(C) the Chief Executive Officer, Chief Financial Officer, or Chief Legal Officer of that business entity certifies in writing to the bankruptcy court presiding over the business entity's case, that asbestos liability was neither the sole nor precipitating cause for the filing under chapter 11.

(2) PROCEEDING WITH REORGANIZATION PLAN.—A bankrupt business entity may proceed with the filing, solicitation, and confirmation of a plan of reorganization that does not comply with the requirements of this Act, including a trust and channeling injunction under section 524(g) of title 11, United States Code, notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, if—

(A) the bankruptcy court presiding over the chapter 11 case of the bankrupt business entity determines that—

(i) confirmation is necessary to permit the reorganization of that entity and assure that all creditors and that entity are treated fairly and equitably; and

(ii) confirmation is clearly favored by the balance of the equities; and

(B) an order confirming the plan of reorganization is entered by the bankruptcy court within 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act or such longer period of time approved by the bankruptcy court for cause shown.

(3) APPLICABILITY.—If the bankruptcy court does not make the required determination, or if an order confirming the plan is not entered within 9 months of the effective date of this Act or such longer period of time approved by the bankruptcy court for cause shown, the provisions of the Act shall apply to the bankrupt business entity notwithstanding the certification. Any timely appeal under title 11, United States Code, from a confirmation order entered during the applicable time period shall automatically extend the time during which this Act is inapplicable to the bankrupt business entity, until the appeal is fully and finally resolved.

(4) OFFSETS.—

(A) PAYMENTS BY INSURERS.—To the extent that a bankrupt business entity successfully confirms a plan of reorganization, including a trust under section 524(g) of title 11, United States Code, and channeling injunction that involves payments by insurers who are otherwise subject to this Act, an insurer who makes payments to the trust under section 524(g) of title 11, United States Code, shall obtain a dollar for dollar reduction in the amount otherwise payable by that insurer under this Act to the Fund.

(B) CONTRIBUTIONS TO FUND.—Any cash payments by a bankrupt business entity, if any, to a trust under section 524(g) of title 11, United States Code, may be counted as a contribution to the Fund.

(d) TIERS II THROUGH VI.—Except as provided in sections 202(b), 204(b), and 204(g), persons or affiliated groups shall be assigned to Tier II, III, IV, V, or VI according to the prior asbestos expenditures paid by such persons or affiliated groups as follows:

(1) Tier II: $75,000,000 or greater.

(2) Tier III: $50,000,000 or greater but less than $75,000,000.

(3) Tier IV: $10,000,000 or greater but less than $50,000,000.

(4) Tier V: $5,000,000 or greater but less than $10,000,000.

(5) Tier VI: $1,000,000 or greater but less than $5,000,000.

(e) ASSIGNMENTS AND COSTS.—

(1) PERMANENT ASSIGNMENT.—Subject to section 204(d), after the Administrator has assigned a person or affiliated group to a tier under this section, such person or affiliated group shall remain in that tier throughout the life of the Fund, regardless of subsequent events, including—

(A) the filing of a petition under a chapter of title 11, United States Code;

(B) a discharge from bankruptcy;

(C) the confirmation of a plan of reorganization; or

(D) the sale or transfer of assets to any other person or affiliated group.

(2) COSTS.—The payment of contributions to the Fund by all persons or affiliated groups that include a person that is a debtor that is the subject of a case under a chapter of title 11, United States Code, after the date of enactment of this Act—

(A) shall constitute costs and expenses of administration of the case under section 503 of that title 11 and shall be payable in accordance with the payment provisions under this subtitle notwithstanding the pendency of the case under that title 11;

(B) shall not be stayed or affected as to enforcement or collection by any stay or injunction power of any court; and

(C) shall not be impaired or discharged in any current or future case under title 11, United States Code.

(f) SUPERSEDING PROVISIONS.—Any plan of reorganization with respect to any debtor assigned to Tier I and any agreement, understanding, or undertaking by any such debtor or any third party with respect to the treatment of any asbestos claim filed before the date of enactment of this Act and subject to confirmation of a plan under chapter 11 of title 11, United States Code, shall be superseded in their entirety by this Act. Any such plan of reorganization, agreement, understanding, or undertaking by any debtor or any third party shall be of no force or effect, and no person shall have any rights or claims with respect to any of the foregoing.

SEC. 203. SUBTIER ASSESSMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) ASSESSMENTS.—Except as provided under subsections (a), (b), (d), (f), and (g) of section 204, the Administrator shall assess contributions to persons or affiliated groups within Tiers I through VII in accordance with this section.

(2) 2002 REVENUES.—The audited consolidated revenue for the year 2002 of each debtor (in this section referred to as "2002 revenues") shall include the revenues for year 2002 of the debtor and all of its affiliated groups. The pro forma revenues of a person or affiliated group that are assigned to Subtier 3 shall not be included in calculating the 2002 revenues of any debtor that is a direct or indirect majority owner of such Subtier 3 person or affiliated group.

(3) GROSS REVENUES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, gross revenues shall be determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, consistently applied, using the amount reported as gross revenues in the annual report filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission in accordance with section 13(a)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(a)(2)) for the year ending December 31, 2002, or, if applicable, the earlier fiscal year that ends during calendar year 2002, if such fiscal year is principally employed by the defendant participant.

(B) INSURANCE PREMIUMS.—Any portion of gross revenues of a defendant participant that is derived from insurance premiums shall not be used to calculate the contribution of that defendant participant under this subtitle.

(C) PRIVATELY-HELD COMPANIES.—If the defendant participant is not required to file an earnings report with the Securities and Exchange Commission, gross revenues shall be the amount that the defendant participant would have reported as gross revenues in the event that it had been required to file the report described under subparagraph (A).

(b) TIER I SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under subsections (a), (b), (d), (f), and (g) of section 204, the Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier I to 1 of 4 Subtiers. Each person or affiliated group shall make contributions to the Fund as provided under this section.

(2) SUBTIER 1.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—All persons that are debtors or affiliated groups, which include a debtor with prior asbestos expenditures of $10,000,000 or greater, shall be assigned to Subtier 1.

(B) ASSIGNMENT.—Each debtor assigned to Subtier 1 shall make annual payments based on a percentage of its 2002 revenues.

(C) PAYMENT.—Each debtor assigned to Subtier 1 shall pay on an annual basis the following with respect to the year of the establishment of the Fund:

(i) Years 1 through 5, 1.4533 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(ii) Years 6 through 8, 1.3080 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(iii) Years 9 through 11, 1.1772 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(iv) Years 12 through 14, 1.0595 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(v) Years 15 through 17, 0.9535 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(vi) Years 18 through 20, 0.8582 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(vii) Years 21 through 23, 0.7723 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(viii) Years 24 through 25, 0.6951 percent of the debtor's 2002 revenues.

(3) SUBTIER 2.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—All persons that are debtors or affiliated groups which include a debtor that have no material continuing business operations but hold cash or other assets that have been allocated or earmarked for asbestos settlements shall be assigned to Subtier 2.

(B) ASSIGNMENT OF ASSETS.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, each person or affiliated group assigned to Subtier 2 shall assign all of its assets to the Fund.

(4) SUBTIER 3.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—All persons that are debtors or affiliated groups that include a debtor, other than those included in Subtier 2, which have no material continuing business operations and no cash or other assets allocated or earmarked for the settlement of any asbestos claim, shall be assigned to Subtier 3.

(B) ASSIGNMENT OF UNENCUMBERED ASSETS.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, each person or affiliated group assigned to Subtier 3 shall contribute an amount equal to 50 percent of its total unencumbered assets.

(C) CALCULATION OF UNENCUMBERED ASSETS.—Unencumbered assets shall be calculated as the Subtier 3 person or affiliated group's total assets, excluding insurance related assets, less—

(i) all allowed administrative expenses;

(ii) allowed priority claims under section 507 of title 11, United States Code; and

(iii) allowed secured claims.

(c) TIER II SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier II to 1 of 5 subtiers, based on the person's or affiliated group's gross revenues. Such subtiers shall each contain as close to an equal number of total persons and affiliated groups as possible, with—

(A) those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 1;

(B) those persons or affiliated groups with the next highest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 2;

(C) those persons or affiliated groups with the lowest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 5;

(D) those persons or affiliated groups with the next lowest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 4; and

(E) those persons or affiliated groups remaining assigned to Subtier 3.

(2) PAYMENT.—Each person or affiliated group within an assigned subtier shall pay, on an annual basis, the following:

(A) Subtier 1: $25,000,000.

(B) Subtier 2: $22,500,000.

(C) Subtier 3: $20,000,000.

(D) Subtier 4: $17,500,000.

(E) Subtier 5: $15,000,000.

(d) TIER III SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier III to 1 of 5 subtiers, based on the person's or affiliated group's gross revenues. Such subtiers shall each contain as close to an equal number of total persons and affiliated groups as possible, with—

(A) those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 1;

(B) those persons or affiliated groups with the next highest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 2;

(C) those persons or affiliated groups with the lowest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 5;

(D) those persons or affiliated groups with the next lowest gross revenues assigned to Subtier 4; and

(E) those persons or affiliated groups remaining assigned to Subtier 3.

(2) PAYMENT.—Each person or affiliated group within an assigned subtier shall pay, on an annual basis, the following:

(A) Subtier 1: $15,000,000.

(B) Subtier 2: $12,500,000.

(C) Subtier 3: $10,000,000.

(D) Subtier 4: $7,500,000.

(E) Subtier 5: $5,000,000.

(e) TIER IV SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier IV to 1 of 4 subtiers, based on the person's or affiliated group's gross revenues. Such subtiers shall each contain as close to an equal number of total persons and affiliated groups as possible, with those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues in Subtier 1, those with the lowest gross revenues in Subtier 4. Those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues among those remaining will be assigned to Subtier 2 and the rest in Subtier 3.

(2) PAYMENT.—Each person or affiliated group within an assigned subtier shall pay, on an annual basis, the following:

(A) Subtier 1: $3,500,000.

(B) Subtier 2: $2,250,000.

(C) Subtier 3: $1,500,000.

(D) Subtier 4: $500,000.

(f) TIER V SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier V to 1 of 3 subtiers, based on the person's or affiliated group's gross revenues. Such subtiers shall each contain as close to an equal number of total persons and affiliated groups as possible, with those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues in Subtier 1, those with the lowest gross revenues in Subtier 3, and those remaining in Subtier 2.

(2) PAYMENT.—Each person or affiliated group within an assigned subtier shall pay, on an annual basis, the following:

(A) Subtier 1: $1,000,000.

(B) Subtier 2: $500,000.

(C) Subtier 3: $200,000.

(g) TIER VI SUBTIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier VI to 1 of 3 subtiers, based on the person's or affiliated group's gross revenues. Such subtiers shall each contain as close to an equal number of total persons and affiliated groups as possible, with those persons or affiliated groups with the highest gross revenues in Subtier 1, those with the lowest gross revenues in Subtier 3, and those remaining in Subtier 2.

(2) PAYMENT.—Each person or affiliated group within an assigned subtier shall pay, on an annual basis, the following:

(A) Subtier 1: $500,000.

(B) Subtier 2: $250,000.

(C) Subtier 3: $100,000.

(h) TIER VII.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any assignment to Tiers II, III, IV, V, and VI based on prior asbestos expenditures under section 204(g), a person shall be assigned to Tier VII if the person—

(A) is a common carrier by railroad subject to asbestos claims brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.); and

(B) have paid not less than $5,000,000 in settlement, judgment, defense, or indemnity costs relating to such claims.

(2) ADDITIONAL AMOUNT.—The contribution requirement for persons assigned to Tier VII shall be in addition to any applicable contribution requirement that such person may be assessed under Tiers II through VI.

(3) SUBTIER 1.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier VII with gross revenues of not less than $5,000,000,000 to Subtier 1 and shall require each such person or affiliated group to make annual payments of $10,000,000 into the Fund.

(4) SUBTIER 2.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier VII with gross revenues of less than $5,000,000,000, but not less than $3,000,000,000 to Subtier 2, and shall require each such person or affiliated group to make annual payments of $5,000,000 into the Fund.

(5) SUBTIER 3.—The Administrator shall assign each person or affiliated group in Tier VII with gross revenues of less than $3,000,000,000, but not less than $500,000,000 to Subtier 3, and shall require each such person or affiliated group to make annual payments of $500,000 into the Fund.

(6) JOINT VENTURE REVENUES AND LIABILITY.—

(A) REVENUES.—For purposes of this subsection, the revenues of a joint venture shall be included on a pro rata basis reflecting relative joint ownership to calculate the revenues of the parents of that joint venture. The joint venture shall not be responsible for a contribution amount under this subsection.

(B) LIABILITY.—For purposes of this subsection, the liability under the Act of April 22, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.), commonly known as the Federal Employers' Liability Act, shall be attributed to the parent owners of the joint venture on a pro rata basis, reflecting their relative share of ownership. The joint venture shall not be responsible for a contribution amount under this provision.

SEC. 204. ASSESSMENT ADMINISTRATION.

(a) REDUCTION ADJUSTMENTS.—The Administrator shall assess contributions based on amounts provided under this subtitle for each person or affiliated group within Tiers II, III, IV, V, VI, and VII for the first 5 years of the operation of the Fund. Beginning in year 6, and every 3 years thereafter, the Administrator shall reduce the contribution amount for each defendant participant in each of these tiers by 10 percent of the amount assessed in the prior year.

(b) SMALL BUSINESS EXEMPTION.—A person or affiliated group that is a small business concern (as defined under section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)), on December 31, 2002, is exempt from any contribution requirement under this subsection.

(c) PROCEDURES.—The Administrator shall prescribe procedures on how contributions assessed under this subtitle are to be paid.

(d) EXCEPTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Under expedited procedures established by the Administrator, a defendant participant may seek adjustment of the amount of its contribution based on severe financial hardship or demonstrated inequity. The Administrator may determine whether to grant an adjustment and the size of any such adjustment, in accordance with this subsection. Such determinations shall not prejudice the integrity of the Fund and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(2) FINANCIAL HARDSHIP ADJUSTMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A defendant may apply for an adjustment based on financial hardship at any time during the life of the Fund and may qualify for such adjustment by demonstrating that the amount of its contribution under the statutory allocation would constitute a severe financial hardship.

(B) TERM.—A hardship adjustment under this subsection shall have a term of 3 years.

(C) RENEWAL.—A defendant may renew its hardship adjustment by demonstrating that it remains justified.

(D) LIMITATION.—The Administrator may not grant hardship adjustments under this subsection in any year that exceed, in the aggregate, 3 percent of the total annual contributions required of all defendant participants.

(3) INEQUITY ADJUSTMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A defendant may qualify for an adjustment based on inequity by demonstrating that the amount of its contribution under the statutory allocation is exceptionally inequitable when measured against the amount of the likely cost to the defendant of its future liability in the tort system in the absence of the Fund.

(B) TERM.—Subject to the annual availability of funds in the Orphan Share Reserve Account established under section 223(e), an inequity adjustment granted by the Administrator under this subsection shall remain in effect for the life of the Fund.

(C) LIMITATION.—The Administrator may grant inequity adjustments only to the extent that—

(i) the financial condition of the Fund is sufficient to accommodate such adjustments;

(ii) the Orphan Share Reserve Account is sufficient to cover such adjustments for that year; and

(iii) such adjustments do not exceed 2 percent of the total annual contributions required of all defendant participants.

(4) ADVISORY PANELS.—

(A) APPOINTMENT.—The Administrator shall appoint a Financial Hardship Adjustment Panel and an Inequity Adjustment Panel to advise the Administrator in carrying out this subsection.

(B) MEMBERSHIP.—The membership of the panels appointed under subparagraph (A) may overlap.

(C) COORDINATION.—The panels appointed under subparagraph (A) shall coordinate their deliberations and recommendations.

(e) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—The liability of each defendant participant to contribute to the Fund shall be limited to the payment obligations under this subtitle, and no defendant participant shall have any liability for the payment obligations of any other defendant participant.

(f) CONSOLIDATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of determining the contribution levels of defendant participants, any affiliated group including 1 or more defendant participants may irrevocably elect, as part of the submission to be made under subsection (i), to report on a consolidated basis all of the information necessary to determine the contribution level under this subtitle and contribute to the Fund on a consolidated basis.

(2) ELECTION.—If an affiliated group elects consolidation as provided in this subsection—

(A) for purposes of this Act other than this subsection, the affiliated group shall be treated as if it were a single participant, including without limitation with respect to the assessment of a single annual contribution under this subtitle for the entire affiliated group;

(B) the ultimate parent of the affiliated group shall prepare and submit the submission to be made under subsection (i), on behalf of the entire affiliated group and shall be solely liable, as between the Administrator and the affiliated group only, for the payment of the annual contribution assessed against the affiliated group, except that, if the ultimate parent does not pay when due any contribution for the affiliated group, the Administrator shall have the right to seek payment of all or any portion of the entire amount due from any member of the affiliated group;

(C) all members of the affiliated group shall be identified in the submission under subsection (i) and shall certify compliance with this subsection and the Administrator's regulations implementing this subsection; and

(D) the obligations under this subtitle shall not change even if, after the date of enactment of this Act, the beneficial ownership interest between any members of the affiliated group shall change.

(g) DETERMINATION OF PRIOR ASBESTOS EXPENDITURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of determining a defendant participant's prior asbestos expenditure, the Administrator shall prescribe such rules as may be necessary or appropriate to assure that payments by indemnitors before December 31, 2002, shall be counted as part of the indemnitor's prior asbestos expenditure, rather than the indemnitee's prior asbestos expenditure, in accordance with this subsection.

(2) INDEMNIFIABLE COSTS.—If an indemnitor has paid or reimbursed to an indemnitee any indemnifiable cost or otherwise made a payment on behalf of or for the benefit of an indemnitee to a third party for an indemnifiable cost before December 31, 2002, the amount of such indemnifiable cost shall be solely for the account of the indemnitor for purposes under this Act.

(3) INSURANCE PAYMENTS.—When computing the prior asbestos expenditure with respect to an asbestos claim, any amount paid or reimbursed by insurance shall be solely for the account of the indemnitor, even if the indemnitor would have no direct right to the benefit of the insurance, if—

(A) such insurance has been paid or reimbursed to the indemnitor or the indemnitee, or paid on behalf of or for the benefit of the indemnitee, any indemnifiable cost related to the asbestos claim; and

(B) the indemnitor has either, with respect to such asbestos claim or any similar asbestos claim, paid or reimbursed to its indemnitee any indemnifiable cost or paid to any third party on behalf of or for the benefit of the indemnitee any indemnifiable cost.

(h) MINIMUM CONTRIBUTIONS.—Minimum aggregate contributions of defendant participants to the Fund in any calendar year shall be as follows:

(1) For each of the first 5 years of the Fund, the aggregate contributions of defendant participants to the fund shall be at least $2,500,000,000.

(2) After the 5th year, the minimum aggregate contribution shall be reduced by $250,000,000 every 3 years as follows:

(A) For years 6 through 8, $2,250,000,000.

(B) For years 9 through 11, $2,000,000,000.

(C) For years 12 through 14, $1,750,000,000.

(D) For years 15 through 17, $1,500,000,000.

(E) For years 18 through 20, $1,250,000,000.

(F) For years 21 through 23, $1,000,000,000.

(G) For years 24 through 26, $750,000,000.

(i) PROCEDURES TO DETERMINE FUND CONTRIBUTION ASSESSMENTS.—

(1) NOTICE TO PARTICIPANTS.—Not later than 60 days after his or her initial appointment, the Administrator shall—

(A) directly notify all reasonably identifiable defendant participants of the requirement to submit information necessary to calculate the amount of any required contribution to the Fund; and

(B) publish in the Federal Register a notice requiring any person who may be a defendant participant (as determined by criteria outlined in the notice) to submit such information.

(2) RESPONSE REQUIRED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any person who receives notice under paragraph (1)(A), and any other person meeting the criteria specified in the notice published under paragraph (1)(B), shall respond by providing the Administrator with all the information requested in the notice at the earlier of—

(i) 30 days after the receipt of direct notice; or

(ii) 30 days after the publication of notice in the Federal Register.

(B) CERTIFICATION.—The response submitted under subparagraph (A) shall be signed by a responsible corporate officer, general partner, proprietor, or individual of similar authority, who shall certify under penalty of law the completeness and accuracy of the information submitted.

(3) NOTICE OF INITIAL DETERMINATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after receiving a response under paragraph (2), the Administrator shall send the participant a notice of initial determination assessing a contribution to the Fund, which shall be based on the information received from the participant in response to the Administrator's request for information.

(B) NO RESPONSE; INCOMPLETE RESPONSE.—If no response is received from the participant, or if the response is incomplete, the initial determination assessing a contribution from the participant shall be based on the best information available to the Administrator.

(4) CONFIDENTIALITY.—Any Person may designate any information submitted under this subsection as confidential commercial or financial information for purposes of the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552). The Administrator shall adopt procedures for designating such information as confidential.

(5) NEW INFORMATION.—

(A) EXISTING PARTICIPANT.—The Administrator shall adopt procedures for revising initial assessments based on new information received after the initial assessments are calculated.

(B) ADDITIONAL PARTICIPANT.—If the Administrator, at any time, receives information that an additional person may qualify as a participant, the Administrator shall require such person to submit information necessary to determine whether an initial determination assessing a contribution from that person should be issued, in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

(6) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—Any initial determination issued under this subsection may allow for periodic payments, provided that the full annual amount assessed is paid each year. Each participant shall pay its contribution to the Fund in the amount specified it the initial determination of assessment from the Administrator, according to the schedule specified in the initial determination.

(7) SUBPOENAS.—The Administrator may request the Attorney General to subpoena persons to compel testimony, records, and other information relevant to its responsibilities under this section. The Attorney General may enforce such subpoena in appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which the person to whom the subpoena was addressed resides, was served, or transacts business.

(8) REHEARING.—A Participant has a right to obtain rehearing of the Administrator's initial determination pursuant to section 202.

Subtitle B—Asbestos Insurers Commission

SEC. 211. ESTABLISHMENT OF ASBESTOS INSURERS COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the Asbestos Insurers Commission (referred to in this subtitle as the "Commission") to carry out the duties described in section 212.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall be composed of 5 members who shall be appointed by the President, after consultation with—

(A) the majority leader of the Senate;

(B) the minority leader of the Senate;

(C) the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

(D) the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(2) QUALIFICATIONS.—

(A) EXPERTISE.—Members of the Commission shall have sufficient expertise to fulfill their responsibilities under this subtitle.

(B) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—No member of the Commission appointed under paragraph (1) may be an employee, former employee, or shareholder of any insurer participant, or an immediate family member of any such individual.

(C) FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT.—A member of the Commission may not be an officer or employee of the Federal Government, except by reason of membership on the Commission.

(3) DATE.—The appointments of the members of the Commission shall be made not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(4) PERIOD OF APPOINTMENT.—Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission.

(5) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(6) CHAIRMAN.—The Commission shall select a Chairman from among its members.

(c) MEETINGS.—

(1) INITIAL MEETING.—Not later than 30 days after the date on which all members of the Commission have been appointed, the Commission shall hold its first meeting.

(2) SUBSEQUENT MEETINGS.—The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairman as necessary to accomplish the duties under section 212.

(3) QUORUM.—No business may be conducted or hearings held without the participation of all of the members of the Commission.

SEC. 212. DUTIES OF ASBESTOS INSURERS COMMISSION.

(a) DETERMINATION OF INSURER LIABILITY FOR ASBESTOS INJURIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall determine the amount that each insurer participant will be required to pay into the Fund to satisfy their contractual obligation to compensate claimants for asbestos injuries.

(2) ALLOCATION AGREEMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the Commission issues its initial determination, the insurer participants may submit an allocation agreement, approved by all of the insurer participants, to—

(i) the Commission;

(ii) the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate; and

(iii) the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

(B) CERTIFICATION.—The authority of the Commission under this subtitle shall terminate on the day after the Commission certifies that an allocation agreement submitted under subparagraph (A) meets the requirements of this subtitle.

(3) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—

(A) AGGREGATE CONTRIBUTION LEVEL.—The total contribution required of all insurer participants over the life of the Fund shall be equal to $45,000,000,000.

(B) DECLINING PAYMENTS.—Since the payments from the Fund are expected to decline over time, the annual contributions from insurer participants is also expected to decline over time. The proportionate share of each insurer participant's contributions to the Fund will remain the same throughout the life of the Fund.

(C) SEVERAL LIABILITY.—Each insurer participant's obligation to contribute to the Fund is several. There is no joint liability and the future insolvency of any insurer participant shall not affect the assessment assigned to any other insurer participant.

(4) ASSESSMENT CRITERIA.—

(A) MANDATORY PARTICIPANTS.—Insurers that have paid, or been assessed by a legal judgment or settlement, at least $1,000,000 in defense and indemnity costs before the date of enactment of this Act in response to claims for compensation for asbestos injuries shall be mandatory participants in the Fund. Other insurers shall be exempt from mandatory payments.

(B) PARTICIPANT TIERS.—Contributions shall be determined by assigning mandatory insurer participants into tiers, which shall be determined and defined based on—

(i) net written premiums received from policies covering asbestos that were in force at any time during the period beginning on January 1, 1940 and ending on December 31, 1986;

(ii) net paid losses for asbestos injuries compared to all such losses for the insurance industry;

(iii) net carried reserve level for asbestos claims on the most recent financial statement of the insurer participant; and

(iv) future liability.

(C) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—Any final determination of assessment issued under subsection (b) may allow for periodic payments, provided that the full annual amount assessed is paid each year. Each insurer participant shall pay its contribution to the Fund in the amount specified in the final determination of assessment from the Commission, according to the schedule specified in the final determination.

(b) PROCEDURE.—

(1) NOTICE TO PARTICIPANTS.—Not later than 30 days after the initial meeting of the Commission, the Commission shall—

(A) directly notify all reasonably identifiable insurer participants of the requirement to submit information necessary to calculate the amount of any required contribution to the Fund; and

(B) publish in the Federal Register a notice requiring any person who may be an insurer participant (as determined by criteria outlined in the notice) to submit such information.

(2) RESPONSE REQUIRED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any person who receives notice under paragraph (1)(A), and any other person meeting the criteria specified in the notice published under paragraph (1)(B), shall respond by providing the Commission with all the information requested in the notice at the earlier of—

(i) 30 days after the receipt of direct notice; or

(ii) 30 days after the publication of notice in the Federal Register.

(B) CERTIFICATION.—The response submitted under subparagraph (A) shall be signed by a responsible corporate officer, general partner, proprietor, or individual of similar authority, who shall certify under penalty of law the completeness and accuracy of the information submitted.

(3) NOTICE OF INITIAL DETERMINATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 120 days after the initial meeting of the Commission, the Commission shall send each insurer participant a notice of initial determination assessing a contribution to the Fund, which shall be based on the information received from the participant in response to the Commission's request for information.

(B) NO RESPONSE; INCOMPLETE RESPONSE.—If no response is received from an insurer participant, or if the response is incomplete, the initial determination assessing a contribution from the insurer participant shall be based on the best information available to the Commission.

(4) REVIEW PERIOD.—

(A) COMMENTS FROM INSURER PARTICIPANTS.—Not later than 30 days after receiving a notice of initial determination from the Commission, an insurer participant may provide the Commission with additional information to support limited adjustments to the assessment received to reflect exceptional circumstances.

(B) ADDITIONAL PARTICIPANTS.—If, before the final determination of the Commission, the Commission receives information that an additional person may qualify as an insurer participant, the Commission shall require such person to submit information necessary to determine whether a contribution from that person should be assessed, in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

(C) REVISION PROCEDURES.—The Commission, shall adopt procedures for revising initial assessments based on information received under subparagraphs (A) and (B). Any adjustments to assessment levels shall comply with the criteria under subsection (a).

(5) SUBPOENAS.—The Commission may request the Attorney General to subpoena persons to compel testimony, records, and other information relevant to its responsibilities under this section. The Attorney General may enforce such subpoena in appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which the person to whom the subpoena was addressed resides, was served, or transacts business.

(6) NOTICE OF FINAL DETERMINATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after the notice of initial determination is sent to the insurer participants, the Commission shall send each insurer participant a notice of final determination.

(B) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—A participant has a right to obtain judicial review of the Commission's final determination under title III.

(c) DETERMINATION OF RELATIVE LIABILITY FOR ASBESTOS INJURIES.—The Commission shall determine the percentage of the total liability of each participant identified under subsection (a).

(d) REPORT.—

(1) RECIPIENTS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit a report, containing the information described under paragraph (2), to—

(A) the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate;

(B) the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives; and

(C) the Court of Asbestos Claims.

(2) CONTENTS.—The report under paragraph (1) shall contain the amount that each insurer participant is required to contribute to the Fund, including the payment schedule for such contributions.

SEC. 213. POWERS OF ASBESTOS INSURERS COMMISSION.

(a) HEARINGS.—The Commission may hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as the Commission considers advisable to carry out this Act.

(b) INFORMATION FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Commission may secure directly from any Federal department or agency such information as the Commission considers necessary to carry out this Act. Upon request of the Chairman of the Commission, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(c) POSTAL SERVICES.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

(d) GIFTS.—The Commission may not accept, use, or dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

SEC. 214. PERSONNEL MATTERS.

(a) COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.—Each member of the Commission shall be compensated at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including travel time) during which such member is engaged in the performance of the duties of the Commission.

(b) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—The members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission.

(c) STAFF.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Chairman of the Commission may, without regard to the civil service laws and regulations, appoint and terminate an executive director and such other additional personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to perform its duties. The employment of an executive director shall be subject to confirmation by the Commission.

(2) COMPENSATION.—The Chairman of the Commission may fix the compensation of the executive director and other personnel without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification of positions and General Schedule pay rates, except that the rate of pay for the executive director and other personnel may not exceed the rate payable for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of such title.

(d) DETAIL OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.—Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement, and such detail shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege.

(e) PROCUREMENT OF TEMPORARY AND INTERMITTENT SERVICES.—The Chairman of the Commission may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, at rates for individuals which do not exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of such title.

SEC. 215. NONAPPLICATION OF FOIA AND CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 552 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Freedom of Information Act) shall not apply to the Commission.

(b) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—All information submitted to the Commission shall be privileged and confidential information and shall not be disclosed to any person outside the Commission, unless such privilege is knowingly and intentionally waived by the person submitting the information. An appeal of an assessment to the Fund under this subtitle shall be deemed a waiver for the purposes of this subsection unless the appellee participant makes a motion for an in camera review of its appeal.

SEC. 216. TERMINATION OF ASBESTOS INSURERS COMMISSION.

The Commission shall terminate 60 days after the date on which the Commission submits its report under section 212(c).

SEC. 217. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004 to carry out the provisions of this subtitle.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—Any sums appropriated under the authorization contained in this section shall remain available, without fiscal year limitation, until expended.

Subtitle C—Office of Asbestos Injury Claims Resolution

SEC. 221. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OFFICE OF ASBESTOS INJURY CLAIMS RESOLUTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established the Office of Asbestos Injury Claims Resolution.

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Office shall be responsible for—

(1) administering the Fund;

(2) providing compensation from the Fund to asbestos claimants who are determined to be eligible for such compensation; and

(3) carrying out other applicable provisions of this title and other activities determined appropriate by the Administrator.

(c) ADMINISTRATOR.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Office shall be headed by an Administrator who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) TERM; REMOVAL.—The Administrator shall serve for a term of 5 years and may be removable by the President only for good cause.

SEC. 222. POWERS OF THE ADMINISTRATOR AND MANAGEMENT OF THE FUND.

(a) GENERAL POWERS.—The Administrator shall have the following general powers:

(1) To promulgate such regulations as the Administrator determines to be necessary to implement the provisions of this subtitle.

(2) To appoint employees or contract for the services of other personnel as may be necessary and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subtitle, including entering into cooperative agreements with other Federal agencies.

(3) To make such expenditures as may be necessary and appropriate in the administration of this subtitle.

(4) To take all actions necessary to prudently manage the Fund, including—

(A) administering, in a fiduciary capacity, the assets of the Fund for the exclusive purpose of providing benefits to asbestos claimants and their beneficiaries;

(B) defraying the reasonable expenses of administering the Fund;

(C) investing the assets of the Fund in accordance with subsection (b)(2); and

(D) retaining advisers, managers, and custodians who possess the necessary facilities and expertise to provide for the skilled and prudent management of the Fund, to assist in the development, implementation and maintenance of the Fund's investment policies and investment activities, and to provide for the safekeeping and delivery of the Fund's assets.

(5) To have all other powers incidental, necessary, or appropriate to carrying out the functions of the Office.

(b) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO FUND ASSETS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Fund shall be held for the exclusive purpose of providing benefits to asbestos claimants and their beneficiaries and to otherwise defray the reasonable expenses of administering the Fund.

(2) INVESTMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Fund shall be administered and invested with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence, under the circumstances prevailing at the time of such investment, that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and manner would use.

(B) STRATEGY.—The Administrator shall invest amounts in the Fund in a manner that enables the Fund to make current and future distributions to or for the benefit of asbestos claimants. In pursuing an investment strategy under this subparagraph, the Administrator shall consider, to the extent relevant to an investment decision or action—

(i) the size of the Fund;

(ii) the nature and estimated duration of the Fund;

(iii) the liquidity and distribution requirements of the Fund;

(iv) general economic conditions at the time of the investment;

(v) the possible effect of inflation or deflation on Fund assets;

(vi) the role that each investment or course of action plays with respect to the overall assets of the Fund;

(vii) the expected amount to be earned (including both income and appreciation of capital) through investment of amounts in the Fund; and (viii) the needs of asbestos claimants for current and future distributions authorized under this Act.

SEC. 223. ASBESTOS INJURY CLAIMS RESOLUTION FUND.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Office of Asbestos Injury Claims Resolution, the Asbestos Injury Claims Resolution Fund, which shall be available to pay—

(1) claims for compensation for an eligible disease or condition determined under title I;

(2) claims for reimbursement for medical monitoring determined under title I;

(3) principal and interest on borrowings under subsection (c); and

(4) administrative expenses to carry out this subtitle.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY MANDATORY PARTICIPANTS.—The aggregate contributions of all mandatory participants to the Fund may not exceed $5,000,000,000 in any calendar year.

(c) BORROWING AUTHORITY.—The Administrator is authorized to borrow, in any calendar year, an amount not to exceed anticipated contributions to the Fund in the following calendar year for purposes of carrying out the obligations of the Fund under this Act.

(d) GUARANTEED PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall establish a guaranteed payment account within the Fund to insure payment of the total amount of contributions required to be paid into the Fund by all participants.

(2) SURCHARGE.—The Administrator shall impose, on each participant required to pay contributions into the Fund under this Act, in addition to the amount of such contributions, a reasonable surcharge to be paid into the guaranteed payment account in an amount that the Administrator determines appropriate to insure against the risk of nonpayment of required contributions by any such participant.

(3) PROCEDURE.—The surcharge required under this section shall be paid in such manner, at such times, and in accordance with such procedures as the Administrator determines appropriate.

(4) USES OF GUARANTEED PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—Amounts in the guaranteed payment account shall be used as necessary to pay claims from the Fund, to the extent that amounts in the Fund are insufficient to pay such claims due to nonpayment by any participant.

(5) ENFORCEMENT.—The enforcement of the payment of a surcharge under this subsection may be enforced in the same manner and to the same extent as the enforcement of a contribution under section 224.

(e) ORPHAN SHARE RESERVE ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent the total amount of contributions of the participants in any given year exceed the minimum aggregate contribution under subsection (h), the excess monies shall be placed in an orphan share reserve account established within the Fund by the Administrator.

(2) USE OF ACCOUNT MONIES.—Monies from the orphan share reserve account shall be preserved and administered like the remainder of the Fund, but shall be reserved and may be used only—

(A) in the event that a petition for relief is filed and not withdrawn for the participant under title 11, United States Code, after the date of enactment of this Act and the participant cannot meet its obligations under this subtitle; and

(B) to the extent the Administrator grants a participant relief for severe financial hardship or exigent circumstances under this section.

SEC. 224. ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) DEFAULT.—If any participant fails to make any payment in the amount and according to the schedule specified in a determination of assessment, after demand and 30 days opportunity to cure the default, there shall be a lien in favor of the United States for the amount of the delinquent payment (including interest) upon all property and rights to property, whether real or personal, belonging to such participant.

(b) BANKRUPTCY.—In the case of a bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding, the lien imposed under subsection (a) shall be treated in the same manner as a lien for taxes due and owing to the United States for purposes of the provisions of title 11, United States Code, or section 3713(a) of title 31, United States Code.

(c) CIVIL ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which there has been a refusal or neglect to pay the liability imposed by the final determination under section 202 or 212, the Administrator may bring a civil action in the Federal district court for the District of Columbia to—

(A) enforce such liability and the lien of the United States under this section; or

(B) subject any property, of whatever nature, of the participant, or in which the participant has any right, title, or interest, to the payment of such liability.

(2) DEFENSE LIMITATION.—In any proceeding under this subsection, the participant shall be barred from bringing any challenge to the assessment if such challenge could have been made during the review period under section 202(b)(4) or 212(b)(4), or a judicial review proceeding under title III.

SEC. 225. ADDITIONAL CONTRIBUTING PARTICIPANTS.

(a) DEFINED TERM.—In this section, the term ''additional contributing participant'' means any defendant in an asbestos claim that is not a mandatory participant under subtitle A and is likely to avoid future civil liability as a result of this Act.

(b) ASSESSMENT.—In addition to contributions assessed under subtitle A, the Administrator may assess additional contributing participants for contributions to the Fund. Any additional contributing participant assessed under this section shall be treated as a defendant participant for purposes of procedures and appeals under this Act.

(c) ASSESSMENT LIMITATIONS.—The Administrator may assess under subsection (b), over the life of the Fund, an amount not to exceed $10,000,000,000 from all additional contributing participants.

TITLE III—JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 301. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OF THE ASBESTOS COURT.

(a) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction over any action to review a final decision of the Asbestos Court.

(b) PROCEDURE FOR APPEALS.—

(1) PERIOD FOR FILING APPEAL.—An appeal under this section shall be filed not later than 30 days after the issuance of a final decision by the Asbestos Court.

(2) TRANSMITTAL OF RECORD.—Upon the filing of an appeal, a copy of the filing shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Asbestos Court, and the Asbestos Court shall file in the court the record in the proceeding, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

(3) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The court shall uphold the decision of the Asbestos Court if the court determines, upon review of the record as a whole, that the decision is not arbitrary and capricious.

(B) EFFECT OF DETERMINATION.—If the court determines that a final decision of the Asbestos Court is arbitrary and capricious, the court shall remand the case to the Asbestos Court.

(4) FINALITY OF DETERMINATION.—The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

SEC. 302. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF FINAL DETERMINATIONS OF THE ASBESTOS INSURERS COMMISSION.

(a) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—The United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction over any action to review a final determination by the Asbestos Insurers Commission regarding the assessment of a contribution to the Fund from a participant.

(b) PROCEDURE FOR APPEAL.—

(1) PERIOD FOR FILING APPEAL.—An appeal under this section shall be filed not later than 30 days after the issuance of a final determination by the Commission.

(2) TRANSMITTAL OF RECORD.—Upon the filing of an appeal, a copy of the filing shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission.

(c) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall uphold the final determination of the Commission with respect to the assessment of a contribution to the Fund from a participant if such determination is not arbitrary and capricious.

(2) EFFECT OF DETERMINATION.—If the court determines that a final determination with respect to the amount of a contribution to the Fund by a participant may not be upheld, the court shall remand the decision to the Commission, with instructions to modify the final determination.

(3) NO STAYS.—The court may not issue a stay of payment into the Fund pending its final judgment.

(4) FINALITY OF DETERMINATION.—The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

SEC. 303. EXCLUSIVE REVIEW.

(a) EXCLUSIVITY OF REVIEW.—An action of the Asbestos Court or the Asbestos Insurers Commission for which review could have been obtained under section 301 or 302 shall not be subject to judicial review in any other proceeding, including proceedings before the Asbestos Court.

(b) CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of a Federal court holding this Act, or any provision or application thereof, unconstitutional shall be reviewable as a matter of right by direct appeal to the Supreme Court.

(2) PERIOD FOR FILING APPEAL.—Any such appeal shall be filed not more than 30 days after entry of such judgment, decree, or order.

SEC. 304. PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST REINSURERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any insurer participant may file a claim in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against any reinsurer that is contractually obligated to reimburse such insurer participant for a portion of costs incurred as a result of payment of asbestos related claims.

(b) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A claim filed under subsection (a) shall be subject to expedited procedures, as prescribed by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

(2) EVIDENTIARY STANDARD.—The plaintiff shall not recover in a claim under subsection (a) unless the plaintiff demonstrates the right to recover by a preponderance of the evidence.

(3) FINAL JUDGMENT.—A final judgment shall be issued on a claim filed under subsection (a) not later than 30 days after such filing.

(c) APPEALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—An appeal from a decision under subsection (b) may be filed with the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

(2) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The final judgment of the district court shall be upheld unless the court of appeals finds the judgment to be arbitrary and capricious.

(3) FINAL JUDGMENT.—A final judgment shall be issued on an appeal filed under paragraph (1) not later than 30 days after such filing.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. FALSE INFORMATION.

Any person who knowingly provides false information in connection with an assessment of contributions, a claim for compensation, or an audit under this Act shall be subject to—

(1) criminal prosecution under section 1001 of title 18, United States Code; and

(2) civil penalties under section 3729 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 402. EFFECT ON BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

(a) NO AUTOMATIC STAY.—Section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (17), by striking "or" at the end;

(2) in paragraph (18), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; or"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (18) the following:

"(19) of the enforcement of any payment obligations under section 204 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003, against a debtor, or the property of the estate of a debtor, that is a participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of that Act).".

(b) ASSUMPTION OF EXECUTORY CONTRACTS.—Section 365 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(q) If a debtor is a participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003), the trustee shall be deemed to have assumed all executory contracts entered into by the participant under section 204 of that Act. The trustee may not reject any such executory contract.".

(c) ALLOWED ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Section 503 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c)(1) Claims of the United States, the Attorney General, or the Administrator (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003) based upon the asbestos payment obligations of a debtor that is a Participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of that Act), shall be paid as an allowed administrative expense. The debtor shall not be entitled to either notice or a hearing with respect to such claims.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "asbestos payment obligation" means any payment obligation under subtitle B of title II of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003.".

(d) NO DISCHARGE.—Section 523 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(f) A discharge under section 727, 1141, 1228, or 1328 of this title does not discharge any debtor that is a participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003) of the payment obligations of the debtor under subtitle B of title II of that Act.".

(e) PAYMENT.—Section 524 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i) PARTICIPANT DEBTORS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraphs (2) and (3) shall apply to a debtor who—

"(A) is a participant that has made prior asbestos expenditures (as such terms are defined in the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003); and

"(B) is subject to a case under this title that is pending—

"(i) on the date of enactment of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003; or

"(ii) at any time during the 1 year period preceding the date of enactment of that Act.

"(2) TIER I DEBTORS.—A debtor that has been assigned to tier I under section 202 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003 shall make payments in accordance with sections 202 and 203 of that Act.

"(3) TREATMENT OF PAYMENT OBLIGATIONS.—All payment obligations of a debtor under sections 202 and 203 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003 shall—

"(A) constitute costs and expenses of administration of a case under section 503 of this title;

"(B) notwithstanding any case pending under this title, be payable in accordance with section 202 of that Act;

"(C) not be stayed;

"(D) not be affected as to enforcement or collection by any stay or injunction of any court; and

"(E) not be impaired or discharged in any current or future case under this title.".

(f) TREATMENT OF TRUSTS.—Section 524 of title 11, United States Code, as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(j) ASBESTOS TRUSTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A trust shall assign a portion of the corpus of the trust to the Asbestos Injury Claims Resolution Fund (referred to in this subsection as the 'Fund') as is required under section 202 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003 if—

"(A) the trust was formed prior to October 22, 1994; and

"(B) the trust qualifies as a "trust" under section 201 of that Act.

"(2) TRANSFER OF TRUST ASSETS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under subparagraphs (B) and (C), the assets in any trust established to provide compensation for asbestos claims (as defined in section 3 of the FAIR Act of 2003) shall be transferred to the Fund not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the FAIR Act of 2003. Except as provided under subparagraph (B), the Administrator of the Fund shall accept such assets and utilize them for any purposes of the Fund under section 223 of such Act, including the payment of claims for compensation under such Act to beneficiaries of the trust from which the assets were transferred. After such transfer, each trustee of such trust shall have no liability to any beneficiary of such trust.

"(B) AUTHORITY TO REFUSE ASSETS.—The Administrator of the Fund may refuse to accept any asset that the Administrator determines may create liability for the Fund in excess of the value of the asset.

"(C) ALLOCATION OF TRUST ASSETS.—If a trust under subparagraph (A) has beneficiaries with claims that are not asbestos claims, the assets transferred to the Fund under subparagraph (A) shall not include assets allocable to such beneficiaries. The trustees of any such trust shall determine the amount of such trust assets to be reserved for the continuing operation of the trust in processing and paying claims that are not asbestos claims. Such reserved amount shall not be greater than 3 percent of the total assets in the trust and shall not be transferred to the Fund.

"(D) SALE OF FUND ASSETS.—The investment requirements under section 222 of the FAIR Act of 2003 shall not be construed to require the Administrator of the Fund to sell assets transferred to the Fund under subparagraph (A).

"(E) LIQUIDATED CLAIMS.—A trust shall not make any payment relating to asbestos claims unless such claims were liquidated before the date of enactment of the FAIR Act of 2003.

"(3) INJUNCTION.—Any injunction issued as part of the formation of a trust described in paragraph (1) shall remain in full force and effect until the assignment required under paragraph (1) has been made.".

(g) NO AVOIDANCE OF TRANSFER.—Section 546 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h) Notwithstanding the rights and powers of a trustee under section 544, 545, 547, 548, 549, and 550 of this title, if a debtor is a participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003), the trustee may not avoid a transfer made by the debtor pursuant to its payment obligations under sections 202 or 203 of that Act.''.

(h) CONFIRMATION OF PLAN.—Section 1129(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(14) If the debtor is a participant (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003), the plan provides for the continuation after its effective date of payment of all payment obligations under title II of that Act.''.

SEC. 403. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS AND EXISTING CLAIMS.

(a) EFFECT ON FEDERAL AND STATE LAW.—The provisions of this Act shall supersede any and all State and Federal laws insofar as they may relate to any asbestos claim filed under this Act.

(b) EXCLUSIVE REMEDY.—The remedies provided under this Act shall be the exclusive remedy for any asbestos claim under any Federal or State law.

(c) BAR ON ASBESTOS CLAIMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No asbestos claim may be pursued in any State or Federal court, except for enforcement of claims for which a final judgment is entered before the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) PREEMPTION.—Any action asserting an asbestos claim in a court of any State, except actions for which final judgment are entered before the date of enactment of this Act, is preempted by this Act.

(3) DISMISSAL.—No judgment other than a judgment of dismissal may be entered in any such action, including an action pending on appeal, or on petition or motion for discretionary review, on or after the date of enactment of this Act. A court may dismiss any such action on its motion. If the district court denies the motion to dismiss, it shall stay further proceedings until final disposition of any appeal taken under this Act.

(4) REMOVAL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If an action under paragraph (2) is not dismissed, or if an order entered after the date of enactment of this Act purporting to enter judgment or deny review is not rescinded and replaced with an order of dismissal within 30 days after the filing of a motion by any party to the action advising the court of the provisions of this Act, any party may remove the case to the district court of the United States for the district in which such action is pending.

(B) TIME LIMITS.—For actions originally filed after the date of enactment of this Act, the notice of removal shall be filed within the time limits specified in section 1441(b) of title 28, United States Code.

(C) PROCEDURES.—The procedures for removal and proceedings after removal shall be in accordance with sections 1446 through 1450 of title 28, United States Code, except as may be necessary to accommodate removal of any actions pending (including on appeal) on the date of enactment of this Act.

(D) JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of the district court shall be limited to—

(i) determining whether removal was proper; and

(ii) ruling on a motion to dismiss based on this Act.

Thanks Brett -

Karl -

FYI, below, from Brett re. the letter sent by Weirton Steel last week that falsely listed "assurances" received during the 5/5 meeting in your office. Brett recommends that I sign and send the response letter, which I will do today and blind-copy your office.

Pirates of the Senate
By The Journal Editorial Board

In James Clavell's novel "Shogun," the hero, John Blackthorne, is a 17th century English captain sailing a Dutch vessel who becomes marooned in Japan after fleeing from Spanish warships in the New World. Blackthorne is, to use the 17th century Dutch word for it, a filibuster, or a privateer who wages war against the colonies of a foreign nation.

Americans adopted the word in the mid-19th century to characterize adventurers who plundered weakly governed Central American and Caribbean countries.
Filibuster also came to refer to the tactics used to delay or defeat action in a legislative assembly, most notably in the U.S. Senate, where rules and custom allow a minority of senators to obstruct legislation from coming to a vote. Recently, Democratic senators have extended the use of the filibuster to prevent confirmation votes on two of President George W. Bush's judicial nominees - Miguel Estrada and Patricia Owen.

On May 9, President Bush took the opportunity of the second anniversary of nominating his first 11 judges to complain that three of his nominees have not received a confirmation vote, including Estrada and Owen. "This is an abdication of constitutional responsibility, and it is hurting our country," Bush said. One year ago, the president used the same occasion to complain that eight of his nominations hadn't received a vote after one

The progress in the past year has been due to the demotion of Sen. Tom Daschle from Senate majority leader to minority leader. A year ago, Majority Leader Daschle wouldn't allow a floor vote on nominees who hadn't received a majority of votes from the then-Democratic majority Senate Judiciary Committee. Today, Minority Leader Daschle and his Democratic colleagues are using a filibuster to block floor votes for certain nominees who have received a majority of votes from the Republican majority committee.

The Journal published an article by Sen. Daschle on Saturday (May 17) in which he defended the Senate's record of confirming judges. He notes that only two of Bush's 126 judicial nominations have not received a floor vote - a 98.4 percent confirmation rate. Daschle writes that the "confirmation process is working well" (without mentioning the unprecedented use of a filibuster to block confirmation votes) and then changes the subject midway through his article to the economy, deficits, ethanol and drought relief.

Majority Leader Bill Frist has proposed changing the Senate rules on filibusters to lower the number of votes necessary to end a filibuster after every cloture vote from 60 votes eventually to 51 votes, a simple majority of the Senate body. Filibusters were first adopted by the Senate in the mid-19th century but have been changed over time from unanimous consent needed to end debate, to a two-thirds vote in 1917, to a three-fifths vote in 1975. Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, originally proposed the Frist filibuster rule change in 1995. The problem is that changing Senate rules requires a two-thirds vote, something Democrats are unlikely to agree to unless it serves their interests.

The U.S. Constitution gives the president the power to appoint judges with the "advice and consent" of the Senate, a practice that until the present time has meant a committee hearing and a vote by the whole Senate. Basic courtesy would require that the Senate give every president's judicial nominees their chance at a timely and fair hearing and an up-or-down confirmation vote.

"There are extreme cases when extreme judges deserve no more than a cloture vote, and these two cases fit that category," Sen. Daschle said recently, an odd statement considering that both Estrada and Owen have the support of a majority of senators and have both received the highest recommendation from that hotbed of extremism, the American Bar Association. Odd, unless you're engaging in legislative piracy, or filibustering, as the Dutch would say.

From the Pittsburgh Business Times

Despite Bush's protests, court vacancies are down

Jon Delano

"Confirm my judicial appointments." It's a familiar refrain. In recent years, presidents have called on the Senate to expedite confirmation so that their choices for the federal bench don't face endless delays.

Former President Clinton railed against the obstructionist tactics of the Republican-controlled Senate, accusing that body of partisan behavior. During Mr. Clinton's last six years in office not a single judge was confirmed for the U.S. District Court in Western Pennsylvania.

Why?

The simple answer is politics. U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, a Republican, "blue slipped" or put on hold the consideration of Mr. Clinton's appointments in this region, arguing that he should be able to name at least one of every three appointees. When Mr. Clinton rejected that claim, there was deadlock.

Last week in the Rose Garden, President Bush sounded a lot like Mr. Clinton, denouncing "obstructionist tactics" by Senate Democrats. At a press conference last Friday, U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, got it exactly right. "When we Republicans controlled the Senate and President Clinton was in office, some things were done which shouldn't have been done," the state's senior senator opined. "And when President Bush took office and the Democrats were in control, there were some things that shouldn't have been done."

The old saying that what goes around comes around seems apt. Mr. Bush is reaping the ill will that was sown earlier. But a careful comparison of the state's federal judiciary today, particularly in Pennsylvania, suggests that this Senate, whether run by Democrats or Republicans, has treated Mr. Bush's nominees better than Mr. Clinton's. In 28 months in office, Mr. Bush has already had 100 district judges confirmed by the Senate along with 23 appellate judges. Of the 665 judges on the federal district courts across America, there are only 26 vacancies, and the vacancy rate among the 179 judges on the courts of appeals is down to 21.

Take the Western District of Pennsylvania, for example. During the years of the Santorum filibuster, that court of 10 judges had as many as five vacancies. Today, the Senate has confirmed four Bush appointees -- Judges Joy Conti, David Cercone, Terry McVerry, and Art Schwab -- and the fifth nomination, attorney Tom Hardiman, has just been sent to the Senate.

With the elevation and confirmation of Judge Brooks Smith to the U.S. Court of Appeals, the president still needs to name one more judge to the local court, but once completed, Mr. Bush, with less than three years in office, will have named -- and the Senate will have confirmed -- six of the 10 judges on the local federal court. That hardly sounds like obstructionism.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and the Virgin Islands), the court just under the Supreme Court, has 11 of its 14 judges in place, one appointed by President Carter, two by President Reagan, two by President Bush I, and five appointed by President Clinton.

Mr. Bush's first appointment to that appellate court, Brooks Smith, was confirmed last year, and the president only two weeks ago sent two more Republican names to the Senate: Attorney General Mike Fisher and former Richard Thornburgh aide Jay Waldman. Nobody expects much controversy over these nominees.

So what is Mr. Bush complaining about?

It turns out that what really angers him is a procedural move adopted by Democrats to deny a final vote on a few controversial nominees. Unable to put a "hold" on nominees as Mr. Santorum did when the Republicans controlled the Senate, the Democrats, the minority party, are using the filibuster to block an up-or-down vote on a few nominees. Under Senate rules, it takes 60 votes to stop a filibuster. With just 51 Republican senators, the GOP cannot force a vote unless some Democrats go along. So far, at least on the nominations of two controversial appellate court judges, Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owens, the Democrats have stuck together.

The Democrats insist that they are not blocking all of Mr. Bush's nominees, only those with which have major problems.

But both sides are playing politics. Mr. Bush is nominating very conservative candidates to appease a wing of his party. And Democrats are denying an up-or-down vote on them to appease a wing of their party. The good news is that vacancies are down. That's progress!

T he case against Alabama Attorney General William Pryor's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit is a simple one: Despite the denials of his friends and admirers, Pryor has consistently used the power of his office to try to change the law to suit his ideology.

In doing so, he has jeopardized the rights of Alabamians and all Americans. Giving him a lifetime seat on the federal appeals court would further jeopardize those rights.

Pryor's devotion to a "states' rights" philosophy has already contributed to a weakening of federal protections for those most in need. In reviewing his record in the office of the attorney general and his extensive speeches and writings, even a casual observer must conclude that, for William Pryor, his states' rights ideology conquers all.

Over the past half-dozen years, Pryor has urged the Supreme Court -- often in cases where Alabama's interests were not at stake -- to advance the states' rights interpretation of the Constitution. In the process, he has helped to weaken civil rights protections for millions of Americans.

Alabama's argument before the court in Garrett vs. Alabama was that key remedies provided in the Americans With Disabilities Act do not apply to state employees, because the Constitution shields states from such suits. Although it was based on the once-discredited states' rights interpretation of the Constitution, Alabama won the case, effectively ending protections against age discrimination for millions of state employees across the country.

In another case, Pryor successfully argued that congressional efforts to end age discrimination -- and provide a remedy for victims of such discrimination -- were not appropriate with respect to state employees.

Pushing this same states' rights philosophy, Pryor has filed a brief before the U.S. Supreme Court supporting the state of Nevada in a case that would leave state employees with no real recourse for violations of the Family and Medical Leave Act. The outcome of this case is pending.

Although Pryor has praised the Supreme Court's rulings in favor of states' rights, he has been critical when his interpretation of the Constitution has been rebuked.

For instance, the court rejected as "cruel and unusual punishment" Alabama prison guards' practice of handcuffing a prisoner to a hitching post and denying him clothing, water and even bathroom breaks. Pryor had defended these barbarous ac tions, and complained that the high court was using "its own subjective views on appropriate methods of prison discipline."

Yet interpreting the Constitution and enforcing its protections is exactly what the Supreme Court is supposed to do.

As a veteran observer of judicial nomination hearings, I can recall more than one of President Bush's nominees grudgingly asserting to a panel of senators that he or she would follow the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade ruling, because it was "the law of the land." But Bill Pryor has called the ruling "the worst abomination of constitutional law in our history."

Indeed, at an April 1997 rally, he decried the decades-old precedent of Roe. He said, "I will never forget Jan. 22, 1973, the day seven members of our highest court ripped the Constitution."

In a survey of state attorneys general on the issue, Pryor said, "Abortion is murder and Roe vs. Wade is an abominable decision." He opposes abortion even in cases of rape or incest.

One of Pryor's most memorable efforts to move the law closer to his ideology is seen through Alabama Chief Justice Roy Moore's crusade to defy a federal court order and display the Ten Commandments in his courtroom and on other state property. Moore parlayed his refusal to remove such a display -- even after a court ordered him to do so -- into a successful campaign for the state's top judgeship.

In Montgomery, he again displayed his Ten Commandments, this time on a granite monument in the rotunda of the Alabama Judicial Building. Pryor has backed Judge Moore, even though the judge's actions plainly violate the Constitution's requirement of the separation of church and state.

Bill Pryor, like Roy Moore, fails to understand the purpose of the "Establishment clause" of the Constitution. It is not hostility to people of faith, but respect for the beliefs of every person that underpins the separation of church and state, which Pryor seems to hold in such low regard.

Out of respect for freedom of conscience, government officials are prevented from using their power to promote specific religious beliefs.

Pryor flouts the spirit of the Establishment Clause. Speaking at a rally in support of Judge Moore in 1997, he said, "God has chosen, through his son Jesus Christ, this time and this place for all Christians to save our country and save our courts."

His efforts to push the law in the direction of his own ideology have also damaged the interests of the people of Alabama. In fact, Pryor's ideology may have cost the people of Alabama millions in the settlement from the suit by state attorneys general against tobacco companies.

According to Mississippi Attorney General Mike Moore, Pryor fought against his fellow state negotiators in talks with tobacco companies. "But tobacco lobbyists saw him as a friend. He was their friend," Mike Moore later told the Decatur Daily News. "He defended them at all costs."

In the end, Alabama did not receive as generous a settlement from the litigation as other states, even though it had lost just as much revenue in health costs for tobacco-related disease and death. Moore says that this is because Pryor "did a better job of defending the tobacco companies than their own defense attorneys."

Pryor also seems to believe it is acceptable to imprison gay men and lesbians for expressing their own human sexuality in the privacy of their homes. He filed a brief in the Supreme Court asking the Court to uphold the Texas "Homosexual Conduct Law," under which two gay men were arrested and jailed for engaging in private consensual sex.

In his brief, Pryor presaged the recent com ments of Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum, equating for the purposes of legal analysis the consensual acts between two people of the same gender with "prostitution, adultery, necrophilia, bestiality, possession of child pornography and even incest and pedophilia."

As the Tuscaloosa News editorialized, "It is a long step from sanctioning, or even tolerating, consensual private activity between two adults to permitting abusive crimes such as pedophilia. The law is perfectly capable of drawing such distinctions in theory and in practice."

It is disturbing that Pryor apparently cannot draw those distinctions.

These are just some of the reasons why his confirmation would pose a threat to the rights of the Americans who seek justice every year in the 11th Circuit. The federal appeals court is almost always the last best chance for justice for the citizens of Alabama, Florida and Georgia, considering that the Supreme Court hears fewer than 90 cases each year.

Pryor is far from being, as one supporter stated, "utterly fair and demonstrably nonpartisan." He has demonstrated that he uses his position to remake the law in order to suit his extreme ideological beliefs.

For these reasons, he is, as the Atlanta Constitution wrote recently, "unfit to judge."

The federal appeals court is almost always the last best chance for justice for the citizens of Alabama, Florida and Georgia, considering that the Supreme Court hears fewer than 90 cases each year.

Pryor is far from being, as one supporter stated, "utterly fair and demonstrably nonpartisan." He has demonstrated that he uses his position to remake the law in order to suit his extreme ideological beliefs.

For these reasons, he is, as the Atlanta Constitution wrote recently,

"unfit to judge."

Civil rights guardian, outstanding nominee

05/20/03

By WILLIE J. HUNTLEY JR.

Special to the Register

T he Washington-headquartered, liberal witch-hunt against President Bush's federal judicial nominees has targeted its next victim, and it is one of our own: Bill Pryor, the attorney general of Alabama.

Among those leading the charge against Pryor is the mis-named group People For the American Way. This should be no surprise; PFAW has led vicious attacks against Attorney General John Ashcroft, Justice Clarence Thomas, Priscilla Owen, Miguel Estrada and numerous other Republican nominees.

PFAW is a radical leftist group that has supported broad court protection for child pornography, burning the American flag, and publicly funded art portraying the Virgin Mary splattered with elephant dung. Most recently, PFAW helped coordinate protests against the war in Iraq -- the war in which some Alabamians gave their lives for their country.

PFAW is funded by the pornography industry and Hollywood radicals, including Playboy magazine, the Screen Actors Guild, and the Center for Alternative Media & Culture. (And they call Bill Pryor an extremist.)

PFAW asserts that Pryor's appointment would devastate civil rights. What its people don't say is that after about 100 years of inaction by other leaders, Bill Pryor led a coalition that included the NAACP to rid the Alabama Constitution of its racist ban on inter-racial marriage.

Pryor then defended the repeal against a court challenge by a so-called Confederate heritage organization.

Our attorney general also took the side of the NAACP in successfully defending majority-minority voting districts -- all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court -- against a challenge by white Alabama Republicans.

Bill Pryor further opposed a white Republican redistricting proposal that would have hurt African-American voters. He did not back down to criticism from his own party -- not one inch.

He then played a key role in the successful prosecution of former Ku Klux Klansmen Bobby Frank Cherry and Thomas Blanton Jr. for the 1963 bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham. In fact, he will personally argue to uphold Blanton's murder conviction before the Alabama Court of Criminal Appeals later this month.

Pryor started a mentoring program for at-risk kids, and regularly goes to Montgomery public schools to teach African-American kids to read.

Because Bill Pryor has a civil rights record that very few can equal, it is no wonder that African-American leaders who know and have worked with him -- like Artur Davis, Joe Reed, Cleo Thomas and Alvin Holmes -- support his nomination to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Ignoring Pryor's defense of voting rights for African-Americans, PFAW charges that he opposes the landmark Voting Rights Act. The truth is, he has dutifully enforced all of the Voting Rights Act every time a case has come up.

Pryor has simply stated that a procedural part of the Voting Rights Act -- Section 5 -- has problems that Congress should fix. Section 5 requires federal officials in Washington to approve even minor changes in voting practices that have nothing to do with discrimination.

For example, last year, Pryor issued an opinion that required a white replacement candidate for a deceased white state legislator to get Washington approval under Section 5 to use stickers to put his name on the ballot over the name of the deceased candidate.

Thurbert Baker, the African-American Democratic attorney general of Georgia, has voiced similar concerns about Section 5 before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Undeterred, PFAW and its allies also charge that Pryor believes in "states' rights" -- their code words for racism. The truth is that he believes in the Constitution. He has fought to protect the state's treasury from lawsuits that would have taken our tax dollars away from the state -- away from salaries for teachers and medical care for poor people.

It is the job of an attorney general to defend his client -- the state. In fact, the key Supreme Court case on defending a state from lawsuits was won not by Pryor, but by Democratic Attorney General Bob Butterworth of Florida.

Democratic attorneys general like Eliot Spitzer of New York, Jim Doyle of Wisconsin and others have all made the same arguments to defend their state budgets. I guess they are all "right-wing extremists," too.

PFAW and its allies have also attacked Pryor for being extremist on abortion rights. As a dedicated Roman Catholic, Bill Pryor loves kids and is against abortion, no doubt about it.

But even though he disagrees with abortion, he instructed Alabama's district attorneys to apply Alabama's partial-birth abortion law in a moderate way that was consistent with U.S. Supreme Court precedent.

Again, he was criticized by Republicans; pro-life activists accused him of gutting the statute. Again, he didn't back down.

Not surprisingly, PFAW and its allies have attacked Pryor for supporting the display of the Ten Commandments in courthouses. But Pryor simply took the position that if a representation of the Ten Commandments can be carved into the wall of the U.S. Supreme Court's courtroom, it can be placed in an Alabama courtroom.

PFAW also has attacked Pryor for the position he took in the Alexander vs. Sandoval case, in which a person who didn't speak English sued to force Alabama to spend its money on printing driver's license tests in foreign languages.

As broke as our state is, there are better things to spend our money on -- like teaching kids to read English so they can take the test and read road signs, and also paving the roads for them to drive on. Pryor fought this attempt to drain our state budget, and the U.S. Supreme Court agreed with him.

The truth and the record show that Bill Pryor has fought for the civil rights and voting rights of African-Americans in Alabama when PFAW was nowhere to be found. Now that President Bush has nominated Pryor to a federal judgeship, PFAW assumes that it can come here and attack him.

I, for one, suggest that PFAW pack up its pro-pornography, flag-burning, anti-religious, attack-dog tactics and go back to Hollywood and Washington.

We who actually know Bill Pryor support him 100 percent.

INSTITUTE FOR JUSTICE

MEMORANDUM

TO: Institute for Justice Supporters

FROM: Clint Bolick and Chip Mellor

RE: School Choice Update

DATE: May 20, 2003

The U.S. Supreme Court's decision yesterday to review the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Davey v. Locke is very important news for the school choice movement. It raises squarely the issue we are confronting around the nation: does a state's Blaine Amendment that is interpreted to require discrimination against religious educational options violate the First Amendment?

Washington State discriminates in its postsecondary student aid programs against students studying for the ministry. The Ninth Circuit ruled 2-1 that the Blaine Amendment must give way to the First Amendment's requirement, and it struck down the discrimination. Although our side won, we submitted an amicus brief on behalf of IJ and the Center for Education Reform written by IJ attorney Dick Komer supporting Supreme Court review because the case raises important issues for school choice.

Prospects in the Supreme Court are uncertain. Usually the Court takes cases in order to reverse them, and it reverses the Ninth Circuit most often of all. But four justices wrote several years ago in Mitchell v. Helms that it was time to take on the legacy of bigotry embodied in the Blaine Amendments.

The group litigating the case is the American Center for Law and Justice, which has a good track record in the Supreme Court. However, ACLJ is focused on religious liberty, not school choice. So IJ will seek to play as central a role as possible in raising the Court's consciousness about the impact of the case on school choice.

A clear victory could wipe away the largest remaining legal obstacle to school choice. The Court could decide the case on some narrow grounds that would require further cases to resolve the larger issue. A loss would mean simply that we will have to litigate the Blaine Amendment issue state-by-state, as we have done in Wisconsin and Arizona, as we are currently doing in Florida, and as we soon will be doing in Colorado. Compounding the uncertainty is the possibility of some change in the composition of the Court before arguments this fall. Regardless, we will work aggressively to shift the odds in favor of a victory for school choice.

Meanwhile, we expect an imminent challenge to the Colorado program. Chip will head the litigation defense for IJ and is in Colorado now working with school choice activists and meeting with parents. We will be prepared to intervene as soon as the lawsuit is filed. Fortunately, the school choice team in Colorado is strong and well organized.

The second wave of litigation is growing intense. With luck, there will be many programs to defend--and the strength of the legal challenges will continue to diminish. Thanks as always for your support.

Subject: Charleston (WV) Gazettte (5/20/03) EDITORIAL re: Far-right unsuitable appointees

Far-right

Unsuitable appointees

EDITORIAL

Charleston (WV) Gazette

May 20, 2003

LAST WEEK, President Bush told America that U.S. courts are in a "crisis" because Democratic senators won't confirm his judicial appointees.

His statement was surprisingly false. The Senate has approved great numbers of his judge choices — and has balked only at some who hold extreme, narrow views far outside the national mainstream.

"The fact is that 124 have been confirmed, and two have been held back," noted Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "You would not know that by listening to the president's remarks."

In comparison, when Democrat Bill Clinton was president, Senate Republicans blocked far more of his judicial appointments. Nonetheless, Bush wants Senate rules changed so Democrats can no longer use filibusters to prevent votes on his nominees.

Why are some Bush appointees in trouble? Because, according to The New York Times, they "are far-right ideologues whose views offend most Americans."

"What kind of nominees are Senate Democrats balking at?" the national newspaper asked. "One, an Arkansas anti-abortion activist, has written that women should be subordinate to men.

Another argued, as a Justice Department lawyer, that Bob Jones University should keep its tax-exempt status even though it discriminated against blacks."

President Bush, deeply in bed with the fundamentalist wing of the GOP, has striven to load the federal government with far-right "social conservatives" who will steer America toward their policies.

For example, his education secretary, Roderick Paige, told Southern Baptists that America's public schools should teach "the values of the Christian community, where a child is taught to have a strong faith." That may sound harmless, but it offended millions of American Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and others.

For example, to head a federal panel on reproductive health drugs, Bush appointed Dr. David Hager of Kentucky, who refuses to prescribe birth-control pills and recommends Scripture reading as a cure for premenstrual pain.

The Republican platform seeks several harsh changes in America, such as banning abortion, which would require jailing of women and doctors involved. Appointment of judges and officials dedicated to such goals is part of the process of attaining them.

Therefore, it's commendable that Senate Democrats like Robert C. Byrd and Jay Rockefeller are striving to prevent confirmation of extreme far-right nominees.

Subject:	Summer interns

This summer we will have three law studens working as interns in our office. Please make an effort to welcome them to the office and to identify interesting and substantive projects for them to work on.

Mara Zimmerman will begin May 27th and will be in our office for the first half of the summer. Mara is currently a second year at Vanderbilt University Law School, where she is a member of the Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law. She will be a summer associate at Vincent & Elkins for the second half of the summer. She earned her bachelors degree from Rhodes College, where she majored in Russian and International Studies.

Starting June 4th and staying with us for the whole summer will be Lee Rudolfsky. Lee is a first year at Harvard Law School. He earned a bachelor of science in Industrial and Labor Relations and a masters in Public Affairs from Cornell University. He is editor of the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy and is a member of the Harvard Law Republicans.

Alexandra Smith will start on July 1st and stay for latter half of the summer. Alexandra is a second year at Brigham Young University. She is very active in BYU Moot Court and won both the Best Oral Advocate and the Best Brief Writer awards last year. She was also an undergraduate at BYU, where she majored in International Development.

Also, beginning June 16th, Tim Flanigan, Jr. will be joining the office as an intern for the remainder of the summer. Tim is a recent graduate of BYU and is applying to law school. During college, Tim was a research assistant in the BYU Political Science Department and the BYU Office of the General Counsel. I hear he comes from good stock.

Ed- We were involved in negotiating a dispute between DOT and ATF/DOJ regarding rulemaking in support of the Explosives Act. Looks like they may still be slinging mud. We have not been involved in this particular issue and frankly, I don't think we should be. DOT and DOJ need to work this out. If you feel compelled to follow up, you might have someone check with Kirk Van Tine to see what they are doing regarding rulemaking.

what do you know on this?

May 15, 2003

TO ALL:

As you know, both the Department of Transportation (DOT) and the Department of Justice continue to receive inquiries regarding the status of pending regulations that will address the transportation of explosives via rail. These inquiries have been increasing in frequency because of the so-called rail embargo on explosives, including fireworks, and the upcoming July 4th holiday.

It is our understanding that comprehensive regulations still are being drafted by DOT. In light of the growing need to alleviate concerns of the railroad industry, however, DOT should consider issuing a brief interim rule addressing the current regulatory scheme.

Based on previous conversations with DOT, it appears that the Federal Railroad Administration currently has in place substantial regulations governing the transportation via rail of hazardous materials, including explosives. In addition, DOT also has indicated that the railroad industry has in place other security measures regarding their operations. Moreover, the nature of the railroad industry may make it less susceptible to the diversion of explosives than other modes of transportation.

As a result, DOT may be able to assert either that it has regulated a relevant aspect of the transportation of explosives via rail, or that it has determined that certain aspects of the transportation of explosives do not pose a security risk warranting further regulation at this time. If DOT can make such determinations, then it could trigger the exception under 18 U.S.C. 845(a)(1) in a brief interim rulemaking. Such a rulemaking should discuss the basis for DOT's determination and contain explicit language triggering section 845(a)(1) with respect to persons subject to 18 U.S.C. 842(i).

Please let me know if the Department can be of any service in the drafting of the necessary regulations. The Department is prepared to expedite its review of such rules.

Thanks for your attention to this matter,

Eric

You are cordially invited to a reception to meet our new law librarian, Lauren Sayer, on Wednesday, May 28, at 2-3:30 p.m. in the EEOB Library, Rm. 308.

Lauren received her BA from George Mason University and her MLS from the University of Texas. She has over seven years experience working in law libraries (state court, government, corporate, and academic). In addition, Lauren has experience in developing and maintaining Web pages and training clients in how to use electronic resources.

Please join us in welcoming her to the EOP.

Brett -

Doug Turner of the Buffalo News has called looking - yet again - to speak with someone about judges/judicial nominations - he has made this request several times in the past - and then he has backed out - however - he just sat down with Sen. Schumer and discussed matters and would like to hear from someone from the WH about "Schumer's allegations."

Do you have time to speak with him on background today?

Constitution isn't a wish list
05/21/03
EDITORIAL
MOBILE (AL) REGISTER

A New York Times editorial this week against the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a federal appeals judgeship provides a textbook example of what's wrong with the way the political left sees the courts.

The editorial contends that a brief Mr. Pryor filed in defense of Texas' anti-sodomy statute makes him unfit for the judgeship because it shows the AG is against gay rights.

Nowhere in the editorial, however, is there any reference to the Constitution or to Supreme Court precedent. Instead, there is a clear assumption that laws against homosexual acts are unfair -- and that, therefore, they ought to be struck down by the courts.

The problem is that judges are not supposed to decide on their own whether a law is fair -- that's a job for legislators -- but only whether it is forbidden by the Constitution or by a superseding statute. As famed Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: I don't do justice; I do the law.

In the case of the law barring homosexual sodomy, Mr. Pryor is on firm legal ground. He argued that if the courts invent, out of thin air, a right to all consensual sexual acts, then legislatures also could be forbidden from outlawing other sexual acts such as prostitution, bestiality or adult incest.

Not even the Times can argue that Mr. Pryor's argument is out of the mainstream. As noted in this space previously, the AG was citing the existing law of the land, as explained by the Supreme Court in Bowers vs. Hardwick. One of the liberal justices appointed since that case was decided, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, also has argued that the Constitution's assumed right to privacy extends to prostitution.

But the Times seems less concerned with what's in the Constitution or in court precedent than it is intent on determining its own sense of what is or isn't fair, and then turning its opinion into a constitutional right -- by judicial fiat, without any democratic processes intervening. Down that road lie not more rights, but tyranny.

KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY***

"We find our greatest security in the advance of human freedom."
--President Bush 5/21/03

HIV/AIDS

*The President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief directs $15 billion over the next five years to fight AIDS abroad - specifically in 14 African and Caribbean countries.

*Our European partners, Japan, and Canada must join our mission. We urge them to match their good intentions with real resources.

FAMINE

*The President will commit to a $1 billion initiative for drinking water in the developing world.

*The President has asked Congress to provide $200 million for a new Famine Fund, and it is time for other nations to follow our lead.

*The President also proposed an Initiative to End Hunger in Africa. Widening the use of new high-yield bio-crops and unleashing the power of markets can feed more people across the continent.

*Our partners in Europe are impeding this effort by blocking all new bio-crops because of unfounded, unscientific fears. Europe should join - not hinder - the cause of ending hunger in Africa.

POVERTY

*The President reiterated his commitment to a new Millennium Challenge Account to help developing nations. MCA funds will go to nations committed to the rule of law, investing in health and education of their people, and pursuing policies that encourage economic freedom.

VOLUNTEERISM

*A new USA Freedom Corps initiative - Volunteers for Prosperity - will give America
's highly skilled professionals new opportunities to serve abroad.

*The President also is determined to double the size of the Peace Corps over five years.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***

5 pm The President and Mrs. Bush greet Prime Minister Koizumi of Japan, Crawford, TX

KEY QUOTE***

"America's national ambition is the spread of free markets, free trade, and free societies. These goals are not achieved at the expense of other nations, they are achieved for the benefit for all nations. America seeks to expand, not the borders of our country, but the realm of liberty."

-- President Bush, 5/21/03HIV/AIDS IN AFRICA***

"The African ambassadors and the entire African Diplomatic Corps on the United States are united in their efforts to highlight the urgency for action against the impending menace of HIV-AIDS. More than 30 million people have died from AIDS in the last two decades, nearly as many as the entire population of South Africa. An additional 40 million people are infected with the virus, mostly in Africa and the Caribbean."

"We need the help of the American people and the international community to turn back this disease. President Bush's proposed emergency plan for AIDS relief is an important, aggressive step forward in this effort... Every day another 14,000 people are infected, and another 8,500 die. Time is of the essence. America must send a signal to the rest of the world that action by all countries is needed in the war against AIDS."

- The President has asked Congress to provide $200 million for a new Famine Fund, and it is time for other nations to follow our lead.
- The President also proposed an Initiative to End Hunger in Africa. Widening the use of new high-yield bio-crops and unleashing the power of markets can feed more people across the continent.
- Our partners in Europe are impeding this effort by blocking all new bio-crops because of unfounded, unscientific fears. Europe should join – not hinder – the cause of ending hunger in Africa.

POVERTY

- The President reiterated his commitment to a new Millennium Challenge Account to help developing nations. MCA funds will go to nations committed to the rule of law, investing in health and education of their people, and pursuing policies that encourage economic freedom.

VOLUNTEERISM

- A new USA Freedom Corps initiative – Volunteers for Prosperity – will give America's highly skilled professionals new opportunities to serve abroad.
- The President also is determined to double the size of the Peace Corps over five years.

The Great Media Gulp

WASHINGTON
The future formation of American public opinion has fallen into the lap of an ambitious 36-year-old lawyer whose name you never heard. On June 2, after deliberations conducted behind closed doors, he will decide the fate of media large and small, print and broadcast. No other decision made in Washington will more directly affect how you will be informed, persuaded and entertained.

Columnist Page: William Safire

His name is Kevin Martin. He and his wife, Catherine, now Vice President Dick Cheney's public affairs adviser, are the most puissant young "power couple" in the capital. He is one of three Republican members of the five-person Federal Communications Commission, and because he recently broke ranks with his chairman, Michael Powell (Colin's son), on a telecom controversy, this engaging North Carolinian has become the swing vote on the power play that has media moguls salivating.

The F.C.C. proposal remains officially secret to avoid public comment but was forced into the open by the two commission Democrats. It would end the ban in most cities of cross-ownership of television stations and newspapers, allowing such companies as The New York Times, Washington Post and Chicago Tribune to gobble up ever more electronic outlets. It would permit Viacom, Disney and AOL Time Warner to control TV stations with nearly half the national audience. In the largest cities, it would allow owners of "only" two TV stations to buy a third.

We've already seen what happened when the F.C.C. allowed the monopolization of local radio: today three companies own half the stations in America, delivering a homogenized product that neglects local news coverage and dictates music sales.

And the F.C.C. has abdicated enforcement of the "public interest" requirement in issuing licenses. Time was, broadcasters had to regularly reapply and show public-interest programming to earn continuance; now they mail the F.C.C. a postcard every eight years that nobody reads.

Ah, but aren't viewers and readers now blessed with a whole new world of hot competition through cable and the Internet? That's the shucks-we're-no-monopolists line that Rupert Murdoch will take today in testimony before the pussycats of John McCain's Senate Commerce Committee.

The answer is no. Many artists, consumers, musicians and journalists know that such protestations of cable and Internet competition by the huge dominators of content and communication are malarkey. The overwhelming amount of news and entertainment comes via broadcast and print. Putting those outlets in fewer and bigger hands profits the few at the cost of the many.

Does that sound un-conservative? Not to me. The concentration of power — political, corporate, media, cultural — should be anathema to conservatives. The diffusion of power through local control, thereby encouraging individual participation, is the essence of federalism and the greatest expression of democracy.

Why do we have more channels but fewer real choices today? Because the ownership of our means of communication is shrinking. Moguls glory in amalgamation, but more individuals than they realize resent the loss of local control and community identity.

We opponents of megamergers and cross-ownership are afflicted with what sociologists call "pluralistic ignorance." Libertarians pop off from what we assume to be the fringes of the left and right wings, but do not yet realize that we outnumber the exponents of the new collectivist efficiency.

That's why I march uncomfortably alongside CodePink Women for Peace and the National Rifle Association, between liberal Olympia Snowe and conservative Ted Stevens under the banner of "localism, competition and diversity of views." That's why, too, we resent the conflicted refusal of most networks, stations and their putative purchasers to report fully and in prime time on their owners' power grab scheduled for June 2.

Must broadcasters of news act only on behalf of the powerful broadcast lobby? Are they not obligated, in the long-forgotten "public interest," to call to the attention of viewers and readers the arrogance of a regulatory commission that will not hold extended public hearings on the most controversial decision in its history?

So much of our lives should not be in the hands of one swing-vote commissioner. Let's debate this out in the open, take polls, get the president on the record and turn up the heat.

The global spread of SARS, the possible return of smallpox as a bioterror weapon, and the post-9/11 anthrax attacks have renewed debate over the limits of state police power in protecting public health. Do we need to rethink and revise traditional public health law and government responsibilities in an age of terrorism, globalization, and rapid communication? Will constitutional safeguards set effective limits on sweeping state action in the name of public health, protect individual liberties, and preserve our open society? Our panel will explore whether we need to apply new powers or old principles in response to the latest risks to our health and well-being.

I appreciate the hard work of Orrin Hatch and Bill Frist to make sure that our judiciary functions properly. I have submitted superb nominations to our federal courts. The confirmation process in the United States Senate should be about justice, not about empty politics. (Applause.)

Univision Battle Heats Up
By Brody Mullins
Roll Call Staff
May 22, 2003

House Democratic Caucus Chairman Bob Menendez (N.J.) alleged Wednesday that the nation,s largest Spanish-speaking television network, Univision Communications, is seeking to secure federal approval of its $2.4 billion merger with a Hispanic radio firm by airing an increasing amount of programming that supports President Bush,s nomination of Miguel Estrada to a key federal appeals court post.

Brett -

The (still-Acting) Solicitor of Labor asked me whether the WH will be distributing any guidance on rules governing campaign contributions by federal employees. Do you happen to know? He is fielding questions on this from people in his agency, and they recall that previous Administrations did distribute such guidance. Any idea? Is the Hatch Act all they need to know?

Thanks,
Jenny

FEDERAL JUDGESHIP: Jurist Jones possible nominee
White House declines to confirm whether Nevadan is Bush's choice for post
By JANE ANN MORRISON
REVIEW-JOURNAL

The White House, after working with U.S. Sen. John Ensign, is poised to nominate U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert Clive Jones to a federal District Court judgeship.
Ensign, a Republican, originally proposed the son of Democratic U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, as well as others, but the Bush administration sought to expand that list.
Republicans had criticized Ensign for proposing Leif Reid, a 35-year-old Democrat with seven years of experience.
Jones is 56, has been on the bankruptcy court for 20 years and has experience both as a certified public accountant and an attorney prior to that.
Jones' name had not been made public until Thursday, when Ensign's spokesman Jack Finn said, "We can confirm he is the White House selection. The senator is very proud of not only Judge Jones, but of all the people we submitted to the White House. They are carefully reviewed and we think the world of all of the others in terms of experience, integrity and abilities."
Finn declined to say how many Nevadans had been considered by the White House, but legal sources said at least seven were submitted.
Along with Leif Reid, the other contenders included former U.S. Attorney Rick Pocker, District Judge Ron Parraguirre, U.S. Magistrate Robert McQuaid of Reno, Las Vegas attorney Sandy Smagac and at least one other person.
"Senator Ensign is extremely pleased and extremely proud of this choice," Finn said. "Judge Jones will absolutely uphold the integrity of the federal judiciary."
Each state's senior senator of the party in power at the White House recommends judicial candidates to the president. After background investigations are complete, the administration nominates its choice. The U.S. Senate must confirm the administration's choice.
White House spokesman Ken Lisaius declined to confirm whether Jones is President Bush's choice. "We don't speculate on personnel. The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make."
Jones has a good reputation within the Las Vegas legal community.
Defense attorney Richard Wright said Jones was a good choice because of his "maturity, experience and seasoning in federal litigation. He's a gentleman, courteous and polite."
Jones is one of those judges who is enjoyable to practice before, Wright said. "He's had wide-ranging litigation on the federal bench in bankruptcy court. He's well-respected and well-qualified."
In the 1980s, he decided the buyer of the bankrupt Aladdin. He was in the same position earlier this year, choosing Planet Hollywood as the best offer for the rebuilt Las Vegas Strip property.
Jones was born and raised in Las Vegas and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1971 with a degree in accounting and English. He obtained his law degree from UCLA in 1975, graduating in the top 10 percent of his class.

After working as a certified public accountant, he started practicing law in 1976. His practice focused on taxation, real estate, commercial law and bankruptcy. In February 1983, he was appointed the the bankruptcy court, where he now serves. He was appointed to the 14-year-term after Lloyd George was elevated from the bankruptcy court to U.S. District Court, a lifetime position.

A registered Republican, he served in the California Air National Guard and the Nevada Army Guard.

He is a former board member of Opportunity Village of Clark County and the Las Vegas Chapter of the American Cancer Society.

The judgeship is becoming available because U.S. District Judge David Hagen is taking senior status.

U.S. appeals judge cutting back; parties clashing over seat
By CRAIG GILBERT

Washington - Federal appeals court Judge John L. Coffey, 81, said Thursday he plans to assume a reduced workload under senior status, creating an important and highly sensitive judicial vacancy on the Chicago-based 7th Circuit.
It will be up to the White House to nominate a new judge at a time when fierce battles in the U.S. Senate are being waged over the appellate courts, the judicial rung just below the U.S. Supreme Court.
Complicating the choice is that President Bush and Wisconsin's two U.S. senators are from different parties, setting up a possible collision over the seat. Both senators, Democrats Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold, serve on the judiciary committee, which approves nominations to the federal bench.
The other key figure in the process is the state's senior Republican congressman, F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. of Menomonee Falls, chairman of the House judiciary committee.
Until now, Sensenbrenner, Kohl and Feingold have used a bipartisan commission to produce a list of finalists for the White House to consider as federal judges and prosecutors.
But Sensenbrenner and a White House aide both confirmed Thursday that Bush would not support that procedure this time because a critical appellate seat is at stake.
"It's not up to Kohl or Feingold or Sensenbrenner," the congressman said of the vacancy. "It's the president that will make the appointment. What advice the president wants is up to the White House."

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel confirmed that, saying the president will consult with lawmakers and bar leaders about their recommendations, but would not rely on a list of finalists produced by a commission.
"The president makes the decision about who to select," Stanzel said.
Stakes are high
The stakes for an appellate seat are also higher for Democrats, and Kohl and Feingold have fought to preservethe commissions, which give them a role in the winnowing of potential nominees, even Republicans. The two will also have a key role in the confirmation process, since senators on the judiciary committee have often exercised an informal veto power over nominees from their home state.
Kohl said in an interview Thursday that "particularly during this time of extreme contentiousness in the Senate, one could easily argue that the best way to avoid that here in Wisconsin is to use a commission approach, which is most likely to produce a nominee both sides can live with."
Kohl was interviewed before the White House made its comments about the process.
The senior senator said a judicial selection commission ensures that both sides have input, and it has worked "fairly well." The members of the commission are nominated by the State Bar of Wisconsin and officeholders in both parties. Such commissions have been used in the state for a couple of decades. But the political backdrop changed in 2001, when for the first time both Wisconsin senators and the president belonged to opposing parties.
"Why would we want to take it at this point and turn it upside down," Kohl said of the system, "unless the president wants to choose whoever the president wants to choose?"
The Milwaukee Democrat added:
"What I'm hopeful for is that here in Wisconsin, it won't be necessary to get into an extreme partisan battle with this judges issue, that we can continue to come up with judges that are acceptable to the center, to the reasonable right and the reasonable left. I don't know if that's what the president is looking for, but that's what we're looking for."
In a statement, Feingold said "There is no reason to abandon this process, which is good for the judiciary and for Wisconsin."
However, under Bush, Wisconsin Republicans have complained about the ability of Kohl and Feingold to strike some GOP finalists from the list that goes to the president.
State GOP chair Rick Graber, who served on the last commission, said Bush should have a freer hand for an appellate seat because it's more important.
"I view the court of appeals as an entirely different situation. I believe the president should be entirely free to make this pick in whatever way he decides," said Graber, who accused Kohl and Feingold of taking a partisan approach to some of the nominees before the Senate Judiciary Committee.
Appellate judges have been the most hotly contested.
"The reason there's more controversy over appellate seats is because appeals courts make most of the judge-made law in this country," Sensenbrenner said.
Several names were offered as potential nominees for this new vacancy by court observers in Wisconsin on Thursday: U.S. District Judge Rudolph T. Randa, chief of the Eastern District; U.S. District Judge J.P. Stadtmueller, also of Milwaukee; and state Supreme Court Justices Patrick Crooks and Diane Sykes. One negative for Republicans on the last two is that Gov. Jim Doyle, a Democrat, would pick a successor.
In an interview, Coffey said he would wait to assume senior status until a new judge is appointed.
"But I'm going to continue to work even after that on a senior status basis," Coffey said.
"I just thought it was time to do it. I've been on this court for 22 years," Coffey said.
The Whitefish Bay jurist was appointed to his seat by President Reagan in 1982.
The 7th Circuit covers Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana. It is only by tradition that Coffey's seat would go to a Wisconsin judge. But it's one the president is expected to follow. The state's other judge on the 7th Circuit, Terence Evans, has served since 1995.

Subject: Summer interns

This summer we will have three law studens working as interns in our office. Please make an effort to welcome them to the office and to identify interesting and substantive projects for them to work on.

Mara Zimmerman will begin May 27th and will be in our office for the first half of the summer. Mara is currently a second year at Vanderbilt University Law School, where she is a member of the Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law. She will be a summer associate at Vincent & Elkins for the second half of the summer. She earned her bachelors degree from Rhodes College, where she majored in Russian and International Studies.

Starting June 4th and staying with us for the whole summer will be Lee Rudolfsky. Lee is a first year at Harvard Law School. He earned a bachelor of science in Industrial and Labor Relations and a masters in Public Affairs from Cornell University. He is editor of the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy and is a member of the Harvard Law Republicans.

Alexandra Smith will start on July 1st and stay for latter half of the summer. Alexandra is a second year at Brigham Young University. She is very active in BYU Moot Court and won both the Best Oral Advocate and the Best Brief Writer awards last year. She was also an undergraduate at BYU, where she majored in International Development.

Also, beginning June 16th, Tim Flanigan, Jr. will be joining the office as an intern for the remainder of the summer. Tim is a recent graduate of BYU and is applying to law school. During college, Tim was a research assistant in the BYU Political Science Department and the BYU Office of the General Counsel. I hear he comes from good stock.

U.S. appeals judge cutting back; parties clashing over seat

Federal appeals court Judge John L. Coffey's plans to assume a reduced workload under senior status will create an important and highly sensitive judicial vacancy on the Chicago-based 7th Circuit.

It will be up to the White House to nominate a new judge at a time when fierce battles in the U.S. Senate are being waged over the appellate courts, the judicial rung just below the U.S. Supreme Court.

Complicating the choice is that President Bush and Wisconsin's two U.S. senators are from different parties, setting up a possible collision over the seat. Both senators, Democrats Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold, serve on the judiciary committee, which approves nominations to the federal bench.

The other key figure in the process is the state's senior Republican congressman, F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. of Menomonee Falls, chairman of the House judiciary committee.

Until now, Sensenbrenner, Kohl and Feingold have used a bipartisan commission to produce a list of finalists for the White House to consider as federal judges and prosecutors.

But Sensenbrenner and a White House aide both confirmed Thursday that Bush would not support that procedure this time because a critical appellate seat is at stake.

"It's not up to Kohl or Feingold or Sensenbrenner," the congressman said of the vacancy. "It's the president that will make the appointment. What advice the president wants is up to the White House."

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel confirmed that, saying the president will consult with lawmakers and bar leaders about their recommendations, but would not rely on a list of finalists produced by a commission.

"The president makes the decision about who to select," Stanzel said.

Stakes are high

The stakes for an appellate seat are also higher for Democrats, and Kohl and Feingold have fought to preservethe commissions, which give them a role in the winnowing of potential nominees, even Republicans. The two will also have a key role in the confirmation process, since senators on the judiciary committee have often exercised an informal veto power over nominees from their home state.

Kohl said in an interview Thursday that "particularly during this time of extreme contentiousness in the Senate, one could easily argue that the best way to avoid that here in Wisconsin is to use a commission approach, which is most likely to produce a nominee both sides can live with."

Kohl was interviewed before the White House made its comments about the process.

The senior senator said a judicial selection commission ensures that both sides have input, and it has worked "fairly well." The members of the commission are nominated by the State Bar of Wisconsin and officeholders in both parties. Such commissions have been used in the state for a couple of decades. But the political backdrop changed in 2001, when for the first time both Wisconsin senators and the president belonged to opposing parties.

"Why would we want to take it at this point and turn it upside down," Kohl said of the system, "unless the president wants to choose whoever the president wants to choose?"

The Milwaukee Democrat added:

"What I'm hopeful for is that here in Wisconsin, it won't be necessary to get into an extreme partisan battle with this judges issue, that we can continue to come up with judges that are acceptable to the center, to the reasonable right and the reasonable left. I don't know if that's what the president is looking for, but that's what we're looking for."

In a statement, Feingold said "There is no reason to abandon this process, which is good for the judiciary and for Wisconsin."

However, under Bush, Wisconsin Republicans have complained about the ability of Kohl and Feingold to strike some GOP finalists from the list that goes to the president.

State GOP chair Rick Graber, who served on the last commission, said Bush should have a freer hand for an appellate seat because it's more important.

"I view the court of appeals as an entirely different situation. I believe the president should be entirely free to make this pick in whatever way he decides," said Graber, who accused Kohl and Feingold of taking a partisan approach to some of the nominees before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Appellate judges have been the most hotly contested.

"The reason there's more controversy over appellate seats is because appeals courts make most of the judge-made law in this country," Sensenbrenner said.

Several names were offered as potential nominees for this new vacancy by court observers in Wisconsin on Thursday: U.S. District Judge Rudolph T. Randa, chief of the Eastern District; U.S. District Judge J.P. Stadtmueller, also of Milwaukee; and state Supreme Court Justices Patrick Crooks and Diane Sykes. One negative for Republicans on the last two is that Gov. Jim Doyle, a Democrat, would pick a successor.

In an interview, Coffey said he would wait to assume senior status until a new judge is appointed.

"But I'm going to continue to work even after that on a senior status basis," Coffey said.

"I just thought it was time to do it. I've been on this court for 22 years," Coffey said.

The Whitefish Bay jurist was appointed to his seat by President Reagan in 1982.

The 7th Circuit covers Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana. It is only by tradition that Coffey's seat would go to a Wisconsin judge. But it's one the president is expected to follow. The state's other judge on the 7th Circuit, Terence Evans, has served since 1995.

With respect to use of equipment, for those uses of equipment that can incur additional costs (resulting primarily from paper and any long-distance costs), your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity. Also, as necessary and appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices.

Sounds reasonable to me but I will wait for guidance from Colleen. This will likely create an enforcement and tracking issue for Room One (since paper, equipment, phones, etc. are handled by various people down here) and I imagine that we will need to get input from Mike Boisvenue. Unless, of course, it's just me that will now be responsible for billing people for paper....

Can I stop up to get a blue sheet signed? It's a bit of an emergency. Thanks.

Jan called me today to let me know that he is planning to send a letter to Finney. Jan received ethics advice that it is OK for him to write but not to make a phone call, which seems dubious. Evidently there is an DOJ regulation that authorizes reference letters concerning federal employment but no affirmative rule about telephone calls.

I suggested that Jan check with you before sending the letter.

Subject: DOJ-HUD issue in Columbus: your guidance?

Brett -

There is a housing issue in Columbus involving HUD oversight which may, pending a decision from DOJ, result in about 180 senior citizens losing their housing. It will be a serious blackeye for both HUD and the Administration. Because the issue now involves a ruling from DOJ, I wanted to seek your guidance.

While I understand that DOJ's decision process is wholly separate from any political considerations, I wanted to point out the impression from our Ohio leadership that DOJ (Dan Bryant) left them with the distinct impression in a recent meeting that DOJ did not consider this a "high priority issue" and may drag their feet in coming to a resolution one way or the other. This is not the case, no matter what their decision, DOJ should probably consider this case quickly so that the various parties involved can know the ruling and begin the process of dealing with it.

Your thoughts?

==========

The Department of Justice's Civil Division is currently reviewing a proposed agreement between the residents of Poindexter Tower in Columbus, the developer of Poindexter Tower, HUD and local elected officials. HUD has indicated to the residents and local/federal officials that they will sign this agreement upon approval from DOJ. The residents of the Tower, low-income seniors, have been told they must vacate the facility by June 30th.

Recent Background:
In March of 2002 a meeting was held in Senator DeWine's office which included Senators DeWine and Voinovich, Congressman Tiberi, legal representatives of the Poindexter Tower residents, and Michael Liu from HUD.
The purpose of the meeting was to urge HUD to work with the residents of the Tower and local leaders to quickly find a solution to their continuing problems with the Towers developer.

The Senators and the Congressman emphasized to HUD the extremely critical needs of the residents. HUD indicated in this meeting that it would be unlikely that legal action against the developer would be successful and promised to work with the residents to achieve an acceptable solution to the situation.

Lacking direction from HUD since March, the residents have reached an agreement with the developer that says, in essence, that the developer would relinquish remaining escrow funds in the property in exchange for a release from future liability regarding the property. Removal of the developer from the situation will allow other local government entities to support improvements to the property and enable them to provide critical assistance to residents. This agreement has the support of various local, state and federal elected officials.

In the last two weeks HUD has indicated to the Congressional offices listed above that they will sign the agreement following approval from the Department of Justice. Since residents have been informed that they must vacate the building by the end of June, it is critical that an acceptable solution to this situation is achieved immediately.

KEY POINTS***
from Deputy Secretary of Defense Wolfowitz's Prepared Testimony for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee

-We are committed to helping Iraqis build what could be a model for the Middle East: a government that protects the rights of its citizens, that represents all ethnic and religious groups, and that will help bring Iraq into the international community of peace-seeking nations.

-Success in Iraq will continue to demoralize those who preach doctrines of hatred, oppression and subjugation. It will encourage those who dream the ancient dream of freedom.

-Most delays in restoring services in Iraq are not primarily a result of the war, but rather of decades of tyrannical neglect. Iraq's wealth was poured into building palaces and tanks and procuring weapons of mass destruction - instead of caring for the Iraqi people.

-Our most urgent task in the post-Saddam era is to establish secure and stable conditions throughout the country that will provide the basics of normal life and services. Beyond that, it is important to create a climate in which people can express their political views free of fear and intimidation.

-Perhaps, the single most important factor in achieving a more secure environment is the active engagement and support of the people of Iraq.

-We continue to work towards the establishment of an Iraqi Interim Administration. It will assume increasingly greater responsibility for the administration of Iraq. The IIA will draw from all of Iraq's religious and ethnic groups and will provide a way for Iraqis to begin immediately to their country's economic and political reconstruction.

2. I would only consider the fet issue resolved when the IRS is fully aware that w.h. is no longer paying fet, but that our broker air partner is. Brett & Adam may be up to speed and all agree on how it should work (i.e. the way it is now) but I don't believe anyone's contacted the IRS.

Monday, May 26, 2003

Last modified at 7:07 p.m. on Sunday, May 25, 2003

JUDICIARY: Opportunity knocks

Jacksonville (FL) Times-Union

If Chief Justice William Rehnquist retires from the U.S. Supreme Court soon, as is rumored, he will be missed.

At age 78, however, Rehnquist isn't getting any younger. Sandra Day O'Connor also is rumored to be ready to retire -- and a vacancy or two would give President Bush an opportunity to leave a legacy.

The front-runners reportedly are White House counsel Alberto Gonzales and federal appellate Judge Emilio Garza. The conventional wisdom is that Bush will bump Justice Antonin Scalia up to chief justice and fill his spot with the new appointee. Scalia, however, is 67. A younger man could have a more-lasting impact on the court -- and if that's what the president wants, he should consider promoting Justice Clarence Thomas.

Thomas is only 54 and already has been on the court nearly 12 years. He is thoughtful, studious and consistent in favoring the passage of laws by elected representatives of the people rather than lifetime appointees to the bench.

Critics initially tried to portray Thomas as a Scalia clone, but that hasn't been the case. Thomas studies documents such as The Federalist Papers for clues about the founders' original intent. Scalia is inclined to consider tradition, and judicial activists interpret the Constitution to mean whatever serves their political agendas.

Thomas would be an ideal chief justice. Liberals, being aghast at the thought of a conservative in a position to become a role model, would throw a collective temper tantrum -- but such is politics. They have already roasted Thomas once -- and now they're giving the same treatment to lower court nominee Miguel Estrada, a judicial scholar whom Democrats oppose because he is a conservative Hispanic.

Let the Democrats worry about racial stereotypes. The president should base his decisions on qualifications. Gerald Tjoflat, a 73-year-old appellate judge from Jacksonville, for example, is immanently qualified, but his age could preclude him from serious consideration. Or is that dis- crimination?

Assuming Rehnquist steps down, Bush could make history twice, with the first Hispanic associate justice and the first African- American chief justice in Supreme Court history.

JUDICIARY: Opportunity knocks
Jacksonville (FL)Times-Union
If Chief Justice William Rehnquist retires from the U.S. Supreme Court soon, as is rumored, he will be missed.
At age 78, however, Rehnquist isn't getting any younger. Sandra Day O'Connor also is rumored to be ready to retire -- and a vacancy or two would give President Bush an opportunity to leave a legacy.
The front-runners reportedly are White House counsel Alberto Gonzales and federal appellate Judge Emilio Garza. The conventional wisdom is that Bush will bump Justice Antonin Scalia up to chief justice and fill his spot with the new appointee. Scalia, however, is 67. A younger man could have a more-lasting impact on the court -- and if that's what the president wants, he should consider promoting Justice Clarence Thomas.
Thomas is only 54 and already has been on the court nearly 12 years. He is thoughtful, studious and consistent in favoring the passage of laws by elected representatives of the people rather than lifetime appointees to the bench.
Critics initially tried to portray Thomas as a Scalia clone, but that hasn't been the case. Thomas studies documents such as The Federalist Papers for clues about the founders' original intent. Scalia is inclined to consider tradition, and judicial activists interpret the Constitution to mean whatever serves their political agendas.
Thomas would be an ideal chief justice. Liberals, being aghast at the thought of a conservative in a position to become a role model, would throw a collective temper tantrum -- but such is politics. They have already roasted Thomas once -- and now they're giving the same treatment to lower court nominee Miguel Estrada, a judicial scholar whom Democrats oppose because he is a conservative Hispanic.
Let the Democrats worry about racial stereotypes. The president should base his decisions on qualifications. Gerald Tjoflat, a 73-year-old appellate judge from Jacksonville, for example, is immanently qualified, but his age could preclude him from serious consideration. Or is that discrimination?
Assuming Rehnquist steps down, Bush could make history twice, with the first Hispanic associate justice and the first African- American chief justice in Supreme Court history.

At the moment, it looks possible that I will have to be here this weekend for a related project. I do not want to leave you and the group twisting. Although not ideal from my perspective or yours, is there a way -- if necessary -- that I could call into the group meeting, give a 10- or 15-minute rundown and answer questions? I realize this is less than ideal, but I may need to be flexible. Thanks in advance for your patience.

WHITE House counsel Alberto Gonzales slipped out of his official demeanor Saturday night to let his hair down among longtime Houston compadres. Well, it wasn't as if the low-key Gonzales (Al to friends) was dancing on the tables. But he was relaxed and talkative among the 70 guests who gathered in his honor in the Memorial-area home of Karen and Roland Garcia.

That was until Gonzales' oft-discussed prospects for a Supreme Court nomination arose. "I'm not commenting on this at all. I have a great job, and I'm sticking with it," he said with poker-face intensity.

Roland Garcia, a partner with Locke Liddell & Sapp who had worked with Gonzales at Vinson & Elkins, countered, "We're all hopeful. It's unanimous here."

Republicans and Democrats alike saluted Gonzales over a feast of guacamole, fajitas and refried beans from Doneraki. Among them - Dorothy Caram, Art Contreras, Judge Eva Guzman, Judge David Medina, Lolita Guerrero, Lupe Fraga, Doniel Aviles and Lynne Liberato, president of the Texas Bar Association.

Guzman, a Court of Appeals justice originally appointed to the bench by then-Gov. Bush, was among those singing Gonzales' praises. "He's someone people can trust," she said, "both intellectually and philosophically speaking."

The White House counsel was in his home town for the Memorial Day weekend with his wife, Becky. Saturday afternoon, he gave the commencement address at South Texas College of Law.

On Law: To reach the heights

By Michael Kirkland
UPI Legal Affairs Corresondent

WASHINGTON, May 23 (UPI) -- If President George W. Bush gets the chance this s ummer to fill vacancies at the Supreme Court, where will he turn?

The White House is keeping its usual well-disciplined silence, but a short lis t of potential "papabile" is generating the required amount of buzz.

The Supreme Court to some extent resembles the Vatican curia. Though the justi ces wear black instead of red, they sit like a clutch of cardinals up in their marble nest on Capitol Hill. No one elected them. No can vote them out unless t he Senate decides to impeach them for lack of "good behavior."

They can serve for life, and in many cases try to fine-tune the conduct of gov ernment and the public alike.

Once approved and confirmed by the Senate, a justice can regard the president and other politicians as mere participants in the passing parade.

Elected officials come and go. Supreme Court justices stay for decades, growin g powerful and secretive behind the great bench with antique ceramic spittoons at their feet.

When the nine justices rise from their bench to recess in late June or early J uly -- assuming there's no special summer session for hearing the appeal of a l ower-court ruling that struck down the core provisions of the ban on unregulate d "soft" money in federal elections -- Bush will be facing one of three situati ons.

First, all nine of the justices just might stay on. That scenario is entirely possible. In Washington, speculation by one journalist is taken up by others, t hen repeated in a widening circle until the speculation hardens into a certaint y.

However, my gut and 10 years of reporting from the court tell me that the odds of no one leaving at the end of this term are less than even money.

Second, at least one of the justices will have announced his or her retirement . The betting on Capitol Hill is that it would be Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 74.

Third, and most intriguing, is that Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, also will step down at roughly the same time as O'Connor. If so, they may make their announcements in separate weeks to avoid stepping on each other's toes.

The third situation would give Bush an almost unprecedented opportunity to sha pe the high court in his own image, though Supreme Court justices are notorious for biting the hand that nominated them.

Assuming O'Connor and Rehnquist step down, and Bush is re-elected, and looking at the ages of those who remain on the court, the president might get a chance to name about four justices over the course of his two terms.

That would mean the chance to pick more high court nominees than any chief exe cutive since President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who named eight justices.

But enough speculation on Bush's influence. Let's speculate instead on the sho rt list.

A name that pops up constantly as a possible nominee is U.S. Circuit Judge J. Michael Luttig.

Luttig was appointed to a newly created seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th U.S. Circuit by Bush's father in 1991. The 4th Circuit appellate court, headquartered in Richmond, Va., is considered one of the most conservative of the federal appeals courts in the United States.

The judge is known to support state restrictions on abortion, and Virginia off icials have sought him out to restore one of those restrictions when it was str uck down by a federal judge.

Moreover, the 4th Circuit court was the judicial body that decided Congress ha d the right to overrule Miranda vs. Arizona, the 1966 Supreme Court decision th at recognized a prisoner's right to remain silent and the right to have a lawye r present during police questioning (the Supreme Court overruled the appeals co urt by a vote of 7-2, with the conservative Rehnquist writing the majority opin ion).

Luttig also has a special connection to victims of crime. His father was murde red in the driveway of his Tyler, Texas, home in 1994 by a group of carjackers that tried, but failed, to also kill his mother. The main perpetrator, Napoleon Beazley, was 17 at the time of the crime, but was executed last spring when th e Supreme Court refused to grant him a stay.

If named by Bush, Luttig would be expected to rule along the lines of Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, enlarging the strength of the court's hard conservative bloc.

Another name that keeps cropping up is that of White House counsel Al Gonzales .

After serving as Bush's general counsel when the president was Texas governor, and as Texas secretary of state, Gonzales was appointed by Bush to the Texas S upreme Court. He left the state court to serve Bush in Washington.

Gonzales has several very important factors in his favor.

He is the right age -- 48 -- to have a lasting impact on the Supreme Court of the United States. He is a personal friend of the president's, and enjoys Bush' s trust. He comes from an impoverished background and pretty much pulled himsel f up by his own bootstraps. Most importantly, he would be the first Hispanic in U.S. history to be appointed to the Supreme Court -- an important first for Bu sh or any president courting the Hispanic vote.

There are also several factors working against him.

As a Texas justice, Gonzales supported a minor trying to get judicial approval for an abortion without telling her parents. Gonzales found himself bumping he ads with fellow state Justice Priscilla Owen, who insisted the girl was not mat ure enough to win judicial approval. Owen since has been nominated by Bush to a federal appeals court, but Democrats in the Senate are filibustering the nomin ation.

Gonzales also helped modify a Justice Department brief in the University of Mi chigan affirmative action case, supporting racial diversity while rejecting rac ial quotas. The Supreme Court is expected to rule in the case, deciding whether affirmative action is an unconstitutional government use of race, sometime ove r the next month and a half.

His intervention in the case deeply angered this town's hard-shell conservativ es, who are not known for letting a grudge die an easy death.

His nomination to the Supreme Court would be a signal that Bush is seeking a m oderate course and some kind of detente with Senate Democrats, who though in th e minority have the power to filibuster his choice into infinity.

Keep an eye also on U.S. Circuit Judge Emilio M. Garza, who serves on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit.

Headquartered in New Orleans, the 5th Circuit appeals court is almost as conse rvative as the 4th Circuit's.

Garza is from Texas, is Hispanic and at 55 still well within the range of the "younger" Supreme Court choices.

He was appointed to the U.S. District Court in Texas by President Ronald Reaga n; President George H.W. Bush raised him to the appeals court.

A Notre Dame graduate and Vietnam-era Marine Corps captain, Garza would make a n appealing nominee before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

However, there might be nagging questions over his nomination from the deeply conservative core of the Republican Party.

Garza has attacked the expert testimony of prosecution psychiatrists who deter mine the "future dangerousness" of a capital defendant before a jury sentences the defendant to death.

The judge calls such testimony unreliable, and he has criticized the 1983 Supr eme Court ruling in Barefoot vs. Estelle which supports expert psychiatric test imony.

Returning to Richmond and the 4th Circuit, the name of Chief Circuit Judge Jam es Harvie Wilkinson cannot be ignored.

Some in the Washington legal community consider him a dark horse who can never theless surge to the head of the pack.

What if Rehnquist leaves and Bush decides to replace him from someone already on the Supreme Court?

What about the conservatives' darling, Scalia? Not much of a chance. He's got the liveliest intellect on the high court, but Scalia's judicial philosophy is truly retro. He deeply believes that legislatures have the right to legislate m orality for the public good. He would fight to the last breath to reverse Miran da and Roe vs. Wade.

I sincerely doubt that Bush is looking for that kind of trouble.

Which leaves us with my current favorite -- Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Kennedy supports Roe vs. Wade, and its progeny, including 1992's Planned Paren thood vs. Casey. But he redeemed himself in conservative eyes by voting with th e minority in 2000's Stenberg vs. Carhart, when a 5-4 Supreme Court majority st ruck down Nebraska's ban on "partial-birth abortion."

Critics called the ban a thinly disguised attempt to end all abortions, but Ke nnedy specifically rejected that argument.

Kennedy, 67, would be tricky for the conservatives to support for chief justic e. He has shown consistent sympathy for the rights of gays and lesbians, and ca n be blistering in his defense of what he believes are core constitutional valu es.

But he votes with the conservative bloc more often than not, and quite often i s in the majority, including the 5-4 majority in Bush vs. Gore.

Finally, Kennedy plainly wants the job.

And he's been smiling a lot lately.

Senator Norm Coleman was elected to the United States Senate in November, 2002. Coleman serves on four committees including the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship. In addition, Coleman is Chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Before he was elected Senator, Norm Coleman was Mayor of Saint Paul for 8 years. As Mayor, Coleman led Minnesota's capitol city through a remarkable renaissance. Since 1993 there have been more than 18,000 new jobs created with more than $3.0 billion of new development. As Mayor he kept his commitment to a zero percent increase in the property tax levy for eight years in a row, and Saint Paul received its first 'AAA' bond rating...unprecedented in the city's history. The value of taxable property in the core downtown has more than doubled, and every neighborhood has seen an increase in property value.

In 1997, Coleman secured a National Hockey League franchise for the Capital City. The Minnesota Wild dropped the puck in September 2000 at a new state-of-the-art $175 million arena. He helped create a new $90 million Science Museum of Minnesota which overlooks the majestic Mississippi River Valley and brought Lawson Software, Minnesota's largest software company with over 1,000 jobs, to downtown Saint Paul. New and expanded businesses are emerging both in the downtown core and in neighborhoods throughout the city.

In addition to economic development, Coleman made public safety a priority while serving as mayor. By adding 40 police officers and working with neighborhoods, the City expanded community-based policing. The result has been a drop in the violent crime rate since 1993 and more confidence in the community about the safety of its neighborhoods.

Education had remained a cornerstone of his administration. Coleman used his position to bring more accountability, additional resources and needed change in our public schools. By working closely with Superintendent Patricia Harvey, they forged exemplary models of choice and parental involvement through traditional public school programs, as well as innovative charter schools. As home to the nation's first charter school, Coleman has championed education reform, leading an initiative to bring 20 new charter schools to Saint Paul.

Coleman also helped in the planting of over 35,000 trees and shrubs along the urban corridor of Mississippi River. He was instrumental in recapturing brownfields and creating new uses for once-discarded land. His Upper Landing housing development serves as a national model of urban renewal on a once blighted land. The Upper Landing project, in partnership with the Centex Corporation, will bring nearly 800 new units of housing, with 20% of those deemed affordable, to a former scrap yard along the shores of the Mississippi River.

Coleman has created a national model for building public/private partnerships. He brought together the top 20 CEO's of the region to create the Capital City Partnership, which is committed to promoting, marketing and developing Saint Paul. In January 2001, Mayor Coleman received the United States Conference of Mayor's Award of Excellence in Public/Private Partnerships. In addition, Coleman has been recognized by the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars with their Award for Public Service.

Coleman served as Chair of the George W. Bush campaign in Minnesota. He served on the Board of Directors of the United States Conference of Mayors and was a charter member of CEO's for Cities, an alliance of Mayors, corporate CEO's, and nonprofit executives focused on market-based approaches to revitalizing urban centers.

In 1993, he was elected Mayor of Saint Paul, as a conservative Democrat. In 1996, he joined the Republican Party and was reelected in 1997 as the first Republican Mayor in Saint Paul in over 25 years, receiving nearly 60% of the vote. He carried the Republican banner for Governor in 1998, narrowly losing to Jesse Ventura by 2% .

Coleman was born in Brooklyn, New York. He received his B.A. from Hofstra University and his J.D. (with high honors) from the University of Iowa. He served 17 years with the Minnesota Attorney General, holding the positions of Chief Prosecutor and Solicitor General of the State of Minnesota.

Coleman serves on four committees including the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship. In addition, Coleman is Chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Before he was elected Senator, Norm Coleman was Mayor of Saint Paul for 8 years. As Mayor, Coleman led Minnesota's capitol city through a remarkable renaissance. Since 1993 there have been more than 18,000 new jobs created with more than $3.0 billion of new development. As Mayor he kept his commitment to a zero percent increase in the property tax levy for eight years in a row, and Saint Paul received its first 'AAA' bond rating...unprecedented in the city's history. The value of taxable property in the core downtown has more than doubled, and every neighborhood has seen an increase in property value.

In 1997, Coleman secured a National Hockey League franchise for the Capital City. The Minnesota Wild dropped the puck in September 2000 at a new state-of-the-art $175 million arena. He helped create a new $90 million Science Museum of Minnesota which overlooks the majestic Mississippi River Valley and brought Lawson Software, Minnesota's largest software company with over 1,000 jobs, to downtown Saint Paul. New and expanded businesses are emerging both in the downtown core and in neighborhoods throughout the city.

In addition to economic development, Coleman made public safety a priority while serving as mayor. By adding 40 police officers and working with neighborhoods, the City expanded community-based policing. The result has been a drop in the violent crime rate since 1993 and more confidence in the community about the safety of its neighborhoods.

Education had remained a cornerstone of his administration. Coleman used his position to bring more accountability, additional resources and needed change in our public schools. By working closely with Superintendent Patricia Harvey, they forged exemplary models of choice and parental involvement through traditional public school programs, as well as innovative charter schools. As home to the nation's first charter school, Coleman has championed education reform, leading an initiative to bring 20 new charter schools to Saint Paul.

Coleman also helped in the planting of over 35,000 trees and shrubs along the urban corridor of Mississippi River. He was instrumental in recapturing brownfields and creating new uses for once-discarded land. His Upper Landing housing development serves as a national model of urban renewal on a once blighted land. The Upper Landing project, in partnership with the Centex Corporation, will bring nearly 800 new units of housing, with 20% of those deemed affordable, to a former scrap yard along the shores of the Mississippi River.

Coleman has created a national model for building public/private partnerships. He brought together the top 20 CEO's of the region to create the Capital City Partnership, which is committed to promoting, marketing and developing Saint Paul. In January 2001, Mayor Coleman received the United States Conference of Mayor's Award of Excellence in Public/Private Partnerships. In addition, Coleman has been recognized by the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars with their Award for Public Service.

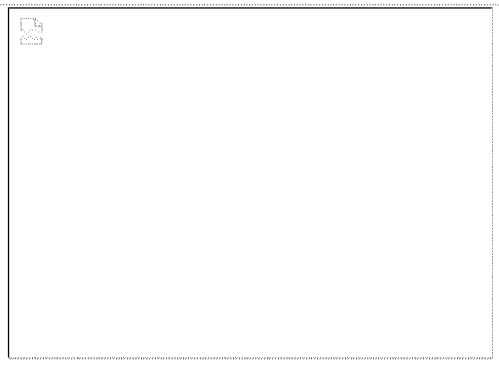
Coleman served as Chair of the George W. Bush campaign in Minnesota. He served on the Board of Directors of the United States Conference of Mayors and was a charter member of CEO's for Cities, an alliance of Mayors, corporate CEO's, and nonprofit executives focused on market-based approaches to revitalizing urban centers.

In 1993, he was elected Mayor of Saint Paul, as a conservative Democrat. In 1996, he joined the Republican Party and was reelected in 1997 as the first Republican Mayor in Saint Paul in over 25 years, receiving nearly 60% of the vote. He carried the Republican banner for Governor in 1998, narrowly losing to Jesse Ventura by 2% .



Coleman was born in Brooklyn, New York. He received his B.A. from Hofstra University and his J.D. (with high honors) from the University of Iowa. He served 17 years with the Minnesota Attorney General, holding the positions of Chief Prosecutor and Solicitor General of the State of Minnesota.

WASHINGTON - When President Bush, in his 2000 campaign, called the two most conservative members of the Supreme Court models for his nominees to the federal bench, Sen. Charles E. Schumer thought he saw an opening.

In the opinion of the New York Democrat, Bush was setting up an ideological test for federal judges just by saying he liked Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas.

Soon afterwards, Schumer began a campaign to reshape the way the Senate deals with judicial nominees - including members of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Senate Democrats, Schumer decided, would put ideology on the front burner in the confirmation process.

Schumer's deployment of the filibuster to smoke out the ideologies of Bush nominees is working, for now.

"I am the leader (of the filibuster movement), and, you know, I'm proud of it," said the freshman senator from Brooklyn.

But this has brought Schumer into almost weekly confrontations with the president.

And now the White House said it is working with Senate Republican leaders to disable the filibuster rule, which permits a senator to engage in unlimited debate, thus preventing action on a piece of legislation or nomination. It takes 60 of the Senate's 100 votes to end a filibuster.

Schumer has used the rule to block confirmation of two appellate court nominees who Bush says have been rated "well qualified" by their fellow lawyers.

Just days ago, Schumer added two more names to the list of Bush nominees he wants to block.

The president called the Schumer-led filibusters "partisan obstructionist tactics, unacceptable and inconsistent with the Senate's constitutional responsibility."

Schumer said he is up for the confrontation.

"I think the president is awash in a deal with the devil: Let the far right pick the federal bench and they will leave me (the president) alone," he said in an interview.

The Bush administration is also ready.

"What is really going on here is a divide between those who know and work with these nominees and opponents from special-interest groups here in Washington who have distorted their records," said one White House official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Schumer claims all four nominees he is trying to block are from the "fringe" of the far right, nominees who would overturn Roe v. Wade if they make it all the way to the Supreme Court.

Range of change

In addition to the future of Roe v. Wade, which legalized abortion, Schumer said the stakes in the fight over judges involve a whole range of women's rights, the fabric of federal regulations and the shape of tomorrow's Supreme Court.

"They want to get rid of unions," he said. "They want to decimate the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act. They want to get rid of any kind of regulation.

"They want to cut back on the civil rights laws."

His critics claim Schumer, a minority member of the Judiciary Committee, is trying to rewrite the Constitution, which empowers the president to nominate jurists.

"Schumer wants to impose a liberal litmus test now on all nominees," said John Nowacki, legal policy director of the Free Congress Foundation, a conservative group.

"He wants to make the Senate co-equal with the president on the selection of judges, something that will rewrite 200 years of constitutional history," Nowacki said.

Schumer is drawing heavy pressure for his efforts. He is regularly denounced on the editorial pages of the Wall Street Journal and the more liberal Washington Post.

Attorney General John Ashcroft and White House counsel Alberto Gonzales have urged him to relent.

Bush has called him to try to talk him out of his stand, calling Schumer by his nickname and middle name, "Ellis."

In recent weeks, Schumer's allies have defeated the Republican majority in five votes to force cloture - a vote to end filibuster - on Miguel Estrada, a former high-ranking attorney in the Justice Department.

Bush wants to put Estrada, an immigrant from Honduras, on the federal appellate court in the District of Columbia.

The Schumer forces also have blocked a confirmation vote on Priscilla R. Owen, a Texas State Supreme Court justice, for the federal appellate court serving Texas and the South. Women's abortion rights organizations claim she has undermined those rights in her rulings in Texas.

Schumer announced he will lead filibusters against Carolyn Kuhl, whom Bush named to the appellate court on the West Coast, and against Charles W. Pickering Sr., for the appeals court in the South. Pickering's nomination was defeated by the Senate when the Democrats controlled it last year, but Bush renominated him.

Some observers speculate these unprecedented clashes are mere warm-ups for the battle Bush could face if he tries to make Scalia or Thomas chief justice of the United States if William H. Rehnquist retires.

More fights

His critics anticipate more judicial appointment fights.

"Schumer argues for the liberal wing of the Democrat Party," said Nowacki. "Schumer seems perfectly happy to label anyone who disagrees with his views as "extremist.'"

Schumer spokesman Phil Singer said the senator does not have a litmus test on any one issue. For instance, Singer said, Schumer does not know whether Richard C. Wesley of Livingston County is pro-life or pro-choice. Bush has nominated Wesley, a state Court of Appeals judge, to the federal appellate court in New York City.

Wesley, who is also supported by Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., had his confirmation hearing Thursday.

"Sen. Schumer looks at the entire package," Singer said.

Countering the Republicans' "obstructionist" charge, Schumer noted that, of 126 nominees Bush sent to the Judiciary Committee, the Senate approved 124.

"I voted for 119 of them," Schumer said. "When they ask me about that in Buffalo, I point out that I backed 98.4 percent of his nominees. Then they said, "Oh,' we didn't know that.' "

High standards

Schumer said his standards for nominees are "excellence, moderation - not too far left or too far right - and diversity - the bench should not be comprised of all white males."

Bush, he said, has done "a pretty good job" on excellence and diversity but said the White House has too often served up too many nominees that "are way beyond the mainstream."

One reason, Schumer said, is that a conservative organization, the Federalist Society, feeds prospective nominees to the White House. The society, 25,000 strong, has members on many law school faculties and is led by former Justice Department officials of the Reagan administration and Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

The society's president, Eugene B. Meyers, said the organization does not propose candidates for the bench but does encourage its members to "take an active interest" in the bench and other public affairs.

Solicitor General Ted Olson, the attorney who argued the case for Bush that settled the 2000 election, is a member.

Jeffrey L, Mazzella, a top official with the conservative Center for Individual Freedom, said Schumer's stand against Estrada and Owen is "pretty hypocritical."

"Not long ago, Schumer and Sen. (Patrick J.) Leahy (D-Vt.) called endorsement by the American Bar Association "the gold standard,' " Mazzella said.

"Here we have both Estrada and Owen judged "well qualified' unanimously by the ABA," Mazzella said.

Schumer claimed Estrada failed to answer any questions about his judicial philosophy put to him in his confirmation hearings.

"He actually answered 125 questions in an eight-hour hearing, questions that other judges were not asked," Mazzella said.

Schumer also said Estrada even declined at his hearing to name three judges he admired. True.

However, in later written answers to the committee, Estrada named Supreme Court Justices Lewis Powell and Anthony Kennedy as well as Amalya Kearse, a federal appellate judge in New York City.

Estrada also has been endorsed by former Democratic Solicitor Generals Seth Waxman and Drew Days III, each of whom Estrada served under.

Schumer's claim that Estrada declined to speculate on his judicial philosophy grates against a standard that Schumer, in June 2001, wanted to put on the table.

Schumer said then it was not forthright for judicial nominees to decline to discuss their ideology at their confirmation hearings.

"If the president uses ideology in deciding whom to nominate to the bench, the Senate, as part of its responsibility to advise and consent, should do the same, in deciding whom to confirm," Schumer said in a letter to the New York Times.

"Pretending that ideology doesn't matter - or, worse, doesn't even exist - is exactly what the Senate should do," he wrote.

Rewriting the rules

By the end of June, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., will try to rewrite the rules on filibusters in order to force votes on all of Bush's judges. Schumer predicted Frist won't win any vote diluting the filibuster rule.

Even so, the White House said Thursday that Senate Rules Chairman Trend Lott, R-Miss., a strong backer of Pickering, will hold hearings on how to dilute the power of the filibuster next month.

Feinstein Is Key Vote for Judge Nominees

By DAVID ESPO
The Associated Press
Wednesday, May 28, 2003; 2:24 PM

WASHINGTON - Moments after voting against committee approval of Los Angeles judge Carolyn Kuhl for a federal appeals court, Sen. Dianne Feinstein signaled that that didn't mean she would automatically support an effort to talk the nomination to death in the Republican-controlled Senate.

"We have two filibusters going," the California Democrat said, referring to attempts to block votes of Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen to appellate court vacancies. "Maybe that's enough."

With Feinstein on the fence, party leaders have yet to announce whether they will filibuster Kuhl's nomination, underscoring the pivotal role the 69-year-old lawmaker plays in a political struggle over President Bush's efforts to place conservatives on the courts.

Along the way, she has frustrated other Democratic senators, who voice their irritation on condition they not be identified by name. Officials in some of the abortion rights, civil rights and other interest groups that have pushed the party to block Bush's judicial nominees have prodded her - but only gently in public.

Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, praised Feinstein for votes against some of Bush's nominees. But, he added, "We hope she'll take more of a leadership role in the fight to defeat extremist nominees."

Not surprisingly, the White House view is different. One senior official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Bush's top lawyer, Alberto Gonzales, and Texas GOP Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchinson are the president's channel to the Californian on judgeships. The White House considers her the critical swing vote on judicial filibusters, this official said, and a rare Democrat willing to judge Bush's nominations on a case-by-case basis.

In an interview, Feinstein said, "I make up my own mind at my own pace and try to give these controversial nominations a good deal of thought. I don't kind of knee-jerk along with whatever the popular demand of the moment is and I think that's what people want me to do."

In a decade in the Senate, Feinstein has developed a reputation as an independent-minded Democrat. She's a strong supporter of abortion rights and gun control, yet on other issues, displays independence from party orthodoxy.

Most recently, she suggested a compromise for limits on awards in medical malpractice cases, then withdrew her proposal when trial lawyers, who are aligned with Democrats, rejected it, as did doctors.

On judges, Feinstein sought to cut through the nomination-by-nomination political warfare with a proposal to remake the system. It called for concessions by the administration as well as Senate Democrats, and the White House swiftly rejected it.

Feinstein is a swing vote on judgeships not because her decision can tip a majority one way or the other. Rather, because of her seat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and her record of independence, party aides and activists say her votes influence the party's position in the Senate as a whole.

When most fellow Democrats wanted to filibuster Owen's nomination this spring, Feinstein remained uncommitted. Several sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said she was prodded inside a closed-door party caucus and lobbied by other Democratic women senators to join the effort to block confirmation.

Feinstein ultimately agreed to back the filibuster, and Owen joined appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada in Senate limbo. Republicans presumably could muster 50 votes to confirm each of the contested nominees, but can't win the 60 needed to overcome filibusters.

On the other hand, Feinstein was the only Democrat to vote in the Judiciary Committee for confirmation of Jeff Sutton, a former Ohio solicitor general, to a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That effectively made it impossible for Democrats to filibuster the nomination, despite the strong opposition by many Democrats and a campaign led by disabled activists who claimed Sutton would weaken their protections under federal law.

Sutton was confirmed on a vote of 52-41.
"Each individual is looked at as an individual case" as Democrats decide whether to filibuster, said Ranit Schmelzer, a spokeswoman for the party's leader, Sen. Tom Daschle of South Dakota. "The one thing that makes it more difficult is if a nominee has Democratic votes in committee."

Feinstein's role is particularly important in the case of Kuhl, according to Democratic aides, because the Los Angeles County Superior Court judge would sit on a circuit that includes California. The state's other Democratic senator, Barbara Boxer, has been a strong opponent of Kuhl, and is facing re-election next year.

When Feinstein declined to say how she would vote in committee, Kuhl's opponents in California arranged public events and phone calls to build pressure. At one, Azucena Sanchez-Scott, a breast cancer survivor, recounted how Kuhl in 1999 dismissed her invasion of privacy suit. She said she filed the case after a doctor allowed a pharmaceutical salesman to observe her breast examination without her consent.

Kuhl's ruling was reversed by a state appeals court and the case was later settled out of court.
Feinstein announced her opposition to Kuhl on the day before the committee voted 10-9, strictly along party lines, to send the nomination to the floor. That preserved the option of a filibuster, and party officials, eager to pressure Feinstein, say they have the 41 votes needed, with or without her support.

So far, though, she remains uncommitted, and the party has yet to announce its plans.

CONGRESS: Minority woes

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., delivered a fiery speech blasting Republicans for passing a tax relief bill without first specifically rejecting an alternative plan submitted by Democrats.

The GOP, she thundered, "will not even allow us to bring up our plan on the floor of the House ... for an up or down vote. That is outrageous."

U.S. Rep. Eliot Engel, D-N.Y., quickly agreed. "We can have democracy in Iraq but not here on the House floor," he fumed.

On the same day, in another part of the Capitol, Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle vigorously was defending his decision to continue a filibuster preventing an up-and-down vote on judicial nominee Miguel Estrada.

Actually, both Pelosi and Daschle were wrong.

If not for the filibuster, Estrada would be confirmed easily. Daschle, lacking the votes to prevail, is thwarting democracy.

On the House side, however, it would have made no difference if there had been a specific vote on the Democrat plan. There simply were not enough votes to pass it. If there had been, the GOP plan would have failed.

Democracy is obstructed when a vote is denied to keep a bill from passing or a nominee from being confirmed, not when a vote is denied because the legislation has no chance of passing. Pelosi needs to audit a course in Civics 101.

A few points:

-Answer to Q 19 states gives details of a signed MOU b/w OHS and OSTP and provides a copy of the MOU

(and the next Q discusses a HSC/NSC MOU). You should check with Brett on whether it is appropriate to disclose such internal agreements. I also seem to recall other MOU type questions in other places in the list of questions.

-Typo in first sentence in Q 21 answer.

-Q 98 states that OA counsel (Greenstone) is going to suggest an answer to the question of whether Gen. Gordon supports the $2 mill "cut" in resources.

I would think this is a HSC/WHCO item to answer. IF it is answered (a question for Jennifer as it essentially asks for testimony from someone who we would not normally have testify/answer written questions), at most I would think the answer would simply not address the views of Gen. Gordon and state something like "The EOP budget proposal provides the necessary resources for HSC to advise and assist the President. The $2 mill "cut" reference is incorrect because . . . . ($2 mill reflects appropriate adjustments as a result of . . . . . creation of DHS, etc. -- whatever the case is.)"

KEY POINTS: MIDEAST ROADMAP***
-The roadmap will help guide the parties forward toward realization of the vision presented by the President on June 24, 2002, of two states living side by side in peace and security.

-President Bush said we would welcome Israeli and Palestinian comments about the roadmap. Israel has significant concerns about the roadmap. We recognize that these concerns are real. As we move forward and implement the roadmap, Israel's concerns will be addressed fully and seriously.

-The Israelis accept the vision of the two state solution as set out in the President's June 24 speech and are prepared to accept the steps laid out in the roadmap.

-Nobody wants the roadmap to become a roadblock. It is a guide forward, a call to concrete action.

-We must act. As we move forward to implement the roadmap, we will address all parties' concerns.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***
All Times Eastern Daylight. Subject to Change.
12:15 pm White House Briefing
12:30 pm State Department Briefing

KEY QUOTE***
"There can be no peace for either side in the Middle East unless there is freedom for both. Reaching that destination will not be easy, but we can see the way forward. Now the parties must take that way, step by step, and America will be the active partner of every party that seeks true peace."

--President Bush, 3/14/03

FACTS: MIDEAST TRIP***
President Bush plans to visit Egypt, Jordan and Qatar from June 2-5, following his stops in Poland, Russia and France.

-June 3: The President will travel to Sharm el-Sheik, Egypt for a meeting with Arab leaders. This meeting underscores the importance that President Bush places on the role of regional partners in building a lasting peace. Many Arab nations want to play a constructive role, and have been playing a constructive role. The President hopes to build on those helpful signs.

-June 4: President Bush will meet with King Abdullah in Aqaba, Jordan and, conditions permitting, with Israeli Prime Minister Sharon and Palestinian Prime Minister Abbas. The meetings will follow up on this hopeful moment in the Middle East by bringing the parties together.

-June 5: The President will go to Doha, Qatar to visit with members of the coalition's Armed Forces.

MORE FACTS: HIV/AIDS INITIATIVE***
-Because of the AIDS pandemic, a child born today in sub-Saharan Africa has a life expectancy of 47 years. In the absence of AIDS, it would be 62.

-Nearly 60 percent of those infected in sub-Saharan Africa are women.

-Three million African children under 15 have the virus, and the disease has left 11 million.

-In the U.S., we have increased spending for domestic HIV prevention, care and treatment by seven percent in next year's budget.

KEY QUOTE

"There can be no peace for either side in the Middle East unless there is freedom for both. Reaching that destination will not be easy, but we can see the way forward. Now the parties must take that way, step by step, and America will be the active partner of every party that seeks true peace."

--President Bush, 3/14/03

KEY POINTS: MIDEAST ROADMAP

- The roadmap will help guide the parties forward toward realization of the vision presented by the President on June 24, 2002, of two states living side by side in peace and security.
- President Bush said we would welcome Israeli and Palestinian comments about the roadmap. Israel has significant concerns about the roadmap. We recognize that these concerns are real. As we move forward and implement the roadmap, Israel's concerns will be addressed fully and seriously.
- The Israelis accept the vision of the two state solution as set out in the President's June 24 speech and are prepared to accept the steps laid out in the roadmap.
- Nobody wants the roadmap to become a roadblock. It is a guide forward, a call to concrete action.
- We must act. As we move forward to implement the roadmap, we will address all parties' concerns.

MORE FACTS: HIV/AIDS INITIATIVE

- Because of the AIDS pandemic, a child born today in sub-Saharan Africa has a life expectancy of 47 years. In the absence of AIDS, it would be 62.
- Nearly 60 percent of those infected in sub-Saharan Africa are women.
- Three million African children under 15 have the virus, and the disease has left 11 million.
- In the U.S., we have increased spending for domestic HIV prevention, care and treatment by seven percent in next year's budget.

A court of civility and controversial conservatism
The Fourth Circuit's rulings cast a wide influence
By Seth Stern | Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor
RICHMOND, VA. - The federal court that sits on a gentle slope down here from the former capitol of the Confederacy is nothing if not genteel. The judges who sit on the court are so rooted in civility, in fact, that they step down from the bench after every oral argument and shake hands with attorneys.
It's an atmosphere where southern manners are as common as lengthy legal briefs.
Yet the friendliness in the courtroom perhaps belies the gravity of its decisions: The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals is at once one of the most influential - and controversial - courts in the country.
For a decade, nominations to this court have spurred some of the most bitter Senate confirmation battles - and are doing so again. The Fourth Circuit rulings, and the conservative law clerks who help write them, often wind up at the Supreme Court, shaping the most sensitive legal issues of the day.

Perhaps most important, should, as expected, a vacancy open with the retirement of a Supreme Court justice at the end of the court's term next month, one of the 4th Circuit's judges might end up making the journey north to Washington.

Two of its 12 sitting judges - J. Michael Luttig and J. Harvie Wilkinson - may be on Bush's short list of Supreme Court nominees.

Messrs. Luttig and Wilkinson are just two of the judicial heavyweights on this conservative-dominated court that hears federal trial court appeals from a five-state region extending from Maryland to South Carolina.

"While you know you are dealing with judges with a conservative ideology, you also know you're dealing with judges who are extremely conscientious and open to quality arguments," says Rod Smolla, dean of the University of Richmond's law school.

That conservatism is evident in rulings scaling back everything from employment-discrimination claims to criminal procedural protections such as the Miranda warning. Death-row inmates here have one of the lowest success rates in getting their appeals heard of any of the 12 federal circuits.

Such novel positions often invite Supreme Court review, says Dave Douglas, a law professor at William & Mary law school in Williamsburg, Va. They also make the court a favorite for conservative lawyers. Observers say the court's stances on law and order help explain why the Justice Department chose to hold prominent post-Sept. 11 terrorist suspects within the Fourth Circuit's territory.

Both alleged 20th hijacker Zacarias Moussaoui and American Taliban John Walker Lindh were indicted in a federal court in eastern Virginia, while Yaser Esam Hamdi and alleged dirty bomber Jose Padilla are both in military brigs within its jurisdiction. Any appeals about the detentions land in the Fourth Circuit's dockets, which has so far shown little sympathy to legal challenges on the issue.

"That court has shown a unique willingness to be very activist," says a law professor who once clerked for a Fourth Circuit judge.

President Bush may now turn to the Fourth circuit for Supreme Court nominees. Professor Smolla suggests he may consider either Luttig, a conservative in the tradition of Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia, or Wilkinson, a more moderate jurist.

Yet a study of judicial decisions by potential Bush Supreme Court nominees published by the American Judicature Society found Wilkinson exhibited a record of "exceptional conservatism," particularly in the areas of criminal justice and economics.

In a phone interview, Wilkinson rejected such labels. "I've never asked if something is conservative or liberal," he says. "I think the judge's perspective on the bench is focused very precisely on the individual parties and the individual questions in a single case."

Even if Luttig is not tapped for the Supreme Court, his influence on the court is extensive. His clerks, who help judges write draft opinions after graduating from law school, often end up later clerking for Supreme Court justices. Luttig himself clerked for Justice Scalia before ushering Clarence Thomas' nomination through the Senate as a Justice Department attorney.

The Fourth Circuit's current posture somewhat belies its past. In the 1960s and '70s, the tribunal earned a reputation as a leader in civil rights. But many judges of that era ended up retiring during the Reagan years, allowing the former president to restock the court with more conservative jurists.

President Bush, for his part, has already shown a desire to continue the Fourth Circuit's tilt to the right but also to increase the number of minorities on the bench.

The court's jurisdiction has the highest minority population of any in the country.

Yet it didn't get its first African-American until 2001, when Mr. Bush nominated Roger Gregory. Judge Gregory was something of an anomalous appointment for Bush: He was tapped for the bench by President Clinton, during a Senate recess, after strong opposition from Republicans. Bush later reaffirmed the appointment, which was temporary.

The court's three current vacancies have been the subject of far more acrimony, again going back to the Clinton era. Republican senators led by Jesse Helms of North Carolina blocked the nomination of four Clinton nominees to the court. Senate Democrats have since returned the favor, blocking the nomination of Terrence Boyle, a former aide to Sen. Helms.

President Bush's two most recent nominations - two conservative African-Americans, including Allyson Duncan, who would be the court's first black woman - stand a better chance of getting confirmed.

Still, lawyers who argue before the court say a conservative majority doesn't mean its decisions are a forgone conclusion.

Similarly, members of the court's Democratic minority say they feel comfortable serving here. "There's a long tradition of judges on the court getting along well with one another and having respect for each other on a personal level," says Judge M. Blane Michael of West Virginia, a Clinton appointee.

Unlike other circuits, all the Fourth Circuit's judges meet during the same week each month. The handshakes also help maintain a cordial atmosphere."It's really important to treat litigants with respect," says Wilkinson. "I'd rather go down from the bench than simply disappear behind a curtain."

Bush Camp Seeks To Mobilize Evangelical Base For 2004. Howard Fineman writes on the Newsweek web site (5/28), "The Bush Crowd loathes talking to the press, but they don't hide their aims. Their straightforward goal for '04 is to boost turnout of 'The Base' -- defined, in the modern Republican Party, as voters who practice traditional religions in traditional ways. That means evangelical Christians, of course, but also, and increasingly, socially conservative (if economically liberal) Roman Catholics, adherents of various strains of Eastern Orthodoxy and non-Reform Jews. Here's one of the most salient facts of politics today: There is a close and growing correlation between dutiful church attendance and identification with the GOP. The president's visit to Krakow-the start of a trip that will include stops in Russia, France and the Middle East-is perfectly timed. He'll be there on Saturday, so that news of his visit to the hometown of the Polish Pope will be in every Sunday paper. You think they'll notice that in, say, Pittsburgh or Chicago? I asked Karl Rove more than a year ago what his goal was for '04. His straightforward, unblinking answer: to increase evangelical turnout." Fineman continues, "You don't tend to think of the Department of the Interior as a hotbed of religiosity or, for that matter, the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Sure enough, though, FEMA recently decided to allow religious groups to be paid for taking part in storm and earthquake relief efforts. And the Department of Housing and Urban Development is funneling money into construction of religious centers, as long as the dominant purpose of the structure is 'social service.'" Fineman also notes, "There's only one high-profile matter that is truly risky: the choice of a nominee for the Supreme Court. To make this strategy work, the president has to pick a religious traditionalist of some kind, which means one who openly-proudly-opposes abortion and favors a Human Life Amendment to the constitution. That kind of nominee would generate the kind of fight the White House doesn't really want to see, for it could mobilize the other side. Better to fly below radar. Which is why, inside the White House, they might want to invent their own kind of religious practice: praying for the health of the members of the High Court."

Masters of Obstruction

The Estrada roadblock continues.

By Mario H. Lopez

Senate Democrats' opposition to a first-rate Hispanic's judicial nomination should come as no surprise given the Democratic party's long history of obstruction on issues of race and equal opportunity. This statement may seem bold — the Democrats are constantly advertising themselves as the party of minorities — but the facts surrounding Miguel Estrada's nomination leave room for no other conclusion.

For two years, Democrats have played political games, offered racial insults, and finally resorted to the favorite parliamentary tool of past equal-opportunity obstructionists — the filibuster.

Miguel Estrada, nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, is a proud example of the American dream. He came here as a high-school student speaking little English. Before ascending to his current position at a leading Washington law firm, he graduated magna cum laude from Harvard Law School, clerked for both a Supreme Court justice and a Court of Appeals justice, argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court, and served as assistant to the solicitor general under presidents Bill Clinton and George H. W. Bush.

Estrada's impressive resume includes more experience than those of many past nominees. Indeed, five of the eight judges currently on the D.C. Circuit had had no prior judicial experience. And the American Bar Association, which routinely rates judicial picks, gave Estrada their highest rating.

Now, despite having enough votes to be confirmed, Estrada is blocked — because Senate Democrats absolutely refuse to allow his nomination a vote, as the Constitution requires. Estrada has the support of 55 of senators, but 60 votes are required to break the filibuster. This month, Democrats succeeded for the sixth time in blocking a cloture motion — which would stop debate and allow a vote — and so continued the first filibuster of an Appeals court nominee.

Democrats claim that Estrada has no support in the Hispanic community — even though not one membership-based Hispanic organization opposes Estrada. The racial attack peaked when Rep. Bob Menendez sneered that Estrada isn't Hispanic enough.

"Being Hispanic means for us much more than having a surname," Menendez said — although he failed to list the official requirements for Hispanic-ness. If Menendez has such a list, perhaps he should send it to the Honduran-born Estrada.

For the Left's racial demagogues and self-appointed thought police, all minorities must think alike. Of course, the only views considered acceptable are those backing policies that keep minorities firmly under the thumb of government programs the Left controls.

Currently, the "substantive" anti-Estrada argument rests on two assertions: first, that he hasn't answered enough questions, and second, that the administration will not release memos he wrote while serving as assistant to the Solicitor General.

Because the Solicitor General represents the government, the memoranda in question fall under attorney-client privilege. Every living SG agrees that releasing them would do long-term harm to the Justice Department (of the seven SGs, four are Democrats, and three are Republicans). Tellingly, producing such documents has not been required of past nominees.

Clinton SG Seth Waxman, one of Estrada's former bosses, wrote that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity" and that Estrada is "a model of professionalism and competence."

The lack of credible opposition to Estrada and the flimsy arguments, thinly-veiled racial epithets, and political tricks are all just a continuation of Democratic party opposition to equal opportunity.

In the 1930s, Democrats filibustered to death a federal anti-lynching bill that passed the House several times. Civil-rights litigation was repeatedly derailed in the 1950s by Democratic filibusters or threats thereof. Democrats filibustered the 1964 Civil Rights Act for 74 days, and in 1963, Democratic governor George Wallace physically blocked the schoolhouse door to prevent two black students from entering the University of Alabama.

Today, Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle is blocking the courthouse door, refusing to give a vote to a nominee who would be the first Hispanic on the D.C. Circuit Court.

If the Democrats were forced to filibuster the old-fashioned way — by being required to speak continuously — perhaps they would take their place alongside brethren like ex-Sen. Strom Thurmond. As an opponent of desegregation — and a Democrat — Thurmond spoke for 24 hours and 18 minutes in opposition to the 1957 Civil Rights Act.

Could Thurmond's record be broken? Given the contempt fueling opposition to a fair vote for Miguel Estrada, it is possible. At any rate, past Democrats would certainly have been proud of the party's obstructionist success so far.

Shappert closes in on chief prosecutor's job

Edwards signals support for Charlotte lawyer nominated by Bush

Staff Writer

Veteran Charlotte prosecutor Gretchen Shappert received good news Wednesday in her bid to become chief federal prosecutor for the Western District of North Carolina.

U.S. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., returned a blue slip to the Senate Judiciary Committee giving the go-ahead to hold a confirmation hearing on whether Shappert should be named U.S. Attorney for Charlotte and the state's western district.

"I'm gratified by this expression of support and grateful that the process has moved along promptly," Shappert, 47, said.

U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Dole, R-N.C., had already returned a blue slip for Shappert.

But Shappert must overcome yet another hurdle.

She won't likely get her confirmation hearing until her boss, U.S. Attorney Bob Conrad, gets a federal judgeship.

President Bush in April nominated Conrad to one of two newly created federal judgeships for the Western District of North Carolina.

Three days later, the president nominated Shappert to replace Conrad as U.S. attorney.

Dole has returned the blue slip to the Senate Judiciary Committee for Conrad.

Edwards, who sits on the committee, has not.

Michael Briggs, Edwards' press secretary, said last week the senator is trying to learn more about Conrad.

On Wednesday, Briggs said: "The senator continues to review the nomination of Mr. Conrad for a district court judgeship."

Senators from home states of judicial nominees can hold up confirmation hearings indefinitely by not sending back blue slips to the judiciary committee.

The return of the slips often signals that the senators have no serious reservations about the nominees' qualifications.

She won't likely get her confirmation hearing until her boss, U.S. Attorney Bob Conrad, gets a federal judgeship.

President Bush in April nominated Conrad to one of two newly created federal judgeships for the Western District of North Carolina.

Three days later, the president nominated Shappert to replace Conrad as U.S. attorney.

Dole has returned the blue slip to the Senate Judiciary Committee for Conrad.

Edwards, who sits on the committee, has not.

Michael Briggs, Edwards' press secretary, said last week the senator is trying to learn more about Conrad.
On Wednesday, Briggs said: "The senator continues to review the nomination of Mr. Conrad for a district court judgeship."
Senators from home states of judicial nominees can hold up confirmation hearings indefinitely by not sending back blue slips to the judiciary committee.
The return of the slips often signals that the senators have no serious reservations about the nominees' qualifications.

4th Circuit balance

Originally published May 27, 2003

THE BUSH administration should withdraw the nomination of Claude A. Allen to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for many reasons, principally his lack of experience. But an equally important consideration is preserving a semblance of balance on a court that observers say is already the most conservative in the nation.

The nomination of Mr. Allen further aggravates the imbalance. His nomination is also an affront to the legacy of Francis D. Murnaghan Jr., whose seat on the bench Mr. Allen would fill. Judge Murnaghan, who died in 2000, was a liberal thinker, a progressive and a distinguished advocate of civil rights. That point of view deserves to be heard on any court, this one in particular.

Courts are in the business of dispensing justice or, in the case of an appeals court, deciding whether justice was served in lower-court decisions. To achieve that result, a court such as the 4th Circuit should have a variety of viewpoints. Right now, the court falls to the right of the U.S. Supreme Court, which recently overturned a 4th Circuit decision that would have nullified the Miranda ruling that mandates advising an accused of his or her rights.

There is no requirement that this court have a Maryland seat - or a "Murnaghan seat," as some in the Maryland bar think of it. But by tradition the seat has been filled by a Marylander. Now, as a direct result of judicial politics, the seat has been given to Virginia. The first nominee for this seat, Peter D. Keisler of Bethesda, was rejected by Maryland's Democratic senators, Paul S. Sarbanes and Barbara A. Mikulski, because he was not a member of the Maryland bar. Surely a judge filling a Maryland seat should have that threshold qualification.

Now Mr. Bush has kept the Maryland senators out of the fray by choosing someone from another state. Other senators, worried about attempts to thwart their will, may wish to join the Marylanders in an effort to head off the Allen nomination. A better solution would be withdrawing Mr. Allen in favor of a Marylander. No doubt the Republican Party of Maryland would want to see that occur given the importance of judgeships in the world of judicial politics and patronage.

Gov. Robert L. Ehrlich Jr., a Republican, should exercise whatever clout he has in the White House to put a Marylander in the Maryland seat.

It's one of those moments when partisanship has some virtue.

KEY POINTS: THE LATEST ON WMD***
"You have to believe that Saddam Hussein was willing to live under sanctions for 12 years, for no good reason, if you really believe that he was not hiding a weapons of mass destruction program. I just don't think that argument is credible."
--National Security Advisor Rice, 5/28/03

-President Bush has made identifying and eliminating Iraq's weapons of mass destruction a top priority.

-We've had a major development in finding biological weapons labs, which correspond to the sketches that Secretary Powell showed at the UN.

-We are interviewing scientists and recovering documents.

-The process of identifying and verifying WMD is complicated and lengthy because the Iraqi regime designed these programs to deceive. The U.S. government has always expected the disarmament of Iraq to be a difficult and lengthy process.

-The Coalition is taking a comprehensive approach by:
-Obtaining the cooperation of key Iraqi personnel
-Accessing and assessing possible sites
-Obtaining and examining key documents and computers

-The Iraqi regime devised many concealment and deception tools.
-Iraq's "just-in-time inventory" allowed them to put together weapons at the last moment.
-Many facilities were inspections-proof. The Iraqis embedded as much as they could in the "dual-use infrastructure," allowing them - for example - to make as much as 50 percent more chlorine than needed.
-The making of chlorine looks perfectly innocent, but it is a precursor for some chemical weapons.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***
President Bush travels to Poland, Russia, France, Egypt, Jordan and Qatar

MIDDLE EAST ROADMAP***
"I'm committed to working toward peace in the Middle East... I understand it's going to be difficult to achieve peace, but I believe it can happen."
--President Bush, 5/23/03

The President believes that there is a new opportunity for peace. Also, now that Iraq has been liberated a new Palestinian leadership is emerging and an obstacle to peace has been removed.

-The Israeli government has accepted the steps in the Roadmap.
-The parties have indicated they are ready to make real progress toward Hey, Brett. Quick question, what's the current administration view on the use of private aircraft? Our Deputy Under Secretary for Safe and Drug Free Schools is going to be in CA next week and for his return to DC has been offered a seat on Arnold Schwartzenegger's private plane. AS is flying back to DC for the Secretary's summit on after school programs, at which the Deputy US will also be a participant. I recall from our ethics briefing with you that you folks were working on a policy on the use of private aircraft so want to check in with you before I get back to our folks.

Thanks much.

This is an official trip, correct? If so, then apply the standard regs on use of corporate aircraft for official trips. If a political trip, give me a call.

Subject: Use of private aircraft

Hey, Brett. Quick question, what's the current administration view on the use of private aircraft? Our Deputy Under Secretary for Safe and Drug Free Schools is going to be in CA next week and for his return to DC has been offered a seat on Arnold Schwartzenegger's private plane. AS is flying back to DC for the Secretary's summit on after school programs, at which the Deputy US will also be a participant. I recall from our ethics briefing with you that you folks were working on a policy on the use of private aircraft so want to check in with you before I get back to our folks.

Thanks much.

Donation To GOP From Tribe Seeking Meeting With Norton Draws Attention. The AP (5/30, Yost) reports, "Just months after President Bush took office, the Republican Party accepted a $100,000 check from an Indian tribe seeking help in getting a meeting with Interior Secretary Gale Norton, according to internal GOP records. After the check was sent, the lobbyist for the Agua Caliente Indian band sent a thank-you letter to the GOP suggesting Norton's office was considering its meeting request. The leader of the tribe eventually got to air its concerns to the interior secretary during a congressional tour near the tribe's home in Palm Springs, Calif." Republican Party "officials say tribal officials were never promised anything in return for their six-figure check in 2001. 'We may pass along a request, but that's the extent of it,' said Jim Dyke, a spokesman for the Republican National Committee." Agua Caliente tribal chairman Richard Milanovich "said Thursday there was no connection between the tribe's check and the request for a meeting with Norton, adding, 'It wasn't to look for any particular favors from anyone.'"

As many of you know today is my last day at the White House. I wanted to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all of you for all that you have done to make this extraordinary experience so enjoyable. Working with all of you and serving the President has been the most incredible and rewarding professional experience of my life. Every day I have worked here, I have been reminded of what a rare and special privilege it is to serve in this place and to assist the President and his staff in carrying out their awesome responsibility to the Nation.

Best wishes to all of you in your continued service to President Bush, and for all the challenges that lie ahead.

A terrible court choice

A Times Editorial

While high-profile battles rage in the Senate over some of President Bush's more controversial nominees to the federal appellate bench, less attention is being paid to his district court picks. One, James Leon Holmes, an attorney in private practice in Arkansas, is particularly worrisome. The choice of Holmes is further evidence that Bush is trying to pack the courts with conservative ideologues.

Holmes, a former president of Arkansas Right to Life, is a man whose view of the world is so dated and backward that he shouldn't be put in charge of a classroom, much less a federal district courtroom. He questions the basic premise of gender equality. In a 1997 article he co-wrote with his wife, Holmes states that the Bible dictates a subordinate role for wives, saying "the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." He writes that choosing any other way is "distorting the relationship between male and female" and "is as sacrilegious as profaning any of the other sacraments."

The article excoriates modern feminism, charging that it has brought society "artificial contraception and abortion on demand with recognition of homosexual liaisons soon to follow."

"No matter how often we condemn abortion," Holmes writes, "to the extent we adopt the feminist principle that the distinction between the sexes is of no consequence and should be disregarded in the organization of society . . . we are contributing to the culture of death."

In other writings Holmes has equated abortion rights supporters with Nazis, and he dismissed concerns over the impact of a total ban on abortion on rape victims with the inaccurate and compassionless assertion that "conceptions from rape occur with approximately the same frequency as snowfall in Miami." He has said since he regrets that comment.

This is the man Bush has plucked from obscurity to elevate to the federal bench. Senate Democrats may not have handled every judicial nomination fairly, but in some cases Bush has gone out of his way to find some of the most narrow-minded, extreme thinkers on the political right to place in judicial lifetime appointments.

Holmes' twisted notions of women's equality are out of step with constitutional law and modern thinking. He shouldn't be given a chance to impose his rigid moralism for the rest of his life from the bench.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections. At all times, you should contact the Counsel's Office if you have any questions about appropriate political activity. You also should keep in mind, as always, that appearance and propriety issues can occasionally arise even with respect to perfectly lawful activity. Finally, the Chief of Staff has asked me to remind you that the decision whether to engage in political activity or make contributions to political entities or campaigns, including with respect to the re-election campaign of the President, is a personal matter for each employee and that no one is under any obligation to engage in such activity.

Basic Rules and Policies

The basic rules and policies you should follow with respect to your political activity are straightforward. You are permitted to engage in a variety of political activity, as detailed more fully below, subject to certain important restrictions:

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly permit your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. (If your title is used by others inadvertently and without your knowledge, you should contact the Counsel's Office promptly about appropriate steps to take.) You also may not use your official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.

- Second, you may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not personally solicit contributions. But you should always clear such activity with the Office of Political Affairs and the Counsel's Office before accepting an invitation to be a guest speaker at a fundraiser.

On-Duty and On-Site Activity

All employees are responsible at all times for performing their official duties and responsibilities. White House employees whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post also are permitted by law to engage while on duty and in the office in otherwise permitted political activity, such as meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. (Note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.) However, any such political activity should be limited so that it is not inconsistent with official duties or otherwise inappropriate. In addition, any non-incidental costs that the government would not have incurred but for any political activity should be paid or reimbursed by a political entity. Finally, detailees are not permitted to engage in political activity while on duty and in their offices, but may do so off duty and off site.

It is important to note that certain White House employees may be required in the performance of their official duties to assist or accompany the President, the Vice President, the First Lady, Mrs. Cheney, or others with respect to political activity. This may entail, for example, duties related to security, scheduling, advance, or communications, among other duties. Such assistance is permissible and appropriate.

Travel and Costs

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

The issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity. Also, White House cars ordinarily should not be used for transportation to political events except as necessary for security purposes or to accompany the President, Vice President, First Lady, or Mrs. Cheney.

With respect to office equipment, your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity for those uses of equipment that can incur non-incidental additional charges (primarily from paper and long-distance costs). As appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices by the Office of Management and Administration.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions discussed above, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
- being a member of a political party;
- serving as an officer of a political party;
- attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
- participating in a political convention or rally; and
- serving as a delegate to a political convention.

- participation in political campaigns, which includes:

- canvassing for votes;

    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;

    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and

    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

- participation in elections, including:

    - voting; and

    - driving voters to polling places.

- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

    You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, you may:

    - make lawful political contributions;

- attend political fundraisers;

    - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);

    - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with the legal requirements of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;

    - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list your official title; and

    - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Employees of the Vice President

Employees of the Vice President (and especially those whose salary is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate) should consult the Counsel to the Vice President regarding political activity or contributions.

Conclusion

Above all, please remember that we are all employees of the President or Vice President and that our performance reflects upon them. All of us must comply with applicable laws and regulations, and must also comply with the high ethical standards they have set for us.

Subject: specific HSC/WHO staff name & travel info shld not be included in public OA QFR responses

Thanks Jen. I think you're focused on exactly the two right issues. We (HSC) discussed this last night and this morning, including Faisal Gill (who has the HSC lead on reviewing the HSC/OHS-related questions), Michael Allen (WH leg affairs) and Kate Anderson (who's reviewed a number of these types of responses in her 5+ years at OA counsel's office prior to coming to HSC).

Kate agrees that this level of staff name and travel information has not been provided before. The primary concern is that, since these responses have routinely become incorporated in public documents by the committee, in the post-9/11 world there are obvious issues associated with making staff and travel identification (some of which appears to relate to travel to undisclosed locations) so widely, anonymously (in contrast to agency FOIA requests) and readily available e.g. to hostile internet surfers in distant caves. I would say that the consensus HSC view is that the detailed info as to specific NAMES and TRAVEL of HSC/EOP staff shld NOT be incorporated in the 166 page doc & charts slated to go to the committee on Monday. That information shld be formatted to provide info that is responsive but much more general and limited. If the committee follows up with a request for specific names and more travel details, e.g., then we can attempt to reach an accommodation such as by permitting them to inspect such lists, or providing it in a separate, confidential, non-public form.

I'm happy to discuss this further, but am about to depart for New Haven so wld have to do so via cell. In the alternative, w/ me on the road you are welcome to coordinate w/ Kate and Faisal here (or Michael Allen as to leg affairs). You also have my proxy Jen to consider our views and advise OA as to what you conclude is the best course here.

Thanks -- E.

Subject: OA questions

I defer to the two of you on whether it is appropriate to include in the OA responses the detailed salary information with the name of the individual earning the salary; as well as the detailed travel breakdown by position and trip. From my review of old testimony it appears that detailed travel information has been provided in the past for President & First Lady -- but not previously requested for specific agencies within the EOP. Perhaps we should have a quick call among the three of us to discuss?

Pickering says his father's fight for post bigger than one person

By Matt Volz

The Associated Press

U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering says his father, Judge Charles W. Pickering, is feeling the strain of his controversial judicial nomination, but that the principle of winning the battle outweighs personal considerations.

"In many ways, it's larger than him," Pickering said on Thursday. "It is about standing up to those groups who would make false charges, false allegations, that would misuse race to divide us."

Charles Pickering, a federal district judge in Hattiesburg, was voted down for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year in a U.S. Senate committee after strong opposition by groups who criticized his civil rights record, including a 1994 case in which he sought leniency for a cross burner. President Bush re-nominated him in January.

Since then, Democrats have filibustered two of Bush's judicial nominees — Texas Judge Priscilla Owen and Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada — and have promised more if divisive nominees come to the Senate floor.

Chip Pickering said the Senate could take up his father's nomination as early as June. He said allies in the Senate have been approaching senators in efforts to form a filibuster-busting coalition if the same tactic is used for his father.

"To give in to those who would use such destructive methods and tactics would encourage more of it, which could hurt not only his confirmation, but others'," he said.

Charles Pickering, who turned 65 on Thursday, said he could not comment on the confirmation process.

Chip Pickering was in Jackson on Thursday to present employee of the year awards at Mississippi Industries for the Blind. Afterward, he responded to reports that to gain support of Mississippi's black leaders, he said his father's replacement in Hattiesburg would be state Judge Johnny Williams, who is black.

Pickering said he has discussed his father's replacement with Sens. Thad Cochran and Trent Lott, R-Miss., and with White House officials. He said Williams' name has been mentioned along with others who are white, black and Hispanic.

He declined to name others he recommended for the post, but said he would be in favor of a minority.

"One of the concerns raised by some was lack of diversity on the 5th Circuit," Pickering said.

Pickering said he is still courting black leaders to endorse his father.

State Rep. David Green, D-Gloster, a member of the Mississippi Legislative Black Caucus, said Thursday he endorsed Charles Pickering in a video to be played to the U.S. Senate.

Green said his endorsement was made with no consideration of who would replace Pickering, although he said he would like to see a black judge in Hattiesburg.

"The only message that I gave was simply that Judge Pickering should be given an opportunity to serve on the Fifth Circuit," Green said Thursday.

The majority of the 45-member Mississippi Legislative Black Caucus is opposed to Charles Pickering's nomination. Philip West, D-Natchez, the chairman of the caucus, has also endorsed Pickering.

U.S. Rep. Chip Pickering says his father, Judge Charles W. Pickering, is feeling the strain of his controversial judicial nomination, but that the principle of winning the battle outweighs personal considerations.
"In many ways, it's larger than him," Pickering said on Thursday. "It is about standing up to those groups who would make false charges, false allegations, that would misuse race to divide us."
Charles Pickering, a federal district judge in Hattiesburg, was voted down for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year in a U.S. Senate committee after strong opposition by groups who criticized his civil rights record, including a 1994 case in which he sought leniency for a cross burner. President Bush re-nominated him in January.
Since then, Democrats have filibustered two of Bush's judicial nominees * Texas Judge Priscilla Owen and Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada * and have promised more if divisive nominees come to the Senate floor.
Chip Pickering said the Senate could take up his father's nomination as early as June. He said allies in the Senate have been approaching senators in efforts to form a filibuster-busting coalition if the same tactic is used for his father.
"To give in to those who would use such destructive methods and tactics would encourage more of it, which could hurt not only his confirmation, but others'," he said.

Charles Pickering, who turned 65 on Thursday, said he could not comment on the confirmation process.
Chip Pickering was in Jackson on Thursday to present employee of the year awards at Mississippi Industries for the Blind. Afterward, he responded to reports that to gain support of Mississippi's black leaders, he said his father's replacement in Hattiesburg would be state Judge Johnny Williams, who is black.
Pickering said he has discussed his father's replacement with Sens. Thad Cochran and Trent Lott, R-Miss., and with White House officials. He said Williams' name has been mentioned along with others who are white, black and Hispanic.
He declined to name others he recommended for the post, but said he would be in favor of a minority.
"One of the concerns raised by some was lack of diversity on the 5th Circuit," Pickering said.
Pickering said he is still courting black leaders to endorse his father.
State Rep. David Green, D-Gloster, a member of the Mississippi Legislative Black Caucus, said Thursday he endorsed Charles Pickering in a video to be played to the U.S. Senate.
Green said his endorsement was made with no consideration of who would replace Pickering, although he said he would like to see a black judge in Hattiesburg.
"The only message that I gave was simply that Judge Pickering should be given an opportunity to serve on the Fifth Circuit," Green said Thursday.
The majority of the 45-member Mississippi Legislative Black Caucus is opposed to Charles Pickering's nomination. Philip West, D-Natchez, the chairman of the caucus, has also endorsed Pickering.

As many of you know today is my last day at the White House. I wanted to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all of you for all that you have done to make this extraordinary experience so enjoyable. Working with all of you and serving the President has been the most incredible and rewarding professional experience of my life. Every day I have worked here, I have been reminded of what a rare and special privilege it is to serve in this place and to assist the President and his staff in carrying out their awesome responsibility to the Nation.

Best wishes to all of you in your continued service to President Bush, and for all the challenges that lie ahead.

Sincerely yours,

DT

According to the Supreme Court's public calendar, the last currently announced session day is Monday, June 23. The last conference scheduled is Thursday, June 26. (See http://www.supremecourtus.gov/oral_arguments/courtcalendar.pdf.)

Do you have any sense of whether the Court is likely to add more session days after June 23 or June 26? Any chance that the real last day will be, for example, Monday, June 30?

I'm asking because I am trying to schedule some things for the office, but want to be cognizant of possible chaos due to a last-day-of-the-Term retirement announcement.

UNDER THE DOME Edwards weighs in on FCC
Raleigh News & Observer
May 30, 2003

U.S. Sen. John Edwards has added his voice to the chorus of those seeking to stop the Federal Communications Commission from relaxing rules on media ownership.

The FCC is expected to vote Monday on a package of rule changes, including one that would raise the cap on the number of local TV stations that can be owned by large media companies.

"Diversity in the media is enormously important to our democracy," Edwards said in a letter to FCC Chairman Michael Powell and the four other panel members. "Americans should have choices in the music they can hear and the television programs they can watch."

Edwards, who has emphasized his rural roots in his White House run, argued that increased network ownership could jeopardize local programming.

U.S. Rep. Richard Burr, a Winston-Salem Republican, and U.S. Rep. David Price, a Chapel Hill Democrat, are pushing legislation to overturn the expected FCC decision. Elizabeth Dole is a co-sponsor of a similar bill in the Senate.

Jones assails ruling

U.S. Rep. Walter Jones, a Farmville Republican, is trying to protect pre-supper prayer in the nation's military schools.

In a letter this week to President Bush, Jones says he was "disappointed and outraged" upon learning of a court ruling last month that saying grace at the Virginia Military Institute violated First Amendment protections.

Jones is urging Bush to sign an executive order to allow nondenominational activity to continue.

"By virtue of educations rooted in the principles of our Founding Fathers and steeped in the traditions of our great military services, our future officers gained respect for God and country," Jones wrote. "Now one of those traditions, the act of community prayer before meals ... , is under serious attack from groups like the ACLU."

Dole, Duncan lunch

U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Dole had lunch Thursday in Raleigh with Allyson Duncan, a lawyer with Kilpatrick Stockton and one of President Bush's two North Carolina nominees to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Duncan's nomination, made last month, has become intertwined with that of U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle, whom Bush first nominated in May 2001 but whose fortunes have stalled because Edwards has not yet returned the "blue slip" that home senators must sign before hearings will proceed. Edwards has urged the nomination of Duncan to move ahead, which could lead to her appointment sooner than Boyle's.

Dole spokeswoman Mary Brown Brewer said Thursday that the senator's lunch with Duncan on Thursday was in no way a sign that Dole wants Duncan appointed first. Dole supports both nominees, Brewer said.
Still, Dole and Duncan have something in common, Brewer said: Dole was the first woman elected to the Senate from North Carolina, and Duncan would be the first black woman appointed to the 4th Circuit.

No good sense of that at this point.

According to the Supreme Court's public calendar, the last currently announced session day is Monday, June 23. The last conference scheduled is Thursday, June 26. (See http://www.supremecourtus.gov/oral_arguments/courtcalendar.pdf.)

Do you have any sense of whether the Court is likely to add more session days after June 23 or June 26? Any chance that the real last day will be, for example, Monday, June 30?

I'm asking because I am trying to schedule some things for the office, but want to be cognizant of possible chaos due to a last-day-of-the-Term retirement announcement.

From the President's Weekend Remarks

-Today we are striving for a world in which men and women can live in freedom and peace, instead of in fear and chaos - and every civilized nation has a stake in the outcome.

-NATO must show resolve and foresight to act beyond Europe, and it has begun to do so. NATO has agreed to lead security forces in Afghanistan, and to support our Polish allies in Iraq.

-Armed force is always a last resort, and Americans know that terrorism is -In Africa and elsewhere, America is committed to a $15 billion effort to prevent and treat AIDS. The President urges our partners in Europe to make a

-The President has proposed an emergency famine fund. Europe can help in this effort, with emergency policies that discourage African farmers from using safe biotechnology.

-The President has also proposed a 50 percent increase in America's core development assistance. This aid will not go to corrupt elites, but to Subject: Questions re possible Supreme Court retirement(s)

Dear Brett,

Thus is to supplement the two telephone messages I have left you today and last Tuesday.

I hope that you can provide me with guidance--off the record, if you prefer--for a piece that I am writing on the possibility of one or more Supreme Court retirements.

The most important of my questions are whether you can confirm, deny, comment on, or provide off-the-record guidance with respect to (1) accounts I have heard of a recent meeting at Jones, Day at which you and other White House officials consulted with veterans of past Supreme Court nomination battles, and (2) the following passage, which I have drafted for inclusion in my piece:

It seems fairly probable that none of the justices will retire this year.

The main reason is that the two on whom retirement rumors have focused--Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor--must be well aware that the White House would prefer that they stay on until after the 2004 election.

President Bush must focus his political capital in the coming months on the Middle East peace talks, Iraq, and other pressing international affairs. A confirmation battle now would be an unwelcome distraction. In addition, White House officials are said by knowledgable sources to believe--as do independent political analysts including my colleague Charlie Cook--that any confirmation battle would create unnecessary risks for the President's reelection prospects.

Rehnquist and O'Connor could have learned of the President's desire that they stay on through their social networks, which include many Republicans well-connected with the White House. Some insiders also suggest that Bush and Rehnquist may have discussed the matter directly, perhaps when they met at Rehnquist's initiative last December 20 to discuss judicial salaries.

The main basis for media speculation about retirements has been past indications by Rehnquist and O'Connor that they would prefer to be replaced by a Republican president. If the Republican president wants them to stay, why would they go?

Neither is known to have debilitating health problems, to be weary of the power and glory, or to be hard-pressed handling the Court's caseload, which is about half what it was before Rehnquist was elevated to Chief Justice in 1986.

Sincerely, Stuart

Double Standard Filibuster

By Alberto R. Gonzales

Today John Roberts will take the oath of office to become a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. He is an excellent example of the kind of person President Bush has nominated to the federal appeals courts. Roberts has been a well-respected lawyer in Washington, principal deputy solicitor general of the United States, associate counsel to President Reagan and law clerk to then-Justice William Rehnquist. He has argued 39 cases before the Supreme Court and is widely recognized as one of the best appellate lawyers in America. He is a person of great integrity with wide bipartisan support, and the American Bar Association unanimously rated him well qualified. Roberts will be a distinguished judge on the D.C. Circuit.

The Senate voted unanimously on May 8 to confirm Roberts to the D.C. Circuit. That vote is noteworthy for two reasons, however, both of which demonstrate the serious breakdown in the Senate confirmation process for federal appeals court nominees.

First, the long road from Roberts's nomination to his confirmation vote is impossible to defend. Roberts was first nominated to the D.C. Circuit more than 11 years ago, in January 1992, but did not receive a hearing before the end of President George H.W. Bush's term. President George W. Bush then nominated Roberts on May 9, 2001, shortly after taking office. But the Senate Judiciary Committee did not hold a hearing on the nomination during the last Congress, even though no serious objections were lodged against Roberts. President Bush then re-nominated him on Jan. 7, 2003. Finally, after two hearings this year, Roberts received his Senate vote, on May 8.It was unanimous, which makes the many years of delay all the more difficult to explain and justify.

The Senate's delays and denials of votes on appeals court nominees -- which have been far too common in recent administrations -- flout the intention of the Constitution and the tradition of the Senate. No judicial nominee should ever have to wait years for a vote in the Senate. These delays leave judicial vacancies unfilled and thus prevent the federal courts from doing their jobs for the American people. The delays and uncertainty also threaten to deter the best and brightest from seeking judicial service. The Senate should fulfill its constitutional responsibility and ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down vote within a reasonable time after nomination.

Second, the confirmation of John Roberts also dramatically exposes the double standard being applied by Senate Democrats to the president's other D.C. Circuit nominee, Miguel Estrada. The career records of Roberts and Estrada are strikingly similar. Both were unanimously rated well-qualified by the American Bar Association. Both have argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court, including as attorneys in the solicitor general's office. Both have devoted large portions of their legal careers to public service and also been partners at major Washington law firms. Both have clerked for Supreme Court justices. Both have the strong support of prominent Democratic attorneys who served in high-ranking positions in the Clinton administration. Neither has served previously as a judge or a professor, and therefore neither has written widely about his personal views on legal issues. Both have served instead as superb, well-respected and fair-minded lawyers for public and private clients throughout their careers.

Despite the great similarities between Roberts and Estrada, 45 Senate Democrats have treated them very differently. Senate Democrats never requested confidential case memoranda written by Roberts from his time in the solicitor general's office. Yet they are insisting on reviewing memoranda written by Estrada in the solicitor general's office, as a condition of ending a four-month filibuster of his nomination. Consistent with judicial independence and the traditional practice of judicial nominees, Senate Democrats also did not demand that Roberts answer questions about his personal views on legal and policy issues before they voted on him. Yet these senators are apparently demanding that Estrada answer such questions as a condition of ending the filibuster.

The 45 Senate Democrats who are filibustering Estrada's nomination are applying a double standard. There is no rational or legitimate justification for the disparate treatment of Roberts and Estrada -- particularly for the use of an extreme and unprecedented filibuster against Estrada, who would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit and has the clear support of a majority of senators. The president has asked that the Senate Democrats halt the filibuster, stop the delays and allow an up-or-down vote on Estrada. As the president has said, let each senator vote as he or she thinks best, but end the double standard and give the man a vote.

The writer is counsel to the president.

Carrie,

I have interofficed you a packet regarding the information below:

Recently, IGA received a request for Reuben Barrales to be the keynote speaker at the Western Riverside (California) Council of Governments event on July 17, 2003, noting in their invitation that they believed the President would participate via satellite. Our office has no records of this invitation nor of this group.

When IGA asked the group why they were under the impression the President would participate, the group faxed in a fake acceptance letter (we don't know whether it was created by this group or by someone else). As you will see, this letter has the Presidential Seal and claims to be the President's stationery. The letter came from a Gregory Hamilton, which our office has no record of. It was cc'd to Noelia Rodriguez in Mrs. Bush's Press Office, however, she has never seen the letter nor heard of the group.

Brad asked that we send it to your office to handle. We have not received an official invitation so we won't be responding to the group, and IGA has already regretted for Reuben.

Thanks for your help. Let me know if you have any questions after receiving the packet.

HIGH COURT NOMINATIONS MAY HINGE ON FILIBUSTER DEBATE
SENATE IS DIVIDED ON CONSTITUTIONALITY

BYLINE: By Lyle Denniston, Globe Correspondent

BODY:
WASHINGTON - Talk of a possible vacancy on the Supreme Court is rising with the arrival of June and the last month of the current term. If there is an opening, however, a nominee's fate may depend on what happens to the filibuster rule in the Senate, now under siege.

A filibuster, one of the Senate's most cherished eccentricities, is a debate that can go on and on - a blocking maneuver that works simply because it is so hard to stop in a closely divided Senate. This year, its use against lower court nominations has run on for months.

The continuing slowdown on two conservative nominees is widely regarded as a rehearsal for coming battles if a Supreme Court justice retires and President Bush picks a controversial replacement.

Aware of that prospect, and frustrated by the current filibuster, President Bush last month complained that "we are facing a crisis in the Senate, and therefore a crisis in our judiciary."

But the Democratic leader in the Senate, Tom Daschle of South Dakota, has said there is no crisis and there is nothing wrong with the filibuster rule. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it," he said in May.

The precedent for filibustering judicial nominations was set in 1968 when Republican senators thwarted the Democratic nomination of Justice Abe Fortas to become chief justice. The technique was not renewed on judgeships until this year, when Democrats brought it back to try to head off two of Bush's nominees to federal appeals courts - Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

As the Supreme Court's future is pondered, the filibuster looms large in the background.

The filibuster is now under fierce challenge in all three branches of government. The most drastic form of a challenge would involve a ruling from the Senate chair, occupied for the occasion by Vice President Dick Cheney, that filibusters no longer can be used against judicial nominees - a simple, unmistakable display of power that could leave the Democratic minority with no option but to stall virtually all Senate business.

"It is not called the nuclear option for nothing," said Elliot M. Mincberg, legal director of People for the American Way, a liberal group that supports the current filibustering.

This is not something that either Republican or Democratic senators are actively talking about in public, because it looks drastic in the gentle-mannered Senate. But lobbyists seem preoccupied with it these days.

Supporters of the option, like conservative legal advocate Jay Alan Sekulow of the American Center for Law and Justice, prefer to call it "the constitutional option." They argue that filibusters aimed at judicial nominations are unconstitutional, and their option would simply restore majority rule on those nominations.

Short of that option, there are other challenges building. The president, reaching deep into the Senate's own affairs, has suggested that the chamber speed up its process on judgeships. The Senate's own Republican leadership is seeking to weaken the filibuster rule.

The rule is also under assault from a number of conservative activist groups. And among academics, there is a continuing debate whether the filibuster is unconstitutional. The Senate will begin formal study of all of the options on Thursday, when its Rules Committee holds an afternoon hearing.

One conservative group, Judicial Watch - a legal advocacy organization that in nine years of existence has brought suit more than 100 times, mainly against the government - has filed a lawsuit claiming that the filibuster of judgeship nominees is unconstitutional.

Judicial Watch asked the US District Court to strike down the filibuster rule and order the Senate and its officers to let the two pending appeals court nominations come to a final vote - one that would ensure the nominees' confirmation.

In a rare display of agreement on the emotionally charged subject of filibusters, the Senate last month voted unanimously and without debate to defend itself against that lawsuit.

At this point, however, it is unclear what the Senate's defense will be. Some freshman Senate Republicans have talked publicly about pursuing the constitutional claim in court themselves, so there may be some resistance to mounting a legal argument that the issue is none of the courts' business. The Senate Legal Counsel will begin framing a defense shortly.

Each of the several options has its critics, but there is no consensus yet that all of them ultimately will fail.

The new rumbling over the filibuster can be traced to simple numbers: the 100-member Senate is divided 51-49, with Republicans holding control. The filibuster this year has taken that control away from them on at least two court nominations.

Senate Rule 22, the filibuster rule, requires 60 votes, not a majority of 51, to stop a filibuster and let the Senate proceed to a final vote. That means that if 41 senators want to keep a filibuster going, it can't be stopped because 59 opposing votes would not be enough.

Although changing the Senate rules ordinarily would require only a simple majority of 51 votes, a proposed change can itself be filibustered, and another Senate rule says it takes 67 votes (not 60) to end a filibuster against a rule change. That means 34 senators can block a rule change even if 66 want it.

Senate rules would have to be changed to adopt President Bush's suggestion for a more rapid timetable of Senate review of judicial nominees or to approve a Senate GOP leaders' proposal to reduce in steps the votes required to shut off a filibuster, from 60 to 51. Both ideas, if they make it to the Senate floor, would be subject to filibuster.

Thus, two out of three options now being discussed may be in for a seemingly endless struggle. Advocates on opposite sides of the filibuster controversy, like Mincberg and Sekulow, agreed that the two options suggested by Bush and Senate GOP leaders could be doomed.

That is what has brought on talk of the third option. It would work this way: Republicans would raise a parliamentary point that Rule 22 does not apply at all to judicial nominations, and so a majority of 51 prevails.

Brett -- based on your suggested language, how does this look? Like you, I prefer to use "public outreach" or "building public support" as instead of "lobbying."

I think the American people recognize one of the most important responsibilities of a President has always been to reach out to the American people to build public support for his agenda and priorities.

The Department of Justice under President's of both parties has consistently interpreted that such riders and prohibitions do not apply to efforts by President's and presidential aides to build public support for his congressional agenda.

The Justice Department concluded in an April 14, 1995, legal memorandum, for example, that restrictions on Executive Branch public outreach activity do not apply to activities "personally undertaken by the President, his aides and assistants within the Executive Office of the President, the Vice President, cabinet members within their areas of responsibility, and other Senate-confirmed officials appointed by the President within their areas of responsibility."

It is traditional and appropriate for Presidents and their aides to explain the President's agenda and proposals to members of the public and to seek support for that agenda in Congress. The Department of Justice under Presidents of both parties has consistently interpreted so-called "anti-lobbying" riders and prohibitions not to apply to efforts by Presidents and their close aides to explain the President's agenda to the Congress and the public and to seek the public's support with Congress. The Department concluded in an April 14, 1995, legal memorandum, for example, that restrictions on Executive Branch lobbying activity do not apply to activities "personally undertaken by the President, his aides and assistants within the Executive Office of the President, the Vice President, cabinet members within their areas of responsibility, and other Senate-confirmed officials appointed by the President within their areas of responsibility."

It was the latest in a recent spate of Air Force One visits to states where senators are resisting Bush's program. But the president's personal interventions came only after persistent coordination between the White House and top employers in those states aimed at bending key senators to their wills, according to senators, congressional aides and business lobbyists.

"We've done ads, we've done mailings," said John J. Castellani, president of The Business Roundtable, an influential group of top executives, many of them major employers in crucial states. "We've had visits in the states. We've had meetings, written op-eds. The only thing we haven't done is a prayer breakfast."

Working through its political office and its office of business liaison, the White House has contacted local business leaders either directly or through national business groups to get them to lobby their senators on behalf of Bush's tax cuts. Among senators who said they'd been lobbied this way are Nelson, Max Baucus, D-Mont., Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, and George Voinovich, R-Ohio. Other targets include Sens. Mary Landrieu, D-La., and Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark.

Brett -- based on your suggested language, how does this look? Like you, I prefer to use "public outreach" or "building public support" as instead of "lobbying."

I think the American people recognize one of the most important responsibilities of a President has always been to reach out to the American people to build public support for his agenda and priorities.

The Department of Justice under President's of both parties has consistently interpreted that such riders and prohibitions do not apply to efforts by President's and presidential aides to build public support for his congressional agenda.

The Justice Department concluded in an April 14, 1995, legal memorandum, for example, that restrictions on Executive Branch public outreach activity do not apply to activities "personally undertaken by the President, his aides and assistants within the Executive Office of the President, the Vice President, cabinet members within their areas of responsibility, and other Senate-confirmed officials appointed by the President within their areas of responsibility."

It is traditional and appropriate for Presidents and their aides to explain the President's agenda and proposals to members of the public and to seek support for that agenda in Congress. The Department of Justice under Presidents of both parties has consistently interpreted so-called "anti-lobbying" riders and prohibitions not to apply to efforts by Presidents and their close aides to explain the President's agenda to the Congress and the public and to seek the public's support with Congress. The Department concluded in an April 14, 1995, legal memorandum, for example, that restrictions on Executive Branch lobbying activity do not apply to activities "personally undertaken by the President, his aides and assistants within the Executive Office of the President, the Vice President, cabinet members within their areas of responsibility, and other Senate-confirmed officials appointed by the President within their areas of responsibility."

Brett:

I wonder whether this clear and conspicuous notice would be a legally acceptable (FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3), but politically friendlier, and useable with respect to all Federal candidates without any need to change text, alternative:

"Any solicitation by a Federal officeholder at this event seeks only federally permissible funds, that is, up to $2000 per candidate per election from an individual's own funds, and no funds from a corporation, labor organization or minor."

Also, is it our view that this disclaimer on the invitation-and-reply-device is satisfactory under FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3 -- or is it necessary to have this disclaimer on a display-board-and-easel at the event -- given that FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3 speaks of a written notice "displayed" at a state candidate fundraising event.

Dole and judges

If this sounds familiar, stop me. North Carolina's junior senator is complaining that North Carolina's senior is blocking federal judgeships from being approved.

That was the common complaint made by Democrat John Edwards against Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, who he noted was using his powers as a home-state senator to block Democratic judges in the Clinton administration.

Now Sen. Elizabeth Dole is making the same complaint about Edwards.

"The senior senator from North Carolina is blocking Terry Boyle from even getting a hearing," Dole told the state GOP convention over the weekend. "We are sick and tired of obstructionism."

President Bush has nominated Boyle, a federal judge from Elizabeth City, to a seat on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"Please send me a fellow Republican," Dole said. "We need Richard Burr." She was referring to the Winston-Salem congressman who is expected to run for Edwards' seat next year.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, June 03, 2003

KEY POINTS: FROM THE G-8 SUMMIT

President Bush went to the G-8 Summit in Evian, France to encourage cooperation on key global priorities: spurring economic growth; combating terrorism; preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; and promoting prosperity in the developing world.

*Combating HIV/AIDS
? President Bush's new initiative for 5-year, $15 billion Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief triples U.S. spending on combating HIV/AIDS. The President urged other G-8 leaders to make similar commitments.

*MCA - The President discussed his pledge of $1.3 billion in 2004 to assist countries with sound development policies. This new plan for linking development assistance to policies is known as the Millennium Challenge Account initiative, and U.S. funding levels will increase to $5 billion annually by 2006.

*Famine Relief - President Bush called for urgent action to address famine, in particular to assist the 38 million people at risk of starving in Sub-Saharan Africa. America is the world's leading donor to the UN World Food Program. The President urged his European partners to reconsider policies that discourage African farmers from using safe biotechnology to increase agricultural productivity.

*Increasing Trade - The President called on all countries to contribute to the goal of opening global markets and increasing prosperity through free trade, pointing out how the U.S. increased its share of Sub-Saharan exports from 1996 to 2001.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***
President Bush meets with leaders from the region, Sharm el Sheikh, Egypt

MASS GRAVES

Many mass grave sites have been identified in Iraq, providing further evidence of Saddam Hussein's atrocities against the Iraqi people. The Coalition is working to help grieving families search for lost relatives and preserve evidence for future prosecutions by the new Iraqi government against the perpetrators. Some activities include:

*A team of U.S. forensic experts has arrived to assess the sites and determine security needs. They will work with other Coalition assessment teams.

*To strike the delicate balance between the interests of families searching for loved ones and broader justice issues, ORHA is working with local leaders where digging has already begun to coordinate the process; providing security at sites where digging has not begun; and sending forensic teams to conduct exhumations of grave sites.

*ORHA will work with existing Iraqi organizations to establish an Iraqi Committee on Missing Persons (ICMP). It will collect the records of Iraqis who have disappeared and compile a national database to integrate the information with findings of the forensic investigative teams.

*Prosecution of crimes against humanity committed by the former regime will be conducted through an Iraqi-led process assisted and supported by the international community as needed.

*To ensure that prosecutors have access to evidence, ORHA will form an evidence coordination team. The team will create centralized and systematic warehouses for the storage, documentation and preservation of evidence.

KEY QUOTE

"America and Europe are called to advance the cause of freedom and peace, and these two commitments are inseparable. It is human rights and private property, the rule of law and free trade and political openness that undermine the appeal of extremism and create the stable environment that peace requires. We are determined to demonstrate the power of these ideals in the reconstruction of Afghanistan and Iraq. And these ideals will provide the foundation for a reformed and peaceful and independent Palestinian state."

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

All Times Eastern Daylight. Subject to Change

President Bush meets with leaders from the region, Sharm el Sheikh, Egypt

MASS GRAVES

Many mass grave sites have been identified in Iraq, providing further evidence of Saddam Hussein's atrocities against the Iraqi people. The Coalition is working to help grieving families search for lost relatives and preserve evidence for future prosecutions by the new Iraqi government against the perpetrators. Some activities include:

- A team of U.S. forensic experts has arrived to assess the sites and determine security needs. They will work with other Coalition assessment teams.
- To strike the delicate balance between the interests of families searching for loved ones and broader justice issues, ORHA is working with local leaders where digging has already begun to coordinate the process; providing security at sites where digging has not begun; and sending forensic teams to conduct exhumations of grave sites.
- ORHA will work with existing Iraqi organizations to establish an Iraqi Committee on Missing Persons (ICMP). It will collect the records of Iraqis who have disappeared and compile a national database to integrate the information with findings of the forensic investigative teams.
- Prosecution of crimes against humanity committed by the former regime will be conducted through an Iraqi-led process assisted and supported by the international community as needed.
- To ensure that prosecutors have access to evidence, ORHA will form an evidence coordination team. The team will create centralized and systematic warehouses for the storage, documentation and preservation of evidence.

KEY POINTS: FROM THE G-8 SUMMIT

President Bush went to the G-8 Summit in Evian, France to encourage cooperation on key global priorities: spurring economic growth; combating terrorism; preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; and promoting prosperity in the developing world.

- Combating HIV/AIDS – President Bush's new initiative for 5-year, $15 billion Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief triples U.S. spending on combating HIV/AIDS. The President urged other G-8 leaders to make similar commitments.
- MCA – The President discussed his pledge of $1.3 billion in 2004 to assist countries with sound development policies. This new plan for linking development assistance to policies is known as the Millennium Challenge Account initiative, and U.S. funding levels will increase to $5 billion annually by 2006.
- Famine Relief – President Bush called for urgent action to address famine, in particular to assist the 38 million people at risk of starving in Sub-Saharan Africa. America is the world's leading donor to the UN World Food Program. The President urged his European partners to reconsider policies that discourage African farmers from using safe biotechnology to increase agricultural productivity.
- Increasing Trade – The President called on all countries to contribute to the goal of opening global markets and increasing prosperity through free trade, pointing out how the U.S. increased its share of Sub-Saharan exports from 1996 to 2001.

KEY QUOTE

I had envisioned the disclaimer to be printed on the event's program, rather than on the invitation and reply card. That way, it would be "at" the event. Brett, did you have a different thought? If it were on the program, I think it would satisfy the standard articulated in the FEC Adv. Op., particularly since the printed disclaimer is intended to serve as a safety precaution, since it is my understanding that neither the President nor the Vice President makes a practice of soliciting donations at these events. But I'd like to hear Brett's view and also whether Charlie Spies concurs.

Brett:

I wonder whether this clear and conspicuous notice would be a legally acceptable (FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3), but politically friendlier, and useable with respect to all Federal candidates without any need to change text, alternative:

"Any solicitation by a Federal officeholder at this event seeks only federally permissible funds, that is, up to $2000 per candidate per election from an individual's own funds, and no funds from a corporation, labor organization or minor."

Also, is it our view that this disclaimer on the invitation-and-reply-device is satisfactory under FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3 -- or is it necessary to have this disclaimer on a display-board-and-easel at the event -- given that FEC Adv. Op. 2003-3 speaks of a written notice "displayed" at a state candidate fundraising event.

SHOW: CNN WOLF BLITZER REPORTS 17:00
June 2, 2003 Monday
Transcript # 060200CN.V67

SECTION: News; International

LENGTH: 7401 words

HEADLINE: Rudolph Refuses to Enter Plea; Bush Arrives in Egypt

GUESTS: Brad Berenson, Anthony Romero

BYLINE: Wolf Blitzer, Brian Cabell, Gary Tuchman, Art Harris, Dana Bash, Jeffrey Toobin, Jamie McIntyre, Kelli Arena, Bob Franken, Richard Quest

HIGHLIGHT:
Bombing suspect Eric Rudolph refuseed to enter a plea today in court. Also, the president arrived in Egypt to begin his peace summit.

BLITZER: Joining us to talk more about this inspector general report from the Justice Department, Brad Berenson. He is a former White House counsel in the Bush administration. And the executive director of the ACLU Anthony Romero. Thanks to both of you very much.

First to you, Brad, this is pretty embarrassing stuff for the Bush administration that you guys, your former official in the White House have to now defend this behavior right after 9/11.

BRAD BERENSON, FORMER ASSOCIATE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL: Well, I actually don't agree that this is a significant embarrassment for the administration. None of the conduct in this report was illegal. The report in fact confirms that the office of Legal Counsel and the Justice Department blessed all the things that were matters of policy. As for the physical and verbal abuse, that was not a matter of policy. That was a few isolated instances of misconduct by individual corrections officers. Now no one would excuse that. On the other hand, given that they are up there in New York the immediate aftermath of 9/11, it's not difficult to understand why feelings may have run high.

BLITZER: All right, Anthony, do you have the same assessment?

ANTHONY ROMERO, EXEC. DIR. ACLU: No, not at all. In fact, the inspector general goes quite far to say that not with standing the difficulty and hectic events that happened after 9/11, the Justice Department went too far too fast. It talked about the haphazard and indiscriminate way it which it prosecuted the war on terrorism. And how it quickly turned into a war on immigrants. They raised serious concerns about our civil liberties, and how the justice department, even itself, was at odds and had the base for the Justice Department about how best to prosecute the war on terror.

BLITZER: And on that specific point, Brad, you heard Kelli Arena say at the end of a report that some top officials of the Justice Department are now being encouraged to go hire private attorneys in case they are sued by some of these immigrants who were picked up.

BERENSON: Yes. I don't know the truth of that report, but I don't see anything in the report that would give them grounds for personal legal liability or especially to require the retention of private counsel. I don't see why counsel for the government, why Justice Department couldn't -- Justice Department lawyers could not represent these officials. All of these actions were taken in good faith. All of them appear to comply with the law, and we have to remember that every single person that we're talking about here was a law breaker, was a person who violated federal law, in most cases immigration laws, civil or criminal.

BLITZER: Lets Anthony respond to that go ahead.

ROMERO: What's remarkable is the fact the Justice Department has encouraged the individuals to secure individual legal counsel. We saw that in press reports and we've heard that elsewhere throughout the weekend. If the Justice Department really thought there was nothing wrong or illegal or unconstitutional about its actions. We find it curious they'd be encouraging government officials to hiring lawyers. Then you read the actual, 198 page document, and you see that the Justice Department goes quite far in terms of abuse and treatment of some detainees in the treatment centers. Remarkably, Wolf, that in one detention center, that the tapes -- videotapes that could have documented the conditions of confinement or abuse of prisoners were destroyed. It talks about official policies set by the Justice Department.

BLITZER: Well, let me have Brad weigh in on that.

Do you have any evidence to suggest or confirm that documents were destroyed?

BERENSON: I have no evidence either way on that. I haven't any idea whether that's true.

BLITZER: Because that's a serious allegation, right, Anthony?

What specifically are you referred to?

ROMERO: Towards the end of the report, I think around page 170, they talk about videotapes that had been taken at MAC, the Metropolitan Detention Center, that had been destroyed and taped over. These were taped that were being used to be able to corroborate or to track the abuse or treatment of the conditions of confinement in prison.

BLITZER: Brad, you've had a chance, Brad, to look at this inspector general's report. Looking back with hindsight, of course, remembering the mood right after 9/11, what if anything do you think the administration should have done perhaps differently?

BERENSON: Well, there are things the administration could have done differently. I mean, no one is going to argue absolutely everything was done perfectly. But under the circumstances, I think the standard of perfection is probably a little too much to expect. My overall reaction reading the report was that given what had happened to this country on 9/11 this country did about as well as any country in the world probably would have under the circumstances, and the record, while not perfect, was still pretty darn good.

BLITZER: And Anthony, you have to give the administration, the Justice Department credit for coming out with this inspector general's report, not covering up perhaps some mistakes in this policy.

ROMERO: It's the inspector general who draws entirely the contrary conclusion to the one Brad just drew. And what for us is breath taking and remarkable is the level and extent of the scathing criticism you find within the Justice Department's own report. The fact that they fully documented the abuse issues, and fully addressed for us the concerns around immigrants rights in the aftermath of 9/11, gives us reason to believe this is just the beginning of the debate, not the end of it.

BLITZER: The debate will continue. Unfortunately not here because we're all out of time. Brad Berenson, thanks very much. Anthony Romero, thanks to you as well.

No -- it's a set of bound volumes called "The Supreme Court of the United States Nominations,1916-1994" edited by Roy Mersky, et al. There are about two volumes per nomination. It contains a short history of each nomination, the full text of the nominees' questionnaires, confirmation hearings, floor debates, and member statements, all of the nominees' writings that were at issue during the hearings, all related executive branch and presidential statements, correspondence with the committee, and a compendium of editorial comment and other significant media material. In short, absolute one-stop shopping for any question relating to the precedents governing confirmations, including how nominees answered questions in the past, how disputes were resolved over what materials the executive branch would disgorge etc. Also great for giving an nominee the feel of the back and forth to be expected during hearings. If the OEOB Library doesn't have this, they should get it.

What time? Right now, all she has is 2:30 with Collins tomorrow. Snowe is meeting with staff this am, and then will decide whether she needs to see her. All others seem ok.

I would like to get Kuhl to stop by and see Judge Gonzales here at WH when she has a spare moment tomorrow after Judge meets with Feinstein. Is that doable?

Brett-

Thanks for inquiry. Continuing black hole. No contact from anyone at Presidential personnel or otherwise. Larry Thompson called Armitage (dep.
Sec. State) on my behalf some time ago. I had hoped you had heard something,
or could find out???

I note that the person who headed that office (Rand Beers)two years into the Bush Admistration and then got promotion to National Security Counsel not only resigned in protest of Bush anti-terrorism policy but thereafter joined the Kerry for President campaign! That office now continues to be headed by a career foreign service officer (acting Ast.
Sec)with no law enforcement background while we are loosing the heroin eradication effort, both in Columbia and Afghanistan because of imept policies and lack of understanding of how law enforcement works. As a result heroin (which was only a few years ago, almost non-existent in US) is resurgant on the streets of America -- as we head into the President's reelection campaign.

UNFAIR TREATMENT?
Kuhl Epitomizes 'Mainstream' of Appropriate Conduct for Judiciary

Forum Column

By John C. Eastman

Stellar credentials and a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, its highest, following her nomination to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals should have made the road to confirmation an easy one for Judge Carolyn Kuhl.

But the path since Kuhl's nomination June 22, 2001 - two years ago - has been anything but easy. Indeed, for 21 months, she was not even given the courtesy of a hearing by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and a month after she finally did receive a hearing April 1, 2003, her nomination was "reported out" to the Senate floor on only the barest, 10-9 vote, with not a single Democrat siding with what Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., once called the "gold standard" of the ABA's well-qualified rating.

Her credentials are impeccable. Bachelor's degree in chemistry from Princeton, graduated cum laude. Law degree from Duke, graduated with distinction, inducted into the prestigious Order of the Coif, served as an editor of the Duke Law Journal. Law clerk in California on the 9th Circuit with then judge, now Supreme Court justice, Anthony Kennedy. High-ranking official at the U.S. Department of Justice, served as deputy solicitor general, deputy assistant attorney general and special assistant to the attorney general. Partner in one of Los Angeles' most prestigious firms, Munger, Tolles & Olson. Eight years of service as a judge on the Los Angeles Superior Court, in both the criminal and civil divisions.

And she's a woman, which means she accomplished all this at a time when women were just beginning to break through the glass ceiling that had for far too long limited opportunities for women in the legal profession.

So why all the opposition? Some self-proclaimed "women's groups" have apparently decided that this impeccably well-qualified woman is ... anti-woman! She might even, they fear, have conservative leanings.

There are three key pieces of "evidence" in this frontal assault on Kuhl. First, while a young, 29-year-old attorney at the Department of Justice with no policy-making authority, Kuhl helped urge the attorney general to reverse an Internal Revenue Service policy denying tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University.

She did so on two grounds, neither of which had anything to do with defending the university's racial policies. She believed that Congress, not an administrative agency like the IRS, ought to be making such determinations. She also was concerned lest the IRS use its power to define "public policy" to deprive tax-exempt status to all-girls schools (such as the high school Kuhl herself had attended) or all-women colleges.

Harvard Law professor Laurence Tribe, in a 1984 letter to Attorney General William French Smith, praised the quality of the brief submitted by the Department of Justice in the case.

Tribe noted that he "thought it was a powerful and, in most respects, entirely compelling legal document."

Second, while serving on the Los Angeles Superior Court, Kuhl dismissed one of several counts in a case brought by a woman alleging the tort of intrusion after her doctor, while conducting a breast exam, had invited into the examining room a pharmaceutical company representative who was observing the doctor's work as part of his participation in an oncology mentorship program designed to improve care for breast-cancer patients.

Kuhl ruled that the remaining counts could proceed to trial, and the case ultimately settled with the plaintiff receiving an undisclosed sum.

Her ruling dismissing the intrusion count was well-grounded in existing precedent of the state Supreme Court, which had held that the tort of intrusion encompassed only unconsented-to physical intrusion.

Although her decision dismissing the intrusion count was reversed on appeal, state Court of Appeal Justice Paul Turner, who wrote the appellate opinion in the case, has acknowledged that "a strong argument can be made that [Kuhl] correctly assessed the competing societal interests the California Supreme Court requires all jurists in this state to weigh in determining whether the tort of intrusion has occurred."

Finally, Kuhl had a limited role in the drafting of the brief filed by acting Solicitor General Charles Fried in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986), in which Fried, acting on behalf of President Reagan, urged the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade. Her name appears third on the brief, though, so abortion rights groups have attributed the position to her.

Most troubling about this attack on Kuhl is the disparity of treatment it represents. Charles Fried, whose name appears first on the brief, has acknowledged that he wrote the "overrule-Roe part of the brief" himself. Yet Fried's nomination as solicitor general later that year was approved unanimously by the Senate Judiciary Committee. He was confirmed by the full Senate by a voice vote, without debate, by several of the same Democrats opposing Kuhl, including Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. and Leahy.

Moreover, the initial draft of the brief was written by John Rogers, whose name appears second on the brief, yet Rogers is sitting as judge on the 6th Circuit. Rogers was not even questioned about his role in the case during his confirmation hearing. He was approved by the Judiciary Committee and confirmed by the full Senate on a voice vote.

What are we to make of this opposition to Kuhl? For some reason, the confirmation bar seems higher for her than for other, equally qualified male nominees. Perhaps it is no surprise that a woman jurist who is not lock step in line with the abortion-on-demand policies of the National Abortion Rights Action League would not get its support - although Kuhl has vowed that she is "fully committed to following the precedent established by [Roe v. Wade] and would do so fairly and properly."

But it is somewhat surprising that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D.-Calif., would go along - the same Feinstein who first was elected in the 1992 "year of the woman" with a campaign message of sending more women to the men's club of the U.S. Senate.

Or that Sen. Barbara Boxer, D.-Calif., elected that same year with a similar campaign message, would not at least support a vote on this extremely well-qualified woman nominee.

Is this the same Boxer who just nine months before Kuhl was nominated held a press conference decrying the "shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary were being treated" by the Senate and who had vigorously contended for years that every judicial nominee should receive an up or down vote?

"Whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democrat side," she said in 1998, "let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote."

Boxer finds Kuhl to be "outside the mainstream." Yet the overwhelming consensus among people who actually know her is just the opposite.

Two years ago, Vilma Martinez, former director of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund and lifelong Democrat, wrote of Kuhl, "I consider her mainstream. ... She's careful and she's thoughtful. She's been an excellent Superior Court judge, and I think she will be an excellent 9th Circuit judge."

A year ago, a bipartisan group of 23 women judges who work with Kuhl at the Los Angeles Superior Court, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote in support of her nomination: "As sitting judges, we more than anyone appreciate the importance of an independent, fair-minded and principled judiciary. We believe that Carolyn Kuhl represents the best values of such a judiciary."

Leo James Terrell, who has litigated before Kuhl, informed Boxer in May, 2001 that he "vigorously" recommended Kuhl's appointment to the 9th Circuit.

Terrell, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, found that "Judge Kuhl was fair, impartial, competent and at all times extremely professional."

With such impeccable credentials and widespread testament to a demonstrably stellar judicial temperament by litigators of every political persuasion, including leading environmental, trial and civil rights attorneys - traditional Democrat allies all - Kuhl epitomizes the "mainstream" of appropriate judicial conduct.

The real question for Boxer and Feinstein is whether they will listen to such longtime allies and permit a vote on this well-qualified nominee from their home state or whether they will heed the slanders being propounded by the National Abortion Rights Action League and erect a new glass ceiling against any woman nominee who does not fully support the most extreme of the group's positions.

UNFAIR TREATMENT?
Kuhl Epitomizes 'Mainstream' of Appropriate Conduct for Judiciary

&nb sp;Forum Column

By John C. Eastman

Stellar credentials and a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, its highest, following her nomination to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals should have made the road to confirmation an easy one for Judge Carolyn Kuhl.

But the path since Kuhl's nomin ation June 22, 2001 - two years ago - has been anything but easy. Indeed, for 21 months, she was not even given the courtesy of a hearing by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and a month after she finally did receive a hearing April 1, 2003, her nomination was "reported out" to the Senate floor on only the barest, 10-9 vote, with not a single Democrat siding with what Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., once called the "gold standard" of the ABA's well-qualified rating.

Her credentials are impeccable. Bachelor's degree in chemistry from Princeton, graduated cum laude. Law degree from Duke, graduated with distinction, inducted into the prestigious Order of the Coif, served as an editor of the Duke Law Journal. Law clerk in California on the 9th Circuit with then judge, now Supreme Court justice, Anthony Kennedy. High-ranking official at the U.S. Department of Justice, served as deputy solicitor general, deputy assistant attorney general and special assistant to the attorney general. Partner in one of Los Angeles' most prestigious firms, Munger, Tolles & Olson. Eight years of service as a judge on the Los Angeles Superior Court, in both the criminal and civil divisions.

And she's a woman, which means she accomplished all this at a time when women were just beginning to break through the glass ceiling that had for far too long limited opportunities for women in the legal profession.

So why all the opposition? Some self-proclaimed "women's groups" have apparently decided that this impeccably well-qualified woman is ... anti-woman! She might even, they fear, have conservative leanings.

There are three key pieces of "evidence" in this frontal assault on Kuhl. First, while a young, 29-year-old attorney at the Department of Justice with no policy-making authority, Kuhl helped urge the attorney general to reverse an Internal Revenue Service policy denying tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University.

Brett-

Thanks for inquiry. Continuing black hole. No contact from anyone at Presidential personnel or otherwise. Larry Thompson called Armitage (dep.
Sec. State) on my behalf some time ago. I had hoped you had heard something,
or could find out???

I note that the person who headed that office (Rand Beers)two years into the Bush Admistration and then got promotion to National Security Counsel not only resigned in protest of Bush anti-terrorism policy but thereafter joined the Kerry for President campaign! That office now continues to be headed by a career foreign service officer (acting Ast.
Sec)with no law enforcement background while we are loosing the heroin eradication effort, both in Columbia and Afghanistan because of imept policies and lack of understanding of how law enforcement works. As a result heroin (which was only a few years ago, almost non-existent in US)
is resurgant on the streets of America -- as we head into the President's reelection campaign.

Nancy Smith
Director, Presidential Materials Staff
National Archives and Records Administration
Washington, DC 20408

Dear Ms. Smith:

This letter approves access by historians from the Office of the Secretary of Defense to the National Security Council institutional files as requested by Alfred Goldberg, OSD Historian. These NSC files are maintained as presidential records by the National Archives and Records Administration. The OSD Historical Office has requested access for Dr. Richard Hunt, who is working on a history of OSD from 1969-73. Future requests will identify individual historians and provide their specific research subjects. The Historical Office also will verify the historians' clearances with the National Archives and Records Administration.

This letter does not pre-approve the disclosure of any records or information reviewed or obtained by the historians during their research. All rights, privileges and immunities pertaining to the reviewed records, and the information contained therein, are reserved pending subsequent review and decision. The review of all documents selected by the OSD Historical Office for potential declassification or publication will be coordinated by the NSC in accordance with applicable law, including Executive Order 13233.

Sincerely,

Brett M. Kavanaugh
Associate Counsel to the President

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

KEY POINTS ON MIDDLE EAST PEACE***
From the President's comments at Sharm el-Sheikh, 6/3/03

-This is a moment of promise for the cause of peace in the Middle East, with the potential for unity against terror, the birth of a new and Palestinian state, and broader peace among the peoples of this region. Achieving these goals will require courage and moral vision on every side, from every leader.

-America is committed to helping all the parties reach the hard and heroic decisions that will lead to peace. To this end, President Bush has:
*Put forth a proposal for two states, Israel and Palestine, living side-by-side in peace
*Called on Israel to respect the rights of Palestinians, including the right to live in dignity in a free and peaceful Palestine
*Urged the Palestinian people to embrace new leaders who stand for reform, democracy and for fighting terror
*Said that progress toward peace would require the active commitment and support of neighboring states

-All progress towards peace requires the rejection of terror. King Abdullah of Jordan, Prince Abdullah of Saudi Arabia, President Mubarak of Egypt, King Hamad of Bahrain, and Prime Minister Abbas from the Palestinian Delegation declared their firm rejection of terror, regardless of its justifications or motives, and committed to practical actions to use all means to cut off assistance, including arms and financing to any terror group, and to aid the Palestinian Authority in its own fight against terror.

-President Bush will meet with Prime Minister Sharon and Prime Minister Abbas, to discuss the responsibilities of the Israelis and the Palestinians. If all sides fulfill their obligations, steady progress on the road toward Palestinian statehood, a secure Israel, and a just and comprehensive peace can be made. We seek true peace; not just a pause between more wars and intifadas, but a permanent reconciliation among the peoples of the Middle East.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***
All Times Eastern Daylight. Subject to Change.
President Bush meets with the King of Jordan, Prime Minister of Israel, and Palestinian Prime Minister, Aqaba, Jordan

KEY QUOTE***
"We welcome the roadmap rising from this vision, and adopted by the Quartet, especially since it has been accepted by both the Israeli and Palestinian governments. We particularly express our appreciation for President Bush's strong personal commitment for its full implementation."
--President Mubarak of Egypt, in Sharm el-Sheikh, 6/3/03

IRAQ UPDATE***
"America is fully committed to restoring security to Iraqi cities and helping the Iraqi people rebuild their nation, after decades of cruel and corrupt dictatorship. I welcome the support of all the nations represented here for these important goals, and hope they will contribute to helping the good people of Iraq."
--President Bush, 6/3/03

We are nearing the end of the first phase of the coalition's efforts towards the reconstruction of Iraq. Here are some of the successes:
-In Baghdad, more than 1300 Megawatts of electricity are now being generated a day, which is up from only 300 when the coalition arrived
-The oil fields are producing more and more - now nearly 700,000 barrels a day
-The food distribution system has been restarted in the last several days
-Banks are reopening - 25 in Baghdad alone
-The police and military patrols are getting a firmer grip on the security situation
-The Community Action Program will inject about $70 million into the local economies by hiring workers

Thank you again for the copy of the WH Travel policies handbook; it has been very helpful. The FEC is holding a public hearing on June 6th where travel issues and the Commission's current regulations in this area may be discussed. Do you have any problem with the Commission using the handbook at the hearing?

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General Washington, D.C. 20530

Draft June 4, 2003

The Honorable Charles E. Grassley
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to your letter, dated June 3, 2003, which requested a copy of a letter from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS), Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the Department of Justice (DOJ) regarding a proposed settlement of administrativeoverpayment overpayment and underpayment claims by and against HCA. This administrative settlement is one component of a global settlement with HCA, including False Claims Act claims, which has been announced by both parties as an agreement in principle although details and precise document language are still under negotiation.

The Department appreciates the Committee's oversight interest in the HCA administrative settlement, and we want to accommodate your need for information about the Department's decision to approve the settlement negotiated by CMS staff. Accordingly, we provided a comprehensive briefing on May 23rd. In response to Committee staff interests, the briefing focused primarily on our analysis of the administrative overpayment claims settlement. The Committee has thus received a full summary of the reasons for this Department's actions regarding the settlement. We also understand that your staff soon will be briefed by CMS representatives, which may provide the most helpful information about their reasons for proposing the administrative settlement.

Our concerns about providing the requested letter pertain primarily to the risk of chilling the candid exchange of views during our decisionmaking on litigation and other matters. The Department has substantial confidentiality interests in the analysis and recommendations of any client agency regarding a proposed settlement. We want to encourage agencies to be complete and forthright in setting forth their analyses of the strengths and weaknesses of a potential case, addressing the legal and evidentiary issues in a written format than can be effectively used within the Department. If client agencies expect that their contributions to the settlement decisionmaking process will be disclosed to and dissected by Congress, then the free and candid flow of views and recommendations from the agencies would certainly be jeopardized. The Supreme Court has recognized the legitimacy of this "chilling effect" concern: "Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process." United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705 (1974). The Court stressed that "the importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion." Id.

The "chilling effect" concern exists regardless of whether or not the matter that is the subject of a settlement recommendation letter is pending at the time the disclosure is requested, because the concern is with the inhibiting effect on people writing such letters in the future. However, there is an additional concern where, as here, disclosure is sought before the details of the settlement have been finalized, namely that disclosure could jeopardize the Government's successful resolution of the matter.

We are also concerned about the likely impact of disclosure of a settlement recommendation letter on pending and future litigation involving similar issues against other parties. For instance, the law may be uncertain, and assessments of litigation risk may depend on the forum in which the case may be litigated. Documents of this type discuss such litigation risk assessment and other negotiation or litigation strategy in the case under consideration for settlement, but those concerns and assessments, if disclosed, could be generally applicable to other pending or future cases. Thus, anddisclosure could thus compromise the Government's handling of both pending and future litigation.

Our briefing to Committee staff, which included information about our analysis of CMS's reasoning as well as the bases for our approval decision, avoided this chilling effect and focused on the particular facets of the settlement of most interest to your staff. Such an accommodation, which protects the confidentiality of the client agency's deliberative work product, will encourage agencies to continue their provision of candid views, which is critical to our evaluation of such settlements and our conduct of related litigation.

I hope that this information is helpful and that you will understand our position in this matter. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional information.

Sincerely,

William E. Moschella
Assistant Attorney General

Roll Call 's Emily Pierce takes a look at Senator Dianne Feinstein as a possible running mate on the 2004 Democratic ticket.

"Senator Bob Graham (D-Fla.), who is running for president, suggested he would consider Feinstein for anything from running mate to a prominent spot in his administration."

"'Whatever Dianne wants to do, President Graham will assist her and look forward to serving her in any capacity,' Graham said in an interview."

"It was almost two decades ago, in 1984, that Feinstein was first seriously considered for her party's national ticket, when as a well-known mayor she was passed over for the vice presidential nomination in favor of former New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro."

"'I was on what we called the bridesmaids list,' said Feinstein, who said she would look very carefully at any renewed offers from the Democratic presidential nominee in 2004 to be his or her running mate."

"But some political strategists downplay the idea of Feinstein rounding out the 2004 Democratic ticket, primarily because her popularity in California is not needed to improve the electoral outcome in a state that has been voting overwhelmingly Democratic in the past few presidential races."

Next year they are going to ask for the following:;; reporting entity, financial management structure, and info on our financial accounting system cross servicing provider

QUESTION 71:; Last year, you stated that you had identified best practices for documented policies and procedures based upon one federal agency which has been recognized as one of the best in the Federal government (p. 136).; Which agency are you using as a model, and what are some examples of the specific best practices you intend to use?

RESPONSE: We were referring to the Department of Education and we conducted a pilot of their approach for developing policies and procedures within the Office of the CFO.; While that pilot was helpful, we determined that three other tasks (identify reporting entity, develop financial management structure, and identifying our financial accounting system cross servicing provider) needed to be completed before our policies and procedures could be developed.; Since those are near completion, we anticipate again focusing on developing policies and procedures during the remainder of this fiscal year.

UNFAIR TREATMENT?
Kuhl Epitomizes 'Mainstream' of Appropriate Conduct for Judiciary

By John C. Eastman

Stellar credentials and a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, its highest, following her nomination to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals should have made the road to confirmation an easy one for Judge Carolyn Kuhl.

But the path since Kuhl's nomination June 22, 2001 - two years ago - has been anything but easy. Indeed, for 21 months, she was not even given the courtesy of a hearing by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and a month after she finally did receive a hearing April 1, 2003, her nomination was "reported out" to the Senate floor on only the barest, 10-9 vote, with not a single Democrat siding with what Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., once called the "gold standard" of the ABA's well-qualified rating.

Her credentials are impeccable. Bachelor's degree in chemistry from Princeton, graduated cum laude. Law degree from Duke, graduated with distinction, inducted into the prestigious Order of the Coif, served as an editor of the Duke Law Journal. Law clerk in California on the 9th Circuit with then judge, now Supreme Court justice, Anthony Kennedy. High-ranking official at the U.S. Department of Justice, served as deputy solicitor general, deputy assistant attorney general and special assistant to the attorney general. Partner in one of Los Angeles' most prestigious firms, Munger, Tolles & Olson. Eight years of service as a judge on the Los Angeles Superior Court, in both the criminal and civil divisions.

And she's a woman, which means she accomplished all this at a time when women were just beginning to break through the glass ceiling that had for far too long limited opportunities for women in the legal profession.

So why all the opposition? Some self-proclaimed "women's groups" have apparently decided that this impeccably well-qualified woman is ... anti-woman! She might even, they fear, have conservative leanings.

There are three key pieces of "evidence" in this frontal assault on Kuhl. First, while a young, 29-year-old attorney at the Department of Justice with no policy-making authority, Kuhl helped urge the attorney general to reverse an Internal Revenue Service policy denying tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University.

She did so on two grounds, neither of which had anything to do with defending the university's racial policies. She believed that Congress, not an administrative agency like the IRS, ought to be making such determinations. She also was concerned lest the IRS use its power to define "public policy" to deprive tax-exempt status to all-girls schools (such as the high school Kuhl herself had attended) or all-women colleges.

Harvard Law professor Laurence Tribe, in a 1984 letter to Attorney General William French Smith, praised the quality of the brief submitted by the Department of Justice in the case. Tribe noted that he "thought it was a powerful and, in most respects, entirely compelling legal document."

Second, while serving on the Los Angeles Superior Court, Kuhl dismissed one of several counts in a case brought by a woman alleging the tort of intrusion after her doctor, while conducting a breast exam, had invited into the examining room a pharmaceutical company representative who was observing the doctor's work as part of his participation in an oncology mentorship program designed to improve care for breast-cancer patients.

Kuhl ruled that the remaining counts could proceed to trial, and the case ultimately settled with the plaintiff receiving an undisclosed sum.

Her ruling dismissing the intrusion count was well-grounded in existing precedent of the state Supreme Court, which had held that the tort of intrusion encompassed only unconsented-to physical intrusion.

Although her decision dismissing the intrusion count was reversed on appeal, state Court of Appeal Justice Paul Turner, who wrote the appellate opinion in the case, has acknowledged that "a strong argument can be made that [Kuhl] correctly assessed the competing societal interests the California Supreme Court requires all jurists in this state to weigh in determining whether the tort of intrusion has occurred."

Finally, Kuhl had a limited role in the drafting of the brief filed by acting Solicitor General Charles Fried in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986), in which Fried, acting on behalf of President Reagan, urged the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade. Her name appears third on the brief, though, so abortion rights groups have attributed the position to her.

Most troubling about this attack on Kuhl is the disparity of treatment it represents. Charles Fried, whose name appears first on the brief, has acknowledged that he wrote the "overrule-Roe part of the brief" himself. Yet Fried's nomination as solicitor general later that year was approved unanimously by the Senate Judiciary Committee. He was confirmed by the full Senate by a voice vote, without debate, by several of the same Democrats opposing Kuhl, including Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. and Leahy.

Moreover, the initial draft of the brief was written by John Rogers, whose name appears second on the brief, yet Rogers is sitting as judge on the 6th Circuit. Rogers was not even questioned about his role in the case during his confirmation hearing. He was approved by the Judiciary Committee and confirmed by the full Senate on a voice vote.

What are we to make of this opposition to Kuhl? For some reason, the confirmation bar seems higher for her than for other, equally qualified male nominees. Perhaps it is no surprise that a woman jurist who is not lock step in line with the abortion-on-demand policies of the National Abortion Rights Action League would not get its support - although Kuhl has vowed that she is "fully committed to following the precedent established by [Roe v. Wade] and would do so fairly and properly."

But it is somewhat surprising that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D.-Calif., would go along - the same Feinstein who first was elected in the 1992 "year of the woman" with a campaign message of sending more women to the men's club of the U.S. Senate.

Or that Sen. Barbara Boxer, D.-Calif., elected that same year with a similar campaign message, would not at least support a vote on this extremely well-qualified woman nominee.

Is this the same Boxer who just nine months before Kuhl was nominated held a press conference decrying the "shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary were being treated" by the Senate and who had vigorously contended for years that every judicial nominee should receive an up or down vote?

"Whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democrat side," she said in 1998, "let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote."

Boxer finds Kuhl to be "outside the mainstream." Yet the overwhelming consensus among people who actually know her is just the opposite.

Two years ago, Vilma Martinez, former director of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund and lifelong Democrat, wrote of Kuhl, "I consider her mainstream. ... She's careful and she's thoughtful. She's been an excellent Superior Court judge, and I think she will be an excellent 9th Circuit judge."

A year ago, a bipartisan group of 23 women judges who work with Kuhl at the Los Angeles Superior Court, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote in support of her nomination: "As sitting judges, we more than anyone appreciate the importance of an independent, fair-minded and principled judiciary. We believe that Carolyn Kuhl represents the best values of such a judiciary."

Leo James Terrell, who has litigated before Kuhl, informed Boxer in May, 2001 that he "vigorously" recommended Kuhl's appointment to the 9th Circuit.

Terrell, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, found that "Judge Kuhl was fair, impartial, competent and at all times extremely professional."

With such impeccable credentials and widespread testament to a demonstrably stellar judicial temperament by litigators of every political persuasion, including leading environmental, trial and civil rights attorneys - traditional Democrat allies all - Kuhl epitomizes the "mainstream" of appropriate judicial conduct.

The real question for Boxer and Feinstein is whether they will listen to such longtime allies and permit a vote on this well-qualified nominee from their home state or whether they will heed the slanders being propounded by the National Abortion Rights Action League and erect a new glass ceiling against any woman nominee who does not fully support the most extreme of the group's positions.

He was confirmed by the full Senate by a voice vote, without debate, by several of the same Democrats opposing Kuhl, including Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. and Leahy.

Moreover, the initial draft of the brief was written by John Rogers, whose name appears second on the brief, yet Rogers is sitting as judge on the 6th Circuit. Rogers was not even questioned about his role in the case during his confirmation hearing. He was approved by the Judiciary Committee and confirmed by the full Senate on a voice vote.

What are we to make of this opposition to Kuhl? For some reason, the confirmation bar seems higher for her than for other, equally qualified male nominees. Perhaps it is no surprise that a woman jurist who is not lock step in line with the abortion-on-demand policies of the National Abortion Rights Action League would not get its support - although Kuhl has vowed that she is "fully committed to following the precedent established by [Roe v. Wade] and would do so fairly and properly."

But it is somewhat surprising that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D.-Calif., would go along - the same Feinstein who first was elected in the 1992 "year of the woman" with a campaign message of sending more women to the men's club of the U.S. Senate.

Or that Sen. Barbara Boxer, D.-Calif., elected that same year with a similar campaign message, would not at least support a vote on this extremely well-qualified woman nominee.

Is this the same Boxer who just nine months before Kuhl was nominated held a press conference decrying the "shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary were being treated" by the Senate and who had vigorously contended for years that every judicial nominee should receive an up or down vote?

"Whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democrat side," she said in 1998, "let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote."

Boxer finds Kuhl to be "outside the mainstream." Yet the overwhelming consensus among people who actually know her is just the opposite.

Two years ago, Vilma Martinez, former director of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund and lifelong Democrat, wrote of Kuhl, "I consider her mainstream. ... She's careful and she's thoughtful. She's been an excellent Superior Court judge, and I think she will be an excellent 9th Circuit judge."

A year ago, a bipartisan group of 23 women judges who work with Kuhl at the Los Angeles Superior Court, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote in support of her nomination: "As sitting judges, we more than anyone appreciate the importance of an independent, fair-minded and principled judiciary. We believe that Carolyn Kuhl represents the best values of such a judiciary."

Leo James Terrell, who has litigated before Kuhl, informed Boxer in May, 2001 that he "vigorously" recommended Kuhl's appointment to the 9th Circuit.

Terrell, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, found that "Judge Kuhl was fair, impartial, competent and at all times extremely professional."

With such impeccable credentials and widespread testament to a demonstrably stellar judicial temperament by litigators of every political persuasion, including leading environmental, trial and civil rights attorneys - traditional Democrat allies all - Kuhl epitomizes the "mainstream" of appropriate judicial conduct.

The real question for Boxer and Feinstein is whether they will listen to such longtime allies and permit a vote on this well-qualified nominee from their home state or whether they will heed the slanders being propounded by the National Abortion Rights Action League and erect a new glass ceiling against any woman nominee who does not fully support the most extreme of the group's positions.

When there is motorcade travel on behalf of the campaign, the campaign will reimburse the costs of equivalent large rental vehicles. This is a variation on a question you asked the other day, so I wanted to make sure this was clear. We are preparing the basic travel cost/allocation memo that will cover such travel-cost issues.

The House Democrats are whipping against H.R. 1115, the class action reform bill.

Note that in addition to other erroneous and misleading allegations the Democratic whip material continues to misstate that the legislation is opposed by the Judicial Conference and the ABA.

Next week, the House is expected to consider legislation to expand the jurisdiction of the federal courts over class action cases, H.R. 1115, the Class Action Fairness Act. This misguided legislation claims to address problems in current law but it only imposes additional burdens on the already over-tasked federal courts and needlessly changes current uniform rules of federal civil procedure. H.R. 1115 was reported out of the House Judiciary Committee on May 21 with a 20-14 vote (only one Democrat voted for the bill).

? H.R. 1115 weakens accountability of major companies involved in pending class actions including Enron, WorldCom, and Arthur Anderson for financial fraud and several pharmaceutical companies such as Eli Lilly, Aventis Pasteur and Abbott laboratories. Moreover, this is done on a retroactive basis and would apply to pending cases, unlike the bill considered in the last Congress.

? H.R. 1115 would delay judicial relief by giving defendants vast new opportunities for delaying cases for two years or more and staying discovery during that time period. Again, this would apply retroactively to pending cases.

? H.R. 1115 needlessly burdens federal courts by broadly defining "class actions" to include mass torts and state actions brought on behalf of the general public (an important consumer protection tool for California residents). Federal courts, which lack the resources to handle complex state law issues, would be forced to handle state class actions in addition to their already large caseload and judicial vacancy rate. There are currently 45 judicial vacancies in the federal judiciary and 471 civil cases pending per district court judge, on average, as of 2002.

? H.R. 1115 would hamper judicial relief for injured consumers and other class action plaintiffs. In cases where the federal court chooses not to certify the state class action, the bill prohibits the states from using class actions to resolve underlying state causes of action.

? H.R. 1115 eliminates current uniform rules of federal civil procedure regarding diversity jurisdiction, removal, dismissal, remand, appellate review, and discovery for class action cases only. These new procedural rules would benefit defendants at the plaintiff's expense and would additionally burden the federal judiciary.

? H.R. 1115 is opposed by federal and state judges including the Federal Judicial Conference, headed by Chief Justice William Rehnquist and the Conference of Chief Justices (which represents the state chief justices). Other opponents include the American Bar Association, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, the Consumer Federation of America, the Consumer Union, and the National Organization for Women.

? H.R. 1115 fails to address problems with coupon settlements. This bill's solution to coupon-settlement abuses is judicial scrutiny of such settlements (something that both state and federal judges are already required to do). However, abusive coupon settlements could increase as the increase workload of the deferral judiciary makes judicial scrutiny of such settlements less likely.

Democrats are expected to offer a substitute to address some of the concerns over class action practices without interfering in the ability of classes of plaintiffs looking for remedies. The Democratic Class Action Improvement Act of 2003 would address settlement abuses, protections against losses, and discretion of appeals. Democrats protect class action members by:

? Basing attorneys' fees on the amount redeemed by class members rather than on the amount of the settlement, thus eliminating any incentive for a collusive agreement between plaintiffs' and defendants' counsel;

? Requiring the court to make a written finding that non-monetary benefits to the class members in a settlement outweigh the monetary loss;

? Requiring the court to determine that a settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate to the class, and that is applies only to claims on which the class is authorized to represent members;

? Prohibiting court record and documents obtained during discovery in a class action from being sealed or the made the subject of a protective order unless the court finds it is necessary to protect a particular trade or business secret and is in the public interest; and

? Codifying Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(f), which provides courts of appeals discretion to permit an appeal from an order granting or denying class action certification and to use its discretion in deciding to stay proceedings pending outcome of the appeal.

WHEN TO RETIRE?

Volcanologists gravitate toward Sicily when Mt. Etna starts to rumble.
Tornado chasers head to Kansas and Oklahoma during twister season.

For the same reason, it makes sense that Artemus Ward has positioned himself in Washington these days. The phenomenon Ward awaits is a Supreme Court retirement, and he is guessing there will be one soon: Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

Ward's book Deciding to Leave: The Politics of Retirement from the United States Supreme Court was published earlier this year. As the title suggests, the book offers the most pervasively political * and cynical * analysis yet for why Supreme Court justices retire.

Yes, health and the perennial desire to "spend time with the grandchildren" can be factors, he acknowledges. But because of increasingly generous retirement formulas, lightening workloads, and longer life expectancy, Ward posits, modern-day justices have decades within which to determine the precise time to retire. That wide window of opportunity, Ward argues, has inexorably led justices to focus ever more closely on the political question of which president will name their replacement.

"The process now is entirely partisan," says Ward, currently working on

Capitol Hill through an American Political Science Association fellowship. "It is much easier now for justices to think strategically, and they have a huge window of time to play the political game." Ward's fellowship is with Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.), working on House Judiciary Committee matters. Ward, 32, has been teaching at California State University, Chico, and plans to move to Northern Illinois University after his stint in Washington. The book began as his doctoral dissertation at Syracuse University.

Ward's book is not the first on the subject. David Atkinson's Leaving the Bench in 1999 first catalogued the reasons for Court retirements, emphasizing health and aging.

But Ward looks at the phenomenon through a more political and institutional lens. This leads him to the view that 1954 was a pivotal date in the story of high court retirements. That was when Congress passed a law allowing federal judges to retire at full pay at age 70 with 10 years of judicial service or at 65 with 15 years of judicial service.

The so-called Rule of 80 means, for example, that Justice Stephen Breyer will be eligible to retire at full pay this August, when he turns 65, and John Paul Stevens could have retired as early as 1985. In fact, by year's end, all of the justices except David Souter and Clarence Thomas could retire without losing pay. Souter reaches that point in 2005, and Thomas in 2013.

Congress first enacted relatively generous retirement benefits in the mid-1800s to encourage justices to leave, rather than hang on beyond the point of infirmity for financial reasons. But now, as Ward sees it, the retirement benefits have the effect of allowing justices to prolong their tenure for political reasons. Since the 1954 retirement law passed, Ward says, all but two departing justices have retired at a time of their own choosing. Arthur Goldberg resigned to become United Nations ambassador, and Abe Fortas resigned under an ethical cloud. The last justice to die in office was Robert Jackson, in 1954.

As retirement terms sweetened, Ward notes, the workload of the high court has also lightened * in recent years, the justices have issued fewer than 100 rulings per term, and they increasingly rely on law clerks to screen cases and write opinions. "Why retire to a comfortable life when you already have a comfortable life?" asks Ward. "As the caseload decreases, partisanship increases as a factor in retirement."

Ward thinks all the retirements of the past three decades have been timed for partisan reasons. He points to Lewis Powell Jr., whose former law clerk John Jeffries Jr. wrote him a memorandum in 1987 laying out the political as well as personal factors Powell should weigh. Powell announced his retirement a few days later, thereby avoiding the 1988 presidential political season.

Viewed this way, Ward thinks it is an easy call to predict that the conservative Rehnquist will announce his retirement in the next month, faced with the likelihood that the next opportune moment might not come for two more years, when the occupant of the White House could conceivably be a Democrat.

And why won't there be a second retirement at the same time, such as that of Sandra Day O'Connor? Ward invokes another unwritten rule * the Rule of Eight * under which justices seek to avoid more than one departure in the same term, so that the number of sitting justices never dips below eight. The last exception to the rule came in 1971, when John Harlan II and Hugo Black retired within a week of each other, mainly for health reasons.

The Rule of Eight presupposes that justices check with each other on their retirement plans, an assumption some Court-watchers doubt. But Ward asserts that Rehnquist and O'Connor, who have known each other since Stanford Law School days, are likely to be aware of each other's plans. Especially with the bitterly political confirmation process currently in place, should Rehnquist leave, Ward thinks, it is unlikely O'Connor will gamble that her replacement could also be confirmed by the beginning of the fall term.

"Justices read the papers. They know about this stuff," insists Ward. "Judges are political actors."

Ward offers fairly draconian remedies for the politicization of high court retirements. He urges Congress to revise the Rule of 80 upward to 100 * meaning that justices could retire at full pay only after their age plus years of judicial service total 100. That would significantly reduce the window in which the justices could time their retirements for partisan reasons.

Alternatively, Ward thinks a mandatory retirement age of 75 should be considered. That would take politics out of the equation altogether and, in a sense, enhance judicial independence, in Ward's view. Those who oppose mandatory retirement point to the later-life contributions of justices like Oliver Wendell Holmes, who served on the Court until age 90. Ward has a ready and controversial answer.

"Holmes was one thing. The Court would have lost a great legal mind if he had left at 74," says Ward. "But now, would we be losing great legal minds, when justices now are really technocrats and they don't write their own opinions? I don't think so."

Subject: New Hampshire Invitation

The following text is from an invitation paid for by the New Hampshire State Party:

Dear Republican Elected Official:

We are honored to have White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card visiting New Hampshire on Tuesday, June 17th. We hope you can join us in this special oppurtunity to meet Secretary Card and discuss local and national issues facing New Hampshire and the Nation. As a former Massachusetts State Representative himself, we wanted to ensure that you received a special invitation to meet Secretary Card.

We plan to hold this Grassroots Connection Series with Republican elected officials and activists from 5-6 PM on Tuesday, June 17th, in Concord at the LOCATION.

Together the Republican Party has regained control of the Governor's office after six long years and made historic gains in the State House of Representatives and State Senate. We hope that you can join us in welcoming Secretary Card back to the Granite State.

Please RSVP by calling State Committee headquarters at 225-9341 or by e-mail to Jen@nhgop.org.

Thank you for your consideration. I hope to see you there.

Sincerely,

Jayne Millerick

Hatch Considers Changing Asbestos Bill To Build Support
ÿÿÿÿÿ Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch said today he is considering changes to asbestos litigation reform legislation in order to build support for the controversial bill, including doing away with language that would reduce compensation to victims of asbestos-related diseases based on payments from other sources. But the list of issues that Hatch indicated he might address was far shorter than a list of concerns that Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., outlined during his opening statement in a hearing on the asbestos bill.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch is trying to win the support of key Democrats to pass the plan for reforming the litigation system for victims of asbestos-related illnesses. Both parties as well as insurers, defendant companies, victims' groups, unions and others say reform is badly needed to ensure that companies are not driven into bankruptcy and to ensure that the sickest victims are compensated. However, Democrats have yet to coalesce around Hatch's plan, and key private sector stakeholders, including labor unions and trial lawyers, are balking. The legislation calls for a $108 billion trust fund made up of money from defendant companies and insurers. It would establish a separate court system for asbestos cases and sets medical criteria and compensation amounts.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch called a handful of proposed changes to the legislation "laudable and well-intentioned." Those included a proposal by Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., that would ban the future use of asbestos. Hatch also said he was working with Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., to compensate victims in the mining town of Libby, Mont., where asbestos exposure and related diseases are widespread among miners and their families. Under the bill as written, the family members of miners would not be compensated because their illnesses were not the result of job-related exposure, but rather resulted from "second-hand" exposure to asbestos fibers. Additionally, ÿÿÿÿÿBut Leahy expressed concern about a few fundamental aspects of the bill, including the separate court structure that would decide asbestos claims. "Such a court appears to be inconsistent with a 'no-fault' system and may prove unworkable," Leahy said. Ensuring solvency of the trust fund is one of Leahy's and other Democrats' biggest concerns. "The bill guarantees businesses a lifetime of absolute legal and financial certainty, but it leaves asbestos victims completely out of luck if the trust fund runs out of money any time in the next 50 years," Leahy said.

Hatch said he would examine concerns that asbestos victims' compensation would be unfairly reduced by payments from Medicare, Medicaid, insurance and other "collateral" sources.
Hatch urged interested parties to submit suggestions for changes by the end of the week and said he hopes to hold a markup session next Thursday.
"This bipartisan bill is not without flaws, and this hearing is intended to provide expert advice on how to improve it," Hatch said. -- by Emily Heil ok with change made in bold.

The following text is from an invitation paid for by the New Hampshire State Party:

Dear Republican Elected Official:

We are honored to have The Honorable Andrew Card visiting New Hampshire on Tuesday, June 17th. We hope you can join us in this special opportunity to meet Secretary Card and discuss local and national issues facing New Hampshire and the Nation. As a former Massachusetts State Representative himself, we wanted to ensure that you received a special invitation to meet Secretary Card.

We plan to hold this Grassroots Connection Series with Republican elected officials and activists from 5-6 PM on Tuesday, June 17th, in Concord at the LOCATION.

Together the Republican Party has regained control of the Governor's office after six long years and made historic gains in the State House of Representatives and State Senate. We hope that you can join us in welcoming Secretary Card back to the Granite State.

Please RSVP by calling State Committee headquarters at 225-9341 or by e-mail to Jen@nhgop.org.

Thank you for your consideration. I hope to see you there.

Sincerely,

Jayne Millerick

Re: Public Airing of Stakes in Upcoming Supreme Court Vacancy Must Begin Now

Coming Supreme Court Debate Must Focus on Substance, Not Politics

It has been almost nine years since the last U.S. Supreme Court vacancy, the longest interval between nominations in 180 years. Indeed, over the past half century, there has been on the average one Supreme Court nomination every two years. It is considered likely that at least one member of the U.S. Supreme Court will resign when the current term ends this month, and it is quite possible that the vacancy or vacancies this summer will be the first of three or four openings on the Court over the next several years. At stake in the appointment of new Supreme Court justices is the law of the land for the next generation – or longer. At risk are many of the great social justice achievements of the 20th Century.

The Bush administration, Republican Senate leaders, and right-wing pundits and activists are already gearing up to turn the focus of a Supreme Court battle away from the substance of a nominee's legal and judicial philosophy – and the devastating impact of a right-wing dominated Supreme Court – and toward the so-called "obstructionism" of Senate Democrats and the legitimacy of a potential Senate filibuster against an extremist Supreme Court nominee.

It is urgent that public debate over Supreme Court nominees focus on crucial constitutional questions over which the current Court is closely divided, including the existence of a constitutional right to privacy, the authority of the federal government to enact and enforce civil rights and environmental protections, the separation of church and state, and more. Dozens of rights and legal protections Americans count on are just one or two Supreme Court justices away from being dismantled in pursuit of right-wing legal theorists' goal of reinstating a 19th Century approach to the U.S. Constitution.

A 19th Century Constitution for a 21st Century America

Two far-right justices, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, have led the destructive revival of a once-discredited "states' rights" approach to the Constitution. A series of 5-4 decisions have embraced new theories advanced by right-wing legal advocates affiliated with the Federalist Society, weakening federal civil rights protections and declaring other urgent issues off limits to action by the U.S. Congress. But even more important, Scalia and Thomas have staked out in their written dissents and concurring opinions a burning desire to have the Court move much more aggressively to overturn decades of Supreme Court precedent than even the current conservative majority has been willing to do.

With President Bush having campaigned on a pledge to use Scalia and Thomas as his models for Supreme Court nominees, it is crucial that senators, the media, and the American public examine the impact on American law and society of a Supreme Court dominated by justices who are committed to radically restricting the authority of the federal government to protect individual rights and act in pursuit of the common good.

Scalia and Thomas, like many Bush administration officials and judicial nominees, are affiliated with the Federalist Society, which has held seminars on returning the nation's constitutional framework to a pre-New Deal era. (For more information on the philosophy and extraordinary influence of the Federalist Society on the Bush administration and its judicial selection process, see The Federalist Society: From Obscurity to Power, published by People For the American Way Foundation and available at www.pfaw.org/go/federalist_society.)

People For the American Way Foundation's Courting Disaster, published in 2000, examined the dissenting and concurring opinions written by Scalia and Thomas since they joined the Court. Courting Disaster documented that a Supreme Court with a Scalia-Thomas majority could overturn more than 100 precedents and turn back the clock decades on civil and voting rights, privacy and reproductive choice, religious liberty, environmental protection, consumer and worker safety, and more. Because most cases before the Supreme Court that raise fundamental constitutional questions are now decided by slim majorities, it would take just one or two more appointments to give Scalia and Thomas the power to reshape the Constitution according to their radically reactionary vision.

The result would be a dramatic rollback in legal and social justice gains, and a return to a constitutional framework in which states' rights and property rights were predominant. A Supreme Court committed to advancing the Scalia-Thomas agenda would not only bring about the reversal of more than half a century of legal and social justice accomplishments, but also a return to a situation America faced in the first third of the 20th Century, when progressive legislation adopted by Congress and signed by the President was repeatedly rejected on constitutional grounds by the Supreme Court. A Court dominated by the states' rights judicial philosophy could prevent the federal government from taking action on a range of national issues, regardless of who is elected to the White House or Congress.

Courting Disaster and updates on the 2001 and 2002 Supreme Court terms are available at www.pfaw.org/go/courting_disaster. A comprehensive update of the report will be available shortly after the close of the current term.

The Attack on the Senate's Advise and Consent Role

In our constitutional system of checks and balances, the Senate has a co-equal role with the President in appointing federal judges, since it must provide its "advice and consent" before any nominee becomes a judge. Judicial nominees – who are confirmed for lifetime appointments – must be subject to the highest standard of scrutiny. Federal judges' decisions – especially the rulings of Supreme Court justices – last long after the presidents who appointed them are no longer in office.

Given the power that rests with the Supreme Court, no president's nominee is presumptively entitled to confirmation. Instead, a nominee bears the burden of demonstrating that he or she meets the appropriate qualifications, which must include a demonstrated commitment to civil rights and individual liberties, and a clear respect for Congress' proper constitutional role in protecting constitutional and civil rights and the health and safety of all Americans.

Since President Bush has signaled both in word and in deed that he intends to nominate Supreme Court justices who do not share these commitments, senators have an urgent responsibility to take their constitutional obligation seriously and oppose with every appropriate means at their disposal the confirmation of Supreme Court justices who would wreak havoc on Americans' lives and liberties.

Going Nuclear

The White House, its right-wing allies, and some Senate Republicans are waging a pre-emptive war designed to eliminate one important tool at the disposal of senators concerned about extremist Supreme Court nominees – the Senate filibuster.

Ignoring the overwhelming confirmation rate of Bush administration judicial nominees, the administration and its backers have whipped up a dishonest and hypocritical campaign to discredit Senate Democrats' treatment of Bush nominees. This campaign has employed crude racial politics and outrageous smears, for example accusing opponents of appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada's confirmation of anti-Hispanic bigotry.

GOP leaders have now put the next step in motion, calling into question the constitutionality of the filibuster, even though both parties have repeatedly used filibusters for decades. The Senate Rules Committee will conduct a hearing this week on one proposal to change Senate rules to effectively eliminate this important procedural protection against the abuse of power by a bare majority acting on an issue of major importance. Sen. Trent Lott has joined the far-right chorus urging GOP leaders to go even further, adopting a "nuclear" strategy and carrying out a naked power play that would ignore Senate rules and lay waste to two hundred years of Senate tradition.

For a more detailed examination of the historical use and defense of the filibuster by GOP leaders including Lott, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist and Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, see GOP Leaders Try to Create Constitutional Cover for Illegitimate Power Play, at www.pfaw.org/independent_judiciary.

Appeals Court Nominees Give Clear Signal of Trouble to Come

As a presidential candidate, George W. Bush secured the enthusiastic support of Religious Right political leaders by telling them that he would appoint Supreme Court justices in the mold of Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. As noted previously, if President Bush makes good on that pledge, far-right political groups will have succeeded in their ultimate quest. A Supreme Court with a Scalia-Thomas majority would likely give right-wing leaders long-term victories on a wide range of issues, including dismantling women's constitutional right to privacy and reproductive choice and further undermining the separation of church and state.

There is no evidence that President Bush intends to abandon his goal of using the federal courts to turn back the clock. Indeed, there is powerful evidence to the contrary. A number of his appeals court nominees are among the nation's most aggressive proponents of the neo-states' rights judicial philosophy, and have advocated for an end to reproductive choice, overturning federal laws protecting the rights of people with disabilities, dismantling key protections of the federal voting rights act, and more.

Among the administration's appeals court nominees:

- Carolyn Kuhl, a Federalist Society member and currently a California state trial court judge, has been nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. While in the Justice Department under the Reagan Administration, Kuhl urged the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade as "flawed." She also played a key role in convincing then-Attorney General William French Smith to reverse prior policy and support the granting of tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University despite its racially discriminatory practices. (Her position was rejected by an 8-1 ruling of the Supreme Court.) Kuhl has been widely criticized for a ruling in which she dismissed the right to privacy claims of a breast cancer patient whose doctor permitted a drug company salesman to watch her breast and abdominal exam. Her ruling was unanimously reversed on appeal. Kuhl's nomination has been approved on a party-line vote by the Judiciary Committee; she is awaiting floor action in spite of opposition from both California Senators Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer.

- Priscilla Owen, a Federalist Society member and currently a justice on the Texas Supreme Court, was nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Owen is at the far right wing of the conservative Texas court, further to the right than President Bush's own appointees to that court when he was governor. In one case in which Owen dissented, then-Texas Supreme Court Justice Alberto Gonzales - who is now chief White House counsel - warned that adopting the dissenters' view would be an "unconscionable act of judicial activism." (This was only one of 11 cases in which Gonzales criticized or joined other justices' criticism of positions taken by Owen during the short time they served on the court together.) In another dissent, Owen effectively sought to rewrite an important state civil rights law to make it much harder for employees to prove that their rights were violated. Owen's confirmation was rejected by the Senate Judiciary Committee on September 5, 2002; in an unprecedented move, she was renominated by President Bush this year. Her confirmation is being blocked by a Senate filibuster.

- Jeffrey Sutton, an officer in the Federalist Society's Separation of Powers and Federalism practice group, was narrowly confirmed by the Senate to a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. Sutton has been one of the nation's most aggressive advocates for severely limiting federal protections against discrimination and injury based on disability, race, age, sex, and religion. More than 70 national organizations and over 375 regional, state, and local groups opposed his confirmation. Sutton was confirmed by a vote of 52 to 41 on April 29, 2003.

- Terrence Boyle, a former staffer to Senator Jesse Helms and a district court judge in North Carolina, has been nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Civil rights groups have criticized Boyle for his right-wing judicial activism in civil rights cases. Boyle twice ruled that congressional redistricting in North Carolina was unconstitutional because it favored minority voters, but was reversed both times by the Supreme Court, once in a unanimous ruling. In another case, Boyle refused to accept a settlement of a Justice Department sex discrimination claim against a North Carolina agency, even though the state had agreed to the settlement. He later allowed the state to withdraw from the settlement, a ruling reversed by the court of appeals.

- Miguel Estrada, a Federalist Society member and D.C. lawyer, was nominated to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. His confirmation has been opposed by the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and a large group of Latino legal and civil rights organizations and community leaders. Estrada has been criticized for extensive efforts to defend so-called anti-loitering laws, which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative effect on African-Americans and Latinos; in one case, he argued that the NAACP did not even have standing to challenge such an ordinance. A former supervisor in the Solicitor General's office concluded that Estrada "lacks the judgement" and is "too much of an ideologue to be an appeals court judge." Estrada and the Bush administration have refused to fully answer a number of important questions asked by senators or provide relevant memos from his tenure at the Justice Department. Estrada's confirmation is currently being blocked by a Senate filibuster.

- Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor is not only one of the nation's most aggressive advocates for a states' rights approach to the Constitution, but he has also used his office in an effort to push the law far to the right. As state Attorney General and as a leader in the Federalist Society, Pryor successfully urged the Supreme Court to roll back the clock on federal protections against age discrimination and discrimination against people with disabilities. Pryor has urged restrictions on federal authority even more extreme than those adopted by the narrow Supreme Court states' rights majority. For example, Pryor had urged the Court to rule that states could not be sued for money damages for violating the Family and Medical Leave Act, which would have left millions of state employees with no real recourse for violations of that law. In a recent 6-3 ruling, the Court rejected Pryor's argument. Pryor has urged Congress to consider repealing Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, calling it "an affront to federalism and an expensive burden that has outlived its usefulness." Pryor believes that it is acceptable to imprison gay men and lesbians for having consensual sex in the privacy of their own homes, and has filed an amicus brief urging the Supreme Court to uphold Texas' "Homosexual Conduct Law." In his brief, he has equated private consensual sex between same-sex couples with "activities like prostitution, adultery, necrophilia, bestiality, possession of child pornography, and even incest and pedophilia." Pryor is a staunch opponent of a woman's right to reproductive choice and has stated that Roe v. Wade is "the worst abomination of constitutional law in our history." Pryor opposes genuine church-state separation and among other things has supported a state judge's official sponsorship of sectarian prayers before jury assemblies.

Senate Handling of President Bush's Nominees under Democratic Control

President Bush and Republican Senate leaders have falsely claimed that the administration's judicial nominees were not treated fairly during the time that Democrats held a majority in the Senate, and that Democrats are now engaged in partisan obstructionism as a minority party. In fact, Bush's judicial nominees have been confirmed at a rapid pace under both Democratic and Republican majorities in the Senate, and have been given far better treatment than President Clinton's nominees received at the hands of the Republican Senate majority.

The Senate under Democratic control confirmed 100 of President Bush's judicial nominees in 17 months. The 100 confirmations represent significantly more than the 71 judges confirmed during the first two years of the first Bush administration and the 75 confirmed during the first two years of Republican Senate control during the Clinton administration. The 100 confirmations are more than the number confirmed during any of the Republican controlled Congresses under President Clinton, when there was an average of only 38 confirmations per year. Indeed, Senate Republicans blocked one-third of Clinton's circuit court nominees from 1995 to 2000.

Since the beginning of this year, with the Senate in Republican hands, an additional 26 judges have been confirmed, cutting the number of vacancies in half since the beginning of the administration. In that time, Democrats have used the filibuster to block only two controversial appeals court nominees, while a number of other nominees have been permitted a full floor vote in spite of intense opposition. Amidst the talk of crisis and a broken system, one important fact is being overlooked: there are currently only 45 vacancies in the federal judiciary, less than half of the 111 vacancies that existed when the Democrats took control of the Senate in July 2001. Sen. Patrick Leahy has noted that the vacancy rate on the federal judiciary is at its lowest level in 13 years and is now lower than the national unemployment rate.

Conclusion

The next Supreme Court justices could prove decisive on fundamental questions as well as shape for decades how America works and how Americans live: Will the Supreme Court undermine the federal government's ability to safeguard the air we breathe and the water we drink? Will the courts abandon their role in preserving Americans' right to privacy and strip women of the constitutional right to make their own family planning and reproductive choices? Will Congress lose the power to protect Americans' civil rights from abuses by state governments and others? Will the Voting Rights Act be applied so narrowly that it fails to protect citizens' most fundamental rights?

This is a defining moment for the meaning of the Constitution and the direction of the nation for the first half of the 21st Century. That fact is clearly understood by right-wing leaders and their allies in the White House and Congress. That is why they have focused so intently on judicial nominations, and it is why they are prepared to go to extreme measures – including changing the very nature and role of the Senate in our constitutional system – in order to try to guarantee Senate approval for even the most extreme right-wing nominees.

It is urgent that the American people be given the opportunity to understand how much is at stake before the next Supreme Court vacancy appears and the debate becomes focused on politics and process surrounding a particular nominee. The time for a broad public discussion about the future of the Court and the Constitution is now.

Re: Public Airing of Stakes in Upcoming Supreme Court Vacancy Must Begin Now

Coming Supreme Court Debate Must Focus on Substance, Not Politics

It has been almost nine years since the last U.S. Supreme Court vacancy, the longest interval between nominations in 180 years. Indeed, over the past half century, there has been on the average one Supreme Court nomination every two years. It is considered likely that at least one member of the U.S. Supreme Court will resign when the current term ends this month, and it is quite possible that the vacancy or vacancies this summer will be the first of three or four openings on the Court over the next several years. At stake in the appointment of new Supreme Court justices is the law of the land for the next generation – or longer. At risk are many of the great social justice achievements of the 20th Century.

The Bush administration, Republican Senate leaders, and right-wing pundits and activists are already gearing up to turn the focus of a Supreme Court battle away from the substance of a nominee's legal and judicial philosophy – and the devastating impact of a right-wing dominated Supreme Court – and toward the so-called "obstructionism" of Senate Democrats and the legitimacy of a potential Senate filibuster against an extremist Supreme Court nominee.

It is urgent that public debate over Supreme Court nominees focus on crucial constitutional questions over which the current Court is closely divided, including the existence of a constitutional right to privacy, the authority of the federal government to enact and enforce civil rights and environmental protections, the separation of church and state, and more. Dozens of rights and legal protections Americans count on are just one or two Supreme Court justices away from being dismantled in pursuit of right-wing legal theorists' goal of reinstating a 19th Century approach to the U.S. Constitution.

A 19th Century Constitution for a 21st Century America

Two far-right justices, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, have led the destructive revival of a once-discredited "states' rights" approach to the Constitution. A series of 5-4 decisions have embraced new theories advanced by right-wing legal advocates affiliated with the Federalist Society, weakening federal civil rights protections and declaring other urgent issues off limits to action by the U.S. Congress. But even more important, Scalia and Thomas have staked out in their written dissents and concurring opinions a burning desire to have the Court move much more aggressively to overturn decades of Supreme Court precedent than even the current conservative majority has been willing to do.

With President Bush having campaigned on a pledge to use Scalia and Thomas as his models for Supreme Court nominees, it is crucial that senators, the media, and the American public examine the impact on American law and society of a Supreme Court dominated by justices who are committed to radically restricting the authority of the federal government to protect individual rights and act in pursuit of the common good.

Scalia and Thomas, like many Bush administration officials and judicial nominees, are affiliated with the Federalist Society, which has held seminars on returning the nation's constitutional framework to a pre-New Deal era. (For more information on the philosophy and extraordinary influence of the Federalist Society on the Bush administration and its judicial selection process, see The Federalist Society: From Obscurity to Power, published by People For the American Way Foundation and available at www.pfaw.org/go/federalist_society.)

People For the American Way Foundation's Courting Disaster, published in 2000, examined the dissenting and concurring opinions written by Scalia and Thomas since they joined the Court. Courting Disaster documented that a Supreme Court with a Scalia-Thomas majority could overturn more than 100 precedents and turn back the clock decades on civil and voting rights, privacy and reproductive choice, religious liberty, environmental protection, consumer and worker safety, and more. Because most cases before the Supreme Court that raise fundamental constitutional questions are now decided by slim majorities, it would take just one or two more appointments to give Scalia and Thomas the power to reshape the Constitution according to their radically reactionary vision.

The result would be a dramatic rollback in legal and social justice gains, and a return to a constitutional framework in which states' rights and property rights were predominant. A Supreme Court committed to advancing the Scalia-Thomas agenda would not only bring about the reversal of more than half a century of legal and social justice accomplishments, but also a return to a situation America faced in the first third of the 20th Century, when progressive legislation adopted by Congress and signed by the President was repeatedly rejected on constitutional grounds by the Supreme Court. A Court dominated by the states' rights judicial philosophy could prevent the federal government from taking action on a range of national issues, regardless of who is elected to the White House or Congress.

Courting Disaster and updates on the 2001 and 2002 Supreme Court terms are available at www.pfaw.org/go/courting_disaster. A comprehensive update of the report will be available shortly after the close of the current term.

The Attack on the Senate's Advise and Consent Role

In our constitutional system of checks and balances, the Senate has a co-equal role with the President in appointing federal judges, since it must provide its "advice and consent" before any nominee becomes a judge. Judicial nominees – who are confirmed for lifetime appointments – must be subject to the highest standard of scrutiny. Federal judges' decisions – especially the rulings of Supreme Court justices – last long after the presidents who appointed them are no longer in office.

Given the power that rests with the Supreme Court, no president's nominee is presumptively entitled to confirmation. Instead, a nominee bears the burden of demonstrating that he or she meets the appropriate qualifications, which must include a demonstrated commitment to civil rights and individual liberties, and a clear respect for Congress' proper constitutional role in protecting constitutional and civil rights and the health and safety of all Americans.

Since President Bush has signaled both in word and in deed that he intends to nominate Supreme Court justices who do not share these commitments, senators have an urgent responsibility to take their constitutional obligation seriously and oppose with every appropriate means at their disposal the confirmation of Supreme Court justices who would wreak havoc on Americans' lives and liberties.

Going Nuclear

The White House, its right-wing allies, and some Senate Republicans are waging a pre-emptive war designed to eliminate one important tool at the disposal of senators concerned about extremist Supreme Court nominees – the Senate filibuster.

Ignoring the overwhelming confirmation rate of Bush administration judicial nominees, the administration and its backers have whipped up a dishonest and hypocritical campaign to discredit Senate Democrats' treatment of Bush nominees. This campaign has employed crude racial politics and outrageous smears, for example accusing opponents of appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada's confirmation of anti-Hispanic bigotry.

GOP leaders have now put the next step in motion, calling into question the constitutionality of the filibuster, even though both parties have repeatedly used filibusters for decades. The Senate Rules Committee will conduct a hearing this week on one proposal to change Senate rules to effectively eliminate this important procedural protection against the abuse of power by a bare majority acting on an issue of major importance. Sen. Trent Lott has joined the far-right chorus urging GOP leaders to go even further, adopting a "nuclear" strategy and carrying out a naked power play that would ignore Senate rules and lay waste to two hundred years of Senate tradition.

For a more detailed examination of the historical use and defense of the filibuster by GOP leaders including Lott, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist and Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, see GOP Leaders Try to Create Constitutional Cover for Illegitimate Power Play, at www.pfaw.org/independent_judiciary.

Appeals Court Nominees Give Clear Signal of Trouble to Come

As a presidential candidate, George W. Bush secured the enthusiastic support of Religious Right political leaders by telling them that he would appoint Supreme Court justices in the mold of Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. As noted previously, if President Bush makes good on that pledge, far-right political groups will have succeeded in their ultimate quest. A Supreme Court with a Scalia-Thomas majority would likely give right-wing leaders long-term victories on a wide range of issues, including dismantling women's constitutional right to privacy and reproductive choice and further undermining the separation of church and state.

There is no evidence that President Bush intends to abandon his goal of using the federal courts to turn back the clock. Indeed, there is powerful evidence to the contrary. A number of his appeals court nominees are among the nation's most aggressive proponents of the neo-states' rights judicial philosophy, and have advocated for an end to reproductive choice, overturning federal laws protecting the rights of people with disabilities, dismantling key protections of the federal voting rights act, and more.

Among the administration's appeals court nominees:

- Carolyn Kuhl, a Federalist Society member and currently a California state trial court judge, has been nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. While in the Justice Department under the Reagan Administration, Kuhl urged the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade as "flawed." She also played a key role in convincing then-Attorney General William French Smith to reverse prior policy and support the granting of tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University despite its racially discriminatory practices. (Her position was rejected by an 8-1 ruling of the Supreme Court.) Kuhl has been widely criticized for a ruling in which she dismissed the right to privacy claims of a breast cancer patient whose doctor permitted a drug company salesman to watch her breast and abdominal exam. Her ruling was unanimously reversed on appeal. Kuhl's nomination has been approved on a party-line vote by the Judiciary Committee; she is awaiting floor action in spite of opposition from both California Senators Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer.

- Priscilla Owen, a Federalist Society member and currently a justice on the Texas Supreme Court, was nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Owen is at the far right wing of the conservative Texas court, further to the right than President Bush's own appointees to that court when he was governor. In one case in which Owen dissented, then-Texas Supreme Court Justice Alberto Gonzales - who is now chief White House counsel - warned that adopting the dissenters' view would be an "unconscionable act of judicial activism." (This was only one of 11 cases in which Gonzales criticized or joined other justices' criticism of positions taken by Owen during the short time they served on the court together.) In another dissent, Owen effectively sought to rewrite an important state civil rights law to make it much harder for employees to prove that their rights were violated. Owen's confirmation was rejected by the Senate Judiciary Committee on September 5, 2002; in an unprecedented move, she was renominated by President Bush this year. Her confirmation is being blocked by a Senate filibuster.

- Jeffrey Sutton, an officer in the Federalist Society's Separation of Powers and Federalism practice group, was narrowly confirmed by the Senate to a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. Sutton has been one of the nation's most aggressive advocates for severely limiting federal protections against discrimination and injury based on disability, race, age, sex, and religion. More than 70 national organizations and over 375 regional, state, and local groups opposed his confirmation. Sutton was confirmed by a vote of 52 to 41 on April 29, 2003.

- Terrence Boyle, a former staffer to Senator Jesse Helms and a district court judge in North Carolina, has been nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Civil rights groups have criticized Boyle for his right-wing judicial activism in civil rights cases. Boyle twice ruled that congressional redistricting in North Carolina was unconstitutional because it favored minority voters, but was reversed both times by the Supreme Court, once in a unanimous ruling. In another case, Boyle refused to accept a settlement of a Justice Department sex discrimination claim against a North Carolina agency, even though the state had agreed to the settlement. He later allowed the state to withdraw from the settlement, a ruling reversed by the court of appeals.

- Miguel Estrada, a Federalist Society member and D.C. lawyer, was nominated to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. His confirmation has been opposed by the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and a large group of Latino legal and civil rights organizations and community leaders. Estrada has been criticized for extensive efforts to defend so-called anti-loitering laws, which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative effect on African-Americans and Latinos; in one case, he argued that the NAACP did not even have standing to challenge such an ordinance. A former supervisor in the Solicitor General's office concluded that Estrada "lacks the judgement" and is "too much of an ideologue to be an appeals court judge." Estrada and the Bush administration have refused to fully answer a number of important questions asked by senators or provide relevant memos from his tenure at the Justice Department. Estrada's confirmation is currently being blocked by a Senate filibuster.

- Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor is not only one of the nation's most aggressive advocates for a states' rights approach to the Constitution, but he has also used his office in an effort to push the law far to the right. As state Attorney General and as a leader in the Federalist Society, Pryor successfully urged the Supreme Court to roll back the clock on federal protections against age discrimination and discrimination against people with disabilities. Pryor has urged restrictions on federal authority even more extreme than those adopted by the narrow Supreme Court states' rights majority. For example, Pryor had urged the Court to rule that states could not be sued for money damages for violating the Family and Medical Leave Act, which would have left millions of state employees with no real recourse for violations of that law. In a recent 6-3 ruling, the Court rejected Pryor's argument. Pryor has urged Congress to consider repealing Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, calling it "an affront to federalism and an expensive burden that has outlived its usefulness." Pryor believes that it is acceptable to imprison gay men and lesbians for having consensual sex in the privacy of their own homes, and has filed an amicus brief urging the Supreme Court to uphold Texas' "Homosexual Conduct Law." In his brief, he has equated private consensual sex between same-sex couples with "activities like prostitution, adultery, necrophilia, bestiality, possession of child pornography, and even incest and pedophilia." Pryor is a staunch opponent of a woman's right to reproductive choice and has stated that Roe v. Wade is "the worst abomination of constitutional law in our history." Pryor opposes genuine church-state separation and among other things has supported a state judge's official sponsorship of sectarian prayers before jury assemblies.

Senate Handling of President Bush's Nominees under Democratic Control

President Bush and Republican Senate leaders have falsely claimed that the administration's judicial nominees were not treated fairly during the time that Democrats held a majority in the Senate, and that Democrats are now engaged in partisan obstructionism as a minority party. In fact, Bush's judicial nominees have been confirmed at a rapid pace under both Democratic and Republican majorities in the Senate, and have been given far better treatment than President Clinton's nominees received at the hands of the Republican Senate majority.

The Senate under Democratic control confirmed 100 of President Bush's judicial nominees in 17 months. The 100 confirmations represent significantly more than the 71 judges confirmed during the first two years of the first Bush administration and the 75 confirmed during the first two years of Republican Senate control during the Clinton administration. The 100 confirmations are more than the number confirmed during any of the Republican controlled Congresses under President Clinton, when there was an average of only 38 confirmations per year. Indeed, Senate Republicans blocked one-third of Clinton's circuit court nominees from 1995 to 2000.

Since the beginning of this year, with the Senate in Republican hands, an additional 26 judges have been confirmed, cutting the number of vacancies in half since the beginning of the administration. In that time, Democrats have used the filibuster to block only two controversial appeals court nominees, while a number of other nominees have been permitted a full floor vote in spite of intense opposition. Amidst the talk of crisis and a broken system, one important fact is being overlooked: there are currently only 45 vacancies in the federal judiciary, less than half of the 111 vacancies that existed when the Democrats took control of the Senate in July 2001. Sen. Patrick Leahy has noted that the vacancy rate on the federal judiciary is at its lowest level in 13 years and is now lower than the national unemployment rate.

Conclusion

The next Supreme Court justices could prove decisive on fundamental questions as well as shape for decades how America works and how Americans live: Will the Supreme Court undermine the federal government's ability to safeguard the air we breathe and the water we drink? Will the courts abandon their role in preserving Americans' right to privacy and strip women of the constitutional right to make their own family planning and reproductive choices? Will Congress lose the power to protect Americans' civil rights from abuses by state governments and others? Will the Voting Rights Act be applied so narrowly that it fails to protect citizens' most fundamental rights?

This is a defining moment for the meaning of the Constitution and the direction of the nation for the first half of the 21st Century. That fact is clearly understood by right-wing leaders and their allies in the White House and Congress. That is why they have focused so intently on judicial nominations, and it is why they are prepared to go to extreme measures – including changing the very nature and role of the Senate in our constitutional system – in order to try to guarantee Senate approval for even the most extreme right-wing nominees.

It is urgent that the American people be given the opportunity to understand how much is at stake before the next Supreme Court vacancy appears and the debate becomes focused on politics and process surrounding a particular nominee. The time for a broad public discussion about the future of the Court and the Constitution is now.

Brett,

Great news about Karen.

Attached is a copy of an email I sent to Helgi Walker and Carolyn Nelson. Anything you can do to help would be great as we are in a time crunch. Ken is not listed on the invitation because he is sending out something this week about Campaign Finance Reform and does not want to be listed on two fundraising letters in the same week.

Carolyn,

Helgi Walker was kind enough to contact you about getting a speaker from the Bush administration for a political event on June 30.

My husband, Ken Starr, and I are helping with a fundraiser for Jack Rust, a candidate for the Virginia House of Delegates. Jack, an attorney in Fairfax, Virginia, formerly served in the General Assembly, but he was defeated in the last election by a hair. So we very much want him to get his seat back because he was the most effective Republican in the Virginia legislature.

On Monday, June 30 from 6:00 - 8:00 p.m., we are helping to host a reception at the home of George Shafran, a generous Republican with a beautiful home at 1310 Ballantrae Farm Drive in McLean, across the street from Colin Powell. We would like to have a prominent special guest attend the reception who will be a draw for the event. We would especially like to request if Judge Gonzales, Karl Rove, Andy Card, Larry Thompson or Ken Mehlman would be available? Unfortunately the invitations are scheduled to go out tomorrow so it would be helpful to know by then.

I have attached the invitation. If Judge Gonzales or someone from the administration can attend, we will place an insert in the invitation.

Many thanks for your assistance. - Alice

Brett,

Great news about Karen.

Attached is a copy of an email I sent to Helgi Walker and Carolyn Nelson.
Anything you can do to help would be great as we are in a time crunch.
Ken is not listed on the invitation because he is sending out something this week about Campaign Finance Reform and does not want to be listed on two fundraising letters in the same week.

Carolyn,

Helgi Walker was kind enough to contact you about getting a speaker from the Bush administration for a political event on June 30.

My husband, Ken Starr, and I are helping with a fundraiser for Jack Rust, a candidate for the Virginia House of Delegates. Jack, an attorney in Fairfax, Virginia, formerly served in the General Assembly, but he was defeated in the last election by a hair. So we very much want him to get his seat back because he was the most effective Republican in the Virginia legislature.

On Monday, June 30 from 6:00 - 8:00 p.m., we are helping to host a reception at the home of George Shafran, a generous Republican with a beautiful home at 1310 Ballantrae Farm Drive in McLean, across the street from Colin Powell. We would like to have a prominent special guest attend the reception who will be a draw for the event. We would especially like to request if Judge Gonzales, Karl Rove, Andy Card, Larry Thompson or Ken Mehlman would be available? Unfortunately the invitations are scheduled to go out tomorrow so it would be helpful to know by then.

I have attached the invitation. If Judge Gonzales or someone from the administration can attend, we will place an insert in the invitation.

Many thanks for your assistance. - Alice

THE JUDICIARY

Short-listed

BY PETER GEIER
Daily Record Legal Affairs Writer

Two federal judicial profiles are soon to be unveiled in Maryland — one, the official appointment of U.S. District Judge Marvin J. Garbis, slated to take senior status on his 67th birthday next week.

The other will be the lawyer the White House evidently has picked from its short list of six names to take Garbis' place. The new appointee will be assigned to the district's southern division in Greenbelt, according to sources.

The following candidates — listed in alphabetical order — have been identified:

• Rod J. Rosenstein, 33, principal deputy assistant attorney general at the Department of Justice Tax Divison, who has served as deputy assistant attorney general for criminal matters since September 2001.

Rosenstein served as an Associate Independent Counsel from 1995 to 1997 and as an Assistant United States Attorney in Maryland from 1997 to 2001. He prosecuted a broad range of federal criminal cases, including tax offenses. He also briefed and argued appeals in the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

• Ronald B. Rubin, 47, a name partner in a four-lawyer Rockville law firm whose practices areas include civil, tax, criminal and securities litigation. (Rubin was also a finalist for the so-called Maryland seat on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.)

[illegible] from Catholic University [illegible] was a law clerk to U.S. District Judge [illegible] C. Miller Jr., U.S. District Court, District of Maryland, 1980-1982.

• Harry C. Storm, [illegible]

See Storm, page 12B

List

five-lawyer Bethesda law whose practice includes civil and petroleum franchise litigation and contracts. Storm is a University of Maryland law school graduate and president of the Montgomery County Bar Association, 2002-2003.

• Roger W. Titus, 61, a partner in the Rockville office of Venable, Baetjer and Howard, whose practice areas include litigation and appellate practice, as well as municipal, education, zoning planning and land use law.

Like Rubin, Titus had been considered previously for appointment to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

A Georgetown University Law Center graduate, as well as adjunct professor, Titus' accomplishments include serving as trial counsel, for the Montgomery County Board of Education since 1979 and a member of the Trial Courts Judicial Nominating Commission for Montgomery County, 1979-1991.

A member of the state Appellate Judicial Nominating Commission from 1991-1999, Titus has also been a member of the Court of Appeals' standing committee on rules of practice and procedure since 1989.

• John H. "Butch" West III, 60, a Towson-based practitioner whose areas of practice include civil and commercial litigation, as well as securities, admiralty and personal injury law. West received his law degree from Washington and Lee University and was a law clerk to the U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman (Eastern District of Virginia, 1970-1971).

West also has been an arbitrator for the National Association of Securities Dealers since 1996 and a member of the 4th Circuit's Judicial Conference since 1974.

• Pamela J. White, a partner in the Baltimore law firm Ober, Kaler Grimes and Shriver. White, who served as president of the Maryland State Bar Association in 2001-2002, is a 1977 graduate of Washington & Lee University's law school.

Court to Hear Campaign Finance Challenge

By ANNE GEARAN
The Associated Press
Thursday, June 5, 2003; 5:14 PM

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court said Thursday it will hold a special session in September to hear arguments on the constitutionality of a law meant to govern how candidates raise money in the 2004 presidential and congressional elections.

The court will meet Sept. 8, a month ahead of the start of its regular term. In apparent acknowledgment of the complexity of the case, the court will hear four hours of argument instead of the usual one hour.

The 2002 law bans corporate, union and unlimited contributions - known as soft money - to national party committees. It also bars a range of interest groups, including those financed with corporate or union money and those that do not disclose their donors, from airing ads mentioning federal candidates in their districts in the month before a primary and two months before a general election.

A complex lower court ruling upheld parts of the law and struck down others. That ruling spawned 12 separate appeals to the Supreme Court, covering some 80 groups or individuals and nearly two dozen legal questions.

Out of that tangle, the high court organized the parties into two sides and set out when each must file its legal papers.

The high court will have the last word on the new rules, which are already in effect.

HEADLINE: BEST LOCAL GIRL MADE GOOD
Cecilia Altonaga

BODY:
On May 6, 2003, by a unanimous vote of the U.S. Senate, Altonaga became the nation's first female Cuban-American federal judge. President George W. Bush personally nominated her, sidestepping a list of South Florida candidates forwarded by the state's two senators, Bill Nelson and Bob Graham. The move provoked cries of foul. It's clear Bush wanted a Cuban female in the position, and in Altonaga he found a winner. The Yale-educated Coral Gables resident was a career prosecutor with the Miami-Dade State Attorney's Office until she became a county court judge in 1996 and then circuit court judge three years later. Even Nelson and Graham, two Democrats, conceded the point of her qualifications and ended up backing the president's pick.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF
OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS "EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 2"

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.

2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

Bill Pryor Senate Confirmation Hearing

Alabama attorney general's Judiciary Committee hearing set to begin Wednesday

06/07/03

By SEAN REILLY

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON -- The same day the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a hearing on Alabama Attor ney General Bill Pryor's candidacy for a federal judgeship, it will also consider a nominee to head the federal office created by a 1994 law intended to combat domestic violence and sexual assaults against women.

Considering that Pryor, a Republican and Mobile native, backed a move that killed a key provision in that same statute, it's a coincidence that some find ironic. And Pryor's position in that case is one of a number of subjects that will be brought up at Wednesday's hearing, according to staffers for senior Democratic senators.

"That will certainly be an issue that the committee will examine," said David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the panel's top Democrat.

Carle said the committee will also look at Pryor's role in "stripping" away congressional and fed eral authority to enforce constitutionally guaranteed protections.

Because Pryor's record is still being reviewed, Carle declined to go into detail.

But as attorney general, Pryor has mounted legal challenges including one involving a Mobile woman who wanted to overturn the state's English-only driver's license test. Several of those cases resulted in U.S. Supreme Court rulings putting new limits on citizens' ability to bring lawsuits against states based on federal discrimination laws.

In those instances, Pryor, an ardent advocate of states' rights, successfully argued that those laws impermissibly stretched federal authority.

At the office of another top Democrat on the committee, Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, spokeswoman Stephanie Cutter indicated that the senator had questions for Pryor on his record on civil rights, abortion rights and his position as attorney general on treatment of prisoners when he unsuccessfully fought a lawsuit targeting the state's practice of handcuffing inmates to a hitching post as a means of disciplining them.

Spokesmen for other Democrats on the committee either did not return phone calls or declined to comment Friday. While not a surprise, the responses from Leahy's and Kennedy's offices offer the first specific indication of the kind of intensive questioning Pryor may face.

On Friday, a Pryor spokeswoman declined to discuss any preparations the attorney general is making for the hearing, saying only that he "looks forward to the confirmation process."

President Bush nominated Pryor, 41, two months ago for the lifetime appointment to the Atlanta-based U.S. 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, one step below the U.S. Supreme Court. A number of advocacy groups are already arguing that Pryor won't be able to keep his personal views out of the courtroom. Supporters call him a superb legal scholar who will uphold the law.

The only other nomination on the panel's agenda Wednesday is that of Diane M. Stuart to head the Justice Department's Office on Violence Against Women.

That office was created by the 1994 Violence Against Women Act. Several years ago, Pryor was the only attorney general in the country to file a friend of court brief siding with those seeking to overturn the portion of the law that allowed rape victims to sue their attackers in federal courts. Although three-dozen attorneys general lined up on the other side, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the provision in 2000 by a 5-4 majority.

In an article that he circulated to the media, Pryor defended his position. He did not dispute the goal of preventing sexual assaults, but said the provision was "unconstitutional and misguided" because it sought to justify federal intervention by the effect that abuse has on interstate commerce.

Lobbying Starts as Groups Foresee Supreme Court Vacancy
By ROBIN TONER and NEIL A. LEWIS NY Times

ASHINGTON, June 7 * Interest groups on the left and the right are beginning full-scale political campaigns * including fund-raising, advertising and major research * to prepare for what many expect to be a Supreme Court vacancy in the next several weeks.

While none of the justices have said they plan to retire, any decision would traditionally be announced at the end of the court's term in late June.

Both conservatives and liberals say the time is right for a change in at least one and perhaps two seats, given the age of several justices and the general recognition that this is President Bush's last chance to name a justice before the presidential campaign begins in earnest.

Neither side wants to be caught off guard in what is expected to be a fast-moving battle for public opinion, set off by the naming of a nominee.

The Naral Pro-Choice America Foundation is making a pre-emptive strike with a television campaign beginning on Sunday that highlights the importance of the court to abortion rights. The commercial shows a woman gasping as she reads the newspaper headline "Abortion Outlawed * Court Overturns Right to Choose."

Republicans have been raising money and planning strategy under the guidance of the former White House counsel C. Boyden Gray, who was a principal strategist in the bitter struggle over Justice Clarence Thomas's nomination in 1991.

Two weeks ago, White House and Justice Department officials met in a Washington law office with several Republican veterans of confirmation battles, including Mr. Gray, to discuss how to deal with liberal attacks on a Bush nominee.

The meeting opened with the veterans recalling the failed effort to put Robert H. Bork on the Supreme Court in 1987 and the successful campaign to confirm Mr. Thomas in 1991, after he was confronted with reports that he had sexually harassed Anita Hill, his former employee.

"The purpose was to see what lessons we had learned from those two battles," said a lawyer at the meeting, which included Leonard Leo, a top official of the Federalist Society, a conservative lawyers' group.

On the other side, a coalition of liberal and progressive groups * including Naral, People for the American Way, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and the Alliance for Justice * has been meeting weekly, usually on Fridays, to discuss judicial strategy for nominations to lower federal courts and the Supreme Court.

"If history is any guide, it is quite likely, given the president's stated preference for justices like Thomas and Scalia, that the next Supreme Court nominee is likely to be an ideological extremist," Wade Henderson, executive director of the leadership conference, said. "In that case, we would hope to generate a debate in the Senate and the country at large over what it means to appoint another justice in that mold."

The groups are compiling research on potential nominees. Nan Aron, director of the Alliance for Justice, a Washington liberal group that scrutinizes judicial nominees, said she had added several staff members for the expected confirmation battle and had compiled dossiers on about eight people she said she thought could be named.

Liberals acknowledge, though, that the White House has the advantage of surprise. Kate Michelman, president of Naral Pro-Choice America, said her group planned a rapid-response research operation.

On Capitol Hill, the parties are already engaged in legislative trench warfare over several lower court nominations that are considered dress rehearsals for a Supreme Court battle. While Republicans control the Senate with 51 seats compared with 48 Democrats and one independent, Democrats have staged filibusters to block votes on two of Mr. Bush's nominees they say are right-wing ideologues.

As a result, Republicans are trying to change the rules on filibusters, asserting that Democrats are thwarting the will of the president and have unfairly created the need for a 60-vote majority (enough to break a filibuster) to confirm judges.

Mr. Gray's group, the Committee for Justice, has bought television commercials in some states, supporting those appeals court nominees who have been blocked by Democratic filibusters. "If it becomes accepted lore that you now have to have 60 votes, then we've got a real problem," Mr. Gray said.

Liberals counter that Mr. Bush is engaged in ideological court-packing. Senator Charles E. Schumer, the New York Democrat who has led the effort to oppose several appeals court nominees, met last week with Alberto R. Gonzales, the White House counsel, and urged him to ensure that any Supreme Court selections were moderate enough to win substantial Democratic support.

Mr. Schumer said he told Mr. Gonzales that he should try to "find someone who 100 of us can support," not just the 51 Republicans.

Each party is stoking emotions among its core supporters. A fund-raising appeal from the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee declares: "The Bush administration would like nothing more than to pack the courts with right-wing ideologues like Antonin Scalia. Now that they control all branches of the federal government, they are trying to push their choices through the Senate with no debate, no questions asked."

The expectation of change on the court is based, in part, on its record-breaking stability in recent years; no one has stepped down since President Bill Clinton appointed Stephen G. Breyer in 1994, providing for the longest period without a turnover since the 1820's.

The three oldest judges are Republicans, and White House officials say that two of them * Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, who is 78, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who is 73 * would be the most likely to retire, given the knowledge that a Republican president would pick their replacements. More than one vacancy this summer would add even more urgency to the campaigns, and Justice O'Connor's frequent position as a swing vote could intensify a battle over her successor.

Abortion rights advocates have been particularly energized, asserting that Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision recognizing a constitutional right to abortion, could be overturned by a substantially refashioned court.

Ms. Michelman has already called on senators who support abortion rights to filibuster any nominee who does not commit to Roe. "The nominee must commit to upholding Roe," she said in an interview. "We have every right, given what's at stake for American women, to expect the nominee to answer the question."

The issue of how nominees respond to such questions has always produced a rich debate. Republican nominees have generally brushed aside those inquiries by saying it would be inappropriate to say how they would rule on specific cases.

However, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, named to the court by President Clinton in 1993, said flatly that she supported Roe.

James Bopp Jr., general counsel for the National Right to Life Committee, countered: "Pro-choice groups want to change the rules of the game. They want to politicize the judiciary by seeking to require pledges by nominees that they would vote a certain way. This is not just politicizing the judiciary, it's the destruction of an independent judiciary."

Administration officials say that the White House has compiled dossiers on dozens of potential nominees, but that the list of genuine candidates is far smaller, fewer than 10. So far, the discussions have focused on providing possible nominees for different circumstances, depending on who resigns.

In almost all the possibilities, officials said, Mr. Gonzales, the White House counsel and a longtime legal adviser to Mr. Bush, would be a candidate. Mr. Gonzales would be the first Hispanic member of the Supreme Court. Mr. Bush's top aides, notably Karl Rove, his chief political adviser, are described as well aware that this would provide a political advantage for both him and the Republican Party, which has been aggressively courting Hispanic voters.

But social conservatives, an important component of Mr. Bush's political coalition, have expressed increasing wariness about Mr. Gonzales. Many say he reminds them of Justice David J. Souter, who was named to the court by President Bush's father, and who they say had been sold to them as a solid conservative vote but turned out otherwise.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS "EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 2"

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.

2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

CERTIFICATION BY EMPLOYEE

(in response to "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003 from the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States)

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

   (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;

   (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or

   (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

   Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

TEL (202) 331-4060
www.9-11commission.gov

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS "EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 2"

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.

2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

CERTIFICATION BY EMPLOYEE

(in response to "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

   (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;

   (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or

   (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

   Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

TEL (202) 331-4060
www.9-11commission.gov

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS "EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 2"

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.

2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

CERTIFICATION BY EMPLOYEE

(in response to "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003
from the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States)

(Check one item as appropriate, sign, and date, and submit to the Office of the Counsel to the President by June 16, 2003)

____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the materials in my possession or control for materials responsive to National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States' "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003 and have produced with this certification photocopies of all such responsive documents to the Office of the Counsel to the President.

____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the materials in my possession or control for materials responsive to National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States' "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003 and have no such documents.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

   (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;

   (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or

   (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

   Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

TEL (202) 331-4060
www.9-11commission.gov

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS "EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 2"

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.

2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

CERTIFICATION BY EMPLOYEE

(in response to "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003
from the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States)

(Check one item as appropriate, sign, and date,
and submit to the Office of the Counsel to the President by June 16, 2003)

____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the materials in my possession or control for materials responsive to National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States' "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003 and have produced with this certification photocopies of all such responsive documents to the Office of the Counsel to the President.

____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the materials in my possession or control for materials responsive to National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States' "EOP Document Request No. 2" dated June 4, 2003 and have no such documents.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

   (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;

   (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or

   (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

   Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

TEL (202) 331-4060
www.9-11commission.gov

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)

4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.

5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

I know you have a million things on your plate, but have you had a chance to review the Smithsonian's request for the bullhorn to go on tour around the country through January 2006? Just want to keep on your radar screen.

At a minimum, I think we would need some document of agreement listing the actual cities when they have been determined, get it back first to build an appropriate display case so it cannot be tampered with, and include a provision allowing us to retrieve it if necessary prior to the scheduled end date.

Would appreciate your input when you have a chance.

Excerpts from "Be Patient, Keep Looking" by Gary Schmitt, Los Angeles Times (6/8/03):

"In making the case to the American people and the world for going to war with Iraq, the Bush administration argued in part that it was justified because Saddam Hussein had defied the U.N. Security Council for 10 years and that he headed one of the world's bloodiest and most ruthless regimes.

"But the core reason was that he possessed weapons of mass destruction and, when combined with his hatred of the United States, his history of aggression and his ties to terrorists, that made him too dangerous to leave in place after 9/11.
But, to date, no weapons have been found, and the question is: Did the administration deceive Congress, the American people and allies in order to justify a war it wanted to wage for totally different reasons?

"If it was a campaign of deception, it was one in which virtually the whole world was complicit... Clinton administration officials, congressional Democrats and Republicans, French officials, British officials, U.N. officials and virtually anyone with a serious intelligence capability -- all had said that Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction. And with good reason. Not only did Hussein use chemical weapons against Iran and his own people, but U.N. inspectors also documented his efforts to build nuclear weapons, weaponize biological agents and develop various means to deliver them. It was the United Nations, not the U.S., that first concluded that Iraq had produced thousands of liters of chemical and biological agents and never documented their destruction."

"So, if there was near-universal agreement about the existence of Iraq's weapons programs, why can't the coalition teams find stocks of weapons today? Probably because Hussein destroyed them either before the U.N. inspectors returned to Iraq last December or, as one Iraqi scientist told occupation authorities, just before the war began."

"Even the French said that if Hussein used such weapons, they would support the coalition effort. From a tactical point of view, the Iraqi leader might have calculated that using chemical or biological weapons would not have stopped American forces from advancing and, in turn, would have undermined a strategy of drawing out the conflict in the hope that world opinion, led by Paris, Berlin and Moscow, would eventually force an end to the war."

"[P]atience is required. Hussein's regime had more than two decades of experience in hiding these programs from inspectors and the world's intelligence agencies.

"...[C]hemical and biological weapons programs are easily concealed because they require no huge infrastructure and can be intertwined with wholly legitimate commercial and scientific processes. This means that much of what we uncover will first require Iraqi scientists, engineers and former senior officials to come forward with information on the whereabouts of the various parts of the programs."

"Unfortunately, patience has been the first thing to go in the current controversy... It is certainly possible that intelligence assessments were politicized, but it is very unlikely. Does anyone really think that Secretary of State Colin L. Powell, CIA Director George J. Tenet or, for that matter, almost any experienced Washington hand would not know that any serious attempt to rig intelligence conclusions would come back to bite them?"

"Intelligence products are not gospel, and they should not be treated as such. For most questions, intelligence assessments are a combination of some secret material and a whole lot of ordinary analysis. To make sense of the data, an analyst will have to pick and order the information using assumptions and methodologies any thoughtful policy analyst would normally use. This is not some arcane exercise. And there are good reasons to believe that any number of experienced policymakers will be as good at this as the intelligence official ? or better.

"There is something else going on. Opponents of the war ? most of whom probably never had a good word to say about the CIA ? are rushing to defend "the sanctity" of the intelligence process in an effort to undermine the legitimacy of the war and call into question a president's judgment that, in the years ahead, "the community of nations may see more and more of the very kind of threat Iraq poses now ? a rogue state with weapons of mass destruction, ready to use them or provide them to terrorists." But since this was the assessment of President Clinton in a February 1998 speech at the Pentagon, Bush critics have a larger task in front of them than just going after the current administration.

"... But like the conduct of the early days of the war itself, the fact that things have not turned out precisely as some might have predicted doesn't mean failure, incompetence or, worse, duplicity. It simply means we have been engaged in a struggle with a clever and deceptive enemy."

Excerpts from "A Plot to Deceive?" by Robert Kagan, The Washington Post (6/8/03):

"There is something surreal about the charges flying that President Bush lied when he claimed Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction...

"Why? Not because the Bush administration may have -- repeat, may have --exaggerated the extent of knowledge about what Hussein had in his WMD arsenal. No, the critics' real aim is to prove that, as a New York Times reporter recently put it, 'the failure so far to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq may mean that there never were any in the first place.'

"The absurdity of this charge is mind-boggling. Yes, neither the CIA nor the U.N. inspectors have ever known exactly how many weapons Hussein had or how many he was building. But that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction and the ability to produce more? That has never been in doubt.

"Start with this: The Iraqi government in the 1990s admitted to U.N. weapons inspectors that it had produced 8,500 liters of anthrax and a few tons of VX. Where are they?"

"Go back and take a look at the report Hans Blix delivered to the U.N. Security Council on Jan. 27. On the question of Iraq's stocks of anthrax, Blix reported 'no convincing evidence' that they were ever destroyed. But there was 'strong evidence' that Iraq produced more anthrax than it had admitted 'and that at least some of this was retained'...

"On the question of VX, Blix reported that his inspections team had information that conflicted with Iraqi accounts. The Iraqis claimed that they had produced

VX only as part of a pilot program but that the quality was poor and the agent was never 'weaponized.' But according to Blix, the inspections team discovered Iraqi documents that showed the quality of the VX to be better than declared.
The team also uncovered 'indications that the agent' had been 'weaponized'...

"Today, of course, they and many other known weapons are still unaccounted for.
Does it follow, therefore, that they never existed? Or does it make more sense to conclude that the weapons were there and that either we'll find them or we'll find out what happened to them?

"The answer depends on how broad and pervasive you like your conspiracies to be.
Because if Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair are lying, they're not alone. They're part of a vast conspiratorial network of liars that includes U.N. weapons inspectors and reputable arms control experts both inside and outside government, both Republicans and Democrats.
"Maybe former CIA director John Deutch was lying when he testified before the Senate Intelligence Committee on Sept. 19, 1996, that 'we believe that [Hussein] retains an undetermined quantity of chemical and biological agents that he would certainly have the ability to deliver against adversaries by aircraft or artillery or by Scud missile systems.'
"Maybe former defense secretary William Cohen was lying in April when he said,
'I am absolutely convinced that there are weapons.... I saw evidence back in 1998 when we would see the inspectors being barred from gaining entry into a warehouse for three hours with trucks rolling up and then moving those trucks out.'
"Maybe the German intelligence service was lying when it reported in 2001 that Hussein might be three years away from being able to build three nuclear weapons and that by 2005 Iraq would have a missile with sufficient range to reach Europe.
"Maybe French President Jacques Chirac was lying when he declared in February that there were probably weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and that 'we have to find and destroy them.'
"Maybe Al Gore was lying when he declared last September, based on what he learned as vice president, that Hussein had 'stored secret supplies of biological and chemical weapons throughout his country.'

"Finally, there's former president Bill Clinton. In a February 1998 speech, ...
Clinton accurately reported the view of U.N. weapons inspectors 'that Iraq still has stockpiles of chemical and biological munitions, a small force of Scud-type missiles, and the capacity to restart quickly its production program and build many, many more weapons.' That was as unequivocal and unqualified a statement as any made by George W. Bush."

"So if you like a good conspiracy, this one's a doozy. And the best thing about it is that if all these people are lying, there's only one person who ever told the truth: Saddam Hussein. And now we can't find him either."

just thinking - in the interest of making the mtg. go faster and not running into endless conversations of what ifs - i think it would be good if we did our best to come to the mtg. with specific questions in mind. i'm just worried that it will never stop and have no point and we'll all be stuck here forever. for example some of the things i was hoping to cover were:

what is the precedent for our office as to how involved or not involved they've been in the past?
equipment needs for our specific office? what is allowed phone? fax? email?
process questions - like notes? approval? actually mailing out? etc.
role of israel? role of susan? are they different?

KEY POINTS***
From the President's comments on June 9, 2003

-President Bush is optimistic about bringing a peaceful, free Palestinian state into existence, side by side with a secure Israel. But there is a lot of work to do.

-Prime Minister Sharon is a courageous leader, dedicated to the security of the Israeli people, as are we - and he recognizes that life can be better for the Palestinians.

-Prime Minister Abbas of the Palestinian Authority speaks eloquently and clearly about the need for the free world to fight off terror in order for a Palestinian state to emerge.

-The average Palestinian should know that their lives will improve with the vision of Prime Minister Abbas. The Arab neighborhood knows that violence will lead to nothing except misery and lack of hope. Responsible leaders now understand that we must work to fight off the terror attacks so that a peaceful Palestinian state can emerge.

-Ambassador Wolf and his team will be on the ground soon, holding people to account and working to strengthen Prime Minister Abbas, so that the Prime Minister can deliver on his promise to work as hard as he can to fight off those territories that want to use violence to destroy any hope for peace, and, therefore, to destroy the hopes of the Palestinian people.

Bankruptcy judge picked for seat on federal bench

Jurist not included on initial Ensign list of possible nominees

By STEVE TETREAULT

STEPHENS WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON -- President Bush on Monday formally nominated U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert Clive Jones to become a federal District Court judge in Nevada.

Jones, a bankruptcy judge in Nevada for the past 20 years, would replace U.S. District Judge David Hagen, who is retiring later this year.

Jones was at a conference but issued a statement that he was pleased to have been named by Bush and it will be an honor for him to serve on the bench.

The nomination now goes before the U.S. Senate. Officials at the Senate Judiciary Committee could not be reached for comment Monday evening.

Jack Finn, a spokesman for Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev., said "it is impossible to pin down" a time frame for Jones to be considered.

"We anticipate no problems," Finn said.

The White House decided on Jones for the post after returning an initial list of possible nominees that Ensign submitted. That list included Leif Reid, the son of Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev.

Finn said Jones emerged out of subsequent discussions between Ensign and the White House. Ensign has the power to propose judicial nominees as the senior senator of the president's party.

"I truly appreciate Senator Ensign's confidence in submitting my name on the extended list of judicial candidates for White House consideration," Jones said in his statement, adding he understood Ensign obtained Reid's concurrence.

"I've known Senator Reid for many years and appreciate his confidence as well," Jones said.

There are seven federal district judges in Nevada, plus two, Edward Reed and Lloyd George, who are on senior status.

Jones, who turns 56 on July 21, was born and raised in Las Vegas. He obtained a law degree from UCLA Law School in 1975, graduating in the top 10 percent of his class. He earned an undergraduate degree in English and accounting at Brigham Young University in 1971.

After working as a certified public accountant, Jones began practicing law in 1976. He was appointed federal bankruptcy judge in 1983, and was re-appointed to another 14-year term in 2000. He is a registered Republican.

From 1971 and 1977, Jones served in the Nevada Army Guard and the California Air National Guard.

Jones was bishop in the Canyon Gate Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints from 1998 until earlier this year. He also has served as a scoutmaster in the Boy Scouts of America.

In 1992-93, Jones helped justice officials in Slovakia to draft new bankruptcy statutes.

Supreme Court vacancy looks less likely this year

By Frank J. Murray

Published June 11, 2003

Any prospects for a partisan fight this summer over confirming President Bush's first Supreme Court nominee appeared to dim recently after justices agreed to hear a contentious case in September, signaling that the bench will remain unchanged at least until then.

Despite the court's decision Thursday to consider campaign-finance reform, the Senate Judiciary Committee is forging ahead with contingency plans based on what a Senate Republican leadership staff member called "the 100-percent expectation a vacancy will occur."

The Senate's preparation and much of the speculation over which of the three eldest Supreme Court justices might retire this month are driven by groups such as People for the American Way, which have opposed Mr. Bush's judicial nominations.

Since before the 2000 election, groups such as PFAW have raised money by annually predicting doom for the Constitution if Mr. Bush were allowed to install judges on the Supreme Court. PFAW President Ralph Neas declared last week that at least one justice will resign, creating "the first of three or four openings" in coming years.

Such activists have sounded the alarms even though several factors indicate that the most stable nine-justice high court in history will remain unchanged for two more years.

Most analysts expecting a retirement consider Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, the most likely to depart, even though each plays a key role in the most sharply split cases and both still write books and pursue activities outside the court.

The true dark horse is Justice John Paul Stevens, who at 83 is an avid tennis player said to abhor letting a conservative Republican choose his replacement.

Sources who have contacts with Chief Justice Rehnquist said they doubt he plans to quit, and he bandies words with those brash enough to raise the question. After the chief justice visited Mr. Bush at the White House in December, both parties let it be known his mission was a hunt for allies to raise judicial salaries.

Skeptics of that account consider the visit a pretext for a nominating-strategy session.

Mr. Bush announced May 9 that Justice O'Connor would lead a team of judges to Bahrain in September to help improve Middle East court systems, but a White House spokesman couldn't confirm yesterday whether the president and Justice O'Connor had spoken.

Justice O'Connor's only public comment about her position on the court was to dampen speculation she might be elevated to chief justice. When asked, she replied, "I'm too old," the Christian Science Monitor reported.

"It's very possible that they won't retire," said Artemus Ward, author of "Deciding to Leave: The Politics of Retirement From the United States Supreme Court."

"Why retire when you're at the top of your game?" he said.

He considers the chief justice the most likely candidate — ending his 32-year tenure on the court — although Mr. Rehnquist often mentions future projects and recently extended for a fourth year the appointment of administrative assistant Sally M. Rider.

Washington lawyer James C. Duff, her predecessor in that post, remains involved with the chief justice's efforts to win pay raises for federal judges but refused to discuss departures and scoffed at reports that imply inside knowledge.

"When I took the job in 1996, I remember reading an article which said that the winner of the Clinton-Dole presidential election would have four nominees to the court. Of course there have been none since then," Mr. Duff said.

During a presidential debate in 2000, Mr. Gore said, "The next president is going to appoint three, maybe even four justices of the Supreme Court."

Because no one expects a vacancy during next year's presidential campaign year — absent death or disability — the next two weeks would be the last real chance for an appointment until June 2005.

Mr. Ward questioned reports that more than one justice could retire now.

"That's never happened in the history of the court," he said. The closest exception were retirements of Justices Hugo Black and John Harlan a week apart in September 1971, shortly before both died.

Mr. Ward estimated that the life expectancy for today's Supreme Court justices is 87, about 15 years longer than the average for white men in America.

"To remain a Supreme Court justice keeps you alive, to some extent," Mr. Ward said.

Justices traditionally guard retirement plans until announced from the bench at term's end.

"Even other members of the court are sort of the last to know. It is kept very secret," said Mr. Ward, who is on leave from Northern Illinois University for a one-year American Political Science Association fellowship at the House Judiciary Committee.

"The justices are concerned with minimizing the politicization of the succession process to protect the institution," he said.

Because the Supreme Court put the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act case on a fast track, justices must review the mountain of legal briefs filed through the summer. They have slated an extraordinary four-hour hearing for Sept. 8, a month before the next term begins.

"I would be very pleased if no one resigned," Mr. Neas said. "If President George W. Bush nominates someone in the mold of Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, as he has certainly said he intended to do, then there would be one of the most intense confirmation battles in the nation's history."

The median age for court retirees is 78. The chief justice marks his 79th birthday in October, and Justice O'Connor turned 73 on May 26. Only Justice Stevens exceeds that median; he turned 83 on April 20.

Five justices were older than Justice Stevens when they retired, and four of them did so since 1971, when Justice Black quit at age 85, followed in 1990 by William Brennan, 84, a year later by Thurgood Marshall, three months past his 83rd birthday, and in 1994 by Harry Blackmun, 85.

Between June 19, 1811, and March 18, 1823, the seven-member court remained intact. The current cast has not changed since Aug. 3, 1994, the longest period without a vacancy since Congress created the eighth and ninth seats in 1837.

In terms of comparison stats, we frame those this way.

1. In both the Bush 41 and Clinton Administration, too many appeals court nominees were held up at the end of the Administrations. In the Bush 41 Administration, only 19 of 29 appeals court nominees in the last two years were confirmed; in Clinton, it was 15 of 29. Neither was acceptable -- as this President Bush has explained.

2. In this Administration, the difference is that the Senate delays and obstruction started at the beginning of the Administration. In particular, only 53% of President Bush's appeals court nominees in his first 2 years (17 of 32) were confirmed compared to more than 90% (60 of 65 total) in the Clinton, Bush 41, and Reagan Presidencies combined during the first two years of those Presidencies. And now we are seeing unprecedented filibusters of multiple nominees.

1. When Clinton was President and Republicans controlled the Senate, they bottled up (TK) of Clinton's nominations in committee? (i've been told by Sen Leahy's office that the answer is over 50.)

2. When Democrats ran the Senate last year, they did the same to [tk #] of Bush's nominees?
do you have a figure for this?
Thanks Jim

Carolyn,

Helgi Walker was kind enough to contact you about getting a speaker from the Bush administration for a political event on June 30.

My husband, Ken Starr, and I are helping with a fundraiser for Jack Rust, a candidate for the Virginia House of Delegates. Jack, an attorney in Fairfax, Virginia, formerly served in the General Assembly, but he was defeated in the last election by a hair. So we very much want him to get his seat back because he was the most effective Republican in the Virginia legislature.

On Monday, June 30 from 6:00 - 8:00 p.m., we are helping to host a reception at the home of George Shafran, a generous Republican with a beautiful home at 1310 Ballantrae Farm Drive in McLean, across the street from Colin Powell. We would like to have a prominent special guest attend the reception who will be a draw for the event. We would especially like to request if Judge Gonzales, Karl Rove, Andy Card, Larry Thompson or Ken Mehlman would be available? Unfortunately the invitations are scheduled to go out tomorrow so it would be helpful to know by then.

I have attached the invitation. If Judge Gonzales or someone from the administration can attend, we will place an insert in the invitation.

Many thanks for your assistance. - Alice

Brett,

Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.

I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS FOR
HEARING ON S.J. RES. 1, A PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CRIME VICTIMS
APRIL 8, 2003

Questions by Senator Leahy for Viet Dinh

1. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that constitutional amendments should be reserved for "certain great and extraordinary occasions."

(A) Do you agree with this standard?

Yes.

(B) Is there anything in our current Constitution that inhibits the enactment of State or Federal laws that protect crime victims?

Nothing in the Constitution specifically inhibits the enactment of statutes to protect crime victims. However, although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained in this amendment, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's constitutional rights. Furthermore, statutes would not address two critical issues that necessitate a constitutional amendment, i.e., uniform implementation of rights, and establishing standing for victims to assert these rights in court.

(C) Please identify any appellate decisions of which you are aware that were not eventually reversed in which a State of Federal victims' rights law was not given effect because of a defendant's right in the U.S. Constitution.

Two specific examples where State victims' constitutional rights were not given effect because of a defendant's rights under the U.S. Constitution are:

State ex rel. Romley v. Superior Court, 836 P.2d 445, 453, (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992), in which the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that a victim's State constitutional right must yield to a defendant's Federal and State constitutional right to due process. This case involved a State constitutional right that precludes the trial court from compelling disclosure of the victim's medical records. The defendant argued that the statute violated her due process rights because without the information, she could not mount an adequate defense or conduct adequate cross-examination of witnesses. The Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that the defendant's Federal and State due process right trumped the victim's State constitutional right.

Martinez v. State of Florida, 664 So.2d 1034 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996), where the defendant was convicted of attempted manslaughter with a firearm and appealed on several grounds, including that the court erred in giving priority to the constitutional right of a victim to be present in the courtroom over the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial by having the witnesses sequestered. Despite the Florida State victims' rights amendment, the court, citing Gore v. State of Florida, agreed with the defendant and stated that the victims should not have been permitted in the courtroom during opening statements. However, the court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that the error in this particular case was harmless.

2. If Congress enacted spending power-based legislation to get every state to implement a uniform national standard of victims rights, what would remain to be done that only a constitutional amendment could accomplish?

Although such legislation would do away with one of the main concerns with statutory remedies, the need for uniformity, it would not accomplish the same goals as a constitutional amendment. As stated previously, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights because courts often will not reach the threshold question of whether the two sets of rights are truly in conflict. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998 entitled The Rights of Crime Victims – Does Legal Protection Make a Difference?, which after surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."

3. Section 1 of the proposed amendment states: "The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied." If a judge concludes that there is indeed a conflict between a victim's rights and the constitutional rights of the accused, would section 1 require the judge to discard that legal conclusion and uphold the right of the accused?

As Assistant Attorney General Dinh stated during the hearing, it would be very difficult for me to speculate how this amendment will be interpreted and how judges will decide cases in particular instances. However, we do believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge the ability to protect the interests and rights of criminal defendants. For example, by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries defining the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case.

4. Four of the current amendments to the Constitution – the 14th, 15th, 24th, and 26th – recognize a distinction between the complete "denial" or rights and the "abridgement" of them. Similarly, section 1 of the proposed amendment refers to rights being both "denied" and "restricted." Does the assurance that the constitutional rights of the accused will not be "denied" mean that a judge is free to "restrict" those rights in ways that the Constitution might not otherwise allow if doing so will make it easier to accommodate the rights of victims?

As stated in response to Question 3, we believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge in a particular case the ability to protect the interests and rights of a criminal defendant. In cases where there is a tension between the rights of victims and the rights of defendants, courts will rule in favor of the party with the more compelling legal argument.

5. I think we would both agree that in a mass-victim case, the court should not be required to allow each of the potentially thousands of victims to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing – meaning that there are some cases when it might be entirely reasonable to deny some victims the right to be heard. But given that the rights conferred by proposed amendment belong to each individual victim, and that the text of the amendment allows a victim's participatory rights to be "restricted" in limited circumstances but never "denied," how would it be possible for courts to allow the kind of flexibility we need without completely ignoring the obvious difference between a "restriction" and a "denial?"

It is my understanding that the amendment as drafted does not grant a victim the absolute right to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing. The amendment instead grants victims the right "reasonably to be heard" at specified public proceedings. The "reasonably to be heard" guarantee can be accomplished by allowing a victim to communicate his or her views to the court either orally or in writing. Such a decision would be at the court's discretion. In addition, we disagree that the language of the amendment does not allow for exceptions to the right "reasonably to be heard." Indeed, the text of the amendment itself explicitly allows for such exceptions. In other contexts, it has been left up to the courts to determine the boundaries of certain rights, for example when the press' First Amendment rights are pitted against a defendant's right to a fair trial. However, the last clause of section 2, which reads "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity," clearly allows for exceptions by employing a two-tiered approach – the lower standard of substantial interest is used when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of criminal justice, while a higher standard of compelling necessity is used for other possible justifications.

6. Under section 2 of the proposed amendment, a crime victim has "the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime." Please explain how this provision would apply in multi-victim cases. For example, suppose that one victim of a multi-victim offense files a civil tort action against the offender for damages resulting from the criminal conduct. That action would be "a public proceeding involving the crime," even though the prosecutor may have no knowledge of it. Who would have the constitutional obligation to provide "reasonable and timely notice" to the other victims?

I do not believe that the amendment as written grants victims the right to be informed of civil actions and therefore there is no attendant constitutional obligation to provide reasonable and timely notice in such cases.

7. Section 3 of the proposed amendment states that "[o]nly the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." If a defendant raises an objection to having an indigent victim speak at a proceeding, who would handle the litigation on behalf of the victim? I assume the prosecutor would gladly do so for a victim who could not afford to hire counsel, but under section 3, would that be permissible? Would the prosecutor have the right or the duty to make what she believed to be a better argument on behalf of a represented victim?

Although presumably Congress and/or state legislatures could enact legislation that establishes a framework by which indigent victims can receive representation, we do not think that section 3 precludes a prosecutor from asserting the rights of victims. The relevant clause in section 3 to which we believe you refer reads "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article...." This clause confers standing to assert the rights, something that mere legislation has been unable to do. However, although it is the victim or his or her representative who has standing, presumably any attorney could go before the court on his or her behalf.

8. Section 3 of the proposed amendment forbids granting a new trial as a remedy for the violation of a victim's rights, but does not forbid re-opening the sentencing proceeding. (A) If a prosecutor fails to notify a victim of the sentencing hearing, can the victim obtain a new sentencing hearing after sentence has been imposed? (B) If the victim persuades the judge at such a hearing to impose a longer prison term or order greater restitution, would that constitute a denial of the accused's Fifth Amendment right to be protected against Double Jeopardy?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 provides grounds for invalidating a sentence nor would it allow a new sentencing hearing. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case or any proceeding thereof.

9. At the sentencing phase of a capital case, there are normally two parties – the government and the defendant – that call witnesses in an effort to provide as factual matters aggravating and mitigating factors that support either a death sentence or a lesser punishment. As a matter of due process, none of those witnesses is allowed to make an argument as to what the sentence should be; such arguments are reserved for counsel at the end of the phase. Would the proposed amendment give qualifying victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death?

Although we are not entirely sure that due process necessarily disallows witnesses from arguing in favor of a proper sentence, we do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

10. Given that earlier versions of S.J. Res. 1 contained explicit language prohibiting a court from staying or continuing a trial once it is underway, language that has been discarded in the current bill, what would prevent an appellate court from doing just that to prevent further potential violations of a victim's participatory rights while an interlocutory appeal was pending?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 could be construed to provide grounds to stay trials, reopen proceedings, or invalidate rulings. Although it remains to be seen how courts will interpret the amendment and make determinations given specific fact patterns, the Department believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to delay criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding). Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case.

11. To what extent are the rights described in the proposed amendment self-executing?

Please identify any specific rights that (A) would not require implementing legislation, or (B) would be immune from limiting legislation.

(A) Although the Department welcomes any appropriate implementing legislation, we believe that the entire amendment is self-executing, and therefore the rights are enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to clearly define those situations where the amendment will apply in order to minimize the difficulties that could arise if federal, state and local prosecutors were unable to determine their proper response in certain situations.

(B) The second sentence in section 4, which reads "Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons," prevents Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons . The Department believes that the President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

REV_00121520

Follow-Up Questions for Assistance Attorney General Viet Dinh
Regarding a proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims (S.J. Res. 1)

Senator Richard J. Durbin
April 29, 2003

Question 1

Section 1 of S.J. Res. 1 states: "The rights of victims of violent crimes, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them are hereby established and shall not be denied by any State or the United States and may be restricted only as provided in this article."

a.) Do you believe this presumption is true? In other words, would S.J. Res. 1 deny any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be denied?

I do believe that this presumption is true. The rights granted by the proposed amendment are not intended to operate in conflict with those rights granted to defendants under the Constitution and as enunciated by the Supreme Court, but rather are intended to operate in parallel with those rights. We do not support the proposition that the amendment, as drafted, denies any rights of the accused.

b.) Do you believe S.J. Res 1 diminishes any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be diminished?

No, we do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 as drafted diminishes any rights of the accused. If a conflict were to arise, it would ultimately be up to the Courts to delineate the boundaries of the rights and to accommodate both to the greatest extent possible.

If not, can you explain why S.J. Res. 1 would not deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury, specifically in cases where the victim is a witness in a case? In such cases, do you believe the victim would be excluded from the proceedings under the exception created by a "substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice" or do you believe the victim would be allowed to attend the proceedings?

Allowing a victim to be present during a trial, simply because he or she is an intended witness, would not necessarily deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury. Ultimately, based on the facts of the case, it would be up to the court to determine if indeed a defendant's right to an impartial jury would be implicated by granting a victim a right not to be excluded from the proceedings. Indeed, courts make similar determinations in many contexts and are able to harmonize rights that some may argue are in conflict. For example, courts are often called upon to accommodate the right of the press and the public to attend trials and to reconcile these rights with the rights of a defendant to a fair trial.

Question 2

In the 105th Congress, when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered another version of this amendment, I offered an amendment that said "Nothing in this article shall be construed to deny or diminish the rights of the accused as guaranteed by this Constitution."

Would you object to the adoption of similar language to S.J. Res. 1? Why or why not?

I believe that the language you suggested would be detrimental to the intended purpose of the amendment. The inclusion of such language would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of victims' rights, where a court would not need to consider the relationship between the rights of victims and the rights of the accused, but rather would protect the latter to the detriment of the former.

Do you believe this language is consistent with your conclusions in responding to Question 1?

While we do believe that this language is consistent with my conclusion in Question 1, we do not necessarily believe that it would be consistent with the intent of the amendment – to require courts to give consideration to the rights of victims in the criminal justice system. Because its inclusion would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of rights, courts would not be required to reach the threshold question of whether a victim's right truly conflicts with a right of the defendant.

Question 3

Section 3 states: "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." However, this amendment does not define "victim." I understand your position that Congress will likely be responsible for defining this term. Please provide guidance for Congress in addressing the following hypothetical possibilities:

a.) Someone is murdered. Is the deceased the only victim of the crime? What about the spouse? Significant others? Domestic partner? Parents? Children?

b.) A child is kidnaped and recovered. Is the child the victim? Or the parents?

c.) A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, is brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. Who is the victim with Constitutional rights?

REV_00121522

If the amendment is adopted, the courts presumably will develop a body of jurisprudence that will more precisely define the term "victim," and the corresponding reach of Congressional authority to refine that definition. However, we believe that in the case of a murdered person, it would be appropriate to allow the victim's rights to be exercised by a surviving family member or other appropriate representative, and am confident that courts will agree with this conclusion. In the case of a minor victim, such as in the kidnaping context, it should again be an appropriate representative that will exercise the victim's rights. As for situations involving domestic violence, it may very well be that the accused batterer technically meets any developed definition of a victim. However, the amendment currently contains exception language which reads: "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." In domestic violence cases, where the true victim of the abusive relationship may actually be the defendant in a particular case and the abuser may be the victim, a judge may well decide that a substantial interest in public safety, or one of the other grounds for an exception, exists so as to preclude the abusive "victim" from exercising the given rights.

Question 4

S.J. Res. 1 also does not define "the victim's lawful representative" or explain how such a person should be chosen. In the hypothetical situation involving a murder victim, what would happen if both the spouse and the father of the deceased wanted to be the "lawful representative?" Who do you propose should make that determination? A judge? The prosecutor? What if the party who was not selected wants to appeal this decision?

It would be up to the courts to determine, on a case-by-case basis, who the victim's lawful representative should be.

Question 5

In your statement, you wrote, "By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims."

This assumes that violent crime has more detrimental effects on its victims. What about the victim of a misdemeanor assault? Is that person more worthy of Constitutional rights than an elderly widow has been swindled out of her life savings?

I do not believe that it would be correct to state that one type of victim is more or less worthy of Constitutional rights. However, those affected by violent crime often have not only a pecuniary loss as a result of the crime, but also suffer physically and psychologically.

In addition, it is important to note that the proposed amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime. Some states have already extended statutory victims' rights to victims of other types of crime and the amendment in no way restricts such rights. Furthermore, the states and the federal government are free to broaden statutory protections for these other types of crime and it is my belief that by passing S.J. Res. 1, more attention will be focused on the plight of all victims, and perhaps other protections will be examined and possibly broadened.

Should the court examine the detrimental effects of each crime before determining whether the victim has Constitutional rights?

When dealing with a constitutional amendment, there are always going to be situations where it will be impossible to determine just what the courts will do when interpreting the boundaries of the amendment. Other amendments to the Constitution have undergone many of years of review and interpretation and we therefore have developed a jurisprudence that better equips us to determine what the most likely, and proper outcome will be. Although recognizing that one-hundred percent certainty is an impossibility, we do believe that the sponsors of this amendment have strived to reduce the situations where uncertainty could exist. By requiring courts to examine the detrimental effect of each crime before determining whether the victim has constitutional rights, we believe that it would invite even more uncertainty which would increase the difficulties that could arise if federal, state, and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain circumstances.

Question 6

In your statement, you wrote, "Our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals." In California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted – withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. However, at the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

Do you believe that the rights of victims in this case burdened the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case?

Although we would not feel comfortable stating unequivocally that the victims' rights did or did not burden the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case without knowing the particular circumstances and having all of the facts before me, we do believe that the facts that you have cited led to an unfortunate result in this particular case. However, we think that even the opponents of the victims' rights amendment concede that overall prosecutorial efforts are more, not less, effective when victims are regularly consulted during the course of a case.

How would the language of S.J. Res. 1 avert a similar outcome in other criminal prosecutions?

REV_00121524

The proposed language of S.J. Res. 1 allows victims the right reasonably to be heard and to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety. However, it does not allow a victim the right to preclude plea bargains. Judges will be called upon to consider the rights of the defendant, the rights of the victim, and the pursuit of justice, and they will make determinations on a case-by-case basis.

Question 7

In your statement, you wrote, "The Department fully supports Section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by Congress." I believe we should not amend the Constitution – which has served us well for over 200 years – casually.

If you think the "intent and circumstances" leading us to amend the Constitution may change in as few as seven years, is this not an argument for a statutory and not a constitutional approach to protecting victims?

I do not believe that it is. A number of amendments to the Constitution contain such a clause – the 18th, 20th, 21st, and the 22nd Amendments. The purpose of such a clause is to preclude the type of situation like that encountered with the ratification of the 27th Amendment, which was originally proposed in 1789 but not ratified by the requisite number of state legislatures until 1992. We believe that the experience of the 27th Amendment, which remained in constitutional limbo for over 200 years, has led the Congress to include such a clause in a substantial number of proposed constitutional amendments over the last two decades. For example, amendments proposed in the last few years which have contained such a time limitation include those to ban flag burning and to limit campaign expenditures introduced recently in the 108th Congress; to repeal the 22nd Amendment and to provide for a balanced budget introduced in the 107th Congress; and an amendment to provide for Congressional term limits and your amendment to abolish the electoral college introduced in the 106th Congress.

Question 8

In Ms. Earlene Eason's testimony, she wrote of her frustration that the DA would not ask for a continuance on her behalf so she could attend the sentencing of the person who pled guilty to murdering her son. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to seek a continuance? If so, under what circumstances? How would this be reconciled with the Constitutional right to a speedy trial?

I do not believe that the amendment as drafted allows a victim an absolute right to a continuance. The amendment grants a victim the right not to be excluded from a public proceeding and the right reasonably to be heard at a public sentencing hearing. First, the right not to be excluded is not tantamount to a right to be present, i.e., the court does not need to accommodate the victim's right to be there, it simply cannot exclude him or her from the proceeding. Second, the right reasonably to be heard does not necessarily have to entail the victim's presence, a victim could be afforded the right to be heard in writing rather than orally. However, courts may well decide, on a case-by-case basis, that a continuance would not adversely affect the proceedings and therefore order a continuance so that the victim's right under the amendment can be fully realized.

There are numerous scenarios where the defendant's right to a speedy trial would in no way be implicated by a continuance issued so as to allow the victim to be present. This would be the case when the continuance sought was a mere matter of days, or even longer. The Supreme Court has stated that the right to a speedy trial does not preclude delays and has identified four factors that should be considered when making determinations in this context: the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972). In addition, the Court stated that "until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance." Id. at 530. Under this analysis, depending on the length of the delay a continuance may cause, it is entirely possible that the defendant's right to a speedy trial will in no way be implicated.

Question 9

In Mr. Duane Lynn's testimony, he expressed his frustration that he could not comment on how his wife's murdered should be sentenced. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to make a sentencing recommendation (such as the death penalty instead of life in prison or vice versa) in his or her impact statement?

I do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. Indeed, it is unclear that current law precludes such victim testimony. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

Senator Dianne Feinstein

Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S.J. Res. 1,
the Victims' Rights Amendment
Written Question for Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh

1. At the hearing, there was some discussion about what would happen if S. J. Res. 1 was adopted and a victim's constitutional right came into conflict with a criminal defendant's constitutional right. First, I want to clarify that nothing in the amendment would take away defendants' rights. Section 1 of the amendment makes clear that victims' rights are capable of protection without denying defendants' constitutional rights. Second, in many instances, the basic procedural rights conferred by the amendment would have little, if any, impact on defendants' rights. For example, is hard to see how a defendant could plausibly object to providing notice to victims about the date and location of public proceedings involving the crime. Third, the amendment qualifies many of the victims' rights to ensure that courts limit them appropriately. For instance, under the amendment, victims would have no constitutional right to be heard at trial and, at other public proceedings involving the crime, victims would have only a right "reasonably" to be heard. Fourth, the amendment provides three specific exceptions to restrict victims' rights: 1) a substantial interest in public safety; 2) a substantial interest in the administration of criminal justice; and 3) compelling necessity.

I would like to clarify one point about the administration of criminal justice exception. In responses to me and to Senator Durbin at the hearing, you suggested that the administration of criminal justice exception would allow courts faced with a conflict between a defendant's constitutional right and a victim's constitutional right to balance these rights and decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument.

I agree with that response. However, to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to make clear that defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception. Let me offer some examples of how that could happen. If a victim sat in the courtroom and tried to disrupt the proceeding by yelling at the defendant, this would adversely affect the administration of criminal justice. To ensure that the defendant received his or her constitutional right to a fair trial, the judge could have the victim removed (and even pursue other actions against the victim, such as holding the victim in contempt). If the same victim threatened bodily harm to the defendant or judge, that would also implicate public safety as well as violate the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. The judge could, at a minimum, force the victim to leave under the public safety exception. If the victim was horribly maimed by the crime and insisted on sitting immediately in front of the jury, the judge could determine that compelling necessity dictated that the victim not be allowed to be present during the trial.

Obviously, I do not intend these examples to be exhaustive. However, I do think that they illustrate some of the variety of ways in which the amendment would ensure the protection of defendants' constitutional rights consistent with the existence of victims' constitutional rights. These ways would always depend heavily on the underlying context in which the rights came into conflict and the weight of the defendant's and victim's respective interests. Similar balancing is done in other situations where constitutional rights conflict–for example, where the media's First Amendment right to cover a trial conflicts with a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial.

a) Do you agree that criminal defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception?

Yes.

b) Assuming that you answer yes to question 1(a), do you agree that, if a victim's constitutional right conflicted with a defendant's constitutional right, the judge would then–applying applicable precedent–balance (or otherwise reconcile) these rights and then decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument?

Yes. We believe that by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries to define the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

Brett,
Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.
I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS FOR
HEARING ON S.J. RES. 1, A PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CRIME VICTIMS
APRIL 8, 2003

Questions by Senator Leahy for Viet Dinh

1. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that constitutional amendments should be reserved for "certain great and extraordinary occasions."

(A) Do you agree with this standard?

Yes.

(B) Is there anything in our current Constitution that inhibits the enactment of State or Federal laws that protect crime victims?

Nothing in the Constitution specifically inhibits the enactment of statutes to protect crime victims. However, although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained in this amendment, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's constitutional rights. Furthermore, statutes would not address two critical issues that necessitate a constitutional amendment, i.e., uniform implementation of rights, and establishing standing for victims to assert these rights in court.

(C) Please identify any appellate decisions of which you are aware that were not eventually reversed in which a State of Federal victims' rights law was not given effect because of a defendant's right in the U.S. Constitution.

Two specific examples where State victims' constitutional rights were not given effect because of a defendant's rights under the U.S. Constitution are:

State ex rel. Romley v. Superior Court, 836 P.2d 445, 453, (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992), in which the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that a victim's State constitutional right must yield to a defendant's Federal and State constitutional right to due process. This case involved a State constitutional right that precludes the trial court from compelling disclosure of the victim's medical records. The defendant argued that the statute violated her due process rights because without the information, she could not mount an adequate defense or conduct adequate cross-examination of witnesses. The Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that the defendant's Federal and State due process right trumped the victim's State constitutional right.

Martinez v. State of Florida, 664 So.2d 1034 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996), where the defendant was convicted of attempted manslaughter with a firearm and appealed on several grounds, including that the court erred in giving priority to the constitutional right of a victim to be present in the courtroom over the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial by having the witnesses sequestered. Despite the Florida State victims' rights amendment, the court, citing Gore v. State of Florida, agreed with the defendant and stated that the victims should not have been permitted in the courtroom during opening statements. However, the court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that the error in this particular case was harmless.

2. If Congress enacted spending power-based legislation to get every state to implement a uniform national standard of victims rights, what would remain to be done that only a constitutional amendment could accomplish?

Although such legislation would do away with one of the main concerns with statutory remedies, the need for uniformity, it would not accomplish the same goals as a constitutional amendment. As stated previously, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights because courts often will not reach the threshold question of whether the two sets of rights are truly in conflict. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998 entitled The Rights of Crime Victims – Does Legal Protection Make a Difference?, which after surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."

3. Section 1 of the proposed amendment states: "The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied." If a judge concludes that there is indeed a conflict between a victim's rights and the constitutional rights of the accused, would section 1 require the judge to discard that legal conclusion and uphold the right of the accused?

As Assistant Attorney General Dinh stated during the hearing, it would be very difficult for me to speculate how this amendment will be interpreted and how judges will decide cases in particular instances. However, we do believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge the ability to protect the interests and rights of criminal defendants. For example, by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries defining the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case.

4. Four of the current amendments to the Constitution – the 14th, 15th, 24th, and 26th – recognize a distinction between the complete "denial" or rights and the "abridgement" of them. Similarly, section 1 of the proposed amendment refers to rights being both "denied" and "restricted." Does the assurance that the constitutional rights of the accused will not be "denied" mean that a judge is free to "restrict" those rights in ways that the Constitution might not otherwise allow if doing so will make it easier to accommodate the rights of victims?

As stated in response to Question 3, we believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge in a particular case the ability to protect the interests and rights of a criminal defendant. In cases where there is a tension between the rights of victims and the rights of defendants, courts will rule in favor of the party with the more compelling legal argument.

5. I think we would both agree that in a mass-victim case, the court should not be required to allow each of the potentially thousands of victims to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing – meaning that there are some cases when it might be entirely reasonable to deny some victims the right to be heard. But given that the rights conferred by proposed amendment belong to each individual victim, and that the text of the amendment allows a victim's participatory rights to be "restricted" in limited circumstances but never "denied," how would it be possible for courts to allow the kind of flexibility we need without completely ignoring the obvious difference between a "restriction" and a "denial?"

It is my understanding that the amendment as drafted does not grant a victim the absolute right to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing. The amendment instead grants victims the right "reasonably to be heard" at specified public proceedings. The "reasonably to be heard" guarantee can be accomplished by allowing a victim to communicate his or her views to the court either orally or in writing. Such a decision would be at the court's discretion. In addition, we disagree that the language of the amendment does not allow for exceptions to the right "reasonably to be heard." Indeed, the text of the amendment itself explicitly allows for such exceptions. In other contexts, it has been left up to the courts to determine the boundaries of certain rights, for example when the press' First Amendment rights are pitted against a defendant's right to a fair trial. However, the last clause of section 2, which reads "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity," clearly allows for exceptions by employing a two-tiered approach – the lower standard of substantial interest is used when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of criminal justice, while a higher standard of compelling necessity is used for other possible justifications.

6. Under section 2 of the proposed amendment, a crime victim has "the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime." Please explain how this provision would apply in multi-victim cases. For example, suppose that one victim of a multi-victim offense files a civil tort action against the offender for damages resulting from the criminal conduct. That action would be "a public proceeding involving the crime," even though the prosecutor may have no knowledge of it. Who would have the constitutional obligation to provide "reasonable and timely notice" to the other victims?

I do not believe that the amendment as written grants victims the right to be informed of civil actions and therefore there is no attendant constitutional obligation to provide reasonable and timely notice in such cases.

7. Section 3 of the proposed amendment states that "[o]nly the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." If a defendant raises an objection to having an indigent victim speak at a proceeding, who would handle the litigation on behalf of the victim? I assume the prosecutor would gladly do so for a victim who could not afford to hire counsel, but under section 3, would that be permissible? Would the prosecutor have the right or the duty to make what she believed to be a better argument on behalf of a represented victim?

Although presumably Congress and/or state legislatures could enact legislation that establishes a framework by which indigent victims can receive representation, we do not think that section 3 precludes a prosecutor from asserting the rights of victims. The relevant clause in section 3 to which we believe you refer reads "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article...." This clause confers standing to assert the rights, something that mere legislation has been unable to do. However, although it is the victim or his or her representative who has standing, presumably any attorney could go before the court on his or her behalf.

8. Section 3 of the proposed amendment forbids granting a new trial as a remedy for the violation of a victim's rights, but does not forbid re-opening the sentencing proceeding. (A) If a prosecutor fails to notify a victim of the sentencing hearing, can the victim obtain a new sentencing hearing after sentence has been imposed? (B) If the victim persuades the judge at such a hearing to impose a longer prison term or order greater restitution, would that constitute a denial of the accused's Fifth Amendment right to be protected against Double Jeopardy?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 provides grounds for invalidating a sentence nor would it allow a new sentencing hearing. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case or any proceeding thereof.

9. At the sentencing phase of a capital case, there are normally two parties – the government and the defendant – that call witnesses in an effort to provide as factual matters aggravating and mitigating factors that support either a death sentence or a lesser punishment. As a matter of due process, none of those witnesses is allowed to make an argument as to what the sentence should be; such arguments are reserved for counsel at the end of the phase. Would the proposed amendment give qualifying victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death?

Although we are not entirely sure that due process necessarily disallows witnesses from arguing in favor of a proper sentence, we do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

10. Given that earlier versions of S.J. Res. 1 contained explicit language prohibiting a court from staying or continuing a trial once it is underway, language that has been discarded in the current bill, what would prevent an appellate court from doing just that to prevent further potential violations of a victim's participatory rights while an interlocutory appeal was pending?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 could be construed to provide grounds to stay trials, reopen proceedings, or invalidate rulings. Although it remains to be seen how courts will interpret the amendment and make determinations given specific fact patterns, the Department believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to delay criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding). Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case.

11. To what extent are the rights described in the proposed amendment self-executing?

Please identify any specific rights that (A) would not require implementing legislation, or (B) would be immune from limiting legislation.

(A) Although the Department welcomes any appropriate implementing legislation, we believe that the entire amendment is self-executing, and therefore the rights are enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to clearly define those situations where the amendment will apply in order to minimize the difficulties that could arise if federal, state and local prosecutors were unable to determine their proper response in certain situations.

(B) The second sentence in section 4, which reads "Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons," prevents Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons . The Department believes that the President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

Follow-Up Questions for Assistance Attorney General Viet Dinh
Regarding a proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims (S.J. Res. 1)

Senator Richard J. Durbin
April 29, 2003

Question 1

a.) Do you believe this presumption is true? In other words, would S.J. Res. 1 deny any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be denied?

I do believe that this presumption is true. The rights granted by the proposed amendment are not intended to operate in conflict with those rights granted to defendants under the Constitution and as enunciated by the Supreme Court, but rather are intended to operate in parallel with those rights. We do not support the proposition that the amendment, as drafted, denies any rights of the accused.

b.) Do you believe S.J. Res 1 diminishes any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be diminished?

No, we do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 as drafted diminishes any rights of the accused. If a conflict were to arise, it would ultimately be up to the Courts to delineate the boundaries of the rights and to accommodate both to the greatest extent possible.

If not, can you explain why S.J. Res. 1 would not deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury, specifically in cases where the victim is a witness in a case? In such cases, do you believe the victim would be excluded from the proceedings under the exception created by a "substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice" or do you believe the victim would be allowed to attend the proceedings?

Allowing a victim to be present during a trial, simply because he or she is an intended witness, would not necessarily deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury. Ultimately, based on the facts of the case, it would be up to the court to determine if indeed a defendant's right to an impartial jury would be implicated by granting a victim a right not to be excluded from the proceedings. Indeed, courts make similar determinations in many contexts and are able to harmonize rights that some may argue are in conflict. For example, courts are often called upon to accommodate the right of the press and the public to attend trials and to reconcile these rights with the rights of a defendant to a fair trial.

Question 2

In the 105th Congress, when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered another version of this amendment, I offered an amendment that said "Nothing in this article shall be construed to deny or diminish the rights of the accused as guaranteed by this Constitution."

Would you object to the adoption of similar language to S.J. Res. 1? Why or why not?

I believe that the language you suggested would be detrimental to the intended purpose of the amendment. The inclusion of such language would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of victims' rights, where a court would not need to consider the relationship between the rights of victims and the rights of the accused, but rather would protect the latter to the detriment of the former.

Do you believe this language is consistent with your conclusions in responding to Question 1?

While we do believe that this language is consistent with my conclusion in Question 1, we do not necessarily believe that it would be consistent with the intent of the amendment – to require courts to give consideration to the rights of victims in the criminal justice system. Because its inclusion would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of rights, courts would not be required to reach the threshold question of whether a victim's right truly conflicts with a right of the defendant.

Question 3

Section 3 states: "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." However, this amendment does not define "victim." I understand your position that Congress will likely be responsible for defining this term. Please provide guidance for Congress in addressing the following hypothetical possibilities:

a.) Someone is murdered. Is the deceased the only victim of the crime? What about the spouse? Significant others? Domestic partner? Parents? Children?

b.) A child is kidnaped and recovered. Is the child the victim? Or the parents?

c.) A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, is brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. Who is the victim with Constitutional rights?

REV_00121539

If the amendment is adopted, the courts presumably will develop a body of jurisprudence that will more precisely define the term "victim," and the corresponding reach of Congressional authority to refine that definition. However, we believe that in the case of a murdered person, it would be appropriate to allow the victim's rights to be exercised by a surviving family member or other appropriate representative, and am confident that courts will agree with this conclusion. In the case of a minor victim, such as in the kidnaping context, it should again be an appropriate representative that will exercise the victim's rights. As for situations involving domestic violence, it may very well be that the accused batterer technically meets any developed definition of a victim. However, the amendment currently contains exception language which reads: "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." In domestic violence cases, where the true victim of the abusive relationship may actually be the defendant in a particular case and the abuser may be the victim, a judge may well decide that a substantial interest in public safety, or one of the other grounds for an exception, exists so as to preclude the abusive "victim" from exercising the given rights.

Question 4

S.J. Res. 1 also does not define "the victim's lawful representative" or explain how such a person should be chosen. In the hypothetical situation involving a murder victim, what would happen if both the spouse and the father of the deceased wanted to be the "lawful representative?" Who do you propose should make that determination? A judge? The prosecutor? What if the party who was not selected wants to appeal this decision?

It would be up to the courts to determine, on a case-by-case basis, who the victim's lawful representative should be.

Question 5

In your statement, you wrote, "By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims."

This assumes that violent crime has more detrimental effects on its victims. What about the victim of a misdemeanor assault? Is that person more worthy of Constitutional rights than an elderly widow has been swindled out of her life savings?

I do not believe that it would be correct to state that one type of victim is more or less worthy of Constitutional rights. However, those affected by violent crime often have not only a pecuniary loss as a result of the crime, but also suffer physically and psychologically.

In addition, it is important to note that the proposed amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime. Some states have already extended statutory victims' rights to victims of other types of crime and the amendment in no way restricts such rights. Furthermore, the states and the federal government are free to broaden statutory protections for these other types of crime and it is my belief that by passing S.J. Res. 1, more attention will be focused on the plight of all victims, and perhaps other protections will be examined and possibly broadened.

Should the court examine the detrimental effects of each crime before determining whether the victim has Constitutional rights?

When dealing with a constitutional amendment, there are always going to be situations where it will be impossible to determine just what the courts will do when interpreting the boundaries of the amendment. Other amendments to the Constitution have undergone many of years of review and interpretation and we therefore have developed a jurisprudence that better equips us to determine what the most likely, and proper outcome will be. Although recognizing that one-hundred percent certainty is an impossibility, we do believe that the sponsors of this amendment have strived to reduce the situations where uncertainty could exist. By requiring courts to examine the detrimental effect of each crime before determining whether the victim has constitutional rights, we believe that it would invite even more uncertainty which would increase the difficulties that could arise if federal, state, and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain circumstances.

Question 6

In your statement, you wrote, "Our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals." In California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted – withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. However, at the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

Do you believe that the rights of victims in this case burdened the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case?

Although we would not feel comfortable stating unequivocally that the victims' rights did or did not burden the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case without knowing the particular circumstances and having all of the facts before me, we do believe that the facts that you have cited led to an unfortunate result in this particular case. However, we think that even the opponents of the victims' rights amendment concede that overall prosecutorial efforts are more, not less, effective when victims are regularly consulted during the course of a case.

How would the language of S.J. Res. 1 avert a similar outcome in other criminal prosecutions?

REV_00121541

The proposed language of S.J. Res. 1 allows victims the right reasonably to be heard and to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety. However, it does not allow a victim the right to preclude plea bargains. Judges will be called upon to consider the rights of the defendant, the rights of the victim, and the pursuit of justice, and they will make determinations on a case-by-case basis.

Question 7

In your statement, you wrote, "The Department fully supports Section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by Congress." I believe we should not amend the Constitution – which has served us well for over 200 years – casually.

If you think the "intent and circumstances" leading us to amend the Constitution may change in as few as seven years, is this not an argument for a statutory and not a constitutional approach to protecting victims?

I do not believe that it is. A number of amendments to the Constitution contain such a clause – the 18th, 20th, 21st, and the 22nd Amendments. The purpose of such a clause is to preclude the type of situation like that encountered with the ratification of the 27th Amendment, which was originally proposed in 1789 but not ratified by the requisite number of state legislatures until 1992. We believe that the experience of the 27th Amendment, which remained in constitutional limbo for over 200 years, has led the Congress to include such a clause in a substantial number of proposed constitutional amendments over the last two decades. For example, amendments proposed in the last few years which have contained such a time limitation include those to ban flag burning and to limit campaign expenditures introduced recently in the 108th Congress; to repeal the 22nd Amendment and to provide for a balanced budget introduced in the 107th Congress; and an amendment to provide for Congressional term limits and your amendment to abolish the electoral college introduced in the 106th Congress.

Question 8

In Ms. Earlene Eason's testimony, she wrote of her frustration that the DA would not ask for a continuance on her behalf so she could attend the sentencing of the person who pled guilty to murdering her son. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to seek a continuance? If so, under what circumstances? How would this be reconciled with the Constitutional right to a speedy trial?

I do not believe that the amendment as drafted allows a victim an absolute right to a continuance. The amendment grants a victim the right not to be excluded from a public proceeding and the right reasonably to be heard at a public sentencing hearing. First, the right not to be excluded is not tantamount to a right to be present, i.e., the court does not need to accommodate the victim's right to be there, it simply cannot exclude him or her from the proceeding. Second, the right reasonably to be heard does not necessarily have to entail the victim's presence, a victim could be afforded the right to be heard in writing rather than orally. However, courts may well decide, on a case-by-case basis, that a continuance would not adversely affect the proceedings and therefore order a continuance so that the victim's right under the amendment can be fully realized.

There are numerous scenarios where the defendant's right to a speedy trial would in no way be implicated by a continuance issued so as to allow the victim to be present. This would be the case when the continuance sought was a mere matter of days, or even longer. The Supreme Court has stated that the right to a speedy trial does not preclude delays and has identified four factors that should be considered when making determinations in this context: the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972). In addition, the Court stated that "until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance." Id. at 530. Under this analysis, depending on the length of the delay a continuance may cause, it is entirely possible that the defendant's right to a speedy trial will in no way be implicated.

Question 9

In Mr. Duane Lynn's testimony, he expressed his frustration that he could not comment on how his wife's murdered should be sentenced. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to make a sentencing recommendation (such as the death penalty instead of life in prison or vice versa) in his or her impact statement?

I do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. Indeed, it is unclear that current law precludes such victim testimony. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

Senator Dianne Feinstein

Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S.J. Res. 1,
the Victims' Rights Amendment
Written Question for Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh

1. At the hearing, there was some discussion about what would happen if S. J. Res. 1 was adopted and a victim's constitutional right came into conflict with a criminal defendant's constitutional right. First, I want to clarify that nothing in the amendment would take away defendants' rights. Section 1 of the amendment makes clear that victims' rights are capable of protection without denying defendants' constitutional rights. Second, in many instances, the basic procedural rights conferred by the amendment would have little, if any, impact on defendants' rights. For example, is hard to see how a defendant could plausibly object to providing notice to victims about the date and location of public proceedings involving the crime. Third, the amendment qualifies many of the victims' rights to ensure that courts limit them appropriately. For instance, under the amendment, victims would have no constitutional right to be heard at trial and, at other public proceedings involving the crime, victims would have only a right "reasonably" to be heard. Fourth, the amendment provides three specific exceptions to restrict victims' rights: 1) a substantial interest in public safety; 2) a substantial interest in the administration of criminal justice; and 3) compelling necessity.

I would like to clarify one point about the administration of criminal justice exception. In responses to me and to Senator Durbin at the hearing, you suggested that the administration of criminal justice exception would allow courts faced with a conflict between a defendant's constitutional right and a victim's constitutional right to balance these rights and decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument.

I agree with that response. However, to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to make clear that defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception. Let me offer some examples of how that could happen. If a victim sat in the courtroom and tried to disrupt the proceeding by yelling at the defendant, this would adversely affect the administration of criminal justice. To ensure that the defendant received his or her constitutional right to a fair trial, the judge could have the victim removed (and even pursue other actions against the victim, such as holding the victim in contempt). If the same victim threatened bodily harm to the defendant or judge, that would also implicate public safety as well as violate the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. The judge could, at a minimum, force the victim to leave under the public safety exception. If the victim was horribly maimed by the crime and insisted on sitting immediately in front of the jury, the judge could determine that compelling necessity dictated that the victim not be allowed to be present during the trial.

Obviously, I do not intend these examples to be exhaustive. However, I do think that they illustrate some of the variety of ways in which the amendment would ensure the protection of defendants' constitutional rights consistent with the existence of victims' constitutional rights. These ways would always depend heavily on the underlying context in which the rights came into conflict and the weight of the defendant's and victim's respective interests. Similar balancing is done in other situations where constitutional rights conflict–for example, where the media's First Amendment right to cover a trial conflicts with a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial.

a) Do you agree that criminal defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception?

Yes.

b) Assuming that you answer yes to question 1(a), do you agree that, if a victim's constitutional right conflicted with a defendant's constitutional right, the judge would then–applying applicable precedent–balance (or otherwise reconcile) these rights and then decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument?

Yes. We believe that by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries to define the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

Brett,
Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.

I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS FOR
HEARING ON S.J. RES. 1, A PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CRIME VICTIMS
APRIL 8, 2003

Questions by Senator Leahy for Viet Dinh

1. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that constitutional amendments should be reserved for "certain great and extraordinary occasions."

(A) Do you agree with this standard?

Yes.

(B) Is there anything in our current Constitution that inhibits the enactment of State or Federal laws that protect crime victims?

Nothing in the Constitution specifically inhibits the enactment of statutes to protect crime victims. However, although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained in this amendment, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's constitutional rights. Furthermore, statutes would not address two critical issues that necessitate a constitutional amendment, i.e., uniform implementation of rights, and establishing standing for victims to assert these rights in court.

(C) Please identify any appellate decisions of which you are aware that were not eventually reversed in which a State of Federal victims' rights law was not given effect because of a defendant's right in the U.S. Constitution.

Two specific examples where State victims' constitutional rights were not given effect because of a defendant's rights under the U.S. Constitution are:

State ex rel. Romley v. Superior Court, 836 P.2d 445, 453, (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992), in which the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that a victim's State constitutional right must yield to a defendant's Federal and State constitutional right to due process. This case involved a State constitutional right that precludes the trial court from compelling disclosure of the victim's medical records. The defendant argued that the statute violated her due process rights because without the information, she could not mount an adequate defense or conduct adequate cross-examination of witnesses. The Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that the defendant's Federal and State due process right trumped the victim's State constitutional right.

Martinez v. State of Florida, 664 So.2d 1034 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996), where the defendant was convicted of attempted manslaughter with a firearm and appealed on several grounds, including that the court erred in giving priority to the constitutional right of a victim to be present in the courtroom over the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial by having the witnesses sequestered. Despite the Florida State victims' rights amendment, the court, citing Gore v. State of Florida, agreed with the defendant and stated that the victims should not have been permitted in the courtroom during opening statements. However, the court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that the error in this particular case was harmless.

2. If Congress enacted spending power-based legislation to get every state to implement a uniform national standard of victims rights, what would remain to be done that only a constitutional amendment could accomplish?

Although such legislation would do away with one of the main concerns with statutory remedies, the need for uniformity, it would not accomplish the same goals as a constitutional amendment. As stated previously, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights because courts often will not reach the threshold question of whether the two sets of rights are truly in conflict. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998 entitled The Rights of Crime Victims – Does Legal Protection Make a Difference?, which after surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."

3. Section 1 of the proposed amendment states: "The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied." If a judge concludes that there is indeed a conflict between a victim's rights and the constitutional rights of the accused, would section 1 require the judge to discard that legal conclusion and uphold the right of the accused?

As Assistant Attorney General Dinh stated during the hearing, it would be very difficult for me to speculate how this amendment will be interpreted and how judges will decide cases in particular instances. However, we do believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge the ability to protect the interests and rights of criminal defendants. For example, by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries defining the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case.

4. Four of the current amendments to the Constitution – the 14th, 15th, 24th, and 26th – recognize a distinction between the complete "denial" or rights and the "abridgement" of them. Similarly, section 1 of the proposed amendment refers to rights being both "denied" and "restricted." Does the assurance that the constitutional rights of the accused will not be "denied" mean that a judge is free to "restrict" those rights in ways that the Constitution might not otherwise allow if doing so will make it easier to accommodate the rights of victims?

As stated in response to Question 3, we believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge in a particular case the ability to protect the interests and rights of a criminal defendant. In cases where there is a tension between the rights of victims and the rights of defendants, courts will rule in favor of the party with the more compelling legal argument.

5. I think we would both agree that in a mass-victim case, the court should not be required to allow each of the potentially thousands of victims to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing – meaning that there are some cases when it might be entirely reasonable to deny some victims the right to be heard. But given that the rights conferred by proposed amendment belong to each individual victim, and that the text of the amendment allows a victim's participatory rights to be "restricted" in limited circumstances but never "denied," how would it be possible for courts to allow the kind of flexibility we need without completely ignoring the obvious difference between a "restriction" and a "denial?"

It is my understanding that the amendment as drafted does not grant a victim the absolute right to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing. The amendment instead grants victims the right "reasonably to be heard" at specified public proceedings. The "reasonably to be heard" guarantee can be accomplished by allowing a victim to communicate his or her views to the court either orally or in writing. Such a decision would be at the court's discretion. In addition, we disagree that the language of the amendment does not allow for exceptions to the right "reasonably to be heard." Indeed, the text of the amendment itself explicitly allows for such exceptions. In other contexts, it has been left up to the courts to determine the boundaries of certain rights, for example when the press' First Amendment rights are pitted against a defendant's right to a fair trial. However, the last clause of section 2, which reads "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity," clearly allows for exceptions by employing a two-tiered approach – the lower standard of substantial interest is used when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of criminal justice, while a higher standard of compelling necessity is used for other possible justifications.

6. Under section 2 of the proposed amendment, a crime victim has "the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime." Please explain how this provision would apply in multi-victim cases. For example, suppose that one victim of a multi-victim offense files a civil tort action against the offender for damages resulting from the criminal conduct. That action would be "a public proceeding involving the crime," even though the prosecutor may have no knowledge of it. Who would have the constitutional obligation to provide "reasonable and timely notice" to the other victims?

I do not believe that the amendment as written grants victims the right to be informed of civil actions and therefore there is no attendant constitutional obligation to provide reasonable and timely notice in such cases.

7. Section 3 of the proposed amendment states that "[o]nly the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." If a defendant raises an objection to having an indigent victim speak at a proceeding, who would handle the litigation on behalf of the victim? I assume the prosecutor would gladly do so for a victim who could not afford to hire counsel, but under section 3, would that be permissible? Would the prosecutor have the right or the duty to make what she believed to be a better argument on behalf of a represented victim?

Although presumably Congress and/or state legislatures could enact legislation that establishes a framework by which indigent victims can receive representation, we do not think that section 3 precludes a prosecutor from asserting the rights of victims. The relevant clause in section 3 to which we believe you refer reads "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article...." This clause confers standing to assert the rights, something that mere legislation has been unable to do. However, although it is the victim or his or her representative who has standing, presumably any attorney could go before the court on his or her behalf.

8. Section 3 of the proposed amendment forbids granting a new trial as a remedy for the violation of a victim's rights, but does not forbid re-opening the sentencing proceeding. (A) If a prosecutor fails to notify a victim of the sentencing hearing, can the victim obtain a new sentencing hearing after sentence has been imposed? (B) If the victim persuades the judge at such a hearing to impose a longer prison term or order greater restitution, would that constitute a denial of the accused's Fifth Amendment right to be protected against Double Jeopardy?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 provides grounds for invalidating a sentence nor would it allow a new sentencing hearing. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case or any proceeding thereof.

9. At the sentencing phase of a capital case, there are normally two parties – the government and the defendant – that call witnesses in an effort to provide as factual matters aggravating and mitigating factors that support either a death sentence or a lesser punishment. As a matter of due process, none of those witnesses is allowed to make an argument as to what the sentence should be; such arguments are reserved for counsel at the end of the phase. Would the proposed amendment give qualifying victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death?

Although we are not entirely sure that due process necessarily disallows witnesses from arguing in favor of a proper sentence, we do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

10. Given that earlier versions of S.J. Res. 1 contained explicit language prohibiting a court from staying or continuing a trial once it is underway, language that has been discarded in the current bill, what would prevent an appellate court from doing just that to prevent further potential violations of a victim's participatory rights while an interlocutory appeal was pending?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 could be construed to provide grounds to stay trials, reopen proceedings, or invalidate rulings. Although it remains to be seen how courts will interpret the amendment and make determinations given specific fact patterns, the Department believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to delay criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding). Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case.

11. To what extent are the rights described in the proposed amendment self-executing?

Please identify any specific rights that (A) would not require implementing legislation, or (B) would be immune from limiting legislation.

(A) Although the Department welcomes any appropriate implementing legislation, we believe that the entire amendment is self-executing, and therefore the rights are enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to clearly define those situations where the amendment will apply in order to minimize the difficulties that could arise if federal, state and local prosecutors were unable to determine their proper response in certain situations.

(B) The second sentence in section 4, which reads "Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons," prevents Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons . The Department believes that the President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

Follow-Up Questions for Assistance Attorney General Viet Dinh
Regarding a proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims (S.J. Res. 1)

Senator Richard J. Durbin
April 29, 2003

Question 1

a.) Do you believe this presumption is true? In other words, would S.J. Res. 1 deny any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be denied?

I do believe that this presumption is true. The rights granted by the proposed amendment are not intended to operate in conflict with those rights granted to defendants under the Constitution and as enunciated by the Supreme Court, but rather are intended to operate in parallel with those rights. We do not support the proposition that the amendment, as drafted, denies any rights of the accused.

b.) Do you believe S.J. Res 1 diminishes any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be diminished?

No, we do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 as drafted diminishes any rights of the accused. If a conflict were to arise, it would ultimately be up to the Courts to delineate the boundaries of the rights and to accommodate both to the greatest extent possible.

If not, can you explain why S.J. Res. 1 would not deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury, specifically in cases where the victim is a witness in a case? In such cases, do you believe the victim would be excluded from the proceedings under the exception created by a "substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice" or do you believe the victim would be allowed to attend the proceedings?

Allowing a victim to be present during a trial, simply because he or she is an intended witness, would not necessarily deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury. Ultimately, based on the facts of the case, it would be up to the court to determine if indeed a defendant's right to an impartial jury would be implicated by granting a victim a right not to be excluded from the proceedings. Indeed, courts make similar determinations in many contexts and are able to harmonize rights that some may argue are in conflict. For example, courts are often called upon to accommodate the right of the press and the public to attend trials and to reconcile these rights with the rights of a defendant to a fair trial.

Question 2

In the 105th Congress, when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered another version of this amendment, I offered an amendment that said "Nothing in this article shall be construed to deny or diminish the rights of the accused as guaranteed by this Constitution."

Would you object to the adoption of similar language to S.J. Res. 1? Why or why not?

I believe that the language you suggested would be detrimental to the intended purpose of the amendment. The inclusion of such language would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of victims' rights, where a court would not need to consider the relationship between the rights of victims and the rights of the accused, but rather would protect the latter to the detriment of the former.

Do you believe this language is consistent with your conclusions in responding to Question 1?

While we do believe that this language is consistent with my conclusion in Question 1, we do not necessarily believe that it would be consistent with the intent of the amendment – to require courts to give consideration to the rights of victims in the criminal justice system. Because its inclusion would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of rights, courts would not be required to reach the threshold question of whether a victim's right truly conflicts with a right of the defendant.

Question 3

Section 3 states: "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." However, this amendment does not define "victim." I understand your position that Congress will likely be responsible for defining this term. Please provide guidance for Congress in addressing the following hypothetical possibilities:

a.) Someone is murdered. Is the deceased the only victim of the crime? What about the spouse? Significant others? Domestic partner? Parents? Children?

b.) A child is kidnaped and recovered. Is the child the victim? Or the parents?

c.) A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, is brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. Who is the victim with Constitutional rights?

REV_00121567

If the amendment is adopted, the courts presumably will develop a body of jurisprudence that will more precisely define the term "victim," and the corresponding reach of Congressional authority to refine that definition. However, we believe that in the case of a murdered person, it would be appropriate to allow the victim's rights to be exercised by a surviving family member or other appropriate representative, and am confident that courts will agree with this conclusion. In the case of a minor victim, such as in the kidnaping context, it should again be an appropriate representative that will exercise the victim's rights. As for situations involving domestic violence, it may very well be that the accused batterer technically meets any developed definition of a victim. However, the amendment currently contains exception language which reads: "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." In domestic violence cases, where the true victim of the abusive relationship may actually be the defendant in a particular case and the abuser may be the victim, a judge may well decide that a substantial interest in public safety, or one of the other grounds for an exception, exists so as to preclude the abusive "victim" from exercising the given rights.

Question 4

S.J. Res. 1 also does not define "the victim's lawful representative" or explain how such a person should be chosen. In the hypothetical situation involving a murder victim, what would happen if both the spouse and the father of the deceased wanted to be the "lawful representative?" Who do you propose should make that determination? A judge? The prosecutor? What if the party who was not selected wants to appeal this decision?

It would be up to the courts to determine, on a case-by-case basis, who the victim's lawful representative should be.

Question 5

In your statement, you wrote, "By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims."

This assumes that violent crime has more detrimental effects on its victims. What about the victim of a misdemeanor assault? Is that person more worthy of Constitutional rights than an elderly widow has been swindled out of her life savings?

I do not believe that it would be correct to state that one type of victim is more or less worthy of Constitutional rights. However, those affected by violent crime often have not only a pecuniary loss as a result of the crime, but also suffer physically and psychologically.

In addition, it is important to note that the proposed amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime. Some states have already extended statutory victims' rights to victims of other types of crime and the amendment in no way restricts such rights. Furthermore, the states and the federal government are free to broaden statutory protections for these other types of crime and it is my belief that by passing S.J. Res. 1, more attention will be focused on the plight of all victims, and perhaps other protections will be examined and possibly broadened.

Should the court examine the detrimental effects of each crime before determining whether the victim has Constitutional rights?

When dealing with a constitutional amendment, there are always going to be situations where it will be impossible to determine just what the courts will do when interpreting the boundaries of the amendment. Other amendments to the Constitution have undergone many of years of review and interpretation and we therefore have developed a jurisprudence that better equips us to determine what the most likely, and proper outcome will be. Although recognizing that one-hundred percent certainty is an impossibility, we do believe that the sponsors of this amendment have strived to reduce the situations where uncertainty could exist. By requiring courts to examine the detrimental effect of each crime before determining whether the victim has constitutional rights, we believe that it would invite even more uncertainty which would increase the difficulties that could arise if federal, state, and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain circumstances.

Question 6

In your statement, you wrote, "Our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals." In California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted – withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. However, at the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

Do you believe that the rights of victims in this case burdened the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case?

Although we would not feel comfortable stating unequivocally that the victims' rights did or did not burden the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case without knowing the particular circumstances and having all of the facts before me, we do believe that the facts that you have cited led to an unfortunate result in this particular case. However, we think that even the opponents of the victims' rights amendment concede that overall prosecutorial efforts are more, not less, effective when victims are regularly consulted during the course of a case.

How would the language of S.J. Res. 1 avert a similar outcome in other criminal prosecutions?

REV_00121569

The proposed language of S.J. Res. 1 allows victims the right reasonably to be heard and to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety. However, it does not allow a victim the right to preclude plea bargains. Judges will be called upon to consider the rights of the defendant, the rights of the victim, and the pursuit of justice, and they will make determinations on a case-by-case basis.

Question 7

In your statement, you wrote, "The Department fully supports Section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by Congress." I believe we should not amend the Constitution – which has served us well for over 200 years – casually.

If you think the "intent and circumstances" leading us to amend the Constitution may change in as few as seven years, is this not an argument for a statutory and not a constitutional approach to protecting victims?

I do not believe that it is. A number of amendments to the Constitution contain such a clause – the 18th, 20th, 21st, and the 22nd Amendments. The purpose of such a clause is to preclude the type of situation like that encountered with the ratification of the 27th Amendment, which was originally proposed in 1789 but not ratified by the requisite number of state legislatures until 1992. We believe that the experience of the 27th Amendment, which remained in constitutional limbo for over 200 years, has led the Congress to include such a clause in a substantial number of proposed constitutional amendments over the last two decades. For example, amendments proposed in the last few years which have contained such a time limitation include those to ban flag burning and to limit campaign expenditures introduced recently in the 108th Congress; to repeal the 22nd Amendment and to provide for a balanced budget introduced in the 107th Congress; and an amendment to provide for Congressional term limits and your amendment to abolish the electoral college introduced in the 106th Congress.

Question 8

In Ms. Earlene Eason's testimony, she wrote of her frustration that the DA would not ask for a continuance on her behalf so she could attend the sentencing of the person who pled guilty to murdering her son. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to seek a continuance? If so, under what circumstances? How would this be reconciled with the Constitutional right to a speedy trial?

I do not believe that the amendment as drafted allows a victim an absolute right to a continuance. The amendment grants a victim the right not to be excluded from a public proceeding and the right reasonably to be heard at a public sentencing hearing. First, the right not to be excluded is not tantamount to a right to be present, i.e., the court does not need to accommodate the victim's right to be there, it simply cannot exclude him or her from the proceeding. Second, the right reasonably to be heard does not necessarily have to entail the victim's presence, a victim could be afforded the right to be heard in writing rather than orally. However, courts may well decide, on a case-by-case basis, that a continuance would not adversely affect the proceedings and therefore order a continuance so that the victim's right under the amendment can be fully realized.

There are numerous scenarios where the defendant's right to a speedy trial would in no way be implicated by a continuance issued so as to allow the victim to be present. This would be the case when the continuance sought was a mere matter of days, or even longer. The Supreme Court has stated that the right to a speedy trial does not preclude delays and has identified four factors that should be considered when making determinations in this context: the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972). In addition, the Court stated that "until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance." Id. at 530. Under this analysis, depending on the length of the delay a continuance may cause, it is entirely possible that the defendant's right to a speedy trial will in no way be implicated.

Question 9

In Mr. Duane Lynn's testimony, he expressed his frustration that he could not comment on how his wife's murdered should be sentenced. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to make a sentencing recommendation (such as the death penalty instead of life in prison or vice versa) in his or her impact statement?

I do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. Indeed, it is unclear that current law precludes such victim testimony. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

REV_00121572

Senator Dianne Feinstein

Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S.J. Res. 1,
the Victims' Rights Amendment
Written Question for Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh

1. At the hearing, there was some discussion about what would happen if S. J. Res. 1 was adopted and a victim's constitutional right came into conflict with a criminal defendant's constitutional right. First, I want to clarify that nothing in the amendment would take away defendants' rights. Section 1 of the amendment makes clear that victims' rights are capable of protection without denying defendants' constitutional rights. Second, in many instances, the basic procedural rights conferred by the amendment would have little, if any, impact on defendants' rights. For example, is hard to see how a defendant could plausibly object to providing notice to victims about the date and location of public proceedings involving the crime. Third, the amendment qualifies many of the victims' rights to ensure that courts limit them appropriately. For instance, under the amendment, victims would have no constitutional right to be heard at trial and, at other public proceedings involving the crime, victims would have only a right "reasonably" to be heard. Fourth, the amendment provides three specific exceptions to restrict victims' rights: 1) a substantial interest in public safety; 2) a substantial interest in the administration of criminal justice; and 3) compelling necessity.

I would like to clarify one point about the administration of criminal justice exception. In responses to me and to Senator Durbin at the hearing, you suggested that the administration of criminal justice exception would allow courts faced with a conflict between a defendant's constitutional right and a victim's constitutional right to balance these rights and decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument.

I agree with that response. However, to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to make clear that defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception. Let me offer some examples of how that could happen. If a victim sat in the courtroom and tried to disrupt the proceeding by yelling at the defendant, this would adversely affect the administration of criminal justice. To ensure that the defendant received his or her constitutional right to a fair trial, the judge could have the victim removed (and even pursue other actions against the victim, such as holding the victim in contempt). If the same victim threatened bodily harm to the defendant or judge, that would also implicate public safety as well as violate the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. The judge could, at a minimum, force the victim to leave under the public safety exception. If the victim was horribly maimed by the crime and insisted on sitting immediately in front of the jury, the judge could determine that compelling necessity dictated that the victim not be allowed to be present during the trial.

Obviously, I do not intend these examples to be exhaustive. However, I do think that they illustrate some of the variety of ways in which the amendment would ensure the protection of defendants' constitutional rights consistent with the existence of victims' constitutional rights. These ways would always depend heavily on the underlying context in which the rights came into conflict and the weight of the defendant's and victim's respective interests. Similar balancing is done in other situations where constitutional rights conflict–for example, where the media's First Amendment right to cover a trial conflicts with a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial.

a) Do you agree that criminal defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception?

Yes.

b) Assuming that you answer yes to question 1(a), do you agree that, if a victim's constitutional right conflicted with a defendant's constitutional right, the judge would then–applying applicable precedent–balance (or otherwise reconcile) these rights and then decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument?

Yes. We believe that by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries to define the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

Brett,

Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.

I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

Subject:	FYI - CongressDaily: AFL-CIO letter opposing S. 1125 (asbestos)

Labor Circulates Letter Opposing Hatch's Asbestos Bill

Hope for bipartisan support of a proposed asbestos compensation bill took a heavy hit today as the AFL-CIO circulated to senators a strongly worded letter of opposition to the measure. The legislation, sponsored by Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch, calls for the establishment of a $108 billion trust fund -- financed by insurers and defendant companies -- to pay for claims submitted to a special new court by persons suffering from certain asbestos diseases. In its strong plea to senators not to sign on to the Hatch bill, the AFL-CIO leveled a sharp attack against the legislation, charging that it "fails to provide fair, timely and certain compensation to victims -- while relieving manufacturers, employers and insurers of all liability." Bill Samuel, labor's legislative director, in the letter said the Hatch bill also set such restrictive eligibility standards that thousands of stricken victims could not quality for compensation. Moreover, Samuel maintained the bill's trust fund would not provide sufficient money to cover anticipated claims.

Hatch earlier today called labor's letter "all tactics" aimed at softening support for his bill. But Hatch left the door open for further talks with labor and other affected parties to hash out a compromise acceptable to each side. "If we don't sit down and get this down," Hatch said, "it's going to be over -- a dead bill. They know it and I know it. So I think we're going to get something done." Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., also expressed hope that an accord could be reached. "We can get a bill," Leahy said. "But we're going to have to negotiate these serious points of contention. You can't just put a bill out there and say, 'take it or leave it.' It can't be a one-sided bill. We've got to get the two sides together and work out our differences." -- by David Hess

I will be moving to the President's re-election campaign and I wanted to drop you a quick note to thank for your friendship and the wonderful experience working with each of you has been.

As you know, there will be a lot of changes in the Political Affairs Office. As of next Monday, I will no longer be checking this email address or my WH phone. For questions related to Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, please contact Darren Bearson at 6-5275 or Darren_Bearson@who.eop.gov. He is the new Associate Director for that part of the country.

For the other states I've worked in (Montana, North Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota), please contact Matt Schlapp until he announces a new regional director. Thanks again and I look forward to crossing paths with you again in the future!

KEY POINTS: MIDDLE EAST***
From the President's remarks in Chicago, 6/11/03

President Bush condemned Wednesday's bus bombing in Jerusalem. The militant Islamic group Hamas claimed responsibility for the attack, which killed at least 16 people and injured more than 30.

-It is clear there are people in the Middle East who hate peace; who want to kill to make sure peace doesn't happen.

-It is clear that there are people who kill to make sure the desires of the Prime Minister of the Palestinian Authority and others of a peaceful state, living side-by-side with Israel, do not happen.

-President Bush urges nations that want to see peace in the Middle East to fight terror, cut off money from organizations like Hamas and to isolate those who are willing to kill to stop peace from happening.

-President Bush is calling upon all of the free world and peace-loving nations to not only condemn the killings, but to use their power to prevent them in the future.

REBUILDING AFGHANISTAN***
From remarks on 6/9/03 by Grant Aldonas, U.S. Department of Commerce Under Secretary for International Trade, in Chicago

-The people of Afghanistan, subjected by despots to more than two decades of war, tyranny, repression, malice and murder, must and will rise again, and we pledge to help them.

-The United States is not only committed to rebuilding Afghanistan - we are also committed to rebuilding Afghanistan in a way that encourages peace and stability, commerce and opportunity, and freedom and democracy.

-We will do this by building infrastructure for systems such as health care, education, energy and transportation.

-President Bush's designation of Afghanistan as a beneficiary of the Generalized System of Preferences will permit some 5,700 products manufactured and originated in Afghanistan to enter the U.S. duty free.

-The President believes that remarkable changes will come from implementing a government that divides the economic interest of the people from those of the government, encourages economic freedom, and eliminates barriers to trade. This will sow the seeds of free markets.

-It is important that we set the Afghan people free - allowing them to create an economic destiny where they can live and succeed, and their ideas, innovation, and efforts will be rewarded.

Brett,
Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.
I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS FOR
HEARING ON S.J. RES. 1, A PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CRIME VICTIMS
APRIL 8, 2003

Questions by Senator Leahy for Viet Dinh

1. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that constitutional amendments should be reserved for "certain great and extraordinary occasions."

(A) Do you agree with this standard?

Yes.

(B) Is there anything in our current Constitution that inhibits the enactment of State or Federal laws that protect crime victims?

Nothing in the Constitution specifically inhibits the enactment of statutes to protect crime victims. However, although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained in this amendment, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's constitutional rights. Furthermore, statutes would not address two critical issues that necessitate a constitutional amendment, i.e., uniform implementation of rights, and establishing standing for victims to assert these rights in court.

(C) Please identify any appellate decisions of which you are aware that were not eventually reversed in which a State of Federal victims' rights law was not given effect because of a defendant's right in the U.S. Constitution.

Two specific examples where State victims' constitutional rights were not given effect because of a defendant's rights under the U.S. Constitution are:

State ex rel. Romley v. Superior Court, 836 P.2d 445, 453, (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992), in which the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that a victim's State constitutional right must yield to a defendant's Federal and State constitutional right to due process. This case involved a State constitutional right that precludes the trial court from compelling disclosure of the victim's medical records. The defendant argued that the statute violated her due process rights because without the information, she could not mount an adequate defense or conduct adequate cross-examination of witnesses. The Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that the defendant's Federal and State due process right trumped the victim's State constitutional right.

Martinez v. State of Florida, 664 So.2d 1034 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996), where the defendant was convicted of attempted manslaughter with a firearm and appealed on several grounds, including that the court erred in giving priority to the constitutional right of a victim to be present in the courtroom over the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial by having the witnesses sequestered. Despite the Florida State victims' rights amendment, the court, citing Gore v. State of Florida, agreed with the defendant and stated that the victims should not have been permitted in the courtroom during opening statements. However, the court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that the error in this particular case was harmless.

2. If Congress enacted spending power-based legislation to get every state to implement a uniform national standard of victims rights, what would remain to be done that only a constitutional amendment could accomplish?

Although such legislation would do away with one of the main concerns with statutory remedies, the need for uniformity, it would not accomplish the same goals as a constitutional amendment. As stated previously, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights because courts often will not reach the threshold question of whether the two sets of rights are truly in conflict. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998 entitled The Rights of Crime Victims – Does Legal Protection Make a Difference?, which after surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."

3. Section 1 of the proposed amendment states: "The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied." If a judge concludes that there is indeed a conflict between a victim's rights and the constitutional rights of the accused, would section 1 require the judge to discard that legal conclusion and uphold the right of the accused?

As Assistant Attorney General Dinh stated during the hearing, it would be very difficult for me to speculate how this amendment will be interpreted and how judges will decide cases in particular instances. However, we do believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge the ability to protect the interests and rights of criminal defendants. For example, by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries defining the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case.

4. Four of the current amendments to the Constitution – the 14th, 15th, 24th, and 26th – recognize a distinction between the complete "denial" or rights and the "abridgement" of them. Similarly, section 1 of the proposed amendment refers to rights being both "denied" and "restricted." Does the assurance that the constitutional rights of the accused will not be "denied" mean that a judge is free to "restrict" those rights in ways that the Constitution might not otherwise allow if doing so will make it easier to accommodate the rights of victims?

As stated in response to Question 3, we believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge in a particular case the ability to protect the interests and rights of a criminal defendant. In cases where there is a tension between the rights of victims and the rights of defendants, courts will rule in favor of the party with the more compelling legal argument.

5. I think we would both agree that in a mass-victim case, the court should not be required to allow each of the potentially thousands of victims to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing – meaning that there are some cases when it might be entirely reasonable to deny some victims the right to be heard. But given that the rights conferred by proposed amendment belong to each individual victim, and that the text of the amendment allows a victim's participatory rights to be "restricted" in limited circumstances but never "denied," how would it be possible for courts to allow the kind of flexibility we need without completely ignoring the obvious difference between a "restriction" and a "denial?"

It is my understanding that the amendment as drafted does not grant a victim the absolute right to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing. The amendment instead grants victims the right "reasonably to be heard" at specified public proceedings. The "reasonably to be heard" guarantee can be accomplished by allowing a victim to communicate his or her views to the court either orally or in writing. Such a decision would be at the court's discretion. In addition, we disagree that the language of the amendment does not allow for exceptions to the right "reasonably to be heard." Indeed, the text of the amendment itself explicitly allows for such exceptions. In other contexts, it has been left up to the courts to determine the boundaries of certain rights, for example when the press' First Amendment rights are pitted against a defendant's right to a fair trial. However, the last clause of section 2, which reads "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity," clearly allows for exceptions by employing a two-tiered approach – the lower standard of substantial interest is used when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of criminal justice, while a higher standard of compelling necessity is used for other possible justifications.

6. Under section 2 of the proposed amendment, a crime victim has "the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime." Please explain how this provision would apply in multi-victim cases. For example, suppose that one victim of a multi-victim offense files a civil tort action against the offender for damages resulting from the criminal conduct. That action would be "a public proceeding involving the crime," even though the prosecutor may have no knowledge of it. Who would have the constitutional obligation to provide "reasonable and timely notice" to the other victims?

I do not believe that the amendment as written grants victims the right to be informed of civil actions and therefore there is no attendant constitutional obligation to provide reasonable and timely notice in such cases.

7. Section 3 of the proposed amendment states that "[o]nly the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." If a defendant raises an objection to having an indigent victim speak at a proceeding, who would handle the litigation on behalf of the victim? I assume the prosecutor would gladly do so for a victim who could not afford to hire counsel, but under section 3, would that be permissible? Would the prosecutor have the right or the duty to make what she believed to be a better argument on behalf of a represented victim?

Although presumably Congress and/or state legislatures could enact legislation that establishes a framework by which indigent victims can receive representation, we do not think that section 3 precludes a prosecutor from asserting the rights of victims. The relevant clause in section 3 to which we believe you refer reads "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article...." This clause confers standing to assert the rights, something that mere legislation has been unable to do. However, although it is the victim or his or her representative who has standing, presumably any attorney could go before the court on his or her behalf.

8. Section 3 of the proposed amendment forbids granting a new trial as a remedy for the violation of a victim's rights, but does not forbid re-opening the sentencing proceeding. (A) If a prosecutor fails to notify a victim of the sentencing hearing, can the victim obtain a new sentencing hearing after sentence has been imposed? (B) If the victim persuades the judge at such a hearing to impose a longer prison term or order greater restitution, would that constitute a denial of the accused's Fifth Amendment right to be protected against Double Jeopardy?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 provides grounds for invalidating a sentence nor would it allow a new sentencing hearing. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case or any proceeding thereof.

9. At the sentencing phase of a capital case, there are normally two parties – the government and the defendant – that call witnesses in an effort to provide as factual matters aggravating and mitigating factors that support either a death sentence or a lesser punishment. As a matter of due process, none of those witnesses is allowed to make an argument as to what the sentence should be; such arguments are reserved for counsel at the end of the phase. Would the proposed amendment give qualifying victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death?

Although we are not entirely sure that due process necessarily disallows witnesses from arguing in favor of a proper sentence, we do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

10. Given that earlier versions of S.J. Res. 1 contained explicit language prohibiting a court from staying or continuing a trial once it is underway, language that has been discarded in the current bill, what would prevent an appellate court from doing just that to prevent further potential violations of a victim's participatory rights while an interlocutory appeal was pending?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 could be construed to provide grounds to stay trials, reopen proceedings, or invalidate rulings. Although it remains to be seen how courts will interpret the amendment and make determinations given specific fact patterns, the Department believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to delay criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding). Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case.

11. To what extent are the rights described in the proposed amendment self-executing?

Please identify any specific rights that (A) would not require implementing legislation, or (B) would be immune from limiting legislation.

(A) Although the Department welcomes any appropriate implementing legislation, we believe that the entire amendment is self-executing, and therefore the rights are enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to clearly define those situations where the amendment will apply in order to minimize the difficulties that could arise if federal, state and local prosecutors were unable to determine their proper response in certain situations.

(B) The second sentence in section 4, which reads "Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons," prevents Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons . The Department believes that the President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

Follow-Up Questions for Assistance Attorney General Viet Dinh
Regarding a proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims (S.J. Res. 1)

Senator Richard J. Durbin
April 29, 2003

Question 1

a.) Do you believe this presumption is true? In other words, would S.J. Res. 1 deny any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be denied?

I do believe that this presumption is true. The rights granted by the proposed amendment are not intended to operate in conflict with those rights granted to defendants under the Constitution and as enunciated by the Supreme Court, but rather are intended to operate in parallel with those rights. We do not support the proposition that the amendment, as drafted, denies any rights of the accused.

b.) Do you believe S.J. Res 1 diminishes any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be diminished?

No, we do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 as drafted diminishes any rights of the accused. If a conflict were to arise, it would ultimately be up to the Courts to delineate the boundaries of the rights and to accommodate both to the greatest extent possible.

If not, can you explain why S.J. Res. 1 would not deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury, specifically in cases where the victim is a witness in a case? In such cases, do you believe the victim would be excluded from the proceedings under the exception created by a "substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice" or do you believe the victim would be allowed to attend the proceedings?

Allowing a victim to be present during a trial, simply because he or she is an intended witness, would not necessarily deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury. Ultimately, based on the facts of the case, it would be up to the court to determine if indeed a defendant's right to an impartial jury would be implicated by granting a victim a right not to be excluded from the proceedings. Indeed, courts make similar determinations in many contexts and are able to harmonize rights that some may argue are in conflict. For example, courts are often called upon to accommodate the right of the press and the public to attend trials and to reconcile these rights with the rights of a defendant to a fair trial.

Question 2

In the 105th Congress, when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered another version of this amendment, I offered an amendment that said "Nothing in this article shall be construed to deny or diminish the rights of the accused as guaranteed by this Constitution."

Would you object to the adoption of similar language to S.J. Res. 1? Why or why not?

I believe that the language you suggested would be detrimental to the intended purpose of the amendment. The inclusion of such language would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of victims' rights, where a court would not need to consider the relationship between the rights of victims and the rights of the accused, but rather would protect the latter to the detriment of the former.

Do you believe this language is consistent with your conclusions in responding to Question 1?

While we do believe that this language is consistent with my conclusion in Question 1, we do not necessarily believe that it would be consistent with the intent of the amendment – to require courts to give consideration to the rights of victims in the criminal justice system. Because its inclusion would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of rights, courts would not be required to reach the threshold question of whether a victim's right truly conflicts with a right of the defendant.

Question 3

Section 3 states: "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." However, this amendment does not define "victim." I understand your position that Congress will likely be responsible for defining this term. Please provide guidance for Congress in addressing the following hypothetical possibilities:

a.) Someone is murdered. Is the deceased the only victim of the crime? What about the spouse? Significant others? Domestic partner? Parents? Children?

b.) A child is kidnaped and recovered. Is the child the victim? Or the parents?

c.) A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, is brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. Who is the victim with Constitutional rights?

REV_00121634

If the amendment is adopted, the courts presumably will develop a body of jurisprudence that will more precisely define the term "victim," and the corresponding reach of Congressional authority to refine that definition. However, we believe that in the case of a murdered person, it would be appropriate to allow the victim's rights to be exercised by a surviving family member or other appropriate representative, and am confident that courts will agree with this conclusion. In the case of a minor victim, such as in the kidnaping context, it should again be an appropriate representative that will exercise the victim's rights. As for situations involving domestic violence, it may very well be that the accused batterer technically meets any developed definition of a victim. However, the amendment currently contains exception language which reads: "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." In domestic violence cases, where the true victim of the abusive relationship may actually be the defendant in a particular case and the abuser may be the victim, a judge may well decide that a substantial interest in public safety, or one of the other grounds for an exception, exists so as to preclude the abusive "victim" from exercising the given rights.

Question 4

S.J. Res. 1 also does not define "the victim's lawful representative" or explain how such a person should be chosen. In the hypothetical situation involving a murder victim, what would happen if both the spouse and the father of the deceased wanted to be the "lawful representative?" Who do you propose should make that determination? A judge? The prosecutor? What if the party who was not selected wants to appeal this decision?

It would be up to the courts to determine, on a case-by-case basis, who the victim's lawful representative should be.

Question 5

In your statement, you wrote, "By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims."

This assumes that violent crime has more detrimental effects on its victims. What about the victim of a misdemeanor assault? Is that person more worthy of Constitutional rights than an elderly widow has been swindled out of her life savings?

I do not believe that it would be correct to state that one type of victim is more or less worthy of Constitutional rights. However, those affected by violent crime often have not only a pecuniary loss as a result of the crime, but also suffer physically and psychologically.

In addition, it is important to note that the proposed amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime. Some states have already extended statutory victims' rights to victims of other types of crime and the amendment in no way restricts such rights. Furthermore, the states and the federal government are free to broaden statutory protections for these other types of crime and it is my belief that by passing S.J. Res. 1, more attention will be focused on the plight of all victims, and perhaps other protections will be examined and possibly broadened.

Should the court examine the detrimental effects of each crime before determining whether the victim has Constitutional rights?

When dealing with a constitutional amendment, there are always going to be situations where it will be impossible to determine just what the courts will do when interpreting the boundaries of the amendment. Other amendments to the Constitution have undergone many of years of review and interpretation and we therefore have developed a jurisprudence that better equips us to determine what the most likely, and proper outcome will be. Although recognizing that one-hundred percent certainty is an impossibility, we do believe that the sponsors of this amendment have strived to reduce the situations where uncertainty could exist. By requiring courts to examine the detrimental effect of each crime before determining whether the victim has constitutional rights, we believe that it would invite even more uncertainty which would increase the difficulties that could arise if federal, state, and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain circumstances.

Question 6

In your statement, you wrote, "Our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals." In California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted – withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. However, at the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

Do you believe that the rights of victims in this case burdened the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case?

Although we would not feel comfortable stating unequivocally that the victims' rights did or did not burden the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case without knowing the particular circumstances and having all of the facts before me, we do believe that the facts that you have cited led to an unfortunate result in this particular case. However, we think that even the opponents of the victims' rights amendment concede that overall prosecutorial efforts are more, not less, effective when victims are regularly consulted during the course of a case.

How would the language of S.J. Res. 1 avert a similar outcome in other criminal prosecutions?

REV_00121636

The proposed language of S.J. Res. 1 allows victims the right reasonably to be heard and to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety. However, it does not allow a victim the right to preclude plea bargains. Judges will be called upon to consider the rights of the defendant, the rights of the victim, and the pursuit of justice, and they will make determinations on a case-by-case basis.

Question 7

In your statement, you wrote, "The Department fully supports Section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by Congress." I believe we should not amend the Constitution – which has served us well for over 200 years – casually.

If you think the "intent and circumstances" leading us to amend the Constitution may change in as few as seven years, is this not an argument for a statutory and not a constitutional approach to protecting victims?

I do not believe that it is. A number of amendments to the Constitution contain such a clause – the 18th, 20th, 21st, and the 22nd Amendments. The purpose of such a clause is to preclude the type of situation like that encountered with the ratification of the 27th Amendment, which was originally proposed in 1789 but not ratified by the requisite number of state legislatures until 1992. We believe that the experience of the 27th Amendment, which remained in constitutional limbo for over 200 years, has led the Congress to include such a clause in a substantial number of proposed constitutional amendments over the last two decades. For example, amendments proposed in the last few years which have contained such a time limitation include those to ban flag burning and to limit campaign expenditures introduced recently in the 108th Congress; to repeal the 22nd Amendment and to provide for a balanced budget introduced in the 107th Congress; and an amendment to provide for Congressional term limits and your amendment to abolish the electoral college introduced in the 106th Congress.

Question 8

In Ms. Earlene Eason's testimony, she wrote of her frustration that the DA would not ask for a continuance on her behalf so she could attend the sentencing of the person who pled guilty to murdering her son. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to seek a continuance? If so, under what circumstances? How would this be reconciled with the Constitutional right to a speedy trial?

I do not believe that the amendment as drafted allows a victim an absolute right to a continuance. The amendment grants a victim the right not to be excluded from a public proceeding and the right reasonably to be heard at a public sentencing hearing. First, the right not to be excluded is not tantamount to a right to be present, i.e., the court does not need to accommodate the victim's right to be there, it simply cannot exclude him or her from the proceeding. Second, the right reasonably to be heard does not necessarily have to entail the victim's presence, a victim could be afforded the right to be heard in writing rather than orally. However, courts may well decide, on a case-by-case basis, that a continuance would not adversely affect the proceedings and therefore order a continuance so that the victim's right under the amendment can be fully realized.

There are numerous scenarios where the defendant's right to a speedy trial would in no way be implicated by a continuance issued so as to allow the victim to be present. This would be the case when the continuance sought was a mere matter of days, or even longer. The Supreme Court has stated that the right to a speedy trial does not preclude delays and has identified four factors that should be considered when making determinations in this context: the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972). In addition, the Court stated that "until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance." Id. at 530. Under this analysis, depending on the length of the delay a continuance may cause, it is entirely possible that the defendant's right to a speedy trial will in no way be implicated.

Question 9

In Mr. Duane Lynn's testimony, he expressed his frustration that he could not comment on how his wife's murdered should be sentenced. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to make a sentencing recommendation (such as the death penalty instead of life in prison or vice versa) in his or her impact statement?

I do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. Indeed, it is unclear that current law precludes such victim testimony. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

REV_00121639

Senator Dianne Feinstein

Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S.J. Res. 1,
the Victims' Rights Amendment
Written Question for Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh

1. At the hearing, there was some discussion about what would happen if S. J. Res. 1 was adopted and a victim's constitutional right came into conflict with a criminal defendant's constitutional right. First, I want to clarify that nothing in the amendment would take away defendants' rights. Section 1 of the amendment makes clear that victims' rights are capable of protection without denying defendants' constitutional rights. Second, in many instances, the basic procedural rights conferred by the amendment would have little, if any, impact on defendants' rights. For example, is hard to see how a defendant could plausibly object to providing notice to victims about the date and location of public proceedings involving the crime. Third, the amendment qualifies many of the victims' rights to ensure that courts limit them appropriately. For instance, under the amendment, victims would have no constitutional right to be heard at trial and, at other public proceedings involving the crime, victims would have only a right "reasonably" to be heard. Fourth, the amendment provides three specific exceptions to restrict victims' rights: 1) a substantial interest in public safety; 2) a substantial interest in the administration of criminal justice; and 3) compelling necessity.

I would like to clarify one point about the administration of criminal justice exception. In responses to me and to Senator Durbin at the hearing, you suggested that the administration of criminal justice exception would allow courts faced with a conflict between a defendant's constitutional right and a victim's constitutional right to balance these rights and decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument.

I agree with that response. However, to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to make clear that defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception. Let me offer some examples of how that could happen. If a victim sat in the courtroom and tried to disrupt the proceeding by yelling at the defendant, this would adversely affect the administration of criminal justice. To ensure that the defendant received his or her constitutional right to a fair trial, the judge could have the victim removed (and even pursue other actions against the victim, such as holding the victim in contempt). If the same victim threatened bodily harm to the defendant or judge, that would also implicate public safety as well as violate the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. The judge could, at a minimum, force the victim to leave under the public safety exception. If the victim was horribly maimed by the crime and insisted on sitting immediately in front of the jury, the judge could determine that compelling necessity dictated that the victim not be allowed to be present during the trial.

Obviously, I do not intend these examples to be exhaustive. However, I do think that they illustrate some of the variety of ways in which the amendment would ensure the protection of defendants' constitutional rights consistent with the existence of victims' constitutional rights. These ways would always depend heavily on the underlying context in which the rights came into conflict and the weight of the defendant's and victim's respective interests. Similar balancing is done in other situations where constitutional rights conflict–for example, where the media's First Amendment right to cover a trial conflicts with a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial.

a) Do you agree that criminal defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception?

Yes.

b) Assuming that you answer yes to question 1(a), do you agree that, if a victim's constitutional right conflicted with a defendant's constitutional right, the judge would then–applying applicable precedent–balance (or otherwise reconcile) these rights and then decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument?

Yes. We believe that by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries to define the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

The campaign would like to know how we should handle the corporate plane approval process. Do we want a new form created to give the information for vetting, or do you want to handle on a case-by-case basis via email?

Once a person or entity has been approved, can we use them on a going forward basis w/o going through approval again? For example, Brett gave approval to use Warren Tichenor's corporate plane for TX travel for upcoming BC'04 events. Can we consider Warren's plane pre-approved for future WH staff, or do you want to go through the approval process again using forms or email?

Subject:	6/12 CongressDaily AM on Sensenbrenner and other amendments to class action bill (HR1115) to be voted on today in House & outlook in Senate

On Class Action, House Borrows From Senate

House Judiciary Chairman Sensenbrenner will introduce a compromise amendment to the House class action bill that supporters hope will awaken Democratic support when the legislation goes to the floor for a vote today.

Sensenbrenner's amendment borrows language from a compromise amendment by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., to the Senate class action bill that was approved during an April markup.

The Feinstein amendment was instrumental in drawing Democratic support for the Senate bill, and supporters in the House hope it has the same effect there, while resolving differences in legislation before both chambers.

Sensenbrenner's amendment is cosponsored by Reps. Bob Goodlatte, R-Va., Rick Boucher and James Moran, both D-Va., Calvin Dooley, D-Calif., Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, and Lee Terry, R-Neb.

The amendment would increase the number of class action cases that remain in state courts in two ways. First, it would raise the amount of damages needed for federal court jurisdiction from $2 million to $5 million. Second, if less than one-third of the plaintiffs are from the same state, the case is automatically eligible for federal jurisdiction. If more than two-thirds of the plaintiffs are from the same state, its stays in the state. When the number of plaintiffs falls between the two, federal judges must weigh five factors to consider whether or not to return the case to the states.

Other amendments approved by the House Rules Committee Wednesday include a substitute amendment by House Judiciary ranking member John Conyers, D-Mich., and Rep. Max Sandlin , D-Texas. It includes new language for so-called coupon settlements, court approval of settlements, sealing of class action documents and interlocutory appeals.

The Conyers-Sandlin amendment also would enact widely publicized United States Judicial Conference recommendations and create a "state court multidistrict litigation panel" to consolidate interstate class actions. The National Center for State Courts would develop rules for the panel to transfer cases to federal court.

An amendment by Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, D-Texas, would block U.S. companies from escaping class action liability by merging with foreign companies. An amendment by California Democratic Reps. Zoe Lofgren and Linda Sanchez would protect their state's "17-200" consumer protection laws.

Other amendments strike "interlocutory appeal" provisions and "retroactivity" provisions and require a unanimous jury verdict for awarding punitive damages.

The bill has been the subject of intense lobbying by both the business and the public interest communities. Based on disclosure records, Public Citizen, an opponent of the legislation, reports today that more than 100 companies and trade groups have retained 475 lobbyists since 2000 in support of reforming class action laws.

Meanwhile, vote-counting has begun on the Senate bill by Judiciary Chairman Hatch . Supporters are seeking 60 votes to head off a likely filibuster by Democrats. According to sources, the bill will come up for a vote after the July Fourth recess, but before the August recess.

Supporters now claim 57 votes in favor, including 50 Republican votes. According to sources, Sen. Richard Shelby , R-Ala., will not join colleagues to vote in support of the bill or cloture. Shelby's spokeswoman said he has not taken a position, but sources said that, based on his past voting record, sponsors "aren't counting on him."

Six Senate Democrats have publicly committed their support. Among them are the bill's original cosponsors, Sens. Herb Kohl of Wisconsin, Thomas Carper of Delaware and Zell Miller of Georgia. Feinstein backed the bill in April with her compromise amendment, and Sens. Blanche Lincoln of Arkansas and Mary Landrieu of Louisiana have followed.

Another "mystery" Democrat has privately pledged support, but will not go public until the vote. In addition, supporters maintain they are "confident" of votes from two or three additional Democrats. One such Democrat is Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska.

"The senator will likely support the bill if he's convinced legitimate lawsuits will be protected," a Carper spokesman told CongressDaily . "He supports most of the bill, and is pleased with the consumer protection provisions. But he wants to make sure it protects the rights of plaintiffs with legitimate concerns." By Ted Leventhal

Subject: Use of Corporate Planes

The campaign would like to know how we should handle the corporate plane approval process. Do we want a new form created to give the information for vetting, or do you want to handle on a case-by-case basis via email?

Once a person or entity has been approved, can we use them on a going forward basis w/o going through approval again? For example, Brett gave approval to use Warren Tichenor's corporate plane for TX travel for upcoming BC'04 events. Can we consider Warren's plane pre-approved for future WH staff, or do you want to go through the approval process again using forms or email?

Let me know your thoughts.

Brett,

Attached are Justice Qs and As following an April 8th hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on S.J.Res 1. These Qs and As are addressed to Viet Dinh. Justice would like to have their Qs and As cleared by tomorrow so they could submit them for tomorrow's markup that is scheduled before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitution, Civil Rights and Property Rights Subcommittee. These Qs and As are 15 pages long.

I have not circulated them yet for clearance. Could you let me know if you could review these by tomorrow afternoon or if you would need more than just a day to review them. Thank you.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS FOR
HEARING ON S.J. RES. 1, A PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CRIME VICTIMS
APRIL 8, 2003

Questions by Senator Leahy for Viet Dinh

1. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that constitutional amendments should be reserved for "certain great and extraordinary occasions."

(A) Do you agree with this standard?

Yes.

(B) Is there anything in our current Constitution that inhibits the enactment of State or Federal laws that protect crime victims?

Nothing in the Constitution specifically inhibits the enactment of statutes to protect crime victims. However, although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained in this amendment, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's constitutional rights. Furthermore, statutes would not address two critical issues that necessitate a constitutional amendment, i.e., uniform implementation of rights, and establishing standing for victims to assert these rights in court.

(C) Please identify any appellate decisions of which you are aware that were not eventually reversed in which a State of Federal victims' rights law was not given effect because of a defendant's right in the U.S. Constitution.

Two specific examples where State victims' constitutional rights were not given effect because of a defendant's rights under the U.S. Constitution are:

State ex rel. Romley v. Superior Court, 836 P.2d 445, 453, (Ariz. Ct. App. 1992), in which the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that a victim's State constitutional right must yield to a defendant's Federal and State constitutional right to due process. This case involved a State constitutional right that precludes the trial court from compelling disclosure of the victim's medical records. The defendant argued that the statute violated her due process rights because without the information, she could not mount an adequate defense or conduct adequate cross-examination of witnesses. The Arizona Court of Appeals ruled that the defendant's Federal and State due process right trumped the victim's State constitutional right.

Martinez v. State of Florida, 664 So.2d 1034 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996), where the defendant was convicted of attempted manslaughter with a firearm and appealed on several grounds, including that the court erred in giving priority to the constitutional right of a victim to be present in the courtroom over the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial by having the witnesses sequestered. Despite the Florida State victims' rights amendment, the court, citing Gore v. State of Florida, agreed with the defendant and stated that the victims should not have been permitted in the courtroom during opening statements. However, the court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that the error in this particular case was harmless.

2. If Congress enacted spending power-based legislation to get every state to implement a uniform national standard of victims rights, what would remain to be done that only a constitutional amendment could accomplish?

Although such legislation would do away with one of the main concerns with statutory remedies, the need for uniformity, it would not accomplish the same goals as a constitutional amendment. As stated previously, in my view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused person's rights under the U.S. Constitution. Unfortunately, this is often the case even where a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights because courts often will not reach the threshold question of whether the two sets of rights are truly in conflict. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998 entitled The Rights of Crime Victims – Does Legal Protection Make a Difference?, which after surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."

3. Section 1 of the proposed amendment states: "The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied." If a judge concludes that there is indeed a conflict between a victim's rights and the constitutional rights of the accused, would section 1 require the judge to discard that legal conclusion and uphold the right of the accused?

As Assistant Attorney General Dinh stated during the hearing, it would be very difficult for me to speculate how this amendment will be interpreted and how judges will decide cases in particular instances. However, we do believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge the ability to protect the interests and rights of criminal defendants. For example, by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries defining the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case.

4. Four of the current amendments to the Constitution – the 14th, 15th, 24th, and 26th – recognize a distinction between the complete "denial" or rights and the "abridgement" of them. Similarly, section 1 of the proposed amendment refers to rights being both "denied" and "restricted." Does the assurance that the constitutional rights of the accused will not be "denied" mean that a judge is free to "restrict" those rights in ways that the Constitution might not otherwise allow if doing so will make it easier to accommodate the rights of victims?

As stated in response to Question 3, we believe that the amendment allows sufficient flexibility to afford a judge in a particular case the ability to protect the interests and rights of a criminal defendant. In cases where there is a tension between the rights of victims and the rights of defendants, courts will rule in favor of the party with the more compelling legal argument.

5. I think we would both agree that in a mass-victim case, the court should not be required to allow each of the potentially thousands of victims to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing – meaning that there are some cases when it might be entirely reasonable to deny some victims the right to be heard. But given that the rights conferred by proposed amendment belong to each individual victim, and that the text of the amendment allows a victim's participatory rights to be "restricted" in limited circumstances but never "denied," how would it be possible for courts to allow the kind of flexibility we need without completely ignoring the obvious difference between a "restriction" and a "denial?"

It is my understanding that the amendment as drafted does not grant a victim the absolute right to speak at a bail or sentencing hearing. The amendment instead grants victims the right "reasonably to be heard" at specified public proceedings. The "reasonably to be heard" guarantee can be accomplished by allowing a victim to communicate his or her views to the court either orally or in writing. Such a decision would be at the court's discretion. In addition, we disagree that the language of the amendment does not allow for exceptions to the right "reasonably to be heard." Indeed, the text of the amendment itself explicitly allows for such exceptions. In other contexts, it has been left up to the courts to determine the boundaries of certain rights, for example when the press' First Amendment rights are pitted against a defendant's right to a fair trial. However, the last clause of section 2, which reads "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity," clearly allows for exceptions by employing a two-tiered approach – the lower standard of substantial interest is used when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of criminal justice, while a higher standard of compelling necessity is used for other possible justifications.

6. Under section 2 of the proposed amendment, a crime victim has "the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime." Please explain how this provision would apply in multi-victim cases. For example, suppose that one victim of a multi-victim offense files a civil tort action against the offender for damages resulting from the criminal conduct. That action would be "a public proceeding involving the crime," even though the prosecutor may have no knowledge of it. Who would have the constitutional obligation to provide "reasonable and timely notice" to the other victims?

I do not believe that the amendment as written grants victims the right to be informed of civil actions and therefore there is no attendant constitutional obligation to provide reasonable and timely notice in such cases.

7. Section 3 of the proposed amendment states that "[o]nly the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." If a defendant raises an objection to having an indigent victim speak at a proceeding, who would handle the litigation on behalf of the victim? I assume the prosecutor would gladly do so for a victim who could not afford to hire counsel, but under section 3, would that be permissible? Would the prosecutor have the right or the duty to make what she believed to be a better argument on behalf of a represented victim?

Although presumably Congress and/or state legislatures could enact legislation that establishes a framework by which indigent victims can receive representation, we do not think that section 3 precludes a prosecutor from asserting the rights of victims. The relevant clause in section 3 to which we believe you refer reads "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article...." This clause confers standing to assert the rights, something that mere legislation has been unable to do. However, although it is the victim or his or her representative who has standing, presumably any attorney could go before the court on his or her behalf.

8. Section 3 of the proposed amendment forbids granting a new trial as a remedy for the violation of a victim's rights, but does not forbid re-opening the sentencing proceeding. (A) If a prosecutor fails to notify a victim of the sentencing hearing, can the victim obtain a new sentencing hearing after sentence has been imposed? (B) If the victim persuades the judge at such a hearing to impose a longer prison term or order greater restitution, would that constitute a denial of the accused's Fifth Amendment right to be protected against Double Jeopardy?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 provides grounds for invalidating a sentence nor would it allow a new sentencing hearing. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case or any proceeding thereof.

9. At the sentencing phase of a capital case, there are normally two parties – the government and the defendant – that call witnesses in an effort to provide as factual matters aggravating and mitigating factors that support either a death sentence or a lesser punishment. As a matter of due process, none of those witnesses is allowed to make an argument as to what the sentence should be; such arguments are reserved for counsel at the end of the phase. Would the proposed amendment give qualifying victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death?

Although we are not entirely sure that due process necessarily disallows witnesses from arguing in favor of a proper sentence, we do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

10. Given that earlier versions of S.J. Res. 1 contained explicit language prohibiting a court from staying or continuing a trial once it is underway, language that has been discarded in the current bill, what would prevent an appellate court from doing just that to prevent further potential violations of a victim's participatory rights while an interlocutory appeal was pending?

I do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 could be construed to provide grounds to stay trials, reopen proceedings, or invalidate rulings. Although it remains to be seen how courts will interpret the amendment and make determinations given specific fact patterns, the Department believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to delay criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding). Remedies for violation of rights specified in the proposed amendment should be separate from the outcome of the case.

11. To what extent are the rights described in the proposed amendment self-executing?

REV_00121670

Please identify any specific rights that (A) would not require implementing legislation, or (B) would be immune from limiting legislation.

(A) Although the Department welcomes any appropriate implementing legislation, we believe that the entire amendment is self-executing, and therefore the rights are enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to clearly define those situations where the amendment will apply in order to minimize the difficulties that could arise if federal, state and local prosecutors were unable to determine their proper response in certain situations.

(B) The second sentence in section 4, which reads "Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons," prevents Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons . The Department believes that the President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

Follow-Up Questions for Assistance Attorney General Viet Dinh
Regarding a proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims (S.J. Res. 1)

Senator Richard J. Durbin
April 29, 2003

Question 1

a.) Do you believe this presumption is true? In other words, would S.J. Res. 1 deny any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be denied?

I do believe that this presumption is true. The rights granted by the proposed amendment are not intended to operate in conflict with those rights granted to defendants under the Constitution and as enunciated by the Supreme Court, but rather are intended to operate in parallel with those rights. We do not support the proposition that the amendment, as drafted, denies any rights of the accused.

b.) Do you believe S.J. Res 1 diminishes any rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution? If so, which rights and how would they be diminished?

No, we do not believe that S.J. Res. 1 as drafted diminishes any rights of the accused. If a conflict were to arise, it would ultimately be up to the Courts to delineate the boundaries of the rights and to accommodate both to the greatest extent possible.

If not, can you explain why S.J. Res. 1 would not deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury, specifically in cases where the victim is a witness in a case? In such cases, do you believe the victim would be excluded from the proceedings under the exception created by a "substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice" or do you believe the victim would be allowed to attend the proceedings?

Allowing a victim to be present during a trial, simply because he or she is an intended witness, would not necessarily deny or diminish the right to an impartial jury. Ultimately, based on the facts of the case, it would be up to the court to determine if indeed a defendant's right to an impartial jury would be implicated by granting a victim a right not to be excluded from the proceedings. Indeed, courts make similar determinations in many contexts and are able to harmonize rights that some may argue are in conflict. For example, courts are often called upon to accommodate the right of the press and the public to attend trials and to reconcile these rights with the rights of a defendant to a fair trial.

Question 2

In the 105th Congress, when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered another version of this amendment, I offered an amendment that said "Nothing in this article shall be construed to deny or diminish the rights of the accused as guaranteed by this Constitution."

Would you object to the adoption of similar language to S.J. Res. 1? Why or why not?

I believe that the language you suggested would be detrimental to the intended purpose of the amendment. The inclusion of such language would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of victims' rights, where a court would not need to consider the relationship between the rights of victims and the rights of the accused, but rather would protect the latter to the detriment of the former.

Do you believe this language is consistent with your conclusions in responding to Question 1?

While we do believe that this language is consistent with my conclusion in Question 1, we do not necessarily believe that it would be consistent with the intent of the amendment – to require courts to give consideration to the rights of victims in the criminal justice system. Because its inclusion would make the amendment similar to a legislative grant of rights, courts would not be required to reach the threshold question of whether a victim's right truly conflicts with a right of the defendant.

Question 3

Section 3 states: "Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article." However, this amendment does not define "victim." I understand your position that Congress will likely be responsible for defining this term. Please provide guidance for Congress in addressing the following hypothetical possibilities:

a.) Someone is murdered. Is the deceased the only victim of the crime? What about the spouse? Significant others? Domestic partner? Parents? Children?

b.) A child is kidnaped and recovered. Is the child the victim? Or the parents?

c.) A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, is brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. Who is the victim with Constitutional rights?

REV_00121673

If the amendment is adopted, the courts presumably will develop a body of jurisprudence that will more precisely define the term "victim," and the corresponding reach of Congressional authority to refine that definition. However, we believe that in the case of a murdered person, it would be appropriate to allow the victim's rights to be exercised by a surviving family member or other appropriate representative, and am confident that courts will agree with this conclusion. In the case of a minor victim, such as in the kidnaping context, it should again be an appropriate representative that will exercise the victim's rights. As for situations involving domestic violence, it may very well be that the accused batterer technically meets any developed definition of a victim. However, the amendment currently contains exception language which reads: "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." In domestic violence cases, where the true victim of the abusive relationship may actually be the defendant in a particular case and the abuser may be the victim, a judge may well decide that a substantial interest in public safety, or one of the other grounds for an exception, exists so as to preclude the abusive "victim" from exercising the given rights.

Question 4

S.J. Res. 1 also does not define "the victim's lawful representative" or explain how such a person should be chosen. In the hypothetical situation involving a murder victim, what would happen if both the spouse and the father of the deceased wanted to be the "lawful representative?" Who do you propose should make that determination? A judge? The prosecutor? What if the party who was not selected wants to appeal this decision?

It would be up to the courts to determine, on a case-by-case basis, who the victim's lawful representative should be.

Question 5

In your statement, you wrote, "By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims."

This assumes that violent crime has more detrimental effects on its victims. What about the victim of a misdemeanor assault? Is that person more worthy of Constitutional rights than an elderly widow has been swindled out of her life savings?

I do not believe that it would be correct to state that one type of victim is more or less worthy of Constitutional rights. However, those affected by violent crime often have not only a pecuniary loss as a result of the crime, but also suffer physically and psychologically.

In addition, it is important to note that the proposed amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime. Some states have already extended statutory victims' rights to victims of other types of crime and the amendment in no way restricts such rights. Furthermore, the states and the federal government are free to broaden statutory protections for these other types of crime and it is my belief that by passing S.J. Res. 1, more attention will be focused on the plight of all victims, and perhaps other protections will be examined and possibly broadened.

Should the court examine the detrimental effects of each crime before determining whether the victim has Constitutional rights?

When dealing with a constitutional amendment, there are always going to be situations where it will be impossible to determine just what the courts will do when interpreting the boundaries of the amendment. Other amendments to the Constitution have undergone many of years of review and interpretation and we therefore have developed a jurisprudence that better equips us to determine what the most likely, and proper outcome will be. Although recognizing that one-hundred percent certainty is an impossibility, we do believe that the sponsors of this amendment have strived to reduce the situations where uncertainty could exist. By requiring courts to examine the detrimental effect of each crime before determining whether the victim has constitutional rights, we believe that it would invite even more uncertainty which would increase the difficulties that could arise if federal, state, and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain circumstances.

Question 6

In your statement, you wrote, "Our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals." In California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted – withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. However, at the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

Do you believe that the rights of victims in this case burdened the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case?

Although we would not feel comfortable stating unequivocally that the victims' rights did or did not burden the prosecutor's ability to prosecute the case without knowing the particular circumstances and having all of the facts before me, we do believe that the facts that you have cited led to an unfortunate result in this particular case. However, we think that even the opponents of the victims' rights amendment concede that overall prosecutorial efforts are more, not less, effective when victims are regularly consulted during the course of a case.

How would the language of S.J. Res. 1 avert a similar outcome in other criminal prosecutions?

REV_00121675

The proposed language of S.J. Res. 1 allows victims the right reasonably to be heard and to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety. However, it does not allow a victim the right to preclude plea bargains. Judges will be called upon to consider the rights of the defendant, the rights of the victim, and the pursuit of justice, and they will make determinations on a case-by-case basis.

Question 7

In your statement, you wrote, "The Department fully supports Section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by Congress." I believe we should not amend the Constitution – which has served us well for over 200 years – casually.

If you think the "intent and circumstances" leading us to amend the Constitution may change in as few as seven years, is this not an argument for a statutory and not a constitutional approach to protecting victims?

I do not believe that it is. A number of amendments to the Constitution contain such a clause – the 18th, 20th, 21st, and the 22nd Amendments. The purpose of such a clause is to preclude the type of situation like that encountered with the ratification of the 27th Amendment, which was originally proposed in 1789 but not ratified by the requisite number of state legislatures until 1992. We believe that the experience of the 27th Amendment, which remained in constitutional limbo for over 200 years, has led the Congress to include such a clause in a substantial number of proposed constitutional amendments over the last two decades. For example, amendments proposed in the last few years which have contained such a time limitation include those to ban flag burning and to limit campaign expenditures introduced recently in the 108th Congress; to repeal the 22nd Amendment and to provide for a balanced budget introduced in the 107th Congress; and an amendment to provide for Congressional term limits and your amendment to abolish the electoral college introduced in the 106th Congress.

Question 8

In Ms. Earlene Eason's testimony, she wrote of her frustration that the DA would not ask for a continuance on her behalf so she could attend the sentencing of the person who pled guilty to murdering her son. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to seek a continuance? If so, under what circumstances? How would this be reconciled with the Constitutional right to a speedy trial?

I do not believe that the amendment as drafted allows a victim an absolute right to a continuance. The amendment grants a victim the right not to be excluded from a public proceeding and the right reasonably to be heard at a public sentencing hearing. First, the right not to be excluded is not tantamount to a right to be present, i.e., the court does not need to accommodate the victim's right to be there, it simply cannot exclude him or her from the proceeding. Second, the right reasonably to be heard does not necessarily have to entail the victim's presence, a victim could be afforded the right to be heard in writing rather than orally. However, courts may well decide, on a case-by-case basis, that a continuance would not adversely affect the proceedings and therefore order a continuance so that the victim's right under the amendment can be fully realized.

There are numerous scenarios where the defendant's right to a speedy trial would in no way be implicated by a continuance issued so as to allow the victim to be present. This would be the case when the continuance sought was a mere matter of days, or even longer. The Supreme Court has stated that the right to a speedy trial does not preclude delays and has identified four factors that should be considered when making determinations in this context: the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972). In addition, the Court stated that "until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance." Id. at 530. Under this analysis, depending on the length of the delay a continuance may cause, it is entirely possible that the defendant's right to a speedy trial will in no way be implicated.

Question 9

In Mr. Duane Lynn's testimony, he expressed his frustration that he could not comment on how his wife's murdered should be sentenced. Do you believe S.J. Res. 1 would allow a victim to make a sentencing recommendation (such as the death penalty instead of life in prison or vice versa) in his or her impact statement?

I do believe that a court could decide that under the proposed amendment a victim has the right to offer his or her opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death. Indeed, it is unclear that current law precludes such victim testimony. In Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), the Supreme Court ruled that the Eighth Amendment does not erect a per se bar to the admission of victim impact evidence in capital cases. In so doing, the Court overruled two of its prior precedents, Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), in which the Court ruled that victim impact evidence relating to the personal characteristics of the victim and the emotional impact of the crimes on the victim's family were barred, and South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805 (1989), which ruled that a prosecutor could not argue to the jury the human cost of the crime during the sentencing phase of a capital case. However, the Supreme Court has not ruled on whether victim impact statements can include a sentencing recommendation and it is unclear, based on the Court's prior rulings, that it would decide that such recommendations are per se unconstitutional. In Oklahoma, victims are allowed to give opinions of a recommended sentence. See OKLA. STAT. ANN. § 984. In ruling on a due process challenge to victim impact testimony that included a recommendation for the death penalty in a capital case, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that such opinion testimony is permissible and articulated the proper standard of review: "evidence by victim impact witnesses that the defendant deserves death is admissible but will be viewed by this Court with a heightened degree of scrutiny." Conover v. State of Oklahoma, 933 P.2d 904, 921 (Okla. Crim. App. 1997). Although the court found the particular opinion testimony given in this case to have been more prejudicial than probative, it ruled that "there was nothing improper in the opinions given by the three witnesses in this case that the death penalty was the appropriate sentence . . . . However, this type of evidence should be limited to a simple statement of the recommended sentence without amplification." Id. at 921.

Ultimately, it will be up to the courts to decide whether or not the amendment grants victims the right to offer their opinion as to whether the defendant should be sentenced to life or death, but we do believe that it is entirely consistent with the right "reasonably to be heard" to allow victims the right to give a sentencing recommendation. As in other contexts, the courts will have to examine this right in light of a defendant's constitutional rights and define the application of the competing rights or balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

REV_00121678

Senator Dianne Feinstein

Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S.J. Res. 1,
the Victims' Rights Amendment
Written Question for Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh

1. At the hearing, there was some discussion about what would happen if S. J. Res. 1 was adopted and a victim's constitutional right came into conflict with a criminal defendant's constitutional right. First, I want to clarify that nothing in the amendment would take away defendants' rights. Section 1 of the amendment makes clear that victims' rights are capable of protection without denying defendants' constitutional rights. Second, in many instances, the basic procedural rights conferred by the amendment would have little, if any, impact on defendants' rights. For example, is hard to see how a defendant could plausibly object to providing notice to victims about the date and location of public proceedings involving the crime. Third, the amendment qualifies many of the victims' rights to ensure that courts limit them appropriately. For instance, under the amendment, victims would have no constitutional right to be heard at trial and, at other public proceedings involving the crime, victims would have only a right "reasonably" to be heard. Fourth, the amendment provides three specific exceptions to restrict victims' rights: 1) a substantial interest in public safety; 2) a substantial interest in the administration of criminal justice; and 3) compelling necessity.

I would like to clarify one point about the administration of criminal justice exception. In responses to me and to Senator Durbin at the hearing, you suggested that the administration of criminal justice exception would allow courts faced with a conflict between a defendant's constitutional right and a victim's constitutional right to balance these rights and decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument.

I agree with that response. However, to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to make clear that defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception. Let me offer some examples of how that could happen. If a victim sat in the courtroom and tried to disrupt the proceeding by yelling at the defendant, this would adversely affect the administration of criminal justice. To ensure that the defendant received his or her constitutional right to a fair trial, the judge could have the victim removed (and even pursue other actions against the victim, such as holding the victim in contempt). If the same victim threatened bodily harm to the defendant or judge, that would also implicate public safety as well as violate the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. The judge could, at a minimum, force the victim to leave under the public safety exception. If the victim was horribly maimed by the crime and insisted on sitting immediately in front of the jury, the judge could determine that compelling necessity dictated that the victim not be allowed to be present during the trial.

Obviously, I do not intend these examples to be exhaustive. However, I do think that they illustrate some of the variety of ways in which the amendment would ensure the protection of defendants' constitutional rights consistent with the existence of victims' constitutional rights. These ways would always depend heavily on the underlying context in which the rights came into conflict and the weight of the defendant's and victim's respective interests. Similar balancing is done in other situations where constitutional rights conflict–for example, where the media's First Amendment right to cover a trial conflicts with a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial.

a) Do you agree that criminal defendants' rights could come under any one (or more) of the three exceptions in Section 2 of the amendment, not just the administration of criminal justice exception?

Yes.

b) Assuming that you answer yes to question 1(a), do you agree that, if a victim's constitutional right conflicted with a defendant's constitutional right, the judge would then–applying applicable precedent–balance (or otherwise reconcile) these rights and then decide in favor of the person with the more compelling argument?

Yes. We believe that by allowing for restrictions when there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity, the amendment would allow the courts either to articulate boundaries to define the application of competing rights or to balance the competing rights in a particular case and rule in favor of the party with the more compelling argument.

We should create a form e-mail for this. And I should approve each individual trip where the campaign has secured a private plane and intends to provide transportation to a government official on that plane. Thanks.

The campaign would like to know how we should handle the corporate plane approval process. Do we want a new form created to give the information for vetting, or do you want to handle on a case-by-case basis via email?

Once a person or entity has been approved, can we use them on a going forward basis w/o going through approval again? For example, Brett gave approval to use Warren Tichenor's corporate plane for TX travel for upcoming BC'04 events. Can we consider Warren's plane pre-approved for future WH staff, or do you want to go through the approval process again using forms or email?

Let me know your thoughts.

Although smaller and less prominent, the Hudson Institute has carved out a niche for itself, not only by placing its scholars in the administration but also by driving a few issues important to the administration and even in some cases helping write and pass bills over its objections.

Hudson's ideas to reform tort law have made their way into bills that reached the floor of the Senate, and White House officials Brett Kavanaugh, Jay Lefkowitz and Phil Perry have all shown interest in the ideas.

Bush also drew on Hudson's work on the persecution of evangelical Christians around the world and sexual slavery in Eastern Europe to devise a part of his foreign policy — both over the objections of the Clinton administration.

But over objections of some in the White House and Justice Department, Senate aides said, Hudson's Horowitz played a crucial role in drafting legislation and assembling a bipartisan coalition that makes passage of a prison-rape bill likely.

KEY POINTS: MIDDLE EAST***
From the President's remarks in Chicago, 6/11/03

President Bush condemned Wednesday's bus bombing in Jerusalem. The militant Islamic group Hamas claimed responsibility for the attack, which killed at least 16 people and injured more than 30.

-It is clear there are people in the Middle East who hate peace; who want to kill to make sure peace doesn't happen.

-It is clear that there are people who kill to make sure the desires of the Prime Minister of the Palestinian Authority and others of a peaceful state, living side-by-side with Israel, do not happen.

-President Bush urges nations that want to see peace in the Middle East to fight terror, cut off money from organizations like Hamas and to isolate those who are willing to kill to stop peace from happening.

-President Bush is calling upon all of the free world and peace-loving nations to not only condemn the killings, but to use their power to prevent them in the future.

The initiative is intended to:
*Prevent 7 million new infections
*Treat 2 million HIV-infected people
*Care for 10 million HIV-infected individuals and AIDS orphans

The plan's implementation will:
*Involve a layered network of medical centers that support satellite

Setting the Record Straight

An open letter to Hillary Clinton.

By Dick Morris

ear Hillary,

In your new book, Living History, you correctly note that when you asked me to help you and Bill avert defeat in the congressional election of 1994 I was reluctant to do so. But then you assert, incorrectly, that my reluctance stemmed from difficulties in working with your staff. You even misquote me as telling you: "I don't like the way I was treated, Hillary. People were so mean to me."

As you know, I never said anything of the sort. I had, in fact, no experience in dealing with either your staff or the President's at that point, and had not yet met Leon Panetta or George Stephanopoulos. My prior dealing with Harold Ickes had been twenty five years earlier.

The real reason I was reluctant was that Bill Clinton had tried to beat me up in May of 1990 as he, you, Gloria Cabe, and I were together in the Arkansas governor's mansion. At the time, Bill was worried that he was falling behind his democratic primary opponent and verbally assaulted me for not giving his campaign the time he felt it deserved. Offended by his harsh tone, I turned and stalked out of the room.

Bill ran after me, tackled me, threw me to the floor of the kitchen in the mansion and cocked his fist back to punch me. You grabbed his arm and, yelling at him to stop and get control of himself, pulled him off me. Then you walked me around the grounds of the mansion in the minutes after, with your arm around me, saying, "He only does that to people he loves."

I continued to work for Bill since I felt a responsibility to do so until Election Day in 1990. But our relationship was never close and never the same. After the 1990 campaign we parted ways as a direct result of the altercation.

When the story threatened to surface during the 1992 campaign, you told me to "say it never happened."

That, and not the invented conversation in your memoir, was the reason that I was reluctant to work for Bill again.

Yours,
Dick Morris

<http://www.newdem.org/images/email/ndn-header.jpg>

Today, class action reform passed the House of Representatives with the votes of 32 Democrats, a doubling of Democratic support from past years. We are proud to say that 22 of those Democratic votes came from members of the New Democrat Coalition, including Reps. Ed Case (HI), Jim Cooper (TN), Bud Cramer (AL), Cal Dooley (CA), Rahm Emanuel (IL), Harold Ford (TN), Jane Harman (CA), Baron Hill (IN), Chris John (LA), Rick Larsen (WA), John Larson (CT), Ken Lucas (KY), Denise Majette (GA), Jim Matheson (UT), Karen McCarthy (NY), Michael Michaud (ME), Dennis Moore (KS), Jim Moran (VA), David Scott (GA), Charles Stenholm (TX), John Tanner (MS), and Jim Turner (TX).

A special word of congratulations must go to Reps. Boucher, Dooley, and Moran who have been working hard on this issue for so long.

Congratulations all!

Subject: Another Question

I know you are getting slammed with questions right now, I promise we will get this after the first trip, but.....

Noelia Rodriguez, our Press Secretary, will be traveling on both of our first stops.

Trip #1: In Chattanooga, she will be with the First Lady the entire trip.

Trip #2: She will fly to PA with the First Lady and attend all events, fly to Cincinnati and attend only the official event, and fly home commercially. I noticed that the President's Press Secretary (on a memo from you) is considered an "official" traveler. Is Noelia considered an "official traveler regardless of the nature of the trip"? If no, what will her flight home from OH be classified as?

Thank you for all of your help and guidance.

Also, I want to speak with you about the Staff Room and the Countdown Room. I'm thinking both these rooms can be paid for out of the WHO budget verses the campaign. Also, what about the downtime suite for the President?

We have added a downtime suite for the President in New York. The cost is $500.00. When he has downtime, we always get a Precor eliptical trainer in the room for his work out. Can't that be paid by the WH instead of the campaign?

No problem. Although this makes it a little more difficult, we will assess the Press Secretary to the First Lady on a case-by-case basis based on the Press Secretary's role on the trip and the nature of the trip. On the trips described below, she should be treated as an official traveler.

Pryor says his beliefs won't interfere with law

06/12/03

MARY ORNDORFF

News Washington correspondent

WASHINGTON Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor told senators Wednesday that he could discard his history of strong personal opinions and political agendas to become a fair and objective judge, a statement Republicans cheered and Democrats doubted.

"My record as attorney general shows that I am able to put aside my beliefs and follow the law," Pryor said. "It is my duty."

They were his first public comments since President Bush nominated him in April to a lifetime slot on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, a post that requires the blessing of the U.S. Senate.

Pryor's four-plus hours before the Senate Judiciary Committee were less contentious than his supporters had expected. But Democrats, while they applauded Pryor's candor, grilled him about everything from his stated position that abortion is murder to his distaste for federal government reaching into state issues.

"I believe a judge can be pro-life yet be fair, balanced, and uphold a woman's right to choose," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-NY. "But based on the comments Attorney General Pryor has made on this subject, I've got some real concerns that he cannot, because he feels these views so deeply and passionately."

The hearing's tempo swung like a pendulum. Republicans heaped praise on Pryor as he leaned back in his chair and sipped water. But the more interrogating Democrats took turns sending him to the edge of his seat to defend himself, sometimes at higher volume, against their pointed questions.

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wisconsin, debated Pryor on his record of raising campaign cash from corporations through a political group he created for Republican state attorneys general. Pryor said the contributions would not create a conflict of interest for prosecutors who might have to investigate those companies.

Feingold also asked Pryor why he decided to reschedule a family vacation to Disney World to avoid a planned gathering of homosexuals. Pryor said he and his wife, when their daughters were ages 6 and 4, "made a value judgment" and went another time.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., accused Pryor of "ducking" a question about a case involving the death penalty's application to the mentally retarded.

Pryor testified that he regretted only one of his published remarks, when he said Alabama's method of execution should not be a decision for the "octogenarians" on the Supreme Court.

Pryor's biggest defenders were the committee chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala.

Sessions, whose own nomination to the bench was killed several years ago by the same committee, beamed like a proud father. He hired Pryor into the state prosecutor's office in 1995.

"Bill is one of the good guys," Sessions said. "There is no extremism here."

Hatch was incredulous that opponents blasted Pryor's legal positions in cases ultimately won before the U.S. Supreme Court. "The ones outside the mainstream are these critics," Hatch said.

Pryor returned time and again to a set of examples of his defying his personal beliefs or bucking his supporters to make a legal argument in a case. He ordered local prosecutors in Alabama to enforce a ban on a late-term abortion method critics call partial-birth abortion only to the extent that would be upheld by the courts, and no further; he took the side of blacks and Democrats in a challenge to legislative district lines; and he disagreed with former Gov. Fob James and argued in support of student-led, but not school-led, prayer.

"Whatever my political philosophies might be ... I strive to follow the law," Pryor said.

Race and religion were undercurrents. There were multiple references to the 16th Street Baptist Church bombings and how Pryor aided the prosecution of the final two suspects. Sessions and other Republicans spoke frequently and highly of state Rep. Alvin Holmes, D-Montgomery, who endorsed Pryor's nomination. Hatch called Holmes "a great black leader."

There were no signs that the seven Democrats at Wednesday's hearing were swayed to vote for Pryor. One Republican, Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, asked Pryor for assurances that he would follow the precedents of the Supreme Court, especially Roe v. Wade. Pryor under earlier questioning had said he would follow the law on abortion. Specter, who is pro-choice, did not disclose whether he would support Pryor's nomination.

If the committee votes along party lines, in a meeting that is probably more than a week away, Pryor would be approved 10-9. Pryor's opponents are lobbying Democrats to filibuster Pryor's nomination on the Senate floor, a tactic employed against two other nominees.

In the end, Sessions declared Pryor had won the day. Democrats, who were limited to 10-minute sessions per senator, did not return for a second round of questions after a lunch break.

Tomorrow from 2 to 3 pm, in the Mansfield Room (S 207), we have arranged to host a powerful presentation to benefit all staffs on judicial issues this summer, both in speechwriting, correspondence and press. The information you will receive will not only benefit your work but should also be communicated to your senator. We will begin promptly.

At 2 pm, we will begin with a presentation of the Hispanic polling released just yesterday by pollster Raul Damas, especially useful to Senators in cycle.
At 2:15, pollster Frank Luntz will describe the results of his recent focus group on what works in communicating on judicial nominations.
At: 2:45, pollster Dave Winston, the official pollster of the Senate GOP, will present the latest polling on how the Senate GOP is doing with the American people.

The Luntz presentation features video of several GOP Senators and shows the immediate focus group results.

This is a rare and unprecedented opportunity for the staff. Your judiciary issues counsel, LA's/LC's, and communications team should attend.

Thanks,
Manuel Miranda

Of course, I remembered at about 10:30 last night that I was supposed to send you these summaries. This is not a good sign. My short-term memory has already failed and we haven't even gotten to the first political trip yet...

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

October 30, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR THE FILE

FROM: CATHY ALIX
SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

SUBJECT: THE PRESIDENT'S October 17, 2002 TRIP TO ATLANTA, GA / DAYTONA BEACH, FL

The following is a summary of the President's trip to Atlanta, GA / Daytona Beach, FL by the White House Management Office according to the President's schedule.

A) Trip Summary

On the morning of Thursday, October 14, 2002, the President departed the White House via Marine One en route Andrews Air Force Base where he boarded Air Force One and departed en route Atlanta, GA. Upon arrival, the President proceeded via motorcade to Atlanta Marriott Marquis Hotel where he participated in a Photo Opportunity and gave Remarks at Georgia 2002 Unity Luncheon. Upon conclusion, the President departed via motorcade en route Hartsfield International Airport where he returned to Air Force One. He then departed en route Daytona Beach, FL. The President then proceeded via motorcade to Read-Pattillo Elementary School where he participated in a Roundtable on Education, gave Remarks on Education, and gave Remarks Via Satellite to the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce National Convention. The President then departed via motorcade en route Kennedy Residence where he participated in a Photo Opportunity and made Remarks at Republican Party of Florida Reception. At the conclusion of the events, the President returned to Air Force One and departed en route Andrews Air Force Base. Upon arrival, the President then boarded Marine One en route The White House where he remained for the evening.

B) Cost Summary

Since this trip involved both official and political activity, the "hard time" formula will be used to divide the mixed costs (AF1, military aircraft, per diem, car rentals, and miscellaneous support) between the White House and the Republican National Committee. Attached are trip record sheets for each city with percentages determined by the "hard time". There is also a trip record sheet, which shows the overall percentages determined by the event "hard time" for the President's total activities during his travel. The overall percentage will be applied to the cost of AF1 and traveling party per diem.

Any costs, which are determined to be solely "official" or "political" in nature, will be paid accordingly.

C) Hard Time Breakout

	OFFICIAL	POLITICAL
Overall Trip Percentage	42%	58%
Atlanta, GA	0%	100%
Daytona Beach, FL	59%	41%
