Could you two please let me know your thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set up with WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or how should we handle?

Thanks,

Kelley –

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

'SANCHEZ-SCOTT' DECISION IS HARDLY LAPSE IN JUDGMENT

Forum Column

By Lawrence C. Waddington

Against the recommendations of Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nomination of Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The battle now moves to the full Senate.
Feinstein stated she received 21,367 letters in opposition to Kuhl's nomination and only 114 letters in support. The precision of this mathematical count is remarkable. The numbers presumably are attributable, in part, to Kuhl's decision in Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals, a case reversed by the Court of Appeal. See Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharms., 86 Cal.App.4th 365 (2001).
Most of Kuhl's critics, uninformed of the facts or law and agitated by special interest groups, cite this single case for their hostility. Undoubtedly, only a small percentage of Kuhl's opponents are lawyers or have read the decision. Other complaints against Kuhl relate to her advocacy as a lawyer.
Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., attributed to Kuhl a "lapse of judgment that gives me great pause." If Specter did read the appellate opinion allegedly causing this moral anxiety, we should doubt his own judgment. Feinstein found the opinion "startling." Boxer manifested her knowledge of the case by filing a "blue slip" disapproving of the nominee.
The Sanchez-Scott case consists only of allegations in a complaint. According to Azucena Sanchez-Scott, during her breast examination, conducted by a doctor to determine the possibly of cancer, a man later identified as a drug company representative remained in the room. At no time did the man touch Sanchez-Scott, participate in the examination, solicit unwelcome advances, offer salacious or offensive comments or discuss the examination publicly.
According to her allegations, Sanchez-Scott became embarrassed at the presence of the third party, unidentified by the doctor. Although the doctor subsequently apologized, Sanchez-Scott elected to file suit and, in the absence of settlement, eventually would have asked a jury for monetary compensation for her embarrassment. These are the sum total of facts agitating the minds of U.S. Senators.

What Feinstein, Specter and those who oppose Kuhl's nomination apparently do not understand is that allegations are not proof. No trial had been held; the doctor and sales representative had not answered the complaint formally, except to object to its legal sufficiency on demurrer. In their responsive papers, the defendants also denied the allegations (unnecessary in a demurrer) and contended that the doctor informed Sanchez-Scott of the identity of the representative and that she voiced no objection. To resolve this credibility conflict, assuming a defense of consent, a jury eventually would determine who is telling the truth.

Kuhl concluded only that the facts stated by Sanchez-Scott, even if true, were legally insufficient under California law.

Sanchez-Scott had alleged two legal theories: invasion of her right to privacy under the California Constitution and violation of a common-law right of privacy. On appeal, she abandoned her constitutional right-of-privacy claim. The Court of Appeal dismissed it, in effect, confirming Kuhl on this allegation.

The appellate court then embarked on an extensive analysis of the common-law right of privacy. The right, by the court's own admission, is amorphous and contingent on numerous factors. Unlike an assault evidenced by personal injury, violation of the common-law right of privacy involves no personal injury and consists of subjective perception of emotional harm. The court spends innumerable pages trying to explain the contours of "privacy" and concedes the difficulty in fashioning a bright line. Privacy is quintessentially fact-specific. Precise definition rarely is achieved. Apparently, this single case, decided by Kuhl as a judge, disqualifies her as a federal judge.

If appellate reversals are the test, then the senators should look to the 9th Circuit itself as an example. The U.S. Supreme Court has reversed the 9th Circuit repeatedly. The high court's current docket calendars more 9th Circuit cases for review than any other Circuit Court. Only a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court reversed four of its cases in one day.

Professor Karl Manheim of Loyola Law School cannot resist adding his opinion. "'Sanchez-Scott' Decision by Kuhl Proves Her Unfitness," Forum, May 14.

Manheim finds Kuhl's decision to evidence "an appalling ignorance of the existing law on privacy or a disturbing willingness to ignore that law." This is Manheim's hyperbolic characterization of a ruling on demurrer. Presumably, Sanchez-Scott's run-of-the-mill tort claim for damages, alleging no physical injury or economic loss, exceeds the embarrassing reversal record of the 9th Circuit.

Although the Court of Appeal dismissed Sanchez-Scott's claim alleging violation of her constitutional right of privacy, Manheim announces that the law on common-law invasion of privacy is "clear." Here are his three "clear" cases:

* Shulman v. Group W. Prods. Inc., 18 Cal.4th 2000 (1998). A television news crew rode in an ambulance with a seriously injured woman, recorded her statements and aired them on television. In a 112-page split opinion, the state Supreme Court held that this conduct constituted an invasion of privacy.
* Wilkins v. NBC, 71 Cal.App.4th 1066 (1999). Television reporters disguised their true identity and interviewed advertisers suspecting of engaging in fraud.
* DeMay v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160 (1881). In this out-of-state case, the defendant assaulted the plaintiff during childbirth.

These three cases not only lack clarity but also are irrelevant as precedent or, as courts tactfully phrase this kind of analysis by an advocate, factually distinguishable.

Is Sanchez-Scott the case (face) that will launch a thousand filibusters (ships) - a trial court ruling, sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, involving a single count of common-law invasion of privacy, no tangible damages, no economic loss, no publicity and monetary damages for hurt feelings?

Is this the case that senators and a law school professor find to be startling and a lapse of judgment?

KEY POINTS: Economic Reconstruction of Iraq

*The Coalition has begun the process of putting a country together that has been ravaged for 30 years by political tyranny and economic under-investment.
*Before the war, unemployment was about 50 percent, and it is likely substantially higher now. There is no higher priority than creating jobs, getting productive activity going again, and starting to reverse chronic underinvestment in infrastructure.
*The Coalition has already started to partner with Iraqi businessmen and women and with officials to find ways to carry out the best economic policy. The IMF, World Bank, and UNDP are also engaged in this partnership.
*One new initiative is a $100 million emergency program to help restart the construction industry.
*The Coalition is also trying to encourage trade and help Iraq to re-enter the world economy. The most obvious example of that is the sale of oil, and in the next few days, Iraq will reenter the world petroleum market.
*These activities are just the beginning. There are many challenges to restarting the economy. The Coalition is forging ahead with Iraqi partners to restructure Iraq's economy.

KEY QUOTES ON THE ROADMAP

"The road map is intact. The road map remains the way forward to a peace deal between the Palestinians and Israelis. It lays out the steps both sides have to take. Even in the presence of the violence that we have seen over the last couple of days, both leaders -- Prime Minister Sharon and Prime Minister Abbas -- remain committed to moving forward."
--Secretary of State Powell, 6/12/03

Could you two please let me know your thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set up with WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or how should we handle?

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

Brett--I'd like to meet briefly to fill you in on what we have been doing with regard for the handling of the Federal Excise Tax that applies to Press Charters. This was something that was impacted by the recent changes to the handling of Press charters, such as Air Partner and the new billing using Amex accounts. We've reached a stage where I would like to speak to offices in the IRS which we have spoken to and corresponded with in the past regarding the FET to confirm our resolution of this situation. Previously, we were required to collect and pay the tax directly to the IRS, now we believe it is appropriate for Air Partner to do this (as we no longer handle the funds), and our contact would of course be limited to confirming that resolution. Also, in working this issue and reviewing the charter agreement Eric uses with Air Partner, there are some changes I would like to suggest. I know that we have discussed this briefly before, but my inclination was that this was at a stage where it would be a good idea to fill you in.

It would be great if you can indicate some times and we can accommodate to you. Adam

washingtonpost.com

Former Aide Takes Aim at War on Terror

By Laura Blumenfeld
Monday, June 16, 2003; Page A01

Five days before the war began in Iraq, as President Bush prepared to raise the terrorism threat level to orange, a top White House counterterrorism adviser unlocked the steel door to his office, an intelligence vault secured by an electronic keypad, a combination lock and an alarm. He sat down and turned to his inbox.

"Things were dicey," said Rand Beers, recalling the stack of classified reports about plots to shoot, bomb, burn and poison Americans. He stared at the color-coded threats for five minutes. Then he called his wife: I'm quitting.

Beers's resignation surprised Washington, but what he did next was even more astounding. Eight weeks after leaving the Bush White House, he volunteered as national security adviser for Sen. John F. Kerry (Mass.), a Democratic candidate for president, in a campaign to oust his former boss. All of which points to a question: What does this intelligence insider know?

"The administration wasn't matching its deeds to its words in the war on terrorism. They're making us less secure, not more secure," said Beers, who until now has remained largely silent about leaving his National Security Council job as special assistant to the president for combating terrorism. "As an insider, I saw the things that weren't being done. And the longer I sat and watched, the more concerned I became, until I got up and walked out."

No single issue has defined the Bush presidency more than fighting terrorism. And no issue has both animated and intimidated Democrats. Into this tricky intersection of terrorism, policy and politics steps Beers, a lifelong bureaucrat, unassuming and tight-lipped until now. He is an unlikely insurgent. He served on the NSC under Presidents Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton and the current Bush. The oath of office hangs on the wall by his bed; he tears up when he watches "The West Wing." Yet Beers decided that he wanted out, and he is offering a rare glimpse in.

"Counterterrorism is like a team sport. The game is deadly. There has to be offense and defense," Beers said. "The Bush administration is primarily offense, and not into teamwork."

In a series of interviews, Beers, 60, critiqued Bush's war on terrorism. He is a man in transition, alternately reluctant about and empowered by his criticism of the government. After 35 years of issuing measured statements from inside intelligence circles, he speaks more like a public servant than a public figure. Much of what he knows is classified and cannot be discussed. Nevertheless, Beers will say that the administration is "underestimating the enemy." It has failed to address the root causes of terror, he said. "The difficult, long-term issues both at home and abroad have been avoided, neglected or shortchanged and generally underfunded."

The focus on Iraq has robbed domestic security of manpower, brainpower and money, he said. The Iraq war created fissures in the United States' counterterrorism alliances, he said, and could breed a new generation of al Qaeda recruits. Many of his government colleagues, he said, thought Iraq was an "ill-conceived and poorly executed strategy."

"I continue to be puzzled by it," said Beers, who did not oppose the war but thought it should have been fought with a broader coalition. "Why was it such a policy priority?" The official rationale was the search for weapons of mass destruction, he said, "although the evidence was pretty qualified, if you listened carefully."

He thinks the war in Afghanistan was a job begun, then abandoned. Rather than destroying al Qaeda terrorists, the fighting only dispersed them. The flow of aid has been slow and the U.S. military presence is too small, he said. "Terrorists move around the country with ease. We don't even know what's going on. Osama bin Laden could be almost anywhere in Afghanistan," he said.

As for the Saudis, he said, the administration has not pushed them hard enough to address their own problem with terrorism. Even last September, he said, "attacks in Saudi Arabia sounded like they were going to happen imminently."

Within U.S. borders, homeland security is suffering from "policy constipation. Nothing gets done," Beers said. "Fixing an agency management problem doesn't make headlines or produce voter support. So if you're looking at things from a political perspective, it's easier to go to war."

The Immigration and Naturalization Service, he said, needs further reorganization. The Homeland Security Department is underfunded. There has been little, if any, follow-through on cybersecurity, port security, infrastructure protection and immigration management. Authorities don't know where the sleeper cells are, he said. Vulnerable segments of the economy, such as the chemical industry, "cry out for protection."

"We are asking our firemen, policemen, Customs and Coast Guard to do far more with far less than we ever ask of our military," he said. Abroad, the CIA has done a good job in targeting the al Qaeda leadership. But domestically, the antiterrorism effort is one of talk, not action: "a rhetorical policy. What else can you say -- 'We don't care about 3,000 people dying in New York City and Washington?' "

When asked about Beers, Sean McCormack, an NSC spokesman, said, "At the time he submitted his resignation, he said he had decided to leave government. We thanked him for his three decades of government service." McCormack declined to comment further.

However it was viewed inside the administration, onlookers saw it as a rare Washington event. "I can't think of a single example in the last 30 years of a person who has done something so extreme," said Paul C. Light, a scholar with the Brookings Institution. "He's not just declaring that he's a Democrat. He's declaring that he's a Kerry Democrat, and the way he wants to make a difference in the world is to get his former boss out of office."

Although Beers has worked in three Republican administrations, he is a registered Democrat. He wanted to leave the NSC quietly, so when he resigned, he said it was for "personal reasons." His friends called, worried: "Are you sick?"

When Beers joined the White House counterterrorism team last August, the unit had suffered several abrupt departures. People had warned him the job was impossible, but Beers was upbeat. On Reagan's NSC staff, he had replaced Oliver North as director for counterterrorism and counternarcotics, known as the "office of drugs and thugs."

"Randy's your model government worker," said Wendy Chamberlin, a U.S. Agency for International Development administrator for Iraq, who worked with Beers on counterterrorism on the NSC of the first Bush administration. "He works for the common good of the American people. He's fair, balanced, honest. No one ever gets hurt feelings hearing the truth from Randy."

The first thing Beers noticed when he walked into his new office was the pile of intelligence reports. The "threat stuff," as Beers calls it, was 10 times thicker than it had been before the 1998 U.S. embassy bombings.

He was in a job that would grind down anyone. Every day, 500 to 1,000 pieces of threat information crossed his desk. The typical mix included suspicious surveillance at a U.S. embassy; surveillance of a nuclear power plant or a bridge; a person caught by airport security with a weapon, or an airplane flying too close to the CIA; a tanker truck, which might contain a bomb, crossing the border and heading for a city; an intercepted phone call between suspected terrorists. Most of the top-secret reports -- pumped into his office from the White House Situation Room -- didn't pan out. Often they came from a disgruntled employee or a spouse.

When the chemical agent ricin surfaced in the London subway, "we were worried it might manifest here," he said. The challenge was: "Who do we alert? How do you tell them to organize?"

Every time the government raises an alarm, it costs time and money. "There's less filtering now because people don't want to make the mistake of not warning," he said. Before Sept. 11, 2001, the office met three times a week to discuss intelligence. Now, twice a day, at 7 a.m. and 3 p.m., it holds "threat matrix meetings," tracking the threats on CIA spreadsheets.

It was Beers's task to evaluate the warnings and to act on them. "It's a monstrous responsibility," said William Wechsler, director for transnational threats on Clinton's NSC staff. "You sit around every day, thinking about how people want to kill thousands of Americans."

Steven Simon, director for counterterrorism in the Clinton White House, said, "When we read a piece of intelligence, we'd apply the old how-straight-does-your-hair-stand-up-on-your-head test."

The government's first counterterrorism czar, Richard Clarke, who left his White House job in February after more than 10 years, said officials judged the human intelligence based on two factors: Would the source have access to the information? How reliable was his previous reporting? They scored access to information, 12345; previous reporting, abcd. "A score of D5, you don't believe. A1 -- you do," Clarke said. "It's like a jolt of espresso, and you feel like -- whoop -- it pumps you up, and wakes you up."

It's easier to raise the threat level -- from code yellow to code orange, for example -- than to lower it, Beers said: "It's easier to see the increase in intelligence suggesting something's going to happen. What do you say when we're coming back down? Does nothing happening mean it's not going to happen? It's still out there."

After spending all day wrestling with global jihad, Beers would go home to his Adams Morgan townhouse. "You knew not to get the phone in the middle of the night, because it was for Dad," said his son Benjamin, 28. When the Situation Room called, Beers would switch to a black, secure phone that scrambled the signal, after fishing the key out of his sock drawer. There were times he would throw on sweats over his pajamas and drive downtown.

"The first day, I came in fresh and eager," he said. "On the last day, I came home tired and burned out. And it only took seven months."

Part of that stemmed from his frustration with the culture of the White House. He was loath to discuss it. His wife, Bonnie, a school administrator, was not: "It's a very closed, small, controlled group. This is an administration that determines what it thinks and then sets about to prove it. There's almost a religious kind of certainty. There's no curiosity about opposing points of view. It's very scary. There's kind of a ghost agenda."

In the end, Beers was arriving at work each day with knots in his stomach. He did not want to abandon his colleagues at such a critical, dangerous time. When he finally decided to quit, he drove to a friend's house in Arlington. Clarke, his old counterterrorism pal, took one look at the haggard man on his stoop and opened a bottle of Russian River Pinot Noir. Then he opened another bottle. Clarke toasted Beers, saying: You can still fight the fight.

Shortly after that, Beers joined the Kerry campaign. He had briefly considered a think tank or an academic job but realized that he "never felt so strongly about something in my life" than he did about changing current U.S. policies. Of the Democratic candidates, Kerry offered the greatest expertise in foreign affairs and security issues, he decided. Like Beers, Kerry had served in Vietnam. As a civil servant, Beers liked Kerry's emphasis on national service.

On a recent hot night, at 10 o'clock, Beers sat by an open bedroom window, wearing a T-shirt, his bare feet propped on a table.

Beers was on a three-hour conference call, the weekly Monday night foreign policy briefing for the campaign. The black, secure phone by his bedside was gone. Instead, there was a red, white and blue bumper sticker: "John Kerry -- President." The buzz of helicopters blew through the window. Since Sept. 11, 2001, it seemed, there were more helicopters circling the city.

"And we need to return to that kind of diplomatic effort . . . ," Beers was saying, over the droning sound. His war goes on.

Air Force One phone calls are all considered official and not billed back to the caller. Wouldn't we rather make a policy that you can't make political calls from the plane?

Could you two please let me know your thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set up with WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or how should we handle?

Thanks,
Kelley

Kelley -

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

Brett- how do you define "political calls?"

I have a call out to the agency that pays for these calls to find if we can reimburse for "political calls." Seems like maybe we can have guidelines to avoid making calls that require reimbursements. For example, you can talk about this kind of stuff, but not that kind of stuff.

I'm sure it is very expensive. I'm not sure that the campaign will want to pay for political calls from the plane due to expense.

Brett--I'd like to meet briefly to fill you in on what we have been doing with regard for the handling of the Federal Excise Tax that applies to Press Charters. This was something that was impacted by the recent changes to the handling of Press charters, such as Air Partner and the new billing using Amex accounts. We've reached a stage where I would like to speak to offices in the IRS which we have spoken to and corresponded with in the past regarding the FET to confirm our resolution of this situation. Previously, we were required to collect and pay the tax directly to the IRS, now we believe it is appropriate for Air Partner to do this (as we no longer handle the funds), and our contact would of course be limited to confirming that resolution. Also, in working this issue and reviewing the charter agreement Eric uses with Air Partner, there are some changes I would like to suggest. I know that we have discussed this briefly before, but my inclination was that this was at a stage where it would be a good idea to fill you in.

It would be great if you can indicate some times and we can accommodate to you. Adam

I need to get clarification on the use of the RNC letterhead (versus the Bush-Cheney '04 letterhead). Last week, I confirmed with counsel that we should not be using the RNC letterhead. Today, OPA brought me letters on the RNC letterhead and said that Karl said it was ok to use this.

I just need to make sure we are all on the same page. Is it ok to use the RNC letterhead or not? If not, it is my understanding that OPA does not have the Bush-Cheney letterhead yet. Can we get that to them?

It depends on what the letters are for. There will be some instances that RNC letterhead is OK for political events not specifically related to the campaign. Karl did recently approve use of RNC letterhead for something, though can't specifically recall the item. Remember - OPA will still coordinate political efforts between the RNC, NRSC, and NRCC. This is not related to BC'04.

That makes sense. Patrick, will you check with Brett to make sure that this is his understanding as well? What I have here are 3 party-switching letters. That would appear to be ok to be on RNC paper per Susan's guidance.

Craig Ray, who was Special Assistant to the President and Deputy Director of Advance until March, is working with Haley Barbour's campaign for Governor of Mississippi. He asked if I would email him a copy of a backdrop we used for an Official Presidential Event. It would be for reference only -- to visually see how we design the banners. He would not and (with what I'm sending) could not re-produce them. Please call with any questions.

State judge ride high court track
OPPOSITION GEARING UP FOR FIGHT IF SHE'S NOMINATED FOR POSSIBLE VACANCIES
By Howard Mintz
Mercury News

Just seven years ago, an influential state judicial screening group didn't consider Janice Rogers Brown qualified to be on the California Supreme Court. Now, there is a real possibility Brown could vault from the highest court in the state to become the first black woman ever to serve on the highest court in the land.

As the U.S. Supreme Court winds down its latest term this month amid rampant speculation that at least one justice is preparing to retire, Brown, a 54-year-old conservative and daughter of an Alabama sharecropper, is one of a small number of potential Supreme Court nominees who have already been vetted by the White House.

Brown would fit the template of a judge that President Bush has favored in stocking the nation's federal bench. A staunch conservative on everything from affirmative action to the death penalty, she is an ideological match with the Bush administration and a political plus as a black woman who has risen from a childhood in the segregated South to the pinnacle of her profession.

``I think she is well-qualified for appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court,'' said State Supreme Court Justice Marvin Baxter, who is usually aligned with Brown's conservative positions.

But Brown, whose prickly prose has touched on hot-button issues ranging from abortion to affirmative action, already has attracted close scrutiny from civil rights groups and others girding for a confirmation fight. In fact, she's just one of six possible Supreme Court nominees whose records have been scoured by Alliance for Justice, the group that ordinarily leads political opposition to Bush's judicial picks.

Critics such as San Francisco's Eva Paterson, one of the nation's leading civil rights lawyers, have labeled Brown ``another Clarence Thomas,'' in large part because of the way she came down in an affirmative action case out of San Jose three years ago.

``If she's the president's choice, it's going to be a huge battle,'' observes Erwin Chemerinsky, a professor at the University of Southern California law school.

The attention on Brown has ramped up in recent months because of the strong belief in legal circles that the Supreme Court is about to end its longest stretch without turnover in 180 years. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, are viewed as likely to retire to give a Republican president a chance to replace them well before the next election.

How many retiring?

If Rehnquist retires, most predict, the White House might name the first Latino in the court's history, with the leading candidate being White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales. But most legal experts and leading Republicans agree that Brown leaps to the front of the list if both Rehnquist and O'Connor step down.

``It would be incredibly difficult for Democrats to go against a woman like Janice Brown,'' said a top California Republican close to the judicial selection process. ``She has a very compelling personal story.''

Consideration for the U.S. Supreme Court is a remarkable climb for Brown, who was rated not qualified for the California Supreme Court by a state bar group when former Gov. Pete Wilson nominated her in 1996. The bar group, which touched off a controversy over its rating, concluded that Brown, as an appeals court justice, too often injected her personal views into court cases.

Legal experts no longer question Brown's qualifications for the job, although the bar's complaint that she used her legal opinions as a personal bully pulpit remains one of the chief criticisms against her as a Supreme Court justice.

Brown declined to be interviewed for this story, but her background has been well documented. She grew up in rural Alabama in the 1950s, and eventually her family moved to California, where she attended law school at UCLA. A liberal in college, she became a conservative as a lawyer, working in the California Attorney General's Office and later rising to become Wilson's legal affairs secretary.

Wilson named Brown to a Sacramento state appeals court in 1994 and elevated her to the state Supreme Court two years later. She quickly found herself embroiled in the state's most controversial court case at the time, a 1997 ruling in which the justices, by a 4-3 vote, struck down California's law requiring minors to obtain parental consent to get an abortion.

In dissent, Brown chastised her colleagues: ``This case is an excellent example of the folly of courts in their role of philosopher kings.''

Since that decision, Brown, who is reserved in person and typically the lowest-key justice in questioning lawyers, has cranked up the volume in her writing. Perhaps her signature case -- and one that may attract the most attention if she is nominated -- came in 2000, when she wrote the majority opinion invalidating San Jose's minority contracting program.

The ruling was the first to apply Proposition 209's anti-affirmative action provisions in the state. And while the court's conclusion in the case came as no surprise, Brown's writings did. She filled her decision with a scathing denunciation of past affirmative action decisions and their place in history, prompting an unusual rebuke from Chief Justice Ronald George, who called it ``unnecessary and inappropriate.''

``On the U.S. Supreme Court, they call them nine scorpions in a bottle,'' said Gerald Uelmen, a Santa Clara University law professor and Supreme Court expert. ``She'd fit right in the scorpion mode.''

Criticism called unfair

Brown's supporters say her decisions and position in the Proposition 209 case have been unfairly criticized. Ward Connerly, who knows Brown well and was the chief sponsor of Proposition 209, said she was criticized for the ruling because she is a ``quote, unquote, black conservative.''

``She knows who she is,'' Connerly said. ``She has a very clear compass and she follows it.''

Brown, who still lives in Sacramento and often limits her trips to the Supreme Court's headquarters in San Francisco to once or twice a week, is regarded as a lone wolf on the court.

According to knowledgeable state Supreme Court insiders, Brown's approach even rankles some of her colleagues, notably George, the chief justice, who has traded barbs with her in numerous court opinions.

``There is no doubt about her intelligence and gift with the pen,'' said one Supreme Court official. ``It's just a question of whether it is used in an appropriate way.''

Praise for scholarship

But despite the fiery rhetoric, Brown has earned plaudits for her legal scholarship and a libertarian streak that can flash when she believes government is going too far.

And her friends say that she is well-equipped to weather a bruising Senate confirmation battle.

To Doug Kmiec, a Brown friend, leading conservative scholar and dean of Catholic University's law school, Brown looks like somebody the White House would like.

In a commencement speech a few weeks ago at Catholic University, for Kmiec's law school, Brown showed signs of developing her public persona. Unlike some of her colleagues, Brown seldom speaks in public, but agreed to address Catholic University. There, she stressed the importance of law in a speech laced with religious references and patriotism.

Invoking Sept. 11, Brown warned the lawyers-to-be that in today's climate, ``nothing less than Western civilization and the rule of law are at stake.''

Brett:

FYI - I'll call you shortly.

* The Schumer/Leahy letters demand a role in the selection of Supreme Court nominees, claiming that the Constitution obliges the Senate to play such a role.

* The Constitution imposes no obligation upon the Senate to suggest nominees or upon the President to consult with the Senate prior to a nomination.

* The Constitution says that only the President shall nominate. As numerous constitutional law professors have recognized, the Senate's advice and consent role applies only to the appointment of judges, and not to the nomination of judges. Article II explicitly states that "[t]he President . . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges."

* The Senate's "advice and consent" role simply makes clear that the Senate's approval is necessary but not sufficient for the President to appoint an individual or to ratify a treaty. If the Senate advises that a nominee be appointed or a treaty be ratified, it still remains up to the President to decide whether or not to appoint that individual or ratify that treaty.

* Law professors who have advised Democrats on the judicial selection process agree.

o Cass Sunstein: "the Constitution contemplates no formal prenomination advisory role for the Senate but reserves the act of nomination exclusively to the President."

o Michael Gerhardt: "the Constitution does not . . . impose any obligation on the president to consult with the Senate prior to nominating people to confirmable posts"

* Throughout history and from the very beginning of this nation's founding, it has been understood that the President alone shall nominate, and that the Senate has no constitutional role in consulting or advising on nominations.

o Renowned constitutional scholar and historian David Currie has explained that, although President George Washington sought close consultation with the Senate on the negotiation of future treaties, "[i]t is noteworthy that no comparable practice emerged with regard to appointments; from the outset the President simply submitted the names and the Senate voted yes or no. . . . Madison, Jefferson, and Jay all advised Washington not to consult the Senate before making nominations."

o Federalist No. 76: "one man of discernment is better fitted to analyze and estimate the peculiar qualities adopted to particular offices than a body of men . . . In the act of nomination, [the President's] judgment alone would be exercised"

* Should individual Senators decide to make recommendations on possible nominees, that is of course their right of expression. But no one should be confused into thinking that the President is in any way bound as a legal or political matter to follow those recommendations.

o It is impossible to see how the President could obey the wishes of 100 Senators, each of whom might have their own recommended nominees.

o Unlike the Senate's role in the confirmation of judges, the Constitution expressly states that the President may "recommend" legislation to Congress. Yet no one would dispute that Congress is fully entitled to ignore those recommendations and pass contrary legislation.

* Of course, good faith consultation and cooperation between the branches can sometimes be helpful. But bipartisan consultation and cooperation must be a two-way street.

o The President has established an exceptionally successful system of selecting the finest legal minds in the country, from diverse walks of life, to serve on the federal bench.

o But a partisan minority of Senators has poisoned the atmosphere by conducting unprecedented and dangerous filibusters of judicial nominees - even though those nominees are supported by a bipartisan majority of Senators.

o That partisan minority further poisons relations between the branches when it falsely claims that the judicial nominees they are filibustering fall outside the mainstream of American jurisprudence - when Miguel Estrada has the support of Democrats and Republicans across the country, including 87% of Hispanics according to a recent poll by Opiniones Latinas, and when 84% of Texans have expressed their support of Justice Priscilla Owen.

o It wasn't always this bad. For example, President Clinton nominated former ACLU general counsel Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court, even though she had previously argued that there is a constitutional right to prostitution - hardly a mainstream legal position. Yet the Senate confirmed her by an overwhelming 96-3 vote.

* Conclusion: Should there be a Supreme Court vacancy, Senators should be confident that the President will select an outstanding individual of exceptional legal caliber to the Supreme Court - just as he has done with respect to the numerous vacancies and judicial emergencies in the lower courts. The President is of course fully authorized to consider suggestions made by Senators or indeed by any American, but the only role contemplated by the Constitution in the nomination of judges is the President and the President alone.

    - Renowned constitutional scholar and historian David Currie has explained that, although President George Washington sought close consultation with the Senate on the negotiation of future treaties, "[i]t is noteworthy that no comparable practice emerged with regard to appointments; from the outset the President simply submitted the names and the Senate voted yes or no. . . . Madison, Jefferson, and Jay all advised Washington not to consult the Senate before making nominations."

    - Federalist No. 76: "one man of discernment is better fitted to analyze and estimate the peculiar qualities adopted to particular offices than a body of men . . . In the act of nomination, [the President's] judgment alone would be exercised"

-   &n bsp; Should individual Senators decide to make recommendations on possible nominees, that is of course their right of expression. But no one should be confused into thinking that the Presiden t is in any way bound as a legal or political matter to follow those recommendations.

- It is impossible to see how the President could obey the wishes of 100 Senators, each of whom might have their own recommended nominees.

- Unlike the Senate's role in the confirmation of judges, the Constitution expressly states that the President may "recommend" legislation to Congress. Yet no one would dispute that Congress is fully entitled to ignore those recommendations and pass contrary legislation.

• & nbsp; &n bsp; Of course, good faith consultation and cooperation between the branches can sometimes be helpful. But bipartisan consultatio n and cooperation must be a two-way street.

- The President has established an exceptionally successful system of selecting the finest legal minds in the country, from diverse walks of life, to serve on the federal bench.

- But a partisan minority of Senators has poisoned the atmosphere by conducting unprecedented and dangerous filibusters of judicial nominees – even though those nominees are supported by a bipartisan majority of Senators.

- That partisan minority further poisons relations between the branches when it falsely claims that the judicial nominees they are filibustering fall outside the mainstream of American jurisprudence – when Miguel Estrada has the support of Democrats and Republicans across the country, including 87% of Hispanics according to a recent poll by Opiniones Latinas, and when 84% of Texans have expressed their support of Justice Priscilla Owen.

- It wasn't always this bad. For example, President Clinton nominated former ACLU general counsel Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court, even though she had previously argued that there is a constitutional right to prostitution – hardly a mainstream legal position . Yet the Senate confirmed her by an overwhelming 96-3 vote.

• & nbsp; &n bsp; Conclusion: Should there be a Supreme Court vacancy, Senators should be confident that the President will select an outstanding individual of exceptional legal caliber to the Supreme Court – just as he has done with respect to the numerous vacancies and judicial emergencies in the lower courts. The President is of course fully authori zed to consider suggestions made by Senators or indeed by any American, but the only role contemplated by the Constitution in the nomination of judges is the President and the President alone.

EXAMPLE TRIPS

I. MIXED OFFICIAL AND CAMPAIGN-RELATED TRIP

Day 1: The campaign committee departs Andrews Air Force Base en route to Houston, Texas. Upon arrival in Houston, the President proceeds to his family home for private time and accompanying staff proceed to hotels.

Day 2: The President participates in 1 hour fundraising event for the campaign committee held at Houston Hotel.

The President returns to family home for personal time.

Day 3: The President departs Houston for Dallas, Texas. The President makes a 20 minute speech to the National Home Builders Association on foreign policy and the domestic economic situation.

The President departs Dallas and returns to Washington, D.C.

A. Allocation of Costs for Air Force I

The President's campaign committee would be billed the costs of a first-class airfare ticket for a round trip from Washington, D.C. to Houston, Texas for each person traveling on Air Force I who is not an official traveler (Dallas is not included because all activities there were "official").

B. Allocation of Other Costs

The President's campaign committee must pay all hotel costs for each individual traveling to Houston and who is not designated as an official traveler.

The President's campaign committee must pay all event costs related to the fundraising event.

All costs solely associated with the Dallas appearance may be paid from official funds.

The President's campaign committee must pay all transportation, hotel and per diem expenses for advance staff working in Houston. Travel, lodging and per diem expenses for all advance staff working only in Dallas may be paid from official funds.

The President's campaign committee must pay the Government the equivalent rate of a rented large car to compensate for the use of a Government vehicle in transporting the President from his family home in Houston to the fundraising event and back. If any other Government vehicles are used in the motorcade for reasons unrelated to the security of the President, the President's campaign committee must pay the Government rental value for such vehicles.

Per diems for traveling staff must be paid by the campaign committee for Days 1 and 2.

II. MIXED OFFICIAL AND POLITICAL NON-CAMPAIGN RELATED TRIP

Rule: Apply the hard-time formula for allocation of travel expenses. Allow the host party committee to pay for all political event costs. If an advance man works solely on the party committee event (other than coordination with the official party) his travel, hotel and per diem expenses may be paid by the host party committee.[1]

Note: Political travel in 1992 will be presumed to be campaign-related under FEC regulations.

III. POLITICAL TRIP: CAMPAIGN-RELATED ACTIVITIES ONLY

Day 1: President departs Andrews Air Force Base en route to Des Moines, Iowa.

Upon arrival in Des Moines, the President enters motorcade to Des Moines Hyatt for a fundraising dinner.

President overnights in Des Moines.

Day 2: President departs Des Moines en route to Detroit, Michigan. Upon arrival in Detroit, President enters motorcade to Renaissance Center for a campaign fundraising breakfast.

Following breakfast, President meets with campaign officials.

[1]An example of the application of the "hard-time formula" appears in my February 12, 1990 memorandum to Senior Administration Officials.

Following meeting, President departs Detroit en route to Andrews Air Force Base.
Upon arrival at Andrews, President enters motorcade for return to office.

A. Allocation of Air Force I Costs

The campaign committee must pay first-class airfare for travel from Washington, D.C. to Des Moines to Detroit and return for each person on the plane who is not designated as an official traveler.

B. Allocation of Other Costs

The campaign committee must pay all other travel and event costs associated with this trip, including hotel and motorcade costs. For the motorcades, the campaign would reimburse the Government rental costs for one large car for the President's use in the motorcades and rental costs for any other motorcade cars not solely related to the President's security.

The campaign committee must pay all travel, hotel and per diem costs for advance staff working on this trip.

IV. MIXED POLITICAL TRAVEL: CAMPAIGN AND POLITICAL NON-CAMPAIGN RELATED STOPS IN 1991

Day 1: The President departs Andrews Air Force Base en route to Cincinnati, Ohio. Upon arrival in Cincinnati, the President enters a motorcade to Downtown Hyatt hotel to speak at Ohio Republican Party Dinner.

The President overnights in Cincinnati at the Downtown Hyatt.

Day 2: The President attends a campaign fundraising breakfast at the Downtown Hyatt.

The President departs Cincinnati for Cleveland.

Following the luncheon, the President departs Cleveland en route to Washington, D.C.

A. Allocation of Air Force I Costs

The campaign committee must pay first-class airfare for round trip tickets from Washington to Cincinnati and back for each person on the plane who is not an official traveler.

The Cleveland party committee must pay the coach airfare for each person on the plane who is not an official traveler from Cincinnati to Cleveland.

B. Allocation of Other Costs

The campaign committee must pay the hotel expenses for all persons who are not designated as official travelers and who stay overnight in Cincinnati.

The Ohio Republican Party may pay the hotel expenses and airfare of one advance man designated as responsible for its dinner. The campaign committee must pay the travel, lodging and appropriate per diem expenses for all the advance personnel in Cincinnati. The expenses of advance personnel in Cleveland (transportation, hotel, per diem) may be paid by the Cleveland party committee.

The campaign committee must pay the per diems for all individuals traveling with the President from Washington through Cincinnati. Any per diem costs for the quarters of the day from which the President left Cincinnati, traveled to Cleveland, and returned to Washington may be paid by the Cleveland party committee.

The campaign committee must pay appropriate motorcade costs for motorcade within Cincinnati. The campaign committee must pay all costs solely related to the Cincinnati fundraising breakfast. All other event costs in Cleveland may be paid for by the Cleveland party committee.

IVa. MIXED POLITICAL TRAVEL: CAMPAIGN AND POLITICAL NON-CAMPAIGN RELATED STOPS IN 1992

REMEMBER: In 1992, all political travel is presumed to be campaign-related by the FEC. As a result, unless the FEC presumption can be overcome, all political events will be treated as campaign-related and the hypothetical trip rule will apply.

The President takes the same trip as in the preceding example, except that the trip takes place in 1992 instead of 1991.

A. Allocation of Air Force I Costs

The campaign committee must pay first-class airfare for round trip tickets from Washington to Cincinnati to Cleveland and back for each person on the plane who is not an official traveler.

B. Allocation of Other Costs

The campaign committee must pay the hotel expenses for all persons who are not designated as official travelers and who stay overnight in Cincinnati or Cleveland.

The campaign committee must pay the travel, lodging and appropriate per diem expenses for all the advance personnel in Cincinnati and Cleveland.

The campaign committee must pay the per diems for all individuals traveling with the President from Washington through Cleveland and back to Washington.

The campaign committee must pay appropriate motorcade costs for motorcade within Cincinnati and Cleveland. The campaign committee must pay all costs solely related to the Cincinnati fundraising breakfast. All other event costs in Cleveland and Cincinnati may be paid for by the respective party committees.

V. MIXED POLITICAL TRAVEL: OFFICIAL, CAMPAIGN-RELATED AND POLITICAL NON-CAMPAIGN RELATED STOPS IN 1992

Day 1: The President departs Andrews Air Force Base en route to Boise, Idaho. Upon arrival in Boise, the President enters a motorcade to deliver the commencement address to the University of Idaho.

Day 2: The President departs Boise for Helena, Montana.

Upon arrival in Helena, the President speaks at a fundraising luncheon for a Senate candidate, the Republican Senatorial candidate up for re-election in Montana.

Following the luncheon, the President departs Helena en route to Washington, D.C.

REMEMBER: In 1992, all political travel is presumed to be campaign-related by the FEC. As a result, unless the FEC presumption can be overcome, all political events will be treated as campaign-related and the hypothetical trip rule will apply.

A. Allocation of Air Force I Costs

The campaign committee must pay first-class airfare for round trip tickets from Washington to Boise to Helena and back for each person on the plane who is not an official traveler.

B. Allocation of Other Costs

The campaign committee must pay the hotel expenses for all persons who are not designated as official travelers and who stay overnight in Boise or Helena.

The campaign committee must pay the travel, lodging and appropriate per diem expenses for all the advance personnel in Boise and Helena, except for those advance personnel who work only on the advance of the President's commencement address.

The campaign committee must pay the per diems for all individuals traveling with the President from Washington through Helena and back to Washington.

The campaign committee must pay appropriate motorcade costs for motorcade within Boise and Helena. The campaign committee must pay all costs solely related to the Boise fundraising dinner. The event costs solely related to the commencement address must be paid for from official funds. The events costs solely related to the fundraising luncheon in Helena may be paid for by the candidate's re-election campaign committee.

Twenty-five years ago this month, California?s Proposition 13 launched a nationwide tax revolt, with reverberations still being felt today. In June 1978, 65 percent of Californians voted for a state constitutional amendment that limited property taxes. Within a few years, a dozen other states had imposed various forms of tax and expenditure limitations. Proposition 13 also helped pave the way for Ronald Reagan's ambitious federal tax cut plan in 1981 and inspired numerous attempts to impose added budget restraints on the federal government.

Have Proposition 13 and other tax and spending limitation measures been successful? Which types of budget limitations work best, and which should be pursued at the state and federal level? Please join our panel of experts? including some who helped launch the tax limitation movement?for a discussion of the lessons learned and future options for tax limitation.

Attached is the opinion released today in the detainees/FOIA CADC litigation. The majority opinion (Sentelle) finds that the govt properly invoked FOIA exception 7(A) (ongoing law enforcement activities), according appropriate deference to the govt's assessment of the risks that would be created by disclosure of information regarding the detainees. The CADC also rejects the plaintiffs' non-FOIA arguments, which were based on First Amendment and a common-law right of access to govt information. Tatel filed a lengthy dissent.

United States Court of Appeals

FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

No. 02-5254

CENTER FOR NATIONAL SECURITY STUDIES, ET AL., APPELLANTS/CROSS-APPELLEES

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
APPELLEES/CROSS-APPELLANTS

Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia
(No. 01cv02500)

Gregory G. Katsas, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, argued the cause for appellants/cross-appellees. With him on the briefs were Roscoe C. Howard, Jr., U.S. Attorney, Mark B. Stern, Robert M. Loeb, and Eric D. Miller, Attorneys, U.S. Department of Justice.

Bills of costs must be filed within 14 days after entry of judgment. The court looks with disfavor upon motions to file bills of costs out of time.

REV_00122345

Daniel J. Popeo and Paul D. Kamenar were on the brief for amici curiae Washington Legal Foundation and the Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs in support of appellant urging partial reversal.

Kate A. Martin argued the cause for appellees/cross-appellants. With her on the briefs were David L. Sobel, Elliot M. Mincberg, Arthur B. Spitzer, Steven R. Shapiro, and Lucas Guttentag.

Laura R. Handman, Eric N. Lieberman, Henry S. Hoberman, Nathan E. Siegel, Richard M. Schmidt, Jr., Slade R. Metcalf, David E. McCraw, Rene Milam, Bruce W. Sanford and Robert D. Lystad were on the brief for amici curiae The Washington Post Company, et al., in support of appellees/cross-appellants.

Before: SENTELLE, HENDERSON and TATEL, Circuit Judges.

Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge SENTELLE.

Dissenting opinion filed by Circuit Judge TATEL.

SENTELLE, Circuit Judge: Various "public interest" groups (plaintiffs) brought this Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) action against the Department of Justice (DOJ or government) seeking release of information concerning persons detained in the wake of the September 11 terrorist attacks, including: their names, their attorneys, dates of arrest and release, locations of arrest and detention, and reasons for detention. The government objected to release, and asserted numerous exceptions to FOIA requirements in order to justify withholding the information. The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment. The district court ordered release of the names of the detainees and their attorneys, but held that the government could withhold all other detention information pursuant to FOIA Exemption 7(A), which exempts "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes . . . to the extent that the production" of them "could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A) (2000). Attorneys filed cross-appeals. Upon de novo review, we agree with the district court that the detention information is properly covered by Exemption 7(A); but we further hold that Exemption 7(A) justifies withholding the names of the detainees and their attorneys. We also reject plaintiffs' alternate theories that the First Amendment and the common law mandate disclosure of the contested information. We therefore affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand the case to the district court for the entry of a judgment of dismissal.

I. Background

A. The Investigation

Consistent with the mutual decision of the parties to seek resolution to this controversy on summary judgment, the facts are not in serious dispute. In response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, President George W. Bush ordered a worldwide investigation into those attacks and into "threats, conspiracies, and attempts to perpetrate terrorist acts against United States citizens and interests." The Department of Justice, defendant in this action, has been conducting the investigation in conjunction with other federal, state and local agencies. The investigation continues today.

In the course of the post-September 11 investigation, the government interviewed over one thousand individuals about whom concern had arisen. The concerns related to some of these individuals were resolved by the interviews, and no further action was taken with respect to them. Other interviews resulted in the interviewees being detained. As relevant here, these detainees fall into three general categories.

The first category of detainees consists of individuals who were questioned in the course of the investigation and detained by the INS for violation of the immigration laws (INS detainees). INS detainees were initially questioned because there were "indications that they might have connections with, or possess information pertaining to, terrorist activity against the United States including particularly the September 11 attacks and/or the individuals or organizations who perpetrated them." Based on the initial questioning, each INS detainee was determined to have violated immigration law; some of the INS detainees were also determined to "have links to other facets of the investigation." Over 700 individuals were detained on INS charges. As of June 13, 2002, only seventy-four remained in custody. Many have been deported. INS detainees have had access to counsel, and the INS has provided detainees with lists of attorneys willing to represent them, as required by 8 U.S.C. § 1229(b)(2) (2000). INS detainees have had access to the courts to file habeas corpus petitions. They have also been free to disclose their names to the public.

The second category of detainees consists of individuals held on federal criminal charges (criminal detainees). The government asserts that none of these detainees can be eliminated as a source of probative information until after the investigation is completed. According to the most recent information released by the Department of Justice, 134 individuals have been detained on federal criminal charges in the post-September 11 investigation; 99 of these have been found guilty either through pleas or trials. While many of the crimes bear no direct connection to terrorism, several criminal detainees have been charged with terrorism-related crimes, and many others have been charged with visa or passport forgery, perjury, identification fraud, and illegal possession of weapons. Zacarias Moussaoui, presently on trial for participating in the September 11 attacks, is among those who were detained on criminal charges.

The third category consists of persons detained after a judge issued a material witness warrant to secure their testimony before a grand jury, pursuant to the material witness statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3144 (2000) (material witness detainees). Each material witness detainee was believed to have information material to the events of September 11. The district courts before which these material witnesses have appeared have issued sealing orders that prohibit the government from releasing any information about the proceedings. The government has not revealed how many individuals were detained on material witness warrants. At least two individuals initially held as material witnesses are now being held for alleged terrorist activity.

The criminal detainees and material witness detainees are free to retain counsel and have been provided court-appointed counsel if they cannot afford representation, as required by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution. In sum, each of the detainees has had access to counsel, access to the courts, and freedom to contact the press or the public at large.

B. The Litigation

On October 29, 2001, plaintiffs submitted a FOIA request to the Department of Justice seeking the following information about each detainee: 1) name and citizenship status; 2) location of arrest and place of detention; 3) date of detention/arrest, date any charges were filed, and the date of release; 4) nature of charges or basis for detention, and the disposition of such charges or basis; 5) names and addresses of lawyers representing any detainees; 6) identities of any courts which have been requested to enter orders sealing any proceedings in connection with any detainees, copies of any such orders, and the legal authorities relied upon by the government in seeking the sealing orders; 7) all policy directives or guidance issued to officials about making public statements or disclosures about these individuals or about the sealing of judicial or immigration proceedings. To support its FOIA request, plaintiffs cited press reports about mistreatment of the detainees, which plaintiffs claimed raised serious questions about "deprivations of fundamental due process, including imprisonment without probable cause, interference with the right to counsel, and threats of serious bodily injury."

In response to plaintiffs' FOIA request, the government released some information, but withheld much of the information requested. As to INS detainees, the government withheld the detainees' names, locations of arrest and detention, the dates of release, and the names of lawyers. As to criminal detainees, the government withheld the dates and locations of arrest and detention, the dates of release, and the citizenship status of each detainee. The government withheld all requested information with respect to material witnesses. Although the government has refused to disclose a comprehensive list of detainees' names and other detention information sought by plaintiffs, the government has from time to time publicly revealed names and information of the type sought by plaintiffs regarding a few individual detainees, particularly those found to have some connection to terrorism.

On December 5, 2001, plaintiffs filed this action in district court seeking to compel release of the withheld information pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552. Plaintiffs also argued that the First Amendment, as interpreted in Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980) and its progeny, and the common law doctrine of access to public records require the government to disclose the names and detention information of the detainees.

The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment. In its motion, the government contended that FOIA Exemptions 7(A), 7(C), and 7(F), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A), (C) & (F), allow the government to withhold the requested documents as to all three categories of detainees. These exemptions permit withholding information "compiled for law enforcement purposes" whenever disclosure:

> (A) could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings, ... (C) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, ... or (F) could reasonably be expected to endanger the life or physical safety of any individual.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A), (C), (F). As to the material witness detainees, the government also invoked Exemption 3, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3), which exempts from FOIA requirements matters that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by [other statutes] ...," contending that Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e), which limits the disclosure of grand jury matters, bars the release of information concerning material witnesses.

In support of its motion, the government submitted affidavits from James Reynolds, Director of the Terrorism and Violent Crime Section of the Department of Justice, and Dale

REV_00122350

Watson, FBI Executive Assistant Director for Counterterrorism—officials with central responsibility for the ongoing terrorist investigation. See Reynolds Decl., Reynolds Supp. Decl., Reynolds Second Supp. Decl., and Watson Decl.

As to Exemption 7(A), the declarations state that release of the requested information could hamper the ongoing investigation by leading to the identification of detainees by terrorist groups, resulting in terrorists either intimidating or cutting off communication with the detainees; by revealing the progress and direction of the ongoing investigation, thus allowing terrorists to impede or evade the investigation; and by enabling terrorists to create false or misleading evidence. As to Exemption 7(C), the declarations assert that the detainees have a substantial privacy interest in their names and detention information because release of this information would associate detainees with the September 11 attacks, thus injuring detainees' reputations and possibly endangering detainees' personal safety. Finally, as to Exemption 7(F), the government's declarations contend that release of the information could endanger the public safety by making terrorist attacks more likely and could endanger the safety of individual detainees by making them more vulnerable to attack from terrorist organizations. For these same reasons, the counterterrorism officials state that the names of the detainees' lawyers should also be withheld.

C. The Judgment

On August 2, 2002, the district court rendered its decision, ruling in part for the plaintiffs and in part for the government. Ctr. for Nat'l Sec. Studies v. United States Dep't of Justice, 215 F. Supp. 2d 94 (D.D.C. 2002) (CNSS). Briefly put, the court ordered the government to disclose the names of the detainees and detainees' lawyers, but held that the government was entitled to withhold all other detention information under Exemptions 7(A) and 7(F). Id. at 113.

Addressing the names of the detainees, the court held that disclosure could not reasonably be expected to interfere with ongoing enforcement proceedings, and thus the names were not exempt under 7(A). The court rejected the government's argument that disclosure of detainees' names would deter them from cooperating with the government because terrorist groups likely already know which of their cell members have been detained. Id. at 101. Moreover, the court reasoned that the government's voluntary disclosure of the names of several detainees undermined the force of its argument about the harms resulting from disclosure. Id. at 101–02. The court further held that "the government has not met its burden of establishing a 'rational link' between the harms alleged and disclosure" because its declarations provided no evidence that the detainees actually have any connection to, or knowledge of, terrorist activity. Id. at 102 (quoting Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 789 F.2d 64, 67 (D.C. Cir. 1986)).

The court next rejected the government's 7(A) argument that disclosure of names would allow terrorist groups to map the course of, and thus impede, its investigation. Id. at 103. The government had advanced a "mosaic" argument, contending that the court should consider the aggregate release of the names under 7(A) rather than the release of each in isolation, on the reasoning that the release of the names in toto could assist terrorists in piecing together the course, direction and focus of the investigation. Id. at 103. The district court rejected this argument, holding, inter alia, as a matter of law that FOIA Exemption 7(A) requires an individualized assessment of disclosure, and that the government's mosaic theory could not justify a blanket exclusion of information under Exemption 7(A). Id. at 103–04. In the district court's view, the mosaic theory is only cognizable under Exemption 1, which protects information authorized by Executive Order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy. Id. The court further rejected the government's final 7(A) argument, concluding that there was insufficient evidence that disclosure would enable terrorist groups to create false and misleading evidence. Id. at 104–05.

Turning to Exemptions 7(C) and 7(F), the court rejected the government's claims, holding that the admittedly substantial privacy and safety interests of the detainees do not outweigh the vital public interest in ensuring that the government is not abusing its power. Id. at 105–06. The court noted that plaintiffs have raised "grave concerns" about the mistreatment of detainees and have provided evidence of alleged mistreatment in the form of media reports, and first-hand accounts given to Congress and human rights groups. Id. at 105 & n.17. While rejecting the government's attempt to withhold detainees' names, the court ruled that it would permit detainees to opt out of disclosure by submitting a signed declaration within fifteen days. Id. at 106. The court did not address the government's argument that disclosure could harm public safety.

Having rejected the government's Exemption 7 claims, the court further held that Exemption 3 does not bar the release of the names of material witnesses. Id. at 106–07. Specifically, the court held that Exemption 3 does not apply, reasoning Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e) does not bar the disclosure of the identities of persons detained as material witnesses, but only bars "disclosure of a matter occurring before a grand jury." Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e)(6). The government's evidence did not establish that any of the detainees were actual grand jury witnesses or were scheduled to testify before a grand jury. Further, the government's disclosure of the identities of twenty-six material witness detainees undercut its argument that disclosure is barred by statute. 215 F. Supp. 2d at 106–07. As to the government's contention that court sealing orders prevent the government from releasing the names of material witnesses, the court ordered the government to submit such orders for in camera review or to submit a "supplemental affidavit explaining the nature and legal basis for these sealing orders." Id. at 108.

For reasons not unlike its rejection of the government's attempt to withhold the names of detainees, the court also held that the government must reveal the names of the detainees' lawyers.[1] The court determined that the names of [1] The government has withheld the names of the attorneys for both INS detainees and material witness detainees; it has revealed the names of the attorneys for the criminally charged detainees.

the attorneys were not covered by Exemptions 7(A), 7(C), or 7(F) for the same reason it had rejected the government's attempt to withhold the names of detainees; because attorneys have no expectation of anonymity; and because any concerns about physical danger were purely speculative. Id. at 109.

Turning to the other information sought by plaintiffs—the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release—the court granted summary judgment for the government on its claim that such detention information was covered under 7(A) and 7(F). Id. at 108. The court credited the counterterrorism officials' judgment that the detention information "would be particularly valuable to anyone attempting to discern patterns in the Government's investigation and strategy," and that disclosure would make detention facilities "vulnerable to retaliatory attacks." Id. Finally, the court rejected plaintiffs' claim that the First Amendment and common law entitle them to the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release. Id. at 111–12.

The court ordered the government to release the names of detainees and their lawyers in fifteen days, subject to the right of detainees to opt out of disclosure. Id. at 113–14. On August 15, 2002, the district court stayed its order pending appeal. The government timely appealed. Plaintiffs cross-appealed the district court's ruling that the detention information was properly withheld and the district court's ruling that detainees could opt out of disclosure. The appeals were consolidated.

II. The FOIA Claims

We review de novo the district court's grant of summary judgment, Johnson v. Executive Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 774 (D.C. Cir. 2002), and therefore consider anew each of the claims and defenses advanced before the district court. We turn first to the government's claims of exemption from disclosure under FOIA of the names of the detainees and their lawyers.

REV_00122354

A. Names of Detainees

"Public access to government documents" is the "fundamental principle" that animates FOIA. John Doe Agency v. John Doe Corp., 493 U.S. 146, 151 (1989). "Congress recognized, however, that public disclosure is not always in the public interest." CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 166–67 (1985). Accordingly, FOIA represents a balance struck by Congress between the public's right to know and the government's legitimate interest in keeping certain information confidential. John Doe Agency, 493 U.S. at 152. To that end, FOIA mandates disclosure of government records unless the requested information falls within one of nine enumerated exemptions, see 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). While these exemptions are to be "narrowly construed," FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 630 (1982), courts must not fail to give them "a meaningful reach and application," John Doe Agency, 493 U.S. at 152. The government bears the burden of proving that the withheld information falls within the exemptions it invokes. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(b).

The government invokes four exemptions—7(A), 7(C), 7(F), and 3—to shield the names of detainees from disclosure. Upon review, we hold that Exemption 7(A) was properly invoked to withhold the names of the detainees and their lawyers. Finding the names protected under 7(A), we need not address the other exemptions invoked by the government and reserve judgment on whether they too would support withholding the names.

Exemption 7(A) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such law enforcement records or information ... could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A). In enacting this exemption, "Congress recognized that law enforcement agencies had legitimate needs to keep certain records confidential, lest the agencies be hindered in their investigations." NRLB v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 232 (1978). Exemption 7(A) does not require a presently pending "enforcement proceeding."

Rather, as the district court correctly noted, it is sufficient that the government's ongoing September 11 terrorism investigation is likely to lead to such proceedings. See CNSS, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 101 n.9 (citing Bevis v. Dep't of State, 801 F.2d 1386 (D.C. Cir. 1986)).

The threshold question here is whether the names of detainees were "compiled for law enforcement purposes." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7). Because the DOJ is an agency "specializ[ing] in law enforcement," its claim of a law enforcement purpose is entitled to deference. Campbell v. Dep't of Justice, 164 F.3d 20, 32 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Quinon v. FBI, 86 F.3d 1222, 1228 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Pratt v. Webster, 673 F.2d 408, 419 (D.C. Cir. 1982). To establish a law enforcement purpose, DOJ's declarations must establish (1) "a rational nexus between the investigation and one of the agency's law enforcement duties;" and (2) "a connection between an individual or incident and a possible security risk or violation of federal law." Campbell, 164 F.3d at 32 (citations and quotations omitted); see also Quinon, 86 F.3d at 1228. The government's proffer easily meets this standard. The terrorism investigation is one of DOJ's chief "law enforcement duties" at this time, see Reynolds Decl. ¶ 2, and the investigation concerns a heinous violation of federal law as well as a breach of this nation's security. Moreover, the names of the detainees and their connection to the investigation came to the government's attention as a result of that law enforcement investigation. Reynolds Decl. ¶ ¶ 2–5.

Nonetheless, plaintiffs contend that detainees' names fall outside Exemption 7 because the names are contained in arrest warrants, INS charging documents, and jail records. Since these documents have traditionally been public, plaintiffs contend, Exemption 7 should not be construed to allow withholding of the names. We disagree. Plaintiffs are seeking a comprehensive listing of individuals detained during the post-September 11 investigation. The names have been compiled for the "law enforcement purpose" of successfully prosecuting the terrorism investigation. As compiled, they constitute a comprehensive diagram of the law enforcement investigation after September 11. Clearly this is information compiled for law enforcement purposes.

Next, plaintiffs urge that Exemption 7(A) does not apply because disclosure is not "reasonably likely to interfere with enforcement proceedings." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A). We disagree. Under Exemption 7(A), the government has the burden of demonstrating a reasonable likelihood of interference with the terrorism investigation. The government's declarations, viewed in light of the appropriate deference to the executive on issues of national security, satisfy this burden.

It is well-established that a court may rely on government affidavits to support the withholding of documents under FOIA exemptions, King v. United States Dep't of Justice, 830 F.2d 210, 217 (D.C. Cir. 1987), and that we review the government's justifications therein de novo, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B); Summers v. Dep't of Justice, 140 F.3d 1077, 1080 (D.C. Cir. 1998). It is equally well-established that the judiciary owes some measure of deference to the executive in cases implicating national security, a uniquely executive purview. See, e.g., Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 696 (2001) (noting that "terrorism or other special circumstances" might warrant "heightened deference to the judgments of the political branches"); Dep't of the Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518, 530 (1988) ("courts traditionally have been reluctant to intrude upon the authority of the executive in military and national security affairs"). Indeed, both the Supreme Court and this Court have expressly recognized the propriety of deference to the executive in the context of FOIA claims which implicate national security.

In CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159 (1985), the Supreme Court examined the CIA's claims that the names and institutional affiliations of certain researchers in a government-sponsored behavior modification program were exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 3, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). Id. at 163–64. The agency claimed that the information was protected from disclosure by a statute charging the CIA to prevent unauthorized disclosure of "intelligence sources and methods," 50 U.S.C. § 403(d)(3). In accepting the CIA Director's judgment that disclosure would reveal intelligence sources and methods, the Court explained that "[t]he decisions of the Director, who must of course be familiar with 'the whole picture,' as judges are not, are worthy of great deference given the magnitude of the national security interests and potential risks at stake." Sims, 471 U.S. at 179. The Court further held that "it is the responsibility of the Director of Central Intelligence, not that of the judiciary, to weigh the variety of subtle and complex factors in determining whether disclosure of information may lead to an unacceptable risk of compromising the Agency's intelligence-gathering process." Id. at 180.

The same is true of the Justice Department officials in charge of the present investigation. We have consistently reiterated the principle of deference to the executive in the FOIA context when national security concerns are implicated. In McGehee v. Casey, we examined the standard of review for FOIA requests of classified documents. 718 F.2d 1137, 1148 (D.C. Cir. 1983). We observed:

> [C]ourts are to "accord substantial weight to an agency's affidavit concerning the details of the classified status of the disputed record" because "the Executive departments responsible for national defense and foreign policy matters have unique insights into what adverse affects [sic] might occur as a result of a particular classified record."

Id. (quoting S. Rep. No. 1200, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 12, U.S.C.C.A.N. 1974, p. 6267 (1974) (Conference Report on the FOIA Amendments)). Moreover, in the FOIA context, we have consistently deferred to executive affidavits predicting harm to the national security, and have found it unwise to undertake searching judicial review. See, e.g., King, 830 F.2d at 217 ("the court owes substantial weight to detailed agency explanations in the national security context"); Gardels v. CIA, 689 F.2d 1100, 1104 (D.C. Cir. 1982) ("Once satisfied that proper procedures have been followed and that the information logically falls into the exemption claimed, the courts need not go further to test the expertise of the agency, or to question its veracity when nothing appears to raise the issue of good faith."); Halperin v. CIA, 629 F.2d 144, 148 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Weissman v. CIA, 565 F.2d 692, 697–98 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

Given this weight of authority counseling deference in national security matters, we owe deference to the government's judgments contained in its affidavits. Just as we have deferred to the executive when it invokes FOIA Exemptions 1 and 3, we owe the same deference under Exemption 7(A) in appropriate cases, such as this one. Id. Plaintiffs provide no valid reason why the general principle of deference to the executive on national security issues should apply under FOIA Exemption 3, as in Sims and Halperin, and Exemption 1, as in our earlier cases, but not under Exemption 7(A). Nor can we can conceive of any reason to limit deference to the executive in its area of expertise to certain FOIA exemptions so long as the government's declarations raise legitimate concerns that disclosure would impair national security.

The need for deference in this case is just as strong as in earlier cases. America faces an enemy just as real as its former Cold War foes, with capabilities beyond the capacity of the judiciary to explore. Exemption 7(A) explicitly requires a predictive judgment of the harm that will result from disclosure of information, permitting withholding when it "could reasonably be expected" that the harm will result. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A). It is abundantly clear that the government's top counterterrorism officials are well-suited to make this predictive judgment. Conversely, the judiciary is in an extremely poor position to second-guess the executive's judgment in this area of national security. Cf. Krikorian v. Dep't of State, 984 F.2d 461, 464 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (quoting Halperin, 629 F.2d at 148) ("Judges . . . lack the expertise necessary to second-guess such agency opinions in the typical national security FOIA case."). We therefore reject any attempt to artificially limit the long-recognized deference to the executive on national security issues. Judicial deference depends on the substance of the danger posed by disclosure—that is, harm to the national security—not the FOIA exemption invoked.

In light of the deference mandated by the separation of powers and Supreme Court precedent, we hold that the government's expectation that disclosure of the detainees' names would enable al Qaeda or other terrorist groups to map the course of the investigation and thus develop the means to impede it is reasonable. A complete list of names informing terrorists of every suspect detained by the government at any point during the September 11 investigation would give terrorist organizations a composite picture of the government investigation, and since these organizations would generally know the activities and locations of its members on or about September 11, disclosure would inform terrorists of both the substantive and geographic focus of the investigation. Moreover, disclosure would inform terrorists which of their members were compromised by the investigation, and which were not. This information could allow terrorists to better evade the ongoing investigation and more easily formulate or revise counter-efforts. In short, the "records could reveal much about the focus and scope of the [agency's] investigation, and are thus precisely the sort of information exemption 7(A) allows an agency to keep secret." Swan v. SEC, 96 F.3d 498, 500 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

As the district court noted, courts have relied on similar mosaic arguments in the context of national security. CNSS, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 103 & n.13. In Sims, for example, the Supreme Court cautioned that "bits and pieces" of data "'may aid in piecing together bits of other information even when the individual piece is not of obvious importance in itself.'" 471 U.S. at 178 (quoting Halperin, 629 F.2d at 150). Thus, "[w]hat may seem trivial to the uninformed, may appear of great moment to one who has a broad view of the scene and may put the questioned item of information in its proper context." Id. (quotations omitted). Such a danger is present here. While the name of any individual detainee may appear innocuous or trivial, it could be of great use to al Qaeda in plotting future terrorist attacks or intimidating witnesses in the present investigation. Cf. United States v.

Yunis, 867 F.2d 617, 623 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ("[t]hings that did not make sense to the District Judge would make all too much sense to a foreign counter-intelligence specialist who could learn much about this nation's intelligence-gathering capabilities from what these documents revealed about sources and methods."). Importantly, plaintiffs here do not request "bits and pieces" of information, but rather seek the names of every single individual detained in the course of the government's terrorism investigation. It is more than reasonable to expect that disclosing the name of every individual detained in the post-September 11 terrorism investigation would interfere with that investigation.

Similarly, the government's judgment that disclosure would deter or hinder cooperation by detainees is reasonable. The government reasonably predicts that if terrorists learn one of their members has been detained, they would attempt to deter any further cooperation by that member through intimidation, physical coercion, or by cutting off all contact with the detainee. A terrorist organization may even seek to hunt down detainees (or their families) who are not members of the organization, but who the terrorists know may have valuable information about the organization.

On numerous occasions, both the Supreme Court and this Court have found government declarations expressing the likelihood of witness intimidation and evidence tampering sufficient to justify withholding of witnesses' names under Exemption 7(A). See NLRB v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 239–42 (1978) (allowing withholding pursuant to Exemption 7(A) based on the risk of witness intimidation that would attend releasing witness statements prior to NLRB proceedings); Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co. v. EPA, 856 F.2d 309, 312–13 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (upholding 7(A) claim based on government declaration that disclosure would enable corporation under investigation to intimidate or coerce informing employees); accord Mapother v. Dep't of Justice, 3 F.3d 1533, 1542–43 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (recognizing that government affidavits predicting witness intimidation and evidence fabrication "have achieved recognition in Exemption 7 caselaw"); Manna v. Dep't of Justice, 51 F.3d 1158, 1165 (3d Cir. 1995) (allowing withholding of names of all "interviewees, informants, [and] witnesses" in criminal investigation based on fears of retaliation from organized crime). Most recently, we addressed in Swan a FOIA request that would have resulted in the disclosure of, inter alia, the identities of witnesses in an SEC investigation. 96 F.3d at 499. The SEC's declaration alleged that disclosure would risk allowing the subjects of the investigation to "intimidate witnesses, manufacture favorable evidence, and conceal damaging evidence." Id. We accepted the SEC's declaration and allowed the documents to be withheld. Id. at 499, 500. The risks of witness intimidation and evidence tampering alleged here are at least as great as those in Swan and our other precedents. We see no reason to assume that terrorists are less likely to intimidate the detainees here than were the subjects of the SEC investigation in Swan. Consequently, we hold that disclosure of detainees' names could "reasonably be expected to interfere" with the ongoing terrorism investigation.

For several reasons, plaintiffs contend that we should reject the government's predictive judgments of the harms that would result from disclosure. First, they argue that terrorist organizations likely already know which of their members have been detained. We have no way of assessing that likelihood. Moreover, even if terrorist organizations know about some of their members who were detained, a complete list of detainees could still have great value in confirming the status of their members. Cf. Gardels, 689 F.2d at 1105 (rejecting a similar argument in the FOIA national security context and stating that "[o]fficial acknowledgment ends all doubt and gives the foreign organization a firmer basis for its own strategic or tactical response."). For example, an organization may be unaware of a member who was detained briefly and then released, but remains subject to continuing government surveillance. Reynolds Supp. Decl. ¶ ¶ 3, 5. After disclosure, this detainee could be irreparably compromised as a source of information.

More importantly, some detainees may not be members of terrorist organizations, but may nonetheless have been detained on INS or material witness warrants as having information about terrorists. Terrorist organizations are less likely to be aware of such individuals' status as detainees. Such detainees could be acquaintances of the September 11 terrorists, or members of the same community groups or mosques. See Rachel L. Swarns, Oregon Muslims Protest Monthlong Detention Without a Charge, N.Y. TIMES, April 20, 2003, at A16 (describing material witness detainee who attended same mosque as indicted terrorism suspects). These detainees, fearing retribution or stigma, would be less likely to cooperate with the investigation if their names are disclosed. Moreover, tracking down the background and location of these detainees could give terrorists insights into the investigation they would otherwise be unlikely to have. After disclosure, terrorist organizations could attempt to intimidate these detainees or their families, or feed the detainees false or misleading information. It is important to remember that many of these detainees have been released at this time and are thus especially vulnerable to intimidation or coercion. While the detainees have been free to disclose their names to the press or public, it is telling that so few have come forward, perhaps for fear of this very intimidation.

We further note the impact disclosure could have on the government's investigation going forward. A potential witness or informant may be much less likely to come forward and cooperate with the investigation if he believes his name will be made public. Cf. Sims, 471 U.S. at 172 (noting Congress's concern that intelligence sources will "close up like a clam" unless the government maintains complete confidentiality); Manna, 51 F.3d at 1165 ("disclosure ... could result in a chilling effect upon potential cooperators and witnesses").

Plaintiffs next argue that the government's predictive judgment is undermined by the government's disclosure of some of the detainees' names. The Supreme Court confronted a similar argument in Sims, in which respondents contended that "because the Agency has already revealed the names of many of the institutions at which [behavior modification] research was performed, the Agency is somehow estopped from withholding the names of others." 471 U.S. at 180. In rejecting the argument, the Court stated that "[t]his suggestion overlooks the political realities of intelligence operations in which, among other things, our Government may choose to release information deliberately to 'send a message' to allies or adversaries." Id. We likewise reject the plaintiffs' version of this discredited argument. The disclosure of a few pieces of information in no way lessens the government's argument that complete disclosure would provide a composite picture of its investigation and have negative effects on the investigation. Furthermore, as the Sims Court recognized, strategic disclosures can be important weapons in the government's arsenal during a law enforcement investigation. Id. ("The national interest sometimes makes it advisable, or even imperative, to disclose information that may lead to the identity of intelligence sources."). The court should not second-guess the executive's judgment in this area. "[I]t is the responsibility of the [executive] not that of the judiciary" to determine when to disclose information that may compromise intelligence sources and methods. Id.

Contrary to plaintiffs' claims, the government's submissions easily establish an adequate connection between both the material witness and the INS detainees and terrorism to warrant full application of the deference principle. First, all material witness detainees have been held on warrants issued by a federal judge pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3144. Reynolds Decl. ¶ 4. Under this statute, a federal judge may issue a material witness warrant based on an affidavit stating that the witness has information relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation. Consequently, material witness detainees have been found by a federal judge to have relevant knowledge about the terrorism investigation. It is therefore reasonable to assume that disclosure of their names could impede the government's use of these potentially valuable witnesses.

As to the INS detainees, the government states that they were > originally questioned because there were indications that they might have connections with, or possess information pertaining to, terrorist activity against the United States > including particularly the September 11 attacks and/or the individuals and organizations who perpetrated them. For example, they may have been questioned because they were identified as having interacted with the hijackers, or were believed to have information relating to other aspects of the investigation.

Reynolds Decl. ¶ 10. "Other INS detainees may have been questioned because of their association with an organization believed to be involved in providing material support to terrorist organizations." Watson Decl. ¶ 8. Moreover, "[i]n the course of questioning them, law enforcement agents determined, often from the subjects themselves, that they were in violation of federal immigration laws, and, in some instances also determined that they had links to other facets of the investigation." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 10; Watson Decl. ¶ 8. Furthermore, the Watson Declaration speaks of the INS detainees being subject to "public hearings involving evidence about terrorist links," ¶ 16, and states that "concerns remain" about links to terrorism, ¶ 19. The clear import of the declarations is that many of the detainees have links to terrorism. This comes as no surprise given that the detainees were apprehended during the course of a terrorism investigation, and given that several detainees have been charged with federal terrorism crimes or held as enemy combatants. Accordingly, we conclude that the evidence presented in the declarations is sufficient to show a rational link between disclosure and the harms alleged.

In support of this conclusion, we note that the Third Circuit confronted a similar issue involving the INS detainees when it considered the constitutionality of closed deportation hearings in North Jersey Media Group, Inc. v. Ashcroft, 308 F.3d 198 (3d Cir. 2002), cert. denied, No. 02–1289 (May 27, 2003). The court was faced with the same Watson Declaration in evidence here and the same government prediction that harm would result from the disclosure of information about the INS detainees. See id. at 218. That court acknowledged that the "representations of the Watson Declaration are to some degree speculative." Id. at 219. But the court did not search for specific evidence that each of the INS detainees was involved in terrorism, nor did it embark on a probing analysis of whether the government's concerns were well-founded. Id. Rather, it was "quite hesitant to conduct a judicial inquiry into the credibility of these security concerns, as national security is an area where courts have traditionally extended great deference to Executive expertise." Id. The court concluded: "To the extent that the Attorney General's national security concerns seem credible, we will not lightly second-guess them." Id. We think the Third Circuit's approach was correct and we follow it here. Inasmuch as the concerns expressed in the government's declarations seem credible—and inasmuch as the declarations were made by counterterrorism experts with far greater knowledge than this Court—we hold that the disclosure of the names of the detainees could reasonably be expected to interfere with the ongoing investigation.

In upholding the government's invocation of Exemption 7(A), we observe that we are in accord with several federal courts that have wisely respected the executive's judgment in prosecuting the national response to terrorism. See Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 316 F.3d 450 (4th Cir. 2003) (dismissing the habeas corpus petition of a United States citizen captured in Afghanistan challenging his military detention and designation as an enemy combatant); Global Relief Found. v. O'Neill, 315 F.3d 748 (7th Cir. 2002) (upholding against constitutional challenge a portion of the USA PATRIOT Act, 50 U.S.C. § 1702(c), which authorizes the ex parte use of classified evidence in proceedings to freeze the assets of terrorist organizations); North Jersey Media Group, 308 F.3d 198 (holding that closure of "special interest" deportation hearings involving INS detainees with alleged connections to terrorism does not violate the First Amendment); Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 296 F.3d 278 (4th Cir. 2002) (reversing district court's order that allowed alleged enemy combatant unmonitored access to counsel). We realize that not all courts are in agreement. In Detroit Free Press v. Ashcroft, 303 F.3d 681 (6th Cir. 2002), the Sixth Circuit acknowledged the necessity of deferring to the executive on terrorism issues but held that the First Amendment prohibits a blanket closure of "special interest deportation hearings." We do not find the Sixth Circuit's reasoning compelling, but join the Third, Fourth, and Seventh Circuits in holding that the courts must defer to the executive on decisions of national security. In so deferring, we do not abdicate the role of the judiciary. Rather, in undertaking a deferential review we simply recognize the different roles underlying the constitutional separation of powers. It is within the role of the executive to acquire and exercise the expertise of protecting national security. It is not within the role of the courts to second-guess executive judgments made in furtherance of that branch's proper role. The judgment of the district court ordering the government to disclose the names of the detainees is reversed.

B. Identity of Counsel

We next address whether the government properly withheld the names of the attorneys for INS and material witness detainees under Exemptions 7(A), 7(C), and 7(F). As with the identities of the detainees, we hold that their attorneys' names are also protected from disclosure by Exemption 7(A).

The government contends that a list of attorneys for the detainees would facilitate the easy compilation of a list of all detainees, and all of the dangers flowing therefrom. It is more than reasonable to assume that plaintiffs and amici press organizations would attempt to contact detainees' attorneys and compile a list of all detainees. As discussed above, if such a list fell into the hands of al Qaeda, the consequences could be disastrous. Having accepted the government's predictive judgments about the dangers of disclosing a comprehensive list of detainees, we also defer to its prediction that disclosure of attorneys' names involves the same danger. Cf. Sims, 471 U.S. at 179–80 (upholding under FOIA Exemption 3 the government's withholding of the institutional affiliations of researchers in a secret government program; deferring to government's judgment that disclosure would lead to identification of the researchers themselves and the consequent loss of confidential intelligence sources).

C. Other Detention Information

Having held that the government properly withheld the names of the detainees pursuant to Exemption 7(A), we easily affirm the portion of the district court's ruling that allowed withholding, under Exemption 7(A), of the more comprehensive detention information sought by plaintiffs.

As outlined above, supra at 5, plaintiffs sought the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release for each of the detainees. Even more than disclosure of the identities of detainees, the information requested here would provide a complete roadmap of the government's investigation. Knowing when and where each individual was arrested would provide a chronological and geographical picture of the government investigation. Terrorists could learn from this information not only where the government focused its investigation but how that investigation progressed step by step. Armed with that knowledge, they could then reach such conclusions as, for example, which cells had been compromised, and which individuals had been cooperative with the United States. They might well be able to derive conclusions as to how more adequately secure their clandestine operations in future terrorist undertakings. Similarly, knowing where each individual is presently held could facilitate communication between terrorist organizations and detainees and the attendant intimidation of witnesses and fabrication of evidence. As explained in detail above, these impediments to an ongoing law enforcement investigation are precisely what Exemption 7(A) was enacted to preclude. Accordingly, we affirm the district court and hold that the government properly withheld information about the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release for each detainee.

III. Alternative Grounds

We turn now to plaintiffs' alternative grounds for seeking disclosure of the detainees' names and detention information. Although FOIA does not mandate disclosure, plaintiffs contend that disclosure is independently required by both the First Amendment and the common law right of access to government information. We address these contentions in turn, and conclude that neither is meritorious.

REV_00122368

A. The First Amendment

As outlined above, the government voluntarily released the names of all criminally charged detainees. Therefore, as in its FOIA request, plaintiffs seek the names of INS and material witness detainees, and the dates and location of arrest, detention, and release for all detainees. Plaintiffs characterize the information they seek as "arrest records," and contend that the public has a right of access to arrest records under the First Amendment, as interpreted in Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980). We disagree. Plaintiffs seek not individual arrest records, but a comprehensive listing of the individuals detained in connection with a specified law enforcement investigation as well as investigatory information about where and when each individual was arrested, held, and released. The narrow First Amendment right of access to information recognized in Richmond Newspapers does not extend to non-judicial documents that are not part of a criminal trial, such as the investigatory documents at issue here.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." U.S. CONST. amend. I. In accord with its plain language, the First Amendment broadly protects the freedom of individuals and the press to speak or publish. It does not expressly address the right of the public to receive information. Indeed, in contrast to FOIA's statutory presumption of disclosure, the First Amendment does not "mandate[ ] a right of access to government information or sources of information within the government's control." Houchins v. KQED, 438 U.S. 1, 15 (1978) (plurality opinion); id. at 16 (Stewart, J., concurring in the judgment) (the First Amendment "do[es] not guarantee the public a right of access to information generated or controlled by the government"). Thus, as the Court explained in Houchins: "[t]he public's interest in knowing about its government is protected by the guarantee of a Free Press, but the protection is indirect. The Constitution itself is neither a Freedom of Information Act nor an Official Secrets Act." Id. at 14 (quoting Potter Stewart, Or of the Press, 26 HASTINGS L.J. 631, 636 (1975)). Rather, disclosure of government information generally is left to the "political forces" that govern a democratic republic. Id. at 14–15.

Two years after Houchins, the Court recognized a limited First Amendment right of access to a criminal trial. See Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. 555. In Richmond Newspapers, the Court explained that the First Amendment "was enacted against the backdrop of the long history of trials being historically open" and thus incorporated the notion of public access to criminal trials. Id. at 576–77. The Court expanded this limited right somewhat in the years after Richmond Newspapers. See Press–Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court, 464 U.S. 501 (1984) (Press–Enterprise I) (holding that the public has a First Amendment right to attend voir dire examinations during criminal trial); Press–Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court, 478 U.S. 1 (1986) (Press–Enterprise II) (holding that the public has a First Amendment right to access transcripts of adversarial preliminary hearings that occur prior to a criminal trial). In Press–Enterprise II, the Supreme Court first articulated what has come to be known as the Richmond Newspapers "experience and logic" test, by which the Court determines whether the public has a right of access to "criminal proceedings":

> First, because a tradition of accessibility implies the favorable judgment of experience, we have considered whether the place and process have historically been open to the press and general public . . . . Second, in this setting the Court has traditionally considered whether public access plays a significant positive role in the functioning of the particular process in question.

Id. at 8 (citations omitted).

Neither the Supreme Court nor this Court has applied the Richmond Newspapers test outside the context of criminal judicial proceedings or the transcripts of such proceedings. When the "experience and logic" test has been applied beyond the trial itself, as in Press–Enterprise II, it has been limited to judicial proceedings that are part of the criminal trial process. See also Washington Post v. Robinson, 935 F.2d 282, 290 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (holding that First Amendment protects public access to plea agreement on which judgment has been entered); but see United States v. El-Sayegh, 131 F.3d 158, 160–61 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (applying "experience and logic test" but finding no First Amendment right of access to withdrawn plea agreement). Moreover, neither this Court nor the Supreme Court has ever indicated that it would apply the Richmond Newspapers test to anything other than criminal judicial proceedings. Indeed, there are no federal court precedents requiring, under the First Amendment, disclosure of information compiled during an Executive Branch investigation, such as the information sought in this case.

Indeed, to the extent the Supreme Court has addressed the constitutional right of access to information outside the criminal trial context, the Court has applied the general rule of Houchins, not Richmond Newspapers. See LAPD v. United Reporting Publ'g Corp., 528 U.S. 32, 40 (1999) (holding that there is no First Amendment right to receive addresses of arrestees); Houchins, 438 U.S. at 13–15 (holding that press has no First Amendment right of access to prisons). In Houchins, the Court observed that the press had ample means for obtaining information about prison conditions, "albeit not as conveniently as they prefer." Id. at 15. For example, the Court noted that members of the press could receive letters from inmates and interview inmates' attorneys, prison visitors, or former inmates. Id. The same is true here. According to the government's declarations, detainees are free to contact family members as well as members of the press. Detainees' attorneys are presumably free to do the same. In LAPD, the Court rejected a facial challenge to a state law restricting access to the addresses of arrestees. 528 U.S. at 40. The Court explained that "this is not a case in which the government is prohibiting a speaker from conveying information that the speaker already possesses." Id. Rather, "what we have before us is nothing more than a governmental denial of access to information in its possession. California could decide not to give out arrestee information at all without violating the First Amendment." Id. (citing Houchins, 438 U.S. at 14). Similarly here, the First Amendment is not implicated by the executive's refusal to disclose the identities of the detainees and information concerning their detention.

We will not convert the First Amendment right of access to criminal judicial proceedings into a requirement that the government disclose information compiled during the exercise of a quintessential executive power—the investigation and prevention of terrorism. The dangers which we have catalogued above of making such release in this case provide ample evidence of the need to follow this course. Cf. Global Relief Found., 315 F.3d at 754 ("The Constitution would indeed be a suicide pact ... if the only way to curtail enemies' access to assets were to reveal information that might cost lives.") (citation omitted). To be sure, the Sixth Circuit recently held that the public has a constitutional right of access to INS deportation hearings involving the same INS detainees at issue in this case. See Detroit Free Press, 303 F.3d 681; but see North Jersey Media Group, 308 F.3d 198 (finding no right of access). However, the Sixth Circuit applied Richmond Newspapers only after extensively examining the similarity between deportation proceedings and criminal trials, Detroit Free Press, 303 F.3d at 696–99, and noting the crucial distinction between "investigatory information" and "access to information relating to a governmental adjudicative process," id. at 699. Inasmuch as plaintiffs here request investigatory—not adjudicative—information, we find Detroit Free Press distinguishable. We therefore will not expand the First Amendment right of public access to require disclosure of information compiled during the government's investigation of terrorist acts.

Accordingly, we conclude that the information sought by plaintiffs falls within the general principle announced in Houchins and affirmed in LAPD, rather than the Richmond Newspapers exception to that rule. Plaintiffs have no First Amendment right to receive the identities of INS and material witness detainees, nor are they entitled to receive information about the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release for each detainee.

B. The Common Law

We also reject plaintiffs' final claim that disclosure is required by the common law right of access to public records. The Supreme Court held in Nixon v. Warner Communications, Inc., 435 U.S. 589 (1978), that "the courts of this country recognize a general right to inspect and copy public records and documents, including judicial documents." Id. at 597. Plaintiffs, citing several state court cases finding a common law right of access to arrest records, urge us to recognize a federal common law right to receive the information they seek. In response, the government claims that the common law right of access is limited to judicial records. Even if the common law right applies to executive records, the government contends, FOIA has displaced the common law right. While we question the government's first contention, we accept its second.

This Court has held that the common law right of access extends beyond judicial records to the "public records" of all three branches of government, Washington Legal Found. v. United States Sentencing Commission, 89 F.3d 897, 903–04 (D.C. Cir. 1996), and we are bound by our precedent. We need not decide, however, whether the information sought by plaintiffs is a public record. Even if it is, the common law right of access is preempted by FOIA.

In Nixon, the Supreme Court assumed arguendo that the common law right of access covered the tapes sought by the media. 435 U.S. at 599. Nonetheless, the Court denied disclosure because the Presidential Recordings Act provided a statutory scheme for seeking access to the tapes. Id. at 603–06. The Court held that the presence of this "alternative means for public access tip[ped] the scales in favor of denying release." Id. at 606. In El-Sayegh, this Court applied Nixon's principle that a statutory disclosure scheme preempts the common law right. See 131 F.3d at 163. The Court found no common law right of access to a withdrawn plea agreement because "[t]he appropriate device" for access to the records "is a Freedom of Information Act request addressed to the relevant agency." Id. (citing Nixon, 435 U.S. at 605–06).

The principles of Nixon and El–Sayegh apply with full force here. FOIA provides an extensive statutory regime for plaintiffs to request the information they seek. Not only is it uncontested that the requested information meets the general category of information for which FOIA mandates disclosure, but for the reasons set forth above, we have concluded that it falls within an express statutory exemption as well. It would make no sense for Congress to have enacted the balanced scheme of disclosure and exemption, and for the court to carefully apply that statutory scheme, and then to turn and determine that the statute had no effect on a preexisting common law right of access. Congress has provided a carefully calibrated statutory scheme, balancing the benefits and harms of disclosure. That scheme preempts any preexisting common law right.

In accordance with Nixon and El–Sayegh, we cannot craft federal common law when Congress has spoken directly to the issue at hand. Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 U.S. 304, 314 (1981) ("when Congress addresses a question previously governed by a decision rested on federal common law the need for such an unusual exercise of lawmaking by federal court disappears"). Consequently, we reject plaintiffs' claim that the common law right of access requires disclosure of the requested information.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we conclude that the government was entitled to withhold under FOIA Exemption 7(A) the names of INS detainees and those detained as material witnesses in the course of the post-September 11 terrorism investigation; the dates and locations of arrest, detention, and release of all detainees, including those charged with federal crimes; and the names of counsel for detainees. Finally, neither the First Amendment nor federal common law requires the government to disclose the information sought by plaintiffs.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded.

REV_00122375

TATEL, Circuit Judge, dissenting: Disregarding settled principles governing the release of government records under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 et seq., this court holds that the government may keep secret the names of hundreds of persons whom it has detained in connection with its investigation of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks without distinguishing between information that can, in FOIA's words, "reasonably be expected to interfere" with the investigation and information that cannot. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A). While the government's reasons for withholding some of the information may well be legitimate, the court's uncritical deference to the government's vague, poorly explained arguments for withholding broad categories of information about the detainees, as well as its willingness to fill in the factual and logical gaps in the government's case, eviscerates both FOIA itself and the principles of openness in government that FOIA embodies.

I.

I begin with some preliminary observations about the principles that govern this case. First, no one can doubt that uniquely compelling governmental interests are at stake: the government's need to respond to the September 11 attacks—unquestionably the worst ever acts of terrorism on American soil—and its ability to defend the nation against future acts of terrorism. But although this court overlooks it, there is another compelling interest at stake in this case: the public's interest in knowing whether the government, in responding to the attacks, is violating the constitutional rights of the hundreds of persons whom it has detained in connection with its terrorism investigation—by, as the plaintiffs allege, detaining them mainly because of their religion or ethnicity, holding them in custody for extended periods without charge, or preventing them from seeking or communicating with legal counsel. The government claims that the detainees have access to counsel and freedom to contact whomever they wish, see Op. at 5, but the public has a fundamental interest in being able to examine the veracity of such claims. Just as the government has a compelling interest in ensuring citizens' safety, so do citizens have a compelling interest in ensuring that their government does not, in discharging its duties, abuse one of its most awesome powers, the power to arrest and jail.

Second, while the governmental interests in this case may be uniquely compelling, the legal principles that govern its resolution are not at all unique. The court's opinion emphasizes the national-security implications of the September 11 investigation, but as the government conceded at oral argument, this case is not just about September 11. The law that governs this case is the same law that applies whenever the government's need for confidentiality in a law enforcement investigation runs up against the public's right to know "what [its] government is up to." United States Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (internal quotation marks omitted). In all such situations, FOIA fully accommodates the government's concerns about the harms that might arise from the release of information pertaining to its investigations. To be sure, the statute strongly favors openness, since Congress recognized that an informed citizenry is "vital to the functioning of a democratic society, needed to check against corruption and to hold the governors accountable to the governed." NLRB v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 242 (1978). But Congress also recognized that "legitimate governmental and private interests could be harmed by release of certain types of information." John Doe Agency v. John Doe Corp., 493 U.S. 146, 152 (1989) (internal quotation marks omitted). It therefore "provided . . . specific exemptions under which disclosure could be refused," id., including the four exemptions relevant to this case: Exemption 7(A), for information that "could reasonably be expected to" interfere with ongoing law enforcement efforts, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A); Exemptions 7(C) and 7(F), for information that "could reasonably be expected to" unjustifiably compromise an individual's privacy or physical safety, id. § 552(b)(7)(C), (b)(7)(F); and Exemption 3, for information that other statutes exempt from disclosure, id. § 552(b)(3). But " 'these limited exemptions do not obscure the basic policy that disclosure, not secrecy, is the dominant objective of the Act.' " John Doe Agency, 493 U.S. at 152

(quoting Dep't of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 361 (1976)). Accordingly, courts must "narrowly construe[ ]" the exemptions, and "the burden is on the agency to sustain its action." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The government may in some situations withhold entire categories of records from disclosure, as it seeks to do here by withholding names and other information pertaining to all terrorism-investigation detainees. In order to sustain its burden, however, the government must demonstrate that "the range of circumstances included in the category 'characteristically support[s] an inference' that the statutory requirements for exemption are satisfied." Nation Magazine v. United States Customs Serv., 71 F.3d 885, 893 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (citing United States v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165, 176–80 (1993)).

The third principle relates to the level of deference we owe the government. Invoking the "heightened deference to the judgments of the political branches with respect to matters of national security," Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 696 (2001), the government refuses to identify the specific categories of information that would actually interfere with its investigation, but rather asks us simply to trust its judgment. This court obeys, declaring that "the judiciary is in an extremely poor position to second-guess the executive's judgment in this area of national security." Op. at 15. But requiring agencies to make the detailed showing FOIA requires is not second-guessing their judgment about matters within their expertise. And in any event, this court is also in an extremely poor position to second-guess the legislature's judgment that the judiciary must play a meaningful role in reviewing FOIA exemption requests. Neither FOIA itself nor this circuit's interpretation of the statute authorizes the court to invoke the phrase "national security" to relieve the government of its burden of justifying its refusal to release information under FOIA.

To begin with, I think it not at all obvious that we owe heightened deference to the government in this case. Citing the legislative history of the 1974 amendments to FOIA's Exemption 1, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1), the exemption for national-security matters, we have held that in evaluating Exemption 1 claims, " 'substantial weight' is to be accorded to detailed agency affidavits setting forth the basis for exemption." Weissman v. CIA, 565 F.2d 692, 697 n.10 (D.C. Cir. 1977); see also S. REP. No. 93–1200, at 12 (1974) (" '[T]he conferees recognize that the Executive departments responsible for national defense and foreign policy matters have unique insights into what adverse effects might occur as a result of public disclosure of a particular classified record. Accordingly, the conferees expect that the federal courts, in making de novo determinations in section 552 (b)(1) cases under the Freedom of Information law, will accord substantial weight to an agency's affidavit concerning the details of the classified status of the disputed record.' "). We have also extended this heightened deference to cases involving Exemption 3 as it incorporates the National Security Act of 1947, which requires the CIA Director to protect "intelligence sources and methods" from unauthorized disclosure, 50 U.S.C § 403–3(c)(7). E.g., Halperin v. CIA, 629 F.2d 144 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (National Security Act); Weissman, 565 F.2d 692 (Exemption 1 and National Security Act). The government, however, relies on neither Exemption 1 nor the National Security Act in this case, and contrary to the court's suggestion, see Op. at 15, we have never held that such heightened deference is also appropriate in Exemption 7 cases. Indeed, in Weissman, which the court cites for the proposition that "we owe the same deference under Exemption 7(A) in appropriate cases," we found Exemption 7 inapplicable in the case of the CIA's investigation into the FOIA requester's background "except under special collateral circumstances," for instance, to protect the identities of FBI personnel named in requested materials. We instead focused on the deference owed the agency under Exemption 1, as well as Exemption 3 as it incorporates the National Security Act. 565 F.2d at 694–96, 698 & n.15.

In any event, the government's case fails even under the heightened deference we have applied in Exemption 1 and National Security Act cases. No matter the level of deference, our review is not "vacuous." Pratt v. Webster, 673 F.2d 408, 421 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Even when reviewing Exemption 1's applicability to materials classified in the interest of national security, we have made clear that no amount of deference can make up for agency allegations that display, for example, a "lack of detail and specificity, bad faith, [or] failure to account for contrary record evidence," since "deference is not equivalent to acquiescence." Campbell v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 164 F.3d 20, 30 (D.C. Cir. 1998). By accepting the government's vague, poorly explained allegations, and by filling in the gaps in the government's case with its own assumptions about facts absent from the record, this court has converted deference into acquiescence.

With these principles in mind, I examine each of the government's arguments for withholding the detainee information. Part II explains why Exemption 7(A), which forms the basis of the court's holding, cannot justify the government's refusal to disclose the bulk of the requested information about the detainees. Part III shows why the government's alternative arguments under Exemptions 7(C), 7(F), and 3 as it incorporates Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e) likewise fail. Finally, Part IV demonstrates why, on the basis of the record before us, the government has no basis under any exemption for withholding the names of the detainees' attorneys.

II.

Although FOIA permits agencies to craft rules exempting certain categories of records from disclosure under Exemption 7(A) instead of making a record-by-record showing, see Robbins Tire, 437 U.S. at 236, an agency's ability to rely on categorical rules has limits. Specifically, the government must divide information it seeks to withhold into "categories ... [that are] sufficiently distinct to allow a court to grasp 'how each ... category of documents, if disclosed, would interfere with the investigation.'" Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms, 789 F.2d 64, 67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (quoting Campbell v. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 682 F.2d 256, 265 (D.C. Cir. 1982)). An acceptable category is

REV_00122380

"functional," that is, it "allows the court to trace a rational link between the nature of the document and the alleged likely interference." Id.; see also Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 893 ("There are limits . . . to when categorical rules may be employed. Only when the range of circumstances included in the category 'characteristically support[s] an inference' that the statutory requirements for exemption are satisfied is such a rule appropriate.").

Although I have no doubt that some of the requested information is exempt from FOIA's mandatory disclosure requirement, the court treats disclosure as an all-or-nothing proposition, repeatedly emphasizing the breadth of the plaintiffs' request—the fact that they seek the names and other information pertaining to "every single individual detained in the course of the government's terrorism investigation," Op. at 17—as a justification for accepting the government's own very broad, categorical refusal to release the bulk of the requested information. This all-or-nothing approach runs directly counter to well-established principles governing FOIA requests. Nothing in the statute requires requesters to seek only information not exempt from disclosure. To the contrary, the government bears the burden of reviewing the plaintiffs' request, identifying functional categories of information that are exempt from disclosure, and disclosing any reasonably segregable, non-exempt portion of the requested materials. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). The government fails to satisfy that burden in this case, for the range of circumstances included in the government's exemption request do not "characteristically support" an inference that the information would interfere with its terrorism investigation.

In support of its exemption request, the government offers declarations from two senior officials with responsibility for the terrorism investigation. One of those declarations, by Dale L. Watson, a Federal Bureau of Investigation official charged with supervising the investigation, was prepared not for this case, but for cases involving the closure of deportation hearings. See N. Jersey Media Group, Inc. v. Ashcroft, 308 F.3d 198 (3d Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 2003 WL 1191395 (May 27, 2003); Detroit Free Press v. Ashcroft, 303 F.3d 681 (6th Cir. 2002). Watson's declaration thus speaks not to the harm that would flow from disclosing detainees' names or other information, but instead to the harm that would flow from publicly airing evidence about particular detainees at such a hearing—i.e., "what evidence led to the detention of each individual," "[i]nformation about how any given individual entered the country," and "what evidence the United States has against members of a particular cell." Watson Decl. ¶ ¶ 12–13. Plaintiffs in this case request no such information. The court nevertheless relies on the Watson declaration, as well as North Jersey Media Group, see Op. at 22–23, despite the fact that neither has anything to do with the release of detainee names.

The other declaration, by Department of Justice Terrorism and Violent Crime Section chief James S. Reynolds, does in fact outline the harms that might result from release of some detainee names. But it does not support the government's request for a 7(A) exemption, since that request treats all detainees the same, even though Reynolds tells us that the only common thread among the detainees is that they were "originally questioned because there were indications that they might have connections with, or possess information pertaining to, terrorist activity against the United States." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 10; see also id. ¶ ¶ 27, 36. As Reynolds himself acknowledges, this group includes some detainees who have turned out to be innocent of any involvement with terrorist activity and have "no information useful to the investigation." Id. ¶ 36.

Ignoring this important concession, the court declares that "[t]he clear import of the declarations is that many of the detainees have links to terrorism"—which the court considers "no surprise given that the detainees were apprehended during the course of a terrorism investigation, and given that several detainees have been charged with federal terrorism crimes or held as enemy combatants." Op. at 21. The court's approach is unconvincing for two reasons.

To begin with, it rests on what seems to be a faulty assumption about facts not in evidence. As of November 5, 2001, the last time the government released a tally, there were 1,182 detainees. See Dan Eggen & Susan Schmidt, Count of Released Detainees Is Hard to Pin Down, WASH. POST, Nov. 6, 2001, at A10 (quoting Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker). Nothing in the record tells us how many of those 1,182 detainees have been charged with federal terrorism crimes or held as enemy combatants. What little information the record does contain, however, suggests that the number may be relatively small. A list of federally charged detainees attached to the government's motion for summary judgment reports that as of the time this suit was filed, only one detainee had been criminally charged in the September 11 attacks and only 108 detainees had been charged with any federal crime—primarily violations of anti-fraud statutes. Reynolds Decl. ¶ 27; Def. Mot. for Summary Judgment, Ex. 8.

In any event, the court concedes the point—even if "many" of those "apprehended during the course of a terrorism investigation" have links to terrorism, not all of them do. As the court itself notes, the declarations establish that many of the INS detainees were held because law enforcement agents determined in the course of questioning them that they were in violation of federal laws; only " 'in some instances' " did agents "also determine[ ] that they had links to other facets of the investigation." Op. at 21 (quoting Reynolds Decl. ¶ 10). Furthermore, although the court assumes that all those detained on material witness warrants "have relevant knowledge about the terrorism investigation" because a federal judge issues such warrants "based on an affidavit stating that the witness has information relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation," Op. at 20, that assumption seems unwarranted given the government's concession that "it may turn out that these individuals have no information useful to the investigation," Reynolds Decl. ¶ 36.

The government gives us no reason to think that releasing the names of these innocent detainees could interfere with its investigation. Indeed, the government never really asks us to believe that disclosure of the names of innocent persons having no knowledge of terrorist activity would in any way impede its ability to gather information from those who do have such knowledge. Instead, it asserts that "a detainee who knows his name will be made public may be deterred from cooperating now or in the future for fear of retaliation by terrorist organizations against him or his family and associates." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 15. Although the court accepts this argument, Op. at 19, it is ultimately not an argument for withholding detainees' names, but rather for withholding the names of people who have information that might be helpful to law enforcement officials. These are two different categories of people, for as Reynolds acknowledges, many detainees have no information to provide. Reynolds Decl. ¶ 36. These two groups thus merit different treatment. In fact, several statutory provisions address precisely the problem the government identifies, but all of them are aimed at protecting the identities of those people who provide information, not people the government questions because it thinks they might have information but who turn out not to. FOIA Exemption 7(A) protects the identities of witnesses where disclosure might pose a risk of interference in the form of witness intimidation or coercion, Robbins Tire, 437 U.S. at 239–40; FOIA Exemption 7(D) protects the identities of sources who choose to provide information to law enforcement agents on a confidential basis, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(D); and the National Security Act protects the identity of intelligence sources in order to prevent those sources from "clos[ing] up like a clam," CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 172 (1985) (internal quotation marks omitted). The government can and should rely on these provisions to protect the names of detainees who provide information to law enforcement agents or whom the government believes will be able to provide such information in the future. The government may not, however, preemptively withhold the identities of innocent detainees who do not now, and may never, have any information of use to the terrorism investigation.

The only argument that could conceivably support withholding innocent detainees' names is the assertion that disclosure of the names "may reveal details about the focus and scope of the investigation and thereby allow terrorists to counteract it." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 16 (emphasis added). That Reynolds believes these harms may result from disclosure is hardly surprising—anything is possible. But before accepting the government's argument, this court must insist on knowing whether these harms "could reasonably be expected to" result from disclosure—the standard Congress prescribed for exemption under 7(A). Nothing in Reynolds's declaration suggests that these harms are in fact reasonably likely to occur.

To begin with, Reynolds never explains how a list of names of persons unknown to terrorist organizations would tell the terrorists anything at all about the investigation, much less allow them to "map [its] progress." Id. For example, if the government tells us that it detained men named Mohammed Mubeen, Osama Elfar, Ghassan Dahduli, Fathi Mustafa, Nacer Fathi Mustafa, and Hady Omar, Jr., none of whom has any connection to terrorist organizations, see Amy Goldstein, A Deliberate Strategy of Disruption: Massive, Secretive Detention Effort Aimed Mainly at Preventing More Terror, WASH. POST, Nov. 4, 2001, at A1, what could that information possibly tell terrorists about the government's investigation? Though Reynolds's declaration provides no answer, the court speculates that the names of these innocent detainees could be valuable to terrorist organizations because "[s]uch detainees could be acquaintances of the September 11 terrorists, or members of the same community groups or mosques." Op. at 19. That may well be true in some cases, but if it is, Reynolds should tell us so under oath, thus providing a record basis for the government to claim an exemption for those detainees who pose such concerns. But the court's speculation, supported only by a newspaper article describing a single detainee who attended a mosque that two terrorism suspects also attended, see id. (citing Rachel L. Swarns, Muslims Protest Monthlong Detention Without a Charge, N.Y. TIMES, April 20, 2003, at A16), falls far short of satisfying the government's burden under FOIA.

The government's failure to provide an adequate explanation is all the more glaring given that the detainees represent only a subset—and quite possibly a very small subset—of persons questioned in connection with this investigation. Reynolds Supp. Decl. ¶ 2. As a result, even if releasing detainee names were to provide some insight into the terrorism investigation, that insight would be limited. Releasing the names of the detainees, but not the names of those questioned in connection with the investigation, can paint only a partial—and possibly misleading—picture of the government's investigative strategy. For example, if the government detains two people in Detroit but questions a thousand in Chicago, wouldn't release of the detainee information wrongly lead terrorist organizations to believe that the government was focusing on Detroit, not Chicago?

The second failing in both the government's request and the court's analysis is that they treat all detainee information the same, despite the fact that each item of information that plaintiffs seek about the detainees—names, attorneys' names, dates and locations of arrest, places of detention, and dates of release—is clearly of very different value to terrorists attempting to discern the scope and direction of the government's investigation. Although the Reynolds declaration tells us that "releasing the names of the detainees who may be associated with terrorism and their place and date of arrest would reveal the direction and progress of the investigations," Reynolds Decl. ¶ 16, it does not tell us, for example, whether releasing the detainees' names and dates of arrest, but not their places of arrest—or even releasing the dates of arrest alone—would involve the same danger. The Reynolds declaration, moreover, contains no justification at all for withholding dates of release. Indeed, the government has already disclosed the release dates of detainees who had been held on federal criminal charges. Id. ¶ 8. This information may seem unimportant, but from the FOIA requesters' point of view, it could be highly relevant to the question of how the government is treating the persons it has detained. Taken together, arrest and release dates can tell the public how long persons have been detained, raising concerns about possible constitutional violations. See Appellees' Br. at 27.

The government's allegations of harm are also undercut by the fact that it has itself provided several other means by which this information can become public. Not only do detainees remain free to inform whomever they choose of their detention, Reynolds Decl. ¶ 23, but on numerous occasions since September 11, the government itself has disclosed precisely the kind of information it now refuses to provide under FOIA. For example, on April 17, 2002, the government announced the arrest of Issaya Nombo, whom government officials said they suspected of connections to terrorism, although he was arrested on immigration charges. Officials revealed Nombo's name and the date and place of his arrest. Philip Shenon, African Held After Name Is Left in Cave, N.Y. TIMES, Apr. 18, 2002, at A15. At a June 10, 2002 press conference, the Attorney General announced the arrest of one Abdulla Al Muhajir, born José Padilla, for suspected terrorism involvement, revealing not only Al Muhajir's two names, but also the date and place of his arrest, and the events leading to his capture. Attorney General Ashcroft News Conference, June 10, 2002, available at http:/www.usdoj.gov/ag/speeches/2002/061002agtranscripts.htm. And on July 26, 2002, government officials announced they were holding Mohammad Mansur Jabarah on a material witness warrant after his arrest in connection with a terrorist plot in Singapore. William K. Rashbaum, Captured Qaeda Member Gives Details on Group's Operations, N.Y. TIMES, July 27, 2002, at A8.

Nothing in the record explains why the government's concerns about interference with the investigation do not apply with respect to detainees such as Abdulla Al Muhajir, Issaya Nombo, and Mohammad Mansur Jabarah, but do nevertheless apply with respect to the other detainees. In its reply brief, the government explains that it may have strategic reasons for disclosing certain information, since its disclosures to date "have identified specific individuals in a manner unlikely, in the view of the law enforcement experts, to impede the progress of the investigation." Appellant's Reply Br. at 18. While this may well be so, it is an argument of counsel, and though the court accepts it, FOIA requires that the agency—not counsel—explain such judgments under oath. The reason for this requirement is clear: We owe deference to agency expertise, not to lawyers defending the agency in litigation. See, e.g., Church of Scientology v. IRS, 792 F.2d 153, 165–166 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (citing SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80 (1943)). If there are legitimate investigative reasons for releasing the names of some detainees, but not others, then Mr. Reynolds or others responsible for the terrorism investigation should explain those reasons under oath—in an in camera affidavit, if necessary to protect the information—and that explanation would probably warrant judicial deference.

It is true, as the court points out, that the Supreme Court in CIA v. Sims acknowledged "the political realities of intelligence operations in which, among other things, our Government may choose to release information deliberately to 'send a message' to allies or adversaries" when it upheld the CIA's right to withhold intelligence information even if the CIA has already released some part of it. 471 U.S. at 180. Unlike this court, however, the Supreme Court did not simply assume it understood the government's strategy; it reached its conclusion on the basis of the CIA Director's affidavit explaining that strategy. Id. at 180 & n.24. The record in this case contains no similar explanation. Moreover, counsel's argument suggests that the government itself differentiates among detainees on a case-by-case basis for purposes of assessing how disclosure might harm its investigation. If the government itself makes such distinctions in deciding what information to release, then why, particularly in light of FOIA's exacting standards, doesn't it make those distinctions in its exemption request before this court?

By asking these questions, the court would not, as it warns, be "second-guessing" the government's judgments about matters of national security. Op. at 15. It would, rather, be doing the job Congress assigned the judiciary by insisting that the government do the job Congress assigned to it: provide a rational explanation of its reasons for claiming exemption from FOIA's disclosure requirements.

REV_00122388

III.

Because the court concludes that Exemption 7(A) applies to the government's entire request, it never addresses the government's alternative arguments under Exemptions 7(C), 7(F), and 3. In my view, none of these provisions supports the government's refusal to disclose the detainee information either.

Exemption 7(C)

Exemption 7(C) permits the government to withhold law enforcement records where their release "could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C). Like Exemption 7(A), the application of Exemption 7(C) is subject to a set of well-established standards. Because the statute refers not to invasions of privacy generally, but to "unwarranted" invasions of privacy, courts evaluating claims for 7(C) exemption must do more than simply identify a privacy interest that will be compromised by disclosure of information. Instead, they must "balance the public interest in disclosure against the interest Congress intended the Exemption to protect." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 776.

Relying on our decision in Nation Magazine, the government argues that the detainees have " 'an obvious privacy interest cognizable under Exemption 7(C) in keeping secret the fact that they were subjects of a law enforcement investigation,' " and that these privacy concerns are "particularly acute given the nature and magnitude of the September 11 attacks." Appellant's Br. at 39–40 (quoting Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 894). This argument is unconvincing. For one thing, if the government is so concerned with the detainees' privacy, why has it released so much information about them? What about Abdulla Al Muhajir's privacy, or Issaya Nombo's, or Mohammad Mansur Jabarah's? Nothing in the Reynolds declaration explains how the government's press conferences releasing the names of these detainees demonstrate any respect for their privacy.

In any event, we have never held that individuals who have been not only investigated, but also arrested and jailed, have a similar privacy interest in avoiding "unwarranted association with criminal activity or reputational harm." Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 894. Even though being arrested subjects a person suspected of criminal activity to embarrassment and potentially more serious reputational harm, the law is nevertheless clear that no right of privacy "is violated by the disclosure of 'an official act such as an arrest.'" Am. Fed'n of Gov't Employees, AFL-CIO v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 118 F.3d 786, 794 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (quoting Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 713 (1976)).

To be sure, detainees may have a unique interest in avoiding association with the crimes of September 11. Even so, that interest is clearly outweighed by the public interest in knowing whether the government, in investigating those heinous crimes, is violating the rights of persons it has detained. And while FOIA asks only whether the public interest in disclosure outweighs the private interest in secrecy, it bears noting that the private interests in this case weigh on both sides of the balance: Plaintiffs' request for disclosure of the detainees' names seeks to vindicate not only the public's right to know what its government is up to, but also the detainees' own rights, including the right to counsel and to speedy trial.

Nothing in SafeCard Services, Inc. v. SEC, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991), requires a different result. SafeCard establishes that names appearing in law enforcement files will often fall within the scope of Exemption 7(C), since records containing such information are generally far less probative of an agency's behavior or performance than of the behavior of the persons whose names appear in the records. Id. at 1205; see also Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 895 ("In some, perhaps many, instances where a third party asks if an agency has information regarding a named individual in law enforcement files, the cognizable public interest in that information will be negligible; the requester will be seeking records about a private citizen, not agency conduct."). The SafeCard court therefore formulated a categorical rule exempting disclosure of such information unless the requester can show (1) compelling evidence that the agency is engaged in illegal activity, and (2) that the information is necessary to confirm or refute that evidence. SafeCard, 926 F.2d at 1205–06. Plaintiffs' FOIA request satisfies both elements of this rule.

To begin with, this case does not implicate SafeCard's concern that disclosure of names in law enforcement files will generally shed less light on the government's behavior than it does on the behavior of private citizens. In SafeCard, the FOIA requester sought information relating to organizations and individuals whom the SEC had suspected of manipulating the requester's stock and who might be witnesses or litigants in the SEC's investigations. 926 F.2d at 1200, 1205. Similarly, in many other Exemption 7(C) cases, FOIA requesters seek names in law enforcement files primarily in order to attack their convictions or otherwise exculpate themselves—a "personal stake" in disclosure that "does not count in the calculation of the public interest." Oguaju v. United States, 288 F.3d 448, 450 (D.C. Cir. 2002); see also Billington v. United States Dep't of Justice, 233 F.3d 581, 582 (D.C. Cir. 2000). Here, in contrast, plaintiffs have little if any personal stake in their FOIA request, which aims solely to glean information relating to the government's conduct of its terrorism investigation and its treatment of the detainees. Designed to "shed[ ] light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties," this request implicates precisely the kind of public interest lying at the heart of Exemption 7(C)'s balancing test. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773.

Moreover, plaintiffs offer ample evidence of agency wrongdoing. The record includes hundreds of pages of newspaper articles, human rights reports, and congressional testimony reporting alleged governmental abuses such as holding detainees for long periods without allowing them to seek or communicate with counsel and without charging them. See, e.g., Alison Leigh Cowen, Detainees' Lawyers Complain of Unfair Treatment, N.Y. TIMES, Oct. 21, 2001, at B1; Richard A. Serrano, Many Held in Terror Probe Report Rights Being Abused, L.A. TIMES, Oct. 15, 2001, at A1; Amnesty International, Amnesty International's Concerns Regarding Post September 11 Detentions in the USA, available at http://web.amnesty.org/aidoc/aidoc_pdf.nsf; Human Rights Watch, Presumption of Guilt: Human Rights Abuses of Post–September 11 Detainees, available at http://www.hrw.org/reports/2002/us911/USA0802.pdf; Department of Justice Oversight: Preserving Our Freedoms While Defending Against Terrorism: Hearing Before the Senate Judiciary Comm., 107th Cong. (2001) (statement of Gerald H. Goldstein, Attorney, National Ass'n of Criminal Defense Lawyers), available at http://judiciary.senate.gov/hearing.cfm?=28; id. (statement of Michael Boyle, Attorney, American Immigration Lawyers Ass'n). To be sure, none of this evidence has been tested and proved in a court of law. But SafeCard requires only "compelling" evidence—not tested evidence, and not even evidence that would be admissible at trial. If hundreds of pages of first-hand reports of governmental abuses do not qualify as "compelling" evidence sufficient to justify an investigation into the government's conduct, then I cannot imagine what would. After all, FOIA's purpose, as SafeCard recognizes, is to allow the public access to records necessary to ascertain whether the government has acted illegally. If requesters already had tried and tested proof of such illegal activity, then resort to FOIA would be unnecessary. History, moreover, is full of examples of situations in which just these sorts of allegations led to the discovery of serious government wrongdoing—from Teapot Dome in the 1920s to the FBI's COINTELPRO counterintelligence program in the 1960s to Watergate in the 1970s.

In short, by interpreting SafeCard to require anything more than compelling "allegations of illegal agency activity," Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 896, the government would transform the SafeCard test into a categorical ban on the disclosure of names contained in law enforcement records. That result finds justification in neither FOIA nor our cases interpreting Exemption 7(C). See Nation Magazine, 71 F.3d at 896 (holding that a blanket exemption for all names in law enforcement records "would be contrary to FOIA's overall purpose of disclosure, and thus is not a permissible reading of Exemption 7(C)"); Stern v. FBI, 737 F.2d 84 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (ordering the disclosure of the name of a high-ranking FBI official in internal reports concerning the agency's investigation of a cover-up).

Finally, plaintiffs need the information they request to confirm or refute the compelling evidence of agency wrongdoing—the SafeCard test's second requirement. While it is true that a list of names alone would shed no light on whether the government has respected detainees' constitutional rights, plaintiffs need the names in order to gather information about the government's treatment of the detainees. Appellees' Br. at 30. In this respect, plaintiffs' request differs from the vast majority of FOIA requests for information concerning named individuals in law enforcement files, where the only plausible public interest is knowing to what extent an agency believed the named individuals were involved in illegal activity. Cf. Rosenfeld v. United States Dep't of Justice, 57 F.3d 803, 812 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that Exemption 7(C) does not justify withholding the identities of persons investigated for subversive activities in FBI files, where the names would make it possible to determine whether the FBI had investigated student activists for participating in political protests by comparing the FBI's investigations to a roster of a student activist group's leadership).

Amici Washington Legal Foundation and the Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs contend that release of the information is not necessary to evaluate whether the government is operating within the bounds of the law in detaining persons in connection with its terrorism investigation, since the public has other means of obtaining the information: Individual detainees can bring individual lawsuits, the Department's Inspector General has investigated allegations of misconduct, and media reports and congressional investigations all tell the public what its "government is up to." Washington Legal Found. Br. in Support of Appellant at 17. But Amici's argument has no basis in FOIA. If Congress had intended for individual lawsuits, internal investigations, or newspaper reports to relieve the government of its obligations under FOIA, then it would have expressed that intent in the law.

Exemption 7(F)

The government next invokes Exemption 7(F), which permits withholding law enforcement records where their release "could reasonably be expected to endanger the life or physical safety of any individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(F). Here again, the government's evidence fails to establish that the entire range of records encompassed in the plaintiffs' FOIA request "could reasonably be expected" to endanger the detainees.

The government's declarations tell us only that (1) "[d]etainees who are, in fact[,] affiliated with a terrorist group may be perceived by such groups as informants for the United States and be killed to preclude their future cooperation," Reynolds Decl. ¶ 37, and (2) "[i]f prisoners learn that an individual who was detained as a result of the investigation emanating from the September 11 attacks is in their own prison facility, some may try to retaliate against this individual," id. ¶ 29. The government tells us nothing about what threat, if any, disclosure would pose to detainees who are neither affiliated with a terrorist group nor currently imprisoned. And the government's own disclosures again undermine its assertions about detainees' safety. Plaintiffs point out that the Justice Department Inspector General himself named two of the detention centers used to house the terrorism investigation detainees, a fact that the government neither denies nor explains. Appellees' Br. at 27. Again, the government may have had reasons for disclosing the names of only these two detention centers, but nothing in the Reynolds declaration tells us what those reasons might be.

Exemption 3

Finally, the government invokes Exemption 3, which exempts from disclosure matters that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . ., provided that such statute . . . requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). According to the government, Exemption 3, which encompasses Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e)'s prohibition on the disclosure of "matters occurring before the grand jury," see Fund for Constitutional Gov't v. Nat'l Archives & Records Serv., 656 F.2d 856, 867–68 (D.C. Cir. 1981), excuses it from disclosing the names of detainees held on material witness warrants, since "each of these warrants was issued to procure a witness's testimony before a grand jury," Reynolds Second Supp. Decl. ¶ 4. As such, the government contends that Exemption 3 provides a ground for nondisclosure independent of Exemption 7.

Rule 6(e) forbids disclosure of "not only what has occurred and what is occurring, but also what is likely to occur" before a grand jury, including disclosure of witnesses' identities. In re Motions of Dow Jones & Co., 142 F.3d 496, 500 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Therefore, the names of persons detained on material witness warrants who have actually testified before grand juries are unquestionably exempt from disclosure. The government, however, insists that Exemption 3 also covers the names of material witness detainees who have neither testified before grand juries nor are scheduled to do so, as well as the names of detainees who were released without ever having testified, because all of these detainees were originally detained in order to "procure [their] testimony before a grand jury." Reynolds Second Supp. Decl. ¶ 4.

Saying that the material witness detainees were held in order to secure their testimony is quite different from saying that their testimony is "likely to occur" before a grand jury. Indeed, the record indicates that at least seven material witnesses have been released without testifying before a grand jury, so in their cases, it seems more accurate to say that their testimony is quite unlikely to occur before a grand jury. See Indiana Men Ordered to Testify to Return to Evansville, Assoc. Press, Oct. 25, 2001. Furthermore, although current detainees may be, on the whole, somewhat more likely to testify before grand juries, their testimony is not necessarily "likely to occur" for purposes of Rule 6(e). We have said that the "likely to occur" language must be read sensibly: It does not authorize the government to draw "a veil of secrecy . . . over all matters occurring in the world that happen to be investigated by a grand jury." In re Sealed Case, 192 F.3d 995, 1001–02 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Accordingly, we have made clear that Rule 6(e) covers "testimony about to be presented to a grand jury" (emphasis added)—hence the "likely to occur" language—but does not cover government investigations that merely parallel grand jury investigations. Id. at 1002–03. Because the government fails to show that all material witness detainees are likely to testify before grand juries, it may not, on this record, withhold their names under Rule 6(e). To hold otherwise would convert this circuit's carefully crafted standard into an absolute rule that would permit the government to keep secret the name of any witness whom it ever thought might testify at a grand jury proceeding, or who might testify at some indefinite point in the future. Neither Rule 6(e) nor the law of this circuit justifies that result.

IV.

No part of the government's exemption request better illustrates its infirmities than its refusal to disclose the names of the detainees' attorneys. Essentially rehashing its arguments for withholding the names of the attorneys' clients, the government argues—and the court agrees, see Op. at 23—that releasing attorneys' names would interfere with the terrorism investigation and would compromise the detainees' privacy interests, since releasing a list of attorneys "may facilitate the identification of the detainees themselves." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 18. The government also claims to be withholding the attorneys' names for their own good, warning that attorneys identified as representing individuals detained in connection with the terrorism investigation "run the risk that they will be subjected to harassment or retaliation in their personal as well as professional lives." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 26.

Both parts of this argument are not only profoundly wrong, but also reflect a complete misunderstanding of the nature of this country's legal profession. In the first place, attorneys' names are quite clearly not a proxy for the names of their clients. Indeed, recognizing that knowledge of the lawyer's identity does not inexorably lead to identifying the client, ethical rules forbid lawyers from identifying their clients without their consent, except in extraordinary circumstances. Rule 1.6 of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct provides that absent extraordinary circumstances, "[a] lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives consent after consultation"—a prohibition that generally includes disclosure of a client's identity. See CTR. FOR PROF'L RESPONSIBILITY, AM. BAR ASS'N, ANNOTATED MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT 83 (4th ed. 1999). Because the decision ultimately belongs to the detainees and not their lawyers, providing a list of the lawyers' names would do little more to facilitate identification of the detainees than the government's current policy of allowing the detainees to identify themselves to the media and to whomever else they choose.

Even assuming that releasing attorneys' names will somehow facilitate identification of the detainees, the court's all-or-nothing approach again impermissibly shifts the burden of identifying exempt information from the government to plaintiffs. The government's Exemption 7(A) argument for withholding lawyers' names thus fails for the same reason as its 7(A) argument for withholding the names of all detainees. How would releasing the names of attorneys representing innocent clients with no connection to terrorist activities interfere with the government's terrorism investigation? Neither the court nor the government provides an explanation.

The government's second argument fares no better. The notion that the government must withhold the attorneys' names for their own good is flatly inconsistent with lawyers' roles as advocates and officers of the court in our fundamentally open legal system. Having voluntarily assumed this public role, lawyers have little expectation of anonymity. I, for one, know of no lawyer who has ever asked for the kind of protection the government now asserts on behalf of the detainees' lawyers. Moreover, I have no doubt that lawyers will represent individuals associated with the terrorism investigation even without the protection the government urges. As Judge Kessler noted in her opinion in this case, the history of our profession is full of examples of brave men and women who have taken on unpopular causes in the interest of justice. Center for Nat'l Sec. Studies v. Dep't of Justice, 215 F. Supp. 2d 94, 109 (D.D.C. 2002). Not only do lawyers regularly represent persons accused of terrible and highly publicized crimes against individuals, but many of this country's most prominent and well-respected lawyers have defended persons accused of heinous crimes against the state, from Aaron Burr to Nazi saboteurs to Soviet spies, as well as persons merely suspected of a propensity to commit such crimes, such as Japanese internees in World War II.

In addition, the government completely fails to substantiate its concerns about releasing attorneys' names. The government insists that "[i]n light of the brutality of the acts committed against the United States, even the mere possibility of retaliation against these lawyers justifies withholding their identities." Reynolds Decl. ¶ 38. FOIA, of course, does not allow the government to withhold information based on "mere possibilities." And the Reynolds declaration fails to establish that retaliation is reasonably likely. Indeed, if the government is so worried about retaliation against lawyers, why did it release a comprehensive list of attorneys representing federally charged detainees? See Def. Mot. for Summary Judgment, Ex. 8. Reynolds provides no answer. And if the risk of retaliation has materialized in the case of these attorneys, Reynolds certainly does not tell us so.

If the government has legitimate concerns about the safety of one or more of the lawyers, FOIA requires it to describe those concerns with reasonable specificity—again in an in camera affidavit, if necessary—and explain why it believes the harms it fears "could reasonably be expected" to occur. Giving appropriate deference to law enforcement expertise, the district court would then be in a position to evaluate the government's concerns and determine whether withholding the attorneys' names under Exemption 7(F)—or some other, less extraordinary measures—are needed to protect the detainees' attorneys. Absent such evidence, however, the government has no basis for its flat refusal to release lawyers' names.

V.

Although I think it unreasonable to infer that all of the information plaintiffs seek in their FOIA request qualifies for exemption, the government may be able to point to more narrowly defined categories of information that might justify the inference. For example, while nothing in the record supports the government's contention that releasing the names of innocent detainees would harm the investigation, perhaps the government could justify withholding the places of arrest on the ground that such information might provide terrorist organizations with some insight into the government's investigative methods and strategy. I would therefore remand to allow the government to describe, for each detainee or reasonably defined category of detainees, on what basis it may withhold their names and other information.

This "more particularized approach" comports with both "Congress' intent to provide workable rules of FOIA disclosure," United States v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165, 180 (1993) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), and FOIA's ultimate aim: to give the public "access to information about how Government is exercising its trust," at a time when "Government is becoming involved in more and more aspects of every citizen's personal and business life." 112 Cong. Rec. 13654 (1966) (statement of Rep. Rumsfeld). It would also ensure that this court treat FOIA as "a disclosure statute and not as an excuse to withhold information from the public." Id.

Rather than hold the government to clearly established standards governing FOIA exemptions, the court sustains the government's vague, ill-explained decision to withhold information, invoking principles of deference and engaging in its own speculation to fill in the gaps in the government's showing. In my view, the court's approach drastically diminishes, if not eliminates, the judiciary's role in FOIA cases that implicate national-security interests. Congress certainly could have written FOIA that way, but chose instead to require meaningful judicial review of all government exemption claims. If the government thinks that a new, broader FOIA exemption is needed for terrorism cases, it should ask Congress to create one, just as in the wake of September 11 it asked Congress to authorize roving wiretaps of suspected terrorists and to permit detention of non-U.S. citizens suspected of terrorism without specific charges. See USA PATRIOT Act, Pub. L. No. 107–56, 115 Stat. 272 (2001). But this court may not change the law in Congress's stead. For all its concern about the separation-of-powers principles at issue in this case, the court violates those principles by essentially abdicating its responsibility to apply the law as Congress wrote it. I dissent.

Excellent. Not sure about comparison to recommendations clause; that seems double-edged example given veto possibility. I thought the last sentence sounded a tad preachy. Thx.

The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The Constitution vests the Senate with the important responsibility of confirming or rejecting individuals selected by the President to serve on the United States Supreme Court and on the lower federal courts. In recent weeks, however, in the apparent anticipation that one or more justices of the Supreme Court may soon announce an intention to retire, some Senators have expressed a desire to control not only the confirmation process, but also the selection process for appointing Supreme Court justices. Specifically, in a series of letters dated May 14, June 10, and June 11, Senators Patrick Leahy and Charles Schumer have asked you to give each of them a special role in selecting nominees to the Supreme Court, even though the Constitution vests that authority exclusively in the President.

With all respect to my distinguished colleagues, I disagree. As President of the United States, you of course enjoy full discretion and authority to consider suggestions made by any member of the United States Senate, or indeed by any American. To the extent, however, that Senators Leahy and Schumer intimate that either the Constitution or Senate tradition support a special role for United States Senators in the process of selecting Supreme Court justices, they are mistaken.

In his June 11 letter, Senator Leahy suggests that "consultation with the Senate in advance of nomination" has traditionally helped Presidents to select Supreme Court nominees. He even asserts that such consultation might be necessary to "reassure the Senate and the American people that the process of selecting a Supreme Court justice has not become politicized." Senator Schumer goes even further. First, he claims in his June 10 letter that the Constitution "mandate[s] that the Senate advise the President on judicial nominations" (emphasis added). Moreover, to carry out his "constitutional obligation" to "advise [you] on whom to nominate," Senator Schumer boldly recommends five individuals for you to nominate to the Supreme Court.

These letters concern me a great deal. Although I am new to the United States Senate, I have long been a champion of an independent judiciary as a vital institution and as the very foundation of our system of government. Few things concern me more than the threat of politics interfering with our courts and our system of justice, including our system of selecting judges to serve on the federal bench. And few things would politicize our judiciary more than to hand over control of the process for selecting Supreme Court justices to the 100 elected members of the United States Senate.

Although you may decide to entertain any suggestions made by Senators Leahy or Schumer or any other member of the United States Senate for filling vacancies on the Supreme Court, I would urge you against giving their recommendations special weight simply by virtue of their status as Senators. Neither the Constitution nor Senate tradition establishes the wisdom of such a course. Neither the Constitution nor tradition confers any responsibility upon the Senate to recommend nominees to the Supreme Court, or imposes any obligation upon the President to seek advice from Senators prior to announcing such a nomination.

The Constitution nowhere "dictates that federal judges be nominated by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate," as Senator Schumer erroneously claims. Instead, the Constitution says that only the President shall nominate. As legal academics and Senate historians alike have long recognized and understood, the Senate's "advice and consent" role is limited to the appointment, and not the nomination, of judges: the Constitution explicitly states that "[t]he President . . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges."

There is another reason why the Senate's limited "advice and consent" role reinforces the view that it is the President, and not the Senate, who shall take the lead on selecting nominees to the Supreme Court. The Advice and Consent Clause of the Constitution simply establishes that the Senate's approval is necessary, but not sufficient, for the President to appoint an individual – just as the Senate's approval is necessary, but not sufficient, for the President to ratify a treaty. Should the Senate advise that a nominee be appointed or a treaty be ratified, the Constitution leaves it to the President to decide whether or not to appoint that individual or ratify that treaty. The Senate must advise and consent, but it is the President who must, both initially and ultimately, decide.

The text of the Constitution therefore contemplates no role for Senators to advise on selecting justices of the Supreme Court. Indeed, law professors frequently consulted by Senate Democrats have stated as much. Professor Cass Sunstein, for example, has agreed that "the Constitution contemplates no formal prenomination advisory role for the Senate but reserves the act of nomination exclusively to the President." Professor Michael Gerhardt has similarly explained that "the Constitution does not . . . impose any obligation on the president to consult with the Senate prior to nominating people to confirmable posts."

From the time of this nation's founding, it has been understood that the President alone shall nominate justices of the Supreme Court, and that the Senate has no constitutional role in consulting or advising on such nominations. As renowned constitutional scholar and historian David Currie has pointed out, President George Washington consulted with the Senate on the negotiation of future treaties, yet "no comparable practice emerged with regard to appointments; from the outset the President simply submitted the names and the Senate voted yes or no. . . . Madison, Jefferson, and Jay all advised Washington not to consult the Senate before making nominations." Alexander Hamilton similarly wrote in Federalist No. 76 that "one man of discernment is better fitted to analyze and estimate the peculiar qualities adopted to particular offices than a body of men . . . . In the act of nomination, [the President's] judgment alone would be exercised."

Of course, should individual Senators decide to send you recommendations of possible nominees to the Supreme Court, that is their right of expression. But no one should be confused into thinking that the President is in any way bound, as a legal, political, or traditional matter, to follow any of those recommendations. Indeed, it is impossible to comprehend how the President would obey the wishes of all 100 Senators, each of whom might submit their own recommended nominees. Moreover, unlike the absence of any clear constitutional role for the Senate in the selection of judges, the Constitution expressly states that the President may "recommend" legislation to Congress – yet no one would dispute that Congress is nevertheless fully entitled to ignore those recommendations and enact legislation contrary to the President's views.

Good faith cooperation between the branches, and between both political parties, can of course be desirable and helpful to the effective operation of the government and of the federal judiciary. On numerous occasions, you have stated your vision of changing the tone in Washington, and I wholeheartedly endorse that vision. But such cooperation must be a two-way street. You have done your part by establishing an exceptionally successful system for selecting the finest legal minds in the country, from diverse walks of life, to serve on the federal bench. Yet a partisan minority of Senators has poisoned the atmosphere by conducting unprecedented and dangerous filibusters of judicial nominees – even though those nominees are supported by a bipartisan majority of Senators. Moreover, this partisan minority of Senators further poisons relations between the branches when it falsely accuses certain judicial nominees of falling outside the mainstream of American jurisprudence. The truth is, Miguel Estrada has the support of Democrats and Republicans across the country, including 87% of Hispanics according to a recent poll by Opiniones Latinas. Leading Democrats from the state bar and the state supreme court, along with 84% of Texas voters, have expressed their support for Justice Priscilla Owen. Yet a minority of Senators will not allow a bipartisan majority of Senators to vote to confirm these fine individuals. Until they end the poisonous atmosphere created by these unprecedented filibusters of judicial nominees, it is difficult for me to imagine how you could reasonably conduct good faith consultation with the culprits on any matter as important as a Supreme Court vacancy.

[ON SECOND THOUGHT, I THINK THAT WE SHOULD AVOID NAMING SITTING JUSTICES, EVEN THOUGH THE OTHER SIDE DOES IT: It doesn't have to be this way, and it wasn't always this way. President Clinton nominated former ACLU general counsel Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court, even though she had previously argued that there is a constitutional right to prostitution – hardly a mainstream legal position. Yet the Senate confirmed her by an overwhelming 96-3 vote.]

As President, you have demonstrated a serious commitment to selecting the nation's finest legal minds to serve on the lower federal courts. You have insisted upon individuals who understand that the role of a judge is to interpret, and not to make, law. Members of the United States Senate certainly expect you to do nothing less in the event that one or more Supreme Court justices announces their retirement during your tenure as President. In the course of choosing a Supreme Court nominee, you of course have the discretion to consider suggestions made by any American, including any member of the United States Senate. But the only role expressly contemplated by the Constitution, and recommended by tradition, in the nomination of Supreme Court justices is the President's and the President's alone. The preferences of a single Senator should not distract you from your constitutional responsibility to select individuals who are committed to faithfully interpreting the law on behalf of the American people.

Sincerely,

JOHN CORNYN
United States Senator

Parking

Effective immediately, anyone looking to park in any of the White House lots (includes the Ellipse, State Place, and West Exec.), must have a placard with them- No Exceptions. This has been ordered by the White House Management Office and not the Secret Service, so there is nothing that the guards posted at the gates can do if you forget your placard. Anyone without a parking placard will be turned away.

Invitations for the 4th of July fireworks celebration on the South Lawn are set to be distributed over the course of the next several days. EOP staff members are allowed one guest or their immediate family (defined here as a spouse and any children currently living at home- this does not include parents, siblings, etc.). Due to the size of the guest list (invitations will be distributed to OA, OMB, USTR, and all Political Appointees currently working within the Administration), expect the Visitors Office to be strict in their enforcement of the established attendance guidelines. Other details regarding the event will be included on the invitation.

Dear Senator Schumer:

Thank you for your letter of June 10 to the President. If a Supreme Court vacancy arises during his Presidency, President Bush will nominate an individual of the highest integrity, intellect, and experience. The Senate will have an opportunity to assess the President's nominee and exercise its constitutional responsibility to vote up or down on the nominee.

We would be pleased to visit with you about the process, and we will consider suggestions you may have should a vacancy arise.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES REGARDING CORPORATE AND GOVERNMENTAL AIRCRAFT ON POLITICAL TRIPS

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to use of corporate or governmental aircraft for political trips. (Note that this memorandum does not cover travel on a charter aircraft paid for by a political entity, which is treated the same as ordinary travel on a commercial aircraft where the cost is paid by a political entity.)

I. Corporate Aircraft

A political campaign or party may pay for air transportation of individuals to a political event, including of individuals who may be employed in the Executive Branch. See 5 C.F.R. 2635.204(f). In addition, federal law authorizes political campaigns and parties to secure a corporate aircraft to provide air transportation, so long as the campaign or party reimburses the owner of the aircraft under relevant federal statutes and regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 114.9.

As a matter of policy, however, the following steps must occur when an Executive Branch employee travels on a corporate aircraft secured by a political campaign or party for the employee's travel to a political event:

1. The employee should not travel on a corporate aircraft for political travel unless commercial service would not be practically available under the circumstances, taking into account the employee's official schedule and the location and timing of the event.

2. The employee should not travel on an aircraft owned by an entity or individual that is regulated by or doing business with the employee's department or agency, or in circumstances that otherwise would be inappropriate.

3. The relevant political campaign or party must pay the owner of the aircraft in advance by paying the relevant first class airfare (or, in the case of travel to a city not served by a regularly scheduled commercial service, the usual charter rate).

4. For White House employees, advance approval of any use of a corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the Counsel to the President. For other Administration employees, advance approval of any use of corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the relevant department or agency General Counsel and the Counsel to the President.

5. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the re-election campaign will reimburse first-class airfare from the point of origin to each stop in which campaign-related activity is conducted and back to the point of origin. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving political activity other than campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the political entity will reimburse first-class airfare based on the hard-time formula. On all mixed trips, use of a corporate aircraft must also meet the standards for approval under 41 C.F.R. Part 304.

II. Governmental Aircraft

1. White House employees and other Administration employees should not use governmental aircrafts for travel on political trips or mixed official-political trips unless the employee is required for security reasons to use governmental aircraft, or the employee is accompanying another official who requires use of a governmental aircraft for security reasons.

2. Advance approval of any use of a governmental aircraft for such a trip must be obtained from the Chief of Staff to the President and Counsel to the President. Appropriate first-class reimbursement for political travelers must be made by the campaign or relevant political entity. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(5).

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes general rules with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party under the Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1993. Please note that this memorandum is simply a summary of the relevant laws and regulations, which are set out or referenced in 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections.

We ask that the General Counsels of the Executive departments and agencies issue guidance -- tailored as appropriate to your department or agency -- to ensure that all employees of the departments and agencies are aware of and comply with the laws with respect to political activity, including those contained at 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. (We have provided similar guidance to White House staff.) At all times, you should instruct employees to contact your General Counsel's office if they have any questions about appropriate political activity.

In addition, please note that certain agencies listed in 5 C.F.R. 734.401 -- primarily those with law enforcement or national security responsibilities -- have more stringent rules with respect to political activity. Several agencies traditionally have followed more stringent specific rules and practices as a matter of policy as well. This memorandum does not purport to summarize the rules applicable to employees in those particular agencies.

Finally, please be aware that today we are issuing two separate memoranda to you regarding specific political travel issues that frequently arise.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

The range of permissible activities for Executive Branch employees is described in 5 C.F.R. Part 734. To summarize, an employee (other than one employed in an agency described in 5 C.F.R. 734.401) may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
    - being a member of a political party;
    - serving as an officer of a political party;

- attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
- participating in a political convention or rally; and
- serving as a delegate to a political convention.

- participation in political campaigns, which includes:

  - canvassing for votes;
  - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
  - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
  - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

- participation in elections, including:

  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.

- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

  An employee may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, an employee may:

  - make lawful political contributions;
  - attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with the legal requirements of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list the official title; and
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Basic Prohibitions

The basic prohibitions on political activity are summarized at 5 C.F.R. 734 Subpart C.

1. An employee may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, an employee may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. (However, an employee may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not personally solicit contributions.)

2. An employee may not use his or her official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that an employee's official title may not be used on invitations to political fundraisers. If a title is used by others inadvertently and without the employee's knowledge, the employee should contact the relevant General Counsel's office promptly about appropriate steps to take.

3. An employee may not use his or her official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.

On-Duty Activity Rules

Most Executive Branch employees are prohibited from engaging in political activity while on duty and in their offices. There is an exception to this prohibition for those who are (i) Senate-confirmed officials or are employed in the Executive Office of the President and (ii) whose duties continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post. Such employees are permitted by law to engage in otherwise permitted political activity while on duty and in the office – for example, meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. However, any non-incidental costs incurred as a result of such activity shall be reimbursed. In addition, employees who are not Senate-confirmed or covered EOP employees may engage in official duties that involve assisting a Senate-confirmed or covered EOP official -- for example, with respect to scheduling or typing.

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

Please note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.

Travel Rules

As fully detailed in a separate memorandum being issued to you today regarding travel costs, the appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant costs associated with political travel (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should be instructed to contact their department or agency general counsel.

A Refreshing Exchange
William Pryor goes to Washington.

he attorney general of Alabama is the most refreshing thing to happen to Washington since William Faulkner said the reason he wouldn't be going to President Kennedy's Nobel prize-winner party at the White House was that Washington was a long way to go for dinner. Listen to William Pryor being grilled by Senator Feingold. The senator was fishing about trying to add to Mr. Pryor's list of disqualifications to serve as judge. Wasn't Mr.

Pryor associated with the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA), which made contributions to Republican contenders for election as attorneys general?
FEINGOLD. Will you provide to the committee a comprehensive list of RAGA's contributors and the amounts and dates of their contribution?
PRYOR. I don't have such a list, Senator.
FEINGOLD. Who does?
PRYOR. The Republican National Committee.
FEINGOLD. Will you urge them to provide that list?
PRYOR. If you need that kind of list, then you really need to seek it from them.
FEINGOLD. You oppose a disclosure of this information?
PRYOR. I'm not saying that I oppose it or I favor it.
FEINGOLD. I'm taking this as a refusal to urge the release of this information.
[In street talk, this would read: You want that? Well, stir ass and get. Don't use me as your research assistant.]
Attorney General Pryor has run into the high risk of sassing critically situated senators. Not that there was ever any possibility that Sen. Feingold would vote to confirm the nomination of Pryor to the court of appeals. The 41-year-old Pryor had given the committee an answer to the big question. He said it with a straight face. Said it as matter-of-factly as if he had been asked by the short-order cook did he say he wanted his steak well done. The great question: Mr. Pryor, you once said that you thought the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade was "the worst abomination of constitutional law in our history." Do you still think that?
Oh yes, said Pryor.
When asked whether he thought that that decision had had moral consequences, he said, oh yes. He explained: "It has led to the slaughter of millions of innocent unborn children." Does the attorney general of Alabama know nothing about governing protocols in dealing with proud liberal senators? You never say "unborn children" when referring merely to * fetuses. What you do is you tilt the language around a bit and talk about the rights of the mother. But Pryor * who almost certainly will not be confirmed * hadn't come to Washington to disguise his personal views on child pornography, homosexual practices, gun laws, or prayer in school. What he said was that he respected the right of the state legislatures to promulgate laws governing these matters, provided they did not violate constitutional postulates, for instance, the right to pray or to exhibit the Ten Commandments in a judge's chambers.
What is admirable about Mr. Pryor's personal deportment is his refusal to cavil. He came to conclusions about Roe v. Wade no different from those taken by Supreme Court justices who voted against the majority opinion in 1973. If a lawyer isn't free to believe that Roe was wrong as constitutional exegesis, and mischievous as political sociology, he isn't free to think, except as spokesperson for People for the American Way. The only proper concern for the Senate Committee, passing on a nomination by the president, who is given that authority by the Constitution, is whether the potential judge would enforce the law. And Pryor would do so, even laws based on opinions he thought wrong. He has more than once argued, as attorney general, to enforce the law based on judicial rulings with which he did not sympathize.
But people who are in favor of abortion don't want anybody around courthouses who thinks abortions immoral, let alone illegal. Because of course if they are, then those in favor of abortion are supporting immoral activity. Politicians don't want that kind of invidious language. That's why they talk about women's rights (which include the right to be immoral). Get this: One senator wanted to know whether Mr. Pryor had canceled a visit to Disney World with his children, which visit would have fallen on Gay Day at Disney World.
"We made a value judgment and changed our plan and went another weekend."
To spare the kids from embarrassment?
Hardly. The two girls were 4 and 6. No. Mr. Pryor was saying to Disney, Look, if you want to celebrate Gay Day, count me out as participant in the celebration. I'll come another day. Fair enough.
Pryor has a superb record, as lawyer and attorney general, but of course the Democrats won't vote for him, and they'll seek an Arlen Specter or two to dissent from Mr. Bush's nomination. The thought police are busy, and they're looking for a couple of Republican senators to help make the point that some thoughts are unthinkable.

The Disney Smear
A goofy tactic used against a Bush judicial nominee.

Senate Democrats are bent on keeping as many of President Bush's conservative nominees to federal courts off their intended benches as they can get away with, and are using whatever they can to demonize each one of them. Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi is a racist, according to the script. Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen is an anti-choice extremist. Miguel Estrada is not Hispanic enough. Their latest target is Alabama attorney general William Pryor, who is nominated for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

It was no-holds-barred at Pryor's Senate Judiciary Committee hearing last Thursday. Senate Democrats questioned him on his religion and past remarks on abortion. New York Democratic senator Charles Schumer proclaimed: "[Pryor's] beliefs are so deeply held that it's very difficult to believe those views won't influence how he follows the law. A person's views matter."

Also at the hearing, Senator Russell Feingold (D., Wis.) made an issue out of the fact that Pryor and his wife changed their Walt Disney World vacation plans when they learned their visit was coinciding with the annual Gay Day there (the first Saturday in June).

Here's how it went:

SEN. FEINGOLD: In a recent brief to the Supreme Court, you equated private, consensual sexual activity between homosexuals to prostitution, adultery, necrophilia, bestiality, incest and pedophilia. In addition, your office defended a statute that denied funding to a gay-lesbian-bisexual alliance, a student organization. The 11th Circuit unanimously declared the statute unconstitutional. Furthermore, as deputy attorney general, you joined an amicus brief in Romer v. Evans arguing that local governments in Colorado were prohibited from enacting laws to protect gays and lesbians from discrimination. The Supreme Court later rejected your view, but you called the decision undemocratic.

News accounts also report that you even went so far as to reschedule a family vacation at Disney World in order to avoid Gay Day. In light of this record, can you understand why a gay plaintiff or defendant would feel uncomfortable coming before you as a judge? And I'd like to give you this opportunity to explain why these concerns may or may not be justified.

ATTY GEN. PRYOR: I think my record as attorney general shows that I will uphold and enforce the law. In the Lawrence case, the first that you mentioned, I was upholding and urging the Supreme Court to reaffirm its decision of 1986 in Bowers versus Hardwick, which is the law of the land. And the argument to which you referred, the slippery slope argument, was taken from Justice White's majority opinion for the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the second instance that you mentioned, the 11th Circuit case involving university facilities and funds for homosexual groups in Alabama, that argument was presented by then attorney general Jeff Sessions, not by me. And, in fact, after the decision came down, by the time the decision came down I was attorney general. But I did not file any papers to quarrel with the decision because, in fact, I agreed with it. When we worked together in the attorney general's office, I declined to participate in that case for General Sessions because I had agreed with the District Court ruling, and I agreed then with the 11th Circuit ruling.
In the case of Romer versus Evans, General Sessions again was the attorney general at the time. I was his deputy attorney general, but he was the one who made the final decision. I have criticized the Romer decision.
As far as my family vacation is concerned, my wife and I had two daughters who at the time of that vacation were six and four, and we made a value judgment. And that was our personal decision. But my record as attorney general is that I will uphold and enforce the law, particularly, as I mentioned in my first example, in the Lawrence case, the brief that we filed defending Alabama law, which prohibits sodomy between unmarried persons, follows the Supreme Court's precedent.
SEN. FEINGOLD: Well, I certainly respect going to Disney World with two daughters. I've done the same thing. But are you saying that you actually made that decision on purpose to be away at the time of that * ATTY GEN. PRYOR: We made a value judgment and changed our plan and went another weekend.
SEN. FEINGOLD: Well, I * I appreciate your candor on that.
Mr. Chairman * Mr. Pryor, you've criticized those *
SEN. HATCH: Senator, your time is up.
Throughout the hearing on Thursday, Pryor was unapologetic before the committee for being who he is: a pro-life, legally conservative, Catholic public servant (surely none of these disqualifies one for seating on a federal bench); he handled the Disney question no differently. Despite his honesty, however, the Democrats' work had already been done: Simply by raising the question, they had demonized him.
But that any of his critics would use his family's Disney vacation planning against him is, well, goofy. A family choosing not to go to Disney World during "Gay Day" says nothing about their positions on or feelings about gay marriage, homosexuality, or gay people in general. It would probably not be a stretch to guess that if there were a "Live-in Boyfriend and Girlfriend's Day," the emphasis on visitors being publicly identified by their sexual orientation (at least for that day), Pryor and his wife would probably skip that, too.
Whatever your position on gay marriage or homosexuality, a private decision to not take your children to Disney World during "Gay Day," would be considered by many parents to be a perfectly sensible decision * and that is certainly not proof that those parents are haters. (Click here, here, here or here for some visuals from both on Disney grounds and at associated events.) It does not follow that you are an anti-gay bigot if you decide Gay Day (which has included an event for gay and lesbian youth at the Magic Kingdom and a Queer as Folk reception) is not the most appropriate time to travel to Disney World with your four- and six-year-old daughters.
What the Pryor hearing was really about was stonewalling, yet again. It's our way, or empty benches, is the message the Democrats repeatedly send the White House. And to law-upholding, conservative, pro-life, religious nominees: Unless you have the stomach to fight back, or apologize, in the face of intense demagoguery, stay far away from Capitol Hill, and, subsequently, any federal bench.

Dear Joseph,

Thank you so much for the May 22 letter outlining your thoughts for the upcoming election. Everyone involved with the Bush/Cheney 2004 campaign is looking forward to the upcoming challenges and opportunities.

As you know, New York is the site of the Republican National Convention in 2004. New York is an amazing representative of America and thus an appropriate city for such an event.

I sincerely appreciate you taking the time to write me with your thoughts and offering to help in New York. There will be many opportunities for you to volunteer your time and services locally, and I encourage you to participate.

Again, thank you for the insightful letter, and thank you also for your strong support of President Bush.

Sincerely,

Matt Schlapp

This is unbelievable - the latest iteration that we think it will take to get Specter on board. This has not yet been sent to Specter staff (so don't share around) - but it is in response to what was discussed today. As I mentioned before, Specter doesn't want any mass actions going to MDL, and this may be the best we can get. Am I nuts to be concerned about this language? Can't the President appoint Specter to be Ambassador to Antarctica or something? Ugh.

Bush-Cheney paid campaign advance staff will not be used to do advance for the President or VP when the events are for Congressional candidates. Two reasons (1) cost. It doesn't make sense for the B-C campaign to pay for advance staff to do events that are not B-C events. (2) Legally (this is what I've been told, but I'm not a lawyer, so check it out) agency employees (schedule C's) can be used to do advance work for Congressional events.

Hope that clears it up.

From this morning on the Sup Court question:

Q Ari, is the White House pointblank rejecting the suggestion from Senator Daschle to consult on any Supreme Court nominations the President might make? Is that just not going to work?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, Judge Gonzales wrote back to Senator Daschle and others who have come up with a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process. And I've said he's always happy to meet and talk with these individual Senators, and of course, he will if they want to do that. But the Constitution is clear; the Constitution will be followed; we will always welcome thoughts that, certainly, no one wants to suggest that the Constitution be altered.

Q But, Ari, the Constitution doesn't say that the President needs to consult on Medicare, it just says that he should sign a bill. I mean, why is it important to consult on issues like that and not other issues that could be credibly divisive, to avoid that?

MR. FLEISCHER: As I indicated, the Judge has written a letter and says he's always happy to meet and always happy to talk. But there's a difference between the naming of an individual and a piece of legislation that has a hundred moving parts to it.

Q What if Gonzales is the nominee?

MR. FLEISCHER: I'm just not -- nice try, very clever, good direct front door effort to speculate on a position that's not even open. (Laughter.)

MR. FLEISCHER: Judge Gonzales?

Q Yes, you said -- you said that Judge Gonzales would meet with the senators. Will the President meet with the senators? The President, as Donna points out, frequently will meet on, as you say, complex issues and simple ones. He has an interest here, doesn't he?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, the Judge's letter speaks for itself, and there's not even a vacancy.

Q Can we get a copy of that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Yes.

ARI FLEISCHER

The James S. Brady Briefing Room

9:35 A.M. EDT

MR. FLEISCHER: Good morning. I suppose you're wondering why I've asked you here. I have a report for you on the President's day. The President had his breakfast meeting with the Speaker of the House, Majority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House and Senate, along with Leader DeLay.

He went from there immediately to an intelligence briefing, then an FBI briefing, and then an NSC meeting. I have not had an opportunity to talk to the President yet about the congressional breakfast, so I don't have anything for you on it -- I anticipate I will in time for the briefing.

The President at 10:40 a.m. this morning in the Roosevelt Room, with stills at the top, will have a roundtable on prison fellowship ministries. At this meeting, the President will talk about the effectiveness of faith-based programs in reducing recidivism through in-prison and after-care mentoring programs. That will be stills at the top.

At noon, the President will have lunch with the Vice President, his weekly lunch. And at 2:20 p.m. in the Cabinet Room with the pool at the top, the President will welcome to the White House a bipartisan group of senators to talk about the importance of finishing the job and getting prescription drugs to America's seniors as part of the modernized, strengthened Medicare plan.

And then this evening, weather permitting, there will be the congressional picnic out on the South Lawn.

Q When will the call be made?

MR. FLEISCHER: Do you know when the call will be made, Reed? Yes, I think we're trying to work on that now. I don't know what the alternative plan is in case it's -- tomorrow night?

MR. DICKENS: Tomorrow night, same time.

MR. FLEISCHER: Okay. Same time tomorrow.

Q Can we get a little more volume on the -- thank you.

MR. FLEISCHER: And, let's see if I have anything else for you today. I realize it's relatively quiet right now. And that's all I have for the day.

Q In Iraq, another American soldier was killed today, American soldiers killed two Iraqis separately. Obviously, violence continuing. I think the figure is some 50 American soldiers have died since the President declared the war over. Did he say too soon that major fighting was done? The situation seems --

MR. FLEISCHER: No, I was asked this yesterday, and the answer is the same that the President said major combat is over. Major combat is over. But the President said that danger remains. There continue to be elements that support Saddam Hussein, there continue to be loyalists to the Baath Party who want to engage in violence. These are violent people. They governed Iraq with violence. They governed Iraq with torture. They're continuing what they used to do. And the purpose of America's presence there is to help bring stability to Iraq as it's reconstructed.

Q Is there some need to perhaps add some troops again and kind of bulk up what we're doing there to prevent this kind of --

MR. FLEISCHER: I think the Defense Department always reviews the numbers, the adequacy of operation. But I think it's safe to say whether the number is "X" or the number is "Y," there are still elements who will shoot at America's military. And that's why the military is there with the amount of force they've deemed appropriate to help bring more stability to the country.

Q Is there a review going on to add back to the numbers?

MR. FLEISCHER: Nothing that I'm aware of that's any different from what you've been told before, no.

Q What is the President's --

Q Ari, I was just going to ask about North Korea. Secretary Powell is going to the ASEAN nations at the moment, talking to them. Is he talking to them about setting up an interdiction line around North Korea to stop the weapons flow? And, also, do you have any reaction to the North Korean statement that any such blockade or interdiction effort would lead to an outbreak of hostilities?

MR. FLEISCHER: On the first question, if you recall, the President in his speech in Krakow announced an interdiction effort to join internationally with nations to help enforce anti-proliferation measures so that the world can, indeed, join in fighting proliferators like North Korea.

There was a very successful meeting in Spain last week with a number of nations -- a large number of nations, including France -- to focus on how this interdiction effort can be set up to fight proliferation. And Secretary Powell is continuing to build on that momentum. It's an important initiative, a serious endeavor. And it shows, indeed, that the world does want to come together to take meaningful actions to fight proliferation. Obviously, the existing regimes need strengthening because of threats from nations like North Korea. And this is part of that.

Q Would it be accurate to say that he wants the ASEAN nations now to join the 11 that agreed in Madrid?

MR. FLEISCHER: Certainly, there's no question that the Secretary of State is going to -- per the President's instructions -- reach out to more nations. The broader the group, the more the number of nations with capabilities, the better.

Q Is North Korea's interpretation that this is a blockade accurate? And do you have any reaction to their other hostile comments?

MR. FLEISCHER: No. This is seen for what it is, an effort to enforce proliferation rules so that the world can be safe from the threat of proliferation. The world -- one of the great lessons of what has taken place in Iraq is to make certain that the world joins together to fight proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. And this is something the President cares very deeply about. It's an important part of providing for the security of America's future, as well as the future of other nations.

And it's heartening to see the number of nations that have come together. Even nations that disagreed with us about Iraq are joining in this initiative. It's a good sign.

Q Is North Korea the main target of this --

MR. FLEISCHER: Certainly, North Korea's activities suggest that it's been -- suggest they indicate directly that they've been involved in proliferation. And it's important to fight proliferation.

Q But what about North Korea's remark that this --

MR. FLEISCHER: North Korea has a history of making inflammatory statements. And this fits in with their history of -- recognizes uniquely rhetorical flourishes that North Korea engages in on a very regular basis.

Q Ari, the Medicare bill appears headed for overwhelming passage in the Senate on a relatively brisk pace. Why does the President feel the need for a meeting today?

MR. FLEISCHER: This is part of how the President leads. The President very often on major issues will welcome bipartisan groups to the White House to talk to them about the legislation. And no one should take for granted that this is a done deal, that seniors are going to get prescription drugs and that Medicare will pass. It requires ongoing work from the President, from the White House to work with the Congress in a bipartisan way. And the President is committed to doing that.

If this happens, this will be a remarkable and significant accomplishment of a bipartisan nature to provide a modernized benefit to senior citizens as part of the Medicare program, and a modern Medicare program. And the history of our country is major initiatives like this require a constant dialogue between the White House and the Congress.

Q Is he going to seek any changes at all? I mean, what are they going to talk about?

MR. FLEISCHER: There are umpteen moving pieces in the Medicare bill, a bill of this size. They get into formulas. They get into all kinds of different complicated reimbursement rates, figures for adjustables, co-pays, deductibles -- I said "adjustables" -- deductibles, co-pays, a host of the intricate parts that make up the Medicare program. And both the Senate and the House have differing versions. The President has stayed very close on top of this. He's regularly briefed on what the substance of the legislation is as it moved through committee, as it approaches the floor, et cetera.

Q But is he going to suggest changes today? I mean, is he going to suggest some of his own ideas today?

MR. FLEISCHER: What the President is going to urge on members of Congress is that they provide a prescription drugs to seniors as part of a modernized Medicare that has as much market influence to help shape competition and innovation as possible. The President wants to make certain that the system is modernized in a way that provides choices and options for seniors.

Q Ari, is the White House pointblank rejecting the suggestion from Senator Daschle to consult on any Supreme Court nominations the President might make? Is that just not going to work?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, Judge Gonzales wrote back to Senator Daschle and others who have come up with a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process. MR. FLEISCHER: No, the Judge's letter speaks for itself, and there's not even a vacancy.

Q Can we get a copy of that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Yes.

Q Here's the core of the question, doesn't the President have an interest if a vacancy ever opens up at any point in the future, in putting together a nominee that would not result in a divisive --

MR. FLEISCHER: I think that unless and until there is a vacancy, this is idle chit-chat, and I'd just leave it at chit-chat.

Q What is still unclear is -- I'd like to see Gonzales' letter, obviously, but you're characterizing it -- is he rejecting what Daschle suggested, or is he saying, fine, we're happy to do that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Described just as I said, that the Chief Counsel is always happy to meet with a senator or talk about any of the senator's thoughts or ideas.

Q But his letter says the President is not willing to meet to discuss that --

MR. FLEISCHER: No, the Chief Counsel is.

Q Recognizing that you aren't yet ready to give us a readout on the meeting with congressional leaders today -- I understand a lot of it dealt with the President's assessment of the situation in the Middle East -- can you give us a sense of what he feels that is now, and when he expects the Israelis and Palestinians to begin implementing the promises they made in Aqaba?

MR. FLEISCHER: I think the way the President views where matters stand now, the President remains, long-term, hopeful and optimistic; and short-term, he remains determined to keep the parties working together -- principally, the Israelis and the Palestinian Authority -- focused on the steps they need to take to implement the road map. He remains determined to help the Palestinian Authority to fight terror, to work with Arab nations in the region so they can help the Palestinian Authority to fight terror. And that's where much of his effort is focused now, and much of the administration's efforts, Secretary Powell and Dr. Rice are focused now.

The President, when he looks at what's happening in the Middle East, the first place he looks is at terror, because terror remains the biggest threat to implementation of the road map.

Q Ari, going back to the question about the continued shooting in Iraq, who does the administration think is directing these forces that are still killing Americans? And what, if any, are the concerns about foreign influence? There have been a number of reports that people are still streaming into Iraq from Syria and from Jordan to join up with the people who are shooting at the Americans.

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, the assessment of the Department of Defense is that it appears to be a loose-knit group of loyalists, of Baath Party loyalists, people who are still dedicated to Saddam Hussein, who have spent their lives killing, who haven't changed their stripes. They have seen no evidence that there is any one organizational point for these disparate groups, other than the fact they all emerged out of the same horrendous, dictatorial, murderous structure that they continue to abide by today.

Q And foreign involvement?

MR. FLEISCHER: Foreign involvement, we continue to have concerns about Iran and their influence in Iraq. I cannot say -- that's a broad statement, Peter. I cannot say that there is a link between anything that you've seen involved in the shootings and Iran, or not. It is a broad statement about Iran still seeking to influence inside Iraq; influence that we do believe ultimately will not be successful because of the Iraqi people's determination, particularly Shia Iraqis, to determine their own future, and the long hostility between Iranian Shias and Iraqi Shias.

Q And what about the angle of people coming in from Jordan and Syria?

MR. FLEISCHER: I don't have anything new on that.

Q Ari, during the war you occasionally gave us a characterization of how the President was conducting himself, given the huge responsibilities of launching a war. And then we saw him on the Abraham Lincoln and he clearly looked pretty pumped up on the deck of the Abraham Lincoln. I wonder now whether you could tell us a little about how the President is feeling as he sees this steady stream of American casualties, the reports of lawlessness on the ground in Iraq.

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, keep in mind, it's a good occasion to go back to his speech on the Abraham Lincoln, because this is something that the President did warn the American people was an ongoing risk, because we have America's military still in harm's way. And the President is determined to see this through so that Iraq can be rebuilt with a future that focuses on opportunity and freedom for the Iraqi people, and to do so in a way that the American military will stay as long as is necessary and not a day longer. That's what the President said then. That's still is his focus today.

Terry, last one.

Q Is the President satisfied with the pace of reconstruction, for provision of services, the establishment of administrative responsibility? Is he satisfied with what's happening --

MR. FLEISCHER: He is. As you know, the President met with Ambassador Bremer when he was there, and the President is very pleased with Ambassador Bremer's actions and leadership in a very difficult position. And the President also keeps in mind that it wasn't so long ago that this was a active, major armed conflict, and it will, indeed, take time. And this President is determined to see that through because that's what he promised the American people.

And so his timetable is a timetable of whatever time is going to be required to do this well and to do it right, so a free Iraq can emerge, cognizant of the fact that there remain people who are loyal to Saddam Hussein, who learned how to kill under Saddam Hussein, and that's why they shoot now at Americans. And that's -- these are the same people who had tortured the Iraqis and their Baath loyalists. And they are a problem.

Q Will see Jay Garner now that Garner is back in town?

MR. FLEISCHER: I would not rule that out. Helen, do you have one?

Q How do you like the fact that Bremer is called, I think it's The New York Times, the "viceroy"? And can you conceive that some Iraqis might be fighting against occupation, per se, and not just, you know, Saddam Hussein? They may love their country to fight for it's --

MR. FLEISCHER: One, on his title. Who in The New York Times called him "viceroy"? Was it one of those editorial writers, because I know the reporters wouldn't do that.

Q We use "emperor" for things like that. (Laughter.)

Q Maybe it's in The Post.

MR. FLEISCHER: No, The Post used "Grand Poobah." (Laughter.)

Q Bremer was called a "viceroy."

MR. FLEISCHER: The President calls him "Ambassador." I'll see you at the briefing.

From this morning on the Sup Court question:

Q Ari, is the White House pointblank rejecting the suggestion from Senator Daschle to consult on any Supreme Court nominations the President might make? Is that just not going to work?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, Judge Gonzales wrote back to Senator Daschle and others who have come up with a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process. And I've said he's always happy to meet and talk with these individual Senators, and of course, he will if they want to do that. But the Constitution is clear; the Constitution will be followed; we will always welcome thoughts that, certainly, no one wants to suggest that the Constitution be altered.

Q But, Ari, the Constitution doesn't say that the President needs to consult on Medicare, it just says that he should sign a bill. I mean, why is it important to consult on issues like that and not other issues that could be credibly divisive, to avoid that?

MR. FLEISCHER: As I indicated, the Judge has written a letter and says he's always happy to meet and always happy to talk. But there's a difference between the naming of an individual and a piece of legislation that has a hundred moving parts to it.

Q What if Gonzales is the nominee?

MR. FLEISCHER: I'm just not -- nice try, very clever, good direct front door effort to speculate on a position that's not even open. (Laughter.)

MR. FLEISCHER: Judge Gonzales?

Q Yes, you said -- you said that Judge Gonzales would meet with the senators. Will the President meet with the senators? The President, as Donna points out, frequently will meet on, as you say, complex issues and simple ones. He has an interest here, doesn't he?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, the Judge's letter speaks for itself, and there's not even a vacancy.

Q Can we get a copy of that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Yes.

The James S. Brady Briefing Room

9:35 A.M. EDT

MR. FLEISCHER: Good morning. I suppose you're wondering why I've asked you here. I have a report for you on the President's day. The President had his breakfast meeting with the Speaker of the House, Majority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House and Senate, along with Leader DeLay.

He went from there immediately to an intelligence briefing, then an FBI briefing, and then an NSC meeting. I have not had an opportunity to talk to the President yet about the congressional breakfast, so I don't have anything for you on it -- I anticipate I will in time for the briefing.

The President at 10:40 a.m. this morning in the Roosevelt Room, with stills at the top, will have a roundtable on prison fellowship ministries. At this meeting, the President will talk about the effectiveness of faith-based programs in reducing recidivism through in-prison and after-care mentoring programs. That will be stills at the top.

At noon, the President will have lunch with the Vice President, his weekly lunch. And at 2:20 p.m. in the Cabinet Room with the pool at the top, the President will welcome to the White House a bipartisan group of senators to talk about the importance of finishing the job and getting prescription drugs to America's seniors as part of the modernized, strengthened Medicare plan.

And then this evening, weather permitting, there will be the congressional picnic out on the South Lawn.

Q When will the call be made?

MR. FLEISCHER: Do you know when the call will be made, Reed? Yes, I think we're trying to work on that now. I don't know what the alternative plan is in case it's -- tomorrow night?

MR. DICKENS: Tomorrow night, same time.

MR. FLEISCHER: Okay. Same time tomorrow.

Q Can we get a little more volume on the -- thank you.

MR. FLEISCHER: And, let's see if I have anything else for you today. I realize it's relatively quiet right now. And that's all I have for the day.

Q In Iraq, another American soldier was killed today, American soldiers killed two Iraqis separately. Obviously, violence continuing. I think the figure is some 50 American soldiers have died since the President declared the war over. Did he say too soon that major fighting was done? The situation seems --

MR. FLEISCHER: No, I was asked this yesterday, and the answer is the same that the President said major combat is over. Major combat is over. But the President said that danger remains. There continue to be elements that support Saddam Hussein, there continue to be loyalists to the Baath Party who want to engage in violence. These are violent people. They governed Iraq with violence. They governed Iraq with torture. They're continuing what they used to do. And the purpose of America's presence there is to help bring stability to Iraq as it's reconstructed.

Q Is there some need to perhaps add some troops again and kind of bulk up what we're doing there to prevent this kind of --

MR. FLEISCHER: I think the Defense Department always reviews the numbers, the adequacy of operation. But I think it's safe to say whether the number is "X" or the number is "Y," there are still elements who will shoot at America's military. And that's why the military is there with the amount of force they've deemed appropriate to help bring more stability to the country.

Q Is there a review going on to add back to the numbers?

MR. FLEISCHER: Nothing that I'm aware of that's any different from what you've been told before, no.

Q What is the President's --

Q Ari, I was just going to ask about North Korea. Secretary Powell is going to the ASEAN nations at the moment, talking to them. Is he talking to them about setting up an interdiction line around North Korea to stop the weapons flow? And, also, do you have any reaction to the North Korean statement that any such blockade or interdiction effort would lead to an outbreak of hostilities?

MR. FLEISCHER: On the first question, if you recall, the President in his speech in Krakow announced an interdiction effort to join internationally with nations to help enforce anti-proliferation measures so that the world can, indeed, join in fighting proliferators like North Korea.

There was a very successful meeting in Spain last week with a number of nations -- a large number of nations, including France -- to focus on how this interdiction effort can be set up to fight proliferation. And Secretary Powell is continuing to build on that momentum. It's an important initiative, a serious endeavor. And it shows, indeed, that the world does want to come together to take meaningful actions to fight proliferation. Obviously, the existing regimes need strengthening because of threats from nations like North Korea. And this is part of that.

Q Would it be accurate to say that he wants the ASEAN nations now to join the 11 that agreed in Madrid?

MR. FLEISCHER: Certainly, there's no question that the Secretary of State is going to -- per the President's instructions -- reach out to more nations. The broader the group, the more the number of nations with capabilities, the better.

Q Is North Korea's interpretation that this is a blockade accurate? And do you have any reaction to their other hostile comments?

MR. FLEISCHER: No. This is seen for what it is, an effort to enforce proliferation rules so that the world can be safe from the threat of proliferation. The world -- one of the great lessons of what has taken place in Iraq is to make certain that the world joins together to fight proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. And this is something the President cares very deeply about. It's an important part of providing for the security of America's future, as well as the future of other nations.

And it's heartening to see the number of nations that have come together. Even nations that disagreed with us about Iraq are joining in this initiative. It's a good sign.

Q Is North Korea the main target of this --

MR. FLEISCHER: Certainly, North Korea's activities suggest that it's been -- suggest they indicate directly that they've been involved in proliferation. And it's important to fight proliferation.

Q But what about North Korea's remark that this --

MR. FLEISCHER: North Korea has a history of making inflammatory statements. And this fits in with their history of -- recognizes uniquely rhetorical flourishes that North Korea engages in on a very regular basis.

Q Ari, the Medicare bill appears headed for overwhelming passage in the Senate on a relatively brisk pace. Why does the President feel the need for a meeting today?

MR. FLEISCHER: This is part of how the President leads. The President very often on major issues will welcome bipartisan groups to the White House to talk to them about the legislation. And no one should take for granted that this is a done deal, that seniors are going to get prescription drugs and that Medicare will pass. It requires ongoing work from the President, from the White House to work with the Congress in a bipartisan way. And the President is committed to doing that.

If this happens, this will be a remarkable and significant accomplishment of a bipartisan nature to provide a modernized benefit to senior citizens as part of the Medicare program, and a modern Medicare program. And the history of our country is major initiatives like this require a constant dialogue between the White House and the Congress.

Q Is he going to seek any changes at all? I mean, what are they going to talk about?

MR. FLEISCHER: There are umpteen moving pieces in the Medicare bill, a bill of this size. They get into formulas. They get into all kinds of different complicated reimbursement rates, figures for adjustables, co-pays, deductibles -- I said "adjustables" -- deductibles, co-pays, a host of the intricate parts that make up the Medicare program. And both the Senate and the House have differing versions. The President has stayed very close on top of this. He's regularly briefed on what the substance of the legislation is as it moved through committee, as it approaches the floor, et cetera.

Q But is he going to suggest changes today? I mean, is he going to suggest some of his own ideas today?

MR. FLEISCHER: What the President is going to urge on members of Congress is that they provide a prescription drugs to seniors as part of a modernized Medicare that has as much market influence to help shape competition and innovation as possible. The President wants to make certain that the system is modernized in a way that provides choices and options for seniors.

Q Ari, is the White House pointblank rejecting the suggestion from Senator Daschle to consult on any Supreme Court nominations the President might make? Is that just not going to work?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, Judge Gonzales wrote back to Senator Daschle and others who have come up with a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process. MR. FLEISCHER: No, the Judge's letter speaks for itself, and there's not even a vacancy.

Q Can we get a copy of that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Yes.

Q Here's the core of the question, doesn't the President have an interest if a vacancy ever opens up at any point in the future, in putting together a nominee that would not result in a divisive --

MR. FLEISCHER: I think that unless and until there is a vacancy, this is idle chit-chat, and I'd just leave it at chit-chat.

Q What is still unclear is -- I'd like to see Gonzales' letter, obviously, but you're characterizing it -- is he rejecting what Daschle suggested, or is he saying, fine, we're happy to do that?

MR. FLEISCHER: Described just as I said, that the Chief Counsel is always happy to meet with a senator or talk about any of the senator's thoughts or ideas.

Subject: short summary

Brett:

You did a very good and useful ethics summary yesterday at Strategery. Thanks.

On the other matter we discussed, re: a (very) short summary of our accomplishments in the area of the judiciary, here's the context: I'm looking to put together highlights of what the President has achieved in both foreign/defense and domestic policy. I'm not doing a "soup to nuts" accomplishment list; rather, I want to highlight the things that are most remarkable. I think it would be a useful thing to have. With that in mind, I'm wondering if you could send along to me a sentence or two that captures the President's main judiciary achievements.

The key here is brevity and being concise. Here's the kind of thing I'm looking for. In foreign/defense policy we can say that in the past 20 months the US waged and won two of the most successful and human wars in the history of man -- and more than 50 million Muslims have been liberated from two of the most brutal regimes ever seen. Almost half of the leadership of al-Qaeda has been captured or killed -- and last year terror attacks worldwide were at their lowest level in thirty years. In March 2002 the President called for a new compact for global development and announced the Millennium Challenge Account, which proposed a 50 percent increase in America's core development assistance over three years. The President signed legislation launching an emergency effort that will provide $15 billion over the next five years to fight AIDS abroad -- the largest single up-front commitment in history for an international public health initiative involved a specific disease. In domestic policy, the President created a new Dept. of Homeland Security, the most massive reorganization of the federal government since Truman signed the National Security Act. The President signed the most far-reaching reform of American business practices since the time of FDR (The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002); this law gives the federal government an array of tools to aggressively pursue corporate corruption and crime. The No Child Left Behind Act is one of the most far-reaching domestic reforms in modern times. The President's key insight -- combining national standards, testing, and accountability with local control and a significant new commitment of resources -- is w/o precedent. And so forth and so on.

Can you give me the one-two sentence equivalent for the judiciary (using a crisp sentence from one of the President's speeches would be ideal)? Can we say the President is reshaping the judiciary? If so, in what ways? If you can send along something to me, I'd be grateful.

Thanks so much.

Pete

Art,

Here is a statement of the law that can be disseminated to the commissioned corps.

A criminal statute, 18 U.S.C. 603, prohibits any officer or employee of the United States from giving a political contribution to that individual's "employer or employing authority." The Criminal Division and the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice have interpreted section 603 as prohibiting executive branch officers and employees from contributing to the reelection campaign of an incumbent President. Although the Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1993 made this prohibition inapplicable to most executive branch civil servants (unless the conduct is prohibited specifically by the Hatch Act), the exception does not apply to a "member of the uniformed services." 18 U.S.C. 603(c); 5 U.S.C. 7322(1). Accordingly, members of the Public Health Service Commissioned Corps cannot make a political contribution to the authorized reelection committee of an incumbent President. (This prohibition does not extend, however, to campaign contributions made to national party organizations.) Commissioned Corps officers are also subject to strict limitations on their political activity that parallel the provisions of the Hatch Act as they existed prior to the 1993 amendments. See 45 C.F.R. Part 73, Subpart F. Commissioned Corps officers may not take an active part in political management or political campaigns. Lists of permitted and prohibited activities are contained respectively in 45 CFR 73.735-602 and 73.735-603.

Let me know if I can further assist.

Ed -- thanks for taking the time to advise me. Two things: (1) please be sure to send me the citations for the rules applying to corps officers and (2) I wonder if it would be wise given the circumstances to send something to every officer in the corps? I consider myself a little more sophisticated than the average officer, and even at that I could have made an error.

Thanks again for the guidance,

Nanette, as I mentioned to you last week it would be helpful to get further guidance on a number of issues relating to employees engaging in political activities, as identified below. We have had to face most of these issues during the past few years and any advice regarding them would be appreciated. Specifically, we would appreciate answers or guidance regarding the following questions.

-- What formula should be used when assessing costs for a Presidential campaign trip? It is our understanding that although a "hypothetical trip" formula is usually used to calculate costs owed to the Government when an event on a mixed official/political trip is for a Presidential campaign, this formula is not used when the campaign is not accepting Federal matching funds. In such cases, the "hard line" formula is used. It would be helpful to receive guidance with regard to trips involving events relating to the President's re-election campaign and what events are to be considered Presidential campaign trips.
-- When does a short "drop-by" by a Presidential appointee at an event sufficient participation to trigger political activity rules regarding travel reimbursement requirements and other rules applicable to engaging in political activities? -- Are there any restrictions or guidance on the grant of leave without pay (LWOP) to employees (particularly noncareer employees) when the time will be used to participate in political events?
-- Will there be any rules regarding charging a campaign for travel costs for official events taking place in states holding a primary during the campaign season (or in key electoral states during the Presidential election campaign season)?
-- Is the White House establishing a general policy against the use of official vehicles for political events, even if paid for in advance?
The White House memorandum specifically allows for the use of cars for political events only by the President and Vice President. Commerce policy allows the use of Government cars for political events by the Secretary (but not others). Should the White House policy be read as discouraging vehicle use even by the Secretary (except, of course, when use of an official vehicle for personal purposes is otherwise authorized, such as for security reasons)?
-- Are employees (particularly Presidential appointees) still required to obtain clearance from the White House before agreeing to participate in a political fund-raiser? If so, how and to whom do you want these clearance requests submitted? It seems to us that this should not be through a legal office but directly from the PAS (or the PAS's staff) to the White House office that is coordinating such events. We also question whether it would be appropriate to require clearance from anyone other than Presidential appointees, since such procedures might create an appearance of helping to coordinate political activities and might infringe on employees' individual rights.

-- Are Presidential appointees still barred from accepting offers of travel on corporate (and union) aircraft, even for political trips? Any guidance the White House could provide on privately-owned aircraft would be helpful.

Ed -- thanks for taking the time to advise me. Two things: (1) please be sure to send me the citations for the rules applying to corps officers and (2) I wonder if it would be wise given the circumstances to send something to every officer in the corps? I consider myself a little more sophisticated than the average officer, and even at that I could have made an error.

Thanks again for the guidance, they are still wrestling with this head and blurb. It's better than it was, but I think they will add something shortly to suggest that the issue is direct talks between Bush and senators.

To further make the citation linkage, 5 USC 2101(3) defines "uniformed services" to mean the armed forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, and the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration." As noted earlier, 18 USC 603(c) relieves only those employees defined in 5 USC 7322(1) from the substantive prohibition in 18 USC 603(a). In turn, 5 USC 7322(1) specifically says that members of the uniformed services are not employees for purposes of that section. This circumstance leaves commissioned corps officers fully subject to the existing prohibitions of 18 USC 603(a), which have been interpreted by DOJ to bar political contributions to the reelection campaign of an incumbent President. See Federal Prosecution of Election Offenses, U.S. Department of Justice, Criminal Division, Public Integrity Section (6th ed. 1995).

Here are two entries, one from HowAppealing and one from Southern Appeal:

"Bush to Choose Ex-Starr Aide; Kavanaugh to Be Nominee For Appeals Court Post": Tomorrow's edition of The Washington Post will contain this report concerning another D.C. Circuit nominee in the works, and this news is sure to get people talking. (Thanks to the author of "Southern Appeal" for the heads-up via email.) posted at 11:22 PM by Howard Bashman

President Bush will nominate Brett Kavanaugh to the D.C. Circuit: And the hits just keep on coming from President Bush's White House Counsel's Office. The Washington Post revealed tonight that Bush "plans to nominate White House lawyer Brett M. Kavanaugh, an author of independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr's report on President Bill Clinton, for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit." I've had the pleasure of speaking with Brett on a few occasions, and I can tell you without reservation that he is off the charts brilliant. He will make a fine judge.

By Mike Allen
Washington Post Staff Writer
President Bush plans to nominate White House lawyer Brett M. Kavanaugh, an author of independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr???s report on President Bill Clinton, for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Republican sources said yesterday.
The disclosure came as Bush issued a curt rejection to Democratic senators who had offered to alleviate a fight over a future Supreme Court vacancy by working with him to find a nominee both sides could accept. Kavanaugh???s nomination would suggest Bush is spoiling for a fight with Senate Democrats while the administration???s selection of judges is already a raw issue between the parties. The D.C. Circuit court is considered the second most powerful in the land. Kavanaugh, 38, was involved in many of the Clinton administration???s legal controversies, and he has played a key role in choosing Bush???s judicial nominees.
Kavanaugh is undergoing an FBI background check in preparation for his nomination, which will not be announced immediately. He was an appellate expert in Starr???s office from 1994 to 1998, and worked on the investigation of Monica S. Lewinsky. He represented Starr in efforts to obtain notes from Hillary Rodham Clinton, now a senator, relating to the suicide of deputy White House counsel Vincent Foster. Kavanaugh???s contribution to the Starr report was the section that outlined possible legal grounds for impeachment.
Kavanaugh was a partner with Kirkland & Ellis before becoming an associate White House counsel in January 2001. He has undergraduate and law degrees from Yale, and was a clerk for Justice Anthony M. Kennedy.
The D.C. Circuit court has openings on its 11th and 12th seats, and Republicans blocked Clinton from filling at least one of them by arguing that additional judges were not needed.
Bush???s rebuff of the overture by Senate Democrats, a departure from his frequent contention that he is eager to work with Congress, is part of intense positioning by both parties for the possibility that a Supreme Court justice will retire at the end of this term. Senate Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) wrote to Bush on Tuesday to recommend that the president convene a meeting of Senate leaders ???to begin a bipartisan process of consultation.???
White House press secretary Ari Fleischer called the idea ???a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process,??? and said Bush plans no such meeting. The Constitution gives the president sole power to nominate justices, and then the Senate decides whether to confirm them. ???The Constitution is clear, the Constitution will be followed,??? Fleischer said. ???We always welcome thoughts, but certainly no one wants to suggest that the Constitution be altered.???
Fleischer said White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales ???is always

to meet and talk with these individual senators.??? A twist is that Gonzales, a former justice of the Texas Supreme Court, is one of Bush???s most obvious potential nominees.
Gonzales wrote to Daschle yesterday that in case of a vacancy, the Senate ???will have an opportunity to assess the president???s nominee and exercise its constitutional responsibility.??? He has sent similar letters to other Senate Democrats.
The selection of judges, from federal district courts to the Supreme Court, is always a bitterly contested issue for the most ideologically committed wings of both parties. It is even more so now because of the GOP???s narrow hold on the Senate, and because of rumors about the possible retirement of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day
O???Connor, 73???or even both.
A group called Faith2Action is linking with some of the nation???s best-known conservative organizations for Project Rosebud, which plans to deliver thousands of roses to the White House next week in support of an antiabortion nominee for any Supreme Court vacancy.
Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), a Judiciary Committee member, wrote Bush last week to suggest potential consensus nominees. Schumer suggested five moderate Republicans, including Sen. Arlen Specter (Pa.).
Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, had first suggested the bipartisan summit in a separate letter to Bush last week. Leahy said that Democrats were ???ready to work with you to help select a nominee or nominees to the Supreme Court behind which all Americans, and all senators, can unite.???
Bradford A. Berenson, a former associate White House counsel for Bush, called the letters a political stunt to help Democrats ???blame the president for the ugly confirmation fight it appears they already have planned.???
Democrats, who contend they are not proposing anything radical, are circulating pages from a book by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) in which he takes credit for suggesting to Clinton the nomination of two sitting justices, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G.
Breyer.
Hatch wrote last year in his memoir, ???Square Peg,??? that he had asked
Clinton whether he had considered Breyer or Ginsburg. ???President Clinton indicated he had heard Breyer???s name but had not thought about Judge Ginsburg,??? Hatch recounted.
Hatch said Tuesday on C-SPAN that Democrats were trying to preempt a conservative nominee. ???Even though President Clinton did consult with me as chairman of the committee, he made the final decisions,??? Hatch said.
Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) said the best way for Bush to avoid a major fight would be to consult with the Senate and send up nominees ???without ideological chips on their shoulders.??? ???But if this president wants a battle,??? Kennedy said, ???he???ll get it.???

To further make the citation linkage, 5 USC 2101(3) defines "uniformed services" to mean the armed forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, and the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration." As noted earlier, 18 USC 603(c) relieves only those employees defined in 5 USC 7322(1) from the substantive prohibition in 18 USC 603(a). In turn, 5 USC 7322(1) specifically says that members of the uniformed services are not employees for purposes of that section. This circumstance leaves commissioned corps officers fully subject to the existing prohibitions of 18 USC 603(a), which have been interpreted by DOJ to bar political contributions to the reelection campaign of an incumbent President. See Federal Prosecution of Election Offenses, U.S. Department of Justice, Criminal Division, Public Integrity Section (6th ed. 1995).

The Interior Department's decision to help restore the Old North Church in Boston recognizes that national landmarks that need government assistance aren't always secular. The 280-year-old church is one of the best-known historic sites of the Revolutionary War era. Lanterns were hung in its belfry one night in April 1775 to warn Patriots that the British were coming, thereby sending Paul Revere on his famous midnight ride.

The $317,000 grant represents a shift in policy for Interior, which hasn't contributed in recent years to restorations of churches with active congregations. That policy changed under the current administration, and the shift has been decried by a Washington-based group known as Americans United for Separation of Church and State. But the grant isn't being used to help establish a government religion, it's being used to help preserve a national architectural and historical treasure.

The grant will be used to restore and repair windows in the church, which not only is an active Episcopal church but a major tourist site on Boston's Freedom Trail. Federal funds are being provided the church's foundation through Interior's Save America's Treasures Historic Preservation Program.

Interior's policy change is timely considering that six churches are listed among the nation's most endangered historic buildings, recently cited by the National Trust for Historic Preservation. The list includes Mount Bethel Baptist Church in Washington, D.C., described by The Associated Press as a staging point for the 1963 March on Washington; Acts of the Apostles Church in Philadelphia; Beth Hamedrash Hagodol Synagogue on New York City's Lower East Side; St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church in Denver; Quinn Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago; and First United Methodist Church in Seattle.

Many urban churches are in trouble because dwindling urban populations have resulted in smaller congregations and fewer contributions, according to the AP report. The Old North Church, for example, has a congregation of 150. The half million annual visitors to the church make donations that help pay for operating expenses and maintenance, the Rev. Stephen T. Ayres, church vicar, tells us.

The shift in Interior policy, enunciated in the Old North Church grant, could mean another source of aid for other historic churches in need of restoration.

Federal preservation funds are scarce, and should be used for important buildings with a demonstrable financial need. But churches that are open to all and have played a major role in America's history shouldn't be excluded from consideration. The use of federal funds is particularly appropriate for a national landmark as significant as the Old North Church.

By Howard Mintz
Mercury News

Just seven years ago, an influential state judicial screening group didn't consider Janice Rogers Brown qualified to be on the California Supreme Court. Now, there is a real possibility Brown could vault from the highest court in the state to become the first black woman ever to serve on the highest court in the land.

As the U.S. Supreme Court winds down its latest term this month amid rampant speculation that at least one justice is preparing to retire, Brown, a 54-year-old conservative and daughter of an Alabama sharecropper, is one of a small number of potential Supreme Court nominees who have already been vetted by the White House.

Brown would fit the template of a judge that President Bush has favored in stocking the nation's federal bench. A staunch conservative on everything from affirmative action to the death penalty, she is an ideological match with the Bush administration and a political plus as a black woman who has risen from a childhood in the segregated South to the pinnacle of her profession.

``I think she is well-qualified for appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court,'' said State Supreme Court Justice Marvin Baxter, who is usually aligned with Brown's conservative positions.

But Brown, whose prickly prose has touched on hot-button issues ranging from abortion to affirmative action, already has attracted close scrutiny from civil rights groups and others girding for a confirmation fight. In fact, she's just one of six possible Supreme Court nominees whose records have been scoured by Alliance for Justice, the group that ordinarily leads political opposition to Bush's judicial picks.

Critics such as San Francisco's Eva Paterson, one of the nation's leading civil rights lawyers, have labeled Brown ``another Clarence Thomas,'' in large part because of the way she came down in an affirmative action case out of San Jose three years ago.

``If she's the president's choice, it's going to be a huge battle,'' observes Erwin Chemerinsky, a professor at the University of Southern California law school.

The attention on Brown has ramped up in recent months because of the strong belief in legal circles that the Supreme Court is about to end its longest stretch without turnover in 180 years. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, are viewed as likely to retire to give a Republican president a chance to replace them well before the next election.

How many retiring?

If Rehnquist retires, most predict, the White House might name the first Latino in the court's history, with the leading candidate being White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales. But most legal experts and leading Republicans agree that Brown leaps to the front of the list if both Rehnquist and O'Connor step down.

``It would be incredibly difficult for Democrats to go against a woman like Janice Brown,'' said a top California Republican close to the judicial selection process. ``She has a very compelling personal story.''

Consideration for the U.S. Supreme Court is a remarkable climb for Brown, who was rated not qualified for the California Supreme Court by a state bar group when former Gov. Pete Wilson nominated her in 1996. The bar group, which touched off a controversy over its rating, concluded that Brown, as an appeals court justice, too often injected her personal views into court cases.

Legal experts no longer question Brown's qualifications for the job, although the bar's complaint that she used her legal opinions as a personal bully pulpit remains one of the chief criticisms against her as a Supreme Court justice.

Brown declined to be interviewed for this story, but her background has been well documented. She grew up in rural Alabama in the 1950s, and eventually her family moved to California, where she attended law school at UCLA. A liberal in college, she became a conservative as a lawyer, working in the California Attorney General's Office and later rising to become Wilson's legal affairs secretary.

Wilson named Brown to a Sacramento state appeals court in 1994 and elevated her to the state Supreme Court two years later. She quickly found herself embroiled in the state's most controversial court case at the time, a 1997 ruling in which the justices, by a 4-3 vote, struck down California's law requiring minors to obtain parental consent to get an abortion.

In dissent, Brown chastised her colleagues: ``This case is an excellent example of the folly of courts in their role of philosopher kings.''

Since that decision, Brown, who is reserved in person and typically the lowest-key justice in questioning lawyers, has cranked up the volume in her writing. Perhaps her signature case -- and one that may attract the most attention if she is nominated -- came in 2000, when she wrote the majority opinion invalidating San Jose's minority contracting program.

The ruling was the first to apply Proposition 209's anti-affirmative action provisions in the state. And while the court's conclusion in the case came as no surprise, Brown's writings did. She filled her decision with a scathing denunciation of past affirmative action decisions and their place in history, prompting an unusual rebuke from Chief Justice Ronald George, who called it ``unnecessary and inappropriate.''

``On the U.S. Supreme Court, they call them nine scorpions in a bottle,'' said Gerald Uelmen, a Santa Clara University law professor and Supreme Court expert. ``She'd fit right in the scorpion mode.''

Criticism called unfair

Brown's supporters say her decisions and position in the Proposition 209 case have been unfairly criticized. Ward Connerly, who knows Brown well and was the chief sponsor of Proposition 209, said she was criticized for the ruling because she is a ``quote, unquote, black conservative.''

``She knows who she is,'' Connerly said. ``She has a very clear compass and she follows it.''

Brown, who still lives in Sacramento and often limits her trips to the Supreme Court's headquarters in San Francisco to once or twice a week, is regarded as a lone wolf on the court.

According to knowledgeable state Supreme Court insiders, Brown's approach even rankles some of her colleagues, notably George, the chief justice, who has traded barbs with her in numerous court opinions.

Praise for scholarship

But despite the fiery rhetoric, Brown has earned plaudits for her legal scholarship and a libertarian streak that can flash when she believes government is going too far.

And her friends say that she is well-equipped to weather a bruising Senate confirmation battle.

To Doug Kmiec, a Brown friend, leading conservative scholar and dean of Catholic University's law school, Brown looks like somebody the White House would like.

In a commencement speech a few weeks ago at Catholic University, for Kmiec's law school, Brown showed signs of developing her public persona. Unlike some of her colleagues, Brown seldom speaks in public, but agreed to address Catholic University. There, she stressed the importance of law in a speech laced with religious references and patriotism.

Invoking Sept. 11, Brown warned the lawyers-to-be that in today's climate, ``nothing less than Western civilization and the rule of law are at stake.''

DRAFT

Dear Senator Leahy:

Thank you for meeting with me yesterday and also for your letter of today. Your letter raises concerns about certain media reports yesterday, and I wanted to respond promptly.

First, there is no current vacancy on the Supreme Court, of course, and we are not aware of plans by any Justice to retire. Therefore, it would be quite premature for the President to engage Senators to discuss particular nominees at this point. Contrary to news reports, moreover, Ari Fleischer never said who, as a matter of process, President Bush would consult or receive advice from with respect to any Supreme Court vacancy, other than that he would follow the Constitution.

Second, in response to letters written by you and two of your colleagues, I have indicated my willingness to meet with Senators to discuss the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy in order to obtain your thoughts. I did so with you yesterday and I remain willing to do so with other Senators, as I indicated to Senator Daschle and Senator Schumer.

In short, I think any fair evaluation of the White House,s approach shows our genuine willingness to meet and listen to hear your thoughts and concerns, as well as those of your colleagues. I fully appreciate your interest in the Supreme Court process, and I share your desire for a fair and orderly Senate confirmation process and vote in the event of a Supreme Court vacancy during this Presidency.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable Patrick Leahy
United States Senate

Brett,

We're all set for the call at 9:20. I told Brian you would be speaking 3 - 5 minutes. Is that about right?

Is there any paper you will want us to distribute either before or after you speak on the call?

Thanks,

Tevi

The Federal Judiciary: Devout Catholics Need Not Apply
By John Nowacki
CNSNews.com Commentary
June 19, 2003

No religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States. (Article VI of the U.S. Constitution)

Ever wondered what a religious test would look like in 21st century America? It's not that difficult to imagine.

Suppose an attorney holding statewide political office is nominated for a federal appeals court judgeship. He'll have taken positions on various policy issues -- something unavoidable for someone in his position - but will have earned a reputation in his state as someone who fairly and objectively applies the law, whether he agrees with it or not.

Suppose that on the all-important issue of abortion, he had actually instructed his subordinates to follow Supreme Court precedent when enforcing his state's ban on partial-birth abortion, even though he is unabashedly pro-life. And let's say that he is unabashedly pro-life because he is a devout Roman Catholic.

Oh, yes. Let's also say that his critics in the Senate -- for whom abortion is an issue of paramount interest -- say that nothing disqualifies him from service on the bench more than his "deeply held personal views." As one of them would put it, his beliefs are so well known, so deeply held, that we simply can't believe he'll be objective -- even when he says he knows a judge's responsibility is to follow the law and binding precedent.

In other words, because he personally believes in Catholicism's teachings on abortion, he cannot be trusted.

As amazing as it is, that's precisely what is being insinuated about Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor, nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. And that is the point that Democrat after Democrat on the Judiciary Committee argued at his nomination hearing.

Charles Schumer announced that Pryor feels so deeply, so passionately about Roe v. Wade that we can't believe he'll be objective.

Dianne Feinstein told Pryor that while people can stop being advocates when they become judges, he does have very strong views after all.

Ted Kennedy acknowledged that while a number of nominees who take positions he opposes have been confirmed, many of Pryor's positions reflect deeply held views -- on the abortion issue in particular -- that make him just too extreme. One of those other nominees, outspoken and avowedly pro-life legal scholar Michael McConnell, was confirmed by unanimous consent in November.

Patrick Leahy reminded Pryor he'd been criticized because of his personal beliefs and after having heard him point to his record again and again, once more demanded to know how anyone could believe he'd really be fair and impartial.

The Senate does have a responsibility to examine whether a nominee will set his or her personal views aside as a judge. In Pryor's case, the answer is that he clearly will. Many of his colleagues in the state government -- Democrat and Republican, liberal and conservative, black and white - agree that he's a man who will follow the law without favoring any side. And his record as a popular and respected state Attorney General backs him up 100 percent, on abortion or any other issue raised in the context of his nomination.

As if that weren't enough, his sworn testimony before the committee was that he will strive to be a fair, objective judge who follows the law and binding precedent. Even while affirming his personal pro-life beliefs inspired by his Catholic faith, he reminded the committee that he has a moral obligation based on his faith to uphold his oath of office.

None of that, however, was enough for those Senators who think that anyone who sincerely believes as Pryor does is not fit for this particular office or public trust under the United States. Senator Russ Feingold even went out of his way to fault Mr. and Mrs. Pryor just for deciding to postpone a trip to Disney World with their six and four year-old daughters until after Gay Day, responding incredulously when Pryor said the family had made a personal value judgment.

Whether following Supreme Court precedent on abortion and First Amendment cases, protecting Alabama from huge monetary judgments, fulfilling his oath of office by defending state laws, or promoting racial equality, Pryor has demonstrated his commitment to follow the law and seek the fair administration of justice. That willingness to judge each case according to the law and facts is precisely what most Americans expect from those who serve on the federal bench.

He deserves fair consideration and an up-or-down vote in the Senate, and his personal pro-life views that come from his Catholic faith are no excuse to treat his nomination differently. Those Senators on the Judiciary Committee must remember that we are supposed to have left religious tests behind long ago, and that no American courthouse bears a sign stating that devout Catholics need not apply.

Dear Senator Leahy:

Thank you for meeting with me yesterday and also for your letter of today. Your letter raises concerns about certain media reports yesterday, and I wanted to respond promptly.

First, there is no current vacancy on the Supreme Court, of course, and we are not aware of plans by any Justice to retire. Therefore, it would be quite premature for the President to engage Senators to discuss particular nominees at this point. Contrary to news reports, moreover, Ari Fleischer never said who, as a matter of process, President Bush would consult or receive advice from with respect to any Supreme Court vacancy, other than that he would follow the Constitution.

Second, in response to letters written by you and two of your colleagues, I have indicated my willingness to meet with Senators to discuss the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy in order to obtain your thoughts. I did so with you yesterday and I remain willing to do so with other Senators, as I indicated to Senator Daschle and Senator Schumer.

In short, I think any fair evaluation of the White House's approach shows our genuine willingness to meet and listen to hear your thoughts and concerns, as well as those of your colleagues. I fully appreciate your interest in the Supreme Court process, and I share your desire for a fair and orderly Senate confirmation process and vote in the event of a Supreme Court vacancy during this Presidency.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Counsel to the President

Phone calls from the plane

Here is a potential solution. We can have two air phones put on the plane that have a label that says "political phone." Staff can use those phones for any political calls. These phones do not go to the air force one operator. In fact, political staff can call up to these phones directly as well. The calls are about 3.99 per minute - with a minimum of 2-3 minutes. It's just like a phone on a commercial plane.

Then the bill will come to WHCA for these phones only. WHCA will get me the bills and I will give them to Susan. You get the bill monthly, after the fact. The bill would come in itemized, but wouldn't have the callers name identified. You could put a little card next to the phone that gave some sort of policy direction for usage. For example, "please note this is a political phone that costs 3.99 per minute. That's a lot of bumper stickers. Please use sparingly." Or, "this phone may only be used by....."

Please let me know if you would like me to make this happen and put this process in place.

Could you two please let me know your thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set up with WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or how should we handle?

Thanks,

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

DRAFT

June 19, 2003

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes general rules with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party under the Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1993. Please note that this memorandum is simply a summary of the relevant laws and regulations, which are set out or referenced in 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections.

Please ask the General Counsels of your department or agency to issue guidance -- tailored as appropriate to your department or agency -- to ensure that employees of the department or agency are aware of and comply with the laws with respect to political activity, including those contained at 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. (We have provided similar guidance to White House staff.) Employees should be instructed to contact your General Counsel's office if they have any questions about appropriate political activity.

In addition, please note that certain agencies listed in 5 C.F.R. 734.401 -- primarily those with law enforcement or national security responsibilities -- have more stringent rules with respect to political activity. Several agencies traditionally have followed more stringent specific rules and practices as a matter of policy as well. This memorandum does not attempt to summarize the particular rules applicable to employees in those agencies.

Finally, please be aware that today we are issuing two separate memoranda to you regarding specific political travel issues that frequently arise.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

The range of permissible political activities for Executive Branch employees is described in 5 C.F.R. Part 734. To summarize, an employee (other than one employed in an agency described in 5 C.F.R. 734.401) may engage in the following activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
    - being a member of a political party;
    - serving as an officer of a political party;
    - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;

- participating in a political convention or rally; and
- serving as a delegate to a political convention.

- participation in political campaigns, which includes:

  - canvassing for votes;
  - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
  - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
  - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

- participation in elections, which includes:

  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.

- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

  An employee may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, an employee may:

  - make lawful political contributions;
  - attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (but you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with all legal requirements including the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list the official title; and
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not solicit or receive such services from a subordinate employee, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Basic Prohibitions

The basic prohibitions on political activity are summarized at 5 C.F.R. 734 Subpart C.

1. An employee may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, an employee may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. (However, an employee may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not personally solicit contributions.)

2. An employee may not use his or her official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that an employee's official title may not be used on invitations to political fundraisers. If a title is used by others inadvertently and without the employee's knowledge, the employee should contact the relevant General Counsel's office promptly about appropriate steps to take.

3. An employee may not use his or her official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.

On-Duty Activity Rules

Most Executive Branch employees are prohibited from engaging in political activity while on duty or in any government office building. There is an exception to this prohibition for those who are (i) Senate-confirmed officials or paid from an appropriation for the Executive Office of the President and (ii) whose duties continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post. Such employees are permitted by law to engage in otherwise permitted political activity while on duty and in the office -- for example, meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. However, any non-incidental costs incurred as a result of such activity shall be reimbursed. In addition, employees who are not Senate-confirmed or covered EOP employees may engage in official duties that involve assisting a Senate-confirmed or covered EOP official -- for example, with respect to scheduling or typing.

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

Please note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.

Travel Rules

As fully detailed in a separate memorandum being issued to you today regarding travel costs, the appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant costs associated with political travel (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

CONCERNING

OCTOBER 17, 1995

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

I am John Schmidt, Associate Attorney General of the United States. I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you today to present the views of the Department of Justice on the issue now before the Subcommittee: whether to reduce the size of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit from twelve to eleven judges.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the commitment you, Senator Heflin and the other members of this Subcommittee have made to the efficient, sound operation of the federal judiciary. The Administration, in turn, is committed to working with you to address the very difficult issues that lie ahead.

It is the Department's strongly held view that the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit must retain its full complement of twelve judges -- the number of judges authorized by law -- to ensure the proper administration of justice. As the legal representative of most agencies of the U.S. government, the Department of Justice is the most frequent litigant in the D.C. Circuit, and thus we have a keen institutional interest in the efficient operation of this court. In addition, litigants from throughout the nation -- both businesses and private individuals -- rely on the D.C. Circuit to resolve some of our nation's most difficult legal disputes.

The D.C. Circuit's caseload remains by far the most complex and difficult of all the federal circuit courts. Equally important, the Circuit's workload has grown since the time the Judiciary Committee determined -- over ten years ago -- that a twelfth D.C. Circuit judge was necessary. We believe that when Congress decides to adjust the size of the federal judiciary, it should do so comprehensively and prospectively. only in this way can Congress carry out its legitimate authority to determine the size of the judiciary without giving the appearance of altering court size for partisan or political reasons.

1. Complex Caseload

It is undisputed that the D.C. Circuit's docket is by far the most complex and difficult of any of the nation's federal circuit courts. Over the last three years, an average of 1718 cases were filed in the D.C. Circuit per year, 778 (45.3%) of which, on average, were administrative appeals. 1 These administrative appeals are more complicated, often involve multiple parties, lengthy briefs and voluminous records, and take significantly more time to review and decide, than other cases. During this same period, only 5.9% of the appeals outside of the D.C. Circuit were administrative appeals; the figure for the Seventh Circuit was 4.7%, while the figure for the Eighth Circuit was 3.0%. 2 1 See Letter from Ralph Mecham to Senator Charles E. Grassley (October 12, 1995), Enclosure 1. Due to substantial caseload fluctuations from year to year, examining the average annual caseload over the past three years is more statistically significant than examining one year in isolation. The three years examined here are the twelve-month periods ending June 30, 1993-1995. During the most recent twelve-month period, 611 (38.5%) of the 1585 cases filed in the D.C. Circuit were administrative appeals. Ibid. 2 See Letter from Ralph Mecham to Senator Charles E. Grassley (October 12, 1995), Enclosure 1.

Two recent cases illustrate the type of administrative appeals typically and regularly handled by the D.C. Circuit:

* State of Ohio v. U.S. EPA, 997 F.2d 1520 (D.C. Cir. 1993). This case involved 24 consolidated petitions for review of EPA's National Oil and Hazardous Substance Pollution Contingency Plan under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA). EPA filed a brief of about 170 pages, addressing an unusually large number of issues, while petitioners filed briefs totalling about 210 pages. The court allocated 3 hours for argument time, although the argument in fact went quite bit longer. The final opinion took up 31 pages in the Federal Reporter.

* MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. FCC, 59 F.3d 1407 (D.C. Cir. 1995). This case involved approximately 50 consolidated petitions for review of 21 separate FCC orders adjudicating damage actions filed by several interexchange carriers against local exchange carriers. The petitions were consolidated in the D.C. Circuit after being filed in four different circuits. The five parties filed over 250 pages of briefs, and the record on appeal filled-two drawers of a file cabinet. The court allocated one hour for argument time, although the argument in fact took two hours.

Given the unique contours of the D.C. Circuit's docket, raw caseload data -- including comparisons with the number of cases handled by other circuits -- do not accurately reflect the actual volume or difficulty of work performed by the D.C. Circuit. For example, during the twelve-month period ended September 30, 1994, only 157 (8.9%) of the 1770 cases filed in the D.C. Circuit were prisoner petitions. In Courts of Appeals outside the D.C. Circuit, 27.7% of the appeals were prisoner petitions; in particular, 1225 (38.4%) of the 3193 cases filed in the Eighth Circuit, and 1010 (32.6%) of the 3096 cases filed in the Seventh Circuit were prisoner petitions. 3 These cases, unlike administrative appeals, generally involve simple legal issues and brief records, and most are relatively easy to dispose of. Yet these relatively straightforward cases serve to swell the numbers of cases handled by the other circuit courts.

Similarly, the D.C. Circuit handles a relatively low proportion of pro se appeals, direct criminal appeals and diversity appeals, as compared with the regional circuit courts. 4 These cases, like prisoner petitions, generally consume fewer judicial resources than other cases, yet they misleadingly make it appear that other courts have a larger proportional share of the nation's judicial workload than does the D.C. Circuit.

For all of these reasons, simple numerical comparisons do not do justice to the D.C. Circuit's caseload. A recent editorial in The Washington Times, 5 for example, noted that the D.C. Circuit disposes of fewer than the 285 cases per judge once recommended by the Judicial Conference as the optimal level of circuit court dispositions. But using this benchmark to judge the D.C. Circuit's workload is inappropriate -- and not just because the Judicial Conference itself no longer uses the benchmark. More importantly, this arbitrary figure wholly ignores the unique and complex nature of D.C. Circuit cases. As James Rill, Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust in the Bush Administration, recently stated: "Reliance on simple numerical case load comparisons among circuits is essentially unreliable as a policy guide to the number of appellate judges needed for the administration of justice in each court. A qualitative analysis of this caseload is imperative . . . T he appeals heard by the D.C. Circuit far surpass in complexity and in critical importance to government regulation of business and the national economy those heard by any other circuit. These cases are characteristically extraordinarily complicated and technologically difficult, often involving multiple parties; they can have immense far-reaching economic consequences. 6 3 Judicial Business of the United States Courts.: 1994 Report of the Director, Table B-1. 4 See Letter from Chief Judge Harry T. Edwards to Senator Charles E. Grassley, at 3-4 (Sept. 18, 1995). See also Judicial Business of the United States Courts: 1994 Report of the Director, Table B-1. 5 "Another Judge for the D.C. Circuit?", The Washington Times, at A-16 (Sept. 19, 1995).

The uniquely complex nature of the D.C. Circuit's caseload weighed heavily on Congress when it followed the Judicial Conference's recommendation to create new D.C. Circuit judgeships in 1978 and 1984. The Senate Judiciary Committee Report to the 1984 judgeship legislation -- issued under the direction of then Chairman Thurmond -- was quite clear on this point in approving the creation of the D.C. Circuit's twelfth judgeship: " T he Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia inevitably receives a significant number of its caseload from federal administrative agencies headquartered in the area. Administrative appeals filed in this court numbered 504 in 1982 and represented 34.8 percent of the incoming caseload. . . . Due to the nature of the caseload which includes many unique cases involving complex legal, economic and social issues of national importance and a large backlog of pending appeals, the D.C. Circuit requires one additional judgeship." 7

The Judiciary Committee's conclusions are even more sound today, more than a decade later, when the annual number of administrative appeals filed in the D.C. Circuit has increased from 504 to 778, and from 34.8% of the Circuit's docket to 45.3%. 8 6 Letter from James F. Rill to The Washington Times, at 1 (Sept. 29, 1995) (emphasis supplied). 7 S. Rep. No. 98-55 (April 7, 1983), at 74. 8 See Letter from Ralph Mecham to Senator Charles E. Grassley (October 12, 1995), Enclosure 1 (statistics for the past three years); S. Rep. No. 98-55 (April 7, 1983), at 74 (D.C. Circuit caseload statistics available to the Judiciary Committee when it approved the twelfth judgeship). Taking into account only the most recent twelve- month period, the annual number of administrative appeals has increased from 504 to 611, and from 34.8% of the D.C. Circuit's docket to 38.5%.

In light of the unique nature of its docket, it should come as no surprise that the D.C. Circuit takes longer to dispose of cases on the merits than do all but two other regional circuits. The median amount of time required in the D.C. Circuit from the filing of the notice of appeal to final disposition is 12.0 months. This ranks the D.C. Circuit tenth out of the twelve regional circuits in this measure of productivity, ahead of only the Ninth Circuit (14.5 months) and the Eleventh Circuit (14.8 months). The nationwide average is 10.5 months; the figure for both the Second and Eighth Circuits is 8.1 months. 9

This lag time means that litigants in the D.C. Circuit are waiting longer for justice than other litigants. As Mr. Rill pointed out, the D.C. Circuit "faces a heavy commitment to appeals dealing with core issues involving the operation of the telecommunications, transportation, broadcasting, energy, and other vital industries. 10 These critical regulated companies often must wait at least a year to have their disputes with the government resolved. Reducing the size of the Circuit would only exacerbate the problem. Because the D.C. Circuit is truly a national court, with a uniquely national administrative docket, this means that all Americans are potentially at risk of having justice delayed and hence denied.

II. Increased Workload

In Public Law 98-353, enacted in 1984, Congress increased the size of the D.C. Circuit from eleven to twelve judges. In reporting this legislation to the full Senate in April 1983, the Judiciary Committee concluded that the Circuit -- based upon its 1982 caseload -- needed a twelfth judgeship. 11 9 Judicial Business of the United States Courts: 1994 Report of the.Director, Table B-4. 10 Letter from James F. Rill to The Washington Times, at 2 (Sept. 29, 1995). 11 S. Rep. No. 98-55 (April 7, 1983), at 74. In supporting the 1984 legislation, Senator Robert Dole stated: "These new judicial positions were carefully considered and approved, after hearings before the Courts Subcommittee. Testimony was received from the chief judges of the circuit courts requesting the increases. The Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts submitted justification material based on workload and backload statistics of all Federal courts. on the basis of this record, the additional judgeships were approved." 130 Cong. Rec. S6093 (May 21, 1984).

This bit of history is extremely important, and sheds a great deal of light on the issue at hand. Presently, the D.C. Circuit faces a far heavier workload than it did when the Judiciary Committee decided to create the twelfth judgeship. Comparing the 1982 caseload to the average caseload from 1993-1995, there has been a 54.4% increase in administrative appeals and a 18.7% increase in total appeals. 12 In addition, when the Judiciary Committee approved the twelfth judgeship, the D.C. Circuit had three senior circuit judges to assist with its business. 13 Presently, there are no senior judges.

Thus, if a twelfth D.C. Circuit judgeship was deemed necessary when the Judiciary Committee reported the 1984 judgeship legislation, present circumstances make that judgeship even more essential today. In light of the Circuit's increased workload, one cannot reasonably conclude that the Circuit is "overstaffed" and has "excess capacity," or that its judges are not pulling their fair share of the judiciary's work.

As an aside, it is important to note that the 1985 caseload statistics cited by Judge Silberman in a letter to Senator Grassley 14 are anomalous. The 2182 cases filed in 1985 far surpassed the number of cases filed in every other year during the past decade. 15 The relevant point of comparison, rather, is 1982. First, 1982 was a more representative year. Second, the 1982 caseload data was the basis for the Judiciary Committee's conclusion, arrived at after reasoned deliberation, that a twelfth D.C. Circuit judgeship was necessary. Any fair comparison with 1982 will lead to the conclusion that maintaining the D.C. Circuit's twelfth judgeship is more than justified. 12 Over the last three years, an average of 1718 cases were filed in the D.C. Circuit per year, 778 (45.3%) of which, on average, were administrative appeals. Letter from Ralph Mecham to Senator Charles E. Grassley (October 12, 1995), Enclosure 1. In its April 1983 Report, the Senate Judiciary Committee cited caseload statistics from 1982, during which litigants filed 1447 cases -- 504 of which were administrative appeals -- in the Circuit. S. Rep. No. 98-55 (April 7, 1983), at 74. Comparing the 1982 caseload with the caseload from the most recent twelvemonth period, there has been a 21.2% increase in administrative appeals and a 9.5% increase in total appeals. 13 S. Rep. No. 98-55 (April 7, 1983), at 74. 14 Letter from Judge Laurence H. Silberman to Senator Charles E. Grassley, at 1-2 (Sept. 26, 1995). 15 See Letter from Chief Judge Harry T. Edwards to Senator Charles E. Grassley, "New Case Filings" Table (Sept. 18, 1995).

III. Constitutional and Prudential Considerations

Mr. Chairman, under our constitutional system, Congress certainly is well within its prerogatives to raise questions about court size and, of course, has the final authority to create or abolish judgeships through enacted legislation. However, Congress traditionally has examined such questions in a methodical and comprehensive manner. These issues should be examined apart from consideration of specific vacancies, and informed by the deliberations of the Judicial Conference. Every effort should be made to ensure an objective result and to avoid inadvertently politicizing the process of determining the size of the judiciary.

As members of the Subcommittee well know, the Framers of the Constitution were particularly concerned about preserving the independence of the judiciary. For this reason, the Framers gave the executive and legislative branches roles in determining the judiciary's membership -- the President has the power to nominate and the Senate the power to confirm. Similarly, in determining the size of the judiciary, Congress authorizes judicial positions and the President has the power to sign or veto the authorization. It is a careful balance, intended to protect the judiciary.

In the past, Congress has looked to the judges themselves -in the form of the Judicial Conference -- for assistance and guidance in determining the appropriate number of judicial positions. The process of addressing court size typically has proceeded as follows. The Judicial Conference periodically undertakes studies and surveys to assess its needs and to formulate recommendations to Congress. Congress then evaluates the Judicial Conference's recommendations. This process guarantees that serious and careful deliberation underlie decisions regarding the size of each district court and court of appeals and the federal courts as a whole.

In my view, leaving selected judicial vacancies open as they occur would introduce an element of randomness into what should be -- and what traditionally has been -- a deliberate, considered process. Vacancies can occur unexpectedly, as a result of death, resignation or retirement. Adjusting court size on such an ad hoc basis would make it difficult for chief judges at both the district and circuit level to predict what judicial resources would be available to them in the reasonably foreseeable future.

In addition, and notwithstanding the good faith of those who are raising the issue now, making judgeship decisions on such an ad hoc basis would create an appearance of partisanship that would weaken our society's respect for the non-partisan nature of the judiciary. Until now, Congress has never reduced the number of previously authorized judgeships at the circuit court level, let alone done so on an ad hoc basis when a particular vacancy arose. And, as just noted, Congress typically has increased the number only after careful consideration of Judicial Conference recommendations, on a nationwide basis.

Such an approach guarantees both the reality, and the appearance, of an objective, non-partisan allocation process. And it ensures that alterations in the judiciary's size are not viewed by the public either as attempts by Congress to deny appointments to a sitting President, or attempts by a sitting President and Congress to improperly exercise control over the Third Branch.

Indeed, the most well-known proposal to deviate from this considered approach was President Roosevelt's court-packing bill, aimed at increasing the size of the Supreme Court to ensure the Court's control by his nominees. However, as students of history will note, members of Congress from both parties strongly objected to his court-packing plan. They felt that such an unorthodox action threatened the institution of the courts, as well as the public's respect for the independence of the judiciary as an institution.

The Senate ultimately rejected Roosevelt's court-packing plan in 1937. The Senate's action signalled an understanding that the integrity of the court system can best be maintained by addressing specific nominations on their own merits, and by addressing questions of court size separately and on their own merits. I submit that the nation would be best served if the Senate would continue to act on that decades-old understanding.

IV. Conclusion

To summarize, it is the Department's strongly held view that the D.C. Circuit should retain its current size. Efficient handling of the Circuit's uniquely complex caseload, with its heavy complement of administrative appeals, is essential to the nation's most important business. Due to differences in case mix and composition, simple caseload comparisons with the other circuits are bound to be misleading. Moreover, the D.C. Circuit's workload -- particularly its administrative appeals -has grown since the Judiciary Committee concluded over ten years ago that a twelfth judgeship was necessary. And finally, while Congress has the power to alter the size of the federal judiciary, it should do so in a comprehensive manner and in consultation with the Judicial Conference, and not on a vacancy-by-vacancy basis.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes general rules with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party under the Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1993. Please note that this memorandum is simply a summary of the relevant laws and regulations, which are set out or referenced in 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections.

Please ask the General Counsels of your department or agency to issue guidance -- tailored as appropriate to your department or agency -- to ensure that employees of the department or agency are aware of and comply with the laws with respect to political activity, including those contained at 5 U.S.C. 7321-7326 and 5 C.F.R. Part 734. (We have provided similar guidance to White House staff.) Employees should be instructed to contact your General Counsel's office if they have any questions about appropriate political activity.

In addition, please note that certain agencies listed in 5 C.F.R. 734.401 -- primarily those with law enforcement or national security responsibilities -- have more stringent rules with respect to political activity. Several agencies traditionally have followed more stringent specific rules and practices as a matter of policy as well. This memorandum does not attempt to summarize the particular rules applicable to employees in those agencies.

Finally, please be aware that today we are issuing two separate memoranda to you regarding specific political travel issues that frequently arise.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

The range of permissible political activities for Executive Branch employees is described in 5 C.F.R. Part 734. To summarize, an employee (other than one employed in an agency described in 5 C.F.R. 734.401) may engage in the following activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
    - being a member of a political party;
    - serving as an officer of a political party;
    - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;

- participating in a political convention or rally; and
- serving as a delegate to a political convention.

- participation in political campaigns, which includes:

  - canvassing for votes;
  - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
  - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
  - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

- participation in elections, which includes:

  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.

- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

  An employee may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, an employee may:

  - make lawful political contributions;
  - attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (but you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with all legal requirements including the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list the official title; and
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not solicit or receive such services from a subordinate employee, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Basic Prohibitions

The basic prohibitions on political activity are summarized at 5 C.F.R. 734 Subpart C.

1. An employee may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, an employee may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. (However, an employee may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as the employee does not personally solicit contributions.)

REV_00123664

2. An employee may not use his or her official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that an employee's official title may not be used on invitations to political fundraisers. If a title is used by others inadvertently and without the employee's knowledge, the employee should contact the relevant General Counsel's office promptly about appropriate steps to take.

3. An employee may not use his or her official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.

On-Duty Activity Rules

Most Executive Branch employees are prohibited from engaging in political activity while on duty or in any government office building. There is an exception to this prohibition for those who are (i) Senate-confirmed officials or paid from an appropriation for the Executive Office of the President and (ii) whose duties continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post. Such employees are permitted by law to engage in otherwise permitted political activity while on duty and in the office -- for example, meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. However, any non-incidental costs incurred as a result of such activity shall be reimbursed. In addition, employees who are not Senate-confirmed or covered EOP employees may engage in official duties that involve assisting a Senate-confirmed or covered EOP official -- for example, with respect to scheduling or typing.

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

Please note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.

Travel Rules

As fully detailed in a separate memorandum being issued to you today regarding travel costs, the appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant costs associated with political travel (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 19, 2003

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES REGARDING CORPORATE AND GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT ON POLITICAL TRIPS

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to use of corporate or government aircraft for political trips. (Note that this memorandum does not cover travel on a charter aircraft paid for by a political entity, which is treated the same as ordinary travel on a commercial aircraft where the cost is paid by a political entity.)

I. Corporate Aircraft

A political campaign or party may pay for air transportation of individuals to a political event, including of individuals employed in the Executive Branch who are otherwise allowed to attend the event. See 5 C.F.R. 2635.204(f). In addition, federal law authorizes political campaigns and parties to secure a corporate aircraft to provide air transportation, so long as the campaign or party reimburses the owner of the aircraft under relevant federal statutes and regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 114.9.

As a matter of policy, however, the following steps must occur when an Executive Branch employee travels on a corporate aircraft secured by a political campaign or party for the employee's travel to a political event:

1. The employee should not travel on a corporate aircraft for political travel unless commercial service would not be practically available under the circumstances, taking into account the employee's official schedule and the location and timing of the event.

2. The employee should not travel on an aircraft owned by an entity or individual that is regulated by or doing business with the employee's department or agency, or in circumstances that otherwise would be inappropriate.

3. The relevant political campaign or party must pay the owner of the aircraft in advance by paying the relevant first class airfare (or, in the case of travel to a city not served by a regularly scheduled commercial service, the usual charter rate).

4. For White House employees, advance approval of any use of a corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the Counsel to the President. For other Administration employees, advance approval of any use of corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the relevant department or agency General Counsel and the Counsel to the President.

5. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the re-election campaign will reimburse first-class airfare from the point of origin to each stop in which campaign-related activity is conducted and back to the point of origin. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving political activity other than campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the political entity will reimburse first-class airfare based on the hard-time formula, which means that the reimbursable costs of the trip are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503. On all mixed trips, use of a corporate aircraft must also meet the standards for approval under 41 C.F.R. Part 304.

II. Government Aircraft

1. White House employees and other Administration employees should not use government aircraft for travel on political trips or mixed official-political trips unless the employee is required for security reasons to use government aircraft, or the employee is accompanying another official who requires use of a government aircraft for security reasons.

2. Advance approval of any use of a government aircraft for such a trip must be obtained from the Chief of Staff to the President and Counsel to the President. Appropriate first-class reimbursement for political travelers must be made by the campaign or relevant political entity. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(5).

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: PAYMENT OF EXPENSES ASSOCIATED WITH POLITICAL TRAVEL DURING THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

This memorandum addresses the allocation of costs for travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee.

The memorandum will be of primary assistance to those who calculate the costs for political and mixed travel. For reference, the rules of allocation and payment are summarized on pages 3-4 of this memorandum.

General Legal Principles

When considering the payment of travel expenses incurred on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee (Bush/Cheney '04), three principles govern. First, appropriated funds may be spent only for the purposes for which they have been appropriated. See 31 U.S.C. 1301. Accordingly, funds appropriated for the official functions of the departments and agencies may be used for travel expenses only if the travel is reasonably related to an official purpose.

The second basic principle is that, in general, official activities should be paid only from funds appropriated for such purposes, unless Congress has authorized the support of those activities by other means. This principle prevents unauthorized augmentation of appropriations.

The third principle involves the requirements of the Federal election laws. Now that the President is a candidate for re-election, travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee must be paid for by Bush/Cheney '04. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7.

Political and Official Travel

Before an allocation of expenses for travel can be made, a determination must first be made as to whether an appearance is official or political; and, if it is political, whether it is on behalf of Bush/Cheney '04 or another political candidate or committee. For purposes of allocating travel costs during the Presidential campaign, there are three categories of events: 1) official events; 2) Bush/Cheney '04 political events, e.g., a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser; and 3) other political events, e.g., a fundraising event for a non-Presidential candidate.

In determining whether an activity is political or official, all relevant factors should be considered, including, but not limited to, the identity of the sponsor of the event, the group or organization being addressed, other participants, and the nature of the speech being delivered. There is considerable room for discretion in determining whether an event giving rise to an expense is political or official. Ultimately, the question is a factual one that can only be answered by those most familiar with the facts of a given event, trip or situation; accordingly, this determination must be made on a case-by-case basis. White House employees should consult the Counsel's Office, and department and agency employees should consult their General Counsel about these matters.

Generally speaking, appearing at party functions, fundraising, and campaigning for specific candidates should be considered political. In addition, any event that involves solicitation of campaign funds or express advocacy for a candidate or candidates for office will be political. Travel for inspections, meetings to discuss government business, official addresses, and the like ordinarily should be considered official travel, even though the event may have partisan consequences or concern matters on which opinion is politically divided. For a broader discussion of these issues, see 6 Op. O.L.C. 214, 216-217 (1982).

When allocating costs between political and official activities, an additional point should be kept in mind. There are some persons whose official duties may require them to be with the Administration official, whether or not that official is on government business. This group may include, among others, personal aides responsible for assisting in the conduct of official business while an official is traveling and the security detail responsible for an official's protection. Expenses incurred during travel by this group of individuals are official regardless of the character of the event that may be involved.

Bush/Cheney '04 Campaign Travel

The Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will carefully follow rules set forth in Federal Election Commission campaign travel allocation regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3, 9034.7, 9035.1. The travel expenses for campaign-related travelers that are incurred for a stop in which an individual engages in campaign activity on behalf of the President are paid by Bush/Cheney '04. Please note that if any campaign activity for a Presidential candidate, other than incidental contacts, is conducted at a stop, that stop shall be considered campaign-related. Id. 9034.7(b)(2).

Campaign committees for non-Presidential candidates may not pay for the costs of campaign travel on behalf of the President. For example, if a Senatorial candidate schedules a fundraiser back-to-back with a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser, the President's campaign committee must pay the travel expenses for the entire stop. See 11 C.F.R. 106 and 9034.7. Also, when there is a question about the nature of a political event, particularly those involving the President and Vice President, the event will presumptively be considered campaign-related, and Bush/Cheney '04 will pay the appropriate travel costs.

Event costs associated with the individual events at a stop involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and official activity -- as opposed to the travel-related costs -- may be divided and allocated. Similarly, event costs associated with a trip involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and other political events likewise may be divided and allocated.

In instances where the same travel costs are incurred in conjunction with official and Bush/Cheney '04 activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the President's campaign committee is determined by using the hypothetical trip formula: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin. Cf. 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(2). Where travel includes political, but not Bush/Cheney '04, activity and official activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the political entities is determined by using the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503.

Rules of Allocation and Payment

The rules of allocation and payment are summarized below:

1. The President's campaign committee pays Presidential campaign-related travel costs. This includes transportation, hotel, and per diem costs for campaign-related travelers. For mixed trips, the hypothetical trip formula should be used for all campaign-related travelers: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin.

2. Costs associated with political activity that occurs on a mixed trip that does not involve any Bush/Cheney '04 activity are allocated according to the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on the time spent on official and political activity. If any Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related activities occur on a trip, the costs of the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign stops must be allocated according to the hypothetical trip formula.

3. If government aircraft (in accordance with applicable rules) is used for Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the campaign committee must pay the appropriate government entity the first-class commercial airfare for each traveler (except official travelers) in the case of travel to a city served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial service. In the case of travel to a city that is not served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial airline service, the campaign must reimburse the appropriate government entity the commercial coach airfare for each traveler (except official travelers). The campaign committee must pay the commercial charter rate in the case of travel to a city not served by regularly scheduled commercial service. (For political travel that is not Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the reimbursement is at commercial coach rate.)

4. If an Administration official travels to the political event by commercial airline, the campaign is obliged to pay the actual cost of the commercial airfare. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

5. If government cars (in accordance with applicable rules) are used for Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related travelers on campaign-related trips, the government shall be reimbursed the commercial rental cost of comparable vehicles for the campaign-related travelers.

6. If a meeting room is rented for the purpose of campaign-related activity, the campaign should pay the costs of the room. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

7. The campaign must pay for the hotel rooms of campaign-related travelers. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

8. To document adequately these travel allocations and payments, all agencies should: (i) prepare, or otherwise have available, an itinerary for each trip involving Bush/Cheney '04 activity, and (ii) if government conveyance is used, prepare a list of all passengers, along with a designation as to which passengers are, or are not, campaign-related. A copy of the itinerary should be submitted to Bush/Cheney '04; the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will maintain such information.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. The regulations governing the payment of expenses for travel by federal officials on behalf of the President's campaign committee are in title 11, Code of Federal Regulations. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

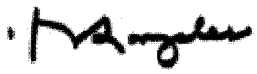
THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 19, 2003

Dear Senator Leahy:



Thank you for meeting with me yesterday and also for your letter of today. Your letter raises concerns about certain media reports yesterday, and I wanted to respond promptly.

First, there is no current vacancy on the Supreme Court, and as I told you yesterday we are not aware of plans by any Justice to retire. Therefore, final decisions regarding appropriate consultations have not been made. Contrary to news reports, moreover, Ari Fleischer did not say who President Bush would consult with or receive advice from in the event of a Supreme Court vacancy and certainly did not foreclose the possibility that Senators might be consulted.

Second, in response to letters written by you and two of your colleagues, I have already indicated my willingness to meet with Senators to discuss the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy. I did so in good faith with you yesterday and I remain willing to do so with other Senators who may be interested in discussing this issue, as I indicated to Senator Daschle and Senator Schumer.

In short, the White House is and remains willing to meet and listen to your thoughts and concerns, as well as those of your colleagues. I fully appreciate your interest, as well as your constitutional role, in the Supreme Court process, and I share your desire for a fair and orderly Senate confirmation process and prompt vote in the event of a Supreme Court vacancy during this Presidency.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Phone calls from the plane

Here is a potential solution. We can have two air phones put on the plane that have a label that says "political phone." Staff can use those phones for any political calls. These phones do not go to the air force one operator. In fact, political staff can call up to these phones directly as well. The calls are about 3.99 per minute - with a minimum of 2-3 minutes. It's just like a phone on a commercial plane.

Then the bill will come to WHCA for these phones only. WHCA will get me the bills and I will give them to Susan. You get the bill monthly, after the fact. The bill would come in itemized, but wouldn't have the callers name identified. You could put a little card next to the phone that gave some sort of policy direction for usage. For example, "please note this is a political phone that costs 3.99 per minute. That's a lot of bumper stickers. Please use sparingly." Or, "this phone may only be used by……"

Please let me know if you would like me to make this happen and put this process in place.

Could you two please let me know your thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set up with WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or how should we handle?

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

Could youtwo please let me knowyour thoughts on this question from Mary? I assume we could set some sort of billing procedure set upwith WHCA. It also raises another question: if a snack or meal is served on board either plane when we have political travellers, will there be a Bush-Cheney '04 account that is billed or howshould we handle?

Thanks,
Kelley

Kelley-

What are the rules regarding campaign staff using the phones on AF1 or 2? I assume that if we can use them, we need some sort of billing card, but are we allowed to use them at all?

NBC "TODAY" INTERVIEW WITH: PAUL BREMER, PRESIDENTIAL ENVOY TO IRAQ

7:12 A.M. (EDT), FRIDAY, JUNE 20, 2003

CAMPBELL BROWN: About 50 Americans have died in Iraq due to hostile fire and accidents since major combat was declared over by President Bush on May 1st. One hundred fifty thousand American troops remain on the ground there.

;;;;;; Ambassador Paul Bremer is the highest-ranking American official in Baghdad and is responsible for overseeing Iraq's transition to democracy.

;;;;;; Ambassador Bremer, good morning.

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Good morning. Great to be with you from free Iraq.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: Ambassador, let me begin by asking you about a story on the front page of the New York Times today. U.S. officials say they now believe that Saddam Hussein is probably alive and that this is coming on the heels of a major arrest, one of his closest aides this week. What information do you have that makes you think he may be alive?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: I think actually the intelligence community and the military is divided on the question of whether he's alive or dead. We frankly don't know. I wish we did know. I think it would be nice to have that particular chapter completely ended. He, of course, is not in charge here, and that's the main thing.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: I don't want to put you too much on the spot here, because I know you're not directly in charge of security, but the fact is it's been almost two months since the president declared the war over, but almost 50 soldiers or about 50 soldiers have died during that time. Recently it's been one a day. Did the president declare this over too soon?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: No. First of all, two-thirds of those casualties are accidents. They're not combat-related. It doesn't make it any easier and it makes it no less regrettable when we have our young men and women dying here. We still have hostile action in this country. We still have Baathist regime remnants who are trying to kill our soldiers.

;;;;;; But the real target that they're after is the Iraqi people. They're basically trying to send a message that the coalition cannot provide the most basic function of any government, which is security. And they're not going to succeed. We will provide security.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: I want to read you a quote that's in today's Washington Post. This is from an American soldier who is stationed in Iraq. And he says, quote, "The war is supposed to be over, but every day we hear of another soldier getting killed. Is it worth it? Saddam isn't in power anymore. The locals want us to leave. Why are we still here?" How do you answer that soldier who's there putting his life on the line?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Well, of course, I admire his and I'm proud of his service to his country. But the fact of the matter is, most Iraqis don't want us to leave because they know if we leave, we would leave behind a situation where it is possible that remnants of the regime might reconstitute themselves. That's what we're seeing in these fights and fire fights we've had north and west of Baghdad over the last couple of weeks.

;;;;;; The president has been very clear. We're going to stay here until the job is done. And the job is defined as putting in place a democratic government in Iraq, fully sovereign within its borders, and at peace with its neighbors. We will leave when that job is done, and we won't leave until it's done.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: Well, let me ask you about that, because your job is bringing democracy to Iraq, and yet this week you canceled planned elections for mayor in Najaf that were planned by the Iraqis. You have thrown out the original idea of having the Iraqis elect an interim authority to run the country. Instead you're appointing your own council of advisers who will answer solely to you. How do you call that bringing democracy to Iraq?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Well, in the first place, I canceled those elections two weeks ago. I guess it only got out to the press recently. The political council which I am consulting on will, in fact, be an agreed council, a consultative council that will be agreed upon in the discussions I'm having with a very broad range of Iraqis from all around the country -- Shias, Sunnis, Kurds, Arabs, men and women, Christians, Turkomans.

;;;;;; We'll have a council which will be broadly representative of the entire country. And I think most Iraqis now recognize that that is the quickest and most effective way to get responsible Iraqis in charge of their country.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: I want to read you one more quote. Your critics have been saying that you don't have the resources; you're understaffed. This is from the Times of London this week, one of your own officials, who says, quote, "This is the single most chaotic organization I've ever worked for and suffers from an almost complete absence of strategic direction." Your reaction?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Well, clearly this was somebody who didn't know what he was talking about. Our strategy is very clear. It's been very clear for months. We are going to install a representative government here. We're going to provide law and order for the Iraqi people.

;;;;;; And most importantly right now, our focus is on a fundamental transformation of a very devastated economy. That is what's getting most of our attention now and will over the next few days. I'm leading a delegation, including Iraqis, to the World Economic Forum in Jordan tomorrow and Sunday, where we're going to have talks with world leaders about our plans to reform this economy.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: Finally, Ambassador, let me ask you about weapons of mass destruction, our reason that we gave the rest of the world for going to war. Where are they?

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Well, we have a team that has arrived here about a week ago, 1300 people under General Dayton. They are beginning the process now of a very intense, close review of documents and sites. There's no question that there were weapons of mass destruction here. All of the U.N. people agreed on that. President Clinton agreed on that. Two U.N. inspection teams agreed on that. The question is, where are they now? And we'll find them if they're here, I'm confident.

;;;;;; MS. BROWN: Ambassador Paul Bremer, we do wish you best of luck with a difficult job ahead. Thanks for being with us this morning.

;;;;;; AMB. BREMER: Nice to be with you.

END.

WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES REGARDING CORPORATE AND GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT ON POLITICAL TRIPS

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to use of corporate or government aircraft for political trips. (Note that this memorandum does not cover travel on a charter aircraft paid for by a political entity, which is treated the same as ordinary travel on a commercial aircraft where the cost is paid by a political entity.)

I. Corporate Aircraft

A political campaign or party may pay for air transportation of individuals to a political event, including of individuals employed in the Executive Branch who are otherwise allowed to attend the event. See 5 C.F.R. 2635.204(f). In addition, federal law authorizes political campaigns and parties to secure a corporate aircraft to provide air transportation, so long as the campaign or party reimburses the owner of the aircraft under relevant federal statutes and regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 114.9.

As a matter of policy, however, the following steps must occur when an Executive Branch employee travels on a corporate aircraft secured by a political campaign or party for the employee's travel to a political event:

1. The employee should not travel on a corporate aircraft for political travel unless commercial service would not be practically available under the circumstances, taking into account the employee's official schedule and the location and timing of the event.

2. The employee should not travel on an aircraft owned by an entity or individual that is regulated by or doing business with the employee's department or agency, or in circumstances that otherwise would be inappropriate.

3. The relevant political campaign or party must pay the owner of the aircraft in advance by paying the relevant first class airfare (or, in the case of travel to a city not served by a regularly scheduled commercial service, the usual charter rate).

4. For White House employees, advance approval of any use of a corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the Counsel to the President. For other Administration employees, advance approval of any use of corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the relevant department or agency General Counsel and the Counsel to the President.

5. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the re-election campaign will reimburse first-class airfare from the point of origin to each stop in which campaign-related activity is conducted and back to the point of origin. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving political activity other than campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the political entity will reimburse first-class airfare based on the hard-time formula, which means that the reimbursable costs of the trip are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503. On all mixed trips, use of a corporate aircraft must also meet the standards for approval under 41 C.F.R. Part 304.

II. Government Aircraft

1. White House employees and other Administration employees should not use government aircraft for travel on political trips or mixed official-political trips unless the employee is required for security reasons to use government aircraft, or the employee is accompanying another official who requires use of a government aircraft for security reasons.

2. Advance approval of any use of a government aircraft for such a trip must be obtained from the Chief of Staff to the President and Counsel to the President. Appropriate first-class reimbursement for political travelers must be made by the campaign or relevant political entity. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(5).

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 19, 2003

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: PAYMENT OF EXPENSES ASSOCIATED WITH POLITICAL TRAVEL DURING THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

This memorandum addresses the allocation of costs for travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee.

The memorandum will be of primary assistance to those who calculate the costs for political and mixed travel. For reference, the rules of allocation and payment are summarized on pages 3-4 of this memorandum.

General Legal Principles

When considering the payment of travel expenses incurred on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee (Bush/Cheney '04), three principles govern. First, appropriated funds may be spent only for the purposes for which they have been appropriated. See 31 U.S.C. 1301. Accordingly, funds appropriated for the official functions of the departments and agencies may be used for travel expenses only if the travel is reasonably related to an official purpose.

The second basic principle is that, in general, official activities should be paid only from funds appropriated for such purposes, unless Congress has authorized the support of those activities by other means. This principle prevents unauthorized augmentation of appropriations.

The third principle involves the requirements of the Federal election laws. Now that the President is a candidate for re-election, travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee must be paid for by Bush/Cheney '04. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7.

Political and Official Travel

Before an allocation of expenses for travel can be made, a determination must first be made as to whether an appearance is official or political; and, if it is political, whether it is on behalf of Bush/Cheney '04 or another political candidate or committee. For purposes of allocating travel costs during the Presidential campaign, there are three categories of events: 1) official events; 2) Bush/Cheney '04 political events, e.g., a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser; and 3) other political events, e.g., a fundraising event for a non-Presidential candidate.

In determining whether an activity is political or official, all relevant factors should be considered, including, but not limited to, the identity of the sponsor of the event, the group or organization being addressed, other participants, and the nature of the speech being delivered. There is considerable room for discretion in determining whether an event giving rise to an expense is political or official. Ultimately, the question is a factual one that can only be answered by those most familiar with the facts of a given event, trip or situation; accordingly, this determination must be made on a case-by-case basis. White House employees should consult the Counsel's Office, and department and agency employees should consult their General Counsel about these matters.

Generally speaking, appearing at party functions, fundraising, and campaigning for specific candidates should be considered political. In addition, any event that involves solicitation of campaign funds or express advocacy for a candidate or candidates for office will be political. Travel for inspections, meetings to discuss government business, official addresses, and the like ordinarily should be considered official travel, even though the event may have partisan consequences or concern matters on which opinion is politically divided. For a broader discussion of these issues, see 6 Op. O.L.C. 214, 216-217 (1982).

When allocating costs between political and official activities, an additional point should be kept in mind. There are some persons whose official duties may require them to be with the Administration official, whether or not that official is on government business. This group may include, among others, personal aides responsible for assisting in the conduct of official business while an official is traveling and the security detail responsible for an official's protection. Expenses incurred during travel by this group of individuals are official regardless of the character of the event that may be involved.

Bush/Cheney '04 Campaign Travel

The Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will carefully follow rules set forth in Federal Election Commission campaign travel allocation regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3, 9034.7, 9035.1. The travel expenses for campaign-related travelers that are incurred for a stop in which an individual engages in campaign activity on behalf of the President are paid by Bush/Cheney '04. Please note that if any campaign activity for a Presidential candidate, other than incidental contacts, is conducted at a stop, that stop shall be considered campaign-related. Id. 9034.7(b)(2).

Campaign committees for non-Presidential candidates may not pay for the costs of campaign travel on behalf of the President. For example, if a Senatorial candidate schedules a fundraiser back-to-back with a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser, the President's campaign committee must pay the travel expenses for the entire stop. See 11 C.F.R. 106 and 9034.7. Also, when there is a question about the nature of a political event, particularly those involving the President and Vice President, the event will presumptively be considered campaign-related, and Bush/Cheney '04 will pay the appropriate travel costs.

Event costs associated with the individual events at a stop involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and official activity -- as opposed to the travel-related costs -- may be divided and allocated. Similarly, event costs associated with a trip involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and other political events likewise may be divided and allocated.

In instances where the same travel costs are incurred in conjunction with official and Bush/Cheney '04 activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the President's campaign committee is determined by using the hypothetical trip formula: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin. Cf. 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(2). Where travel includes political, but not Bush/Cheney '04, activity and official activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the political entities is determined by using the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503.

The rules of allocation and payment are summarized below:

1. The President's campaign committee pays Presidential campaign-related travel costs. This includes transportation, hotel, and per diem costs for campaign-related travelers. For mixed trips, the hypothetical trip formula should be used for all campaign-related travelers: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin.

2. Costs associated with political activity that occurs on a mixed trip that does not involve any Bush/Cheney '04 activity are allocated according to the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on the time spent on official and political activity. If any Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related activities occur on a trip, the costs of the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign stops must be allocated according to the hypothetical trip formula.

3. If government aircraft (in accordance with applicable rules) is used for Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the campaign committee must pay the appropriate government entity the first-class commercial airfare for each traveler (except official travelers) in the case of travel to a city served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial service. In the case of travel to a city that is not served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial airline service, the campaign must reimburse the appropriate government entity the commercial coach airfare for each traveler (except official travelers). The campaign committee must pay the commercial charter rate in the case of travel to a city not served by regularly scheduled commercial service. (For political travel that is not Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the reimbursement is at commercial coach rate.)

4. If an Administration official travels to the political event by commercial airline, the campaign is obliged to pay the actual cost of the commercial airfare. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

5. If government cars (in accordance with applicable rules) are used for Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related travelers on campaign-related trips, the government shall be reimbursed the commercial rental cost of comparable vehicles for the campaign-related travelers.

6. If a meeting room is rented for the purpose of campaign-related activity, the campaign should pay the costs of the room. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

7. The campaign must pay for the hotel rooms of campaign-related travelers. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

8. To document adequately these travel allocations and payments, all agencies should: (i) prepare, or otherwise have available, an itinerary for each trip involving Bush/Cheney '04 activity, and (ii) if government conveyance is used, prepare a list of all passengers, along with a designation as to which passengers are, or are not, campaign-related. A copy of the itinerary should be submitted to Bush/Cheney '04; the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will maintain such information.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. The regulations governing the payment of expenses for travel by federal officials on behalf of the President's campaign committee are in title 11, Code of Federal Regulations. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: RULES REGARDING CORPORATE AND GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT ON POLITICAL TRIPS

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to use of corporate or government aircraft for political trips. (Note that this memorandum does not cover travel on a charter aircraft paid for by a political entity, which is treated the same as ordinary travel on a commercial aircraft where the cost is paid by a political entity.)

I. Corporate Aircraft

A political campaign or party may pay for air transportation of individuals to a political event, including of individuals employed in the Executive Branch who are otherwise allowed to attend the event. See 5 C.F.R. 2635.204(f). In addition, federal law authorizes political campaigns and parties to secure a corporate aircraft to provide air transportation, so long as the campaign or party reimburses the owner of the aircraft under relevant federal statutes and regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 114.9.

As a matter of policy, however, the following steps must occur when an Executive Branch employee travels on a corporate aircraft secured by a political campaign or party for the employee's travel to a political event:

1. The employee should not travel on a corporate aircraft for political travel unless commercial service would not be practically available under the circumstances, taking into account the employee's official schedule and the location and timing of the event.

2. The employee should not travel on an aircraft owned by an entity or individual that is regulated by or doing business with the employee's department or agency, or in circumstances that otherwise would be inappropriate.

3. The relevant political campaign or party must pay the owner of the aircraft in advance by paying the relevant first class airfare (or, in the case of travel to a city not served by a regularly scheduled commercial service, the usual charter rate).

4. For White House employees, advance approval of any use of a corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the Counsel to the President. For other Administration employees, advance approval of any use of corporate aircraft for a political trip must be obtained from the relevant department or agency General Counsel and the Counsel to the President.

5. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the re-election campaign will reimburse first-class airfare from the point of origin to each stop in which campaign-related activity is conducted and back to the point of origin. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7. When the trip is a mixed official-political trip involving political activity other than campaign-related activity for Bush/Cheney '04, the political entity will reimburse first-class airfare based on the hard-time formula, which means that the reimbursable costs of the trip are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503. On all mixed trips, use of a corporate aircraft must also meet the standards for approval under 41 C.F.R. Part 304.

II. Government Aircraft

1. White House employees and other Administration employees should not use government aircraft for travel on political trips or mixed official-political trips unless the employee is required for security reasons to use government aircraft, or the employee is accompanying another official who requires use of a government aircraft for security reasons.

2. Advance approval of any use of a government aircraft for such a trip must be obtained from the Chief of Staff to the President and Counsel to the President. Appropriate first-class reimbursement for political travelers must be made by the campaign or relevant political entity. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(5).

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 19, 2003

MEMORANDUM FOR HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: PAYMENT OF EXPENSES ASSOCIATED WITH POLITICAL TRAVEL DURING THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

This memorandum addresses the allocation of costs for travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee.

The memorandum will be of primary assistance to those who calculate the costs for political and mixed travel. For reference, the rules of allocation and payment are summarized on pages 3-4 of this memorandum.

General Legal Principles

When considering the payment of travel expenses incurred on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee (Bush/Cheney '04), three principles govern. First, appropriated funds may be spent only for the purposes for which they have been appropriated. See 31 U.S.C. 1301. Accordingly, funds appropriated for the official functions of the departments and agencies may be used for travel expenses only if the travel is reasonably related to an official purpose.

The second basic principle is that, in general, official activities should be paid only from funds appropriated for such purposes, unless Congress has authorized the support of those activities by other means. This principle prevents unauthorized augmentation of appropriations.

The third principle involves the requirements of the Federal election laws. Now that the President is a candidate for re-election, travel on behalf of the President's authorized campaign committee must be paid for by Bush/Cheney '04. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3 and by policy 11 C.F.R. 9034.7.

Political and Official Travel

Before an allocation of expenses for travel can be made, a determination must first be made as to whether an appearance is official or political; and, if it is political, whether it is on behalf of Bush/Cheney '04 or another political candidate or committee. For purposes of allocating travel costs during the Presidential campaign, there are three categories of events: 1) official events; 2) Bush/Cheney '04 political events, e.g., a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser; and 3) other political events, e.g., a fundraising event for a non-Presidential candidate.

In determining whether an activity is political or official, all relevant factors should be considered, including, but not limited to, the identity of the sponsor of the event, the group or organization being addressed, other participants, and the nature of the speech being delivered. There is considerable room for discretion in determining whether an event giving rise to an expense is political or official. Ultimately, the question is a factual one that can only be answered by those most familiar with the facts of a given event, trip or situation; accordingly, this determination must be made on a case-by-case basis. White House employees should consult the Counsel's Office, and department and agency employees should consult their General Counsel about these matters.

Generally speaking, appearing at party functions, fundraising, and campaigning for specific candidates should be considered political. In addition, any event that involves solicitation of campaign funds or express advocacy for a candidate or candidates for office will be political. Travel for inspections, meetings to discuss government business, official addresses, and the like ordinarily should be considered official travel, even though the event may have partisan consequences or concern matters on which opinion is politically divided. For a broader discussion of these issues, see 6 Op. O.L.C. 214, 216-217 (1982).

When allocating costs between political and official activities, an additional point should be kept in mind. There are some persons whose official duties may require them to be with the Administration official, whether or not that official is on government business. This group may include, among others, personal aides responsible for assisting in the conduct of official business while an official is traveling and the security detail responsible for an official's protection. Expenses incurred during travel by this group of individuals are official regardless of the character of the event that may be involved.

Bush/Cheney '04 Campaign Travel

The Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will carefully follow rules set forth in Federal Election Commission campaign travel allocation regulations. See 11 C.F.R. 106.3, 9034.7, 9035.1. The travel expenses for campaign-related travelers that are incurred for a stop in which an individual engages in campaign activity on behalf of the President are paid by Bush/Cheney '04. Please note that if any campaign activity for a Presidential candidate, other than incidental contacts, is conducted at a stop, that stop shall be considered campaign-related. Id. 9034.7(b)(2).

Campaign committees for non-Presidential candidates may not pay for the costs of campaign travel on behalf of the President. For example, if a Senatorial candidate schedules a fundraiser back-to-back with a Bush/Cheney '04 fundraiser, the President's campaign committee must pay the travel expenses for the entire stop. See 11 C.F.R. 106 and 9034.7. Also, when there is a question about the nature of a political event, particularly those involving the President and Vice President, the event will presumptively be considered campaign-related, and Bush/Cheney '04 will pay the appropriate travel costs.

Event costs associated with the individual events at a stop involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and official activity -- as opposed to the travel-related costs -- may be divided and allocated. Similarly, event costs associated with a trip involving both Bush/Cheney '04 and other political events likewise may be divided and allocated.

In instances where the same travel costs are incurred in conjunction with official and Bush/Cheney '04 activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the President's campaign committee is determined by using the hypothetical trip formula: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin. Cf. 11 C.F.R. 9034.7(b)(2). Where travel includes political, but not Bush/Cheney '04, activity and official activity, the portion of the trip allocable to the political entities is determined by using the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on time spent on official and political activity. See 5 C.F.R. 734.503.

The rules of allocation and payment are summarized below:

1. The President's campaign committee pays Presidential campaign-related travel costs. This includes transportation, hotel, and per diem costs for campaign-related travelers. For mixed trips, the hypothetical trip formula should be used for all campaign-related travelers: calculating what the trip would have cost from the point of origin through each campaign-related stop and back to the point of origin.

2. Costs associated with political activity that occurs on a mixed trip that does not involve any Bush/Cheney '04 activity are allocated according to the hard-time formula, under which relevant costs are divided based on the time spent on official and political activity. If any Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related activities occur on a trip, the costs of the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign stops must be allocated according to the hypothetical trip formula.

3. If government aircraft (in accordance with applicable rules) is used for Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the campaign committee must pay the appropriate government entity the first-class commercial airfare for each traveler (except official travelers) in the case of travel to a city served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial service. In the case of travel to a city that is not served by regularly scheduled first-class commercial airline service, the campaign must reimburse the appropriate government entity the commercial coach airfare for each traveler (except official travelers). The campaign committee must pay the commercial charter rate in the case of travel to a city not served by regularly scheduled commercial service. (For political travel that is not Bush/Cheney '04 travel, the reimbursement is at commercial coach rate.)

4. If an Administration official travels to the political event by commercial airline, the campaign is obliged to pay the actual cost of the commercial airfare. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

5. If government cars (in accordance with applicable rules) are used for Bush/Cheney '04 campaign-related travelers on campaign-related trips, the government shall be reimbursed the commercial rental cost of comparable vehicles for the campaign-related travelers.

6. If a meeting room is rented for the purpose of campaign-related activity, the campaign should pay the costs of the room. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

7. The campaign must pay for the hotel rooms of campaign-related travelers. The campaign may not take advantage of government rates.

8. To document adequately these travel allocations and payments, all agencies should: (i) prepare, or otherwise have available, an itinerary for each trip involving Bush/Cheney '04 activity, and (ii) if government conveyance is used, prepare a list of all passengers, along with a designation as to which passengers are, or are not, campaign-related. A copy of the itinerary should be submitted to Bush/Cheney '04; the Bush/Cheney '04 campaign will maintain such information.

Conclusion

All Executive Branch employees must comply with relevant laws and regulations governing political activity and with the highest ethical standards. The regulations governing the payment of expenses for travel by federal officials on behalf of the President's campaign committee are in title 11, Code of Federal Regulations. If White House employees have questions about these rules, they should contact the Counsel's office. If department or agency employees have questions about these rules, they should contact their department or agency General Counsel.

Subject: Holy Land Foundation -- win in CADC

Peter Keisler called to report another win. CADC (affirming a ruling by DDC) today rejected a challenge by the the Hamas-linked Holy Land Foundation ("HLF") to Treasury's designation of HLF as a terrorist group ("Specially Designated Global Terrorist," or "SDGT"). This designation came under the IEEPA, and resulted in the blocking of all of HLF's assets.

This was another Sentelle opinion (joined by Ginsburg and Henderson).

CADC's opinion states, in relevant part: "Treasury's decision to designate HLF as an SDGT was based on ample evidence in a massive administrative record."

Kerry says he'll filibuster Supreme Court nominees who do not support abortion rights

NEDRA PICKLER, Associated Press Writer

Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry said Friday that he is prepared to block any Supreme Court nominee who would not uphold the Roe
v. Wade decision that legalized abortion.

"I am prepared to filibuster, if necessary, any Supreme Court nominee who would turn back the clock on a woman's right to choose or the constitutional right to privacy, on civil rights and individual liberties and on the laws protecting workers and the environment," Kerry said in remarks prepared for delivery via satellite at a meeting of Democratic party officials in St. Paul, Minn.

"The test is basic -- any person who thinks it's his or her job to push an extreme political agenda rather than to interpret the law should not be a Supreme Court justice."

Kerry, a Massachusetts senator and one of nine Democrats seeking the party's presidential nomination, is staking out a position favorable to liberal women. Kerry also has said if elected president he would only appoint judges who support Roe v. Wade, while his opponents for the nomination say they would not impose a litmus test on nominees.

All nine Democratic presidential candidates support abortion rights. President Bush has said he would fill any Supreme Court vacancies with judges such as Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas, two of the most conservative justices on the high court who are presumed to favor the abolition of Roe v. Wade.

None of the nine current Supreme Court justices has announced plans to retire, but Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, are considered the most likely possibilities. Both would prefer that a Republican president pick their successors.

Republicans control the Senate by two votes; there are 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent. But Democrats can block any potential nominee through a filibuster if they can get 41 votes.

Senate Democrats have used a filibuster to block President Bush's nominations of two federal judges this year.

Several Senate Democrats recently sent letters to the White House asking Bush to meet with Senate leaders from both parties to talk about possible nominations and ways to avoid a bruising battle in the Senate. White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales indicated on Thursday that there was a possibility of consultations with senators, but said no final decision has been made.

Justice Marshall has rendered extraordinary and distinguished service to his country as a pioneering civil rights lawyer, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, as Solicitor General, and in his tenure on the Supreme Court. His career is an inspiring example for all Americans. He grew up under segregation to achieve the highest office to which a lawyer can aspire. His accomplishments on the Bench will long be remembered. We wish him the best in his retirement. I intend to nominate a successor very soon.

LIKE FATHER, LIKE CLERK

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas first met Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson in 1974 as they studied for the Missouri Bar exam. Next year, Thompson's son Larry Thompson Jr. will work for Justice Thomas in his chambers as a law clerk.

Thomas revealed the hire during a recent talk with students at Banneker High School in Washington, D.C. A student asked Thomas whether any of his contemporaries were as successful professionally as he is. Coincidentally, the student asking the question said his name was Larry Thompson. Thomas laughed that "that's a very important name" for him -- because of his friend, the Justice Department official, and Larry Jr., who will soon be one of Thomas' law clerks. Justice Thomas said the elder Thompson is "one of the smartest, most talented people I know," adding that Larry Jr. is "equally talented."

The younger Thompson just graduated from New York University School of Law, and this summer begins a one-year stint as a law clerk to J. Michael Luttig, a judge on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and a leading supplier of clerks to the high court. When he heads to the Supreme Court, Thompson will be Thomas' second African-American law clerk. His first, Stephen Smith, is now an associate professor at the University of Virginia School of Law. During a C-SPAN interview earlier this month, the deputy attorney general was shown videotape of the comments by Justice Thomas. "My son is much more qualified than I am," he said.

Thompson the father was also asked if he himself might soon be working at the Supreme Court -- as a justice. With regularity, Thompson's name pops up in the D.C. rumor mill as a potential nominee. Though he did not completely reject the idea, Thompson said he intended to return to Atlanta after leaving the Justice Department. He also said it was "highly unlikely" that someone like himself, who has never been a judge, would be appointed to the high court.

Subject: positive piece on Steve Limbaugh -- good quotes from Ronnie White about him

Supreme Court judge Limbaugh nears end as chief justice

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. -- In addition to tackling the pressing legal issues of the day, the Missouri Supreme Court sits as a seven-member board of directors over the state's judicial branch.

As chief justice for the last two years, Stephen N. Limbaugh Jr. of Cape Girardeau has been the chairman of the board.

Though the job has been rewarding, Limbaugh said overseeing the judicial branch, which has 3,600 employees and a $160 million budget, has also meant a lot of extra work.

"I suppose I've spent two-thirds of my time on administrative matters rather than on the work of the court, though I have kept a full caseload," Limbaugh said.

While he will remain on the bench, his tenure as chief justice ends July 1. The post rotates among the court's members every two years, with the job going to the most senior judge who hasn't had a turn.

Judge Ronnie L. White of St. Louis will succeed Limbaugh to become the court's first black chief.

Given Missouri's role in the infamous Dred Scott case that helped precipitate the Civil War, Limbaugh said it's well past time for an African-American to serve in the position.

"That is an important symbolic event and something for Missourians to celebrate," Limbaugh said.

White, who was appointed in 1995 by Gov. Mel Carnahan, will also be the first Democratic appointee to hold the post since 1987.

Though he sometimes disagrees with Limbaugh on legal interpretations, White said Limbaugh is a valued friend who will be a tough to replace as the court's leader.

"I thought Steve was an outstanding chief justice," White said. "He had to take over at a time of severe financial difficulties in the state and in particular the judiciary. No other chief justice in my time had to face that."

White, 56, deferred comment on his upcoming tenure until next week but said he is looking forward to the challenge.

"My only hesitation is if I can live up to the standard others have set," White said.

Swing to Democrats

Until last year, Republican-appointees had dominated the court since the mid-1980s. Judges chosen by Democratic governors now hold a 4-3 majority. White said the change has had little impact.

"I think everybody on the court still works together to come up with solutions everybody understands," White said.

Although the court split along partisan lines in a pair of death penalty cases handed down this week, such divisions are an exception.

Limbaugh, appointed to the court by Republican Gov. John Ashcroft in 1992, said the judges strive for unanimity when possible, though disagreements occur.

"We come from broadly diverse backgrounds, and each one of the judges contributes special strengths," Limbaugh said. "Diversity of opinion is a healthy thing."

One of the chief justice's roles is to lobby the Missouri Legislature for funding. Instead of painting a dire picture of the consequences of funding cuts like some agency heads, Limbaugh simply asked lawmakers to do their best.

"I was smart enough to know asking for money would be pointless and only irritate legislators," Limbaugh said, joking.

He regrets the fact that on his watch funding for various judicial initiatives was deeply slashed, which leaves the ongoing effort to automate state courts at a standstill.

The judge earned high marks from lawmakers for his low-key approach.

"He was never one to come over and use high-pressure influence," said state Rep. Rob Mayer, R-Dexter.

Mayer also praised Limbaugh for championing reform of the family court and foster care systems before a joint legislative session in January.

"The great thing was he had a first-hand knowledge of the system and was aware of its flaws and places where it was broken," Mayer said.

Limbaugh, who handled a number of child abuse cases as a Cape Girardeau County Circuit Court judge, established a special commission of members of all three branches of government to examine the problem. The panel's recommendations led to the passage of reform legislation last month.

The Supreme Court also took unilateral efforts to improve the judiciary's performance in such matters, such as mandating cross training of family court judges so they better understand the roles of foster care caseworkers and others in the system.

"We don't want it ever to be said a tragedy resulted from a failure to communicate between those various components of the system," Limbaugh said.

Barring an unforeseen opportunity, Limbaugh, 51, plans to seek another 12-year term when his current one expires in 2006. It's entirely possible, he said, that he could remain on the high court until he reaches the mandatory retirement age of 70.

OMB Access

1. Because of the critical nature of OMBs mission, the Congress has considerable interest in, and oversight responsibility for, OMBs implementation of its statutory responsibilities. Accordingly, having complete, accurate, and timely information about OMBs activities is paramount to Congress ability to carry out its responsibilities.

a. What are your views on providing Congress timely and accurate access to federal agency records and other information and to federal officials, if necessary, for Congress to fulfill its oversight responsibilities?

b. What are your views on providing congressional and GAO access to OMB records and other information and to key federal officials within OMB?

c. How would you propose establishing and maintaining constructive working relationships with the Congress, as well as resolving any potential disputes regarding access to information and officials?

d. GAO supports the Congress in fulfilling its constitutional duties, and Congress often relies on its work. The Committee has heard that GAO has experienced difficulties in its efforts to meet and talk with appropriate OMB staff and to obtain access to necessary information in a timely manneroften for work that is either a statutory mandate or a Committee request and hence required work for GAO. How would you propose to establish and maintain a working relationship with GAO and to resolve any difficulty over access to people and information?

Congress should have timely access to accurate information, consistent with its constitutional and statutory obligations to oversee the Executive Branch. In addition, the Executive Branch has legitimate constitutional interests in protecting the confidentiality of its deliberations, such as internal advice and recommendations. I will work to accommodate Congress interests while at the same time protecting the prerogatives of the Executive Branch. Finally, I respect GAOs need to collect information as part of GAOs response to statutory reporting requirements or congressional requests for a GAO review.

What would you think if we could shorten and rephrase as follows:

Congress should have timely access to accurate information consistent with the constitutional and statutory prerogatives and obligations of the Executive Branch. I will work to accommodate the interests of Congress and the GAO fully and appropriately, consistent with those constitutional and statutory prerogatives and obligations of the Executive Branch. Should I have any questions about a request for information, I would consult as appropriate with officials from OMB's General Counsel, the Counsel to the President, and the Department of Justice.

Thanks for your help.

OMB Access

1. Because of the critical nature of OMBs mission, the Congress has considerable interest in, and oversight responsibility for, OMBs implementation of its statutory responsibilities. Accordingly, having complete, accurate, and timely information about OMBs activities is paramount to Congress ability to carry out its responsibilities.

a. What are your views on providing Congress timely and accurate access to federal agency records and other information and to federal officials, if necessary, for Congress to fulfill its oversight responsibilities?

b. What are your views on providing congressional and GAO access to OMB records and other information and to key federal officials within OMB?

c. How would you propose establishing and maintaining constructive working relationships with the Congress, as well as resolving any potential disputes regarding access to information and officials?

d. GAO supports the Congress in fulfilling its constitutional duties, and Congress often relies on its work. The Committee has heard that GAO has experienced difficulties in its efforts to meet and talk with appropriate OMB staff and to obtain access to necessary information in a timely manneroften for work that is either a statutory mandate or a Committee request and hence required work for GAO. How would you propose to establish and maintain a working relationship with GAO and to resolve any difficulty over access to people and information?

CONGRESS: Strange objections

Democratic senators clearly crossed the line in their zeal to find fault with President Bush's judicial nominees.

It was bad enough when qualified legal scholars were deemed unacceptable on the grounds that they were insufficiently supportive of abortion or guilty of being "conservative while Hispanic."

Sen. Russ Feingold took politically correct witch hunts to a new level, however, when he raised the issue of whether one nominee had done something wrong by not taking his daughters, ages 4 and 6, to Disney World during "gay days."

Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor, under questioning from Feingold, repeatedly confirmed that he had rescheduled a trip to Disney to avoid the homosexual celebration.

Feingold may find that to be a terrible, homophobic thing to do. Most Americans, we are certain, would disagree.

There is nothing morally wrong or inherently evil about wanting to protect childhood innocence.

The fact that a man is a concerned father shouldn't be grounds to exclude him from the judiciary, but rather the reverse.

I have a basic paragraph for each of the three most likely scenarios.

But we will obviously have to do an instant analysis and then refine it.

In the event it is handed down tomorrow, is there any reason to have someone at the court to get it, or will it be available in real time online for us to review and discuss.

On April 11, at the Bethesda naval hospital, George W. and Laura Bush looked on as Master Gunnery Sgt. Guadalupe Donogean, a Mexican wounded in Iraq, was sworn in as a U.S. citizen. Some 37,000 noncitizens, most of them Hispanic, serve in the U.S. military; Congress is speeding through legislation to make it easier for them to become citizens, and two non- citizens killed in Iraq were granted citizenship posthumously. "It was a very profound moment," Bush said outside the hospital. "We were both honored to witness this." Many Democrats fear that the vision of Bush landing on the aircraft carrier USS Abraham Lincoln will win votes for him in 2004. But reverberations from that moment in Bethesda, or others like it, may be politically more potent.

That is because Hispanic immigrants are the fastest-growing and politically most fluid segment of the electorate. They were 7 percent of voters in 2000 and could be 9 percent in 2004, most of them in big states. Al Gore carried Hispanics 62 percent to 35 percent. But Bush has courted them assiduously, speaking Spanish, hailing the contributions of immigrants, proposing relaxation of immigration laws (though that's on the back burner now). Every department press office must have a Spanish-speaking spokesperson; Housing and Urban Development Secretary Mel Martinez appears often on the Univision and Telemundo television networks and talks not just about housing but also about foreign policy and defense.

All of this has paid off. Bush's favorable rating among Hispanics is high--63 percent in a recent Zogby poll, almost as high as his 69 percent among whites and much higher than his 50 percent among blacks. Interestingly, Bush is rated higher among immigrant and Spanish-dominant Hispanics than among the U.S.-born and English-dominant; many of the latter have gotten used to voting Democratic, while newcomers are more open to Bush's appeals. Other Republicans have won about half or more of Hispanic votes in 2001 or 2002--Mayor Michael Bloomberg and Gov. George Pataki in New York, Govs. Jeb Bush in Florida and Bill Owens in Colorado. These are voters up for grabs.

Court fight. Bush will have another issue working for him with Hispanics: the Democrats' blocking of the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada. Democrats think this is a low-visibility issue and point out that the (all-Democratic) House Hispanic Caucus and the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund oppose Estrada. But the two Hispanic organizations with the largest memberships don't: The League of United Latin American Citizens supports Estrada, and the National Council of La Raza is neutral. Martinez and other administration representatives appear frequently on Spanish-language TV and radio to attack Democrats for opposing Estrada, to the point that some Democrats have charged Univision with bias. The message may be getting through. A poll of Hispanics by the pro-Estrada Committee for Justice shows that a surprisingly high 33 percent are aware that Estrada has been nominated and not confirmed.

It is not hard to imagine the ad Bush could run on Spanish-language TV in 2004: President Bush has nominated a Hispanic who came to this country at 17 speaking little English, who graduated from Harvard Law School and argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court--but the Democrats are blocking him by holding him to a different standard from that of any other nominee. Which they are. They demanded to see memos he wrote while in the solicitor general's office, even though such memos have never been revealed before and though they did not make the same demand of another nominee who worked there. They subjected him to a filibuster--something never before done to a judicial nominee with the votes to be confirmed. This could be political dynamite--a narrative that shows Bush honoring an immigrant who has worked hard and achieved great things and the Democrats discriminating against him. Democrats, confident in 2002 that they would pay no political price for opposing Bush on homeland security at the behest of federal employees' unions, seem confident now that they will pay no political price for opposing him on Estrada at the behest of abortion-rights groups. But in 2002 Bush showed he can shine the spotlight on the hitherto obscure homeland security issue, just as he could shine the spotlight on marines becoming citizens in Bethesda. He could shine it on Estrada in 2004. Democrats think blocking Estrada is clever politics. But they risk alienating America's fastest-growing and most fluid voting bloc.

Michigan verdict forethought

By Roger Clegg
THE WASHINGTON TIMES
Published June 23, 2003

Politicians are always tempted to wait for an event to happen before thinking about how to react — why borrow trouble, after all. But the Bush administration will be making a big mistake if it doesn't get its ducks in a row now for the Supreme Court's affirmative-action decision, which will come down this week.

The central issue to be decided in the pair of University of Michigan admissions cases currently under review at the high court is whether achieving "diversity" in a college setting is so compellingly important that using racial and ethnic preferences in the admissions process to achieve that goal is justified. The case attracted a record number of friend-of-the-court briefs from interested parties, but the Big Kahuna brief was submitted by the Bush administration.

What's more, the day it was filed the president himself went before the nation in a live broadcast from the Roosevelt Room of the White House to explain why he was urging the court to rule that Michigan's policies are unlawful. His position in the case drew an immediate salvo from the leading Democrat presidential contenders, but those criticisms will look gentle compared to what you will hear if Michigan ultimately loses.

So, if the Supreme Court follows the administration's advice and strikes down the UM admissions policies, the White House better brace itself for an onslaught of hysterical paroxysms from the Democrats, their allies in the higher education bureaucracies, and, it goes without saying, the "civil rights" advocacy groups.

The reaction of the latter groups, in particular, isn't going to be pretty. In fact, if the past is prologue, the rhetoric of the hard-charging race-demagogues to a loss in the UM cases could be out-and-out dangerous.

Don't scoff. After all, it was only seven years ago that eight people gruesomely died in Freddy's Fashion Mart in Harlem after Al Sharpton demanded that the Jewish owner — a "white interloper," Rev. Al called him — be forced out. God willing, nothing remotely like this will take place. And surely it helps that universities are currently on summer break. But no one should dismiss out-of-hand the real possibility of angry marches and demonstrations that have the potential of turning violent.

The establishment press will chime in with stories and editorials about how the c ourt has "turned back the clock on civil rights" and turned our institutions of higher learning into lily-white enclaves. It is also quite possible that congressional Democrats will immediately propose legislation attempting to gut any decision the justices offer that favors colorblind legal precepts in university admissions. (If a justice retires, this issue will be front and center at the new nominee's confirmation hearings.)

Sadly, judging from their squishiness over the last few years, it's a fair wager that Republicans, especially in the House and Senate, may head for the high grass rather than defend the principle of nondiscrimination. So the job of defending the decision of the high court will fall to the president.

The president should not shirk that opportunity — he should welcome it. While the Democrats, media and civil rights establishment are assailing Mr. Bush's positions in the UM cases, Mr. Bush can score his own points by contrasting his equal opportunity vision of civil rights with those of his pro-preference opponents.

This will take some forethought on his part because of the president's desire to expand the GOP's reach into minority communities, especially Hispanics, and so he needs to start honing that message now. For starters, the president's should remind the nation after the decision is handed own that eliminating racial preferences in college admissions means the nation is that much closer to ending what he has called the "soft bigotry of low expectations" that cast a shadow over all minority students.

If the administration unapologetically champions principled and colorblind public policies, that won't negate the GOP's efforts to broaden the party's appeal to minorities. Poll after poll shows that racial preferences are overwhelmingly unpopular with all Americans, of all ethnicities. But hesitation will be fatal, as will obfuscation, waffling, and pandering on racial preferences. The president's opponents will always be able to out-quota him.

Either the preference apologists will argue that the court's decision leaves the door open to uses of race that it does not (as, indeed, they have been doing during the 25 years since the court's last decision in this area), or — if the court shuts the door tightly enough against the use of race — they will assert that the decision "turns back the clock" on civil rights, and has no more legitimacy than a Jim Crow law.

Either way, those opposing preferences need to counter that spin immediately. No, the door does not remain open to discriminate, and, no, that is not a bad thing: The end of universities' systematic and institutionalized discrimination is, to the contrary, a welcome event for all Americans.

The White House must stand up and support the court's decision — which, after all, the administration asked for, and thus implicitly reassured the court that, if it stuck out its institutional neck by doing the right thing, it would not be left hanging. The Justice and Education Departments need to issue their own, authoritative interpretations of the court's ruling quickly and promise they will monitor and "work with" universities to ensure those decisions are followed.

Regardless of the scope of the final ruling against racial and ethnic preferences in university admissions, every left-leaning group in the country will demonize the president. He should stand up and immediately fight toe-to-toe with them. He'll win and so will the country.

Beyond the Pale

Many of the Bush administration's judicial nominees have been evasive about their positions on abortion, but not William Pryor. Mr. Pryor, Alabama's attorney general, has declared that Roe v. Wade, the landmark ruling upholding abortion rights, "ripped the Constitution and ripped out the life of millions of unborn children." He has shown the same lack of subtlety — and fierce ideological agenda — on issues ranging from civil rights to states' rights and gay rights. His extremism and disdain for the legal rights of many Americans make him unsuited to be a federal judge.

Mr. Pryor, who has been nominated to the Atlanta-based United States Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit, has a record of incendiary comments that show a lack of judicial temperament and a cynical view of the law. When he disagreed with the Supreme Court's decision to delay an execution in a capital punishment case, he dismissed the court as "nine octogenarian lawyers." On another occasion, he ended a speech with a prayer for "no more Souters," a blast at Supreme Court Justice David Souter, a moderate.

As Alabama attorney general, Mr. Pryor has turned his office into a taxpayer-financed right-wing law firm. He has testified to Congress in favor of dropping a key part of the Voting Rights Act. In a Supreme Court case challenging the Violence Against Women Act, 36 state attorneys general urged the court to uphold the law. Mr. Pryor was the only one to argue that the law was unconstitutional. This term, he submitted a brief in favor of a Texas law that makes gay sex illegal, comparing it to necrophilia, bestiality, incest and pedophilia.

Mr. Pryor has taken particularly outlandish positions on "federalism," a dangerous states' rights movement that seeks to take away federal rights. This term, he urged the Supreme Court to make nearly five million state employees ineligible to sue for damages under the Family and Medical Leave Act. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, a strong supporter of federalism, wrote the opinion rejecting Mr. Pryor's position as too extreme. In another states' rights case this term, involving statutes of limitations, the court rejected Mr. Pryor 9 to 0.

Judicial nominees are often accused of undergoing "confirmation conversions," backing away from controversial stands to win Senate support. But there is no great honor in the positions Mr. Pryor stuck to at his confirmation hearing: that Roe was "morally wrong" and responsible for "the slaughter of millions of unborn children," that part of the Voting Rights Act should be repealed and that when he rescheduled his family's vacation to Disney World to avoid a day when many gays attend, it was a legitimate "value judgment."

If a far-right legal group needs a lawyer to argue extreme positions against abortion, women's rights, gay rights and civil rights, Mr. Pryor may be a suitable candidate. But he does not belong on the federal bench.

University of Michigan deserves our complete respect.; My administration will study it carefully to ensure that we comply with the mandates of the Constitution as we continue our work to achieve the ideal of equal treatment under law for people of all races.; As I noted in January, at the time our briefs in the Michigan cases were filed, I strongly support diversity of all kinds, including racial diversity in higher education.; Today's decision makes clear, however, that as we pursue diversity, we must be ever mindful not to use means that create another wrong, and thus perpetuate our divisions. My administration will continue to actively promote diversity and opportunity in every way that the law permits.

Subject: NYT on Pryor

Happy Monday. Not surprising.

June 23, 2003

Beyond the Pale

Many of the Bush administration's judicial nominees have been evasive about their positions on abortion, but not William Pryor. Mr. Pryor, Alabama's attorney general, has declared that Roe v. Wade, the landmark ruling upholding abortion rights, "ripped the Constitution and ripped out the life of millions of unborn children."

He has shown the same lack of subtlety - and fierce ideological agenda - on issues ranging from civil rights to states' rights and gay rights. His extremism and disdain for the legal rights of many Americans make him unsuited to be a federal judge.

Mr. Pryor, who has been nominated to the Atlanta-based United States Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit, has a record of incendiary comments that show a lack of judicial temperament and a cynical view of the law. When he disagreed with the Supreme Court's decision to delay an execution in a capital punishment case, he dismissed the court as "nine octogenarian lawyers." On another occasion, he ended a speech with a prayer for "no more Souters," a blast at Supreme Court Justice David Souter, a moderate.

As Alabama attorney general, Mr. Pryor has turned his office into a taxpayer-financed right-wing law firm. He has testified to Congress in favor of dropping a key part of the Voting Rights Act. In a Supreme Court case challenging the Violence Against Women Act, 36 state attorneys general urged the court to uphold the law. Mr. Pryor was the only one to argue that the law was unconstitutional. This term, he submitted a brief in favor of a Texas law that makes gay sex illegal, comparing it to necrophilia, bestiality, incest and pedophilia.

Mr. Pryor has taken particularly outlandish positions on "federalism," a dangerous states' rights movement that seeks to take away federal rights. This term, he urged the Supreme Court to make nearly five million state employees ineligible to sue for damages under the Family and Medical Leave Act. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, a strong supporter of federalism, wrote the opinion rejecting Mr. Pryor's position as too extreme. In another states' rights case this term, involving statutes of limitations, the court rejected Mr. Pryor 9 to 0.

Judicial nominees are often accused of undergoing "confirmation conversions," backing away from controversial stands to win Senate support. But there is no great honor in the positions Mr. Pryor stuck to at his confirmation hearing: that Roe was "morally wrong" and responsible for "the slaughter of millions of unborn children," that part of the Voting Rights Act should be repealed and that when he rescheduled his family's vacation to Disney World to avoid a day when many gays attend, it was a legitimate "value judgment."

If a far-right legal group needs a lawyer to argue extreme positions against abortion, women's rights, gay rights and civil rights, Mr. Pryor may be a suitable candidate. But he does not belong on the federal bench.

US top court allows university race preferences

;;;;;;;;;;;;;;; WASHINGTON, June 23 (Reuters) - The U.S. Supreme Court upheld on Monday the University of Michigan's affirmative action policy that favors minorities who apply to its law school.

;;;;;;;;;;;;;;; It was the high court's first ruling on the important civil rights issue in 25 years.

;;;;;;;;;;;;;;; The U.S. Constitution ``does not prohibit the law school's narrowly tailored use of race in admissions decisions to further a compelling interest in obtaining the educational benefits that flow from a diverse student body,'' Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said for the court majority.

Conservatives Call Affirmative Action Rulings 'Disgusting' and 'Disappointing'

By Robert B. Bluey

CNSNews.com Staff Writer

June 23, 2003

(CNSNews.com) - The U.S. Supreme Court blew its chance to end discriminatory practices in college admissions, according to disappointed conservatives reacting to Monday's ruling that upholds the use of racial preferences.

In two split decisions Monday, the court ruled 5-4 that the University of Michigan could keep the affirmative action policy used at its law school, but a 6-3 majority said it must revamp the "point system" for undergraduate admissions.

Two Republican members of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights expressed disappointment in the rulings and assailed the court for allowing race as a factor in admissions.

"The court should be ashamed of itself, and this nation should be ashamed of itself for celebrating," said Abigail Thernstrom, a commissioner and senior fellow at the conservative Manhattan Institute.

"We have just signed on to quotas for the foreseeable future for decades to come," she added. "We're going to have race-driven decision making from now on with the moral legitimacy of the court. It's disgusting."

Thernstrom said the court was "buffaloed by rotten social science," and her colleague on the commission, Cleveland labor lawyer Peter Kirsanow, said the court relied on so-called "expert studies" on race, many of which have been debunked.

In Kirsanow's view, the key issue came down the court's finding in the law school decision that student body diversity was a compelling government interest.

"The majority opinion is impressive in how it can contort the plain and unambiguous language of the 14th Amendment into a license to discriminate, albeit carefully," Kirsanow said.

As long as universities don't use overt point systems or numerical indices that emphasize race, they will still be able to consider racial preferences, he said. Many schools - and probably businesses as well - will now tailor their affirmative action policies to the law school's approach, Kirsanow said.

The White House released a statement partly praising the Supreme Court for recognizing the value of diversity, but also stressing the need to for a race-neutral society.

"The court has made clear that colleges and universities must engage in a serious, good faith consideration of workable race-neutral alternatives," President Bush said in the statement. "I agree that we must look first to these race-neutral approaches to make campuses more welcoming for all students."

Despite Bush's reaction, other conservatives, including Kirsanow and Thernstrom, were less optimistic.

"Every conservative I've spoken to - and those who aren't trying to spin - are sourly disappointed with this," Kirsanow said.

The much-anticipated rulings brought a positive response from the University of Michigan. President Mary Sue Coleman called them a victory for higher education since they uphold the use of affirmative action to achieve the goal of diversity. She said the ruling regarding undergraduates gives the school a "road map" for how to proceed.

Liberal interest groups also rallied behind the ruling.

"The Supreme Court's affirmation of the constitutionality of affirmative action represents a victory for America's march from our segregated, racist past," said Ralph G. Neas, president of People for the American Way Foundation. "Today, the Court gave us a signal that affirmative action can stay in order to promote diversity."

Sorry to bring a new issue up, but the current preview on page 1 of the White House web page says what is quoted below.

"President Bush applauded Monday's Supreme Court decisions for recognizing the value of diversity on our Nation's campuses and said these "decisions seek a careful balance between the goal of campus diversity and the fundamental principle of equal treatment under the law."

Again, the problem (technical but important) is that President did not applaud the decisions themselves in his actual statement.

Let Judges Do Their Jobs
By JOHN S. MARTIN Jr.

I have served as a federal judge for 13 years. Having reached retirement age, I now have the option of continuing to be a judge for the rest of my life, with a reduced workload, or returning to private practice. Although I find my work to be interesting and challenging, I have decided to join the growing number of federal judges who retire to join the private sector.

When I became a federal judge, I accepted the fact that I would be paid much less than I could earn in private practice; judges make less than second-year associates at many law firms, and substantially less than a senior Major League umpire. I believed I would be compensated by the satisfaction of serving the public good — the administration of justice. In recent years, however, this sense has been replaced by the distress I feel at being part of a sentencing system that is unnecessarily cruel and rigid.

For most of our history, our system of justice operated on the premise that justice in sentencing is best achieved by having a sentence imposed by a judge who, fully informed about the offense and the offender, has discretion to impose a sentence within the statutory limits. Although most judges and legal scholars recognize the need for discretion in sentencing, Congress has continually tried to limit it, initially through the adoption of mandatory-minimum sentencing laws.

Congress's distrust of judicial discretion led to the adoption in 1984 of the Sentencing Reform Act, which created the United States Sentencing Commission. The commission was created on the premise, not unreasonable, that uniformity in sentencing nationwide could be promoted if judges and other criminal law experts provided guidelines for federal judges to follow in imposing sentences. However, Congress has tried to micromanage the work of the commission and has undermined its efforts to provide judges with some discretion in sentencing or to ameliorate excessively harsh terms.

For example, when an extensive study demonstrated that there was no justification for treating crack cocaine as 100 times more dangerous than powdered cocaine, the ratio adopted by Congress in fixing mandatory minimum sentences, the commission proposed reducing the guideline ratios. However, the proposal was withdrawn when Congressional leaders made it clear that Congress would overrule it.

Congress's most recent assault on judicial independence is found in amendments that were tacked onto the Amber Alert bill, which President Bush signed into law on April 30. These amendments are an effort to intimidate judges to follow sentencing guidelines.

From the outset, the sentencing commission recognized the need to avoid too rigid an application of the guideline system and provided that judges would have the power to adjust sentences when circumstances in an individual case warranted. The recent amendments require the commission to amend the guidelines to reduce such adjustments and require that every one be reported to Congress. They also require that departures by district judges be reviewed by the appellate courts with little deference to the sentencing judge.

Congress's disdain for the judiciary is further manifested in a provision that changes the requirement that "at least three" of the seven members of the sentencing commission be federal judges to a restriction that "no more than" three judges may serve on it. Apparently Congress believes America's sentencing system will be jeopardized if more than three members of the commission have actual experience in imposing sentences.

Every sentence imposed affects a human life and, in most cases, the lives of several innocent family members who suffer as a result of a defendant's incarceration. For a judge to be deprived of the ability to consider all of the factors that go into formulating a just sentence is completely at odds with the sentencing philosophy that has been a hallmark of the American system of justice.

When I took my oath of office 13 years ago I never thought that I would leave the federal bench. While I might have stayed on despite the inadequate pay, I no longer want to be part of our unjust criminal justice system.

John S. Martin Jr. is a federal district judge in Manhattan.

Supreme Court Quotas

Justice O'Connor provides the fifth vote for racial preferences.

Tuesday, June 24, 2003 12:01 a.m. EDT

Anyone looking for legal, much less moral, clarity from yesterday's Supreme Court rulings on race-based admissions at the University of Michigan was surely disappointed. What we got instead was another look at Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's split-the-baby jurisprudence, and another generation of polarizing race-based public policy.

In Gratz v. Bollinger, the court struck down, 6-3, the crude point system used in undergraduate admissions at Michigan, whereby being black carried more weight than a perfect SAT score. But in Grutter v. Bollinger, the more significant companion ruling written by Justice O'Connor, by a 5-4 vote the court upheld racial discrimination in Michigan's law school recruitment.

In his Grutter dissent, Justice Scalia mocks this muddle. "Unlike a clear constitutional holding that racial preferences in state educational institutions are impermissible," he writes, "or even a clear anticonstitutional holding that racial preferences in state educational institutions are OK, today's Grutter-Gratz split double header seems perversely designed to prolong the controversy and the litigation."

A cynic might conclude that yesterday's decisions mean universities can still racially discriminate, as long as they're not too obvious about it. That cynicism is based on a quarter-century of racial preference shenanigans instigated by the late Justice Lewis Powell's 1978 Bakke opinion. In a part of his opinion that was joined by no other Justice, Powell argued that "diversity" is a compelling state interest. And ever since, college administrators have relied on his reasoning to justify racial bias in admissions.

Now Justice O'Connor, writing for the majority on the law-school case, has given that view the fifth vote it needed to become the law of the land. The Constitution, said Justice O'Connor, "does not prohibit the law school's narrowly tailored use of race in admissions decisions to further a compelling interest in obtaining the educational benefits that flow from a diverse student body."

Justice O'Connor has been on the fence for years on racial preferences, voting against them on such matters as government contracting. So in Grutter she strives to explain why education is special. Her reasons include nothing quantifiable, but come down to such things as "cross-racial understanding" and the desire to "cultivate a set of leaders with legitimacy in the eyes of the citizenry." And you probably thought the goal of Michigan Law School was a legal education. In his notable dissent, Justice Clarence Thomas cuts to shreds this insulting notion of a constitutional justification for universities using otherwise unqualified racial minorities to enrich the learning experience of whites.

Justice O'Connor was long ago identified as the swing vote on the Michigan cases. She has always been an intensely political judge who takes cues from the opinion polls, the political establishment and the press, in addition to the law. So her confusing split decision was probably guaranteed once the Bush Administration filed its own muddled brief in the Michigan cases.

If the White House was unwilling to assert unequivocally that racial discrimination is wrong, even when practiced in the service of the best intentions, there was very little chance that Justice O'Connor would wander out on that politically unpopular limb by herself.

A White House statement unpersuasively spun yesterday's decision as a victory. But in one sense it is the first Supreme Court decision issued by White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, who is widely believed to be President Bush's choice for the High Court when the next Justice retires. Mr. Gonzales helped to overrule those at the Justice Department who understood how Justice O'Connor would interpret their brief's legal ambivalence.

The one silver lining in yesterday's Grutter opinion is Justice O'Connor's own lack of confidence in it. She admits that race-based policies are so constitutionally suspect that they must be "time-limited" and predicts that they will be gone at Michigan in 25 years. Alas, that is probably also what Justice Powell thought when he wrote Bakke, precisely 25 years ago.

Chief Justice Rehnquist has served with honor and distinction as a member of the Supreme Court for more than three decades. The Nation owes him a debt of deep gratitude for his extended public service on the Supreme Court as well as in World War II and at the Department of Justice. His record of accomplishments on the bench will long be studied and remembered for its consistency of vision and contribution to the Court's jurisprudence. During his 17 years as Chief Justice, he provided effective and disciplined leadership of the "Rehnquist Court" as it grappled with some of the most difficult and important issues facing our society, and federal judges from across the philosophical spectrum have welcomed the manner in which he has led the Court and the judiciary. With our hearfelt thanks for his service, we wish him the best in his retirement.

Specter boosts Hatch for future court vacancy
By Geoff Earle and Sarita Chourey

As President Bush ponders how to fill a potential vacancy on the Supreme Court, Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) thinks he need look no further than the Senate.

Specter is touting Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) as someone whose close personal ties with his colleagues might help him clear the chamber.

"I think Hatch is one of the few people that can be confirmed without a bitter fight," Specter said. "I think he's shown a lot of balance. He's pro-life, but he had the courage to stand up for stem cell research. He's got a good record on civil rights."

But the suggestion, while intriguing to some, also would carry a host of complications, not the least of which include Hatch's statements indicating coolness to the job.

As for Hatch, there is one obvious flaw to nominating him. At 69 years old, he cannot be expected to fill a lifetime appointment as long as someone a generation younger.

But Specter said Hatch's age could be an asset. "He's old enough so that he won't serve 40 years on the court like Clarence Thomas will. He lowers the tenure." That might give Democrats more comfort in voting for him.

And his nomination, if confirmed, would slim the GOP's narrow Senate majority until Utah's Republican governor could appoint a successor.

But Hatch brushed off the possibility on C-SPAN when a caller raised the suggestion. He said it would be an "honor" but said the president was considering a handful of people for the job.

Meanwhile, most other Senate Republicans are advising the White House to reject Democratic pleas to vet any Supreme Court nominees with the minority.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.), among others, wrote Bush last week urging him to consult with Democrats before making a nomination. There has been speculation that retirements on the court could create a vacancy as early as this summer.

"I am not aware that any president has formally consulted with the Senate for a nomination," said Senate Republican Conference Chairman Rick Santorum (Pa.). "I wouldn't start here, and I certainly wouldn't start with the people from the other side of the aisle."

"I don't think the president is going to consult with me on a Supreme Court nominee," said Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.). "Why should he consult with Daschle?"

"Consultation, to Democrats, means accepting their views," Hatch said. He said that if Democrats had cooperated with Bush "instead of smearing people" who were nominated for lower court judgeships, they would have more bargaining power.

But Specter advised the president to take Daschle's request seriously. "I think the White House ought to respond in the affirmative," he said. "Daschle is right about some things … Even a stopped clock is right twice a day."

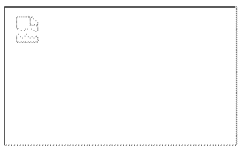
Specter referred to his background as a district attorney: "I never arrested a guy without calling him up and asking him to explain himself." Similarly, he said, the president might learn something valuable about a nominee that could either help or hurt the nomination by consulting with Democrats.

Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) said the White House should seek a consensus candidate, adding, "It's always a good thing to do … I think there should always be consultation."

A potential pitfall would be the caustic relations that Hatch has sometimes had with Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, particularly ranking member Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who has clashed with him over presidential nominations.

But Leahy, asked Hatch could get confirmed, responded, "Sure." Asked if he would vote for Hatch, Leahy replied, "Sure." Hatch also has a close relationship with Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), with whom he has worked on Judiciary.

As the third most senior Republican on Judiciary (after Sen. Chuck Grassley [R-Iowa], Finance Committee chairman), Specter would take over the committee if Hatch left the Senate.



There already are signs that the administration is laying out the strategy for an upcoming floor fight. Rather than vetting its nominee with Daschle, the White House could ignore Democratic leaders while picking off the requisite number of centrist Democrats.

Sen. Ben Nelson (D-Neb.) said he has talked to White House staff about how a Supreme Court vacancy should be handled. "I've made my desires clear to them," he said. "I would hope that they would look for somebody that would not be controversial … I don't think we need to be tied up in knots."

Nelson, who said he appointed half the judges in Nebraska while serving as governor, said he spent 45 minutes with Circuit Court nominee Miguel Estrada before deciding that Estrada was qualified to serve. Democrats are filibustering the nomination.

Nelson did, however, caution that Estrada might encounter difficulty if he were nominated for a Supreme Court vacancy. "I think it's a little harder to support somebody that's not been a judge," he said. Estrada worked in the solicitor general's office.

Sen. Zell Miller (D-Ga.), who along with Nelson, backed the president's tax cut, said he doesn't think the White House needs to nominate a consensus candidate or even consult the Senate.

You'd expressed interest in the status of the draft Safety Act regs at one point -- they're now thru the OIRA process and I believe will go back to DHS and then on to the Fed Register today or tomorrow for publication. I wld not expect any further staffing and assume you've all seen them, but if not OMB has the current electrons.

Subject: RE: HSC comments, questions and release of hold on OMB draft Safety Actregs

Thanks Ed. I have spoken to the Secretary this morning about the one concern General Gordon raised with him (30 instead of 60 day notice). That said, here's where we stand (John W. and I just spoke about this as well):

(1) 30 day notice and comment (Secy specifically approved)
(2) September 1 application due date
(3) Pre-certification provision stays in
(4) Discretionary Notice provision out

Obviously 3 & 4, as well as 2, can be changed after the notice and comment period, so please let us know if HSC has any lingering concerns on these points.

As of now, with these changes, the rule is complete. OMB will make these changes and pass the reg back to DHS today or tomorrow so DHS can send it to the Fed Reg.

Subject: HSC comments, questions and release of hold on OMB draft Safety Actregs

John and Lucy -- Gen. Gordon has asked us to forward to OMB and the Department the following four HSC comments concerning this draft. Bottom line is that, following up on our communications on Thursday, Friday and earlier today, and as you've requested, the HSC hold re: the draft has been released. The four bullets below represent HSC's comments, questions and recommendations to the
Secretary and to OMB. DHS has requested that HSC defer to the Department re:
the fact questions that have been raised about timing and Department/S&T resources, and HSC has agreed to do so. At core, as much as they are comments, the first two bullet points below represent questions to DHS, and if the Secretary does not share the concerns described here HSC defers to DHS as to the Department's current and expected capacity and resources to address these matters on the highly expedited timetables proposed here. Thus, assuming DHS is satisfied with the answers to these questions, HSC is not requesting/requiring that these recommendations/comments be incorporated or reconciled prior to the issuance of the draft in question.

Comment Period: These important new regulations are of national interest to virtually every industry and yet propose to provide for just a brisk 30 day comment period. Last month, DHS argued persuasively to HSC that -- because the USG was greatly limited in its ability to make informed choices without a full opportunity to access and review
the considerable amount of worthwhile and material information that was held by businesses, scientists and other experts outside the USG --
the comment period needed to be extended from 30 to 60 days. In fact, the period WAS extended to 60 days in a recent DHS draft. HSC was and remains persuaded that 60 days is a better comment period. The President has equities in the success of these regs and this Act, which is why a balance should be struck between relative speed (30 days) and a more deliberate pace (the 90 days that was once discussed).
Given the wide interest that these regulations are likely to generate, HSC recommends to the Secretary that the initial comment period should be at least 60 days. Does DHS have any similar concerns? Is a 45 day period the right compromise between the 30-day and 60-day views?
Date for Accepting Applications: HSC has been advised that the SAFETY

Act application start date at page 2 of the regulation has been moved back to August 15, 2003. HSC is concerned that this may be premature.
Question to DHS: Is S&T sufficiently staffed with the expertise, manpower and other resources and infrastructure to competently and fully address what is likely to be a flood of highly technical applications less than two months from now? If not, we could be setting up S&T, the Department and the Administration effort for a predictable and highly visible failure. HSC recommends that the application period begin AFTER the initial 60-day comment period has ended (see above), and DHS/S&T have had adequate time to review and address the initial comments. Based on a 60-day comment period, HSC recommends to the Secretary that September 15 would be more appropriate than August 15.
Does DHS have any similar concerns? Is Sept. 1 the right compromise between the August 15 and Sept. 15 views?
Pre-Application Consultations: Section 101.3(h) provides for Pre-Application Consultations to provide feedback to manufacturers regarding whether proposed or developing anti-terrorism technologies might be worth pursuing. HSC is concerned about the additional workload that this may generate. Given that such consultations are not required by the SAFETY Act, and DHS has the inherent authority to do so anyway, we recommend that this section be deleted. Since the advice DHS gives in such consultations could in no way provide advance certification decisions, advertising the availability of such consultations could actually end up clouding the issue, especially if we gave thumbs-up during the pre-application consultations and then rejected the formal application. More importantly, does S&T have the staff to support this?
If not, why advertise what is not required?
Discretionary Notice of Recommendation: In Section 101.5(e) and Section 101.7(e), there is a provision for a Discretionary Notice of Recommendation that permits the Assistant Secretary to provide notice to the Seller of his or her recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of their application. It then states that the A/S is in no event required to provide such notice and opportunity. Since in both cases one of the possible actions by the U/S is to notify the Seller in writing of additional information needed before a decision could be reached, it would seem both unnecessary and an opportunity to open the Department up to charges of favoritism/unfairness if it provides some applicants with an additional chance to improve their applications but doesn't do it for others. While this sounds like a good way to be responsive, HSC questions whether DHS really wants to open up another area where it may be taking on additional work and, at the same time, exposing the Department to criticism.

MR. RUSSERT: Which Supreme Court justice do you really respect?

GOV. BUSH: Well, that's--Anthony Scalia is one.

MR. RUSSERT: He is someone who wants to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

GOV. BUSH: Well, he's a--there's a lot of reasons why I like Judge Scalia. I tell you a guy who I...

MR. RUSSERT: So you'd want to know how a judge feels about abortion. You just wouldn't put him on the bench blindly.

GOV. BUSH: I want to know how a judge feels about a lot of issues. The most primary one is...

MR. RUSSERT: Including abortion?

GOV. BUSH: The most primary issue--the most primary issue is will they strictly interpret the Constitution of the United States?

MR. RUSSERT: Will your judges and judge appointments to the Supreme Court be similar to Scalia in their temperament and judicial outlook?

GOV. BUSH: Well, I don't think you're going to find many people to be actually similar to him. He's an unusual man. He's an intellect. The reason I like him so much is I got to know him here in Austin when he came down. He's witty, he's interesting, he's firm. There's a lot of reasons why I like Judge Scalia. And I like a lot of the other judges as well. I mean, it's kind of a harsh question to ask because it now pits me--some of whom are friends of mine. I mean, it's--and so, in all due respect, Judge Thomas.

MR. RUSSERT: Do you believe Clarence Thomas was the most qualified man in the country for the Supreme Court?

GOV. BUSH: I do. And I think he's proven my dad correct.

MR. RUSSERT: How about Dav...

GOV. BUSH: And I think he got a raw shake during the nomination process. And one of the reasons I'm running for president is to try to rid Washington of cynicism, and, you know, zero-sum politics. I believe, Tim--I asked this question before I asked my family to join the race. I believe an administration can change the tone in Washington. I do.

MR. RUSSERT: How about David Souter of New Hampshire to the Supreme Court?

GOV. BUSH: I'm not falling into that trap. Let me...

MR. RUSSERT: Notice you're not endorsing him, either.

GOV. BUSH: Well, he's a fine man. But let me--I want to follow up on this point real quick, because I think people need to know. If I didn't think an administration could change the zero-sum politics of Washington, an atmosphere that is so hostile sometimes, an atmosphere that just chewed a good man up like Clarence Thomas, I wouldn't be running. I believe--I do believe--I believe someone can not only bring honor and dignity to the office, I believe an administration can make Washington a place where hostility doesn't have to be the main characteristic of the attitudes of the people up there.

June 23, 2003

The Honorable William H. Frist
Majority Leader

Dear Majority Leader Frist:

We write to you concerning a grave injustice that is endangering the well being of countless Americans and putting our system of justice in jeopardy in a significant part of this country. We refer to the continued, intentional obstruction of the nominations of Henry W. Saad, Susan B. Neilson, David W. McKeague, and Richard A. Griffin to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, as well as the nominations of Thomas L. Ludington and Daniel P. Ryan to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan. This obstruction is not only harming the lives and careers of good, qualified judicial nominees, it is prolonging a dire emergency in the administration of justice; an emergency that has brought home to numerous Americans the truth of the phrase "justice delayed is justice denied."

As you know, the two Michigan Senators continue to block Judiciary Committee hearings regarding these nominees. They refuse to allow the United States Senate to complete its constitutional duty of Advise and Consent, denying the nominees the opportunity to address any honest objections to their records or qualifications and their fellow Senators the right to air the relevant issues and vote according to their consciences. All of this taking place during an emergency in the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

We join with the members of Michigan's Congressional delegation who wrote Chairman Hatch on February 26, 2003 to express their concern that "if the President's nominations are permitted to be held hostage, for reasons not personal to any nominee, then these judicial seats traditionally held by judges representing the citizens of Michigan may be filled with nominees from other states within the Sixth Circuit. This would be an injustice to the many citizens who support these judges and who have given much to their professions and government in Michigan."

Our interest, however, is not parochial. We are concerned about the Sixth Circuit as a whole, which continues to be tainted by scandal and burdened by high caseloads. The facts as to the Sixth Circuit are undisputed. The Sixth Circuit is under-staffed, with 4 of its 16 seats vacant. The workload is heavy in the Sixth Circuit and the judges are few. According to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, the Sixth Circuit ranks next to last out of the 12 circuit courts in the time it takes to complete its cases. Since 1996 each active judge has had to increase his or her number of decisions by 46% -- more than three times the national average. But even this extraordinary effort has not been sufficient. In the recent past, the Sixth Circuit has taken as many as 15.3 months to reach a final disposition of an appeal. With the national average at only 10.9 months, this means the Sixth Circuit takes over 40% longer than the national average to process a case.

We urge you to put an end to this obstruction and bring these nominations forward so that honest debate may ensue, and so that we may address the severe shortage of judges in the Sixth Circuit.

The last time the Sixth Circuit was this understaffed former Chief Judge Gilbert S. Merritt said that it was handling "a caseload that is excessive by any standard." Judge Merritt also wrote that the court was "rapidly deteriorating, understaffed and unable to properly carry out their responsibilities." That is precisely the case today. And real Americans' lives are being affected as a result.

Senator, these are not just dry statistics. The crisis is real and it affects everyday Americans. Let us cite a few examples.

1. Ohio Attorney General Betty Montgomery has said that numerous death penalty appeals before the Sixth Circuit are experiencing prolonged delays. For example, the appeal of Michael Beuke has not been acted on in more than two years and Clarence Carter has had a motion pending before the Sixth Circuit for three years. [The Cincinnati Post, March 25, 2002.]

2. District Court Judge Robert Holmes Bell describes the Sixth Circuit as in a "crisis" because of the vacancies, and he added, "We're having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don't get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeal judges." [The Grand Rapids Press, February 21, 2002.]

3. Cincinnati Attorney Elizabeth McCord, as of the end of 2001, had been waiting fifteen months just to have oral arguments scheduled for her client's appeal in a job-discrimination suit, according to a December 26, 2001 article in The Cincinnati Post. In that interim, her client had died. The article describes delays like this as "commonplace" because vacancies have left the court at "at half-strength and have created a serious backlog of cases.

4. Mary Jane Trapp, president of the Ohio Bar Association, said, "Colleagues of mine who do a lot of federal work are continuing to complain (about the delays). When you don't have judges appointed to hear cases, you really are back to the adage of 'justice delayed is justice denied.'" [The Cincinnati Post, December 26, 2001.]

The Sixth Circuit has been forced to use district court judges and Sixth Circuit senior judges to keep pace with its caseload. This practice, in turn, affects the efficiency of the district courts. We understand that the Sixth Circuit currently hears some arguments via telephone. Each three-judge panel on the Sixth Circuit not only must hear more cases each year; it must spend less time on each case in order to maintain some control over the docket. Some cases may not be heard despite their merit. In the meantime, the administration of justice suffers.

Decisions from the Sixth Circuit are slower in coming, based on less careful deliberation and as a result are less likely to be just and predictable. The effects on our people, our society and our economy are far reaching. Uncertainty, transaction costs and even litigation are increased as people strive to continue doing business when the lines of swift justice and clear precedent are being blurred.

Senator, President Bush has done his part to alleviate this crisis. Over the past two years he has nominated eight qualified people to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, with three of them designated to cure judicial emergencies. Four of these nominees continue to languish without hearings because of the obstruction of the two Michigan Senators.

We now ask that the Senate fulfill its role in the Constitutional nomination process by holding hearings and allowing a vote on the Michigan nominees.

O'Connor voices hope for day affirmative action not needed

In a rare interview the day after issuing a landmark University of Michigan ruling, a key justice reflects on racial preferences, her groundbreaking career and life on the high court

June 25, 2003

WASHINGTON -- A day after announcing the Supreme Court's most significant decision on race in a generation, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said in a rare interview Tuesday that if America provided adequate educational opportunities for young people, it could someday achieve the goal of ending affirmative action in college admissions.

Looking 25 years into the future, O'Connor said: "I hope it looks as though we don't need artificial help to fill our classrooms with highly qualified students at the graduate level."

"And if we do our job on educating young people, we can reach that goal," she said, leaving no doubt that the secrecy-shrouded court is aware of the dramatic impact its rulings can have on American life. O'Connor made the comments in a wide-ranging, 40-minute interview with the Tribune to discuss her new book.

O'Connor, who wrote Monday's landmark affirmative action opinion for a 5-4 court, also acknowledged that the decision went beyond the court's previous statements on the use of racial preferences in education.

For the first time, a majority of the court said colleges and universities could consider the race of an applicant to get a diverse student body. It upheld an admissions policy at the University of Michigan Law School, where officials used race as a "plus factor" when evaluating applicants.

O'Connor's opinion borrowed heavily from the late Justice Lewis Powell's opinion in University of California vs. Bakke, the 1978 case that had been the court's latest statement on affirmative action in education. But she said Tuesday that she was unsure whether Powell, a moderate conservative whom she deeply admired and considered a friend, would have joined it.

"He'd probably say, `Well, you may have made too much about what I had to say,'" O'Connor said, laughing at the thought. "I don't know. It was fairly consistent with the view he expressed in Bakke. If he had been here, whether he would've gone along with all of the nuances and declarations, it's hard to say."

careers

In the Bakke case, the court struck down the admissions policy of a California medical school that had set aside 16 of 100 places for minorities. But the court could not agree on why the program was unconstitutional. Powell wrote a separate opinion, which no other justice joined, that said the Constitution allowed admissions officials to consider race as a "plus factor" in evaluating prospective students in light of a university's compelling interest in getting a diverse student body.

The next step

The court's decision Monday endorsed Powell's view but then went the next step by embracing arguments by Michigan officials, business leaders and military officers that diversity in education has meaningful benefits to students and society.

Laurence Tribe, a Harvard Law School professor, said Tuesday that O'Connor's remarks "very much reflect a recognition on her part that the Powell opinion planted the seed, but the tree had to be grown."

"[Powell's opinion] set only a general outline that still needed to be fleshed out and filled in with a much more elaborate explanation of what diversity is all about and how it might be expected to achieve the goals of broadening the representation of racial minorities," Tribe said.

O'Connor, 73, the court's first female justice, has long expressed admiration and fondness for Powell and devotes a chapter to him in her new book, "The Majesty of the Law." She called Powell "a model of human kindness, decency, exemplary behavior and integrity" who was concerned in every case "about reaching a fair and just result."

Change of heart

Powell's views also could play a role in a case the court will announce Thursday on whether states can prosecute people for having consensual homosexual sex in the privacy of their homes. Powell joined a 1986 opinion upholding a similar Georgia anti-sodomy law, a vote he told Tribe and others he later came to regret.

Some observers have predicted that Powell's change of heart may resonate with O'Connor in that case.

O'Connor said Tuesday that Powell, as a legal thinker, probably cared "more about the ultimate fairness of the resolution" of a particular problem "than is typical in deciding these abstract principles of law."

"You're not dealing with Mary and Sam and little Johnny. You're dealing with abstract principles," O'Connor said of deciding a case. "He was a person who, although he did that, at the same time he cared about little Johnny and Mary as well."

Role of women

During the conversation in her chambers, adorned with Southwestern artifacts that reflect her upbringing on an Arizona cattle ranch, O'Connor talked about her life, as well as her views on the law and the role of women in shaping it.

She was relaxed and animated as she mentioned several pioneering women who helped pave the way for future female leaders, including herself. Her husband, John, sat on a nearby couch reading a newspaper while she talked about how, as a young woman, she balanced work and family, and succeeded in a legal world often hostile to women.

Her comments on the affirmative action decision were a brief part of Tuesday's interview. But they nonetheless were illuminating.

For instance, in her opinion for the court, O'Connor said she expected that racial preferences "will no longer be necessary" in 25 years.

But her remarks indicate she offered the time frame as an expression of hope--not a definitive endpoint, as dissenting justices and opponents of affirmative action had suggested.

She also said the justices, in cases like the affirmative action dispute, realize that how they resolve abstract legal issues can significantly affect individuals.

"We often recognize that issues, the abstract issues with which we deal, do have real life consequences and may matter deeply to people," she said. "That's why you try to do the best you can. But you can't decide it on the basis of, `Oh, gosh, a lot of people are going to be affected.'"

O'Connor spoke passionately about the tremendous obstacles women have overcome and the "sea change" in public attitudes about women's roles in society. It was just 51 years ago that she graduated near the top of her class at Stanford Law School, only to be offered a job as a legal secretary.

Many young women today who encounter no real barriers to getting a job find it "almost inconceivable" to imagine a time when that wasn't the case, O'Connor said.

O'Connor eventually formed a small law firm in Arizona, and then, with three small sons, quit when her baby-sitter moved to California. That decision was difficult, she said, because she was "fearful I'd never get another job in the legal profession."

She ran for public office after her children were in school, eventually winning election to the Arizona Senate and, later, to a state appellate court. When President Ronald Reagan in 1981 offered her a position on the U.S. Supreme Court--fulfilling a campaign wish to nominate the first woman--O'Connor said she felt additional pressure as a woman.

Hesitant to join court

"I've always said it's fine to be the first, but you don't want to be the last," she said. "I was acutely aware of the negative consequences if I arrived here and did a poor job. It made me hesitant to say yes when the president called."

In her 22 years on the bench, O'Connor has become, in the eyes of many, the court's most powerful justice. A moderate conservative, she often provides the key vote on high-profile cases in areas of race, religion, abortion and civil liberties.

At times, she tempers the positions of her more conservative colleagues, particularly in religion and voting-rights cases. And, as Monday's affirmative action case made clear, she also breaks ranks to join the more liberal side.

Because of her key role on such a closely divided court, an O'Connor retirement now would be momentous and would give the Bush administration an opportunity to change the balance of the court. She declined Tuesday to say whether she had decided about her future.

But several observers said her affirmative action opinion had the feel of a swan song and speculated on whether she was considering retirement.

Tribe said O'Connor clearly decided to write the decision broadly, endorsing Powell's view and providing a theoretical framework for why diversity mattered.

"You might speculate that if she were going to retire soon, leaving a landmark behind her instead of just another little point on a confusing spectrum would be a sensible way to take advantage of the experience and insight she has developed on all of this," Tribe said.

"If she were firmly intending to stay for several years, one could imagine she'd say, `We'll do this in three baby steps.'"

June 24, 2003

Dear Colleagues,

In light of numerous letters of colleagues addressing the possibility of a Supreme Court nomination this summer recently made public, I write to outline my expectations of a fair and orderly process for Senate consideration of a Supreme Court nomination if any Justice retires at the end of this Supreme Court Term.

First, to perform our obligations to the Supreme Court and the American people, the Senate should act on any nominee within a reasonable time to ensure, if possible, that a new Justice can assume office before the Supreme Court resumes hearing cases this fall. In most instances in the past, the Senate has acted promptly to consider a President's nominee to the Supreme Court. Most recently, for example, both of President Clinton's nominees to the Supreme Court received Senate votes before the Senate's August recess, after receiving Judiciary Committee hearings in July. Consistent with that schedule, if there is a retirement at the end of the Supreme Court's Term and a nomination is submitted shortly thereafter, I anticipate the Judiciary Committee would hold hearings in July and the full Senate would vote on the nomination before the Senate recess in August.

Second, the Senate must vote on the President's nominee to either confirm or reject the nominee. The Constitution provides that the Senate shall advise and consent on a President's nominees to the Supreme Court. Since 1789, in accord with the Constitution and to fulfill its Constitutional responsibility, the Senate has consistently afforded Presidential nominees to the Supreme Court a vote of the Senate (except, of course, when the nominee withdrew before a vote). Any tactics to endlessly delay the process and prevent the Senate from performing its Constitutional responsibility to vote on a Supreme Court nomination would be inconsistent with the Constitution and contrary to the Senate's traditional practice for more than 200 years. As Majority Leader, I will work to ensure that a Supreme Court nominee by a President of either party receives a fair up or down vote in the Senate.

The Senate has few Constitutional responsibilities as important as exercising its advice and consent on a President's nominee to the Supreme Court. I look forward to working with each of you to ensure a fair and orderly Senate process in the event of a Supreme Court nomination this summer or in the future.

The Constitution provides that the Senate shall advise and consent on a President's nominees to the Supreme Court. Since 1789, in accord with the Constitution and to fulfill its Constitutional responsibility, the Senate has consistently afforded Presidential nominees to the Supreme Court a vote of the Senate (except, of course, when the nominee withdrew before a vote). Any tactics to endlessly delay the process and prevent the Senate from performing its Constitutional responsibility to vote on a Supreme Court nomination would be inconsistent with the Constitution and contrary to the Senate's traditional practice for more than 200 years. As Majority Leader, I will work to ensure that a Supreme Court nominee by a President of either party receives a fair up or down vote in the Senate.

The Senate has few Constitutional responsibilities as important as exercising its advice and consent on a President's nominee to the Supreme Court. I look forward to working with each of you to ensure a fair and orderly Senate process in the event of a Supreme Court nomination this summer or in the future.

Alliance for Justice Urges White House to Reconsider Kavanaugh Nomination to D.C. Circuit

Jun 19, 2003 -- The Alliance for Justice today called upon President Bush to reconsider his reported decision to nominate Assistant White House Counsel Brett Kavanaugh for a lifetime seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Kavanaugh is a protégé of former Independent Counsel Ken Starr. He has spent much of his legal career working for ultra-conservative legal causes such as the impeachment of President Clinton. And, as Assistant White House Counsel, he has championed President Bush's most controversial judicial nominees.

"Our courts need fair and independent judges who will follow the law rather than their political beliefs. We have grave concerns that Brett Kavanaugh does not pass this basic test. We ask the President to reconsider his decision to nominate Kavanaugh," said Alliance for Justice President Nan Aron.

Kavanaugh's claim to fame is his work on Ken Starr's investigations of the Clinton Administration. He worked on the investigation of Vince Foster's suicide and drafted sections of the report on the Monica Lewinsky matter. As a member of Starr's Office of Independent Counsel, he repeatedly argued that the White House must turn over documents to investigators. However, since joining the White House, Kavanaugh has reversed himself and written regulations to keep Presidential records secret. "Kavanaugh apparently prefers partisan loyalty to intellectual integrity," Aron said.

If he is officially nominated, Kavanaugh will join the growing list of extremist nominees such as Charles Pickering, Priscilla Owen, Miguel Estrada, Carolyn Kuhl, and William Pryor that he has helped pick.

"The D.C. Circuit is the country's second most powerful court and hears some of the most significant cases involving health, safety, civil rights and environmental regulations," explained Aron. "It needs judges who will render fair and impartial justice to all."

Andrew Sullivan's take (thanks to Bashman) on Maureen Dowd's unbelieveable column this morning:

THE 'INGRATITUDE' OF THOMAS: It would be hard to find a more appalling example of racial animus than in Maureen Dowd's column this morning. For some reason I guess I do understand, Clarence Thomas isn't just opposed by many on the Left; he is hated. He is hated because he is, in Dowd's extraordinary formulation, guilty of "a great historical ingratitude." The good negroes, in Dowd's liberal-racist world, are those grateful to their massas in the liberal hierarchy: they are grateful to Howell and Gerald and Arthur; and they know their place. For them to express the psychological torment of being advanced for racist reasons, to explain in graphic, brave and bold terms the complexity of emotions many African-Americans feel as 'beneficiaries' of racial preferences, is unacceptable. To describe such a person who has been courageous enough to put these feelings into a powerful dissent as "barking mad" is nothing short of disgusting. Yes, there are all sorts of psychological inconsistencies in Thomas' journey. But that, in part, is the point! If Dowd supports "diversity" as a good thing in elite institutions, why isn't it a good thing for one black Justice to contribute his own experience as part of a landmark judicial ruling? Of course I don't know whether Dowd supports diversity in this sense. That would require her to argue something - of which she is apparently incapable. And then Dowd, of all people, complains that Thomas is more interested in his own personal dramas than "bigger issues of morality and justice." When was the last time you read a Dowd column that grappled with "bigger issues of morality and justice"?

I think this will be a very useful tool for us to track expenses by event. We can use it to make sure we are keeping under budget and then share it as a report so that we can monitor expenses overall weekly.

BC-ROVE:DA * national, political (1080 words)
Rove calls on Bush allies to fill GOP coffers early
By Gromer Jeffers Jr.
The Dallas Morning News
FORT WORTH, Texas * Offering a sneak peek at President Bush,s re-election strategy, White House political adviser Karl Rove called on supporters Wednesday to help raise enough money to keep their rivals off balance and lock up states for Republicans early next year so the GOP can make inroads into Democratic territory.
&Our object is not to defend our own turf. Our goal is to get the other side to defend their turf,8 Rove said at a private meeting of more than 80 partisans at the downtown Fort Worth Club.
He exhorted the Bush backers, many of them longtime GOP donors and elected officials, to overwhelm Democrats when the president and his political foes report their latest fund-raising tallies at the end of this month.
&June 30 is the first battle,8 he said, a reference to predictions by other Republicans that the Bush camp wants to prove its financial mettle by raising at least $20 million by the end of the month * and as much as $200 million over the next year.
Molly Beth Malcolm, head of the Texas Democratic Party, blasted the GOP fund raising in Texas.
&After the Bush administration gave big tax cuts to millionaires, it,s no surprise that Karl Rove is down here collecting money from the same people who benefited,8 she said. &Instead of squeezing money out of millionaires in Texas, Rove should be back in Washington squeezing Republican congressmen like (House Majority Leader) Tom DeLay to give working families a tax cut, too.8
In his briefing, Rove acknowledged that he expects serious opposition from Democrats.
&We,re not going to catch them napping,8 he said. &We have to build a stronger ground organization. We,ve got to do what we did in Texas across the country.8
Republicans have talked in general about the outlines of the 2004 campaign, but Rove, an architect of the Bush victory last time, seldom provides specifics publicly. The Fort Worth session was closed to the press, but a reporter with The Dallas Morning News heard the remarks from the hallway close to the meeting room and near what appeared to be a kitchen storage area.
Later, as he was leaving, Rove told The Dallas Morning News he was not in Texas to lobby state legislators about congressional redistricting, the politically divisive issue that comes up Monday in a special session in Austin.
&It,s a Texas issue,8 he said.
For weeks, even before Bush formally filed for re-election on May 16, Rove and Ken Mehlman, the former White House political director who is now the campaign manager, have roamed the country, meeting with party activists to lay the groundwork for the president,s re-election and a coordinated effort to help other Republicans running for Congress, governor and state legislatures.
It is part of an effort not only to return Bush to the White House but also to expand the GOP political base and to give him strong majorities in Congress.

&They want to drown out talk about Democratic money,8 Stuart Rothenberg, editor of the Washington-based Rothenberg Political Report, said of the Bush team. &They want to give a sense of inevitability about the re-election of George W. Bush and give Democrats a sense of pessimism.8
Bush plans to attend fund-raisers on July 18 in Dallas and July 19 in Houston.
Rove said the president is helped by a high approval rating among voters who admire his efforts combating terrorism and in the war with Iraq.
&He,s seen as a strong leader,8 he told the group. &He,s also seen as a person who cares about ordinary people.8
Responding to a question about terrorism, Rove said the war would be ongoing.
&There are al-Qaida cells in 68 countries,8 he said, adding that the public should not believe the enemy were men &wearing turbans in caves.8
Even with the president,s popularity, Rove said, the race will be tough. Early surveys indicate Bush getting support from less than 50 percent of the public in a matchup with a generic Democratic nominee.
For starters, Rove said, the Democratic nominee would become a media darling with The Washington Post, New York Times and political writers.
&He will be a hero on the evening newscasts,8 Rove said. &He will be at or ahead of us in the polls.8
Texas, being Bush,s home state, is not expected to be contested by Democrats in the November 2004 election, but it remains a frequent stop for both parties seeking campaign cash.
Malcolm,s office has been referring fund-raising appeals from Democratic presidential contenders to potential Texas donors. One of the most recent appeals came from Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., who said in his e-mail message that Bush has mishandled the economy.
Anticipating a surge by Democrats, Rove said he hopes Republicans will sock away their stronghold states before Labor Day 2004.
That would allow the party to concentrate on establishing beachheads in states that are considered Democratic power bases.
He mentioned New Mexico, Iowa, Oregon and Wisconsin * traditional Democratic country * as prime targets.
&We,ve got to take states out before Labor Day,8 he said.
Rove used the Bush efforts in West Virginia as a model for waging an effective ground war.
He said that former Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., lost the state in his failed 1996 presidential bid against Bill Clinton.
But after the GOP worked to build up its base in the state, President Bush won West Virginia.
&Without those four electoral votes, we would have lost,8 he said.
(EDITORS: STORY CAN END HERE)
Rothenberg, the analyst, said Rove,s plan could work, but he warned about issues related to the sagging economy rising to the public forefront.
&If things continue the way they are, he can take his base for granted and move on the attack,8 Rothenberg said. &But a great deal depends on the economy. If that becomes an issue, there will be hand-to-hand combat in many states.8
Weatherford auto dealer J. Roger Williams hosted the meeting, which often took the tone of a pep rally. Rove attended a similar event later in San Antonio.

Confused O'Connor

By Richard Cohen
Thursday, June 26, 2003; Page A29

It is said of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor that she manages to mirror public opinion. She has done so on abortion and other matters, and in the Michigan affirmative action case, she has succeeded beyond all expectations. She is as confused as the public.

What she is not is either logical or clear. Her opinion, which a bare majority of the court joined, upheld the affirmative action program for the University of Michigan's law school. In a separate opinion, the court struck down the program for undergraduate admissions. The latter was a bit too obvious; the former a bit more subtle. That they both discriminated on the basis of race seemed not to matter to her.

To rationalize the irrational, O'Connor declared what amounts to a racial emergency. She has to do that to get around the Constitution's equal protection clause, which provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." O'Connor takes the clause very seriously. She cites a previous Supreme Court decision (Adarand Constructors v. Pe¤a) that says, "Government may treat people differently because of their race only for the most compelling reasons." Fortunately for her, she has found one: minority underrepresentation.

In one form or another, O'Connor uses the term repeatedly. But she never defines it. Like pornography, she knows it when she sees it. Underrepresentation would not be, say, 14.5 percent of the law school class -- the actual figure of minority students enrolled -- but it would be, say, 4 percent of the class, the predicated percentage if there were no affirmative action program. That calamity enables her to suspend the Constitution.

O'Connor recognizes what she has done. She cannot bring herself to expound some new legal principle, so in the manner of Lincoln and habeas corpus or FDR and the incarceration of Japanese, O'Connor declares an emergency that will end when underrepresentation is no more. "The court expects that 25 years from now, the use of racial preferences will no longer be necessary," she writes. Let us all pray.

But first let us think. Is 4 percent such an awful figure? O'Connor, buying the university's fatuous argument, says yes. Too few minority students would not constitute the "critical mass" necessary for minorities to really "contribute to the law school's character and to the legal profession." In other words, these black or Hispanic students are there not to just to learn, but to teach others -- to educate whites about blacks or Hispanics. Too few minorities would not do the trick. About 14.5 percent is just right.

This is total nonsense -- and insulting to blacks and Hispanics, who are not mere condiments recruited to add spice to an otherwise bland law school class. In his dissent, Justice Clarence Thomas referred to "a faddish slogan of the cognoscenti" -- the supposed, but unproved, virtues of diversity. But aside from that, the use of such numbers not only implies an impermissible quota but also suggests there really is such a thing as a correct figure.

Jews make up less than 2 percent of the population. Should they make up 2 percent of the law school class or, by frightening extension, 2 percent of op-ed page columnists? What about Asians, those inscrutable overachievers? In fact, what is meant by underrepresentation in the first place? Blacks make up about 12.5 percent of the population. Nationwide, they account for 12 percent of undergraduates and 9 percent of graduate students. This is hardly a racial emergency.

Yet O'Connor argues as if all law school students did their undergraduate work at Iceland U. Only in law school, she seems to think, will these naive young people meet that "critical mass" of minority students who will be able to dispel "racial stereotypes." As for the pernicious stereotype that minorities cannot cut the mustard, she is silent. Yet that is surely one lamentable consequence of affirmative action.

In some respects O'Connor has my sympathy, but not my respect. Her intention is to somehow find a constitutionally permissive way to compensate for generations of slavery followed by Jim Crow. In other words, she wants to do the right thing. But there is no getting around the fact that if blacks or Hispanics are favored on the basis of race or ethnicity, someone else is disfavored on the same basis. And this the Constitution -- not to mention simple fairness -- does not permit.

O'Connor's opinion is an intellectual mess. Given the nature and complexities of affirmative action, that's understandable. But the Supreme Court is supposed to clarify the very issues that befuddle the rest of us. O'Connor not only failed to do that, but she and her colleagues failed so spectacularly that maybe it is the high court that could use some affirmative action itself. Clear thinkers are underrepre- sented.

(Alberto) GONZALES

WASHINGTON - From the day he set foot in the White House as President Bush's chief counsel, Texan Alberto Gonzales has consistently been touted as a prospect for an even higher calling: the first Hispanic nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

But as speculation mounts about an imminent Supreme Court vacancy, the president's lawyer is engulfed in criticism from across the political spectrum, threatening his potential nomination before Bush even has a chance to make it.

Conservative purists are attacking his stance on affirmative action and abortion decisions rendered as a Texas Supreme Court justice. Liberals are challenging his role in White House decisions they say threatened civil liberties. And even some Hispanic groups are hedging on a potential endorsement until they further scrutinize his record.

The drumbeat of criticism comes amid growing talk that at least one and as many as three elderly justices could announce their retirements after the high court recesses Thursday.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, and John Paul Stevens, 83, are considered as possible retirees from the court. All three have kept quiet about their intentions and some court-watchers caution that talk of high court departures is premature.

As White House counsel, Gonzales, 47, is in charge of screening all presidential judicial nominees, a position that could presumably give him a say in his own nomination to the Supreme Court. But he has consistently brushed aside any talk of the nomination, keeping the focus on his job as the president's top legal adviser.

Nevertheless, insiders and observers have considered Gonzales to be on the Republican president's short list of Supreme Court choices since the outset of the Bush White House in January 2001. He has been at his boss's side since Bush was governor of Texas and embodies a rise-from-poverty success story that Bush has frequently cited as an example of American achievement.

The son of migrant farm workers, Gonzales grew up in a two-bedroom house in Houston and won an appointment to the Air Force Academy before turning his sights on law. With a law degree from Harvard, he joined the Vinson & Elkins law firm in Houston, became a top adviser for Gov. Bush and later served on the Texas Supreme Court.

Supporters inside and outside Bush's circle call Gonzales an ideal candidate to become the nation's first Hispanic nominee, describing him as a pragmatic conservative with formidable legal experience. "I think he's a great man and would make a wonderful justice," said Reggie Bashur of Austin, a lobbyist who worked closely with Gonzales during their days in the Texas governor's office.

But the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy has ignited a pre-emptive campaign against Gonzales' nomination, including attacks from the staunchly conservative wing of Bush's own party.

Part of the conservative backlash stems from the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision this week upholding affirmative action on college campuses, a ruling vehemently criticized by conservatives who oppose the use of race as a factor in employment or school enrollment.

As the White House weighed in on the case in advance of the decision, Gonzales argued against a hard-line position opposing affirmative action and, in the view of conservative critics, was at least partly responsible for the Supreme Court decision.

"I don't think conservatives are happy with the role Judge Gonzales played," said Linda Chavez, president of the Center for Equal Opportunity, who challenged the use of race-based standards at the University of Michigan.

Christian Right and anti-abortion groups have also become increasingly vocal against Gonzales, in part because of his decisions on the Texas Supreme Court in 2000.

During Gonzales' tenure, the court ruled on at least six cases under the Parental Notification Act that requires minors to notify their parents before seeking an abortion. The law enables girls to file "Jane Doe" appeals to waive parental consent if they prove that they are mature and "well-informed" enough to make the decision themselves or would be subject to parental abuse.

The court denied three Jane Doe appeals and sent two back to the lower courts. The sixth, involving a 17-year-old, was initially sent back to a lower court but was approved on a second appeal.

In a concurring opinion, Gonzales wrote that the wording of the law left him no choice but to approve the request: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the court's decision here may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the legislature," he wrote.

But Janet Folger, president of Faith2Action, an anti-abortion group, suggested that Gonzales' vote on the case was tantamount to sanctioning abortion. She also hinted that Gonzales may come under criticism today when the anti-abortion group conducts a Washington press conference with a coalition of other conservative organizations.

"Any judge that would rule against parental notification, the American people are going to have enormous concern against that particular judge," she said.

Other conservatives are also angry at Gonzales for what has been interpreted as critical remarks against Priscilla Owen, his colleague on the Supreme Court who voted against the exemption on the parental notification case. Without naming names, Gonzales suggested that dissenters Owen and Nathan Hecht were engaging in "judicial activism."

Owen's remarks were later recycled by Senate Democrats in an attempt to derail her nomination after Bush nominated the Texas jurist to a three-state appeals court. Gonzales, as the White House counsel, argued on behalf of the nomination although he had reportedly favored another nominee. Owen's nomination is still awaiting Senate approval.

"He's absolutely unacceptable to us for the Supreme Court," Minnery said.

From the other end of the spectrum, the People for the American Way plans to take an intense look at Gonzales' behind-the-scenes role as the president's counsel, says president Ralph Neas. The organization, which is already organizing opposition to whomever Bush nominates, is particularly concerned about Gonzales' role in drafting executive orders limiting public access to presidential records and creating military tribunals to try non-U.S. citizens in terrorism cases.

Craig McDonald of Texans for Public Justice, a legal watchdog group, said Gonzales, like other members of the Texas Supreme Court, ruled heavily in favor of business and accepted campaign donations from companies that had cases before the court.

"He was a good Republican, good pro-corporate judge, and I use the term loosely," McDonald said. "He was pretty good to corporate interests at the expense of consumer interests."

Gonzales has said that he steadfastly made his decisions based strictly on the law, and his defenders describe him as a skilled and tireless jurist who would not attempt to inject political opinions into his interpretations. Bashur says he is unquestionably a conservative.

Although Hispanic groups have pushed for years for a Hispanic nominee to the nation's highest court, not every organization representing them is prepared to automatically embrace Gonzales' nomination.

"We would certainly welcome that, but just being a Latino isn't enough," said Vibiana Andrade, vice president of public policy for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund. The organization, she said, would take a "very careful" look at Gonzales' record before deciding on an endorsement.

(Alberto) GONZALES

WASHINGTON - From the day he set foot in the White House as President Bush's chief counsel, Texan Alberto Gonzales has consistently been touted as a prospect for an even higher calling: the first Hispanic nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

But as speculation mounts about an imminent Supreme Court vacancy, the president's lawyer is engulfed in criticism from across the political spectrum, threatening his potential nomination before Bush even has a chance to make it.

Conservative purists are attacking his stance on affirmative action and abortion decisions rendered as a Texas Supreme Court justice. Liberals are challenging his role in White House decisions they say threatened civil liberties. And even some Hispanic groups are hedging on a potential endorsement until they further scrutinize his record.

The drumbeat of criticism comes amid growing talk that at least one and as many as three elderly justices could announce their retirements after the high court recesses Thursday.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, and John Paul Stevens, 83, are considered as possible retirees from the court. All three have kept quiet about their intentions and some court-watchers caution that talk of high court departures is premature.

As White House counsel, Gonzales, 47, is in charge of screening all presidential judicial nominees, a position that could presumably give him a say in his own nomination to the Supreme Court. But he has consistently brushed aside any talk of the nomination, keeping the focus on his job as the president's top legal adviser.

Nevertheless, insiders and observers have considered Gonzales to be on the Republican president's short list of Supreme Court choices since the outset of the Bush White House in January 2001. He has been at his boss's side since Bush was governor of Texas and embodies a rise-from-poverty success story that Bush has frequently cited as an example of American achievement.

The son of migrant farm workers, Gonzales grew up in a two-bedroom house in Houston and won an appointment to the Air Force Academy before turning his sights on law. With a law degree from Harvard, he joined the Vinson &

Elkins law firm in Houston, became a top adviser for Gov. Bush and later served on the Texas Supreme Court.

Supporters inside and outside Bush's circle call Gonzales an ideal candidate to become the nation's first Hispanic nominee, describing him as a pragmatic conservative with formidable legal experience. "I think he's a great man and would make a wonderful justice," said Reggie Bashur of Austin, a lobbyist who worked closely with Gonzales during their days in the Texas governor's office.

But the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy has ignited a pre-emptive campaign against Gonzales' nomination, including attacks from the staunchly conservative wing of Bush's own party.

Part of the conservative backlash stems from the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision this week upholding affirmative action on college campuses, a ruling vehemently criticized by conservatives who oppose the use of race as a factor in employment or school enrollment.

As the White House weighed in on the case in advance of the decision, Gonzales argued against a hard-line position opposing affirmative action and, in the view of conservative critics, was at least partly responsible for the Supreme Court decision.

"I don't think conservatives are happy with the role Judge Gonzales played," said Linda Chavez, president of the Center for Equal Opportunity, who challenged the use of race-based standards at the University of Michigan.

Christian Right and anti-abortion groups have also become increasingly vocal against Gonzales, in part because of his decisions on the Texas Supreme Court in 2000.

During Gonzales' tenure, the court ruled on at least six cases under the Parental Notification Act that requires minors to notify their parents before seeking an abortion. The law enables girls to file "Jane Doe" appeals to waive parental consent if they prove that they are mature and "well-informed" enough to make the decision themselves or would be subject to parental abuse.

The court denied three Jane Doe appeals and sent two back to the lower courts. The sixth, involving a 17-year-old, was initially sent back to a lower court but was approved on a second appeal.

In a concurring opinion, Gonzales wrote that the wording of the law left him no choice but to approve the request: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the court's decision here may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the legislature," he wrote.

But Janet Folger, president of Faith2Action, an anti-abortion group, suggested that Gonzales' vote on the case was tantamount to sanctioning abortion. She also hinted that Gonzales may come under criticism today when the anti-abortion group conducts a Washington press conference with a coalition of other conservative organizations.

"Any judge that would rule against parental notification, the American people are going to have enormous concern against that particular judge," she said.

Owen's remarks were later recycled by Senate Democrats in an attempt to derail her nomination after Bush nominated the Texas jurist to a three-state appeals court. Gonzales, as the White House counsel, argued on behalf of the nomination although he had reportedly favored another nominee. Owen's nomination is still awaiting Senate approval.

"He's absolutely unacceptable to us for the Supreme Court," Minnery said.

Confused O'Connor

By Richard Cohen

Thursday, June 26, 2003; Page A29

It is said of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor that she manages to mirror public opinion. She has done so on abortion and other matters, and in the Michigan affirmative action case, she has succeeded beyond all expectations. She is as confused as the public.

What she is not is either logical or clear. Her opinion, which a bare majority of the court joined, upheld the affirmative action program for the University of Michigan's law school. In a separate opinion, the court struck down the program for undergraduate admissions. The latter was a bit too obvious; the former a bit more subtle. That they both discriminated on the basis of race seemed not to matter to her.

To rationalize the irrational, O'Connor declared what amounts to a racial emergency. She has to do that to get around the Constitution's equal protection clause, which provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." O'Connor takes the clause very seriously. She cites a previous Supreme Court decision (Adarand Constructors v. Peña) that says, "Government may treat people differently because of their race only for the most compelling reasons." Fortunately for her, she has found one: minority underrepresentation.

In one form or another, O'Connor uses the term repeatedly. But she never defines it. Like pornography, she knows it when she sees it. Underrepresentation would not be, say, 14.5 percent of the law school class -- the actual figure of minority students enrolled -- but it would be, say, 4 percent of the class, the predicated percentage if there were no affirmative action program. That calamity enables her to suspend the Constitution.

O'Connor recognizes what she has done. She cannot bring herself to expound some new legal principle, so in the manner of Lincoln and habeas corpus or FDR and the incarceration of Japanese, O'Connor declares an emergency that will end when underrepresentation is no more. "The court expects that 25 years from now, the use of racial preferences will no longer be necessary," she writes. Let us all pray.

But first let us think. Is 4 percent such an awful figure? O'Connor, buying the university's fatuous argument, says yes. Too few minority students would not constitute the "critical mass" necessary for minorities to really "contribute to the law school's character and to the legal profession." In other words, these black or Hispanic students are there not to just to learn, but to teach others -- to educate whites about blacks or Hispanics. Too few minorities would not do the trick. About 14.5 percent is just right.

This is total nonsense -- and insulting to blacks and Hispanics, who are not mere condiments recruited to add spice to an otherwise bland law school class. In his dissent, Justice Clarence Thomas referred to "a faddish slogan of the cognoscenti" -- the supposed, but unproved, virtues of diversity. But aside from that, the use of such numbers not only implies an impermissible quota but also suggests there really is such a thing as a correct figure.

Jews make up less than 2 percent of the population. Should they make up 2 percent of the law school class or, by frightening extension, 2 percent of op-ed page columnists? What about Asians, those inscrutable overachievers? In fact, what is meant by underrepresentation in the first place? Blacks make up about 12.5 percent of the population. Nationwide, they account for 12 percent of undergraduates and 9 percent of graduate students. This is hardly a racial emergency.

Yet O'Connor argues as if all law school students did their undergraduate work at Iceland U. Only in law school, she seems to think, will these naive young people meet that "critical mass" of minority students who will be able to dispel "racial stereotypes." As for the pernicious stereotype that minorities cannot cut the mustard, she is silent. Yet that is surely one lamentable consequence of affirmative action.

In some respects O'Connor has my sympathy, but not my respect. Her intention is to somehow find a constitutionally permissive way to compensate for generations of slavery followed by Jim Crow. In other words, she wants to do the right thing. But there is no getting around the fact that if blacks or Hispanics are favored on the basis of race or ethnicity, someone else is disfavored on the same basis. And this the Constitution -- not to mention simple fairness -- does not permit.

O'Connor's opinion is an intellectual mess. Given the nature and complexities of affirmative action, that's understandable. But the Supreme Court is supposed to clarify the very issues that befuddle the rest of us. O'Connor not only failed to do that, but she and her colleagues failed so spectacularly that maybe it is the high court that could use some affirmative action itself. Clear thinkers are underrepre- sented.

He served in the United States Army Air Forces during World War II, as a law clerk on the Supreme Court of the United States, and as Assistant Attorney General in the Department of Justice. In 1972, he was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Nixon. In 1986, President Reagan appointed Justice Rehnquist as the 16th Chief Justice of the United States. As a jurist for more than 30 years, Chief Justice Rehnquist has faithfully interpreted the Constitution to ensure equal justice under law and to maintain the Constitutional separation of powers. While a Justice, he also has authored three important books on American legal history. During his 17 years as Chief Justice, he provided effective and disciplined leadership of the Federal Judiciary in its efforts to ensure fair pay, adequate resources, and a prompt confirmation process. Chief Justice Rehnquist's vision, leadership, and opinions have had an enormous and enduring impact on American life and American law. We wish him the best in retirement.

JOHN FUND'S POLITICAL DIARY

Bush Eyes Brown

The California jurist who may replace Justice O'Connor.

Thursday, June 26, 2003 12:01 a.m.

Only a handful of people know if a Supreme Court vacancy will be announced later today. The guessing in Washington is that Chief Justice William Rehnquist is now less likely to retire, given the White House's strongly expressed view that it doesn't want a vacancy. But Justice Sandra Day O'Connor marches to her own drummer, and recent events have led several court observers to speculate she may step down this week.

Justice O'Connor has previously expressed a desire to return to Arizona with her husband, who is in poor health. While she has said she has no plans to retire, she has clearly hedged in answering such questions. A few weeks ago she published a book of memoirs that could be seen as a swan song for her judicial career. On Monday the court released a landmark opinion she wrote upholding the racial diversity as a "compelling state interest" that justifies some use of racial preferences in college admissions. What better time to leave the bench then when basking in the praise of the Washington establishment?

A likely candidate to replace Justice O'Connor would be Alberto Gonzales, the 47-year-old White House counsel. President Bush has genuine affection for Mr. Gonzales, whom he appointed in 1999 to the Texas Supreme Court, where Mr. Gonzales gave few signals as to his underlying judicial philosophy. Mr. Bush prizes Mr. Gonzales's loyalty, and appointing the first Hispanic to the Supreme Court could help win votes in a crucial bloc.

But the bland Mr. Gonzales has many skeptics in the conservative movement. They recall that in 1990, Mr. Bush's father appointed a largely unknown David Souter to the Supreme Court. John Sununu, the elder Mr. Bush's White House chief of staff, assured conservatives Justice Souter would be a "home run." He turned out instead to be one of the most liberal justices on the court. Many fear Mr. Gonzales is another Souter, and with the court divided 5-4 on racial preferences and many other crucial issues, the stakes are high with any nominee.

If conservative skepticism about Mr. Gonzales prompts Mr. Bush to turn elsewhere, he has several choices. Judges J. Harvie Wilkinson and J. Michael Luttig of the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals have excellent résumés and strong conservative records. Emilio Garza and Edith Jones, both judges on the Fifth Circuit, have strong champions within the conservative Federalist Society. But my view is that should Mr. Gonzales not be the nominee for any Supreme Court vacancy, the frontrunner would be Justice Janice Rogers Brown of the California Supreme Court.

Justice Brown, the daughter of a Alabama sharecropper, is a respected jurist with a compelling life story. Born in 1949, she arrived in California as a child and worked her way through college at Cal State Sacramento and law school at UCLA. She went to work in the state attorney general's office, and in 1991 Gov. Pete Wilson tapped her as his legal-affairs adviser. In 1994 Mr. Wilson appointed her to a state appeals court; two years later he elevated her to the state's highest court.

While on the court she has not shied away from controversy. She has said some of her colleagues have "an overactive lawmaking gland" that compels them to second-guess legislators. A clear expression of her frustration with judicial activists came in 1997, when she wrote a dissent in a case where the court majority struck down a state law stipulating that minors had to obtain parental consent for an abortion. "This case is an excellent example of the folly of courts in their role of philosopher kings," she concluded.

Her most controversial legal writing will surely be her opinion in a 2000 case that struck down a minority contracting program in San Jose. She found that it ran afoul of Proposition 209, the 1996 state initiative approved that abolished racial preferences by state and local governments. Justice Brown described preferences as an "entitlement based on group representation" and said they have had pernicious effects on society. Her opinion led some liberals to tag her as "a female Clarence Thomas."

But she also has a civil-libertarian streak. Last year the California Supreme Court affirmed the conviction of a black man who had been stopped while riding his bicycle the wrong way on a one-way street. Police searched him and found methamphetamine, and he was sentenced to nearly three years in prison. Justice Brown was a lone dissenter from that opinion, arguing that the circumstances of the arrest could be seen as racial profiling.

Douglas Kmiec, a former Reagan administration official who is now dean of the law school at Washington's Catholic University, is a close friend of Justice Brown. He believes that she has both the intellectual gifts and the grit to win a bruising confirmation battle and make a lasting impression on the Supreme Court. He also believes that her Christian faith will help her connect with millions of ordinary Americans. Last month, Justice Brown gave the commencement address to Mr. Kmiec's graduating law students. She chastised philosophers for trying to shape society "as if God did not exist" and frequently made reference to religious and patriotic themes.

Janice Rogers Brown sounds like the kind of nominee that a lot of Americans could come to like and admire. But she also is someone who may stir up a whirlwind of opposition from liberal senators. From what I know of her, senators who tried such strong-arm tactics would come to regret it. Says California businessman Ward Connerly, who led the campaign for Proposition 209: "No one who knows her doesn't believe she would come out on top and leave her critics in the dust."

To All 100 Senators

Dear Colleague,

In light of numerous letters of colleagues addressing the possibility of a Supreme Court nomination this summer, I wanted to write to outline my expectations of a fair and orderly process for Senate consideration of a Supreme Court nomination if any Justice retires at the end of this Supreme Court Term.

First, to perform our obligations to the Supreme Court and the American people, the Senate should act on any nominee within a reasonable time to ensure, if possible, that a new Justice can assume office before the Supreme Court resumes hearing cases this fall.

In most instances in the past, the Senate has acted promptly to consider a President's nominee to the Supreme Court. Most recently, for example, both of President Clinton's nominees to the Supreme Court received Senate votes before the Senate's August recess, after receiving Judiciary Committee hearings in July. Consistent with that schedule, if there is a retirement at the end of the Supreme Court's Term and a nomination is submitted shortly thereafter, I anticipate the Judiciary Committee would hold hearings in July and the full Senate would vote on the nomination before the Senate recess in August.

Second, the Senate must vote on the President's nominee to either confirm or reject the nominee. The Constitution provides that the Senate shall advise and consent on a President's nominees to the Supreme Court. Since 1789, in accord with the Constitution and to fulfill its Constitutional responsibility, the Senate has consistently afforded Presidential nominees to the Supreme Court a vote of the Senate (except, of course, when the nominee withdrew before a vote).

Any tactics to endlessly delay the process and prevent the Senate from performing its Constitutional responsibility to vote on a Supreme Court nomination would be inconsistent with the Constitution and contrary to the Senate's traditional practice for more than 200 years.

As Majority Leader, I will work to ensure that a Supreme Court nominee by a President of either party receives a fair up or down vote in the Senate.

The Senate has few Constitutional responsibilities as important as exercising its advice and consent on a President's nominee to the Supreme Court. I look forward to working with each of you to ensure a fair and orderly Senate process in the event of a Supreme Court nomination this summer or in the future.

Sincerely yours,

This week the Supreme Court of the United States will have ended October Term 2002 with a dramatic flourish, having issued major opinions in the Michigan affirmative action cases, the Texas sodomy case, the Nike commercial speech case, and the American Library Association obscenity case. These opinions, along with earlier decisions involving federalism, criminal law, campaign finance, punitive damages, cross-burning, and copyright, combined to make the just-ended term one of the most closely watched in recent memory. Join us for a spirited review of the major cases and themes of the Court,s 2002-2003 term.

SUPPORTING VICTIMS OF TORTURE***
"Today, on the United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, the United States declares its strong solidarity with torture victims across the world. Torture anywhere is an affront to human dignity everywhere. We are committed to building a world where human rights are respected and protected by the rule of law...

"No people, no matter where they reside, should have to live in fear of their own government. Nowhere should the midnight knock foreshadow a nightmare of state-commissioned crime. The suffering of torture victims must end, and the United States calls on all governments to assume this great mission."
--President Bush, 6/26/03

KEY QUOTE***
"America is committed to success of Africa, because we recognize a moral duty to bring hope where there is despair, and relief where there is suffering. America is committed to the success of Africa, because failed states spread instability and terror that threatens us all. And America is committed to the success of Africa, because the peoples of Africa have every right to live in freedom and dignity, and to share in the progress of our time."
--President Bush, 6/26/03

"The bankruptcy of fascism, Nazism, and imperial communism has given way to a paradigm of progress, founded on political and economic liberty. The United States, our NATO allies, our neighbors in the Western Hemisphere, Japan, and our other friends and allies in Asia and Africa all share a broad commitment to democracy, the rule of law, a market-based economy, and open trade."

Smooth sailing for Duncan

Nominee for 4th Circuit Court gets friendly questions before Senate panel

By JOHN WAGNER, Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON -- Raleigh attorney Allyson K. Duncan breezed through a confirmation hearing Wednesday, all but ensuring that she will become the first North Carolinian to sit on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in nearly four years.

After glowing introductions by both Democratic Sen. John Edwards and Republican Sen. Elizabeth Dole, the Senate Judiciary Committee subjected Duncan, a lawyer with Kilpatrick Stockton, to six minutes of friendly questions. The panel, which often grills controversial nominees for hours, is expected to send Duncan's nomination to the full Senate early next month.

waiting game

U.S. 4TH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

Terrence W. Boyle: Nominated by President Bush in May 2001; renominated Jan. 7. U.S. Sen. John Edwards is holding his "blue slip," effectively blocking the nomination.

Allyson K. Duncan: Nominated April 28; confirmation hearing held Wednesday. Confirmation by Judiciary Committee and full Senate expected next month.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF N.C.

James C. Dever III: Nominated in May 2002; renominated Jan. 7. Edwards is holding his "blue slip," effectively blocking the nomination.

Louise W. Flanagan: Nominated Jan. 29; confirmation hearing held Wednesday. Confirmation by Judiciary Committee and full Senate expected as soon as next month.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF N.C.

H. Brent McNight: Nominated April 28; waiting for confirmation hearing to be scheduled.

Robert J. Conrad Jr.: Nominated April 28. Edwards is holding his "blue slip," effectively blocking the nomination.

The bipartisan spirit Wednesday stood in sharp contrast to the past rancor that has kept Tar Heels off the 4th Circuit. The 15-member panel hears appeals from five Southeastern states and is the last stop for federal cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Edwards and U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, Dole's Republican predecessor, both used a Senate tradition in recent years that allows members to block home-state nominees by presidents of the opposite party. As a result, North Carolina is the only state in the nation without a judge on an appellate court. Given its size, North Carolina should have at least four judges on the 4th Circuit.

On Wednesday, Edwards called Duncan "a nominee who will restore the voice of North Carolina to an important federal court and break a logjam which has damaged our state for too many years."

Dole heaped effusive praise on Duncan and pledged her "full support throughout this process."

Duncan, 51, is a former law professor at N.C. Central University who served in the 1990s on the state Court of Appeals and the N.C. Utilities Commission. She is a black Republican, and her recent ascent to the presidency of the N.C. Bar Association underscores her popularity in North Carolina.

If confirmed by the full Senate, Duncan would become the first woman from North Carolina to serve on the 4th Circuit and the first black woman from any state to sit on the court. She would be the first North Carolinian on the panel since the death of Sam Ervin III in 1999. She would also be the first new member from North Carolina in more than two decades.

All but one of the questions posed to Duncan on Wednesday were asked by Edwards, a Judiciary Committee member.

Edwards pitched softballs. He asked what Duncan learned from a judge for whom she clerked early in her career and whether her civic involvement would make her better on the bench. And Edwards wanted to know whether Duncan was committed to offering due-process protections to all those who appear before her.

"For obvious reasons, I believe that everyone is entitled to the due process of law," Duncan replied. "It is a commitment I will carry forward."

The only other question came from U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham, a freshman Republican from South Carolina, who acted as chairman in the absence of other Republican panel members.

Graham wanted to know what Duncan thought of this week's decisions on affirmative action by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Duncan suggested that the pair of opinions on the University of Michigan's admissions procedures would offer additional guidance on administering affirmative action programs. Graham asked no follow-up questions.

The Judiciary Committee also held hearings Wednesday on five noncontroversial District Court nominees, including that of Louise W. Flanagan, a U.S. magistrate judge based in New Bern, whom President Bush has nominated for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

With little standing in the way of either Flanagan or Duncan's confirmations, a larger questioned loomed Wednesday about the fate of Terrence Boyle, another of President Bush's nominees to the 4th Circuit.

Boyle, a former aide to Helms, was nominated by Bush in May 2001. Edwards' opposition kept him from getting a hearing until his nomination expired. Bush then renominated Boyle to the 4th Circuit early this year.

Dole initially suggested that Boyle be given a hearing before Duncan but decided not to stand in the way of Duncan's confirmation. During her introduction of Duncan on Wednesday, Dole repeated her position that single senators should not be able to derail nominations.

"If a person has concerns about an issue, or a nominee, then I believe that he or she should make a persuasive case to the other members of this body in a forthright, open and honest debate," Dole said.

Edwards is currently holding a "blue slip" that is distributed to home-state senators to gauge their support. By tradition, hearings rarely move forward before both home-state senators return the forms.

Senators end 12-year fight over court nomination

Move might give N.C. a seat back on bench

TIM FUNK

Observer Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON - A 12-year political impasse that has left North Carolina without any judges on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals finally ended Wednesday.

Sitting side by side, the state's two senators appeared before the Judiciary Committee to support President Bush's nomination of Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan to the Richmond, Va.-based court.

The mutual backing of Democratic Sen. John Edwards and GOP Sen. Elizabeth Dole appeared to put Duncan, 51, on track to get approved by the committee and confirmed by the full Senate as early as next month. Republican Duncan would be the first black woman to serve on the 4th Circuit court.

She's also the first N.C. nominee to have a clear path to the federal bench since 1991, when Democrats, who then controlled the Senate, refused to hold a hearing on the first President Bush's nomination of Terrence Boyle, a former aide to then-U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. Helms retaliated by blocking all of President Clinton's N.C. nominees to the 4th Circuit. Since then, Edwards has blocked Boyle, who was renominated by the current President Bush in 2001.

Edwards and Dole alluded to that stormy past Wednesday, with Dole even appearing to rap Edwards, though not by name, for continuing to deny Boyle a hearing. But their disagreements were muted by their chorus of praise for Duncan and what her confirmation would represent.

Duncan, who answered a few questions from committee members on Wednesday, would be the first N.C. judge to join the 4th Circuit -- often described as the most conservative federal appeals court in the country -- since the late Sam Ervin III in 1980.

Besides North Carolina -- the biggest state in the circuit and the only one not represented on the bench -- the court's jurisdiction includes South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia. Blacks make up 22 percent of the population covered by the court, higher than any other federal jurisdiction. But only one African American judge, Virginia's Roger Gregory, sits on the 13-person 4th Circuit court, which is one step below the U.S. Supreme Court.

On Wednesday, Duncan got a warm reception by the few senators who attended the Judiciary Committee hearing -- and even one who didn't.

In a statement released by the committee, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, its chairman, called Duncan "a true pioneer" and her nomination historic.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., who sat in for Hatch, predicted an easy path to confirmation for Duncan: "Very impressive lady."

Graham posed the only substantive question at Wednesday's hearing, asking Duncan what she thought of the U.S. Supreme Court's rulings this week on affirmative action.

"The two opinions provide additional guidance," answered Duncan, who said she had only skimmed the rulings so far. "(They) set out a framework that will circumscribe considerations on the court of appeals level."

Duncan is a Duke Law School graduate whose résumé also includes time on the N.C. Court of Appeals, the state utilities commission and a professorship at N.C. Central University. She is also the new president of the N.C. Bar Association.

Despite their agreement on Duncan, though, Dole and Edwards -- who sits on the Judiciary Committee -- both referred to the Senate discord this year over some of the president's more conservative judicial nominations.

Dole, who has written a letter to Edwards asking him to stop blocking a hearing for Boyle, now a federal district judge in Elizabeth City, told the committee that North Carolina should have four or five judges on the 4th Circuit bench, which now has four vacancies.

"Vacant federal benches contribute to overcrowded dockets, overburdened judges and understaffed courts," Dole said. "Judiciary committee members who object to a nominee should state their reasons and vote their conscience -- and the committee should promptly report the nomination to the Senate floor with a favorable, unfavorable or no recommendation."

Edwards, who has said he favors a better ideological "balance" in Bush's judicial nominees, called Duncan's nomination a model for what he hopes will happen from now on.

"President Bush reached out to Sen. Dole and me before he made his decision -- he consulted with us, he sought our advice," he told the committee. "And in making his decision, the president selected a nominee who represents the mainstream of our state."

After the hearing, Edwards said his opinion of Boyle's nomination hasn't changed. In a March 31 letter to Hatch, Edwards charged that Boyle "has inaccurately interpreted the law in a way that undercuts basic civil rights."

Dole, in an interview after she left the hearing, said she wants to "put the past behind us" -- including Helms' comments in the 1990s that the 4th Circuit didn't need any more judges.

"Let's move on and give every (judicial nominee) a chance," she said. "That's what the Constitution calls for."

Remarks at Bush-Cheney 2004 Reception – Los Angeles, CA
June 27, 2003
Draft #4

Thank you for that warm welcome. It's great to be in southern California. I've got a lot of friends here, and even some family: My cat Ernie likes southern California so much he moved here.

Thanks to your help tonight, we are laying the groundwork for a strong, nationwide effort next year. And with your help, it will be a strong, nationwide victory. I'm getting loosened up. I'm getting ready, but I am going to count on you to energize the grassroots, to make the phone calls, to put the signs in the yard, and to spread our message, which is positive and hopeful for every single American.

The political season will come in its own time. Right now, I am focused on the people's business in Washington, DC. We have a lot on the agenda. We will continue to work hard to earn the confidence of Americans by keeping this Nation secure and strong, prosperous and free.

Acknowledgments

- Brad Freeman, State Finance Chairman, Bush-Cheney '04 (will introduce the President)
- Mrs. Laura Bush (will not be present)
- Gerry Parsky, State Chairman, Bush-Cheney 2004
- Dennis Miller, Comedian and Actor (will emcee the event) and his wife, Carolyn
- Rabbi Steven Weil (will deliver invocation)
- Kelsey Grammer, Actor (leads the Pledge of Allegiance) (T)
- Johnny Mathis, Singer and Entertainer (sings the National Anthem)

- In the last two and a half years, our Nation has acted decisively to confront great challenges. I came to this office to solve problems, instead of passing them on to other presidents or other generations. I came to seize opportunities, instead of letting them slip away. We are meeting the tests of our time.

- Terrorists declared war on the United States of America – and war is what they got. We have captured or killed many key leaders of the al-

Qaida network – and the rest know we are on their trail. In Afghanistan and in Iraq, we gave ultimatums to terror regimes. Those regimes chose defiance, and those regimes are no more. Fifty million people in those two countries once lived under tyranny – and now they live in freedom.

- Two and a half years ago, our military was not receiving the resources it needed, and morale was beginning to suffer. We increased the defense budget to prepare for the threats of a new era. And today, no one in the world can question the skill, and the strength, and the spirit of the United States military.

- Two and a half years ago, we inherited an economy in recession. Then the attacks on our country, and scandals in corporate America, and the war affected people's confidence. But we acted. We passed tough new laws to hold corporate criminals to account. And to get the economy growing again, we have twice led the Congress to pass historic tax relief for the American people.

- Here is what we believe and here is what we know: When Americans have more take-home pay to spend, save, or invest, the whole economy grows and people can find work. We understand whose money we spend in Washington, DC. It is not the government's money, it is the people's money. We are returning more money to people raising their families. We are reducing taxes on dividends and capital gains to encourage investment. We are giving small businesses incentives to expand and hire new people. With all these actions, we are laying the foundation for greater prosperity, and more jobs across America – so every single person in this country has a chance to realize the American Dream.

- Two and a half years ago, there was a lot of talk about education reform, but there wasn't much action. So I called for, and the Congress passed, the No Child Left Behind Act. With a solid bipartisan majority, we delivered the most dramatic education reforms in a generation. We are bringing high standards and strong accountability measures to every public school in America. We believe every child can learn the basics of reading and math – and we believe every school must teach those basics. We are challenging the soft bigotry of low expectations. The days of excuse-making are over. And now we expect results in every classroom, so that not one child in America is left behind.

- We reorganized the government and created a Department of Homeland Security to safeguard the borders and ports, and protect the American people. We passed trade promotion authority to open new markets for America's farmers, ranchers, and manufacturers. We passed a budget agreement that is helping to maintain spending discipline in Washington, D.C. On issue after issue, this Administration has acted on principle, kept its word, and made progress for the American people.

- The United States Congress has shared in these great achievements, and I appreciate the hard work of the Members of Congress. We will continue to work together to change the tone in Washington, DC, by focusing on the people's business and focusing on results.

- That's the nature of the men and women I have asked to serve America in my Administration. I have put together a fantastic team – people who understand their job is to represent all of America. We have had no finer vice president than Richard B. Cheney. Although my mother has her own favorite.

- In two and a half years, we have come far, but our work is only beginning. We have great goals worthy of this great Nation. First: America is committed to expanding the realm of freedom and peace for our own security and for the benefit of the world. Second: In our own country, we must work for a society of prosperity and compassion, so that every citizen has a chance to work, and succeed, and realize the great promise of America.

- It is clear that the future of freedom and peace depend on the actions of America. This Nation is freedom's home and freedom's defender. We welcome this charge of history, and we are keeping it.

- Our war on terror continues. The enemies of freedom are not idle, and neither are we. This country will not rest, we will not tire, we will not stop until this danger to civilization is removed.

- Yet our national interest involves more than eliminating aggressive threats to our safety. Our greatest security comes from the advance of human liberty, because free nations do not support terror … free nations do not attack their neighbors … free nations do not threaten the world with weapons of mass terror. Americans believe that freedom is the deepest need and hope of every human heart. And we believe that freedom is the right of every person, and the future of every nation.

- America also understands that unprecedented influence brings tremendous responsibilities. We have duties in the world. And when we see disease, and starvation, and hopeless poverty, we will not turn away. On the continent of Africa, America is now committed to bringing the healing power of medicine to millions of men, women, and children now suffering with AIDS. This great land is leading the world in this important work of human rescue.

- We face challenges at home, and our actions prove that we are equal to those challenges. I will continue to work on our economy until everybody who wants to work, and is not working today, can find a job. We have a duty to keep our commitment to America's seniors by strengthening and modernizing Medicare. Late last night, the Congress took historic action to improve the lives of older Americans. For the first time since the creation of Medicare, the House and Senate have passed reforms to increase the choices of seniors, and provide coverage for prescription drugs. The next step is for both houses to come together, iron out some final details, and get a bill to my desk. And the sooner they finish the job, the sooner America's seniors will get the health care they deserve.

- For the sake of our health care system, we need to cut down on frivolous lawsuits, which increase the cost of medicine. People who have been harmed by a doctor deserve their day in court. Yet the system should not reward lawyers who are fishing for rich settlements. Because frivolous lawsuits drive up the cost of health care the medical liability issue is a national problem that requires a national solution. No one has ever been healed by a frivolous lawsuit. We need medical liability reform now. And I also strongly support the class action reform bill passed by the House this month, which would help ensure that more settlement money goes to real victims, not trial lawyers.

- I have a responsibility as President to make sure the judicial system runs well – and I have met that duty. I have nominated superb men and women for the federal courts – people who will interpret the law, not legislate from the bench. Some members of the Senate are trying to keep my nominees off the bench by blocking up-or-down votes. Every judicial nominee deserves a fair hearing and an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor. It is time for some Members of the Senate to stop playing politics with American justice.

- The Congress needs to pass a comprehensive energy plan. Our Nation must promote energy efficiency and conservation, and develop cleaner technology. For the sake of our economic security and our national security, we must produce more energy here at home.

- Our strong and prosperous Nation must also be a compassionate Nation. I will continue to advance our agenda of compassionate conservatism – applying the best, most innovative ideas to the task of helping our fellow citizens in need. There are still millions of men and women who want to end their dependence on the government and become independent through hard work. We must build on the success of welfare reform, to bring work and dignity into the lives of more of our fellow citizens. Congress should complete the Citizen Service Act, so that more Americans can serve their communities and their country. And both houses should reach agreement on a faith-based bill to support the Armies of Compassion that are mentoring children, and caring for the homeless, and offering hope to the addicted.

- A compassionate society must promote opportunity for all – including the independence and dignity that come from ownership. This Administration will constantly strive to promote an ownership society in America. We want more people to own their homes. We want more people to own their own retirement accounts. We want more small business owners in America. We want people to own their own health care plan. We understand that when a person owns something, he or she has a vital stake in the future of this country.

- In a compassionate society, people respect one another, and take responsibility for the decisions they make. We are changing the culture of America from one that said: "If it feels good, do it and if you've got a problem, blame someone else," to a culture in which each of us understands we are responsible for the decisions we make in life. If you are fortunate enough to be a mother or father, you are responsible for the well-belling of your child. If you are concerned about the quality of education in your community, you are responsible for doing something about it. If you are a CEO in America, you have a responsibility to tell the truth to your shareholders and your employees. And in this new responsibility society, each of us is responsible for loving our neighbor just like we'd like to be loved ourselves.

- We can see the culture of service and responsibility growing around us. I started the USA Freedom Corps to encourage Americans to extend a compassionate hand to neighbors in need. And the response has been strong. Faith-based charities are strong and vibrant, bringing hope and healing to our fellow citizens. Policemen, and firefighters, and people who wear our Nation's uniform are reminding us what it means to sacrifice for something greater than yourself. Once again, the children of America believe in heroes, because they see them every day.

- In these challenging times, the world has seen the resolve and the courage of America. And I have been privileged to see the compassion and character of the American people. All the tests of the last two and a half years have come to the right Nation. We are a strong country, and we use that strength to defend the peace. We are an optimistic country – confident in ourselves, and in ideals bigger than ourselves. Abroad, we seek to lift whole nations by spreading freedom. At home, we seek to lift up lives by spreading opportunity to every corner of America. This is the work that history has set before us. We welcome it, and we know that for our country and for our cause, the best days lie ahead.

- Thank you. God bless you all and may God bless America.

Remarks at Bush-Cheney 2004 Reception – San Francisco, CA
June 27, 2003
Draft #4

Thank you for that warm welcome. It's good to be back in the Bay Area. I thought about taking the new BART train in from the airport – but the Secret Service had a different idea.

Thanks to your help tonight, we are laying the groundwork for a strong, nationwide effort next year. And with your help, it will be a strong, nationwide victory. I'm getting loosened up. I'm getting ready, but I am going to count on you to energize the grassroots, to make the phone calls, to put the signs in the yard, and to spread our message, which is positive and hopeful for every single American.

The political season will come in its own time. Right now, I am focused on the people's business in Washington, DC. We have a lot on the agenda. We will continue to work hard to earn the confidence of Americans by keeping this Nation secure and strong, prosperous and free.

- In the last two and a half years, our Nation has acted decisively to confront great challenges. I came to this office to solve problems, instead of passing them on to other presidents or other generations. I came to seize opportunities, instead of letting them slip away. We are meeting the tests of our time.

- Terrorists declared war on the United States of America – and war is what they got. We have captured or killed many key leaders of the al-

Qaida network – and the rest know we are on their trail. In Afghanistan and in Iraq, we gave ultimatums to terror regimes. Those regimes chose defiance, and those regimes are no more. Fifty million people in those two countries once lived under tyranny – and now they live in freedom.

- Two and a half years ago, our military was not receiving the resources it needed, and morale was beginning to suffer. We increased the defense budget to prepare for the threats of a new era. And today, no one in the world can question the skill, and the strength, and the spirit of the United States military.

- Two and a half years ago, we inherited an economy in recession. Then the attacks on our country, and scandals in corporate America, and the war affected people's confidence. But we acted. We passed tough new laws to hold corporate criminals to account. And to get the economy growing again, we have twice led the Congress to pass historic tax relief for the American people.

- Here is what we believe and here is what we know: When Americans have more take-home pay to spend, save, or invest, the whole economy grows and people can find work. We understand whose money we spend in Washington, DC. It is not the government's money, it is the people's money. We are returning more money to people raising their families. We are reducing taxes on dividends and capital gains to encourage investment. We are giving small businesses incentives to expand and hire new people. With all these actions, we are laying the foundation for greater prosperity, and more jobs across America – so every single person in this country has a chance to realize the American Dream.

- Two and a half years ago, there was a lot of talk about education reform, but there wasn't much action. So I called for, and the Congress passed, the No Child Left Behind Act. With a solid bipartisan majority, we delivered the most dramatic education reforms in a generation. We are bringing high standards and strong accountability measures to every public school in America. We believe every child can learn the basics of reading and math – and we believe every school must teach those basics. We are challenging the soft bigotry of low expectations. The days of excuse-making are over. And now we expect results in every classroom, so that not one child in America is left behind.

- We reorganized the government and created a Department of Homeland Security to safeguard the borders and ports, and protect the American people. Thank you for that warm welcome. It's great to be in southern California. I've got a lot of friends here, and even some family: My cat Ernie likes southern California so much he moved here.

Remarks at Bush-Cheney 2004 Reception – San Francisco, CA
June 27, 2003
Draft #4

Thank you for that warm welcome. It's good to be back in the Bay Area. I thought about taking the new BART train in from the airport – but the Secret Service had a different idea.

Thanks to your help tonight, we are laying the groundwork for a strong, nationwide effort next year. And with your help, it will be a strong, nationwide victory. I'm getting loosened up. I'm getting ready, but I am going to count on you to energize the grassroots, to make the phone calls, to put the signs in the yard, and to spread our message, which is positive and hopeful for every single American.

The political season will come in its own time. Right now, I am focused on the people's business in Washington, DC. We have a lot on the agenda. We will continue to work hard to earn the confidence of Americans by keeping this Nation secure and strong, prosperous and free.

Acknowledgments

- Brad Freeman, State Finance Chairman, Bush-Cheney 2004 (will introduce the President)
- Mrs. Laura Bush (will not be present)
- Gerry Parsky, State Chairman, Bush-Cheney 2004
- Dennis Miller, Comedian and Actor (will emcee the event) and his wife, Carolyn
- Father Steven Pirvett (will deliver Invocation)
- Dr. Gloria Hom (will lead the Pledge of Allegiance)
- JoAnna Dias (will perform the National Anthem)

- In the last two and a half years, our Nation has acted decisively to confront great challenges. I came to this office to solve problems, instead of passing them on to other presidents or other generations. I came to seize opportunities, instead of letting them slip away. We are meeting the tests of our time.

- Terrorists declared war on the United States of America – and war is what they got. We have captured or killed many key leaders of the al-

Qaida network – and the rest know we are on their trail. In Afghanistan and in Iraq, we gave ultimatums to terror regimes. Those regimes chose defiance, and those regimes are no more. Fifty million people in those two countries once lived under tyranny – and now they live in freedom.

- Two and a half years ago, our military was not receiving the resources it needed, and morale was beginning to suffer. We increased the defense budget to prepare for the threats of a new era. And today, no one in the world can question the skill, and the strength, and the spirit of the United States military.

- Two and a half years ago, we inherited an economy in recession. Then the attacks on our country, and scandals in corporate America, and the war affected people's confidence. But we acted. We passed tough new laws to hold corporate criminals to account. And to get the economy growing again, we have twice led the Congress to pass historic tax relief for the American people.

- Here is what we believe and here is what we know: When Americans have more take-home pay to spend, save, or invest, the whole economy grows and people can find work. We understand whose money we spend in Washington, DC. It is not the government's money, it is the people's money. We are returning more money to people raising their families. We are reducing taxes on dividends and capital gains to encourage investment. We are giving small businesses incentives to expand and hire new people. With all these actions, we are laying the foundation for greater prosperity, and more jobs across America – so every single person in this country has a chance to realize the American Dream.

- Two and a half years ago, there was a lot of talk about education reform, but there wasn't much action. So I called for, and the Congress passed, the No Child Left Behind Act. With a solid bipartisan majority, we delivered the most dramatic education reforms in a generation. We are bringing high standards and strong accountability measures to every public school in America. We believe every child can learn the basics of reading and math – and we believe every school must teach those basics. We are challenging the soft bigotry of low expectations. The days of excuse-making are over. And now we expect results in every classroom, so that not one child in America is left behind.

- We reorganized the government and created a Department of Homeland Security to safeguard the borders and ports, and protect the American people. We passed trade promotion authority to open new markets for America's farmers, ranchers, and manufacturers. We passed a budget agreement that is helping to maintain spending discipline in Washington, D.C. On issue after issue, this Administration has acted on principle, kept its word, and made progress for the American people.

- The United States Congress has shared in these great achievements, and I appreciate the hard work of the Members of Congress. We will continue to work together to change the tone in Washington, DC, by focusing on the people's business and focusing on results.

- That's the nature of the men and women I have asked to serve America in my Administration. I have put together a fantastic team – people who understand their job is to set aside partisan bickering and represent all of America. We have had no finer vice president than Richard B. Cheney. Although my mother has her own favorite.

- In two and a half years, we have come far, but our work is only beginning. We have great goals worthy of this great Nation. First: America is committed to expanding the realm of freedom and peace for our own security and for the benefit of the world. Second: In our own country, we must work for a society of prosperity and compassion, so that every citizen has a chance to work, and succeed, and realize the great promise of America.

- It is clear that the future of freedom and peace depend on the actions of America. This Nation is freedom's home and freedom's defender. We welcome this charge of history, and we are keeping it.

- Our war on terror continues. The enemies of freedom are not idle, and neither are we. This country will not rest, we will not tire, we will not stop until this danger to civilization is removed.

- Yet our national interest involves more than eliminating aggressive threats to our safety. Our greatest security comes from the advance of human liberty, because free nations do not support terror … free nations do not attack their neighbors … free nations do not threaten the world with weapons of mass terror. Americans believe that freedom is the deepest need and hope of every human heart. And we believe that freedom is the right of every person, and the future of every nation.

- America also understands that unprecedented influence brings tremendous responsibilities. We have duties in the world. And when we see disease, and starvation, and hopeless poverty, we will not turn away. On the continent of Africa, America is now committed to bringing the healing power of medicine to millions of men, women, and children now suffering with AIDS. This great land is leading the world in this important work of human rescue.

- We face challenges at home, and our actions prove that we are equal to those challenges. I will continue to work on our economy until everybody who wants to work, and is not working today, can find a job. We have a duty to keep our commitment to America's seniors by strengthening and modernizing Medicare. Late last night, the Congress took historic action to improve the lives of older Americans. For the first time since the creation of Medicare, the House and Senate have passed reforms to increase the choices of seniors, and provide coverage for prescription drugs. The next step is for both houses to come together, iron out some final details, and get a bill to my desk. And the sooner they finish the job, the sooner America's seniors will get the health care they deserve.

- For the sake of our health care system, we need to cut down on frivolous lawsuits, which increase the cost of medicine. People who have been harmed by a doctor deserve their day in court. Yet the system should not reward lawyers who are fishing for rich settlements. Because frivolous lawsuits drive up the cost of health care the medical liability issue is a national problem that requires a national solution. No one has ever been healed by a frivolous lawsuit. We need medical liability reform now. And I also strongly support the class action reform bill passed by the House this month, which would help ensure that more settlement money goes to real victims, not trial lawyers.

- I have a responsibility as President to make sure the judicial system runs well – and I have met that duty. I have nominated superb men and women for the federal courts – people who will interpret the law, not legislate from the bench. Some members of the Senate are trying to keep my nominees off the bench by blocking up-or-down votes. Every judicial nominee deserves a fair hearing and an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor. It is time for some Members of the Senate to stop playing politics with American justice.

- The Congress needs to pass a comprehensive energy plan. Our Nation must promote energy efficiency and conservation, and develop cleaner technology. For the sake of our economic security and our national security, we must produce more energy here at home.

- Our strong and prosperous Nation must also be a compassionate Nation. I will continue to advance our agenda of compassionate conservatism – applying the best, most innovative ideas to the task of helping our fellow citizens in need. There are still millions of men and women who want to end their dependence on the government and become independent through hard work. We must build on the success of welfare reform, to bring work and dignity into the lives of more of our fellow citizens. Congress should complete the Citizen Service Act, so that more Americans can serve their communities and their country. And both houses should reach agreement on a faith-based bill to support the Armies of Compassion that are mentoring children, and caring for the homeless, and offering hope to the addicted.

- A compassionate society must promote opportunity for all – including the independence and dignity that come from ownership. This Administration will constantly strive to promote an ownership society in America. We want more people to own their homes. We want more people to own their own retirement accounts. We want more small business owners in America. We want people to own their own health care plan. We understand that when a person owns something, he or she has a vital stake in the future of this country.

- In a compassionate society, people respect one another, and take responsibility for the decisions they make. We are changing the culture of America from one that said: "If it feels good, do it and if you've got a problem, blame someone else," to a culture in which each of us understands we are responsible for the decisions we make in life. If you are fortunate enough to be a mother or father, you are responsible for the well-belling of your child. If you are concerned about the quality of education in your community, you are responsible for doing something about it. If you are a CEO in America, you have a responsibility to tell the truth to your shareholders and your employees. And in this new responsibility society, each of us is responsible for loving our neighbor just like we'd like to be loved ourselves.

- We can see the culture of service and responsibility growing around us. I started the USA Freedom Corps to encourage Americans to extend a compassionate hand to neighbors in need. And the response has been strong. Faith-based charities are strong and vibrant, bringing hope and healing to our fellow citizens. Policemen, and firefighters, and people who wear our Nation's uniform are reminding us what it means to sacrifice for something greater than yourself. Once again, the children of America believe in heroes, because they see them every day.

- In these challenging times, the world has seen the resolve and the courage of America. And I have been privileged to see the compassion and character of the American people. All the tests of the last two and a half years have come to the right Nation. We are a strong country, and we use that strength to defend the peace. We are an optimistic country – confident in ourselves, and in ideals bigger than ourselves. Abroad, we seek to lift whole nations by spreading freedom. At home, we seek to lift up lives by spreading opportunity to every corner of America. This is the work that history has set before us. We welcome it, and we know that for our country and for our cause, the best days lie ahead.

- Thank you. God bless you all and may God bless America.

SUBJECT: Heads Up on Treasury Customer Identification Notice

We have concluded review of a Treasury Department notice that reopens several issues contained in a recent final rule issued by six financial regulatory agencies. The joint regulation, issued pursuant to the USA PATRIOT Act, is a component of the government's anti-money laundering and anti-terrorist financing effort. It requires financial institutions to develop reasonable procedures for identifying their customers.

The two aspects of the regulation that will be reexamined, and for which the notice seeks comment, regard (1) the retention of photocopies of identification documents, and (2) the reliance on certain forms of foreign government-issued identification. After the final rule was published, House Judiciary Chairman Sensenbrenner and the Department of Justice expressed concern regarding the final regulation's treatment of these situations and the resulting negative impact on law enforcement. Financial institutions have until October 1, 2003 to be in compliance.

After the 30-day comment period on this notice is concluded, a decision will be made whether to initiate a rulemaking to revise the requirements of the recently-published final regulation. Comments on the notice being published this week will create an administrative record that can be used to undertake such a change.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Texas to Restore Race in Admissions

By ANITA CHANG

The Associated Press

Friday, June 27, 2003; 2:42 PM

DALLAS - Six years after dropping affirmative action in favor of a 10 percent solution, Texas' public university system will work to restore race as a factor in admissions, with the blessing of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Larry Faulkner, president of the University of Texas' 50,000-student flagship campus at Austin, said the changes could be in place there this fall for applicants for the 2004-5 school year. The other schools in the 170,000-student UT system would probably follow Austin's lead.

Affirmative action "gets to the heart of what we try to accomplish as an institution," Faulkner said. "It's important for us to have strong representation here of students from all sectors of society."

Earlier this week, the Supreme Court upheld affirmative action at universities, endorsing the notion that diversity on campus makes for a more just society. The court struck down a race-based point system for undergraduate admissions at the University of Michigan as too rigid, but it upheld the more individualized policy at the university's law school.

Faulkner did not give details of how race will be added back into the equation. Any such changes would probably not require legislative approval, but must be compatible with Texas' "Top 10 Percent" admissions law.

Under that law, students who graduate in the top 10 percent of each high school are automatically admitted to the state university system.

Two other big states use similar methods: California guarantees admission to the top 4 percent of its high school graduates, and Florida's 4-year-old policy admits the top 20 percent. The plans are aimed at giving a shot at an education to a diverse selection of students.

"The percentage plans are predicated on the continued existence of segregated housing patterns giving rise to extremely segregated high schools," said Sheldon Steinbach, general counsel for the American Council on Education.

Texas dropped the use of race in college admissions in 1996 after a federal appeals court overturned the University of Texas law school's affirmative-action program. The state adopted the 10 percent solution under then-Gov. George W. Bush in 1997. Around that time, California voters passed Proposition 209 to ban racial and ethnic preferences in hiring and admissions.

Florida's plan was promoted by Gov. Jeb Bush, the president's brother, who initiated it without being directly forced to do so by either a court ruling or a ballot measure.

Because California's race-blind policy is now part of the state constitution, it cannot be changed without another statewide vote.

As for Florida, the governor said his state's policy will not change in the wake of the high court's decision. "Embracing diversity in meaningful ways with nondiscriminatory practices has yielded a better result for African-American and Hispanic students in our state," Jeb Bush said.

Any changes in Texas could have political ramifications, since President Bush has touted his home state's 10 percent plan as a model race-blind policy.

Republican Gov. Rick Perry has asked for the state attorney general's opinion on the Supreme Court ruling so public universities and colleges in Texas would have a clearer idea of how race may be reincorporated into admissions.

The Texas and California programs have a mixed record, with minority enrollment holding steady or up only slightly at most schools, and lower at competitive schools like UC-Berkeley.

The Florida plan has not seen a similar drop-off. But its plan is not entirely race-neutral: Florida has financial aid, recruitment and retention programs targeting minorities, and those programs are banned in Texas and California.

Tim,

I don't know what was going on that provoked the meeting this morning, but in all honesty I found it insulting. I ducked a lecture here at FRC that I had a hand in promoting in order to attend a meeting utterly without substance, that plowed the same old ground, and amounted to little more than a pep talk. We don't need any more pep talks. I find them condescending. And we're not awed by being invited to the Senate. This was a colossal waste of time.

I know it wasn't your meeting, just wanted to vent.

Izzy explained that this is a standing meeting that takes place for all upcoming WH events. If a BC'04 event is on the schedule, the campaign personnel get to participate just for that portion of the discussion. For today's call, they did discuss Monday's BC'04 events in FL, but they also discussed 4th of July in OH. That's the background. I'll let Brett decide re: reimbursement of any cost. What is the cost associated for having a conference call like this?

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

NALEO

PHOENIX, ARIZONA

FRIDAY,
JUNE 27, 2003

REV_00124729

Thank you. Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. My presence here today and the simile on my face confirm that the U.S. Supreme Court has issued its final opinions for the term and there has been no announcement of a vacancy on the court, thus creating the good possibility that the White House will not be engaged this summer in a protected effort to get the President's nominee confirmed in a closely divided Senate.

REV_00124730

It has been a historic week for our country. But in truth ladies and gentlemen, it seems that virtually every day, history is made in the White House.

After all, people from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television over the years.

REV_00124731

And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they first step into the West Wing. Of course, most of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there… particularly now during this historic period for our country.

REV_00124732

When I think of leadership, I often repeat in my mind a quote I heard many years ago – "In every age there comes a time when leadership suddenly springs forth to meet the needs of the hour. And so, there is no man that does not have his time, and no hour that does not have its leader." This quote steadies me – it grounds me – reassuring my faith that our needs will always be provided for. True leadership abounds in the human spirit and with the nurturing of God and man – this leadership can be realized.

REV_00124733

Following September 11th we know that our country is confronting a historic threat. We are facing a type of enemy never seen before – an enemy that doe not respect our values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life. Defeating such an extraordinary threat requires extraordinary leadership.

REV_00124734

This President, this Administration, has been commissioned to discharge a solemn duty in a uniquely singular moment in the history of America.

But there are other threats, other dangers closer to home that also require a response. All of you have been elected or appointed to serve have been given a sacred trust to make decisions that address the needs of others. You may consider yourself to be ordinary, but you are extraordinary Americans who have been chosen to meet the needs of this hour – of this time.

As you consider your commitment, it is natural for other to ask how did these leaders come to be? What is the source of their achievements? What events led them to this hour – this very moment? Each of them has a story with many twists and turns. A story that could have had a different outcome depending on the choices they made when opportunities presented themselves … opportunities that simply were not available to many of our parents.

REV_00124736

Years ago, Hispanic children had to attend separate schools in some parts of our great country. Perhaps someone in the audience remembers not being allowed to serve on a jury or live in a certain neighborhood because of their ethnicity … I have visited the graves of my relatives buried in the "Mexican" section of a cemetery in San Antonio.

REV_00124737

We all know that today, the opportunities for the Hispanic community are better. Earlier this month headlines touted that Hispanics now constitute the largest minority population in America. Arguably, our booming population growth makes it dangerous for politicians wanting our votes and companies coveting our dollars to ignore the needs of our community. So many of my friends draw comfort from the fact that we are no longer few in numbers. But like some of you, I still worry when I see so many unmet needs.

REV_00124738

Our children continue to be endangered by a rising tide of drugs, crime and indifference that threatens to wash away the opportunity for even a high school education. Now, we have recognized the problem for years, and talked and talked about the solutions. But, every day another child is lost as we continue to wring our hands with indecision. (PAUSE)

It is time to stop talking.

REV_00124739

Rebecca, and I have two young sons at home. And when I drive them somewhere they often ask, "Daddy, where are you taking me?"

It is a perfectly natural question from curious little boys. But standing here is front of the elected and appointed leaders of the Hispanic community, it seems to me to be an equally legitimate question to ask of you, "Where are you taking me?"

Because you see, having placed our future in your hands, we have a right to ask that question. And you have a duty to have an answer.

REV_00124740

I believe that a person's character can best be measured after you give them power. What will you do with the power that comes with your office? How will your character measure up? In the future as we assume more power, we will be to blame if our children continue to be illiterate, if our small businesses continue to remain shut out from government contracts, and if our parents cannot afford healthcare? So where are you taking us?

REV_00124741

Will you lead us forward with an eye upon the lessons of the past? There is little question that life was more difficult for people named Villalreal, Longoria, and Fernandez, but in an ironic way, the old prejudices – the bigotries of the past - served to strengthen our community.

In dealing with social and economic barriers, we have always been sustained by family and religion, … and in so doing, we discovered the strength of our faith, the beauty of our culture, and we developed strong, visionary leadership.

Our experiences, though painful, provided important lessons. It is important that our children understand these lessons, that they learn and are continuously reminded of the importance of personal responsibility … reminded not just by our words but by our actions. If we are silent during the debate aobut public education in this country … if we are timid in the face of discrimination … if we are absent at the voting both on Election Day, then we fail in our missions to prepare the next generation of leaders.

REV_00124743

So, where are you taking us?

As a young man, my father picked crops as a migrant worker in the fields of South Texas where he met my mother. Later – limited in opportunity by a second grade education – Dad worked construction and eventually on a maintenance crew at a Houston rice mill until he died during my last semester in law school. My mother would often wake me as a boy before dawn so I could have eggs and tortillas with my father before he left for work.

REV_00124744

Last month Mom – now seventy- came to stay with my family and visit Washington for the first time. We walked the monuments and the museums like other tourists, but I also took her into the Oval Office to see the President. It was important for me to be able to do that for her – this little woman with virtually no formal education who with my father struggled to provide for her children – I took her to thank her and to show her what I had accomplished because of her sacrifices and those of my father.

REV_00124745

At dawn on the last day of her visit, she was there to say goodbye as I left for work – just as she had done for my father on so many mornings. Only I wasn't going to a construction site, I was reporting to the White House to advise the most powerful person in the world.

Think of the pride and wonder that must have filled her heart. She never dreamed that I would take her from the cotton fields to the Oval Office. Where are you taking me?

As I look around this room, I see such a remarkable collection of talent that gives me great hope. All of you are success stories - with chapters of accomplishments still unwritten. You are smart, ambitious, and hardworking…but, I promise you – particularly for the elected officials we recognize today, you are here because somewhere, sometime in your life, there was someone that made a sacrifice so you would have a chance; somewhere, a parent, a teacher, an employer, gave you an opportunity and opened the doors to your success.

REV_00124747

Yes, we may be different in origin, but we pursue a common end, asking for only one thing – an opportunity to succeed. "Just give me a chance to prove myself" – that is the prayer that Latinos share – still today. I am the beneficiary of the sacrifices of my parents, and the many opportunities given to me by our President. There were many others of course, who are less recognizable. I do not know their names, but we are all familiar with their faces: the Panamanian woman who served your meal, the Columbian janitor who will sweep these floors when you are gone, the Guatemalan cook, the Peruvian shoemaker, the Honduran seamstress, the Puerto Rican teenager who cuts your grass, the Cuban roofer putting the shingles on your neighbor's house, the Mexican construction worker like my father before me.

I am all of these people who have sacrificed because I am Hispanic. As are you. As are you.

REV_00124749

Your responsibility and mine, is to give another person a chance. You want to be a hero, then believe in a child. Help someone get into college, encourage them to own their own business, motivate them to give back to the community that has nurtured them, support them in pursuing their dream.

REV_00124750

Last year I attended the Hispanic Heritage Awards at the Kennedy Center, and watched with pride and inspiration as five Hispanics were recognized for excellence in their chose field. One of the honorees was Derek Para from California.

You may remember that Para became the first Mexican American to compete in, and medal in the Olympic Winter Games. Following his historic achievement Derek spoke of his struggles and his joy in being the first Latino to bring home Olympic Gold.

I was moved by his public acknowledgment of his faith in God and his obvious pride in our community.

I think faith is a common trait found in many of our leaders. Faith in the outcome of the risks they took. Faith in their abilities to succeed in their efforts. Faith in those family and friends that stood by believing in them even before they reached the pinnacles in their careers. And faith in an almighty God that would assure them that "His will be done."

REV_00124752

Few of us will have the opportunity to compete for gold in the Winger Olympics or for the Presidency of the United States. But we can all be heroes by simply believing in a child. It is particularly important that our Hispanic leaders nurture and encourage others – because as you know better than most the needs of our community are still so great.

REV_00124753

When I was a Texas state official I often said that one of the most important gifts we can give a child is hope…to leave them with a dream…to convince them that anything is possible. I often asked young students "How big can you dream?" It is a question that often caused them to fidget, eliciting nervous laughter – as if it is silly or childish to dream big dreams.

REV_00124754

On Monday, the Supreme Court took a step in the right direction by recognizing the value of diversity on our Nation's campuses. As the President has said from the beginning, "[d]iversity is one of America's greatest strengths," and we applaud the Supreme Court for recognizing this.

REV_00124755

Diversity comes in many forms – racial, religious, economic, and geographic, to name a few – and all of these aspects of our society should be reflected at our institutions of higher education. A college education should teach more than the basic courses required to graduate – students should leave college with greater understanding of, and respect for, people different from themselves. In order to grow in that fashion, they must have the opportunity to live among and study with a diverse group of classmates during their time in college.

REV_00124756

The values of mutual respect and diversity of viewpoint are only strengthened by having students from different backgrounds interacting with and learning from one another on campus and in the classroom.

REV_00124757

Monday's decisions in the Michigan affirmative action cases strike a careful balance between the goal of campus diversity and the fundamental principle of equal protection and treatment under the law. The effect of these two rulings will be to allow universities to continue using race or ethnicity as a "'plus' factor in a particular applicant's file," but also to require that schools take special care to evaluate each applicant as an individual, not in a way that makes race the defining feature of his or her application.

REV_00124758

REV_00124759

The majority in the law school decision also endorsed the view that race-conscious affirmative action policies should not be a permanent feature in the application process, and announced their expectation that "25 years from now, the use of racial preferences will no longer be necessary to further the interest" of diversity based affirmative action.

REV_00124760

This Administration has promoted, and will continue to promote, polices that expand educational opportunities for all Americans. The Supreme Court has made clear that colleges and universities should engage in a serious, good faith consideration of workable race-neutral alternatives that reflect our Nation's diversity without relying on racial quotas.

REV_00124761

Some states, like California, Florida, Washington and Texas, have proven that broad racial diversity can be achieved without using racial quotas, by guaranteeing admissions to the top students from high schools throughout the state, including low income neighborhoods. This is especially important because the arena of education is the gateway to freedom for the children of poor families.

REV_00124762

These race-neutral admissions policies have resulted in high levels of minority attendance for incoming students that are similar to, if not even better than, those achieved under a race-based approach.

REV_00124763

There are members of society who say that quality is determined not by external characteristics, such as race and socio-economic background, but by internal discipline and training. The President agrees with the importance of ability but also appreciates the benefits that diversity brings. As the former Governor of Texas and the President of the United States, President Bush has valued diversity among those he has appointed to his Administration.

REV_00124764

This diversity has proven to be an important complement to integrity and competence. Likewise, this has been and will continue to be true of his appointments to the bench. Obviously, interpretation of law should not be based on the ethnicity of a judge because there is no white, black or brown jurisprudence.

REV_00124765

The President looks first at each candidate's qualifications, experience, and judicial philosophy, but has also made clear that he believes government should be open to all qualified individuals from every segment of society. The President also recognizes that we live in a diverse nation where quality individuals are found in many colors. He has instructed those who seek out judicial candidates to go the extra mile to ensure that opportunities are available to everyone.

REV_00124766

Racial and ethnic diversity is part of who this Country is. Diversity represents one of our greatest strengths; therefore, we must strive to guarantee that all Americans have the opportunity to reach their fullest potential. Every year, since the founding of this Nation, immigrants have come to America with the hope of better opportunities for themselves and their children.

REV_00124767

The President embraces these desires and has taken steps to ensure that all students are given a quality education, no matter what ethnic or economic background they come from. This Administration will continue to actively promote diversity and opportunity in every way that the law permits.

REV_00124768

A few years ago then Texas Governor Bush spoke about the sacrifice by my parents. Referring to my then recent appointment to the Texas Supreme Court, the Governor said that I had realized my parent's dreams.

REV_00124769

So I ask you today, "how big can you dream?" The answer to that question says more to me about you than any resume or press release. It tell me how soon we achieve the President's vision of a country in which no child is left behind, a country in which armies of compassion rise up to wage battle against the evils of our society — a country where every person, no matter their ethnicity, gender or race has an equal opportunity to the American dream, where an African American little boy can become a United States Senator, a Hispanic child from the barrios of Los Angeles or Miami can become a United States Supreme Court Justice, a country in which a little girl can become its President.

If you are still dreaming big dreams, not just for yourself, but for others - if that is where you are taking me - then that's where I want to be – with you…working side by side, shoulder to shoulder for America.

REV_00124771

I close by confessing that being the lawyer for this President is the best legal job in America. If Rebecca and I could afford it, I would serve this President and our country for free. I have perhaps the most important client in the world, a man whom I admire and respect so much, and the quality of work is unparalleled - what we do more than satisfies the hopes and dreams I had as a young man contemplating a career in the law because I wanted a job where I could make a difference in the lives of ordinary people and for my community.

REV_00124772

So all that we have accomplished, we owe not just to a President, but as well, to the true heroes of our community, the people who simply believed in a child.

Emerson said that, "what lies behind us and what lies before us are tiny matters compared to what lies within us."

All of my hopes and dreams are in my children. The choices that you make as leaders will have a profound impact on my life and the lives of my sons. Will we continue to enjoy prosperity? Will we continue to be safe? Will we continue to be free?

Like it or not, ready or not, the fate of all I hold dearest is really in your hands. Not all of your decisions will be fun or easy. Not all of your decisions will be glamorous or make the evening news. Some will be about family, duty to country, and just helping others.

You will decide.

REV_00124774

So I care very much about the choices you are going to make… the world you are about to create.

This is why I am here… and this is why I ask, “Where are you taking me?”

Ladies and Gentlemen, I look forward with anticipation to your answer.

Our country is becoming increasingly more diverse, and the face of its leadership must change to keep pace.

Thank you for doing your part in teaching civic responsibility, highlighting role models, educating our children, and providing leadership for our community. I pray that God will continue to watch over you and your families, may He guide your decisions and may He continue to bless the United States of America.

Thank you.

Subject: Traveling Bullhorn

Last week, I spoke with staff at the Smithsonian's American History Museum and the National Archives regarding the proposal to include the President's bullhorn, used on September 14, 2001, in the Smithsonian's traveling exhibit entitled, Bearing Witness to History: September 11, 2001.

In both conversations, I reiterated the White House's concern about the security of the bullhorn while it is traveling with this exhibit. The Smithsonian has not yet finalized the list of cities nor the venues it plans to visit with their exhibit. In my view, the White House should not agree to the loan of the bullhorn until this list is finalized, and the sites appear acceptable for display of the bullhorn. The Smithsonian is building a crate to store the bullhorn, but started before consulting with the White House on the specifics needed, etc.

I talked to the Presidential Libraries division of the Archives, and they already knew that the Smithsonian wanted to take the bullhorn on the road, as the Smithsonian had already contacted them. I asked the Archives if some of their experts could look at the Smithsonian's plan for security of the bullhorn. The Archives offered two options:

1) The Archives will send a couple of their staff to the White House to look over and evaluate the Smithsonian plan, to see if the crate that the Smithsonian has in mind will sufficiently protect the bullhorn for long-term travel and storage.

2) The Archives can "co-sign" the loan of the bullhorn to the Smithsonian. This has been done before with other items loaned from the White House. While it has no legal bearing, this arrangement allows the Archives to contact the Smithsonian directly and consult/confer on the cities, venues, security, etc. for the exhibit as it travels. The Archives would serve as the "watch dog" to make sure that the Smithsonian is fulfilling its responsibilities re: the loan. This doesn't mean that the White House is shut out of the arrangement, only that the Archives will oversee the arrangements and the nitty gritty details.

I believe that option #2 is the best way for the White House to go, if a final decision is made to loan the bullhorn for the exhibit. We certainly need to assure that when the bullhorn leaves Washington it is in a secure display box with proper humidity and temperature controls. Likewise, the White House needs to know that the venues at which the bullhorn is displayed are appropriate and deserving of a loaned item from the President. The Archives can help us with this, and I think also give us all a greater level of comfort in loaning this historic item.

Let me know your thoughts. Thanks.

In trying to track down the results of the name check on Sandra Townes, I learned from Jim Carroll that we haven't been doing name checks routinely on candidates for some time -- this was news to me and I expect may be to you as well. Anyway, apparently we have still been asking candidates to fill out the name check paperwork, so we have it on Townes. Jim s going to try to get the check done today. He thinks he can get an answer by tomorrow morning.

Do we need to revisit the broader question of whether they should be done regularly?

MEMORANDUM FOR ANDREW CARD

THROUGH: Augustine T. Smythe

FROM: John D. Graham

SUBJECT: Proposed Rulemaking on SBA's Certified Development Company Loan Program

OMB has concluded review on a Small Business Administration (SBA) proposed rule entitled "Development Company Loan (504) Program Changes." The 504 program, established in its current form in 1980, authorizes SBA to guarantee debentures backing long-term, fixed-asset loans made by Certified Development Companies (CDCs). This rule would relax a number of restrictions on the program, including the elimination of the regulations restricting CDCs from expanding their geographic reach and operating in other CDCs' territories. SBA hopes that these changes will make the program and the CDCs more competitive and improve the delivery of these loans to small businesses, particularly in rural areas that SBA believes are underserved by existing CDCs.

SBA issued an Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking on this issue in December 2002 and received almost 2000 comments. This NPRM will generate similar interest from the CDCs, banks, small businesses, and government and community organizations. Since CDCs are closely tied to their local communities by their governance structure, we can expect some Congressional interest, but this rule is unlikely to generate media interest.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

This week the Supreme Court of the United Stateswill have ended October Term 2002 with a dramatic flourish, having issued major opinions in the Michiganaffirmative action cases, the Texassodomy case, the Nike commercial speech case, and the American Library Association obscenity case. These opinions, along with earlier decisions involving federalism, criminal law, campaign finance, punitive damages, cross-burning, and copyright, combined to make the just-ended term one of the most closely watched in recent memory. Join us for a spirited review of the major cases and themes of the Court's 2002-2003 term.

I'm sorry...I have no idea who to ask this to, so I thought I would start with you.

1. Can we (as the White House Press Office) release dubed tape copies of the President's Campaign events?!? We always have requests for Presidential events that we release with out hesitation, we just wanted to make sure that we weren't doing anything wrong releasing the Campaign events.

2. Can we release dubed tape copies of the President's Presidential events to Partisan organizations?!? For example, we have RepublicanTV.org requesting some footage of some events. Is that okay to release to them?!!?

We just want to make sure we aren't mixing in places we shouldn't and doing anything wrong.

I didn't know who to ask in our office so I thought you might! You are the best, thanks so much!

Subject: Traveling Bullhorn

Last week, I spoke with staff at the Smithsonian's American History Museum and the National Archives regarding the proposal to include the President's bullhorn, used on September 14, 2001, in the Smithsonian's traveling exhibit entitled, Bearing Witness to History: September 11, 2001.

In both conversations, I reiterated the White House's concern about the security of the bullhorn while it is traveling with this exhibit. The Smithsonian has not yet finalized the list of cities nor the venues it plans to visit with their exhibit. In my view, the White House should not agree to the loan of the bullhorn until this list is finalized, and the sites appear acceptable for display of the bullhorn. The Smithsonian is building a crate to store the bullhorn, but started before consulting with the White House on the specifics needed, etc.

I talked to the Presidential Libraries division of the Archives, and they already knew that the Smithsonian wanted to take the bullhorn on the road, as the Smithsonian had already contacted them. I asked the Archives if some of their experts could look at the Smithsonian's plan for security of the bullhorn. The Archives offered two options:

1) The Archives will send a couple of their staff to the White House to look over and evaluate the Smithsonian plan, to see if the crate that the Smithsonian has in mind will sufficiently protect the bullhorn for long-term travel and storage.

2) The Archives can "co-sign" the loan of the bullhorn to the Smithsonian. This has been done before with other items loaned from the White House. While it has no legal bearing, this arrangement allows the Archives to contact the Smithsonian directly and consult/confer on the cities, venues, security, etc. for the exhibit as it travels. The Archives would serve as the "watch dog" to make sure that the Smithsonian is fulfilling its responsibilities re: the loan. This doesn't mean that the White House is shut out of the arrangement, only that the Archives will oversee the arrangements and the nitty gritty details.

I believe that option #2 is the best way for the White House to go, if a final decision is made to loan the bullhorn for the exhibit. We certainly need to assure that when the bullhorn leaves Washington it is in a secure display box with proper humidity and temperature controls. Likewise, the White House needs to know that the venues at which the bullhorn is displayed are appropriate and deserving of a loaned item from the President. The Archives can help us with this, and I think also give us all a greater level of comfort in loaning this historic item.

Let me know your thoughts. Thanks.

Judicial impasse ends
N.C. senators work together for appeals court nominee

Hallelujah! North Carolina's two U.S. senators broke a 12-year political stalemate over appeals court nominees last week. The result should be this state's first 4th Circuit Court judge in a decade.

Both Republican Elizabeth Dole and Democrat John Edwards deserve a hand for working together to support Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan, President Bush's nominee. Their mutual backing all but ensures the 51-year-old Ms. Duncan of confirmation. She's on track to get approval from the Senate Judiciary Committee and could get full Senate confirmation in weeks.

As we've noted before, Ms. Duncan is an excellent choice. She's a former judge of the N.C. Court of Appeals, former member of the N.C. Utilities Commission and former law professor at the N.C. Central University school of law.

A Republican, she would be the first judge of African American descent from North Carolina on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That distinction was not lost on members of the Senate. In a written statement, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, Judiciary Committee chair, called Ms. Duncan "a true pioneer" and her nomination historic.

Even if she didn't have those perceived advantages, Ms. Duncan would be a first-rate nominee. Her colleagues regard her as extremely bright, passionate about her work and easy to work with. She recently became head of the state bar association.

North Carolina will benefit immensely from ending this impasse. Disagreements between then-U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, who retired last year, and the Clinton administration over "conservative" or "liberal" nominees effectively robbed this state of valuable representation on the 13-person court.

The nomination of Ms. Duncan, who is viewed as a moderate, provided the perfect avenue to end the stalemate. Sen. Edwards called her nomination a model for what could happen with better "ideological balance" in the nominees.

Politics being politics, this is not likely to be the end of the battle royal over these judgeships. But our lawmakers owe it to us to work cooperatively to get N.C. representation on the 4th Circuit. The court handles appeals from five Southern states including North Carolina. Judges with knowledge of N.C. law are crucial.

Sens. Dole and Edwards have moved in the right direction with the Duncan nomination. They need to stay on course.

"Our Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. . . . The law regards man as man, and takes no account of his surroundings or of his color. . . ." Those words were written by a Member of this Court 84 years ago. Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 559 (Harlan, J., dissenting). His colleagues disagreed with him, and held that a statute that required the separation of people on the basis of their race was constitutionally valid because it was a "reasonable" exercise of legislative power and had been "enacted in good faith for the promotion [of] the public good. . . ." Id., at 550. Today, the Court upholds a statute that accords a preference to citizens who are "Negroes, Spanish-speaking, Orientals, Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts," for much the same reasons. I think today's decision is wrong for the same reason that Plessy v. Ferguson was wrong, and I respectfully dissent.

The equal protection standard of the Constitution has one clear and central meaning -- it absolutely prohibits invidious discrimination by government. That standard must be met by every State under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 10; Hill v. Texas, 316 U.S. 400; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U.S. 303, 307-308; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 71-72. And that standard must be met by the United States itself under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 239; Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497. n1 Under our Constitution, any official action that treats a person differently on account of his race or ethnic origin is inherently suspect and presumptively invalid. McLaughlin v. Florida, 379 U.S. 184, 192; Bolling v. Sharpe, supra, at 499; Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 216. n2 n2 By contrast, nothing in the Constitution prohibits a private person from discriminating on the basis of race in his personal or business affairs. See Steelworkers v. Weber, 443 U.S. 193. The Fourteenth Amendment limits only the actions of the States; the Fifth Amendment limits only the actions of the National Government.

"Equal protection analysis in the Fifth Amendment area is the same as that under the Fourteenth Amendment." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 93.

The hostility of the Constitution to racial classifications by government has been manifested in many cases decided by this Court. See, e. g., Loving v. Virginia, supra.; McLaughlin v. Florida, supra; Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483; Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U.S. 337. And our cases have made clear that the Constitution is wholly neutral in forbidding such racial discrimination, whatever the race may be of those who are its victims. In Anderson v. Martin, 375 U.S. 399, for instance, the Court dealt with a state law that required that the race of each candidate for election to public office be designated on the nomination papers and ballots. Although the law applied equally to candidates of whatever race, the Court held that it nonetheless violated the constitutional standard of equal protection. "We see no relevance," the Court said, "in the State's pointing up the race of the candidate as bearing upon his qualifications for office." Id., at 403 (emphasis added). Similarly, in Loving v. Virginia, supra, and McLaughlin v. Florida, supra, the Court held that statutes outlawing miscegenation and interracial cohabitation were constitutionally invalid, even though the laws penalized all violators equally. The laws were unconstitutional for the simple reason that they penalized individuals solely because of their race, whatever their race might be. See also Goss v. Board of Education, 373 U.S. 683; Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U.S. 60. n3

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n3 University of California Regents v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265, and United Jewish Organizations v. Carey, 430 U.S. 144, do not suggest a different rule. The Court in Bakke invalidated the racially preferential admissions program that had deprived Bakke of equal access to a place in the medical school of a state university. In United Jewish Organizations v. Carey, a state legislature had apportioned certain voting districts with an awareness of their racial composition. Since the plaintiffs there had "failed to show that the legislative reapportionment plan had either the purpose or the effect of discriminating against them on the basis of their race," no constitutional violation had occurred. 430 U.S., at 179-180 (concurring opinion). No person in that case was deprived of his electoral franchise.

More than 35 years ago, during the Second World War, this Court did find constitutional a governmental program imposing injury on the basis of race. See Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214; Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81. Significantly, those cases were decided not only in time of war, but also in an era before the Court had held that the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment imposes the same equal protection standard upon the Federal Government that the Fourteenth Amendment imposes upon the States. See Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497.

This history contains one clear lesson. Under our Constitution, the government may never act to the detriment of a person solely because of that person's race. n4 The color of a person's skin and the country of his origin are immutable facts that bear no relation to ability, disadvantage, moral culpability, or any other characteristics of constitutionally permissible interest to government. "Distinctions between citizens solely because of their ancestry are by their very nature odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon the doctrine of equality." Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81, 100, quoted in Loving v. Virginia, supra, at 11. n5 In short, racial discrimination is by definition individious discrimination.

* * *

The Fourteenth Amendment was adopted to ensure that every person must be treated equally by each State regardless of the color of his skin. The Amendment promised to carry to its necessary conclusion a fundamental principle upon which this Nation had been founded -- that the law would honor no preference based on lineage. n13 Tragically, the promise of 1868 was not immediately fulfilled, and decades passed before the States and the Federal Government were finally directed to eliminate detrimental classifications based on race. Today, the Court derails this achievement and places its imprimatur on the creation once again by government of privileges based on birth.

n13 The Framers of our Constitution lived at a time when the Old World still operated in the shadow of ancient feudal traditions. As products of the Age of Enlightenment, they set out to establish a society that recognized no distinctions among white men on account of their birth. See U.S. Const., Art. I, õ 9, cl. 8 ("No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States"). The words Thomas Jefferson wrote in 1776 in the Declaration of Independence, however, contained the seeds of a far broader principle: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal. . . ."

The Court, moreover, takes this drastic step without, in my opinion, seriously considering the ramifications of its decision. Laws that operate on the basis of race require definitions of race. Because of the Court's decision today, our statute books will once again have to contain laws that reflect the odious practice of delineating the qualities that make one person a Negro and make another white. n14 Moreover, racial discrimination, even "good faith" racial discrimination, is inevitably a two-edged sword. "[Preferential] programs may only reinforce common stereotypes holding that certain groups are unable to achieve success without special protection based on a factor having no relationship to individual worth." University of California Regents v. Bakke, supra, at 298 (opinion of POWELL, J.). Most importantly, by making race a relevant criterion once again in its own affairs the Government implicitly teaches the public that the apportionment of rewards and penalties can legitimately be made according to race -- rather than according to merit or ability -- and that people can, and perhaps should, view themselves and others in terms of their racial characteristics. Notions of "racial entitlement" will be fostered, and private discrimination will necessarily be encouraged. n15 See Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U.S. 460, 463-464; T. Eastland & W. Bennett, Counting by Race 139-170 (1979); Van Alstyne, Rites of Passage: Race, the Supreme Court, and the Constitution, 46 U. Chi. L. Rev. 775 (1979).

There are those who think that we need a new Constitution, and their views may someday prevail. But under the Constitution we have, one practice in which government may never engage is the practice of racism -- not even "temporarily" and not even as an "experiment."

Subject: Traveling Bullhorn

Last week, I spoke with staff at the Smithsonian's American History Museum; and the National Archives regarding the proposal to include the President's bullhorn,;used on September 14, 2001, in the Smithsonian's traveling exhibit entitled, Bearing Witness to History: September 11, 2001.;
In both conversations, I reiterated the White House's concern about the security of the bullhorn while it is traveling with this exhibit.; The Smithsonian has not yet finalized the list of cities nor the venues it plans to visit with their exhibit.; In my view, the White House should not agree to the loan of the bullhorn until this list is finalized, and the sites appear acceptable for display of the bullhorn.; The Smithsonian is building a crate to store the bullhorn, but started before consulting with the White House on the specifics needed, etc.

I talked to the Presidential Libraries division of the Archives, and they already knew that the Smithsonian wanted to take the bullhorn on the road, as the Smithsonian had already contacted them.; I asked the Archives if some of their experts could look at the Smithsonian's plan for security of the bullhorn.; The Archives offered two options:
1); The Archives will send a couple of their staff;to the White House to look over and evaluate the Smithsonian plan, to see if the crate that the Smithsonian has in mind;will sufficiently protect the bullhorn for long-term travel and storage.
2); The Archives can "co-sign" the loan of the bullhorn to the Smithsonian.;;This has been done before with other items;loaned from the; White House.; While it has no legal bearing, this arrangement allows the Archives to contact the Smithsonian directly and consult/confer on the cities, venues, security, etc. for the exhibit as it travels.; The Archives would serve as the "watch dog" to;make sure that the Smithsonian is fulfilling its responsibilities re: the loan.;;This doesn't mean that the White House is shut out of the arrangement, only that the Archives will;oversee the arrangements and the nitty gritty details.
I believe that option #2 is the best way for the White;House to go, if a final decision is made to loan the bullhorn for the exhibit.; We certainly need to assure that when the bullhorn leaves Washington it is in a secure display box;with proper humidity and temperature controls.; Likewise, the White House needs to know that the venues;at which the bullhorn;is displayed;are appropriate and deserving;of a loaned item from the; President.;The Archives can help us with this, and I think also give us all a greater level of comfort in loaning this historic item.

Judicial impasse ends

N.C. senators work together for appeals court nominee

Hallelujah! North Carolina's two U.S. senators broke a 12-year political stalemate over appeals court nominees last week. The result should be this state's first 4th Circuit Court judge in a decade.

Both Republican Elizabeth Dole and Democrat John Edwards deserve a hand for working together to support Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan, President Bush's nominee. Their mutual backing all but ensures the 51-year-old Ms. Duncan of confirmation. She's on track to get approval from the Senate Judiciary Committee and could get full Senate confirmation in weeks.

As we've noted before, Ms. Duncan is an excellent choice. She's a former judge of the N.C. Court of Appeals, former member of the N.C. Utilities Commission and former law professor at the N.C. Central University school of law.

A Republican, she would be the first judge of African American descent from North Carolina on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That distinction was not lost on members of the Senate. In a written statement, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, Judiciary Committee chair, called Ms. Duncan "a true pioneer" and her nomination historic.

Even if she didn't have those perceived advantages, Ms. Duncan would be a first-rate nominee. Her colleagues regard her as extremely bright, passionate about her work and easy to work with. She recently became head of the state bar association.

North Carolina will benefit immensely from ending this impasse. Disagreements between then-U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, who retired last year, and the Clinton administration over "conservative" or "liberal" nominees effectively robbed this state of valuable representation on the 13-person court.

The nomination of Ms. Duncan, who is viewed as a moderate, provided the perfect avenue to end the stalemate. Sen. Edwards called her nomination a model for what could happen with better "ideological balance" in the nominees.

Politics being politics, this is not likely to be the end of the battle royal over these judgeships. But our lawmakers owe it to us to work cooperatively to get N.C. representation on the 4th Circuit. The court handles appeals from five Southern states including North Carolina. Judges with knowledge of N.C. law are crucial.

Sens. Dole and Edwards have moved in the right direction with the Duncan nomination. They need to stay on course.

I'm sorry...I have no idea who to ask this to, so I thought I would start with you.

1. Can we (as the White House Press Office) release dubed tape copies of the President's Campaign events?!? We always have requests for Presidential events that we release with out hesitation, we just wanted to make sure that we weren't doing anything wrong releasing the Campaign events.

2. Can we release dubed tape copies of the President's Presidential events to Partisan organizations?!? For example, we have RepublicanTV.org requesting some footage of some events. Is that okay to release to them?!!?

We just want to make sure we aren't mixing in places we shouldn't and doing anything wrong.

I didn't know who to ask in our office so I thought you might! You are the best, thanks so much!

HEADLINE: Bush Names Townes To U.S. District Court

BYLINE: Ken Fireman

BODY:

Washington - President George W. Bush yesterday appointed state Appellate Division Justice Sandra Townes to serve as a district judge on the federal court that covers Long Island, Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island, the White House announced.

Townes, 58, spent most of her legal career in Syracuse but for the past two years has served on the appellate court that covers Brooklyn. She is originally from South Carolina.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), who sits on the Senate committee that will vet Townes' appointment, said in a statement: "I look forward to examining her credentials."

He noted that Bush had followed his advice by naming an African-American to replace retiring District Judge Sterling Johnson, the only black judge now on the court to which Townes was appointed.

NYLJ didn't have much to say:

Appellate Division, Second Department, Justice Sandra L. Townes of the Appellate Division, Second Department, has been nominated by President

George W. Bush for an Eastern District judgeship. She is a former prosecutor and Syracuse City Court judge.

The Syracuse paper had a more substantial story:

Townes nominated for federal judgeship

She was the first African-American woman elected to the Syracuse City Court.

July 02, 2003

Staff reports

The White House announced Tuesday that President Bush intends to nominate Sandra L. Townes, a longtime lawyer and judge in Syracuse courtrooms, to

Townes Townes, 58, would join the U.S. District Court in New York's

Eastern District, which includes much of New York City and Long Island, with a population of 8 million.

The Downstate area has been Townes' judicial turf since Gov. George Pataki appointed her in 2001 to the Brooklyn-based state Supreme Court Appellate Division.

At the time, she was believed to be the first African-American woman on the state appellate bench.

Pataki Tuesday issued a statement applauding Bush's decision.

"I commend President Bush on his decision to nominate Justice Sandra L.

Townes to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York,"

Pataki said. "Justice Townes is a true American success story who has served the people of New York with great distinction as an Appellate Division judge. All New Yorkers can be proud of Sandra Townes and the outstanding work she has done, and I am confident she will be an outstanding federal judge."

State Supreme Court 5th Judicial District Administrative Justice James Tormey III said he congratulated Townes when he saw her at the Onondaga County Courthouse Tuesday.

"I'm very happy for her. She's been working very hard for this," Tormey said. "She's being rewarded for her very hard work. She'll make a very good federal court judge."

Any move to the federal court bench would be subject to approval by the U.S. Senate. Tormey said he understood Townes, a Republican, has the backing of both of New York's Democratic senators, Charles Schumer and Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Schumer, D-N.Y., a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee that would first examine Townes' credentials, released a statement Tuesday saying that he had urged the White House and Pataki to appoint an African-American to fill the void created by the retirement of Sterling Johnson, the only African American on the Eastern District bench.

"The White House has nominated such a candidate today and I look forward to examining her credentials," Schumer said of Townes.

Appointment to the federal bench is a lifetime appointment. The job currently pays $154,700.

Townes could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Her rise in judicial circles has been a noteworthy one.

She first was elected to the Syracuse City Court bench in 1987, the top vote-getter in a six-candidate race to fill three seats. She was the first African-American woman and the second woman ever elected to the City Court bench.

She easily won re-election without opposition in 1997.

Two years later, Townes led a trio of Republican judges - including John Centra and Anthony Paris - to victory for three seats on the state Supreme Court bench in the 5th Judicial District. That district includes Onondaga, Oswego, Oneida, Jefferson, Herkimer and Lewis counties.

She was the top vote-getter in Onondaga and four of the other five counties in that contest.

In March 2001, Pataki named her to serve on one of the four mid-level appellate courts in New York. She has served since then on the Second Department appellate court in Brooklyn while maintaining her local office and residence in Syracuse.

Before her election to the City Court bench, Townes served 10 years as a prosecutor with the Onondaga County District Attorney's Office where she handled homicides, domestic violence and child abuse cases and the prosecution of career criminals.

But the law was a second career for Townes. Before obtaining her law degree in 1976 from the Syracuse University College of Law, Townes was an English teacher in high schools in Syracuse; Washington, D.C.; and her hometown of Spartanburg, S.C.

Although she currently sits as a state appellate judge in Brooklyn, Townes is still considered a state Supreme Court judge from Onondaga County, the position she was elected to in 1999. To hold her appellate judge post, Townes would have to win re-election to the state Supreme Court in 2013.

If she is appointed to the federal court, it would open her local Supreme Court seat up for election. The winner of that election would likely serve as a trial judge locally, and Pataki would appoint another judge to the Appellate Division. Staff writers Erik Kriss, Mark Libbon and Jim O'Hara contributed to this report.

I've held 450 for Tues, Wed and Thursday at both 9am and 4pm. Let me know if you want to go with morning or afternoon - so I can release the room.

I also agree with Option 2 as the most protective. I continue to be concerned about the security arrangements. I assume the Smithsonian of all entities is used to having one of a kind objects. However, this one is truly one of a kind and the security must be satisfactory. All this is repetitive of I believe others views of course.

Thanks for following up. I agree that the number 2 option is probably the best, but only if the Smithsonian is able to provide a final list of cities and venues at which it will displayed and if the bullhorn is locked in an appropriate display case. We also need to preserve the option to call it back at any point for any reason.

I will await Counsel's input, but also think that a final step would be to ask the President if he is okay with the loan as well.

Subject: Traveling Bullhorn

Last week, I spoke with staff at the Smithsonian's American History Museum and the National Archives regarding the proposal to include the President's bullhorn, used on September 14, 2001, in the Smithsonian's traveling exhibit entitled, Bearing Witness to History: September 11, 2001.

In both conversations, I reiterated the White House's concern about the security of the bullhorn while it is traveling with this exhibit. The Smithsonian has not yet finalized the list of cities nor the venues it plans to visit with their exhibit. In my view, the White House should not agree to the loan of the bullhorn until this list is finalized, and the sites appear acceptable for display of the bullhorn. The Smithsonian is building a crate to store the bullhorn, but started before consulting with the White House on the specifics needed, etc.

I talked to the Presidential Libraries division of the Archives, and they already knew that the Smithsonian wanted to take the bullhorn on the road, as the Smithsonian had already contacted them. I asked the Archives if some of their experts could look at the Smithsonian's plan for security of the bullhorn. The Archives offered two options:

1) The Archives will send a couple of their staff to the White House to look over and evaluate the Smithsonian plan, to see if the crate that the Smithsonian has in mind will sufficiently protect the bullhorn for long-term travel and storage.

2) The Archives can "co-sign" the loan of the bullhorn to the Smithsonian. This has been done before with other items loaned from the White House. While it has no legal bearing, this arrangement allows the Archives to contact the Smithsonian directly and consult/confer on the cities, venues, security, etc. for the exhibit as it travels. The Archives would serve as the "watch dog" to make sure that the Smithsonian is fulfilling its responsibilities re: the loan. This doesn't mean that the White House is shut out of the arrangement, only that the Archives will oversee the arrangements and the nitty gritty details.

I believe that option #2 is the best way for the White House to go, if a final decision is made to loan the bullhorn for the exhibit. We certainly need to assure that when the bullhorn leaves Washington it is in a secure display box with proper humidity and temperature controls. Likewise, the White House needs to know that the venues at which the bullhorn is displayed are appropriate and deserving of a loaned item from the President. The Archives can help us with this, and I think also give us all a greater level of comfort in loaning this historic item.

Let me know your thoughts. Thanks.

MR. LEHRER -- New subject, new question, another vice-presidential debate follow-up. Governor, both Senator Lieberman and Secretary Cheney said they were sympathetically rethinking their views on same-sex relationships. What's your position on that?

MR. BUSH -- I'm not for gay marriage. I think marriage is a sacred institution between a man and a woman and I appreciated the way the administration signed the Defense of Marriage Act. I presume the vice president supported it when the president signed that bill and supports it now. But I think marriage is a sacred institution. I'm going to be respectful, for people who may disagree with me. I've had a record of doing so in the state of Texas. I've been a person that would have been called a uniter, not a divider, because I accepted some, I accept other people's points of view, but I feel strongly that marriage should be between a man and a woman.

MR. LEHRER -- Vice President Gore?

MR. GORE -- I agree with that, and I did support that law. But I think that we should find a way to allow some kind of civic unions. And I basically agree with Dick Cheney and Joe Lieberman, and I think the three of us have one view and the governor has another view.

MR. LEHRER -- Is that right?

MR. BUSH -- I'm not sure what kind of view he's ascribing to me. I can just tell you, I'm a person who respects other people. I respect their -- one day he says he agrees with me, then he says he doesn't, I'm not sure where he's coming from. But I will be a tolerant person. I've been a tolerant person all my life. I just happen to believe strongly that marriage is between a man and a woman.

MR. LEHRER -- Do you believe, in general terms, that gays and lesbians should have the same rights as other Americans?

MR. BUSH -- Yes. I don't think they ought to have special rights. But I think they ought to have the same rights.

MR. GORE -- Well, there's a law pending called the Employment Nondiscrimination Act. I strongly support it. What is says is that gays and lesbians can't be fired from their job because they're gay or lesbian. And it would be a federal law preventing that. Now, I wonder if the -- it's been blocked by the opponents in the majority in the Congress. I wonder if the governor would lend his support to that law.

MR. LEHRER -- Governor.

MR. BUSH -- . . . question . . .

MR. LEHRER -- Well, but it's a logical --

MR. BUSH -- Well, I have no idea. I mean, he can throw out all kinds of -- I don't know the particulars of this law. I will tell you, I'm the kind of person, I don't hire or fire somebody based upon their sexual orientation. As a matter of fact I'd like to take the issue a little further. I don't really think it's any of my -- you know, any of my concern what, how you conduct your sex life. And I think that's a private matter. And I think that's the way it ought to be. But I'm going to be respectful for people. I'll tolerate people. And I support equal rights but not special rights for people.

MR. LEHRER -- And special rights -- how does that affect gays and lesbians?

MR. BUSH -- Well, it'd be if they're given special protective status. And that doesn't mean we shouldn't fully enforce laws and fully protect people and fully honor people, which I will do as the President of the United States.

September 30, 1996

Throughout my life I have strenuously opposed discrimination of any kind, including discrimination against gay and lesbian Americans. I am signing into law H.R. 3396, a bill relating to same-gender marriage, but it is important to note what this legislation does and does not do.

I have long opposed governmental recognition of same-gender marriages and this legislation is consistent with that position. The Act confirms the right of each state to determine its own policy with respect to same gender marriage and clarifies for purposes of federal law the operative meaning of the terms "marriage" and "spouse".

This legislation does not reach beyond those two provisions. It has no effect on any current federal, state or local anti-discrimination law and does not constrain the right of Congress or any state or locality to enact anti-discrimination laws. I therefore would take this opportunity to urge Congress to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, an act which would extend employment discrimination protections to gays and lesbians in the workplace. This year the Senate considered this legislation contemporaneously with the Act I sign today and failed to pass it by a single vote. I hope that in its next Session Congress will pass it expeditiously.

I also want to make clear to all that the enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination, violence or intimidation against any person on the basis of sexual orientation. Discrimination, violence and intimidation for that reason, as well as others, violate the principle of equal protection under the law and have no place in American society.

SUBJECT: Heads-Up on DOT's Proposal on the Safety Performance History of New Drivers

We have concluded review of a Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) supplemental notice of proposed rulemaking (SNPRM) intended to help prospective employers make informed hiring decisions. This rule enables motor carriers to obtain safety history information about drivers. Under this proposal, former employers would be required to provide prospective employers this information. It will also incorporate new limitations on the liability of those who provide and use this information and provide driver privacy protections.

This SNPRM supplements a proposed rule that DOT issued March 1996. FMCSA estimates that the discounted costs and benefits of this rule over ten years will be $90 million and $111 million, respectively.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

- Is it ok that we are not doing briefings for the following WH Offices: PPO, Counsel and HSC
- Should they be mandatory?
- Should we take attendance and have make-up sessions?

I've held 450 for Tues, Wed and Thursday at both 9am and 4pm. Let me know if you want to go with morning or afternoon - so I can release the room.

My understanding is that the Judge did not make this announcement at Senior Staff. Did he discuss with Sec. Card? Should I go ahead and send out the postmaster. (I know you will want to see it before it goes out). I want people to have enough advance notice.

Enraged Democratic Lefties Are Sabotaging Judicial Nominations

EDITORIAL

TAMPA TRIBUNE

Published: Jul 5, 2003

S ome people bet President Bush is chafing at the bit to appoint a Supreme Court justice this year.

Others speculate he would prefer to gamble and wait until after the 2004 election in the hope that he will be returned to office (and so that abortion will not become a campaign issue, which it likely will be regardless).

Democratic presidential candidate and Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry offers a three-word summation of why he thinks Bush must be defeated: the Supreme Court.

One Senator's List Of Values

``I need you to join me in keeping the Supreme Court out of the hands of right- wing ideologues,'' Kerry writes in a letter seeking the support of members of the political action committee Move- On.

``I am prepared to filibuster, if necessary, any Supreme Court nominee who would turn back the clock on a woman's right to choose, on civil rights and individual liberties, and on the laws protecting workers and the environment.''

Indeed, abortion-supporting Democrats, presuming that the president will appoint a pro-life lawyer to the high court, promise to fight any Bush appointment, and some groups have already put advertisements on the airwaves to stir up the party's left-wing base.

Moreover, left-wing ideologues in the Senate, who accuse Bush of filling the judiciary with right-wingers, have prevented confirmation votes on two of the president's nominees, even though both have enough senators supporting them to be confirmed.

In disgust, some GOP senators have hatched a plan to change Senate rules to make it easier to break the Senate filibusters.

The 10 Republicans on the Senate Rules Committee recently passed a resolution to change the rule to provide for a series of votes in which the 60-vote threshold for cloture would gradually decrease until a simple majority would overcome it.

Bill Frist, the Senate majority leader from Tennessee, says he will bring up the resolution for a Senate vote sometime after July 4, but it seems unlikely to pass, since the rule change itself would require 67 votes.

And so some Republicans are talking up the so-called nuclear option: having Vice President Cheney rule from the chair that Senate rules do not allow filibusters for judicial nominees. It would take only 51 votes to impose that ruling.

And it would start a war. The Democrats threaten further unpleasantness, which raises the question of just how much cooperation there really is between the parties now.

The truth is the angry base to which the Senate Democrats are appealing with their filibuster threats consists of voters who believe their party failed in 2000 to stand up to dastardly Republicans who will no doubt do anything to hold on to power.

That base does not want cooperation between the parties, and its ideological representatives in the Senate are controlling the confirmation process.

In the meantime, some Republicans worry that their leaders won't be tough enough, that they will keep backing down to subversive tactics like the judicial filibuster and continue to let the Democrats have their way.

Both parties are walking a fine line, and the senators would do well to remember they are but one election away from reversing roles.

Unjust Treatment Of Estrada And Owen

Judicial selection and the proper role of the Senate in the confirmation process will be a major election issue. It's not yet time to exercise the nuclear option.

But the filibusters of stymied nominees Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen are manifestly unfair, and if the Democrats continue along this track with other Bush nominees - most especially a nominee to the Supreme Court - the Republicans will have reason to exercise it.
