of the suite that night. He did not see the cleaners in VINCENT FOSTER's office that night. He said that he also recalls telling the two cleaning employees, after he locked the suite at approximately 11:45 pm, that they were not to clean the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite that night. In response to another question, O'NEILL said that he does not think that FOSTER used a "burn bag" in his office.

Officer O'NEILL said that he does not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at The White House during the late evening hours of July 20 or the early morning hours of July 21, 1993. He also said that he saw no one carrying boxes out of The White House.

In response to questions from Associate Special Counsel STEIN and Assistant Special Counsel LANKLER, O'NEILL said that he wants what he has told Special Counsel personnel during his interviews to be held in confidence. He said that he does not want anything he has said to be made known to The White House staff. O'NEILL said however, that he does understand that he could potentially be called as a witness if criminal prosecution was pursued in this matter.

HENRY P. O'NEILL, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) voluntarily contacted Special Agent (SA) [redacted] by telephone at the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. O'NEILL, knowing the official identity of [redacted] volunteered the following information:

Subsequent to his having been interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel on June 8, 1994, he had obtained and reviewed some photographs of individuals. O'NEILL said that while he is still not certain as to the identity of the woman he said he saw sitting in a chair behind VINCENT FOSTER's desk during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993, he now believes that it is possible that PATSY THOMASSON was the woman sitting behind the desk. He reiterated that he is not certain of this but a photograph he saw that was identified to him as being PATSY THOMASSON seems to resemble the woman sitting behind the desk. O'NEILL went on to advise that he had seen another photograph of an individual that he believed to be SUSAN THOMASES. O'NEILL said that this woman shown in the photograph of SUSAN THOMASES may have been the woman he saw in the 2nd floor west wing hallway during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993 who introduced herself to him.

O'NEILL was told that plans are currently underway to have him return to the Office of the Special Counsel at a later date to view photographs currently being sought by an Associate Special Counsel. He was told that his thoughts regarding the photographs he had personally obtained and reviewed could be discussed when he came to the Special Counsel's office to view other photographs.

HENRY P. O'NEILL, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), was interviewed in Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. This was a follow-up interview conducted at the request of Associate Special Counsel MARK STEIN for the principal purpose of displaying photographs to Officer O'NEILL and asking him to attempt to identify any individuals depicted in these photographs whom he recalls seeing in the west wing of The White House during the late evening hours of July 20 or early morning hours of July 21, 1993. Officer O'NEILL was shown 318 color photographs of White House staffers previously provided to the Office of the Special Counsel by The White House. Officer O'NEILL having been previously advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, looked at each of these photographs and provided the following observations:

He had previously seen "quite a few of the women" depicted in these photographs in The White House and/or on The White House compound grounds since the January 1993 inauguration of BILL CLINTON. He recognized some of the women pictured as being employed in The White House's Old Executive Office Building and the New Executive Office Building. However, he recognized only four of the individuals depicted in the 318 photographs as individuals he recalled seeing in The White House west wing on the evening of July 20 and/or early morning hours of July 21, 1993.

Officer O'NEILL identified a photograph of BERNARD NUSSBAUM as being BERNARD NUSSBAUM and said that this is the man he saw in the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993. Officer O'NEILL also identified a photograph of HOWARD PASTER as being HOWARD PASTER and said that this is the individual he observed in the hallway on the 2nd floor of the west wing of The White House near the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993. Officer O'NEILL further identified a photograph of MARGARET WILLIAMS as being "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS and also being the woman he saw exiting the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER suite during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993 with folder/file material in her arms. He said this is a photograph of the woman he saw carry this material into "MAGGIE" WILLIAMS office on July 20. Lastly, Officer O'NEILL identified a photograph of SYLVIA MATHEWS as being the woman in the west wing, first floor, office of MAC MACLARTY to whom he gave the "burn bag" material he had taken from various west wing offices during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993. He said that he did not know the name of the woman depicted in this photograph and also did not know the name of the woman to whom he gave the burn bag on July 20, but they are one in the same.

Officer O'NEILL was unable to identify any of the women depicted in these photographs as being PATSY THOMASSON. He was also unable to identify any of the women depicted in these photographs as being the woman he saw sitting in a chair behind VINCENT FOSTER's desk during the late evening hours of July 20. O'NEILL volunteered, as he had in a previous discussion with Special Agent (SA) [redacted] that while he is still not certain as to the identity of the woman he saw sitting in a chair behind VINCENT FOSTER's desk, he believes "it is possible" that PATSY THOMASSON was that woman.

FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

O'NEILL further volunteered that he saw a woman in The White House on July 15, 1994 who was identified to him as being SUSAN THOMASES. O'NEILL said, as he had in a previous conversation with SA [redacted] that he believes it is possible that SUSAN THOMASES, is the woman he saw in the second floor hallway of the west wing on July 20, 1993 who introduced herself to him.

HENRY P. O'NEILL, Officer, Uniformed Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), was interviewed in the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. At the outset, Officer O'NEILL was informed that the purpose of this follow-up interview was an attempt by the investigative staff of the Independent Counsel's office to clarify, resolve and finalize questions and issues that have arisen as a result of the information he provided during prior interviews. In addition to FBI Agent COLOMBELL, Attorneys MARK STEIN and BETH GOLDEN with the Independent Counsel's staff also participated in the interview.

By way of background information, Officer O'NEILL stated that he has been with the USSS Uniformed Division since January of 1977. Following Training Academy, he was assigned to The White House where he worked on different outside or exterior security posts until early 1980. Beginning in early 1980 or 1981, he was selected as a tour officer, conducting tours within The White House. He remained in that position until 1984 at which time he volunteered for night shift. The night assignment accommodated his need to be home during the day to assist in watching his children since his wife had gone back to work. Initially he was assigned to security posts at the Executive Office Building. Beginning in August of 1991 and for the past three years, he has worked in The White House-west wing, manning one of four different security positions that are posted during the 10:30 p.m. to 7:00 a.m. night shift.

On July 20, 1993, he reported to work and attended roll call at approximately 10:30 p.m. in the basement of the East Wing of The White House. There was no mention of VINCE FOSTER's death that evening at roll call. His principal responsibility during the shift was to escort a GSA cleaning crew responsible for cleaning the West Wing of The White House. During the course of the evening, he is responsible for keeping an eye on the cleaning crew. In addition, he is required to be physically present with them whenever they are working in an alarmed area of the West Wing. As the cleaning crew goes about their business, he is personally responsible for picking up "burn bags" containing confidential matters from West Wing offices. His first stop on July 20, 1993 were the offices of the Chief Counsel for the President, on the second floor, West Wing of The White House. He stated that he arrived there at approximately 10:40 p.m. and as he approached the office, he radioed to the USSS Control Office of his intentions to enter the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. He utilized his key to open the office, adding that as he stepped into the outer area which would be where the secretaries sit, the office was dark, to include the secretaries' area, Mr. NUSSBAUM's office and Mr. FOSTER's office, both of which are off to the right as you enter.

No one was in the Chief Counsel's suite of offices when he entered. He immediately turned to his right, walking into VINCE FOSTER's office, explaining that he had to go behind the door to FOSTER's office in order to turn off a toggle switch that is connected to the office alarm. After doing this, he returned to the area where the secretaries have their desks, adding that to the best of his recollection, at this point in time he was standing in the middle of the room where the secretaries sit with his back towards the main entrance to the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. The cleaning ladies who were previously identified as TERRI COBEY and DIANE WALTERS, had followed him into the Chief Counsel's suite of offices and were preparing to start cleaning in the area where the secretaries sit.

He was still standing in the area where the secretaries are situated with his back still partially to the main entrance when he saw out of the corner of his eye Mr. BERNARD NUSSBAUM walking into his office. He overhead conversation and clearly recalls that there were at least two other people with Mr. NUSSBAUM and that they entered his office with him. The only individual he was able to identify at this time was Mr. NUSSBAUM, but believes that there were two women present.

U.S. Secret Service (USSS) policy is for the uniformed guards and cleaning persons to immediately exit the office when staff are present. O'NEILL followed this policy and he and the cleaning ladies immediately exited the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. He initially stood out in the hallway, then walked down the end of the hallway towards the First Lady's office, adding that he did walk around the corner and for a matter of several seconds was out of view of the entry door to the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. He then walked back, retracing his steps towards the Chief Counsel's suite of offices at which time he saw a man standing in the hallway in close proximity to the entrance to the Chief Counsel's office. He recognized this man as being a member of the Presidential staff but could not recall his name. They greeted one another and as best he recalls, he, O'NEILL, inquired if there was something wrong. The man in the hallway identified himself as the President's Legislative Affairs Chief, and remarked with words to the effect that "something terrible has happened. VINCE FOSTER has killed himself." As best he recalls, this individual, who he later identified from a photograph he saw in The White House as Mr. HOWARD PASTER, then remained in the hallway near the Chief Counsel's suite of offices; O'NEILL is unable to state whether PASTER actually entered into the Chief Counsel's office space.

Within a very short time period, less than a minute, he observed a woman standing in the hallway or doorway to the Chief Counsel's suite. He was unable to state whether Mr. PASTER or this unknown woman were the same parties who were present with Mr. NUSSBAUM earlier when he first unlocked the Chief Counsel's office.

O'NEILL stated that during prior interviews, he had this woman and a White House staff person known to him as PATSY THOMASSON confused. He stated that he now believes that this woman in the hallway could be SUSAN THOMASSES. As he approached her, the woman he believes could be SUSAN THOMASSES introduced herself and wanted to know if he or the Secret Service would do something about locking up FOSTER's office. This woman was wearing White House staff identification. He responded that he would take care of it. He then accompanied this woman on the elevator to the ground level. He believes the USSS officer on duty at post E1, ground level, was Officer JIM SHEA and this woman, believed to be SUSAN THOMASSES, also spoke to Officer SHEA about securing FOSTER's office. As best he recalls it would have been approximately 11:00 pm when he and this woman reached the ground floor, post E1.

O'NEILL stated that at this point he assumed his regular duties of patrol and security. As best he recalls, using the phone at post E1, he called the Watch Commander and informed him about VINCE FOSTER's death. He stated that as best he recalls, the Watch Commander was already aware of the situation.

He then returned to the first floor, post E6, located outside of the Oval Office. He spoke briefly with the officer at post E6 and informed him of Mr. FOSTER's death. He stated that he didn't see any of The White House staff in this area but that several of the lights were on in staff offices on the first floor, including the Chief of Staff's office. At approximately 11:15, he returned to the 2nd floor, west wing of The White House and again walked into the Chief Counsel suite of offices. His purpose in returning was to see if everyone had left so he could secure the office. There was no one in the secretary's area. He stated that he can't recall if there was anyone in Mr. NUSSBAUM's office. He stated that he began to walk into FOSTER's office for the purpose of locking it up when he noticed that there was a woman sitting behind Mr. FOSTER's desk, reviewing or looking at something on the top of the desk. At the time, he thought it might have been Mrs. Foster and without making any comment or introducing himself, he immediately withdrew from the doorway to FOSTER's office and to the Chief Counsel suite of offices. He was of the opinion that the woman sitting behind FOSTER's desk was totally unaware of his presence in the doorway. He estimated that it was approximately 11:15 pm when he left the Chief Counsel's suite of offices for the second time.

O'NEILL stated that initially he was unable to identify this woman but now feels fairly certain that she is identical to PATSY THOMASSON, a White House staff person. He stated that back in July of 1993, he did not make any effort to identify these people. After having been interviewed by the Independent Counsel's office, he did review photographs available to him of all White House staffers and now feels fairly certain that it was PATSY THOMASSON who he observed behind FOSTER's desk that evening.

O'NEILL stated that after leaving the Chief Counsel's suite of offices, he can't recall where he went but he did not remain close to or in view of the entrance to the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. He returned to that area approximately 10 or 15 minutes later (approximately 11:30 pm) and was standing in the hall near the entrance to the First Lady's office when he observed Mr. NUSSBAUM exit the Chief Counsel suite and leave the second floor. He can't say for sure, but he believes Mr. NUSSBAUM took the stairway down. As Mr. NUSSBAUM was leaving, the same woman that he saw earlier in the evening, who he now believes may be SUSAN THOMASSES, was standing in the area, either in the hallway or by the entrance way to the Chief Counsel's office. Mr. NUSSBAUM, in leaving, passed by her but, to the best of his recollection, he did not observe or overhear conversation between them. This woman again inquired of him regarding locking up the doors to FOSTER's office and he again responded that he would take care of it.

At this point in time, a woman who he recognized as MAGGIE WILLIAMS, a regular White House staffer, walked out of the Chief Counsel's office space into the hall. O'NEILL was unable to say whether WILLIAMS was coming from NUSSBAUM's office or FOSTER's office. Ms. WILLIAMS was carrying some files and folders in her arms. He estimates that the files and folders in her arms were three to five inches in height. As best he recalls, MAGGIE WILLIAMS remarked to the other woman words to the effect that she was just going to put these in her office and then walked past him and the doorway to the First Lady's office, stopping at the doorway to her own office. Once she passed by him in the hall, the other woman, believed to be SUSAN THOMASSES, informed O'NEILL that the other woman was Ms. MAGGIE WILLIAMS, the First Lady's personal assistant. O'NEILL stated that he was familiar with MAGGIE WILLIAMS, having seen her in The White House in the past. WILLIAMS paused at the doorway to her office, using her key to open the office door. She proceeded inside and came back into the hallway, almost immediately, empty handed. To the best of his recollection while he was in the process of alarming and locking the door to the Chief Counsel's suite, MAGGIE WILLIAMS and the other woman went towards the elevators. After securing the Chief Counsel's suite of offices, he proceeded down to the ground level near post E1. Initially he thought that he rode the elevators down with Ms. WILLIAMS and the other lady but in reviewing this matter in his mind, he's not sure whether he did or not. He estimated that it was about midnight when both women took the elevator down to the ground floor.

O'NEILL stated that as best he recalls, he remained on the ground floor, in the vicinity of post E1 for the next 30-45 minutes. He stated that during this time, he observed PATSY THOMASSON standing in the doorway to DAVID WATKINS office. She appeared visibly upset and distraught and he walked over to her, volunteering that he believed there were other people up in the Chief of Staff's office on the first floor. As best he recalls, she got on the elevator and went up to that location.

O'NEILL stated that some time later, but within the next hour, he was directed to go to the Chief of Staff's office by his supervisor and hand over all "burn trash" that he had collected that evening. He gave the "burn trash" to a woman at the Chief of Staff's office who he has previously identified as SYLVIA MATHEWS. Within in a half hour, he was instructed to go back to the Chief of Staff's office and retrieve the bag of "burn trash". O'NEILL pointed out that the trash he delivered to the Chief of Staff's office did not contain any burn trash from the Chief Counsel's suite of offices, including VINCE FOSTER's office. As best he recalls, no one inquired whether "burn trash" had been picked up at VINCE FOSTER's office and he did not volunteer that it had not.

O'NEILL stated that he is not sure who Mr. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is and would not have readily recognized him had he been at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993. He stated that until he was approached by the investigators from the Independent Counsel's office in late April 1994, he had never been asked any questions or discussed his observations and conversations on the night of July 20-21, 1993 with anyone. He stated that he wasn't quite sure of the significance of these observations and was not about to volunteer it to anyone.

In concluding, O'NEILL stated that he realizes that he was incorrect in his original identification of the woman he saw standing in the doorway when MARGARET WILLIAMS was observed carrying out the documents. O'NEILL originally thought that the woman standing in the doorway was PATSY THOMASSON, and he was unable to identify the woman seated behind FOSTER's desk. Shortly after being interviewed by this office on June 8, he reviewed photographs available to him at The White House. One of the photographs he saw was that of PATSY THOMASSON. Upon seeing that photograph, he realized that the woman seated behind the desk was PATSY THOMASSON, and that the woman he saw in the doorway when MARGARET WILLIAMS carried out the documents was someone else.

O'NEILL is less certain of his identification of the woman he saw in the doorway, but believes her to be SUSAN THOMASES. He states that he bases this possible identification on the fact that on or about July 8 or 9, 1994, he was reviewing a newspaper article in The White House press office and noticed the name SUSAN THOMASSES, recalling at that moment that the name (SUSAN THOMASSES) appeared identical to the name of the woman who introduced herself on July 20, 1993, or the second floor west wing of The White House. O'NEILL went on to state that on or about the evening of July 14, 1994, he was on duty in the ground floor of The White House residence when he observed the President and First Lady in the company of a woman who looked similar to the woman he had seen on the second floor west wing of The White House on July 20, 1993. He added that the President and First Lady were viewing the newly released movie ("Wolf") and this woman was one of their guests. O'NEILL stated that later that evening he checked with one of the ushers in The White House ushers office (believes it was JOHN LNU) and learned that the name SUSAN THOMASSES was on the log for guests who were in The White House that evening.

Following the conclusion of this interview, Special Agent WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL and Independent Counsel Attorney MARK STEIN requested Mr. O'NEILL to view two separate photo spreads. The first photo spread included the photograph of PATSY L. THOMASSON. Mr. O'NEILL was asked whether he recognized any of the women as someone he saw on the second floor of the west wing on the night of July 20. Mr. O'NEILL picked the photograph of PATSY L. THOMASSON, stating this was the woman seated behind FOSTER's desk.

The second photo spread included the photograph of EVELYN LIEBERMANN. Mr. O'NEILL was asked whether he recognized any of the women as someone he saw on the second floor of the west wing on the night of July 20. O'NEILL was unable to pick out any photos from this spread as a person he saw that evening. However, O'NEILL did state that the photo of EVELYN LIBERMANN looked similar to the woman who was with and left with MAGGIE WILLIAMS on the evening of 7/20/93.

HENRY P. O'NEILL, Officer, Uniformed Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), was contacted by SA COLOMBELL at the FBI Office in Landover, Maryland. Officer O'NEILL was shown a copy of a seven-page FD-302 reflecting his prior interview by the Independent Counsel staff on July 20 and 26, 1994. MR. O'NEILL was asked to read the FD-302 to see if there were any mistakes or corrections and he did so. Officer O'NEILL signed and initialed and dated the 302 (all seven-pages) stating that it was an accurate representation of the events and persons that he observed on the second floor, West Wing of the White House on the evening of July 20, 1993.

Officer O'NEILL was asked to clarify one point, specifically whether to his knowledge, the cleaning women that were with him that night removed and "regular" trash from the Chief Counsel's suite of offices. O'NEILL was unable to state whether the cleaning women had removed any "regular" trash but he again confirmed that he did not remove any "burn trash" from the Chief Counsel's suite of offices, including VINCE FOSTER's office.

O'NEILL was asked if it was possible that he might have observed MAGGIE WILLIAMS and the other woman on the second floor, West Wing of the White House later that week, specifically on the evening of July 21 or 22, 1993. He responded by stating that he worked every night that week and would have had the same responsibilities, that is accompanying the cleaning women and picking up the "burn trash." He stated that he is certain that he was not mistaken with regard to the evening in question. It had to be July 20, 1993, the evening of VINCE FOSTER's death because he specifically remembers the conversation that he had with MR. HOWARD PASTER and MR. PASTER's comments that something terrible had happened and that VINCE FOSTER had taken his own life.

Officer O'NEILL was shown a photo spread (five photos) included in which was a photograph of SUSAN P. THOMASES. O'NEILL looked at all five photographs and picked out the photograph of

JULIE A. OPPENHEIMER, former Assistant Director of News Analysis at The White House, was interviewed telephonically at her home in Chicago, Illinois. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, OPPENHEIMER provided the following information:

OPPENHEIMER advised that in July 1993 her position at The White House was Assistant Director of News Analysis, which is part of the Office of Communications. Their offices are located in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB). She worked with KEITH BOYKIN, KEN CHITESTER, LARRY SAMPUS and numerous volunteers and some interns.

Her main activity in the early morning hours at the start of her day was directing and coordinating the preparation of press clippings for printing and distribution within The White House. Volunteers and interns, if they had any, would do the bulk of the work under her supervision.

OPPENHEIMER has only a vague recollection of the day VINCE FOSTER killed himself on July 20, 1993 and the following time period. She advised that during that time she would generally arrive to her office in the Old Executive Office Building between 4:30 and 6:00 am. She believes that the morning of July 21 she either read about VINCE FOSTER's death on "the wire" or heard it from KEN CHITESTER as soon as she arrived.

She advised that she did not recall that they had any interns working for them in July 1993, but suggested we attempt to contact volunteers VIRGINIA (JENNY) LINDAHL, DAVID DINAN, and JOHN HOPMAN. OPPENHEIMER believes that LINDAHL is still at The White House. She advised that DINAN is not at The White House anymore and she believes he is living near Philadelphia and HOPMAN is not at The White House anymore but may live in Washington, D.C.

OPPENHEIMER says she has no recollection of going to the West Wing or any place else in The White House on July 21, 1993. She does not recall whether she herself was assisting with the distributing of the clippings at that time. She said she probably did not do so.

With regard to CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, she knows who he is and does not recall seeing him. She said that she rarely saw him in the morning in any case. He was sometimes there when interns needed somebody to accompany them on their rounds on the weekends. She does not recall any involvement of LIVINGSTONE with any activities or events with regard to VINCE FOSTER.

OPPENHEIMER also said she never heard any rumors which verified stories that she read in the press having to do with FOSTER's death or the handling of his papers thereafter. The only specific memory she has of July 21 is the staff meeting held in the Old Executive Office Building where President CLINTON said a few words about FOSTER's death. She estimated the time of that meeting as 3:30 in the afternoon.

As part of the interview, OPPENHEIMER provided the following information:

Date of Birth:	FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C)
Place of Birth:
Home Address:	2430 Lakeview Chicago, Illinois 60614

MR. HOWARD G. PASTER was interviewed at his office, 901 31st Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20007, telephone (202) 333-7400. MR. PASTER was advised of the identities of Special Agents WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL and WILLIAM T. GUYTON and informed that they wished to speak with him regarding any knowledge he may have concerning an ongoing investigation into the death of Vincent Foster on July 20, 1993.

MR. PASTER stated that on July 20, 1993, he was serving as Assistant to the President/Director for Legislative Affairs, adding that his office was located in the West Wing, second floor of the White House. PASTER stated that he did not know VINCE FOSTER well, pointing out that he had not been a part of the CLINTON campaign team and to the best of his recollection had first met FOSTER the day before Thanksgiving, 1992. He stated that to the best of his recollection, he has never met MRS. FOSTER. PASTER stated that on a professional level, he had worked together with MR. FOSTER regarding some of the Administration's Supreme Court nominations and on other issues involving the Department of Justice and/or judicial matters. He stated that he really has no idea why MR. FOSTER took his life. He surmised that the intense media attention, much of it negative and in his opinion much of it not true, especially the Wall Street Journal article that prominently mentioned FOSTER, may have taken its toll. He also felt there was a lot of truth in the thoughts expressed by FOSTER about life in Washington, D.C. in the torn up piece of paper that was later found at the White House. PASTER pointed out that on December 22, 1993, he walked away from his job as the President's Director for Legislative Affairs, stating that while it was a job that he had dreamed about and aspired to and had wanted more than anything else in his life, the actual job just wore him down and he needed more time for his wife and children.

PASTER stated that as best he recalls, he went to work on July 20, 1993 at the normal time and attended the daily 8:00 a.m. meeting in the Roosevelt Room with all senior staff. He stated that BERNIE NUSSBAUM ordinarily would represent the White House Counsel's office, adding that FOSTER would frequently be there in NUSSBAUM's absence but he was unable to recall whether FOSTER attended the 8:00 a.m. meeting on that particular day. PASTER stated that he really has no recollection of whether he saw VINCE FOSTER during the day. He stated that that evening, he had left his White House office and returned to his residence. He was called by GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS at approximately 9:00 p.m., informed of VINCE FOSTER's death, and instructed to return to the White House. He stated that to the best of his recollection, he got to the White House around 10:00 p.m. He stated that he really wasn't quite sure why he was there since he had no specific assignment or instructions, and basically just milled about and extended his sympathy and condolences to a number of people who were part of the Arkansas group that knew FOSTER far better than he did. PASTER stated that to the best of his recollection, he remained in the White House from approximately 10:00 p.m. until 12:30-1:00 a.m. the next morning. He stated that during that time, he milled about, spending some time in the basement of the White House residence commiserating with other staffers. He stated that he also spent some of this time in MARK GEARAN's office as well as in his own office on the second floor of the West Wing.

PASTER stated that he does recall one conversation about what should be done with any "garbage" in MR. FOSTER's office. He stated that to the best of his recollection, a White House staffer named SYLVIA MATTHEWS, who worked for BOB RUBEN, brought this point up and there was some discussion as to what should be done. He recalls discussing this issue with MARK GEARAN and, to the best of his knowledge, the issue was later mentioned to MACK MCLARTY. To his knowledge, one of those two gentlemen gave instructions to insure that the garbage be saved. PASTER stated that he was unaware whether this so-called garbage or trash from FOSTER's office had already been removed from his office, or whether it was still there. He was unable to comment as to who eventually had the specific responsibility to insure that the garbage or trash remained in the office.

PASTER stated that as best he recalls, BERNIE NUSSBAUM was present on the second floor, West Wing, at different times during the evening along with PATSY THOMASSON. He stated that NANCY HEMREICH, Personal Assistant to President CLINTON may also have been there along with DEBBIE COYLE, a White House staffer who worked for BRUCE LINDSEY. PASTER was asked specifically if he recalled CRAIG LIVINGSTONE being present at the White House West Wing, stating that he really couldn't recall whether he was or not. PASTER stated that quite possibly, in July of 1993, he may not have been acquainted with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. MR. PASTER was also asked if MAGGIE WILLIAMS was present, responding that he really couldn't say one way or another since he has no specific recollection of her being there.

PASTER stated that to some degree he felt awkward being at the White House on the evening of July 20, 1993 since he was not part of the Arkansas group. He had no specific purpose for being there. He does recall BERNIE NUSSBAUM at one point in the evening trying to reach BILL KENNEDY on the phone, instructing KENNEDY that he wanted him to go to the hospital to make a positive identification of FOSTER's body. He also recalled a conversation in MARK GEARAN's office among several people regarding what should be done to inform the press, specifically recalling that before that was done, someone had to get to VINCE FOSTER's mother down in Arkansas to insure that she did not learn of these tragic events through the media. MR. PASTER stated that as best he recalls, he spent the majority of his time that night in MARK GEARAN's office. He stated that he has no recollection of having gone into the White House Counsel's space on the second floor of the West Wing, specifically the outer office, MR. NUSSBAUM's office or MR. FOSTER's office. He stated that he was unable to state whether anyone else had gone into the White House Counsel's office or specifically into VINCE FOSTER's office. MR. PASTER stated that he has no recollection of anyone either removing or being observed moving about the second floor of the West Wing with either records or files or documents, nor did he see anyone coming into or leaving the White House Counsel's office with any type of documents. MR. PASTER concluded by stating that during the time that he was in the West Wing, second floor, evening of July 20, 1993, things were very confusing, sad and tragic, especially for those friends of VINCE FOSTER who came to Washington with him from Arkansas. PASTER reiterated that he was present at the White House on July 20, 1993 for no specific reason or assignment and spent most of the evening trying to console those work associates who knew FOSTER far better than he did.

Dr. Stefan A. Pasternack, MD, 2121 Wisconsin Avenue, Washington, D.C. (telephone number 965-9426) was telephonically contacted by interviewing agent and informed of the nature of the telephone contact. After confirming the identity of the interviewing agent, Dr. Pasternack agreed to furnish the following information relative to any past association with Vincent Foster.

Dr. Pasternack, who is a practicing psychiatrist and psychoanalyst, confirmed the fact that he had previously informed United States Park Police (USPP) officials that he had no prior professional association with Vincent Foster. Dr. Pasternack advised that he neither treated nor had a scheduled appointment with Vincent Foster and had no prior association with Mr. Foster or any member of the Foster family. He further related that since he does not have an appointment secretary he personally schedules all patient consultation sessions and therefore is positive that Mr. Vincent Foster was never scheduled for a counseling session with him.

In response to a question as to how, in his opinion, his name would have been found in Mr. Foster's personal possession after his death on July 20, 1993, Dr. Pasternack believes that a Washington, D.C. internist, Dr. Oscar Mann was responsible for the psychiatric counseling referral. Dr. Pasternack, however, was unaware of the identity of the individual who initially contacted Dr. Mann seeking psychiatric referral.

RICHARD M. Mr. PENCE was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agents and of the purpose of the interview. Information provided by Mr. PENCE, in part and in substance, is as follows:

Mr. PENCE stated that he is currently the Chief of the Civil Section of the United States Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of Arkansas. He was acting as interim head of the United States Attorney's Office during July 1993. He recalled that Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA) FLETCHER JACKSON informed him about a search warrant which was to be executed during July 1993. This search warrant was to be executed at the Office of CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES, INC., which was under the direction of DAVID HALE.

He said that he was made aware of the search warrant, about one or two days before the warrant was to be executed, due to his position as acting head of the United States Attorney's Office. After having been told about the search warrant, he spoke with no one else about it until he heard from AUSA JACKSON that the search had gone smoothly. He said he could not remember the exact date of the execution of the search warrant but recalled that it occurred on the same day or within one or two days of the death of VINCENT FOSTER.

He stated he received no inquiries from anyone prior to the execution of the search warrant and mentioned that there were no news reports immediately after the search was conducted. He sid that he knows of no one else in the United States Attorney's Office who knew about the search warrant prior to its execution, aside from AUSA JACKSON and JACKSON's secretary. He said that he knows of no one at the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., who was aware of the search warrant prior to its execution.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

He speculated that, if anyone in Washington may have suspected that a search warrant might be planned for CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES, INC., it would have been someone in the SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION (SBA) offices there. He was unable to provide details to support his speculation aside from his belief that the SBA would have known about the fact that the FBI was investigating CAPITAL MANAGEMENT SERVICES, INC., based on SBA's referral of alleged fraudulent activities involving that corporation.

Joseph H. Phillips, Officer, Uniform Division, United Secret Service (USSS), was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue N.W. Officer Phillips was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for almost 18 years and has been assigned to The White House Special Operations Branch of the USSS Uniform Division for approximately 10 years. His regular assignment is to clear tourist and some visitors through a White House gate for the public White House tour. He also travels periodically with the President providing security. He was employed in his current capacity at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death on July 20, 1993.

Although he cannot be certain, he believes that he first learned of Foster's death either on the evening of July 20 or the morning of July 21 via the television/radio news. At approximately 6:30 am on July 21, 1993, he reported to his regularly assigned post at The White House tour gate. At approximately 1:00 pm that afternoon he was ordered to relieve another USSS Uniformed Officer at a temporarily established post in front of Vincent Foster's office door. He was told (cannot recall by whom) not to allow entry into Foster's office without authority from USSS Inspector Dennis Martin or higher ranking USSS personnel. Phillips assumed this post and relieved USSS officer Robert Popic.

Phillips manned this newly assigned post for approximately one hour until he was relieved for a break by Officer James Young. He and Officer Young thereafter, alternated on this post approximately every one to one and one half hours until Phillips was permanently relieved from this post and went home at approximately 6-6:30 pm. Officer Phillips stated that he cannot recall exactly who permanently relieved him that evening. Phillips stated that he was not assigned to this temporary post the next day (July 21) and has not been assigned to any post in the west wing of The White House since the evening of July 21, 1993. Phillips advised that while he was on this post, he did not observe anyone take anything from or put anything into Foster's office.

Officer Phillips advised that at what may have been approximately 5-5:30 pm July 21, upon returning to the post outside Foster's door after having been relieved by Officer Young, he observed a group of men escorted by USSS Inspection Martin and Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC) Don Flynn enter the Counsel reception area and move toward Foster's door. He stated that he was advised by either Inspector Martin or ASAC Flynn to allow this group into Foster's office in that they had proper authority. He stated that the group, then, went into Foster's office, stayed a very brief time, turned and walked into Bernard Nussbaum's office where they stayed for a longer period of time and talked. Officer Phillips stated that he did not make a list of names of this group and did not check their identification since he was advised by appropriate USSS authority that they had been cleared. He stated that he cannot recall their names and can not recall any more detail about their being in Foster's office except that they were in the office for a very short time. He stated that he believes this group included a couple of Park Police investigators, one or two FBI agents, a couple of men whom he was told were Department of Justice attorneys and he believed Mr. Nussbaum. He stated that he did not overhear any conversations of this group. He further advised that no one else entered or tried to enter Foster's office while he was at his post.

Officer Phillips advised that while he had been relieved by Officer Young and was on a break at the west wing "lobby post" downstairs from Foster's office, he observed two USSS Technical employees getting off the elevator in the west wing lobby having come from upstairs where Foster's office is located. He stated that while he did know they had been to Foster's office, he assumed that they were perhaps putting a lock on Foster's door since he had heard from other USSS employees that a lock might be placed on the door that night. Phillips said that he cannot recall the identities of these two individuals, although he believes that one of them may have the last name "Wills". He advised that when he returned to the post outside Foster's door no new lock had been installed on the door and no new lock was installed on the door prior to his departing that evening.

Officer Phillips was specifically asked if he recalled anyone taking trash from or putting trash in Foster's office or the trash can in Foster's office. He advised that this did not happen while he was on duty outside the door to Foster's office. He volunteered, however, that there is a daily record kept of what uniform officer picks up the "burn bag" from the west wing offices on a daily basis. Officer Phillips explained that the "burn bag" contains classified and sensitive material that is destroyed by burning. He stated that while he has never had this particular duty, it is his understanding that this is done on a daily basis in the late evening. He volunteered that Inspector Dennis Martin could possibly provide a list of the employees who had performed this task on or around the time of Mr. Foster's death.

Officer Phillips stated that although he knew who Vincent Foster was, by title, he did not know him either professionally or personally and had never talked to him prior to his death. Officer Phillips stated that he could contribute nothing regarding Foster's state of mind, his demeanor, or his degree of association with the President or Mrs. Clinton prior to his death.

STUART B. PIPER, telephone (703) 941-0882, provided the following information to the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C.:

He had previously worked as a Schedule C employee at the Inter-Governmental Affairs Office of the General Services Administration from April 1991 through January 20, 1993. He is presently doing consulting work in government relations projects and looking for full-time employment.

On Wednesday, April 20, 1994, sometime between 6:00 and 9:30 p.m., PIPER met an individual named TOM (Last Name Unknown) (LNU) at Champions Sports Bar in Tysons Corner, Virginia. PIPER said this sports bar is now known as The Sports Page. TOM LNU operates a father and son towing business known as T. & T. Towing, Incorporated, telephone (703) 795-9659, associated with McLean Service Center, Chain Bridge Road, McLean, Virginia, telephone (703) 356-7730. PIPER had met TOM LNU on only this one occasion and said TOM LNU probably doesn't know him. PIPER doesn't want to be identified to TOM LNU. PIPER described TOM LNU as being 43-44 years of age, a Viet Nam veteran and former employee of the San Francisco Police Force. PIPER said an individual by the name of LISA COFFMAN, telephone 225-9026, of the Government Operations Sub-Committee, called TOM LNU earlier in the week and TOM denied having any knowledge concerning what PIPER was about to report.

During their time together at the Sports Bar on April 20th, TOM LNU and PIPER started to talk about "strange situations" that had happened to each other. TOM LNU related a story to PIPER concerning the towing of a vehicle to the FBI Headquarters garage from Ft. Marcy Park on the evening and/or early morning hours of July 20-21, 1993. VINCENT FOSTER, Deputy White House Counsel, The White House, Washington,D.C. was found dead in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993.

TOM LNU said he had received a call from the U.S. Park Police (USPP) sometime after midnight to tow a car from Ft. Marcy Park. Enroute to the job, TOM LNU saw many police vehicles, both marked and unmarked, from multiple jurisdictions, traveling up and down George Washington Parkway. When he arrived at Ft. Marcy Park, the scene was lit up with lights, the vehicle doors open, and "lots of pictures were being taken." TOM LNU's son, also named TOM, was not with his father, but had received a phone call while his father was enroute to the scene, asking the whereabouts and arrival time of the tow truck.

TOM LNU further described the vehicle as having a window missing on the front driver's side, blood on the dashboard and a small bag in the foot area of the passenger side with blood on it. TOM LNU was asked to move the vehicle without moving the wheels and therefore avoid placing additional mileage on it. He used a flatbed truck to transport the car. He was assisted by what was described as a "gloved" officer who did not want him to touch the vehicle as he was putting it in gear, so as to preserve any fingerprints in the interior of the vehicle. TOM LNU said he was supervised during this operation by various police officers. He had a police escort, front and behind, to the 14th Street Bridge enroute to FBI Headquarters. He also had someone in the tow truck with him. They took the car down the down ramp of the FBI Headquarter's garage. TOM LNU related that he had never been paid for this tow job. He said in the past he had done a lot of towing for government agencies to include work associated with federal fleet cars, airport exchanges and running out of gas situations.

PIPER said he had no additional information concerning what TOM LNU had told him. He knew of no reason why TOM LNU would "spin a story." PIPER had thought about coming forward earlier with this story, but had not done so. PIPER has told a "couple of friends" about this.

Betsy L. Pond, Executive Assistant, Office of the Counsel to the President, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW in the presence of her attorney, Thomas R. Dyson. Ms. Pond was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

At the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death in July, 1993 she had known Foster for approximately four months. She stated that at that time she was the Executive Assistant to Bernard Nussbaum, the Counsel to the President, and as such sat in a desk just outside Nussbaum's and Foster's offices. She said that she had daily contact with Foster but that this contact consisted of an "office relationship" that was friendly but limited to exchanges of greetings and pleasantries. She explained that while she worked in the same office suite as Foster she can recall doing no work for Foster in that Deborah Gorham was his Executive Assistant. She said that she can not recall observing any changes in Foster's behavior or physical appearance prior to his death. She described the Office of the Counsel to the President at that time as being a "pressure cooker environment" with Foster and every other employee within that office being under considerable stress. She said however, that she cannot recall Foster ever commenting on this stress. She described Foster as a "reserved and quiet man-a gentleman", whom she liked.

Betsy Pond said that the last time she saw Vincent Foster was at approximately 1:00 pm on July 20, 1993, when he departed the Counsel suite after having had lunch in his office.

Ms. Pond was asked to recall the atmosphere and events of the Counsel suite on July 19, 1993. She said that she has no specific recollections concerning that day except that everyone in the office was very busy and involved in proceedings regarding the upcoming announcement of Louis Freeh to be the new Director of the FBI and Ruth Bader Ginzberg, who had been nominated to the U.S. Supreme Court and was to begin confirmation hearings the next day. She said that she was therefore very preoccupied with work on July 19 and can not even be sure if Vincent Foster was at work on that day.

According to Ms. Pond, July 20, 1993 was another busy day for the employees of the Presidential Counsel. She said that she arrived at work at approximately 8:30 am and she recalls the remainder of the morning being very busy, even somewhat harried, with related press coverage and many official visitors coming to The White House for the Louis Freeh announcement in the Rose Garden. After the Freeh announcement, Vincent Foster asked Betsy Pond and Linda Tripp, another employee in the Counsel suite, to bring him lunch from The White House mess. Ms. Pond stated that she and Linda Tripp left Foster, went to The White House mess and placed his order for a hamburger, french fries, and a drink, and then went "for a cigarette" while his lunch order was being prepared. Ms. Pond stated that while she cannot recall how long they were gone, she does recall Tom Castleton, another employee of the Counsel's office, coming to check on them, saying that Foster had sent him to find them and see what was taking so long. After they returned, Foster sat on a sofa in his office and ate his lunch at a coffee table while reading.

Betsy Pond stated that after Vincent Foster finished his lunch, he took his suit jacket and left the office saying "I'll be back". She said that she can not recall if he was carrying a briefcase or not. Ms. Pond said that while she was not aware of specifics regarding Vincent Foster's schedule, she did not think he had any outside appointments on that day. She heard nothing from Foster the remainder of the afternoon. At approximately 6-6:30 pm, Margaret "Maggie" Williams, Hillary Clinton's Chief of Staff, telephoned for Foster. When advised that Foster was not in his office, she asked that he be electronically paged. Betsy Pond contacted The White House operator, asking that Foster be paged, and asking that he phone Maggie Williams' office telephone number. Pond said that to the best of her recollection, Maggie Williams did not call back and she (Pond) does not know if Foster ever returned her call. Ms. Pond stated that she left The White House for her residence at approximately 6:45 pm on July 20. She said that she went to the grocery that night and got home at approximately 8:30 pm. She said that being very tired, she turned the ringer off on her telephone and went to bed early. She said that she did not return to The White House until the next morning.

Ms. Pond awakened at approximately 5:00 am on July 21, 1993 to get ready for work. Shortly thereafter she checked her answering machine and discovered two messages that had been recorded while she slept. The first of these messages was from The White House operator and had come in at 1:20 am advising her that Bernard Nussbaum was trying to reach her. The second message was from Linda Tripp, came in at approximately 1:30 am, and indicated "I need to talk to you, please call me." Ms. Pond said that she sensed something was wrong and immediately called The White House operator asking to be "patched through" to Linda Tripp's home telephone number. It was at that point that The White House operator advised her of Vincent Foster's death. Betsy Pond was then connected telephonically with Linda Tripp who confirmed that Vincent Foster was indeed dead. Ms. Pond said that The White House operator had told her that Bernard Nussbaum had been at The White House late the night before (July 20). When later questioned about this statement, both she and her attorney said that that was not what she meant to say. Ms. Pond, at that point, amended this statement to indicate that The White House operator had said that Bernard Nussbaum had been up late, rather than at The White House late, the night before. Ms. Pond said that while she was getting ready for work, she noticed that the Vincent Foster death was even being reported on the early morning television news. At that point she felt it appropriate to notify her young co-worker, Tom Castleton, who was the newest of the employees in The White House Counsel's office. She said that she also telephonically notified John Carey, a long time attorney friend of hers and a White House staffer, whom she knew had been meeting with Vincent Foster on work related matters.

At approximately 7:00 am on July 21, Betsy Pond arrived at The White House west wing. She proceeded to the Counsel suite, opened the door, deactivated the alarm switch, and telephonically notified the U.S. Secret Service Control Center that she had placed the alarm in its access mode. When asked what telephone she used to contact the Secret Service Control Center, she paused and said that she could not be certain, but she may have used the telephone in Vincent Foster's office, since the alarm deactivation switch for the entire suite is in his office. She said that she had often, in the past, used his phone for this purpose. Betsy Pond said that it is her belief that Foster had two phones in his office, one near his desk and one near his door and the alarm switch. She said that, while she cannot recall the next sequence of events with certainty, she believes that she then spotted papers on Foster's coffee table in a state of uncharacteristic disarray. She said that she "straightened these papers" and placed them "into a neat stack" on his coffee table. She said that while she cannot, with certainty, explain why she did this she believes that it was a "reflex response" and nothing more. She said that she did not read any of these papers while she was straightening them and, in fact, can not describe them other than to say that they were "long papers-legal size". She said that, in retrospect, these documents may have been "The White House clips" of daily news articles that do come on legal size paper. She said that she was in Foster's office no more than a minute or two.

After exiting Foster's office, Ms. Pond believes that she then went to her desk and telephoned Bernard Nussbaum. She said that she believed she made this telephone call at approximately 7:05 am. She said that she made this call in that she knew that Nussbaum had been attempting to get in touch with her the night before and she simply wanted to let him know that she was at work and had "opened the office" and to ascertain if he had any specific instructions. During this conversation Nussbaum advised her "Don't let anybody in Vincent Foster's office". She therefore, after this conversation ended, closed the door to Foster's office. She said that she recalls noticing nothing unusual about the appearance of Foster's office that morning. She said that she further recalled seeing no one in the 2nd floor hallway of the west wing at 7:00 am when she arrived and she similarly recalls not seeing any White House staffers in the area of the ground floor west wing entrance that she used to enter that morning.

Betsy Pond said that the 2nd person to arrive at the Counsel's office on the morning of July 21 was Steve Neuwirth, who arrived at approximately 7:30 am. They chatted briefly and he then went briefly into Nussbaum's office. Linda Tripp arrived shortly thereafter and was advised by Pond to not go into Vincent Foster's office. Pond says that she does not believe either Neuwirth or Tripp went into Foster's office that day. She said that after President Bill Clinton came to the Counsel's office late that morning, she saw Bernard Nussbaum go into Foster's office. She said that at that time a Secret Service Officer had been posted outside Foster's door and she recalls Nussbaum telling him that he was entering the office to obtain a photograph that she recalled being on Foster's bookshelf. Pond said that she recalls no one else taking anything out of or placing anything in Vincent Foster's office on that day or the next day. She further advised that she does not recall any White House staffer, including Bernard Nussbaum, ever talking about being in Vincent Foster's office during the evening hours following his death on July 20.

In response to a specific question, Ms. Pond said that she has a vague recollection of Vincent Foster sending some personal mail that required postage (rather than franked envelopes) on July 19 or 20, 1993. She said that she recalls this because Deborah Gorham, Foster's Executive Assistant, asked her if she thought these envelopes (number of envelopes unrecalled) would each require one or two stamps. Ms. Pond advised that she can not recall to whom any of these envelopes were addressed.

Ms. Pond said that she has no personal knowledge of and has heard of no White House staffers discussing any efforts to impede or obstruct this investigation or the prior Foster investigation by the U.S. Park Police.

On Thursday, August 22, 1993, Detective Pete Markland and I responded to the White house to meet with Special Agents Scott Salter and Dennis Condon of the FBI to conduct interviews. The purpose of the interviews were to reconstruct the final hours of Vincent Foster's life.

Myself and Special Agent Condon interviewed Ms. Betsy L. Pond; Staff Assistant to Bernard Nussbaum, Chief Counsel for the White House. The interview took place in an office that was unoccupied for the day. Present in the room during the entire interview were Clifford Sloan; associate counsel to Nussbaum, and Paul Imbordino; assistant Special Agent in Charge, Office of Protective Operation, U.S. Secret Service. Clifford Sloan took notes throughout the interview. During the interview Bernard Nussbaum burst into the room and demanded "is everything all right?"

We started the interview at approximately 0900 hours. Ms. Pond got in to work at around 0900 hours on Tuesday, July 20th. Usually there is a staff meeting of the counsel's office from 0900 to 0945 hours each morning that Vincent Foster would attend. She assumed he was at the staff meeting as she didn't see him when she arrived at work. She first recalled seeing him outside in the Rose Garden. The President was nominating Judge Freeh at the ceremony as the new director of the FBI.

She doesn't recall Vincent Foster having any visitors on Tuesday. The first conversation she had with him was about lunch around 1200-1230 hours. He said he would eat at his desk. He ordered a medium rare cheeseburger, french fries and coke. She and Linda Tripp went to the cafeteria and ordered his lunch. She recalled there were M & M's on the tray with the food because Linda wanted them. He sat on his sofa and ate lunch in his office.

At around 1300 hours he came out of the office and stated "I'll be back, there are M & M's left in my office". Ms. Pond recalled that she and Linda were in the office when he left. She wasn't sure if Tom was in the office or not. Tom Castleton is a young college graduate working in the office. There was nothing unusual about his emotional state. In fact, over the last several weeks she did not notice any changes, either physically or emotionally. She noticed no weight lost. She was unaware of him taking any medication or seeing any doctors. I asked here would she be surprised if I found out he was seeing a psychiatrist. She said yes. She was not aware of any depression problems. She had no information whether he owned any weapons.

Ms. Pond said she left work at approximately 1845-1850 hours on Tuesday; but, before she left at around 1820 or so, Maggie Williams (Mrs. Clinton's Chief of Staff) called for Vincent. She paged Vincent and left the White House number for him to call. She recalled no other phone messages for Vincent.

She learned about Vincent's death from messages on her home answering machine around 0500-0600 hours on Wednesday, July 21. She came into work at 0700 hours and was the first person in. The door to Vincent's office was closed when she arrived at work. She believed that Tom Castleton or Bernard Nussbaum were the last persons out of the complex on Tuesday and one of them would have closed the door to Vincent's office. She went into his office and "squashed" the papers together that were on his desk. She realized that she shouldn't have touched the papers as soon as she did it but probably did it out of habit.

When I questioned her if she had been told how to respond to our questions, she stated that Clifford Sloan (who was present during our interview) and Steve Neuwirth, both associate counselors, had called them all together on Wednesday evening and told them they would be questioned by the police and for them to tell the truth.

STEVEN A. POLLOCK, currently Conference Coordinator of The White House Conference on Small Businesses, telephone (202) 724-0891 was interviewed telephonically by writer. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, POLLOCK provided the following information:

POLLICK advised that in July 1993, he was employed in The White House Office of Personnel Security under the direct supervision of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. He said that he worked for LIVINGSTONE periodically throughout the summer and was full time until Memorial Day of 1993. He then shifted to just one day a week which was Fridays. He maintained that schedule until late Fall when he moved to The White House Conference on Small Business.

He explained that as part of his job in the Office of Personnel Security he did do some typing but he didn't do any typing of a chronology of LIVINGSTONE's activities on July 20 and 21, 1993. He said he would have remembered such a memorandum because of its unique nature and because of the remarkable events of those days.

He advised that his normal activities in the office included doing background checks and administrative functions with regard to White House passes and other miscellaneous administrative matters. He did some minor memos in this connection. He did not assist nor did he ever hear of anybody assisting CRAIG LIVINGSTONE carrying boxes from one area of The White House to the other and specifically from VINCE FOSTER's office or from the west wing at any time.

POLLOCK advised that his DOB is [redacted] and POB is [redacted]

Robert Mark Popik, Officer, Uniform Division (Special Operations Section), United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. Officer Popik was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS for eight years, the last six of which have been at The White House compound. He is currently responsible for leading congressionally requested special tours through portions of The White House. He was performing these same duties at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death on July 20, 1993. His office is located at 1310 L Street NW and his telephone number is 202-395-4418.

On July 20, 1993 he worked the 6:30 am - 3:00 pm shift at The White House. He said that he could recall nothing unusual or out of the ordinary about that day except that they were very busy with tours in that it is the peak tourist season in Washington, D.C. and at The White House. He described this as a routine, ordinary day.

On July 21, 1993, Officer Popik was on his way to work shortly before 6:30 am listening to the news on his car radio when he first learned of Vincent Foster's death. Upon arriving at work, he went to his regularly assigned post and began giving tours. At approximately 10:00 am that morning, he was approached by USSS Inspector Dennis Martin and a USSS sergeant who advised him that a temporary guard post was to be established outside Vincent Foster's office door and that he and several other USSS uniform officers would be placed on that post. He assumed this post at approximately 12:00 noon relieving Officer Michelle Macon who had been the first uniform officer on that post. The instructions related to him by Inspector Martin were that he was to stand in front of this door with it closed and if anyone wanted to enter the office he was to get their name and take note of the time that they entered and the time that they left. Officer Popik stated that he was on this post for approximately one and one half hours and while he was standing this post no one entered Vincent Foster's office or attempted to enter the office. He said that while he was on this post he made "small talk" with the secretaries located in the reception area outside Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster's offices. He advised however, that none of this discussion centered on or related to Mr. Foster or his death.

Officer Popik stated that approximately 1:30 pm he was relieved from this post by USSS Officer Joe Phillips. Popik said that he returned to his normal tour duties and has never been to that office on the 2nd floor of The White House west wing since July 21, 1993.

Officer Popik stated that he knew Vincent Foster by title and was able to recognize who he was when he saw him within The White House compound. He advised however that he did not know Foster either personally or professionally well enough to feel comfortable commenting on his personality or demeanor.

SYDNEY FRANCES PROBST was interviewed in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. (WDC). After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, PROBST furnished the following information:

PROBST has known VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. for approximately forty years. PROBST regards SHEILA ANTHONY, FOSTER's sister, as her best friend. ANTHONY and PROBST have known each other since they were fourteen or fifteen years old, and they attended college together at the University of Arkansas. While PROBST knew FOSTER through ANTHONY, she did not have close contact with FOSTER because PROBST and ANTHONY were seven years older than FOSTER. This seven year difference in ages had less significance as PROBST and FOSTER grew older, and PROBST grew to know FOSTER better when they were adults. However, PROBST has always been much closer to ANTHONY, and much of what she knows about FOSTER was learned from ANTHONY. PROBST has known LISA FOSTER since she and FOSTER were married.

PROBST does not recall if she saw FOSTER when he first moved to WDC in 1993 and was living with ANTHONY. PROBST did not socialize with FOSTER, but she may have occasionally seen FOSTER at gatherings on Capitol Hill or at gatherings of people from Arkansas. PROBST cannot recall with certainty that she actually saw FOSTER at any of these functions. PROBST recalls that she last saw FOSTER at a luncheon on Capitol Hill for the Arkansas congressional delegation approximately one or two weeks before FOSTER's death. PROBST and ANTHONY greeted each other at this luncheon, and FOSTER appeared fine to PROBST. PROBST does not recall having any other encounters or telephone calls with FOSTER after he arrived in WDC in 1993.

PROBST was not a participant in any regular gatherings of Arkansans for dinner on Tuesday nights, and she has no knowledge of such gatherings.

Investigation on 5/4/95 at Washington, D.C. File # 29D-OIC-LR-35063

by SA RUSSELL T. BRANSFORD RTB:rtb Date dictated 5/4/95

PROBST has no personal knowledge of the factors which may have led to FOSTER's suicide. PROBST has been told by ANTHONY that FOSTER was absolutely worn out from working eighteen hours a day.

PROBST has lived in WDC for the last fourteen years and she did not maintain any type of continuing contact with VINCENT or LISA FOSTER during that time period.

On the morning of July 21, 1993, PROBST learned of FOSTER's death when she received a telephone call at her home from DOUG FROST. FROST had previously worked for former Representative BERYL ANTHONY, who is the husband of SHEILA ANTHONY. FROST's call to PROBST awoke her. PROBST believes FROST told her that FOSTER had committed suicide. After receiving the call from FROST, PROBST hung up and immediately called the ANTHONY residence. The ANTHONYs' telephone line was busy, and PROBST quickly dressed herself and went to the ANTHONYs' residence. Upon PROBST's arrival there, she discovered that SHEILA ANTHONY was already gone, but BERYL ANTHONY and a few people were still at home. PROBST does not recall who else was at the ANTHONY house, but she recalls that the house was not crowded. PROBST offered to help out in terms of arranging for food to be brought in or in making any other arrangements which needed to be made as a result of FOSTER's death. PROBST took responsibility for answering the ANTHONYs' telephone because PROBST knew the ANTHONYs well enough to know with whom they would want to speak and who should not be put through to them. PROBST remained at the ANTHONYs house most of the day but went to her own home briefly before returning to the ANTHONYs' house that evening. At no time did PROBST go to the FOSTERs' house in WDC.

On the Thursday following FOSTER's death, PROBST flew to Little Rock for FOSTER's funeral. PROBST flew aboard a small private plane which may have belonged to TRUMAN ARNOLD. Also on the plane with PROBST were FOSTER's sister, SHARON BOWMAN, and BOWMAN's daughter MARY. There were two other passengers on the airplane but PROBST does not recall their identities.

PROBST did not participate in or overhear any conversation about the subject of FOSTER having left a note or of such a note having been found.

Prior to FOSTER's move to WDC in 1993, PROBST probably last saw FOSTER in the summer of 1992 on the night of a run-off election for the congressional seat of Representative BERYL ANTHONY. PROBST, FOSTER and one of FOSTER's sons were together with other people at the home of PAT and SCOTTY GILES (phonetic) in El Dorado, Arkansas, to watch the election returns. PROBST recalls that FOSTER "seemed fine" that night.

PROBST does not recall observing any indications of depression in FOSTER, but she notes that she rarely saw him. FOSTER had been moody for as long as PROBST knew him, but she does not recall observing any change in his personality or behavior in her limited contacts with him. FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C) PROBST was not around FOSTER enough to have observed any symptoms of depression in him.

PROBST is convinced that FOSTER died from suicide caused by clinical depression. PROBST's conclusion is based on secondhand information from ANTHONY and not from any personal observations of FOSTER by PROBST. PROBST was told by ANTHONY that FOSTER had called her and asked for recommendations for a psychiatrist he could see. PROBST was told by ANTHONY that ANTHONY gave FOSTER the names of two or three psychiatrists, but that FOSTER seemed reluctant to contact the psychiatrists because he was concerned such contacts could affect his security clearance.

PROBST believes the source of FOSTER's depression was that he was overworked, tired, and deeply affected by what he perceived to be criticism of himself in the press, particularly in the Wall Street Journal. PROBST believes that, due to his successful background in a different type of environment such as Little Rock, FOSTER was unable to simply ignore such criticism and proceed with his work.

Based on observation and interview, PROBST is described as follows:

Mrs. BARBARA PRYOR, wife of Senator RICHARD PRYOR of Arkansas, was advised of the identity of Special Agent WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL. She was also informed that Agent COLOMBELL wished to interview her regarding the circumstances surrounding her visit to the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993.

Mrs. PRYOR advised that in July of 1993, she and her husband lived in close proximity to the FOSTER home, specifically on 19th Street off of Dupont Circle. She and the FOSTER's, as well as SHIELA ANTHONY, VINCENT FOSTER's sister, have been friends for many years. Her purpose in going to the FOSTER residence was to give SHIELA ANTHONY a ride home, pointing out that Ms. ANTHONY had spent the night at the FOSTER residence. Mrs. PRYOR arrived at the FOSTER residence sometime between 8:00 and 8:30 am. She parked her car on Cambridge Place in close proximity to the FOSTER home. She recalled that while parking, she accidentally tapped an expensive sports car, either a Porsche or a Jaguar parked on the street, setting off a car alarm. The street was very quiet and she observed no one on the street or sitting in any parked cars nearby. She was specifically asked if there was any media presence in the area and she responded not to her recollection. SHIELA ANTHONY answered the door and let her in. She remembers thinking that maybe she came to early. It appeared to her that everyone was still asleep and that she had awakened Ms. ANTHONY. To the best of her recollection, Ms. ANTHONY was still wearing the same dress that she had on the prior evening when close family friends had gathered at the residence to comfort the family. Shortly after entering the FOSTER residence, the car alarm ceased and she assumed that whoever owned the car must have gone outside and turned it off.

Mrs. PRYOR stated that she recalls making coffee and staying a short time, (approximately 15 to 20 minutes) and then driving SHIELA ANTHONY home. She feels certain that she and Ms. ANTHONY left the FOSTER residence no later than 9:00 am. She can't be sure, but believes that while she was there the HUBBELLs arrived. During the 15 to 20 minute visit, she has no recollection of either SHIELA ANTHONY or Mrs. FOSTER making any

JOHN MICHAEL QUINN, who is also known as JACK QUINN, was interviewed in his office in the Old Executive Office Building on the grounds of the White House, Washington, D.C. QUINN serves as both Assistant to the President and Chief of Staff and Counselor to the Vice President. Present during the interview of QUINN was DONALD SIMON, who is QUINN's friend as well as an attorney. Associate Counsel MARK J. STEIN of the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., also participated in the interview. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, QUINN furnished the following information:

QUINN's primary role is to manage the staff of the Office of the Vice President. The staff is rather large and includes people assigned to both the Executive Office of the President as well as staff assigned to the Vice President in his role as the President of the United States Senate. Based on an earlier decision of President BILL CLINTON, the position of Chief of Staff to the Vice President is also considered part of the staff of the President. As a result, QUINN attends the daily meetings for senior staff held at the White House at 8:00 a.m. each morning.

QUINN met Vice President ALBERT GORE when QUINN was an attorney in private practice and Mr. GORE was a Member of the United States House of Representatives. While in the private practice of law, QUINN worked on matters which fell under the purview of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. In 1987 and 1988, QUINN assisted Mr. GORE in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for president. Then-Senator GORE asked QUINN to help him prepare for the debates with then-Vice President DAN QUAYLE. Following the election in 1992, QUINN served as counsel to the CLINTON transition team along with several attorneys from Little Rock, Arkansas. Once the CLINTON Administration took office, QUINN assumed the duties of Counsel to the Vice President and Deputy Chief of Staff to the Vice President. ROY NEEL was then the Chief of Staff for the Vice President.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

QUINN worked with Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. during the early part of the CLINTON Administration when QUINN was serving as Counsel to the Vice President. In that position, QUINN attended the daily morning meetings of the White House Counsel's Office staff. QUINN attended these meetings from January 20, 1993 through early May 1993, and these meetings usually lasted approximately forty-five minutes each. QUINN did not work on any projects with FOSTER, and he only saw or had contact with FOSTER during the meetings with the staff of the White House Counsel's Office.

QUINN never discussed the subject of Whitewater with FOSTER. FOSTER was a man of unusual discretion, and he was not given to discussing his work with other people.

QUINN does not recall whether he was at work at the White House on July 20, 1993, which was the date of FOSTER's death. QUINN is certain that he was not at the White House when he learned of FOSTER's death. He has a strong sense that he was at home when he learned of FOSTER's death, but he is not certain whether he acquired this knowledge the night of July 20, 1993 or the morning of July 21, 1993. QUINN has a vague recollection that he may have learned of FOSTER's death through either a radio or television report the morning of July 21, 1993.

No one ever told QUINN that members of the White House staff went into FOSTER's office the night of July 20, 1993. QUINN does not have any information to suggest that anything was removed from FOSTER's office that night.

On the morning of July 22, 1993, which was the day on which the inspection of documents in FOSTER's office was conducted, QUINN was made aware that White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM planned to allow a search of FOSTER's office by officials of the National Park Service. QUINN does not recall whether NUSSBAUM was planning to allow the search of FOSTER's office or whether NUSSBAUM would be present during the search. QUINN was told about NUSSBAUM's plans regarding the search either by White House Chief of Staff THOMAS "MACK" McLARTY or by a member of McLARTY's staff. QUINN does not recall whether he first spoke to McLARTY or whether one of McLARTY's aides said that McLARTY wanted to speak with QUINN.

During a conversation the morning of the search of FOSTER's office, McLARTY expressed his confidence in QUINN's legal judgment and he asked QUINN to provide a second opinion about the advisability of NUSSBAUM's plan for the search of the office. McLARTY did not himself express any opinion about the advisability of the search. QUINN does not recall the exact words used by McLARTY, but McLARTY wanted QUINN to take a second look at the question of how the search should be conducted. QUINN's conversation with McLARTY occurred face-to-face in the west wing of the White House. QUINN is rather confident that McLARTY did not mention anything about the specific procedure to be used for the search. QUINN further understood McLARTY wanted him to speak with NUSSBAUM about the plan for the search. QUINN does not believe he had spoken with NUSSBAUM or heard about the investigation being conducted by the United States Park Police (USPP) prior to his meeting with McLARTY.

QUINN met with NUSSBAUM later the same day in the Vice President's office, which is adjacent to McLARTY's office. The Vice President was not present during this meeting. QUINN's meeting with NUSSBAUM was impromptu and QUINN does not recall how the meeting was organized. This meeting may have occurred shortly after QUINN's meeting with McLARTY. People in attendance at the meeting included QUINN, NUSSBAUM, possibly STEVE NEUWIRTH of the White House Counsel's Office, a representative of McLARTY's office (definitely not McLARTY but possibly Deputy Chief of Staff BILL BURTON), and, QUINN believes, at least one other person. If QUINN were asked to speculate about the identity of this other person, he would name senior advisor BRUCE LINDSEY as most likely to have been this person. QUINN cannot state with certainty that this unidentified person was present for the entire meeting since he has a vague recollection of this person coming and going during the meeting.

At the outset of the meeting, NUSSBAUM said that the investigating authorities wanted to conduct a search of FOSTER's office and he wanted to allow this search to occur. QUINN objected strenuously and repeatedly to this proposal. QUINN believed NUSSBAUM and the USPP agents would be the first people to enter FOSTER's office and would be conducting searches of files and documents. QUINN argued that the Counsel to the Office of the President had an obligation in regard to the papers in FOSTER's office, especially those papers which were either privileged or were highly classified and had relevance to issues of national security. QUINN wanted to protect the traditional presidential privilege and avoid any improper exposure of classified matters. QUINN felt it was quite likely that FOSTER would have had documents in his office which would fall under the presidential privilege. He felt that NUSSBAUM's client, i.e., the President of the United States, should have an opportunity to contest efforts by anyone outside the White House staff to review privileged documents. NUSSBAUM felt quite passionately that he could not conduct an initial review of the documents since to do so would be unacceptable to the USPP investigators. Based on NUSSBAUM's statement, QUINN assumed NUSSBAUM had already spoken with USPP investigators and had been told of USPP concerns.. QUINN does not recall NUSSBAUM saying that representatives of the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) would be present during the search.

The discussion between QUINN and NUSSBAUM went back and forth for approximately fifteen to twenty minutes, which was the duration of the entire meeting. QUINN has a vivid memory of the other people at the meeting remaining quiet during the discussion between QUINN and NUSSBAUM. QUINN and NUSSBAUM were in essential disagreement about a lawyer's best judgment in representing a client. QUINN continues to feel that the principle that a lawyer's first duty is to his or her client required an examination of the issues of privilege and national security. QUINN's memory of what NUSSBAUM said about the expectations of the USPP investigators is not clear.

At the end of this meeting, NUSSBAUM said that QUINN's concern was misplaced because the first visual examination of each document in FOSTER's office would be conducted by NUSSBAUM. QUINN cannot now say whether NUSSBAUM's position at the end of the meeting was the same as it had been at the start of the meeting or whether it evolved to that view. QUINN believes that NUSSBAUM's position evolved during the meeting to the plan in which NUSSBAUM would initially examine each document. QUINN expressed bafflement that NUSSBAUM believed that the investigators would not object to the procedure proposed by NUSSBAUM. QUINN was unclear whether NUSSBAUM had already made a commitment to the investigators about how the document search would be conducted. The meeting held in the Vice President's office was in close proximity in time to a meeting between NUSSBAUM and USPP officials.

QUINN does not recall any of the dialogue from the meeting in the Vice President's office. QUINN's clear impression is that NUSSBAUM, not QUINN, would make the final decision and the question would not be put to a vote of lawyers. QUINN came away from the meeting with the impression that NUSSBAUM had not been swayed to QUINN's point of view.

QUINN does not recall whether at the beginning of the meeting NUSSBAUM had a plan to conduct an initial solitary review of the documents. QUINN does not believe the discussion ever got to such a level of specificity that an inventory of the documents was discussed. QUINN does not recall discussing how long it would take to conduct the search if NUSSBAUM personally reviewed each document.

QUINN has no knowledge of anything having been taken out of FOSTER's office at that time. For all intents and purposes, NUSSBAUM's search was to be the first search of FOSTER's office.

QUINN does not recall reporting the outcome of the meeting back to McLARTY. QUINN regards this recollection as surprising to himself because the meeting had ended with QUINN and NUSSBAUM still disagreeing about how the search should be conducted. QUINN probably relied on the aide of McLARTY who had attended the meeting, possibly BILL BURTON, to relate the content of the meeting back to McLARTY. QUINN did mention the discussion to TODD CAMPBELL, who had replaced QUINN as Counsel to the Vice President. QUINN felt that CAMPBELL should have knowledge of the meeting because CAMPBELL was at a level where he interfaced with the White House Counsel's Office.

QUINN and NUSSBAUM had debated their views strongly and expressed their professional differences.

Neither President CLINTON nor First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON had any input into how the search of FOSTER's office was conducted. QUINN has not had any conversation with Vice President GORE about the search of FOSTER's office. QUINN had not had any conversations with anyone about the meeting in the Vice President's office in July 1993 until QUINN was contacted by Associate Independent Counsel STEIN approximately forty-eight hours prior to this interview.

QUINN does not think that he and NUSSBAUM had any conversations about the conduct of the search after it had occurred. QUINN learned about the procedures used in the search of documents through subsequent newspaper accounts. QUINN has not spoken to anyone at DOJ about the search of FOSTER's office.

QUINN was not involved in the decision to move documents from FOSTER's office to the offices of the CLINTONs' private attorney. QUINN did not have any involvement with the torn handwritten note which was found in FOSTER's briefcase. QUINN does not have any information that anyone in the CLINTON Administration had any involvement with the torn note prior to its discovery on July 26, 1993. QUINN does not have any information about the possible existence of any other notes having been written by FOSTER.

On May 17, 1994, GORDON S. RATHER, JR. Attorney at Law, WRIGHT, LINDSEY & JENNINGS, 200 West Capitol Avenue Suite 2200, Worthen Bank Building, Little Rock, Arkansas, was interviewed at his law offices. Having been advised of the nature and purpose of the interview and the identity of the interviewing agents, RATHER provided the following information:

RATHER advised that he understood that he was being contacted because he had telephoned VINCE FOSTER, JR. on July 20, 1993, the day of FOSTER's death. RATHER advised that he had known FOSTER since they had taken the Arkansas bar exam together and since FOSTER joined the ROSE LAW FIRM, about 20 years. They had met during a bar review course. Later, FOSTER was a speaker for the bar review course organizers because he had received the top grade in the Arkansas bar exam the year he took it. In subsequent years, FOSTER became a familiar legal contact. They worked on cases together, both on the same and opposing sides. They were both responsible for recruiting new lawyers into their respective law firms and therefore they were in contact every so often to speak about prospective applicants, what entry level salaries were reasonable and other recruitment matters. Socially speaking, they would run into one another occasionally at social gatherings because Little Rock is a small community. RATHER therefore characterized his relationship with FOSTER as a combination of both professional and personal friendship. They were not, however, close personal friends. They would see one another several times a year.

RATHER described FOSTER as "a true gentleman". He was a gracious winner and a gracious loser. He was very impressive both physically and intellectually, well spoken, thoughtful and careful about what he said--a very bright person. RATHER never knew FOSTER to get emotional. But he was a feeling person and cited as an example, FOSTER's having sent RATHER a very touching sympathy card in 1992 when RATHER's son died.

RATHER described FOSTER as always looking fit, healthy and "nicely turned out". No personal problems were ever discussed between the two men and they didn't have the kind of relationship where RATHER and FOSTER would have had philosophical discussions of any depth.

RATHER explained that he is very active in the American Board of Trial Advocates (ABOTA). ABOTA is a professional organization of approximately 4,000 attorneys. In order to qualify for membership one must have completed 20 civil jury trials and joining is by invitation only. It is the only organization (other than bar organizations) that has both plaintiff and defense attorneys in the same organization. FOSTER was a member of the Arkansas Chapter of ABOTA but resigned when he went to Washington, D.C. to join The White House staff in order to avoid any kind of appearance of impropriety.

On March 2, 1993, RATHER and two colleagues from ABOTA, DON SHULTZ, then National President of the organization and STEWART GROSSMAN, a plaintiff's trial lawyer from Miami, Florida, met with VINCE FOSTER at 11:00 am in the West Wing of The White House. Their meeting lasted from 30-45 minutes and the purpose of it was to encourage The White House to fill vacancies on the Federal Bench. RATHER explained that as an organization, ABOTA is dedicated to the preservation of the right to civil jury trial in this country. The organization was attempting to influence President CLINTON to fill those vacancies. Not to fill them with any particular people, but to fill them. RATHER explained that about 120 Federal District Court benches are vacant currently. The largest number of vacancies is at the Federal Trial Court level. Vacancies affect peoples' access to the courts for civil jury trials. ABOTA does not lobby for any particular list of perspective nominees. The three men were visiting FOSTER to encourage him to encourage the President to fill the vacancies.

At the March 2 meeting, FOSTER made neither promises nor assurances to the three men on behlaf of ABOTA. He was aware of the problem of the vacancies on the bench and FOSTER introduced them to RON KLAIN, a White House staffer who was coordinating the effort to fill the Federal Judicial vacancies. That was the last time that RATHER saw FOSTER. After the three men left the Old Executive Office Building after talking with RON KLAIN for a short time, RATHER recalled one of the men turning to him and saying, "This is one of the most unforgettable days in my life and VINCE FOSTER is one of the most impressive men I've ever met".

RATHER advised that he does not recall speaking with FOSTER again, but knows he must have to get RON KLAIN's mailing address. RATHER called FOSTER on July 20 out of sheer coincidence. FOSTER was not expecting his call and RATHER called in order to speak with him about ABOTA business. It was just fateful that it was that day that FOSTER committed suicide. He was impressed with the fact that the same day, possibly within an hour of his call, someone from FOSTER's office called him back and asked if it were an urgent matter or if it was all right if FOSTER returned his call the following day.

RATHER heard the news of FOSTER's death by reading it in the newspaper on July 21, 1993. He said that FOSTER was one of the most unlikely candidates for suicide he can imagine. He commented that an article in the newspaper that appeared not to long after FOSTER's death on the topic of executive suicide, was somewhat helpful to him in understanding why it may have happened.

RATHER said it was his theory that if FOSTER had not gone to Washington, D.C. he would be alive today. FOSTER had always succeeded and had never failed at anything. In Washington, D.C., no matter what he did, people were critical of it and perhaps that it was something that he just couldn't deal with.

RATHER was never aware of any rumors concerning a romantic liaison between FOSTER and HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON. RATHER said, however, that his wife told him that there were such rumors circulating.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Date of transcription 9/7/94

A review was conducted of three logs which had been furnished to the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), Washington, D.C., by PAUL B. IMBORDINO, Assistant Special Agent in Charge, White House Division, United States Secret Service (USSS), Washington, D.C. The first log, which was provided to the OIC on June 8, 1994, is a ninety-two page document which reflects the identities of persons entering and exiting a gate to the White House compound from West Executive Avenue. This gate is designated USSS post B4. The log covers the period July 19, 1993 through July 22, 1993. In the course of providing this log to the OIC, IMBORDINO advised that the log would not reflect all persons entering or leaving through this gate. IMBORDINO noted that holders of White House passes who are in vehicles when they enter the White House compound through this gate would not be reflected on the log. Further, holders of White House passes who were known to the USSS officer on duty or who were entering during a period of heavy pedestrian traffic into and out of the White House would also not necessarily be reflected in the log.

The other two logs, which were furnished by IMBORDINO on June 28, 1994, are also USSS gate logs which reflect the identities of person entering and exiting the White House compound. One of the logs reflects activity at a gate on West Executive Avenue from Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., which is the gate designated USSS post A1. The second such log reflects activity at a gate into the White House compound from East Executive Avenue, which is the gate designated USSS post A5. Each of these logs covers the period of July 20, 1993 through July 21, 1993.

The review of these logs was conducted in the offices of the OIC, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. The purpose of the review was to record the entries and exits of persons whose names or activities have significance for the OIC investigation. It is noted that the names of VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. and a number of other high-ranking White House officials did not appear in these logs. The review yielded the following information:

A. (ANA) VICTORIA RIVAS-VASQUEZ, Assistant Press Secretary, The White House Press Office was interviewed at The White House on September 16, 1994. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, RIVAS-VASQUEZ provided the following information:

RIVAS-VASQUEZ advised that she has been Assistant Press Secretary since February 1993. Her job is coordinating television coverage and her office is Room 174 of the Old Executive Office Building. Her office mate and fellow Assistant Press Secretary DAWN ALEXANDER.

RIVAS-VASQUEZ remembers the day VINCE FOSTER, JR. killed himself, July 20, 1993, because she was the one who coordinated and was present for the Larry King Show that the President did in The White House. They found out at approximately 9:30 pm that VINCE FOSTER, JR. had been found dead. She herself did not know VINCE FOSTER but was familiar with the name. The show ended at 10:00 pm and after that it was part of RIVAS-VASQUEZ's job to stay there until all of the media people had torn down their equipment and left The White House. After that, she went to MARK GEARAN and DEE DEE MYERS office (the upper Press Office) to help them answer telephones. She mostly recorded the names of those people calling in and took messages so that they could be called back. She estimates that she got home that night at approximately midnight.

RIVAS-VASQUEZ estimated that she got to work the following morning between 7:00 and 7:30 am, going directly to her office in the Old Executive Office Building. She does not recall if she went over to the West Wing at all the morning of July 21, 1993. She also was not absolutely sure of her time of arrival at work. She said that she remembers spending most of the morning on July 21, sitting at her desk with headphones on responding to numerous requests coming in from television networks asking if they were going to release anymore information or special features about VINCE FOSTER or his death.

She advised that she knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE but would probably not recognize his voice on the telephone. She did not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE any time on July 21, 1993 because her only specific memory of the entire day is the meeting where President CLINTON, "MAC" MCLARTY and BERNARD NUSSBAUM held a big staff meeting in the Old Executive Office Building. The only kind of coming together to express mutual grief and sadness and talk about the event that she recalls of that day was that staff meeting.

RIVAS-VASQUEZ advised that she did not hear any discussion of the issue of press coverage at the FOSTER residence, either the evening of July 20 at The White House or any time the following day. She also did not hear, after the fact, that anybody had gone to the residence to help deal with press. She advised that she did attend the daily press office staff meeting at that time (she could not recall what time that meeting was held that morning), but has no recollection of what was discussed.

As part of the interview, RIVAS-VASQUEZ provided the following personal information:

Kevin M. Robbins, Physical Security Specialist, Technical Security Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed at the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. Mr. Robbins was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by the U.S. Secret Service for approximately 6 years all of which time has been at The White House compound. Mr. Robbins is a master locksmith and is responsible for installation and maintenance of locks, alarms, and video surveillance cameras within The White House compound. He advised that he was so employed on July 20, 1993, the date of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death. Mr. Robbins said that he worked the 9:00 am through 5:30 pm shift on July 20 and, from his perspective, this was an routine, normal day. He stated that he can recall nothing out of the ordinary that he observed that day while at work and that he went home at approximately 5:30 pm.

On July 21, 1993, he was not at work, but on annual leave when he received a telephone call from The White House telling him that he would need to come to The White House to perform an "escort" for a lock installation. He advised that he was aware of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death at this point but was not advised that the lock installation was to be on Vincent Foster's door. He stated that he telephonically contacted Kenneth "Buddy" Blair of Federal Security Systems, a contract employee of USSS, advising Blair that he needed to come to The White House to install a lock that evening.

Mr. Robbins advised that he arrived at The White House where he met with Buddy Blair and proceeded to the 2nd floor of The White House west wing. He stated that Blair had brought with him a lock to be installed on the door and that he (Robbins) had brought a "key core" and two specially prepared U.S. Secret Service keys to match the "key core". When they arrived on the 2nd floor they were greeted by Assistant Special Agents in Charge Paul Imbordino and Donald Flynn at the entrance to the suite of offices occupied by Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster. As they stepped into the office suite he observed a USSS uniform officer standing in front of Foster's office door. The lock installation was begun at approximately 8:00 pm and all work was completed at approximately 10:00 pm. At that point the door was locked and the two keys were given to Assistant Special Agent in Charge Flynn. Robbins and Blair then left The White House.

Mr. Robbins advised that while the lock installation was underway, he observed Bernard Nussbaum and one of the secretaries (name unknown) in the reception area outside Foster's door. He advised however that neither of these individuals nor anyone else entered Foster's office while the lock installation was underway. Robbins said that although he did have occasion to look inside Vincent Foster's office during the installation, he can recall nothing of any particular note about the office, its furnishings, or its contents.

Leslie Rutherford, 5810 Bent Twig Road, Mclain, Virginia (703-528-0168) was interviewed at her residence in the presence of her mother Mrs. Sally Rutherford and both advised as to the identity of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the inquiry. Leslie Rutherford then provided the following information.

Ms. Leslie Rutherford, who is presently an 18 year old student attending Dennison College, Ohio advised that at approximately 3:00 pm on July 19, 1993, she was walking in the northeast portion of Fort Marcy Park gaining entry to the park at a spot where the tennis courts of the Dogwood subdivision border on Fort Marcy Park. She related that it was an extremely hot and humid day and noticed at a distance of approximately 10 to 15 feet a white male walking by himself in a direction leading from the George Washington Memorial Parkway into the northeast section of the park. She stated what caught her attention was that this white male, in spite of the heat, was dressed in a dark suit, white shirt and a red neck tie.

Ms. Rutherford further described this white male as being in his early 40's, dark hair, approximately 180 lbs. and slightly over 6 foot in height. According to Ms. Rutherford, this white male had no facial hair nor was he wearing eyeglasses. She further stated that when she noticed this white male, he immediately looked away from her and therefore she could furnish no additional details relative to his facial characteristics. In a further attempt to determine the height of this white male, it was Ms. Rutherford's opinion that he was slightly over 6 foot tall but did not approach 6 foot 4 inches in height.

Ms. Rutherford stated that she had viewed various newspaper articles in which Vincent Foster's picture appeared but stated that she could not make any determination from these newspaper photographs as to whether or not the individual she saw at Fort Marcy Park was, in fact, Vincent Foster. Ms. Rutherford was also exhibited photographs of Mr. Foster but she was unable to make any determination as to whether these photographs

Scott M. Salter, Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C., as scheduled at 2:00 p.m. for interview. Salter was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Agent Salter provided the following information:

He first became involved in the Vincent Foster death investigation on Wednesday, July 21, 1993. He was advised by his supervisor, John K. Danna, that a call had been received from the U.S. Park Police for assistance with this Foster investigation.

Salter advised he proceeded to the White House and then waited for a considerable time in the Old Executive Office Building. Present with him were Supervisor Danna, FBI Special Agent Dennis Condon, two U.S. Park Police investigators and one U.S. Secret Service agent.

At about 4:00 p.m. or later that afternoon, Salter and these individuals proceeded to Bernard Nussbaum's office. Salter noted that David Margolis and Roger Adams from the Department of Justice were also present during this discussion in Nussbaum's office. It was clear that Margolis was the point man for the Department of Justice. Salter described the scene as being disorganized. He said arrangements were made to come back on the following day, July 22, 1993, to conduct a search of Vincent Foster's White House office and to interview some White House employees. The question of who would search the office was discussed, with indications being that the White House would do the search and the rest of the non-White House people would watch because of a White House concern regarding privileged documents. Discussion was held regarding the possibility that the investigators would get to look at some of the Foster documentation. It seemed as if a lot of the procedure to be followed had been worked out already with the fine points to be worked out the next day when they came back for the search. It was agreed that Foster's office should be secured and that U.S. Secret Service Agent Don Flynn would hold the only key to the Foster office. The U.S. Secret Service technical people were in the process of putting a lock on the Foster office door during the meeting.

The purpose of the search was to confirm a suicide or point to anything else regarding the death of Vincent Foster.

Nussbaum advised the group that the Foster office had not been previously secured. Nussbaum said that he had been in the office, but hadn't seen a note.

This meeting on July 21, 1993 adjourned around 5:00 p.m. or a little after, after agreeing to meet the following morning at approximately 9:00 a.m.

In a huddle following the formal meeting, it was agreed that the interviews the following day with White House personnel would be conducted with one FBI Agent and one U.S. Park Police investigator present. They did not know at that time that White House Counsel would be present during these interviews. Margolis indicated that the FBI and Park Police would have access to the Foster office. Margolis said that he would deal with the White House and would get them the proper access. Margolis said he had the horsepower from Attorney General Janet Reno, if necessary. Deputy Attorney General Phillip Heyman's name was also mentioned by Margolis.

On July 22, 1993, at approximately 9:00 a.m., the following individuals assembled in the West Wing of the White House: Salter, Dennis Condon, Charles Hume, Pete Markland, David Margolis (and maybe Roger Adams), Don Flynn and Paul Imbordino. This group sat around for hours waiting for decisions to be made. Margolis had told the others to wait while he was dealing with Nussbaum regarding the ground rules.

Finally, at about 2:00 or 2:30 p.m., the agents and Park Police investigators were allowed to interview a couple of secretaries. These secretaries were some of the last people to see Vincent Foster alive on July 20, 1993. It was at the point of these interviews that Salter and the others were told by Margolis that White House attorneys would sit in on the interviews. Margolis' only explanation was that "that's the way it is." Salter and Hume did their interviews in the presence of Cliff Sloan and Condon and Markland did their interviews in the presence of Steven Neuwirth. Salter said he understood that the purpose of White House Counsel being there during the interviews was to take notes. They scribbled down virtually every question and answer. Salter was shown a copy of an FD-302 (attached) he had done concerning the search of Vincent Foster's office on July 22, 1993. This FD-302 was part of a report Salter had written dated August 9, 1993 concerning the Obstruction of Justice (OOJ) investigation conducted by the FBI. Salter said that an FD-302 was prepared on the search of Foster's office after Foster's note had been found and the OOJ case opened. Salter said the facts contained in this FD-302 were complete, with the exception that another individual by the name of Spafford had been present during the search. He understood Spafford to be an attorney with Jim Hamilton's law firm, the family attorneys for the Fosters. Salter added that it was apparent during the search that Nussbaum was running the show. Others present from the White House were whispering to Nussbaum during the search. Neuwirth and Sloan were scribbling notes to Nussbaum during the search. During the search, Nussbaum sat at Vincent Foster's desk, flanked by Neuwirth on his right and Sloan on his left. Also on the right was Burton. Margolis sat immediately in front of the desk and immediately behind him, from left to right looking out from the desk was Salter (standing), Markland and Hume (sitting on a couch), and Dennis Condon (sitting in a chair). Spafford was to Condon's left. Imbordino and Flynn from the U.S. Secret Service were standing in the background.

Salter commented that the search did not go as he would have wanted it to go.

At one point during the search, Sloan said to Salter who was standing, "Excuse me agent, you're not standing there so you can see what Nussbaum is looking at, are you?" Salter commented something to the effect that Sloan was getting carried away. Salter said he felt like he was being treated as "the enemy."

Nussbaum mediated the exchange by saying, "Yes, yes, of course we're all here to find out the truth. We're not adversaries." Salter said, "but clearly that was the mood."

Nussbaum led the review of items during the search. The FBI, DOJ, Park Police and Secret Service present were shut out of everything. They only became aware of the procedure for the search when they got into the office.

Nussbaum divided documents located in Foster's office into three piles: Foster's work for the President - work papers not relevant to the death investigation; second, Foster's personal papers - health insurance for the family, etc.; and a third pile of "maybe relevant." Salter only recalled a calendar and schedule for Foster being put into this third pile. Salter said all items reviewed by Nussbaum were looked at and then placed face down on their respective piles. The non-White House people present did not personally see any of the documentation.

The trash in Foster's office was also searched but nothing pertinent located. Salter believed that there was a bag of trash which had been previously removed and then returned to Foster's office and there was a can of confidential trash also in the room.

The computer in Foster's office was not searched.

During the course of the search, Margolis may have asked about why things wouldn't be relevant. It was plain, during the search, that the item had to relate to a suicide or those present wouldn't see it. The bottom line was that the FBI, DOJ, Park Police and Secret Service didn't see anything that day.

When Salter told Margolis that he felt they had been shut out, Margolis said that the ground rules for the search had been changed by Nussbaum once they were in the room. Salter described Nussbaum as a forceful personality; a person who would indicate "that's the way it's going to be."

Referring back to the previously prepared FD-302 concerning the search of Foster's office, Salter said that the last paragraph of this FD-302 referring to items which were found during the inventory could be clarified by indicating that items were found or not found by Nussbaum only, as others in the room were not allowed to look at the documentation.

Salter said that at the time of the search in July, 1993, the terms Whitewater and Madison would not have been significant to him. It was articulated that the search was being conducted for a suicide note, evidence of unusual death, an extortion letter, or any other indications or reasons for Foster's suicide and/or his being under duress.

The search was conducted only in Foster's office. Salter does not recall a safe. He estimated the documentation located in Foster's office consisted of one xerox-type box of work-related material which was placed on Foster's desk, two similar boxes of White House related material found in the cabinets, and less than a box of personal material given to the family attorney.

The information found in the briefcase was all determined to be work-related. This briefcase was originally on the right, next to the desk, and then put back against the wall. Salter was of the opinion that the briefcase had been emptied by Nussbaum during the search and that Burton and Nussbaum would have seen that it was empty. Salter again noted that Nussbaum runs at a high rate of speed, but that the briefcase had no pockets or zippers and it would have been clear that it was empty or not. Salter was not allowed to see for himself that the briefcase was empty. This briefcase was given to Hamilton's office courier by Salter for return to the family.

Salter added that when he and Special Agent Charles K. Dorsey returned to the White House to see Bernard Nussbaum to pick up Foster's briefcase, Nussbaum took Dorsey into Foster's office. Dorsey saw two or three pads of yellow lined paper in the office and asked Nussbaum if he could have those pads. Nussbaum agreed. These pads were then sent to the FBI laboratory for the purpose of raising indented writing from the pads which may be the writing contained on Foster's note. It was determined by the laboratory that there was indented writing on one of the pads but that the writing did not correspond to Foster's note. At this point, FBI Headquarters Supervisor, Patrick J. Foran, became involved and it was obvious to Salter and Dorsey that the material found on the pad was of a sensitive nature. They were told by Foran that the material was not relevant to their OOJ case and no further information was provided to either Salter or Dorsey concerning this writing, other than the laboratory report which was included in the FBI's OOJ report.

Salter said the FBI had been involved in the Foster death investigation at the time of Foster's death for only a day or two and then was out of the investigation. The FBI re-entered the investigation from an OOJ standpoint when the Foster note was found and revealed to the public on July 27, 1993. Salter said he received better White House cooperation during this second phase of the investigation.

SA Salter entered on duty with the FBI on January 9, 1989 and is currently assigned to Squad C-4, a reactive criminal squad. His work telephone number is (202) 252-7137.

TIMOTHY A. SCHMIDT was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC), regarding his knowledge of events surrounding the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., on July 20, 1993. After being apprised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview, SCHMIDT thereafter provided the following information:

SCHMIDT is an Officer with the United States Uniformed Secret Service (USSS), currently assigned to the USSS Control Center in the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB). In this capacity, SCHMIDT handles radio dispatches, and monitors alarms throughout The White House complex. SCHMIDT also controls incident paperwork. He was manning the Control Center switchboard on July 20, 1993, and also monitored incoming radio traffic. SCHMIDT's shift on the evening of July 20 was from 2:00 pm until 10:30 pm.

Sometime during the evening of July 20, 1993, SCHMIDT received a telephone call from a White House operator who said she had a telephone call for the President. The caller turned out to be CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. LIVINGSTONE was patched through to White House Chief of Staff, MACK MCLARTY, who was with the President. SCHMIDT did not talk directly to LIVINGSTONE that evening. The telephone call came in between 9:00 and 9:20 pm on July 20. SCHMIDT was not informed until July 21, 1993, that FOSTER had died. It was then that SCHMIDT figured out the telephone call during the previous evening for the President was related to the death of FOSTER.

SCHMIDT did not know FOSTER.

SCHMIDT did know LIVINGSTONE by name and title, noting that he was probably with White House security. SCHMIDT later remembered that LIVINGSTONE might have been the head of White House security.

SCHMIDT was not working alone at the console in the USSS Control Center. He could not recall who might have worked with him that evening. SCHMIDT noted that any alarms regarding secure areas being breached would have to be silenced by Control Center personnel.

According to SCHMIDT, the alarm procedure required that when a staffer exited an alarmed area, he/she was to call the Operations Center with his/her name, activate the alarm, and close the door. If someone were required to return to an alarmed area, they technically were to telephone the Control Center to inform appropriate USSS personnel. SCHMIDT was of the impression that most people did follow the proper procedure. A grace period of two minutes was allowed once an office was entered before the USSS would make a telephone call to inquire about the status of an area alarm. If no answer were received when that area was telephoned, a USSS Officer was sent to the site of the breached alarm to investigate.

SCHMIDT was unaware of any cameras being located in the vicinity of the Counsel's office suite, and he was also of the opinion that there were no cameras in a position to monitor the office of the First Lady and its respective suite.

SCHMIDT had heard on July 21, 1993, that documents had been removed from the office of VINCENT FOSTER. The documents were later described to have been trash. SCHMIDT had heard that the USSS was trying to obtain all confidential trash that was removed from the Counsel's office suite that evening. This information came from a USSS officer whom SCHMIDT could not remember. He was unaware if individuals associated with the search for the confidential trash ever found what they were looking for.

SCHMIDT had heard the name of MAGGIE WILLIAMS but did not know who she was. He had no knowledge of WILLIAMS ever removing documents from the FOSTER office suite. He had no knowledge of LIVINGSTONE removing documents from the West Wing of The White House on July 21, 1993.

TIMOTHY A. SCHMIDT was described from observation and interview as follows.

MARSHA SCOTT, Deputy Assistant to the President and former Director of Correspondence was interviewed at her attorney's office on May 12, 1994. SCOTT advised that she has recently changed positions and is now Deputy Assistant to the President in a undetermined public liaison capacity. Also present was her attorney STUART F. PIERSON of the law firm DAVIS, WRIGHT and TREMAINE, 701 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 600, Washington, D.C. 20004-2608, telephone (202) 508-6623. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, SCOTT provided the following information:

SCOTT advised that she met VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in approximately 1967 when she was about 20 years old. They were merely acquaintances in the interim years, sharing the same friends and moving to the same social circles in Arkansas. They became friends after the inauguration of President CLINTON. They have never been romantically involved with one another

SCOTT characterized her relationship with FOSTER as a personal friendship. She explained that she used to "pop my head in" every day or every other day to see FOSTER. She said that FOSTER had a serious facade but a good sense of humor; was very smart and very meticulous in the way he did things. She advised that he always put friendship and loyalty, ethics and his family before everything. She also said he was very patriotic.

SCOTT does not know why FOSTER would have committed suicide. She saw some signs that he was depressed but did not know that he was in such a serious crisis. In explaining what she meant by seeing signs of depression, SCOTT advised that everyone was depressed. Their whole circle of friends from Arkansas who had come to The White House were overworked and under constant pressure and constant scrutiny by the press and others in the Washington environment. They were "down".

SCOTT advised that in the beginning, shortly after the inauguration, The White House staffers from Arkansas would meet for dinner, sometimes several times a week. But as the workload for everybody increased, they met only once a week for dinner, generally Tuesday evenings.

SCOTT advised that on Monday, July 19, 1993, she stopped in to see FOSTER for a period of time in the afternoon. She wanted to ask him how the weekend had gone, knowing he had gone off for the weekend with his family. In retrospect she realizes that he acted different, but at the time she did not sense it. She explained that always before when she walked into the room, FOSTER would give her a hug and tell her some kind of little joke, but on this occasion he seemed preoccupied and a little quieter. There were no huge indicators, however, that there was something seriously wrong.

During that visit SCOTT advised that she did most of the talking and she does not remember what topics they talked about. She estimated that the visit lasted between 20 and 30 minutes but it could have been longer. She does not remember why she left and she does not recall that the visit was any different than any other time she visited him. She advised that she was uncomfortable talking about some of the private thoughts FOSTER shared with her. She said she believed FOSTER had painted himself into a box with no windows. But she got the sense during the July 19th meeting that he had come to some sort of decision and was, if anything, somehow relaxed as a result.

SCOTT is of the opinion that FOSTER committed suicide for personal reasons but commented that he didn't separate work from personal matters. He had talked about "wanting out". He talked about "wanting rest". He commented that he was "eternally tired". But on the Monday before his death, he was smiling and it struck her that he seemed to have figured out that he needed rest. It is SCOTT's theory that he had come to some sort of acceptance of something (what that was, she was not sure of) and expected that he was going to feel better soon. She thought it was related to his having taken the weekend off and realizing that he needed to do that sort of thing more often. But this was conjecture on her part.

In describing FOSTER, SCOTT advised that he was not an "open" person. He would not offer information and she took that to mean that he was an extremely private person. It was not his habit to "dump" or unwind by talking about problems. He did not say anything indicating anything was upsetting him. Asked about whether or not she could recall a conversation on Air Force One in route to VINCE FOSTER's funeral, SCOTT advised that she does not recall telling anybody about any topic that was bothering FOSTER. Asked who was on the flight with her, SCOTT could not recall who was on the plane. She believes she remembers seeing VINCE's secretary, DEBORAH GORHAM and perhaps GALE KENNEDY but she doesn't remember any other specifics.

SCOTT advised that Foster was especially worried about the negative impact that staff cuts were going to have on The White House overall and especially on the counsel's office. In fact, the very last words that he spoke to her were "the staff cuts are killing us". He was a perfectionist who wanted to do things right and staff cuts were affecting his ability to see that happen. SCOTT advised that the reactive mode that everybody was in all the time at The White House prevented the kind of care and thoughtfulness that FOSTER liked to bring to his work product.

SCOTT advised she was not aware of any personal matters which were disturbing him. His family arrived, she believes, the first week of June and it seemed to her that it was good for him to have his family there but it caused extra effort and he had to pay more attention to budgeting his time. This was a common topic among all of the folks up from Arkansas. FOSTER more than others, would sometimes miss the Tuesday dinner gatherings because of work-related responsibilities. FOSTER would not generally speak about things that were bothering him at these gatherings.

The evening of Tuesday, July 20, 1993, SCOTT advised that she was having dinner with WEBB and SUSAN HUBBELL and their children at a restaurant, the Lebanese Taverna. JANET SCHAUFELE, an intern at The White House, was also with them. WEBB HUBBELL's beeper kept going off and, as was his habit, he ignored it until about the third beep. It was the Justice Command Center calling to notify him of VINCE FOSTER's death. They left the restaurant right away and as they were walking to the elevator, WEBB HUBBELL was obviously very shaken. They did not know what the facts were. They thought perhaps it was VINCE's son who had been found. They had been told that the car had been found. They decided to go to WEBB HUBBELL's home so that he could get his Justice telephone book. When they arrived at their home, he realized he did not have his house keys and so while Mrs. HUBBELL and SCOTT attempted to get into the house, WEBB HUBBELL began making telephone calls from a neighbor's home.

HUBBELL told SCOTT that BILL KENNEDY (an especially good friend of FOSTER's) was on his way to view the body in order to confirm that it was indeed VINCE FOSTER, JR. VINCE FOSTER's sister, SHEILA ANTHONY lived right across the street from the HUBBELL's and even though VINCE FOSTER's death had not yet been actually been confirmed, SCOTT and the HUBBELLs went over to SHEILA ANTHONY's residence. FOSTER's other sister, SHARON BOWMAN, was also there visiting from Arkansas. SCOTT told the two sisters and niece what had occurred.

SCOTT was unable to say who was notified in what order among The White House staff. She believes that the U.S. Park Police had called CRAIG LIVINGSTONE. KENNEDY and LIVINGSTONE viewed the body and confirmed the identification.

SCOTT and the HUBBELLs went from the ANTHONY's to the FOSTER residence. They arrived as DAVID and EILEEN WATKINS and separately, the U.S. Park Police were arriving. It was very crowded in the FOSTER's small entryway. As everybody was coming in the entryway SCOTT looked up and saw LISA FOSTER coming down the stairs and LAURA FOSTER coming in from the kitchen wondering what was going on. She recalls LISA FOSTER saying something like "What's going on?" She recalls the U.S. Park Officer going up to her and notifying her that her husband had been found dead. LISA FOSTER cried out and sank down to a sitting position on the stairs. LAURA FOSTER began to scream at that point. A female officer went up to LISA FOSTER and SCOTT could not hear what was being said to her. Other people began to pay attention to LAURA, who appeared to be going into shock. People helped LISA upstairs and SCOTT remembers hearing her screaming. SCOTT herself recalls asking somebody how VINCE FOSTER had died.

After that, SCOTT and SUSAN HUBBELL went back to the ANTHONY's to see if BERLE ANTHONY had arrived home. They were having difficulty contacting him. Then they went back to the FOSTER residence. SCOTT telephoned SENATOR and BARBARA PRYOR, a close friend of SHEILA ANTHONY's. SCOTT recalls two doctors arriving. SENATOR PRYOR's doctor, Dr. ALEX CHESTER and second doctor (identity unknown). Many people came and went at the FOSTER residence, including JOHN and PEGGY RICHARDSON with whom MARSHA SCOTT was living at the time.

SCOTT left the FOSTER residence and went to The White House some time after midnight with MICKEY CANTER, the U.S. Trade Representative. She said she went there "to see how BILL [President CLINTON] was doing." SCOTT remembers seeing DAVID GERGEN, MACK MCLARTY, VERNON JORDAN, ROBIN DICKEY (whose daughter HELEN babysits CHELSEY CLINTON) and others. SCOTT cannot recall if she saw PATSY THOMASSON or BILL BURTON. SCOTT does not recall anything being said about a note or about searching VINCE FOSTER's office for a note. WEBB HUBBELL thought it was very important to seal FOSTER's office and he commented to that effect to SCOTT the evening of the 20th at the FOSTER residence.

SCOTT also talked with PATSY THOMASSON but she does not recall whether it was the night of the 20th or the next day. She found out later that PATSY THOMASSON and MAGGIE WILLIAMS went into FOSTER's office and that MAGGIE had been crying. SCOTT does not know how she knows that. She learned about it later. SCOTT advised that everybody was very upset. She explained that FOSTER had an "inclusive style", meaning he would draw people in to him and what he was doing. People loved him. She commented that HILLARY CLINTON was his best friend and that HILLARY, MAGGIE WILLIAMS and FOSTER worked together.

SCOTT advised that when she got to The White House the night of July 20, 1993, she went directly to see President BILL CLINTON. She was there at The White House only a couple hours staying in the kitchen of the residence area. She then went home.

SCOTT advised that the people who were around that night, BILL BURTON, MACK MCLARTY, GERGEN, HUBBELL, PATSY THOMASSON, DAVID WATKINS and others who were all concerned with basically two things. First, were they doing the right thing to ensure the integrity of the moment? Who should handle things, the Attorney General or BERNIE NUSSBAUM? And secondly, they were coping with intense grief. Each person was struggling with a personal sense of loss that this had happened to a friend and colleague. Each person within their own sphere of influence was trying to do the right thing to handle the situation, even if it was just notifying people within their staff. SCOTT advised that her piece in the puzzle was notifying as many families as she could. She explained that if errors were made it was because people didn't know what to do.

She advised that she did not know FOSTER to be a terribly religious person but knew that he attended church with his family. SCOTT advised that LISA and VINCE FOSTER knew each other very well and although they had experienced a strain in connection with the split of their household when VINCE came to Washington, D.C., she felt they had a basically good marriage. She herself never saw any inkling of marital infidelity on FOSTER's part, not with HILLARY CLINTON or any other person.

SCOTT guessed that FOSTER may have considered WEBB HUBBELL and herself to be confidantes. She does not feel that he would have considered HILLARY a confidante inasmuch as it is difficult to confide in somebody when you're actually working for them, which is an adjustment that they all had to make with BILL and HILLARY CLINTON.

With regard to the note discovered on July 26 in FOSTER's handwriting, SCOTT advised that she did not know about it from personal knowledge. She knew FOSTER to be a good lawyer and a good political adviser and she would not have thought that he would ever have written anything like that down. She was surprised to hear of the list that was supposedly written by him. Her reaction was that FOSTER was so methodical, he simply would not have left it lying around, not even the pieces of it. SCOTT advised that it never occurred to her to wonder who tore the note up or who would have put it in the briefcase. She figured that he tore it up and put it in the briefcase in order to take it out later and discard the pieces.

Asked what she thought FOSTER would have meant regarding the FBI lying in their report to Department of Justice (one of the items on the list that she later read about in the news media), she explained that FOSTER felt that the dealings with the FBI and BILL KENNEDY had not been accurately reported. She explained that FOSTER was like mentor to BILL KENNEDY.

MARSHA SCOTT was interviewed on June 9, 1994 at the office of her attorney, STUART F. PIERSON, of DAVIS, WRIGHT, TREMAINE, 701 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 600, Washington, D.C. 20004, telephone 202-508-6623. Present during the interview, aside from SCOTT, was her attorney STEWART PIERSON and MARK STEIN of the Office of the Independent Counsel. Being acquainted with the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, SCOTT provided the following information:

SCOTT advised that in July 1993, her office was in the Old Executive Office Building and that she came to The White House on a daily basis to conduct business. She frequently went over to say "hi" to VINCE FOSTER, Jr. and normally she did it in the afternoon because mornings were very busy for her. She recalls that on July 19, 1993, she visited FOSTER but did not recall what time of day it was. It was most likely early afternoon but she is not sure. She would also frequently visit BILL CLINTON, NANCY HERNRAICH and others, sometimes even HILLARY CLINTON. But she doesn't remember if she saw any other individual on July 19.

She recalls FOSTER that day sitting behind his desk and the most notable thing about it was that he did not get up and greet her as he normally did. She said that when she entered the office usually he would stand up, she would kiss him on the cheek, get a hug and joke with him. She recalled that on July 19, he didn't get up and although she did not attach significance to it at the time, with hindsight, she realizes that that was something different. She said that she had a sense of detachment from him but it was nothing that caused her antenna to go up. She does not recall whether the door was opened or closed but explained that meetings in his office were private even if the door was open because of the physical configuration of the office. SCOTT explained that she stopped by because she wanted to ask him how he enjoyed the weekend. She knew that he had had a good weekend from having talked to somebody else (she couldn't recall who and wanted to ask him if he had had as much fun as others said that they had had. She commented that she is friends with the CARDOZOs and WEBB and SUSIE HUBBELL also with LISA and FOSTER children.

SCOTT explained that with regard to her recollection or lack of recollection as to the meeting that took place between her and FOSTER, she said that she hoped everybody would understand that that was an incredibly painful time and her way of dealing with matters such as that is to block it out. She remembers impressions, she does not remember specific conversations.

The overwhelming memory for her of FOSTER's death and the days before and after is that she was truly shocked. She believed that he committed suicide. In fact, she believed that was so from the time she talked with the Park Police on July 20, 1993. One of the reasons why she was so shocked that he would commit suicide is that FOSTER believed in the power of words and he loved being a lawyer and she along with others just couldn't believe that he would have taken his own life without having reached out to his friends.

She said that during the meeting on July 19, he did not appear distracted or otherwise distressed. She explained that FOSTER could be very focused when he was involved in something and she knew that she had interrupted his train of thought when she entered the room but he didn't give her an indication that she had come at a bad time, otherwise, she would have left. They did not, however, have a heart-to-heart talk. SCOTT said that FOSTER did not have heart-to-heart talks in his office or ever by her standards. FOSTER was mysterious and that made him intriguing.

SCOTT said it varied how often she would see FOSTER. It was sporadic depending upon what was going on at The White House, but she saw him frequently. She noticed changes in everybody from the Arkansas group. She said that everybody over time, during the six months, got tighter and tenser, with "the men getting skinner and the women getting fatter". She said that she personally didn't notice his weight loss. She put together a collection of photographs for LISA FOSTER after FOSTER's death and it was LISA who pointed out to her that FOSTER had lost weight. Most of her conversations with LISA FOSTER since July 1993 have been comprised of LISA's questioning as to why this could have happened and what could have triggered it.

With regard to the last thing that SCOTT heard him say, that is, "the staffing cuts are killing us", the context for that statement was that SCOTT asked FOSTER, "If I talk to him (meaning President CLINTON) before you do, what do you want me to tell him?" FOSTER's response was, "The staff cuts are killing us." SCOTT further explained that everybody serves at the pleasure of the President and by custom when the administrations change, anybody can be asked to stay or might be asked to leave.

With regard to the Travel Office matter, SCOTT advised that she does not recall specific conversations. She recalls knowing that FOSTER was particularly upset about the reprimand of BILL KENNEDY. He felt that BILL was "taking a fall" for something he hadn't done. She knows that she and VINCE talked about it, but she doesn't recall the conversation now. She also did not discuss the matter with LISA FOSTER. She said she doesn't remember ever talking about work items with LISA FOSTER and explained that she does not consider it appropriate and so keeps her conversation general. She also had the impression that FOSTER himself did not talk about work with LISA.

SCOTT advised that she has the sense that FOSTER had reached a personal dead end. It is her opinion that he would have reached it whether or not he had come to Washington, D.C. She opined that FOSTER lacked the ability to see options and on July 20, he felt that he had no other option but to commit suicide. His view of his responsibilities was very serious. He was accustomed to succeeding and to being able to affect closure in his work tasks. The White House involved work made up of endless loops without any resolution.

With regard to articles in The Wall Street Journal, she said that VINCE was shocked when the article on him appeared in the paper. They had wanted a picture of him and characterized their not getting it as stonewalling on The White House's part. That struck all of them in the Arkansas group as "dumb". She felt that FOSTER thought that the press was being absolutely ruthless. It seemed to him a personal, mean and vicious attack at a time when he was working extremely hard. FOSTER (and others in the Arkansas group) felt that they (meaning the press and possibly specifically The Wall Street Journal) would stay at it until they "took somebody out"--until they drove a wedge to separate the President from his Arkansas friends. In saying that FOSTER was upset, SCOTT does not know if he was angry upset (because she never saw him angry) but she knew that it weighed heavily on him and he was very offended.

SCOTT does not know if she and FOSTER discussed ZOE BAIRD or not. FOSTER did not feel as though The White House got credit for anything, but that The White House took a lot of criticism no matter what. She knows nothing about Whitewater or Madison Guaranty and nothing was ever discussed between her and FOSTER about these matters.

On the night of July 20, 1993, she went from LISA FOSTER's residence to the HUBBELL's residence back to the FOSTER's residence and then to The White House. There was so much moving back and forth because they were checking on children and notifying various people. She said she arrived at The White House sometime between 11:00 and 1:00 am and that we could check the logs if we needed to know specifically. She assumes that such things are monitored and a record is kept, but does not know this for a fact. She said that she parked in the West Wing parking area, went to The White House lobby and through the corridor under the Oval office and under the Rose Garden to the residence area. She said that BILL CLINTON had lost a best friend and explained that where she comes from when there is a death like that you gather in order to give support. It was important that they be there because HILLARY CLINTON was out of town and CHELSEY was not there, so people went to give BILL support.

She heard voices in the kitchen and knew that that was where everybody was. She remembers seeing MAC MCLARTY, DAVID GERGEN, VERNON JORDAN, The President and MICKEY CANTOR, HELEN DICKEY (a young girl who "babysits" CHELSEA) and her mother were also there. She doesn't remember if she saw BERNARD NUSSBAUM, MAGGIE WILLIAMS, or PATSY THOMASSON that night. She remarked that DAVID WATKINS office used to be there on the basement level and she may have seen PATSY THOMASSON there that night, she doesn't remember.

She said that she was probably crying on and off, but that she does not remember a guard seeing her and directing her to go someplace. She went no place in The White House other than through the residence to the kitchen area. She does not recall going anywhere near MAC MCLARTY's office until the following day and she does not remember how she left The White House that night.

With regard to what was talked about in the kitchen that evening, she remembers DAVID GERGEN talking about who should make the announcement of FOSTER's death and what kind of political tone should be taken. It was decided that MAC MCLARTY should make the announcement. Nobody suggested that there was any link to Whitewater. She said that people questioned whether or not it was a suicide because they couldn't believe that FOSTER would have committed suicide.

They discussed whether or not a note had been found. There was no note that anybody had found. They had asked Park Police and the Park Police had not found any note. There was probably a discussion as to whether or not FOSTER's office was searched for a note. WEBB HUBBELL maintained all along that the integrity of FOSTER's office should be protected. He said this to MARSHA and to everybody else who would listen. But SCOTT was not aware of whether or not the office was being sealed that very night. The first time she heard about any kind of note was the torn up note that STEPHEN NEUWIRTH found later in the briefcase. She heard about this later. She was not aware of anybody having been in FOSTER's office that night. She was not aware of anybody taking things out of FOSTER's office that night and she does not recall what she was wearing that night.

RICKI L. SEIDMAN, Assistant to the President, Director of Scheduling and Advance, The White House, Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 456-2823 was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. SEIDMAN was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Also present during the interview was DAVID OVERLOCK STEWART, Attorney for SEIDMAN from the law firm ROPES and GRAY, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 1200 South, Washington, D.C. 20004, telephone (202) 626-3900. SEIDMAN provided the following information:

From January 1993 through May or June 1993, she served as Deputy Assistant to the President and Deputy Director of Communications. From July 1993 through September 1993 her title was Assistant to the President, Counselor to the Chief of Staff (MCLARTY). She has held her present position as Assistant to the President, Director of Scheduling and Advance since November 1993. SEIDMAN had worked in the 88' DUKAKIS campaign and worked in the CLINTON campaign as manager of the "war room" handling "quick response". She received her law degree from the University of Georgia and previous employment included serving as Chief Investigator for the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and as Legal Director at the People for the American Way. SEIDMAN met the CLINTONs very briefly while at People for the American Way when she was active in education issues. She had met the CLINTONs through a college associate of theirs.

SEIDMAN first met VINCENT FOSTER during the transition. She was serving as Deputy Director of Communications out of offices in Little Rock, Arkansas. She recalled being with FOSTER at several meetings but did not recall the subject matter other than that it probably concerned the financial aspects of candidates being considered for the Administration.

VINCENT FOSTER handled the "official aspects" of the First Family's financial disclosures and tax returns. FOSTER interpreted ethics laws and government standards with respect to these matters. SEIDMAN'S association with FOSTER concerned a "broad range of things" but primarily concerned the "vetting" of nominees such as for the Supreme Court and the Attorney General positions. After the financial disclosures were completed by candidates, SEIDMAN would look at them and "predict" what the press focus would be. She worked with BETH NOLAN in the Counsel's office on such matters. She worked with FOSTER on the CLINTON disclosures. She doesn't remember anything being "very memorable" other than two issues. There was an investment in Mid-Life Investments of approximately $5,000 dollars each by VINCE FOSTER, HILLARY CLINTON and WEBB HUBBELL in the early 80's which had been "never closed down" and was a source of discussion. Secondly, she became involved in accusations concerning shorted health positions taken by HILLARY CLINTON in connection with Value Partners. SEIDMAN said there was nothing to either problem and nothing ever happened on either. She had meetings with FOSTER on these and other issues "as necessary".

SEIDMAN was asked about FOSTER's involvement with Whitewater. She said the only Whitewater issue she could recall was in April, 1993 in connection with the CLINTONs tax returns. The tax returns show that the CLINTONs had divested themselves of their interest in Whitewater. SEIDMAN's involvement was from a "communications perspective". The Whitewater issue had surfaced during the campaign, interest had then ended, and it was believed the tax returns would bring the Whitewater issue into the "public domain again". SEIDMAN said there was discussion regarding the "soundest way" to seek closure to the issue. The options considered were (1) declare a loss; (2) declare an even split; and (3) declare the CLINTONs received a $1000 dollar gain. SEIDMAN said she and FOSTER were discussing these options. She remembered attending meetings at WILLIAMS and CONNOLY on the issue. She was asked if WILLIAMS and CONNOLY were the CLINTONs attorneys at the time, and she answered she "didn't know the answer to that". She remembered the meetings as being "very dry and accountantish". She stated that FOSTER's involvement with Whitewater was a "totally routine issue". SEIDMAN knew FOSTER very well in a professional way and would often "cry on his shoulder". FOSTER was not a very emotional person, but SEIDMAN could tell if something was upsetting to him. She said Whitewater was not upsetting for FOSTER to any "visible degree". SEIDMAN had no knowledge that Whitewater was upsetting to FOSTER. SEIDMAN said Whitewater records were confused and not in the CLINTONs' possession and they had insufficient documentation from an IRS or "public scrutiny" perspective. Therefore, decisions were made "erring on the side of being excruciatingly honest".

SEIDMAN was shown a memorandum dated April 12, 1993 addressed to "RICKI" from "ANN" and was asked to explain this document. SEIDMAN said ANN was ANN WALKER who was Director of Research at The White House. She said it was a new administration which had no historical record of how to do "these things" referring to the three issues cited in the memorandum concerning tax filing, charitable contributions and Whitewater coverage. SEIDMAN said these were issues "we wanted to answer". The CLINTONs had made significant contributions to charity and the research concerned the history of a First Family doing this. SEIDMAN described the research as "routine" and not "unusual". She said they were looking at what questions might be raised. She did not consider it a large matter and was not a developing matter where FOSTER's interest kept expanding.

SEIDMAN noted no additional agitation with respect to VINCE FOSTER closer to the time of his death. She said FOSTER had been "agitated" by the Travel Office matter. FOSTER's concern was that people were "not sufficiently focused" to make sure that the Travel Office matter ended and did not continue to "dog the President". SEIDMAN recalled a major conversation with FOSTER on the Travel Office matter wherein he was emphatic that someone should handle this situation. He thought it was something that was "falling between the cracks." It became SEIDMAN's job to pass on or indicate his interest in addressing the matter. He did not articulate who, in particular, was not giving the Travel Office sufficient attention, but SEIDMAN theorized that it might be Counsel's office or White House senior leadership. In her opinion, FOSTER wasn't worried about a "dark underside" to the issue. FOSTER was concerned for further exposure of BILL KENNEDY of The White House Counsel's office and the matter continuing to be embarrassing to the CLINTONs. SEIDMAN said her attention at this time had been also focused on organizing a "boiler room operation" to pass the President's economic plan.

After the Travel Office report came out, SEIDMAN had a conversation with FOSTER wherein he expressed to her that he thought the report had been "unduly harsh" on BILL KENNEDY. FOSTER had thought that people working for the government were not making themselves public figures in this way. SEIDMAN explained that FOSTER was "a very sophisticated thinker" and he became like a "guppy plopped into a goldfish bowl". Her view was that FOSTER was overreacting to the Travel Office matter. Her discussion with FOSTER involved pointing out that the "reason the report had been done this way" would preclude a later broad congressional inquiry into the matter. There had been "no real malevolence", but rather mistakes made relative to the Travel Office firings. SEIDMAN added that FOSTER had been involved in the decision to bring an outside accounting firm in to review the matter. SEIDMAN believed VINCE FOSTER had committed suicide. FOSTER had become depressed. She could not comment on the causes of FOSTER's depression but knew that he was not happy with how Washington, D.C. worked and the way the CLINTONs were treated. SEIDMAN said that FOSTER was not upset by Whitewater. FOSTER never said anything to her about Whitewater. FOSTER's comment in the note that was found after his death concerning the FBI lying in their report to the Attorney General was probably made in relation to BILL KENNEDY. She said FOSTER "lacked perspective" on the issue.

SEIDMAN was shown a New York Times editorial dated Monday, April 5, 1993 entitled "At last, a Team for Justice" and asked to comment on this article. SEIDMAN said the issue involved when FOSTER referred this article to her and designated a copy for ANN WALKER was regarding the WEBB HUBBELL confirmation. HUBBELL had been the Chief Author of the Arkansas Ethics Statute. SEIDMAN had not been involved in the campaign at the time of the issue cited in the article being raised. The issue concerned exempting Governor CLINTON from coverage of a provision requiring the disclosure of potential conflicts of interest. SEIDMAN said this exemption had caused criticism. She said the "actual truth" was that the Governor had been "held to a higher standard" than contained in the Ethics Statute. The issue had been "totally miscast as a negative". SEIDMAN said the April 5 editorial was simply a matter of opinion. She said she had been involved in HUBBELL and the Attorney General's confirmation. SEIDMAN felt that the press was being unfair and the concern was they didn't want this to cloud HUBBELL's nomination. SEIDMAN said, in fact, this did not become an issue during the confirmation. She said that the higher standard to which the Governor was held was something that was verifiable but she did not have any additional information on it at this time. ANN WALKER had been included on the copycount for the article as WALKER was Research Director. WALKER was supervised by SEIDMAN.

On the evening of July 20, 1993, SEIDMAN was in The White House residence watching the President as he appeared live on the LARRY KING program. During the course of this broadcast, GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS and DEE DEE MYERS were called out of the room where they were viewing the program. SEIDMAN then went out to see "what was up". She was told that VINCE FOSTER had been found dead and then immediately afterward notified that it was thought to be a suicide. SEIDMAN described the situation as "totally tragic" and everyone's reaction as being "personal emotion". SEIDMAN said MACK MCLARTY had known VINCE FOSTER since they were 5 years old. Everyone present had a "great personal affection" for FOSTER. She said it was a tragedy, it was horrible, it was disbelief. No one had any inkling and everyone was "totally shocked".

SEIDMAN remained at The White House that evening, primarily to "hold off reporter phone calls". She said the President came out of the LARRY KING program at about 10:00 pm. All were in the downstairs of the residence and the President went upstairs to the residence and then went to LISA FOSTER's house. The others, including herself, went to MARK GEARAN's office. SEIDMAN said phone calls were made to notify others and discussion was held regarding when and how the news of FOSTER's death should be released. There was a period until about 11:30 pm where this news could not be released. SEIDMAN did not recall why.

SEIDMAN did not have a clear recollection of her movements that night. She remembered running into SYLVIA MATHEWS and GENE SPERLING that night. She remembered this because they had retrieved FOSTER's trash from his office. SYLVIA MATHEWS took the trash into the Deputy Chiefs of Staff's office (ROY NEAL). This office was part of the suite with the Chief of Staff MCLARTY, and therefore the door to this office had been open. SEIDMAN became involved in this "after the fact" that night discussing this with them. She was asked about her knowledge of burn bag material and answered that this was collected separately, but that she did not remember anything about the burn bag. She said everyone was "literally in shock".

SEIDMAN was asked if she had been asked by anyone to move documents from VINCENT FOSTER's office or secure FOSTER's office. She answered no.

SEIDMAN said that she "remembered vaguely" and thought that she took BERNARD NUSSBAUM home from The White House that night. She remembers he said he was going back upstairs to be sure the door to the Counsel's office had been locked and alarmed. She said they both left The White House some time around 12:30 or 1:00 am.

SEIDMAN spent the evening of July 20 at The White House in MARK GEARAN's office. She was also in the area near the Chief of Staff's office.

SEIDMAN had no firsthand knowledge regarding any discussions concerning documents from FOSTER's office or removal of any documents from FOSTER's office.

She did not recall calling people into The White House that night. She remembered the following people being at The White House that evening: MARK GEARAN, GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, DEE DEE MYERS, MAGGIE WILLIAMS, BERNARD NUSSBAUM, SYLVIA MATHEWS, MACK MCLARTY, and the President.

SEIDMAN was asked to characterize NUSSBAUM on the evening of July 20, 1993. SEIDMAN answered that NUSSBAUM was "crying, very upset, very emotionally attached to 'FOSTER". She said FOSTER's death had come as a total shock. She remembers NUSSBAUM recalling his last conversation with FOSTER. She said it had something to do with FOSTER coming into NUSSBAUM's office while NUSSBAUM was watching t.v.

SEIDMAN was asked if she had had any discussion with anyone else concerning her interview with the Office of the Independent Counsel. She answered no. She said she could not recall anything else which may be helpful concerning this matter.

DAVID SELDIN, Press Assistant at The White House Press Office from January 1993 through February 1994, was interviewed by telephone at his current place of employment working on the campaign for GLENN DENNING for Governor in Maryland, telephone (301) 277-5582. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview SELDIN provided the following information:

SELDIN advised that he found out about VINCE FOSTER, Jr.'s death on the morning of July 21, 1993 when he read it in the morning newspaper. He arrived at The White House Press Office approximately 7:30 to 8:00 am. He does not recall seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE anytime that morning. He also does not recall CRAIG LIVINGSTONE being anywhere around the Press Office that day.

SELDIN advised that he has a vague recollection that there was a question whether or not there was a need to send somebody from the Press Office out to the VINCE FOSTER residence, but he does not recall if somebody was ever sent. He speculated that either LORRAINE VOLES or DEE DEE MYERS, possibly DAVID LEVY or JEREMY GAINES might be able to provide information. He also speculated that perhaps "an advance person" may have been sent. He said that occasionally CRAIG LIVINGSTONE did advance type work. It usually was when there was some issue of security access to events where there was a security concern.

SELDIN advised that he has spoken with CRAIG LIVINGSTONE's attorney about his recall of the events.

As part of the interview SELDIN provided the following personal information:

James J. Shea, Jr., Master Patrol Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Officer Shea was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

His office address is 1310 L Street, NW and he can be reached at telephone number 202-395-2020. He has been employed by the USSS for 22 years and at The White House compound for the last 11 years. As of the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death (July 20, 1993), he was regularly assigned to USSS post "E-1" which allows entry into the ground floor of The White House west wing off of West Executive Avenue.

Officer Shea stated that he did not know Vincent Foster either personally or professionally and can only recall seeing him once, just after President Clinton's inauguration. Shea stated that on July 20, 1993, he was assigned to work the 10:30 pm - 7:00 am shift on post E-1. He explained that this shift actually began at 10:30 pm on 7/19/93 and ended at 7:00 am on 7/20/93. He came back on duty at post E-1 at approximately 10:45 pm on the evening of 7/20/93 and was on duty at post E-1 until approximately 7:00 am the next day, 7/21/93. Officer Shea stated that he recalls learning that Vincent Foster had been found dead, however he does not recall by which means or exactly when he learned this.

Officer Shea stated that he recalls seeing a secretary whose name he cannot remember, and a small group of other women by his post during the late evening hours of July 20. He said that he overheard several of these women crying and discussing Foster's suicide. He stated that while he cannot recall the specifics of their conversation, he believes he learned that one of the women was Vincent Foster's secretary. He said that he recalls seeing that woman and some other secretarial employees leaving the west wing of The White House through post E-1 at approximately 12 midnight on the evening of July 20. Shea, while recounting this information and other points that he made during the interview, often said that he was having considerable trouble recalling dates, times, and other specific details regarding his observations of events that happened on July 20 and July 21, 1993. For example, he was asked if he recalled seeing Bernard Nussbaum, Maggie Williams, and/or Patsy Thomasson either enter or exit the west wing through post E-1 on July 20 or July 21 during his shift. He stated that while he can recall seeing each of these individuals enter and leave The White House on several occasions he cannot be sure if he saw any of them specifically on July 20 or July 21.

Officer Shea stated that he does not know a White House staff member by the name of Craig Livingstone and therefore could not say if Mr. Livingstone entered or exited The White House during his shifts of July 20 or July 21. He advised that while he believes he has heard of Mr. Livingstone, he does not know who he is. Officer Shea advised that he can not recall if any staffer brought a non-staff member into The White House west wing during the early morning of July 20 or July 21.

James J. Shea, Jr., Master Patrol Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Officer Shea, having been previously advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview provided the following information:

He came on duty at post E-1 at approximately 10:45 pm on the evening of 7/20/93 and was on duty at post E-1 until approximately 7:00 am the next day, 7/21/93. Officer Shea stated that he is acquainted with USSS Officer Henry O'Neill, who also works the "midnight" shift in The White House west wing. He said that he is aware that O'Neill's duties include escorting a GSA cleaning crew into various alarmed areas of the west wing where they clean and pick up non-confidential trash on a daily basis. He said that he is also aware that O'Neill's duties include his personally picking up the "burn bag" trash from each west wing office. He said that he recalled that O'Neill routinely starts his nightly rounds on the second floor of the west wing and then proceeds to the first floor following the cleaning of all second floor offices. He said that both he and O'Neill had their "lunch break" at approximately 1:00 am during their shift and that he and O'Neill would, from time to time, have lunch and/or get together to talk during their break. Shea said however, that he can not recall if he and O'Neill talked during his 7/20-21/93 shift. In response to a specific question, he said that he does not recall O'Neill talking to him about seeing White House staffers in the Nussbaum/Foster 2nd floor suite or him (O'Neill) deciding to not pick up the trash in that suite or have it cleaned on July 20, 1993.

Officer Shea stated that there is a couch located in the hallway near his USSS west wing ground floor post E-1 desk. He recalls a small group of women sitting on or standing near that couch during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993 discussing Vincent Foster's death. While he does not know the identity of any of the three women he recalls seeing there, he does recall that one of them was a black female, one of them was a white middle-aged female and the third was a white female who was younger than the other. He could not offer any better description of these three women. He said however, that he recalled seeing the younger of the two white females go down the hallway and enter an office on the ground floor of the west wing. While he does not know who occupied that office, he is certain that it is a suite of offices occupied by White House staffers who handle "administrative matters" for the Clinton administration.

Previous efforts to interview MRS. ANNETTE SHELBY, 3025 Cambridge Place, Washington, D.C., telephone number (202) 965-3236, were unsuccessful. MRS. SHELBY and her husband, U.S. Senator RICHARD SHELBY were the FOSTERS' next door neighbors in July of 1993.

On May 31, 1994, Senator SHELBY's office contacted Special Agent COLOMBELL, informing him that MRS. SHELBY was on vacation and could be reached at her residence telephone in Alabama. MRS. SHELBY was contacted and agreed to a telephone interview, at which time she provided the following information:

MRS. SHELBY stated that she is not well acquainted with the FOSTERS, adding that she may have spoken to MRS. FOSTER on a few occasions in passing but to the best of her recollection, has never been in the FOSTER residence. She stated that as best she recalls, she never met VINCENT FOSTER. She pointed out that she is a Professor in the Business School at Georgetown University and in the Spring and early Summer of 1993, she was away from the Washington, D.C. area for several months in connection with her employment. She was unable to provide any information as to whether MR. FOSTER may have returned to his residence on the afternoon of July 20, 1993. She stated that on that particular evening, she and her husband did hear someone scream, adding that she later learned that it was MRS. FOSTER who screamed upon being informed by the police that her husband had been found dead. MRS. SHELBY stated that it was not until the next day that she learned of FOSTER's death, adding that she did go over to the residence and offer her help and as best she recalls, she did bring some food to the family. MRS. SHELBY stated that as best she recalls, the FOSTER family left the Washington, D.C. area fairly quickly after MR. FOSTER's death. She stated that on one occasion, she did try to call MRS. FOSTER to console her and offer her assistance in any manner. She stated that she never did speak to MRS. FOSTER because at the time, the family was not accepting telephone calls.

On June 9, 1994, Senator RICHARD C. SHELBY, United States Senator, Washington, D.C., telephonically contacted Special Agent WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL at the Office of Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. Special Agent COLOMBELL had previously attempted to reach Senator SHELBY at his office.

Special Agent COLOMBELL informed Senator SHELBY that the Office of Independent Counsel had received information regarding a story circulating on Capitol Hill to the effect that Senator SHELBY had encountered President CLINTON on the sidewalk in front of the VINCE FOSTER residence, Cambridge Place, Georgetown, Washington, D.C. on the evening of July 21, 1993, the evening following VINCE FOSTER's death. The President was reportedly without any U.S. Secret Service protection and remarked to Senator SHELBY that he had stopped by to chat with the Senator.

Senator SHELBY was asked if he could comment on or clarify this rumor and stated that he had no problem doing so. Because of his busy schedule, Senator SHELBY provided the following information telephonically. He stated that on the evening of July 21, 1993, at approximately 6:00 p.m., he and his wife visited VINCE FOSTER's sister, SHEILA ANTHONY and her husband at their residence in Washington, D.C. to pay their condolences. He stated that he returned to his residence which is next door to the FOSTER residence on Cambridge Place at approximately 7:30 p.m. Senator SHELBY stated that while attempting to park, he was approached by U.S. Secret Service personnel who instructed him that he would have to park down the street from his residence. Senator SHELBY stated that at approximately 8:30 p.m., he responded to a knock on his front door and found President CLINTON standing there, by himself, without any visible Secret Service protection. Senator SHELBY pointed out that he was already aware of extensive Secret Service presence in the neighborhood because of his 7:30 p.m. encounter.

Senator SHELBY stated that he invited the President in and that he and President CLINTON sat and chatted for approximately one hour on a number of topics, including the tragic death of VINCE FOSTER and other unrelated items.

Senator SHELBY advised that after approximately one hour, a female White House staffer came to his front door asking to see the President and at that time the President left. Senator SHELBY stated that he could not state whether President CLINTON had been at or returned to the FOSTER residence on that evening, adding that he assumed he had.

Special Agent COLOMBELL informed Senator SHELBY that the Independent Counsel is also investigating the reasons why VINCE FOSTER might have committed suicide, specifically if there was any relationship to his suicide and any involvement with Whitewater matters. Senator SHELBY was asked if he had any information relative to Mr. FOSTER's state of mind. Senator SHELBY responded that he did not have such information, concluding that he would not be qualified to comment regarding the reasons that might have triggered the tragic death of VINCENT FOSTER.

STEPHEN B. SILVERMAN, Special Assistant to the President for Cabinet Affairs, was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Mr. SILVERMAN was advised as to the official identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

Prior to his coming to work at The White House in January, 1993, he had been employed as an attorney in New York City. He joined the CLINTON Presidential election campaign and worked in Little Rock, Arkansas. He later worked as AL GORE's Deputy Press Secretary throughout the remainder of the campaign. After BILL CLINTON's election as President, he (SILVERMAN) moved to Washington, D.C. where he, as part of a small group of volunteers, worked as a "vetting team" reviewing the qualifications and backgrounds of potential Presidential appointees. He first met VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in Washington in January, 1993, shortly after BILL CLINTON's inauguration while he (SILVERMAN) continued to work on the "vetting team". He did not have very much interaction with FOSTER and "hardly knew him at all". He said that although he attended several large meetings where FOSTER was present, most of his contacts with FOSTER were limited to them passing one another in a hallway and exchanging greetings. He said that he recalled last seeing VINCENT FOSTER at a large meeting of White House staff "Deputies" on July 19, 1993. He did not recall the topic of this meeting nor did he recall talking with FOSTER at this meeting.

In early February, 1993, he was appointed to his current position and was subsequently designated Deputy Secretary to the Cabinet by his immediate superior, CHRISTINE VARNEY who is the Secretary to the Cabinet. He then moved into his current office space, Room 111 1/2, Old Executive Office Building.

Mr. SILVERMAN said that he arrived at work on July 20, 1993 at approximately 7:30-8:30 am and while he cannot recall what time he left The White House that night he did recall that he did not stay late. Mr. SILVERMAN said that July 20, 1993 was not a particularly eventful day for him at work. He recalls watching television with his wife that evening at their home prior to going to bed. He said that he recalls this because he remembers watching President BILL CLINTON being interviewed by LARRY KING on the Cable News Network that evening. He said that he was awakened on July 21, 1993 by a telephone call at approximately 7:00 am. GARY GINSBURG, a White House co-worker and friend with whom he had previously worked on the "vetting team" telephoned him to advise him of VINCENT FOSTER, JR.'s apparent suicide. SILVERMAN said that this was the first he had heard of this and he was "totally shocked". He said that he was given no instructions by GINSBURG and no requests were made of him during this telephone call. He said that he arrived at work on July 21 at approximately 8:25 am and began his regular duties. SILVERMAN said that he was not at The White House nor was he at the FOSTER residence during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993 or during the early morning hours of July 21, 1993. He said that no one asked him to remove any documents from The White House during that time frame and he did not remove any items or documents from The White House during that period. He further advised that he knows of no one having done so or being asked to do so. Mr. SILVERMAN said that he knew of no additional information that he could provide that could possibly help with this investigation.

OFFICER PETER SIMONELLO, Evidence Officer, U.S. Park Police (USPP), 1100 Ohio Drive, S.W., Washington, D.C. 20242, advised Special Agents WILLIAM E. COLOMBELL and WILLIAM T. GUYTON that he had reviewed Evidence Control files regarding the VINCENT FOSTER death investigation and was able to locate only one handwriting sample containing the known handwriting of VINCENT FOSTER. He stated that this known handwriting sample of FOSTER was provided to the USPP on July 28, 1993 by the FOSTER family attorney, JAMES HAMILTON. OFFICER SIMONELLO advised that the known handwriting sample consisted of a letter signed by VINCENT W. FOSTER, addressed to the American Exploration Company, dated June 18, 1993.

OFFICER SIMONELLO stated that on July 29, 1993, in his presence, SGT. LARRY LOCKHART, Handwriting Expert, U.S. Capitol Police, examined the above known handwriting sample of VINCENT FOSTER with the questioned document (torn note found in FOSTER's briefcase). SGT. LOCKHART concluded that the known and questioned documents were completed by the same writer, specifically, MR. VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.

John S. Skyles, Officer, Uniform Division, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW. Officer Skyles was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

His office is located at 1310 L Street NW and his telephone number is 202-395-2020. He has been employed by USSS for 19 years, the last 6 of which have been at The White House compound. He is normally assigned to USSS guard post "E-4" (west lobby) which is located at the first floor front entrance to the west wing of The White House. He was so employed on July 20, 1993, the day of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death.

Officer Skyles stated that he first learned of Vincent Foster's death through a late evening television news broadcast on July 20, 1993. He stated that he had not known Vincent Foster either professionally or personally but that he knew Foster to be a White House staffer, knew his title, and easily recognized him when he saw him on The White House compound. He explained that he easily recognized Foster because he had seen him enter and exit The White House west wing on numerous occasions when he (Skyles) was on duty.

On July 20, 1993, Officer Skyles worked the 6:30 am through 3:00 pm shift at post E-4. He described this as a rather routine day about which he could recall noticing nothing out of the ordinary. He advised that numerous White House staffers came and went through post E-4 on July 20 but that he could recall few specifics about these individuals. He advised, however, when he learned of Vincent Foster's death late on the evening of July 20, he remembered that he had seen Foster leaving the west wing of The White House through entrance E-4 earlier that day. Skyles said that he was approximately two thirds of the way through his shift on July 20 when he saw Foster leaving The White House. He said that while he cannot recall exactly when he saw Foster, he does distinctly recall that it was "about lunchtime". He said that as Foster walked pass the guard desk at entrance E-4 he (Skyles) asked Foster, "How are you doing sir"? He said that Foster replied, "Hello-fine" and nodded his head to Skyles with what Skyles remembers as a "half smile". Officer Skyles said that he remembers this encounter in detail because when he heard that Foster had died via suicide he distinctly recalled that Foster did not appear to be at all depressed or preoccupied as he walked by. He said that he was therefore quite surprised to hear that Foster had committed suicide. Officer Skyles said, to the best of his recollection, that Foster was wearing a gray suit when he saw him on July 20. He said that he could not recall if Foster was wearing his suit jacket or not and that he does not recall Foster carrying anything in his hands such as a briefcase. Officer Skyles stated that this was the last time that he saw Vincent Foster.

Officer Skyles said that he worked the 6:30 am to 3:00 pm shift on post E-4 on July 21, 1993. He said that this was a rather routine, ordinary shift except that he overheard parts of several conversations between White House staff members that day about Vincent Foster's death, their grief, and their disbelief that he could be dead. He said that he can not recall, however, any specifics as to who was engaged in these conversations or exactly what was being said.

JEANNE LYNNE SLADE (DOB: [redacted], was reinterviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel - Whitewater. SLADE was interviewed in the presence of Associate Independent Counsel BRETT KAVANAUGH. SLADE was advised of the identities of the interviewing agent and attorney. SLADE confirmed that her home and work telephone numbers and addresses are the same as from her previous interview. Additionally, SLADE provided the following contact telephone number for a temporary residence where she will be staying while her home is being built; (703) 506-9435.

SLADE was previously interviewed on April 11, 1994. SLADE stated that she had three previous contacts with FBI agents regarding this case; once on the phone then twice at her office. Additionally, SLADE stated that she was contacted by the U.S. Park Police the week after the incident.

SLADE confirmed all of the statements in her previous interview, with the following additions:

SLADE stated that she left work at approximately 5:15 pm - 5:30 p.m. SLADE recalled that she was to be at a swimming meet at 6:00 p.m.

SLADE stated that she has a clock located on the dashboard of her car, which she looked at constantly during her drive from work because she did not want to be late for the swim meet.

SLADE stated that she believes that her car broke down near the entrance to Fort Marcy Park at approximately 5:30 p.m. - 5:45 p.m.

SLADE stated that she was driving a dark blue Mercedes 300E with a camel interior. SLADE's vehicle would not accelerate; she coasted into the entrance area of the park.

SLADE was shown an aerial photograph of the Fort Marcy Park area. SLADE identified her exact location; where the vehicle coasted to a stop inside of the park. SLADE pointed to a spot on the photograph just past a grass median area on the right side of the Fort Marcy Park road.

SLADE stated that there was a second car which was parked inside the entrance area. SLADE described this car as a newer model, white, four door, medium sized car. SLADE had no further descriptive information regarding this vehicle. SLADE walked past the vehicle and observed the driver. SLADE described the driver as a white male, early 40's, dark hair, medium build, and moderately attractive. SLADE walked down the road to the Fort Marcy parking area looking for a phone. SLADE stated that she did not walk all the way into the parking lot. SLADE observed a trail at the beginning of the lot on the left. SLADE could not locate a telephone, and subsequently turned and walked back to her vehicle. While she was in the parking lot, SLADE observed two cars parked near the trail entrance at the beginning of the parking lot. One of the vehicles was described as a goldish/tan/bronze, medium size car; the other vehicle was described as a dark, blue, older car. SLADE stated there were possibly a few more vehicles further in the lot, however, she can not be sure. SLADE stated that she did not see the license plates on either of these two vehicles. SLADE thinks that both of the vehicles were pulled front end first into their parking spots. SLADE did not see any police or emergency vehicles in the parking lot. SLADE was shown a photograph of the rear of VINCENT W. FOSTER's vehicle. SLADE stated that the car in the photo looks like one of the cars she observed in the Fort Marcy parking lot; the vehicle appears to be the same size and type of car. However, SLADE stated that she can not be positive.

As SLADE was walking back towards her vehicle, the individual she had initially passed in the white car asked her if she wanted a ride anywhere. SLADE declined the offer.

SLADE made sure her car was locked, and then walked up the George Washington Parkway to an Exxon station located at the intersection of Chain Bridge Road. SLADE telephoned her husband from the Exxon station.

SLADE does not have any recollection of seeing a white van anywhere near the Fort Marcy Park area.

SLADE clearly recalls hearing emergency vehicles (sirens) as she was walking towards the Exxon station. SLADE stated that she heard the sirens approximately half way to the Exxon station.

SLADE's husband came and picked her up from the Exxon station and subsequently called a towing service from his restaurant to retrieve SLADE's vehicle. However, due to the U.S. Park Police presence at the park, the towing service could not get her car until the following day.

Mrs. Jeanne Lynne Slade was interviewed at her place of employment, American College of Emergency Physicians, 900 17th Street, N.W., Suite 1250, Washington, D.C. 20006. She was advised of the identity of FBI Agent William E. Colombell and informed that he wished to speak to her concerning an ongoing investigation into the death of Vincent Foster on July 20, 1993. Mrs. Slade advised that several days after the events of July 20, 1993, she was contacted by telephone by an individual who identified himself as a Park Police Officer; adding that she answered his questions and provided whatever information she had.

Mrs. Slade advised that on the day in question, she left her office at approximately 5:15 p.m. and took her usual route home, proceeding North on the George Washington Parkway. She advised that as she approached Fort Marcy Park, the gas pedal "stopped working" and her car would not accelerate. She stated that she started to coast, coasting as far as she could and ending up approximately 50-60 feet into the entrance ramp leading into Fort Marcy Park. She stated that she was driving her 1987 Mercedes 300E, color dark blue. She advised that she put the emergency flashers on and started walking towards the Fort Marcy parking lot, hoping that there would be a phone located in that area. She stated that another car, occupied by a white male, was also parked off to the right on the entrance ramp leading into the Fort Marcy parking lot. She advised that she had to walk by this vehicle as she approached the parking lot and noticed that the occupant appeared to be looking at some papers or possibly a map.

Mrs. Slade advised that as she walked past this individual, he started his car and then pulled up next to her, adding that they had still not reached the parking lot area. She said this individual inquired if she needed a ride and she declined; she stated that he asked a second time if he could help or give her a ride and she again remarked no, that she was just trying to find a telephone. As best she recalls, this individual proceeded up into the parking lot, turned around, and then drove off in the direction of the GW Parkway. She described the individual who offered to give her a ride as a white male, dark hair, thick, well-groomed, summer-type shirt on, possibly plaid color, age 38-42, medium build. She described his vehicle as a late model vehicle, 4-door, color white, possibly a Honda. She was unable to recall any other details.

Mrs. Slade stated that she is quite sure that it was somewhere in the vicinity of 5:45-6:15 p.m. when her car broke down and she pulled into Fort Marcy Park. Mrs. Slade advised that she approached the front area of the parking lot and was unable to locate a phone; she recalls some type of park sign that appeared next to the entrance to a trail leading up into the park. Mrs. Slade advised that at least two cars were in the parking lot and that they were both parked fairly close to one another, not necessarily side by side but within a few spaces of one another. Her recollection was that these cars were parked more or less in front of her as she walked into the lot and were situated in the beginning of the lot, not towards the back of the lot. She stated that she was unable to comment as to whether there were any additional cars located towards the rear of the lot. She stated that she was quite sure that there was no one present in the cars, nor did she observe anyone else in the parking lot area. The only thing that she can recall about these two cars was that one was dark blue and the second was light gray or silver in color. Mrs. Slade stated that she saw no one else, nor did she see any other cars coming into or out of the lot. Mrs. Slade advised that she then walked back to the George Washington Parkway shoulder and proceeded to walk North on the Parkway to the McLean/Chain Bridge exit, where she sought assistance at an Exxon station located on Chain Bridge Road.

Mrs. Slade stated that she did not see any vehicle resembling a white van in the vicinity of the Fort Marcy parking area. She also stated that she did not hear any loud noises or possible gunshots while she was in the Fort Marcy parking lot area.

Mrs. Slade advised that as she was walking North on the GW Parkway, another white male stopped to assist her and she refused. She also recalled that while walking North, she observed several emergency vehicles with sirens sounding heading South on the GW Parkway. Mrs. Slade concluded the interview by providing the following background information:

JONATHAN SLEVIN of the Intelligent Vehicle Highway Society of America (IVHSA) 400 Virginia Avenue, SW, Suite 800, WDC, telephone number 202-484-2893, was telephonically interviewed regarding a visit he made to the residence of GEORGE O. GONZALEZ, JR. on July 17, 1994. GONZALEZ, of the Fairfax County Virginia Emergency Medical Service (EMS) resides at 2007 Storm Drive, Falls Church, Virginia. After being apprised of the purpose of the interview and the identity of the interviewing Agent, SLEVIN thereafter provided the following information:

SLEVIN advised that he was asked by a friend, who is a newspaper reporter, to deliver a copy of a report written by the reporter to GONZALEZ at his residence. SLEVIN arrived at the GONZALEZ residence and met with MARIANNE GONZALEZ and GEORGE GONZALEZ, SR. SLEVIN informed MARIANNE GONZALEZ and her father-in-law that he had a friend who was releasing a report that suggested GONZALEZ, Jr. changed the location of the body of VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in his testimony to the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC). SLEVIN advised MARIANNE GONZALEZ and her father-in-law that New York Post reporter CHRIS RUDDY suggested that if GONZALEZ was not telling the truth, other people would tell the truth in upcoming congressional hearings. According to SLEVIN, RUDDY wanted to get across that some people who testify on Capitol Hill based on inconsistencies are in danger of perjuring themselves in a congressional hearing. SLEVIN was only delivering on behalf of RUDDY, well intentioned advice.

When SLEVIN was initially asked by RUDDY to deliver a copy of the report and the aforementioned advice, he additionally declined. SLEVIN finally relented and approached GONZALEZ as a favor to his friend RUDDY. SLEVIN was aware that RUDDY had been pursuing events surrounding the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. SLEVIN emphatically denied that any threat was made against GONZALEZ' life.

In the course of the interview, SLEVIN was asked if he was recording the conversation between the interviewing Agent and

CLIFFORD M. SLOAN was interviewed in a conference room at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. Also present during the interview were SLOAN's attorneys, PETER J. ROMATOWSKI and STEVE BYERS, of the law firm of CROWELL & MORING, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20004-2595, telephone number (202) 624-2745. Participating in the interview from the OIC were Associate Counsels MARK STEIN and CARL STICH. After being advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, SLOAN provided the following information:

SLOAN was interviewed for his current position as Associate White House Counsel in April 1993. SLOAN was interviewed for the position by White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM and Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr., and he began working at the White House at the end of May 1993. SLOAN's official starting date in the White House Counsel's Office was June 14, 1993.

WALTER DELLINGER had previously functioned as the expert on constitutional law within the White House Counsel's Office until he left to take a position in the United States Department of Justice (DOJ). People at the White House suggested to SLOAN that he make inquiries about replacing DELLINGER. SLOAN had previous experience working for a Chicago law firm, BROWN & PLATT, handling appellate matters. SLOAN had also served for a period of time in the Office of the Solicitor General handling issues pertaining to the separation of powers. Prior to that time, SLOAN worked for Independent Counsel LAWRENCE E. WALSH in the investigation of the Iran-Contra matter from January 1987 to December 1988. SLOAN has also clerked for Supreme Court Justice JOHN PAUL STEVENS.

SLOAN's first assignment in the White House Counsel's Office was to serve in a liaison function regarding the White House Travel Office investigation.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

SLOAN was slightly aware of Whitewater as an issue in early 1992. SLOAN did not become more aware of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan (MGSL) until he read a letter from Arkansas Senator DALE BUMPERS dated either March 31 or April 1, 1993. SLOAN recalls that Senator BUMPERS had complained about overly aggressive enforcement actions by the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC). SLOAN recalls drafting a bland or "vanilla" response to Senator BUMPERS. SLOAN spoke to Deputy White House Counsel JOEL KLEIN last week and saw a letter, dated July 1993, from NUSSBAUM to Senator BUMPERS. Until he saw the letter, SLOAN had not associated the letter from Senator BUMPERS and the response from NUSSBAUM as both being related to MGSL.

During September 1993, SLOAN was working at the White House on matters related to the siege involving the Branch Davidians in a complex near Waco, Texas. Two reviews were being conducted regarding the activities of federal law enforcement agencies during the incident near Waco. The reviews were being conducted by two distinct groups, one at the Department of the Treasury (Treasury) and one at DOJ. SLOAN did not have any contact with Treasury, but he had rather frequent liaison contacts with the DOJ investigators as they sought to interview people at the White House in order to prepare their report on the Waco incident. On approximately September 28, 1993, NUSSBAUM told SLOAN that several Treasury investigators would be conducting interviews at the White House.

On September 29, 1993, a meeting was held at the White House regarding the issuance of the Treasury report on the Waco incident. The meeting was attended by RONALD NOBLE, Assistant Secretary for Enforcement at Treasury; JOSH STEINER, Special Assistant at Treasury; JACK DeVORE, Press Secretary to Treasury Secretary LLOYD BENTSEN; JEAN HANSON, General Counsel at Treasury; NUSSBAUM; and SLOAN. As SLOAN was leaving the Waco meeting, he observed NUSSBAUM and HANSON off to the side talking in NUSSBAUM's office. SLOAN waited outside as they conversed. After a wait of less than five minutes, NUSSBAUM called SLOAN into his office and said that he wanted SLOAN to hear something. HANSON then stated that there might be eight or nine criminal referrals forthcoming which would probably be a source of media interest because President BILL CLINTON and First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON were mentioned in the referrals. The CLINTONs were mentioned as witnesses or potential witnesses, and the CLINTON gubernatorial campaign of 1984 was mentioned as a subject or possible subject.

When asked by the interviewers whether HANSON actually used the word "subject," SLOAN replied that he only has an impression that HANSON used the word "subject," and he is not certain that she actually used the word. SLOAN stated that his impression may have been influenced by subsequent telephone conversations.

SLOAN then went on to advise the interviewers the following:

During the meeting in NUSSBAUM's office, HANSON said that ROGER ALTMAN may have sent some materials to NUSSBAUM regarding this matter. NUSSBAUM responded that he did not recall receiving them.

SLOAN did not form an impression whether or not HANSON had actually read the referrals. SLOAN has subsequently found notes which refer to several telephone calls which were made by HANSON to SLOAN.

During the meeting on September 29, 1993, HANSON did not mention how she had become aware of the referrals. SLOAN's notes from September 30, 1993 indicate that HANSON had learned of the referrals from BILL ROELLE of the RTC.

After HANSON departed NUSSBAUM's office on September 29, 1993, SLOAN remained and spoke with NUSSBAUM about the Waco matter. NUSSBAUM said that he was going to pass on the information he had received from HANSON to BRUCE LINDSEY. Before HANSON had left the meeting, NUSSBAUM told her to call SLOAN if something came up. SLOAN believes he was called into the meeting with NUSSBAUM and HANSON because NUSSBAUM's general style was to have someone else from the staff with him during meetings. SLOAN does recall that HANSON said that there had been referrals. There was no discussion about HANSON attempting to find out more details about the referrals or following up on anything. The only part of the conversation which related to any type of follow-up occurred when NUSSBAUM said that he had not received the materials from ALTMAN. This comment suggested the need to determine what had happened to the materials from ALTMAN. SLOAN left the meeting with no specific assignment other than to act as a point of contact for HANSON.

On March 11, 1994, which was the day after the date for compliance with the subpoenas which had been issued through the OIC, SLOAN was in his basement going through notes which had been stored there as the basement was being finished. SLOAN found notes which were responsive to the subpoenas and which he had neglected to turn in. SLOAN found these notes stored in a black binder. SLOAN brought the notes in to his office at 8:30 and showed them to JOEL KLEIN. SLOAN's discovery of a portion of a phone bill was part of another issue and occurred at another time.

On September 30, 1993, HANSON called SLOAN and advised him that she had been wrong when she had mentioned ALTMAN sending materials to NUSSBAUM. HANSON stated that ALTMAN had not sent any such information to NUSSBAUM. HANSON mentioned to SLOAN an article written by JEFF GERTH which had been published in the New York Times in March 1992.

At this point in the interview, SLOAN began reading from his original notes regarding the call from HANSON.

SLOAN believes that SUE SCHMIDT, a reporter for the Washington Post, was alleging at that time that vital information relating to the referrals was suppressed. SLOAN has no recollection that HANSON had actually spoken with SCHMIDT. SLOAN does not have an independent recollection whether HANSON was speaking for herself or was simply relating what SCHMIDT had said to her. SLOAN was in his office when he received this telephone call from HANSON. HANSON and SLOAN had missed each other a number of times when they returned calls to each other. Due to the proximity in time, SLOAN inferred that HANSON's calls to him pertained to the issue of the criminal referrals. SLOAN wanted fellow Associate White House Counsel NEIL EGGLESTON to participate in a conference call with HANSON, and EGGLESTON did participate in at least one of the calls between HANSON and SLOAN. EGGLESTON had prior law enforcement experience and normally would have been more involved in these matters while SLOAN would deal with constitutional issues.

During June and July 1993, SLOAN had been in contact with HANSON to coordinate a simultaneous investigation of the White House Travel Office by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

SLOAN asked EGGLESTON if it was all right for him to have conversations with anyone from Treasury about the forthcoming referrals. EGGLESTON advised SLOAN that he thought such contact would be all right. The contacts appeared to be appropriate in the context of SLOAN's official responsibilities since there might be press inquiries about the referrals. Further, the referrals were not a matter before a grand jury. EGGLESTON and SLOAN looked at the RTC statute and found no statutory or regulatory prohibition against such contacts. Furthermore, SLOAN thought that HANSON, as Treasury General Counsel, would know of any legal considerations which would prohibit such contacts. Both EGGLESTON and SLOAN conducted legal research about the propriety of the contacts, but they did not separate their analysis of the statutes from their analysis of the regulations. SLOAN told NUSSBAUM of the results of their legal research and NUSSBAUM agreed with their analysis. The possibility of press inquiries made the ability to respond to these queries an official responsibility of the White House Counsel's Office. LINDSEY and Director of Communications MARK GEARAN had come to NUSSBAUM and told him they were already receiving press inquiries, especially from JEFF GERTH.

HANSON was calling SLOAN regarding specific press inquiries. SLOAN cannot tell whether HANSON was calling with independent knowledge or was passing along what she had learned from SUE SCHMIDT.

SLOAN told NUSSBAUM about HANSON's call, and NUSSBAUM told SLOAN to brief LINDSEY about it. SLOAN does not recall how he conveyed to NUSSBAUM the information from the call from HANSON. SLOAN's largest impression is that HANSON's call related to press inquiries.

SLOAN spoke to LINDSEY several times. On at least one of these occasions, EGGLESTON was with SLOAN. SLOAN tried to relate to LINDSEY the substance of the calls from HANSON. LINDSEY was fairly knowledgeable about the press inquiries, the details of the issues, and the names of the reporters covering the story. After the first call from HANSON, EGGLESTON was "in the loop," either from participating in the conversation or from being briefed by SLOAN. LINDSEY did not tell SLOAN that he would do anything.

At this point in the interview, SLOAN reviewed one of his original notes from October 7, 1993.

At that time, SLOAN and HANSON had been placing and returning calls to each other in unsuccessful efforts to reach each other. On one particular call, EGGLESTON was on a telephone extension as SLOAN spoke with HANSON. SLOAN recalls HANSON saying that one of the RTC investigators had thrown SUE SCHMIDT out of the investigator's home. HANSON did not name the RTC investigator to SLOAN. HANSON then mentioned four questions which had been asked by SCHMIDT rather than GERTH. SLOAN does not know how HANSON came up with these four questions, but he had the impression that these questions came up through the RTC Public Affairs Office. The first question concerned International Paper Realty. SLOAN later learned from LINDSEY that in October 1986 International Paper sold a piece of property which became part of the Whitewater development. The second question concerned SETH WARD, who was the father-in-law of Associate Attorney General WEBSTER HUBBELL. The third question pertained to knowledge that three senior partners in the Rose Law Firm were angry at a fourth individual because he made too much money. The fourth question was whether VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. was involved in any of these issues. SLOAN learned that some reporter had interviewed JIM McDOUGAL the day before.

SUE SCHMIDT had spoken to STEVE KATSANOS, a Public Affairs official at the RTC. An RTC Early Bird noted that the Washington Post and the Associated Press were pursuing undisclosed links between the members of the Rose Law Firm. SLOAN read that there were alleged to be conflicts of interest involving the Rose Law Firm, and internal RTC sources suggested that multiple referrals to the Justice Department linked the Rose Law Firm to matters under investigation.

SLOAN's notation regarding "no contempt" was a reference to gays in the military and a possible contempt citation being issued to the Secretary of Defense.

Regarding the conversation with HANSON on September 30, 1993, SLOAN has no recollection of what information was being sought by the press. It is possible that some of this information was not coming from someone in the Public Affairs Office.

SLOAN believes that HANSON's reason for making the calls to SLOAN was that they were made in the context of press inquiries. SLOAN was not asked to do anything with the information about the referrals other than relate the information to EGGLESTON, NUSSBAUM and LINDSEY. LINDSEY was generally familiar with the subject.

LINDSEY was surprised at the existence of the Early Bird. He thought it was crazy for the RTC to collect rumors and leaks and then spend money printing them in an RTC publication.

SLOAN does not recall anything pertinent happening between October 7, 1993 and October 14, 1993.

HANSON called SLOAN on October 14, 1993 or the day before. A meeting was scheduled between Treasury and White House press people. SLOAN mentioned the meeting to NUSSBAUM but NUSSBAUM and EGGLESTON already knew about it. NUSSBAUM invited SLOAN to come along and attend the meeting. Because this meeting occurred during a time of transition when responsibility for different issues was being divided between SLOAN and EGGLESTON, both of them attended the meeting. Neither of them regarded the meeting as something important. Ordinarily, NUSSBAUM and one staff member would have attended a meeting of this type. SLOAN did not question at that time why he was invited to attend such a meeting when it was supposed to relate to press inquiries. It was not unusual for press matters to have legal overtones.

The meeting held on October 14, 1993 was attended by NUSSBAUM, EGGLESTON, SLOAN, LINDSEY and GEARAN from the White House and by HANSON, JOSH STEINER and JACK DeVORE from Treasury. DeVORE mentioned that he had been receiving a number of calls from people in the media. JEFF GERTH's name may have come up during DeVORE's presentation. DeVORE mentioned the reporters' questions and his responses to them. DeVORE said that reporters had asked whether there had been any unusual handling of the referrals, such as the referrals being sent to Washington, D.C. and held there. DEVORE said that the referrals had been handled in accordance with the normal process. DeVORE stated that GERTH had drawn an incorrect and adverse conclusion about how such referrals are processed. DeVORE said he wanted to clarify GERTH'S misconception. NUSSBAUM asked DeVORE how he would normally pass on information to GERTH and DeVORE explained his usual practice. SLOAN has a vague recollection that DeVORE was just about to leave. In reference to the RTC Early Bird, LINDSEY said it was a crazy idea for a government agency to circulate leaks and rumors.

At some point in the meeting, NUSSBAUM said he had heard something and he had heard about it from "you," looking in the direction of HANSON. HANSON appeared to nod in response. SLOAN does not know to what topic NUSSBAUM may have been referring. STEINER mentioned that the information about the referrals was public information which was being released in response to public inquiries.

NUSSBAUM raised the question of whether it was proper to comment on the referrals. SLOAN does not recall LINDSEY raising this same question, but LINDSEY may have participated in such a discussion.

SLOAN did not regard it as odd that the White House held such a meeting regarding this particular RTC investigation because press inquiries had been coming to the White House.

After this meeting on October 14, 1993, SLOAN really had nothing else to do with the referral issue. In late December 1993 or January 1994, SLOAN and others in the Counsel's Office were called upon to perform specific legal tasks regarding these matters. SLOAN and others were attempting to correct misstatements in the press so that an accurate record would exist for internal use within the White House. EGGLESTON was assigned matters relating to Whitewater while SLOAN was assigned to handle questions about matters relating to FOSTER's office.

SLOAN and EGGLESTON prepared a memorandum to LINDSEY which was dated October 7, 1993. Because LINDSEY was so busy, LINDSEY's secretary had asked SLOAN to prepare a memo explaining why a meeting was being requested with LINDSEY. This occasion was the only time SLOAN was ever asked to prepare such a memorandum. SLOAN's written reason for requesting to schedule a meeting with LINDSEY was to discuss the call made to SLOAN by HANSON that day.

NUSSBAUM and EGGLESTON were working quite a bit on the Whitewater issue. When DONALD MACKAY was first proposed as a candidate for Special Counsel to investigate the Whitewater matter, SLOAN performed background work to demonstrate that internal politics in DOJ had not led to consideration of MACKAY for the position.

Some time between December 25, 1993 and January 1, 1994, possibly on December 30, 1993, SLOAN received a telephone call at home from TOM CASTLETON, an intern at the White House. CASTLETON related that GENE LUDWIG, Comptroller of the Currency, had called the White House and wanted to speak to either NUSSBAUM or SLOAN regarding MGSL. NUSSBAUM was out of town at the time.

SLOAN thought that EGGLESTON should handle this inquiry since it fell under EGGLESTON's purview. However, CASTLETON told SLOAN that LUDWIG had asked for SLOAN by name. LUDWIG also related to CASTLETON that he was calling from the Renaissance Weekend event in South Carolina, which President CLINTON was also attending. President CLINTON had asked about MGSL, and LUDWIG wanted to get the information so he could properly respond to the President. SLOAN does not know how LUDWIG obtained SLOAN's name. After speaking with CASTLETON, SLOAN called EGGLESTON, and they concluded that they should call JOEL KLEIN, who was also attending Renaissance Weekend. When they contacted KLEIN, he told them that no further conversation with the President about MGSL had occurred and the matter had been handled in an appropriate manner.

SLOAN did not attend a meeting held at the White House on February 2, 1994, but he saw HANSON and ROGER ALTMAN going into the meeting. KLEIN later made incidental comments to SLOAN that the subject of recusal had been discussed at the meeting. Since KLEIN had not attended the meeting either, he did not know any details of the meeting, and his comments were just passing references. Recusal was a hot issue at the time because one of the Republican senators wanted RICKI R. TIGERT, head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), to recuse herself from matters relating to MGSL. This senator eventually extracted a pledge from TIGERT that she would recuse herself. SLOAN recalls that KLEIN was uncertain about the content of the conversation relating to ALTMAN's recusal and could only speculate about the content of the discussion. Both KLEIN and SLOAN had reputations for having strong senses of caution. SLOAN took KLEIN's comments as having been made in the context of his concern about the meeting. SLOAN did not express concern about it to KLEIN. KLEIN thought the White House should take an extremely cautious and conservative view toward handling the whole issue of recusal.

BETH NOLAN, the person responsible for ethics issues in the White House, was in contact with someone at Treasury at that time. SLOAN believes he recalls a conversation between NUSSBAUM and NOLAN at the end of a meeting, but he did not hear any details of the conversation between NUSSBAUM and NOLAN.

SLOAN did not participate in preparing ALTMAN for his testimony before the Senate. SLOAN does not know of anyone at the White House who prepared ALTMAN for his testimony. EGGLESTON was looking forward to ALTMAN's testimony. At White House staff meetings, EGGLESTON would mention having had conversations with staffers from Capitol Hill. JOHN PODESTA and NUSSBAUM were also dealing with Whitewater matters. No particular issues regarding Whitewater were being discussed at that time. SLOAN did not watch the hearings on a Thursday when ALTMAN testified. On Thursday afternoon, KLEIN said that EGGLESTON had attended the hearings and thought they went fairly well. SLOAN thought ALTMAN had mentioned the meeting on February 2, 1994 in his testimony.

On Friday, the day after ALTMAN's testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, the New York Times gave a lot of attention to the meeting of February 2, 1994 in its account of ALTMAN's testimony. At a meeting of the White House Counsel's staff immediately following the senior staff meeting, KLEIN said there was some concern about the New York Times story and there might be a White House statement coming out. EGGLESTON related anecdotes about ALTMAN's testimony. SLOAN was concerned that the White House statement might be inaccurate if it only mentioned the meeting on February 2, 1994. SLOAN told KLEIN it was important to make the White House statement accurate. SLOAN suggested to KLEIN that he speak with LINDSEY to ensure the statement's accuracy since LINDSEY was familiar with the autumn meetings between the White House and Treasury officials. On Friday afternoon, SLOAN called KLEIN, who advised that he was all right and did not need SLOAN'S assistance. LINDSEY later ran into SLOAN and told him it had been a good point about ensuring that the number of meetings mentioned in the statement was accurate. SLOAN was present when NUSSBAUM called KLEIN from Mexico. SLOAN had the feeling KLEIN would mention JAY STEPHENS to NUSSBAUM during this call. KLEIN went into NUSSBAUM's office, spoke to NUSSBAUM on the telephone, and then came back out and briefed SLOAN on the substance of the call. NUSSBAUM was then transferred to the telephone of Deputy Chief of Staff HAROLD ICKES. SLOAN recalls that KLEIN was going to update NUSSBAUM over the weekend but nothing occurred which required such an updating.

On Monday, February 28, 1994, NUSSBAUM was scheduled to be back at the White House. KLEIN called SLOAN and asked him to go out to lunch. KLEIN and SLOAN went out and KLEIN said he had just learned that the meeting had not been set up by NUSSBAUM but had possibly been set up by ICKES or by the office of White House Chief of Staff THOMAS "MACK" McLARTY. KLEIN was also concerned by ALTMAN's testimony that the recusal issue had not been brought up at the meeting. At that time, neither SLOAN nor KLEIN had seen the transcript of ALTMAN's testimony yet. The upshot of this conversation was that KLEIN would have EGGLESTON review the transcript and evaluate the accuracy of ALTMAN's testimony. KLEIN told SLOAN that he already assigned that task to EGGLESTON. KLEIN later paged SLOAN and told him that EGGLESTON had reviewed the transcript and that EGGLESTON, NUSSBAUM and KLEIN would get together. KLEIN said that BETH NOLAN would stand in for SLOAN. When KLEIN and SLOAN met that evening, KLEIN said that the transcript had reflected that ALTMAN had requested the meeting. Within the White House, there was concern about the appearance of NUSSBAUM setting up such a meeting, particularly since he had not set it up. KLEIN and SLOAN reviewed a long passage of the transcript regarding procedures, looking line by line for a reference to recusal. KLEIN said PODESTA had been brought into the discussion and wanted to sleep on it. SLOAN said he hoped there had not been a question which should have elicited a discussion of previous meetings. SLOAN took a copy of the transcript home and reviewed it. In reviewing the transcript, SLOAN read where Senator CHRISTOPHER BOND had asked ALTMAN how the White House had learned of the RTC referrals. ALTMAN testified that no one from his agency, i.e., the RTC, had advised the White House.

On Tuesday, SLOAN went to NUSSBAUM and said there were questions about ALTMAN'S responses in terms of the White House meetings involving HANSON. SLOAN saw KLEIN shortly thereafter and told him he had talked to NUSSBAUM. That afternoon, PODESTA, NUSSBAUM, EGGLESTON and SLOAN met. NUSSBAUM left briefly and returned with LINDSEY, who stayed for the meeting. SLOAN explained to the group what had occurred in the meetings on September 29, 1993 and October 14, 1993 as well as the telephone calls which had occurred between those two meetings. NUSSBAUM and LINDSEY remembered the terms used in the meetings differently. LINDSEY did not recall the CLINTONs being mentioned as witnesses. NUSSBAUM did not remember the CLINTON campaign being mentioned as a co-conspirator and he thought a different term had been used. The participants in the meeting went over the transcript in detail. PODESTA was going to call ALTMAN and bring the discrepancies in ALTMAN's testimony to his attention. The discrepancies centered around the recusal issue and the prior meetings between the White House and Treasury officials. PODESTA thought the issue of the Treasury-White House meetings needed to be brought up clearly. The recusal point could be part of the discussion about procedures. Later that day, SLOAN heard from KLEIN that PODESTA had called ALTMAN. SLOAN heard that ALTMAN interrupted PODESTA and said that he had not known about the prior meetings.

SLOAN has never had much contact with ALTMAN. SLOAN has had no contact with either HANSON or ALTMAN since ALTMAN testified before the Senate Banking Committee. SLOAN has had no conversation at the White House or anywhere about JAY STEPHENS or removing STEPHENS from his post with the RTC. SLOAN has not had any conversation with either ICKES or GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS about removing STEPHENS from his post at RTC. On Friday, KLEIN told SLOAN there would be a big story in the media over the weekend. On Saturday, SLOAN read in the Washington Post about a call made by STEPHANOPOULOS regarding the hiring of STEPHENS by the RTC. The following week, SLOAN spoke with KLEIN and learned that McLARTY was not conducting an internal inquiry and that there was a sense in the press that the White House was putting STEPHANOPOULOS out to dry.

Based on observation and interview, SLOAN is described as follows:

Name:	CLIFFORD M. SLOAN
Sex:	Male
Race:	White
Date of Birth:	FOIA(b)(6) FOIA(b)(7) - (C)

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 5/11/94

CLIFFORD M. "CLIFF" SLOAN, Associate Counsel to the President, was interviewed at the office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. as scheduled at 9:15 a.m. MR. SLOAN was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and of the purpose of the interview. Assisting with the interview was CARL STICH, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. Also present during the interview were MR. SLOAN's attorneys, PETER J. ROMATOWSKI and STEVE BYERS from the law firm CROWELL & MORING. MR. SLOAN provided the following information:

FOIA(b)(3) - Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 6(e) - Grand Jury

Working from the index of the documents produced, this documentation was reviewed during the course of the interview in a cursory way. SLOAN indicated that he had maintained the originals of this documentation in a two-drawer file cabinet in his office. Some of the material produced had been kept segregated.

SLOAN said in addition to the documents provided, he would later make available a copy of a draft of questions and answers which he had in his possession that had been prepared to assist with press inquiries on the FOSTER note.

SLOAN joined the White House Staff in May or June of 1993. For the six to eight weeks prior to VINCENT FOSTER's death, he dealt with FOSTER on a daily basis. SLOAN didn't know FOSTER well, as in the sense of a close friend, but described him as a colleague. SLOAN was normally assigned his work by BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief White House Counsel, but on occasion FOSTER would assign work to him.

SLOAN described FOSTER with the following adjectives: reserved; carried himself with great dignity; supportive; decent guy; and a careful lawyer.

SLOAN could not recall having any conversations with FOSTER regarding non-work related matters.

When asked if he could identify individuals who may have confided with FOSTER, SLOAN named MARSHA SCOTT and then added the name BILL KENNEDY. As an example of SCOTT's rapport with FOSTER, SLOAN cited a conversation he had with SCOTT on Air Force One while enroute to FOSTER's funeral. SCOTT told SLOAN she had talked with FOSTER the day before he died for a long time. FOSTER had told her that he was going to get some rest. SCOTT believed that FOSTER had times like that in Arkansas. SCOTT reported this conversation with FOSTER to SLOAN during the course of discussion while on the plane.

SLOAN was asked to describe the NUSSBAUM/FOSTER relationship. SLOAN said they got along very well; it was a close relationship. They were very different people. NUSSBAUM was outgoing and talkative and FOSTER reserved and chose his words carefully. FOSTER was always deferential to NUSSBAUM. There was never any question as to who was in charge in the counsel's office. It was clearly NUSSBAUM. FOSTER was very concerned to keep NUSSBAUM advised on issues. They were very open with each other.

SLOAN was asked if he had observed any noticeable changes in FOSTER. SLOAN said he had noticed increased stress in FOSTER as a result of the Travel Office report. In addition, other items appearing in the press such as those concerning Supreme Court nominees were also stress provoking for FOSTER. FOSTER had a conversation with SLOAN wherein FOSTER revealed his thoughts that the counsel's office and White House were not prepared for further onslaught by the Republicans and press. FOSTER suggested the hiring of outside counsel to represent the White House. FOSTER also discussed an alternative of hiring of someone else on the counsel's staff to focus on matters under attack. FOSTER felt that the White House was overwhelmed and outmanned.

SLOAN did not notice any weight loss by FOSTER. SLOAN described FOSTER's appearance the week before his death as being more reserved and laconic. SLOAN said that FOSTER took a day off the week before his death and also came in late one day. SLOAN did not view this as out of the ordinary at the time, as others were also taking time off. For example, NUSSBAUM had recently come back from a week off. SLOAN also recalled that NUSSBAUM had encouraged FOSTER to take time off.

As an example of how FOSTER's condition was manifested, SLOAN cited a night about a week before FOSTER's death when it looked like the "JOCELYN ELDER thing" was going to erupt. SLOAN found NUSSBAUM and FOSTER together when SLOAN went to them to discuss the Travel Office matter. FOSTER said "They're way ahead of us." It was another example of a "huge new problem" confronting them. BILL KENNEDY's name came up during the conversation. NUSSBAUM said that KENNEDY was okay. FOSTER said that KENNEDY was not okay, referring to how he (KENNEDY) was doing emotionally.

SLOAN was asked if FOSTER was involved with non-White House related matters and whether this was a source of concern for FOSTER. SLOAN could not remember the issue coming up concerning the propriety of White House counsel working on personal matters for the CLINTONS. SLOAN said that it was reported in the newspaper that FOSTER himself was looking into securing private counsel regarding the Travel Office matter.

FOSTER had conversations with JIM HAMILTON regarding the White House retaining HAMILTON to represent the White House during the Congressional investigation of the Travel Office issue. NUSSBAUM had concerns regarding the hiring of outside counsel. NUSSBAUM advised that HAMILTON just represent FOSTER. It was unclear whether HAMILTON represented the White House or FOSTER. HAMILTON has notes of his conversation with FOSTER but SLOAN has not seen these notes. HAMILTON discussed his conversations with FOSTER with SLOAN in September or October, 1993, at the time the First Lady and others in the White House were becoming a focus in the Travel Office inquiry. There was a question if the President and First Lady were interviewed, who would be their counsel.

SLOAN was asked if he knew if FOSTER was working on Whitewater at the time of his death. SLOAN answered no. SLOAN was asked if FOSTER was working on CLINTON personal/family legal matters. SLOAN answered FOSTER would have been working on personal official matters such as residence issues; in a sense personal but job related. When asked if others were also working on such matters, SLOAN said his "impressions" were that STEVE NEUWIRTH did work for HILLARY CLINTON, CLINTON's Task Force litigation, and that BETH NOLAN did financial disclosure type matters. FOSTER was working with outside lawyers such as BOB BARNETT, but SLOAN had no knowledge of this. SLOAN was asked if he had learned of any projects FOSTER was working on for the CLINTONS prior to the inauguration. SLOAN answered in a general way but that he was not personally extensively involved with the matters. In December, 1992, FOSTER had worked on the closing out of the President's and First Lady's involvement with Whitewater.

SLOAN saw VINCENT FOSTER for the last time on the morning of July 20, 1993 at the nomination ceremony for the Director of the FBI. He said he and FOSTER were standing together at the ceremony and FOSTER had made the comment to him about how old is he, referring to Director Freeh. SLOAN also walked back to the White House with FOSTER. He asked FOSTER the question, "So what d'ya think?" FOSTER only mumbled an answer. A second question by SLOAN received no response from FOSTER. FOSTER's quiet way was not arrogant but rather FOSTER wasn't expressive and kept to himself. SLOAN had no further contact with FOSTER on July 20, 1993. The rest of July 20, 1993 was a normal work day for SLOAN. He was involved in arranging a confirmation hearing for FBI Director Freeh.

SLOAN was asked if he knew what FOSTER was working on July 19 or 20, 1993. SLOAN answered no.

SLOAN went to bed on the evening of July 20, 1993 at 11:00 p.m. or earlier. After retiring for the night, he received a call from NUSSBAUM. He believed NUSSBAUM was calling from the White House. NUSSBAUM told SLOAN that "I have terrible news for you - VINCE FOSTER killed himself." NUSSBAUM described that FOSTER had driven his car to a park and shot himself. NUSSBAUM didn't want SLOAN to hear this from someone else. NUSSBAUM made no requests of SLOAN. SLOAN did not do anything or make any notifications as a result of this call. SLOAN had a "fitful" night and slept very little thereafter.

Wednesday, July 21, 1993 was an overwhelmingly sad, painful time for everyone at the White House. SLOAN went to NUSSBAUM's office at about 9:00 a.m. that day. Others drifted in to include STEVE NEUWIRTH, BILL KENNEDY, BETH NOLAN, etc. Two issues came up while in NUSSBAUM's office. One, the question of sealing VINCENT FOSTER's door and two, the presence of the U.S. Park Police who wanted in FOSTER's office. The discussion concerning sealing the door was that NEUWIRTH and SLOAN thought that a guard and lock should be put on FOSTER's office. Others wondered if it was necessary and would "look strange." SLOAN explained the phrase "look strange" as being a question of whether this change of securing the office now versus not having done so previously would cause concern. Also, a guard outside the FOSTER door may be perceived as an overreaction or alarmist measure. SLOAN viewed securing the office as being the prudent, lawyerly thing to do to freeze the situation. SLOAN did not recall NUSSBAUM or BETSY POND saying they had been in the office the night before. There was no discussion of the FOSTER note. The purpose of the review of documents in FOSTER's office the following day was discussed, but only in general. SLOAN did not remember what he knew at the time regarding anyone being in and out of FOSTER's office.

At some point during the day on Wednesday, SLOAN learned of a cleaning lady having a bag of trash from FOSTER's office. SLOAN intercepted this employee and stored the bag of trash in ROY NEAL's office. After the afternoon meeting on July 21, 1993 with U.S. Park Police and others, probably about 6:00 or 6:30 p.m., SLOAN put this trash in FOSTER's office. SLOAN had learned about the trash from NUSSBAUM.

The second issue discussed in NUSSBAUM's office that morning regarding the U.S. Park Police presence and their desire to enter the FOSTER office concerned a discussion of how to deal with their request. NUSSBAUM wanted to check with PHIL HEYMAN at the Department of Justice (DOJ) regarding DOJ and FBI involvement in the case. There was also some discussion of Interior Department involvement versus DOJ. HEYMAN was NUSSBAUM's primary contact at DOJ. SLOAN did not remember if he was in the room when NUSSBAUM made his call to HEYMAN. He does not remember hearing NUSSBAUM's side of the conversation. HEYMAN wanted to send over DOJ lawyers and FBI agents. SLOAN did not recall the preference of the counsel's office, except that it seemed odd to him (SLOAN) that the U.S. Park Police were involved. NUSSBAUM also wanted to see how Interior viewed the matter. NUSSBAUM wanted to talk to high levels at the Interior Department, rather than with the U.S. Park Police. SLOAN doesn't know if NUSSBAUM did this or not.

During this meeting in NUSSBAUM's office, NUSSBAUM and BILL KENNEDY perhaps, left to attend a U.S. Park Police briefing regarding FOSTER's death.

People were in NUSSBAUM's office most of July 21, 1993. SLOAN described this office as a "mourning room."

NUSSBAUM made no specific assignments to anyone that SLOAN was aware of. SLOAN did not recall any interest being expressed in the weapon which FOSTER had used or the autopsy which was to be performed that day.

The reservations regarding the U.S. Park Police search of FOSTER's office concerned: (1) who was making the law enforcement decisions; and (2) privileged documents and White House layers of confidentiality. It was NUSSBAUM's feeling not to let investigators rummage through the office, as it could be a violation of the lawyer's responsibility.

On July 22, 1993, NUSSBAUM was in discussion with others in the White House. SLOAN was not present. SLOAN continued to return to his office to handle other business throughout the day.

Late in the morning of July 21, 1993, WEBB HUBBELL came into NUSSBAUM's office. Also the President and MACK MCLARTY came into the office. NUSSBAUM took a picture of the President and FOSTER from FOSTER's office. SLOAN again emphasized the grief and shock that everyone was feeling.

About noon on July 21, 1993, the entire White House staff was assembled in the Old Executive Office Building. The President, NUSSBAUM and MCLARTY addressed everyone. RICKIE SIDEMAN was busy getting background information on FOSTER and MARK GEARAN was preparing for a press briefing.

On Wednesday afternoon, July 21, 1993, a meeting was set up with DOJ lawyers and the FBI. The meeting took place in NUSSBAUM's office. A list of those in attendance was provided by SLOAN. Those present included: Detective PETE MARKLAND, U.S. Park Police; SA SCOTT M. SALTER, FBI; ASAIC DONALD A. FLYNN, U.S. Secret Service; DAVID MARGOLIS, DOJ; ROGER ADAMS, DOJ; CHARLES W. HUME, U.S. Park Police; and JOHN K. DANNA, FBI. In addition, SLOAN said that White House people not listed included NUSSBAUM, maybe STEVE NEUWIRTH and SLOAN himself. SLOAN could not recall any pre-meeting or meetings prior to this Wednesday afternoon meeting. SLOAN described the meeting as give and take. Discussions concerned the trash, a photo, the posting of the office and the interviews of the secretaries the next morning. There was "not a lot" of discussion regarding how the search of FOSTER's office was to be done. SLOAN had no remembrance of discussion concerning DOJ or FBI review. SLOAN said there could have been different impressions people would have from the discussions regarding what and how things were to be done the following day.

The discussions with PHIL HEYMAN resulted in DAVID MARGOLIS and ROGER ADAMS from DOJ and the FBI assigned to be there. SLOAN also recalled discussing FOSTER's personal affects. BURTON wanted FOSTER's wallet, rings, etc. for the President to take to MRS. FOSTER that evening. SLOAN asked the Park Police if this was possible and they said they would try and, in fact, did secure these items for delivery to the White House at about 7:30 p.m. After the meeting, SLOAN took the trash from ROY NEAL's office to FOSTER's office. SLOAN doesn't remember how NEAL got the trash, except from the cleaning lady. He could not remember whether the bag of trash was sealed or not and whether the bag was transparent or not.

Later that same evening (July 21, 1993), NUSSBAUM told NEUWIRTH and SLOAN to "prepare" the White House secretaries for their next day interviews. By "prepare," SLOAN said the secretaries were instructed to answer forthrightly regarding routine questions on VINCE FOSTER. They also asked the secretaries what they recalled. SLOAN said the only consequential item surfaced was the family calling with concern for FOSTER. SLOAN viewed this preparation as informing the secretaries. He doesn't recall telling them not to volunteer information. He said this preparation seemed totally normal to him to facilitate the investigation. He said the preparation time was quick and the secretaries had been assembled in a group and included BETSY POND, LINDA TRIPP and DEBORAH GORHAM.

The lock was being installed on FOSTER's office door as SLOAN left for the day. He understood that the key was given to the U.S. Secret Service.

The morning of July 22, 1993 was basically consumed with the interviews of the secretaries. SLOAN remembered coming to NUSSBAUM's office. CHERYL MILLS and WALTER DILLINGER joined in a conversation regarding FOSTER. CHERYL MILLS remembered reading a New York Times article about the gun being found in FOSTER's right hand and questioning whether he was left handed. The discussion was inconclusive that day. A subsequent conversation with JIM HAMILTON two weeks later, which NUSSBAUM asked SLOAN to have, indicated a newspaper article reported the question of whether FOSTER was left or right handed had been resolved to the satisfaction of the U.S. Park Police. During the conversation, it was discussed that BILL KENNEDY knew VINCENT FOSTER best.

The U.S. Park Police and FBI then arrived and NEUWIRTH and SLOAN split up to assist or attend the secretary interviews. SLOAN was at POND's interview and NEUWIRTH at GORHAM's. SLOAN said it had been decided by NUSSBAUM that he and NEUWIRTH would be present for the interviews. SLOAN could not recall any reaction by law enforcement to this procedure. It surfaced as an issue later. The assumption was suicide and there was little discussion otherwise. At one point during the POND interview, NUSSBAUM burst in the room. SLOAN said this was NUSSBAUM's way of welcoming and asking "do you need anything?" SLOAN said it was a remarkable distortion of what happened and an unfair characterization to label this interruption as anything more than this. He said he may be basing this on his prior exposure to NUSSBAUM versus a perception by those who really did not know NUSSBAUM. SLOAN said there was no White House intimidation in dealings with law enforcement. It was entirely professional and a mutual respect situation.

SLOAN also was present at LINDA TRIPP's interview.

SLOAN recalled that after GORHAM's interview, NEUWIRTH told SLOAN that GORHAM had failed to mention anything regarding the family calling the White House to check on FOSTER's condition. SLOAN suggested a follow-up with GORHAM by the U.S. Park Police and FBI. At this point, the interviews of the secretaries were completed.

Attention now focused on the issue of going into FOSTER's office. NUSSBAUM had been tied up in meetings during the morning. Some of these meetings may have concerned the procedure of the FOSTER office search. SLOAN could only recall that one of these meetings was with the Chief of Staff. Meanwhile, the U.S. Park Police, a member of JIM HAMILTON's law firm, the FBI and DOJ were waiting. MARGOLIS from the DOJ was in charge of this group. SLOAN was occupied doing JOCELYN ELDERS' work. NUSSBAUM said going into the office that he would briefly describe the documents. NUSSBAUM or SLOAN told MARGOLIS of the procedure. MARGOLIS then called HEYMAN and expressed concern regarding the procedure. SLOAN talked for a time with HEYMAN and then referred HEYMAN to NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM and HEYMAN discussed the procedure to be followed for the search. It was eventually decided how the search would proceed, but SLOAN doesn't remember anything but the bottom line. The important thing to SLOAN was that the process was moving forward. SLOAN said he had no idea whether the search of FOSTER's office was the only subject or not discussed by NUSSBAUM in the various meetings of that morning. SLOAN said the FOSTER funeral and press inquiries and other related matters were also occupying people's time. The First Lady was in Arkansas at the time of FOSTER's death. SLOAN did not know if NUSSBAUM was consulting with her or the President.

(At this point in the interview, a ten or fifteen minute break was taken.)

SLOAN tried to keep the Park Police, FBI and DOJ posted regarding the status of the search. At 1:00 or 1:15 p.m., NUSSBAUM said "let's do it (the search) at 2:00 p.m." SLOAN said the discussion on who would see what documents was not done in his presence. NUSSBAUM thought it was a good idea to have others in FOSTER's office as he reviewed the documents. He considered the extremes of letting investigators rummage through the office versus nobody in the office at all. NUSSBAUM felt the latter would be criticized more than the procedure actually followed. They felt it was a "reasonable balance." The purpose of the search was to locate a suicide or extortion note. SLOAN said that at the time he had no firm view one way or the other regarding how the search should be conducted. His perspective was that he was not making the decision. His view of this procedure today is that to the extent it has provoked controversy, it is regrettable. SLOAN is not sure of optimal alternatives. He believes each option has its different pros and cons. The issue of privilege is viewed by SLOAN as not being unreasonable.

SLOAN doesn't recall MARGOLIS saying how the search should be done. SLOAN said the criteria used would be to let investigators see anything related to suicide or extortion. NUSSBAUM would be reviewing and describing documents located in FOSTER's office. If law enforcement said a document was of interest, it would be put in a separate (middle) pile for later consideration. FOSTER personal papers and work-related papers would be put in two other piles. Law enforcement never asked to see anything to the best of SLOAN's recollection. NEUWIRTH and SLOAN were moving around during the search. BURTON was in and out of the office. NEAL was not there. Sometimes NUSSBAUM would turn over documents he had reviewed and sometimes not. MARGOLIS had commented on HEYMAN's concerns, but SLOAN believed NUSSBAUM and HEYMAN were handling these concerns. Nobody said anything nor did any body language convey to SLOAN that anybody had any inappropriate concerns.

SLOAN remembered the incident with FBI Agent SALTER standing. SLOAN said NEUWIRTH whispered to him that SALTER was looking at documents and to SLOAN it seemed he was. SLOAN said to SALTER, "You're not standing up to look at documents, are you?" SALTER answered, "Let's not get carried away." NUSSBAUM interjected that "You can stand up." In retrospect, SLOAN believes his comment was dumb and he apologized at the time for making it. Thereafter, the search became lighter because of people joking about other's actions in the later part of the search, also trying to "see" documents.

The actual search consisted of a search of the desktop and drawers, side drawers and files, trash, and briefcase. NUSSBAUM would pull out a drawer and describe its contents. SLOAN made notes from NUSSBAUM's description. He did not intend this list to be exhaustive.

FOIA(b)(3) - Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 6(e) - Grand Jury

SLOAN could not specifically recall any black binders being located during the search. He said that notebooks were present in FOSTER's office.

The trash bag brought back to FOSTER's office by SLOAN on July 21, 1993 was searched by NUSSBAUM. SLOAN did not recall if they looked in the trash can itself in the office or not. He did not recall searching a burn bag in FOSTER's office, but thinks that it was searched. With respect to the trash/burn bag, SLOAN was called to MARK GEARAN's office to explain the trash situation. SLOAN repeated that he had gotten the trash from ROY NEAL's office and put it back in FOSTER's office. SYLVIA MATTHEWS, Special Assistant to ROBERT RUBEN, Director of the Economic Counsel, with offices on the second floor of the White House with possibly GENE SPERLING, Deputy to BOB RUBEN, had gone to look for FOSTER's burn bag the evening of July 20, 1993. It had been mixed with others but they had located torn up credit card slips with VINCENT FOSTER's name on them, etc. and mentioned this to NUSSBAUM. MATTHEWS was summoned to GEARAN's office to explain this. MATTHEWS said she had retrieved the burn bag from wherever burn bags go. SLOAN speculated that there may have been more than one burn bag or a burn bag from another office. He just didn't know. SLOAN never heard of a burn bag returned to FOSTER's office. This meeting in GEARAN's office occurred in early August, a few days after the FOSTER note was found and a story surfaced regarding something taken out of FOSTER's office. SLOAN described it as a misunderstanding. SLOAN described the burn bag as having red and white stripes.

SLOAN was shown the briefcase believed taken from FOSTER's office. SLOAN didn't remember the briefcase. He remembered that the briefcase in FOSTER's office was flexible like the one shown to him, but did not remember the color. He thought it was more brown, rather than black. SLOAN had a "hazy" recollection of the original location of the briefcase in FOSTER's office. SLOAN said NUSSBAUM took files and papers out of the briefcase and put the briefcase down. SLOAN did not recall what NUSSBAUM said or did with the briefcase. SLOAN remembers thinking the thought that the briefcase was empty, but not sure why he felt this way. The list he prepared regarding the search doesn't specify what was taken from the briefcase. SLOAN interjected that there had been some confusion about there being more than one briefcase and asked if the briefcase he was shown was the one from FOSTER's office.

A lot of the material in the file cabinets remained in the file cabinets. A foot-high pile of documents not identified as FOSTER personal or investigator interest resulted from the search. This pile would be the work-related or privileged documents located during the search. A small redwell file was produced for documents being produced for investigators. This included two July calendars, one July call sheet, a photo of the handwritten note and possibly the phone log notebook. The third pile, approximately a xerox-type box full of material consisted of FOSTER personal items. MIKE SPAFFORD took these items. SLOAN recalled that other things, such as pictures, were also taken and it was more than SPAFFORD could carry.

When the search was over, the pile put aside for consideration later was given to SLOAN as it was late in the day and the FOSTER funeral was the next day. SLOAN locked this pile in a two-drawer file cabinet in his office. Investigators took nothing the day of the search. Investigators returned on Friday, July 30, 1993 to view some telephone messages, etc. SLOAN is not sure who initiated their visit. He said the FOSTER note had been found. Newspaper articles had discussed the search and may have prompted the return visit. SLOAN said it has always been the intention that this pile was going to be something to be addressed.

After the search, the keys to FOSTER's office were given to NUSSBAUM. NUSSBAUM went into FOSTER's office after the others left on the day of the search, July 22, 1993. SLOAN said NUSSBAUM was looking at some of the documents in the office. SLOAN heard subsequently that White House related documents were disbursed to others in the White House but he doesn't know specifics. SLOAN could not recall getting any of these documents himself. NEUWIRTH probably did, but no one else was recalled by SLOAN. SLOAN could not recall whether the FOSTER office was locked thereafter or not. He said there was no particular reason to lock this door as the suite of offices had a lock on it.

SLOAN was asked about NEUWIRTH discovering the FOSTER note on July 26, 1993. SLOAN only knew about the note being found after the fact. He first heard about its location Tuesday evening, after it was given to the U.S. Park Police. It was SLOAN's understanding that NEUWIRTH was going to index files in FOSTER's office and that pieces of the note "fluttered out" of the briefcase as NEUWIRTH was handling it. NUSSBAUM helped NEUWIRTH piece the note together. SLOAN had no information regarding the note in the briefcase at the time of the search. In passing, DEBORAH GORHAM has said that she saw yellow stickies in the briefcase. NEUWIRTH has described to SLOAN how the note was found. Regarding the origin of the note, SLOAN only knows what he has learned afterwards, i.e., that MRS. FOSTER had told VINCE to write things down. Asked if he thought the note had been put in the briefcase after the search, SLOAN said he had no information suggesting anyone had any knowledge of this.

NUSSBAUM gave his handwritten version of the note to SLOAN. SLOAN produced a typed copy of the note from this version and believes he gave the handwritten note back to NUSSBAUM.

When questioned about searching a safe, SLOAN replied that the safe in NUSSBAUM's office contained VINCENT FOSTER's war powers file. SLOAN knew of no other information belonging to FOSTER in the safe.

SLOAN had no information concerning any other FOSTER note. He had no information concerning a discussion regarding another note.

SLOAN did not return to the White House on the evening FOSTER died (July 20, 1993). NUSSBAUM, THOMASSON and WILLIAMS described things and SLOAN believed were the only people in FOSTER's office that night. BETSY POND was in FOSTER's office the next morning (July 21, 1993) to "straighten papers." THOMASSON had been beeped by DAVID WATKINS to return to the White House. WILLIAMS had been beeped by someone whom SLOAN could not recall to return to the White House. WILLIAMS saw HOWARD PASTER in bluejeans that night at the White House. SLOAN described the scene as a place that was grief stricken and shocked.

In December, 1993, SLOAN got the details from MAGGIE WILLIAMS concerning various "CLINTON personal documents" given to her by NUSSBAUM or NEUWIRTH. WILLIAMS received the documents Thursday after the search (July 22, 1993) or the following Monday (July 26, 1993). WILLIAMS locked these documents in a closet at the White House residence. The following Tuesday (July 27, 1993), the documents were delivered to WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY for indexing. The quantity of documents was a half-drawer or box full. WILLIAMS carried the box with a legal intern from the office.

At Attorney ROMATOWSKI's prompting, SLOAN recalled that a couple of weeks before FOSTER's death on July 20, 1993, perhaps

Friday, July 9, 1993, SLOAN saw FOSTER carrying a box or two to his car. FOSTER told SLOAN they were "things from the transition."

SLOAN was again questioned regarding the procedure followed in the search of FOSTER's office. He defended the procedure as being necessary to protect privileged documents. He said "not even a flash" of privileged documents would be acceptable. The purpose of the search was described as "educational" and to give the investigators a "sense of the office and its contents."

SLOAN was asked if he had attended any social events with FOSTER. The only time SLOAN could recall was a party in June, 1993 for BILL KENNEDY.

The following description of SLOAN was obtained through observation and interview:

CLIFFORD "CLIFF" M. SLOAN, Associate Counsel to the President, The White House, Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 456-7900/6788 was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), Washington, D.C., as a follow-up to his previous interview of May 11, 1994. Assisting with the interview was MARK STEIN, Assistant to Independent Counsel, ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. Also present during the interview were Mr. SLOAN's attorneys, PETER J. ROMATOWSKI, STEVE BYERS, and KAREN DEAKINS from the law firm Crowell & Moring, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., telephone (202) 624-2745. Having been advised of the identities of the interviewing agent and OIC Counsel and of the purpose of the interview, Mr. SLOAN provided the following information:

When asked if everybody left after the review of documents in VINCE FOSTER's office on the afternoon of July 22, 1993, SLOAN answered that BERNARD NUSSBAUM, Chief White House Counsel, STEVE NEUWIRTH, Associate Counsel to the President, and himself (SLOAN), stayed "for a few minutes." SLOAN said there was a pile of personal FOSTER files which went to the FOSTER family attorney, SPAFFORD. SPAFFORD filled a box and then "couldn't fit any more in the box." SPAFFORD was "loaded up with stuff and left." SLOAN said that his notes of the file review in FOSTER's office, which had previously been furnished to the OIC, had a line at the end concerning a direction given to him about getting MAGGIE WILLIAMS, etc. SLOAN said the note would jog his recollection but he doesn't recall anything beyond that. He said the fact that he wrote it down means that he was at least partially responsible for the follow through with WILLIAMS. However, it later came to his attention that he didn't have to do this. He personally didn't separate the personal materials on July 22, 1993 or at any other time. SLOAN was taking notes from what NUSSBAUM was saying versus what he (SLOAN) actually saw during the record review in FOSTER's office.

SLOAN was asked if he could recall other conversations regarding the document transfer to the law firm of Williams & Connolly. SLOAN answered, "No, not that I recall." SLOAN said he knew of the transfer of documents sometime in August 1993. He said he learned of this during a discussion with BOB BARNETT. His discussion with BARNETT was in connection with research for a column that William Saphire was writing. SLOAN previously furnished the OIC with his notes of his conversations with BARNETT.

After being reminded by his attorney, PETER ROMATOWSKI, SLOAN said that he also remembered NUSSBAUM sitting at FOSTER's desk after the search looking at the documents. NUSSBAUM asked if there was an obligation for them to preserve or retain the documents. SLOAN answered that it would be "a good idea to do so." NUSSBAUM was interested in the legal requirement or basis for doing this. At some point during the discussion, NEUWIRTH came in and joined them and advised that the documents should be retained because of the "Presidential Records Act," SLOAN said that NUSSBAUM was going through the files and sorting them in the context of "what to do with certain things in the office."

SLOAN was asked if he could recall any other conversations. He said he remembered at one point NUSSBAUM, while in FOSTER's office, was on the telephone with SUSAN THOMASES and relating the procedure which had been followed during the search of FOSTER's office. SLOAN said that he left during the conversation. When asked why NUSSBAUM would call THOMASES, SLOAN answered that she was someone NUSSBAUM talked to.

SLOAN was asked about NUSSBAUM's reasoning for transferring the FOSTER documents to Williams & Connolly. SLOAN answered that he later heard NUSSBAUM discuss that he (NUSSBAUM) "had done the reasonable thing." Work-related materials from FOSTER's office had been given to others in the White House to handle and personal papers of the FOSTER family and the CLINTONs given to the appropriate attorneys. SLOAN learned of this at the time the White House was making public statements regarding the handling of documents probably in December 1993.

SLOAN was asked if he was involved in a review of FOSTER documents in December 1993. SLOAN answered that in December 1993 or early January 1994, he was working with JOEL KLEIN to prepare for press inquiries regarding the matter. SLOAN talked with MAGGIE WILLIAMS and said at that time he "learned more than I knew." He said the conversations included discussions regarding the night of July 20, 1993 and what had happened with the FOSTER files which had gone to Williams & Connolly. SLOAN was asked if WILLIAMS had told him that documents had been transferred to Williams & Connolly. SLOAN answered that in his discussions with WILLIAMS, they were trying to establish the timing of the transfer of documents and that WILLIAMS had been unclear. The transfer was either Thursday, July 22, 1993 or possibly Monday, July 26, 1993. SLOAN said it was most likely the Thursday date.

WILLIAMS had told SLOAN that she got a call from NUSSBAUM to "come get the documents before PHIL HEYMANN changes his mind." When asked when WILLIAMS got this call from NUSSBAUM, SLOAN answered that he didn't recall. He said his "sense" was that it was after the review of documents in FOSTER's office on July 22, 1993.

WILLIAMS came with an intern to pick up the FOSTER documents and then locked this box of documents in a closet at the White House residence. SLOAN said there are notes regarding this which have previously been furnished to the OIC. BARNETT was called and Williams & Connolly came and picked the records up at the White House. WILLIAMS, in trying to "peg" the times, may have talked with BARNETT on the plane to the FOSTER funeral. WILLIAMS did not remember when Williams & Connolly picked up the FOSTER files. The time of the pickup by Williams & Connolly may have been at 4:00 p.m. on the following Tuesday (July 27, 1993).

SLOAN was asked if the documents transferred included any blind trust file. SLOAN said there were documents sent by BRANT BUCK, Federal Express, which were trust documents that were "time sensitive." He said the obtaining of this documentation was discussed before the search of the FOSTER office on July 22, 1993, but the actual "obtaining of the documents did not occur before the review."

The only instances known to SLOAN of anyone going into FOSTER's White House office after it had been sealed were the occasions where (1) NUSSBAUM removed a picture from FOSTER's office and (2) SLOAN put the trash back into the office.

SLOAN was asked if WILLIAMS was involved in obtaining the blind trust documents or taking anything out of FOSTER's office. SLOAN answered that he had "no knowledge of that."

SLOAN was asked if the blind trust documents were actually in the office and SLOAN answered that he had a "vague sense of NUSSBAUM saying he had found the documents."

SLOAN was asked if any documents were given to Williams & Connolly after July 27, 1993. SLOAN answered, "No, unless there is something to the contrary in my notes."

SLOAN was asked if he had any other information regarding the transfer of documents. SLOAN answered that he tried to identify the intern involved in the movement of the documents but "wasn't successful."

SLOAN was then asked about his involvement in conversations in the White House leading to the search of VINCENT FOSTER's office. SLOAN said that he was involved in discussions regarding the "process" to be followed but that he had no other conversations except for discussions with NUSSBAUM and NEUWIRTH. SLOAN didn't recall any discussions from July 21, 1993, the day before the search. On July 22, 1993, he remembered talking with NUSSBAUM and then later with NEUWIRTH. He was not sure exactly when. He did recall an anecdote which NEUWIRTH had relayed to him. This concerned a meeting in which JACK QUINN had said that counsel "screwed up." It was QUINN's opinion that counsel should have done an inventory of the documents in FOSTER's office before letting anyone into the office. SLOAN did not know when this discussion occurred.

SLOAN was also aware of NUSSBAUM's discussion with PHIL HEYMANN at the Department of Justice (DOJ). SLOAN said he "put the conversation together" as NUSSBAUM coming back from meetings regarding the search and explaining to him (SLOAN) the planned procedure. SLOAN remembered DAVID MARGOLIS, a DOJ attorney, on the phone with PHIL HEYMANN at one point. MARGOLIS said to SLOAN that HEYMANN has concerns regarding the procedure. SLOAN referred HEYMANN to NUSSBAUM and "somehow it was resolved."

SLOAN was asked if he had any information regarding NUSSBAUM owing a call to HEYMANN regarding how the search would be conducted. SLOAN answered "no."

SLOAN was asked if there had been a change in procedure for the search. SLOAN answered that he didn't remember how it had been left on July 21st, but felt that it had been "ambiguous" and "not clearly spelled out." "People walked away with a different sense" because of what "wasn't spelled out." SLOAN could not recall any specific discussion on July 21st regarding a clear procedure to be followed. SLOAN had a "vague sense" that there were "unresolved questions." SLOAN said it was "not clear in NUSSBAUM's mind." The procedure for the search "wasn't set at the end of the day on July 21st."

SLOAN was asked if he could recall any discussions on the morning of July 22, 1993 with NUSSBAUM or NEUWIRTH regarding the search and SLOAN answered "not that I recall." He answered in this way for both discussions with NUSSBAUM and NEUWIRTH together or separately. SLOAN said he was "not materially involved in the discussions." SLOAN could remember NUSSBAUM commenting to him "in fragmentary ways."

NUSSBAUM was having meetings on other White House matters during the July 21st and 22nd timeframe. SLOAN didn't have a "clear sense" of how much of NUSSBAUM's time had been focused during this time period on the procedure to be followed for the search of FOSTER's office.

SLOAN was asked if he could recall any other discussions and he said he could only remember the NEUWIRTH comment by JACK QUINN. He remembered this only because of the anecdote which had been recalled by NEUWIRTH.

SLOAN was asked if he had ever heard NUSSBAUM state that the First Lady was concerned about the procedure to be followed for the search of FOSTER's office. SLOAN answered that he could not recall this. He remembered that either before or after the search, there was discussion that the CLINTONs were "clients" and that you "don't turn every file in a lawyer's office" over to investigators and waive attorney-client privilege. SLOAN could not recall a specific comment regarding this. SLOAN was asked if anyone talked with the First Lady and he answered "not that I know of."

At this point in the interview, SLOAN and his attorneys were told that there were no more questions. They asked to have a brief consultation in the hallway concerning the possibility of bringing up another matter. After a half-minute or so, SLOAN and the three attorneys returned indicating they had no more information. Attorney ROMATOWSKI said that his recollection regarding another issue had been erroneous.

MICHAEL LLOYD SPAFFORD, Partner, Swidler & Berlin, 3000 K Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20007, was interviewed via the telephone. MR. SPAFFORD was interviewed on the telephone in view of the fact that he is currently involved in a protracted trial in West Virginia and was not available for an in-person interview. MR. SPAFFORD was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. MR. SPAFFORD provided the following information:

He had never met VINCENT FOSTER, Deputy Counsel at the White House. His involvement with the FOSTER family and associated death investigation was limited to the search of VINCENT FOSTER's White House office on the afternoon of July 22, 1993. SPAFFORD explained that JIM HAMILTON, another partner at the Swidler & Berlin law firm, represented the FOSTER family and was unable to be at the search of FOSTER's office on that day. SPAFFORD substituted for him.

SPAFFORD said he "showed up" at the White House on the morning of July 22, 1993 at about 11:00 a.m. and "sat around a lot." He met DAVID MARGOLIS, U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) attorney, who was also waiting. It was SPAFFORD's understanding that BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Counsel, was taking care of issues with the President. SPAFFORD said he did not know this for a fact but made this assumption. NUSSBAUM met with SPAFFORD and asked him to wait. MARGOLIS was "in and out." SPAFFORD said he waited for some time as he was offered lunch during the period of his wait.

When the search of FOSTER's office finally commenced, SPAFFORD said that the following individuals were present: MARGOLIS, an FBI agent whose name SPAFFORD could not recall, two U.S. Park Police investigators - one with the last name of MARKLAND, one U.S. Secret Service agent who SPAFFORD could not identify, and several White House personnel to include NUSSBAUM, one of his aides, and someone believed to be from the Chief of Staff's office by the name of BILL, again SPAFFORD could not recall his last name. SPAFFORD had been asked by his partner,

JIM HAMILTON, to be at the search to represent MRS. FOSTER.

NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS took the lead in the search. NUSSBAUM identified the privilege issue which would have to be addressed. Procedures were agreed to and the search proceeded. It was agreed that NUSSBAUM would look through the documents in FOSTER's office and describe them to the assembled group. The documents would be placed into three piles: (1) personal affects of FOSTER; (2) clearly privileged documents; (3) miscellaneous documents. With respect to the pile of privileged affects, it was SPAFFORD's understanding that MARGOLIS would call JIM HAMILTON later regarding the review of these documents. SPAFFORD said no one was trying to impede the investigation but his law firm wanted to consult with their client (MRS. FOSTER) before investigators reviewed the documents from this pile. It was SPAFFORD's understanding the pile of miscellaneous documents would be discussed later by MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM. However, SPAFFORD does not know what happened with respect to these documents.

The search itself was very systematic. SPAFFORD recalled the desk being searched first, followed by the drawers, credenza, computer and one or two briefcases. The computer was not actually searched on the afternoon of July 22, 1993, but rather became an issue between MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM who agreed to pursue the computer at a later time. SPAFFORD could not recall if there was one or two briefcases in FOSTER's office. He distinctly remembered one and thought the second may have been a "transfile" rather than a briefcase. Both of these items were on the floor behind FOSTER's desk. SPAFFORD could not recall where the documents from the briefcase(s) and/or transfile were placed. As NUSSBAUM reviewed the documentation in FOSTER's office, he would make comments such as "this is privileged and relates to the President;" something personal such as "frequent flyer things," etc. NUSSBAUM discussed "types" of things. Investigators were not shown the documents. SPAFFORD doesn't recall a specific request by the investigators to see any documents.

It was SPAFFORD's understanding that there had been a discussion between NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS prior to the actual search of FOSTER's office. They had agreed to search the office for a suicide note or anything else in the office which might help further explain FOSTER's death. SPAFFORD believed NUSSBAUM and MARGOLIS would discuss a further search of FOSTER's office "after this."

At one point during the search, SPAFFORD said one of the investigators stood up and an aide to NUSSBAUM said "Hey, he's trying to look at the documents." It was SPAFFORD's understanding that the aide had said this to protect the privilege of the documents. NUSSBAUM replied to the comment by saying "Let's not get carried away ... Let's do what we agreed and not get confrontational." SPAFFORD observed that NUSSBAUM handled that situation and the search fairly well under difficult circumstances. He explained that White House personnel present were emotionally upset by FOSTER's death.

SPAFFORD said that to his knowledge, no areas outside of FOSTER's office were searched. No safe of any kind was searched in his presence. SPAFFORD did recall a "big, clear, plastic bag" of trash being searched. He recalled a discussion of the trash bag which they had "gotten back" but doesn't remember the source. SPAFFORD did not recall anything concerning FOSTER's burn bag. He said he was not sure he knew the difference between trash and a burn bag.

At the conclusion of the search, SPAFFORD packed one "transfile" box with FOSTER's personal documents. The box was not sealed but was closed by overlapping the flaps on the top of the box. SPAFFORD took this box back to his law offices and inventoried its contents that night. The box was then placed in a locked office and kept until it was turned over to MRS. FOSTER. SPAFFORD could not recall when these items were given to MRS. FOSTER. He said the inventory of the box was available at his law firm, but he would have to discuss its release with JIM HAMILTON at a later date if the Office of Independent Counsel would like to review this listing. SPAFFORD said a second box of items and documents from FOSTER's office was also given to his law firm, perhaps on the following Monday. This second box contained pictures, miscellaneous papers, perhaps an umbrella and other items from FOSTER's office bookshelves. SPAFFORD does not believe that this second box was inventoried. There was a total of two boxes of personal items from FOSTER's office which SPAFFORD was aware of. SPAFFORD said these boxes had been "looked through" by two U.S. Park Police (USPP) investigators. MARGOLIS had called the law firm and made arrangements for this review subsequent to the search of FOSTER's office. SPAFFORD-believes that these USPP investigators interviewed MRS. FOSTER on this occasion also, but he (SPAFFORD) was not personally involved.

When asked to give his perception of how investigators viewed the search of FOSTER's office, SPAFFORD replied that "investigators like to be in charge" and he said they "were not thrilled." The investigators would have preferred "to fish through it all." SPAFFORD said that MARGOLIS, however, understood the privilege issue and that NUSSBAUM did a good job of explaining his concerns. Again, SPAFFORD said it was his belief that MARGOLIS and NUSSBAUM had had a discussion up front concerning the privilege concerns. MARGOLIS understood that, but was also firm that there was an investigation to be conducted and investigators needed to see all "relevant" documentation. NUSSBAUM came up with a "mechanism to balance" everyone's concerns. SPAFFORD again reminded that White House Counsel personnel were emotionally upset at this time over the death of FOSTER. He said secretaries in the office were openly crying.

The following description of SPAFFORD was obtained through interview:

EUGENE BENTON SPERLING, who is generally known as GENE SPERLING, was interviewed in a conference room in the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. Participating in the interview was OIC Assistant Counsel BRETT M. KAVANAUGH. After being advised of the official identities of the interviewers and the nature of the interview, SPERLING provided the following information:

SPERLING currently serves as Deputy Assistant to the President for Economic Policy at the White House, where his telephone number is (202) 456-2620. ROBERT RUBIN, head of the National Economic Council, serves as Assistant to the President and is SPERLING's immediate superior. SPERLING was hired for the presidential campaign of BILL CLINTON on June 4, 1992. SPERLING served the CLINTON campaign as economic policy director during the general election campaign, and, following the election of President CLINTON, SPERLING served as deputy economic transition director under ROBERT REICH.

SPERLING had no contact with former Deputy White House Counsel VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. until after the election of President CLINTON when they both came to Washington, D.C. to assist in the transition. SPERLING first met FOSTER when they both participated in a ceremony in Little Rock, Arkansas, in January 1993 in which appointees to a number of high level posts in the CLINTON administration were introduced to the media.

SPERLING's office is located in the West Wing of the White House, and he shares his office with BILL GALSTON. Their office, which is located on the second floor, is located almost directly across the hall from the office of MAGGIE WILLIAMS, Chief of Staff for First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON.

SPERLING's office is also located in the vicinity of the White House Counsel's Office (WHCO) suite, where FOSTER formerly had his office. Because of the proximity of their offices, SPERLING would encounter FOSTER once or twice a day in passing. SPERLING basically only encountered FOSTER in the halls and had little contact with him. When FOSTER and SPERLING spoke, their conversations were not particularly lengthy or deep. In one typical conversation recalled by SPERLING, FOSTER remarked to SPERLING that he had liked comments which had been attributed to SPERLING in the press.

SPERLING formerly worked in New York for Governor MARIO CUOMO and others, and he was familiar with the treatment accorded by the Wall Street Journal (WSJ) to politicians whose views differed from those of the WSJ editorial staff. SPERLING knew that people in public office had a tendency to take too seriously any criticisms leveled at them by the WSJ. When the WSJ published an editorial entitled "Who Is Vincent Foster?", SPERLING approached FOSTER and jokingly asked him the same question. FOSTER seemed to take SPERLING's jibe reasonably well and commented that SPERLING had received better press than FOSTER lately.

SPERLING regards FOSTER as a big, lanky person who kept an even keel and who seemed to be gentle and nice. SPERLING was able to form this impression of FOSTER even though he and FOSTER only exchanged small talk.

SPERLING read an article, possibly written by JEFF GERTH in the New York Times, about Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan (MGSL) at some point during the campaign. SPERLING has no knowledge that FOSTER worked on either Whitewater or MGSL issues. SPERLING does not know whether the terms "Whitewater" or "Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan" had any meaning to him on July 20, 1993.

SPERLING is able to recall the day of July 20, 1993 rather clearly because that was the day when Judge LOUIS J. FREEH was named by President CLINTON to be the new Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). SPERLING regards HOWARD SHAPIRO, now serving on Director FREEH's staff, as his best friend, and SPERLING knew both SHAPIRO and Judge FREEH when they previously worked in New York. SPERLING had been monitoring the process in which Judge FREEH and others were considered for the position of Director of the FBI, and SPERLING was hoping that Judge FREEH would be named to the post. Prior to the Rose Garden ceremony at which President CLINTON named Judge FREEH to be FBI Director, SPERLING went to the WHCO suite to see SHAPIRO and to greet other people who had come to the White House for the ceremony. White House Counsel BERNARD NUSSBAUM commented what a great day it was, how the weather was beautiful and what a fine appointment Judge FREEH represented. SPERLING observed FOSTER standing in the WHCO suite looking on and, in retrospect, FOSTER did not appear as emotional or jovial as the other people in the suite. SPERLING was not struck by FOSTER's appearance at that time, only after FOSTER's death, when SPERLING reflected on the last times he had seen FOSTER. SPERLING remained in the WHCO suite for a short time and departed as Attorney General JANET RENO was entering.

On the night of July 20, 1993, President CLINTON was interviewed live at the White House by LARRY KING on the "Larry King Live" television program. One of SPERLING's responsibilities is to brief President CLINTON on current economic issues before the president appears on such programs. There was no organized briefing time prior to the start of the show, but GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS asked SPERLING to fire off for the president what would be the two most likely economic questions to be asked during the course of the program. This prebriefing took place prior to the broadcast as the president was being made up, and it consisted of SPERLING and other briefers posing questions to President CLINTON while STEPHANOPOULOS monitored the president's responses.

Once the program began, SPERLING went into another room where a large screen television had been set up so the White House staff could watch the program live. Other people in this viewing room with SPERLING included STEPHANOPOULOS, THOMAS F. "MACK" McLARTY, DAVID DREYER, RICKI SEIDMAN, DEE DEE MYERS and MARK GEARAN. SPERLING recalls that Senator BARBARA BOXER's daughter and a female companion may also have been in the viewing room. SPERLING cannot recall the name of Senator BOXER's daughter, but he recalls that she later married a brother of First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON.

PAUL BEGALA was present for the prebriefing of President CLINTON, but SPERLING cannot recall if BEGALA remained in the viewing room during the broadcast.

Approximately twenty to thirty minutes after the start of the show and while the staff members were watching the live broadcast, McLARTY and STEPHANOPOULOS were called out of the room by someone whose identity SPERLING does not recall. A short time later, DREYER left the viewing room and went out into the adjacent hallway. Shortly thereafter, SPERLING went out into the hallway and approached DREYER to ask him some work-related question. DREYER said that he was unable to focus and asked SPERLING if he knew what had happened. When SPERLING responded that he did not, DREYER advised him that FOSTER had committed suicide.

SPERLING then observed that a couple of things were going on. McLARTY and STEPHANOPOULOS were telephoning people to notify them of FOSTER's death, and they were also attempting to find some means to cancel an extension of "Larry King Live" to which President CLINTON had agreed. McLARTY and STEPHANOPOULOS wanted the show to end quickly so that they could promptly notify President CLINTON of FOSTER's death. They were also attempting to figure out how to notify FOSTER's widow, LISA FOSTER, and to determine who should go to her house. The focus at that time was on how to tell people about FOSTER's death.

SPERLING has distinct knowledge about how the trash from FOSTER's office was handled that night. When the "Larry King Live" program ended at 10:00 p.m., all the staff members in the vicinity of the broadcast cleared out of the area and went back to the West Wing. In light of the situation, SPERLING wanted to help out in whatever way he could so he went upstairs in the West Wing for a little while. During the course of the evening, SPERLING wandered around the West Wing and probably went up and down the stairs a few times. On one of his trips to the second floor of the West Wing, SPERLING observed that the doors to the WHCO suite appeared to be open and the cleaning people were going into various rooms. It occurred to SPERLING that perhaps FOSTER's office should be left uncleaned that night, but he did not voice this view because he thought to himself that since the events in question were occurring inside the White House, people there would know the appropriate way to handle such matters.

At some point in the evening, probably between 10:00 p.m. and 12:00 midnight, SPERLING and SYLVIA MATHEWS were manning the telephones in McLARTY's office. At that time, MATHEWS was a Special Assistant to ROBERT RUBIN, but she is now RUBIN's staff director. MATHEWS mentioned to SPERLING that she thought the burn bags had been removed from the offices in the WHCO suite, and she said that she thought FOSTER's family would be upset because of the possibility that anything FOSTER may have written about the reasons for his suicide and then discarded might be lost. MATHEWS's comment reminded SPERLING that he had had a similar thought earlier but had not taken action on it. SPERLING agreed with MATHEWS that it would be advisable to locate FOSTER's trash, and MATHEWS went around the West Wing and spoke to the custodial staff in an effort to identify which trash bags may have been removed from FOSTER's office. MATHEWS was told by the custodial staff that the burn bags had been collected and put into larger bags. MATHEWS eventually obtained from the custodial staff two large bags containing a number of smaller plastic bags of trash.

When SPERLING returned to McLARTY's office, MATHEWS had some of the contents of one of these two bags on the office floor. SPERLING felt a little uncomfortable looking at someone else's confidential trash. MATHEWS believed she had retrieved the correct trash, i.e., the trash from FOSTER's office, but she found nothing relevant to FOSTER's death in the trash. MATHEWS placed any papers believed to have come from FOSTER's office in a neat stack.

NUSSBAUM came by the office, and he was still very upset and unable to focus on anything. BILL BURTON was also in the office at some point. NUSSBAUM expressed some concern that the documents being examined could include materials which may have come from the confidential trash in his office or from the office of First Lady CLINTON. However, NUSSBAUM did not instruct SPERLING or MATHEWS to stop what was being done before he left the office.

SPERLING had originally hired MATHEWS and she had served as his deputy during the CLINTON presidential campaign. SPERLING was still uncomfortable with MATHEWS continuing to review the confidential trash. As MATHEWS finished with the first large bag and prepared to open the second bag of trash, SPERLING told her not to continue. MATHEWS appeared startled, like a deer caught in an automobile's headlights, and she asked SPERLING if she was doing something wrong. SPERLING told MATHEWS that he had no idea whether what they were doing was wrong, and he tried to imagine what course of action his father, an attorney, would advise. SPERLING concluded that his father would not look at the trash, and he directed MATHEWS to stop the examination of the trash.

SPERLING picked up the unopened bag, MATHEWS gathered the documents from the first bag, and they put all of these materials into ROY NEEL's office and locked the door as they left. SPERLING believes the second bag was secured shut in some manner, but he is unable to recall whether it was stapled shut or secured in some other way. SPERLING's belief that the second bag was sealed is based on the fact that he had an opportunity to tell MATHEWS not to open the bag before she did so. SPERLING does not know what happened to either the documents or the bags after that night.

In response to an inquiry about specifically which bags and documents were put into NEEL's office, SPERLING stated that MATHEWS brought in the small pile of papers which she had flattened out during the course of her examination. SPERLING has a general recollection, of which he is fifty percent certain, that the first bag opened by MATHEWS was also placed into NEEL's office.

In SPERLING's office, his regular trash is discarded into trash cans lined with clear plastic bags. SPERLING does not recall if the bags being reviewed by MATHEWS that night were clear plastic or not. SPERLING simply has no recollection of the color of those bags. SPERLING is not entirely sure if MATHEWS was certain that each of the documents she separated out specifically pertained to FOSTER or just that she thought the document could have a connection to FOSTER's office.

Members of the White House staff "felt bad" that McLARTY had to keep a stiff upper lip and continue to perform his duties despite having known FOSTER for a long time. For example, McLARTY had to make decisions about matters such as whether or not to clear President CLINTON's schedule for the following day once the president knew of FOSTER's death.

SPERLING does not think he has spoken with MATHEWS about the burn bags since that night. In fact, SPERLING recalls that he has not spoken with MATHEWS herself, but he has spoken with her attorney. SPERLING and MATHEWS have discussed the thought of speaking to each other about the events of that night, but they sought advice from others and were told not to talk with each other. MATHEWS has told SPERLING that she considered writing down on July 21, 1993 her recollections of the preceding night but she did not do so.

SPERLING learned of the subsequent discovery of a torn note in FOSTER's briefcase from reading the newspapers. SPERLING recalls that people on the White House staff were upset that press accounts of the note's discovery were critical of the manner in which the White House staff had handled the matter. Staff members felt there had been valid concerns about wanting to first notify President CLINTON, who was out of town at the time, and LISA FOSTER about the discovery of the note before information about the existence of the note was released to the public.

SPERLING does not believe that he entered the WHCO suite the night of July 20, 1993. SPERLING holds this belief because he recalls that FOSTER's office was not boarded up as he might have expected. SPERLING only recalls seeing the custodial staff enter the WHCO suite but he is not one hundred percent certain that he did not see anyone else enter the suite that night.

SPERLING does not recall engaging in any discussion with NUSSBAUM that night about entering FOSTER's office. SPERLING recalls NUSSBAUM remarking that it had been such a good day that FOSTER's death did not make any sense. SPERLING did not view FOSTER's suicide as strange since SPERLING recalled that the incidence of suicide increases during such happy times as holiday seasons.

SPERLING recalls directing MATHEWS to clear actions with NUSSBAUM before initiating them, e.g., trying to locate the burn bags. However, NUSSBAUM was not focused, and SPERLING does not believe there was any real resolution as to whether NUSSBAUM approved these actions. Based on MATHEWS's startled response to SPERLING when he told her to cease examining the confidential trash and her obvious concern about not wanting to do anything with even the appearance of impropriety, SPERLING concluded that MATHEWS had not been told by NUSSBAUM or anyone else to stop looking at the trash.

SPERLING did see MAGGIE WILLIAMS on the second floor of the West Wing the night of July 20, 1993. WILLIAMS was in the hallway outside her office, and she was crying and having an emotional hug with someone whose identity SPERLING cannot recall. SPERLING cannot recall if this person with WILLIAMS was a male or a female, but he believes this person was someone who had come up to the second floor just to talk to WILLIAMS. SPERLING may have offered his condolences to WILLIAMS while they were on the second floor, but they did not engage in conversation. WILLIAMS appeared very upset and she was sobbing. SPERLING does not recall observing WILLIAMS carrying anything in her arms since she was engaged in embracing someone. SPERLING does not recall seeing WILLIAMS on any other occasion that night.

Later that night, there was a conversation in STEPHANOPOULOS's office about canceling President CLINTON's schedule for the following day. At various times, this office has been the office of STEPHANOPOULOS, DAVID GERGEN and DEE DEE MYERS. There was discussion about designating a spokesperson to respond to inquiries relating to FOSTER's death. President and First Lady CLINTON opposed this idea because they believed FOSTER's death was a personal tragedy which would not attract significant media attention. HOWARD PASTER strongly favored designating one person to respond to inquiries and he argued that people in opposition to the idea did not understand Washington, D.C., and the way Washington thrives on gossip.

SPERLING does not recall observing PATSY THOMASSON that night. It is possible that he saw her but he does not recall doing so.

SPERLING recalls hearing general gossip that no note had been found and that FOSTER's death was inexplicable. There seemed to be a sense among people SPERLING spoke to early on that no note had been found but SPERLING is not certain how this sense developed, though perhaps it was because no note had been found next to FOSTER's body. SPERLING does not recall anyone specifically telling him that no note had been found. It was just an impression he formed.

SPERLING does not recall observing DEBORAH COYLE on July 20, 1993, but he cannot be certain because he recognizes COYLE's name but cannot picture what she looks like. SPERLING does not recall seeing SUSAN THOMASES that night, e.g., when the staff members were watching President CLINTON on the "Larry King Live" program. When asked whether he observed anyone else that night who was not on the White House staff, SPERLING again mentioned the daughter of Senator BOXER. SPERLING knows CHERYL MILLS but he is not certain about whether or not he saw MILLS that night. At approximately 11:30 p.m. that night, a number of people came into the White House, but SPERLING does not recall the identities of these people. People were milling around, hanging out near BRUCE LINDSEY's office, and many were wearing casual clothes. SPERLING knows EVELYN LIEBERMAN, and he does not recall seeing her that night.

SPERLING recalls that other people came in while he was hanging around LINDSEY's office. LINDSEY appeared to be very upset, and SPERLING recalls LINDSEY remaining mostly at his desk in his office. There were discussions about going to the FOSTER house, and McLARTY and HUBBELL were people regarded as likely to go there. SPERLING himself did not go to the FOSTER house either that night or anytime since then. In discussions about how to respond to media interest in FOSTER's death, HOWARD PASTER was very vocal in saying he wanted more of a strategy developed for responses to the media.

On July 20, 1993, SPERLING personally notified two people of FOSTER's death. Between 10:00 and 10:30 p.m., SPERLING telephoned ROBERT RUBIN at the Jefferson Hotel where RUBIN was living and notified him. At a time which SPERLING does not recall, McLARTY asked SPERLING to bring RICKI SEIDMAN to McLARTY so that he could tell her of FOSTER's death. When SPERLING approached SEIDMAN and asked her to accompany him, SEIDMAN refused to move until SPERLING told her what was going on so SPERLING had to break the news to her.

SPERLING does not recall any discussions about anything embarrassing or damaging in FOSTER's office. He does not recall NUSSBAUM talking about FOSTER's office being sealed. Although it is possible SPERLING mentioned the subject of sealing FOSTER's office to someone since the thought did occur to SPERLING that night, he does not recall having any such conversation.

SPERLING did not observe anyone in First Lady CLINTON's office. He believes the doors to the office were closed as they usually were at that time of the evening.

When asked by the interviewers what had been discussed in terms of talk about what may have been in FOSTER's office as well as the need to seal FOSTER's office, SPERLING stated that he had formed a general impression that there had been some sort of minimal effort made relating to FOSTER's office. SPERLING does not recall any specific conversations about these subjects. SPERLING cannot now distinguish what he knew the night of July 20, 1993 versus what he may have learned four days later, perhaps from press accounts. SPERLING has no knowledge that anything other than the trash was removed from FOSTER's office either that night or the following morning.

SPERLING has not spoken with either BERNARD NUSSBAUM or MAGGIE WILLIAMS about who had access to FOSTER's office that night.

SPERLING knows the name CRAIG LIVINGSTONE but he is not certain he would recognize LIVINGSTONE the person.

SPERLING left the White House between 12:30 and 2:00 a.m. on July 21, 1993. He believes he was alone when he left but he may have been with SYLVIA MATHEWS.

SPERLING currently arrives at his office each day at 7:00 a.m., but he formerly arrived somewhat later. SPERLING does not recall what time he arrived for work on July 21, 1993, but it was probably around 7:50 a.m. He has no recollection of coming in for work extremely early that day. SPERLING recalls that the doors to the WHCO suite were closed when he walked past them on the way to his office.

SPERLING was not involved in any discussions about the procedure to be employed in the review of the documents in FOSTER's office. SPERLING did not engage in conversations at that time or since then about how the review of documents was conducted.

SPERLING believes he read in the newspapers about the torn FOSTER note being found. SPERLING teased STEVEN NEUWIRTH about his notoriety after SPERLING learned that NEUWIRTH had found the note. NEUWIRTH said that it was notoriety he could do without. SPERLING does not recall having any other conversations with NEUWIRTH regarding the note other than one in which he teased NEUWIRTH about why it took six days to discover the note. SPERLING does not recall having any informed conversation with anyone abut the circumstances surrounding the discovery of the note, just chatting with other people. SPERLING recalls that he was interested in the subject of the note at that time, but he only recalls speaking with other people whose knowledge of the situation came from reading the newspapers rather than through direct involvement or knowledge.

SPERLING believes there was a very moving White House staff meeting in Room 450 in which President CLINTON addressed the staff in the aftermath of FOSTER's death.

EUGENE BENTON SPERLING, who is generally known as GENE SPERLING, was contacted telephonically at his office in the White House, telephone number (202) 456-2620. SPERLING was familiar with the interviewing agent from an earlier interview of SPERLING which had been conducted at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), Washington, D.C., on December 20, 1994. The interviewing agent placed the call to SPERLING from the OIC offices, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490 North, Washington, D.C. After being advised of the nature of the interview, SPERLING provided the following information:

SPERLING recalls that the examination of confidential trash which occurred in the White House on July 20, 1993, was conducted in the office suite of Chief of Staff THOMAS F. "MACK" McLARTY. Specifically, the examination of the trash was conducted by SYLVIA MATHEWS on the floor of the reception area in McLARTY's suite. While she was examining the trash, MATHEWS was on the floor of the reception area just to the right of the doorway leading into the suite and immediately inside this doorway. SPERLING recalls that there were two chairs with their backs to the wall just inside and to the right of this doorway, and the examination occurred on the floor directly in front of these chairs.

The suite of the chief of staff has a doorway which leads into the reception area from a hallway. This reception-area is where the secretaries and executive assistants are located. From the doorway, McLARTY's office is located to the right of the reception area and can be entered through a doorway from the reception area. The office of the deputy chief of staff is located to the left of the reception area and can also be entered through a doorway from the reception area.

SPERLING is not certain about the disposition of the papers which MATHEWS segregated from the other confidential trash during the course of her examination. SPERLING is certain that, once the examination of the trash was ended, both bags of confidential trash were put on the floor of the office of the deputy chief of staff. ROY NEEL was the deputy chief of staff at that time. SPERLING is less certain that the segregated papers were also put on the floor near the bags. SPERLING is not suggesting that the papers were not put on the floor in NEEL's office, but his recollection regarding these papers is less clear than his recollection regarding the confidential trash bags. Once the items were placed on the floor of NEEL's office, the door to NEEL's office was pulled shut and locked.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, Staff Assistant to The White House Chief of Staff was interviewed at the law offices of Brand & Lowell, 923 15th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20005, telephone 202-662-9700 in the presence of his attorney, STANLEY M. BRAND. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, STEPHANOPOULOS provided the following information:

STEPHANOPOULOS confirmed that he was at The White House the night of VINCE FOSTER's death and said that he left that evening at approximately 11:00 although he does not have a clear recollection of the time. He recalls one telephone conversation with WEBB HUBBELL during which he advised HUBBELL of VINCE FOSTER, JR.'s death. STEPHANOPOULOS does not recall any subsequent telephone conversation with WEBB HUBBELL or with any other individual who was calling him from the FOSTER residence and discussing any issue of press coverage at the FOSTER residence and the advisability of assisting the family with that potential problem. The only press related issue that STEPHANOPOULOS recalls dealing with that evening was going over a press statement on the FOSTER death that had been written by DAVID DREYER of the Office of Communications.

STEPHANOPOULOS advised that he did not handle or know of any arrangements for having someone at the FOSTER residence to deal with the press, either the evening of FOSTER's death or the following morning. He advised that Press Secretary DEE DEE MYERS would have handled such arrangements and if MYERS had not handled the issue, he does not know who would have handled it if the President was not planning to visit the residence.

With regard to his recollection of the early morning hours of July 21, 1993, the day after FOSTER's death, STEPHANOPOULOS advised that he probably arrived to work at his usual time, which was about 6:30 am. He read the newspapers and advised that he must have read articles about VINCE FOSTER although he has no specific recollection of doing so. He does not have any recollection of seeing any individual early that morning between the hours of approximately 6:30 and 8:00 am. He does not recall what time he went down to the basement level to get coffee at the Navy Mess but advised that he generally does so between 7:30 and 8:30, sometimes before the staff meeting at 8:00 and sometimes after it. He has no recollection of seeing anybody carrying a briefcase but advised that that would have been such a common thing to see that it would not have made any impact on his memory.

He advised that he knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and has no recollection whether or not LIVINGSTONE stopped in to see him between the time of STEPHANOPOULOS' arrival to The White House at approximately 6:30 am and 8:30 when activities began to occur. He said that in the last two years he has probably received about a half dozen visits from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, all brief and business related. The only incident he recalled enough to describe involved a reporter from Pittsburgh who was doing a story on CRAIG LIVINGSTONE because LIVINGSTONE is from Pittsburgh. He spoke to the reporter briefly on LIVINGSTONE's behalf.

STEPHANOPOULOS also did not recall any specific conversation with his Executive Assistant, HEATHER BECKEL, on the morning of July 21, 1993. He had a vague recollection that there was a meeting in DAVID WATKINS' office with an entity that could have been the Park Police later in the morning, but has no other recollections of that morning.

Mr. Charles J. Stough was interviewed at the Turkey Run Maintenance Facilities, U.S. Park Services, Fairfax County, Virginia. Mr. Stough was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information.

Mr. Stough advised that for the past seven years he has been employed as a tree worker for the U.S. Park Service, Washington, D.C., and presently resides at 9938 Forest View Place, Gaithersburg, Maryland (telephone number 301-963-5934). Mr. Stough's supervisor is Mr. Mark White, who can be located on 703-285-2701.

Mr. Stough advised that to the best of his recollection on July 20, 1993, he completed his work day with the U.S. Park Service in the late afternoon and joined a fellow U.S. Park Service employee, Mr. Francis Swann in a "moonlighting" job trimming trees at a private residence in Northern Virginia. He maintained that after completing this after-job activity at approximately 5:00 p.m. on July 20th, he and Mr. Swann purchased a six-pack of beer at a convenience store and drove to the Turkey Run Maintenance Center in order for him to secure his private vehicle.

Mr. Stough further advised that since there was unusually heavy traffic on this particular evening, Mr. Swann parked his vehicle in the Turkey Run Maintenance parking area, directly opposite a public telephone and both proceeded to consume two or three beers apiece. According to Mr. Stough, sometime between 5:30 and 6:00 p.m., a white van entered the parking area and the occupant of the van engaged him in conversation while he, Mr. Stough, was walking from Mr. Swann's vehicle to his own vehicle. Mr. Stough stated that the driver of this white van specifically asked him if he would call the Park Police, further informing Mr. Stough that he had seen a body at Fort Marcy Park and that it looked like this man had been shot and that he looked dead. He further added that he strongly believed that the occupant of this van informed him that the body of this individual was behind the second cannon at Fort Marcy Park. After receiving this notification from the occupant of the white van, Mr. Stough called Mr. Swann over and believes that the occupant of the white van repeated the same information to Mr. Swann. He recalls asking Mr. Swann if he had the telephone number to report information regarding the dead body to the U.S. Park Police.

Mr. Stough further commented that while he could not recall the exact words spoken by the occupant of the white van, he was fairly certain that he mentioned a "body by the second cannon." He advised that he did not ask any questions of the occupant of the white van which immediately departed the parking lot after furnishing this notification to himself and Mr. Swann.

Mr. Stough specifically remembers that after the van departed the area, Mr. Swann utilized the payphone located to the right of the entrance to the Turkey Run Maintenance Park to call the U.S. Park Police and to inform them of the information they received from the occupant of this van. He stated that he could not recall the exact words used by Mr. Swann in notifying the U.S. Park Police authorities and that immediately after concluding this telephone call, both he and Swann left the area in separate vehicles, returning to their residences.

In an effort to further clarify the above information supplied by Mr. Stough, he stated that he was intimately familiar with Fort Marcy Park, since his work with the Park Service required him to often trim trees in that particular park. As such, he stated he knew the exact location of the second or top cannon in Fort Marcy Park which, in his opinion, gave more credibility to the occupant in the van when he reported the disposition of the dead body. Mr. Stough also advised that he was never interviewed by U.S. Park Police officials regarding this particular incident, nor did he volunteer any information to the U.S. Park Police when it became public information that the dead body in Fort Marcy Park on July 20th was, in fact, a White House official. According to Mr. Stough, his silence regarding this issue was justified since he was informed by Mr. Swann a few days after the July 20, 1993 discovery of the body that he (Swann) had provided detailed information to the U.S. Park Police regarding this matter. Stough further related that in his opinion, the failure of Mr. Swann to identify himself when notifying the U.S. Park Police of the information related by the occupant of the van was generally a hesitancy to get involved with police authorities, as well as to a minor concern that they were drinking beer in a U.S. Park Service facility. Mr. Stough further maintained that, with the exception of brief discussions with Mr. Swann shortly after the discovery of Mr. Foster's body, he has had no other discussions with fellow workers regarding this issue, nor has he been contacted by the media regarding this particular incident. Furthermore, Mr. Stough vehemently denied that he was in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993, to include a denial that he discovered the body of Mr. Foster.

Mr. Stough furnished the following descriptive data regarding the above cited van, as well as a description of the occupant:

Vehicle: Late model (early to mid-1980's), white service van, possibly a Chevrolet. Service van believed to have been engaged in heating/cooling or air conditioning business, with a possibility that heating and plumbing materials such as valves or old air conditioners were located in the van. On the driver's side of the van was blue and red lettering, with a possibility of a 703 prefix also on the driver's panel side of the door. The vehicle had two doors in the rear and vehicle appeared to have been well-used with some dents and scrapes.

Occupant:

Race/Sex: White male

Age: Late 40s (45-48)

Weight/Body: 210-215 lbs., stocky build

Height: 5'7"-5'8"

Hair: Light brown, worn short, not over the ears

Face:	No facial hair, rounded face, slightly chubby, possibility of black-rimmed eyeglasses
Speech:	No noticeable accent
Dress:	Standard service company, white in color, with collared shirt. Believed to have company name or wearer's name on breast pocket.

In addition to the above information, Mr. Stough stated that the occupant of the van appeared slightly nervous but composed and did not demonstrate any outward manifestations of being gay. He further maintained that, with the exception of Mr. Swann, there were no other individuals in the parking area the evening of July 20, 1993, who would be in a position to provide further description of this van or the occupant. Mr. Stough concluded by stating that he felt fairly confident that he would be able to recognize in the future the occupant of the above-described white van.

Subsequently, the confidential witness advised that since a year had almost elapsed since he reported the location of Mr. FOSTER's body, he could not positively identify as the white male Park Service employee he notified on July 20, 1993.

Mr. Francis Elbert Swann was interviewed at his place of employment, U.S. National Park Service Maintenance Yard, located off the George Washington Memorial Parkway, Alexandria, Virginia. At the outset, he was advised of the identities of Special Agents William E. Colombell and Lawrence Monroe and further informed that they wished to interview him concerning an ongoing investigation relating to the death of Vincent Foster at Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993.

Mr. Swann stated that he has been employed by the National Park Service since June of 1966. He stated that on July 20, 1993, he was assigned to work in the South end of the George Washington Memorial Parkway in the vicinity of Mt. Vernon, driving a street cleaning truck. Mr. Swann stated that he returned to the National Airport Maintenance Yard at approximately 3:00 p.m. and met up with a fellow employee, Chuck Stough, explaining that he had lined up a side job to cut down a tree at a private residence in McLean, Virginia, and that Chuck was going to assist him. Mr. Swann stated that he and Stough drove directly from the National Airport Maintenance Yard to the private home site in Swann's truck. Mr. Swann was unable to provide the address for this private home, but stated that if need be, he could point it out to the agents. They finished up the tree cutting job at approximately 5:00-5:15 p.m. and then stopped to pick up a six-pack of Budweiser at a 7-11 located on Chain Bridge Road in McLean. He then drove to the Turkey Run Maintenance Yard off the GW Parkway (Stough had his car parked there) and parked in the front parking lot back towards the pine trees that are located to your left as you drive into the maintenance yard. Mr. Swann stated that they both had three beers and were getting ready to leave the yard when a white male in a white Chevy van pulled into the maintenance yard off of the GW Parkway. He estimated the time to be approximately 5:45 p.m. The van pulled up to where he and Chuck were sitting. At the time, both he and Chuck were still in their park service uniforms. Mr. Swann advised that the van driver asked if they worked for the park service and they responded in the affirmative. The van driver then stated words to the effect that "there is a body down at Fort Marcy up by the cannon and could they call the police." Mr. Swann further added that as best he recalls, the driver of the van also remarked that he had been walking through Fort Marcy Park and saw "this body that apparently looked like it was dead."

Mr. Swann advised that using a pay phone located in the parking lot area, he called the police on 911 and believes he reached the Fairfax County Police, informing them of the information provided by the van driver. As best he recalls, the operator told him that Fort Marcy was Federal park jurisdiction and that he should also call the U.S. Park Police. Mr. Swann advised that he then called the Park Police using the same public telephone, adding that the Park Police number was located on a outside bulletin board next to the phone. He advised that he called the Park Police within a few minutes after hanging up with the Fairfax County Police.

Mr. Swann stated that he provided the same information to the Park Police, adding that he did not give his name because he did not want to get involved. He stated that he wanted to be sure that if someone needed help, they received it, but he didn't want to be answering all kinds of questions and wasn't sure whether the whole thing was just made up or a joke. Mr. Swann stated that after he talked to the Park Police, he and Stough left the Turkey Run Maintenance area and he proceeded directly home.

Mr. Swann stated that when leaving, he noticed that there were a few park rangers still at the maintenance yard, but neither he nor Chuck said anything to the rangers. As best he recalls, upon arriving home, he discussed the matter with his wife, stating that by that time, he believes it was already on the news.

Mr. Swann stated that the driver of the van was at the Turkey Run Maintenance parking lot no more than 30 seconds. He never got out of the truck and when he drove out he went North on the George Washington Parkway. He stated that he and Stough did not press the individual for more information. As best he recalls, as soon as the van left, he and Stough discussed the situation briefly and then he proceeded to the pay phone to call the authorities. He was unable to recall the exact conversation that he had with the Fairfax Police and Park Police authorities, adding that he tried to give them every bit of information provided by the van driver.

Mr. Swann described the driver of the van as follows: white male, age approximately 45-50, dark or black hair with a receding hairline, speckled with gray, approximately 200-210 pounds, chubby, height - approximately 5'9"-5'10" (difficult to estimate because the driver never got out of the van), rounded face, clean-shaven, wearing a short-sleeved shirt with collar, color - light blue with possible vertical stripes (definitely a working-type shirt rather than a dress shirt), no noticeable accent. Mr. Swann stated that only he and Chuck saw or spoke to this individual. He stated that he has not seen the van or the individual since, adding that he probably could identify him if he saw him again. Mr. Swann stated that it was his impression that the man was just trying to help. He did not appear to be in an agitated or nervous state.

Swann described the van as a 1987 or 88 Chevy or GMC, three-quarter ton, possibly bearing Virginia tags, windowless doors in rear, possibly a sliding door on passenger side with blue writing on side, possibly some type of advertising. Swann further stated that it could have been a plumber's van, since he saw through the driver side window what appeared to be pipes in the rear of the van.

At the conclusion of the interview, Mr. Swann was specifically asked if he or his friend Chuck had been at Fort Marcy Park that day and found the body but failed to report it, fearing reprisal from park authorities either because of their moonlighting activities or because they were drinking on park property. Mr. Swann answered without any hesitation that he had not been at Fort Marcy Park that day or for some time, and stated that he was not in any manner involved in the discovery of Mr. Foster's body.

Mr. Swann provided the following background information about himself:

The first page of the fax identifies the second page as a "page out of my appointment section of my Filofax for July 20 and 21, 1993". The second page of the fax from THOMASES indicates that she was in Washington, D.C. on July 21, 1993 but not July 20, 1993.

THOMASES has explained that the notation on the July 21st entry in the upper left hand corner of the page indicating "D.C." was her method of recording days she was actually in Washington, D.C. For the date of July 20, 1993 there is no such notation, and she therefore knows that she was not in Washington, D.C. on that date.

The information depicted on this calendar is consistent with THOMASES interview by the FBI on June 14, 1994.

Ms. THOMASES was informed that in an effort to finish up our investigation, she was being requested to visit the Independent Counsel office in Washington, D.C. for the purpose of being deposed under oath regarding her activities and whereabouts on the night of July 20/21, 1993. She stated that she would have her attorney, BENITO ROMANO, telephone MARK STEIN as soon as possible to set up a date. During the discussion, it appeared that Wednesday, August 10, would probably be a suitable date that would fit into her schedule.

In addition, Ms. THOMASES was asked whether or not she currently or in the past had been in possession of a White House staff pass. She stated that she did have her own White House staff pass when she was part of the transition and may have still been in possession of The White House staff pass in July of 1993. To the best of her recollection, she believes she gave it back prior to that time, probably some time in April or May of 1993. To the best of her recollection, when she did return it, it was given to Mr. CRAIG LIVINGSTONE, The Director of White House Security. She stated that Mr. LIVINGSTONE should have an exact record of when The White House pass was returned. She also stated that The White House should have an official photograph of her that was taken in connection with her having a White House staff pass.

SUSAN P. THOMASES, was contacted by telephone at the law firm of WILLKIE, FARR, and GALLAGHER, 153 East 53rd Street, New York, New York where she is employed as an attorney and a partner. After being advised as to the official identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, Ms. THOMASES provided the following information:

She resides at 929 Park Avenue, New York, New York, has a non-published home telephone number, but can be reached by telephone at her New York office through 212-821-8275. She works the majority of her time in New York City but with her firm having had an office in Washington, D.C. since 1981, she routinely comes to Washington on Wednesdays and returns to New York on Thursday evenings. She is the managing partner of her firm's Washington, D.C. office.

She first met VINCENT FOSTER, JR. in Arkansas during 1976 through her friends BILL and HILLARY CLINTON. She served with HILLARY CLINTON on the Children's Defense Board and has known both HILLARY and BILL CLINTON for approximately 20 years. She regarded VINCENT FOSTER as a friend although she only saw him approximately once or twice a year during the period 1976 through 1991, when she would visit the CLINTONs and/or come to Arkansas on business.

In July, 1991, she moved to Arkansas to begin working full time on BILL CLINTON's Presidential campaign. During the entire campaign, she was in charge of daily scheduling for CLINTON and for campaign events. She continued this work on a part-time basis throughout the transition period from the BUSH administration to the CLINTON administration handling scheduling matters for the newly elected President. Toward the end of the transition period in December, 1992, she returned to her law practice in New York and Washington. Since she had met many volunteers during the CLINTON campaign who took positions with the new administration, she often visited with them during her weekly trips to her Washington, D.C. office. She therefore during the campaign, transition, and the first six months of the CLINTON administration, got to know VINCENT FOSTER fairly well.

She last saw VINCENT FOSTER on Wednesday or Thursday before his death. She believes that they had lunch together with some other people in Washington. She recalls him mentioning he planed to take a weekend trip to the eastern shore of Maryland. She noted no change in his demeanor or physical appearance but was aware that he was working very hard and was under considerable pressure. His death came as a complete shock to her and she can offer no reason or speculation as to why he may have taken his life.

SUSAN THOMASES was not in Washington on July 20, 1993, the date of VINCENT FOSTER, JR.'s death. She checked her personal 1993 calendar to verify this. She said that she cannot recall the last time that she was at The White House prior to FOSTER's death. She learned of his "suicide" via a telephone call from either HILLARY CLINTON or BERNARD NUSSBAUM. She cannot recall which one of them first told her about FOSTER's death because she talked to both of them by phone on the night of his death. She was at her residence in New York when she received these telephone calls. Although she cannot recall exactly when she spoke to HILLARY CLINTON and BERNARD NUSSBAUM that evening, she does recall that it was after dark. The next day, Wednesday, July 21, 1993, she went to her Washington, D.C. office as previously scheduled. Although she cannot recall she believes that she went to The White House on July 21 or July 22 to express her condolences to those there whom she knew. She did not go to the FOSTER funeral in Arkansas. She did not go to VINCENT FOSTER's office on July 21 or July 22 and cannot recall the last time she was in his office although it was quite some time before his death.

Ms. THOMASES continues to regard HILLARY and BILL CLINTON as friends and visits with them from time to time when she is in Washington.

On 4/12/94 LINDA R. TRIPP, Executive Assistant to the Counsel to the President, The White House, (202) 456-2681, appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington D.C. for a pre-scheduled interview. She was accompanied by her attorney, SANDRA WILKINSON, of the law firm of PAUL HASTINGS, JANOFSKY & WALKER, 1299 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington D.C., (202) 508-9593. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and introduced to attorneys for the Independent Counsel, RODERICK C. LANKLER and CARL STICH, who were also present, TRIPP provided the following information:

TRIPP advised that her job was Executive Assistant to BERNARD NUSSBAUM. She has had the same title since April 1993 and was previously in the White House Chief of Staff's office during the Bush Administration. She is one of only two individuals still employed at the White House from the Bush Administration.

TRIPP worked in the same physical area where NUSSBAUM and VINCENT FOSTER JR. and their Executive Assistants were located. TRIPP and BETSY POND worked for Mr. NUSSBAUM but had daily contact with FOSTER and would take messages and otherwise assist FOSTER's Executive Assistant, DEBORAH GORHAM, when necessary.

TRIPP met FOSTER right after PRESIDENT CLINTON's inauguration. She would occasionally take phone messages for him. Her contact with him was "daily and continual" as the physical area of the offices and the Executive Assistant's desks is relatively small. She characterized her relationship with FOSTER as warm and professional. She believes she was the last person in the office to see him alive and that was in the early afternoon of July 20, 1994.

TRIPP characterized FOSTER as a wonderful, warm, kind person who was respectful to all people. He was reserved and very private, with a soft-spoken distinct Arkansas accent. He maintained very fond relationships with NUSSBAUM, HILLARY

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

CLINTON, MARSHA SCOTT, and his family. He had extremely professional and cordial relationships with GORHAM, DEBORAH COYLE (phonetic), and BRUCE LINDSEY. TRIPP opined that he may have considered WEBB HUBBELL and HILLARY CLINTON to be personal confidantes. Nobody outside of the Arkansas "group" would be considered a confidante.

FOSTER did not appear to TRIPP to have any weaknesses, including not being too "thin skinned". The work environment in the whole office was always at "mach speed" and FOSTER was an intensely serious and extremely focused person. In retrospect, TRIPP recalled that when she first met FOSTER he was more relaxed, had a twinkle in his eyes. She advised that for the first few weeks she did not notice any change, but then she noticed that his pants were cinched, reflecting a weight loss, that his normal characteristics seemed exaggerated--meaning he was more quiet, more gentle, more subdued and reserved. She was not aware of him taking any medication or having a doctor.

FOSTER worked very long hours. He was at work, and appeared to be well settled in, by the time TRIPP arrived to work every morning at 8:00AM and would frequently stay until 8:00PM and even later. His family did not join him in Washington right away because one child did not graduate from High School until June 1993 so he was "free" to work long hours. But his children loomed large in his life and they were frequently visiting the White House and calling their father at work.

TRIPP advised that she never saw an incident where he did not handle stress well. She heard that he lost his temper on one occasion over the Travelgate matter. As TRIPP understood the matter, FOSTER wanted to take the "fall" instead of NUSSBAUM, and was overheard to say, "This is my blame. Let me take it."

TRIPP advised that FOSTER's relationship with HILLARY CLINTON was very friendly. They had the freedom to walk back and forth between one another's office and did so-- not daily, not even weekly, but it was not unusual. HILLARY CLINTON was equally friendly with others.

Some time in the days preceding FOSTER's death, TRIPP asked GORHAM, "What's wrong with Vince?" GORHAM responded with one word, "government". There was no further elaboration. Within a week of his death, possibly the day before it, GORHAM told TRIPP that FOSTER approached GORHAM and, with an uncharacteristic and intense sincerity, asked her, "How are you doing?" A brief conversation ensued and, although TRIPP did not recall who said the words first, she remembered GORHAM telling her that during that conversation both VINCE and GORHAM said they felt "spiritually empty". GORHAM and FOSTER were not personally close and even their professional relationship, while very cordial, was not particularly "close". (For example, FOSTER would record dictation, then give the tapes to GORHAM-- they did not physically work together such as might occur if he dictated to her personally.) It is partly for that reason that this exchange between GORHAM and FOSTER was sufficiently unusual that GORHAM commented on it to TRIPP. TRIPP speculated that maybe that was a brief window into FOSTER and maybe he was "reaching out". TRIPP noted that FOSTER had received a great deal of undeserved bad press and that maybe the timing of the conversation had something to do with that.

TRIPP did not observe FOSTER to be a religious person, but thought he probably was of a background and social milieu that included church attendance.

The Friday before the first of July, FOSTER observed TRIPP packing up preparing to be gone from her job for several weeks vacation and asked her what was up. She told him her plans and suggested to him that he could use a break too. He said, "That would be nice." But the only vacation she knew him to take was the weekend shortly before his death there were last minute plans for him and his wife, LISA FOSTER, to spend a weekend with the CARDOZAS (phonetic) and the HUBBELLs. After the weekend, he merely said it was a "very nice weekend" in response to TRIPP's casual question.

On the day of July 20, 1994 her focus was on NUSSBAUM, who, along with herself and POND, were totally engaged in the ceremony appointing LOUIS FREEH the new Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), which took place in the Rose Garden late in the morning. FOSTER was not involved in that, and TRIPP does not recall what he was doing during the morning hours. He attended the Rose Garden ceremony, but instead of sitting in the audience which would have been a normal pattern, he stood on the periphery, on the sidewalk which connects the wings of the White House. It is only with the benefit of hindsight that TRIPP can say that he seemed "distracted and a little down".

GORHAM left the office shortly after noon, so TRIPP was covering for her for FOSTER, who was still in his office. FOSTER came out of his office and looked at the cafeteria menu, choosing a hamburger. TRIPP left him with TOM CASTLETON while she went to get his lunch. She dumped a whole handful of M&M candies on his tray as a pleasantry. When she returned CASTLETON was gone. FOSTER asked her what took her so long and said he had sent CASTLETON to go find her. TRIPP was surprised that FOSTER would send CASTELTON to look for her because she had not been gone very long. FOSTER seemed in a rush. He sat at his couch, eating and reading the newspaper. He removed the onions from his hamburger, which struck TRIPP as odd in retrospect. She couldn't understand why he would do that if he was planning to commit suicide. It did not make sense to her that he might be worried about his breath if that were the case. TRIPP does not know if FOSTER likes or dislikes onions. She had never ordered lunch for him before and made a mental note of his preference at the time in case she ever ordered lunch for him again.

Shortly after she left him eating and reading the newspaper FOSTER came out of his office with his jacket on and empty-handed. He said, "There are lot's of M&Ms left in there. I'll be back." There was nothing unusual about his demeanor and he did not seem distressed. TRIPP advised that it was FOSTER's habit to carry his briefcase with him when he traveled to and from work. When he left the office at shortly after 1:00PM he did not have anything with him. TRIPP did not know where he was going and it was not appropriate for her to ask him. He did not have any appointments noted on his office calendars or that anybody knew about.

Some time during the afternoon NUSSBAUM casually asked where FOSTER was, and POND, GORHAM, and TRIPP discussed whether or not they should page him and decided against it. TRIPP does not know if NUSSBAUM paged FOSTER. TRIPP left at 5:30 PM. COYLE, the President's secretary, called TRIPP at approximately midnight to notify her about FOSTER's apparent suicide. TRIPP called GORHAM and notified her, and left a message on POND's telephone answering machine in an attempt to notify her. She did not speak to anyone else that night. She arrived the next day at her usual time, approximately 8:00 AM.

She advised that sometime soon after the death, GORHAM told TRIPP that the morning of his death, much earlier than his leaving, FOSTER had placed three pieces of personal correspondence in the outgoing mail. The pieces were definitely personal, FOSTER having addressed them by hand and used stamps instead of officially franked envelopes. This was sufficiently unusual that GORHAM noted it, and told TRIPP who two of the items were addressed to. TRIPP was unable to recall one of the items, but said the other was to FOSTER's mother. TRIPP does not know if GORHAM knows who the third piece was addressed to. Pieces of mail are not logged. The couriers who pick up the mail are BOBBY, JACKY, and Helen (all phonetic and last names unknown). TRIPP never mentioned these letters to the Park Police. She does not believe GORHAM or anybody else has either, although TRIPP urged GORHAM to report them to the Park Police. TRIPP is not aware of any discussion with NUSSBAUM about the letters or any other internal discussion of them.

TRIPP advised that the following individuals worked in close proximity to FOSTER: Herself, POND, GORHAM, NUSSBAUM, CASTLETON (an intern), and MARLENE MACDONALD (an unpaid volunteer).

TRIPP never saw a gun in FOSTER's office or in his possession. He never talked about guns or mentioned owning one. TRIPP advised that she could not picture a more non-violent person. He may have had an interest in history, judging from books in his office. TRIPP does not know if he had any hobbies. There is a collage of photographs showing him and Lisa in a boat, which might indicate some kind of interest.

Two things occurred which were out of the ordinary on July 19, 1993, the day before FOSTER died. MARSHA SCOTT, Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of Presidential Correspondence, came to see FOSTER for a closed-door session which lasted over an hour, possibly as long as two hours. This was highly unusual, both her coming to see him and anybody taking up that much time with FOSTER. TRIPP advised that SCOTT went to school with President CLINTON and she is part of the group of "core" Arkansans who go to dinner every Tuesday night. She has no direct knowledge of whether or not SCOTT has attended the "Renaissance weekend" at Hilton Head with the CLINTONS or whether SCOTT's and PRESIDENT CLINTON's name has been linked romantically. TRIPP advised that she was very uncomfortable discussing SCOTT due to their professional relationship and the fact that SCOTT appears to wield influence that belies her official position.

TRIPP does not know what SCOTT and FOSTER discussed, but has a clear recollection of the meeting because she feared at the time that it might have something to do with her professionally. She does not know if it was a scheduled meeting. SCOTT did not make any effort to see NUSSBAUM before meeting with FOSTER.

The second thing that happened that day which was unusual was that he went home early-- about 7 o'clockish in the evening-- when NUSSBAUM, CASTLETON, TRIPP were frenetically completing final preparations for the next morning's appointment of FBI Director FREEH in the Rose Garden. It seemed a little odd that he would leave when everybody else, including NUSSBAUM, was so busy. Then added to that was that about thirty minutes after he left, the White House operator called for him, saying the President was trying to reach him. When NUSSBAUM heard about this he said, "Good, he can use the support."

TRIPP spoke to FOSTER as he left, asking him if he had thought about inviting his children to the Rose Garden ceremony the next day. FOSTER had a non-committal answer. He had his briefcase with him as he left. TRIPP advised that he customarily carried it to and from work.

TRIPP advised that there are two safes in NUSSBAUM's office at the White House and that GORHAM was the only person who was physically able to open the one on the right as you entered the office. To the best of Tripp's knowledge, the one on the left was not used. TRIPP does not recall any discussion regarding the safes on July 22, 1993 (the day FOSTER's office was inventoried), or on any other day following FOSTER's death. The first reference that TRIPP heard concerning a safe was in the press and it was that PATSY THOMASSON said they should open the safe. THOMASSON was not a usual visitor to the office and she was very surprised when she heard that THOMASSON had been in the office shortly after FOSTER's death.

TRIPP advised that the photo that NUSSBAUM took from FOSTER's office was a small black and white photograph of Miss Mary's preschool class, showing FOSTER, BILL CLINTON, and others as four-year-olds. TRIPP had the photo, which had been given to her by NUSSBAUM to get it copied to give to LISA FOSTER, VINCE FOSTER's widow.

With regard to trash from FOSTER's office, TRIPP advised that at some point on July 21, 1993, somebody mentioned the possible existence of a burn bag. TRIPP does not think FOSTER had one in his office. But he did have a trash receptacle and TRIPP believes that trash from it was retrieved.

TRIPP advised that she is not aware of the cabinets in front of GORHAM's desk, known to have FOSTER's materials in them, ever to have been searched or looked into. Everybody had access to them. TRIPP does not know if they were locked, and was of the opinion that they were "housekeeping" type materials. TRIPP never saw or heard of FOSTER giving any dictation or other secretarial work to any person other than GORHAM.

TRIPP was present when STEVEN NEUWIRTH found the torn up yellow piece of paper that was discovered in FOSTER's briefcase. She advised that NEUWIRTH came out of FOSTER's office white-faced and shocked looking. He asked where NUSSBAUM was, and when TRIPP told him where he was, he said, "Page him." From the way he was acting, she asked if he had found something, and he answered, "Yes." GORHAM had told TRIPP that the briefcase was "empty except for those yellow stickies on the bottom."

The morning of July 21, 1993, TRIPP arrived to work at 7:00 AM. POND was already there and had been in FOSTER's office. Everybody, including herself, was extremely upset. TRIPP could not remember anybody who was not weeping to some degree at some point. People from all over stopped in. TRIPP recalls MARSHA SCOTT, MAGGIE WILLIAMS, BRUCE LINDSEY, BILL KENNEDY, WEBB HUBBELL-- all those in the Tuesday night Arkansas "group". She had to take a cab home that evening because she left so late. They were told to remain at work in case anybody had a question.

At some point the day of July 21, 1993 TRIPP suggested to NUSSBAUM that they needed a Secret Service officer to guard FOSTER's office. She advised that she thinks GORHAM and NUSSBAUM were in FOSTER's office together that day. She did not remember anything being moved. Mostly she remembers the door to the office being closed. After it was inventoried by a large group of people including NUSSBAUM, NEUWIRTH, and DAVID SLOAN (date not recalled) the door was kept locked and nobody tried to access the office. TRIPP did not know who had the key to it. It seemed that the door stayed closed and locked for months.

At one point (exact day not recalled) HILLARY CLINTON went into FOSTER's office, stood just inside the doorway gazing around without touching anything for a little while, then turned

A Staff Meeting was called and held in the 4th floor of the Old Executive Office Building. Everybody was there. PRESIDENT CLINTON made remarks. The White House Associates were called in to a meeting. TRIPP does not know what transpired at the meeting. Non-Associate staff were told that there would be an Associate sitting in on their Park Police interview when it occurred. TRIPP had CLIFF SLOAN sitting in on hers when it occurred. That is the only other time she was interviewed on this matter.

TRIPP provided the following personal information about herself:

They each similarly advised that they did not know Bernard Nussbaum, Patsy Thomasson, Maggie Williams, nor Craig Livingstone and cannot specifically recall if any of these individuals passed through gate B-4 during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993 or early morning hours of July 21, 1993. They each advised that it would be unusual for a White House staffer with appropriate White House access credentials, to attempt to bring a visitor on The White House compound during late night or early morning hours. CHRISTINE A. VARNEY was interviewed within the offices of the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC). VARNEY was accompanied to the interview by her attorney, LYN UTRECHT, of the law firm of Oldaker, Ryan & Leonard, 818 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Suite 1100, WDC, telephone number 202-728-1010. After being apprised of the identities of the interviewing agents and that the purpose of the interview was to discuss events surrounding the death of VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., former Deputy Counsel to the President of the United States, VARNEY thereafter provided the following information:

VARNEY served as the Chief Counsel to the Presidential campaign of then candidate, BILL CLINTON. Upon CLINTON's election as President of the United States, she was named General Counsel for the inauguration. After CLINTON's inauguration as President, VARNEY was appointed Cabinet Secretary for the administration. VARNEY has held the aforementioned positions based upon her expertise in the field of election law.

Prior to her interview by the OIC, WDC, VARNEY reviewed her calendar related to the time period surrounding July 20, 1993. The aforementioned review revealed that VARNEY was in her office on that day. During the time period in question, VARNEY was involved in dealing with floods in the mid-western portion of the United States.

VARNEY recalls meeting FOSTER in Little Rock during the fall, 1992. They met after the Presidential election in November, 1992. VARNEY had no role in FOSTER being selected to serve in The White House Counsel's office. Subsequent to the inauguration of President CLINTON, VARNEY and FOSTER had weekly business and social contact. VARNEY described herself to have been an acquaintance of the FOSTERs.

FOSTER would seek VARNEY's advice with regard to leftover/ongoing election issues related to the 1992 Presidential campaign and election. VARNEY had no conversations or discussions with FOSTER regarding a blind trust related to the President and Mrs. CLINTON. VARNEY has no recollection of any interaction between herself and FOSTER on July 20, 1993. VARNEY had no recollection of the last time she saw FOSTER.

VARNEY first learned of FOSTER's death from a newspaper story on July 21, 1993. VARNEY was alerted to the newspaper story by her husband.

VARNEY arrived at her office between the hours of 7:30 and 8:00 am on July 21, 1993. She believes that the door to the Counsel's office suite was closed upon her arrival. Her office is located on the second floor, northside of the west wing of The White House.

VARNEY had an awareness of discussions regarding how the Park Police investigation was being conducted related to FOSTER's death. No one sought her counsel either formally or informally regarding the search of FOSTER's office. VARNEY was not present during the search of the office and did not attend FOSTER's funeral. VARNEY's only awareness of the search of FOSTER's office with particular regard to procedures utilized in the course of the search was from media/newspaper reports.

VARNEY believes that she was informed that STEPHEN NEUWIRTH of the White House Counsel's office was the individual who found the note believed to have been written by FOSTER. VARNEY was aware that the note was found by NEUWIRTH while he was packing up FOSTER's office. VARNEY does not recall who told her that the note had been found. She has no knowledge of any additional notes relating to FOSTER having been found.

VARNEY departed The White House between 7:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. on July 20, 1993. She did not return to The White House that evening. VARNEY was aware that Larry King was going to broadcast a program from The White House on the evening of the 20th. She may have prepared a briefing paper related to potential issues the President could be questioned about in the course of the interview. VARNEY's paper concerned floods in the mid-west.

VARNEY has known CRAIG LIVINGSTONE since the 1988, Democratic Presidential nominating convention. She was also aware that LIVINGSTONE did advance work related to the CLINTON Presidential campaign and the inauguration. LIVINGSTONE is known to be currently involved in the area of personnel security at The White House.

VARNEY has no recollection of seeing LIVINGSTONE on either July 20 or July 21, 1993.

VARNEY's only conversation with LIVINGSTONE related to the investigation currently being conducted by the Office of the Independent Counsel concerned LIVINGSTONE seeking advice for counsel. LIVINGSTONE came to VARNEY and asked for recommendations for attorneys to represent him on the issue of moving boxes from The White House. These boxes were in some way related to FOSTER. She did not recall when this conversation took place. LIVINGSTONE emphatically denied to VARNEY ever moving any boxes from The White House related to FOSTER. VARNEY described LIVINGSTONE to be upset regarding his situation. VARNEY just provided LIVINGSTONE with names and does not know if he ever contacted anyone on the list. LIVINGSTONE informed VARNEY that he did go to the hospital on the night of FOSTER's death to identify the body. VARNEY had no recollection of hearing information regarding LIVINGSTONE going to the FOSTER residence on the morning of July 21, 1993. VARNEY did not go to the FOSTER residence subsequent to FOSTER's death.

VARNEY's only knowledge regarding Whitewater stems from her recollection of a December 1992 discussion in Little Rock, regarding the dissolution of the CLINTONs' Whitewater investment and other unrecalled issues.

VARNEY had no reason to believe that Whitewater or Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan were reasons as to why FOSTER may have taken his own life.

No other information of investigative value was provided.

CHRISTINE A. VARNEY is described from observation and interview as follows:

LORRAINE A. VOLES, Director of Communications for the Vice President, work telephone (202) 456-7035, was interviewed at her office at the White House. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, VOLES provided the following information:

VOLES advised that at the time that VINCE FOSTER, JR. killed himself on July 20, 1993, VOLES was Deputy Press Secretary in the Office of Communications. At the time of FOSTER's death, she was covering the RUTH BADER GINSBURG confirmation hearing, so everyday she reported directly to Capitol Hill to work. She started those duties of July 19 or 20 and believes from looking at her calendar that she was doing that Monday through Thursday of the week that FOSTER killed himself. She did not go into the White House at all and was not involved in any way in the events at the White House during that period.

On July 21, 1993, her calendar shows that she had to be in Room 234 at 9:00 a.m. She does not recall the press office calling her at all. She has a vague memory of a conversation with RICHARD STRAUSS about some radio program information related to the BADER GINSBURG hearings and in passing he made a comment about everybody being "out of it because of VINCE FOSTER."

VOLES advised that she received a call on the issue of press coverage at the FOSTER residence from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE's attorney approximately two to three weeks ago. She knew nothing about the matter. She did not assign anybody to go out there. That is the type of thing that she would have done in the course of her responsibilities of managing the lower press office had she been at the White House at the time, but she was not. She advised that in her absence either DEE DEE MYERS or ARTHUR JONES of the Press Office would have been the ones to send somebody to the FOSTER residence.

The only women in the office at that time included NANCY WARD (Office Manager), KATHY MCKIERNAN and VOLES herself. She advised that if someone was sent, they would not have sent an intern. The only other remote possibilities would be VICKY RIVAS VAZQUEZ or DAWN ALEXANDER.

Asked to speculate what other entity might have sent somebody out to the FOSTER residence the morning of July 21 to handle press, she thought maybe DAVID WATKINS' old office (The Office of Management and Administration) or maybe the Secret Service. She said if it had been a Press Office person, they would have discussed it at the Press Office meeting.

VOLES advised that she had not heard about CRAIG LIVINGSTONE's activities on July 20 and 21 until his lawyer contacted her. She does not know of any business CRAIG LIVINGSTONE or anybody would have had in the White House early on the morning of July 21, 1993. She said someone in the Press Office would have known if any intern of theirs had been borrowed to help move boxes.

VOLES advised that her personal impression of CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is that "he has watched too many episodes of Cagney & Lacey," intimating that he tended to enjoy intrigue and get wrapped up in "cloak & dagger stuff." In addition, on a couple occasions, he told her about problems that individuals were getting into and she felt it was indiscrete and inappropriate for him to have told her. For that reason she avoids contact with him except what is unavoidable.

As part of the interview, VOLES provided the following personal information:

ANN FAIRFAX WALKER, Special Assistant to the President and Director of Communications research, The White House, Washington, D.C. was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel, Washington, D.C. Ms. WALKER was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and of the purpose of the interview. MARK STEIN Assistant to Independent Counsel ROBERT B. FISKE, JR. assisted in this interview. Ms. WALKER provided the following information:

She has been in her present position at The White House since January 20, 1993. She previously worked since March of 1992 in the CLINTON campaign. She was press secretary in Washington, D.C. during the primaries and worked during the transition at the Governor's Mansion in Arkansas. Her present job is basically research to find public record information.

WALKER was asked about her interaction with VINCENT FOSTER, former White House Deputy Counsel who died on July 20, 1993. She described her interaction as "a little bit". When FOSTER wanted research done, and RICKI SEIDMAN (Deputy Assistant to the President and Deputy Director of Communications) was out, he would come to her. Basically what FOSTER wanted researched was tax information such as what BUSH and QUAYLE had reported as deductions on their tax returns.

WALKER was shown a copy of a memorandum addressed to "RICKI" dated April 12, 1993. She said this memorandum was informing SEIDMAN about FOSTER's request. WALKER explained that SEIDMAN had wanted an outline of the information which she had provided to FOSTER during her (SEIDMAN's) absence. In addition to the tax info, FOSTER also wanted information on Whitewater and how it had been reported during the CLINTON Presidential campaign. WALKER said the word "project" in the memorandum referred to FOSTER's call for information concerning the three items listed on the memorandum. Those items were 1) How the media "handled" President Bush's income tax filing in 1989; 2) Whether Bush itemized charitable contributions and deductions and did the media scrutinize these line items; and 3) The White Water Development Project coverage during the campaign. FOSTER requested all of this information in the same phone call to WALKER. WALKER was able to provide information to FOSTER on each of these questions. She met with him on or about April 5, 1993 concerning her research. When WALKER met with FOSTER he provided her with a New York Times article from Monday April 5, 1993 captioned "At Last, a Team for Justice" concerning some Arkansas ethics legislation. FOSTER wanted to know while CLINTON was governor how this had been reported and what had been said about WEBB HUBBELL's role.

WALKER said that SEIDMAN and FOSTER discussed the White Water coverage during the campaign further as FOSTER wanted more information. WALKER's comment in the memorandum concerning "excluding the White Water clips--per your instruction" was made because SEIDMAN already had this information.

The reference to REAGAN and CARTER was an answer to FOSTER's request for more information. WALKER said SEIDMAN was clearly looking for something without saying what it was she was looking for. WALKER had done a "couple" of media searches regarding Whitewater or taxes for FOSTER. She described this research as being routine, but said that SEIDMAN had been "agitated" about it. WALKER was not sure why. WALKER said it was unusual to get a request from VINCE FOSTER or the Counsel's office herself but that maybe SEIDMAN got this type of request on other occasions. During this two or three week period in April, 1993, WALKER had done other research on Whitewater such as locating other New York Times articles for FOSTER. She had also been asked to research the Whitewater coverage during the campaign and to determine who had spoken on the record on the campaign concerning Whitewater.

FOSTER's phone call to WALKER was the first request she had gotten to research Whitewater. She pointed to the fact on the memorandum of April 12, 1993, that she had not spelled Whitewater correctly. She said the request came "out of the blue" and she didn't know why she was being asked for the information. WALKER was not sure if some of the requests were coming from GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS or that she was just providing copies of her memorandums to him.

With respect to SEIDMAN being agitated, WALKER further explained that she (WALKER) needed to know what she was looking for and felt as though she was "shooting in the dark". No one else had expressed a concern to her regarding this research project. FOSTER himself had been "perfectly calm" about the request. WALKER could not remember any questions that FOSTER asked her about this research.

WALKER was asked if she had told anyone else about her research for FOSTER. She answered that in February or March of 1994 she had told JOHN PODESTA while he was doing some other research concerning Whitewater. She said no one else at The White House had been told other than through her memorandums to SEIDMAN with copies to STEPHANOPOULOS. WALKER had given STEPHANOPOULOS her research on who said what during the campaign on Whitewater. She is not sure if she did this memorandum to STEPHANOPOULOS with a copy to FOSTER or to FOSTER with a copy to STEPHANOPOULOS. FOIA(b)(3) - Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 6(e) - Grand Jury WALKER said she would review her records upon returning to The White House and get back to the Office of the Independent Counsel with any additional information that she located.

Diann Walters, who resides at Number 40 Chesapeake Street Apt. 304, Washington, D.C., was contacted and advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview. She then provided the following information:

She is employed by the General Services Administration (GSA) as a "cleaning lady". She works the 9:30 pm - 5:45 am shift at The White House. Her duties are to vacuum, dust, clean, and remove non-confidential trash from offices on the 2nd floor in the west wing of The White House. Her telephone number at work is 202-395-3270 and her home telephone number is 202-563-5471.

In July, 1993, as now, she was working the 9:30 pm - 5:45 am shift. She recalls learning of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death during the late evening hours of July 20, 1993, although she can not recall by which means she learned of his death. She remembers working that particular night because she learned of his death and because she was subsequently advised that she was not to remove any trash from or clean the suite of offices that included Foster's office. She stated, however, that she can not recall who so advised her. Ms. Walters was asked if she recalls seeing any White House staffers in the Bernard Nussbaum/Vincent Foster suite of offices that night. She stated that she does not recall seeing anyone in that office and does not recall seeing anyone enter or leave that suite of offices. In response to a specific question, she further said that she similarly does not recall seeing anyone carrying anything out of the Nussbaum/Foster suite of offices on July 20, 1993.

DIANN WALTERS was interviewed at her residence, 40 Chesapeake Street, S.E., Apt. 304, Washington, DC (WDC), regarding her knowledge of events occurring at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993, as they related to the death of former Deputy White House Counsel, VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR. After being apprised of the purpose of the interview and the identity of the interviewing agents, WALTERS thereafter provided the following information:

On the evening of July 20, 1993, WALTERS, assigned to The White House as a member of the cleaning staff, was working in her usual capacity in removing trash from offices located in the West Wing of The White House. WALTERS and a second cleaning woman by the name of TERRI COBEY were escorted to the 2nd floor of the West Wing to pull trash from offices located in the Counsel's office suite. In the course of pulling trash from offices located within the Counsel's office suite, WALTERS noticed a white female going through trash that had been pulled at some point from the offices in that suite by both WALTERS and COBEY. WALTERS was in the Counsel's office suite when she observed this female going through the trash.

The white female who was searching through the trash that had been pulled from the Counsel's office suite is further described to have been of small frame, approximately 5'6" in height, with shoulder length hair. WALTERS believed her first encounter with this woman was on July 20, 1993. She could not recall if the unknown white female wore any type of identification badge.

WALTERS did not remember if the assigned Uniformed United States Secret Service (USSS) Officer escort had to utilize keys to gain access to the Counsel's office suite. WALTERS and COBEY were escorted into the Counsel's office suite by HANK O'NEILL, of the USSS. On the 2nd floor of the West Wing, WALTERS cleaned the Office of the First Lady and the Counsel's office suite. With regard to O'NEILL, WALTERS recalled that he was just substituting that night for USSS Officer RIDGE (phonetic). RIDGE is described to be a white male who usually serves as an escort for WALTERS and COBEY while on the 2nd floor of the West Wing.

According to WALTERS, "lock-ups" are done at approximately 10:45 pm each evening. Lock-ups are described to be secure office areas requiring a USSS escort. The lock-up known as the Counsel's office suite was probably cleaned at approximately 10:45 pm on the evening of July 20, 1993.

When trash is picked up from offices within the West Wing, WALTERS noted that the trash is put into two separate bags. Trash or garbage is put into a large brown paper bag. Paper refuse goes into clear plastic bags.

As the white female previously described by WALTERS looked through the trash, WALTERS did not see the white female touch any of the trash nor did she observe the white female taking anything out of the trash. WALTERS could not recall whether or not the white female may have gone through trash in the hallway leading up to the Counsel's office suite.

As the evening progressed, WALTERS recalls that Officer O'NEILL may have said something about not pulling any more trash from offices in the Counsel's office suite. It is possible that the trash had already been pulled from the suite by the time O'NEILL made his decision.

WALTERS can not remember if anyone was in the First Lady's office when trash was pulled from that location. She is of the opinion that the First Lady's office door was locked and that Officer O'NEILL had to provide access to that office.

WALTERS did not recall whether or not anyone else was walking around the second floor of the west wing on the evening of July 20. She does not recall if the white female took anything out of the Counsel's office suite.

WALTERS has been employed for approximately 3 years as a cleaning woman at The White House.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

NANCY L. WARD, Press Office Manager, White House Press Office, was interviewed at The White House on September 16, 1994. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, WARD provided the following information:

WARD advised that she has been Press Office Manager since January 1993. Her duties include a wide range of responsibilities, including the training and supervision of 10-12 interns and other staff assistants in the Press Office. She makes sure that phone calls, mail and other office correspondence are routed efficiently and otherwise acts as an Administrative Coordinator for the Press Office activities.

WARD said she knew nothing of VINCE FOSTER, JR.'s death until she arrived at work on July 21, 1993. She did not know FOSTER at the time, although his name was familiar

WARD advised that she has no knowledge of anybody from the Press Office either going themselves or sending anybody on behalf of the Press Office to go out to the FOSTER residence to help deal with press coverage there. She added, however, that she probably would not have known of such a decision because her professional focus is within the lower Press Office in The White House and does not include activities outside The White House. She suggested that such a decision to send somebody to the FOSTER residence would have been made by either ARTHUR JONES or LORRAINE VOLES.

WARD advised that she knows who CRAIG LIVINGSTONE is but does not know his title. She does not recall any contact with him early in the morning on July 21, 1993 either by telephone via an outside call or seeing him anywhere in the upper or lower Press Office in The White House.

As part of the interview, WARD provided the following personal information:

GWENDOLYN NANCY WEAVER, Deputy Assistant Director of the Office of Administration for Information Management, The White House, a position she has held since June 1, 1993 was interviewed at her office in the New Executive Office Building. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, WEAVER provided the following information:

WEAVER advised that the responsibilities of her office include management and oversight of all the libraries and the computing services for The White House complex. It includes the Data Center, a Network Services Group, Customer Support Desk (which includes a Help Desk, Programming, and Training) and Records Management. They also handle Systems Integration and Information Security.

WEAVER has no specific recollection of the day VINCE FOSTER, JR. committed suicide. She remembers the general time period of it having happened. Neither she personally nor her office were directly involved in the events surrounding VINCE FOSTER's death, including the disposition of his office and the inventory of his papers, at the time of his death. She did not know if there had been any requests to move equipment following VINCE FOSTER's death but advised that JAMES MCDONALD, an individual in her office, would know the answer to that question.

She explained that, as a practical matter, even though users are not supposed to move their own equipment, the reality is that equipment does get moved without her office finding out about it. All requests for moving equipment should be done through her office's Help Desk. WEAVER also said that she doubts that anybody in the Counsel's office knew enough about computers to do any of their own work. She also advised that the Counsel's office had E-mail but was not on a local area network (LAN) as of July 20, 1994. That means, in essence, that the movement of information from the Counsel's office or to the Counsel's office could not have been conducted by computer but would have, by necessity, had to be transmitted physically by "hard copy"

(paper) or floppy disk.

WEAVER advised that she knows CRAIG LIVINGSTONE but has only had very brief conversations with him on the subject of building passes.

As part of the interview WEAVER provided the following information:

THOMAS S. WEDERTZ, age 42, tow truck driver for T. & T. Towing, Incorporated, telephone (703) 795-9659, was telephonically contacted. WEDERTZ was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and that the purpose of the interview was in connection with information which had been received regarding his towing of a car from Ft. Marcy Park on the evening of July 20, 1993 and/or early morning hours of July 21, 1993. On July 20, 1993, VINCENT FOSTER, Deputy White House Counsel, The White House, Washington, D.C., had been found dead in Ft. Marcy Park.

When asked if he had towed a vehicle from Ft. Marcy Park to the FBI Headquarter's garage on July 20-21, 1993, WEDERTZ answered that he was "not aware of anything like that." He said he had no idea why this information would come up.

WEDERTZ was reminded to be truthful regarding the question being asked and he said that he was being truthful. He said he had been called by "some lady" last week from Capitol Hill with a similar question and had denied having any information with her as well. He could not further identify this person or the purpose of her call. He said he had nothing to hide, but did not tow any vehicle from Ft. Marcy Park on July 20-21, 1993.

LISA WETZL, Intern employed at The White House Office of Personnel Security, telephone (202) 456-2345 was interviewed telephonically. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, WETZL provided the following information:

WETZL said that she was working in the same position she currently holds in The White House Office of Personnel Security on July 20, 1993 and has specific recollections of the events of that date because it was made remarkable by VINCE FOSTER's death. She advised that as of July 20, 1993 she was only an intern, not a permanent employee as she is now and she was only typing minor memoranda for the Office of Personnel Security. She did not type any kind of memo from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE that was dated July 21, 1993 titled, "Report from CRAIG LIVINGSTONE" and purporting to be a chronology of his activities on July 20 and 21, 1993. She does not recall ever seeing such a document and did not type anything like it then or since that time. She feels sure that she would have remembered such a memo.

WETZL advised that the only thing she has typed for CRAIG LIVINGSTONE that remotely relates to this matter was a project wherein she typed the results of the Office of the Independent Counsel's interview of LIVINGSTONE from notes he had made of the interview. WETZL speculated that the memorandum chronicling his activities on July 21 was either typed by LIVINGSTONE himself or given to MARI ANDERSON and not to any of the interns.

WETZL explained that her job as of July 20 related to maintaining security files. She made up files, she sent off requests for FBI background information. She never assisted CRAIG LIVINGSTONE carrying boxes out of The White House or heard of anybody doing so.

As part of her interview, WETZL provided the following personal information:

MARGARET A. WILLIAMS, Chief of Staff for the First Lady, The White House, was interviewed at the Office of the Independent Counsel (OIC), 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. (WDC). WILLIAMS was accompanied to the interview by her attorney, ED DENNIS. Participating in the interview were attorneys MARK STEIN and CARL STICH, both of the OIC. After being apprised of the identities of those participating, and the purpose of the interview, WILLIAMS thereafter provided the following information:

Since arriving in WDC as members of the CLINTON administration, WILLIAMS and former Deputy Counsel to the President VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR., maintained a fair amount of contact until his death on July 20, 1993. WILLIAMS had a fair amount of interaction with FOSTER on issues related to health care, based upon HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON's (HRC) status in heading the health care task force for The White House. In connection with the health care task force, FOSTER provided counsel regarding HRC's classification as a private citizen as opposed to being a federal employee. This issue was of significant importance regarding whether or not health care task force meetings should be open to the public. WILLIAMS' role with regard to the health care task force and her interaction with The White House Counsel's Office was that of a facilitator.

WILLIAMS and FOSTER also had contact regarding renovations at The White House. In a note that was believed to be written by FOSTER, discovered subsequent to his death, an issue was raised regarding a dispute between The White House Usher's Office and the Office of HRC. The dispute concerned renovations to The White House and whether or not estimates provided by the Usher's Office for work related to the renovation were in line with estimates provided by KAKI HOCKERSMITH the decorator chosen by HRC for the project. Estimates provided by GARY WALTERS, Senior White House Usher, were higher than estimates provided by HOCKERSMITH. WILLIAMS was aware that these disputes arose because the decorator was not aware of other costs involved in the renovation. WILLIAMS noted that special care had to be taken with regard to removal of wallpaper in the residence, and when covering furniture at The White House. Duplicates also had to be re-upholstered for use in emergency situations. Overtime payments for work that could only be done in the absence of the President, which was usually on weekends, were also not figured into estimates generated by HOCKERSMITH. WILLIAMS noted that HOCKERSMITH did not quite understand how the estimates did not match up and that she did not understand that duplicate copies be manufactured of any piece of furniture that was renovated.

WILLIAMS also discussed with FOSTER, the replacement of appointees to The White House Historical Society. Specifically, WILLIAMS and FOSTER discussed the time frame through which the replacement of the former appointees could be handled.

In May of 1993, MAGGIE WILLIAMS attended a meeting with GARY WALTERS, HOCKERSMITH and FOSTER related to The White House renovation cost estimates. The purpose of the meeting was to determine the cause of the differences between the Usher's Office estimates for White House renovation and estimates generated by HOCKERSMITH. Also discussed during the meeting was the lack of communication between all parties concerned. It was determined that there was a lack of knowledge regarding issues related to the renovation on the part of White House staff. FOSTER was of the impression that White House staffers should have previously known about the renovations associated with The White House and all associated costs.

WILLIAMS recalls seeing the line in FOSTER's note expressing FOSTER's belief that the Usher's Office was engaged in a plot to "take advantage of HRC." WILLIAMS admitted that she was surprised to see FOSTER's thinking regarding the Usher's Office issue as related to The White House renovation. WILLIAMS had no prior indication that FOSTER had harbored the feeling that there was a conspiracy by the Usher's Office to discredit HRC. This revelation was surprising to WILLIAMS in that FOSTER was thought to have had a good perspective regarding issues related to The White House.

On occasion, WILLIAMS was known to walk into FOSTER's office and FOSTER was known to walk into WILLIAMS' office. FOSTER had a knack for calming WILLIAMS down on sensitive issues. WILLIAMS was unaware of any change in FOSTER's demeanor. At one point WILLIAMS did note that she told FOSTER he needed a vacation, but WILLIAMS noted that her comment was general in nature. WILLIAMS further noted that FOSTER was the individual who was always busy keeping everyone else's spirits up. In retrospect, WILLIAMS now thinks that FOSTER was working too hard.

WILLIAMS' discussions with FOSTER surrounding The White House Travel Office affair were defined in terms of a pending internal White House review. The White House review of the Travel Office matter was to be coordinated by JOHN PODESTA, Assistant to the President. FOSTER hinted to WILLIAMS that HRC might possibly be interviewed in the course of The White House review.

Of issues that were of concern to FOSTER, WILLIAMS does not recall having any conversations with him related to articles written in the Wall Street Journal. She does not recall FOSTER's opinions changing over time.

On July 19, 1993, the day before FOSTER died, WILLIAMS was aware that FOSTER was working on a blind trust related to the CLINTONs. FOSTER called WILLIAMS and questioned her related to stocks belonging to CHELSEA CLINTON. FOSTER contacted WILLIAMS because he felt HRC could answer questions related to the stock issue. At the time, HRC was traveling from Hawaii to Little Rock. WILLIAMS was aware that the deadline related to the blind trust was quickly approaching.

WILLIAMS tried to telephonically contact FOSTER on the morning of July 20, 1993. WILLIAMS' attempts to contact FOSTER were negative. WILLIAMS tried again on July 20, later in the day.

At The White House, FOSTER and HRC had occasional contact. Their conversations were friendly in nature. According to WILLIAMS, there was no basis for the rumors regarding a relationship between FOSTER and HRC.

WILLIAMS learned about FOSTER's death after receiving a telephone call from HRC. HRC was on an airplane headed to Little Rock. HRC wanted to find out if WILLIAMS was at home, after which she hung up the phone and re-telephoned WILLIAMS. At this point, WILLIAMS was informed by HRC that FOSTER was dead. HRC may have said that FOSTER killed himself. According to WILLIAMS, the conversation was short in duration and HRC made no requests of WILLIAMS at this time.

After receiving the telephone call from HRC, WILLIAMS called her staff assistant, EVELYN LIEBERMAN. LIEBERMAN came to WILLIAMS' house to pick her up, at which time they both traveled to The White House. WILLIAMS felt like she needed to be at The White House with her group. WILLIAMS recalls that she went to The White House on impulse. WILLIAMS may have been paged during this time frame but does not recall returning the page. (WILLIAMS believes the first page she received was at approximately 8:00 pm.)

One concern that caused WILLIAMS to travel to The White House on the evening of July 20, was her concern for HRC's schedule related to July 21, 1993.

Upon arriving at The White House, WILLIAMS got a key to HRC's office and placed EVELYN at the secretary's desk to answer incoming telephone calls. A guard opened the door to HRC's office. A call was then placed to LISA CAPUTO, Press Secretary for HRC.

WILLIAMS then travelled to MARK GEARAN's office. Prior to arriving at GEARAN's office WILLIAMS remembers seeing cleaning people out near an elevator. WILLIAMS recalls that the door to the Counsel's Office suite was open.

Upon arriving at GEARAN's office, WILLIAMS recalls seeing MARK GEARAN, DEE DEE MYERS, and HOWARD PASTER. She believes PASTER may have been dressed in blue jeans at the time.

(WILLIAMS noted that she had been aware that LARRY KING was taping a show at The White House on the evening of July 20, 1993.)

While in GEARAN's office, WILLIAMS sat down and started crying. GEARAN provided her with a draft of the statement to be released by The White House. People in The White House were very emotional at this time. WILLIAMS was aware that other people were in the office as well. WILLIAMS departed GEARAN's office and returned to HRC's office space. She provided the statement given to her by GEARAN, to LIEBERMAN which was subsequently passed on to LISA CAPUTO.

Upon returning to HRC's office, WILLIAMS saw cleaning people standing in the doorway to the Counsel's Office suite. She remembers that the door to the office was definitely open.

WILLIAMS then entered the suite noticing that a light was on in FOSTER's office. She then entered FOSTER's office and saw PATSY THOMASSON sitting at FOSTER's desk. She was surprised to see someone sitting behind the desk in that FOSTER hardly sat at his desk. THOMASSON made some comment that WILLIAMS could not recall. WILLIAMS sat down on a couch that was located in the office and recalls looking at a photograph. WILLIAMS recalls THOMASSON saying "If we found the note, it would give LISA some comfort." LISA as referred to by THOMASSON, was FOSTER's wife. This was WILLIAMS recollection as to why she had a sense that THOMASSON was looking for a note.

WILLIAMS described her relationship to THOMASSON as being a good professional relationship. WILLIAMS and THOMASSON did not socialize together outside The White House. At some point while WILLIAMS was in FOSTER's office, BERNARD NUSSBAUM, White House Counsel, walked into the office. WILLIAMS recalls NUSSBAUM to have scratched his head and paced back and forth while in the office. WILLIAMS eventually got up and departed the office. After leaving FOSTER's office, WILLIAMS went back down to GEARAN's office. It is possible that NUSSBAUM could have departed FOSTER's office and walked down to GEARAN's office as well. Upon departing FOSTER's office, WILLIAMS stated that she "didn't carry anything after leaving FOSTER's office." Her response was negative to departing FOSTER's office with either notepads or folders.

WILLIAMS did not see NUSSBAUM remove anything from FOSTER's office. She only recalls going into FOSTER's office once on the night of July 20. WILLIAMS was at The White House for approximately 30 minutes on the evening of FOSTER's death. She did not recall seeing anyone who did not belong in the Counsel's Office suite. WILLIAMS advised that her deputy, may be someone who could provide additional information surrounding events that took place at The White House on July 20.

WILLIAMS once again spoke to HRC after returning to her home. HRC asked WILLIAMS if there was any reason why FOSTER may have killed himself. During the first call to HRC, it appeared that HRC was trying to comfort WILLIAMS. During a second telephone call HRC appeared to be a bit more vulnerable. HRC wondered if WILLIAMS being in WDC helped her (WILLIAMS') state of mind. The conversation between HRC and WILLIAMS was of short duration. WILLIAMS doesn't recall speaking to anyone else at The White House on July 20.

WILLIAMS did recall hearing, possibly from the media, that no note was found related to FOSTER's death. This may have been stated by the President.

WILLIAMS believes she may have attended a meeting where a conversation was held between White House Chief of Staff, MACK MCLARTY and NUSSBAUM regarding a search of FOSTER's office by investigators. General issues were raised regarding how to treat executive privilege issues. WILLIAMS was aware that NUSSBAUM was to be in FOSTER's office during the course of the search. NUSSBAUM talked to WILLIAMS to assure that the personal files of President CLINTON were sent to the law firm of WILLIAMS and CONNOLLY. WILLIAMS saw a file marked income tax that was added to the gathered documents. HRC called and advised that WILLIAMS should contact CAROLYN HUBER. HUBER called regarding storage space for the documents until they could be picked up by WILLIAMS and CONNOLLY. TOM CASTLETON helped WILLIAMS move the boxes to the designated location. WILLIAMS did not notice a Whitewater file in any of the papers she handled.

WILLIAMS recalls that personal documents of the President were turned over to BOB BARNETT of the firm of WILLIAMS and CONNOLLY.

WILLIAMS recalls that a note was found containing writing on pieces of paper located at the bottom of a briefcase in FOSTER's office. WILLIAMS talked to STEVEN NEUWIRTH of the Counsel's Office regarding the line in the note related to KAKI HOCKERSMITH. WILLIAMS believed that questions and answers related to the Travel Office were based on the GEARAN press briefing.

WILLIAMS had had no conversations with FOSTER regarding Whitewater.

No further information of investigative value was provided.

On May 16, 1994, Dr. LARRY S. WATKINS, Doctor's Building, Suite 402, 500 South University, Little Rock, Arkansas was interviewed at his professional offices. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature and purpose of the interview, Dr. WATKINS provided the following information:

WATKINS advised that he had known VINCE FOSTER, Jr. since they went to college together and been FOSTER's personal physician since November 1979. They engaged in some social activities together, they were members of the same country club in Little Rock, and he also treats FOSTER's mother, his wife LISA FOSTER, his two older children and his sister who lives in Little Rock. Since he sees various members of the family fairly frequently, some of the information provided during the interview came from them rather than directly from FOSTER.

WATKINS advised that FOSTER had no significant history of illnesses or hospitalizations. Asked if he had known FOSTER to suffer from any kind of depression before, WATKINS advised that he had not, although in the later part of November and December 1992, after the election, FOSTER went through a period of increased stress which he discussed with WATKINS at that time. He understood from LISA that FOSTER considered himself very good friends with BILL and HILLARY CLINTON and he had not yet been asked to take a position in the new administration. He was quite concerned about this and was experiencing some insomnia. On December 31, 1992, Dr. WATKINS' records reflect that he prescribed Restoril, a mild sleeping pill that is out of a person's system in approximately 6 hours. WATKINS advised that the problem was not persistent and he heard from LISA that things got better after FOSTER received the appointment as Deputy Counsel.

WATKINS advised that the move to Washington, D.C. had been very stressful for the family. LISA FOSTER and their daughter LAURA did not want to go to Washington, D.C. but they were willing to do so. They did not sell their home, but were going to rent it in anticipation of returning to Little Rock at some future date. At the time, their son DREW was in private Catholic School, their son VINCENT, Jr. was attending Texas Christian University (TCU) and LAURA was at Vanderbilt. FOSTER's father had set up a trust fund to assist with VINCE, Jr.'s and DREW's college costs but not LAURA's. All together WATKINS estimated that FOSTER was handling about $40,000 in educational costs alone every year.

Another matter which WATKINS advised was probably a source of stress at the time in their lives was the scandal over members of CLINTON's staff being members of the Little Rock Country Club, which had no Black members. The four members of his staff who were members there agreed to drop their membership, but WATKINS said that there was a rumor that FOSTER had not been in favor of that decision. The reason was essentially that the family planned to return to Little Rock and the Country Club membership was important to their lives. All of their friends belonged to the club and LISA and the children used it frequently. In addition, the joining fee is $25,000 which is forfeited when you give up your membership. WATKINS advised that whereas WEBB HUBBELL, BILL KENNEDY and the CLINTONS could afford to walk away from a $25,000 investment, FOSTER's family could not. In closed circles in Little Rock, there was a rumor that FOSTER had not wanted to drop out but that he had to go along with it. WATKINS does not believe that the Rose Law Firm picked up any part of that $25,000 joining fee.

The last time that Dr. WATKINS talked to FOSTER was when FOSTER called him sometime mid-day between 10:00 am and 2:00 pm on July 19, 1993. It was very unusual, in fact unprecedented, for FOSTER to call the doctor directly. Usually patients, including FOSTER, would pass messages and get what they needed through a nurse for efficiency's sake. This time, however, FOSTER insisted on speaking with WATKINS. He complained of loss of appetite and insomnia; he wasn't eating well and when WATKINS asked him if he was depressed, he said yes. WATKINS recalled that FOSTER sounded a little tired. They discussed depression and FOSTER knew that he was being prescribed an anti-depressant.

WATKINS prescribed Desyrel, 50 milligram tablets, which he knew to be the generic drug Trazodone, a tricyclic anti-depressant. He chose Desyrel because it does not have side effects and is helpful for insomnia. WATKINS knew that it took 10 days to two weeks to take effect but helps with insomnia, sometimes the very first day. He felt it was very important for FOSTER to start sleeping better and thought that if he got some rest that he would feel a lot better. He did not think that FOSTER was significantly depressed nor had Foster given the impression that he was "in crisis". From what FOSTER told him, FOSTER's condition sounded mild and situational. WATKINS advised that he was only a little bit alarmed in that FOSTER had insisted on talking to him directly instead of discussing things through his nurse.

After FOSTER's death, WATKINS spoke with a psychiatrist and asked him whether any suicides had been linked to Desyrel and was told they had not. WATKINS advised he was particularly glad, in retrospect, that he had not prescribed Prozac, inasmuch as Prozac has been associated with some suicides. He advised that he did not even ask FOSTER if he had thought about suicide or was having any suicidal ideation because the symptoms that FOSTER was describing were not severe enough to cause WATKINS to think that he might be in that state. WATKINS handles depression all the time among his patients. He said that it is a very, very common thing. He had told FOSTER to let him know how he was doing and was not particularly concerned about follow-up because he knew that either FOSTER would get back to him or WATKINS would find out through LISA how FOSTER was doing because his contact with the family was fairly frequent. He was aware that LISA and VINCE FOSTER had discussed the Desyrel. He did not know whether he had told LISA beforehand that he had called Dr. WATKINS and discussed depression but he knew that LISA knew about it after the fact and they had discussed it.

WATKINS advised that he never prescribed beta blockers for FOSTER to help him with stress, which he would do for some attorneys during litigation or other high stress periods to calm them down. He also advised that FOSTER never showed any indication of having problems with drugs or alcohol (one to two glasses of wine per day).

FOSTER's weight in 1987 was 200 pounds. As of August 1990 he was 207 pounds. His weight on December 31, 1992 was 194 pounds and WATKINS had made a note that he was on a diet and exercising.

WATKINS described FOSTER's personality as quiet, and passive, with a good sense of humor and a dry wit--someone who laughed a lot. FOSTER was not one to come to WATKINS with stress related problems.

WATKINS speculated and observed that FOSTER had done well in law school and was the "golden boy" of the Rose Law Firm and had, therefore, never had to deal with criticism before in his life on any significant scale. He had never been in a position where he had to deal with attacks to his character or integrity or where he had to cope with sustained levels of criticism. It could be, therefore, that unbeknownst to him, he was a person who lacked the ability to weather that sort of criticism and therefore found the Washington environment much more stressful than he ordinarily would have.

WATKINS does not know whether FOSTER was left handed or right handed, but it appears from his handwriting that he was right handed. His eyes were not good. He needed glasses for most activities, however, he did not jog with them on.

On July 20, 1993, WATKINS got a call late in the evening from LISA FOSTER, who notified him of FOSTER's death. Dr. WATKINS said that he was very surprised at the suicide, but as soon as he got the call he knew that it was because FOSTER had committed suicide and he knew it because of FOSTER's describing himself as depressed during the previous day's telephone call. LISA said during that conversation that FOSTER had taken one tablet of Desyrel the night of the 19th.

Lisa told him they had gone away and had a nice weekend on July 17-18, and WATKINS thought they were planning on going away again the following weekend and he believes that LISA told him that FOSTER had actually begun jogging again either the 19th or the 20th, but he's not sure of that recollection. He had the distinct impression however, that things were looking up and that LISA was taken completely by surprise by this.

WATKINS advised that he is unaware of any history of depression or suicide in any other member of the family. Since FOSTER's death, LAURA has had a transfer from Vanderbilt University to Fayetteville in order to be closer to home. She has had a good year, relatively speaking.

Shortly after FOSTER's death, there was an article in the Arkansas Democrat Gazette entitled, "Executive Suicide". He said that the description of the disease or phenomenon in the article fit FOSTER very closely.

As part of the interview and in response to a subpoena for documents presented to him at the beginning of the interview, WATKINS provided two identical copies of FOSTER's medical records from WATKINS' file.

Also as part of the interview, WATKINS provided the following personal information:

Name:	Dr. LARRY S. WATKINS
Date of Birth:
Place of Birth:
Social Security No:
Position:	Internist for the FOSTER family since November, 1979

W. DAVID WATKINS appeared at the Office of the Independent Counsel in Washington, D.C. for a pre-arranged interview on June 22, 1994. Also present during the interview was MARK STEIN, an attorney for the Office of the Independent Counsel. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature and purpose of the interview, WATKINS provided the following information:

WATKINS advised that he had been acquainted with VINCENT FOSTER, JR. since both of them were young teenagers in Little Rock, Arkansas. They did not regularly socialize while living in Little Rock but periodically they saw one another because the social circles in that town are fairly small. WATKINS said that he did not consider himself a close confidant of FOSTER's. He had never heard anything about FOSTER experiencing periods of depression or being despondent while living in Little Rock.

While at their positions at The White House, WATKINS said that he had periodic contact with FOSTER, most of which occurred during the handling of the Travel Office matter which had begun the week of May 13, 14 and 15, 1993. WATKINS said that when improprieties came to the attention of himself, HARRY THOMASON and CATHERINE CORNELIUS, WATKINS said, "Let us call VINCE FOSTER". He said to call FOSTER because he knew him best and it was appropriate since FOSTER was the Deputy Counsel. On Wednesday of that week, FOSTER, WILLIAM KENNEDY, THOMASON, CORNELIUS and WATKINS met to decide how to go about investigating what came to be known as the Travel Office matter. They kicked around ideas on how to go about it, but no final decision was made. It was at that meeting that FOSTER assigned the matter to KENNEDY to handle.

On Thursday, the following day, FOSTER, PATSY THOMASSON and WATKINS briefed MAC MCLARTY, Chief of Staff. MCLARTY already knew about the problem. It was decided that PETE MARWICK (an outside accounting firm) was selected to prepare a report on the Travel Office for The White House.

by SSA H. ALEXIS SUGGS Date dictated 6/27/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

The following day, Friday, WATKINS had to be out of town but he was receiving reports approximately every two hours from his assistant, PATSY THOMASSON, who would call him. WATKINS talked with FOSTER by phone and they discussed the Travel Office matter. The main problem was that the Travel Office was "a bad operation from a documentation view point". WATKINS said it was a management decision, not a legal one, whether or not to fire employees from the Travel Office. During that telephone conversation FOSTER told WATKINS, "HILLARY would like to talk with you about it". WATKINS advised that neither FOSTER nor KENNEDY were involved in the decision to fire the employees. It was WATKINS' decision to fire them.

The following Saturday the FBI had a meeting after PETE MARWICK had finished his examination of the Travel Office operations. WATKINS said, to his knowledge, nobody thought The White House Counsel's office had done anything wrong. There was a meeting prior to the press conference on Wednesday to settle what talking points would be covered during the press conference.

Adverse press regarding the Travel Office started Wednesday afternoon right after the press briefing. WATKINS advised that he must have talked with FOSTER around that time because both men were at a meeting on Friday but he does not remember specific conversations with FOSTER. He recalls talking with FOSTER the following week as FOSTER was headed for a meeting with JOHN PODESTA on Capitol Hill regarding the Travel Office. He does not recall FOSTER expressing an opinion about whether The White House should or should not do an internal review. FOSTER's posture was that The White House should not be so defensive about the Travel Office matter because The White House was acting legally and the matter was being handled properly. WATKINS said that FOSTER did not appear to be uncharacteristically depressed about the matter.

WATKINS advised that he has no idea what FOSTER meant by his comment in his note, "The FBI lied". He did not himself read the FBI's interim report and thought it came way after The White House's internal report on the matter. WATKINS participated as a witness in The White House internal review on the matter and he talked with FOSTER about PODESTA's position.

WATKINS never spoke with FOSTER about the Wall Street Journal articles, either on the Travel Office or any other matters. They did speak some about the conclusions of the internal report on the Travel Office matter. WATKINS also spoke to LEON PANETTA and MCLARTY about the effect of WATKINS himself getting a reprimand. FOSTER's wife LISA had told WATKINS' wife (they were tennis buddies) that FOSTER himself was expecting a reprimand also.

WATKINS advised there was no internal hostility about the report. He frankly didn't agree with parts of the report but he did not get a sense that there was a rift within The White House staff, nor was there much talk about it among White House staffers. WATKINS advised that FOSTER didn't talk much in any case about anything. WATKINS was much more emotional overall than FOSTER. WATKINS never heard directly or indirectly that FOSTER was distressed about it, or about anything else for that matter.

WATKINS saw FOSTER at 11:00 am on Monday, July 19, 1993 as FOSTER was entering The White House. FOSTER stopped WATKINS as they were passing one another to pass on regards to WATKINS from PAM SHRIVER whom he had recently met. FOSTER's demeanor was cheerful.

WATKINS was at a movie with his wife on the evening of July 20, 1993 when he was beeped. The Secret Service told him that, "Mr. FOSTER has shot himself". WATKINS advised that he was notified because it was White House protocol that he be the first person notified when anything happens like this. He said that two officers from the Park Police were going to notify the family and WATKINS asked them to meet him at WATKINS' house so they could go over to the FOSTER residence together. Meanwhile, WATKINS said he wanted to make sure that there was a positive identification before notifying LISA FOSTER for obvious reasons. WATKINS called MAC MCLARTY and he also contacted or was contacted by (he could not recall exactly how this happened) CRAIG LIVINGSTONE and told him to make arrangements to go with KENNEDY to view the body. WATKINS himself went with the officers to the FOSTER residence. LAURA FOSTER answered the door and LISA FOSTER was coming down the stairs. WATKINS does not recall any question asked or answered about where on his body FOSTER had been shot. SHEILA and WEBB HUBBELL arrived at the residence shortly thereafter.

President CLINTON arrived at the FOSTER residence approximately 10:30 pm. MAC MCLARTY was with him. WATKINS and MCLARTY were talking about whether or not a note had been left.

WATKINS called his assistant, PATSY THOMASSON, to both notify her of FOSTER's death and ask her to go to FOSTER's office in The White House West Wing to look for a note. WATKINS guessed that she telephoned him back while he was still at the FOSTER residence, approximately an hour later, and notified him that there was no note found. She told him at that time that MAGGIE WILLIAMS and BERNARD NUSSBAUM had also been there in FOSTER's office. WATKINS said that he never heard about a note having been found or any documents having been removed from FOSTER's office that night. He first heard about the existence of a note approximately a week later when STEPHEN NEUWIRTH discovered a torn up note in FOSTER's briefcase.

WATKINS said that he felt very bad about the fact that THOMASSON was caught up in a web of innuendos and suspicions as a result of her having been in FOSTER's office that night, since it was he who had asked her to go there specifically to look for a note.

WATKINS does not remember anything about seeing CRAIG LIVINGSTONE at The White House that night and he also does not remember seeing any written memo about LIVINGSTONE's activities on or about July 21, 1993.

During the interview WATKINS provided the following personal information about himself:

ALAN WOODS, Maintenance Superintendent, Virginia Department of Transportation, Merrifield Headquarters (703) 207-7321. WOODS was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose for the interview. WOODS then provided the following information:

WOODS is responsible for all maintenance done by the Virginia Department of Transportation on Chain Bridge Road on the eastern side of Ft. Marcy Park. WOODS was responsible for that area in 1993. WOODS stated that he is familiar with the area.

WOODS stated that he checked his records, as previously requested by the investigating agent, and could locate no record of any maintenance crews from the Virginia Department of Transportation working on Chain Bridge Road on 7/20/93 or 7/21/93. WOODS stated that there were no maintenance crews working on Chain Bridge Road from 7/16 till 7/30/93. There was a mowing crew on the road prior to 7/20/93, in the early part of the month. Additionally, WOODS stated that there was a ditching crew working on the road at the George Washington Parkway on 7/16/93.

WOODS stated that the only other agency that would provide any type of maintenance on that part of the road would be the National Park Service.

Jimmy Keith Young, Officer, Uniformed Division, Special Operations Section, United States Secret Service (USSS) was interviewed in the Office of the Special Counsel, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. Mr. Young was advised as to the identities of the interviewing agents and informed of the nature of the interview. He then provided the following information:

He has been employed by USSS since July 1989. He has been employed by USSS at The White House compound for the past 3 years and was so employed on July 20, 1993, at the time of Vincent Foster, Jr.'s death. His office is located at 1310 L Street NW and his telephone number is 202-395-4418.

As an employee of the Special Operations Section his primary responsibility is to lead tours through certain portions of The White House. He was performing those duties on July 20, 1993, when he worked the 6:30 am - 2:00 pm shift. Officer Young described that day as being very routine except for the fact that he and his fellow tour leaders were very busy since July is the peak tourist season in Washington, D.C. and at The White House. He stated that he was not aware of anything out of the ordinary that happened at The White House on that day. He stated that he could not recall exactly when he first learned of Vincent Foster's death, but he does recall that he heard of Foster's death on either the television or radio news. Officer Young said that he never knew Vincent Foster, never met him, nor had they ever talked prior to Foster's death. He stated that he, therefore, does not feel qualified to comment as to Foster's personality or demeanor.

Officer Young advised that he also worked the 6:30 am - 2:00 pm shift on July 21, 1993. He began his regular, routine work that morning and at approximately 8:10 am his supervisor told him and several other uniform officers that a temporary post was being established outside Vincent Foster's office door. Young stated that he was told that he was to serve as a relief officer for other officers who would be assigned specific shifts at this temporary post. He said that his instructions were that no one was to enter that office without the USSS uniform officer notifying the watch commander and obtaining permission for entry. He was also told that a log would be kept. He said that he, his supervisor, and several uniform officers proceeded to the second floor of The White House west wing in the mid-morning hours (exact time unrecalled). He said that while he cannot recall the exact time of day, he does recall relieving USSS Officer Joe Phillips for a period of approximately 20-25 minutes. He stated that once Phillips returned, he (Young) was relieved and that he served no further at this particular post, but returned to his regular duties.

During the 20-25 minutes that Officer Young was standing in front of the office door he was approached by Bernard Nussbaum who introduced himself and then asked him "Who are you going to let in and who are you not going to let into this office?". Young repeated his orders, as he understood them, to Mr. Nussbaum and told him that certain USSS personnel were allowed in but that he (Young) would need to get permission from the USSS Watch Commander for anyone else to enter. Young stated that it was his impression that Bernard Nussbaum was not attempting to enter Vincent Foster's office, at that time, but was "testing" him to see if he understood and could articulate his duties. Officer Young stated that no one entered Vincent Foster's office while he was standing on this post and, other than Mr. Nussbaum, no one even approached the door. Young said that other than the 20-25 minutes that he stood on this post, he has never again been in the suite of offices that, at that time, was occupied by Bernard Nussbaum and Vincent Foster.

REPORT ON THE DEATH OF VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.

INTRODUCTION

In the early evening of July 20, 1993, the body of Deputy White House Counsel Vincent W. Foster, Jr. was found in Fort Marcy Park in Fairfax County, Virginia. The United States Park Police ("Park Police") investigated the death and concluded that it was a suicide.

Since that time, questions have been raised concerning the circumstances of Foster's death, specifically:

1) Were the Park Police correct that Foster committed suicide, or was he murdered?;

2) If the death was a suicide, did it occur in Fort Marcy Park or had the body been moved?; and

3) If Foster committed suicide, was it motivated in any way by concerns Foster may have had about legal issues related to the Clintons' involvement with the Whitewater Development Company, Inc. ("Whitewater"), Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan ("Madison Guaranty"), or Capital Management Services, Inc. ("CMS")?

As a result of speculation about a possible link between Foster's death and issues related to Whitewater, Madison Guaranty, and CMS, the Office of the Independent Counsel ("this Office") conducted a thorough investigation into each of the questions listed above.

THE INVESTIGATION

Roderick C. Lankler directed the Independent Counsel's investigation into Foster's death. For eight of his thirteen years in the Manhattan District Attorney's Office, Mr. Lankler served in the Homicide Bureau, investigating and prosecuting murder cases. He was assisted in this investigation by Associate Counsels Mark Stein and Carl Stich. Russell Hardin, Jr., also an Associate Counsel, reviewed and analyzed the evidence compiled during this investigation. Mr. Hardin is a former Assistant District Attorney in Houston, Texas who has also investigated and tried numerous homicide cases.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation ("FBI") provided substantial and invaluable support in this investigation. The FBI assigned seven experienced agents to the Independent Counsel's Washington Office, all of whom have worked exclusively with this Office for approximately the last four months. Assistance was also provided by representatives of the FBI's National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime. In addition, experts in the FBI Laboratory performed a thorough analysis of the available evidence.

In the course of the investigation, this Office interviewed approximately 125 people. Those interviewed included numerous close friends and relatives of Foster, who provided insight into Foster's activities and state of mind during the weeks prior to his death.* This Office also interviewed numerous people who worked with and for Foster in the White House, including President William Jefferson Clinton; First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton; Chief of Staff Thomas McLarty; Assistants to the President Bruce Lindsey, John Podesta, Ricki Seidman and George Stephanopoulos; Deputy Assistants to the President Charles ("Bill") Burton, and Marsha Scott; former Deputy Chief of Staff Roy Neel; Mrs. Clinton's Chief of Staff Margaret Williams; former General Counsel Bernard Nussbaum; Associate Counsels William Kennedy, Stephen Neuwirth, Beth Nolan and Clifford Sloan; Foster's Executive Assistant Deborah Gorham, and other staff who worked in the White House Counsel's offices. In addition, we contacted and interviewed everyone whom our investigation revealed may have spoken or attempted to speak with Foster in the days prior to his death, including Foster's close friend, former Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell.

Everyone known to have been in Fort Marcy Park on the afternoon or evening of July 20, 1993, also was questioned. This includes: a confidential witness who first found the body; the members of the Fairfax County Fire and Rescue Department who responded to the Park; the Park Police investigators, officers and technicians who conducted the investigation in the Park; the Fairfax County Medical Examiner; and others who were in or near the Park on that day for reasons unconnected with Foster's death. The Medical Examiner who conducted the autopsy was also interviewed.

In addition to conducting interviews, this Office examined documentary and photographic evidence, including documents obtained by the Park Police at the time of Foster's death from his wallet and his car; documents removed from Foster's office at the White House and turned over to either the Clintons' private attorney or the Foster family attorney; photographs of Foster's body taken by the Park Police in Fort Marcy Park; the Northern Virginia District Medical Examiner's autopsy report; and photographs taken during the autopsy. This Office also reviewed White House documents that were worked on by Foster, found in his office, or which otherwise related to Foster.

Experienced FBI Laboratory Technicians in Washington D.C. ("the FBI Lab") performed extensive analyses of the physical evidence identified during the investigation. Among the tests conducted by the FBI Lab were: an examination of the gun that the Park Police found in Foster's hand; a chemical and physical comparison of gunpowder and lead residue on Foster's clothing with that found in the gun; an analysis of photographs taken by the Park Police for patterns of bloodstaining, gunpowder residue and the presence or absence of physical marks on Foster's clothing and body; a toxicological analysis of a blood sample obtained during the autopsy and a comparison of that blood sample with blood on Foster's clothing; a DNA comparison of Foster's blood with DNA found near the muzzle of the gun; an analysis of mineral deposits on the clothing; a fingerprint analysis; and a handwriting analysis of a torn-up note discovered in Foster's briefcase.*

A four-member panel of experienced and respected forensic pathologists ("Pathologist Panel") reviewed the results of the investigation. The members of this panel are:

> Dr. Charles S. Hirsch - Chief Medical Examiner for the City of New York and Chairman of the Department of Forensic Medicine at New York University Medical School;
>
> Dr. James L. Luke - Forensic Pathology Consultant, FBI Investigative Support Unit, FBI Academy; Project Director, Department of Environmental and Toxicologic Pathology, Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Washington D.C.; Clinical Professor of Pathology at Georgetown and George Washington Universities;
>
> Dr. Donald T. Reay - Chief Medical Examiner for King County, Seattle, Washington since 1975; Professor of Pathology at the University of Washington;
>
> Dr. Charles J. Stahl - Distinguished Scientist and Armed Forces Medical Examiner, Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Washington, D.C.

Following their review of the evidence, the Pathologist Panel issued a report summarizing their analysis and conclusions ("Pathologist Report").

* Attached as Exhibit 1 are reports issued by the FBI Lab. These include two general reports dated May 9, 1994 ("Lab Report") and June 13, 1994 ("Supplemental [illegible] Report") (the Supplemental Lab Report was issued as a result of [illegible] this Office to the Lab following receipt of th[illegible]; two reports on the FBI Lab's fingerprint ana[illegible] 94 and June 9, 1994; and a report on the FBI La[illegible]sis dated June 17, 1994.

This Office was also assisted by Dr. Joel E. Kleinman, M.D., Ph.D., a respected psychiatrist. Dr. Kleinman is the Deputy Chief of the Clinical Brain Disorders Branch and Chief of the Neuropathology Section at the Intramural Research Program, National Institute of Mental Health, Saint Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington D.C. He is also a Clinical Professor in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences and Department of Neurology, George Washington University School of Medicine.*

SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

On the afternoon of July 20, 1993, in Fort Marcy Park, Fairfax County, Virginia, Vincent W. Foster, Jr. committed suicide by firing a bullet from a .38 caliber revolver into his mouth. As discussed below, the evidence overwhelmingly supports this conclusion, and there is no evidence to the contrary. This conclusion is endorsed by all participants in the investigation, including each member of the Pathologist Panel.

We found no evidence that issues involving Whitewater, Madison Guaranty, CMS or other personal legal matters of the President or Mrs. Clinton were a factor in Foster's suicide. While Foster did confide to family and friends in the weeks prior to his death that certain matters were troubling him, we have learned of no instance in which Whitewater, Madison Guaranty, CMS, or other possible legal matters of the Clintons were mentioned. Moreover, in the spring and summer of 1993, Whitewater and Madison Guaranty related matters were not issues of concern either within the White House or in the press.

FACTS

A. Background

Vincent W. Foster, Jr. was born on January 15, 1945, in Hope, Arkansas, where he attended the same kindergarten class as President Clinton and White House Chief of Staff Thomas McLarty. After graduating from Hope High School in 1963, Foster attended Davidson College in Davidson, North Carolina, where he earned a bachelor's degree in 1967. In 1968, Foster married Elizabeth ("Lisa") Braden, with whom he had three children: Vincent, age 22; Laura, age 21; and John, age 18. In 1971, he received his law degree from the University of Arkansas School of Law in Fayetteville, Arkansas, where he ranked first in his class. He subsequently received the highest score on the Arkansas Bar exam. In 1971, Foster joined the Rose Law Firm and, in 1973, he was made a partner. Among his partners at the firm were Hillary Rodham Clinton, Webster Hubbell and William Kennedy.

Foster remained at the firm until January 1993, when he moved to Washington, D.C., to assume the position of Deputy White House Counsel. At about the same time, Kennedy joined the Counsel's Office and Hubbell became Associate Attorney General. Foster's office at the White House was located on the second floor of the West Wing where he shared a suite with White House General Counsel Bernard Nussbaum. A few weeks after arriving he hired Deborah Gorham as his Executive Assistant.

When Foster first arrived in Washington he lived with his sister, Sheila, and her husband, Beryl Anthony. Foster's wife and children remained in Arkansas so that his son John could complete his school year. In March 1993, Foster rented a house and in early June he was joined in Washington by his wife and children.

Friends and associates who knew Foster well, uniformly described him as a man of honesty and integrity, respected for his intelligence and judgment. His professional reputation was of paramount importance to him, particularly among colleagues in Arkansas. Foster was characterized as quiet, reserved, and one who rarely showed anger or emotion. Although difficult to get close to, he could be relied upon as a trusted confidante. Colleagues within the White House described him as a calming influence during stressful periods.

Foster's family and friends said that Foster did not experience any extended period of depression prior to the spring of 1993. Although he experienced some brief episodes of depression and anxiety, these appeared to be resolved without treatment. From time to time Foster experienced what his wife described as anxiety or panic attacks, marked by heavy sweating and a strained voice. In late 1992, he told his physician in Little Rock, Dr. Larry Watkins, that he was feeling depressed and anxious. At least two of Foster's close relatives have suffered from periods of depression.

B. Foster's State Of Mind During The Weeks Prior To Suicide

Foster's position at the White House generally demanded that he work from between 7:30-8:30 in the morning until 9:30 or later at night, either six or seven days per week. He took no vacation or weekends off until the weekend immediately prior to his death. The demands of the Counsel's office were severe, and Bernard Nussbaum heavily relied upon Foster to assist him in accomplishing a wide range of tasks. Friends and associates recall that in the last two to three months prior to his death, he showed signs of stress and had virtually no time to relax in the ways that he had in Arkansas.

In the last six to eight weeks of his life those close to Foster observed that he appeared exhausted much of the time, his face drawn and grey. He confided to some that he was having difficulty sleeping, and on certain mornings commented that he had not slept at all.* Although no one noticed a loss of appetite, it was obvious to many that he had lost weight. In the last few weeks of his life Foster seemed uncharacteristically fretful, and more quiet and subdued than usual. Family members noted that he had lost his sense of humor and appeared distracted. Lisa Foster described him as constantly worried and under stress.

Bernard Nussbaum noted a marked decrease in Foster's productivity in the weeks prior to his death. During his first few months in Washington, Foster actively involved himself in most of the important matters within the Counsel's office. Nussbaum came to rely on him to accomplish matters quickly and with sound judgment. During the particularly busy period of late June and July, however, Foster was virtually uninvolved. For example, Nussbaum noted that Foster uncharacteristically provided little assistance in the selection of a new FBI Director, a task that Nussbaum considered one of the most important he faced during his time in Washington. Nussbaum repeatedly suggested to Foster during this period that he should take some time off, but Foster was reluctant. Deborah Gorham, his Executive Assistant, confirmed that Foster's productivity dropped significantly in the last few weeks of his life. Lisa Foster said that Foster received no joy from his work during that time.

---

* Foster had a prescription for sleeping pills but did not want to take them for fear of becomi

Some family members have stated that Foster appeared depressed in the weeks prior to his death. Although it is impossible to determine precisely what triggered this depression, certain matters were cited repeatedly by those interviewed during this investigation.

1. The Travel Office matter

Those close to Foster have stated that the single greatest source of his distress was the criticism he and others within the Counsel's Office received following the firing of seven employees from the White House Travel Office.

The Travel Office controversy began in mid-May 1993, when allegations surfaced that the White House Travel Office was being mismanaged and that employees within that Office may have either embezzled funds or received kickbacks. Foster gave Associate Counsel William Kennedy responsibility for handling the matter. In consultation with Foster and others within the White House, Kennedy took two steps: he hired an outside accounting firm to audit the books of the Travel Office, and he contacted the FBI to discuss the possibility of initiating a criminal investigation. On May 19, 1993, following a preliminary report by the accounting firm, the White House decided to fire seven employees in the Travel Office.

In the days that followed, the White House was harshly criticized for its handling of the matter. Some reports charged that the White House pressured the FBI to open an investigation in order to justify the firings. In late May 1993, the FBI conducted an internal review of the meetings between FBI agents and White House personnel, and on June 1, submitted a report on the matter to the Attorney General. Included in the report were statements attributed to William Kennedy, some of which Kennedy denied making. The White House announced in late May that it would conduct an internal review of the Travel Office matter. In connection with that review, the White House requested and received a copy of the FBI's report to the Attorney General. On July 2, 1993, the White House released an internal report that reprimanded Kennedy and others for their handling of the matter. There was some discussion within the White House about reprimanding Foster, but this did not occur.

By many accounts, Foster was deeply disturbed by the reprimand of Kennedy and what he viewed as a distortion of the facts by the press. Lisa Foster believed that the Travel Office matter was the greatest cause of Foster's stress and anxiety in the weeks prior to his death. She recalled that Foster had a bout of "anxiety" at around the time that the White House reprimand was issued. Foster was angry and distressed that, in his view, Kennedy had been unjustly criticized. He told co-workers that he believed that the FBI's report to the Attorney General had mischaracterized what had occurred in meetings with Kennedy. He told family members that the FBI had lied about the meetings, and that the Counsel's Office had been set up by the FBI in this matter.*

Foster was concerned that the White House report would lead to unwarranted investigations of well-intentioned actions. He felt responsible for Kennedy's situation because he had assigned Kennedy to the matter. He was heard to raise his voice uncharacteristically in insisting that Nussbaum allow Foster to take the blame instead of Kennedy.

It is clear from Foster's conversations with others in the White House that the reaction to the Travel Office firings had a profound effect upon him. He told Webster Hubbell, a close friend who at that time was serving as the Associate Attorney General, that no laws or rules had been broken but that in Washington you are assumed to have done something wrong even if you have not. He further told Hubbell that he thought the matter would never end. Foster told Kennedy in connection with the Travel Office matter that there were very few people one could trust in Washington.

Foster's sister, Sheila Anthony, observed that immediately after the White House issued its Travel Office report, Foster's distress became severe. He told his sister, as well as his wife, Lisa, and friend, Kennedy, that he was considering resigning from his position. Both Sheila Anthony and Lisa Foster believed that the personal humiliation he would have felt had he returned to Arkansas under those circumstances prevented him from resigning.

According to Nussbaum, Foster became increasingly obsessed with the Travel Office matter in the weeks before his death. Foster repeatedly urged Nussbaum to hire outside counsel to represent the General Counsel's Office in connection with the issues related to the Travel Office firings.* Nussbaum felt that Foster was overreacting and tried unsuccessfully to allay his concerns.

The extent to which Foster was disturbed by Travel Office issues is reflected in a torn note found in his briefcase by Stephen Neuwirth on July 26, 1993, six days after Foster's death. Lisa Foster has identified the handwriting in the note as Foster's, and a handwriting analysis performed by the FBI Lab confirms that identification. Lisa Foster believes that the note was written by Foster on or about July 11, 1993. On that day, she had encouraged him to write down everything that was disturbing him. She also encouraged him to go on the offensive and not take responsibility for every mistake. Later that day, Foster told his wife that he had written the opening argument for his defense - an apparent reference to his expected testimony should Congress hold hearings on the Travel Office matter.

There are ten separate entries in the torn up note found in Foster's briefcase. Five of them appear to relate to the Travel Office matter:

> I made mistakes from ignorance, inexperience and overwork;
>
> I did not knowingly violate any law or standard of conduct.
>
> No one in the White House, to my knowledge, violated any law or standard of conduct, including any action in the travel office. There was no intent to benefit any individual or specific group.
>
> The FBI lied in their report to the AG.
>
> The press is covering up the illegal benefits they received from the travel staff.*

2. The Wall Street Journal editorials

According to people close to Foster, he was also distressed by editorials written about him in the Wall Street Journal ("the Journal"). Of particular concern was a June 17, 1993, editorial entitled "Who Is Vincent Foster?" The editorial criticized the Clinton White House for "carelessness about following the law," using as an example the Journal's efforts to obtain a photograph of Foster. According to the editorial, someone within the White House Counsel's Office responded that, "Mr. Foster sees no reason why he should supply the Journal with a photo." The Journal thereafter filed a request for the photograph under the Freedom of Information Act but, according to the editorial, did not receive a response within the ten-day period set forth in the Act. The editorial states:

> No doubt Mr. Foster and company consider us mischievous (at best). . . . Does the law mean one thing for critics and another for friends? Will we in the end have to go to court to get a reply, or will even that work? Does it take a $50,000-a day fine to get this mule's attention? . . . Who ensures that this administration follows the law, or explains why not? A good question. While Constitutional law may not have been the big part of the Rose firm's practice, it seems to us that a good man for the job would be deputy counsel Foster.

One week later, on June 24, 1993, the Journal ran another editorial entitled "Vincent Foster's Victory", which focused on a decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that Hillary Rodham Clinton was the functional equivalent of a federal employee and, therefore, the Health Care Task Force she headed need not meet in public pursuant to the Federal Advisory Committee Act ("FACA"). The editorial states:

> As for Iran-Contra, we suspect that Vincent Foster and Ollie North might hit it off. After all, we're supposed to believe that the health task force "officially" disbanded on > May 30, and so FACA's requirements are moot. That is, we're supposed to believe that Mrs. Clinton and her associates will never ever hold off-the-books meetings with "non-government" advisers to get the reform plan finished.

Foster was unaccustomed to such criticism. He was distraught over these editorials, and told others that they were mean-spirited and factually baseless. He believed the Journal would continue attacking him and others within the Administration until someone from Arkansas was forced out of the White House. He noted to his sister Sheila and to Kennedy that his friends and colleagues in Arkansas read the Journal, and voiced his concern that the editorials would damage his reputation. Foster told Sheila's husband, Beryl Anthony, that he had spent a lifetime building his reputation and that it was now being tarnished. Sheila Anthony tried without success to make Foster understand that this was "par for the course" in Washington politics. Colleagues at the White House made similar comments and attempted to joke with Foster about the editorials, but Foster found no humor in them.

On July 19, 1993, the Journal ran another editorial that mentioned Foster. That editorial was critical of the speed at which the Administration was moving to replace FBI Director William Sessions, and compared it to the Administration's handling of the Travel Office matter. The editorial noted that Foster was involved in the Travel Office matter, and stated that, "The mores on display from the Rose alumni are far from confidence-building."*

Foster's views about the importance of reputation are reflected in his commencement address to The University of Arkansas Law School at Fayetteville, Arkansas, on May 8, 1993. Many of those interviewed referred to the speech as a source of insight into Foster's attitudes. On the topic of reputation Foster told his audience:

> The reputation you develop for intellectual and ethical integrity will be your greatest asset or your worst enemy. . . . Treat every pleading, every brief, every contract, every letter, every daily task as if your career will be judged on it. . . . I cannot make this point to you too strongly. There is no victory, no advantage, no fee, no favor which is worth even a blemish on your reputation for intellect and integrity. Nothing travels faster than an accusation that another lawyer's word is no good. . . . Dents to the reputation in the legal profession are irreparable. . . .*

Sheila Anthony recalls that during his address Foster's voice was unnaturally strained and tense, reminiscent of their father's voice when he was distraught during the period before his death in 1991.

Foster's distress about adverse publicity is plainly reflected in the torn note found in his briefcase. In reference to the Journal editorials, he wrote that "The WSJ editors lie without consequence." He concluded the note by stating, "I was not meant for the job or the spotlight of public life in Washington. Here ruining people is considered sport."

C. The Role of Whitewater

During his time as White House Deputy Counsel, Foster continued to handle some personal legal matters for the President and Mrs. Clinton, as he had while a member of the Rose Law Firm. Among those matters was Foster's role in arranging for the Clintons' accounting firm to prepare Whitewater tax returns for the years 1990-92. We have reviewed all of the Whitewater-related documents from Mr. Foster's files that were delivered to the Clinton's personal attorney after his death. However, Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure precludes us from disclosing the content of these documents since they were obtained by grand jury subpoena.

Those who worked in the White House during the first half of 1993 all stated that Whitewater was not an issue of any significance within the White House during that period. The issue had received virtually no attention in the press since the spring of 1992, during the Presidential campaign. As one person put it, Whitewater issues were "not on the screen" at that time. It was not until October 1993, three months after Foster's death, when it was disclosed that the Resolution Trust Corporation had issued criminal referrals involving Madison Guaranty and Whitewater, that the matter again received prominent public attention.

Each of Foster's co-workers, friends and family whom we questioned was explicitly asked whether Foster had ever mentioned Whitewater or Madison Guaranty related matters as a cause of concern or distress.* According to each of these people, Foster had never expressed any concern about these matters.

Questions have also been raised regarding whether a warrant authorizing the FBI to search the premises of CMS played a role in Foster's suicide. The search warrant was issued by the Federal District Court in Little Rock, Arkansas, on the afternoon of July 20, 1993, the date of Foster's death. However, the search warrant was not made public until it was executed, on July 21, after Foster's death. We have investigated to determine whether Foster learned of the search warrant prior to his death and have found no evidence that he did. In fact, only a limited number of individuals in the Little Rock U.S. Attorney's Office, the Little Rock FBI Office and the Court had any knowledge of the warrant prior to its execution.

Obviously, the fact that Foster never expressed a concern about Whitewater or Madison to anyone does not mean that he did not, in fact, have such a concern. Thus, we cannot conclusively rule out such a concern as a possible contributing factor to his depression. What we can conclude is that there is no evidence that he did have such a concern against a background in which Whitewater/Madison issues were neither a matter of expressed concern in the White House, nor the subject of media attention.*

D. Foster's Activities From July 12 - July 18, 1993

Early in the week of July 12, Foster expressed concern to Beryl Anthony about the possibility of Congressional hearings on the Travel Office matter and asked Anthony to recommend an attorney. Mr. Anthony delivered a list of attorneys to him later that week. At about the same time, Foster spoke to James Lyons by telephone and told Lyons that the Travel Office matter was escalating and asked him to come to Washington as soon as possible. They arranged to meet the following week, on July 21, when Lyons was planning to be in Washington on other business. On July 13, Foster again expressed his concern about upcoming Congressional hearings regarding the Travel Office and told his wife that he was thinking about resigning.

Deborah Gorham, Foster's Executive Assistant, stated that Foster did little work during the week of July 12, and instead concentrated on "cleaning-up" matters that he had not been able to get to for some time, such as dictating thank-you and congratulatory notes. Gorham rarely had personal conversations with Foster, but on Thursday, July 15, he told her that he was frustrated because well-intentioned people were trying to build something and others just kept knocking it down. Gorham asked Foster if he ever felt that he was in "spiritual default." He said that he did, and Gorham recommended a church located near the White House.

Lisa Foster recalls that during that same week, Foster told her that his heart had been "pounding". Records reflect that on Friday, July 16, he went to the White House medical unit to have his blood pressure taken, which was recorded as 132/84. On the same day, Foster called his sister, Sheila, and told her that he was battling depression for the first time in his life and did not know what to do about it. Sheila Anthony described Foster's voice as tight and strained. She asked him to let her contact a psychiatrist and set up an appointment for him. Foster told her that he was hesitant to see a psychiatrist because it could jeopardize his White House security clearance. Sheila Anthony said that she would discuss this concern with the psychiatrist before making any appointment.

Sheila Anthony contacted a psychiatrist in the Washington area who was recommended by a friend. That doctor agreed to see Foster one time on an "off-the-record" basis. Sheila Anthony then called Foster and provided him with the names and telephone numbers of three psychiatrists, including the one she had spoken to, and encouraged him to call right away. He said that he wanted to think about it over the weekend.

Telephone records reflect that in the early afternoon of July 16, Foster made two calls to one of the psychiatrists recommended by his sister. At 12:41 p.m. and again at 1:24 p.m., Foster called the psychiatrist from the telephone in his office, and charged the calls to his home telephone. Each call lasted one minute or less.* The psychiatrist called by Foster often uses an answering machine during the lunch hour when no one is in the office. It is possible that Foster reached the answering machine and did not leave a message. Neither the psychiatrist that Foster attempted to reach nor the other psychiatrists recommended by Sheila Anthony ever spoke with Foster. The list of psychiatrists was found on a piece of paper in Foster's wallet following his death.

During the same telephone call in which Foster told Sheila Anthony that he was depressed, he asked her to recommend a place he and his wife could go to relax for the weekend. She called Lisa Foster with two or three possibilities, and Lisa Foster made arrangements for them to go to an inn on Maryland's Eastern Shore. Before they left, Foster told his wife that he was depressed, and she could tell that he was still under great stress while they were driving through Maryland.

Coincidentally, Webster Hubbell and his wife were also on the Eastern Shore of Maryland for the weekend staying with friends, Michael and Harolyn Cardoza, who also knew the Fosters. On Saturday, July 17, the Cardozas invited the Fosters to their home, and the group spent Saturday evening and Sunday together. Hubbell described it as a relaxing weekend during which Foster jogged, went boating, hit some golf balls, read the newspaper, and ate fresh crab for the first time. Foster and Hubbell spoke about the need to change their lifestyles and spend more time away from work. Foster mentioned that he missed spending time during June and July at his house in Michigan, as he had while at the Rose Law Firm.

Somewhat in contrast to Hubbell's perception of the weekend, Lisa Foster stated that the weekend did not go particularly well for Foster. When Foster returned on Sunday evening, July 18, he spoke to Lyons by telephone. They discussed the Travel Office matter for approximately thirty minutes and confirmed that they would meet in Washington to further discuss it on July 21.

E. Foster's Activities On July 19

Gorham observed that Foster spent much of the day on Monday, July 19, going through paperwork on his desk and in his desk drawers, dictating letters and taking care of unfinished business. She described Foster's day as one of "straightening and cleaning." Gorham recalled that he spent much of the day with his door closed.

Gorham recalls that at one point Foster came out of his office and placed three envelopes in the out-box on her desk. The envelopes had already been addressed, stamped and sealed by Foster, which was unusual. She looked at the envelopes to make sure they had postage and recalls that one was addressed to Foster's mother in Hope, Arkansas, and another was addressed to an insurance company. She cannot recall how the third envelope was addressed. Sheila Anthony was with their mother when she received correspondence from Foster a day or two after his death. The letter contained oil leases which had been left to Foster's mother after his father died in 1991. Foster wrote a very brief typewritten cover letter providing instructions to his mother regarding the leases. Lisa Foster believes that the correspondence sent to the insurance company and the third envelope mailed by Foster were bill payments that she had asked Foster to make.

Hubbell stopped by Foster's office on July 19, and Foster told him that the weekend had been good for him and that he and Lisa were planning to go away the following weekend. Lisa Foster recalls that she and Foster had spoken about going away the following weekend but that no plans had been made. Foster also told Sheila Anthony during a telephone conversation on July 19 that the weekend had gone well, and he contemplated getting away more often. He also said that he was not yet ready to contact a psychiatrist.

On the same date, Foster contacted Dr. Larry Watkins, his physician in Arkansas. He told Watkins that he was under a great deal of stress and was depressed, that he had a loss of appetite and was losing weight. Watkins prescribed an anti-depressant drug called Desyrel, which has the generic name trazadone. Watkins stated that he had never before prescribed an anti-depressant for Foster. A pharmacy in Washington filled the prescription for 30 tablets, in a dosage of 50 milligrams per tablet, and had the tablets delivered to Foster's home in the late afternoon on July 19.* Lisa Foster saw Foster take one tablet during that evening.

Foster left work earlier than usual that day and arrived home around 7:45 p.m. During the evening Foster received a call from President Clinton. The President had heard that Foster was feeling down about the Travel Office matter and called to invite Foster to watch a movie with him and others at the White House. Foster declined the invitation. After chatting about Foster's weekend in Maryland, the President told him that he wanted Foster's advice on possible White House organizational changes. They agreed to meet on Wednesday, July 21. The President did not perceive during this conversation that Foster was downcast or depressed.

F. Foster's Activities On July 20

Lisa Foster recalls that Foster left for work at about 8:00 a.m. She saw him for the last time standing "stiffly" in the kitchen before he left for work. As usual, Foster drove to work in their 1989 light grey Honda Accord which still bore Arkansas license plates. On the way to the White House, he dropped his son, Vincent, at a Metro station and his daughter, Laura, at work. Soon after Foster arrived at the White House, he [illegible] the regular 9:00 a.m. Counsel's Office staff meeting.* Following the meeting, Foster went to the White House Rose Garden to attend the ceremony announcing the selection of Louis Freeh as Director of the FBI. Foster then returned to his office.

Later that morning, Foster walked into Nussbaum's office, where Nussbaum was watching television coverage of two events: the Freeh nomination and Ruth Bader Ginsburg's Supreme Court confirmation hearings. Nussbaum was exuberant about both nominations. He said to Foster, "We hit two home runs today." Foster seemed distracted and his response was markedly understated.

At approximately 12:00 noon, Foster asked Linda Tripp, an Executive Assistant to Nussbaum, to get him lunch from the cafeteria. A short time after Tripp went to the cafeteria, Thomas Castleton, an employee in the Counsel's Office, arrived at the cafeteria and told Tripp that Foster had sent him to find out what was taking so long. Tripp delivered Foster's lunch and added some M & M's to the tray. Foster sat on the couch in his office and ate his lunch while reading the newspaper. At about 1:00 p.m., he came out of his office holding his suit jacket, without a briefcase. He told Tripp that there were still some M & M's on the tray if she wanted them. He said, "I'll be back," and then left.

Foster did not return to the White House. A number of people tried unsuccessfully to reach him by telephone. C. Brantley Buck, Foster's former partner at the Rose Law Firm, called to discuss finalizing work that Buck had been doing to set up a blind trust for the Clintons. Foster, who was acting as Buck's contact point at the White House, was supposed to have the Clintons sign some documents to complete the process. Buck stated that there was nothing about the blind trust that would have provided a source of concern to Foster, nor did Foster ever express any such concern.

James Lyons called to finalize plans for his meeting with Foster, scheduled for the following day. Gordon Rather, an attorney from Little Rock, called to discuss a routine matter regarding the American Board of Trial Advocates. A number of people within the White House also tried to reach Foster to discuss ongoing White House projects with which Foster was involved.

We have been unable to determine where Foster went following his departure from the Counsel's Office at about 1:00 p.m. We have also been unable to determine with certainty when Foster entered Fort Marcy Park. One motorist traveling on the George Washington Memorial Parkway saw a Japanese-made car driven by a white male swerve from the left lane of the Parkway into Fort Marcy Park some time between 2:45 and 3:00 p.m. on the afternoon of July 20. When interviewed shortly after Foster's death, the motorist told the Park Police that he recalled that the license plate on the car was from either Arkansas or Ohio. When he was recently shown pictures of Foster's car, the motorist stated that he did not believe that it was the car he saw on July 20 because the license plate he saw identified the State in the lower right hand corner of the plate.*

Another man stated that he drove into Fort Marcy Park between 4:15 and 4:30 p.m. He observed two cars in the parking lot of the Park at that time. He described one as a brown Japanese-made car with an Arkansas license plate. When shown photographs of Foster's car, he stated that the car he saw appeared darker in color and more compact. He stated that nobody was in the car, but there was a man's suit jacket folded over the passenger seat of the car. He recalls that the car was parked in one of the first spaces on the left side of the lot, which is where the Park Police found Foster's car following his death. The Park Police also found Foster's suit jacket draped over the front passenger seat of his car.

G. Discovery Of Foster's Body

1. Fort Marcy Park

Fort Marcy Park is located adjacent to the northbound lanes of the George Washington Memorial Parkway in Fairfax County, Virginia. The only vehicular entrance is from the Parkway, although there is a small opening in the fence on the Chain Bridge Road side of the park for use by pedestrians. A short drive from the Parkway entrance, there is a parking lot. Several foot trails lead from the lot. The original Fort Marcy was one of a ring of fortifications constructed during the Civil War to defend Washington against Confederate attack. It is now a National Park. One path from the parking lot leads up to two cannons dating from the Civil War.

No one interviewed during this investigation had ever heard Foster mention the Park, or knew of Foster ever visiting the Park prior to the date of his death.

2. Observations by Confidential Witness

Foster's body was discovered in Fort Marcy Park at approximately 5:45 p.m. on July 20 by a man who has requested that his identity remain confidential. As a result, this individual will be referred to only as a confidential witness ("CW").*

On the afternoon of July 20, at approximately 5:30-5:45 p.m., CW was driving north on the George Washington Memorial Parkway in heavy traffic when he turned into Fort Marcy Park to urinate. When he arrived, he observed two cars in the parking lot. He described the first as a compact Japanese-made car of a light color (he is not sure of the exact color) parked in the second or third space on the left as one enters the lot. The other he described as a white Honda Accord parked near the rear of the lot. CW had visited the Park many times and was familiar with its layout.

* CW initially provided this information to G. Gordon Liddy, who hosts a radio call-in program broadcast from the Washington, D.C. area. Mr. Liddy subseq ...s Office and arranged for this Office to meet ...fter receiving assurances that we would respec ...nfidentiality.

Note 1920

CW followed a path off the parking lot for approximately 200 yards until he reached the second cannon, which faces a raised berm that runs along the original Fort's perimeter. CW walked just over the berm, stopping at a point about 15-20 feet to the right of the cannon.* He noticed to his left what he first thought was a pile of trash located on the slope just over the berm in front of the cannon. He went over to look, and realized that it was a body. He stood at the top of the berm, just above the head of the body. The body appeared to be a man dressed in a white dress shirt, "expensive" trousers, and black dress shoes. CW stated that the man's head was either straight up or slightly tilted to the right, his arms were straight down at his sides. CW further stated that he believed the man's palms were facing upward. He did not see a gun in the man's hands but said it was difficult to see his hands because of the dense foliage in the area where the body was lying. CW acknowledges that, because of his position at the top of the berm and the heavy foliage, there could have been a gun in the man's hand that he did not see.

CW saw what appeared to be dried blood on the man's lips and nostrils. He also noticed a purple stain, which he believed to be a mixture of wine stains and vomit on the right upper shoulder and chest of his shirt. CW stated that he never touched the body.

After briefly viewing the body, CW returned to his vehicle and drove to Parkway Headquarters about two miles north of Fort Marcy Park, where he hoped to find a telephone. When he pulled into the parking lot he saw two uniformed park maintenance employees. CW provided the employees with the location of the body and drove off. He did not leave his name and the maintenance workers did not observe his license plate.*

3. Observations of the U.S. Park Police and Fairfax County personnel

Computer records and audio recordings establish that at 5:59 p.m., using a public telephone, one of the Park maintenance workers dialed "911" to report the information provided by CW. He was advised by the Fairfax County Police dispatcher that because the body was found in the Park, the Park Police was the appropriate authority to respond. At 6:02 p.m., the maintenance worker reached the Park Police dispatcher and reported the information received from CW.

Following receipt of these calls, the Fairfax County Fire and Rescue Department dispatched Emergency Medical Services ("EMS") personnel to the Park, and the Park Police dispatched officers and investigators. At 6:09 p.m., a medical unit and an engine unit from Fairfax County EMS arrived at the Park. At approximately the same time Officer Kevin Fornshill of the Park Police arrived. They split up to look for the body.

Fornshill was first to arrive at the body. His description of its location is identical to that reported by CW. Fornshill observed the body from the top of the berm as had CW and reported that Foster's head was near the top of the berm directly in front of the second cannon.

Representatives from this Office and the FBI have gone to this site numerous times. The berm on which Foster was found is located approximately ten feet in front of the cannon. There is a short incline on the inside of the berm facing the cannon. From the top of the berm, the ground falls away to form the outside embankment of the Fort. Foster was found on the outside of the berm, toward the top of the embankment. The embankment is about twenty to twenty-five feet in length, sloping at about a 45 degree angle.

Fornshill described Foster's body as lying straight up with his head slightly tilted to the right. From his position at the top of the berm, Fornshill could not see a gun, but noted that the natural foliage around Foster's body blocked his view of Foster's hands. Even after the EMS personnel arrived and stated that Foster had a gun in his right hand, Fornshill still could not see it from the top of the berm.

The first EMS personnel to arrive at the body were Todd Stacey Hall and George Gonzalez. Each of them moved next to the body and saw a gun in Foster's right hand, partially concealed beneath the hand and right leg. Hall checked for a pulse against the left side of Foster's neck and found none. Hall states that he did not move Foster's head during this time.

Shortly thereafter an additional group of EMS personnel and Park Police officers arrived at the body. Polaroid and 35 mm photographs were taken of the body and the surrounding area. The 35 mm photographs were underexposed and of little value, despite the FBI Lab's effort to enhance their quality. The Polaroid photographs, however, clearly depict the condition of Foster's body shortly after the arrival of the Park Police. The photographs show blood stains on Foster's face and on the right shoulder of his shirt. The staining on his shirt covered the top of his shoulder from his neck to his upper arm. The photographs of his face show two lines of blood, one running from the right corner of his mouth to below the right ear, and the other from the right nostril toward the temple above the right ear. The photographs also show a larger area of blood staining Foster's right cheek and jaw, forming what is described in the FBI Lab Report as a "contact stain." Lab Report at 9.*

At approximately 6:35 p.m., Park Police Investigators arrived at the body. Park Police Investigator John Rolla observed that some of the blood on Foster's face was still wet when he arrived, but was starting to dry. He touched Foster's body and noted that it was still relatively warm (which could have been a result, in part, of the ninety degree heat that day) and there were no signs of rigor mortis.* Foster's clothes were neat and there was no sign of any struggle. Foster was wearing his White House paging device, which had been turned off. A pair of eyeglasses, identified by Lisa Foster as belonging to her husband, were found about thirteen feet below Foster's body at the bottom of the berm.

Park Police Technician Peter Simonello was responsible for removing the gun still held in Foster's right hand. He noted that the knuckle of Foster's right thumb was trapped between the front surface of the trigger and the inside of the trigger guard of the gun. Simonello stated that Foster's hand was flexible, but that he had to half cock the weapon in order to remove his thumb. After removing the gun, Simonello observed a deep impression on Foster's thumb where the trigger had been located. He further saw powder residue on Foster's thumb and along the edge of Foster's right index finger. Photographs taken at the scene and at the autopsy show this powder residue, and a photograph taken at the autopsy shows the mark on Foster's thumb. The gun, a .38 caliber Colt revolver, was found to contain one unexpended cartridge and one cartridge case from which a bullet had been fired.

While one group of Park Police officials continued to examine Foster's body, others conducted an inspection of the cars in or near the parking lot. When the Park Police and EMS personnel first arrived, they observed three cars within the Park. The first was a blue Mercedes flashing its hazard lights, located just inside the entrance to the Park. This car belonged to a woman who had pulled into the Park late in the afternoon when her car had begun to malfunction. She immediately left the Park on foot and a tow truck arrived to pick up the car at approximately 7:00 p.m.

The second car, a white Nissan Stanza parked near the rear of the parking lot, belonged to another woman who drove to the Park with a friend at approximately 5:00 p.m.* They were still in the Park when located by the Park Police a short way down a path leading south from the parking lot. Neither individual heard a gunshot while in the Park or observed anything unusual.

The third car, a grey 1989 Honda Accord with Arkansas license plates, was parked in one of the first spaces on the left near the entrance of the parking lot. The car was registered to Vincent Foster. Park Police Investigators observed a suit jacket that matched the pants worn by Foster, neatly folded over the passenger seat of the car. In the jacket was Foster's White House identification. The keys to the car were located in Foster's pants pocket. The car was impounded and searched, but nothing significant to the investigation was found.* Foster's wallet was in his suit jacket and contained $292, credit cards, and miscellaneous papers, including the list of three psychiatrists provided by Sheila Anthony four days earlier.

At approximately 7:40 p.m., Dr. Donald Haut, the Fairfax County Medical Examiner, arrived at the scene to examine the body. At that point Foster's body was rolled over and those present observed a large pool of blood located on the ground where Foster's head had been. Haut observed a large exit wound in the back of the skull.

Following this examination, additional personnel from Fairfax County Fire & Rescue were dispatched to the scene to transport Foster's body to the morgue. At approximately 8:45 p.m., Corey Ashford and Roger Harrison lifted Foster's body under the arms and placed him into a body bag. The body was wheeled out of the Park on a stretcher and transported to Fairfax Hospital where it was briefly examined by Dr. Julian Orenstein, the physician on duty in the hospital's emergency room, who officially pronounced Foster dead. The body was taken to the morgue, where it was later identified by William Kennedy and Craig Livingstone, a Special Assistant to the White House Counsel.

H. The Autopsy

At 10:00 a.m. on July 21, 1993, Dr. James C. Beyer, the Deputy Chief Medical Examiner for the Northern Virginia District, conducted the autopsy on Foster. The autopsy found a contact bullet wound entering the soft palate inside the mouth. A microscopic examination noted extensive gunpowder residue on the soft palate. According to the autopsy report and information subsequently provided by Dr. Beyer, the bullet entered the cranial cavity, significantly damaged the left side of the brainstem and the left cerebral hemisphere of the brain, and exited from the center of the back of the head. The autopsy found no other trauma to Foster's body and found his teeth unbroken. Dr. Beyer found gunpowder-like residue on the lateral portion of both index fingers, with a greater concentration on the right index finger. No alcohol or drugs were found in Foster's blood, although a later analysis by the FBI Lab revealed trace amounts of trazadone, attributable to the anti-depressant prescribed by Dr. Watkins. Photographs taken during the autopsy, as well as microscopic slides of Foster's soft palate and other tissues, were obtained from Dr. Beyer by this Office and reviewed by the Pathologist Panel.* Dr. Beyer certified the death as a suicide.

I. The Gun

The Park Police submitted the gun found in Foster's hand to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms ("ATF") for testing. ATF identified the gun as a .38 caliber Colt revolver. The gun contained two different serial numbers, indicating that it was assembled with parts from two different guns. The only available records indicate that guns bearing those serial numbers were purchased in 1913.

When shown the gun, Foster's sister, Sharon Bowman, identified it as appearing very similar to the one their father had kept in his bedside table, specifically recalling the pattern on the grip. When her father fell ill with cancer in 1991, Bowman moved this gun and others in her father's collection into a closet within her father's house. In 1991, shortly after her father's death, Bowman showed Foster where she had put the guns and Foster removed them from the house.

Lisa Foster stated that the gun looked similar to one that she had seen in their home in Arkansas and that she had brought to Washington. Foster had packed a trunk prior to going to Washington but did not take the trunk with him. When Lisa Foster "repacked" the trunk for her own move to Washington in June, she saw the gun and brought it with the rest of her belongings.* Lisa Foster felt uncomfortable having a gun in their house, and twice asked Foster to remove it. On the night of Foster's death, she found a gun, different in appearance from the gun that she had brought with her from Little Rock, in the closet of her house in Washington. She did not recall seeing any ammunition in their house in Washington. In recent weeks, she found some ammunition at her home in Arkansas, but none of it was .38 caliber.

J. The Park Police Investigation

1. Investigative jurisdiction

Because Foster's death occurred in a National Park, the Park Police, as part of the Department of the Interior, had jurisdiction to conduct the investigation. Park Police Chief Robert E. Langston stated that the Park Police have historically had primary investigative jurisdiction for crimes or possible crimes committed within federal parks.

The FBI would have had primary investigative jurisdiction if the circumstances fell within the Presidential and Presidential Staff Assassination statute, Title 18, United States Code, Section 1751. That statute makes it a federal crime to, among other things, kill the President, Vice-President, or a specified number of persons appointed by the President or Vice-President. The statute further provides that violations shall be investigated by the FBI.* Based on a preliminary inquiry by the FBI which failed to indicate any criminal activity, the FBI's inquiry into this matter was closed. At the request of this Office, the FBI reentered this investigation in February 1994.

2. Summary of Park Police investigation

In the weeks following Foster's death, the Park Police conducted a number of interviews with family members, White House staff, and others; reviewed documents obtained from the White House and from Foster's personal belongings; and took other investigative steps including fingerprint analyses and an unsuccessful search in Fort Marcy Park for the bullet fired from the gun. The Park Police concluded that Foster's death was a suicide from a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the mouth.

TESTS CONDUCTED BY FBI LABORATORY

In March 1994, this Office obtained from the Park Police and the Medical Examiner's Office all available physical evidence collected in connection with the investigation of Foster's death, and provided it to the FBI Lab for analysis. This evidence included the gun and the ammunition it contained, Foster's clothing and eyeglasses, items found in Foster's car, photographs taken at the scene of the death and during the autopsy, Foster's hair and blood samples obtained during the autopsy, the autopsy report, and relevant portions of the Park Police Report on Foster's death. The FBI Lab performed extensive analyses, as summarized below.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 44

A. Firearm Analysis

The FBI Lab test-fired the revolver found in Foster's hand ("Foster's gun") and found that it was operable. This kind of firearm can be fired by either cocking the hammer and then pulling the trigger (single action) or by simply pulling the trigger (double action).* The cartridge case, a .38 caliber special cartridge case manufactured by Remington was analyzed and found to have been fired inside Foster's gun. The unexpended cartridge was also .38 caliber manufactured by Remington, and bore the same stamp as the expended cartridge.

The FBI Lab found that when Foster's gun is fired, it releases gunshot residue from the muzzle of the gun and from the cylinder gap. As a result, powder and lead residue can be found on objects in close proximity to the gun when fired. An analysis of the photographs taken at the autopsy reveal gunshot residue on the side of Foster's right forefinger and the web area of Foster's right hand. The FBI Lab found this consistent with that vented by Foster's gun when ammunition of the type found in its cylinder is fired with the palm of the right hand positioned near the front of the cylinder or near the muzzle.

The trigger of Foster's gun will automatically rebound when released after firing. On one of the autopsy photographs, there is a visible mark on the inside of Foster's right thumb. The FBI Lab found that this mark is consistent with a mark produced by

---

* The latter method requires a muc [illegible] he trigger.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 45

Foster's gun when "this portion of the right thumb is wedged between the front of the trigger and the inside of the front of the trigger guard of [Foster's gun] when the trigger rebounds (moves forward)." This mark is also consistent with the position of Foster's thumb in the trigger guard as depicted in the Park Police photographs. Lab Report, at 7.

B. Chemical Analysis

Ball shaped gunpowder was found in scrapings from Foster's shirt and undershirt. The FBI Lab found this gunpowder to be physically and chemically similar to the powder found in the empty cartridge case in the gun. In addition, chemical testing of Foster's shirt resulted in a positive reaction for the presence of lead residue. The presence of the residues found on Foster's shirt is consistent with the blast from the cylinder of Foster's gun when fired using ammunition of the kind found within that gun.

The FBI Lab further found one piece of ball powder on the eyeglasses recovered from the bottom of the berm, approximately thirteen feet below where Foster was found. This powder is physically and chemically similar to the gunpowder found in the cartridge case removed from Foster's gun. These facts are consistent with the eyeglasses being positioned near the gun when fired (such as on Foster's face or in his shirt pocket). One obvious scenario is that the eyeglasses were dislodged by the sudden backward movement of Foster's head when the gun was fired, after which the glasses bounced down the hill.

The FBI Lab detected one flattened ball-shaped gunpowder particle in scrapings from Foster's shoes and socks, and one disk-shaped particle on the paper that Foster's clothes were placed on at the Park Police Laboratory. The FBI Lab found that these particles did not originate from the fired cartridge in Foster's gun. These particles are believed to be the result of contamination some time after the clothing was removed from Foster's body.* The FBI Lab concluded that these particles "are not likely associated with this investigation." Supplemental Lab Report, at 3.

C. Blood Analysis

The FBI Lab conducted tests on the blood sample obtained during Foster's autopsy. The tests revealed small concentrations of trazadone, diazepam and nordiazepam. Trazadone is the anti-depressant prescribed by Dr. Watkins and taken by Foster on the evening of July 19. Diazepam is commonly known as valium, and nordiazepam is a metabolite of valium. The concentrations of these drugs were below generally recognized therapeutic levels.

Foster's blood type was found to be consistent with the blood found on his shirt and undershirt. A visual examination and limited chemical testing of the gun by the FBI Lab did not reveal the presence of any blood. Additional chemical testing was avoided so that the gun could be preserved for subsequent fingerprint and DNA testing. Subsequent testing did detect DNA near the muzzle of the gun which could have been derived from blood or saliva.

D. Analysis of Bloodstaining Patterns

The FBI Lab conducted an analysis of the bloodstaining on Foster's face and clothing as depicted in the photographs taken at the scene. The photographs show Foster's face pointing straight up - his head not tipped to either side. This position is inconsistent with the blood patterns on Foster's face and shirt. The blood on the right shoulder of Foster's shirt "consists of saturating stains typical of having been caused by a flow of blood onto or soaking into the fabric." Lab Report, at 9. The blood on Foster's right cheek and jaw is a "contact stain . . . typical of having been caused by a blotting action, such as would happen if a blood-soaked object was brought in contact with the side of his face and taken away, leaving the observed pattern behind." Lab Report, at 9.

The FBI Lab concluded that the pattern of the blood on Foster's face and on Foster's shoulder is consistent with Foster's face having come into contact with the shoulder of his shirt at some point. Because Foster's head is not in contact with his shoulder in the photographs, the FBI Lab Report concludes that

Foster's head "moved or was moved after being in contact with the shoulder." Lab Report, at 9. The Pathologist Panel endorsed this conclusion, stating that "a rightward tilt of his face was changed to a forward orientation by one of the early observers before the scene photographs were taken." Pathologist Report, ¶ 7.

The FBI Lab also found extensive bloodstaining on Foster's shirt and undershirt, covering a vastly greater amount of his shirt than that depicted in the photographs taken at the scene. This staining is attributable to the movement of the body from the scene, which typically results in additional staining of the deceased's clothing.

E. DNA Analysis

The FBI Lab performed a DNA analysis on material obtained from an area within 5 cm from the muzzle portion of the gun barrel. This DNA was compared to the DNA in Foster's blood, and the FBI Lab found it to be the same type. This DNA type is shared among approximately 6 percent of Caucasians. This material is derived from a cellular material, likely blood or saliva.

F. Fingerprint Analysis

The FBI Lab removed the grips from the handle of Foster's gun for testing. There were no fingerprints found on the outside of the grips or any other exposed portion of the gun. One print was located on the inner surface of one of the gun's grips. The FBI Lab determined that this was not Foster's print.*

G. Handwriting Analysis

Lisa Foster provided a document that she knew to have been handwritten by her husband, and personal checks that she knew had been signed by him. The FBI Lab compared the handwriting to that on the torn note found in Foster's briefcase on July 26, 1993, and determined that the torn note was written by Foster.

H. Other Analyses

1. The FBI Lab examined the pair of prescription eyeglasses found at the bottom of the berm and compared them to Foster's optical prescriptions provided to this Office by Lisa Foster. The FBI Lab found that the prescriptions were consistent with the determined prescription of the eyeglasses found on the berm. Marks on the earpieces of the eyeglasses were found to be consistent with biting. Lisa Foster stated that Foster had a habit of biting the earpieces of his glasses.

2. The FBI Lab determined that Foster's clothing contained head hairs dissimilar from his own, and carpet type fibers of various colors.

3. When Foster's clothing was examined by the FBI Lab, it "did not contain any coherent soil." Lab Report, at 12.

However, the FBI Lab found small particles of mica on much of Foster's clothing, including his shoes. This mica is consistent with the soil found in the area where Foster's body was found.

I. Search For Additional Evidence In Fort Marcy Park

On April 4, 1994, sixteen individuals from the FBI Lab went to Fort Marcy Park to conduct a search in the area where Foster's body was found.* The purpose of the search was to attempt to find a bullet, bone fragments from Foster's skull, the presence of blood in the soil beneath the location of Foster's body when found, and any other evidence relevant to Foster's death.

In an attempt to locate a bullet, FBI Lab personnel surveyed and marked out a grid in what the FBI Lab determined was the most likely area for the bullet to have landed after passing through Foster's skull. This area was systematically searched using metal detectors. Twelve modern-day bullets were collected during the search and returned to the FBI Lab for analysis. The FBI Lab has determined that none of the bullets found were fired from Foster's gun.

The area immediately beneath where Foster's body was found was searched by digging and hand sifting the soil and other debris.

ANALYSIS

A. Analysis And Conclusions Of Forensic Pathology Panel

Four experts in the field of forensic pathology reviewed and analyzed the evidence obtained during the course of this investigation. Each member of the Pathologist Panel was provided unrestricted access to the FBI Lab Reports; the reports of all interviews conducted during the course of the investigation; the report issued by the Park Police following its investigation; the autopsy report; all photographs taken at the scene of Foster's death and during the autopsy; and microscopic slides containing portions of Foster's soft palate obtained during the autopsy. In addition, the Pathologist Panel discussed the evidence with members of this Office, the FBI investigating agents, and FBI Lab personnel. Two members of the Panel met with the Medical Examiner, Dr. Beyer.

After reviewing and analyzing the evidence, the Pathologist Panel issued a report stating its conclusions and summarizing the bases for its conclusions. The Panel concluded the following:

> 1) The bullet wound to Foster's head and brain caused his death;

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 52

2) The bullet traveled through the soft palate, entered the cranial cavity, significantly damaged the left side of the brainstem and the left cerebral hemisphere of the brain and exited from the center of the back of the head;

3) The wound caused instantaneous complete incapacitation, followed by clinical death within a matter of minutes;

4) The wound was self-inflicted, resulting from Foster placing the barrel of the gun into his mouth and firing it; and

5) Foster shot himself where he was found in Fort Marcy Park.

The Pathologist Report states that these conclusions were arrived at separately and independently by each member of the Panel.

1. Basis for conclusion that death was a suicide

The Pathologist Panel found the evidence in this case "typical and characteristic of such findings in deaths due to intentional self-inflicted intraoral gunshot wounds." Pathologist Report, ¶ 1. Physical evidence examined by the Pathologist Panel establishes that the gun was fired while in Foster's mouth. Microscopic slides taken during Foster's autopsy reveal a large quantity of gunpowder residue on the soft palate, indicating "that Mr. Foster placed the barrel of the weapon into his mouth with the muzzle essentially in contact with the soft palate when he pulled the trigger." Pathologist Report, ¶ 1.

The Panel also relied on the FBI Lab's finding that the DNA in Foster's blood sample was the same type as DNA found near the muzzle of the gun. This indicates that cellular material from Foster's body likely came into contact with the barrel of the gun.

Logically, this material is either blood or saliva from Foster's mouth.

The condition of Foster's body indicates that Foster voluntarily placed the gun in his mouth. The evidence is inconsistent with someone having forced the gun into his mouth. No broken teeth or other trauma to Foster's body were discovered during the autopsy, and there was no sign of a struggle. It is highly unlikely that someone could have forced a gun into the mouth of a man of Foster's size (six feet, four and one-half inches in height and 197 pounds in weight) without a struggle that would have resulted in Foster sustaining some other detectable injury. Nor was there any evidence that he was incapacitated by drug or alcohol.

The physical evidence also demonstrates that Foster himself pulled the trigger. An autopsy photograph depicts a mark on Foster's right thumb consistent with the recoil of the trigger after firing. Based on the existence of this mark and Park Police scene photographs showing the position of the gun, the Pathologist Panel concluded that after Foster fired the gun, his "right thumb was trapped and compressed between the trigger and the front of the trigger guard." Pathologist Report, ¶ 8.

Moreover, the photographs reveal and the autopsy confirms that there was gunpowder on the portion of Foster's right index finger facing his thumb and in the web area between the index finger and the thumb. Dr. Beyer, the Medical Examiner, also noted a lesser amount of gunpowder on Foster's left index finger. The gap between the cylinder and the frame of the gun is the logical source for this gunpowder because the muzzle of the gun was in Foster's mouth when it was fired. As a result, the Pathologist Panel concluded "that Mr. Foster's index fingers were in the vicinity of the cylinder gap when the weapon was fired." Pathologist Report ¶ 8.

Finally, the Panel was provided with summaries of interviews with Foster's family and friends during which they described Foster's depressed state prior to his death. The Pathologist Report notes that information that Foster took an anti-depressant prior to his death is corroborated by the finding of a trace amount of trazadone, an anti-depressant, identified in Foster's blood.

2. Basis for conclusion that death occurred in Fort Marcy Park

The Panel concluded that the condition of Foster's body and clothing at the time he was found precludes his having been moved to Fort Marcy Park from another location following his death. The photographs taken of the body in Fort Marcy Park show modest amounts of blood on his face and clothing. The blood visible on his clothing was limited to a small area on the right shoulder of his shirt, which is consistent with Foster having committed suicide where the body was found. The Panel determined that "[s]ubstantially greater contamination of skin surfaces and clothing by spilled and/or smeared blood would have been unavoidable, had the body been transported postmortem to the place where it was found." Pathologist Report, ¶ 3. The extensive blood loss that occurred after Foster's body was moved from the park confirms that finding.

Foster's body was positioned on a steep slope, with his head near the top of the berm and his legs extended down the hill. As a result, when his heart stopped beating, gravity permitted the settling of blood into the lower portions of his body rather than out of the wound in his head. Once the body was laid flat in the body bag for transportation to the morgue, substantial blood loss did occur. Foster's shirt and undershirt were completely saturated with blood when removed from his body before the autopsy. His face and head were also contaminated with additional amounts of blood, as shown in pre-autopsy photographs. Had the body been moved to Fort Marcy Park after his death, the Park Police would have found Foster's body and clothing far more bloodied than they were at the scene.

B. Analysis Of Issues Raised On Circumstances Of Foster's Death

A number of issues have been raised regarding the circumstances of Foster's death. Many of these question the Park Police conclusion that Foster committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park. In this section of the Report we will address those issues. Although it is not possible to provide a definitive response to each of the questions or theories posed, none present circumstances inconsistent with the conclusion that Foster committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 56

1. Why wasn't there more blood on and around Foster's body?

When the Park Police and EMS personnel found Foster's body in Fort Marcy Park, relatively little blood was visible. However, members of the Park Police who were present when Foster's body was rolled over observed a fairly large pool of blood on the ground where his head had been and further noted that the upper portion of the back of Foster's shirt was blood-soaked. The Pathologists' Report provides further explanation for the limited amount of blood observed at the scene:

> [A]ny relative lack of extravasated blood can be readily explained by the position of the body on the steeply inclined slope, with blood settling postmortem to the dependent portions of the body, i.e., below the level of the head wounds and by the prompt cessation of cardiovascular activity incident to the bullet wound injury of the brainstem.

Pathologist Report, ¶ 6.

After Foster's body was placed into the body bag and his body laid flat, some of the blood that had settled in the lower part of his body then flowed out, causing significant additional bloodstaining on his clothes and face.

2. Why were Foster's hands found lying neatly at his side?

The final position of Foster's body is explained by his likely position when he fired the gun. The Pathologist Report concludes that Foster was seated at the time he pulled the trigger.* If Foster were lying down, it is likely that the bullet would have been recovered in the soil beneath his head. If Foster was standing up, "he would not have ended up in the orderly position in which he was found." Pathologist Report, ¶ 6.

If Foster were seated, however, the position of the body was as would be expected following the loss of all motor function caused by bullet-generated trauma to the brainstem. The Pathologist Report concluded that "[a]fter firing the weapon, because of the sloped terrain, he would have fallen backward, with his arms falling to their respective sides by gravity, aided on the right by the weight of the revolver affixed to his thumb." Pathologist Report, ¶ 6.

3. Why was the gun still in Foster's hand?

After firing, the trigger of Foster's gun rebounds forward. Based on an analysis of scene photographs and an autopsy photograph showing a mark on Foster's right thumb, the Pathologist Panel and FBI ballistic experts concluded that Foster's thumb was "trapped and compressed" between the trigger and the trigger guard of the gun. Pathologist Report, ¶ 8. This conclusion is corroborated by the statement of Park Police Technician Peter Simonello who removed the gun from Foster's hand. He stated that Foster's knuckle initially prevented him from removing the gun from Foster's hand. As a result, Simonello half cocked the gun causing the trigger to be pulled back. Only then could Simonello remove the gun.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 58

4. Why was there no blood on the gun?

The FBI Lab could reach no definitive conclusion on whether there was any blood on the gun. The source of the DNA material found on the muzzle of the gun is derived from human cellular material, which could be blood. However, even a determination that there was no blood on the gun would have little significance. The Pathologist Panel found that "[t]he absence of visible blood on the revolver is not inconsistent with the self-inflicted bullet wound [he] sustained. Visual or chemical identification of blood on the weapon in gunshot wound suicides is a common but by no means universal finding." Pathologist Report, ¶ 2.

5. Why did no one hear the shot?

It is impossible to determine conclusively that no one heard the shot. Given the location and circumstances of his death, however, it would not be surprising if the shot went unheard. The Park has few visitors, particularly on a weekday afternoon. It is entirely possible that there was no one else in the Park at the time that Foster fired the shot.

The closest building to the Park is the official Saudi Arabian Ambassador's residence located across Chain Bridge Road, a few hundred yards away from the spot that Foster shot himself. Interviews of the security guards at the Saudi Arabian residence and observations made by the FBI reveal that there were sources of noise which could have muffled the sound of a gunshot. First, Chain Bridge Road has a fairly steady stream of traffic in the afternoon. Second, records obtained through the security guards at the Saudi residence show that construction work involving large vehicles and heavy machinery was occurring at the residence on the date of Foster's death. In addition, the sound of the shot would have been further muffled by Foster shooting the gun inside his mouth and by the Park's dense summer foliage.

6. Why was no bullet found?

The FBI Lab's search for the bullet focused on the most likely area for the bullet to have come to rest based upon certain assumptions of Foster's position when the gun was fired. Given the available information, however, it is impossible to determine where the bullet landed. For example, there is no information on the precise angle of Foster's head when the gun was fired. It is also impossible to predict to what degree the speed or trajectory of the bullet might have changed upon passing through his skull. It would have been enormously time-consuming, costly, and in all likelihood unproductive, to have searched the entire Park for the bullet.

7. Why was no dirt found on Foster's shoes?

The FBI Lab did find mica particles on Foster's shoes and socks. These mica particles are consistent with the mica that is found at Fort Marcy Park. It was approximately 90 degrees Fahrenheit and dry on the day that Foster died. Foliage leading up to and around Foster's body was dense. As a result, it is unlikely that there was a great deal of exposed moist soil in the Park that would have soiled Foster's shoes.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105092 Page 60

8. Why were there no powder burns inside Foster's mouth?

The Pathologist Panel was able to examine microscopic sections of Foster's soft palate obtained during the autopsy. These sections reveal large quantities of gunpowder indicating that the muzzle of the gun was inside Foster's mouth when he pulled the trigger. The Panel did not observe any burns caused by the muzzle blast, but added that such burns would not necessarily be expected under these circumstances.

9. Why was there no gunpowder on Foster's face?

The question of whether there was gunpowder on Foster's face remains unresolved. The scene and autopsy photographs show scattered "stippled material" on Foster's face. This material was not examined during the autopsy. It is uncertain whether this "stippled material" represents "gunpowder residue, blood spatter, or some other foreign material. . . ." Pathologist Report ¶ 8.

10. Why didn't CW see a gun in Foster's hand?

CW has stated that he viewed Foster's body from the top of the berm. He did not move down the berm to view the body from the side. CW has further stated that the natural foliage in the area made it difficult to see Foster's hands. In addition to the foliage, photographs taken at the scene show that Foster's right hand and leg obscured a large portion of the gun.

Observations of Park Police officers who also viewed the body from the top of the berm confirm that it was difficult to see the gun from that position. Officer Kevin Fornshill stated that he was unable to see a gun in Foster's hand while viewing the body from the top of the berm due to the dense vegetation around Foster's body. He stated that he could not see the gun even when it was specifically referred to by a medic from Fairfax County EMS, who was positioned next to the body. Similarly, Ralph Pisani, a technician with Fairfax County EMS, was positioned about fifteen feet from the body at the top of the berm when he asked a colleague where the gun was. Even after he was told that the gun was in Foster's right hand, he was unable to see it from his position.

CONCLUSION

This Report does not purport to provide definitive answers to all questions surrounding Vincent Foster's death. Obviously, it is impossible to completely understand how or why he came to the point at which he decided to take his own life.

The overwhelming weight of the evidence compels the conclusion, however, that Vincent Foster committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. Although the contributing factors to his depressed state can never be precisely determined, there is no evidence that any issues related to Whitewater, Madison Guaranty or CMS played any part in his suicide.

Result of examination:

FIREARMS:

Specimen Q2 is a .38 Special caliber cartridge case of Remington manufacture which was identified as having been fired in the K1 revolver. Several pieces of ball smokeless powder were removed from the Q2 cartridge case in the Laboratory.

Specimen Q1 is a .38 Special caliber cartridge of Remington manufacture which is loaded with a round-nosed lead bullet. The Q1 cartridge and the Q2 cartridge case are similar in caliber type and manufacturer and bear similar "R-P .38 Spl HV" headstamps. The bullet was removed from the Q1 cartridge in the Laboratory.

The K1 revolver functioned normally when test fired in the Laboratory. The trigger pulls (single action and double action) were normal for the K1 revolver.

One piece of ball smokeless powder was removed from the Q3 glasses in the Laboratory. This piece of ball smokeless powder could have been deposited on the Q3 glasses from the cylinder blast or muzzle blast of the K1 revolver when fired. Ball smokeless powder was also removed from the Q30 paper in the Laboratory.

When the Q8 shirt was received in the Laboratory, the resultant color reaction for a positive reaction for the sodium rhodizonate test was apparent. This reaction was positive for vaporized lead and very fine particulate lead; it was noted on the front of the Q8 shirt. This type of reaction is consistent with the type of reaction expected when a firearm is discharged in close proximity to this portion of the shirt. It is consistent with muzzle blast or cylinder blast from a revolver like the K1 revolver using ammunition like specimens Q1 and Q2.

Subsequent chemical processing of the Q8 shirt in the Laboratory revealed lead residues in a small area near the sixth button from the collar on the front of the Q8 shirt. This reaction could have been caused by contact with a source of lead residues. Lead residues were also detected on the underside of the edge of the collar on the left side of the Q8 shirt. This small area of lead residues could have been caused by the discharge of a firearm consistent with the positive reaction noted above when the Q8 shirt was received in the Laboratory.

Apparent gunshot residue (smoke) was noted in the Q60, Q112, Q125, Q126 and Q127 photographs on the side of the right forefinger and web area of the victim's right hand. These residues are consistent with the disposition of smoke from muzzle blast or cylinder blast when the K1 revolver is fired using ammunition like that represented by specimens Q1 and Q2 when this area of the right hand is positioned near the front of the cylinder or to the side of and near the muzzle.

The mark on the inside of the right thumb which is visible in the Q60 photograph is consistent with a mark produced by the trigger of the K1 revolver when this portion of the right thumb is wedged between the front of the trigger and the inside of the front of the trigger guard of the K1 revolver when the trigger rebounds (moves forward). The trigger of the K1 revolver automatically rebounds when released after firing (single or double action) or whenever the trigger is released after it is moved to the rear. This mark is consistent with the position of the right thumb of the victim in the trigger guard of the revolver in the Q77, Q79 and Q97 photographs.

The position of the victims hand in the Q77, Q79 and Q97 photographs relative to the revolver and the apparent deposition of gunshot residue (smoke) visible in the Q60, Q112, Q125, Q126 and Q127 photographs is consistent with, but not limited to, the following position of the right hand during firing: Pulling the trigger of the K1 revolver with the right thumb, single or double action, or having the right thumb inside the trigger guard with the web area and side of the right forefinger near the front of the cylinder.

Based on differences in caliber, bullet type and/or the rifling impressions present in these bullets, specimens Q33, Q34, Q41, Q42, Q44, Q47, Q48, Q49, Q51 and Q58 can be eliminated as having been fired from the K1 revolver or they are dissimilar to the type of bullet loaded into the Q1 cartridge.

Specimens Q35 through Q40, Q43, Q45 and Q52 through Q57 are dissimilar to the type of ammunition components represented by specimens Q1 and Q2 and those commonly fired in the K1 revolver.

METALLURGY:

Based on metallurgical examinations, the Q46 and Q50 bullets, if exposed to the ambient environment from which they were recovered for the duration of their deformed life, were exposed for a period of time significantly exceeding nine months.

CHEMICAL ANALYSES:

The K3 blood contains trazodone, diazepam and nordiazapam at 0.06 micrograms per milliliter (ug/ml), 0.01 ug/ml and 0.04 ug/ml, respectively. The concentration of these drugs is below recognized therapeutic levels.

No drugs were identified in the K2 hair. Inasmuch as this laboratory has limited knowledge of drugs other than cocaine and morphine in hair, no conclusions should be drawn from the fact that the drugs found in the blood were not found in the hair.

Ball-shaped gunpowder was identified on the Q3 eyeglasses and the Q30 paper and in the scrapings from Q8, Q9 and Q31. This gunpowder is physically and chemically similar to the gunpowder identified in the Q2 cartridge case. One flattened ball-shaped gunpowder particle and one perforated disk-shaped gunpowder particle physically different from the gunpowder identified in the Q2 cartridge case was identified in the scrapings from Q12-Q15, and Q31B, respectively. The flattened ball-shaped gunpowder particle from the Q12 through Q15 scrapings is not consistent with having originated from a fired cartridge.

No ball-shaped gunpowder was identified on the tissue samples from the inside of FOSTER'S mouth, when examined at the Office of the Medical Examiner for Northern Virginia.

BLOODSTAIN PATTERN EXAMINATIONS:

Specimens Q8 through Q10, Q12 through Q15 and Q60 through Q127 as well as the ALSO SUBMITTED documentation was examined in an effort to determine any information of value through a study of the bloodstain patterns present. It is to be noted that a study of the above evidence alone cannot substitute for an in-person examination of the original/unaltered incident scene. The following observations were made:

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105094 Page 10

Photographs of the victim at the incident scene depict apparent blood stains on his face and the right shoulder of his dress shirt. The staining on the shirt covers the top of the shoulder from the neck to the top of the arm and consists of saturating stains typical of having been caused by a flow of blood onto or soaking into the fabric. The stains on his face take the form of two drain tracks and one larger contact stain. Contact bloodstaining occurs when an object bearing wet blood comes in contact with an unstained object, leaving blood on the latter. The drain tracks extend from the right corner of the victim's mouth back toward and below the right ear and from the right nostril over the right cheek toward the temple area and above the right ear. The victim's body is depicted at the scene in a supine position with his face looking generally straight up, and the head not turned to either side. While the exact positioning of the victim's head relative to the ground and the contour of the ground itself are not known, the draining tracks suggest his head was tipped back slightly when the draining of blood occurred.

The contact stain on the right cheek and jaw of the victim is typical of having been caused by a blotting action, such as would happen if a blood-soaked object was brought in contact with the side of his face and taken away, leaving the observed pattern behind. The closest blood-bearing object which could have caused this staining is the right shoulder of the victim's shirt. The quantity, configuration and distribution of the blood on the shirt and the right cheek and jaw of the victim are consistent with the jaw being in contact with the shoulder of the shirt at some time. The available photographs depict the victim's head not in contact with the shirt and therefore indicate that the head moved or was moved after being in contact with the shoulder. The specific manner of this movement is not known.

An examination of the clothing of the victim disclosed extensive bloodstaining over the Q8 shirt and Q9 T-shirt which is inconsistent with that observed at the scene on specimen Q8. It should be noted, however, that during the normal course of such scene investigations, movement of the victim at or from the scene by investigative or medical personnel may result in stain patterns not specifically relevant to reconstruction of the original events surrounding the incident. Photographs taken before and after such actions often display apparent inconsistencies when attempts are made to relate the stain patterns to the incident itself.

SEROLOGICAL ANALYSES:

Grouping tests conducted on the K3 blood sample and the human blood identified on the below-listed specimens disclosed the following:

K3	"PGM 2-2+, Hp 2, Gc 1F1S"
Q8	"PGM 2-2+"
Q9	"PGM 2-2+, Hp 2, Gc 1F1S"

Attempts to further characterize Q8 were inconclusive. Human blood, too limited in amount for conclusive grouping purposes, was identified on Q11A. Blood, too limited in amount for conclusive origin determination, was identified on Q15. A preliminary chemical test for the presence of blood was positive on a stain of human origin on Q10; however, the presence of blood could not be confirmed. A preliminary chemical test for the presence of blood was positive on stains on Q4A and Q11; however, the presence of blood could not be confirmed due to a limited amount of stain. No blood was identified on Q3, Q4, Q5, Q12 through Q14, Q30 or K1.

Semen was identified on Q10. No semen was identified on Q4, Q4A, Q5, Q8, Q9 or Q11.

DNA ANALYSIS:

DNA DQ alpha types as listed were detected for the following specimens:

Specimens	DNA DQ alpha Type
K3 (FOSTER)	2,4
K1 (Muzzle portion of barrel)	2,4
Q6F (envelope flap)
Q6F (stamp)	3,4

Based on the DNA DQ alpha results, the source of K3 is included as a potential contributor to the DNA detected in specimen K1. The estimated percentage of selecting an unrelated individual at random from the population having DQ alpha type 2,4 as detected in specimens K3 and K1, is approximately 6 percent of Caucasians, 8 percent of Blacks and 8 percent of Hispanics.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105094 Page 12

Based on the DNA DQ alpha results, the source of K3 is excluded as a potential contributor to the DNA detected on specimens Q6F.

There was insufficient DNA for DNA DQ alpha analysis on specimens Q3, Q6E, Q23, Q24 and Q29.

No DNA examinations were conducted on specimens Q6A through Q6D and Q30.

HAIRS AND FIBERS:

Blonde to light brown head hairs of Caucasian origin which are dissimilar to the head hairs in the K2 known head hair sample from Vincent Foster were found in the debris removed from the Q9 T-Shirt, the Q11 through Q11A pants and belt and the Q12 through Q15 socks and shoes. These hairs have been mounted on glass microscope slides and will be preserved for possible future comparisons.

No other hairs which were dissimilar to the known hairs of the deceased and which were suitable for significant comparison purposes were found in the debris from specimens Q4, Q5, Q8 through Q15 or Q31 through Q31C.

Carpet type fibers of various colors were found in the debris from specimens Q4, Q5, Q8, Q10 through Q15, Q31B and Q31C. These colors include white, tan, gray, blue, red and green. These fibers will also be preserved for possible future comparisons. It was also noted that a number of red/dark pink wool fibers were found in the debris from specimens Q9, Q12 through Q15, Q31A and Q31C. The sources of these wool and carpet fibers or their possible significance is unknown to the Laboratory.

No apparent damage, i.e. cuts, tears abraded areas or missing buttons, was noted on the Q4, Q5 or Q8 through Q15 clothing items.

OPTICAL EXAMINATIONS:

The wire frame, dark lens glasses, specimen Q17, are non-prescription Ray-Ban sunglasses. There are subtle indentations on the earpieces, an indication of chewing/biting.

The frames and nosepad appear bent, likely due to damage rather than an intentional adjustment. Due to the type of glasses and the nature of their condition, no physical or visual characteristics of the wearer can be determined.

The second pair of glasses, Sanford Hutton frames, specimen Q18, has tinted prescription lenses:

Right eye	-300 sph +150 x 123 degrees (-150 sph -150 cyl x 33 degrees)
Left eye	-325 or -350 sph +50 x 90 degrees (-275 or -300 sph - 50 cyl x 180 degrees)

The pupillary distance (PD) is 73mm. The lenses are compound, the wearer is nearsighted and has an astigmatism in both eyes. The rose colored lenses were originally grey. The color change is due to sun exposure. Subtle indentations on the earpieces indicate chewing/biting.

The pair of glasses, specimen Q3, has prescription lenses:

Right eye	-125 sph -125 x 20 degrees (-250 sph +125 cyl x 110 degrees)
Left eye	-275 sph - 50 x 175 degrees (-325 sph +50 cyl x 85 degrees)

The PD is 71 mm. The wearer is nearsighted and has an astigmatism in both eyes. Subtle indentations on the earpieces indicate chewing/biting. Also, the earpieces on the Q3 glasses move very easily.

Given the large PD and the prescription of the lenses, the two prescription glasses, specimens Q18 and Q3, could have been worn by the same individual. The small numerical differences regarding the lenses are not significant and could be the result of analytical error when examining the patient, medications taken by the patient concurrent with their examination, analytical error when preparing the lenses or any combination thereof.

MINEROLOGY:

The clothing and the paper on which the clothes were dried, specimens Q4, Q5, Q8 through Q15 and Q31, respectively, did not contain coherent soil. However, a few, small particles of mica were observed in the debris from the clothes the victim was wearing when he was found by law enforcement authorities, specimens Q8 through Q15, and the drying paper, specimen Q31. The presence of a few, small particles of mica on these specimens is reasonable given the micaceous soil found at the crime scene. Debris recovered from the victim's jacket and tie, specimens Q4 and Q5, found in the victim's car, did not contain like mica.

DOCUMENT:

Indented writing in the wording "VU Parking Ticket" was observed on the back of the Q6b "Ty Tippet" business card.

No other indented writing was observed on specimens Q6, Q16, Q19 through Q22, Q28, and Q29.

PHOTOGRAPHIC:

The 35mm color negatives (Q32) were examined to locate frames for photographic enhancement. The selected frames (5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 17, 18) were printed using Kodak Ultra print paper to produce maximum image detail. Due to the negatives having been underexposed during the photographic process, limited detail could be extracted from each of the selected frames.

KEY EXAMINATIONS:

Specimen Q7 consists of a key ring containing four keys, a plastic tab and a metal tag with the inscription:

THANK YOU
COOK JEEP SALES
Little Rock, Ark.
Ph 374-4848

Examination of the four keys determined they are consistent with the type of keys utilized in door and cabinet locks.

The Q7A key bears the inscription. "U.S. PROPERTY DO NOT DUPLICATE" and has Medeco type cuts. Such cuts indicate that this key was intended for use in high security locks.

The Q7B key is of the type utilized in double bitted cam locks which are used for cabinet drawers, vending machines, lock boxes, etc.

The Q7C and the Q7D keys are conventionally cut keys which are utilized in standard door locks.

FINGERPRINT:

You will be separately advised concerning the results of the requested latent fingerprint examinations.

ADMINISTRATIVE/DISPOSITION:

RFLP DNA examinations are continuing on specimens K3 and Q10 and will take several weeks to complete. You will be advised of the results of those examinations as soon as they are completed.

The photographs produced during the above-mentioned photographic examinations of specimen Q32 and specimen Q32 were returned to SSA Larry Monroe on May 9, 1994.

Specimens Q60 through Q72, Q73 through Q86 and the negatives, photographs and slides produced from the ALSO SUBMITTED film from Laboratory Number 40414002 S QV QW WP AL and specimens Q101 through Q127 were returned to SSA Colombell on May 3, 1994. You will be separately advised concerning the disposition of the remaining submitted specimens.

FIREARMS:

Issue No. 1 in the ALSO SUBMITTED note relates to the positive color reaction for vaporized lead and fine particulate lead which was noted on the front of the Q8 shirt when it was received in the Laboratory. As noted in the referenced report, the presence of these gunshot residues (vaporized lead and fine particulate lead) is consistent with firing a firearm in close proximity to this portion of the Q8 shirt. Further, it was noted that the presence of these gunshot residues was consistent with the muzzle blast or cylinder blast which was noted when the K1 revolver was fired using ammunition like that represented by specimens Q1 and Q2. It cannot be concluded that the K1 revolver produced these gunshot residues; however, they are consistent with the cylinder blast or the muzzle blast which would be produced if the K1 revolver was fired in close proximity to the front of the Q8 shirt.

Issue No. 2 in the ALSO SUBMITTED note related to the finding of one piece of ball smokeless powder on the Q3 glasses when examined in the Laboratory. No determination can be made as to the position of the Q3 glasses at the time of death. It is noted, however, that ball smokeless powder can be deposited down range from the muzzle of a firearm when fired (muzzle blast) and to the sides of the front of the cylinder (cylinder blast) when a revolver is fired. It is noted in the referenced report that this piece of ball powder could have been deposited on the Q3 glasses from the cylinder blast or muzzle blast of the K1 revolver when fired. Also, in the referenced report, it was noted that the earpieces on the Q3 glasses move very easily.

CHEMICAL ANALYSES:

It was previously reported that no ball-shaped gunpowder was identified on the tissue samples from the inside of FOSTER'S mouth, when examined at the Office of the Medical Examiner for Northern Virginia. Inasmuch as these tissue samples were prepared in a way which is not conducive to retaining unconsumed gunpowder particles, these findings are not unexpected. Also, unconsumed gunpowder particles are different from residue of gunpowder. The FBI Laboratory findings are not inconsistent with the Pathologists' Report relating to a suicide finding in which the muzzle of the firearm was in FOSTER'S mouth.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105094 Page 18

To determine if a person could have been shot by a particular firearm, the gunpowder from a fired cartridge case can be compared with gunpowder from a victim. It was previously reported that ball-shaped gunpowder was identified on the Q3 eyeglasses and in the scrapings from Q8, Q9, Q30 and Q31. This gunpowder is physically and chemically similar to the gunpowder identified in the Q2 cartridge case. One flattened ball-shaped gunpowder particle and one perforated disk-shaped gunpowder particle physically different from the gunpowder identified in the Q2 cartridge case was identified in the scrapings from Q12 through Q15, and Q31B, respectively. The flattened ball-shaped gunpowder particle from the Q12 through Q15 scrapings is not consistent with having originated from a fired cartridge. The significance of these findings is that approximately 20 gunpowder particles from Q3, Q8, Q9, Q30 and Q31, which are consistent with being deposited from the muzzle/cylinder blast of the K1 revolver when fired, matched the gunpowder from the Q2 cartridge case and that only two particles did not match and that one of the two was not consistent with having originated from a fired cartridge. Also, the one which was consistent with coming from a fired cartridge was found on a piece of paper used to dry FOSTER'S clothes. The source of these two particles is unknown; however, they are not likely associated with this investigation.

SEROLOGICAL ANALYSES:

The following information is provided regarding the processing of the specimen K1 .38 Special caliber Colt revolver, Serial Number 355055, for the presence of blood on April 22, 1994 in the FBI Laboratory:

A visual examination of K1 did not reveal the presence of any stains consistent with blood on the exterior surfaces of the weapon. The presence or absence of saliva on a specimen such as K1 cannot be determined by a visual examination.

The entire surface area of K1 was not subjected to chemical testing for the presence of blood or saliva inasmuch as K1 was to be subsequently processed in the FBI Laboratory for the presence of latent fingerprints and DNA. A general swabbing of the entire surface of K1 for the presence of blood or saliva could remove and/or destroy latent fingerprints and/or DNA. Therefore, only limited areas on the outer and inner surfaces of the barrel were selected and subjected to chemical testing for the presence of blood with negative results.

It is also pointed out that the inability to detect blood or saliva on a specimen such as K1, does not preclude subsequent DNA testing.

Specimen K1 appeared to have been previously processed for latent fingerprints prior to receipt by the FBI Laboratory. It should be noted that the processing of K1 for latent fingerprints prior to receipt by the FBI Laboratory could have removed, degraded and/or obscured any blood that may have been initially present to the extent that subsequent visual examination and chemical testing for the presence of blood by the FBI Laboratory would yield negative results.

DNA ANALYSES:

The following information is provided regarding the examination of item K1 for the presence of DNA by DQ alpha analysis.

Item K1 was examined for the presence of human DNA. The exterior circumference of the barrel was swabbed from the bore area to a distance of 5 cm extending from the muzzle end. Human DNA was extracted from the swab and type as DQ alpha type 2, 4. This is consistent with the DQ alpha type of the victim FOSTER.

Human DNA is contained within almost cells within the human body. These cells can be carried in many body fluids such as blood, saliva, urine or semen (in males). DNA from cells contained in the blood of an individual would be the same as DNA taken from cells contained in that individual's saliva. The DNA analysis conducted on item K1 is specific for human DNA. This test cannot determine if the source of the DNA was blood or saliva.

MINERALOGY:

Mica was recovered from the individual specimens Q8 through Q10. Specimens Q11 and Q11a, pants and belt, respectively, were packaged together. Mica was observed on the pants prior to scraping them. Both specimens were scraped together given that they were packaged together. Mica was also observed in the collective scraping of these specimens. Specimens Q12 through Q15, shoes and socks, were packaged together. Hence, these specimens were scraped together and the collective debris examined. Mica was observed in the collective debris.

FOIA # none (URTS 16305) DocId: 70105094 Page 20

Specimens Q4 and Q5, jacket and tie, were packaged together and scraped accordingly. No mica was observed in the collective debris.

Specimens Q31 through Q31c, the paper on which the clothes were dried, were packaged together. Accordingly, observed mica in the debris cannot be attributed to a specific specimen.

Continuation of specimens:

Q27, corkscrew
Q28, miscellaneous items from ashtray
K1, .38 caliber Colt Revolver, bearing serial number 355055
(processed prior to receipt)

The results of the other requested forensic examinations and the disposition of the specimens will be furnished in a separate report.

The specimens were examined and eight latent fingerprints and one latent palm print of value were present or developed on the underside of a pistol grip removed from K1, a business card, two envelopes and a greeting card, parts of Q6.

Seven latent fingerprints are not the fingerprints of VINCENT WALKER FOSTER, JR., FBI #740702RA9. The remaining latent fingerprint (side area) was compared with the available fingerprints of FOSTER, but no identification was effected. Clearly and completely recorded inked impressions of the side areas of the fingers and palm prints are necessary for conclusive comparisons.

ADIC, WMFO June 9, 1994

The following statement is in response to the supplemental request of the Independent Counsel for commentary as to why FOSTER's prints were not found on the weapon:

After I received K1, pistol, I examined it for latent prints by visual examination, laser, cyanoacrylate, laser dye, and appropriate fingerprint powders. No latent prints were detected on the exterior surface of the weapon. Upon removing the grips from the weapon, one latent fingerprint was visible on the underside of the right pistol grip, approximately two inches from the base of the grip.

Generally, the determining factors in leaving latent prints are having a transferable substance, i.e., sweat, sebaceous oil or other substance on the fingers, and having a surface that is receptive to receiving the substance that forms the latent prints. A clean, smooth, flat surface is most receptive for transfer of any substance from the fingers. Some reasons for the lack of these substances are an individual who does not perspire readily, or an individual who wipes or cleans the hands before touching an item, thus removing any substance from the fingers.

Certain atmospheric conditions that an item is subjected to before discovery of that item, such as outside heat, rain, snow, etc., could destroy any latent prints on that item. In addition if an item is not protected from excessive handling or friction, latent prints could also be destroyed, thereby causing no latent prints to be detected or developed.

Please call Specialist L. G. HUPP, (202) 324-6937, if you have any questions concerning the result of the latent print examination.

FORENSIC PATHOLOGY AND MEDICAL EXAMINER-RELATED FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS PERTAINING TO THE INVESTIGATION OF THE DEATH OF VINCENT W. FOSTER, JR.

We were provided unrestricted access to all available investigative and scientific information and materials regarding the death of Vincent W. Foster, Jr., including information developed by the Unites States Park Police, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the FBI Laboratory, the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner, Commonwealth of Virginia, and its Northern Virginia District Office, and the Office of the Independent Counsel. We examined photographs taken at the scene of death and during the course of the postmortem examination, and microscopic slides prepared from tissues obtained at autopsy. We discussed the investigative and scientific findings of the case with the investigative and laboratory personnel responsible for each aspect of the investigation.

The analysis and conclusions of our review, as discussed below, were arrived at separately and independently by each of us.

ISSUES AND CONCLUSIONS

1. CAUSE AND CIRCUMSTANCES OF DEATH

The bullet wound of Mr. Foster's head and brain, with its vital reaction, represents the definitive cause of his death.

The postmortem findings demonstrated in this case are typical and characteristic of such findings in deaths due to intentional self-inflicted intraoral gunshot wounds. Following complete postmortem examination, there was no other trauma identified that would suggest a circumstance other than suicide. In addition, it is exceedingly unlikely that an individual of Mr. Foster's physical stature (6 feet 4 1/2 inches in height, 197 pounds in weight) could have been overcome by an assailant inflicting an intraoral gunshot wound without a struggle and there not to have been some other injury sustained at the time.

2. BULLET PATH

The large quantity of gunpowder residue present on microscopic sections of the soft palate indicates that Mr. Foster placed the barrel of the weapon into his mouth with the muzzle essentially in contact with the soft palate when he pulled the trigger. Recovery of Foster's DNA type from the muzzle of the revolver by the FBI Laboratory is strong supportive evidence that associates the weapon with the deceased. The absence of visible blood on the revolver is not inconsistent with the self-inflicted bullet wound he sustained. Visual or chemical identification of blood on the weapon in gunshot wound suicides is a common but by no means universal finding. There were no flame burns from the muzzle blast identified within the mouth, nor would injury of such type necessarily be expected.

The bullet perforated the soft palate, entered the cranial cavity directly to the left of the foramen magnum, contused the left side of the brainstem, grazed the medial aspect of the left cerebral hemisphere and exited through the occipital skull and scalp. This wound caused instantaneous, complete incapacitation, followed by clinical death within a matter of minutes. There was a secondary, ring-like fracture of the skull, a common associated finding in such cases, that extended symmetrically from the base of the skull across the calvarium.

3. LOCATION OF FATAL EVENT

It is our opinion that the death occurred where the body was found at Fort Marcy Park, Virginia. The relatively pristine nature of the exposed skin surfaces of the deceased and of his clothing precludes any other scenario. Substantially greater contamination of skin surfaces and clothing by spilled and/or smeared blood would have been unavoidable, had the body been transported postmortem to the place where it was found. Precisely such contamination was, in fact, documented following actual transport of the body from the scene of death to Fairfax Hospital, and from there to the medical examiner's office. There was no such contamination when the body was examined and photographed at the scene.

4. TIME OF DEATH

Given the limitations of available information, it is not possible further to define the postmortem interval than within the broad range of when the deceased was last seen alive to the time the body was discovered.

5. TOXICOLOGY

Toxicological examination by the FBI Laboratory of blood obtained at autopsy revealed trace amounts of trazodone and small quantities of diazepam (Valium) and its metabolite, nordiazepam. The finding of trazodone, an antidepressant, confirms the history of Foster's taking a single tablet the evening prior to his death from a prescription ordered by his doctor earlier that day. There was no alcohol or any other toxic substance in Foster's body.

6. POSITION OF THE BODY

The deceased was found supine, with his arms and legs extended. Given the steep (approximately 45 degree) slope on which his body was resting, we believe that he was seated when the weapon was discharged. After firing the weapon, because of the sloped terrain, he would have fallen backward, with his arms falling to their respective sides by gravity, aided on the right by the weight of the revolver affixed to his thumb (see below, number 8). Had he been standing, he would not have ended up in the orderly position in which he was found. Had he been lying down, it is likely that the bullet would have been recovered from the ground beneath his head. It was not. Bullet-generated trauma to the brainstem would have rendered Mr. Foster instantly unconscious and unresponsive.

Although the amount of extravasated blood at the scene of death was characterized by some observers as being less than the expected quantity, a pool of blood was, in fact, found under the head of the deceased when the body was turned, and the upper back of his shirt was noted to be blood soaked. These observations notwithstanding, any relative lack of extravasated blood can be readily explained by the position of the body on the steeply inclined slope, with blood settling postmortem to the dependent portions of the body, i.e., below the level of the head wounds, and by the prompt cessation of cardiovascular activity incident to the bullet wound injury of the brainstem.

7. POSITION OF THE HEAD

According to multiple observers at the scene, the head was facing forward when Foster's body was found, an observation confirmed in scene photographs. There were linear blood stains coursing across the right side of the face, emanating from the nose and mouth. A broad transfer-type blood smear was present at the right side of the chin and neck, precisely corresponding to a similar blood stain of the right collar area of the shirt. For obvious reasons, the head must have been facing to the right when the body was found or have been turned to the right when the body was being examined at the scene. In either circumstance, blood accumulated in the nose and mouth from the bullet defect of the soft palate and base of the skull would have spilled over the face and soiled the right shoulder and collar of the shirt. The finding of the head facing forward and the right sided blood stains are mutually exclusive. We conclude that a rightward tilt of his face was changed to a forward orientation by one of the early observers before the scene photographs were taken.

8. POSITION OF THE WEAPON

Scene and autopsy photographs demonstrate that Mr. Foster's right thumb was trapped and compressed between the trigger and the front of the trigger guard. In addition, there was gunpowder residue on the surface of his right index finger facing the thumb, extending from the distal joint to the web area of the thumb and, according to the autopsy report, similar material, but of lesser quantity, at the corresponding aspect of the left index finger. With the barrel of the revolver placed into the decedent's mouth, the only source of such gunpowder would be the gap between the cylinder and the frame of the weapon. Multiple test firings of the revolver in the FBI Laboratory conclusively demonstrated that gunpowder residue escapes from its cylinder gap. The laboratory studies and the anatomic findings indicate that Mr. Foster's index fingers were in the vicinity of the cylinder gap when the weapon was fired. In addition, flecks of scattered stippled material were observed on the skin surfaces of the lower face in scene photographs and in those autopsy photographs taken before these surfaces were washed. Washing markedly reduced their number. The origin of this material, i.e., whether it represents gunpowder residue, blood spatter or some other foreign material, is uncertain.

SUMMARY

We conclude that Mr. Foster died from a self-inflicted bullet wound delivered with suicidal intent and that the death occurred where the body was found, at Fort Marcy Park, Virginia.

REVIEW & OUTLOOK

Who Is Vincent Foster?

In its first few months, the Clinton White House has proved itself to be careless about many things, from Presidential haircuts to appointing a government. But most disturbing is its carelessness about following the law.

While we have our own complaint that we will presently explain, we hasten to point out that our concern is shared by at least two federal judges. Indeed, they're exploring the largely uncharted legal ground of use of the contempt power to get the Clinton Crowd to obey the law.

In a suit over preservation of computer tapes from the Reagan-Bush era, Judge Charles R. Richey has already issued a contempt order because the administration "dillydallied" in following his earlier order, and threatens $50,000-a-day fines against the White House and National Archives. Now Judge Royce Lamberth has threatened contempt unless the Hillary Clinton health task force takes steps to follow his order to preserve materials relating to its activities.

Quite frankly, we have mixed emotions about these developments. We think that in the post-Watergate era, the executive branch has been on the short end of the balance of powers, and that the government would work better if this were redressed. We find Judge Richey's order more than a little presumptuous, and tend to think the law before Judge Lamberth is a legislative intrusion on executive power. But we can understand that both judges reacted to a certain lack of seriousness—contempt in its most basic meaning—toward legal rulings.

Judge Lamberth's case, for example, concerned whether the Hillary task force had to follow the Federal Advisory Committee Act, in which Congress prescribed hoops Presidents have to jump through in appointing outside commissions. Judge Lamberth held much of the law unconstitutional and laid out what might be seen as accommodating requirements, but dismissed the argument that this was not an outside commission because Mrs. Clinton was "the functional equivalent" of a government employee.

The government appealed the latter finding in a still-pending case; in the oral arguments Judge Laurence Silberman asked whether she took an oath of office or could be impeached. Meanwhile, the task force simply ignored the rest of Judge Lamberth's rulings, for example holding meetings without adequate notice.

We've been having a similar problem with Vincent Foster, deputy White House counsel and one of Mrs. Clinton's former partners in the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock. After we succeeded in making Webster Hubbell famous, it occurred to us we might have occasion to repeat the favor for other Rose partners, and requested photographs of Mr. Foster and associate White House counsel William [illegible] in the counsel's office relayed the message, "Mr. Foster sees no reason why he should supply the Journal with a photo."

Given this encouragement, we filed a request for photos of Mr. Foster and Mr. Kennedy under the Freedom of Information Act. The act requires officials to respond within 10 business days, a deadline that expired May 21. Despite repeated inquiries with those officials who return our calls, the White House still owes us either some photographs or an explanation of why our request has been refused.

At one point, we were told it ought to be worked out, and were referred to deputy press spokesperson Ricki Seidman, who seems not to return calls from our editorial page staff. David Gergen was not exactly overjoyed that we held up public complaint until he arrived, noting that our artists have already converted his photograph into a dot-drawing. But he seems to have jolted the matter off dead center; we're now told there's a draft letter somewhere in the bureaucracy saying the FOI Act does not apply to the White House counsel's office, but the press office can give us photos if it chooses. So we're back to the Seidman black hole, but the letter should be interesting reading.

No doubt Mr. Foster and company consider us mischievous (at best). Of course the Clinton administration has little reason to love us. Back when the rest of the press was in its pre-Waco honeymoon, we were already pulling the loose strings of the basic "New Democrat" lie. Still, we remain supportive when Mr. Clinton returns to that campaign theme, as with Nafta. Indeed, when Mr. Hubbell proved man enough to face public hearings on his appointment as associate attorney general, we saw no reason he should be denied confirmation. Even if we were as uniformly hostile as sometimes charged, there are larger points here. How an administration deals with critics is a basic test of its character and mores, and how scrupulously it follows the law is even more directly significant.

Does the law mean one thing for critics and another for friends? Will we in the end have to go to court to get a reply, or will even that work? Does it take a $50,000-a-day fine to get this mule's attention? Will a task force bearing the First Lady's name blithely ignore a district court order even as its appeal is being heard by the D.C. Circuit? Judge Lamberth demanded, "I want a name and address of who's going to be accountable, who's going to be held in contempt if there are documents destroyed."

Who ensures that this administration follows the law, or explains why not? A good question. While Constitutional law may not have been the big [illegible] seems to us that a good man for the job would be deputy counsel Foster.

REVIEW & OUTLOOK

Vincent Foster's Victory

Meet Vincent Foster, movement conservative.

Vincent Foster is one of the White House lawyers from the Rose Law Firm, whose picture we've been seeking through the alleys and byways of the Freedom of Information Act. The picture arrived in time this week for us to celebrate Mr. Foster's victory yesterday in the battle over Hillary Clinton's status as head of the Clintons' health care task force.

An appeals court ruled Tuesday that, as Mr. Foster had been arguing, Mrs. Clinton is indeed the "functional equivalent" of a federal employee, at least as concerns compliance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act, or FACA (as in "focka").

Vincent Foster

The FACA Fight, initiated by various health and doctors' groups, was over whether the Hillary Clinton Health Task Force had to hold its meetings in public, which is what FACA requires when private citizens are serving on a President's advisory committees. Or whether Hillary, the functional federal equivalent, could hold her meetings in secret, as she desired. The appeals court said, sure, go ahead and meet in secret if you want. That's a win for the White House.

However, the court also said it didn't have a clue as to what exactly the task force's so-called "working groups" were all about, or whether FACA applied to their members. The White House said those are all federal employees, too, so they can hold secret meetings. But the appeals court said the legal status of these people isn't at all clear, and ordered the district court to revisit the FACA netherworld to explore such issues as whether some of Hillary's helpers are "special government employees" or "full time" or "intermittent" or "consultants."

Finally, the court said the plaintiff doctors groups get to look at the almost football-field's worth of paper and documentation that the working groups have piled up by now.

As we say, for achieving these outcomes we think Mr. Foster deserves a salute from conservatives. With one mighty sweep he has struck a blow for separation of powers, executive authority, critics of the litigation explosion, and we dare say, even for the former [illegible] off-the-books Iran-Contra operation.

Conservatives have worried out loud for years about inroads against the President's ability to carry out the functions of his office. In particular, conservatives have noted Congress's instinct to usurp presidential authority, tipping the balance of powers in the legislature's favor. Thus, particular or parochial interests subsume any national interest that a President is elected to represent.

Judge Laurence Silberman, writing for the appeals court (and alluding to Alexander Hamilton along the way), noted: "The ability to discuss matters confidentially is surely an important condition to the exercise of executive power. Without it, the President's performance of any of his duties . . . would be made more difficult. In designing the Constitution, the Framers vested the executive power in one man for the very reason that he might maintain secrecy in executive operations."

Alas, the Clintonites, as is their wont, again allowed hubris to smother mere principle. Instead of a more well-defined operation, they went secret over changing the entire American health care system. Even defenders of executive authority would blanch at such imperial overstretch.

And so now the Clintons will discover the pleasures of the litigation explosion as defined by former Vice President Dan Quayle. Instead of doing productive work, they will spend days bringing forth box after box of documentation, while arguing with a judge about "intermittent" vs. "full-time"—just the way private companies do for the federal prosecutors and agency bureaucrats who enforce the kinds of vague laws that the Clintons' political philosophy favors. Dan Quayle has further details.

As for Iran-Contra, we suspect that Vincent Foster and Ollie North might hit it off. After all, we're supposed to believe that the health task force "officially" disbanded on May 30, and so FACA's requirements are moot. That is, we're supposed to believe that Mrs. Clinton and her associates will never ever hold off-the-books meetings with "non-government" advisers to get the reform plan finished.

Mr. Foster's boss, Bill Clinton, often rails against the gridlock of the "last 12 years." For that reason, we're glad that the case of Association of American Physicians and Surgeons v. Hillary Rodham Clinton, et al. has given a Democratic administration the opportunity to explore the questions of presidential authority discussed by Judge Silberman and his colleagues. Now [illegible] White House.

What's the Rush?

So the gang that pulled the great travel office caper is now hell-bent on firing the head of the FBI. The news reports say that William Sessions has already offered to resign pending approval of a successor; we wish someone would explain to us the hurry.

The FBI director, whatever the incumbent's shortcomings, was given a 10-year term to provide some measure of political independence. To be sure, the President has a right to fire the director, as President Truman fired General MacArthur. But that is not to say every incoming president is justified in firing an incumbent and appointing his own director. We do not want law enforcement put at the disposal of this or that political faction.

If Mr. Sessions is fired it will of course be for ostensible cause, as the travel office firings were over expense records. His sin was to take his wife on his government airplane, and to claim for tax purposes that his limousine was a law enforcement vehicle because he carried firearms in the trunk. Even if he did not use the plane for haircuts, this is apparently deemed reason for summary dismissal. In the travel office case, by contrast, Associate White House Counsel William Kennedy III earned a meaningless letter of reprimand for misusing the FBI's investigative powers.

William Sessions

We hope Mr. Sessions pointed this out to White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum, who sat in with Attorney General Janet Reno and Deputy Attorney General Philip Heymann in the shoot-out with Mr. Sessions on Saturday. Also present was Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, the man who brokered a meeting that resulted in the Justice Department reversing its position in the corruption trial of a member of congress. Mr. Hubbell and Mr. Kennedy are alumni of Little Rock's Rose Law Firm, as are Mrs. Clinton and Deputy White House Counsel Vincent Foster, both of whom were also involved in the travel-office affair.

The leaks on Saturday's meeting are that Webb Hubbell et al. told Mr. Sessions to resign or be fired, probably today; on the way out he stumbled on a curb and broke his elbow. Presumably Mr. Sessions is leaving sooner or later; the conventional wisdom within the Washington Beltway has certainly run against him, for whatever that's worth. He has apparently alienated important subordinates, perhaps because he's a poor administrator. Or perhaps, as he claims, because of his efforts to prosecute black and women. The opposition has a bipartisan patina, since the charges against him were originally leveled by Bush Attorney General William Barr on his last day in office.

The original Bush administration investigation, it should be carefully noted, was announced immediately after it became public that the FBI had launched an investigation into the controversial prosecution of the head of the Atlanta branch of the Banca Nazionale del Lavoro over illicit loans to Iraq. Mr. Barr's own investigator, a prominent former judge, exonerated the Justice Department handling of the BNL case, but we're not sure the final word has been heard.

President Clinton met Friday with Federal Judge Louis J. Freeh of New York, reportedly the leading contender as Mr. Sessions' successor. Judge Freeh is fine by us, but his meeting with the President only deepens the mystery over the hurry. If the choice of a successor really is imminent, why not get him nominated? If Mr. Sessions resigns we worry that Judge Freeh, given the record of the Clinton appointments process, may trip over a Kimba problem or somesuch. The agency would be left adrift and the appointment up for grabs.

Our Washington bureau reported in March that the administration was intent on getting rid of Mr. Sessions in order to replace him with Richard Stearns, a judge on the Massachusetts Superior Court. Judge Stearns and President Clinton were war protesters together as Rhodes Scholars at Oxford. Judge Stearns was also a deputy campaign manager in George McGovern's 1972 presidential race, as well as national director of delegates in Sen. Edward Kennedy's 1980 presidential nomination bid.

This kind of appointment would be another matter indeed. We are far enough along toward making the FBI job a political football. Mr. Sessions is leaving under attack from various quarters; his predecessor, William Webster, left to become Director of Central Intelligence, only to resign that job rather abruptly. Strange things are going on in law enforcement, as the BNL and BCCI cases show. The mores on display from the Rose alumni are far from confidence-building. It seems to us Mr. Sessions would do the nation and his agency a favor to stand by his position, leaving when a successor is ready or letting the President take full responsibility for a firing.

Why don't serious people understand this immediately? What kind of a political culture do we have where the big issue is not whether the FBI director fairly enforces the law, but whether he takes his wife on an airplane?
