Each year, White House staffers are invited to usher at the National Prayer Breakfast. This year it is at the Washington Hilton on February 6th. This allows White House staffers the opportunity to attend without prior sponsors or official invitations. If you are interested, please email the following information to Valerie Largent (valerie_largent@ensign.senate.gov) with a cc to

Thanks Kimberly. This memo looks great and will clarify things greatly for TPO staff. I will rely on you to perform the "checks" identified in the memo. I will tee up to my IT folks the need to make copies (of which I think they are already aware).

Ed -- So that there's no confusion, I would ask that you delete the line in your 1/22 draft memo from Gonzales that says "TPO and all other OMB staff should, obviously, consult with OMB counsel." Given that the OMB memo will go to all TPO folks, there's no need -- and it likely will create confusion -- to state affirmatively that people should consult. Thanks

MEMORANDUM TO OMB TPO STAFF

FROM: PHILIP J. PERRY, GENERAL COUNSEL

SUBJECT: TRANSFER AND HANDLING OF TPO RECORDS

This memorandum provides guidance to all personnel of the Transition Planning Office (TPO). It addresses all documents or email in TPO files, including those received from the White House. Please note that some sections apply to TPO employees who are transferring to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS), while other sections apply to TPO employees transferring to other agencies.

White House Documents (applies to all TPO employees):

When TPO was created, the White House Counsel's Office made special arrangements for handling documents from "White House" entities that were temporarily provided to TPO personnel. Those arrangements (addressed in depth in the attached memoranda) applied generally to emails and other documents from OHS and other White House entities. Pursuant to the attached memos, those materials should already bear the legend "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure."

Please return all such materials to the White House entity from which they originated by routing them through Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor [check].

Emails from White House entities will be automatically segregated by the Office of Administration [check].
You should not take copies of any materials from White House entities with you, unless you receive clearance to do so by Ed McNally, OHS GC.

If you have any questions regarding the treatment of materials from White House entities, please contact Ed McNally at 6-1700.

All other Documents (applies to TPO employees transferring to DHS):

· Documents or Email Created at TPO: You may take to DHS copies of any paper documents or email you created at TPO. However, you should make copies only of materials that you will need to perform your mission at DHS. You do not need to check with a lawyer before taking these copies. Keep in mind that the Office of Administration (OA) will be able to provide you access to your TPO materials even after your transfer to DHS.

· Documents Received from OMB: You may also take to DHS documents received from OMB, except for Director's Review Books, passback materials or other internal OMB deliberative material not typically shared with agencies. If you have any questions about the nature of OMB documents in your possession, please consult Kimberley Luczynski at 5-7870.

· Other Documents Received at TPO: Unless received from OHS or other White House entities, you are free to take copies to DHS.

When you depart for the new Department, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived. The appropriate contact at OA is Markus Most at 5-6471. Mr. Most will send, under separate cover, instructions regarding archiving your originals.

For TPO employees transferring to agencies other than DHS: You may not take copies of any TPO documents with you. As above, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived.

Treasury Nominee Snow Agrees to Divest CSX Holdings
2003-01-22 18:24 (New York)

Treasury Nominee Snow Agrees to Divest CSX Holdings

(Adds Snow pledge in third paragraph, officials' comments in sixth-seventh paragraphs, stock sales in 16th paragraph)

Washington, Jan. 22 (Bloomberg) -- U.S. Treasury Secretary-nominee John Snow agreed to sell his holdings in CSX Corp., the company he ran for more than a decade, to avoid conflict-of-interest accusations similar to those that dogged his predecessor Paul O'Neill.

Within 90 days of being confirmed as Treasury chief, Snow said, he would divest all of his shares in the No. 3 U.S. rail company, sell stock in 60 other companies and resign from the boards of companies including CarMax Inc. and Johnson & Johnson. Snow's assets may exceed $150 million, according to his financial disclosure report.

``I believe that these steps will ensure that I avoid even the appearance of conflict of interest in the performance of my duties,'' Snow said in a letter to Kenneth Schmalzbach, the Treasury's assistant general counsel.

Snow's pledge to dispose of his holdings comes six days before his Senate confirmation hearing and may fend off criticism from Democrats. Members of President George W. Bush's administration from former Treasury Secretary O'Neill to Vice President Dick Cheney encountered barbs for their financial ties to corporations at a time when accounting scandals at Enron Corp. and WorldCom Inc. have shaken investor confidence.

Snow also promised to disqualify himself ``from participation in any matter involving specific parties in which CSX is or represents a party for the duration of my tenure.''

Ethics Issues

Past Treasury secretaries have stayed within ethical and legal rulings by placing shares in blind trusts, keeping some stocks in businesses not affected by Treasury business and only recusing themselves from decisions involving former employers for a year. A government ethics official told reporters that Snow had gone beyond what is required by the ethics laws.

``John Snow is committed to the highest standard of ethical conduct," said Treasury spokesman Rob Nichols.

Snow's financial plans were released a day after he disclosed to the Senate Finance Committee, the panel reviewing his nomination, that he was arrested in 1982 on suspicion of drunken driving and was sued by his ex-wife in 1988 for failure to pay child support. The drunken driving charge was later dismissed, and he settled the child-support lawsuit in 1991.

The committee has scheduled a hearing Jan. 28 to consider Snow's nomination.

Snow had previously said he would surrender $5.6 million in stock and at least $4.5 million in severance that he could have received for leaving CSX for a government job. The proceeds from sales will be placed in assets not conflicted by his job, such as diversified mutual funds. Snow, for now the company's chairman and chief executive officer, has turned over day to day operations to company President Michael Ward.

CSX Holdings

Snow's CSX holdings consist of between $250,001 and $500,000 in a 401(k) plan that he said would be transferred into an individual retirement account.

Earnings in his previously deferred executive stock trust, valued between $5 million and $25 million, will be given to him as a cash payout. He also has an executive retirement plan worth between $25 million and $50 million, which he'll receive in a one-time payment should he be confirmed, according to the disclosure form.

His CSX stock options are valued between $5 million and $25 million. In the disclosure form, he said some of the options would be exercised and those that can't be will be forfeited.

CSX shares, which fell $1.87 to $26.85 at 4:16 p.m. New York time, are down 28 percent from a year ago.

Perks, Loans, Shares

Snow's disclosure form listed the value of some of the benefits he had while with CSX: $4,800 for car allowance; $45,870 for country club memberships; $4,977 for financial planning; and $20,625 for use of a company airplane.

He also disclosed a loan, secured by stock, of between $5 million and $25 million.

Snow also reported assets totaling between $119,006 and $375,000 in shares of Marathon Oil Corp., Bank of America Corp., Johnson & Johnson, Carmax Inc., Circuit City Stores Inc. and U.S. Steel Corp. He had stock holdings in 12 other companies, including WorldCom and Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia Inc., the values of which were too small to be reported. Those would also be sold, he said.

All told, stock and partnership holdings owned by Snow alone or with his wife will be sold within 90-days of the Senate endorsing his nomination. Snow said he would also resign memberships of 32 boards, trusteeships, think tanks and lobby groups.

Board Memberships

Stock options granted for his board memberships of Sapient Corp., Verizon Communications Inc., Circuit City Stores and Johnson & Johnson would also be exercised or surrendered within 90 days of Senate endorsement of his nomination, Snow said.

``I will not participate personally and substantially in an official capacity in any particular matter that would have a direct and predictable effect on the financial interests of such entities, of which I have knowledge, unless I qualify for a regulatory exemption," he said.

After becoming Treasury secretary in January 2001, O'Neill drew criticism in Congress and elsewhere for initially refusing to divest almost $100 million in stock of Alcoa Inc., the aluminum maker where he had served as chairman. In March 2001, he agreed to divest the shares.

WHO docs from TPO

Faisal -- Pls check w/ Distie and/or Brook to provide this fact check to John Wood/OMB (it's possible Robert or Tim Stout may know something about the status as well). FYI if you're running this down, the memo John's referencing is (the memo that names Brook and Distie) is Judge Gonzales' memo of July 26, 2002.
Pls let John and Kim know asap Thurs a.m., obviously.

The reference to routing the return of WH materials through "Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor," was taken from Ed's original memo when TPO was created. We will need someone from OHS or TPO to let us know whether these are the correct people.

Thanks Kimberly. This memo looks great and will clarify things greatly for TPO staff. I will rely on you to perform the "checks" identified in the memo. I will tee up to my IT folks the need to make copies (of which I think they are already aware).

Ed -- So that there's no confusion, I would ask that you delete the line in your 1/22 draft memo from Gonzales that says "TPO and all other OMB staff should, obviously, consult with OMB counsel." Given that the OMB memo will go to all TPO folks, there's no need -- and it likely will create confusion -- to state affirmatively that people should consult. Thanks

FROM: PHILIP J. PERRY, GENERAL COUNSEL

SUBJECT: TRANSFER AND HANDLING OF TPO RECORDS

This memorandum provides guidance to all personnel of the Transition Planning Office (TPO). It addresses all documents or email in TPO files, including those received from the White House. Please note that some sections apply to TPO employees who are transferring to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS), while other sections apply to TPO employees transferring to other agencies.

White House Documents (applies to all TPO employees):
When TPO was created, the White House Counsel,s Office made special arrangements for handling documents from "White House" entities that were temporarily provided to TPO personnel. Those arrangements (addressed in depth in the attached memoranda) applied generally to emails and other documents from OHS and other White House entities. Pursuant to the attached memos, those materials should already bear the legend &White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure.8
Please return all such materials to the White House entity from which they originated by routing them through Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor [check].
Emails from White House entities will be automatically segregated by the Office of Administration [check].
You should not take copies of any materials from White House entities with you, unless you receive clearance to do so by Ed McNally, OHS GC.
If you have any questions regarding the treatment of materials from White House entities, please contact Ed McNally at 6-1700.

All other Documents (applies to TPO employees transferring to DHS):
ú Documents or Email Created at TPO: You may take to DHS copies of any paper documents or email you created at TPO. However, you should make copies only of materials that you will need to perform your mission at DHS. You do not need to check with a lawyer before taking these copies. Keep in mind that the Office of Administration (OA) will be able to provide you access to your TPO materials even after your transfer to DHS.

ú Documents Received from OMB: You may also take to DHS documents received from OMB, except for Director's Review Books, passback materials or other internal OMB deliberative material not typically shared with agencies. If you have any questions about the nature of OMB documents in your possession, please consult Kimberley Luczynski at 5-7870.

ú Other Documents Received at TPO: Unless received from OHS or other White House entities, you are free to take copies to DHS.

When you depart for the new Department, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived. The appropriate contact at OA is Markus Most at 5-6471. Mr. Most will send, under separate cover, instructions regarding archiving your originals.

For TPO employees transferring to agencies other than DHS: You may not take copies of any TPO documents with you. As above, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived.

Brett,
Doug Domenech and some other political appointees at the Department of Interior have requested a meeting to discuss Native American outreach efforts and ideas. We are thinking of setting this meeting up to include some DOI politicals, some folks from OPA and IGA and if you think it is ok, a person from the RNC -- is it ok to have an RNC outreach person in this meeting?

I've been told that because leadership has indicated to the House Judiciary Committee that we would like them to move quickly on medical liability, they have changed plans to move class action first. I think class action would have been able to move very fast (they've passed it twice already), but this now means that class action won't move til April.

Confirm Judge Pickering
by Alberto R. Gonzales

The controversy over President Bush's nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and the recent threats by some Senators to filibuster to prevent an up-or-down Senate vote, illustrate how far the judicial confirmation process has degenerated. Judge Pickering is well-qualified, he should receive an up-or-down Senate vote (as should all judicial nominees), and he should be confirmed.

In 1990, the Senate confirmed Judge Pickering unanimously to be a federal district judge, and he has served with distinction since then. He previously worked in private practice and as a county prosecutor, city judge, and state legislator. He graduated first in his law school class. He has been extraordinarily active in community service activities. The American Bar Association rated him &well-qualified.8 And he has very strong bipartisan support, including from Democrat Governor Musgrove, Democrat Attorney General Moore, Clinton Administration Assistant Attorney General Frank Hunger, and 18 past Presidents of the state bar, among many others.

While sometimes cloaked in other language, the opposition to Judge Pickering has boiled down to a single allegation: that he has demonstrated racial insensitivity during his life. That is a serious charge; indeed, no allegation with respect to a prospective judicial nominee is taken more seriously by President Bush. But the allegation does not square with Judge Pickering,s record, both professional and personal. Judge Pickering has a long record of advancing racial harmony and progress in Mississippi. His efforts began in the 1960,s and have continued to the present. As Charles Evers, the brother of slain Mississippi civil rights leader Medgar Evers, stated, Judge Pickering &was standing up for blacks in Mississippi when no other white man would.8 An account of these efforts demonstrates that the attacks against Judge Pickering have been ill-informed.

In the 1960,s, Judge Pickering was a county prosecutor in Mississippi who aggressively investigated and prosecuted the Ku Klux Klan. Charles Harrison, the first African-American police officer in the Laurel, Mississippi, police department, explained what this effort entailed: & Charles Pickering worked with the FBI to investigate and prosecute violent KKK members. He put his, his wife,s, and his children,s lives at risk by doing this.8 And as a direct result, Judge Pickering lost his re-election as county attorney. Chet Dillard, who was a Mississippi District Attorney at the time, stated: &Charles has always stood tall for justice when very few people would make a stand at all.8

majority-black public schools in Mississippi. He explained: &My young daughters) the first year that they paired schools, which meant that they would be going to a majority-black school; it was a previously all-black school) they went to the previously black school and that is where they got their education. We stayed with the public schools. We helped integrate the public schools.8

In 1971, Judge Pickering ran for state senate and received two-thirds of the African-American vote. Then in 1976, soon after he became chair of the state Republican Party, Judge Pickering hired the state party,s first African-American staffer, James King. Mr. King has stated that Judge Pickering was a &mentor8 and added: &I have known Judge Pickering for 25 years and can and do state without hesitation that he is a man of great morals and principles and I have found him to be completely void of racism in his approach to dealing with issues of race.8

In 1981, as a private lawyer, Judge Pickering defended an African-American man accused of robbing a white woman at knifepoint. The defendant,s father stated that &Judge Pickering believed that my son was entitled to a good defense even though it was not a popular move for him politically.8

In 1983, while Judge Pickering was President of the Mississippi Baptists, the Southern Baptist Convention invited an African-American pastor to speak at the convention for the first time. And in the late 1980,s, when an African-American was denied admission to a fraternity that Judge Pickering had belonged to, Judge Pickering discussed the matter with his son (Congressman Pickering), who flew down from Washington, addressed the chapter, and integrated it.

Judge Pickering,s efforts have continued to this day. In 1988 and 1989, Judge Pickering chaired a bi-racial, bipartisan commission in Jones County that was formed to advance race relations. In 1998, Judge Pickering became a member of the University of Mississippi Institute for Racial Recononciliation and later served on the board. And Judge Pickering authored a 1999 article entitled &Racial Harmony Requires Commitment.8

Based on this extensive record, numerous people) black and white, Republican and Democrat) have written letters of support that debunk the Washington-based criticism of Judge Pickering. The former president of the NAACP in Forrest County (who also has served as a state coordinator for Rev. Jackson,s Rainbow Coalition) wrote that Judge Pickering has been a &major bridge builder8 and has &developed platforms that have eased racial tensions.8 Former Democrat Governor Winter wrote that Judge Pickering &has been one of this state,s most dedicated and effective voices for breaking down racial barriers.8 Johnny Dupree, the African-American Mayor of Hattiesburg, wrote that &Judge Pickering is a model citizen8 and &has received much praise from local and state African American leaders who can attest to his commitment to being fair toward all citizens.8 Judge Damon Keith, one of the country,s leading appeals court judges and an African-American appointee of President Carter, wrote that he was &absolutely convinced that Judge Pickering,s entire life has been dedicated to the principle spelled out in the Declaration of Independence that says all men are created equal.8 Finally, Frank Hunger, who was Assistant Attorney General under President Clinton and is Al Gore,s brother-in-law, wrote: &I have known Judge Pickering for nearly thirty years and have the utmost respect for him as a fair-minded judge who would never knowingly do anything improper or unethical. He is a person of great integrity, strong moral character, courage and compassion who treats all who come before him in a fair and dignified way. . . I think it most regrettable that his nomination has become controversial.8

Opponents have ignored this record and support and instead seized on two main issues to try to demonize Judge Pickering. First, Judge Pickering wrote a student paper in 1959 that analyzed Mississippi,s law against inter-racial marriage (nearly two dozen states had such laws in force before the Supreme Court declared them unconstitutional in 1967). The article analyzes the law, but does not take a moral position on it, and critics have seized on the lack of criticism to attack Judge Pickering.

The law was reprehensible and warrants explicit condemnation, as Judge Pickering himself has explained. The 1959 student analysis does not negate Judge Pickering,s extensive 40-year history of promoting racial harmony and progress for African-Americans in which he has worked to integrate his state, his church, his public schools, his fraternity, and his dinner table.

Second, some have pointed to Judge Pickering,s actions in a cross-burning case in 1994, arguing that he was lenient in sentencing a convicted cross-burner. That allegation is a gross distortion. Four facts bear emphasis. First, there were three defendants involved, and the prosecutors inexplicably allowed two (including the ringleader) to plead guilty with no prison time. Second, Judge Pickering sentenced the third defendant to 27 months, imprisonment, which was more prison time than the Justice Department had offered this defendant in plea bargain negotiations; moreover, the Justice Department did not appeal the sentencing decision. Third, Judge Pickering expressed concern about the inequitable sentences imposed on the three defendants (he has expressed similar concerns in other cases), which stemmed from the fact that the prosecutors had allowed the ringleader of the incident to plead guilty with no prison time. Fourth, and most important for present purposes, there is no doubt that Judge Pickering believed the crime reprehensible. At the sentencing hearings, Judge Pickering stated the following: &This is conduct that is reprehensible. It cannot, it will not be tolerated . . . . You are going to the penitentiary because of what you did. And it is an area that we have got to stamp out, that we have got to learn to live races among each other. And the type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated. You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act. I would suggest to you that during the time that you are in the prison that you do some reading on race relations.8

Judge Pickering is, as the American Bar Association concluded, well qualified. His record should be debated and analyzed fairly, he should receive an up-or-down Senate vote, and he should be confirmed.

I've been told that because leadership has indicated to the House Judiciary Committee that we would like them to move quickly on medical liability, they have changed plans to move class action first. I think class action would have been able to move very fast (they've passed it twice already), but this now means that class action won't move til April.

There is a draft OHS memo ready to go out re: this. Because it references the basic docs memo that the Judge is expected to sign today (Carrie tells me it's being looked at by the CoS office at the Judge's request) it has not yet been transmitted.

My expectation would be that this wld just be a routine housekeeping request, for the record (as it were), from OHS Exec. Sec to TPO Exec. Sec.
First, as a practical matter, this is largely (but not exclusively) an OHS-TPO docs matter. Second, the memos from Phil (yesterday to all TPO/OMB) and from the Judge (the one that's in the hopper today) pretty much cover the map and are fairly detailed as it is.
But if you think in terms of completeness it has to be a White House-wide request -- a formal memo from Judge Gonzales to Phil Perry, e.g. -- it'd still be easy to tweak the draft quickly and do it that way today.

For this housekeeping memo -- which route wld you prefer?

This memorandum is respectfully submitted to help address any open housekeeping matters regarding document returns, and thus to help facilitate the relevant requests concerning certain White House materials made in yesterday's OMB GC memo to OMB TPO staff. In particular, we understand that TPO returns of any White House materials will be routed through your office. By way of background, we understand that on January 17, 2003, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) issued a memorandum advising that on January 24, 2003, the "Transition Planning Office within OMB will cease operations". We also reference the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) executed on behalf of the WHO, OMB and OVP on July 26, 2002. As you know, it is noted in that MOU (at section II, "Return of White House Materials") that certain "White House entities" (a defined term) will be making certain documents available to the Transition Planning Office (TPO) on a "temporary basis for the limited purpose of transition planning and related activities", and on condition of confidentiality, and that "TPO staff shall have an obligation to return such documents to the originating White House entity" in a prompt and timely manner.

White House Office (WHO) staff have this week retrieved the original WHO documents, blue cover sheets and other materials used by WHO personnel on the 9th floor at 1800 G Street to track White House materials that were made available to TPO pursuant to the MOU and my memorandum of July 26, 2002. They will be returned to the originating WHO offices. That said, we recognize that there may be additional Office of Homeland Security (OHS) or other White House materials that were made available to TPO that could still be at TPO. Pursuant to the July 26, 2002 WHCO memorandum and the MOU noted above, any such documents should bear the marking: "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure" (the MOU, e.g., notes that White House materials should be so marked "whenever practicable"). In keeping with OMB GC memo yesterday, we would ask that TPO please return any such remaining OHS materials to the OHS Executive Secretary's office. Assuming there is only a modest quantity of White House materials that originated in WHO offices other than OHS (if any), you are also welcome to transmit any such materials via our office and we will arrange to return them to the White House entity from which they originated. Please contact me or OHS Associate Counsel Faisal Gill with any questions.

David:

USTR needs to get squared away -- if there is a real problem here, I wish USTR would just tell us what it is -- we might have some creative ideas for solving the problem.

They don't need a new Executive Order on classification to get the job done -- E.O. 12958 is clear on the applicable standards and is explicit on the post-FOIA request classifiability of documents. In addition, USTR GC has the authority to get the job done himself (see Fed. Reg. notice below):

NOTICES

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE

Designation of Senior Agency Official Under Executive Order 12958

Wednesday, June 6, 2001

*30499 AGENCY: Office of the United States Trade Representative.

under section 5.6 of Executive Order 12958 entitled "Classified National Security Information."

SUMMARY: The General Counsel of the Office of the U.S. Trade

Representative has been designated as the senior agency official for purposes of section 1.8(d) of Executive Order 12958 and has the authority, along with the United States Trade Representative (USTR) and the Deputy USTRs, to classify or re-classify information that has not previously been disclosed to the public after a request for it has been received under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) or the Privacy Act of 1974.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: Executive Order 12958 ("the Order") provides that heads of agencies that originate or handle classified information shall designate one or more senior agency officials to carry out certain duties and responsibilities under the Order. On May 10, 2001, U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick designated the position of General Counsel as a "Senior Agency Official" pursuant to the provisions of section 5.6 of the Order.
The General Counsel shall have the authority to classify or re-classify information after a request has been received under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. 552, or the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. 552a, so long as that information has not previously disclosed to the public. Such classification or re-classification shall be done in a manner that meet the requirements of the Order and on a document-by-document basis.

Paul:

I don't plan to come to the meeting, but I thought I'd give you my thoughts:

1. As a general proposition, the ability of the United States to obtain foreign government information on a promise of confidentiality and to keep it confidential is a very high priority U.S. interest. (Judge Friedman's opinion acknowledged that the U.S. obtained the documents at issue from Chile on a promise of confidentiality. I have not, of course, seen the actual documents at issue here.)

2. Information obtained in confidence from a foreign government usually can be properly classified under Executive Order 12958 (which would bring them within the scope of FOIA exemption (b)(1) -- which I would bet the court would uphold, having noted Judge Friedman's comments that indicate he understands why the U.S. Government needs the ability to keep confidential information it receives on a promise of confidentiality from a foreign government).

3. Judge Friedman's rejection of FOIA exemption (b)(5) as a basis for withholding seems to me like it is on fairly strong ground -- appealing the (b)(5) decision to the DC Circuit poses a substantial risk of a damaging affirmance on the (b)(5) rejection.

4. The DC Circuit has decent law on coming in with a last-minute FOIA (b)(1) classification claim after a different exemption has been considered and rejected -- they don't like it, of course, but they allow it.

5. Do we know why USTR resists classification of the documents? One possibility is that the documents are not classifiable -- that seems unlikely. Another possibility is that USTR either has shown, or wants to be able to show, the documents to its advisory groups, which may include people who do not have clearances -- this is solvable. Also, I think the E.O. recognizes a concept of providing protection commensurate with that afforded by the foreign government, and I think there is decent case law on the point that the Government does not "waive" classification when it shows classified documents to some people for official purposes.

6. In short, without knowing any more than what is in Judge Friedman's opinion, it strikes me that the best way out of this is to classify the documents (assuming they are classifiable), claim (b)(1), and move to reconsider on (b)(1) grounds before Judge Friedman, being very sheepish about it and citing the DC last-minute-national-security cases. If there is absolutely no way that a (b)(1) claim can lawfully be made, then perhaps we need to bite the bullet now -- it strikes me as very unlikely that you would get a reversal in the DC Circuit of Judge Friedman's decision on the (b)(5) claim.

7. Let me emphasize that my key concern is with the principle that the U.S., in its dealings with foreign governments, needs the ability to promise and deliver confidentiality. I rely on you fellows who know the details of the case, and know best how to litigate, to get to that objective.

Subject: RE: USTR FOIA case

I think we're all on the same page. After David and the Judge and I talked this morning, I strongly hinted to Peter Davidson that we would want USTR to classify, and we agreed to talk after his meeting tomorrow at the SG's office. He's still holding out hope that an appeal will be approved; I believe that's a vain hope and told him as much, but it seemed to me we should let that play out tomorrow so he can realize it's classify or nothing. It certainly won't be shocking to Peter D. if Peter K. says that Counsel's office thinks USTR should classify. Davidson suggested they might need a new EO in order to classify; is that accurate?

To avoid confusion, fyi that I have had several conversations over the last several weeks with Peter Keisler about this case that reflect my views on it (not a very good appeal vehicle, have USTR classify). I am sure Peter believes these views represent the views of the Counsel's office and will so represent. I have not talked directly to Clement about it. Just wanted to let you know because there appear to be a lot of parallel discussions occurring on this one, and we obviously need to be on same page. I also have exchanged voice mails with Friberg (Dep. at USTR) about it but have not actually talked to him. Until today, I always have been told that classification was a viable option (and I believe it still is), so the only question was whether to appeal essentially on principle.

Opening Statement Of Senator Patrick Leahy, Ranking Democratic Member,
Judiciary Committee Business Meeting

January 24, 2003

WELCOME

I start by ceremonially handing a gavel to Senator Hatch. If we always used the same gavel it would be dizzy from the changes we have gone through over the last couple of years.

I welcome back to the Committee those stout-hearted Senators who have returned. I welcome Senator Craig, who sat with us during our bipartisan Ruby Ridge oversight hearings a few years ago and has now chosen to join the panel as a member. I also welcome the other new members of the Committee and look forward to working with them.

It is my hope that we will find consensus items on which we can all work closely together, as we have done, for example, with Senator Feinstein's Amber Alert bill that passed the Senate earlier this week. I always am looking for areas of agreement with Senator Hatch and other members of this Committee. It is with that in mind that I will especially miss Senator Brownback, who has chosen to leave the Committee for greener pastures. I appreciate, as I know Senator Kennedy does, his work on the Immigration Subcommittee and in support of our legislative effort on corporate responsibility. I look forward to working with him and with Senator McConnell on the Appropriations Committee and on matters within this Committee's jurisdiction in which they retain interest.

ORGANIZATION

In addition to handing the gavel over to Senator Hatch I can report that we have had a very smooth implementation of our 50-50 agreement for sharing resources and that we have already succeeded in having Republican phone lines and staff shifted to our Committee reception room and have agreed on a number of nondesignated staff members to serve the entire Committee.

We need to follow through on the Committee's organization for this Congress by organizing our subcommittees, designating chairs and ranking members and assigning members. We also need to reaffirm or revise our Committee rules and should consider whether we wish to continue the protocol we have had on commemorative resolutions, private relief bills and private immigration bills. Those have traditionally been matters that commanded the Committee's attention at its first markups early in the session.

With respect to subcommittees, I understand Senator Hatch was giving thought to creating a Homeland Security Subcommittee. My approach last Congress was to encourage all of our subcommittees, including Immigration, Crime and Drugs, Terrorism, Constitution and Administration Oversight, to be involved in hearings and matters affecting homeland security. Our Committee and subcommittees were among the most active in the last Congress on issues of Homeland Security. The expertise and energy of our members and of these subcommittees account for some of the special strengths we have on this Committee. I am happy to discuss with the Chairman any ideas he has for subcommittees and would want all members to be heard and involved in those considerations. That is obviously something we should do sooner rather than later so that Subcommittee chairs and Ranking Members can know their responsibilities and can begin working together on hearings.

OVERSIGHT

I also hope that we will build upon the important oversight activities we began in the last Congress. Our hearings of homeland security issues, our oversight of the Department of Justice and of the FBI, and in particular our whistleblower hearings were important and constructive work. Indeed, it was not by coincidence that it was on the day of our hearing with FBI Agent Rowley that the Bush Administration reversed its position and announced support for a Homeland Security Department.

Our oversight responsibilities are a fundamental part of our congressional responsibilities. I was glad to work with Senator Grassley and Senator Specter as well as Senator Hatch in the last Congress to ensure that we did our best to fulfill those responsibilities. The Senate was intended to be a check on Executive power and to provide balance and accountability in our government. We should not become a marketing affiliate for the Administration but need to fulfill our intended role in this constitutional democracy. I want to work with the Chairman to do that and look forward to our jointly announcing a series of oversight hearings very quickly.

BIPARTISAN INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY AND TECHNOLOGY AGENDA

I have also asked my staff to work with Senator Hatch's staff in developing a series of hearings and legislative initiatives relating to intellectual property and technology matters, an area in which we have historically worked closely together with great success.

ANTITRUST POLICY

Given our partnership on the Curt Flood Act, by which we finally passed legislation ending professional baseball's antitrust exemption, I also want to invite Senator Hatch, in particular, but also all members of the Committee on both sides of the aisle, to join with Senator Kennedy, Senator Durbin, Senator Edwards and me in amending the immunity from federal antitrust laws for the insurance business in matters relating to medical malpractice insurance. Price-fixing, bid-rigging and market allocations in medical malpractice insurance is simply intolerable. Physicians, patients and our Nation's health care will be the beneficiaries of such long overdue congressional action.

EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS

We begin this session with a number of important Executive Branch vacancies. The Secretary of the Homeland Security Department was promptly confirmed earlier this week. The Commerce Committee held a hearing and meeting on the nomination of the Undersecretary of Border and Transportation Security. I was disappointed that that nomination was not referred to this Committee, as I believe it should have been, given the traditional jurisdiction of this Committee. Indeed, I chaired Administrator Hutchinson's hearing to head the Drug Enforcement Administration in the last Congress, and this Committee has traditional exercised fundamental jurisdiction over immigration, our criminal laws, and our borders. It may be that a few of the dozens of presidential nominees to the new Homeland Security Department will be referred to this Committee, and I look forward to working with the Chairman to prepare for hearings on those nominations.

In addition, I expect that we will soon have pending before this Committee the nomination of the President for the Associate Attorney General position, the third- or fourth-highest post within the Department of Justice. The President announced his intention to make this nomination back in early December. We have yet even to discuss when that hearing might take place and how to deal with the orders involving that nominee issued by a federal court. That nominee to become the Associate has been the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division, so that is another vacancy that will arise. In addition, there is a vacancy in the important position of Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division. I also understand that the Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs has now been assigned other responsibilities and that position, the Attorney General's liaison to the Congress, is also without a nominee. Accordingly, we will face again this year the circumstance I faced in 2001 when we had to find time to prepare for and hold nominations hearings on important Executive Branch nominees as well as judicial nominees. The difference will be that while there will be a number of Executive Branch nominations hearings this year, they will not be nearly as many as we had to hold in 2001 and, hopefully, we will be able to proceed without the unprecedented circumstances we had to overcome in the wake of the September 11 attack and the anthrax letters sent to Senator Daschle and to me that closed the Senate office buildings and displaced so many for so long.

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

Then there are the continuing problems caused by the Administration's refusal to work with Democratic Senators to select consensus judicial nominees who could be confirmed relatively quickly by the Senate. In spite of the President's lack of cooperation, the Senate in the 17 months of Democratic leadership of the Judiciary Committee was able to confirm100 judges and vastly reduce the judicial vacancies that had built up and that were kept vacant by inaction on the nominations of President Clinton.

Last year alone the Democratic-led Senate confirmed 72 judicial nominees, more than in any of the prior six years of Republican control. Not once did the Republican-controlled Committee consider that many of President Clinton's district and circuit court nominees, even though there were often more judicial nominees than that waiting for hearings. In our efforts to repair the damage of the past and to treat this President's nominees more fairly than his predecessor's had fared, we confirmed 100 judges in 17 months. It is somewhat remarkable that not a single elected Republican has yet acknowledged this tremendous bipartisanship and fairness. When Chief Justice Rehnquist thanked the Committee for confirming 100 judicial nominees earlier this month it was the first time this accomplishment had been acknowledged by anyone other than Democrats and a few reporters.

I mention this because we have been hearing so much in the press about the need, or should I say the desire, of Republicans to move quickly on judicial vacancies. One member of this Committee even suggested that the Senate needed to confirm the 100 nominees blocked by the Democrats, despite the fact that everyone here must know that 100 nominees were confirmed - not blocked - many of whom proved to be quite controversial. Almost all of the judges confirmed are conservatives, many of them quite to the right of the mainstream. Many of these nominees have been active in conservative political causes or groups, but we moved fairly and expeditiously on as many as we could.

We cut the number of vacancies on the courts from 110 to 59, despite an additional 50 new vacancies that arose during my tenure. I recall that the Chairman said in September of 1997 that 103 vacancies (during the Clinton Administration) did not constitute a "vacancy crisis." He also observed at one point that 67 vacancies meant "full employment" on the federal courts. With two additional vacancies since the beginning of this year, there are now 61 vacancies on the district and circuit courts, but the President has made nominations to only half of those seats. I am sure that the Chairman will try to chart a steady course to address those vacancies, and I hope it will be a fair one that does not leave the public with the impression that nominees for lifetime positions are racing through the Committee with little time for hearing questions and for thorough review.

Last Congress, we worked hard to keep a steady pace of hearings, even though so many of this President's judicial picks proved to be quite divisive and raised serious questions about their willingness to be fair to all parties. We held hearings for 90 percent of the President's nominees eligible for hearings, a total of 103 nominees, including a record 20 circuit court nominees. We voted on 102 of them, two of which were defeated after fair hearings and lengthy debate. The President has taken this unprecedented action of re-nominating candidates voted down in Committee in spite of the serious concerns raised by fair-minded members of this Committee.

The President has chosen to re-nominate 28 other nominees who did not have Committee votes, most of whom lacked completed files, such as lacking the approval of the people's representatives of their home States, at the end of the last Congress. Some may try to claim that having 30 nominees not get reported out of Committee is somehow unfair, but that ignores the fact that many of these nominees do not have home-State approval, a longstanding Senate tradition which protects the interests of the people likely to be most affected by a nomination. Such a claim of unfairness would also ignore the record number of nominees confirmed in the prior Congress, 100. It is numbers of judges confirmed that matters to the workload of the federal judiciary, not percentages. And it is numbers of judges confirmed that reflects the true workload of the Committee in handling judicial nominations. Such a claim would also ignore the fact that 79 of President Clinton's judicial nominees did not get confirmed in the first Congress they were nominated when Republicans controlled the Senate, and that 59 of these judicial nominees of President Clinton were never allowed a vote by Republicans and were thus never confirmed during Republican control. Never.

Despite our efforts, we hear only harping and criticism. We were twice as productive as a Republican Senate had been when President Clinton was nominating a much more moderate group of highly qualified nominees. Republicans averaged 37 confirmations per 12 months. The Democratic Senate confirmed 100 in 17 months and 72 in calendar year 2002. Still we were vilified for not doing three or four times more than Republicans did. We moved away from the secret holds that Republicans had used for so many years and made blue slips public for the first time in history. We held fair and open hearings and open debates and voted on 102 judicial nominees in open session, rather than defeating nominees in the dark of night through anonymous holds, as was the common practice before.

We proceeded with hearings, as I had previously urged, every three or four weeks. We held more hearings and more votes on nominees than Republicans had. At the same time we tried to be responsible by following the practice of this Committee of proceeding with one Court of Appeals nominee at a time and only one controversial nominee at a time. This President sent the Senate a large number of controversial nominees. We proceeded with more hearings on more of them than had previously been the practice under Republican leadership.

Throughout the last Congress I urged the President to work with us and stop politicizing the judicial confirmation process. I urged him to work with us to achieve a sense of balance on the circuits and to work with Democratic home-State Senators. I offered suggestions with respect to impasses in the 6th Circuit and the D.C. Circuit. All was to no avail. Instead, this White House chose to mischaracterize what we had achieved and to demagogue the issue during the last election. That partisan approach has continued from the White House and is most unfortunate. Sending the Senate divisive judicial nominations is something I have urged the President to avoid, but that is exactly what he has chosen to do.

As we begin this new Congress, it is also not helpful that the Chairman is apparently choosing to change practices in what appears to be an effort to railroad nominations through the Committee and the Senate without thorough hearings. We have not discussed any plans he has to change his own blue slip practices from the last three Congresses in which he chaired the Committee. When the President was a Republican, Senator Hatch was very careful to protect the rights and privileges of Republican Senators with respect to judicial nominations. I cannot recall a single occasion on which he proceeded to a hearing on a judicial nominee before both home-State Senators had returned blue slips indicating their agreement with proceeding.

I look forward to discussing this matter with him and do not intend to rely merely on press accounts. Those conversations have yet to take place.

In the same vein, the Chairman's intentions with respect to how hearings will be conducted is a source of some concern and apparent change. I have yet to see a witness list for the hearing that has been noticed for Wednesday. We have spoken preliminarily about the circuit court nominees. When Senator Thurmond chaired this Committee he agreed to a hearing process that included only one controversial nominee per hearing. All Chairs who followed have conformed to that practice. Now we hear that we may be faced with three controversial circuit nominees at one hearing next week. That is not only inconsistent with decades of practice, and certainly the practices of the last 10 years; it is inconsistent with good practices if the Committee is intended to do its job and thoroughly review these important lifetime appointments.

At the last Committee vote of the past Congress, the Committee was sharply divided in its evaluation of Judge Dennis Shedd to the Fourth Circuit.

Despite unfair attacks against me by a number of Republicans, I kept my commitment that he would receive a Committee vote. Judge Shedd's record in civil rights cases and his record on the bench raised serious concerns among many African Americans living in the Fourth Circuit and across the country. His floor vote was also contentious, with a confirmation vote of 55 to 44.

There also is the matter of the renomination of Judge Charles Pickering, whose record on the bench raised serious concerns among many and whose nomination was defeated by a majority vote in this Committee. I do not know of any precedent for a President renominating a judicial nominee voted upon and rejected by this Committee. This President has chosen to renominate Judge Pickering and Justice Priscilla Owen, who both were voted on by this Committee last year.

Although the campaign rhetoric of the Administration as it continued to politicize the selection of federal judges was in large measure about Judge Pickering and Justice Owen, and although the President has followed through on his threat to renominate them, the agenda for this our first meeting includes no mention of either of them. Perhaps this is a sign that the Republicans on this Committee recognize the unprecedented nature of these renominations and the divisiveness they engender.

THE ESTRADA NOMINATION

The Chairman has instead exercised his prerogative to list the nomination of Mr. Estrada to the D.C. Circuit. This, too, has been a difficult nomination for this Committee. I have significant concerns about Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Many of us would like to have sufficient confidence based on a record and a strong confidence about the type of judge he would be, in voting on this nomination. Sadly, that is not the record before this Committee. I am not convinced that he will not become an activist on that court, given what we have learned about him and given the insufficient record we have. Mr. Estrada has no judicial experience. He has no publications since his law school note. He is not a distinguished legal scholar or professor of law and has never taught a class. While he has experience arguing criminal cases before the Supreme Court, on which he clerked, he appears to have no experience handling the types of civil cases that make up the majority of the docket of the D.C. Circuit. Additionally, his selection for this court has generated tremendous controversy. I think that is, in part, because he appears to have been groomed to be an activist appellate judge by well-placed conservatives.

This has been another nomination that has divided, not united, the American people and the Senate.

Senator Schumer chaired a hearing for Mr. Estrada last September. I was hoping that the hearing would allay concerns that have been raised about this nomination, but I was left with more questions than answers after all of the steps Mr. Estrada took to avoid answering questions at that hearing. I was also left with little hope that he would ever answer any of the concerns raised about entrusting him for the rest of his life with the responsibility for deciding cases fairly and without favor toward any personal or political agenda. When we vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination, I will submit a longer statement detailing my concerns. I would also like to submit for the record Senator Schumer's letter on the Department of Justice's refusal to follow precedent and provide the Committee with an opportunity to examine Mr. Estrada's writings.

My colleagues and I welcome the opportunity to discuss the merits of this nomination. It would be better if that debate and vote took place after the entire record on Mr. Estrada's nomination was assembled. Significant concerns have been raised and not answered. The opposition of so many Hispanic organizations and the Congressional Hispanic Caucus should also be of concern to the Committee. I will submit those letters and statements in opposition for the record.

.....NOW posted an "update" about Kuhl on their web page today - see below.

Carolyn Kuhl
Nominated to the United States Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit. Currently a Los Angeles Superior Court judge. The committee has not set a hearing date.

While at the Justice Department, Kuhl was instrumental in persuading the Reagan administration to support the tax exempt status of Bob Jones University which had been revoked because of racially discriminatory policies.*

Co-authored the government's brief in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists which fought for the "outright reversal of Roe." She argued that the Roe decision was "flawed."

Fought for the gag rule and parental notification for young women. She has also fought for detailed intrusive reporting requirements which forced women to disclose personal information such as the date of their last menstrual cycle, their race, marital status and where they lived.

Member of the Federalist Society, an ultra-conservative legal organization.

Wrote a brief in 1990 on behalf of the American Academy of Medical Ethics in which she argued that prohibiting doctors who receive federal funds from discussing abortion did not violate First Amendment guarantees of free speech.

Pickering, Owen to Get Senate Hearings

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two of President Bush's most contentious court nominations, Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering and Texas Judge Priscilla Owen, will face new questions this year from the same Democrats who rejected the appeals court appointments last year.

Pickering and Owen were the only two White House judicial nominees voted down by Judiciary Democrats when they controlled the Senate last year. Committee chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, plans to let senators question the two again in hopes of rehabilitating their nominations.

Bush renominated the two earlier this month, much to the Democrats' chagrin.

"I'm trying to be cooperative," Hatch said. "We'll have a hearing on Pickering because I'm trying to show deference to them."

Pickering, a U.S. District judge in Hattiesburg, Miss., and a friend of Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., was blocked by Democrats last year after civil rights groups questioned his race-relations record. Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice and a friend of the president, was rejected after Democrats complained that her rulings were overly influenced by her personal beliefs.

Both were nominated for seats on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles federal appeals from Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana.

Opposition to Pickering's nomination increased among Democrats after Lott made racially insensitive remarks and ultimately stepped down as GOP leader.

Pickering's hearing - which could come as early as March - would be his third before the Senate Judiciary Committee since his May 2001 nomination. Hatch did not give a timetable for Owen. "We've got to see whether there will be obstructionist tactics," Hatch said.

Democrats say the Judiciary Committee has already rejected both, and they have threatened to filibuster Pickering's nomination if it goes to the full Senate. Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the panel's top Democrat, noted that the Republicans did not start their year by trying to get either Pickering or Owen approved quickly.

"Perhaps this is a sign that the Republicans on this committee recognize the unprecedented nature of these renominations and the divisiveness they engender," Leahy said in a statement.

Instead, the GOP will start with a Judiciary Committee vote on Miguel Estrada, who wants a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. That court has often been a stepping stone to the Supreme Court.

Estrada received a unanimous well-qualified recommendation from the American Bar Association. If confirmed, he would become the first Hispanic on what is considered the second-highest court in the nation. He also has been mentioned as a possible Supreme Court nominee if a vacancy occurs during Bush's presidency.

A member of the law firm that represented Bush in his successful Supreme Court fight for the presidency in 2000, Estrada had to be renominated earlier this year because the Democratic-controlled Senate did not act on his nomination last year. Estrada has been waiting for a committee vote since May 2001. Republicans now control the Senate.

"It's an important vote," Hatch, R-Utah, said Friday. "I think he will pass out with significant support from this committee."

But Democrats, outnumbered 10-9 on the committee, already are gathering their forces to oppose Estrada.

"His selection for this court has generated tremendous controversy," Leahy said. "I think that is, in part, because he appears to have been groomed to be an activist appellate judge by well-placed conservatives."

During Estrada's five-hour confirmation hearing last year, Democrats repeatedly contended that he lacked judicial experience. That, plus his refusal to answer questions about specific cases, gave Democrats little to review, they said.

The Justice Department's solicitor general's office, where Estrada used to work, refused to release copies of memos and opinions he produced when he worked there.

"Miguel Estrada refused to answer question after question regarding his judicial philosophy and his views on Supreme Court cases of national interest," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. "He gave senators no real insight into his judicial philosophy."

Conclusion is:

> Asset allocation and investment returns have had little, if any, correlation to the development of the current malpractice problem. The crisis is rather the result of a generally unconstrained increase in losses and, over several years, inadequate premium income to cover those losses.

The magnitude of these changes suggests that the eventual solution to the current malpractice problem will be a blend of premium increases and tort reform. Since the financial shortfall compounds itself over time, it is imperative that the solution set be developed as quickly as possible. Without significant relief in fairly short order, the country may find itself facing an accelerating loss of available medical care.

Cross-burning case haunts judge's nomination
By MATT STEARNS
The Kansas City Star

WASHINGTON - A cross burning nine years ago in rural Mississippi is at the center of a Washington political battle.

Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr., renominated by President Bush to a seat on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, presided over the 1994 case as a federal district court judge. He intervened to obtain a lesser prison sentence for one of three defendants in the case.

His opponents say that helps prove Pickering is racially insensitive. His supporters say it shows he is a fine judge who correctly questioned the fairness of a young man's sentence. Both sides also point to separate -- and usually incomplete -- aspects of Pickering's civil rights record.

Pickering's future likely will be determined by which view prevails in the U.S. Senate at a time when both parties are sensitive to racial politics.

Last year the then-Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee rejected his nomination for the same job over largely the same issues.

After last month's furor over comments by Republican Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi that many interpreted as praising the era of segregation, some were surprised that President Bush nominated Pickering again, especially given the close ties between Lott and Pickering.

On Friday, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Pickering would get a new hearing before the committee later this year.

Senate Democrats promise to make the nomination a big battle.

"Why anyone would go the whole nine yards, and then some, to get a lighter sentence for a convicted cross-burner is beyond me," said Sen. Charles Schumer of New York in threatening a filibuster earlier this month. "Why anyone would do that in 1994, and in a state with Mississippi's sad history of race relations, is simply mind-boggling."

But a close look shows that while Pickering did act unusually, he did not appear to take cross burning lightly. Also, Pickering's civil rights record cannot be as easily characterized as his opponents -- or his supporters -- have insisted.

Like many white Southerners who grew up during segregation and came of age when it was being dismantled, the 65-year-old Pickering's relationship with civil rights can best be described as complex and inconsistent.

"For his age and the time period -- the mid-'50s to the mid-'80s -- you're going to see a lot of people who changed, and people who didn't know they changed, and people who changed more than others," said Charles Eagles, a history professor at the University of Mississippi.

To be sure, Pickering's civil rights record is hardly unblemished, and his supporters try to dismiss the unflattering elements of it. As a law student in 1959, he wrote a law review article explaining how Mississippi could strengthen its law banning interracial marriage. He was coy with the Senate Judiciary Committee when asked about the nature of his relationship with the racist Mississippi Sovereignty Commission in the 1970s.

As a federal judge, he questioned the underlying foundations of key civil rights laws in several cases.
Still, Pickering's opponents tend to ignore that as a young lawyer in the 1960s, he aided in the prosecution of a Ku Klux Klan leader, and that he sent his children to public schools after many other well-to-do white Mississippians had abandoned the integrated public education system.
Pickering's mixed record is something for his opponents to exploit -- and it is easier than taking on his conservative views on other social and judicial issues.
"It's hard to attack someone solely on the basis of ideology," said Laurence Moreland, a professor at the Citadel, a military college in Charleston, S.C. "So they have to look for something beyond acceptance, and race provides an opening." Moreland specializes in Southern politics.
The cross-burning incident that came before Pickering occurred in the front yard of an interracial family, and Daniel Swan and two other young men were charged.
Two other defendants -- one of whom was judged mentally incompetent; the other was a juvenile -- pleaded guilty to lesser charges and served no prison time. Swan, then 20, went to trial and was found guilty. Federal sentencing guidelines called for Swan to serve 71/2 years.
Given the other defendants' plea agreements, Pickering told attorneys in the case that he thought the sentence Swan faced was "draconian," especially since he had not been a leader in the cross burning and had no history of racial animosity -- unlike the juvenile defendant.
Pickering asked prosecutors to drop a charge that added five years to the sentence and called a Justice Department official to hasten the request, which eventually was granted.
Some legal scholars say Pickering can be legitimately criticized for acting injudiciously in lobbying on behalf of a defendant before his court, and seeming to strong-arm prosecutors.
Pickering's supporters say he exhibited judicial common sense in trying to ensure parity for a defendant. He has done so in other cases, they say, including at least one involving an African-American defendant.
Pickering is not alone among federal judges in questioning the mandatory sentencing guidelines. The guidelines came into use in the mid-1980s because of concerns about lenient judges as the crack cocaine epidemic raged.
They give judges little leeway in sentencing. Retired U.S. District Court Judge Stanley Sporkin, a Reagan appointee, has called them "terrible.... What guidelines do is they say one size fits all."
As the Pickering debate has played out, his opponents have used some exaggeration. They say he acted inappropriately in meeting privately with prosecutors. He testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee, however, that he met with attorneys for both sides at the same time, which would not be unusual.
It has also been reported that shots were fired into the family's home the night of the cross burning, just missing a sleeping toddler. In fact, the shots were fired into the home during another incident that did not involve Swan.
Swan was ultimately sentenced to more than two years in prison. At Swan's sentencing, Pickering spoke harshly: "The type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated. You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act."

Hawai'i court nominee doubted
By Derrick DePledge
Advertiser Washington Bureau
WASHINGTON * The American Bar Association has determined that Frederick "Fritz" Rohlfing III is not qualified to serve as a judge for U.S. District Court in Hawai'i * a finding that could complicate his confirmation by the U.S. Senate.
Rohlfing, a partner at the Honolulu firm Rohlfing & Stone, was nominated by President Bush last January to fill a vacancy on the court, but did not receive a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the last session of Congress. Bush submitted Rohlfing's name again this month along with 30 other nominees who did not get a hearing or were rejected by the committee.
The ABA does not have a formal role in the confirmation process, but it does evaluate federal judicial nominees. President Bush decided shortly after taking office to end the long-standing practice of consulting with the group before sending nominations to the Senate, but senators routinely consider ABA ratings when evaluating nominees.
Rohlfing is the second of Bush's 131 judicial nominees to receive an "unqualified" rating by the ABA. David Bunning, the son of Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky. * confirmed by the Senate last year as a district court judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky * was the first.
"The administration believes that Mr. Rohlfing is qualified to serve, and we'll continue to support his nomination fully," said Monica Goodling, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of Justice.
Rohlfing did not respond to requests for comment left at his law office yesterday.
Sen. Dan Inouye, D-Hawai'i, indicated yesterday he would not support Rohlfing's nomination. Last January, the senator said he knew Rohlfing's father, former state legislator Fred Rohlfing, and would likely back Rohlfing's confirmation, pending an FBI background check and reviews by the ABA and the Hawaii State Bar Association.
"He would be compelled today to oppose the nomination," said Jennifer Sabas, Inouye's chief of staff in Hawai'i. She described a "qualified" rating from the ABA as a "bottom-line standard."
Sen. Daniel Akaka, D-Hawai'i, said he remains neutral on the nomination, but will take the ABA rating into consideration, along with other background material.
The views of home-state senators traditionally are given great weight in judicial nominations. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has said he will consult with home-state senators, but also promised quick action on Bush's nominees.
ABA officials do not release the content of their evaluations publicly unless asked by the Senate to discuss it at a nominee's confirmation hearing. The evaluations examine a nominee's experience, reputation and judicial temperament and are based in part on confidential interviews with peers in the legal community.
An ABA committee decides whether a nominee is well qualified, qualified, or not qualified for a lifetime appointment to the federal bench. If the committee is divided, the ABA includes a minority opinion in its rating for the Senate.

In Bunning's case, a lawyer who reviewed the ABA's findings told the Senate that Bunning was qualified but negative opinions about his nomination may have been influenced by his age * 35 at the time * and the fact that he was a senator's son.

Bunning also had the enthusiastic support of home-state Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., a Judiciary Committee member in the last session of Congress, and three federal judges from Kentucky who testified on his behalf.

Rohlfing, 46, applied for the nomination after talking with state Rep. Barbara Marumoto, R-19th (Kaimuki, Kahala, Wai'alae Iki), a Republican who chaired Bush's 2000 presidential campaign in Hawai'i.

In his 19-year legal career, Rohlfing has worked exclusively in civil law, mostly corporate, real estate and personal injury cases. In early 1985, he served as chief attorney for state House Republicans, a role he reprised in early 1995 for state Senate Republicans. He also is the former president of Aloha Sports, which operated the Aloha and O'ahu Bowls.

In a nomination questionnaire last year, Rohlfing wrote that he had taken four cases to verdict or judgment, one as sole counsel and three as chief counsel.

"He is very qualified," Marumoto said, adding that she hoped he would get a confirmation hearing soon.

Last year, the Hawai'i State Bar Association interviewed Rohlfing and conducted its own evaluation. It found him "highly qualified," its best rating. Association president Douglas Crosier said the group had received negative comments about the nomination from anonymous sources, but it did not outweigh strong support for Rohlfing in the legal community.

After learning of the ABA's rating this month, Crosier said the association took another look at its endorsement and decided to stand by its conclusion. "I haven't heard anything to change it," he said.

Crosier said it was difficult to respond to the ABA's rating without knowing details.

"We wanted to know, as a starting point, why," he said. "We've had to revisit our rating because of what has happened."

Showdowns are looming in the Senate over several judicial nominations, with the fiercest battles likely to involve candidates for the appellate courts. The Senate confirmed 100 Bush nominees during his first two years in office.

After Republicans took control of the Senate with the November elections, Bush chose to renominate two candidates for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans * Priscilla Owen of Texas and Charles Pickering of Mississippi * whom Democrats on the Judiciary Committee rejected last year.

Both Pickering and Owen received "well-qualified" ratings from the ABA.

Hot Seat Awaits Treasury Nominee Snow

Jan. 26

- By Glenn Somerville

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Lawmakers will get their chance to put U.S. Treasury nominee John Snow on the hot seat on Tuesday as President Bush seeks to rebuild his economic team in preparation for a tax-cut battle.

The wealthy rail executive is assured a courteous, but not placid, question-and-answer session before the Senate Finance Committee, which must confirm Bush's treasury chief choice before he can take up his post.

"Mr. Snow will receive a fair hearing, but not a rubber stamp," promises Max Baucus of Montana, ranking Democrat on the committee.

Snow, 63, was named by Bush in December as his choice to replace dismissed former Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, who was followed out the door the same day by Lawrence Lindsey, head of the White House's Council of Economic Advisers.

The council chairman, Glenn Hubbard, said last week he too will be departing at some point, which would make a clean sweep of Bush's top economic ranks at a time of rising public disaffection.

DISAFFECTION SPREADS

A New York Times/CBS poll published on Friday showed nearly 50 percent of Americans disapproved of Bush's handling of the economy and 41 percent were unhappy with his management of foreign policy -- the highest disapproval ratings since he became president two years ago.

Against that sobering backdrop, Snow will face close questioning on the Bush administration's $674 billion, 10-year tax-cutting program that he is expected to sell to lawmakers.

O'Neill's caution about maintaining fiscal discipline was widely seen as one reason he ran into trouble with the Bush White House, which estimates the stimulus proposals could drive budget deficits up by $359 billion from 2003 to 2007.

Snow was a deficit hawk himself in the past -- one of a group of top executives who took out an advertisement in major U.S. newspapers in December 1995 urging Democratic President Bill Clinton to balance the budget.

Some committee members want to know how he can endorse a stimulus plan that, by cutting tax revenues, must push deficits higher. That ultimately is more important than some personal issues such as a 2-decade-old arrest for driving under the influence of alcohol and a child-custody dispute.

"I think a DUI arrest 20 years ago is not material," Democratic Sen. Kent Conrad of North Dakota said. "A much greater concern for me is whether somebody who was concerned about deficits in the past no longer is."

Seeking to more sharply define their differences with the Bush administration, opposition Democrats on Friday unveiled an alternative stimulus program offering immediate tax relief to individuals in working families as opposed to the centerpiece ending of taxes on dividends in the Bush plan.

DIGGING A DITCH

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle said it would be aimed at poorer Americans and less likely to dig a "deficit ditch" than the Bush administration's offer, which he claimed would push interest rates higher -- something the White House contends will not occur but that Snow likely will be questioned about.

Snow, who pledged to give up his chairmanship of regional freight transportation giant CSX Corp. if made treasury secretary, was preparing the ground last week for his hearing. He made the rounds of senators' offices and has been briefed extensively by White House and treasury officials on the Bush administration's economic agenda.

One of the most sensitive issues with which a treasury chief must deal, currency policy, has grown in profile as the U.S. dollar's value has weakened on worries about the impact from possible war with Iraq. The greenback has slumped nearly 10 percent since early December.

Snow is expected to make a statement on the dollar -- likely a brief one -- but it would be surprising if he departed far from the administration's longstanding support for a strong dollar, a position the White House repeated twice in the past month remained its policy.

Indications on Friday were that Snow would face a grilling on his corporate leadership at CSX, but not likely on his personal past. The 1982 charges for driving under the influence were dismissed and his child-support case was settled.

"I think that senators are going to be very interested in exploring Mr. Snow's record as a corporate CEO (chief executive officer) and other professional capacities over the course of his professional career," Daschle told reporters.

"There certainly is no agenda for democrats other than that -- to determine to the extent of our ability his qualifications, to clarify his past experiences, to get a better judgment from him about his intentions as secretary of Treasury," Daschle said, adding the state of the economy and "his thoughts about some of the presidents proposals" also will be on the agenda.

Hawai'i court nominee doubted
By Derrick DePledge
Advertiser Washington Bureau
WASHINGTON * The American Bar Association has determined that Frederick "Fritz" Rohlfing III is not qualified to serve as a judge for U.S. District Court in Hawai'i * a finding that could complicate his confirmation by the U.S. Senate.
Rohlfing, a partner at the Honolulu firm Rohlfing & Stone, was nominated by President Bush last January to fill a vacancy on the court, but did not receive a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the last session of Congress. Bush submitted Rohlfing's name again this month along with 30 other nominees who did not get a hearing or were rejected by the committee.
The ABA does not have a formal role in the confirmation process, but it does evaluate federal judicial nominees. President Bush decided shortly after taking office to end the long-standing practice of consulting with the group before sending nominations to the Senate, but senators routinely consider ABA ratings when evaluating nominees.
Rohlfing is the second of Bush's 131 judicial nominees to receive an "unqualified" rating by the ABA. David Bunning, the son of Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky. * confirmed by the Senate last year as a district court judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky * was the first.
"The administration believes that Mr. Rohlfing is qualified to serve, and we'll continue to support his nomination fully," said Monica Goodling, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of Justice.
Rohlfing did not respond to requests for comment left at his law office yesterday.
Sen. Dan Inouye, D-Hawai'i, indicated yesterday he would not support Rohlfing's nomination. Last January, the senator said he knew Rohlfing's father, former state legislator Fred Rohlfing, and would likely back Rohlfing's confirmation, pending an FBI background check and reviews by the ABA and the Hawaii State Bar Association.

Cross-burning case haunts judge's nomination

By MATT STEARNS

The Kansas City Star

WASHINGTON - A cross burning nine years ago in rural Mississippi is at the center of a Washington political battle.

Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr., renominated by President Bush to a seat on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, presided over the 1994 case as a federal district court judge. He intervened to obtain a lesser prison sentence for one of three defendants in the case.

His opponents say that helps prove Pickering is racially insensitive. His supporters say it shows he is a fine judge who correctly questioned the fairness of a young man's sentence. Both sides also point to separate -- and usually incomplete -- aspects of Pickering's civil rights record.

Pickering's future likely will be determined by which view prevails in the U.S. Senate at a time when both parties are sensitive to racial politics. Last year the then-Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee rejected his nomination for the same job over largely the same issues.

After last month's furor over comments by Republican Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi that many interpreted as praising the era of segregation, some were surprised that President Bush nominated Pickering again, especially given the close ties between Lott and Pickering.

On Friday, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Pickering would get a new hearing before the committee later this year.

Senate Democrats promise to make the nomination a big battle.

"Why anyone would go the whole nine yards, and then some, to get a lighter sentence for a convicted cross-burner is beyond me," said Sen. Charles Schumer of New York in threatening a filibuster earlier this month. "Why anyone would do that in 1994, and in a state with Mississippi's sad history of race relations, is simply mind-boggling."

But a close look shows that while Pickering did act unusually, he did not appear to take cross burning lightly. Also, Pickering's civil rights record cannot be as easily characterized as his opponents -- or his supporters -- have insisted.

Like many white Southerners who grew up during segregation and came of age when it was being dismantled, the 65-year-old Pickering's relationship with civil rights can best be described as complex and inconsistent.

"For his age and the time period -- the mid-'50s to the mid-'80s -- you're going to see a lot of people who changed, and people who didn't know they changed, and people who changed more than others," said Charles Eagles, a history professor at the University of Mississippi.

To be sure, Pickering's civil rights record is hardly unblemished, and his supporters try to dismiss the unflattering elements of it. As a law student in 1959, he wrote a law review article explaining how Mississippi could strengthen its law banning interracial marriage. He was coy with the Senate Judiciary Committee when asked about the nature of his relationship with the racist Mississippi Sovereignty Commission in the 1970s.

As a federal judge, he questioned the underlying foundations of key civil rights laws in several cases.

Still, Pickering's opponents tend to ignore that as a young lawyer in the 1960s, he aided in the prosecution of a Ku Klux Klan leader, and that he sent his children to public schools after many other well-to-do white Mississippians had abandoned the integrated public education system.

Pickering's mixed record is something for his opponents to exploit -- and it is easier than taking on his conservative views on other social and judicial issues.

"It's hard to attack someone solely on the basis of ideology," said

Laurence Moreland, a professor at the Citadel, a military college in Charleston, S.C. "So they have to look for something beyond acceptance, and race provides an opening." Moreland specializes in Southern politics.

The cross-burning incident that came before Pickering occurred in the front yard of an interracial family, and Daniel Swan and two other young men were charged.

Two other defendants -- one of whom was judged mentally incompetent; the other was a juvenile -- pleaded guilty to lesser charges and served no prison time. Swan, then 20, went to trial and was found guilty. Federal sentencing guidelines called for Swan to serve 71/2 years.

Given the other defendants' plea agreements, Pickering told attorneys in the case that he thought the sentence Swan faced was "draconian," especially since he had not been a leader in the cross burning and had no history of racial animosity -- unlike the juvenile defendant.

Pickering asked prosecutors to drop a charge that added five years to the sentence and called a Justice Department official to hasten the request, which eventually was granted.

Some legal scholars say Pickering can be legitimately criticized for acting injudiciously in lobbying on behalf of a defendant before his court, and seeming to strong-arm prosecutors.

Pickering's supporters say he exhibited judicial common sense in trying to ensure parity for a defendant. He has done so in other cases, they say, including at least one involving an African-American defendant.

Pickering is not alone among federal judges in questioning the mandatory sentencing guidelines. The guidelines came into use in the mid-1980s because of concerns about lenient judges as the crack cocaine epidemic raged.

They give judges little leeway in sentencing. Retired U.S. District Court Judge Stanley Sporkin, a Reagan appointee, has called them "terrible.... What guidelines do is they say one size fits all."

As the Pickering debate has played out, his opponents have used some exaggeration. They say he acted inappropriately in meeting privately with prosecutors. He testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee, however, that he met with attorneys for both sides at the same time, which would not be unusual.

It has also been reported that shots were fired into the family's home the night of the cross burning, just missing a sleeping toddler. In fact, the shots were fired into the home during another incident that did not involve Swan.

Swan was ultimately sentenced to more than two years in prison. At Swan's sentencing, Pickering spoke harshly: "The type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated. You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act."

A long, long time ago, we were trying to set up a meeting to discuss this position. It currently reports to Scheduling, but I suspect there is very little contact in that regard, and hence that position has no supervision or guidance.

Further, we have come up with many questions as to what exactly the offices does, type of information being collected, the process for collecting information, where the records are kept (hard copy and computer version), which of these records is protected and which are not, what the Usher's Office provides in the way of logs, etc.

We know she has all the information in a stand-alone computer system, but what exactly does this mean. I am going to ask Ellen to send us a couple of examples of what his days look like ... maybe a regular day in the Oval, one on the road, and one a weekend at Camp David. At present we never see what goes in there and have no way of checking the accuracy of the information or providing input on ways to capture what we are hoping to include.

I would like to renew the request to set up a meeting w/Counsel's office et al to discuss the background of this position and what the logical reporting structure should be. I feel strongly that it should not be Scheduling, but rather should more likely report to OOO! Then we should set up a meeting with the Diarist to get a full rundown/status report of what's been worked on ... how current or far behind they are, etc.

Thanks.

Conservatives want Bush aide kept off court
By Joan Biskupic, USA TODAY

WASHINGTON * With legal and political insiders nearly certain President Bush soon will get to pick a new Supreme Court justice, conservatives close to the White House are quietly trying to derail the potential nomination of a top aide to the president.

Their target is White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, a longtime friend of Bush and a former Texas Supreme Court judge. Gonzales is a trusted aide in an administration that places a premium on loyalty. And White House sources have suggested that Bush wants to give the high court its first Hispanic justice.

The Gonzales file

Age: 47; born Aug. 4, 1955, San Antonio; grew up in Houston, the second of eight children.

Military service: Air Force, 1973-75.

Education: Air Force Academy, 1975-77; bachelor's degree in political science, Rice University, 1979; law degree, Harvard Law School, 1982.

Professional experience: lawyer, Vinson & Elkins, Houston, 1982-95; general counsel to Texas Gov. George W. Bush, 1995-97; Texas secretary of state, 1997-99; justice, Texas Supreme Court, 1999-2000; White House counsel, 2001-present (first Hispanic to serve in that position).

Personal: Married to Rebecca Turner Gonzales; three sons.

Source: White House

But conservatives inside and outside the administration have long suspected that Gonzales, 47, does not agree with them on key social policy issues * namely, their opposition to abortion and affirmative action. So when the Bush administration didn't go as far as many GOP hard-liners wanted in opposing the University of Michigan's affirmative action program this month, some blamed Gonzales.

That has led to an unusually aggressive "whisper" campaign. Conservative activists who have been successful in persuading Bush to nominate several hard-right candidates to lower federal courts have made it clear to reporters, Bush aides and others that they do not believe Gonzales is Supreme Court material.

The campaign comes amid speculation that at least one of the nine justices will retire this summer. Conservative Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, appears to be the most likely to leave the court soon. Analysts say the anti-Gonzales chatter symbolizes the increasingly aggressive nature of the political maneuvering behind Supreme Court nominations.

"In my 15 years of watching the nomination process, I have never seen something so dramatic happen so early. This is a very aggressive campaign by legal conservatives to hurt (Gonzales') chances for the high court," says Ronald Klain, who was chief counsel to Sen. Joseph Biden when the Delaware Democrat presided over two Senate confirmation hearings.
Klain later was a top legal adviser to President Clinton during two Supreme Court nominations.

The jockeying to influence Bush in the nomination process is important because a president usually wants to have a successor's name in hand when a Supreme Court retirement is first announced.

In recent weeks, Bush aides debated over what stance to take in a Supreme Court case that challenges the University of Michigan's system of favoring minorities in admissions. Conservatives such as Solicitor General Theodore Olson argued that the administration should not only oppose Michigan's program, but also encourage the high court to reject affirmative action altogether.

But Gonzales successfully argued for a legal stance in which the White House is opposing the Michigan program, but is not pushing for an end to affirmative action. That angered some conservatives, who are citing Gonzales' vote as a Texas judge against a law requiring teenagers seeking abortions to notify their parents * without exception.

Conservative columnist Robert Novak focused on those Gonzales moves in a syndicated article last week. Novak questioned whether Gonzales deserves a seat on the high court and said conservatives were warning Bush not to commit a "grave political blunder," as they believe Bush's father did in appointing David Souter to the court in 1990.
Souter has turned out to be a liberal on the current court.

Earlier in January, The Wall Street Journal's conservative editorial page challenged Gonzales to oppose affirmative action to show that he had Supreme Court timbre. Meanwhile, prominent conservatives inside and outside the Bush administration are increasingly * but privately * complaining about Gonzales.

That criticism of Gonzales is just one factor that could influence Bush if he soon has the chance to make his first appointment to the high court. Other factors: pressure from Hispanic groups to pick a Hispanic other than Gonzales, and a vow by Senate Democrats to oppose any court nominee whom they view as too extreme in his or her views.

Gonzales is one of a few prominent lawyers who are on various "short lists" of potential court nominees kept by administration officials.

Others include J. Michael Luttig and J. Harvie Wilkinson, veteran judges of the Richmond, Va.-based U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit; Judge Samuel Alito of the 3rd Circuit in Newark, N.J.; Judge Emilio Garza of the 5th Circuit in San Antonio; California Supreme Court Justice Janice Brown; and Olson.

Some conservatives also are touting Miguel Estrada, a native of Honduras and a former Justice Department lawyer who has been nominated by Bush to serve on the U.S. appeals court in Washington, D.C. Democrats are protesting his lower court nomination, so Estrada would be a long shot for any high court appointment this year.

For conservatives who would oppose a Gonzales nomination, speaking out against him "is a risky strategy, because Judge Gonzales is clearly a very powerful force in the administration," says Klain, who was an adviser to Democrat Al Gore when Gore lost to Bush in the 2000 election. That is likely why most of Gonzales' harshest critics, especially those in the administration, decline to speak publicly. And those who do speak up cast their words carefully.

"I am very disappointed in his position in the Michigan case, but he has done a fine job as White House counsel," says Todd Gaziano, a legal director at the Heritage Foundation, a policy group that is home to staunch conservatives.

"If it's true that Judge Gonzales played a strong role in weakening the Justice Department's criticism of racial preferences, then we would have very serious concerns about nominating (him) to the Supreme Court," says Roger Clegg of the Center for Equal Opportunity, which opposes affirmative action.

Gonzales supports allowing universities to consider an applicant's race in order to ensure diverse campuses. But White House insiders say that Bush already was inclined to agree with that stance, even as he opposed Michigan's specific policies. Gonzales did not return calls seeking comment for this story.

Much of conservatives' disapproval of Gonzales likely has less to do with the Michigan case than with their fear that a Bush nominee could be "another Souter."

Thirteen years ago, then-White House chief of staff John Sununu called Souter's nomination a "home run" for conservatives. But today, Souter is firmly in the high court's liberal bloc, supporting abortion rights, affirmative action and a high wall of separation between church and state.

A Republican president and the GOP takeover of the Senate in the November elections probably increased the chances that Rehnquist would step down. He was put on the bench by Republican President Nixon in 1972 and elevated to chief by Republican President Reagan in 1986.

If Bush were to replace the chief with Gonzales, he could actually move the divided court * which now has five conservative justices who generally vote as a bloc * to the left.

The other justices who might be considering retirement are Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, a conservative who sometimes votes with the court's more liberal justices; and John Paul Stevens, 82, who votes with the liberals. Neither has shown signs of slowing down.

If Rehnquist were to retire, the White House might consider elevating one of the sitting justices to chief and then putting a new member of the court into that person's seat. Such a move could give Bush a chance to appease competing constituencies.

A long, long time ago, we were trying to set up a meeting to discuss this position. It currently reports to Scheduling, but I suspect there is very little contact in that regard, and hence that position has no supervision or guidance.

Further, we have come up with many questions as to what exactly the offices does, type of information being collected, the process for collecting information, where the records are kept (hard copy and computer version), which of these records is protected and which are not, what the Usher's Office provides in the way of logs, etc.

We know she has all the information in a stand-alone computer system, but what exactly does this mean. I am going to ask Ellen to send us a couple of examples of what his days look like ... maybe a regular day in the Oval, one on the road, and one a weekend at Camp David. At present we never see what goes in there and have no way of checking the accuracy of the information or providing input on ways to capture what we are hoping to include.

I would like to renew the request to set up a meeting w/Counsel's office et al to discuss the background of this position and what the logical reporting structure should be. I feel strongly that it should not be Scheduling, but rather should more likely report to OOO! Then we should set up a meeting with the Diarist to get a full rundown/status report of what's been worked on ... how current or far behind they are, etc.

Thanks.

A long, long time ago, we were trying to set up a meeting to discuss this position.; It currently reports to Scheduling, but I suspect there is very little contact in that regard, and hence that position has no supervision or guidance.;

Further, we have come up with many questions as to what exactly the offices does, type of information being collected, the process for collecting information, where the records are kept (hard copy and computer version), which of these records is protected and which are not, what the Usher's Office provides in the way of logs, etc.;

We know she has all the information in a stand-alone computer system, but what exactly does this mean.; I am going to ask Ellen to send us a couple of examples of what his days look like ... maybe a regular day in the Oval, one on the road, and one a weekend at Camp David.; At present we never see what goes in there and have no way of checking the accuracy of the information or providing input on ways to capture what we are hoping to include.

I would like to renew the request to set up a meeting w/Counsel's office et al to discuss the background of this position and what the logical reporting structure should be.; I feel strongly that it should not be Scheduling, but rather should more likely report to OOO!; Then we should set up a meeting with the Diarist to get a full rundown/status report of what's been worked on ... how current or far behind they are, etc.;

Thanks.

Subject: op-ed in Boston Globe today re Pickering

Any luck on submitting Judge's op-ed? We just continue to take it -- without any meaningful Administration response.

Questionable judges

T'S A NEW year, but President Bush is backing outdated federal judges.

Now that Republicans control the Senate, there's a good chance Bush can push his nominees through. But in some cases this would be unfortunate match-making. The last two elections suggest that many voters have marched to the middle of the road. Federal judges should reflect this moderate mind-set.

Instead, Bush is nominating political lightning rods. Among them is US District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, whose nomination was defeated last year by Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Pickering has been criticized for his efforts to reduce the sentence of a convicted cross-burner. He has the support of Trent Lott, the former Republican leader in the Senate and a fellow Mississippian, but that has left Pickering smudged by Lott's praise of Strom Thurmond's segregationist run for the presidency in 1948. And Pickering has a record of dismissing employment discrimination cases without holding trials.

In a review, the American Bar Association found Pickering well qualified to be a judge. But the bar doesn't measure the importance of symbols. Pickering isn't the best person to reassure the country that the federal courts care about protecting hard-won social progress on workers' and civil rights.

The Senate Judiciary Committee - and, in turn, the full Senate - should scrutinize the records of Pickering and other nominees with a simple question in mind: Does this candidate fit the needs of the times?

Care must be taken. Some say Pickering is a stalking-horse, that Republicans will sacrifice his nomination hoping to draw opposition away from other conservative nominees who are younger and would likely spend far more time on the bench than Pickering, who is 65.

This group includes Judge Priscilla Owen of the Texas Supreme Court, who has been nominated to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. She has been described as being too conservative.

Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont, former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, called Owen's record "too extreme even in the context of the very conservative Texas Supreme Court." Leahy points to several cases when that court's Republican majority criticized Owen for extreme dissenting opinions, including a medical malpractice case in which she ignored precedents set by the court's earlier rulings. Owen also has a history of stretching the law too far to block minors from getting abortions, and she has compiled a troubling record on employment discrimination cases.

Bush and his allies often reassure the public about the administration's judicial nominees with platitudes about what fine people they are. This may be true.

The Senate must be tougher in its scrutiny. These nominees should have a proven ability to protect and promote the progress of justice in America.

The reporter characterized the White House's consideration and evaluation of Judge Glenda Sanders for a federal position on the basis of an anonymous source. Judge Sanders is a highly qualified candidate for a federal judicial position who has a very impressive record. She has acted forthrightly and honorably with the White House and Department of Justice throughout all aspects of the selection process. [N.B. Ted Ullyot, the author of this e-mail, is a new Associate Counsel, and is taking over the NextWave case from Helgi Walker.]

Summary: The Supreme Court this morning handed down its decision in FCC v. NextWave. By a vote of 8-1, the Court ruled against the FCC, holding that the Commission's revocation of NextWave's licenses violated the Bankruptcy Code and was therefore invalid. This was the same conclusion reached by the DC Circuit. Justice Scalia wrote the majority opinion, and Justice Breyer dissented. The Court does not give any detailed guidance as to what the FCC, NextWave, or the second-round bidders can or should do next -- it concludes simply by saying that the DC Circuit's decision is affirmed. The DC Circuit, in its now-affirmed decision, had sent the proceedings back to the FCC, so that is where they will presumably resume (with the licenses now in NextWave's hands).

Detail: Scalia's opinion for the Court is brief and straightforward, marching through and rejecting each of the three arguments put forward by the FCC. The provision of the Bankruptcy Code at issue -- Section 525(a) -- provides that "a governmental unit may not . . . revoke . . . a license . . . to . . . a person that is . . . a debtor under [the Bankruptcy Code] . . . solely because such . . . debtor . . . has not paid a debt that is dischargeable . . . ." The FCC's three arguments, and the Court's reasons for rejecting them, were as follows. 1. FCC argued that it had not revoked NextWave's license "solely because" of NextWave's nonpayment; instead, the rejection was due at least in part to the FCC's pursuit of a "valid regulatory motive" (namely enforcing the conditions of the auction). The Court rejected this, saying that such an exception would swallow the rule, because there is virtually always some theoretically valid motive behind an agency's decision. 2. FCC argued that NextWave's obligation to make timely payments to the FCC was not a "debt that is dischargeable" in bankruptcy, but rather a license condition. The Court rejected this one -- reasoning that the Bankruptcy Code defines debts very broadly, so "a debt is a debt, even when the obligation to pay it is also a regulatory condition." 3. FCC argued that to read Section 525 of the Bankruptcy Code as prohibiting the FCC's revocation (as the Court did) would create an unnecessary conflict between the Bankruptcy Code and the Communications Act. The Court dismissed this argument, finding that there is no inherent conflict -- because the Communications Act does not make cancellation the only possible penalty for failure to make timely payments.

In dissent, Breyer contends that the Court has been too literal in reading the language of Section 525, and that if one considers the purposes of the Bankruptcy Code, it is clear that in certain cases (such as this one) the government should be allowed to enforce a sales contract through repossession (license revocation in this case).

Treasury Nominee Snow Faces Senate on CSX Record, Bush Tax Cuts

Treasury Nominee Snow Faces Senate on CSX Record, Bush Tax Cuts

Washington, Jan. 27 (Bloomberg) -- John Snow, who once campaigned for a balanced federal budget, tomorrow will try to convince senators he's the right pick to become U.S. Treasury secretary in an era of slow economic growth and rising deficits.

Snow is expected to win confirmation and become the 73rd Treasury secretary, lawmakers said ahead of what may be a half-day hearing before the Senate Finance Committee. First, he may face questions about President George W. Bush's tax-cut plan, the dollar's decline, and why his pay as chief executive of CSX Corp. rose out of proportion with the railroad's stock performance.

``Mr. Snow will receive a fair hearing, but not a rubber stamp,'' said Senator Max Baucus of Montana, the finance committee's ranking Democrat. ``During this time of economic uncertainty, we need a strong economic team.''

Bush upended his economic team last month after the U.S. lost jobs for a second year and experienced a third straight annual stock market decline. The Republican president tapped Snow, the chief executive of the No. 3 railroad, to replace the ousted Paul O'Neill and to champion a $670 billion, 10-year proposal to aid the economy.

``He's a solid pick -- he's going to get confirmed,'' said Senator John Breaux, a Louisiana Democrat.

One task the 63-year-old Snow may confront is squaring his previous congressional testimony supporting a balanced federal budget with the administration's latest spending and tax-cut plans. Several economists estimate the U.S. budget deficit may reach $300 billion or more this year, depending on whether and when the stimulus plan is approved, how fast the economy grows and the effect of a possible war with Iraq.

Dollar Policy

Currency traders await Snow's remarks on foreign-exchange policy. The White House in recent weeks that signaled Snow won't change the eight-year support for a strong dollar, which economists say limits inflation at the expense of disappointing manufacturers who want a weaker dollar to help boost exports. The dollar fell 15 percent against a group of six main currencies last year, the biggest decline since 1987. So far this year, it's down 2.6 percent. The dollar fell today for a record 10th straight day against the euro, which was introduced in 1999.

Snow also will be the first corporate executive to undergo Senate confirmation for a Cabinet post since accounting scandals at companies including Enron Corp. and WorldCom Inc. Those crises brought attention to companies' accounting practices, weak oversight by directors and exorbitant pay packages.

``American businesses have taken a great hit in credibility throughout the world, '' said Nell Minow, editor of the Corporate Library, a Portland, Maine-based shareholder advocacy group.

Corporate Ties

Some senators have said they want the nominee's ties to other companies reviewed. While at CSX, Snow served at various times as a director of at least 22 other companies, including Circuit City Stores Inc., U.S. Steel Corp., Johnson & Johnson and Verizon Communications Inc.

``The record needs to be examined,'' Senator Jon Corzine, a New Jersey Democrat and a former Goldman, Sachs & Co. chairman who is not on the confirmation panel, said last week. ``I'd like to examine it in detail and see whether there were conflicts.''

The nominee will cite his membership of a Conference Board panel that investigated corporate malfeasance and last week's pledge to go beyond the requirement of the law and sell his CSX holdings and stock in 60 other companies if confirmed.

Snow became CEO of CSX in 1989 and built a personal net worth estimated at $100 million. He sold ships, barges and warehouses to focus CSX on the railroad and led the purchase of Conrail Inc. assets with Norfolk Southern Corp. for $10.2 billion in 1997.

Logjams after that takeover almost wiped out 1999 profit, and CSX stock trades at about half its price before the Conrail offer.

During the decade that ended in December, CSX shares fell 17 percent while the Standard & Poor's 500 Stock Index more than doubled. Snow's salary rose to $1.25 million last year from $961,000 in 1996.

Personal Nature

While Snow is a former deputy Transportation secretary and since 1993 has appeared seven times before Congressional panels, the visit may get more personal. Administration officials have prepped him for questions about memberships to the Augusta National Golf Club, which excludes women, and the Commonwealth Club in Richmond, Virginia, which once barred blacks.

The nominee also may be asked for more details on a 1988 child-support dispute with his first wife and an arrest for drunk driving in 1982; at Treasury, he would oversee the department's newly formed Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau.

Snow may have to backtrack on some earlier public comments seeking a balanced budget. Last February, he warned that a stimulus package at that time might trigger ``problems down the road,'' and in 1995 he led a $2 million advertising campaign for a balanced budget as chairman of the Business Roundtable.

``It's standard Senate theater to raise old quotes, and Snow will certainly be asked to respond to his past statements on deficits,'' said Kevin Hassett, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and one of 15 economists who briefed Bush on the economy last week.

The White House predicts a budget deficit of 2 percent to 3 percent of gross domestic product in the next two fiscal years and Treasury is asking for an increase in its borrowing authority.

Democrats complain that Bush's plan to end taxes on stock dividends and accelerate income-tax cuts is biased toward the rich, will balloon the federal deficit and do little for the economy.

Personal Nature

While Snow is a former deputy Transportation secretary and since 1993 has appeared seven times before Congressional panels, the visit may get more personal. Administration officials have prepped him for questions about memberships to the Augusta National Golf Club, which excludes women, and the Commonwealth Club in Richmond, Virginia, which once barred blacks.

The nominee also may be asked for more details on a 1988 child-support dispute with his first wife and an arrest for drunk driving in 1982; at Treasury, he would oversee the department's newly formed Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau.

Snow may have to backtrack on some earlier public comments seeking a balanced budget. Last February, he warned that a stimulus package at that time might trigger ``problems down the road,'' and in 1995 he led a $2 million advertising campaign for a balanced budget as chairman of the Business Roundtable.

``It's standard Senate theater to raise old quotes, and Snow will certainly be asked to respond to his past statements on deficits,'' said Kevin Hassett, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and one of 15 economists who briefed Bush on the economy last week.

The White House predicts a budget deficit of 2 percent to 3 percent of gross domestic product in the next two fiscal years and Treasury is asking for an increase in its borrowing authority. Democrats complain that Bush's plan to end taxes on stock dividends and accelerate income-tax cuts is biased toward the rich, will balloon the federal deficit and do little for the economy.

Sen Grassley: Snow Hearing May Run 2 Days;Corp Issues Key

Dow Jones Business News via Dow Jones

WASHINGTON (Dow Jones)--U.S. Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said Monday that his committee's confirmation hearing for John Snow as Treasury secretary may take more than one day, with corporate governance the primary issue.

"If it takes all day, it will take all day. If it takes the next day, we'll get through the hearing," Grassley told reporters. "We'll have to wait until the hearing to see if there are any problems... I don't anticipate any."

Corporate governance will likely be foremost among senators' concerns at Tuesday's hearing for the CSX Corp. (CSX) chairman and chief executive, the senator said.

"The only thing that I know negative about getting it up very early is members of both sides of the aisle - but particularly Democrats - have some questions on corporate governance that haven't been answered yet," he said.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., has said questioning will focus on corporate governance issues such as a $24.5 million loan Snow got from CSX to buy the company's stock. The loan was forgiven when the stock price dropped.

Grassley played down the significance of questions raised about the Treasury nominee's personal life. Since President George W. Bush nominated Snow last month, the public has learned of Snow's 1982 drunken-driving arrest and a 1988 child-support lawsuit his ex-wife filed.

"I'm going to wait until tomorrow to see what the reaction is, but based upon the early stories and what I've heard from my colleagues since then I don't anticipate problems now I didn't originally anticipate," he said.

Just wanted to let you know that the Sen Repub Conference room is 212 Dirksen SOB. I gave them a heads up that we'd be delivering a bunch of binders to them for distribution at the joint RPC/SRC Members meeting. (count: 75)

The 51 binders for Steering lunch on Wed should still go to the VP's office at S212.

Thank!

I spoke with Chad Groover this evening. They do not expect Grassley to attend the hearing Wednesday for more than half an hour (conflict with Budget Committee). However, they intend to submit some questions for the record (Cook only) related to whistleblowers (general questions on her view of whether the qui-tam provisions of the False Claims Act are constitutional). I asked him if, in the event Grassley returns to the hearing, he would be likely to ask these questions live. He said he doubted it. Thought it was worth you all (OLP) passing it along to Justice Cook in the slim chance he does raise it Wednesday during the hearing.

Great. Sounds like it's all quiet on press front. Based on conversations with staff last night, reports below on hearing appear accurate: 1 day and a real push to swift confirmation. There is going to be a real push to get questions for the record submitted quickly and we have to be focused on getting an equally swift turnaround to keep our momentum.

Bush's Treasury Choice To Be Questioned on Hill

CSX Chief Is Expected to Be Confirmed

President Bush's nominee for Treasury secretary, John W. Snow of CSX Corp., will face questioning at his confirmation hearing today from Democrats who contend that he was a pampered chief executive who profited from corporate favors, congressional aides said.

Nevertheless, Senate Finance Committee officials said the hearing will last less than one day and even Democrats predicted that Snow will be swiftly confirmed when the committee votes, possibly within a few days of the hearing.

Bush nominated Snow, who is chairman and chief executive of the Richmond-based transportation conglomerate, to succeed Paul H. O'Neill after he was abruptly fired as Treasury secretary in December. Administration officials said a major reason for Snow's selection was that he would be a credible and committed advocate for Bush's $674 billion jobs and growth package, which has so far proved to be a tough sell on Capitol Hill.

The Finance Committee released Snow's responses to senators' questions about his sale of 120,000 CSX shares last year, less than a month before the company announced weak earnings expectations that prompted the stock price to fall. Snow said he had indicated his intent to sell the shares four months in advance, and said that at the time of the August sale, "I had no knowledge that the company's third-quarter revenues would result in lower earnings."

Snow also was asked about CSX's forgiveness of a $24 million corporate loan that he used to buy CSX stock in 1996. Snow said the loan was forgiven because of changes that were made in a program that encouraged managers to buy stock, and he said his 10-year proceeds from participating in the program were $4 million.

The administration portrayed Snow as a champion of ethical corporate policies, noting that he co-chaired the Conference Board's Blue Ribbon Commission on Public Trust and Private Enterprise, which called for tougher corporate governance practices before they drew widespread public attention.

"John Snow has been a leader in the area of corporate best practices and he looks forward to addressing his record on this at the hearing," said Robert Nichols, the Treasury Department's chief spokesman.

Snow has resigned from the Commonwealth Club of Richmond, which excluded African Americans during part of the time he was a member. Snow said on his questionnaire that he "actively supported the application of the Club's first African American member," who joined in 1988. The administration noted that Snow served on the board of Virginia Union University, a historically black institution.

The administration, turning to a key Democratic constituency in an effort to sway potential critics on the committee, collected letters of praise for Snow from union leaders he worked with at CSX.

Peter Keisler has just reiterated that they are prepared to go into court to argue that classification at this point is appropriate and thus precludes the documents from being disclosed under FOIA. Please be aware that the stay expires at the end of the day Thursday so USTR either needs to classify by then or seek an extension of the stay. USTR needs to talk to Shannen before Thursday so that papers of either sort can be prepared.

Subject: RE: USTR FOIA case

I spoke to Peter Davidson, who I call daily for reports on this because he doesn't report in as he promises. He says USTR is moving toward releasing the documents on Friday; that DOJ is counseling them to do so and believes that it's too late to classify; that they're in discussions with Chile to see how they would react; that despite our repeated expressions that he should be ready to classify the documents this week they don't know if they can pull that off; and that they are trying to add a line to some State Department EO that will help them classify in the future. I'm book solid today so I'm wondering Brett if you can check in with Peter K. to see where Justice is on (a) appeal and (b) classification at this point in the process, and let us know. According to Peter, they still haven't heard no on an appeal and Zoellick may try to prevail on Ted to let them do it.

Hispanic Caucus Decries Nominee's Presence At Speech
Responding to reports that Miguel Estrada, President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, will be First Lady Laura Bush's guest at the State of the Union address tonight, Congressional Hispanic Caucus Chairman Ciro Rodriguez, D-Texas, said today that Estrada does not represent Hispanic ideals and does not have judicial experience. "We will support President Bush's Hispanic judicial nominees when they have a demonstrated commitment to protecting the rights of Latinos, and to preserving and expanding the progress that has been made on civil rights and individual liberties," Gonzalez said.
Estrada, who is from Honduras, is a partner with the firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. He served as a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, was an assistant U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York and an assistant to the Justice Department's solicitor general under former President Clinton. - by April Fulton

We need to cancel the 2:00 with Campbell staff tomorrow, I assume, because of RPC?

Judge Gonzales update
1. He has signed the thank yous to the 10 Judiciary, Frist, McConnell, and Santorum. I took them back in to him so he could add handwritten notes at bottom.
2. He is calling Pryor today re Leon Holmes.
3. He is calling Specter today or tomorrow re PA judges.
4. He has RPC on his schedule for tomorrow.

On my end:
1. Producing binders today with paralegal; will be ready for delivery first thing in a.m.; will likely need Leg Affairs to deliver if possible
2. Need to get you draft letter from Frist and Hatch to President re plan
3. Owe you the binders on Owen and Pickering for Collins and Chafee staff
4. I will be there at RPC tomorrow and after
5. Waiting on Ashley for word on Pickering op-ed; she is checking with Dan
6. Preparing letters for Judge (i) to Leahy and Hatch re consultation, (ii) to Schumer re Pickering, and (iii) to Gephardt re Ronnie White

See below -- I had suggested to Kyle that I take Tennessee & Vermont. Is Kyle's proposal of Indiana & Vermont meaningfully better or worse?

Kyle called in and said that he traded California for "Indiana" and "Vermont."; Does that sound good to you?

Hispanic Caucus Decries Nominee's Presence At Speech
Responding to reports that Miguel Estrada, President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, will be First Lady Laura Bush's guest at the State of the Union address tonight, Congressional Hispanic Caucus Chairman Ciro Rodriguez, D-Texas, said today that Estrada does not represent Hispanic ideals and does not have judicial experience. "We will support President Bush's Hispanic judicial nominees when they have a demonstrated commitment to protecting the rights of Latinos, and to preserving and expanding the progress that has been made on civil rights and individual liberties," Gonzalez said. Estrada, who is from Honduras, is a partner with the firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. He served as a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, was an assistant U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York and an assistant to the Justice Department's solicitor general under former President Clinton. - by April Fulton

Ted signed the "no appeal" decision. It will be difficult to get an extension to decide whether and what to classify, acc to Shannon. So USTR needs to classify by Thursday as I understand it. What do we/I need to do to make that happen?

Brett,

Remember the Crime Victims Award Plaque issue several months ago. Apparently, it is still not resolved. The way it ended in our office is that you drafted a letter for Harriet to sign with Trophy Mart. But Trophy Mart no longer exists. According to Harriet below, you were sent the orignial agreement or letter. Do you have this?

Patrick, after this email, Carol discovered that Trophy Mart had been sold and was no longer going to exist and she sent a package of materials to Brett (According to Carol, including the original proposed agreement). There was more email traffic that we could just get someone with the new company to sign. I am having difficulty determining if anything was ever done about it after that. Do you have the original agreement or letter in your files?

Subject: response to NY Times editorial on Estrada

Can we distribute below at Weyrich lunch -- need to know by 12:30 p.m.

Miguel Estrada

Responses to New York Times Editorial of January 29, 2003

ALLEGATION: "People who have worked with him over the years, at the solicitor general's office and elsewhere, report that his interpretation of the law is driven by an unusually conservative agenda."

FACTS:

Estrada received the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every category in every performance review at the Solicitor General's office. In addition, the following former colleagues have sent letters to the Committee:

Seth Waxman, former Solicitor General to President Clinton

"During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence.... I greatly enjoyed working with Miguel, profited from our interactions, and was genuinely sorry when he decided to leave the office in favor of private practice... I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, September 17, 2001.)

Ronald Klain, former Counselor to Vice President Al Gore

"Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent... Miguel will rule justly toward all, without showing favor to any group or individual.... the challenges he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need." (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, January 16, 2002.)

Bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at U.S. Department of Justice

"Miguel is a brilliant lawyer, with an extraordinary capacity for articulate and incisive legal analysis and a commanding knowledge and appreciation for the law. Moreover, he is a person whose conduct is characterized by the utmost integrity and scrupulous fairness, as befits a nominee to the federal bench. In addition, Miguel has a deep and abiding love for his adopted country and the principles for which it stands, and in particular the rule of law. We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, September 19, 2002.)

ALLEGATION: "One way to begin to fill this gap [in the public record], and give the Senate something to work with, would be to make available the numerous memorandums of law that Mr. Estrada wrote when he worked for the solicitor general's office, as other nominees have done."

FACTS: Every living former Solicitor General -- including Archibald Cox, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman -- signed a joint letter to the Committee in response to the Committee's request for these memos arguing that the Committee's request was unprecedented and would have a debilitating effect on the Office of Solicitor General in representing the United States.

ALLEGATION: "In private practice, Mr. Estrada defended anti-loitering laws that civil rights groups have attacked as racist."

FACTS: In private practice, Estrada's primary pro bono work was to defend a death row inmate in the Supreme Court seeking to overturn the death sentence. He was retained to defend the anti-gang ordinances, which were enacted in Chicago with the strong support of Democrat Mayor Daley, after being contacted by the Democrat City Solicitor of Chicago.

Brett, we have been made aware of the President's Commission on the United States Postal Service, established under EO 13278 on December 11, 2002. Although it is administratively associated with the Department of Treasury, the Commission is comprised of members appointed by the President, it reports solely to the President, and is slated to be finished by August 30, 2003.

Should we assume that it is creating Presidential records?

Given the very short duration of this Commission, it is important that NARA coordinate with it on records management as soon as possible. Can you please let us know your views on its record status as soon as you can.

Thanks.

Brett:

Tim Goeglein wants Paul Weyrich to write a piece about what the NY Times left out about Estrada. I need some of the points to refute what was in today's editorial and need them VERY QUICKLY. This is what has been done so far.

Steve Lilienthal

1. Harvard Law grad

2. legal immigrant

Right on the masthead of the The New York Times is its age-old slogan that proclaims the newspaper to have "all the news that's fit to print." Ever since I can remember, conservatives have been able to point out time and time again the cases in which the Times' news coverage or its editorials have either distorted or omitted the crucial facts. Evidently, what is fit to print is not really "all the news" but that which is deemed politically correct.

The most recent example came just yesterday in the Times' lead editorial on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit. It comes on the eve of his long-awaited vote by the Judiciary Committee.

The Left is going all out to stop this nomination because they realize that once seated on the federal bench, a judge like Estrada, who is committed to restraint in reaching decisions, can help to launch a counterrevolution to the sound constitutional principles that protect the ordered liberty of our citizens.

Back in September, I wrote a commentary on how the highly qualified Estrada might be in for a rough hearing because the Senate Judiciary Committee was then under the control of the "Gang of Ten." Led by Patrick Leahy, the then-Democratic majority on Judiciary had deep-sixed the nominations of Texas state Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen and U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering.

Estrada exemplifies the American Dream, an immigrant who came to this country as a legal immigrant, a teenager speaking little English but graduating from Harvard Law School and demonstrating his knowledge of the law by arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

Thanks to the wisdom of the American people last November, Estrada will be given a vote by the Senate Judiciary Committee tomorrow, only the "Gang of Ten" has lost more than one of its ranks. Control of the committee has switched hands, and it appears that Estrada may no longer be sitting on the sideline bench much longer.

But the newspaper that endorsed Al Gore in 2000 showed once again that its heart lies with the Left. Yesterday's editorial termed Estrada an "unacceptable" nominee.

Well, what should be "unacceptable" is the way this newspaper editorial

Miguel Estrada
Responses to New York Times Editorial of January 29, 2003

ALLEGATION: &People who have worked with him over the years, at the solicitor general,s office and elsewhere, report that his interpretation of the law is driven by an unusually conservative agenda.8

FACTS:

Estrada received the highest possible rating of &outstanding8 in every category in every performance review at the Solicitor General,s office.; In addition, the following former colleagues have sent letters to the Committee:;

Seth Waxman, former Solicitor General to President Clinton

&During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence(. I greatly enjoyed working with Miguel, profited from our interactions, and was genuinely sorry when he decided to leave the office in favor of private practice(I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada,s intellect and for his integrity.8; (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, September 17, 2001.)

Ronald Klain, former Counselor to Vice President Al Gore

&Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent...; Miguel will rule justly toward all, without showing favor to any group or individual.... the challenges he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need.8; (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, January 16, 2002.)

Bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at U.S. Department of Justice

&Miguel is a brilliant lawyer, with an extraordinary capacity for articulate and incisive legal analysis and a commanding knowledge and appreciation for the law.; Moreover, he is a person whose conduct is characterized by the utmost integrity and scrupulous fairness, as befits a nominee to the federal bench.; In addition, Miguel has a deep and abiding love for his adopted country and the principles for which it stands, and in particular the rule of law. We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints.8; (Excerpt from Letter to Senator Leahy, September 19, 2002.)

ALLEGATION:; &One way to begin to fill this gap [in the public record], and give the Senate something to work with, would be to make available the numerous memorandums of law that Mr. Estrada wrote when he worked for the solicitor general,s office, as other nominees have done.8

FACTS:; Every living former Solicitor General -- including Archibald Cox, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman -- signed a joint letter to the Committee in response to the Committee,s request for these memos arguing that the Committee,s request was unprecedented and would have a debilitating effect on the Office of Solicitor General in representing the United States.

ALLEGATION:; &In private practice, Mr. Estrada defended anti-loitering laws that civil rights groups have attacked as racist.8

FACTS:; In private practice, Estrada,s primary pro bono work was to defend a death row inmate in the Supreme Court seeking to overturn the death sentence.; He was retained to defend the anti-gang ordinances, which were enacted in Chicago with the strong support of Democrat Mayor Daley, after being contacted by the Democrat City Solicitor of Chicago.

Remember the Crime Victims Award Plaque issue several months ago. Apparently, it is still not resolved. The way it ended in our office is that you drafted a letter for Harriet to sign with Trophy Mart. But Trophy Mart no longer exists. According to Harriet below, you were sent the orignial agreement or letter. Do you have this?

Patrick, after this email, Carol discovered that Trophy Mart had been sold and was no longer going to exist and she sent a package of materials to Brett (According to Carol, including the original proposed agreement). There was more email traffic that we could just get someone with the new company to sign. I am having difficulty determining if anything was ever done about it after that. Do you have the original agreement or letter in your files?

Que Pasa, Chuck?

By Herman Badillo
NEW YORK -- Nothing makes Democrats more frenzied than when a Hispanic or African-American goes off the reservation. Witness now the opposition that the Puerto Rican Legal Defense Fund and the usual Washington special interests are giving Miguel Estrada, the young Honduran immigrant-turned-New Yorker that President Bush has nominated to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.
Congressional Democrats have gone so far as to say that Mr. Estrada is a Hispanic "in name only."
But if their behaviour is outrageous it is also par for the course. Half of the Democrats' energy lately seems focused on corraling the nation's two largest minority groups into an intellectual ghetto. The vitriol we saw most famously directed at Clarence Thomas, and more recently at Condoleezza Rice, demands that blacks and Hispanics toe a political line to have their success acknowledged by their own community.
When confirmed by the Senate, Miguel Estrada, a brilliant lawyer with extraordinary credentials, will be the first Hispanic on the second most prestigious court in the land. He will be a role model not just for Hispanics, but for all immigrants and their children. His is the great American success story.
But his confirmation by the Senate will come no thanks to Chuck Schumer, his home-state senator. Mr. Schumer has thrown every old booby-trap in Mr. Estrada's way, and invented a few new ones just for him. When the Senate held a hearing for Mr. Estrada last year, Mr. Estrada's mother told Mr. Schumer that she had voted for him and hoped that he would return the favor. He hasn't yet.
It is hard to blame Democrats of course. They know how their bread is buttered and by whom -- the monied special interest groups that have made a profitable business of opposing the nominations of President Bush. The Hispanic groups that shun Mr. Estrada, including the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which announced its opposition to his nomination last September, are a different matter. They should be ashamed of themselves.
Sen. Orrin Hatch (R., Utah), who heads both the Senate Judiciary and the Senate Republican Hispanic Task Force, put it well when he said that these liberal Hispanic groups "have sold out the aspirations of their people just to sit around schmoozing with the Washington power elite."
Mr. Schumer's one-man campaign against Mr. Estrada has grown tiresome too. Despite the rebuke of every living U.S. solicitor general of both parties dating back four decades, Mr. Schumer continues to make irresponsible demands, never made before for a non-Hispanic nominee, and insists on making backhanded and unfounded insinuations about Mr. Estrada's career and temperament. This treatment of Mr. Estrada is demeaning and unfair, not only to the nominee but also to the confirmation process and the integrity of the Senate.

Mr. Schumer's petulance ignores Mr. Estrada's qualifications, intellect, judgment, bipartisan support, and that he received a unanimous "well qualified" rating -- the highest possible rating -- from the American Bar Association. The liberal Hispanic groups that challenge Mr. Estrada's personal identity as a Hispanic ignore his support by non-partisan Hispanic organizations, such as the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, and the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Schumer and his colleagues are fond of speaking about the need for "diversity" on the courts. Apparently that talk does not extend to President Bush's nominees, since the confirmation of Mr. Estrada would provide just such diversity on this important court. It is past time that Mr. Schumer put an end to his embarrassing grandstanding on Mr. Estrada's nomination.

One would think that a New York senator would know that, whether Puerto Rican, Dominican or Honduran, Hispanics are most united in one thing -- the pride we take in our advancement as Americans regardless of where we started. One suspects that Mr. Schumer may learn this lesson yet, and that Miguel Estrada's name is one that Charles Schumer will hear repeated when he runs for re-election all too soon.

Mr. Badillo, a former Congressman, is a lawyer in New York City.

The Free Congress Commentary
Miguel Estrada: Will Today Bring
News That Is Truly Fit to Print?
By Paul M. Weyrich

Right on the masthead of the The New York Times is its age-old slogan that proclaims the newspaper contains "all the news that's fit to print." I must admit that it is a great slogan.

No doubt The New York Times is truly a well-read paper. Many Americans rely on the Times for its in-depth coverage of financial and foreign news, and the arts and entertainment. It has some talented, very knowledgeable reporters. However, many of these reporters openly display in their writing the predictable liberal, establishment viewpoint, and they are also not afraid to demonstrate a hostility toward viewpoints considered to be Politically Incorrect.

Ever since I can remember, conservatives have constantly been citing cases in which the Times' news coverage or its editorials have either distorted or

omitted the crucial facts. I've certainly done so a few times myself during the more than three decades that I've lived in Washington. Evidently, what is fit to print in the Times is not always "all the news" or the whole story but often times that which is deemed to be PC.

The most recent example came just yesterday in the Times' lead editorial on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit.

The Left is going all out to stop this nomination. They realize that once seated on the federal bench, a judge like Estrada, who is committed to restraint and textualism in reaching decisions, can protect and defend the sound constitutional principles that ensure ordered liberty for our citizens.

Back in September, I wrote a commentary on how the highly qualified Estrada might be in for a rough hearing because the Senate Judiciary Committee was then under the control of the "Gang of Ten." Led by Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), the then-Democratic majority on Judiciary had deep-sixed the nominations of Texas state Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen and U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering.

Estrada exemplifies the American Dream, a legal immigrant who came to this country as a teenager speaking little English, but graduating from Harvard Law School and demonstrating his knowledge of the law by arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

Thanks to the wisdom exhibited by the American people last November, Estrada is expected to be given a vote by the Senate Judiciary Committee today. The "Gang of Ten" has seen its majority status diminished. Control of the committee has switched hands.

But the newspaper that endorsed Al Gore in 2000 showed once again that its heart lies with the Left. Yesterday's editorial branded Estrada as an "unacceptable" nominee.

What should be "unacceptable" is the way this newspaper editorial failed to tell the whole truth about Miguel Estrada.

For example, take the Times' assertion that Estrada lacked the respect of his peers, who viewed him as someone more interested in being an ideologue than in interpreting the law.

Well, then why would Ron Klain, who served as counselor to Vice President Al
Gore, credit Estrada for having a "deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent...Miguel will rule justly toward all, without showing favor to any group or individual"? And why would Seth Waxman, who was President Clinton's Solicitor General and Estrada's boss, strongly support Estrada's nomination?

Why would a bipartisan group of fourteen former colleagues of Estrada who worked with him in the Office of Solicitor General, write to Leahy last year in his support? Their letter said that even though they "hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum...we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints."

That sounds like someone who was a good colleague and who will be a judge who exhibits restraint in his rulings, who will interpret the law as written, who will not be an activist who whips up rulings using the Left's ideological litmus tests as the recipe. The Left's interest groups are brazenly seeking judges who will be very open in admitting their intention to make laws -- even if there is no real precedent to do so -- that will fulfill their item-by-item wish lists. Those who do not openly endorse the wish lists will find themselves disparaged by these groups as being "anti" this or that issue. It's a simplistic way of looking at things, and an inappropriate way to select judges for our Federal courts.

Indeed, leave it to the Times to charge that "Mr. Estrada defended anti-loitering laws that civil rights and [sic] groups have attacked as racist." In reality, Estrada was retained to defend anti-gang ordinances enacted in Chicago with the strong backing of Mayor Richard Daley.

Just ask yourself: Who are most often the victims of gang activity?

This much I can tell you: It's not upper-middle-class editorial writers living in Manhattan in luxury apartments with 24 hour security guards or out on Long Island in one of its exclusive suburbs.

The Times editorial leaves the impression that, unlike past nominees, the memorandums that Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office should be made available to the Judiciary Committee.

The Times forgot to point out what every living ex-Solicitor General had to say about the then-Democrat dominated Judiciary Committee's request for the memos that Estrada wrote in the Solicitor General's office. What these distinguished attorneys told the "Gang of Ten" was that this was an unprecedented request that, if granted, would have a debilitating effect on the Office of Solicitor General in representing the United States. Signing that letter were Democrats Archibald Cox, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman as well as Republicans Robert Bork, Kenneth Starr, and Charles Fried.

Don't be surprised today if a member of the "Gang of Nine" cites this editorial as providing reasons why Estrada should not have his nomination sent to the Senate floor. They will recite it, expecting that many impressed
C-SPAN viewers will view the Times name with reverence. However, in this case, The New York Times failed to print all it should have about Miguel Estrada. What it did print was, in the instances that I cited, misleading and certainly not the whole story about this fine attorney who has the potential to be an outstanding jurist.

Now, that the "Gang of Ten" is no more, I hope that there will be enough senators on the Judiciary Committee who won't be relying on the judgment of the editorial writers of The New York Times. If senators follow their judgment, then I have no doubt that this nomination will finally be sent to the floor of the United States Senate.

Now, given the problems that some of the most qualified, respected and able nominees of President Bush, encountered from the "Gang of Ten," if the Senate Judiciary Committee, under its new leadership, votes today to send Estrada's nomination to the Senate floor, that will definitely be news that is fit to print.

An Immigrant Success Story: Miguel Estrada Nominated for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

Miguel Estrada immigrated to the United States from Honduras while 17 years old. He spoke very little English, but through hard work gained admission into Columbia College in New York where he graduated magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa in 1983. Three years later, he received his law degree magna cum laude from Harvard Law School, and worked as a law clerk for Judge Amalya L. Kearse and clerked for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy. At the U.S. Department of Justice, his former colleagues in the Clinton Administration described him a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect and fairness, compassionate, principled and ethical.

Now an attorney in private practice at Gibson & Dunn, Mr. Estrada is a living testimony that for immigrants, good work ethic and determination could lead to the great opportunities this country offers.

If confirmed by the U.S. Senate, Mr. Estrada will be the first immigrant to serve in the nation?s second highest court. We should all be proud of the achievements of this fellow immigrant and give him our support. So please, call your Senators and tell them to vote to confirm President Bush?s nomination of Miguel Estrada.

NEW YORK -- Nothing makes Democrats more frenzied than when a Hispanic or African-American goes off the reservation. Witness now the opposition that the Puerto Rican Legal Defense Fund and the usual Washington special interests are giving Miguel Estrada, the young Honduran immigrant-turned-New Yorker that President Bush has nominated to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.
Congressional Democrats have gone so far as to say that Mr. Estrada is a Hispanic "in name only."
But if their behaviour is outrageous it is also par for the course. Half of the Democrats' energy lately seems focused on corraling the nation's two largest minority groups into an intellectual ghetto. The vitriol we saw most famously directed at Clarence Thomas, and more recently at Condoleezza Rice, demands that blacks and Hispanics toe a political line to have their success acknowledged by their own community.
When confirmed by the Senate, Miguel Estrada, a brilliant lawyer with extraordinary credentials, will be the first Hispanic on the second most prestigious court in the land. He will be a role model not just for Hispanics, but for all immigrants and their children. His is the great American success story.
But his confirmation by the Senate will come no thanks to Chuck Schumer, his home-state senator. Mr. Schumer has thrown every old booby-trap in Mr. Estrada's way, and invented a few new ones just for him. When the Senate held a hearing for Mr. Estrada last year, Mr. Estrada's mother told Mr. Schumer that she had voted for him and hoped that he would return the favor. He hasn't yet.
It is hard to blame Democrats of course. They know how their bread is buttered and by whom -- the monied special interest groups that have made a profitable business of opposing the nominations of President Bush. The Hispanic groups that shun Mr. Estrada, including the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which announced its opposition to his nomination last September, are a different matter. They should be ashamed of themselves.

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R., Utah), who heads both the Senate Judiciary and the Senate Republican Hispanic Task Force, put it well when he said that these liberal Hispanic groups "have sold out the aspirations of their people just to sit around schmoozing with the Washington power elite."

Mr. Schumer's one-man campaign against Mr. Estrada has grown tiresome too. Despite the rebuke of every living U.S. solicitor general of both parties dating back four decades, Mr. Schumer continues to make irresponsible demands, never made before for a non-Hispanic nominee, and insists on making backhanded and unfounded insinuations about Mr. Estrada's career and temperament. This treatment of Mr. Estrada is demeaning and unfair, not only to the nominee but also to the confirmation process and the integrity of the Senate.

Mr. Schumer's petulance ignores Mr. Estrada's qualifications, intellect, judgment, bipartisan support, and that he received a unanimous "well qualified" rating -- the highest possible rating -- from the American Bar Association. The liberal Hispanic groups that challenge Mr. Estrada's personal identity as a Hispanic ignore his support by non-partisan Hispanic organizations, such as the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, and the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Schumer and his colleagues are fond of speaking about the need for "diversity" on the courts. Apparently that talk does not extend to President Bush's nominees, since the confirmation of Mr. Estrada would provide just such diversity on this important court. It is past time that Mr. Schumer put an end to his embarrassing grandstanding on Mr. Estrada's nomination.

One would think that a New York senator would know that, whether Puerto Rican, Dominican or Honduran, Hispanics are most united in one thing -- the pride we take in our advancement as Americans regardless of where we started. One suspects that Mr. Schumer may learn this lesson yet, and that Miguel Estrada's name is one that Charles Schumer will hear repeated when he runs for re-election all too soon.

Mr. Badillo, a former Congressman, is a lawyer in New York City.

Miguel Estrada: Will Today Bring

News That Is Truly Fit to Print?

By Paul M. Weyrich

Right on the masthead of the The New York Times is its age-old slogan that proclaims the newspaper contains "all the news that's fit to print." I must admit that it is a great slogan.

No doubt The New York Times is truly a well-read paper. Many Americans rely on the Times for its in-depth coverage of financial and foreign news, and the arts and entertainment. It has some talented, very knowledgeable reporters. However, many of these reporters openly display in their writing the predictable liberal, establishment viewpoint, and they are also not afraid to demonstrate a hostility toward viewpoints considered to be Politically Incorrect.

Ever since I can remember, conservatives have constantly been citing cases in which the Times' news coverage or its editorials have either distorted or omitted the crucial facts. I've certainly done so a few times myself during the more than three decades that I've lived in Washington. Evidently, what is fit to print in the Times is not always "all the news" or the whole story but often times that which is deemed to be PC.

The most recent example came just yesterday in the Times' lead editorial on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit.

The Left is going all out to stop this nomination. They realize that once seated on the federal bench, a judge like Estrada, who is committed to restraint and textualism in reaching decisions, can protect and defend the sound constitutional principles that ensure ordered liberty for our citizens.

Back in September, I wrote a commentary on how the highly qualified Estrada might be in for a rough hearing because the Senate Judiciary Committee was then under the control of the "Gang of Ten." Led by Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), the then-Democratic majority on Judiciary had deep-sixed the nominations of Texas state Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen and U.S. District Court Judge Charles Pickering.

Estrada exemplifies the American Dream, a legal immigrant who came to this country as a teenager speaking little English, but graduating from Harvard Law School and demonstrating his knowledge of the law by arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

Thanks to the wisdom exhibited by the American people last November, Estrada is expected to be given a vote by the Senate Judiciary Committee today. The "Gang of Ten" has seen its majority status diminished. Control of the committee has switched hands.

But the newspaper that endorsed Al Gore in 2000 showed once again that its heart lies with the Left. Yesterday's editorial branded Estrada as an "unacceptable" nominee.

What should be "unacceptable" is the way this newspaper editorial failed to tell the whole truth about Miguel Estrada.

For example, take the Times' assertion that Estrada lacked the respect of his peers, who viewed him as someone more interested in being an ideologue than in interpreting the law.

Well, then why would Ron Klain, who served as counselor to Vice President Al

Gore, credit Estrada for having a "deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent...Miguel will rule justly toward all, without showing favor to any group or individual"? And why would Seth Waxman, who was President Clinton's Solicitor General and Estrada's boss, strongly support Estrada's nomination?

Why would a bipartisan group of fourteen former colleagues of Estrada who worked with him in the Office of Solicitor General, write to Leahy last year in his support? Their letter said that even though they "hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum...we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints."

That sounds like someone who was a good colleague and who will be a judge who exhibits restraint in his rulings, who will interpret the law as written, who will not be an activist who whips up rulings using the Left's ideological litmus tests as the recipe. The Left's interest groups are brazenly seeking judges who will be very open in admitting their intention to make laws -- even if there is no real precedent to do so -- that will fulfill their item-by-item wish lists. Those who do not openly endorse the wish lists will find themselves disparaged by these groups as being "anti" this or that issue. It's a simplistic way of looking at things, and an inappropriate way to select judges for our Federal courts.

Indeed, leave it to the Times to charge that "Mr. Estrada defended anti-loitering laws that civil rights and [sic] groups have attacked as racist." In reality, Estrada was retained to defend anti-gang ordinances enacted in Chicago with the strong backing of Mayor Richard Daley.

Just ask yourself: Who are most often the victims of gang activity?

This much I can tell you: It's not upper-middle-class editorial writers living in Manhattan in luxury apartments with 24 hour security guards or out on Long Island in one of its exclusive suburbs.

The Times editorial leaves the impression that, unlike past nominees, the memorandums that Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office should be made available to the Judiciary Committee.

The Times forgot to point out what every living ex-Solicitor General had to say about the then-Democrat dominated Judiciary Committee's request for the memos that Estrada wrote in the Solicitor General's office. What these distinguished attorneys told the "Gang of Ten" was that this was an unprecedented request that, if granted, would have a debilitating effect on the Office of Solicitor General in representing the United States. Signing that letter were Democrats Archibald Cox, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman as well as Republicans Robert Bork, Kenneth Starr, and Charles Fried.

Don't be surprised today if a member of the "Gang of Nine" cites this editorial as providing reasons why Estrada should not have his nomination sent to the Senate floor. They will recite it, expecting that many impressed C-SPAN viewers will view the Times name with reverence. However, in this case, The New York Times failed to print all it should have about Miguel Estrada. What it did print was, in the instances that I cited, misleading and certainly not the whole story about this fine attorney who has the potential to be an outstanding jurist.

Now, that the "Gang of Ten" is no more, I hope that there will be enough senators on the Judiciary Committee who won't be relying on the judgment of the editorial writers of The New York Times. If senators follow their judgment, then I have no doubt that this nomination will finally be sent to the floor of the United States Senate.

Now, given the problems that some of the most qualified, respected and able nominees of President Bush, encountered from the "Gang of Ten," if the Senate Judiciary Committee, under its new leadership, votes today to send Estrada's nomination to the Senate floor, that will definitely be news that is fit to print.

Subject: possible "Statement by President" after Estrada Committee vote

Ashley: You could use some or all of below as raw material in crafting a statement. I think such a statement would be a good thing tomorrow given the attention this nomination has received. (I think statements on certain other nominees in the future also will be appropriate.)

DRAFT

"I applaud the Senate Judiciary Committee's vote today to approve the nomination of Miguel Estrada to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and to forward the nomination to the full Senate for an up-or-down vote. I now call on the full Senate to act promptly on this superb nominee and to confirm him.

Miguel Estrada came to this country at age 17 as an immigrant from Honduras speaking little English. He has risen to the very top of the legal profession, arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court and earning strong bipartisan respect, admiration, and support. He received a unanimous "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, the highest possible rating. If confirmed, Miguel Estrada would become the first Hispanic ever to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, breaking down a barrier that has stood for too long.

I announced the nomination of Miguel Estrada in the East Room on May 9, 2001, along with 10 other excellent nominees. Yet today, only five of those 11 nominees have received Senate votes. I call on the Senate to end the delays and partisanship on judicial nominations and to ensure that every judicial nominee receives a fair hearing and prompt up-or-down floor vote, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate."

Subject: Transfer of Data

Steve,

Per my call to you on Monday ? this e-mail serves to document the recommended process for transitioning individual system account data such as e-mail or documents in other formats (MS Word, PowerPoint, etc). This prescribed process draws from and is intended to be fully compliant with directions provided by OMB General Counsel as noted in the attached e-mails. Note that the alternative process is to run filters for the non-transferable data ? a process that would take so much time as to be unusable.

Process: Personnel assigned to DHS who have an assigned EOP system (WHO, TPO, OMB) account are permitted take a copy of ?permitted? data that they maintained on their respective system drives (C-drive, J-drive, etc) - procedures on how to copy the data to be provided by the DHS technical support staff. To accommodate the authorized copying of the data, respective individual system accounts will be maintained active until COB February 12, 2003.

It is my understanding that our respective technical staff members are already in discussion.

Provided below is Phil Perry?s direction to OMB TPO staff that states the conditions for data that would be permitted to be copied.

Any question - pls give me a call: (202-494-3197).

Best Regards, Carlos

MEMORANDUM TO OMB TPO STAFF

FROM: PHILIP J. PERRY, GENERAL COUNSEL

SUBJECT: TRANSFER AND HANDLING OF TPO RECORDS

This memorandum provides guidance to all personnel of the Transition Planning Office (TPO). It addresses all documents or email in TPO files, including those received from the White House. Please note that some sections apply to TPO employees who are transferring to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS), while other sections apply to TPO employees transferring to other agencies.

White House Documents (applies to all TPO employees):

When TPO was created, the White House Counsel?s Office made special arrangements for handling documents from "White House" entities that were temporarily provided to TPO personnel (OMB is not a "White House" entity under relevant law). Those arrangements (addressed in depth in earlier memoranda from the White House Counsel's Office) applied generally to emails and other documents from OHS and other White House entities. Those materials should already have blue cover sheets and/or bear the legend ?White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure.?

Please return all such materials to the White House entity from which they originated by routing them through Ken Hill, Executive Secretary for TPO.

You should not take copies of any materials from White House entities with you, unless you receive clearance to do so by Ed McNally, OHS General Counsel.

If you have any questions regarding the treatment of materials from White House entities, please contact Ed McNally at 6-1700.

All other Documents (applies to TPO employees transferring to DHS):

Documents or Email Created at TPO: You may take to DHS copies of any paper documents or email you created at TPO. However, you should make copies only of materials that you will need to perform your mission at DHS. You do not need to check with a lawyer before taking these copies. Keep in mind that the Office of Administration (OA) will be able to provide you access to your TPO materials even after your transfer to DHS.

Documents Received from OMB: You may also take to DHS documents received from OMB, except for Director's Review Books, passback materials or other internal OMB deliberative material not typically shared with agencies. If you have any questions about the nature of OMB documents in your possession, please consult Kimberley Luczynski at 5-7870.

Other Documents Received at TPO: Unless received from OHS or other White House entities, you are free to take copies to DHS.

Archiving: When you depart for the new Department, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived. The appropriate contact at OA is Markus Most at 5-6471. Mr. Most will send, under separate cover, instructions regarding archiving your originals.

For TPO employees transferring to agencies other than DHS: You may not take copies of any TPO documents with you. As above, OA will ensure that all of your original TPO files are properly archived.

Yes, I agree with that on nominations since 1917 -- the year when the cloture rule came into effect. I will check whether there were any successful filibusters on pre-1917 appeals court nominees. I doubt it, but will keep digging.

I see your point, but I think it's a safe bet that no nominations filibuster would have gone on unfettered without a motion to invoke cloture. Accordingly, it's a safe bet that the report contains the universe of attempted filibusters against nominees.

This report does not seem to answer the question whether, before an appeals court nominee has ever been filibustered and not confirmed as a result

Our understanding/research is that there has never been a successful filibuster of appeals court nominee. Do you have any different understanding?

Carlos,

While this documents a process that you have proposed, it does not document the fact that you advised me that you would be unable to allow your network drives to serve as a staging area for us to copy to/from, because your team would not be able to restore the copied data in a timely manner(we have now developed a process that follows all legal guidelines and directions issued by OMB, TPO, and White House General Counsels, and will communicate this process to all appropriate personnel(we will not require assistance from your resources for purposes of migration/copying of approved data and work products(

Thank you for your assistance in this matter,

Steve,

Per my call to you on Monday) this e-mail serves to document the recommended process for transitioning individual system account data such as e-mail or documents in other formats (MS Word, PowerPoint, etc). This prescribed process draws from and is intended to be fully compliant with directions provided by OMB General Counsel as noted in the attached e-mails. Note that the alternative process is to run filters for the non-transferable data) a process that would take so much time as to be unusable.

Process: Personnel assigned to DHS who have an assigned EOP system (WHO, TPO, OMB) account are permitted take a copy of &permitted8 data that they maintained on their respective system drives (C-drive, J-drive, etc) - procedures on how to copy the data to be provided by the DHS technical support staff. To accommodate the authorized copying of the data, respective individual system accounts will be maintained active until COB February 12, 2003.

It is my understanding that our respective technical staff members are already in discussion.

Provided below is Phil Perry,s direction to OMB TPO staff that states the conditions for data that would be permitted to be copied.

Any question - pls give me a call: (202-494-3197).

Best Regards, Carlos

Been a crazy couple of days for you guys, I expect. Congrats on getting Miguel out of Committee. Thought the Senate Republicans did a great job yesterday and today.

At some point, I would like to talk seriously about what I can do to help you all with the nominations backlog. I certainly have some ideas and have an appreciation for the way in which the Committee works. I was up in the Senate the last two days watching our nominees get the tar beat out of them. Who is running point inside the WH on organizing the outside?

The Miami Herald
Controversial Judicial Nominee Divides Hispanic Groups
By Frank Davies

WASHINGTON _ President Bush's drive to name staunch conservatives to the federal judiciary, including two rejected last year, begins this week with Miguel Angel Estrada, a Honduran-born legal whiz whose nomination has divided Hispanic groups.

Estrada's backers for one of the nation's most powerful judgeships cite his Horatio Alger life story. An immigrant at 17, he learned English as a teenager, graduated from Harvard Law School with honors, argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court and gained a reputation as a forceful courtroom advocate.

His opponents portray him as a right-wing ideologue, unsympathetic to affirmative action, who lacks the temperament to be a judge. They see him as a "stealth" nominee with no "paper trail" _ he has never been a judge, law professor or commentator _ and who was evasive during his hearing last fall.

Estrada, 41, has become a rallying point or target because of one overriding political reality. He is the first Hispanic nominated to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, perhaps the second most powerful court, and he could be the first Hispanic to be named to the Supreme Court.

"That's why his nomination has great urgency," said Michael Gerhardt, a College of William and Mary professor who tracks judicial nominations.. "It's clear the White House has invested a lot in him and sees him as a candidate for the Supreme Court."

Now that Republicans have regained control of the Senate, the Bush administration plans to push through several controversial nominees. The Senate Judiciary Committee, with a 10-9 GOP advantage, has scheduled a vote on Estrada for Thursday.

"This is an important vote," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, the new chairman. "I think he will pass out with significant support from this committee."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who was chairman before the GOP takeover, remains opposed to Estrada: "His selection has generated tremendous controversy in part because he appears to have been groomed to be an activist appellate judge by well-placed conservatives."

Estrada is just the first of many battles. Bush has resubmitted 28 other judgeship nominees who were stalled in committee last year when Democrats were in control. And Bush renominated two judges for an appellate court, Charles Pickering of Mississippi and Priscilla Owen of Texas, who were voted down by the Judiciary Democrats last year.

Hatch said a new hearing for Pickering could come in March.

This week, a coalition of about 30 civil rights, labor and environmental groups organized to oppose Pickering, Owen, Estrada and other judicial nominees, saying Bush was trying "to pack the courts with right-wing extremists."

Senate Democrats are now in the minority and must decide which nominees they will oppose. They have threatened a filibuster against Pickering and Owen.

Estrada, with his skimpy record and Hispanic background, is a special case.

He served in the solicitor general's office in the first Bush and Clinton administrations. One former deputy solicitor general, Paul Bender, said last year that "Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge _ you could not count on him to be fair or neutral."

But other Clinton appointees, including Drew Days and Randolph Moss, support Estrada, and the American Bar Association rated him "well qualified."

The League of United Latin American Citizens, the Hispanic Business Roundtable and the Latino Coalition back Estrada.

He is opposed by the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund and the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MALDEF).

"The most difficult situation for an organization like mine is when a president nominates a Latino who does not reflect, resonate or associate with the Latino community," said Marisa Demeo, regional counsel for MALDEF.

Opponents note that Estrada, who once clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy, dismissed complaints about the lack of minorities among Supreme Court clerks.

"If there was some reason for underrepresentation, it would be something to look into," Estrada told USA Today in 1998. "But I don't have any reason to think it's anything other than a reflection of trends in society."

In a 1999 radio interview, Estrada said courts were being misused by citizens who lose a dispute in a legislature or city council, "then try to bring the courts in to trump" that decision.

Estrada worked for Theodore Olson, solicitor general and GOP strategist, and has been an active member of the Federalist Society, a right-of-center legal network influential in the Bush administration.

Demeo said Estrada, who once defended a city's antiloitering statute that was thrown out as discriminatory, "comes with a predisposition to view claims of racial discrimination and unfair treatment with suspicion and doubt instead of an open mind."

The D.C. court handles many regulatory and discrimination cases, and Estrada said at his hearing in September that he would approach each case fairly. He did not elaborate on his judicial philosophy.

"I will follow the binding case law in every case, without any influence whatsoever of any personal views I may have on the subject matter," he said.

While some critics liken Estrada to Clarence Thomas as a conservative ideologue no more representative of Hispanics than Thomas is of blacks, some Hispanic Republicans cry foul.

"Estrada proves the lie to much of the left's stereotyping of Hispanics, and they can't stand it," wrote Linda Chavez, a GOP activist. "They worry that if Estrada makes it onto the D.C. Circuit, he will likely become the first Hispanic nominated to the Supreme Court. This is a plum slot the Democrats hoped to reserve for one of their own."

Controversial Judicial Nominee Divides Hispanic Groups

By Frank Davies

WASHINGTON _ President Bush's drive to name staunch conservatives to the federal judiciary, including two rejected last year, begins this week with Miguel Angel Estrada, a Honduran-born legal whiz whose nomination has divided Hispanic groups.

Estrada's backers for one of the nation's most powerful judgeships cite his Horatio Alger life story. An immigrant at 17, he learned English as a teenager, graduated from Harvard Law School with honors, argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court and gained a reputation as a forceful courtroom advocate.

His opponents portray him as a right-wing ideologue, unsympathetic to affirmative action, who lacks the temperament to be a judge. They see him as a "stealth" nominee with no "paper trail" _ he has never been a judge, law professor or commentator _ and who was evasive during his hearing last fall.

Estrada, 41, has become a rallying point or target because of one overriding political reality. He is the first Hispanic nominated to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, perhaps the second most powerful court, and he could be the first Hispanic to be named to the Supreme Court.

"That's why his nomination has great urgency," said Michael Gerhardt, a College of William and Mary professor who tracks judicial nominations.. "It's clear the White House has invested a lot in him and sees him as a candidate for the Supreme Court."

Now that Republicans have regained control of the Senate, the Bush administration plans to push through several controversial nominees. The Senate Judiciary Committee, with a 10-9 GOP advantage, has scheduled a vote on Estrada for Thursday.

Getting to know W.

What Leon Holmes appointme nt reveals

HOW ABOUT that? A superbly qualified nominee has jus t been chosen for the federal judiciary. The formal announcement came after a s pate of rumors had whetted the wildest hopes for weeks: The newest federal judg e for the Eastern District of Arkansas is to be James Leon Holmesoutstanding la wyer, working scholar, and eminent spirit among us. Goodness. The news goes aga inst the whole tide of mediocrity not just in American law but in American cult ure. Were shocked.

But not so shocked that we wont hasten to c ongratulate the Bush administration and its chief on an appointment that revive s our faith in the systemand in the American presidency. For once quality has t riumphed over stereotype. We came to know Mr. Holmes when he represented the De mocrat-Gazette, and it was an education. Were impressed by George W.s judgment. Once again hes been misunderestimated.

Lest we forget, this p resident is supposed to be some kind of dyslexic moron, if youll recall the car icature the oh-soknowing have painted of him. So he appoints a Leon Holmes to t he federal bench, while someone as supposedly brilliant, learned, and Rhodes Sc holarly as Bill Clinton never managed to appoint Richard S. Arnold, another rea l intellect from Arkansas, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

; Mr. Holmes appointment speaks leather-bound legal volumes about the dif ference between this president and his predecessor. William Jefferson Clinton, who is now suspended from the practice of law in Arkansas, though only for five years, passed over a luminary like Richard Arnold for an opening on the Suprem e Court not once but twice. Instead, he settled for a couple of mediocrities, a dding to the decided majority of same on the highest court in the land.

&nb sp; Chief Judge Arnold of the Eighth Circuit would have made a great addi tion to the high court. A scholar and gentleman, the honorable Richard Arnold i s also a remarkably clear and concise writer, which has become a rare distincti on in the law. He can say more in fewer words than just about any writer weve e ver read, and certainly any lawyer. All of which may explain why he was passed over. He couldnt measure down to the standards of the Clinton administration. There will always be those pseudointellectuals and fashion-sett ers in general who dismiss George W. Bush out of hand, but if anything could op en their eyes, it would be the contrast between these two judicial appointments : one made and one, sadly, never made.

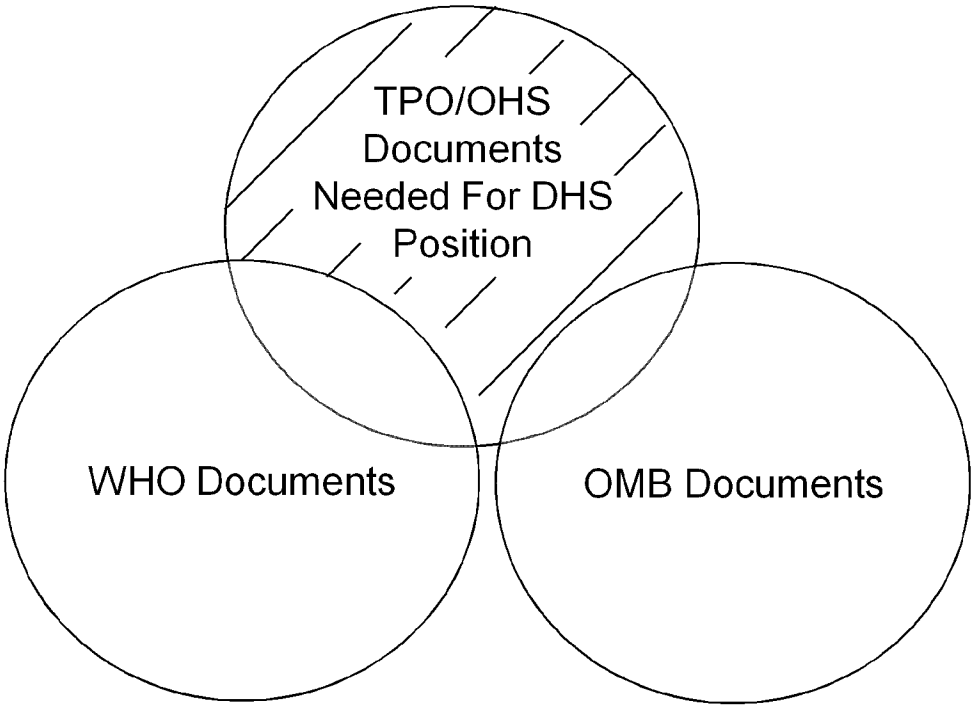
Regarding the Homeland Department's request to OA for a hook up to copy data from the EOP network--for accounts covered by the request (which we understand to be accounts of people at the EOP--both WHO and TPO--who moved to DHS):

The striped area indicates what they theoretically need.



The WHO and OMB circles indicates what DHS, through its technical staff, will be able to copy (for accounts described above) without any further OA action or permission if we were to make the hook up requested by DHS.

I want to emphasize that we can certainly fulfill this request but we want to make sure that your offices understand what DHS is asking OA to do and have approved it before it happens. It also appears to me that DHS is interpreting guidance from both WH and OMB Counsel to justify this request, and I want to confirm that your offices agree with with any such interpretations.

Please let me know if you need any further information.

John--I am not sure if any NSC accounts are covered but wanted to fill you in on this just in case.

Getting to know W.
What Leon Holmes, appointment reveals
HOW ABOUT that? A superbly qualified nominee has just been chosen for the federal judiciary. The formal announcement came after a spate of rumors had whetted the wildest hopes for weeks: The newest federal judge for the Eastern District of Arkansas is to be James Leon Holmes*outstanding lawyer, working scholar, and eminent spirit among us. Goodness. The news goes against the whole tide of mediocrity not just in American law but in American culture. We,re shocked.
ÿ ÿBut not so shocked that we won,t hasten to congratulate the Bush administration and its chief on an appointment that revives our faith in the system*and in the American presidency. For once quality has triumphed over stereotype. We came to know Mr. Holmes when he represented the Democrat-Gazette, and it was an education. We,re impressed by George W.,s judgment. Once again he,s been misunderestimated.
ÿ ÿLest we forget, this president is supposed to be some kind of dyslexic moron, if you,ll recall the caricature the oh-soknowing have painted of him. So he appoints a Leon Holmes to the federal bench, while someone as supposedly brilliant, learned, and Rhodes Scholarly as Bill Clinton never managed to appoint Richard S. Arnold, another real intellect from Arkansas, to the Supreme Court of the United States.
ÿ ÿMr. Holmes, appointment speaks leather-bound legal volumes about the difference between this president and his predecessor. William Jefferson Clinton, who is now suspended from the practice of law in Arkansas, though only for five years, passed over a luminary like Richard Arnold for an opening on the Supreme Court not once but twice. Instead, he settled for a couple of mediocrities, adding to the decided majority of same on the highest court in the land.
ÿ ÿChief Judge Arnold of the Eighth Circuit would have made a great addition to the high court. A scholar and gentleman, the honorable Richard Arnold is also a remarkably clear and concise writer, which has become a rare distinction in the law. He can say more in fewer words than just about any writer we,ve ever read, and certainly any lawyer. All of which may explain why he was passed over. He couldn,t measure down to the standards of the Clinton administration.
ÿ ÿThere will always be those pseudointellectuals and fashion-setters in general who dismiss George W. Bush out of hand, but if anything could open their eyes, it would be the contrast between these two judicial appointments: one made and one, sadly, never made.

Brett , I am happy to help. I, however, wonder about participating in a press conference on the Hill, that is the Senate's deal. I think in the past I have declined to do public events on the Hill. We should talk about this.

1. Senate leadership would like you to participate in a press conference Tuesday at 11:30 on Hill with Senate leaders, Hispanic groups, et al.

2. We had meeting this afternoon re overall leg/communications strategy. Among other things, Ashley may have a few tv interviews set up for you early next week if broadcast/cable networks run stories on Estrada and are interested, which seems likely.

This is from ABC's The Note (written by Mark Halperin), which does a daily political commentatary and seems pretty in the know.

After talking to leading strategists in both parties, The Note thinks it remains an open question of who would win the PR battle if the Democrats filibuster a SCOTUS or other judicial nomination.

Interesting and probably accurate analysis of Pickering issue in Mississippi paper.

Capitol Hill fight over Pickering about abortion
It's about abortion, not race.
While the noise about the nomination and eventual renomination of Mississippi U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has been primarily about race, that's not the real reason liberal senators from the West Coast and the Northeast oppose him.
Based on his status as an evangelical Christian and former president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention, national liberal opposition to Pickering is about his stance * at least the perception of his stance * on abortion. That's why the Ted Kennedys and the Hillary Clintons in the Senate and the rest of the Democratic Party's pro-choice lobby won't stop talking about race when they mention Pickering's nomination.
Playing the race card on Pickering is an easy play indeed for the pro-choice lobby. Pickering's a Mississippian, a Friend of Trent, a born-again Christian and once wrote a paper examining the state's interracial marriage laws. Oh, yes, and he once questioned Al Gore's brother-in-law about the fairness of federal sentencing guidelines in a cross-burning case in which the least guilty defendant seemed to be getting the lion's share of the punishment.
In America today, that's apparently enough to get one branded a racist. Forget the fact that Pickering battled the Ku Klux Klan in the bad old days, forget that he was pro-active in helping to lead state efforts at racial reconciliation, forget all of that.
The usual suspects
The pro-choice lobby has Pickering in its sights. It's easier to demonize someone on a false charge of racism than it is to deal forthrightly with the fact that Republicans and Democrats don't agree on the abortion issue.
The New York Times, in parroting U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer's recent attacks on the Bush administration's judicial nominees that include Pickering, recently claimed that the right to legal abortions in America was in "dire peril." Indeed, when Democrats controlled the Senate two other Bush judicial nominees were rejected based on the abortion issue.
The pattern is clear.
Senate Democrats said Texas Judge Priscilla Owen had been an anti-abortion judicial activist whose opinions and rulings were overly influenced by her personal beliefs. Utah law professor Michael McConnell * another Bush nominee to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals * was pounded by Senate Democrats for his anti-abortion advocacy and conservative views.
NARAL defines debate
Don't think abortion is the root of Pickering's troubles? Here's what the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League has to say on the question in a Web-posted "fact" sheet:
"Currently, the 5th Circuit has a nine-to-five majority of Republican-nominated judges.
"Upon confirmation of three pending Bush nominees, this court will consist of 12 Republican and five Democratic appointees. The seven-seat majority for Republican-nominated judges will affect the balance literally for decades.

"Ultra-conservative nominees to the 5th Circuit will do far more harm than on other circuit courts that are closer to philosophical parity," the group said.

In Pickering's case, false charges of racism is the handle pro-choice forces are using to pick up the suitcase of their opposition to the judge on grounds of his religion and stance on abortion.

Apparently, conservative judges should keep their pro-life "personal beliefs" out of judicial decisions. One has to wonder, however, if a judge's pro-choice "personal beliefs" are an equal constitutional danger in the minds of Senate Democrats. Doubtful.

Mr. Kavanaugh:

I am writing for Mr. Adam Goldman of OPL, who requests your assistance with an upcoming White House briefing. Mr. Goldman wanted me to emphasize that normally he would give a briefing of this nature, but he will be in California on this particular day.

The International Safety Equipment Association's (ISEA) Board of Trustees has requested a briefing on February 24th. They have requested, in part, a discussion on "general product liability reform" and "liability relief for protective equipment and clothing used by responders in a terrorist incident." The briefing is scheduled to take place at 4:00 PM in Room 180. The ISEA estimates that approximately 12 persons will attend.

Below please find the actual request from ISEA. Please let me know if I can provide any additional information.

Thank you for your consideration of this request,

Grayson Hoffman
Office of Public Liaison
6-5183

REQUEST:

January 14, 2003

Adam Goldman
Deputy Director
Office of Public Liaison
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500
Re: Meeting Request

Dear Mr. Goldman:

The International Safety Equipment Association's (ISEA) Board of Trustees will be in Washington, D.C. on February 24. The group, which includes nine senior manufacturing executives, has expressed great interest in a White House briefing on the President's growth agenda and homeland security.

ISEA's members are global companies that manufacture personal protective equipment such as respirators, protective apparel, gloves, detection equipment, hard hats, emergency shower and eyewashes and other equipment used to keep people safe - including those involved in terrorism response and recovery.

As manufacturers, they are naturally interested in the Administration's initiatives on trade, taxes, legal reform and economic growth. In addition, as long-time suppliers of protective clothing and equipment for emergency response, they have a special interest in homeland security planning.

Now that the Homeland Security Department is a reality, there are many questions about funding for responder equipment and training. ISEA is prepared to help in any way it can to link the funding agencies, the organizations receiving the funds, and the suppliers of clothing and equipment, to ensure that responders are getting the equipment they need. Maintaining high-level contacts with the Administration is key to our efforts to protect the protectors. We would welcome your perspective on ways manufacturers can assist homeland security planners and the federal, state and local levels. Your remarks to the group would enable the industry to better understand the immediate and long-term needs of those involved in terrorism preparedness, and plan effectively to meet those needs.

Liability reform is also an important issue to ISEA members. Not only do we support general product liability reform, our members are also concerned that there is some liability relief for protective equipment and clothing used by responders in a terrorist incident.

Our Board would be grateful for the opportunity to discuss these and other issues with senior White House staff members. Dan Glucksman, ISEA's public affairs director, will follow up with you. I have also included a list of our Board members. Please call me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

- Daniel K. Shipp
- President, ISEA

Just a reminder, please take a quick read of this letter to the Appropriators by 9:30 AM TODAY.; It contains something on virtually all of your departments.
Thanks.

The Honorable Ted Stevens
Committee on Appropriations
United States Senate
Washington, D.C.; 20510
Dear Chairman Stevens:
The purpose of this letter is to provide the Administration,s views on the current House and Senate versions of the remaining eleven appropriations bills.; The Administration applauds the commitment of the Appropriations Committee Chairmen to the top line agreement with the President.
;The Administration will support versions of the remaining eleven bills that are consistent with the agreed upon non-defense discretionary spending limit of $385.9 billion, the amount remaining within the top line after enactment of the Defense and Military Construction Appropriations Acts.; It is important that this limit be reached transparently.; Should the final version of the bill exceed this level, including expanded use of advance appropriations or other &gimmicks,8 the President,s senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill.
;There are several other issues that may impact the agreed upon top line funding level discussed above, including the $3.9 billion in essential funding for defense included in the Senate bill, which the Administration supports.; The Administration would support additional drought assistance for those truly in need as long as it is offset within existing agriculture funding.; At the time of enactment, the 2002 Farm Bill was estimated to provide $180 billion, an increase of $82 billion above the baseline -- an historically high level of agriculture spending that can accommodate funding for emergencies, economic assistance, rural development, and other purposes. Further, the Administration believes that physician fees in Medicare need to be adjusted and that those costs can and should be fully offset through statutory changes or legislative action.; We look forward to working with the Congress to address this critical matter.;

The Federal government has been operating under a series of Continuing Resolutions for nearly one-half of FY 2003. Completion of the nation,s budget for the current year is long overdue, and we look forward to working with the Congress to ensure an acceptable bill is presented to the President.; Spending restraint is critical to encouraging continued economic growth.;; We appreciate your consideration of these views.
Homeland Security
On November 25, 2002, the President signed the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (HSA).; The legislation transfers 22 Federal agencies and programs to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS).; The Act lays out an orderly process for transferring entities to DHS.; Provisions that would preclude, complicate, or delay transfers of functions or resources to DHS are unacceptable.
Both the House and Senate bills, as currently written, include numerous unacceptable restrictions that undermine implementation of the HSA.; Most broadly, a number of the House bills prohibit the transfer of funds unless the transfer is provided for in an Appropriations Act.; This is contrary to existing law, which provides the authority to execute these transfers.; Many bills contain specific unacceptable prohibitions on individual programs.; For example, both the House and Senate bills seek to prohibit the transfer of Customs aircraft from the Treasury Department, and the House bill seeks to prevent the transfer of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.; In addition, while funds are provided in the Senate version of bill for the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) Chimera IT and Entry-Exit systems, these funds are not provided within INS, complicating consolidation within DHS.; The conferees must correct these restrictive provisions.;
The House version of the bill cuts the request for the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) by $200 million, and the Senate bill earmarks nearly $400 million, for unrequested and lower-priority activities.
The Senate version of the bill underfunds the homeland security programs of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), including the Entry-Exit System.; The Senate version of the bill also includes unacceptable restrictions on the National Security Entry-Exit Registration System (NSEERS), an Administration initiative to enhance homeland security by requiring certain foreign nationals to register with the INS.;
The Senate bill earmarks funding provided for our nation,s First Responders, which will prevent the program from funding the highest priority programs.; The Administration believes that these funds would be better targeted for homeland security and Federal law enforcement activities.; The Senate version of the bill underfunds the Federal Emergency Management Agency,s Disaster Relief Fund, by nearly $1 billion.; The Administration urges the conferees to adopt the House level for Disaster Relief to ensure adequate resources are available to address emergency situations.
Finally, the Senate bill provides $3.3 billion for bioterrorism defense and research, which is $370 million less than the request.; It is critical that the House and Senate provide the full amount requested for NIH biodefense research, including the request to accelerate investments in biodefense research infrastructure.; The Administration is concerned as it appears that the Senate bill does not fund the $250 million requested for a next-generation anthrax vaccine.; The Administration urges the Senate to restore funding for this important program that will help defend against the anthrax threat as well as inspire new vaccine research breakthroughs.;

Other High-Priority Issues
A few significant problems remain to be addressed before a final version of an Omnibus bill would be acceptable to the President. The current House and Senate versions of the eleven remaining bills underfund major areas of responsibility and divert these funds to lesser needs.; The Administration, s major concerns are outlined below:
Education Funding.; The Administration appreciates the House,s support for funding for the Education Department.; The Senate,s use of gimmicks that will compromise next year's budget by increasing advance appropriations for several programs in Education, including IDEA and Title I, is unacceptable.; This is a misleading practice to avoid spending limitations that Congress and the Administration agreed to curtail last year.
The Administration strongly urges the Congress to adopt the House mark for the Pell Grant program, which maintains the maximum award at the current $4,000 level and provides $11.2 billion to help address the program,s current funding shortfall.; The Senate bill raises the Pell Grant maximum award to students while failing to provide sufficient funding, significantly increasing the shortfall above the House level.
;Transportation Department.; The Senate bill proposes $31.8 billion for highways, an unsustainable level of spending that breaks dramatically with the tradition of tying highway spending to trust fund revenue.; This would put the program on a path to an inevitable gas tax increase, which the Administration strongly opposes.; The Administration strongly supports the highway funding level authorized by the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act and included in the House version. The Senate bill also provides $1.2 billion for Amtrak without including any of the reforms necessary to improve its operations and promote financial stability.; We urge the conferees to adopt the House position and institute operational and structural reforms as a condition for increased funding for Amtrak. Finally, funding earmarks in the bill would significantly constrain flexibility in the Office of the Secretary of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration.
Election Reform.; The Administration strongly supports the inclusion of funds to support reform and improvement of election administration systems in the Senate bill.
Wildland Firefighting.; The Administration supports the inclusion of the $825 million for wildland firefighting in the Senate bill within the top line funding agreement.;
Unemployment Insurance.; The Senate bill raises the contingency trigger in the Unemployment Insurance program significantly.; As a result, many unemployed workers may not receive timely benefit payments and States will incur workload for which there will be no federal financing.; Conferees are urged to adopt the Administration,s contingency trigger level.
LIHEAP.; We appreciate the House,s support for the overall Administration request for this important program.; Conferees are encouraged to adopt the House position.
;Farm Bill Conservation Programs.; The Administration strongly objects to Senate language prohibiting the use of funding in USDA,s Conservation Operations account to implement the recently-enacted Farm bill conservation programs.; This is contrary to past practice and, without enacting the Administration,s proposed budget amendment, would result in only about 10 percent of this year,s authorized Farm bill conservation activities being implemented.; The Administration,s proposal would provide appropriate funding to ensure the farm conservation programs are properly implemented.

;Energy Department.; The Administration appreciates that the Senate version of the bill includes the Price-Anderson Act indemnification provisions.; However, the Administration strongly objects to the Senate,s reduction of $255 million for Yucca Mountain, which would severely delay and diminish the quality of DOE's submission to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to proceed with construction of this vital facility.; The Administration urges the conferees to support the request, which would enable DOE to submit its repository license application to the NRC by December 2004, accelerate essential national transportation-related activities, and ensure the site is a safe working environment.;
Housing Programs.; The Senate bill contains an unacceptable provision that, as currently drafted, could result in considerable additional costs in the Housing Certificate program.; The House,s reform approach is acceptable provided that amounts in the final bill are sufficient to support all units under lease.; We look forward to working with the conferees to ensure proposed changes to the program do not result in unintended costs.
Treasury/IRS.; The Administration urges the conferees to provide the $70 million requested for the Internal Revenue Service to address new requirements under P.L. 107-210, the Trade Act of 2002, which established a new refundable Health Insurance Tax Credit (HITC) program.;
;Patent Office (PTO).;; The Senate bill would reduce requested funding for PTO by almost $300 million, compromising PTO's ability to carry out its new strategic plan.;
;Justice Department.; The Senate bill does not provide adequate funding for the Department of Justice,s core legal staff, including the U.S. Attorneys and Justice,s Legal Divisions, which would severely hamper the Department,s efforts in the war on terrorism.; The Administration is concerned with Senate bill language that earmarks funding, thus constraining the FBI and the Bureau of Prisons from responding to emerging events such as the war on terrorism or prison emergencies.;
;The Senate bill reduces the request for the FBI by $75 million by requiring the use of prior year unobligated balances to fund 2003 initiatives.; The Administration believes that these prior year funds are still required by the FBI and urges that they not be diverted.
;The House and Senate bills provide significantly more funds for crime prevention grant programs than requested.; The Administration believes that these funds would be better targeted for homeland security programs, especially funds for first responders.
;Mother-to-Child HIV/AIDS Transmission Initiative.; The Administration urges the conferees to fully fund the $100 million requested for each USAID and HHS for this important initiative.; The Senate bill provides the request for USAID, without cutting into base HIV/AIDS programs, as the House bill does.; It appears both the House and Senate have underfunded the HHS portion of this initiative by $60 million.
;State Department/Foreign Affairs.; The Administration strongly encourages the conferees to fund State Department Diplomatic and Consular Programs at a level that supports ongoing operations and the Diplomatic Readiness Initiative.; The Administration strongly supports the language included in the Senate bill allowing funds to pay for the costs of debt reduction for Pakistan and Jordan.;
;Corps of Engineers.; The House and the Senate have provided funds well in excess of the request that could be re-directed to higher priority items; the House and Senate bills provide nearly $600 million and $400 million, respectively, above the request for the Corps of Engineers.; The bills divert funds from the large backlog of existing projects and fund activities outside the Corps main mission areas.; They also fund projects that have not been previously approved or authorized.; The Administration urges the conferees to redirect funds to higher-priority national projects.;

Objectionable Language Provisions
The current version of the Senate bill omits several current law provisions relating to abortion. If the final version of the bill did not include all current law provisions prohibiting the use of federal funds for abortions, the President,s senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill.; The Administration also urges the conferees to support the Administration position on UNFPA, including full compliance with Kemp-Kasten.
;The House bill contains provisions that would weaken current sanctions against the Cuban government.; The Administration believes it is vitally important to maintain these sanctions.; Lifting the sanctions now would provide a helping hand to a desperate and repressive regime, whereas the President's policy calls for reaching out to help the Cuban people.; As noted in the July 11, 2002 letter from Secretaries Powell and O'Neill, the President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto a bill that contained such changes.
The Administration also objects to a number of provisions, which, inconsistent with the Supreme Court ruling in INS vs. Chadha, purport to require Committee approval before Executive Branch execution.
The Administration supports final passage of an Omnibus bill that meets our national priorities and is within the agreed upon top line funding level.; We are committed to working with the Congress as the process moves forward to enact the remaining eleven appropriations bills as expeditiously as possible.; We look forward to working with the conferees to address our mutual concerns as a final version of the bill is developed.
;;;;;;;Sincerely,

;;;;;;;Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

Steve - Adam asked that I circle up with you. Please proceed. There is nothing new here legally. Also, I would suggest that OHS employees do not present the immediate issue. It is TPO employees who need their documents as soon as possible. The legal analysis for this was approved prior to 1/24 by Phil Perry and all counsel involved. For TPO, we need to get the user files copied and transferred; the actual mechanics are happily up to you all. Please make these transfers happen as soon as possible. Thank you.

Lucy--Friday afternoon, Ed proposed an approach on transferring this information with which I agree and have advised our CIO's office to proceed with. Each user transferring to DHS from the OHS (WHO) would delete information not authorized for transfer to DHS from their hard and network drives. (Direction on this and any advice necessary to ensure records management of non-transferred materials will be provided to users by White House Counsel.) Once each user has completed that process, we would go through our standard check out and copy the user files on the hard and network drives onto disks. However, we would make a second copy of each disk on checkout, to be provided to DHS.

We can consult with White House Counsel through Ed and Faisal on when to close and copy the accounts and give the disks to OHS. This process would not involve any direct connection between the EOP network and DHS equipment.

Phil/Kimberley--We're hoping to use this kind of approach to transfer the information in the TPO accounts so we can all move in sync. Would be great if you can let me know.

I believe that this solution will work for all parties in all significant respects. Lucy, we would appreciate if you can advise Steve of the resolution. If there are any outstanding issues let me know. Adam, 395-1268

Adam and Laurie -- This seems like a practical way to address this issue of DHS officials/employees who still have TPO e-mail accounts, and wld avoid or at least minmize the generation of add'l records that cld be subject to litigation or other dispute.

Exactly. But only 51 need to go up for 1:30 briefing... the other 100 can go up later via Ashley's arrangements. I assume you'll get the 51 to the car for 1:15 pick up at West Basement? Do you need help with that? If you need bodies for that, let me know and we'll help.

Ex-Tyco Gen. Counsel Accused of Larceny

BOSTON (Reuters) - Former Tyco International Ltd. (TYC.N) general counsel Mark Belnick was charged on Monday with stealing $12 million from the conglomerate by accepting a special bonus the board of directors had not approved. The indictment adds three new charges against Belnick, who served as Tyco's top legal counsel until last year. He faces up to 25 years in prison if convicted of the new felony larceny charge, which stems from a bonus he allegedly received in the form of $2 million cash and 200,000 Tyco shares. In New York, Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau unveiled the superseding indictment against Belnick. It was the latest revelation in an investigation that helped drive down shares of Bermuda-based Tyco more than 70 percent last year. Belnick also is accused of failing to disclose a $2.5 million related-party transaction that resulted in a payment to a Tyco director. Morgenthau identified Lord Michael Ashcroft, who resigned from Tyco's board last year, as the director who received the payment. Belnick's lawyer, Reid Weingarten, said the director transaction happened a year before Belnick arrived at Tyco. The indictment includes the original six counts brought against Belnick last year. He has pleaded innocent to those charges, which accuse him of falsifying documents to conceal $14 million in loans to himself from Tyco. Belnick's lawyers have said that Tyco's outside auditor and compensation committee knew about the loans. In fact, Belnick told the auditors he owed more than what they calculated, according to court papers filed in the case. But on Monday, Belnick was led into the New York state supreme court in handcuffs. His lawyer called the latest charges frivolous. "These charges are frivolous and should be dismissed," Belnick's lawyer, Weingarten, said in a statement.
"The district attorney's new charges are equally frivolous." Weingarten said Belnick received the bonus for "exemplary performance." A former Iran-Contra investigator, Belnick joined Tyco in 1998 and came highly regarded after a 26-year career at the powerhouse law firm Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison. He got the job after former U.S. Senator Warren Rudman recommended him to then-Tyco Chairman Dennis Kozlowski. But last year, Belnick got tangled up in the same investigation by Morgenthau's office that accused Kozlowski and ex-Tyco finance chief Mark Swartz of stealing $600 million from Tyco through unauthorized compensation and fraudulent stock sales. Besides the special bonus, prosecutors claim Belnick also obtained $25 million by selling Tyco stock. In addition, the indictment charges Belnick and others with scheming to obtain favorable proxy cards from Tyco shareholders that had the effect of keeping them in control of the company. Tyco, a Bermuda-based conglomerate whose offices are in Exeter, New Hampshire, makes products ranging from fire alarms to diapers. At the end of last year, Tyco said an investigation by its new management uncovered $382 million in accounting mistakes, which it blamed on aggressive accounting by its former management team.

Snow Takes Oath as Treasury Chief, to Push Tax Cut

By Simon Kennedy and Brendan Murray

Washington, Feb. 3 (Bloomberg) -- John Snow was sworn in as the 73rd U.S. Treasury secretary the day before he is to begin campaigning for President George W. Bush's proposed $690 billion tax cut.

The former chief executive of CSX Corp. stepped into the top Treasury post at a private ceremony held at the department he will now run. His predecessor, Paul O'Neill, left office Dec. 31 after being fired.

Snow is now the leader of Bush's revamped economic team, charged by the president with the task of persuading Congress to lower taxes during the next decade to bolster an economy that has lost jobs for two straight years and a stock market that has dropped for three.

``He is looking forward to implementing President Bush's agenda to strengthen economic growth and create jobs,'' said Rob Nichols, the Treasury's acting assistant secretary of public affairs.

Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam, who ran the department on an interim basis after O'Neill left, administered the oath to Snow, whose wife held a copy of the Bible. Two of Snow's three sons, one of his daughters-in-law and all of his three grandchildren attended the ceremony, which took place beneath a portrait of Alexander Hamilton, the first Treasury secretary, in the secretary's office on the third floor of the Treasury building.

The new Treasury chief is expected to appear before a series of congressional panels this week to lobby for the tax cut and for Bush's fiscal 2004 budget. He is to start tomorrow afternoon with the House Ways and Means Committee before visiting the House Budget and Senate Finance panels Wednesday. The Senate confirmed his nomination Thursday.

Growth Forecasts

Bush overhauled his economics team Dec. 6, firing O'Neill and chief White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey. Stephen Friedman, a former Goldman Sachs Group Inc. co-chairman was appointed to succeed Lindsey.

After falling into recession in March 2001, the economy is expected to grow less than 3 percent for the third successive year in 2003, according to Bush's fiscal 2004 budget, released today. It will grow 2.9 percent this year and 3.6 percent in 2004 after a 2.4 percent expansion last year, the budget forecast.

The tepid recovery and the war on terrorism mean the government will run a budget deficit of $199 billion this year and won't log a surplus until 2007, the Congressional Budget Office said last week. Wall Street analysts have said this year's shortfall will be closer to $300 billion after Congress approves tax cuts and additional spending. The White House today estimated the deficit at $304 billion on its $2.23 trillion budget proposal for fiscal 2004.

Snow on the Deficit

The administration said the projected deficit for this year would amount to 2.8 percent of gross domestic product, well below the 6 percent of 1983, which was the most since World War II.

Bush hopes his call to eliminate taxes on dividends, accelerate income-tax reductions and aid the unemployed will bolster the economy and help him win re-election in 2004.

Snow, who campaigned for balanced budgets in the 1990s as chairman of the Business Roundtable, last week told the Senate that Bush's plan would create 500,000 jobs by year end and leave ``relatively modest'' deficits that wouldn't harm growth or worry financial markets.

``Getting the economy strong is the best way to service that debt,'' Snow told the Senate Finance panel. ``Reducing taxes stimulates the economy and puts us in a better position to do that.''

Democrats complain Bush's plan is biased toward the rich, will boost the deficit and would do little for the economy. ``His plan will push up interest rates, retard economic growth, and create massive problems,'' said Senator Kent Conrad of North Dakota, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee.

Student of Two Nobelists

The 63-year old Snow has a net worth of around $100 million and has pledged to sell his stock in CSX and 60 other companies within 90 days. CSX, the No. 3 railroad company, named Michael Ward, its president, to replace him as chief executive and chairman.

Snow holds a doctorate in economics from the University of Virginia, where he was a student of two Nobel laureates. He has also been employed as a lawyer and as an academic. He served as a deputy secretary of Transportation under President Gerald Ford and last year co-chaired a Conference Board study of corporate malfeasance. He joined CSX in 1977.

At the Treasury, Snow will earn $171,900 a year and oversee an $11 billion annual budget. His initial staff of 117,000 will drop by around a quarter as Treasury agencies such as the Secret Service and the Customs Service are absorbed by the new Homeland Security Department.

Paris Debut

As well as formulating domestic economic and tax policy, Snow will be responsible for leading the U.S. crackdown on terrorism financing, managing the nation's debt and crafting the Bush administration's approach to international financial institutions.

His debut on the world stage will come Feb. 21 when he travels to Paris for a meeting of finance ministers from the Group of Seven industrial nations. The gathering was scheduled for last week until the French government delayed it amid doubt Snow would receive Senate confirmation in time to attend.

Snow's signature will also begin appearing on U.S. dollar bills and notes in April or May, according to the Bureau of Engraving and Print.

Snow Sworn in As Treasury Secretary

By JEANNINE AVERSA, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Former CSX railroad executive John Snow was sworn in Monday as the nation's 73rd treasury secretary, and he has his work cut out for him: Trying to steer the wobbly U.S. economy back onto firmer footing.

One of Snow's first major jobs will be selling President Bush (news - web sites)'s $695 billion tax-cut plan, aimed at energizing the $10.5 trillion economy. The proposal was included in the $2.23 trillion budget for 2004 that Bush sent to Congress on Monday.

Snow - sworn in during a private ceremony at 5 p.m. - was confirmed by the Senate last week and spent all day Monday getting briefed on the president's budget, said Treasury Secretary Rob Nichols. Snow will testify on the president's 2004 budget on Capitol Hill three times in the next two days, Nichols said.

The private ceremony took place inside the blue office of the treasury secretary and underneath the portrait of the nation's first treasury secretary, Alexander Hamilton. Snow's wife, Carolyn, two of his sons and his grandchildren attended.

Snow has pledged to sell his extensive stock holdings in CSX Corp. and 60 other companies and put his money in diversified mutual funds. He will do so within 90 days. Snow has said he would recuse himself from participating in any decisions involving CSX while at Treasury, and would forego a lucrative severance package estimated at up to $15 million.

Snow, the head of railroad giant CSX for the past 14 years, was picked by Bush in December to replace Paul O'Neill after the president decided to shake up his economic team in an effort to find more effective salesmen for his new economic stimulus package.

Ken Dam, the deputy treasury secretary who took over the department's helm after O'Neill's departure, administered the oath of office to Snow. A public ceremony for Snow could take place at the White House this week. A ceremony was slated for Tuesday but was moved because of a memorial service in Houston for the Columbia shuttle astronauts.

John Snow Sworn In As US Treasury Secretary At 5 PM Mon

DOW JONES NEWSWIRES

WASHINGTON -- John Snow was sworn in as the 73rd Treasury Secretary at about 5 p.m. EST Monday, the U.S. Treasury said.

Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam administered Snow's oath in the Treasury Secretary's office in the main Treasury building, said Treasury spokesman Rob Nichols. The ceremony was private and included Snow's wife, Carolyn, two of his three sons and his three grandchildren.

Snow was at work all day Monday, attending briefings President George W. Bush's budget, Nichols said. Snow is slated to go before three Congressional panels this week to discuss the budget.

Tuesday afternoon he will testify before the House Ways and Means Committee. Wednesday morning he is set to appear before the House Budget Committee, followed by the Senate Finance Committee in the afternoon.

"During those hearings, Secretary Snow will share his views on the President's jobs and growth package and what the President is doing to accelerate economic growth," Nichols said.

Treasury has been without a secretary since the end of last year, when Secretary Paul O'Neill resigned under pressure. O'Neill's last day on the job was Dec. 31 and Dam has been serving as acting Treasury secretary.

Snow stepped down last week from his job as chairman and chief executive of CSX Corp. (CSX). Friday CSX named Michael Ward as the railroad company's new chairman and CEO.

The clock has started ticking for Snow and his wife to sell their stock holdings. In an ethics agreement released last month, Snow and his wife also pledged to sell their holdings in CSX and some 70 other companies, including AOL Time Warner Inc. (AOL), CarMax Inc. (KMX), Duke Energy Corp. (DUK), HSBC Holdings PLC (HBC) and Tyco International Ltd. (TYC). The money will be reinvested in diversified mutual funds, among other ventures.

Snow's personal financial-disclosure form doesn't list his specific net wealth, but said it is at least $70 million. Snow said he and his wife would sell CSX stock within 90 days of confirmation, which was Jan. 30, and he pledged to disqualify himself involving matters involving CSX Corp. for the duration of his Treasury term.

In addition to Monday's private swearing-in ceremony, Snow may go through a public ceremony with the President later this week, in line with usual procedure for appointments.

Snow Sworn in as New Treasury Secretary
Mon February 03, 2003 06:09 PM ET

By Glenn Somerville

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Railroad executive John Snow was sworn in on Monday as treasury secretary, taking over the senior Cabinet post left vacant by the resignation under fire of Paul O'Neill in December.

Snow, attended by his wife Carolyn and other family members, was sworn in to office by acting Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam at a private ceremony at the Treasury. Typically, there is a public ceremony later with President Bush, but it was unclear when that would happen.

Snow will be the principal spokesman for Bush's economic policies, including his $2.24-trillion budget for next year, sent to Congress on Monday. He also has the job of selling Bush's $674-billion economic stimulus program, a task he will begin with three appearances before lawmakers on Capitol Hill on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Snow spent all day on Monday being briefed on the budget proposals.

He was scheduled to testify on Tuesday morning to the Senate Finance Committee, but that was rescheduled to Wednesday so lawmakers can attend a memorial ceremony for the seven astronauts lost in the Columbia space shuttle tragedy on Saturday.

TRIPLE TESTIMONY AHEAD

Snow will testify on Tuesday before the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee. On Wednesday, he will testify twice -- before the House Budget Committee in the morning and to the Senate Finance Committee in the afternoon.

Snow is expected to face tough questioning from lawmakers on the budget proposals, which project deficits of $304 billion for the current fiscal year ending Sept. 30 and $307 billion next year, surpassing a 1992 record of $290 billion.

The 63-year-old Snow was chairman of regional freight giant CSX Corp., a position he surrendered at the end of last week. The wealthy industrialist also said he will give up the directorships he holds on the boards of other companies to avoid any conflicts of interest.

Treasury spokesman Robert Nichols said Snow was preparing for his new duties. "Secretary Snow is looking forward to implementing President Bush's agenda to strengthen economic growth and create jobs," Nichols said.

At his hearing last Tuesday, Snow said he supported a strong dollar and, in written questions and answers made public before Thursday night's confirmation vote, he pledged to push the United States' trading partners to do more to boost their economic growth.

Snow will get an early chance to do that when finance ministers from the Group of Seven industrial nations -- the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan -- gather in Paris on Feb. 21-22. The session was originally scheduled to take place on last weekend but was rescheduled to accommodate Snow.

Opening shots

The political war to get President Bush's judicial nominees confirmed begins at 2:15 p.m. tomorrow, according to conservative activist Kay Daly.

That's when the Senate is scheduled to consider Miguel Estrada, the first Hispanic nominated to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"Ralph Neas, if you are out there and you want to filibuster Miguel Estrada, bring it on," said Mrs. Daly, a spokeswoman for the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary and recipient of the Ronald Reagan Award at the 30th annual Conservative Political Action Conference last week.

Mr. Neas, president of People for the American Way, has called Mr. Estrada "the Hispanic Clarence Thomas."

In accepting the award from American Conservative Union Chairman David A. Keene, Mrs. Daly urged the nearly 4,000 activists attending the conference to "write, call, e-mail or send carrier pigeons to their senators requesting that they do the right thing and vote to confirm Miguel Estrada."

Several liberal organizations have promised a bare-knuckles brawl to defeat the Estrada nomination. New York Democratic Sen. Charles E. Schumer has threatened a filibuster.

Mr. Keene described Mrs. Daly, five months pregnant with her second child, as a "modern-day Phyllis Schlafly," reports Ralph Z. Hallow of The Washington Times.

DRAFT LETTER FROM SENATORS FRIST AND HATCH

Dear Mr. President:

We write in response to your October 30 East Room announcement of a specific plan that would resolve the continuing problem of delay in the judicial confirmation process, as well as the judicial vacancies and emergencies caused by such delay. We greatly appreciate and support your leadership and effort to resolve this difficult problem -- and to do so, as you said, on a permanent basis no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

You proposed that federal appeals and district court judges notify the President at least a year in advance of retirement where possible, that Presidents submit nominations within 180 days of a nomination, and that the Senate hold a Judiciary Committee hearing within 90 days and an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of nomination. We agree with you that all three Branches have a responsibility for working together to end the judicial vacancy crisis and to ensure that the judicial confirmation process works in an orderly and predictable manner.

In particular, we agree with you that judges should notify the President, where possible, at least a year in advance of their intended retirement, a proposal that builds upon existing Judicial Conference policy. We also agree with you that Presidents should submit nominations within 180 days of learning of a vacancy. We recognize and appreciate that you are complying with this 180-day time frame in submitting your judicial nominations to the Senate. Both of these steps, if adopted and followed permanently, would greatly improve the process and assist in ending the vacancy crisis.

As to the Senate, you specifically proposed that the Judiciary Committee hold a hearing on each nominee within 90 days of nomination and that the full Senate hold an up-or-down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after nomination. The Constitution provides that the Senate act on a President,s judicial nominations. And in the past, Senators of both parties, including leading Democrats such as Senator Leahy, have expressly supported similar (or shorter) deadlines for hearings and up-or-down floor votes on judicial nominees. We agree with you that, absent unusual or extraordinary circumstances, every judicial nominee should receive a prompt Judiciary Committee hearing and prompt up-or-down floor vote. There may be unusual or extraordinary circumstances when such deadlines are not feasible) for example, where the Judiciary Committee concludes that a President has not adequately consulted home-State Senators about a nomination. But absent unusual or extraordinary circumstances, every judicial nominee deserves a prompt hearing and prompt up-or-down floor vote. We will work with Senators of both parties to ensure that this policy is adopted and complied with -- both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

We appreciate your leadership in seeking to resolve this difficult problem on a permanent basis. We look forward to working with you on it.

Sincerely,

Bill Frist

HEADLINE: Playing judicial 'gotcha'

BODY:

Judicial nominations in the post-Bork era often descend into a game of "gotcha." It requires finding anything the appointee has ever said or done that is halfway controversial, blowing it far out of proportion, and using it to depict him or her as a rabid zealot or a conscious agent of evil.

It's not hard to do, particularly when it comes to lawyers, who often represent unpopular clients, or scholars, who get paid to explore unconventional ideas. But it's not a boon to a calm, reasoned process of advise and consent. The latest nominee to get this treatment is Jeffrey Sutton, named by President Bush to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati. He's been targeted by Democrats and disabled-rights activists for his litigation on behalf of "the new federalism"--decisions that have buttressed the long-diminishing power of state governments versus the federal governments. In a recent letter to Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, Access Living, an organization representing the disabled, called him a "radical" with "intolerable" views who favors discrimination against the disabled.

The chief proof of this claim is that Sutton argued before the Supreme Court that disabled state employees may not rely on the Americans with Disabilities Act to sue the state government for discrimination. But that case wasn't based on hostility to the handicapped. It was based on the conviction that the Constitution reserves some powers to the states. Just because you don't think the federal government should set the speed limit on every street in America doesn't mean you're in favor of dangerous driving.

What's more, Sutton's argument in the ADA was so solidly grounded in constitutional theory and precedent that the court agreed with him. The court found that the ADA was intended to combat discrimination in the private sector, and said Congress couldn't impose such burdens on the states except to remedy constitutional violations--which had not been found. Sutton didn't write the law or the Constitution, and he shouldn't be faulted for pointing out when one is in conflict with the other.

For his part, the nominee said at last week's hearing that he has handled cases on both sides of the disabled-rights issue. In one, he successfully represented a blind woman whose medical school application was rejected.

Sutton has taken other cases aimed at preserving the legitimate powers of state governments. That's a perfectly valid function for a lawyer. Even if you assume he was pushing his own ideas, there's nothing morally defective about the belief that some powers belong to the states. That belief happens to lie at the heart of our system.

The new federalism, in any case, is a product of the Supreme Court's reading of the Constitution, not the preferences of any individual litigant. Anyone dissatisfied with that interpretation should direct complaints to the justices. When disability advocates oppose Sutton, it's because they fear he will abide by the court's decisions on these matters. But that's what lower court judges are supposed to do.

Sutton is a lawyer of uncommon gifts whose insights have illuminated the Supreme Court's understanding of the constitution's division of power between the national government and the states. Contrary to what his opponents say, those qualities are virtues, not vices.

Dear Mr. Stern:

As a follow up to our previous discussions, this letter confirms the intention of the Office of Administration to delete our duplicate set of certain Presidential record e-mails from the Presidency of George H.W. Bush that remain on EOP computer systems. These e-mails were restored from backup tapes under the resolution of Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, and were loaded into the Automated Records Management System (ARMS) located on the EOP complex using the same output tapes that are now in NARA's possession. In addition, we understand that NARA has made preservation copies of these output tapes that are also in NARA's possession.[1] Moreover, we are awaiting word from the Department of Justice that notice to any appropriate courts or other parties has been provided. If I do not hear from you on or before January 27, 2003, I will assume that NARA has no objection to OA's planned deletion of this non-record copy.

Please call me directly if you have any questions or would like to discuss this matter.

Sincerely,

[1] Pursuant to earlier correspondence dated May 22, 2001 from Bradford A. Berenson, Associate Counsel to the President, to Mr. Stern, Mr. Berenson provided similar notice that the Office of Administration intends to delete the corresponding duplicate copy set of Clinton Administration presidential record e-mails which were loaded onto the ARMS system located on the EOP complex. We anticipate that deletion of both duplicates will take place at the same time once full clearance to delete both is obtained, although we reserve the option of deleting each group separately.

The 3:15 CBN interview today will be out on pebble beach, why don't you come here first and we can go out there. In addition to your radio interviews and CBN interview today, we are still trying to set up ed boards it the target states. These will likely be spread out in the week. The Post editorial today should help drive interest in the issue.

The White House Case for Miguel Estrada
A final attempt to correct the record.

Senate debate is set to begin today on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a place on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is still not clear whether Democrats will attempt to block a vote on Estrada, who won approval from the Senate Judiciary Committee last week on a straight party-line vote. On Monday, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales sent a letter to Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein in a last attempt to gain her support * if not for the nomination itself, then at least for allowing a full-Senate vote. Although the letter is framed as an effort to correct some of the "inaccurate or incomplete information" that Feinstein has cited in her opposition to Estrada, it is in fact the most concise and effective argument the White House has yet made for the nomination. What follows is the full text of the Gonzales letter.

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:
I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.
First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

"states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."

"[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."

"[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."

"[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."

"[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views - or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

Subject: Nat Hentoff column (positive) on Pickering

NAT HENTOFF SWEET LAND OF LIBERTY
According to vociferous Democrats on the Senate judiciary committee, Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering is an especially outrageous presidential nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. Minority Senate leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota pledges that ''we're going to do eve rything we can to stop that nomination.'' If need be, say Sens. Ted Kennedy (Massachusetts) and Charles Schumer (New York), they will paralyze Senate business and filibuster.
Whatever one's attitude about whether Pickering merits the promotion, the way these Democratic senators have ignored -- or deliberately misstated -- the facts in their key charge against Pickering reveals how scrofulous the partisanship on this committee c an become.
This behavior is not exclusive to these senators. I also include in this the various anti-Pickering organizations who imply that he is a racist, and who are complicit in denying him basic fairness on this widely publicized accusation.
Indeed, I cite The Washington Post, which last year called the U.S. District Court judge's first hearing ''a degradation of the confirmation process.''
The anti-Pickering campaign's keystone concerns United States v. Swan, a 1994 case involving three white men who burned a cross in front of the home of a white man and his black wife in a rural Mississippi county. The Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Justice Department decided to make a plea bargain with two of the three defendants. It made sense for 25-year-old Mickey Thomas, because of his low I.Q. But the other, a 17-year-old whose name was not released because of his age, turned out to be the ringleader. Both pleaded guilty and, based on the prosecutors' recommendations, received no jail time.
But the government insisted that 20-year-old Daniel Swan be given a mandatory minimum sentence of 7 1/2 years under the federal hate crimes statute. According to that law, the government had to prove that the considerable jail time was justified because the defendant had sufficient racial animus to be punished under that law.
The ringleader had previously fired a gun into the home of the interracial couple. The other defendants were not involved in that incident. And the 17-year-old defendant also had a history of anti-black attitudes. Swan, clearly involved in the cross-burning, did not have a prior record of violent hostility toward blacks.
Swan refused to bargain and pleaded not guilty. In a two-part documented account of why Pickering did not want to impose the 7 1/2 year sentence on Swan -- as appeared in the National Review Online article ''The Cross-Burning Case: What Really Happened'' -- reporter Byron York wrote: ''When it came time to sentence Swan, Pickering questioned whether it made sense that the most-guilty defendant got off with a misdemeanor and no jail time, while a less-guilty defendant would be sentenced to 7 1/2 years in prison.''

One of the prosecutors, Jack Lacy, wrote to Pickering that he ''personally agreed with the judge that the sentence is draconian,'' but added that Swan had ''repeatedly chucked our (plea) offer in our teeth.''

Pickering did try hard to get the Justice Department to recommend a lower sentence that would have more to do with justice than with the prosecutor's pique that Swan had refused to accept a plea bargain.

''Finally,'' York wrote, ''Pickering got word from Civil Rights Division prosecutors, who said they had decided to drop the demand that Swan be given the five-year minimum portion of the recommended sentence. Pickering then sentenced Swan to 27 months in jail.''

At the sentencing, Pickering told Swan that he had committed ''a despicable act ... and it's an area that we've got to stamp out; that we've got to learn to live (together).'' Yet, Schumer threatened to filibuster against Pickering's elevation to the 5th Circuit because the judge, Schumer said, showed ''glaring racial insensitivity'' in working to get a lighter sentence for Swan. And New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd writes that Pickering has ''a soft spot for cross-burners.''

Sen. Kennedy has also charged that Pickering showed selective leniency toward this white cross-burner, while coming down hard on black defendants before him.

However, I have copies of the letters to the Senate Judiciary Committee from four lawyers in Hattiesburg, Miss., who represented black defendants before Pickering. Each tells of cases in which Pickering made significant downward departures from federal sentencing guidelines for these black defendants. Are these the actions of a racist?

WASHINGTONÿ*ÿDemocratic lawmakers will attempt to filibuster the nomination of Miguel Estrada for Washington's U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals before a vote on his confirmation Wednesday, sources close to the Democrats' game plan told Fox News.

Sources said Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee -- including Sen. Patrick Leahy, the ranking member, and Sens. Dick Durbin of Illinois, John Edwards of North Carolina, Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts, Dianne Feinstein of California and Charles Schumer of New York -- met with Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota and his whip, Sen. Harry Reidÿof Nevada, last week to come up with the Democratic strategy for the upcoming floor battle.
Many of the same players met again Tuesday nightÿwith Daschle and Reid to firm up the plan.

According to sources, Democratic planners apparently decided to filibuster -- to block or delay Senate action with proceduralÿor otherwise obstructive motions,ÿfrequently with never-ending speechifyingÿ-- "if they have the votes" to defeat action to end debate.
Sixty votes are needed to end debate andÿprevent a filibuster. Democrats say that even if they don't get the votes, they will attempt to filibuster anyway, on the theory that an uncontested loss "would be worse than no contest," the sources said.
The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the Honduran-born Estrada last Thursday on a 10-9 party line vote.ÿIf President Bush's nominee is confirmed, making him the first Hispanicÿon the appeals court, he would also become a top-tier candidate for the Supreme Court, should any of the justices retire.ÿThree of the current justices ascended to the high court fromÿthe D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.
Estrada, a member of the law firm that represented Bush in his successful Supreme Court fight for the presidency, came to the United Statesÿas a teenager from the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa. Now 41, he quickly learned English, thrived in school and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1986. He has since practiced constitutional law and has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court.
Democrats in the committee's confirmation hearing last September, 16 months after Estrada's nomination, complained they didn't know enough about his legal opinions and did not have a paper trail to whichÿthey couldÿrefer.
Estrada worked for the Justice Department under the first President Bush, but the department refused to release his briefs, saying it would chill the free exchange of legal thought in the agency.
Nonetheless, Democrats argue he is too conservative for the bench.
On Wednesday, Kennedy told his Democratic colleagues, "If we allow a stealth right-winger on this court, we have only ourselves to blame."
"We must filibuster Miguel Estrada's nomination," he told lawmakers at the weekly Democratic policy lunch. "The White House is almost telling us that they plan to nominate him to the Supreme Court. We can't repeat the mistake we made with [Supreme Court Justice]Clarence Thomas."
Democrats say his nomination is one that should be stopped for several reasons, not the least of which is their opinion that the base is "particularly energized" over the issue.
Democrats also argue that not to do so would set a precedent permitting Republicans to "force through all future controversial nominees" without answering senators' questions or providing important information.
They also say that it will be much harder to defeatÿEstrada for a Supreme Court seat if his confirmation goes smoothly now.
Democrats, led by Schumer, also argue that the confirmation process "must be slowed down," so as to thwart what is seen as a Republican attempt to establish what one source called "an automatic assembly line of controversial nominees."
Prior to the explosion of space shuttle Columbia, Democrats had expected the nomination to be brought to the floor this past Monday with a motion to end debate expected for Wednesday. The Democrats were not going to oppose a motion to bring the nomination to the floor.
Reid is said to be working hard to mount Democratic opposition to the Estrada nomination, particularly in southern states with large Hispanic populations, including Florida.
One new tactic is Kennedy's assertion that Estrada has "serious temperament problems," a claim that hasn't previously been made. On Wednesday, Kennedy told his Democratic colleagues that members of the Hispanic caucus and other Latino leaders see Estrada as not being "even-tempered" and having a "short fuse."
One influential Hispanic who heard the remarks told Fox News that he found Kennedy's comments "offensive" and "racist." A GOP source,ÿadded: "They're trying to make him into Ricky Ricardo."
But two Democraticÿsenators -- ÿJohn Breaux of Louisiana and Byron Dorgan of North Dakota -- have approached GOP Senate Judiciary Committee staff aides and requested information about Estrada that they can use to defend a potential vote in favor of his nomination.
Breaux's state has one of the largest concentrations of Hondurans in the United States.

Republicans say they are prepared to debate Estrada's nomination "as long as it takes, for days, weeks, if necessary," one source told Fox News. "This is going to be an unprecedented fight over a nominee," the source said

This is what I was told:

Right now, over 40 alumni are going up to spend a weekend and raise money for a scholarship in honor of the 4 guys who were killed.

Don't know if you followed it at all, but the toxicology reports on the DKE brother driving the vehicle were negative... he did NOT have a drop of alcohol in his system plus he was going the speed limit. The main cause of the crash looks to be that the lights on the highway were not working. The Safety board recreated the crash scene and said that from 50 feet you could not see the trailer -- this was a freak accident.

Anyway, didn't know if you knew anyone i could talk to about facilitating this... The current president of DKE is Nick Sinatra.

Democrats Unsure if Can Block Bush Judge Nominee

By Thomas Ferraro

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - U.S. Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle said on Wednesday he was uncertain if he would have the votes to block President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada, a conservative Hispanic, to a federal appeals court.

But as the Senate opened debate on Estrada, Daschle, of South Dakota, vowed an all-out fight and said "there's overwhelming opposition" within his 48-member Democratic caucus to the nominee.

Estrada, 41, is a Harvard-educated private attorney and former assistant U.S. solicitor general. He came to the United States as a teen-ager from Honduras a generation ago.

Republicans hail Estrada as a bona fide American success story who deserves to be confirmed to a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

But Democrats and liberal groups, including a number of Hispanic organizations, oppose Estrada, saying he is part of Bush's effort to pack the courts with right-wing ideologues.

Republicans control the Senate, 51 to 48 with one independent. Yet Democrats would need just 41 senators to sustain a filibuster and prevent a confirmation vote.

Daschle, asked at a news conference if he expected to have enough Democrats to sustain a filibuster, replied, "I don't know."

"We will not make a final determination to what our strategy will be until this plays out," said Daschle, flanked by Hispanic leaders opposed to Estrada. "We will consider all our options."

The Senate is not expected to vote on Estrada until at least next week. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, a member of the Republican leadership, said on Wednesday he was confident all 51 Republicans would back the nominee.

"The Democrats are proving that they are against anybody who has any kind of conservative background," Santorum said. "It's an outrage. I say we stand and fight. Bring it on."

The Estrada nomination was the chief topic of discussion at the Senate Democrats' weekly luncheon meeting on Wednesday, triggering what one member described as a "feisty debate."

A number of Democrats spoke out against Estrada, while just one, John Breaux, a Louisiana moderate, voiced support for him, participants said.

"I will vote for him. I think he is uniquely qualified," Breaux told reporters, noting he received the highest rating from the American Bar Association. "If someone disagrees ... they can vote against him, but I think it would be wrong to prevent a vote on him with a filibuster."

Another moderate Senate Democrat, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, said he would defer a decision until he meets with Estrada and reads a transcript from his Senate confirmation hearing last year. "I want to be fair," Nelson said.

Is Treasury consulting us on this?

&The federal government will run out of borrowing authority in about two weeks, forcing the Bush administration to ask Congress to boost the debt limit while selling a budget that envisions even bigger deficits. The Treasury said Wednesday that it expects to hit the statutory limit on how much debt it can issue around Feb. 20, although it could use several bookkeeping maneuvers to delay that to the beginning of April. The current debt ceiling is $6.4 trillion. As of Tuesday, debt subject to that ceiling stood at $6.34 trillion, meaning only $60 billion more can be issued.8

Just go to the top right section of your lexis.com screen and click on the button for "options". On the left hand side of the screen, you will see a section for "Retrieve..." and under that will be a pull down for how many documents you want to retrieve at a time. Choose the maximum number of 50 and then click on "Set" at the bottom of the options page. From that point on, any searches that you run under your ID number will automatically give you the first 1-50 in your cite list.

Just go to the top right section of your lexis.com screen and click on the button for "options". On the left hand side of the screen, you will see a section for "Retrieve..." and under that will be a pull down for how many documents you want to retrieve at a time. Choose the maximum number of 50 and then click on "Set" at the bottom of the options page. From that point on, any searches that you run under your ID number will automatically give you the first 1-50 in your cite list.

Matthew Bender also publishes 55 products that are "state specific" and typically examine estate planning, probate and elder law in particular states.

What makes Matthew Bender treatises different from other treatises? Matthew Bender authors place themselves in the shoes of the tax practitioner and design their materials to cover the full range of transactions they will encounter. For instance, to find a document with 20 or more occurrences of the word negligence, type: atleast20(negligence). This will insure that the word "negligence" appears at least 20 times in your document results.

RE: Debt Ceiling Increase

This morning, Treasury issued a vanilla statement (copied below) announcing:

- The current debt ceiling of $6.4 trillion will be reached on or about February 20th; and

- Using past practices, they could keep the government solvent until early April, when a large set of payments is due.

What they didn't say is Treasury can keep the government solvent into early June using the "Debt Suspension Authority" they have. Moving beyond early June would require extraordinary efforts.

Congress

According to the leg shop, the House's initial thought is to pass the debt increase with the budget conference report. This enables them to increase the debt ceiling without voting on it directly using the so-called Gephardt Rule. Waiting for a budget conference report could push us into May or June. Then the Senate would have to act.

Members – especially House Members – will have three issues.

- First, is what is Treasury's "drop dead date" for needing a debt ceiling increase.

- Second, is Treasury going to play Chicken Little as they have in the past about what the drop dead date is?

- Third, how much of an increase do we need?

Our Position:

My suggested message for Congress – again mostly the House – is the following:

- We shouldn't play games with the debt ceiling. If you're going to use the budget conference report, make sure the budget moves quickly. April is better than May.

- Treasury is prepared to do what's necessary to keep the government solvent. The longer we wait, the more draconian their options become. That's not healthy for the economy. Waiting until late May or June is a real risk.

- The increase should be sufficient to get us through 2004. (The House especially should be eager to do the same.)

TREASURY STATEMENT ON THE DEBT CEILING

This morning the Treasury issued its quarterly refunding statement, reflecting revised projections of the government's borrowing needs for the next two quarters of the 2003 fiscal year. Under these projections, debt subject to limit is expected to reach the statutory ceiling of $6,400 billion on or about February 20th and will likely remain above the current debt ceiling thereafter.

If the statutory debt ceiling is not raised, the Treasury will have to begin to use a number of stopgap devices - some costly - to manage debt subject to limit, which have been previously utilized under established legal authority.

On current projections, this additional limited borrowing capacity may only be adequate to meet the government's needs until the beginning of April, when recurring benefit and tax refund payments occur.

The Treasury will continue to work with Congress to ensure the government's ability to finance its operations. Prompt action by Congress to raise the debt ceiling is necessary to ensure success in our efforts to combat terrorism, continue the economic recovery and maintain the soundness of federal government securities.

Senate Begins Debate on Estrada
By Ben Taylor, CitizenLink editor

Heated debate filled the U.S. Senate chamber on Wednesday, as senators began their much-anticipated consideration of judicial nominee Miguel Estrada.

Estrada, who has been nominated by President Bush to fill a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, has long been opposed by liberals for his conservative views.

Democrats complained that Estrada evaded questions about his views during his hearing last year before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"I have never seen such an incredible display of avoidance and of ultimate stonewalling in any confirmation process than I have seen when Miguel Estrada came before our committee," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who is Estrada's biggest opponent in the Senate.

Yet, the nominee's supporters claim Estrada is eminently qualified, and that Democrats are fighting against him simply because he is a conservative.

"I fear that some Democrats are creating a new intellectual glass ceiling for Hispanics,'' said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. "If they do not think a certain liberal way that they do, then they are not good enough for upward mobility and advancement. That is wrong and this body should not perpetuate that.''

Democrats reportedly have yet to decide whether to try blocking Estrada's nomination with a filibuster. If they do, it would take 60 votes to overcome the filibuster.

A vote on Estrada is expected to be delayed until next week.

TAKE ACTION
If you believe liberal ideologues ought not dominate the judicial nomination process, and that well-qualified conservatives like Estrada deserve to be added to the federal judiciary, now is the time to speak out. Contact your two U.S. senators and urge them to vote IN FAVOR of Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

FAMILY NEWS IN FOCUS STORIES

'Life at Conception Act' to be Introduced in Congress
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: A California congressman plans to offer a bill that would help protect the preborn.

It might be tough legislation to pass, but Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., is set to introduce a bill called the "Life at Conception Act of 2003." Hunter's bill makes clear that life does begin at conception, and the California congressman hopes that if it ever becomes law, abortion supporters will have no legal leg on which to stand.

"The only way that we're going to legislatively overturn Roe v. Wade is to establish personhood early on -- and that is at conception," Hunter said.

But getting the bill passed into law will be an uphill fight. The legislation has been introduced in previous sessions of Congress but because of its' controversial nature, it hasn't moved. Hunter sees a different political climate now.

"I think there's certainly more opportunity than there was when we had fewer (pro-life) numbers, he said. "And obviously, when the Senate was in the control of Democrats that made it virtually impossible, so this is a better opportunity than we've had in the past."

Hunter and the pro-life movement seem to have science on their side. Kelly Hollowell, a scientist for Science Ministries Incorporated, points out that cloning and other technologies have actually proved that life begins at conception.

"Technology can tell us exactly when life begins," Hollowell said. "People in the pro-life movement should recognize how we should use this technology to advance our position. We should be standing up (and) ... redefining protecting all life from the very moment of conception."

With technology on the side of the bill's supporters, the real question remains if enough House members will see that truth and be bold enough to take a stand for the preborn.

The bill, which already has 26 cosponsors, is expected to be introduced this week. Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert is pro-life, but there has been no word yet whether or not the bill will be brought up for a vote on the House floor.

TAKE ACTION:
This bill is an important step towards overturning Roe v. Wade and protecting the lives of the preborn. Please contact your House representative and ask him or her to support the "Life at Conception Act of 2003," sponsored by Congressman Duncan Hunter, when it is introduced. Fox's 'Married by America' Criticized
By Stuart Shepard, correspondent

SUMMARY: Fox introduces another reality show with a twist ... America decides who you marry.

Is it a good idea for two strangers to marry because TV viewers decide they should be together? That's the premise of Fox's new TV reality show, "Married by America."

The program is set to begin airing on March 10, and the premise of the show is strangers make the ultimate commitment and agree to get married to whomever America deems fit.

Ed Vitagliano, a spokesman for the American Family Association, said it shows the low view of marriage held by entertainment executives.

"This trivializes it," Vitagliano said. "This is not like arranged marriages 400 years ago when marriage was still considered to be something worthwhile. This is just getting married on a lark."

Glenn Stanton, director of social research and cultural affairs for Focus on the Family, described the show as a corrupted version of a bedrock truth about marriage -- "which is not emotion, which is not this warm euphoric love feeling; it's commitment. It's willful commitment, that I am going to commit myself to this other person.".

Stanton also said he's giving the TV show a thumbs down and not recommending the show.

Vitagliano said if viewers want to express their opinions, they should view the show once, and if they think it devalues marriage they should let their local Fox affiliate know what you think. And then -- tune out.

N.J. Considers Controversial Cloning Bill
By Terry Phillips, state issues correspondent

SUMMARY: New Jersey is on the verge of legalizing the cloning of humans for the purpose of harvesting organs and cells.

The New Jersey Assembly may be on the verge of legalizing the most appalling sort of scientific experimentation. Assembly Bill 2840 will not only allow, but demand, the killing of certain preborn babies as long as it is not later than the moment of birth.

The measure, a cloning bill, sailed through the New Jersey Senate without receiving a single "no" vote. Marie Tasy, head of New Jersey Right to Life, outlined the bill's provisions.

"It would allow cloned embryonic human beings to be implanted into the womb, be brought up to the ninth month of pregnancy, and at any point be destroyed for organs and cells," Tasy said.

Some are arguing that a last-minute amendment by the Senate made the bill into anti-cloning legislation. However, Len Deo, president of the New Jersey Family Policy Council, says it did exactly the opposite.

"A number of legislators were very disingenuous that there would be no cloning. And here it is," Deo said.

The bill makes the live birth of a cloned baby a crime, and makes everyone involved -- even the mother -- a criminal if the infant survives. However, the measure allows abortion right up until the moment of birth, because it only considers the baby to be a clone if he or she is born. This, in turn, would provide scientists with tissue on which to conduct research. Deo said the bill essentially would create an "organ farm."

Tasy added: "It's ghoulish, it's gruesome, and yet in New Jersey 25 senators gave their approval for this type of mad science to proceed."

On Monday, the legislation moved a step closer to becoming law when the bill passed out of a state Assembly Committee by a vote of 5 to 2. It is expected the full Assembly will vote on the legislation early next week.

TAKE ACTION (New Jersey residents only):
Assembly Speaker, Albio Sires, is now in control of the cloning bill, Assembly Bill 2840. If you are repelled by the thought of organs being harvested from unborn children, call Speaker Sires (pronounced SEER-eez) at 201-854-0900 and urge him to stop Assembly Bill 2840 from being approved by the Assembly. Also, call your own Assembly member and urge him or her to OPPOSE Assembly Bill 2840. To find out who your Assembly member is and how to contact him or her, see our Legislative Action Center at:

Vatican Speaks Out Against New Age
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: The Vatican has a very stern warning for Catholics thinking about dabbling in the "New Age" movement: Don't do it.

The message from the Vatican is pretty simple. It makes clear that the "New Age" promise of special powers and self-fulfillment can in no way be a replacement for the Christian faith. Dr. John Borelli, with the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, said the timing of the announcement reflects the growing New Age movement.

"There's a lot of attitudes that are throughout our society and so forth that people are encountering, and I guess they thought it was better now to get something out there," Borelli said.

He noted that many times people turn to the New Age as a fall-back.

"If you have serious problems, if you yourself are having problems living the Christian life, very often you're running away from those problems and you'll take up all kinds of things," he said.

The Vatican's overall response to the New Age movement is one shared by many denominations within the Christian faith. Charles Crabtree, with Assemblies of God USA, said practicing such New Age techniques is risky business.

"Christians are becoming very susceptible to what looks good or feels good or looks harmless," Crabtree said. "When we deny the supremacy of Jesus Christ and His lordship by saying there is nothing wrong, in spite of what the Lord says, then we're in mortal danger."

The Vatican is hoping Christians worldwide will see the danger signs ahead.

NEWS BRIEFS

Frist Has Online Cloning Poll

Americans want to ban all human cloning, according to an online poll on the Web site of Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist.

A poll on Frist's Web site asks two questions: "Should human embryo research cloning be banned?" and "Should human reproductive cloning be banned?" Respondents indicate overwhelming support for a ban in both cases, which is good news for a bill to ban all human cloning.

Focus on the Family Bioethics Analyst Carrie Gordon Earll says opponents of such a bill are being deceitful because they are trying to make cloning for research sound like a different process than cloning with the intent of birthing a baby.

"Hopefully, (Frist) is building a case to bring this bill up before the Senate shortly," she said. "All cloning creates an individually unique human life."

Earll said no matter the purpose, the process is identical.

Adelphia Beams Adult Fare

Adelphia cable has decided to carry pornographic television channels -- something it vowed not to do last year.

Former Adelphia owner John Rigas, who is under federal indictment for financial fraud, said last year that Adelphia would not carry adult fare for moral reasons. With Rigas gone, the company is going after the money. Randy Sharp, of the American Family Association, says the company has even turned a deaf ear to its customers.

"They are now refusing to accept concerns from citizens all across America," he said. "The president's office and all the high executives are rejecting any e-mails from consumers or just concerned citizens."

Is Treasury consulting us on this?

"The federal government will run out of borrowing authority in about two weeks, forcing the Bush administration to ask Congress to boost the debt limit while selling a budget that envisions even bigger deficits. The Treasury said Wednesday that it expects to hit the statutory limit on how much debt it can issue around Feb. 20, although it could use several bookkeeping maneuvers to delay that to the beginning of April. The current debt ceiling is $6.4 trillion. As of Tuesday, debt subject to that ceiling stood at $6.34 trillion, meaning only $60 billion more can be issued."

RE: Debt Ceiling Increase

This morning, Treasury issued a vanilla statement (copied below) announcing:

- The current debt ceiling of $6.4 trillion will be reached on or about February 20th; and

- Using past practices, they could keep the government solvent until early April, when a large set of payments is due.

What they didn't say is Treasury can keep the government solvent into early June using the "Debt Suspension Authority" they have. Moving beyond early June would require extraordinary efforts.

Congress

According to the leg shop, the House's initial thought is to pass the debt increase with the budget conference report. This enables them to increase the debt ceiling without voting on it directly using the so-called Gephardt Rule. Waiting for a budget conference report could push us into May or June. Then the Senate would have to act.

Members – especially House Members – will have three issues.

- First, is what is Treasury's "drop dead date" for needing a debt ceiling increase.

- Second, is Treasury going to play Chicken Little as they have in the past about what the drop dead date is?

- Third, how much of an increase do we need?

Our Position:

My suggested message for Congress – again mostly the House – is the following:

- We shouldn't play games with the debt ceiling. If you're going to use the budget conference report, make sure the budget moves quickly. April is better than May.

- Treasury is prepared to do what's necessary to keep the government solvent. The longer we wait, the more draconian their options become. That's not healthy for the economy. Waiting until late May or June is a real risk.

- The increase should be sufficient to get us through 2004. (The House especially should be eager to do the same.)

TREASURY STATEMENT ON THE DEBT CEILING

This morning the Treasury issued its quarterly refunding statement, reflecting revised projections of the government's borrowing needs for the next two quarters of the 2003 fiscal year. Under these projections, debt subject to limit is expected to reach the statutory ceiling of $6,400 billion on or about February 20th and will likely remain above the current debt ceiling thereafter.

If the statutory debt ceiling is not raised, the Treasury will have to begin to use a number of stopgap devices - some costly - to manage debt subject to limit, which have been previously utilized under established legal authority.

On current projections, this additional limited borrowing capacity may only be adequate to meet the government's needs until the beginning of April, when recurring benefit and tax refund payments occur.

The Treasury will continue to work with Congress to ensure the government's ability to finance its operations. Prompt action by Congress to raise the debt ceiling is necessary to ensure success in our efforts to combat terrorism, continue the economic recovery and maintain the soundness of federal government securities.

FDA seeks altered-gene piglets sold as food U.S. says they pose no risk to public, but critics fear 'incidents like this'

By Elizabeth Weise

USA TODAY

The Food and Drug Administration said Wednesday that it is trying to track down as many as 386 piglets that might have been genetically engineered and wrongfully sold into the U.S. food supply.

The focus of the FDA investigation are pigs raised by researchers at the University of Illinois in Urbana-Champaign. They engineered the animals with two genes: One is a cow gene that increases milk production in the sow. The other, a synthetic gene, makes the milk easier for piglets to digest. The goal was to raise bigger pigs faster.

There has been no evidence that either genetically altered plants or animals trigger human illness, but critics warn that potential side effects remain unknown. University officials say their tests showed the piglets were not born with the altered genes, but FDA rules require even the offspring of genetically engineered animals to be destroyed so they don't get into the food supply.

The FDA, in a quickly arranged news conference Wednesday prompted by inquiries by USA TODAY, said the University of Illinois will face possible sanctions and fines for selling the piglets to a livestock broker, who in turn sells to processing plants.

Both the FDA and the university say the pigs that entered the market do not pose a risk to consumers. But the investigation follows action by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in December to fine a Texas company that contaminated 500,000 bushels of soybeans with corn that had been genetically altered to produce a vaccine for pigs.

Opponents see such cases as evidence of the need for more government oversight of a burgeoning area of scientific research.

"This is a small incident, but it's incidents like this that could destroy consumer confidence and export confidence," said Stephanie Childs of the Grocery Manufacturers of America. "We already have Europe shaky on biotech. The countries to whom we export are going to look at this."

The University of Illinois said it tested the DNA of every piglet eight times to make sure that the animal hadn't inherited the genetic engineering of its mother. Those piglets that did were put back into the study. Those that didn't were sold to the pig broker.

"Any pig that has tested negative for the genes since 1999 has been sent off to market," said Charles Zukoski, vice chancellor for research.

But FDA deputy commissioner Lester Crawford said that under the terms of the university's agreement with the FDA, the researchers were forbidden to remove the piglets without FDA approval.

"The University of Illinois failed to check with FDA to see whether or not the animals could be sold on the open market. And they were not to be used under any circumstance for food," he said.

The FDA is responsible for regulating and overseeing transgenic animals because such genetic manipulation is considered an unapproved animal drug.

Brett,

Thanks very much for taking the time to meet with us last week. We hope that you found the meeting to be as productive as we did.

Our senior fellow Walter Olson is going to be in Austin, Texas on March 28th promoting his new book The Rule of Lawyers: How the New Litigation Elite Threatens America's Rule of Law. I'm hoping you could recommend someone in the Governor's office we could contact about setting up a meeting (or a dinner) for Wally to speak to a (hopefully) bi-partisan group of legislators, business representatives, etc. about the need for sensible, consumer oriented legal reform.

FYI, we're holding an event on medical malpractice on February 25th, in New York, with Phil Howard (Founder of Common Good) and William Brody (President of Johns Hopkins University). The invitation is attached below.

Best of luck with all your work. Let Lindsay or I know if there is anything you need from our end.

Very sincerely,

Paul Howard

They also need the people scheduled for next week to go off site. That's Helgi for M-W and Brett for W-F.

Too conservative to be Hispanic or sit on bench?
By Thomas Jipping

Posted: February 7, 2003
1:00 a.m. Eastern

The games have begun! Miguel Estrada, or at least his appeals court nomination, was in the Senate arena Wednesday and the jousting, jostling and posturing are in full swing.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, lead Judiciary Committee Democrat, came out swinging, claiming all he and his colleagues really know about Mr. Estrada is that he seems like "a pleasant person." That's it. His Judiciary Committee questionnaire and hearing, his FBI background check, his White House vetting) all apparently yielded no information at all about Mr. Estrada.

Imagine going through Columbia College and Harvard Law School, federal court clerkships, years practicing with two nationally prominent law firms, and five years in the U.S. Department of Justice, all without a trace!

Yes, that is as silly as it sounds. And so are the ridiculous claims from leftist groups and Senate Democrats that they know nothing about Mr. Estrada. Sen. Leahy is especially disingenuous since, as Judiciary Committee chairman the last several years, he waited 505 days after Mr. Estrada's nomination even to give him a hearing. When these leftists say the record is inadequate, that the nominee should be "more forthcoming," they really mean that the very public and very full record just doesn't contain what they need to defeat him.

Sen. Leahy, echoing the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, also said Mr. Estrada's lack of judicial experience disqualifies him from this appeals court appointment. Funny, though, that Sen. Leahy and his fellow Democrats loudly supported Clinton nominees lacking any judicial experience to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, D.C., and Federal Circuits. Most, if not all, of them were white.

Let's compare Mr. Estrada's credentials with those of Merrick Garland, a 1997 Clinton appointee to the same court Mr. Estrada would join. Both graduated from college Phi Beta Kappa and from Harvard Law School magna cum laude. Both were editors of the Harvard Law Review, both clerked on the same U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and on the U.S. Supreme Court. Both were in private practice for seven years and became partners with a nationally prominent law firm. Both served in the Justice Department, one with the Attorney General and the other with the Solicitor General, at the same time) in the Clinton administration. Only three years separates their ages.

I do see two differences. First, it took the Senate Judiciary Committee more than six times as long to approve the Hispanic Republican as the white Democrat (he still awaits Senate confirmation). Second, Sen. Leahy says the Hispanic Republican is unqualified but said the white Democrat was "highly qualified." You're not the only one wondering what's going on here.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., the Assistant Minority Leader, emphasized during Wednesday's debate that the Congressional Hispanic Caucus opposes the Estrada nomination. He claimed that the CHC is "not known for its radicalism." Then why has every Republican Hispanic member of Congress refused even to join the caucus? CHC member Robert Menendez, D-N.J., said on Wednesday that the only thing Hispanic about Mr. Estrada is his surname. How's that for radical?

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., someone certainly known for his radicalism, also opposes Mr. Estrada. He attacked the nominee for doing pro bono work, or at least the wrong pro bono work. At the invitation of Democratic mayors, Mr. Estrada helped defend the constitutionality of anti-loitering ordinances in heavily Democratic Chicago and Annapolis, Maryland. I once thought that Hispanics, like everyone else, had an interest in safe streets and freedom from violence and drugs. I doubt Sen. Kennedy's neighborhood needs an anti-loitering ordinance.

Back in the Clinton years, leftist groups cried foul when Republicans questioned the causes to which Clinton judicial nominees had donated free legal help. In November 1997, for example, the Alliance for Justice's Nan Aron said, "Some of the senators on the Judiciary Committee seem to be setting a standard of what is politically correct pro bono work and what isn't. If it is not pro bono in service of the conservative legal movement, it is automatic grounds for scrutiny and perhaps disqualification." Surely Miss Aron is equally apoplectic over Sen. Kennedy's ideological litmus test applied to Mr. Estrada's pro bono work. Surely she is. Well, maybe not.

You'd think public officials such as U.S. senators would be too embarrassed to say that knowing absolutely nothing about a judicial nominee convinces them he is a right-wing extremist ideologue. You'd think.

St. Louis Post Dispatch
A filibuster is not a fix

02/07/2003
THE PROCESS for appointing federal judges is badly broken. A filibuster won't fix it.

Democrats are trying to decide whether to filibuster the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the powerful federal appeals court for the District of Columbia. They consider Mr. Estrada a stealth conservative who is being groomed for the U.S. Supreme Court as a Hispanic Clarence Thomas.

The Democrats' fear may turn out to be valid. But the filibuster is the parliamentary equivalent of declaring war. Instead of declaring war, the Democrats should sue for peace and try to fix the process.

The Senate's confirmation process is not supposed to be a rubber stamp. Judicial nominees have been defeated for political reasons * often good political reasons. The Supreme Court is a better place without Clement Haynsworth, Harrold Carswell and Robert Bork. But ever since Mr. Bork, the process of advise and consent has become attack and delay.

During Bill Clinton's presidency, the GOP-controlled Senate held up highly qualified nominees for ideological reasons. Then, during the two years of Democratic control, the Senate held up highly qualified nominees from President George W. Bush. Now the Republicans are ramming through judges as fast as McDonald's slings burgers.

The only consistent principle in this recent Senate history is that turnabout is fair play. That's a poor way to choose judges.

Mr. Bush, like Ronald Reagan, considers conservative ideology a key qualification for judgeship. Unfortunately, Senate Democrats have set upon highly qualified nominees * such as Michael McConnell, a brilliant law professor, who was eventually confirmed * as wolfishly as they have upon weaker nominees, such as Charles Pickering.

In an ideal world, Mr. Bush would realize that the lackluster Mr. Pickering, a friend of Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., raises divisive racial questions. In an ideal world, the president would nominate the best-qualified legal minds, not ideologues.

But in the real world, Mr. Pickering is acceptable and Mr. Estrada is well-qualified. Mr. Estrada is an immigrant from Honduras who went to Harvard Law School, clerked on the Supreme Court and worked in the Solicitor General's office. Democrats, frustrated by the absence of a paper trail, and Mr. Estrada's sometimes-evasive answers on issues such as abortion, tried to get legal memos that Mr. Estrada wrote while in the Solicitor General's office. But both Democratic and Republican solicitors general have urged that the memos be kept private so that future solicitors general receive candid views from their staff.

In short, the Democratic position doesn't justify a filibuster. Instead, Democrats should reach out to Republicans and try to develop a bipartisan truce that gives judges prompt, but thorough, hearings that will speed the important process of filling the many vacancies on the federal bench.

I had lunch on Friday with, John Norton Moore, who is, as many of you know, a professor of international law at UVA Law School and generally helpful to the Administration. Among other things, however, Professor Moore mentioned that he is co-counsel (with Steptoe & Johnson) for US nationals who were held prisoner and abused by Saddam during the first Gulf War; he wants to try to reach Andy Card or Karl Rove in the next few days to request a meeting to urge Administration support for their claims against Iraq and efforts to attach Iraqi frozen assets. He wants the White House to put pressure on State to support these claims. I told Professor Moore that the White House is well aware of these cases; that they are tragic; but that we cannot get involved in these individual cases at the White House. If Karl or Andy do get a call, I would urge that we refer Professor Moore to the Legal Adviser of the State Department or the General Counsel of the Treasury Department.

HEADLINE: EXTREMISTS UNDERMINE LATINO SUPREME COURT CANDIDATE

BYLINE: Juan A. Figueroa; Juan A. Figueroa is president of the Anthem Foundation, a health care foundation based in New Haven. His column appears every month. To leave him a comment, please e-mail him at jfigueroa@anthemfdnct.org.

BODY:
Alberto "Al" Gonzales may be the first Latino to reach the U.S. Supreme Court. As President Bush's White House counsel, he has both the legal experience and the political dossier to be a top contender for the job. Word is that Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor will retire this year, giving the president an opportunity to name the first Hispanic American to the high court.

To reach this most coveted place in history, however, Gonzales will have to survive the spotlight glaring on him, particularly from the right flank of the president's party. The same Republican extremists who want to give conservative Miguel A. Estrada a free pass to the federal appeals court should not be allowed to choose who is a potentially qualified Latino Supreme Court candidate by pre-empting Gonzales. Unlike Estrada (nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit), Gonzales does have a compelling personal story that resonates with Latinos in this country. Gonzales was one of eight children of Mexican immigrants who settled in Texas and who had never finished elementary school. In remarks he made during National Hispanic Heritage Month in 2001, Gonzales recalled patiently waiting for his father to return home from work every day, six days a week. He said his father worked harder than any person he has ever known. After graduating from high school, Gonzales joined the U.S. Air Force, attended the Air Force Academy and eventually realized his childhood dream by transferring to Rice University: "At the age of 12, I got a job selling soft drinks at Rice Stadium. I dreamed of being a student there one day." Gonzales was the first in his family to go to college.

From Rice, he went to Harvard Law School. He became a lawyer in 1982 and went on to practice corporate business law for 13 years at Vinson and Elkins in Houston. He became the first minority partner at Vinson. While at Vinson, he caught then-Gov. George W. Bush's eye, becoming his general counsel in 1995. Thereafter, Bush appointed him Texas' secretary of state and later to the state Supreme Court. The president then brought him to Washington to be his White House counsel. Gonzales clearly has the president's confidence.

The close relationship between these two Tejanos may not be enough to elevate Gonzales to the job. Influential voices within the president's party have started a campaign to discredit Gonzales. They claim he is simply not conservative enough. Patrick Buchanan says Gonzales may be another David Souter. Justice Souter was appointed by President George H.W. Bush and is a disappointment to many conservatives because he is not in the extreme mold of Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. Recently, syndicated conservative columnist Robert D. Novak echoed Buchanan's concern when he said that conservatives were cautioning Bush not to commit a "grave political blunder" by appointing Gonzales to the high court. Some are beginning to call the attacks on Gonzales a whisper campaign, although the voices don't seem so hushed.

These attacks are familiar. They often happen to high-ranking, successful individuals of color in positions of real power. Similar attacks were made when Secretary of State Colin Powell was emerging as a leading figure in the Republican Party. Such attacks are an odious tool used to discredit people who don't meet the ideological agenda set forth by extremists in the Republican Party. The president should be leery of those who need to discredit the likes of Gonzales because they do not meet the far-right litmus test. That is nothing more than a flagrant attempt to curtail Latino power and influence. And it will surely affect one of Karl Rove's current obsessions: the Latino vote in next year's presidential election.

Alberto Gonzales needs to be vetted like anyone else being considered for such an important position. The Latino community is far from endorsing him. If the president does nominate him, a careful analysis will need to be done concerning his commitment to individual rights and civil liberties as a government official and as a Texas Supreme Court justice. He will need to respond to questions concerning White House policies to set up military commissions/tribunals, state-sponsored assassinations and other matters in which he has pushed the envelope on the law as the president's lawyer.

The packaging is nearly perfect for this potential Supreme Court nominee. Extremists within the president's party should not be allowed to pre-empt it.

Subject: Newsweek blurb on Supreme Court

It's been nine years since the last vacancy opened up on the U.S. Supreme Court. That historically long drought could end this year with at least one resignation. Eager White House aides are stepping up preparation efforts, vetting candidates and contemplating a special media operation to deal with a potential confirmation battle.

WITH THE WHITE HOUSE and the Senate both in Republican hands, GOP-nominated Justices William Rehnquist, 78, and Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, are considered most likely to depart. Some reports suggested that Rehnquist has already given President George W. Bush a heads up on his departure. But a senior administration official dismisses the idea, saying the White House has no "inside information."

Bush aides had contemplated the idea of elevating Associate Justice Antonin Scalia, 66, to replace Rehnquist as chief. Some administration officials relished the idea of courting a major confirmation battle over Scalia—a folk hero to conservatives. Nominating Scalia to be chief would fire up Bush's conservative base, some argued. And some Democratic senators might find it tough to oppose Scalia since they already voted for him once: he cleared the Senate by a vote of 98-0 in 1986. But in the end, sources tell NEWSWEEK, White House officials rejected the idea, concluding that the brilliant but pugnacious justice would not be a consensus builder—an important quality for a chief justice. "We discussed it seriously, but rejected it definitively," says a source familiar with the process.

Many strategists have predicted Bush will fill the open seat with the court's first Hispanic justice. Early betting centered on White House counsel and Bush confidant Alberto Gonzales. But some elements of Bush's conservative base seem to have cooled on the idea. And White House insiders say Gonzales himself has never been enthusiastic about going on the high court. (More likely, the sources say, is that Gonzales, succumbing to President Bush's personal entreaties, would fill a second vacancy.) Other possibilities: appellate Judge Emilio M. Garza of Texas and, if he's confirmed to the D.C. Circuit Court, lawyer Miguel Estrada.

Other observers think Bush could take another approach, appointing California Supreme Court Justice Janice Rogers Brown instead. Brown is a conservative African-American who's ruled against affirmative action and abortion rights. Her nomination would let Bush add the court's third woman and second African-American in one swoop. And White House lawyers have already interviewed her. Tom Goldstein, a Washington lawyer who argues cases before the court, believes Brown could even get the nod for chief justice. "An African-American female nominee is not going to be filibustered," he says. "She doesn't have a record that will stop Democrats in their tracks." And after months of bitter Senate fights over nominations to lower courts, that could have an appeal all its own.

We thought the invite was ok, since the asked for amount was under $2,000
(the asked for amount was $250 per couple), but understood that everything needed to go past you.

The event is schedule for this Saturday, so any direction you have would be

THINKING THINGS OVER

'Affirmative Action': Devil in the Details

The administration's middle-ground position gets it right.

BY ROBERT L. BARTLEY
Monday, February 10, 2003 12:01 a.m.

Second only to the pending war, "affirmative action" is the issue of the day. The Supreme Court will rule on racially oriented admissions policies at the University of Michigan, and the Bush administration finally filed its amicus brief. What does it say, what do Colin Powell and Condi Rice think?

The current confusion has deep roots. This society has been through slavery, the Civil War, radical reconstruction, the end of reconstruction after the disputed 1876 election, the "Jim Crow" era, and the civil rights revolution of the 1950s. In the 14th Amendment, passed after emancipation, the Constitution provides that no state can "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." This was intended to outlaw discrimination against Negroes; surely it's progress that we're now debating discrimination in their favor.

Indeed nearly all major institutions look for ways to advance blacks and other minorities, bending over backwards to make sure they have every chance to succeed. Surely this is a good thing, both in terms of historic justice and in terms of strengthening the institutions themselves. Yet there is also a great deal of wisdom in the 14th Amendment proposition that racial classifications are inherently suspect. Society and the courts wrestle with this dilemma.

In the Michigan law school case, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals was sharply divided. By a 5-4 vote, it reversed the district judge's finding that the procedures were unconstitutional. The opinions included an exchange on suggestions of bad faith in timing the case to tilt which judges would hear it. The Supreme Court took the companion case regarding the undergraduate admissions program after the appellate court heard oral arguments but before it issued a decision.

Court precedents suggest that only a "compelling state interest" can justify racial classifications. Usually this means remedying past discrimination, which is not at issue in the Michigan cases. But in the landmark Bakke case, Justice Lewis Powell said that seeking a diverse student body met the compelling interest test, at least so long as race was only a "plus" in competition. With other justices split 4-4, his opinion decided the case.

Yet no other justice joined the part of the Powell opinion finding diversity a compelling interest, and the actual decision was to overturn racial quotas at the University of California Davis. The Sixth Circuit judges argue over whether Powell's comment is the law of the land or mere dicta that can be ignored. Other appeals courts are split; most notably, the Fifth Circuit found in Hopwood that mere diversity did not justify the use of racial classifications.

From the furor over the Bush administration briefs, you might suppose they urge the Supreme Court to outlaw affirmative action once and for all. To the contrary, they never make the argument that diversity is not a compelling interest. Rather, they say the case "requires this court to break no new ground" to find the Michigan procedures unconstitutional.

The Michigan law school argues that it doesn't have a quota as outlawed by Bakke. It merely ensures that each class include a "critical mass" of minorities; in practice this is a quota employing a small range rather than a single number. The undergraduate college once used a similar system, but now assigns minorities an extra 20 points in the admission process. The district judge decided that the old system was a quota but the new one is not; the Bush brief argues that it's still a de facto quota, that the change was in "the mechanics, not the substance."

The Bush brief stresses programs now used in Texas and California, admitting the top students from the state's high schools. While the rule is race-neutral, it promotes diversity because some high schools are predominantly black. These programs at least help inner-city blacks rather than middle-class suburban blacks, but run the risk of putting students into a competition for which they're not prepared. The real test is not admission rates but graduation rates.

The reality here is that the academic community is determined to credential blacks, whatever the Constitution says. Elite educational institutions can hand out prizes because they typically have 100 openings and 1,000 applicants who can do the work. The value of their credential, though, is based less on providing better education than on admitting bright students. As the Sixth Circuit's Judge Danny Boggs noted in his heated dissent, they could always achieve racially neutral diversity by conducting a lottery among all applicants meeting the minimum standards now applied to minorities.

Judge Boggs elaborates on the dangers of racial preferences. For one thing, how do you determine who's a minority--"a drop of black blood?" Harvard last used quotas, he adds, to restrict Jews. And he cites the Supreme Court itself in the Croson case: "Classifications based on race carry a danger of stigmatic harm. Unless they are strictly reserved for remedial settings, they may in fact promote notions of racial inferiority and lead to a politics of racial hostility."

The equal protection clause, that is, is there for a reason. Do we really want to live permanently as a society where one of two neighbors in Grosse Pointe gets 20 extra points on the basis of skin color? It's one thing for the academic community to pursue its current muse, and another for the Michigan policies to be upheld and cemented as law of the land.

Yet after all this society has been through, do we really want to say it's unconstitutional ever to put race in the mix, as most of us do every day? I think maybe the Bush brief, and a separate dissent by Judge Ronald Gilman, have it about right. The Michigan procedures are clearly unconstitutional, but the ultimate disposition of affirmative action can wait another day.

OUR VIEW

Estrada worthy of appellate seat
Atlanta Journal Constitution
February 10, 2003

Miguel Estrada, a Harvard-educated lawyer who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, is well qualified for the federal appellate bench. Democrats, who are threatening to stall a vote on this confirmation, are choosing the wrong target.

In recent years, unfortunately, leaders in both parties have treated nominations to the federal judiciary as an extension of partisan politics rather than a serious constitutional responsibility. Nominations and confirmation debates should center on meritorious legal qualifications and performance.

President Bush himself has often failed to meet that standard. He sent a string of conservative ideologues to the Senate Judiciary Committee, and then used legitimate questions about their suitability for the bench as an inflammatory partisan theme during the last election.

Still, that is no reason for Democratic senators to play the same game. Estrada is no right-wing nut. The scholarly Latino lawyer, who came to this country at age 17 from Honduras, has earned respect for his intellect and his legal acumen.

While its true his lack of judicial experience has left no record for the Senate to examine, he would not be the first nominee to a high court in that position.

U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist had never served as a judge, either, though he had been an assistant U.S. attorney general during the Nixon administration. Estrada was an assistant U.S. solicitor general during the Clinton years.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) and other members of the Judiciary Committee asked Estrada to submit nonconfidential legal memos from his days in the solicitor's office, which could shed light on his judicial philosophy; Estrada made a mistake in not producing those.
Still, the 41-year-old lawyer, whose confirmation is scheduled for debate on the Senate floor this week, should be approved for a post on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. There are some scary ideologues among the nominees that Bush has sent forward, but Estrada is not one of them.

Filibuster Threat On Estrada Does The Democrats No Honor

Published: Feb 8, 2003
Tampa Tribune
N ow that the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee cannot cynically distort the record of President Bush's appointments to federal appeals courts in an effort to block the nominations, they are threatening another maneuver - the filibuster.
Leading the charge are committee members picked by the Democratic leadership precisely because of their ideological bent. Until the new Congress was seated, they thought nothing of thwarting the constitutional mandate that gives the Senate - the full Senate - the advise and consent power over judicial nominations.
These are senators who have maliciously maligned Bush's nominees to cater to the left-wing base of their party, never mind that the lawyers and judges they have discredited and rejected or delayed have received the highest recommendation of the American Bar Association, the party's so-called gold standard.
Never mind that they have distorted the records of some nominees beyond recognition.
The Democrats claim they are concerned about protecting civil rights and liberties, about defending the right to abortion, about making sure there will not be another Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas on the court.
Currently their fangs are out for Miguel Estrada, a 41-year-old lawyer whose biography would thrill most champions of diversity. The native of Honduras moved to the United States as a teenager, learned English, succeeded in school, wound up at Harvard, clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy and worked in Bill Clinton's Justice Department.
He has the enthusiastic support of, among others, Ron Klain, who helped run Al Gore's campaign in 2000.
Yet the Democrats claim they don't know enough about Estrada. They have demanded to see copies of his work in the Justice Department, intentionally seeking papers they knew to be confidential. Because Estrada did not turn them over, they have attempted to crucify him, this despite letters from former solicitors general complaining that their demand amounted to legislative overreach and that acceding to it would set a dangerous precedent.
Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, who occasionally shows some modicum of fair-mindedness, calls Estrada a cipher, and now committee members, because they didn't have the votes to deny him full consideration by the Senate, threaten to use the filibuster.
We suspect they will fail because some sane Democrats in the Senate, such as Louisiana's John Breaux, have said they would not support a filibuster. We hope that other moderates, like Florida's Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, come around.
Estrada needs only 50 votes for confirmation, but to stop a filibuster, the Republicans would need 60. So let the Democrats try if they dare. The judiciary was a major theme in the last election. Let's see how they will explain to voters how subverting the confirmation process with a months-long delay is in the public good.

JUDICIARY: Blocking Hispanics

If the system were functioning as the founders intended, Miguel Estrada would be confirmed quickly to the federal D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. He is extremely qualified in both education and experience -- and the American Bar Association unanimously awarded him its highest possible rating. Democrats have called the ABA rating their "gold standard" for evaluating judicial nominees. Estrada has been endorsed by previous administration legal officials and numerous Hispanic groups that normally support Democrats.

Estrada also has a compelling personal story, as an immigrant who arrived speaking virtually no English and a few years later graduated from Harvard law school.

Nevertheless, Democrats kept Estrada's nomination bottled up in committee until they lost the Senate -- and now may filibuster, hoping to prevent a floor vote they would lose.

Far-left interest groups don't question Estrada's qualifications. However, Rep. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., says Estrada isn't Hispanic enough. By that, he means Estrada is suspected of being insufficiently liberal. But, under his rules, Menendez wouldn't recognize most residents of Miami's "Little Havana" area as Hispanic.

Liberals worry that Estrada will prove himself worthy of someday becoming the first Hispanic on the U.S. Supreme Court -- a position that would make him, and perhaps his moderate philosophy, a role model for young Hispanics nationwide. They fear that might hurt them politically. The founders, however, tried to isolate the courts from politics.

Fanaticism will serve only to alienate the party further from the public.

A feckless threat to filibuster

Feb. 9, 2003 Orange County Register Editorial

Senate Democrats and liberal interest groups have adopted a despicable strategy of character assassination against some Bush administration judicial selections. The latest victim is Miguel Estrada, a well-qualified nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and potential Supreme Court nominee in the future. He is facing a possible filibuster from Democrats who do not even want his nomination brought to a vote.

In a less partisan atmosphere, Mr. Estrada would be a noncontroversial nominee to the appeals court. The Honduran-born attorney is, in the view of the generally liberal Washington Post, "well qualified for the bench" and someone who "should not be a tough case for confirmation." As the Post sees it, senators who disagree with his views should vote against him, but "should not deny him a vote."

So why the efforts to put together the rarely used filibuster? Why portray a man with a long, distinguished background as some sort of ideological radical? It's simply not so, and should be no surprise that a president would appoint federal judicial nominees who tend to reflect his own judicial views.

"Certain Washington interest groups," a senior White House official told us, want to oppose nominees with "a lack of stated support for certain positions." In other words, Mr. Estrada will not do what the left wants him to do: commit in advance to support the political positions they support. These "interest groups see judges as a means to an end," the official said, rather than as people who will rule based on the law and court precedents.

Consider the shallow arguments against Mr. Estrada. The National Organization for Women, a liberal interest group urging senators to "defeat the nomination of Miguel Estrada by any means necessary," could mainly come up with this issue from his background: "His troublesome record entering the hearing included having defended anti-loitering laws which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative effect on minorities."

This is an indictment? That he argued on behalf of an anti-gang ordinance supported by the Democratic mayor of Chicago?

Another point of contention by Democrats: Mr. Estrada didn't answer direct questions about his positions at a hearing. But the Democrats were playing a game of "gotcha," asking broad questions (Were there any Supreme Court cases with which you disagreed over the last 40 years?) designed to entrap the nominee into expressing a non-politically correct opinion. Then that opinion could be used as a rallying cry by Democrats who are looking for any excuse to stop the nomination with cries of "extremism." We don't blame Mr. Estrada for not falling into that trap.

As the White House official explained, Mr. Estrada is being held to a double standard. He answered the questions in the appropriate way that judicial nominees are supposed to answer questions - by talking about his qualifications rather than committing to certain positions.

Unfortunately, some liberal activists are playing the ethnicity card. Mr. Estrada has the backing of mainstream Hispanic groups, but some of the more liberal ones argue that he is not a "real" Hispanic because his views don't conform to their political views. This race-baiting is unseemly, and Democratic senators should rebuke it rather than tolerate it.

Mr. Estrada does not have a long record of political positions, but appears to hold a traditional, constitutional view of his role - that the judiciary should rule based on the law and not take "activist" positions to advance any particular political agenda, of the left or the right.

Regardless of one's leanings, a president deserves to have his nominees voted on before the full Senate, and not filibustered away.

Democrats should drop the filibuster idea, and let their colleagues vote on Miguel Estrada.

The latest victim is Miguel Estrada, a well-qualified nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and potential Supreme Court nominee in the future. He is facing a possible filibuster from Democrats who do not even want his nomination brought to a vote.

In a less partisan atmosphere, Mr. Estrada would be a noncontroversial nominee to the appeals court. The Honduran-born attorney is, in the view of the generally liberal Washington Post, "well qualified for the bench" and someone who "should not be a tough case for confirmation." As the Post sees it, senators who disagree with his views should vote against him, but "should not deny him a vote."

So why the efforts to put together the rarely used filibuster? Why portray a man with a long, distinguished background as some sort of ideological radical? It's simply not so, and should be no surprise that a president would appoint federal judicial nominees who tend to reflect his own judicial views.

"Certain Washington interest groups," a senior White House official told us, want to oppose nominees with "a lack of stated support for certain positions." In other words, Mr. Estrada will not do what the left wants him to do: commit in advance to support the political positions they support. These "interest groups see judges as a means to an end," the official said, rather than as people who will rule based on the law and court precedents.

Consider the shallow arguments against Mr. Estrada. The National Organization for Women, a liberal interest group urging senators to "defeat the nomination of Miguel Estrada by any means necessary," could mainly come up with this issue from his background: "His troublesome record entering the hearing included having defended anti-loitering laws which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative effect on minorities."

This is an indictment? That he argued on behalf of an anti-gang ordinance supported by the Democratic mayor of Chicago?

Another point of contention by Democrats: Mr. Estrada didn't answer direct questions about his positions at a hearing. But the Democrats were playing a game of "gotcha," asking broad questions (Were there any Supreme Court cases with which you disagreed over the last 40 years?) designed to entrap the nominee into expressing a non-politically correct opinion. Then that opinion could be used as a rallying cry by Democrats who are looking for any excuse to stop the nomination with cries of "extremism." We don't blame Mr. Estrada for not falling into that trap.

As the White House official explained, Mr. Estrada is being held to a double standard. He answered the questions in the appropriate way that judicial nominees are supposed to answer questions - by talking about his qualifications rather than committing to certain positions.

Unfortunately, some liberal activists are playing the ethnicity card. Mr. Estrada has the backing of mainstream Hispanic groups, but some of the more liberal ones argue that he is not a "real" Hispanic because his views don't conform to their political views. This race-baiting is unseemly, and Democratic senators should rebuke it rather than tolerate it.

Mr. Estrada does not have a long record of political positions, but appears to hold a traditional, constitutional view of his role - that the judiciary should rule based on the law and not take "activist" positions to advance any particular political agenda, of the left or the right.

Regardless of one's leanings, a president deserves to have his nominees voted on before the full Senate, and not filibustered away.

Democrats should drop the filibuster idea, and let their colleagues vote on Miguel Estrada.

Disorder in the court!

Adam Sparks, Special to SF Gate Monday, February 10, 2003

A cabal of the usual suspects -- abortion rights advocates, enviro-activists, civil rights groups and organized labor -- is attacking President Bush's nomination choices for the federal bench. Do these groups all share the same board of directors? They all march in lockstep. What they have in common is that they don't like independent judges who won't toe the Democratic Party line.

Last year, the Democrat-dominated Congress stalled 64 of Bush's district-court nominees and all 27 of his appeals-court appointments. Now that the Republicans have taken back the Senate, the president has renominated most of these justices with the hope that they'll fare better with the GOP-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. The tortuous and partisan confirmation process hit its peak in 2002, with the 107th Congress, which left some 91 judgeships unfilled, and the constitutional integrity of the Senate's "advise and consent" function was lost in partisan bickering. Even now, months after the GOP took back control, most of those positions remain vacant.

Prior to November, for example, Judge Miguel Estrada, the nominee for U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, was sent through a Demo-orchestrated wringer. The Judiciary Committee deemed him unsatisfactory because he had wandered off from the liberal reservation, where all good minorities are supposed to graze. One of the charges against him is that he is a strong supporter of capital punishment. (Unfortunately for the Judiciary Committee, so are a majority of Americans.)

The committee complained when it couldn't find enough briefs he had written to determine his ideology. In other words, committee members were trying to prove he's a conservative so they could reject him. Two weeks ago, however, the committee finally allowed Estrada's confirmation to proceed to the full Senate for a vote.

The Democrats are using several litmus-test issues to determine who will get the nod. Republicans, by contrast, gave Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who worked with the American Civil Liberties Union and disagrees with nearly every issue Republicans believe in, unanimous approval during her confirmation hearing. The GOP gave the Democratic president his due respect, but the opposition party's senators are simply not playing by the same courteous rules. It's dirty partisan politics for them.

For example, following in the footsteps of the coordinated character assassination that reached a crescendo with Judge Robert Bork, whose nomination was torpedoed by the Democrats, the liberals in California, led by Sen. Barbara Boxer, are sharpening their knives, getting ready to pounce on Judge Carolyn B. Kuhl, a nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Kuhl apparently committed a most heinous and unspeakable sin when she wrote a brief critical of Roe v. Wade.

Kuhl, who has served as U.S. deputy assistant attorney general and deputy solicitor-general, unfortunately had the temerity to indicate that the U.S. Constitution is silent on the issue of abortion. And the Constitution itself is clear in pronouncing that when it does not specifically address an issue, each state should decide the matter for itself. This is not right-wing lunacy, it's right there in the 10th Amendment. (Look it up.) Ironically, those liberals who want all their freedoms and abortion rights as allegedly granted by the Bill of Rights have never even taken a few minutes to actually read the 10th Amendment. (The 14th amendment, which liberals use to grant the federal government power over the states, actually applies mostly to civil rights cases.)

California liberals are fearful of conservatives taking over the Ninth Circuit, but they can breathe a sigh of relief now. There's no immediate danger of its decidedly left-of-center bias being upset now or in the near future. Of the 25 active judges serving on the court, Bill Clinton appointed 18 and Jimmy Carter gave the nod to four. Only seven were appointed by Republican presidents, three by Ronald Reagan and four by George H. W. Bush. So, if anyone should be screaming about a lack of "balance in the court," it should be the conservatives.

Seventeen months ago, the Supreme Court issued its ruling for United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers Cooperative, the closely watched "medical marijuana" case. By a vote of eight to zero, the court reversed the Ninth Circuit and reached the unsurprising conclusion that properly authorized federal law prevails over state law. That opinion came directly from the U.S. Constitution itself, which provides in Article VI that "this Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land."

The Ninth Circuit had held that there was an implied "medical necessity" exemption to the federal drug laws, a theory made of whole cloth. It cannot be found in the Constitution, which these justices promised to uphold and interpret without prejudice or personal bias. The Supreme Court unanimously held otherwise, and their decision set the groundwork for the well-publicized federal conviction of Oakland medicinal-marijuana grower Ed Rosenthal last month.

The Supreme Court ruling was all over the news, but what wasn't mentioned is that it marked the fifth time the Ninth Circuit -- the most overturned court in the nation -- had been overruled in a month. That's embarrassing, but the ideologically committed Ninth Circuit keeps making faulty ruling after faulty ruling. It couldn't care less. What does this say about the rule of law it's supposed to uphold?

The Ninth Circuit is by far the largest appellate court in the country: the largest geographically, covering California, Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Alaska and Hawaii -- more than one-third of the entire nation -- and the largest in terms of the number of judges, with 28 positions authorized for the court. The president should get his judges appointed. Supreme Court Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist recently said that "vacancies cannot remain at such high levels without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the federal judiciary."

Even Nan Aron, president of the left-leaning court-monitoring group Alliance for Justice, once said the president "has a duty to fill judicial vacancies and appoint jurists who share his views." Of course, she was referring to Clinton at the time, and she probably doesn't quite feel that way about Bush's nominees. However, her point is well taken. Only when a president is able to select judges is the nonelected, independent judiciary ultimately answerable to the people. The Senate's role should be to confirm intelligent judges because they are experienced and qualified, not only when the nominees share senators' political views.

The American Bar Association's Judicial Commission on Separation of Powers and Judicial Independence studied the confirmation process and produced a report that had this to say about the Senate's proper role in the confirmation process: "Problems arise when legitimate inquiries into a nominee's judicial philosophy degenerate into thinly veiled efforts to preordain how the nominee will rule on specific issues in the future. Such 'litmus test' questions cut to the quick of would-be judges' decisional independence and are properly resisted by the nominees."

The organization might have added that such litmus-test inquiries run contrary to the Constitution and reek of high-art partisanship. They're also tacky, reducing the Judiciary Committee to an immature kangaroo court.

NO AFFIRMATIVE ACTION, BUT ...

The Department of Justice may be opposing affirmative action in the courts, but it is instituting initiatives to boost minority representation in its own attorney ranks. Last week Attorney General John Ashcroft and Deputy AG Larry Thompson announced plans to create a new position devoted to recruiting minority lawyers. Other plans for increasing the racial, ethnic, economic, and geographic mix among Justice Department lawyers include diversity training for managers, a formal mentoring program for new hires, and the posting of attorney vacancies on the Internet. The new initiatives come one year after the Justice Department commissioned an outside study by KPMG Consulting to analyze diversity in the department's attorney work force. The completed report has not been released. The Justice Department also announced a student loan repayment program for new attorneys, through which eligible lawyers may receive up to $6,000 annually toward the repayment of federal student loans.

Dirksen 141 is where the binder will be (note there will be one page talking point rebuttals in the pocket of the binder - we did not prepare these, the HELP staff did, I assume that they are OK, and skimming over them they seem to be, but haven't examined closely).

And on Anti trust Mike Volkov prepared this -

Background

The McCarran-Ferguson Act provides a limited exemption to the insurance industry from the federal antitrust laws. The Act provides that the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act and the federal Trade Commission Act apply to the business of insurance "to the extent that such business is not regulated by state law." That limited exemption from federal antitrust law does not extend to "any agreement to boycott, coerce or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion or intimidation." State insurance commissions retain the right to review insurance rates and exercise regulatory authority over such rates.

The practical impact of the antitrust exemption has been eroded in recent years as courts have narrowed the definition of the business of insurance and broadened the definition of boycott and as an increasing number of states have subjected the industry to state antitrust law.

Proposed Bill

The proposed bill provides: "nothing in [McCarran-Ferguson Act] shall be construed to permit commercial insurers to engage in any form of price fixing, bid rigging, or market allocations in connection with the conduct of the business of providing medical malpractice insurance."

The legislation -- which is limited in application to only medical malpractice insurers -- is predicated on an unproven assumption -- that the high rates for medical malpractice insurance are the result of collusion among insurance companies. This contention, while clever and offered only to cloud the debate, lacks any evidentiary support. To the contrary, the most significant cause of higher malpractice rates is rising costs of the underlying tort system. In general, the price of medical malpractice insurance must rise to reflect expected cost of the losses against which policy holders are insured. The allegation of price fixing, bid-rigging and territorial allocations is without evidentiary support, and offered only to deflect attention from the problems with the underlying civil justice system.

While antitrust policy purists contend that there is nothing unique about the insurance industry to warrant the current exemption, the insurance industry is heavily regulated by the states and no one has questioned the ability of states to regulate the industry and prevent clear anti-competitive conduct. Moreover, there are some who suggest that application of the antitrust laws may, in fact, chill legitimate and pro-competitive information sharing activities among competing insurance companies such as joint data collection, joint analysis and reporting of historical data, loss development and trending.

Memorandum

TO: Republican Judiciary Committee Staff
FROM: Rebecca Seidel and Mark Carlson
SUBJECT: Hearing; "Patient Access Crisis, the Effect of Medical Litigation;" 2/11/03
DATE: 02-07-03

This joint Judiciary Committee and HELP Committee hearing will focus on understanding better the causes, the effects, and the scope of the medical litigation crisis that is affecting every American. The Republican witnesses (two Judiciary, three HELP) include a patient, a patient's wife, one physician, the President of Physician Insurers Association of America (PIAA), and the Texas State Insurance Commissioner.

In the last few years, medical liability insurance costs have increased dramatically and several companies have stopped writing this insurance. Doctors, unable to find or pay for insurance, are moving or leaving practice. Patients are left without access to necessary care. Significant evidence indicates that frivolous lawsuits and excessive jury awards for non-economic damages are responsible for the high cost of insurance. The direct costs and indirect costs (due to defensive medicine) of out-of-control medical litigation increase the cost of health care for all Americans and increase risk unnecessarily for patients. Although opponents of reform may now acknowledge that a problem exists, they blame insurance companies, claiming that poor investments, the business cycle, and monopolistic pricing are responsible for sky-rocketing premiums.

Hearing Witnesses:
For the Republicans

1) Leanne Dyess, Wife of patient Tony Dyess, Vicksburg, Mississipi:
Mrs. Dyess's husband had a single car accident and sustained a massive head injury while returning from a business trip in Gulfport, Mississippi to Vicksburg, Mississippi. It is thought that he fell asleep at the wheel. He was taken to Garden Park Hospital in Gulfport where a neurosurgeon was unavailable to provide the care he urgently needed, a shunt to reduce the life-threatening high pressure in his brain. She was told that all but one neurosurgeon had left the area due to medical liability costs and the one remaining neurosurgeon was not available that day. Mr. Dyess was transported via helicopter to the University Medical Center in Jackson Mississippi, arriving about six hours after the accident. He received immediate neurosurgical care at the University Medical Center but remained in a coma for several weeks and is permanently and severely disabled today. Earlier care would likely have reduced the extent of his injury and the severity of his disability. Due to his disability, he lives with his parents while his wife looks for work and looks after their two teenage children, one a sophomore in high school, the other a freshman in junior college.

2) Lawrence E. Smarr, President of Physician Insurers Association of America (PIAA), Rockville, MD:
PIAA is an association of provider-owned and or operated (doctors, dentists, hospitals etc) organizations that provides medical liability insurance to over 60% of the nation's doctors and dentists. Mr. Smarr will testify on the causes of the current crisis and the effects of medical litigation on medical liability insurance rates. He can address the validity of the argument that factors other than medical litigation costs are driving the increase in medical liability insurance premiums. He testified in June, 2002 before the House Subcommittee on Commercial and Administrative Law. He is scheduled to testify before the House Energy and Commerce Committee in a field hearing in Pennsylvania on Monday, February 10, 2003.

3) Jose Montemayor, Commissioner of Insurance, Austin, Texas:
Mr. Montemayor will testify on the effects of Medical litigation on medical insurance premiums and on the states. He will address the causes of the current crisis and what has not caused the crisis.

4) Laurie Peel, Ob/Gyn patient, Raleigh, NC:
Mrs. Peel participated in the recent Republican Press Conference on February 4, 2003. She is from Raleigh, North Carolina. Her OB/GYN of five years, left North Carolina because of premium rates. No other practice would take her because they were already full and because she had suffered a miscarriage prior to moving to Raleigh and was therefore high risk. Dr. Schmitt was the only one who would take her. Ms. Peel was on the President's panel in North Carolina.

5) Shelby Wilbourn, MD, Belfast Maine: After completing his training at the University of Tennessee and Tulane University, Dr. Wilbourn settled in Las Vegas, NV where he practiced for 12 years and served as an Assistant Professor at the University of Nevada School of Medicine. He recently relocated to Belfast, Maine. He recently testified on the President's panel regarding the effects of increasing medical liability insurance premiums. At the time of his testimony, Dr. Wilbourn had no medical liability claims. He has since been served with a claim from the family of a woman who had an amniotic fluid embolism that caused seizures and ultimately left her brain dead. Amniotic fluid embolisms are a rare complication for which Obstetricians say there is no known prevention.

For the Democrats

6) Jay Angoff, Of Counsel, Roger G. Brown & Associates, Jefferson City, MO:
He is a medical malpractice attorney. He is the former Missouri Commissioner under Governor Carnahan. He testified before Judiciary Committee during the medical liability crisis of the 1980's.
(see http://www.consumerwatchdog.org/insurance/rp/rp002610.pdf).

5) Linda McDougal, Patient from Woodville, Wisconsin:
She had an unnecessary double mastectomy for breast cancer that did not exist. It is alleged that a laboratory error (the biopsy slides were mixed up with those of another patient) resulted in the misdiagnosis and the unnecessary procedure. She has been in the news and reportedly was part of the "bus tour."

Estrada short on civil rights

Dorothy I. Height, Wade Henderson

Dorothy I. Height, chairwoman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, and Wade Henderson, its executive director, recently wrote a letter to Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) expressing opposition to the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Here are excerpts:

A review of Estrada's record to date indicates that his positions, opinions and legal activities in numerous areas are troublesome and raise serious questions about his commitment to equal justice and civil rights for all Americans. In addition, by refusing to adequately answer numerous questions posed to him at his Sept. 26, 2002, hearing, as well as written questions following the hearing, Estrada has failed to demonstrate a commitment to the continued vigorous enforcement of critical constitutional and statutory rights in the areas of civil rights and civil liberties. Estrada's nomination has special significance for the communities we represent for a number of reasons, including the unique status of the D.C. Circuit. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has a critical role in our federal judicial system and is widely regarded as the second most important court in the United States, after the U.S. Supreme Court. Because of the importance of this court and because several senators have spoken out about the prospects of Estrada being subsequently elevated to the Supreme Court if confirmed, it is important that his nomination be scrutinized.

In our review of Estrada's record made public to date, we are troubled by many of the positions that he has taken in litigation for public and private clients. For example, Estrada has devoted a good deal of time to defending so-called anti-loitering statutes, which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative impact on African-Americans and Latinos.

These statutes have been attacked on several grounds, including concerns that they inhibit expression in violation of the First Amendment and that they are inconsistent with the 14th Amendment's guarantee of due process. State and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court, have struck down these statutes as unconstitutional. Moreover, we are troubled by claims made by Estrada regarding the standing of civil rights organizations to pursue constitutional challenges to these laws.

Estrada's career thus far also reveals a troubling tendency to favor powerful corporate interests over the interests of normal citizens. His work in at least one case hints at a troubling bias against organized labor, and his work for a large pharmaceutical company suggests a cavalier attitude toward the rights of consumers.

In addition, Estrada has made disturbing public statements expressing disdain for judicial review of legislative enactments.

According to Estrada, in our democracy "we" do not bring challenges to laws in court, but rather "try out" the laws to see if they "work" and only "scrap" them if they don't. This understanding of our constitutional democracy dramatically undermines the role of the judiciary in reviewing executive and legislative branch decisions to ensure that the constitutional rights of minorities (racial or otherwise) are protected.

CHUCK'S FULL OF FILI-BLUSTER: GOP

By VINCENT MORRIS and KENNETH LOVETT

February 11, 2003 --

New York Republicans yesterday attacked Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) for threatening to filibuster against Miguel Estrada, a Hispanic lawyer President Bush nominated as a judge.

Gov. Pataki ripped Schumer's "hypocrisy" in an upstate speech.

"Those on the left who talk about immigrants, who talk about America being an inclusive society, are blocking him because he may not fit their political ideology," Pataki said.

And state GOP Chairman Sandy Treadwell accused Schumer of "petty, partisan political games to prevent this highly qualified Hispanic-American from becoming a judge."

Former Congressman Herman Badillo hinted he might work against Schumer's re-election, saying, "New York Hispanics will not forget this next year."

Senate Republicans want a vote on Estrada's nomination tomorrow. It was unclear yesterday if Democrats would block the vote with a filibuster.

Schumer and other Democrats complain the appeals-court nominee offered no opinion on several hot-button issues.

Estrada is a Washington D.C., lawyer who came to the United States from Honduras as a teenager and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1986. He has practiced constitutional law and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

The nation's largest lawyers group voted Tuesday to recommend limits on asbestos lawsuits, a stand intended to help people who are really sick and to relieve overwhelmed courts.

Critics argued that the American Bar Association should not try to cut off access to jury trials, while supporters said there is a national crisis with 600,000 pending claims.

"It is fair. It is long overdue, and it is clearly in the national interest," said Nathaniel Jones, a former federal judge who now practices law in Cincinnati.

The proposal, which easily cleared the ABA's policy-making board at the ABA's winter meeting here, sets medical standards for people who have been exposed to asbestos but do not have cancer. Those who do not qualify under the standards could sue later if their conditions worsen.

The ABA will now lobby Congress, which is already expected to consider ways to control asbestos lawsuits.

The stand is a little unusual, because it puts the 400,000-member legal organization on the same side as big business groups the ABA often opposes.

Mary Alexander, president of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, argued Tuesday that the plan "restricts open access to justice," and is at odds with the ABA's usual positions.

"Those who are sick but not dying would be denied," she said.

The issue was one of the more controversial of the proposals taken up during the meeting, which was ending on Tuesday.

Both sides brought people with asbestos-related health problems to Seattle to influence the debate.

"You've got to be knocking on death's door, close to the Grim Reaper to get into court," under the ABA standard, said Les Skramstad, a former mine worker from Libby, Mont., who suffers from asbestos and who says his wife and children have lung ailments too.

That town has been plagued by asbestos problems related to a former vermiculite mine.

ABA leaders said the Libby victims would not be hurt by the proposal.

Brian Harvey, a former college employee from Marysville, Wash., said he's skeptical of claims filed by people who he believes rushed to court after getting just a few tests. He said people who are not truly sick are getting undeserved settlements.

"If I had any hair on my back, it would rise," said Harvey, who has undergone chemotherapy and has mesothelioma, a rare and inoperable form of lung cancer.

The asbestosis lawsuits have provided lucrative work for many defense and plaintiffs' lawyers who make up the ABA.

But ABA President A.P. Carlton said most people agree that there is a crisis.
The resolution, Carlton said, "is an earnest and sincere attempt to get some balance into the system."
Asbestos is a heat-resistant mineral that has been found to cause severe health problems. Lawsuits over asbestos have forced more than 60 companies into bankruptcy protection since 2000.
Critics of the ABA proposal said 90 percent of pending cases would be barred under the recommended standard.
Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said in a letter that the proposal "would place the ABA in the position of advocating for the arbitrary denial of justice to those that have been injured by the actions of others."

The issue was one of the more controversial of the proposals taken up during the meeting, which was ending on Tuesday.

Both sides brought people with asbestos-related health problems to Seattle to influence the debate.

"You've got to be knocking on death's door, close to the Grim Reaper to get into court," under the ABA standard, said Les Skramstad, a former mine worker from Libby, Mont., who suffers from asbestos and who says his wife and children have lung ailments too.

That town has been plagued by asbestos problems related to a former vermiculite mine.

ABA leaders said the Libby victims would not be hurt by the proposal.

Brian Harvey, a former college employee from Marysville, Wash., said he's skeptical of claims filed by people who he believes rushed to court after getting just a few tests. He said people who are not truly sick are getting undeserved settlements.

"If I had any hair on my back, it would rise," said Harvey, who has undergone chemotherapy and has mesothelioma, a rare and inoperable form of lung cancer.

The asbestosis lawsuits have provided lucrative work for many defense and plaintiffs' lawyers who make up the ABA.

But ABA President A.P. Carlton said most people agree that there is a crisis.

The resolution, Carlton said, "is an earnest and sincere attempt to get some balance into the system."

Asbestos is a heat-resistant mineral that has been found to cause severe health problems. Lawsuits over asbestos have forced more than 60 companies into bankruptcy protection since 2000.

Critics of the ABA proposal said 90 percent of pending cases would be barred under the recommended standard.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said in a letter that the proposal "would place the ABA in the position of advocating for the arbitrary denial of justice to those that have been injured by the actions of others."

ABA Recommends Curbs on Asbestos Lawsuits
By GINA HOLLAND
ASSOCIATED PRESS
SEATTLE (AP) -
The nation's largest lawyers group voted Tuesday to recommend limits on asbestos lawsuits, a stand intended to help people who are really sick and to relieve overwhelmed courts.

Critics argued that the American Bar Association should not try to cut off access to jury trials, while supporters said there is a national crisis with 600,000 pending claims.

"It is fair. It is long overdue, and it is clearly in the national interest," said Nathaniel Jones, a former federal judge who now practices law in Cincinnati.

The proposal, which easily cleared the ABA's policy-making board at the ABA's winter meeting here, sets medical standards for people who have been exposed to asbestos but do not have cancer. Those who do not qualify under the standards could sue later if their conditions worsen.

The ABA will now lobby Congress, which is already expected to consider ways to control asbestos lawsuits. The stand is a little unusual, because it puts the 400,000-member legal organization on the same side as big business groups the ABA often opposes.

Mary Alexander, president of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, argued Tuesday that the plan "restricts open access to justice," and is at odds with the ABA's usual positions.

"Those who are sick but not dying would be denied," she said. The issue was one of the more controversial of the proposals taken up during the meeting, which was ending on Tuesday. HEADLINE: Judging Gonzales

BYLINE: By Ramesh Ponnuru; NR Senior Editor

BODY:
Is White House counsel Alberto Gonzales on the short list to fill the next Supreme Court vacancy? That's been the subject of speculation since even before President Bush took office. That speculation had declined in recent months, and a recent Washington Post story suggested he was out of the running. But the rumor mill is up and running again. Some social conservatives are reporting that the White House is trying to sell them on Gonzales's merits. They're worried that a Justice Gonzales could be in our

In the Senate, Republican staffers who share this alarm have taken to saying that "Gonzales is Spanish for Souter." The reference is to Justice David Souter, a nominee of the first President Bush. Souter was picked because he lacked a paper trail and could thus easily be confirmed. Souter got 90 votes in the Senate. But on the bench he turned out to be a fairly reliable liberal vote. In the latest issue of NR, my colleagues editorialize that it is unfair to compare Gonzales to Souter: "When Souter was nominated, we didn't know anything about his views. We do know something about Gonzales's views, and what we know is not encouraging."

Gonzales opponents say there are two strikes against him. The first is that he weakened the administration's brief to the Supreme Court in the University of Michigan racial-preference cases. Solicitor General Ted Olson wanted the administration to say that the use of racial preferences to achieve diversity is constitutionally impermissible. Gonzales overruled him.

The second strike is Gonzales's record on abortion as a justice of the Texas supreme court. The state had passed a law requiring parents to be notified before a minor could get an abortion. That law, like most parental-notification laws, allowed judges to waive the requirement if observing it could be expected to lead to the abuse of the girl in question. In its first cases dealing with the law, the court read this judicial-bypass provision broadly - so broadly that one dissenter furiously charged that the law had been gutted.

Priscilla Owen, whom Bush has nominated to a federal court of appeals, sat on the Texas supreme court with Gonzales during the notification cases. She was a dissenter, and last year her opponents seized on a remark Gonzales made in the cases to cast her as an extremist. Gonzales had supposedly tagged Owen as a right-wing activist. Some conservatives believe that Gonzales made this remark, and hold it against him. It appears, however, that Gonzales was referring not to Owen but to one of their colleagues on the Texas supreme court.

I reviewed Gonzales's opinions (and those of his colleagues) for a profile of him in NR two years ago. My conclusion was that while the dissenters had the better argument about how to construe the statute, the cases do not prove Gonzales to be a lawless judge, a supporter of Roe v. Wade, or even a proponent of a right to abortion. On the other hand, nothing in Gonzales's jurisprudence in that case or others would lead people to believe that he would be a Supreme Court justice in the mold of Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas - which is what Bush said he wanted on the campaign trail.

So far, the White House campaign for Gonzales has found few takers among social conservatives or legal conservatives generally. Some of the former are regularly discussing what to do if Bush nominates Gonzales.

The short answer is that there's not much they would be able to do to stop Gonzales's confirmation. Social conservatives would feel betrayed - the rank-and-filers, that is, not just the leaders of the Washington groups - since the chief reason they were given to vote for Bush was that he would nominate "strict constructionists" like Scalia and Thomas. But Republican senators are not going to vote against a Bush nominee who's also the first Hispanic nominee to the Supreme Court, whatever conservatives say. Conservative opponents of Gonzales will have to be careful not to threaten more than they can deliver.

Two months ago, Jeff Bell, an influential social-conservative activist, told me how he thought a Gonzales nomination would play out. "Every article would say that the pro-life movement is over," he said. "[Gonzales would] make [his non-conservatism] obvious as early as the hearings. Leahy would whisk him through, a handful would vote against him. It'd be 90-10. It would be seen as a complete victory for the other side on every difficult liberal-conservative issue before the Supreme Court. . . .

Gonzales is not going to resist the zeitgeist on anything for any length of time and everybody knows that. I think it's a major risk for Bush to make a nomination like that and I think he won't. It might not hurt short-run but in the medium-run and long-run it is very dangerous to his base."

Bell could be wrong about the danger. Everyone can understand the political point of nominating the first Hispanic Supreme Court justice and avoiding a confirmation fight with the Democrats. Says one opponent, "If I was just a Machiavellian Republican, without any desire to do the right thing, I'd try to make this thing work." If Gonzales is nominated, however, it will be hard to see what the point of all the pro-life positions that Bush has taken was.

The president has run real political risks in standing with pro-lifers on stem cells, cloning, and international family-planning funding. He has gained their enthusiastic support as a result - and that's all he has gained. Nominating Gonzales this year would instantly wipe out that enthusiasm. Gonzales's nomination would also raise another question: What was the point of Bush's nominating Scalia-Thomas-style conservatives to the federal courts of appeal? If Bush thought it was worth fighting with liberals over those courts, why not over the court to whose precedents they are bound?

Perhaps the point of all these moves was to build up Bush's credibility among pro-lifers to the point that they would give Gonzales the benefit of the doubt as Bush's friend. But pro-lifers have several reasons not to give Supreme Court nominees the benefit of the doubt. They have been burned before. Pro-lifers were bitterly disappointed with Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony Kennedy, and Souter, all of whom were nominated by political allies and expected to vote against Roe, but didn't. Another such disappointment would leave the court split 7-2 for Roe. That's the same as the original vote for it. We'd be right back to 1973.

Some people believe that it would be easier to sell conservatives on Gonzales as a replacement for Justice O'Connor than as a replacement for Chief Justice William Rehnquist. The White House could tell conservatives that trading O'Connor for Gonzales was a step up, even if Gonzales is not conservatives' ideal justice. That won't work for everyone: Bush's promise was to appoint "strict constructionists," not to improve the Supreme Court incrementally. It might, however, work for a lot of conservatives - especially if Bush had already gotten a conservative justice confirmed and Gonzales were his second nominee.

Thanks Brett. We can use it with our media panel.

At 6:15 p.m. your time we kicked-off the separate Senate/Editor communications program. 1,350 of our lawyers were each e-mailed 2 customized letters on RNLA letterhead to fax to both of their Senators.
The
download rate is incredible -- there will be a crush on the fax machines tomorrow. Similar e-mails and letters are going to newspapers.

John, are you working on any civil justice / tort reform issues? There is a new study out sponsored by ATRA. Before you came to OMB we used an earlier version of this study to estimate some of our tort costs. This updated study finds that:

- Including insured and self-insured costs, the U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001.
- Tort costs increased 14.3% in 2001, the highest percentage increase in tort costs since 1986.
- U.S. tort costs accounted for 2.04% of gross domestic product (GDP) in 2001. This signals the end of a 13-year decline in the ratio of tort costs to GDP in the U.S.
- Tort costs were $721 per U.S. citizen in 2001. This compares to a cost of $12 per citizen in 1950 (or $87 when adjusted for inflation).

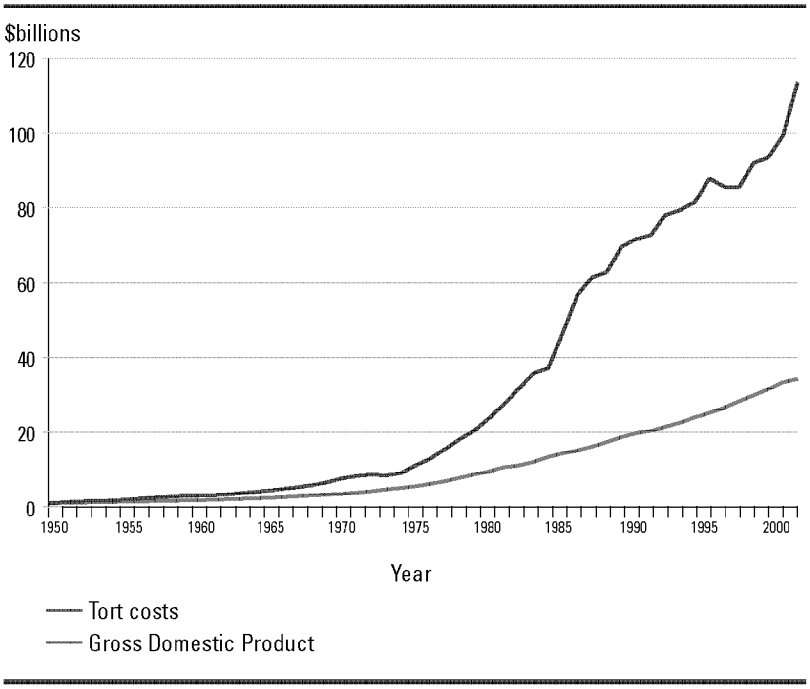
Executive Summary

Key Findings

The cost of the U.S. tort system grew by 14.3% in 2001, the highest single-year percentage increase since 1986. As indicated in the table below, the growth in tort costs experienced in 2001 is in stark contrast to the moderate rate of growth experienced in the past decade and is more akin to the double-digit growth rates experienced in the decades of the 1950s, 1970s and 1980s.

Years	Average Annual Increase in Tort System Costs
1951-1960	11.6%
1961-1970	9.8%
1971-1980	12.0%
1981-1990	11.7%
1991-2000	3.3%
2001	14.3%
50 years (1951-2001)	9.7%



At current levels, U.S. tort costs are equivalent to a 5% tax on wages. The U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001, or $721 per U.S. citizen. This compares to $12 per citizen in 1950.

Over the last 50 years, tort costs in the U.S. have increased more than 100-fold. In contrast, overall economic growth (as measured by GDP) has grown by a factor of 34 and the population has grown by a factor of less than two.

When viewed as a method of compensating injured parties, the U.S. tort system is highly inefficient, returning less than 50 cents on the dollar to the people it is designed to help and returning only 22 cents to compensate for actual economic loss. Inefficiency in the system has increased over time; when our Tort Cost Study was first conducted in 1985, 25 cents on the dollar was returned to injured parties for their actual economic loss.

The 14.3% rate of growth in tort costs in 2001 greatly exceeded overall economic growth of 2.6%. During the past 50 years, growth in tort costs has exceeded growth in GDP by an average of two to three percentage points, with the largest disparity having been nearly 6% in the 1950s. In the 1990s this trend reversed itself, with GDP growth exceeding the growth in tort costs. This change reflected a period of steady economic growth and low inflation without significant growth in tort costs. As of 2001, U.S. tort costs accounted for slightly more than 2% of GDP, after five consecutive years of levels below 2%.

Since 1975 (the first year in this study for which medical malpractice costs are separately identified), the increase in medical malpractice costs has outpaced increases in overall U.S. tort costs. Medical malpractice costs have risen an average of 11.6% per year, in contrast to an average annual increase of 9.4% per year in overall tort costs.

REV_00109380

Future Implications

Does the sudden surge in tort costs in 2001 signal the start of another period of high tort cost growth in the U.S., or does it represent merely a one-year anomaly?

The most notable event contributing to the rise in tort costs in 2001 was a significant upward reassessment of liabilities associated with asbestos claims, whose numbers have continued to mushroom. We estimate that this reassessment accounts for $6 billion of the increase in 2001 tort costs over 2000 levels. Absent these costs, the increase in U.S. tort system costs between 2000 and 2001 would have been approximately 11%, still well above the increases seen in the past decade and well in excess of overall economic growth in 2001. This increase in tort costs, following more than a decade of moderate increases, should not be surprising in light of news reports during the past few years citing:

- increases in class action lawsuits and large claim awards
- jury awards of record amounts in medical malpractice cases
- an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against boards of directors of publicly traded companies, reflecting poor stock performance and possibly further exacerbated by recent corporate accounting scandals and general consumer mistrust of U.S. corporations
- an increase in medical cost inflation, leading to higher costs of personal injury claims.

These trends continued in 2002, with no sign of abatement in the near future. Thus, while it is impossible to accurately predict future increases in tort costs, it does not seem unreasonable to assume that, absent sweeping structural changes to the U.S. tort system, annual increases will be in the 7% to 11% range for the next several years. At this rate of increase, tort costs could approach $1,000 per U.S. citizen by 2005 — representing a new quadruple-digit benchmark.

REV_00109381

The implications of a return to a period of higher growth in tort system costs may be gleaned by recalling what occurred during the last period of large tort cost increases in the 1980s, namely:

- continued increases in insurance prices as companies respond to new information suggesting higher underlying costs than initially assumed in the pricing of their products
- a shift away from insurance and toward self-insurance as corporations attempt to gain more control over their costs
- more insurer insolvencies and/or business curtailment in response to poor profitability
- increased pressure to enact tort reform and/or asbestos reform.

U.S. tort costs continue to grow faster than overall economic growth. While the exact causes of this growth are unclear, it is possible that a sense of entitlement (the so-called litigious society), coupled with a mistrust of corporations fueled by recent scandals, may be major contributors to the cost increases. Whatever the causes, the rapid increases suggest a continued need for public scrutiny and debate about the cost and relative benefits of the U.S. tort system.

A Word About This Study

U.S. Tort Costs: 2002 Update is an update of previous studies published by Tillinghast – Towers Perrin in 1985, 1989, 1992 and 1995. The most recent study, incorporating U.S. results through 2000, was published in February 2002.

Tillinghast presented the results of the original study to the American Insurance Association in the fall of 1985. The study was expanded in 1989 for the Actuarial Centennial Celebration, marking the 100th anniversary of the actuarial profession in North America, and was presented at a panel on liability insurance. Subsequently, Tillinghast testified on its findings before the U.S. Congress Joint Economic Committee.

The results of the earlier studies have been widely quoted by both proponents and opponents of tort reform, suggesting that the studies' straightforward analyses of the tort system's cost and trends have proved to be not only informative, but also objective and unbiased.

REV_00109383

Introduction

This edition of U.S. Tort Costs: 2002 Update is similar to previous studies published in 1985, 1989, 1992, 1995 and February 2002. This analysis tracks the cost of the U.S. tort system from 1950 to 2001 and compares the growth of tort costs to increases in various U.S. economic indicators.

The costs and relative benefits of the U.S. tort system have come under considerable public scrutiny and debate. Proponents of "tort reform" cite the high cost of the system as one reason for change. It is not surprising, then, that the Tillinghast studies have themselves attracted increasing interest and attention and have served as the basic data source for numerous articles in business and popular periodicals.

This update confirms a prediction made in the February 2002 study, namely, that the 13-year downward trend in the ratio of U.S. tort costs to GDP that began in the late 1980s ended abruptly in the year 2000. The growth in tort costs in 2001 was the largest since 1986, while GDP growth was modest.

As with the previous studies, this study's purpose is to provide a straightforward, objective analysis of cost and trends, and not to support any particular point of view.

REV_00109384

Summary of Key Findings

- Including insured and self-insured costs, the U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001.
- Tort costs increased 14.3% in 2001, the highest percentage increase in tort costs since 1986.
- U.S. tort costs accounted for 2.04% of gross domestic product (GDP) in 2001. This signals the end of a 13-year decline in the ratio of tort costs to GDP* in the U.S.
- Tort costs were $721 per U.S. citizen in 2001. This compares to a cost of $12 per citizen in 1950 (or $87 when adjusted for inflation). When viewed as a method of compensating claimants, the U.S. tort system is highly inefficient, returning less than 50 cents on the dollar to the people it is designed to help — and returning only 22 cents of the tort cost dollar to compensate for actual economic losses.
- The tort system has both indirect cost and indirect benefits that are not measured by this study. We do not attempt to measure or to judge the relative utility of these factors, but rather to provide a reasonable and consistent measurement of total direct tort costs over a long period of time.
- We expect the 2002 ratio of tort costs to GDP to increase to 2.15%. We expect the ratio to grow to 2.21% in 2003, based on a forecasted 9% increase in tort costs.

*Throughout this report, unadjusted, or nominal, GDP is used. Most news releases on GDP rely on inflation-adjusted, or real, GDP.

REV_00109385

Change in Tort Costs From 2000

Total insured and self-insured tort costs in the U.S. are estimated at $205.4 billion for 2001. This is an increase of $26 billion, or 14.3%, from the estimated $179.7 billion of tort costs in 2000. The $26 billion increase is the largest in U.S. history; the 14.3% increase is the largest since 1986.

Of the $26 billion increase, roughly $6 billion is attributable to a significant upward reassessment of estimated future payments associated with asbestos claims. In addition, 2001 saw an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against boards of directors of publicly held companies. This increase may be partially due to corporate accounting scandals and to poor stock performance after a number of years of unprecedented growth. It is also interesting to note that personal auto liability costs, unaffected by any particular newsworthy events, experienced the largest increase in costs since 1990. This may reflect an increase in medical cost inflation, leading in turn to higher costs for personal injury claims.

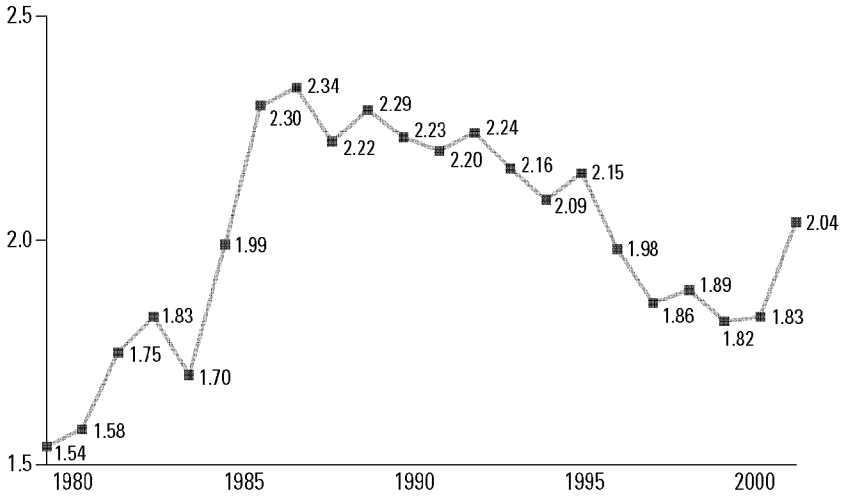
Tort Costs Relative to GDP



Over the last 50 years, tort costs in the U.S. have increased by over 100-fold — from less than $2 billion in 1950 to $205 billion in 2001. Tort cost growth has far outstripped U.S. economic growth as measured by GDP, which increased by a factor of 34 during that time.

	$billions
	U.S. Tort Costs	U.S. GDP	Tort Cost as % of GDP
1950	$ 1.8	$ 294	0.61%
1960	5.4	527	1.03%
1970	13.9	1,040	1.33%
1980	43.0	2,796	1.54%
1990	129.6	5,803	2.23%
2000	179.7	9,825	1.83%
2001	205.4	10,082	2.04%

REV_00109387

When we focus on the last 20 years, a different perspective emerges. Relative to GDP, tort costs appear to have peaked in 1987. The ratio of tort costs to GDP decreased significantly from 1995 (2.15%) to 1999 (1.82%). The 2000 ratio of 1.83% was little changed from the 1999 ratio, but the ratio jumped considerably in 2001.

U.S. Tort Costs as % of GDP — 1980-2001

The 1990s were a decade of substantial economic growth coupled with a low rate of inflation. Against this backdrop, it is not surprising that the rate of GDP growth in the decade exceeded the rate of tort cost growth.

The slowdown in economic growth in 2001, coupled with significant increases in tort costs, caused the surge in the ratio of tort cost growth to GDP in 2001. This suggests that the ratio bottomed out in the 1999-2000 period. We believe that 2001 will be the start of a multiyear period of increasing tort costs relative to GDP.

Tort Costs Relative to Population

Growth in U.S. tort costs since 1950 has far exceeded the U.S. population growth. Tort cost per citizen has risen by a factor of 61 from 1950 ($12 per citizen, or $87 when adjusted for inflation) to 2001 ($721 per citizen). Clearly, only some of this increase is due to inflation. Even after adjusting for changes in the consumer price index, the tort cost per citizen has risen by a factor of more than eight since 1950.

	U.S. Population (millions)	U.S. Tort Costs ($billions)	Tort Cost per Citizen	Inflation-Adjusted* Tort Cost per Citizen
1950	152	$ 1.8	$ 12	$ 87
1960	181	5.4	30	180
1970	205	13.9	68	309
1980	228	43.0	189	406
1990	249	129.6	520	704
2000	281	179.7	638	657
2001	285	205.4	721	721

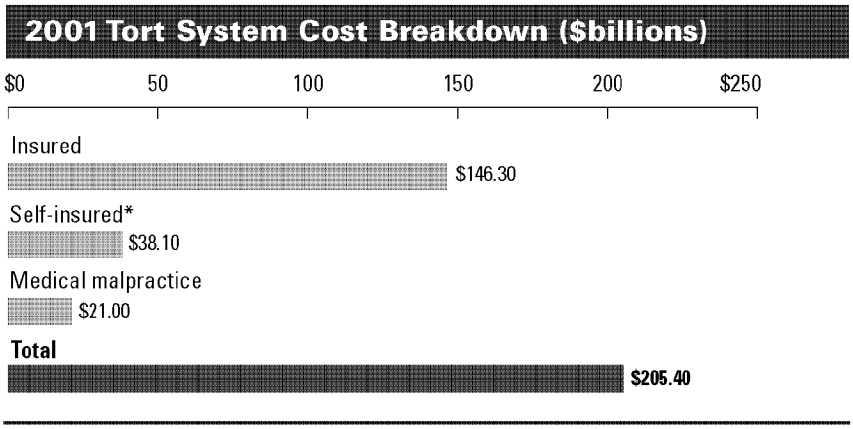
*Restated in year-2001 dollars

REV_00109389

Change in Tort Costs Relative to Inflation

The growth in U.S. tort costs since 1950 can only be partly explained by inflation. As shown below, the change in tort costs far exceeded inflation from 1950 through 1990, with the 1950s showing the biggest difference.

*As measured by the Consumer Price Index — All Items



One would expect the change in tort costs to exceed inflation due to increases in population. However, as shown in Appendix 1, U.S. population growth averaged only 1.2% per year from 1950 to 2001. Moreover, as shown on page 7, U.S. tort costs increased relative to inflation and population from 1950 to 1990. Costs fell on an inflation-adjusted per-person basis from 1990 to 2000, but increased in 2001.

REV_00109390

Components of Tort Costs

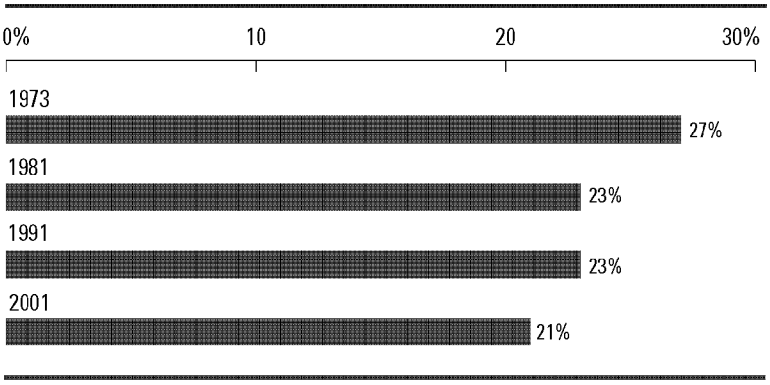
Total Tort Cost Dollars in 2001

The $205.4 billion cost of the U.S. tort system in 2001 is broken down as follows:

*Excluding medical malpractice

Insured Component

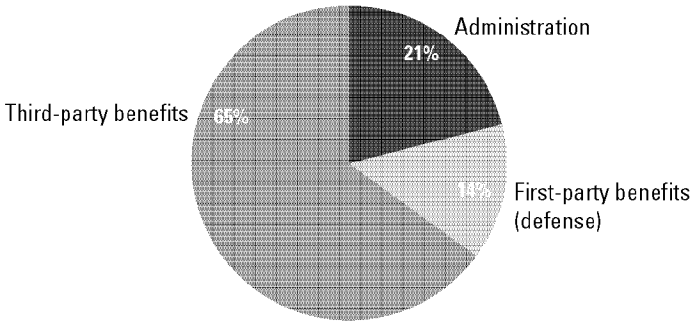
Insured cost estimates are derived from composite financial data (excluding medical malpractice) for the U.S. insurance industry as compiled and published by A.M. Best.* These data are considered highly reliable in that they are subject to audit and are reviewed by state regulatory agencies. Moreover, while certain product lines have changed over time, more than 60 years of consistent data are available.



The insurance costs included are:

- benefits paid to third parties (or their attorneys) alleging injury or damages caused by insured persons or companies
- benefits paid to first-party insureds in the form of claim handling and legal defense costs
- insurance company administrative costs, or overhead.

*Insurance purchased directly from a non-U.S. insurance company would not be included in the "insured component" of this study. Rather, such business would be considered in our estimates of self-insured tort costs.



REV_00109391

Some users of our previous surveys have questioned our decision to include insurance company overhead costs in the total. We take no position regarding the efficiency of this administrative system. Nevertheless, these are real costs, directly associated with administering the settlement of tort claims, and these costs are consistently defined and measurable over time. Although the inclusion of this administrative component obviously increases our definition of absolute cost, it actually dampens the rate of increase because administrative costs have generally declined as a percentage of the total, as follows:

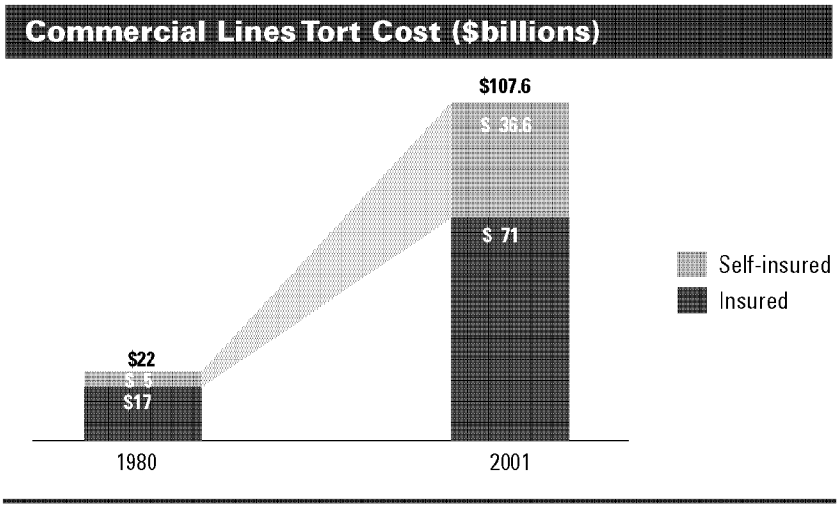
2001 Insured Costs ($146.3 billion)

REV_00109392



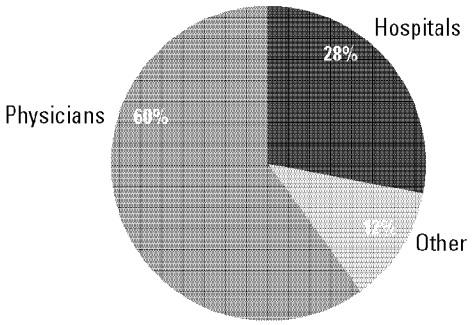
Self-Insured Component

The second component of the $205.4 billion cost total is the self-insured component (excluding medical malpractice). No consistent data set exists for this component, but several specialized studies have been published. The information that we reviewed for commercial lines included Conning and Company's periodic reports on the alternative risk market as well as various studies published by Tillinghast.

We estimate that 2% of personal insurance coverage cost and 34% of total commercial insurance coverage cost (up from less than 20% prior to 1980) are self-insured (see Appendix 4).

Our estimate of self-insured costs is approximately $36.6 billion for commercial risks in 2001. This has been calculated to include tort costs paid by various forms of self-insurance such as large deductibles, captives and risk retention groups. However, our estimate does not capture certain extraordinary costs such as those resulting from the 1998 settlement between tobacco manufacturers and various state attorneys general for health care cost reimbursement.

As shown in the chart below, the growth in self-insured commercial lines tort costs has exceeded the growth in insured tort costs. Given rate increases for commercial insurance in 2001 that appear to have continued in 2002, we would expect the portion of self-insured commercial lines tort costs to continue to grow.



REV_00109393

Medical Malpractice Component

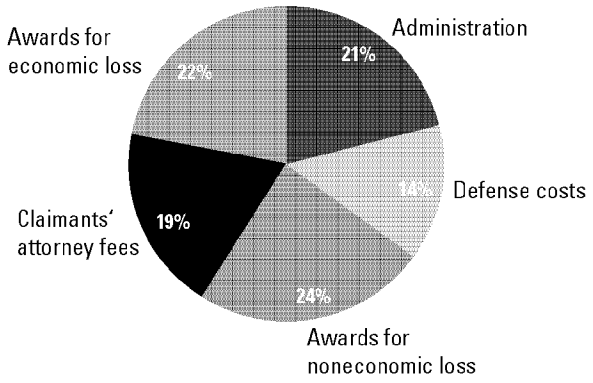
Our estimate of medical malpractice cost is not based on A.M. Best insurance industry data, but rather on Tillinghast–Towers Perrin's internal database of state-by-state medical malpractice cost. We have broken this cost out because the definition of insured versus self-insured costs has changed significantly over the last 30 years. Many group captives started in the mid-1970s as "self-insurance" alternatives to the commercial insurance market have become fully licensed insurance companies, and they are now included in insurance industry data. As of 2001, less than half of the $21 billion total medical malpractice cost is reported by Best.

Our approach to quantifying medical malpractice costs is by type of provider, as shown below (see also Appendix 5).

2001 Medical Malpractice Cost Breakdown by Category of Provider

The tort costs attributable to medical malpractice have been aggregated since 1975. Since then, medical malpractice tort costs have grown at an annual rate of 11.6%, versus 9.4% for all U.S. tort costs.

REV_00109394



What's Included?

We have defined insured tort cost to include first-party benefits (the cost of legal defense and claims handling), benefits paid to third parties (claimants and plaintiffs) or their attorneys, and an administrative, or overhead, component. Our definition includes such costs associated with all claims, not just those that reach the courthouse.

The tort system provides both direct and indirect benefits. The direct benefits include compensation to victims for their economic losses, including damaged property, lost wages and medical expenses. No consistent historical database exists to measure these components of the tort system. However, we do know that of the total benefits paid to third parties (65% of tort costs), one portion compensates for economic losses, one portion compensates for noneconomic losses (such as pain and suffering, loss of consortium, etc.) and a third portion goes to plaintiffs' attorneys.

There have been several studies of this split, but they typically have been limited to a particular state, coverage or exposure. Our best estimate of the breakdown of insured cost is illustrated in the chart below.

Where Tort Cost Goes

If viewed as a mechanism for compensating victims for their economic losses, the tort system is extremely inefficient, returning only 22 cents of the tort cost dollar for that purpose. Of course, the tort system also provides compensation for victims' pain and suffering and other noneconomic losses. However, even including these benefits, the system is less than 50% efficient.

REV_00109395

What's Not Included?

Our definition of tort cost is largely governed by traditional liability insurance coverages. (We previously noted the exclusion of tobacco settlements.) There are gray areas where awards and settlements are typically, but not always, excluded (e.g., certain types of contract and shareholder litigation, and punitive damages, which are included in the insurance contract in certain states and not in others). The costs reflected in this study are consistent with those reported by the insurance companies themselves. Therefore, while certain of these costs may be included in the tort cost totals, we are unable to account for them separately.

We have not included costs incurred by federal and state court systems in administering actual suits. Reliable estimates of these costs do exist, but not back to 1950. Estimates by the Institute of Civil Justice (Rand Corporation) put these costs at less than 1% of the other costs involved. We do not believe the omission of these costs significantly understates our cost index or in any material way distorts long-term trends.

We have also omitted certain indirect costs, such as those associated with litigation avoidance. Indirect costs can range from unnecessary and duplicative medical tests ordered by doctors as a defense against possible malpractice allegations to the disappearance of certain products or entire industries from the marketplace because of high product liability cost.

The tort system also provides indirect benefits that are not measured in this study. Such benefits include a systematic resolution of disputes, thereby reducing conflict, possibly including violence. The tort system may also act as a deterrent to unsafe practices and products. From this perspective, compensation for pain and suffering can be seen as beneficial to society as a whole.

Looking Ahead

Several factors contributed to the resurgence of tort costs in 2001, including:

- an increase in losses associated with asbestos
- an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against the boards of directors of publicly held companies
- an increase in medical cost inflation, leading to higher costs of personal injury claims.

These trends continued in 2002 as well and show no signs of abating in the near future. We expect total tort costs to increase approximately 9% in 2002, to $223.9 billion. We expect GDP to increase by 3.5% in 2002. Consequently, the 2002 ratio of tort costs to GDP is anticipated to increase to 2.15%.

Looking ahead, we anticipate growth in U.S. tort costs to range from 7% to 11% in 2003, with a midpoint of 9%. We expect similar increases in 2004 and 2005. We also anticipate GDP growth to increase to 6% per year. These assumptions yield projected tort costs, GDP and tort-to-GDP ratios as shown below:

	$billions
	Tort Costs	GDP	Tort Cost as % of GDP
2000	$179.7	$ 9,825	1.83%
2001	205.4	10,082	2.04%
2002 (est.)	223.9	10,435	2.15%
2003 (est.)	244.1	11,061	2.21%
2004 (est.)	266.0	11,725	2.27%
2005 (est.)	290.0	12,428	2.33%

The 9% growth in tort costs forecasted for the 2003-2005 period assumes no material impact on losses arising from tort reforms that may be implemented in the 2003-2005 period.

REV_00109397

Our premise of a three-point gap in the growth rates of tort costs and GDP during the 2003-2005 period is consistent with the long-run history of 1951-2001, which shows a gap of 2.5 points. When the gap is measured through 1995 only, it widens to 3.1 points.

We feel the 1996-2000 period is not reflective of current trends. For example, health care cost increases were more contained during that period, both in absolute terms and relative to core CPI. From 1996 to 2000, medical care inflation was less than one point higher than the core CPI. This slowed trend appears to have ended; the 2001 CPI for medical care grew nearly two points more than core CPI. This two-point gap is more consistent with the long-term trend. Results for 2002, through October, show a three-point gap.

The chart below shows the long-term history and our predictions for the 2003-2005 period for CPI, medical care CPI, GDP and tort costs.

	CPI	Medical Care CPI	Nominal GDP	Tort Costs
1951-1995	4.2%	6.1%	7.4%	10.5%
1996-2000	2.5%	3.4%	5.8%	2.5%
2001	2.8%	4.6%	2.6%	15.4%
2002 (est.)	1.6%*	4.6%*	3.5%*	9.0%
2003-2005 (est.)	3.0%	5.0%	6.0%	9.0%

*Estimated based on results through October 2002

There are certainly factors beyond health care costs that influence tort costs. The comparison of health care costs to tort costs is merely used to show differences in trends observed in the late 1990s with those observed over a longer time horizon.

DEMOCRATS SCAPEGOAT ESTRADA
The partisan maneuvering now underway in the U.S. Senate over judicial nominee Miguel Estrada really has nothing to do with Mr. Estrada. This is really about the United States Supreme Court. Far-left Democrats are determined to kill this nomination in order to send an unmistakable signal to President Bush. The Democrats' accusations against Mr. Estrada, a superbly qualified and distinguished lawyer, are laughable. Every one of the ugly smears has been repeatedly answered and refuted. So this has nothing to do with Miguel Estrada and his qualifications. Rather, Mr. Estrada is a scapegoat, a test case, an example, a stand-in for a future Supreme Court nominee. If the Democrats can filibuster to death the Estrada nomination-and no appeals court nominee ever has been successfully filibustered in Senate history-then they will have shown their muscle, paid off their pro-abortion liberal allies, and put President Bush on notice of what he can expect when he seeks to fill a Supreme Court vacancy. Republicans cannot allow the Democrats to prevail. Not only is the president's constitutional prerogative to appoint judges at risk, but the independence of a non-politicized judiciary.

LANDRIEU CHOOSES PARTY OVER PRINCIPLE
U.S. Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., said Tuesday that she probably will vote against President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal judgeship, but she also was forced to disown her own campaign ad telling Louisiana's Hispanic voters that she supports the nomination. In a statement released by her office, Landrieu said the campaign ad was "an error, and I apologize to anyone who was misled." In the ad, the announcer said, "Mary Landrieu has supported the candidacy of Honduran Miguel Estrada for the federal court of appeals." Landrieu characterized the ad's message as a miscommunication between her campaign and Hispanic supporters who helped in the ad's preparation. While stopping short of saying they would kill the nomination, some Democrats said they would filibuster-or delay a vote-until Estrada more fully answers questions about his legal views and the Bush administration provides memoranda he wrote while he worked in the office of the solicitor general in the Justice Department. To overcome a filibuster, the Bush administration would have to muster 60 votes for Estrada, instead of a simple majority of 51 votes. Landrieu said she supports the filibuster "at this time."

TAKE ACTION: Please call Senator Landrieu (202-224-5824 or 225-389-0395)
TODAY and urge her to reconsider and vote in favor of the nomination of Miguel Estrada, and also urge her to vote against any filibuster attempts.

OVER 100 TERRORIST ATTACKS THWARTED
Federal authorities, in an affidavit, reported that more than 100 terrorist attacks planned against the U.S. and its allies have been thwarted since September 11, 2001. Targets of the planned attacks included American embassies on three continents, a military base in Europe, and American cargo ships. The New York Police Department also issued a terror bulletin stating that detailed plots to blow up a terminal at JFK Airport, a nearby gas station, and a city clerk's office were also uncovered.

NEGATIVE SECONDARY EFFECTS
A new study shows that young people who use alcohol, marijuana, and other illicit drugs in their early adolescent years are prime targets for major depression and other psychological disorders in their late 20s. The research by Dr. David W. Brook of Mount Sinai School of Medicine and other colleagues indicates that early substance abuse among adolescents often precedes such problems. It was previously unclear whether drug and alcohol abuse was simply more prevalent among people who already had mental health problems.
The "Children in the Community Study" involved 736 New Yorkers who were interviewed, on average, at ages 14, 16, 22, and 27. Those who reported early use of alcohol and drugs were more likely to experience major depression, alcohol dependence and substance use disorders at age 27. For example, early alcohol users were 50% more likely to experience problems than those who were not early users.

ONLY ONE VOTE
The main body of the sexually oriented businesses (SOB) ordinances passed in Shreveport last night, as expected, by a vote of 7 to 0. The revision will now: require SOB owners to obtain licenses and employees to obtain SOB cards; prevent sex and drug offenders from being employed; prevent closed door "back room" private dances; and confirm stage height requirements and the state "no touch" rule between patrons and strippers. Unfortunately, Amendments 3 (the 6 ft. "buffer zone") and 4 (the hours of operation limitations) each failed by a single, heartbreaking vote. Those two provisions held the main teeth of the ordinance and would have been the most effective means of reducing the adverse effects of the SOBs upon Shreveport.

ANGER RESOLUTION SEMINAR
The Institute for Basic Life Principles' "Anger Resolution Seminar," taught by Dr. Bill Gothard, will be held via video at The Chapel On The Campus Friday, March 28 and Saturday, March 29. Anger has been identified as a major cause of damaged marriages, abused children, and violence in the home, school, and workplace. What is often written off as merely impatience, frustration, or irritability likely stems from a spirit of anger which can be removed before greater damage occurs. The seminar traces anger to its root causes and gives steps of action for resolving anger and repairing its damage. For more information or to register, contact Bob Welch (lmwelch@cox.net, 225-769-3662) or Dee Alberty (albertybr@cox.net, LA's LONGEST MARRIED COUPLE IDENTIFIED!

Louisiana Family Forum, in conjunction with the Diocese of Baton Rouge's Family Life Office and the Louisiana Commission on Marriage and Family, has identified George and Germaine Briant of Hammond, LA as Louisiana's longest married couple. They were married July 20, 1921, and they are 101 and 98 years old respectively. Administrators at the assisted living facility at which they reside testify that they kiss, hug, and dance regularly, with George singing "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" to Germaine every chance he gets.

Subject: Mobile (AL) Register (2/13/03) re: Estrada nomination (Dems fail their own words)

Dems fail their own words

02/13/03

ON THE matter of judicial nominee Miguel Estrada, Vermont Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy has proved himself a hypocrite.

In 1998, Sen. Leahy said this on the Senate floor: "I have stated over and over again ... that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported."

Now, at Sen. Leahy's express urging, the Democrats are implementing a filibuster to block President George W. Bush's nomination of Mr. Estrada for a key federal appeals court judgeship. (A filibuster is a procedural move to continue debate on a topic, without end, in order to deny a final vote.)

Democratic Senate Leader Tom Daschle joined Mr. Leahy on Tuesday to again demand to see memos Mr. Estrada wrote while working for the U.S. solicitor general's office at the Justice Department. They made this demand despite knowing that all seven former solicitors general -- four of them Democrats -- wrote a scathing letter saying that in no circumstances should those memos be released.

Nevertheless, said Mr. Daschle, "Until that information is provided, we will not be in the position to allow this vote to come to the floor."

So what happened to Sen. Leahy's vow to "object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported"?

He knows that all precedent indicates that a filibuster against judicial nominations, for any reason but one concerning the nominee's very integrity, is essentially dirty pool. Not even Sen. Leahy has questioned Mr. Estrada's integrity.

The senator ought to heed his own words and let the Senate vote, up or down, on Mr. Estrada's nomination.

Bush nominates Palo Alto Latina for appeals court bench
By Howard Mintz
Mercury News

In a move that could bolster Latino representation on the nation's largest federal appeals court, President George W. Bush today nominated a Latina state appeals court justice to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Consuelo Maria Callahan, who currently serves on the Sacramento-based Third District Court of Appeal, would become the second Latino judge on the 28-member 9th Circuit if she is confirmed by the U.S. Senate. Bush nominated Callahan to fill one of four vacancies on the San Francisco-based appeals court, which interprets law for California and eight other western states.

A native of Palo Alto and a Stanford University graduate, Callahan, 52, has been a state appeals court justice since 1996, when she was named to the court by former Gov. Pete Wilson. Callahan was previously a San Joaquin County Superior Court judge and a longtime prosecutor in Stockton.

The Bush administration is also close to nominating San Francisco Superior Court Judge Carlos Bea to the 9th Circuit, according to Republican lawyers and judges familiar with the process. Bea and Callahan, if eventually confirmed, would join Judge Richard Paez of Los Angeles as the court's Latino members.

The White House has named two other 9th Circuit nominees, Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl and Nevada lawyer Jay Bybee, who are currently encountering opposition from Democrats in the Senate. If the Bush appointees are confirmed to the 9th Circuit, they would join a court that is heavily dominated by judges appointed by Democrats and which is widely considered the country's most liberal.

Boston Herald calls Estrada filibuster a "democratic debacle";;;
Delay on Estrada: Democratic debacle

A Boston Herald editorial
Friday, February 14, 2003

With war on the horizon and the nation taking seriously a level Orange terrorism alert, you'd think Senate Democrats might have better things to do than play obstructionist games with a nominee to an important federal appellate court.

But sometimes Democrats just can't help themselves.

The man who's got those Senate Democrats in such a tizzy is Miguel Estrada, Harvard Law grad and assistant to the solicitor general of the United States under both Presidents George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton. Estrada, if confirmed, would be the first Hispanic-American to serve on the federal appeals court for the D.C. circuit. And apparently what truly scares the living daylights out of Senate Democrats is that such a high-profile judgeship would surely put him in line to become the first Hispanic to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court.

And so in a display of virtually unparalleled partisanship, Senate Democrats have raised one specious issue after another. Former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, a huge Estrada fan, wrote eloquently on these pages Tuesday in support of his nomination, putting down one phony Democratic excuse after another for blocking the nomination.

The latest one has to do with the White House's refusal to release memos and documents written by Estrada during his tenure in the solicitor general's office. Now all of the living former solicitors general - four Democrats and three Republicans - happen to agree with the White House position. There is such a thing as attorney-client privilege, even for the solicitor general.

But that's not enough to satisfy Massachusetts' own Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who said, ``The Senate cannot look the other way and rubber stamp a nominee like Mr. Estrada to such an important court, when we know so little about him, when what we do know about him raises so many serious questions.''

Rubber stamp? The Estrada nomination has been before the Senate for 21 months. If Kennedy and his pals haven't been able to turn up anything to disqualify Estrada in that time, they just aren't going to.

It's time they ended this mindless opposition, before it becomes even more of an embarrassment.

HEADLINE: Craig nominates 4 Idahoans for 9th Circuit seat

As President Bush seeks to leave his mark on the federal courts, four Idahoans have become part of the drama.

No longer blocked by foot-dragging Democrats who ran the Senate until last month, Bush is moving aggressively to appoint judges across the country.

One of those appointments will fill a seat on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals that's been held by an Idahoan since 1937. The seat will open Nov. 14, when Judge Thomas Nelson of Boise, an appointee of the first President Bush, becomes a "senior" judge on his 67th birthday. Moving quickly at the prompting of the White House, Idaho's senior Republican, Sen. Larry Craig, last week suggested four names for the $164,000-a-year lifetime appointments to the president's counsel, Alberto Gonzales:

Blake Hall, 49, a lawyer in Idaho Falls who was considered for the last 9th Circuit opening by then-Sen. Jim McClure in 1988. Hall is president of the State Board of Education, a former state GOP chairman and, since 1990, Republican national committeeman. He currently is vice chairman of the RNC for 16 Western states.

William Myers III, who is in his mid-40s and the solicitor, or chief legal officer, at the U.S. Department of the Interior in Washington. Meyers, who began practicing law in Wyoming, worked at the Boise office of Holland & Hart before becoming solicitor in 2001. He also was a lobbyist for the public lands livestock industry, a lawyer at the Department of Energy and an aide to former Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.

Kaye O'Riordan, 53, corporate secretary and senior attorney at Albertsons Inc. in Boise. O'Riordan, the first woman president of the Idaho State Bar Association, has also worked as a lawyer for MCI, as a law professor at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., and as a partner at Elam & Burke in Boise. For the past 12 years, she has been Craig's campaign treasurer.

Sixth District Judge Randy Smith, 53, of Pocatello, the only one of the four with experience as a judge. Also a former Idaho GOP chairman, Smith was appointed to the bench by Gov. Phil Batt in 1996. A former corporate counsel for the J.R. Simplot Co., Smith had a private practice in Pocatello and has taught at Brigham Young, Idaho State and Boise State universities.

"I know all of these people well, and I have high regard for them," said Craig, who extended the courtesy of having Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, endorse his nominees in a letter to Gonzales, a former judge, on Thursday. "Judge Gonzales was saying, 'We need names, we need to make a selection and start a process.' It is happening all over the country."

Craig listed the four in alphabetical order and said he had no first choice. The appointment is Bush's to make, but home-state senior senators traditionally suggest names to the White House. Craig, a new member of the Judiciary Committee, is in a good position to speed Senate confirmation.

Bush, knowing the long process of background checks, confirmation hearings and the prospect of 2004 presidential election politics, is making up for time lost when Democrats slowed nominations. Unfortunately, that's not a new phenomenon. It took two years for Nelson, an expert on water law, to get through the process before he was confirmed in 1990.

The 9th Circuit, one of 13 in the country, covers Idaho and eight other Western states. Circuit courts are one rung below the U.S. Supreme Court and have enormous influence on law and policy. Conservatives have long complained about the 9th Circuit, which has 17 Democratic appointees, seven Republicans and four vacancies.

Former Sen. McClure urges Bush to appoint "activist" judges to right the balance. "Conservatives sometimes make the mistake of saying, 'I don't want an activist,'" McClure said. "That means only liberals are activists, and policy always moves to the left. I think there has to be room for a conservative occasionally to recorrect the excesses."

Craig, knowing an "activist" label could slow the Idaho nominee, is wary of such talk. "I appreciate judges who are not political in the sense of activism, judges who follow the Constitution and the laws," he said. "Politics should be left to the politicians."

Craig said he has no litmus tests, except "character, competence and judicial philosophy."

I think Bush wants to counter the Clinton liberals. But the trick is not setting off the opposition, as has happened with Miguel Estrada, Bush's nominee for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Democrats are mulling the obstructionist tactic of a filibuster against Estrada, though they've not been able to pin him down on many of his conservative views, and the administration has declined to provide confidential memos he wrote while in government.

The Idaho candidates are following that lead, keeping mum. Myers didn't return my calls. And Hall, O'Riordan and Smith all had just one thing to say: They are "honored" to be considered.

Sadly, that's a sound strategy in an era when appointments to the federal bench have become a long-running partisan guerrilla conflict.

The key people for this meeting are Sharon Fawcett and Nancy Smith, and next week the only day that works for them is Wednesday, ideally in the afternoon. Can you do it then? If not, then we'll have to try for the week after. Let us know.

Also, this weekend I will be at the Kennedy Library for a conference on presidential tapes, et al. It is quite possible we will be pressed on the EO. If so, I would like to be able to respond that things are now getting much better, including that the WH has now agreed to generally clear notices within 45 days. Do you have a problem with me so saying?

I would rather you say that the process under the EO is moving promptly and that there is no backlog at the White House. The current White House has cleared ___ thousand pages of Reagan and Bush VP records [what is the current number?] and have only under 2500 pages currently under review and should have review of those completed early next week. The comparative judgment (doing "much better") implies a criticism of the WH which is neither appropriate nor justified. Also, I would not publicly identify any WH commitment on time while we remain in litigation.

In our most recent discussions with historians, they identified the real problem they face as a problem at the front end -- getting documents processed by the Libraries and Archives, rather than with WH and EO.

IT'S SHOWDOWN TIME AT U.N. AS POWELL TAKES ON EURO-WEASELS

By DEBORAH ORIN and BRIAN BLOMQUIST

PHOTO BABE AND ARMS: President Bush cuddles an unhappy little baby yesterday at Mayport Naval Station in Jacksonville, Fla., where he challenged our wavering allies to get some "backbone" on confronting Iraq. AP

February 14, 2003 -- WASHINGTON - Weasel so-called allies France and Germany will hear fresh evidence today of Iraqi stonewalling, at an 11th-hour showdown with the United States in the U.N. Security Council.

As chief weapons inspector Hans Blix gives his final report, Secretary of State Colin Powell has vowed to confront the war wimps - who are leading the push against American military action - and ask them if they are simply buying time to get Saddam Hussein "off the hook."

With the United Nations set to decide whether to impose the "serious consequences" it threatened in a unanimous vote last year, President Bush yesterday bluntly challenged France and Germany to get some "backbone."

"The decision is this for the United Nations: When you say something, does it mean anything?" Bush told troops yesterday at the Mayport Naval Station in Jacksonville, Fla.

"I'm optimistic that free nations will show backbone and courage in the face of true threats to peace and freedom," added the president, who sported a military jacket and spoke flanked by rows of sailors in crisp uniforms.

Bush stressed that America must protect the world "from these thugs" but U.S. troops won't have to go it alone even if the United Nations balks since there are plenty of "friends and allies" who agree that Saddam must be stopped.

If it comes to war, "America will act deliberately, America will act decisively and America will act victoriously with the world's greatest military," he vowed to the cheering troops.

Chief weapons inspectors Hans Blix and Mohamed ElBaradei today are expected to report that Iraq has longer-range missiles that explicitly violate the 93-mile U.N. limit aimed at keeping Saddam from attacking his neighbors.

ElBaradei said yesterday that he will ask for more time for inspections to continue.

Blix gave a surprisingly tough report on Jan. 27 and has since spoken of only limited progress and no real sign Iraq will disarm. The big question is how tough he'll be today.

France and Germany insist there's not enough to justify war - not the missiles, nor Saddam's failure to account for tons of lethal VX nerve gas and 25,000 liters of anthrax, as well as a host of other mass-murder weapons.

Powell and other foreign ministers will be at the Security Council for the huddle that could begin the countdown to war - and Powell has vowed to confront the reluctant French and Germans.

"The question I will put to them is, 'Why more inspections? And how much more time? Or are you just delaying for the sake of delaying in order to get Saddam off the hook and no disarmament?' That's a challenge I will put them," Powell told Congress.

February 14, 2003

It would be best if a president's - any president's - nominees to the federal bench were not too far left or right of the ideological center and were as forthcoming as possible during Senate confirmation hearings. It would be helpful if the opposition party in the Senate did not employ delaying tactics during the confirmation process that for years have left scores of vacancies in the federal district and circuit courts.

But in the real world, filling federal judgeships is often a vituperative, ideological slugfest in which the ideals of moderation and consultation between the president and members of the opposition in Congress are ignored. President Bill Clinton, for example, put forward nominees thought to be too liberal and activist by Republicans, who did their best in many cases to slow or stop such appointments. Democrats have done the same in the case of some of President Bush's nominees. It's time that toxic partisanship is drained from the all-important pursuit of selecting judges.

A case in point is Mr. Bush's nomination of 42-year-old lawyer Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Senate Democrats are filibustering the appointment, preventing the body from considering any other business. They believe Mr. Estrada to be extremely conservative and complain that he did not answer questions fully during his confirmation hearing.

The nominee's defenders charge that Democrats are being "unfair to a Hispanic lawyer." Republicans' playing the ethnicity card is a cheap political ploy. The fact that Mr. Estrada is Hispanic is not an issue. Democrats should give up their filibuster nonetheless.

Mr. Estrada probably could have been more cooperative in hearings, but there is little reason to doubt his qualifications and fitness for the job. Reputed to be a brilliant lawyer, Mr. Estrada received rave reviews from superiors for his work in the office of solicitor general, where he has served under both the Clinton and Bush administrations. Further, he was given high marks by the American Bar Association committee that reviews judicial nominees. That he is thought to be very conservative is not reason enough for Democrats to try to block his confirmation.

His opponents can vote against him if they wish. But this able lawyer who has Mr. Bush's confidence deserves a vote by the full Senate.

Democrats turn ugly on Estrada

February 14, 2003

Miguel Estrada is - uh oh - a conservative, and if that makes your heart pound with fear you may very well be a U.S. Senate Democrat. Then you may also be among those trying to thwart the Senate's majoritarian decision-making with a filibuster.

It's irresponsible, this hysteria being acted out to keep Estrada from serving on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. But Democratic senators do have their excuses, each more petty than the next.

One excuse is that they don't know enough about Estrada - implausible because there's a well-known and rather amazing life history here: Estrada immigrated to this country from Honduras, graduated with honors at Columbia College, was editor of the Law Review at Harvard Law School, a clerk to a Supreme Court justice, argued before the Supreme Court 15 times, and received the highest possible recommendation of the American Bar Association.

Opponents of Estrada are piqued because he stayed true to a widely endorsed tradition of refusing to indicate how as a judge he might decide cases that could come before him. Instead, Estrada merely said he would be an impartial judge loyal to the law.

The Democrats have no excuse (although it's clear they fear Estrada would be in line for a Supreme Court nomination if he gets this other judgeship first). If liberals in the Senate think conservatives will spell the end of civilization if they become judges, they can vote against Estrada. But keeping others from voting their consciences on this particular matter is simply out of line.

Give Mr. Estrada A Vote

February 14, 2003

It would be best if a president's - any president's - nominees to the federal bench were not too far left or right of the ideological center and were as forthcoming as possible during Senate confirmation hearings. It would be helpful if the opposition party in the Senate did not employ delaying tactics during the confirmation process that for years have left scores of vacancies in the federal district and circuit courts.

But in the real world, filling federal judgeships is often a vituperative, ideological slugfest in which the ideals of moderation and consultation between the president and members of the opposition in Congress are ignored. I have a handful of letters from the President asking him to endorse either certain candidates or themselves for election in '02. Some also ask for a donation to their campaign. Would the following response be okay? I don't want to answer them, but I feel guilty. Some of the letters are really old.

We apologize for the delay in responding to your letter. Due to mail procedures we only recently received your correspondence. Please know that your views and suggestions were/are very important to President Bush. The President was pleased with the outcome of the elections in November and appreciates your continued support. Best Wishes.

on some on the letters I might want to scratch the part about the President being pleased with the outcome of the elections because I don;t know if their candidate or the Republican won. (a lot of them are local elections)

Do you have any desire to see the actual letters? I doubt it. they are painful. Thanks.

(The only thing is we'd have to get this lg. approved first - make sure everyone is on board)

Also, depending on the author - it may be best not to respond at this late date and offend them more.

As for 04 suggestions - it is too early to say, you may just want to do a ty for your views your suggestions will be shared with the President or you may wait until the campaign starts. The lg. we have wouldn't work b.c. Cheney is the VP and he just may be again. Here it is so you have an idea.

I hope this is somewhat helpful, if not give me a call.
Thank you for your kind words of support, and for sharing your views on my choice for a running mate.
Throughout the vice presidential selection process, my foremost goal was to select an outstanding individual who is capable of serving as President of the United States. I wanted the selection process to be thorough and dignified, and so I reached out to a distinguished and experienced statesman to lead the search) Dick Cheney. For months, we worked closely together to review the qualifications of many impressive candidates.
As we worked to evaluate the strengths of others, I saw firsthand Dick Cheney,s outstanding judgment. As we considered many different credentials, I benefited from his keen insight. I was impressed by the thoughtful and thorough way he approached his mission. And gradually, I realized that the person who was best qualified to be my vice presidential nominee was working by my side.
I am proud that Dick Cheney) a man of great integrity and judgement and experience) has agreed to join me in accomplishing some great goals for our country: to save and strengthen Social Security, to improve Medicare and provide immediate prescription drug benefits to seniors, to reform our public schools, and to rebuild our nation,s military.
I have to admit, I didn,t select Dick because of Wyoming,s three electoral votes) although we want and will work hard to earn them. I picked him because he is without a doubt fully capable of being President of the United States, and he will be a valuable partner in a Bush administration. Dick Cheney has served our country as chief of staff to a President, served in the United States Congress, and as Secretary of Defense. He is a man of integrity who is respected by Republicans and Democrats alike. Even my opponent, Vice President Gore, once said Dick Cheney is a good man who is well liked and respected by his colleagues. I am proud to call him my friend, and am honored to call him my running mate.
The remaining days will be tough, but Dick and I welcome the contest. We, re grateful to know we can count on you.

Is there any language that says we are sorry we did not respond to their original letter? I have decided to not respond to the old endoresement requests or letters pertaining to the '02 election. It is too late and the responses are so tricky. Ken hates non-answer responses and will never sign them. It takes me a week to do a stack of letters and then he will x through them.

It would probably do more harm than good to respond now. But I feel so guilty!

Also, I have no idea how to respond to some of the 04 letters. (like new vp suggestions, etc.) I feel like if I write a letter that has a decent response, it will end up in the newspaper.

John, are you working on any civil justice / tort reform issues? There is a new study out sponsored by ATRA. Before you came to OMB we used an earlier version of this study to estimate some of our tort costs. This updated study finds that:

- Including insured and self-insured costs, the U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001.
- Tort costs increased 14.3% in 2001, the highest percentage increase in tort costs since 1986.
- U.S. tort costs accounted for 2.04% of gross domestic product (GDP) in 2001. This signals the end of a 13-year decline in the ratio of tort costs to GDP in the U.S.
- Tort costs were $721 per U.S. citizen in 2001. This compares to a cost of $12 per citizen in 1950 (or $87 when adjusted for inflation).

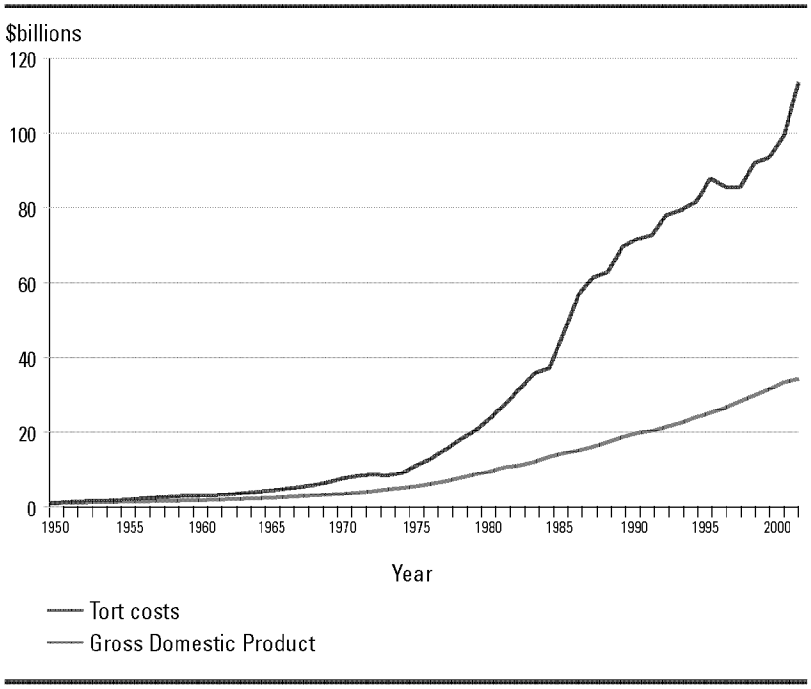
Executive Summary

Key Findings

The cost of the U.S. tort system grew by 14.3% in 2001, the highest single-year percentage increase since 1986. As indicated in the table below, the growth in tort costs experienced in 2001 is in stark contrast to the moderate rate of growth experienced in the past decade and is more akin to the double-digit growth rates experienced in the decades of the 1950s, 1970s and 1980s.

Years	Average Annual Increase in Tort System Costs
1951-1960	11.6%
1961-1970	9.8%
1971-1980	12.0%
1981-1990	11.7%
1991-2000	3.3%
2001	14.3%
50 years (1951-2001)	9.7%



At current levels, U.S. tort costs are equivalent to a 5% tax on wages. The U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001, or $721 per U.S. citizen. This compares to $12 per citizen in 1950.

Over the last 50 years, tort costs in the U.S. have increased more than 100-fold. In contrast, overall economic growth (as measured by GDP) has grown by a factor of 34 and the population has grown by a factor of less than two.

When viewed as a method of compensating injured parties, the U.S. tort system is highly inefficient, returning less than 50 cents on the dollar to the people it is designed to help and returning only 22 cents to compensate for actual economic loss. Inefficiency in the system has increased over time; when our Tort Cost Study was first conducted in 1985, 25 cents on the dollar was returned to injured parties for their actual economic loss.

The 14.3% rate of growth in tort costs in 2001 greatly exceeded overall economic growth of 2.6%. During the past 50 years, growth in tort costs has exceeded growth in GDP by an average of two to three percentage points, with the largest disparity having been nearly 6% in the 1950s. In the 1990s this trend reversed itself, with GDP growth exceeding the growth in tort costs. This change reflected a period of steady economic growth and low inflation without significant growth in tort costs. As of 2001, U.S. tort costs accounted for slightly more than 2% of GDP, after five consecutive years of levels below 2%.

Since 1975 (the first year in this study for which medical malpractice costs are separately identified), the increase in medical malpractice costs has outpaced increases in overall U.S. tort costs. Medical malpractice costs have risen an average of 11.6% per year, in contrast to an average annual increase of 9.4% per year in overall tort costs.

Future Implications

Does the sudden surge in tort costs in 2001 signal the start of another period of high tort cost growth in the U.S., or does it represent merely a one-year anomaly?

The most notable event contributing to the rise in tort costs in 2001 was a significant upward reassessment of liabilities associated with asbestos claims, whose numbers have continued to mushroom. We estimate that this reassessment accounts for $6 billion of the increase in 2001 tort costs over 2000 levels. Absent these costs, the increase in U.S. tort system costs between 2000 and 2001 would have been approximately 11%, still well above the increases seen in the past decade and well in excess of overall economic growth in 2001. This increase in tort costs, following more than a decade of moderate increases, should not be surprising in light of news reports during the past few years citing:

- increases in class action lawsuits and large claim awards
- jury awards of record amounts in medical malpractice cases
- an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against boards of directors of publicly traded companies, reflecting poor stock performance and possibly further exacerbated by recent corporate accounting scandals and general consumer mistrust of U.S. corporations
- an increase in medical cost inflation, leading to higher costs of personal injury claims.

These trends continued in 2002, with no sign of abatement in the near future. Thus, while it is impossible to accurately predict future increases in tort costs, it does not seem unreasonable to assume that, absent sweeping structural changes to the U.S. tort system, annual increases will be in the 7% to 11% range for the next several years. At this rate of increase, tort costs could approach $1,000 per U.S. citizen by 2005 — representing a new quadruple-digit benchmark.

The implications of a return to a period of higher growth in tort system costs may be gleaned by recalling what occurred during the last period of large tort cost increases in the 1980s, namely:

- continued increases in insurance prices as companies respond to new information suggesting higher underlying costs than initially assumed in the pricing of their products
- a shift away from insurance and toward self-insurance as corporations attempt to gain more control over their costs
- more insurer insolvencies and/or business curtailment in response to poor profitability
- increased pressure to enact tort reform and/or asbestos reform.

U.S. tort costs continue to grow faster than overall economic growth. While the exact causes of this growth are unclear, it is possible that a sense of entitlement (the so-called litigious society), coupled with a mistrust of corporations fueled by recent scandals, may be major contributors to the cost increases. Whatever the causes, the rapid increases suggest a continued need for public scrutiny and debate about the cost and relative benefits of the U.S. tort system.

A Word About This Study

U.S. Tort Costs: 2002 Update is an update of previous studies published by Tillinghast – Towers Perrin in 1985, 1989, 1992 and 1995. The most recent study, incorporating U.S. results through 2000, was published in February 2002.

Tillinghast presented the results of the original study to the American Insurance Association in the fall of 1985. The study was expanded in 1989 for the Actuarial Centennial Celebration, marking the 100th anniversary of the actuarial profession in North America, and was presented at a panel on liability insurance. Subsequently, Tillinghast testified on its findings before the U.S. Congress Joint Economic Committee.

The results of the earlier studies have been widely quoted by both proponents and opponents of tort reform, suggesting that the studies' straightforward analyses of the tort system's cost and trends have proved to be not only informative, but also objective and unbiased.

REV_00109766

Introduction

This edition of U.S. Tort Costs: 2002 Update is similar to previous studies published in 1985, 1989, 1992, 1995 and February 2002. This analysis tracks the cost of the U.S. tort system from 1950 to 2001 and compares the growth of tort costs to increases in various U.S. economic indicators.

The costs and relative benefits of the U.S. tort system have come under considerable public scrutiny and debate. Proponents of "tort reform" cite the high cost of the system as one reason for change. It is not surprising, then, that the Tillinghast studies have themselves attracted increasing interest and attention and have served as the basic data source for numerous articles in business and popular periodicals.

This update confirms a prediction made in the February 2002 study, namely, that the 13-year downward trend in the ratio of U.S. tort costs to GDP that began in the late 1980s ended abruptly in the year 2000. The growth in tort costs in 2001 was the largest since 1986, while GDP growth was modest.

As with the previous studies, this study's purpose is to provide a straightforward, objective analysis of cost and trends, and not to support any particular point of view.

REV_00109767

Summary of Key Findings

- Including insured and self-insured costs, the U.S. tort system cost $205 billion in 2001.
- Tort costs increased 14.3% in 2001, the highest percentage increase in tort costs since 1986.
- U.S. tort costs accounted for 2.04% of gross domestic product (GDP) in 2001. This signals the end of a 13-year decline in the ratio of tort costs to GDP* in the U.S.
- Tort costs were $721 per U.S. citizen in 2001. This compares to a cost of $12 per citizen in 1950 (or $87 when adjusted for inflation). When viewed as a method of compensating claimants, the U.S. tort system is highly inefficient, returning less than 50 cents on the dollar to the people it is designed to help — and returning only 22 cents of the tort cost dollar to compensate for actual economic losses.
- The tort system has both indirect cost and indirect benefits that are not measured by this study. We do not attempt to measure or to judge the relative utility of these factors, but rather to provide a reasonable and consistent measurement of total direct tort costs over a long period of time.
- We expect the 2002 ratio of tort costs to GDP to increase to 2.15%. We expect the ratio to grow to 2.21% in 2003, based on a forecasted 9% increase in tort costs.

*Throughout this report, unadjusted, or nominal, GDP is used. Most news releases on GDP rely on inflation-adjusted, or real, GDP.

REV_00109768

Change in Tort Costs From 2000

Total insured and self-insured tort costs in the U.S. are estimated at $205.4 billion for 2001. This is an increase of $26 billion, or 14.3%, from the estimated $179.7 billion of tort costs in 2000. The $26 billion increase is the largest in U.S. history; the 14.3% increase is the largest since 1986.

Of the $26 billion increase, roughly $6 billion is attributable to a significant upward reassessment of estimated future payments associated with asbestos claims. In addition, 2001 saw an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against boards of directors of publicly held companies. This increase may be partially due to corporate accounting scandals and to poor stock performance after a number of years of unprecedented growth. It is also interesting to note that personal auto liability costs, unaffected by any particular newsworthy events, experienced the largest increase in costs since 1990. This may reflect an increase in medical cost inflation, leading in turn to higher costs for personal injury claims.

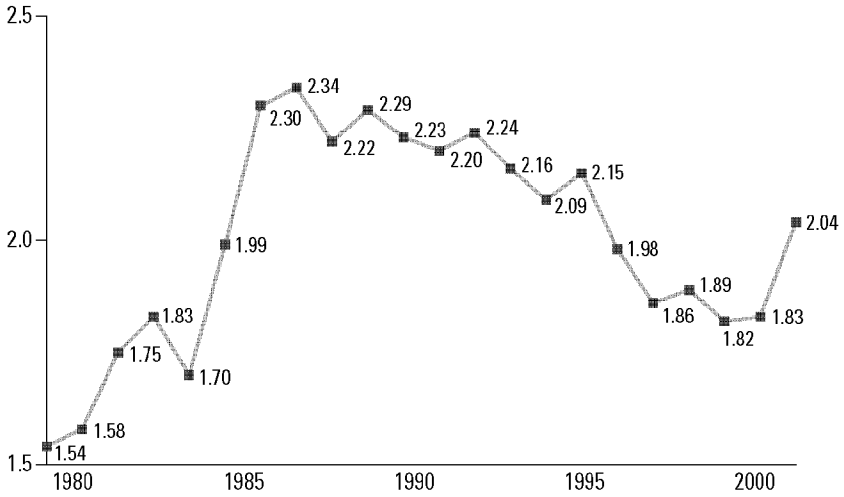
Tort Costs Relative to GDP



Over the last 50 years, tort costs in the U.S. have increased by over 100-fold — from less than $2 billion in 1950 to $205 billion in 2001. Tort cost growth has far outstripped U.S. economic growth as measured by GDP, which increased by a factor of 34 during that time.

	$billions
	U.S. Tort Costs	U.S. GDP	Tort Cost as % of GDP
1950	$ 1.8	$ 294	0.61%
1960	5.4	527	1.03%
1970	13.9	1,040	1.33%
1980	43.0	2,796	1.54%
1990	129.6	5,803	2.23%
2000	179.7	9,825	1.83%
2001	205.4	10,082	2.04%

REV_00109770

When we focus on the last 20 years, a different perspective emerges. Relative to GDP, tort costs appear to have peaked in 1987. The ratio of tort costs to GDP decreased significantly from 1995 (2.15%) to 1999 (1.82%). The 2000 ratio of 1.83% was little changed from the 1999 ratio, but the ratio jumped considerably in 2001.

U.S. Tort Costs as % of GDP — 1980-2001

The 1990s were a decade of substantial economic growth coupled with a low rate of inflation. Against this backdrop, it is not surprising that the rate of GDP growth in the decade exceeded the rate of tort cost growth.

The slowdown in economic growth in 2001, coupled with significant increases in tort costs, caused the surge in the ratio of tort cost growth to GDP in 2001. This suggests that the ratio bottomed out in the 1999-2000 period. We believe that 2001 will be the start of a multiyear period of increasing tort costs relative to GDP.

REV_00109771

Tort Costs Relative to Population

Growth in U.S. tort costs since 1950 has far exceeded the U.S. population growth. Tort cost per citizen has risen by a factor of 61 from 1950 ($12 per citizen, or $87 when adjusted for inflation) to 2001 ($721 per citizen). Clearly, only some of this increase is due to inflation. Even after adjusting for changes in the consumer price index, the tort cost per citizen has risen by a factor of more than eight since 1950.

	U.S. Population (millions)	U.S. Tort Costs ($billions)	Tort Cost per Citizen	Inflation-Adjusted* Tort Cost per Citizen

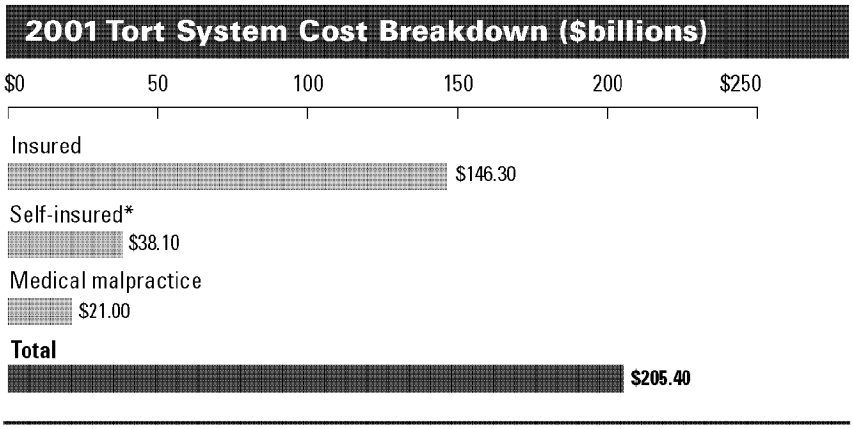
Change in Tort Costs Relative to Inflation

The growth in U.S. tort costs since 1950 can only be partly explained by inflation. As shown below, the change in tort costs far exceeded inflation from 1950 through 1990, with the 1950s showing the biggest difference.

*As measured by the Consumer Price Index — All Items



One would expect the change in tort costs to exceed inflation due to increases in population. However, as shown in Appendix 1, U.S. population growth averaged only 1.2% per year from 1950 to 2001. Moreover, as shown on page 7, U.S. tort costs increased relative to inflation and population from 1950 to 1990. Costs fell on an inflation-adjusted per-person basis from 1990 to 2000, but increased in 2001.

Components of Tort Costs

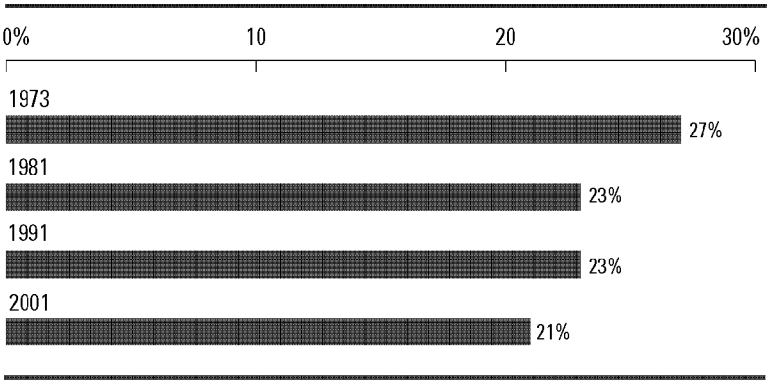
Total Tort Cost Dollars in 2001

The $205.4 billion cost of the U.S. tort system in 2001 is broken down as follows:

*Excluding medical malpractice

Insured Component

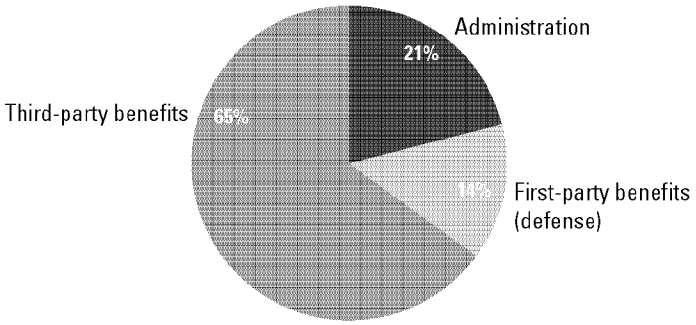
Insured cost estimates are derived from composite financial data (excluding medical malpractice) for the U.S. insurance industry as compiled and published by A.M. Best.* These data are considered highly reliable in that they are subject to audit and are reviewed by state regulatory agencies. Moreover, while certain product lines have changed over time, more than 60 years of consistent data are available.



The insurance costs included are:

- benefits paid to third parties (or their attorneys) alleging injury or damages caused by insured persons or companies
- benefits paid to first-party insureds in the form of claim handling and legal defense costs
- insurance company administrative costs, or overhead.

*Insurance purchased directly from a non-U.S. insurance company would not be included in the "insured component" of this study. Rather, such business would be considered in our estimates of self-insured tort costs.



REV_00109774

Some users of our previous surveys have questioned our decision to include insurance company overhead costs in the total. We take no position regarding the efficiency of this administrative system. Nevertheless, these are real costs, directly associated with administering the settlement of tort claims, and these costs are consistently defined and measurable over time. Although the inclusion of this administrative component obviously increases our definition of absolute cost, it actually dampens the rate of increase because administrative costs have generally declined as a percentage of the total, as follows:

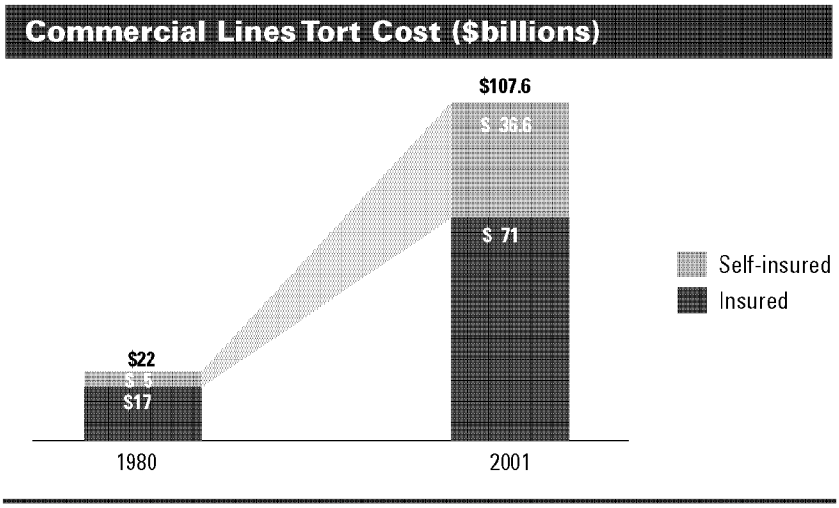
2001 Insured Costs ($146.3 billion)

REV_00109775



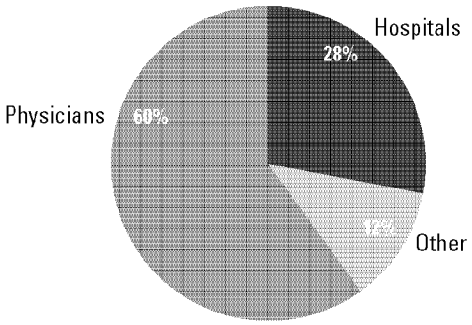
Self-Insured Component

The second component of the $205.4 billion cost total is the self-insured component (excluding medical malpractice). No consistent data set exists for this component, but several specialized studies have been published. The information that we reviewed for commercial lines included Conning and Company's periodic reports on the alternative risk market as well as various studies published by Tillinghast.

We estimate that 2% of personal insurance coverage cost and 34% of total commercial insurance coverage cost (up from less than 20% prior to 1980) are self-insured (see Appendix 4).

Our estimate of self-insured costs is approximately $36.6 billion for commercial risks in 2001. This has been calculated to include tort costs paid by various forms of self-insurance such as large deductibles, captives and risk retention groups. However, our estimate does not capture certain extraordinary costs such as those resulting from the 1998 settlement between tobacco manufacturers and various state attorneys general for health care cost reimbursement.

As shown in the chart below, the growth in self-insured commercial lines tort costs has exceeded the growth in insured tort costs. Given rate increases for commercial insurance in 2001 that appear to have continued in 2002, we would expect the portion of self-insured commercial lines tort costs to continue to grow.



REV_00109776

Medical Malpractice Component

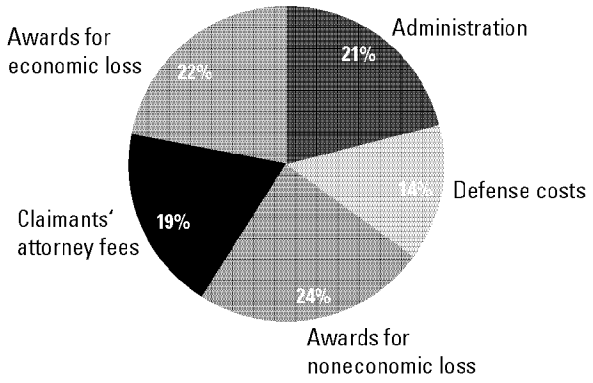
Our estimate of medical malpractice cost is not based on A.M. Best insurance industry data, but rather on Tillinghast–Towers Perrin's internal database of state-by-state medical malpractice cost. We have broken this cost out because the definition of insured versus self-insured costs has changed significantly over the last 30 years. Many group captives started in the mid-1970s as "self-insurance" alternatives to the commercial insurance market have become fully licensed insurance companies, and they are now included in insurance industry data. As of 2001, less than half of the $21 billion total medical malpractice cost is reported by Best.

Our approach to quantifying medical malpractice costs is by type of provider, as shown below (see also Appendix 5).

2001 Medical Malpractice Cost Breakdown by Category of Provider

The tort costs attributable to medical malpractice have been aggregated since 1975. Since then, medical malpractice tort costs have grown at an annual rate of 11.6%, versus 9.4% for all U.S. tort costs.

REV_00109777



What's Included?

We have defined insured tort cost to include first-party benefits (the cost of legal defense and claims handling), benefits paid to third parties (claimants and plaintiffs) or their attorneys, and an administrative, or overhead, component. Our definition includes such costs associated with all claims, not just those that reach the courthouse.

The tort system provides both direct and indirect benefits. The direct benefits include compensation to victims for their economic losses, including damaged property, lost wages and medical expenses. No consistent historical database exists to measure these components of the tort system. However, we do know that of the total benefits paid to third parties (65% of tort costs), one portion compensates for economic losses, one portion compensates for noneconomic losses (such as pain and suffering, loss of consortium, etc.) and a third portion goes to plaintiffs' attorneys.

There have been several studies of this split, but they typically have been limited to a particular state, coverage or exposure. Our best estimate of the breakdown of insured cost is illustrated in the chart below.

Where Tort Cost Goes

If viewed as a mechanism for compensating victims for their economic losses, the tort system is extremely inefficient, returning only 22 cents of the tort cost dollar for that purpose. Of course, the tort system also provides compensation for victims' pain and suffering and other noneconomic losses. However, even including these benefits, the system is less than 50% efficient.

REV_00109778

What's Not Included?

Our definition of tort cost is largely governed by traditional liability insurance coverages. (We previously noted the exclusion of tobacco settlements.) There are gray areas where awards and settlements are typically, but not always, excluded (e.g., certain types of contract and shareholder litigation, and punitive damages, which are included in the insurance contract in certain states and not in others). The costs reflected in this study are consistent with those reported by the insurance companies themselves. Therefore, while certain of these costs may be included in the tort cost totals, we are unable to account for them separately.

We have not included costs incurred by federal and state court systems in administering actual suits. Reliable estimates of these costs do exist, but not back to 1950. Estimates by the Institute of Civil Justice (Rand Corporation) put these costs at less than 1% of the other costs involved. We do not believe the omission of these costs significantly understates our cost index or in any material way distorts long-term trends.

We have also omitted certain indirect costs, such as those associated with litigation avoidance. Indirect costs can range from unnecessary and duplicative medical tests ordered by doctors as a defense against possible malpractice allegations to the disappearance of certain products or entire industries from the marketplace because of high product liability cost.

The tort system also provides indirect benefits that are not measured in this study. Such benefits include a systematic resolution of disputes, thereby reducing conflict, possibly including violence. The tort system may also act as a deterrent to unsafe practices and products. From this perspective, compensation for pain and suffering can be seen as beneficial to society as a whole.

REV_00109779

Looking Ahead

Several factors contributed to the resurgence of tort costs in 2001, including:

- an increase in losses associated with asbestos
- an increase in the number and size of shareholder lawsuits against the boards of directors of publicly held companies
- an increase in medical cost inflation, leading to higher costs of personal injury claims.

These trends continued in 2002 as well and show no signs of abating in the near future. We expect total tort costs to increase approximately 9% in 2002, to $223.9 billion. We expect GDP to increase by 3.5% in 2002. Consequently, the 2002 ratio of tort costs to GDP is anticipated to increase to 2.15%.

Looking ahead, we anticipate growth in U.S. tort costs to range from 7% to 11% in 2003, with a midpoint of 9%. We expect similar increases in 2004 and 2005. We also anticipate GDP growth to increase to 6% per year. These assumptions yield projected tort costs, GDP and tort-to-GDP ratios as shown below:

	$billions
	Tort Costs	GDP	Tort Cost as % of GDP
2000	$179.7	$ 9,825	1.83%
2001	205.4	10,082	2.04%
2002 (est.)	223.9	10,435	2.15%
2003 (est.)	244.1	11,061	2.21%
2004 (est.)	266.0	11,725	2.27%
2005 (est.)	290.0	12,428	2.33%

The 9% growth in tort costs forecasted for the 2003-2005 period assumes no material impact on losses arising from tort reforms that may be implemented in the 2003-2005 period.

REV_00109780

Our premise of a three-point gap in the growth rates of tort costs and GDP during the 2003-2005 period is consistent with the long-run history of 1951-2001, which shows a gap of 2.5 points. When the gap is measured through 1995 only, it widens to 3.1 points.

We feel the 1996-2000 period is not reflective of current trends. For example, health care cost increases were more contained during that period, both in absolute terms and relative to core CPI. From 1996 to 2000, medical care inflation was less than one point higher than the core CPI. This slowed trend appears to have ended; the 2001 CPI for medical care grew nearly two points more than core CPI. This two-point gap is more consistent with the long-term trend. Results for 2002, through October, show a three-point gap.

The chart below shows the long-term history and our predictions for the 2003-2005 period for CPI, medical care CPI, GDP and tort costs.

	CPI	Medical Care CPI	Nominal GDP	Tort Costs
1951-1995	4.2%	6.1%	7.4%	10.5%
1996-2000	2.5%	3.4%	5.8%	2.5%
2001	2.8%	4.6%	2.6%	15.4%
2002 (est.)	1.6%*	4.6%*	3.5%*	9.0%
2003-2005 (est.)	3.0%	5.0%	6.0%	9.0%

*Estimated based on results through October 2002

There are certainly factors beyond health care costs that influence tort costs. The comparison of health care costs to tort costs is merely used to show differences in trends observed in the late 1990s with those observed over a longer time horizon.

I have a handful of letters from the President asking him to endorse either certain candidates or themselves for election in '02. Some also ask for a donation to their campaign. Would the following response be okay? I don't want to answer them, but I feel guilty. Some of the letters are really old.

We apologize for the delay in responding to your letter. Due to mail procedures we only recently received your correspondence. Please know that your views and suggestions were/are very important to President Bush. The President was pleased with the outcome of the elections in November and appreciates your continued support. Best Wishes.

on some on the letters I might want to scratch the part about the President being pleased with the outcome of the elections because I don;t know if their candidate or the Republican won. (a lot of them are local elections)

Do you have any desire to see the actual letters? I doubt it. they are painful. Thanks.

The letters you have not responded to about 02 elections in November. I would suggest sending a ty for your views from you - if at all possible or having a card made up saying -

(The only thing is we'd have to get this lg. approved first - make sure everyone is on board)

Also, depending on the author - it may be best not to respond at this late date and offend them more.

As for 04 suggestions - it is too early to say, you may just want to do a ty for your views your suggestions will be shared with the President or you may wait until the campaign starts. The lg. we have wouldn't work b.c. Cheney is the VP and he just may be again. Here it is so you have an idea.

I hope this is somewhat helpful, if not give me a call.
Thank you for your kind words of support, and for sharing your views on my choice for a running mate.
Throughout the vice presidential selection process, my foremost goal was to select an outstanding individual who is capable of serving as President of the United States. I wanted the selection process to be thorough and dignified, and so I reached out to a distinguished and experienced statesman to lead the search) Dick Cheney. For months, we worked closely together to review the qualifications of many impressive candidates.
As we worked to evaluate the strengths of others, I saw firsthand Dick Cheney,s outstanding judgment. As we considered many different credentials, I benefited from his keen insight. I was impressed by the thoughtful and thorough way he approached his mission. And gradually, I realized that the person who was best qualified to be my vice presidential nominee was working by my side.
I am proud that Dick Cheney) a man of great integrity and judgement and experience) has agreed to join me in accomplishing some great goals for our country: to save and strengthen Social Security, to improve Medicare and provide immediate prescription drug benefits to seniors, to reform our public schools, and to rebuild our nation,s military.
I have to admit, I didn,t select Dick because of Wyoming,s three electoral votes) although we want and will work hard to earn them. I picked him because he is without a doubt fully capable of being President of the United States, and he will be a valuable partner in a Bush administration. Dick Cheney has served our country as chief of staff to a President, served in the United States Congress, and as Secretary of Defense. He is a man of integrity who is respected by Republicans and Democrats alike. Even my opponent, Vice President Gore, once said Dick Cheney is a good man who is well liked and respected by his colleagues. I am proud to call him my friend, and am honored to call him my running mate.
The remaining days will be tough, but Dick and I welcome the contest. We, re grateful to know we can count on you.

Is there any language that says we are sorry we did not respond to their original letter? I have decided to not respond to the old endoresement requests or letters pertaining to the '02 election. It is too late and the responses are so tricky. Ken hates non-answer responses and will never sign them. It takes me a week to do a stack of letters and then he will x through them.

It would probably do more harm than good to respond now. But I feel so guilty!

Also, I have no idea how to respond to some of the 04 letters. (like new vp suggestions, etc.) I feel like if I write a letter that has a decent response, it will end up in the newspaper.

thanks

How's something like this. I tried to edit to suit her/your purposes and also keep the title out.

You are invited to a VIP Briefing with our special guest Coddy Johnson on Friday, February 21, 2003. Coddy worked for President Bush on the 2000 campaign as ____ and worked for Karl Rove and Ken Mehlman to help the President and Republicans throughout the country in the recent mid-term elections.

We will discuss the strengths and weaknesses of the 2000 and 2002 elections and look ahead to 2004. Since you played such a key role in Congresswoman Shelley Moore Capito's tremendous victory, the President and the Republican leadership in Washington are very interested in your thoughts and suggestions. Coddy Johnson also plans to brief this small group on the latest with the President and the game plan for 2004.

The meeting will begin at 1:30 p.m. Location details to follow. Please RSVP to Amy McKinley either by replying to this email (amymckinley@capito2004.com) or calling 304-389-5790. Thank you very much and we look forward to seeing you this Friday!

Subject: DRAFT Invitation for Friday

Brett -
I am going to WV on Friday -
Congresswoman Capito has asked that I speak to a number of her VIP donors - it is not a fundraiser, but rather a time for her key supporters to ask questions and touch base with an Admin. official.
Below is the invite she wants to send out... I imagine we need to change the title. Anything else?

Subject: Draft letter to editor of Washington Post in response to Kinsley; need to send today; PLEASE REVIEW

February 14, 2003

Dear Editor:

Michael Kinsley?s column of February 14 contained several important errors.

First, he writes that President Bush has nominated only one Hispanic to the U.S. Courts of Appeals. In fact, three of President Bush?s 34 appeals court nominees (9%) have been Hispanic: Miguel Estrada (D.C. Circuit), Ed Prado (Texas, 5th Circuit), and Consuelo Callahan (California, 9th Circuit).

Second, he claims that the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the D.C. Circuit is possible only because President Clinton?s last two nominees to that court (of his five overall) were not confirmed. In fact, there are four current vacancies on the D.C. Circuit and only two pending nominees, Estrada and John Roberts. Therefore, the two vacancies that Mr. Estrada and Mr. Roberts will fill would exist regardless whether President Clinton?s last two nominees had been confirmed.

Third, he writes that President Bush ?fired? the American Bar Association after the ABA allegedly gave some Republican nominees ?a lousy grade.? In fact, President Bush has always invited the American Bar Association and all other interested outside groups to review nominees? qualifications after nomination. The President also decided that no single outside group should have a preferential, quasi-official, pre-nomination role in the President?s judicial selection process. The President made that decision in early 2001, before the ABA had rated any of his nominees. Since then, moreover, all of the President?s appeals court nominees have received well-qualified or qualified ratings from the ABA (not one appeals court nominee has received a ?not qualified? rating).

Fourth, he writes that Republican Senator Hatch labeled the ABA rating as the gold standard. Rather, Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer coined that term for the ABA rating in their letter to the President in March 2001. All of the President?s appeals court nominees subsequently have met the Democrats? ?gold standard.? Despite that, 12 of them have been pending since 2001.

Fifth, he writes that President Bush has 42 appeals court vacancies to fill. In fact, there are 28 current and known future vacancies on the appeals courts.

Sixth, he writes that judges should provide their personal views on disputed social, policy, and legal issues during confirmation hearings. The relevant canon of judicial ethics provides, however, that prospective judges ?shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court.? Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point when asked about the Fifth Amendment: ?I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself.? Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice last year: ?In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be ?on interest? to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Cour t declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well.?

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Counsel to the President

February 14, 2003

Dear Editor:

Michael Kinsley?s column of February 14 contained several important errors.

First, he writes that President Bush has nominated only one Hispanic to the U.S. Courts of Appeals. In fact, three of President Bush?s 34 appeals court nominees (9%) have been Hispanic: Miguel Estrada (D.C. Circuit), Ed Prado (Texas, 5th Circuit), and Consuelo Callahan (California, 9th Circuit).

Second, he claims that the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the D.C. Circuit is possible only because President Clinton?s last two nominees to that court (of his five overall) were not confirmed. In fact, there are four current vacancies on the D.C. Circuit and only two pending nominees, Estrada and John Roberts. Therefore, the two vacancies that Mr. Estrada and Mr. Roberts will fill would exist regardless whether President Clinton?s last two nominees had been confirmed.

Third, he writes that President Bush ?fired? the American Bar Association after the ABA allegedly gave some Republican nominees ?a lousy grade.? In fact, President Bush has always invited the American Bar Association and all other interested outside groups to review nominees? qualifications after nomination. The President also decided that no single outside group should have a preferential, quasi-official, pre-nomination role in the President?s judicial selection process. The President made that decision in early 2001, before the ABA had rated any of his nominees. Since then, moreover, all of the President?s appeals court nominees have received well-qualified or qualified ratings from the ABA (not one appeals court nominee has received a ?not qualified? rating).

Fourth, he writes that Republican Senator Hatch labeled the ABA rating as the gold standard. Rather, Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer coined that term for the ABA rating in their letter to the President in March 2001. All of the President?s appeals court nominees subsequently have met the Democrats? ?gold standard.? Despite that, 12 of them have been pending since 2001.

Fifth, he writes that President Bush has 42 appeals court vacancies to fill. In fact, there are 28 current and known future vacancies on the appeals courts.

Sixth, he writes that judges should provide their personal views on disputed social, policy, and legal issues during confirmation hearings. The relevant canon of judicial ethics provides, however, that prospective judges ?shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court.? Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point when asked about the Fifth Amendment: ?I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself.? Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice last year: ?In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be ?on interest? to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Cour t declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well.?

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

El nombramiento de Miguel Estrada
MEL MARTINEZ

Como primer inmigrante hispano del pa¡s que ocupa un cargo de secretario del gabinete, puedo identificarme personalmente con los deseos de Miguel Estrada de servir a su pa¡s, y con su disposici¢n a retribuir algo a la naci¢n que lo bendijo con esta oportunidad.
El presidente George W. Bush ha nombrado dos veces al se¤or Estrada para ser el primer hispano en el Tribunal de Apelaciones del Circuito del Distrito de Columbia, un honor para el cual est eminentemente calificado. Lamentablemente, los l¡deres dem¢cratas le han venido negando el voto de confirmaci¢n en el Senado desde la primavera de 2001.
Para los hispanos y otros inmigrantes la oportunidad de servir a esta gran naci¢n en un cargo p£blico es parte de su sue¤o americano. Yo lo s? bien. A los 15 a¤os de edad hu¡ de la Cuba de Castro en busca de una vida mejor en los Estados Unidos. Pronto estuve ansioso por dar algo a cambio a mi pa¡s adoptivo. Esto fue posible, seg£n me ense¤aron, porque en este pa¡s no importa cu l sea la raza, el grupo ?tnico o la religi¢n, si uno trabaja duro y sigue las reglas del juego, todo es posible.
El se¤or Estrada y yo compartimos un trayecto similar en nuestra b£squeda del sue¤o americano. A la tierna edad de 17 a¤os, y con un dominio m¡nimo del idioma ingl?s, ?l emigr¢ de su nativa Honduras. El trabajo duro y una f?rrea determinaci¢n le permitieron graduarse de la Universidad de Columbia con los m s altos honores, y despu?s obtuvo su diploma de leyes, tambi?n con honores, de la Escuela de Derecho de Harvard.
Despu?s de terminar sus estudios universitarios, el se¤or Estrada desempe¤¢ el cargo de oficial de juzgado para el magistrado del Tribunal Supremo de los EU Anthony Kennedy, y posteriormente trabaj¢ para las administraciones republicana y dem¢crata en el Departamento de Justicia, incluyendo cinco a¤os en la oficina del subsecretario de Justicia. Compareci¢ 15 veces ante el Tribunal Supremo y gan¢ 10 de sus casos. Reconociendo su habilidad y experiencia jur¡dica, la American Bar Association confiri¢ un nimemente sus m s altas calificaciones al se¤or Estrada.
En otras palabras, no entiendo qu? es lo que temen los opositores del se¤or Estrada si dejan que su nombramiento se presente a votaci¢n. Esta es una tierra de oportunidades, y nunca debemos interponernos en el camino de las personas calificadas que est n dispuestas a dedicar su vida al servicio p£blico.
Adem s, un cuerpo judicial que refleje a Am?rica y toda su gloria debiera incluir a hispanos, ahora que se han convertido en el mayor grupo minoritario del pa¡s. Si una ?tica incuestionable, unas credenciales sobresalientes y unas calificaciones profesionales superiores no son suficientes para que un hispano califique para este cargo, un gran n£mero de nuestros ciudadanos perder la confianza en la integridad de nuestro sistema judicial.
Otros pa¡ses se maravillan de la manera en que Estados Unidos, en el transcurso de su historia, puede acoger a los inmigrantes y ofrecerles la oportunidad sin restricciones de a¤adir sus propias contribuciones a la grandeza de esta tierra. Negarle un voto de confirmaci¢n al se¤or Estrada, que est excepcionalmente calificado, ser¡a una tr gica violaci¢n de esta larga y orgullosa tradici¢n.
Secretario del Departamento de Vivienda y Desarrollo Urbano de Estados Unidos, ejerci¢ como abogado en Orlando, Florida, durante 25 a¤os.

ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ

WASHINGTON -- A long-standing impasse over North Carolina's representation on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals could end soon with President Bush's expected nomination of Raleigh lawyer Allyson K. Duncan.ÿÿ

Sen. John Edwards, a Raleigh Democrat, said Thursday that the White House had told him that it intends to nominate Duncan, a black Republican who is a former state appeals court judge and is president-elect of the N.C. Bar Association.ÿÿ

The move, Edwards said, would be a "very positive step" toward ending a feud that has kept North Carolina from having a full-time judge on the 4th Circuit since 1999.ÿÿ

The 15-member court hears appeals from five Southeastern states, the largest of which is North Carolina. It is the last stop for federal cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.ÿÿ "I'm very encouraged by what I have learned about Allyson Duncan after an initial review of her judicial record," Edwards said in a statement issued by his office Thursday. "If President Bush nominates her, I look forward to working with Senator Dole so the Senate can consider the nomination as soon as possible."ÿÿ

Mary Brown Brewer, Sen. Elizabeth Dole's spokeswoman, said the Salisbury Republican considers Duncan to be among several well-qualified judicial nominees whom Bush has already put forward or is likely to nominate.ÿÿ

But Brewer said Dole is also eager to see Terrence Boyle, a previous 4th Circuit nominee, get a fair hearing -- preferably before Duncan does.ÿÿ

Over the past decade, North Carolina's senators have taken advantage of a tradition that allows home-state senators to effectively veto judicial nominations.ÿÿ

Former Sen. Jesse Helms blocked a string of Democratic judges from North Carolina during the Clinton administration. Edwards then refused to let the Senate consider the nomination of Boyle, a former Helms aide whom Bush first nominated in May 2001.ÿÿ Bush renominated Boyle for the 4th Circuit this month.

Boyle's prospects -- and how they might affect Duncan's nomination -- were not entirely clear Thursday.ÿÿ

Edwards spokesman Mike Briggs said that Edwards still has some concerns about Boyle's record as chief judge on the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina. But such concerns might not carry as much weight as they did in the past.ÿÿ

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the new Republican chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said last week that he does not believe the objections of a single senator should be enough to hold up the nomination of an appeals judge.ÿÿ

Judiciary Committee spokeswoman Margarita Tapia said a hearing for Boyle has yet to be scheduled, but she said Hatch wants to move all of Bush's nominees "in a timely fashion."ÿÿ

In a statement, Dole said she wants to see Bush's picks "confirmed so they can start doing the important work of the federal judiciary -- work like helping fight the war on terror and putting drug dealers in jail."ÿÿ

But Dole said she also believes all of Bush's nominees are entitled to a hearing "in the order of their nominations, and based on how long they've been waiting."ÿÿ

Duncan, 51, is a partner in the Raleigh office of Kilpatrick Stockton who specializes in government relations and utility-related issues. She previously served on the state Utilities Commission, as a judge on the N.C. Court of Appeals and as a law professor at N.C. Central University in Durham.ÿÿ

If confirmed, Duncan would be only the second black judge to receive a lifetime appointment to the 4th Circuit.ÿÿ

White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo declined to comment on the status of Duncan's nomination. Duncan did not return a phone call placed to her law office.ÿÿ

Norfleet Pruden, president of the N.C. Bar Association, said Duncan's nomination has been "the object of a lot of speculation."ÿÿ

"If she's the one to break the logjam, that's super," said Pruden, a Charlotte lawyer. "She's a delight to work with. She's extremely bright. She can be very passionate yet very deliberate. I can't think of a better person, if this is something Allyson wants to do."ÿÿ

The current lineup on the 4th Circuit includes four judges from Virginia, four from South Carolina, two from Maryland and two from West Virginia. Three slots are vacant.ÿÿ

Boyle was first nominated for the 4th Circuit more than a decade ago by the elder President Bush.ÿÿ

After Senate Democrats denied Boyle a hearing, Helms blocked a string of nominees during the Clinton administration, including some candidates recommended by Edwards after his arrival in the Senate in 1999.ÿÿ

In July 2000, President Clinton accused Helms of undermining his efforts to integrate the court, which had no black members at the time.ÿÿ

Clinton later put Roger Gregory, a black lawyer from Virginia, on the 4th Circuit on a temporary basis. He was nominated for a lifetime appointment by Bush and rapidly confirmed by the Senate in 2001.ÿÿ

Earlier this month, Bush re-nominated Raleigh lawyer James C. Dever for a seat on the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina. Dever was nominated for the same post last May but never got a hearing.ÿÿ

On Wednesday, Bush nominated Louise Flanagan, a magistrate judge from New Bern, for another opening on the same court.ÿÿ

Briggs said Edwards was still examining those nominations and had not yet decided whether to support them.ÿ

Critics fail to make case vs. Estrada
Column by

Jim Wooten

He's an odd choice for a Senate filibuster, an up-from-poverty Hispanic immigrant whose legal career includes nothing that can be distorted by the groups that pick through the graveyard bones in search of material to blacken the reputations of judicial nominees.

Indeed, 41-year-old Miguel Estrada, who came to this country as a 17-year-old from Honduras, is ably qualified for the D.C. Court of Appeals. A graduate of Harvard Law School, he's a partner in the Washington firm that successfully pursued President Bush's case to the U.S. Supreme Court. He is well regarded by the American Bar Association, the reviewing organization accepted by most Democrats.

From 1992 to 1997, Estrada served in the Clinton administration as assistant solicitor general. He has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and before that served as a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Estrada is clearly a nominee qualified by accomplishment, by the obstacles he's faced and overcome in the true spirit of the American Dream, to -- in the words of U.S. Sen. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.) -- "break a glass ceiling by being the first Latino judge to serve on the D.C. Court of Appeals."

"If he is not confirmed," said Chambliss, "it would not just be terrible for the District of Columbia, but it would send the wrong message to Hispanic communities in my home state of Georgia and across the nation."

Accept, then, that he's qualified. Employ any reasonable standard and Miguel Estrada wins on merit.

But party-line Democrats are filibustering, blocking his nomination last week and vowing to continue their jihad when the Senate reconvenes on Feb. 24. U.S. Sens. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) and John Breaux (D-La.) are specifically not joining in party efforts. And one or two others are lukewarm on the filibuster to keep Estrada off the bench.

Democrats say he lacks judicial experience and a written record, especially on abortion. In the absence of judicial opinions or public writings, Democrats have sought ammunition in confidential work memos Estrada authored while in the solicitor general's office. Every living solicitor general in both parties has signed a letter opposing the request. "Our decision-making process required the unbridled, open exchange of ideas -- an exchange that simply cannot take place if [staff] attorneys have reason to fear that their private recommendations are not private at all," they wrote.

Opposition groups, in the absence of written opinion, have looked to his work as a lawyer to find an offense that will disqualify him in the court of public opinion. One example is his representation of Chicago and Annapolis, Md., in unsuccessfully defending the constitutionality of anti-loitering laws that are described by Estrada's critics as giving police officers broad authority to rid streets of racial minorities. Chicago's ordinance was an effort by Democratic Mayor Richard Daley to rid inner-city neighborhoods of gang activity. The Supreme Court held it to be too vague, but Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Stephen Breyer provided direction that allowed municipalities to reinstitute the antigang ordinances, which Chicago did two years ago. No disqualifying bones here.

Chambliss, who voted as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee to confirm Estrada, has heard the evidence and the innuendo, along with the arguments that a client's position is the lawyer's, too.

"Their argument really has no substance to it," he said Friday. "There's nothing in my mind that in any way indicates that he would be radical on the bench. He's just a conservative and they can't stand it. It's driving them crazy. But they've picked the wrong guy" for the filibuster.

Bush and Senate Republicans won't back down on Estrada. "We are going to keep at it," Chambliss said. "At the end of the day, we are going to win this."

Critics fail to make case vs. Estrada

Column by

Jim Wooten

He's an odd choice for a Senate filibuster, an up-from-poverty Hispanic immigrant whose legal career includes nothing that can be distorted by the groups that pick through the graveyard bones in search of material to blacken the reputations of judicial nominees.

Indeed, 41-year-old Miguel Estrada, who came to this country as a 17-year-old from Honduras, is ably qualified for the D.C. Court of Appeals. A graduate of Harvard Law School, he's a partner in the Washington firm that successfully pursued President Bush's case to the U.S. Supreme Court. He is well regarded by the American Bar Association, the reviewing organization accepted by most Democrats.

From 1992 to 1997, Estrada served in the Clinton administration as assistant solicitor general. He has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and before that served as a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy.

Estrada is clearly a nominee qualified by accomplishment, by the obstacles he's faced and overcome in the true spirit of the American Dream, to -- in the words of U.S. Sen. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.) -- "break a glass ceiling by being the first Latino judge to serve on the D.C. Court of Appeals."

"If he is not confirmed," said Chambliss, "it would not just be terrible for the District of Columbia, but it would send the wrong message to Hispanic communities in my home state of Georgia and across the nation."

Accept, then, that he's qualified. Employ any reasonable standard and Miguel Estrada wins on merit.

But party-line Democrats are filibustering, blocking his nomination last week and vowing to continue their jihad when the Senate reconvenes on Feb. 24. U.S. Sens. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) and John Breaux (D-La.) are specifically not joining in party efforts. And one or two others are lukewarm on the filibuster to keep Estrada off the bench.

Democrats say he lacks judicial experience and a written record, especially on abortion. Going to the Reagan-Lincoln Day Dinner on Friday at Yoken's in Portsmouth? Check your ticket. If it identifies guest speaker Andrew Card as the White House chief of staff, trade it in quick.

State Republican Committee Chairwoman Jayne Millerick said the Strafford and Belknap county Republicans printed the tickets without knowing the latest campaign finance laws. Now-departed state GOP Executive Director Chuck McGee warned event organizers that using Card's title on the tickets or advertising fliers could be construed as a felony.

About 500 of the tickets were printed up, so 500 new tickets were printed up with the instructions to distributors to exchange old tickets for new. The new ones just describe Card as "Honorable."

Most people willing to pay $40 to hear him speak know the rest anyway.

Millerick, meanwhile, is seeking a replacement for McGee, who resigned right after word came out that a Republican-hired company jammed get-out-the-vote phone lines in four New Hampshire cities. She has about a dozen resumes on her desk.

"We want to make sure that our next executive director is the best candidate," she said. "We're looking forward to hiring a very qualified and hard-working person."

HEADLINE: California candidate for the Supreme Court

BYLINE: Reynolds Holding

BODY:
So what's all this fuss about Priscilla Owen?

Truth be told, very few people outside of Texas and its branch office at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. give two shakes about the demise of her nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

I know, I know. The federal appeals courts are important. In practice, they might as well be the highest courts of the land, considering how few cases the U.S. Supreme Court reviews each year. But partisan bellowing aside, Owen's recent defeat before the Senate Judiciary Committee was a distraction. Democrats got the chance to flex their political pecs, but they -- and we -- know the hearings were just an undercard for the touted Thrill on the Hill: President Bush's first nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court.

It shouldn't be long now. Justice John Paul Stevens approaches 83, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor begins her third decade on the court and Chief Justice William Rehnquist, at 77, begins his fourth. A successor looms.

So who's it going to be?

Even Bush probably doesn't know. But that won't slow speculation, including a Web site devoted to tracking how often the national media mentions certain potential nominees.

Take a look at Jurist: The Legal Education Network online at jurist.law.pitt.edu/mentions.htm. At last count, it included more than two dozen names of possible high-court candidates.

Which is about two dozen names too many to be helpful, especially when the site gives no indication of how the potential candidates might rule on issues of particular interest.

Fortunately, three political science professors have solved the problem by identifying the six possibilities mentioned most often in the national media, and then analyzing their decisions as appellate-court judges.

The result is a snapshot of where these likely nominees stand ideologically -- and why liberally inclined Americans may wish to consider fleeing to Canada.

Compiled by Kenneth Manning, Bruce Carroll and Robert Carp and reported in a recent issue of Judicature magazine, the list names as likely nominees Janice Rogers Brown of the California Supreme Court and U.S. Court of Appeals Judges Frank Easterbrook, Edith Jones, J. Michael Luttig and J. Harvie Wilkinson.

The professors reviewed the judges' decisions in three legal categories -- criminal justice, economic regulation and civil rights -- and then rated the decisions ideologically. Decisions favoring criminal defendants, government regulators and labor unions or people claiming civil rights violations were tagged liberal. Decisions that went the other way were considered conservative.

Many Californians will be pleased -- and surprised -- to learn that their own Justice Brown emerged as the most moderate of the bunch. But that's not saying much.

About 60 percent of Brown's decisions scored conservative, more than 8 percent less than her nearest rival, Luttig, and about 20 percent less than Wilkinson, the most conservative of the group.

Brown reached conservative decisions most often in criminal cases -- about 68 percent of the time -- and least often in civil rights cases, 52.5 percent. Brown is an African American woman, but don't jump to conclusions. Garza, a Latino, was the most conservative on civil rights.

As a group, the judges were least conservative on economic regulation and most conservative on civil rights. Overall, they stand to the right of the average federal appellate judge, and Wilkinson approaches Attila the Hun status.

Who gets the nod?

One contender is White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, although his scant judicial record on the Texas Supreme Court defies analysis. Nevertheless, because of his excellent relationship with the president, he remains a strong possibility in many people's eyes.

But Brown's nomination makes the most sense. Unless she pulls a Clarence Thomas and shocks us with a suspect past, it's hard to imagine the Senate rejecting her.

Of course, if Bush, still steamed over the Owen defeat, wishes to stick it to the Democrats, he could choose Wilkinson. Or even Owen herself.

Now that would be worth a fuss.

Here's an update on the media coverage following the Telemundo interview:

MSNBC reported at approximately 4:45 p.m. that the President's interview with Telemundo included his comments on Iraq, North Korea and Estrada. MSNBC aired a soundbite from the President's comments on Iraq and then spoke with Telemundo's anchor Pedro Sevcec, who said that the President was "upset" about the Estrada situation and that shameful politics are standing in the way of Estrada's confirmation. Pedro Sevcec also said the President would defend Estrada until the end.

Telemundo will air the interview tonight at 6:30 p.m. and again on their 11:00 p.m. newcast. Other media outlets, including Reuters and Knight Ridder, have been calling Telemundo for copies of the tape.

Below is a draft of the letter that we will send out next week to officially notify the Hill that we are beginning our contingency measures (G Fund in this case). I will give them a heads-up the day before it is released. We generally release a day or 2 ahead of time (same as last year), so that could be as early as 2/18.

DRAFT

February 18, 2003

The Honorable Dennis Hastert

Speaker of the House

United States House of Representatives

Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

In December of last year, Deputy Secretary Kenneth Dam wrote Congress requesting an increase in the statutory debt limit. Because the debt limit has not yet been raised, I must inform Congress that, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 8438(h)(2), it is my determination that by reason of the public debt limit I will be unable to fully comply with the requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 8438(e), beginning on February 20, 2003. This statute provides for the investment of the Government Securities Investment Fund ("G-Fund") of the Federal Employees Retirement System in special interest-bearing Treasury securities; it also grants the Secretary of the Treasury explicit authority to suspend this G-Fund investment to avoid breaching the statutory debt limit. Such a suspension action was taken by my predecessors both last year and also in 1995.

G-Fund beneficiaries are fully protected and will suffer no adverse consequences from this action. The statute ensures that once the Secretary of the Treasury can make the G-Fund whole without exceeding the public debt limit, he is to do so. Under the governing law in this case, the G-Fund will receive complete restoration of all funds temporarily affected by this necessary action, including full and automatic restoration of any interest that would have been credited to the Fund. In short, the result on the G-Fund and its beneficiaries will be the same as if this temporary action had never taken place.

I know that you share the President's and my commitment to maintaining the full faith and credit of the U.S.

government, especially at this critical time. Together we must continue working to enact an increase in the statutory debt limit as quickly as possible to avoid any negative repercussions at home or abroad.

Sincerely,

This should not change our previous decision to proceed, but I told Alicia that I am confirming with relevant office that provides advisory guidance on these issues just to make sure they agree and back us up. That confirmation should happen this morning. I will let you know as soon as I know. (Btw, the consequences described in the news article are dramatically overstated.)

HEADLINE: (UNDER THE STATE HOUSE DOME) Labor committee expected to favor right-to-work bill

BYLINE: By TOM FAHEY

BODY:

Going to the Reagan-Lincoln Day Dinner on Friday at Yoken's in Portsmouth? Check your ticket. If it identifies guest speaker Andrew Card as the White House chief of staff, trade it in quick.

State Republican Committee Chairwoman Jayne Millerick said the Strafford and Belknap county Republicans printed the tickets without knowing the latest campaign finance laws. Now-departed state GOP Executive Director Chuck McGee warned event organizers that using Card's title on the tickets or advertising fliers could be construed as a felony.

About 500 of the tickets were printed up, so 500 new tickets were printed up with the instructions to distributors to exchange old tickets for new. The new ones just describe Card as "Honorable."

Most people willing to pay $40 to hear him speak know the rest anyway.

Millerick, meanwhile, is seeking a replacement for McGee, who resigned right after word came out that a Republican-hired company jammed get-out-the-vote phone lines in four New Hampshire cities. She has about a dozen resumes on her desk.

"We want to make sure that our next executive director is the best candidate," she said. "We're looking forward to hiring a very qualified and hard-working person."

Sara,
Attached is the draft of the Linn Eagles invitation. They would like to include a bio of Ken Mehlman, because they are concerned that not everyone knows who he is, but when they find out his important role in the White House they will be interested in coming to meet him.

Also, I have a procedural question for you. They would like to send a "blast fax" to their past members for whom they have fax numbers and then call them to recruit them to be on the host committee. In order to send the invitations by next Friday, we'd need to do that right[Sara Taylor] T away and start making our calls. Do we need approval from you to send faxed materials, or only the printed invitation?

Particularly with the new campaign finance reform, I am eager to stick to the rules and make sure no one gets in trouble.

Thanks so much!

I thought you would be interested in the following letter sent to Sen. Charles Schumer:

February 19, 2003

Hon. Charles Schumer

United States Senate

757 Third Avenue, Suite 1702

New York, New York 10017

Dear Senator Schumer:

In the past year many fair-minded observers have begun to wonder the extent to which your efforts to defeat President Bush's judicial nominees have been coordinated with liberal Washington-based special interest groups. In the current instance I note that even as the United States is on the brink of war with a madman whose weapons of mass destruction could bring even more carnage to the streets of New York, you insist on stopping the U.S. Senate to demand confidential, internal memoranda written by judicial nominee Miguel Estrada, for no other reason than that he is a Hispanic whom you suspect of-gasp!-conservatism.

Two years into your continuing campaign against common-sense judges, you have managed to bring up an interesting point. The influence of people with ideological agendas on our government is certainly a source of concern. And I agree with you that it is time to open our government to the public - in this case, to your fellow New Yorkers. Therefore, I am requesting that you immediately release the following information to the media and the general public:

a.. A list of all meetings held by you and/or your staff with the special interest group opponents of both Miguel Estrada and all other Bush nominees.

b.. Copies of all memoranda written to you by your staff on this subject, all memoranda written by your staff to you, and all memoranda from you and your staff to the interest groups.

c.. Phone records listing calls between your office and the interest groups. All relevant e-mails and notes taken in meetings between you, your staff and said interest groups.

d.. A listing of all campaign contributions received by you from either the groups themselves or the members of these groups.

You've continually reminded us that the Senate must have access to information when assessing the merits of a judicial nominee. So I'm sure you 'll agree that the citizens of New York have an equal right to information to assess the quality of their representation in Washington. Sauce for the goose, Senator Schumer, is sauce for the gander.

Very truly yours,

Michael R. Long

State Chairman

IRISH-AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH, 2003

- - - - - - -

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

From the earliest days of our Republic, America has inspired the hopes and dreams of countless individuals from around the world who have come to share in our gifts of freedom, justice, and opportunity. During Irish-American Heritage Month, we celebrate the contributions of these talented and industrious citizens and recognize their rich legacy of ingenuity, creativity, and achievement.

Throughout our history, America has welcomed millions of Irish immigrants to our shores. These proud people arrived in our country seeking a better life for their families, themselves, and future generations. Many courageous individuals came during the terrible years of Ireland's Great Famine in the middle of the 19th century, and their road to prosperity was not easy, as most faced significant obstacles, including discrimination and poverty. Despite these challenges, Irish Americans have risen to success in every sector of our society.

Americans of Irish descent have played a vital role in shaping our history and culture. Nineteen Presidents of the United States have claimed Irish heritage. One-third to one-half of the American troops during the Revolutionary War and 9 of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence were Irish Americans. Irish Americans explored our frontiers, built many of our Nation's bridges, canals, and railroads, and their proud record of public service helped to fortify our democracy.

In all areas of American life, Irish Americans have made significant and enduring contributions to our great country. America is a better Nation because of the efforts of Irish Americans like Henry Ford, who spurred innovation, Bing Crosby, who entertained countless people around the world, and activist Mary Kenney O'Sullivan, who worked for critical and compassionate social reform. These individuals are a few of the many Irish Americans who helped to transform our national identity and whose accomplishments reflect the determination, joy, and hope of the Irish. The faith, perseverance, and spirit of the Irish have helped to strengthen our families, our communities, our ideals, and our national character.

Today, approximately one in four Americans can trace their ancestry in part to Ireland's green shores. We are proud of these deep and lasting ties, and are grateful for the many Irish Americans who continue to enrich our country.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim March 2003 as Irish-American Heritage Month. I call upon all Americans to observe this month by learning about and commemorating the contributions of Irish Americans to our Nation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this day of , in the year of our Lord two thousand three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-seventh.

Speech Insert on President Bush's Jobs and Economic Growth Plan 2/10/2003

I'd like to take a moment to talk about an issue that is very important to this President—the state our economy and his plan to boost economic growth and job creation.

The American economy is in its second consecutive year of growth—yet it is not growing fast enough, or strongly enough. Too many people cannot find work, many family budgets are strained, and many companies are holding back on new investments and on hiring new people.

President Bush has proposed a bold plan that will boost the economy by providing tax relief for every American who pays federal income taxes. Under the President's plan, 92 million Americans would receive, on average, a tax cut of $1,083 this year. That's real money to help pay the bills and push the economy forward. The President's plan includes:

- Across the board tax rate reductions that would start showing up in every taxpayer's paycheck as soon as Congress passes the plan;
- Accelerated relief from the marriage penalty for working couples;
- An increase in the child tax credit from $600 to $1,000 per child. Families would get that extra $400 per child in a check mailed to them weeks after the bill is signed.

This is tax relief that Republicans and Democrats in Congress passed in 2001 and promised for future years. The President believes the time to deliver it is now when it can do the most good for families and businesses. If tax relief is good for Americans three, or five, or seven years from now, it is even better for Americans today.

The President's plan also calls for abolishing the unfair double-taxation of dividends. The President believes it's fair to tax a company's profits; but it's unfair to tax that dollar twice when it is paid out to shareholders. Half of all American households today own stock. Ending the double tax on dividends will be especially good for seniors, who receive more than half of all dividend income. It will be good for workers, who will see wages rise and more jobs created as companies have more capital to invest. And it will encourage more companies to pay dividends. Microsoft recently announced it will pay dividends. We hope other companies will follow.

Small businesses—America's job engine—will also benefit under the President's plan, which triples the amount they can expense for equipment such as computers and machinery.

As we work to grow the economy, we must not forget men and women struggling today. The President's plan would help the unemployed by creating Personal Re-employment Accounts. These accounts would provide unemployed workers with up to $3,000 to use for job training, child care, transportation and other expenses associated with finding a new job. A person who finds a job within 13 weeks will be able to keep the leftover funds from their account.

President Bush will not be satisfied until every American who wants a job can find one; until every business has a chance to grow; and until we turn our economic recovery into lasting prosperity that reaches every corner of America.

I hope you will join me in calling on Congress to pass the President's plan.

Speech Insert on the War on Terrorism 2/12/2003

I'd like to turn now to the challenges our President and our country are facing in the war on terrorism.

On September 11th, a terrible act of war was committed against our country. Since then, our Nation—led by President Bush—has been dedicated to the task of defending the American people from further harm and defeating terrorists wherever they operate. As the President said at the time: any nation that continues to harbor or support terrorism will be regarded by the United States as a hostile regime.

At home, our government has taken unprecedented measures to defend against terrorism:

- Intensifying our security at the borders and ports of entry
- Posting more than 50,000 newly trained federal screeners in airports
- Deploying the first early warning network of sensors to detect biological attack
- Inoculating our troops and first responders against smallpox
- Proposing project BioShield to speed development and delivery of medicines to counter smallpox, anthrax, botulinum toxin and other dangerous agents
- Improving our intelligence capabilities through better coordination among government agencies
- Creating a new Department of Homeland Security and doubling its overall budget
- Engaging Americans in emergency preparedness and response through 300+ citizen corps councils

We have also taken the fight to the terrorists, with our allies, by destroying terrorist camps and disrupting their networks in Afghanistan and other countries, removing key leaders, arresting more than 3,000 terrorists worldwide and breaking up terrorist cells in dozens of countries—including our own.

Yet, the gravest danger in the war on terror—the gravest danger facing America and the world—remains outlaw regimes that seek, possess and may share with terrorist groups nuclear, chemical, radiological and biological weapons. We have seen what terrorists could do using four airplanes as weapons. Imagine what they could do with weapons of mass destruction. It would take just one vial, one canister, one crate slipped into this country to bring a day of horror like none we have ever known.

We have known for some time, through U.N. and U.S. intelligence sources, that Saddam Hussein has such weapons. He agreed to disarm as a condition of ending the Gulf War, but he has not. And, to date, he has not accounted for material sufficient to produce:

- More than 25,000 liters of anthrax—enough to kill several million people
- More than 38,000 liters of botulinum toxin
- As much as 500 tons of sarin, mustard and VX nerve agents
- Also, he has not accounted for almost 30,000 munitions capable of delivering chemical agents

Last November, the United Nations Security Council gave Saddam Hussein one final chance to disarm. Instead, as Secretary of State Colin Powell's recent presentation to the United Nations made crystal clear: Saddam Hussein is not disarming. To the contrary, he is deceiving.

Now the nations of the U.N. Security Council must make a choice. When they demanded the immediate disarmament of Iraq, they spoke with unity and forcefulness. Now that their demands have been defied, they must not back down.

The United States would welcome and support a new resolution making clear that the Security Council stands behind its previous demands. Yet, as the President has said, resolutions mean little without resolve. And the United States, along with a growing coalition of nations, is resolved to take whatever action is necessary to defend ourselves and disarm the Iraqi regime of these terrible weapons of mass destruction.

Whatever action is required, whenever action is necessary, I can assure you that President Bush will defend the freedom and security of the American people.

Attached is the draft of the Linn Eagles invitation. They would like to include a bio of Ken Mehlman, because they are concerned that not everyone knows who he is, but when they find out his important role in the White House they will be interested in coming to meet him.

Also, I have a procedural question for you. They would like to send a "blast fax" to their past members for whom they have fax numbers and then call them to recruit them to be on the host committee. In order to send the invitations by next Friday, we'd need to do that right[Sara Taylor] T away and start making our calls. Do we need approval from you to send faxed materials, or only the printed invitation?

Particularly with the new campaign finance reform, I am eager to stick to the rules and make sure no one gets in trouble.

Subject: High Noon

This is worth reading again, though it came out a year ago.

Where's the Posse?

It's high noon for the civilized world. Let timorous Europeans go home to their kids.

BY R. JAMES WOOLSEY

Monday, February 25, 2002 12:01 a.m.

Paris, Berlin and Brussels are unhappy with the United States. French Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine has called President Bush's axis-of-evil characterization of Iraq, Iran and North Korea "simplistic." German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer said the U.S. was treating Europeans like "satellites." And the normally sensible European Foreign Affairs Commissioner Chris Patten called Mr. Bush's approach "absolutist" and "unilateralist overdrive."

Mr. Patten excepted, much of what is going on here is that many generally leftist members of the European elite have craws in which plain talk gets stuck--they gagged on Ronald Reagan's characterization of the Soviet Union as an evil empire and they are gagging again now.

It's hard to understand the Europeans' problem if one looks at the specific behavior of the regimes that rule Iraq and North Korea by torture and murder, and that also develop weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles in violation of their international obligations. There's virtually nothing about them that is not evil. Iran is a more complex case, because there is a genuine reform movement in the country as a whole and within part of the government, but the nation's power is still wielded--and the use of terrorism supported--by the small group of murderous mullahs whose behavior is on a par with their kindred spirits in North Korea and Iraq.

"Axis" may be a slight stretch because Germany, Japan and Italy were somewhat more aligned than the current gang, although there is definite cooperation on missilery between Iran and North Korea, and some past cooperation on terror between Iran and Iraq.

And my goodness, as Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld might say, how is the U.S. not consulting? Mr. Bush has just been in Asia consulting. Vice President Dick Cheney is headed to the Mideast to consult. Secretary of State Colin Powell is never not consulting.

No, what is agitating the Europeans is not really any inaccuracy in what the president has said, nor is it any failure on America's part to act collegially. Rather, it is a perverse commitment to the proposition that no American good deed should go unpunished. Many members of Europe's elites--British Prime Minister Tony Blair and a few other stalwarts being conspicuous exceptions--persist in a waspish and reality-denying worldview, the centerpiece of which is that anything that America is decisive and enthusiastic about is highly questionable at best.

A substantial part of this derives from their having chosen to lead the good life, to maintain generous social services, take long vacations and let the U.S. bear the principal burden of preserving the world's peace. There is no disdain quite as sour as guilt-driven disdain.

Life is imitating art here--the particular piece of art being the classic Western of half a century ago: "High Noon."

In the film, the marshal of the small town of Hadleyville, Will Kane (played by Gary Cooper), has just stepped down from his job and gotten married. As he is leaving town with his new bride, played by Grace Kelly, he learns that the gang leader who once dominated and terrorized the town has been pardoned by the governor of the state and is arriving on the noon train to meet his old gang and return to power. After a few minutes of indecision, the marshal decides to return to town over the strong objections of his pacifist wife. He starts to organize a posse to protect the town.

But as high noon nears, it becomes increasingly clear that the good citizens of Hadleyville, who had helped the marshal clean the town up years before, can now produce only a cornucopia of excuses: "If the marshal's not here there won't be any trouble--it's just personal trouble between him and Miller [the gang leader]"; "the politicians up north caused the mess--let them deal with it"; "what will they [potential investors] think if they read about shooting in the streets?"; "I'm no lawman, I just live here."

Most poignant is the scene between the marshal and a longtime loyal deputy who backs out of helping as noon approaches because he is worried about his young children. "Go on home to your kids, Herb," says the marshal, and goes out to face the gang alone.

Only the marshal's new wife, who at first had left him, returns at the last minute and helps him prevail against all odds. For a small Quaker lady who hates guns, she does quite well: one kill and one assist. As the townspeople realize he has won and come out of hiding to congratulate him, the marshal looks at them sternly, drops his badge in the dirt, and he and his wife drive away.

In today's front-page version of this story, the work on weapons of mass destruction being conducted by states that support terrorism is the noon train pulling relentlessly nearer. The French government and French oil companies are surely Academy Award material as a collective real-life version of the film's hotel clerk who is fixated on how good the saloon business will be once the gang is back in town.

Many other Europeans will find excellent models in the film to help them perfect both their excuses for inaction and their condescension toward their protector. Fred Zinnemann, the director of "High Noon," knew this moral territory well--as a refugee from Austria he had seen all the techniques for rationalizing appeasement and the deadly consequences of not challenging evil regimes before they can wreak total havoc.

"Ah," anti-American Europeans reading this very piece this morning will likely respond, "you see how the Americans idealize the impulsive Wild West cowboy and his unilateralist approach to dealing with the world. How naive. How droll."

So here are two quick ripostes. Cowboys are normal people--some are impulsive, some are loners, some are neither. But what you are rejecting is not a modern-day cowboy, but rather a modern-day marshal, and marshals are different. They and their equivalents, such as GIs, have chosen to live a life of protecting others, whatever it takes. That's not being impulsive--it's deciding to be a shepherd instead of a sheep.

Second, like the U.S. today in moving against the axis, the marshal in "High Noon" was trying very hard to be multilateral--he desperately wanted a posse. He just had no takers. What the marshal was unwilling to do is to give up doing his duty just because everyone else found excuses to stay out of the fight.

Go on home to your kids, Europeans. Go on home to your kids. And then start praying that when it's over we won't drop our badge in the dirt.

Mr. Woolsey, a Washington attorney, was director of Central Intelligence from 1993 to 1995.

A Crack In The Wall?

Tuesday, Washington's leading liberal newspaper, the Washington Post, did something rather unusual: The Post sided with President Bush and joined the growing chorus of media outlets coming to the defense of embattled judicial nominee Miguel Estrada. While the Post may be a liberal paper, it is not dominated by vicious ideologues and it actually maintains a fairly balanced sense of how the system should operate.

In an official editorial entitled "Just Vote," the Washington Post castigated Senate Democrats in very harsh rhetoric. The Post blasted Democrat arguments against Estrada as ranging from "the unpersuasive to the offensive." The Post went even further, calling racial charges lobbied by Senate liberals "as repugnant as they are incoherent." The editorial board summed up the Democrats' obstructionism by saying "the Estrada filibuster is a step beyond...deplorable games."

If you have not already done so, please contact your senators and urge them to oppose the Estrada filibuster. Senators should be back home during this recess break, so be certain to visit CWF's online

Congressional Directory at http://www.cwfpac.com to look up the district office numbers for your senators. Tell them to follow the advice of the Washington Post and "Just Vote."

Dave,

Hope all is well. I thought you'd be interested in this. Friday, I gave the first speech defending the concept of race-neutral approaches to diversity. We looked at this speech as an opportunity to "field test" some of our ideas. We picked a small conference being held here in Washington, the 12th annual conference of the "Quality Education for Minorities Mathematics, Science and Engineering Network." No press, only about 50 or so in attendance - low key opportunity. As I understand it, your office and DPC reviewed my remarks before the speech.

The audience was quite hostile to the President and to the President's position in the Michigan litigation. I thought I was going to be jeered during the speech! But when I finished, the moderator of the panel stood up and gave an impassioned speech agreeing with me! He said that those defending affirmative action should have been looking for innovative approaches like this 20 years ago, that they never should have allowed the issue to evolve this way. The next presenter was supposed to criticize the Texas 10 Percent Plan, but he agreed with much of our presentation and actually talked about some of the positive aspects of the Texas plan. The questions from the audience and the conversations afterward were also positive. People didn't necessarily agree, but they were willing to talk it through.

The conclusion we reached is this: despite all the controversy surrounding the Michigan litigation, people are open to considering new approaches on this issue. Even the skeptics are willing to listen and discuss new ideas.

How about getting together sometime? No word from DHS.

If Democrats have something substantive to block Miguel Estrada's confirmation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, it's past time they share it. Estrada's nomination was announced in May and has been held hostage since by Senate Democrats who have yet to clearly articulate their objections to it.

Those unschooled in Washington-think -- that would be most of us -- are bewildered why Estrada, who worked in the Clinton admin-istration, is now deemed unworthy to sit on the bench. So instead of clear reasons, we are treated to a sideshow involving the nominee's ethnicity. Estrada was born in Honduras, immigrated to the United States as a teenager and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1986.

Democrats and their supporters hint that Estrada may not be "Hispanic enough" -- whatever that means -- while his Republican supporters note that the nominee's opponents are "anti-Latino." Though vaguely amusing, the arguments have nothing to do with whether Estrada has the intellectual ability and temperament to become a judge on the second most influential court in the nation.

Competence, ability and commitment to the law are what should matter, but don't, in winner-take-all ideology fights. In any event, Democrats appear to be the same kind of ideology-driven obstructionists they accused Republicans of being when President Clinton's nominees hit confirmation roadblocks.

Though partisans may not quite see it, what is really imperiled by this judicial hostage-taking is confidence in the American court system. What we're seeing here is an ugly legal brawl in which the participants use big words instead of bottles to hit the opponents on the head.

Enough is enough. We don't expect the partisan brawl over judicial appointments to ever end, but Estrada has clocked enough time as a punching bag for Democrats. Call the vote.

He also assumes that judging is an inherently political policymaking task, which it is not. By Tom Brune
WASHINGTON BUREAU

February 24, 2003

Washington - The lawyer who recommended the American Bar Association's highest rating for controversial appellate judge candidate Miguel Estrada took part in partisan Republican activities during his term as a nonpartisan judicial nomination evaluator for the Bar, according to records and interviews.

While serving on the ABA's nonpartisan Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, veteran Washington lawyer Fred F. Fielding also worked for the Bush-Cheney Transition Team, accepted an appointment from the Bush administration and helped found a group to promote and run ads supporting Bush judicial nominees, including Estrada.

Fielding evaluated Estrada in the month after President George W. Bush nominated him on May 9, 2001, ABA officials said. That was just weeks after Fielding vetted executive appointments for Bush's transition team and a year before he helped start the partisan Committee for Justice, records show.

The overlap has thrust Fielding - and his evaluation that led to the 15-member ABA Standing Committee's unanimous vote to rate Estrada "well qualified" - into the heated political battle over Estrada's nomination to the prestigious U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, a stepping-stone to the Supreme Court.

Stephen Burbank, a judicial expert at the University of Pennsylvania, said Fielding's overlap raises an appearance of conflict, but even if he had stepped aside Estrada likely would have won the top ABA rating because of his strong academic and legal credentials.

Estrada, 41, a Washington attorney, graduated from Harvard Law School with honors, served as an assistant solicitor general in the Justice Department and has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

That ABA rating has become a selling point for Republicans seeking to rebut Democrats, who two weeks ago began to filibuster a vote on Estrada, charging the conservative Hispanic lawyer is a "stealth nominee" who has a scant written record and won't answer questions on his views.

On Feb. 12, Sen. Harry Reid (D-Nev.) charged that Fielding had a conflict: "Doesn't Mr. Fielding's dual role - purportedly 'independent' evaluator and partisan foot soldier - violate ABA rules?"

Those rules say no Standing Committee member should participate in an evaluation if it would "give rise to the appearance of impropriety or would otherwise be incompatible" with the committee's purpose of a fair and nonpartisan process.

ABA officials said the Standing Committee does not evaluate a nominee's ideology or politics, only his professional competence, integrity and judicial temperament, based on many interviews and research.

ABA president A.P. Carlton rejected Reid's charges. "That's what happens when you have a filibuster," he said.

But his predecessor as ABA president, Robert Hirshon, said he was concerned when in late July 2002 he read reports that Fielding had joined Republican C. Boyden Gray to start the Committee for Justice.

"That raised some concerns in my mind," said Hirshon, "given the fact that our committee has been tarred by both conservatives and liberals as poster boys for the other side, and knowing that we needed to be absolutely nonpartisan."

He called Roscoe Trimmier Jr., then the Standing Committee chair, and asked him to talk with Fielding. "I don't see how you can do both," Hirshon said. If Fielding became involved in Gray's group, he couldn't serve as an ABA evaluator again, he said.

Trimmier talked to Fielding. "The upshot," he said, "was that Fred Fielding would not take part in any activities until his [ABA] term ended" in mid-August 2002.

Fielding is still listed as a board member of the Committee for Justice. He did not return telephone calls.

The Committee for Justice recently unveiled an ad accusing Democrats of "intolerance" for filibustering a vote on Estrada that it plans to air in a few states.

"I don't see the conflict," Gray said, adding Fielding didn't vet Estrada while on the transition team and left the ABA post soon after his group formed.

But Nan Aron, executive director of the liberal Alliance for Justice, which opposes Estrada, charges that Fielding is too partisan to do a fair evaluation.

Fielding was President Ronald Reagan's White House counsel, an adviser to Vice President Dan Quayle and assistant to John Dean, President Richard M. Nixon's White House counsel when Watergate broke.

In May, Bush appointed Fielding to an international center that settles trade disputes, a job that pays $2,000 a day plus expenses, and last fall thanked Fielding publicly during a rally for his judicial nominees.

Burbank says Fielding's activities raise questions of appearances, which could cause more damage to the ABA. Ironically, Bush removed the ABA from its long-held role pre-screening judicial nominees because of the evaluators' perceived liberal bias.

"In light of the controversy concerning the proper role of the ABA Standing Committee," Burbank said, "it seems to me to be a shame to structure the process in such a way that reasonable people might be concerned."

The September 11th exhibit at the National Museum of American History continues to be popular, and the Smithsonian is extending it for a second time through Sunday, July 6th. Consequently, they have sent me a request to sign to extend our "loan" of the bullhorn through August 8th. They have indicated the bullhorn would be returned as quickly as possible, but the month would allow them sufficient time to pack and ship the object and coordinate delivery with our schedule.

I do not see a problem with extending the loan, but I would prefer to send someone to pick it up shortly after July 6th!

The New Mexican Editorial | Mon, Feb 24 Bingaman Should Lead Dems' Filibuster Retreat

The New Mexican 02/24/2003

s legendary prizefighter Joe Louis said of an upcoming opponent reputed to be fast on his feet: "He can run, but he can't hide.''

Senate Democrats, along with the Republican majority, fled Washington last week as their way of honoring Presidents' Day. The annual recess suspended their filibuster against a federal judgeship vote. The Dems are making an unwarranted stand, and an unseemly fuss, over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

The filibuster - protracted talking under senatorial privilege - had consumed a week of debate about Estrada before the senators left town. Now they're gravitating back to the Potomac, and the Dems can hide no longer. Resumption of their verbose balking will make them look ridiculous - at a time when the nation needs statesmen to stand up against the White House warmonger and his partisans commanding Capitol Hill.

The Democrats have chosen a particularly poor target: Estrada, who came from Honduras as a boy and went on to lead his law class at Harvard, is better qualified than many a Democratic appointee now holding life tenure on one federal bench or another.

But after confirming so many less-qualified judges while they held power, Estrada's senatorial tormentors now offer "reasons'' why he shouldn't be confirmed: too young; too bashful about answering leading questions; appointed only because he's Hispanic - or, to some senators' way of thinking, not Hispanic enough.

What really rankles with the Democrats, though, is Estrada's politics. He's a conservative. Surprise, surprise; we've got a conservative president, and it's the president who makes the appointments to the federal judiciary.

As the party on the outs, the Dems had better get used to like-minded appointments from the president. If their game-playing goes on, a disgusted American public might keep George W. Bush in office for the next six years. The country certainly didn't see any reason to balance Bush against a Democratic Congress when it had a chance just a few months ago. With their spiteful behavior toward Bush appointees, the Dems aren't exactly gaining goodwill.

If they find the Republican so repugnant, let 'em vote against him; at least they'll be putting their ideals - or their party colors - on display. But this is no Mr. Smith against some diabolical establishment; it's a bunch of sore losers making themselves even more so.

To break a filibuster by cloture takes 60 senators. The Senate's 51 Republicans need nine of the 48 Democrats, or eight of them and ex-Republican Jim Jeffords of Vermont.

New Mexico's Jeff Bingaman should lead the Democratic blockade-runners. By all measures, Bingaman is a class act; a lawyer who knows that senators have no business obstructing appointments on purely political grounds. He also knows that Republicans aren't going to hold the White House forever; that sooner or later a Democratic president will be choosing judges. And he realizes that Republicans, like their mascot, have long memories.

The last thing our justice system needs is an ongoing feud over appointments to district and appellate judgeships. Let Judge Estrada's confirmation be a landmark of partisan politics' retreat from the courtroom.

Hi Kate--this is a save-the-date for the Eagles Spring trip to Texas. Everyone here has approved--and Jack has asked to run it by Ken. As usual, the issue for us is that we must get this out by COB today as we are tring to have it in people's hands prior to our phone Day--Which is Wednesday!! AAAAAAGH.

I am so sorry to put you in a pinch, but would it be possible to run this by Ken?

Thank you so much!! <<Save the date.doc>>

Hi Kate--this is a save-the-date for the Eagles Spring trip to Texas. Everyone here has approved--and Jack has asked to run it by Ken. As usual, the issue for us is that we must get this out by COB today as we are tring to have it in people's hands prior to our phone Day--Which is Wednesday!! AAAAAAGH.

I am so sorry to put you in a pinch, but would it be possible to run this by Ken?

Thank you so much!! <<Save the date.doc>>

OLSEN & SHUVALOV

RAISING MONEY AND WINNING VOTES THROUGH THE MAIL

A Brief History

In 1999, Karl Rove joined Bush for President after many years of helping devise winning political strategies and direct mail campaigns.

From that great opportunity, a new company is born. Rove asked Todd Olsen and Heather Shuvalov, both former Executive Vice Presidents of Rove + Company, to lead his former firm.

Today, we have a proven track record as an award-winning direct marketing and consulting firm. We specialize in developing and implementing strategic voter contact campaigns and direct mail fundraising and have helped winning Presidential, Congressional, Gubernatorial and statewide campaigns across 31 states.

Let us help you raise money and win votes. With creative packages. Strong copy. Attention-grabbing graphics. Political savvy and a love for meeting deadlines and budgets.

Hi Kate--this is a save-the-date for the Eagles Spring trip to Texas. Everyone here has approved--and Jack has asked to run it by Ken. As usual, the issue for us is that we must get this out by COB today as we are tring to have it in people's hands prior to our phone Day--Which is Wednesday!! AAAAAAGH.

I am so sorry to put you in a pinch, but would it be possible to run this by Ken?

Thank you so much!! <<Save the date.doc>>

The September 11th exhibit at the National Museum of American History continues to be popular, and the Smithsonian is extending it for a second time through Sunday, July 6th. Consequently, they have sent me a request to sign to extend our "loan" of the bullhorn through August 8th. They have indicated the bullhorn would be returned as quickly as possible, but the month would allow them sufficient time to pack and ship the object and coordinate delivery with our schedule.

I do not see a problem with extending the loan, but I would prefer to send someone to pick it up shortly after July 6th!

Your thoughts please?

It's not. Gary said that he wanted to write a response and offered the chance to review it. If we were moving forward on the subject line idea, I think that would obviate at much of the stated reasons for the letter. I'm inclined to take a stab at drafting something that could go out to the whole complex on that. Okay with you?

HEADLINE: Spokane lawyer seeks federal judgeship After not making final three, he asks backers to intercede

BYLINE: Bill Morlin, Staff writer

BODY:
The former head of the Republican Party in Spokane County, who isn't among three finalists to become a federal judge, is mounting his own campaign for the post.

Spokane lawyer Richard Kuhling confirmed Friday that he is asking supporters to write letters to Rep. George Nethercutt, R-Wash.

Kuhling began his effort last week after a bipartisan screening committee selected three finalists and didn't include him.

''There's no end run here," Kuhling said. ''This committee is merely recommending candidates for the job.

''I've always been applying for the job," Kuhling said. ''The committee's three selections was not the end of it, as far as I'm concerned."

Kuhling is a close friend and former campaign manager for Nethercutt, who spent Thursday and Friday interviewing the three finalists, Lonnie Suko, Jim King and Richard Miller.

A spokeswoman for Nethercutt said Friday that only the names of Suko, King and Miller were forwarded to President Bush for consideration. They are scheduled for interviews next week by White House staff.

The three finalists were interviewed this week in Spokane by Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell, both Washington Democrats. The Senate must confirm the lifetime appointments to the federal judiciary made by the president. If a senator doesn't approve of a judicial nomination from the White House, the lawmaker can ''blue tag" the candidate's name, delaying or derailing the process.

Kuhling was among 20 applicants who submitted their names to the six-member, bipartisan selection committee that met in Spokane earlier this month.

The selection committee's members were appointed by Nethercutt and Republican Rep. Doc Hastings, and the two Democratic senators.

The bipartisan selection process has been in place for several years in Washington state. But the process was reaffirmed last year by the state's Democratic senators and Alberto R. Gonzales, counsel to President Bush.

''This is a process the White House has agreed to and has served the people of Washington state well for years," said Todd Webster, a spokesman for Murray.

April Gentry, press spokeswoman for Nethercutt, said his office had ''received a handful of letters" supporting Kuhling's bid for the appointment to succeed retiring Judge Frem Nielsen.

''The congressman's position is he worked with the senators to set up of screening committee, and it selected three highly qualified finalists," Gentry said. ''Congressman Nethercutt has forwarded those three names to the White House."

Kuhling made the initial cut by the screening committee when it cut the field in half, to 10 semifinalists. That group also included Spokane lawyer Bill Hyslop, who also reportedly is talking about pitching his candidacy for the judgeship to Nethercutt.

Hyslop, a former U.S. attorney appointed by President George H. Bush, did not return telephone calls on Friday.

The group of 10 semifinalists was cut to five, then to the three. Suko is a federal magistrate and Miller is an Adams County Superior Court judge. King is a private attorney in Spokane.

Interview: Alberto Gonzales discusses the Democrats' blocking of the controversial nomination of Miguel Estrada to the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

BOB EDWARDS, host: This is MORNING EDITION from NPR News. I'm Bob Edwards.

The Senate returns from a recess today, and Democrats promise to block the controversial nomination of Miguel Estrada to the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Republicans are running campaign style ads complaining the Democrats are being unfair to a Hispanic judicial nominee. President Bush used his weekly radio address on Saturday to complain about the Democrats' handling of the Estrada nomination.

(Soundbite of radio address)

President GEORGE W. BUSH: I submitted his nomination in May of 2001, and Miguel Estrada has been waiting ever since. That's almost two years, and that's a disgrace.

EDWARDS: The man leading the Bush administration's effort to get Estrada confirmed is White House counsel Alberto Gonzales. He spoke with NPR senior correspondent Juan Williams at the White House.

JUAN WILLIAMS reporting:

The nomination of the 41-year-old Estrada, a Honduran born partner at a DC law firm, has become a major ideological battleground. Democrats contend that Republicans blocked President Clinton's nominees to the federal courts on the grounds that they were too liberal. Now the Democrats contend they're not going to allow a Republican president to nominate conservative judges to the court without encountering the same roadblocks. Part of the drama is the expectation that there will soon be several Supreme Court vacancies, and both sides are trying to get the upper hand in advance of any upcoming fight over a high court nominee. I asked White House counsel Gonzales why the Estrada nomination has become such a pivotal fight.

Mr. ALBERTO GONZALES (White House Counsel): This nomination is not just important for Miguel Estrada, but it may tell us something about the future of other nominees of this president, maybe perhaps even Supreme Court nominees in the future. And so it's an important test I think for the new leadership in the Senate.

WILLIAMS: Now the Democrats would contend that, in fact, under Bill Clinton, the Republicans were playing hardball and blocking President Clinton's ability to put judges of a more liberal bent on the court. So they ask why should they open the gates for Mr. Bush's more conservative nominees?

Mr. GONZALES: You know, the president has said and I have said what happened in the past was inexcusable. I mean, to have nominees sit for years and years, in my judgment, there's no reason for that. The president has said that nominees are entitled to a fair hearing and a vote up or down as quickly as possible, no matter who controls the White House and no matter who controls the Senate.

WILLIAMS: Now you've got a situation where the Democrats say if they were to allow the president to have his nominees, in fact, most of the courts in the country would become majority Republican nominees and, therefore, the political scales would be unbalanced. It would be mostly Republican judges dominating these courts. Do you feel that that's a legitimate argument?

Mr. GONZALES: I doubt--the 9th Circuit is heavily balanced by Democratic nominees, the 2nd Circuit and the 3rd Circuit, so there are a lot of circuits around the country where if you look purely at which president nominated the judges, you could argue that the circuits are not properly balanced. We don't look at balance, quite frankly. The president has an obligation under the Constitution to fill vacancies, so we take them where we find them. If there is a vacancy in the circuit, no matter what the composition of the circuit, this president has an obligation to make a nomination and to get those nominees confirmed as quickly as possible.

WILLIAMS: Now there are people on the Democratic side who said,

'Well, if there was a deal that would assure some balance in the future in terms of getting more liberal judges confirmed, as well as more conservative judges, maybe then we could end this filibuster.' Does that kind of deal-making appeal to you?

Mr. GONZALES: Whether it appeals to me or not is sort of irrelevant. The question is whether or not that's something that would be acceptable to the president. He made it clear, in connection with the campaign, the type of people that he would place on the bench, and I think he feels he has a commitment to follow through with what he campaigned on.

WILLIAMS: So no deals?

Mr. GONZALES: Juan, I don't foresee a situation now where we'd be making a deal, because we believe that what we're doing is right.

WILLIAMS: At the same time, you have former colleagues of Mr. Estrada who say he was an ideologue, that he didn't look at the laws, the facts fairly. He was always taking a strongly conservative position, and as a result, they felt they couldn't always trust his interpretation of the law. Do you think that's a fair criticism?

Mr. GONZALES: I think it's an unfair criticism. I think there was some concerns about similar statements made by a supervisor of Miguel Estrada, but when we went back and looked at the evaluations of Miguel, evaluations by this one individual, they were all stellar, talk about what a wonderful lawyer Miguel was. And so if you look behind the accusations, oftentimes there just are no facts to substantiate the accusations.

WILLIAMS: And the notion that he's an ideologue, you said earlier, is not something that you take seriously as a criticism.

Mr. GONZALES: What does it mean to be an ideologue? I mean, obviously, Miguel has a philosophy, a belief in terms of what his role as a judge should be. It is one that we embrace, that the president supports. He expects that of every man and woman that he nominates to the federal bench. And so if that is an ideologue, then that's something that we would support and we're not ashamed of it. I don't think people should be critical of it. I think the American people, if you were to poll every person, every citizen would say, 'Yeah, that's what we expect of our judges,' because to settle for anything less than that means that you would permit men and women to go on the federal bench totally unaccountable to the American citizen and pursue a personal agenda, and I just don't think the American people want that or expect that of their judges.

WILLIAMS: Well, I guess the contrary position would be that the American people might expect independence of their judges as opposed to a highly politicized judiciary.

Mr. GONZALES: Well, I haven't heard any criticism or concern that perhaps these judges are not independent. You know, we hope that they will be independent.

WILLIAMS: By the way, on the Hispanic point, some people would say, 'Oh, it's a cynical approach. They've got somebody there that's going to be very hard for the Democrats to oppose because he is a minority group member, but really, it's just a veil for the fact that he is a hard-line conservative.' Is that a legitimate line of criticism?

Mr. GONZALES: I don't think so. If I recited to you his qualifications without telling you the color of his skin, you would say, 'This is a wonderfully accomplished young man.'

WILLIAMS: What about the Supreme Court? Do you guys have any ideas if any vacancies are coming or any thoughts as you look at possible nominees for the high court, should a vacancy occur?

Mr. GONZALES: Yeah. We're not aware of any vacancy that may occur anytime soon.

WILLIAMS: Republicans in the Senate have 51 votes to confirm Estrada, but they do not have the 60 votes to stop the ongoing Democratic filibuster. The question now is who will blink first? Will the president withdraw the nomination or will the Democrats feel pressure to allow a vote? Juan Williams, NPR News, Washington.

Deborah Cook Is the Typical Bush Judicial Nominee — So Watch Out

By ADAM COHEN

The case before the Ohio Supreme Court looked simple enough. Thomas Davis, a forklift operator at an Ohio Wal-Mart, was crushed to death at work. When his widow sued, Wal-Mart fought hard — and its employees may have lied and destroyed evidence. When she learned of the possible deception, Mrs. Davis went to court to try to add an important legal claim. Too bad, Wal-Mart argued. She had missed her chance — even if it did trick her by lying.

As they say in law school, What result?

The predominantly Republican court properly ruled, 6 to 1, that Wal-Mart's legal defense had been bogus. Even if it wasn't, the court held, it would be fundamentally unjust "to reward a party for misrepresenting or destroying evidence." Only one justice took Wal-Mart's side. That justice was Deborah Cook.

She is now President Bush's nominee to fill a vacancy on the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Cincinnati. Ms. Cook is no Miguel Estrada, the so-called conservative "stealth nominee," who is facing a Senate filibuster. Blacks are not rallying against her, the way they are against Charles Pickering, the Trent Lott protégé who lobbied the Justice Department to go easy on a convicted cross-burner. Disabled people are not lined up against her, as they are against Jeffrey Sutton, who argued a major case that weakened the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Deborah Cook, a 51-year-old onetime corporate lawyer from Akron, Ohio, may actually be the most utterly typical of the Bush administration's judicial nominees. Which is why, based on her judicial record, we should all be very worried about the future of the federal courts.

In eight years on the Ohio Supreme Court, Justice Cook has been a steady voice against injured workers, discrimination victims and consumers. The court's most prolific dissenter, she frequently breaks with her Republican colleagues to side with big business and insurance companies. Often she reaches for a harsh legal technicality to send a hapless victim home empty-handed.

Take David Norgard, a beryllium plant worker in Elmore. When he developed skin ulcers, dizziness and coughing fits, he suspected beryllium poisoning, but his company told him he was fine. It didn't tell him his blood tests showed he was unusually sensitive to beryllium — and that it had filed a workers' compensation claim on his behalf. The Ohio Supreme Court ruled that Mr. Norgard could sue, but Justice Cook argued that it was too late. The statute of limitations started running, she said, when he first suspected he was being poisoned, not when he learned his employer was lying about it.

Justice Cook's dissents in age-discrimination cases have taken tortuous paths to leave older workers in the lurch. The Ohio Supreme Court ruled that Michael Oker, an attorney fired by Ameritech, could sue for age bias. But Justice Cook disagreed, saying the 180-day period for filing a complaint began not when he was fired, but months before he left the job. The court ruled that Phyllis Ruth Mauzy, a 61-year-old office manager, could proceed against an employer who berated her in front of her colleagues, pressed her to retire and wrote in her final evaluation, "you can't teach an old dog new tricks." But Justice Cook would have thrown the case out before Ms.

Mauzy appeared before a jury.

In case after case, Justice Cook has found ways to protect corporations pestered by sick or fired workers. When a bank argued that a jury's sex-discrimination verdict should be thrown out because the judge improperly "steered" the jurors to their result, Justice Cook was the only member of the Ohio Supreme Court to buy it. When a female Dairy Mart employee sued for psychological injuries after she was robbed while working alone, Justice Cook argued, in dissent, that the woman had no claim — a position a majority of the court called "absurd."

At Judge Cook's confirmation hearing, even the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman, Orrin Hatch, a strong supporter, felt a need to ask her why she dissents so often. It is not, "as has been implied," she said, "a matter of my particular bent or preference for any side of a case." She dissents, she said, when she disagrees about the law.

There were senators who were prepared to explore the matter further. But Republicans on the Judiciary Committee, in an extraordinary move, had scheduled a single confirmation hearing for Justice Cook, Mr. Sutton and a third nominee. Democratic senators devoted most of their question time to Mr. Sutton. Justice Cook was all but ignored. When Senator Charles Schumer asked for her to return for more questions, Senator Hatch refused, saying it would not be fair to Justice Cook.

The Bush administration has a long list of Deborah Cooks — nominees who are not stirring controversy, but who will radically reshape the federal judiciary for a generation. The administration is loading the courts with judges who rule in favor of discriminating companies, abusive bosses and employers who injure their workers and lie about it. And it is counting on the rest of us not to notice.

Subject: Moving on

After two years, Friday will be my last day here at the White House. It has been an honor to work with such a wonderful team and to have the privilege to serve this President. There are so many people who I feel deserve thanks for making my tenure so much better and productive that I couldn't begin to thank each of you individually without overloading the email server. Please know that I value your advice, counsel and most of all friendship.

HEADLINE: The Democrats' judicial stall

BODY:
Miguel Estrada, nominated to the federal bench by President Bush, is an indisputable conservative who, in the view of many Senate Democrats, has failed to provide enough information about his views on legal issues. They worry that he'll be a conservative activist. They want him to tell them more about his views, and they insist that the administration release confidential memos he wrote while serving in the Justice Department. But they have had no luck in getting their way.

What are they to do? Their options are clear and simple. Democrats could a) vote against Estrada because they think he's too conservative, b) vote against him because they don't have enough information, or c) vote for him because he's an exceptionally able lawyer, who got the highest possible rating from the American Bar Association and would be the first Hispanic judge on the most important appellate court in the nation. But they've chosen d)--none of the above. Since the Judiciary Committee sent the nomination to the floor, Senate Democrats have successfully maneuvered to keep Estrada from getting a simple up-or-down vote. And they are determined to block a decision on his confirmation until the administration capitulates.

It's a shameless display of partisanship that they should end immediately. Their case against Estrada is strikingly unconvincing. In his appearance before the Judiciary Committee last year, he declined to answer some questions, saying that it would be improper for him to indicate how he would rule on cases. That kind of circumspection is perfectly routine for judicial nominees, who have a duty to protect the courts' reputation for impartiality.

The administration has likewise balked at turning over memos he wrote while serving as a lawyer in the office of the solicitor general, which decides what position the government should take on cases before the Supreme Court. All the living former solicitors general, Democrats as well as Republicans, have strenuously opposed the demand, arguing that it would impede the office's work by discouraging government attorneys from stating their views honestly during internal deliberations.

The decision to prevent a floor vote also has to be resisted. The Senate has never before killed an appeals court nominee by the use of a filibuster, as Democrats are trying to do here. If it succeeds this time, President Bush can assume he'll have to get 60 votes (the number needed to force a vote) to confirm any judicial nominee who's the least bit controversial--instead of the simple majority stipulated in the Constitution.

Trying to block a nominee because you don't like his views is not a new tactic--Republicans used it against some of President Clinton's judicial appointments. But that doesn't make it excusable. As The Tribune said three years ago in reference to a long-stalled Clinton choice, the right way to address a controversial figure is "to debate the nomination fully and then vote to confirm or reject" the nominee.

If Senate Democrats think they can't in good conscience vote for Estrada, they should vote against him. But they should vote.

Gov. Bush appeals to Graham, Nelson for Estrada support

By TIM REYNOLDS

Associated Press Writer

MIAMI - Gov. Jeb Bush has asked Florida's two Democratic senators to support Hispanic judicial nominee Miguel Estrada, saying the path Estrada has taken since coming to the United States epitomizes "the American dream."

Bush sent identical letters to Sens. Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, urging the Democrats to support Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, a court generally considered as a gateway to a future Supreme Court appointment.

It was unclear Tuesday if either senator had actually seen Bush's letter, which was dated Monday.

"Sen. Graham is still kind of reviewing all this information," said Graham spokeswoman Jill Greenberg. "He should have a decision soon."

Graham has not indicated whether he supports Estrada's nomination; Nelson, according to spokesman Dan McLaughlin, is leaning toward favoring Estrada, a conservative Washington-based lawyer.

"Certainly, we appreciate the governor's thoughts," McLaughlin said. "But in this particular case, as far as we're concerned they are coming after the fact."

Sen.s are in their third week of debate over whether Estrada should become the first Hispanic to sit on the federal appeals court in the nation's capital.

Republican supporters of Estrada, including President Bush, the governor's brother, have implored Democratic leaders to stop the filibuster they're using to delay the nomination. Many Democrats contend that they cannot support Estrada because, they say, he is a largely unknown entity.

In his letter, Gov. Bush detailed how Estrada arrived in this country from Honduras as a teenager who spoke virtually no English, but then earned degrees from Columbia and Harvard and has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

"His nomination is historic and important to the Hispanic community in Florida," he wrote.

Nelson said Monday he doesn't support the filibuster, something else which Bush implored the senators to avoid.

Gov. Bush said the filibuster would "demean" Estrada.

The GOP has the 51 votes needed to confirm Estrada's nomination - but not the 60 needed to stop a filibuster and end Senate debate to allow a vote.

Some Senate Democrats say they want to question Estrada further and to review memos written when he worked at the solicitor general's office during the Clinton administration. The White House has not allowed the Democrats access to the memos.

Mr. Dinh--

I am writing this email to follow up on my voice mail message of this morning. I hope that you will be able to join us as a guest at Friday Lunch here at the Brookings Institution. (Friday, February 28, from 12:15--1:45 pm). This week's session will focus on the Estrada nomination, and we would be honored to have you here to share your thoughts.

As background, Friday Lunch is a weekly gathering for informal, off-the-record conversations involving around 30 Brookings and outside scholars, public officials, journalists, and others interested or active in politics. Senior fellow, EJ Dionne, serves as the moderator, and he typically has outside guests speak for about 5 minutes, before opening up the gathering to questions and discussion. In past months, we have been joined by guests such as OMB Director Mitch Daniels, Secretary Tommy Thompson, Senator John McCain, Congresswoman Nancy Pelosi, and Senator Fred Thompson, to name a few. These roundtable discussions prove to be both lively and informative. As the name implies, Friday Lunch takes place here at Brookings every Friday at the same time, from 12:15 until 1:45.

I can be reached via email or by phone at 202-797-6178. I very much hope you will be able to join us!

Christina

David Yepsen is a political columnist for the Des Moines Register. He's the dean of Iowa political reporters. Here's an interesting item from his column today.

http://desmoinesregister.com/opinion/stories/c5917686/20526472.html

JUSTICE COLLOTON? Steve Colloton, U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Iowa, has been nominated for the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Lots of Republican insiders say the 40-year-old Colloton, who caught the eye of conservatives when he worked on Whitewater probes for Ken Starr in 1994-96, might make a good Supreme Court nominee someday. Colloton also clerked for Chief Justice William Rehnquist in 1989. The Iowa City native is young, conservative and doesn't have a big paper trail for liberals to use against him.
But Colloton's confirmation is far from a sure thing. The word from Tom Harkin's camp is the senator is not inclined to go along with Colloton if the Bush administration makes state Senator Chuck Larson of Cedar Rapids his replacement as U.S. attorney.
Larson is angling for the governorship, and Harkin folks worry the new job with enable Larson to get favorable attention as a crime-busting lawman.

I have a question regarding photos that Mrs. Bush took while on her political swing in November. The RNC is going to pay for the printing of all of the greeter photos from each event. However, police photos were paid by the WH because apparently the WH always pays for those since the police serve Mrs. Bush as First Lady, not as a member of the Republican party.

So... who should pay for motorcade driver pictures? Are those people serving Mrs. Bush in an official capacity even when she is in a state solely for political events?

Thanks for your help.

EDITORIAL: First, Help the Sick

February 27, 2003

The continuing flood of asbestos injury lawsuits clogging courts around the country now represents the longest-running legal saga in American history. That unhappy distinction should prod Congress to step in at last.

In recent decades, more than half a million men and women, most of them blue-collar workers, have sued companies that made or used products containing asbestos. Many are desperately sick with respiratory cancers or other conditions causing severe breathing difficulties, but most who say they were exposed to asbestos aren't currently ill.

Lawyers for the earliest asbestos victims were heroes. In the 1970s, they exposed corporate bosses who for decades had told their employees to mine asbestos or insulate ships with it even though company officials knew the material was deadly. When workers fell ill, many coughing up blood, their bosses refused to tell them that asbestos might be the reason. In trial after trial, executives swore that something else must have caused the plaintiffs' diseases -- though juries increasingly refused to buy that line.

At this point, there's plenty of dishonor to be shared. By the labor unions that have shamelessly trolled their ranks for plaintiffs, many of them likely never to fall ill with asbestos-caused disease. By lawyers who have grown rich off these cases but still charge 30% contingency fees to process plaintiffs in impersonal batches of 1,000 or more. And certainly by the corporate defendants.

Asbestos litigation has already cost the U.S. economy $54 billion, according to a Rand Corp. estimate. Plaintiffs have sued some 6,000 companies. Legal fees and payouts have bankrupted dozens of corporations, with more failures to come. Desperately sick plaintiffs can still wait years before they get to court; many have died before their trial dates.

By clumping cases into huge groups, lawyers haggle with the corporations and their insurers over the value of workers' injuries, often shaking them down on behalf of clients who were merely exposed to asbestos while underpaying people who are acutely ill.

For years, policymakers have tried to devise a speedier, fairer way to resolve this mess. The continuing bankruptcies and estimates of half a million or more asbestos lawsuits to come may have created momentum for reform.

The most thoughtful proposal, which Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.) introduced as legislation this month, would make sure that payouts go where they are most needed, to people who are already ill. Those who fall ill in the future would be able to seek compensation then. This approach won important support in recent weeks from the American Bar Assn. Congress should pass Nickles' legislation.

Subject: Post-Reception Dinner

Susan: I wanted to mention a opportunity for Mr. Rove following his reception Thursday evening, March 20 here in Texas. The reception is at 7pm and ends around 8:30pm. Mr. Rove and his friends from Austin may want to go to dinner and visit.

We have the offer to reserve a semi-private room at a local restaurant, the Huisache, that can serve 20 plus easily. Joe Guinn of our Arrangements Committee and Pacificare has offered to cover the cost. They have done this many times in the past.

We could invite his special guests like the Oles, Herndons, Richburgs, and Thomas', etc..If there are other guests he wants to be invited let me know. Is Mrs. Rove and or other family members coming?

Our tickets are at the printer and we can send out the complimentary tickets soon. Let me know. Also, let me know what we owe you on his airline arrangements.

Thanks! MIKE

A New Move on Estrada
The White House challenges Democrats to put up or shut up.

n perhaps its most forceful effort yet to break the stalemate over the appeals-court nomination of Miguel Estrada, the White House has now invited every member of the Senate who has doubts about Estrada's legal views to submit written questions to Estrada by the close of business Friday. In a letter delivered Thursday to all 100 senators, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Estrada will respond by next Tuesday.

"He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before," Gonzales wrote.

Gonzales also renewed a White House offer to set up personal meetings between Estrada and any senator who wants to have a one-on-one talk. "We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character," Gonzales wrote.

Finally, Gonzales asked that Democrats with questions about Estrada's work "immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4." Gonzales specifically named appeals-court judge Amalya Kearse, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, and former Solicitors General Ken Starr, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman.

The last three names * Days, Dellinger, and Waxman * are particularly significant. All were high-ranking appointees of President Clinton, and their inclusion on the list suggests that the White House is confident they will not voice any objections to Estrada.

In addition, all three have seen at least some, if not all, of the internal memos Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office. In recent weeks, Democrats have argued that the memos might reveal some heretofore unknown aspect of Estrada's legal views, and thus must be made public before Estrada is confirmed. The White House has refused, calling the documents "highly privileged" * a position endorsed by all seven living former Solicitors General.

In his letter, Gonzales wrote that the former officials "could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a circuit judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office."

"We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee," Gonzales concluded. "We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information."

The letter is the White House's clearest move yet to call the bluff of Democrats who have been demanding more information on Estrada before they will allow a vote on his nomination. In the letter, the administration is saying to Democrats: You want more information, you can ask for more information.

What is not stated, however, is that the letter will give the White House a powerful argument against any Democrats who oppose Estrada and do not ask for more information. You said you wanted more information, the administration will be able to argue, and yet when we offered it you didn't even bother to ask.

Meanwhile, the Democratic filibuster goes on. Sources say the Republican leadership still made no decision on whether or when to call for a vote to cut off debate and force an up-or-down vote on the nomination. At the moment, Republicans, who have all 51 of their own votes plus four Democrats, would fall five votes short of the 60 needed to cut off debate. But Republicans believe they are making progress and that the filibuster is beginning to take a political toll on moderate Democrats who are so far supporting the filibuster. Thus, the talking will continue. "We are on this next week," one Republican says. "We're committed to it."

Senator won't pursue U.S. attorney job

Sen. Charles Larson Jr. of Cedar Rapids said Thursday he would not pursue an appointment to be U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Iowa.

Last week, U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley said Larson had approached him about the job, now held by Steve Colloton. Colloton has been nominated to a judgeship on the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Larson, 34, is a lawyer and state Republican Party chairman.

"My priorities are re-electing our president and Senator Grassley, and representing the people of District 19 in the Iowa Senate," Larson said.

And yes, that was not a typo; they DENIED rehearing en banc so the pledge decision stands for now in CA9.

A federal appeals court on Friday rejected the Bush administration's request to reconsider its decision that the Pledge of Allegiance is an unconstitutional endorsement of religion when recited in public classrooms, setting up a showdown at the Supreme Court.

Subject: Article re Graham's Blocking of US Marshals

Graham, Bush tussle over marshals
The senator, feeling that the president ignored recommendations, stalls three confirmations.
By LUCY MORGAN, Times Tallahassee Bureau Chief
St. Petersburg Times
published March 1, 2003
TALLAHASSEE -- A political battle between the White House and U.S. Sen. Bob Graham is holding up the appointments of Florida's three U.S. marshals.
Graham is blocking Senate confirmation of the nominees because one of them was not recommended by a nominating commission set up to handle such appointments.
It's a matter of principle, a Graham spokesman said Friday.
"We have highly respected, bipartisan groups who have volunteered to serve on nominating commissions," said spokesman Paul Anderson. "The senator wants an adequate explanation from the White House for why they circumvented this well-respected process."
The White House overruled the nominating commission's choice for South Florida U.S. marshal for the sake of diversity. The president nominated a Hispanic woman instead of the white men the commission recommended.
Caught up in the political battle are Tom Hurlburt Jr. and Dennis Williamson, two widely respected law enforcement officers who gave up high-powered careers six months ago to take the posts in Tampa and Tallahassee. Both were recommended by the nominating commission.

Hurlburt, 57, who was a longtime police chief in Orlando, gave up his $140,000-a-year job as Orange County director of public safety in September to become U.S. marshal in Tampa.
Williamson, 52, deputy commissioner at the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, gave up a $104,000 job the same month to take over the marshal's job in Tallahassee.
Both are still waiting.
"I've been mowing my grass, working on the fence, painting the house and trimming the trees," Hurlburt said Friday when asked how he has used the time off. "It's a pretty sad scenario."
"I'm down to insulating the pipes underneath my house," Williamson said. "I've painted everything, rearranged my garage, cut trees down; it's ridiculous."
Both were advised by federal authorities to leave their old jobs so they would be ready to take their new posts. Hurlburt said he thought it was only fair to step aside so Orlando officials could replace him.
James T. "Tim" Moore, head of the FDLE and chairman of the federal nominating committee, said the appointments should be immediately approved.
"We are the fourth-largest state in the country, and we have two vacancies unfilled," Moore complained. "We had a good process and got two quality individuals that are well-respected and highly regarded."
Moore said he has no problem with Christina Pharo, a deputy marshal in Miami the president nominated for the South Florida post.
Anderson said Graham is concerned that the White House ignored the nominating process set up when former Republican U.S. Sen. Connie Mack was in office and Democrat Bill Clinton was in the White House.
Graham would like "an adequate explanation" from the White House, Anderson added. "He doesn't feel he has put any undue burden on security at courthouses."
The three incumbent marshals remain on the job until their successors are confirmed.

thoughts on Miguel attending? Note that both Judge Gonzales and Menendez are receiving awards.

February 5, 2003

Mr.Estrada
mestrada@gibsondunn.com

Dear Mr. Estrada:

The United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce (USHCC) will be hosting its 13th Annual Legislative Conference on March 12-13, 2003. This event is intended to provide an opportunity for USHCC members to come to Washington, D.C. to interact with key federal elected and appointed officials.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the USHCC, I am pleased to invite you to attend the Legislative Awards Dinner on Thursday, March 13 at the Capital Hilton, located at 1001 16th Street, NW, beginning at 7:00 p.m., with an opening reception beginning at 6:00 p.m. The Awards Dinner is the culmination of our Legislative Conference that will attract more than 500 leaders from the Hispanic business community, corporate America and the public sector.

Every year at the Legislative Conference we honor those who have demonstrated great leadership in promoting the interests of the Hispanic community. This year, White House Counsel Albert Gonzales will receive the President's Award and Congressman Robert Menendez (D-NJ) will receive the Chair's Award. We will also recognize the two Latinos serving as White House fellows - Cesar Conde at the U.S. Department of the State and Cesar Aristeiguieta at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

As you may know, the USHCC's primary mission is to represent the interests of over 1.2 million Hispanic-owned businesses in the United States and Puerto Rico.
Through a network of more than 130 local Hispanic chambers of commerce and business organizations, the USHCC stands as the preeminent business organization that effectively communicates the needs of Hispanic enterprise to corporate America and the Federal government. It is for this reason we find it critical to have an event in Washington, D.C. to bring together the Hispanic business community and government leaders to engage in constructive dialogues around mutual interest.

Attached you will find information about our Legislative Conference. I would be honored if your schedule permits you to join us. If you require additional information or would like to confirm your attendance, please email < mailto:esilva@ushcc.com?Subject=RSVP USHCC Legislative Event> or call Elsa Silva, Executive Assistant, at 202-842-1212, ext. 110.

Sincerely,
<http://www.ushcc.com/eblast/Legislative03/sig.jpg>

The CIA wants to get inside Khalid Shaikh Mohammed's head. But his interrogators - CIA, FBI or from a foreign security service - are working against the clock. Mohammed's information about impending terrorist operations and the location of al-Qaida leaders and cells grows more dated by the hour.

Whether the CIA can learn anything useful from the alleged Sept. 11 mastermind depends on the skills and methods of the interrogators, Mohammed's willingness to talk and perhaps simply time.

Captured early Saturday in a raid in Pakistan, he is now believed to be in U.S. custody overseas.

Of top priority during the questioning is gaining intelligence that could help quickly disrupt attacks being planned or lead to added precautions, American counterterrorism officials said.

That could mean a domestic law enforcement raid to break up a cell ready to strike, or an increase of security at areas Mohammed names as targets subject to imminent attacks. Intelligence about Mohammed's activities led in part to the orange alert that lasted most of February, counterterrorism officials said.

Overseas, it could mean an operation that leads to the capture of al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden.

But such information is just what he is most likely to try to keep secret, or lie about. Still, terrorists who learn of Mohammed's capture may alter their plans, abandon safe houses or make hurried telephone calls - actions that could expose them to detection.

The only al-Qaida capture that approaches the magnitude of Mohammed's was that of Abu Zubaydah last March. Zubaydah more than once provided information that sent American security officials scurrying to provide warnings to cities and sectors of the economy, knowing all the while that he could be lying.

Zubaydah did provide some information that was later verified through other sources, officials said. That included intelligence that led to the detention of Jose Padilla, the American whom federal officials allege was plotting to use a radiological weapon on U.S. soil.

U.S. officials were elated by Mohammed's capture.

"This is equal to the liberation of Paris in the second World War," said GOP Rep. Porter Goss of Florida, chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, on ABC's "This Week."

"This is a giant step backward for the al-Qaida," Republican Sen. Pat Roberts of Kansas, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, told "Fox News Sunday." "Now their operations commander is simply out of operations."

Officials were not releasing details of Mohammed's detention. Previous high-level al-Qaida captives have not been brought to U.S. soil; they would have rights not afforded on foreign soil, U.S. officials say. Where they are, however, has not been disclosed.

Another secret is how officials will attempt to get information from Mohammed.

U.S. officials insist they eschew physical, violent torture, although it is unclear if all of America's allies live by a similar code.

Also less clear are to what extent interrogators use certain methods that human rights groups also regard as torture: sleep deprivation, threats of torture and other techniques intended to confuse, frighten or wear down a captive.

"We don't sanction torture but there are psychological and other ways that we can get most of what we need," said Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Whatever the method, the goal is to get inside a prisoner's head and get him talking, experts say. An interrogator may try to appeal to Mohammed's vanity, his fears, or whatever lever seems to offer the best avenue to getting information that will stop terrorist attacks.

As his interrogation moves away from the immediate, Mohammed can provide counterterrorism officials with a deeper understanding of al-Qaida and its history.

Officials believe he can detail how Sept. 11 was put together, answering long-standing questions about the plot's origins: Who chose the World Trade Center and Pentagon as targets? Who picked Sept. 11 as the date?

American officials say Mohammed, who was born in Kuwait and has both Pakistani citizenship and ancestry, planned and coordinated key aspects of the Sept. 11 operation.

His information can be cross-checked with Ramzi Binalshibh's, his former aide who was captured in September. Binalshibh was a part of the cell that included Mohamed Atta, chief among the Sept. 11 hijackers.

In the mid-1990s, Mohammed also worked with his nephew Ramzi Yousef and two others in the Philippines on a number of operations. Yousef is in prison for his role in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing.

One plan called for bombing up a dozen trans-Pacific airliners in flight. A second involved crashing an airplane into CIA headquarters outside of Washington. Officials have suggested these plots - broken up in their infancy with the arrests of Mohammed's associations - were the seeds of Sept. 11.

The four plotters were linked to al-Qaida through a financial operative named Khalifa, who is bin Laden's brother-in-law, officials have said. Khalifa is believed to remain at large.

Dear Mr. Estrada:

The United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce (USHCC) will be hosting its 13th Annual Legislative Conference on March 12-13, 2003. This event is intended to provide an opportunity for USHCC members to come to Washington, D.C. to interact with key federal elected and appointed officials.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the USHCC, I am pleased to invite you to attend the Legislative Awards Dinner on Thursday, March 13 at the Capital Hilton, located at 1001 16th Street, NW, beginning at 7:00 p.m., with an opening reception beginning at 6:00 p.m. The Awards Dinner is the culmination of our Legislative Conference that will attract more than 500 leaders from the Hispanic business community, corporate America and the public sector.

Every year at the Legislative Conference we honor those who have demonstrated great leadership in promoting the interests of the Hispanic community. This year, White House Counsel Albert Gonzales will receive the President's Award and Congressman Robert Menendez (D-NJ) will receive the Chair's Award. We will also recognize the two Latinos serving as White House fellows - Cesar Conde at the U.S. Department of the State and Cesar Aristeiguieta at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

As you may know, the USHCC's primary mission is to represent the interests of over 1.2 million Hispanic-owned businesses in the United States and Puerto Rico. Through a network of more than 130 local Hispanic chambers of commerce and business organizations, the USHCC stands as the preeminent business organization that effectively communicates the needs of Hispanic enterprise to corporate America and the Federal government. It is for this reason we find it critical to have an event in Washington, D.C. to bring together the Hispanic business community and government leaders to engage in constructive dialogues around mutual interest.

Attached you will find information about our Legislative Conference. I would be honored if your schedule permits you to join us. If you require additional information or would like to confirm your attendance, please email <mailto:esilva@ushcc.com?Subject=RSVP USHCC Legislative Event> or call Elsa Silva, Executive Assistant, at 202-842-1212, ext. 110.

Mr.Estrada
Department of Justice
mestrada@gibsondunn.com

Dear Mr. Estrada:

The United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce (USHCC) will be hosting its 13th Annual Legislative Conference on March 12-13, 2003. This event is intended to provide an opportunity for USHCC members to come to Washington, D.C. to interact with key federal elected and appointed officials.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the USHCC, I am pleased to invite you to attend the Legislative Awards Dinner on Thursday, March 13 at the Capital Hilton, located at 1001 16th Street, NW, beginning at 7:00 p.m., with an opening reception beginning at 6:00 p.m. The Awards Dinner is the culmination of our Legislative Conference that will attract more than 500 leaders from the Hispanic business community, corporate America and the public sector.

Every year at the Legislative Conference we honor those who have demonstrated great leadership in promoting the interests of the Hispanic community. This year, White House Counsel Albert Gonzales will receive the President's Award and Congressman Robert Menendez (D-NJ) will receive the Chair's Award. We will also recognize the two Latinos serving as White House fellows - Cesar Conde at the U.S. Department of the State and Cesar Aristeiguieta at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

As you may know, the USHCC's primary mission is to represent the interests of over 1.2 million Hispanic-owned businesses in the United States and Puerto Rico. Through a network of more than 130 local Hispanic chambers of commerce and business organizations, the USHCC stands as the preeminent business organization that effectively communicates the needs of Hispanic enterprise to corporate America and the Federal government. It is for this reason we find it critical to have an event in Washington, D.C. to bring together the Hispanic business community and government leaders to engage in constructive dialogues around mutual interest.

Attached you will find information about our Legislative Conference. I would be honored if your schedule permits you to join us. If you require additional information or would like to confirm your attendance, please email <mailto:esilva@ushcc.com?Subject=RSVP USHCC Legislative Event> or call Elsa Silva, Executive Assistant, at 202-842-1212, ext. 110.

Subject: political photos

I have a question regarding photos that Mrs. Bush took while on her political swing in November. The RNC is going to pay for the printing of all of the greeter photos from each event. However, police photos were paid by the WH because apparently the WH always pays for those since the police serve Mrs. Bush as First Lady, not as a member of the Republican party.

So... who should pay for motorcade driver pictures? Are those people serving Mrs. Bush in an official capacity even when she is in a state solely for political events?

Thanks for your help.

Yup. I am not having a successful day. And, Lincoln wants questions answered to the "committee" so we can send a letter to Leahy and Hatch with her questions and his answers and cc Lincoln. What does that get us, you ask? DUNNO.

Let me know.

Brett, this is in follow-up to a conversation you had with David Maggi of this office last month about invitations to political events. We understood that the White House wanted all invitations to political events cleared through you and the White House Office of Political Affairs for the next several weeks. We wanted to find out whether that policy is still in effect and whether it extends to political events which are not fundraisers. We've received a request from an employee to clear her attendance at a breakfast meeting for Republican elected officials (not a fundraiser) during a National League of Cities conference. Is this the kind of event you want to see? If so, do you have a concern about the employee(Elizabeth Dial, a non-PAS employe in the Department's Office of Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs) attending in her personal capacity?

EDITORIAL • March 5, 2003

Tackling asbestos reform

In the wake of the American Bar Association's historic decision to break with trial-lawyer advocacy groups and support commonsense limits on asbestos-related lawsuits, the Senate Judiciary Committee this afternoon will hold a hearing on the growing problem of asbestos litigation and bankruptcies. Asbestos, a mineral once widely used in fireproofing and insulation, can cause severe and even fatal health damage to individuals receiving prolonged exposure. The most serious problem today, however, is a proliferation of lawsuits coming from people who received little or no actual harm from asbestos.

According to a Rand Corp. study released in January, between 65 percent and 90 percent of asbestos plaintiffs in the courts today have no physical impairment. The ABA made its move last month after hearing angry lawyers complain that lawsuits from non-victims were inhibiting the ability of persons injured by asbestos to receive compensation.

Sen. Don Nickles, Oklahoma Republican, has introduced legislation (S. 413) that he says would move actual asbestos victims to the front of the line when it comes to compensation by establishing medical criteria based on American Medical Association (AMA) standards for determining asbestos-related illnesses. Like the ABA proposal, Mr. Nickles' proposal, the Asbestos Claims Criteria and Compensation Act, would also protect the rights of individuals who are concerned that they may some day develop an asbestos-related illness "by keeping the statute of limitations clock from ticking until the illness is discovered."

This afternoon's Judiciary Committee witness list represents something of a political and philosophical cross-section on asbestos and tort reform in general, ranging from ABA President-elect Dennis Archer to a representative of the AFL—CIO. The latter can be expected to make the case for some sort of trust fund that would handle asbestos-related claims — something that is likely to deteriorate into an expensive boondoggle for persons who aren't really sick (and their lawyers).

But this afternoon's most powerful witness for change could prove to be Steven Kazan. A partner in an Oakland law firm, he has spent the last 15 to 20 years representing plaintiffs suffering from mesothelioma, an asbestos-related cancer. In testimony before the Judiciary Committee in September, Mr. Kazan delivered an impassioned plea for reform. "Other plaintiffs' attorneys are filing tens of thousands of claims every year for people who have absolutely nothing wrong with them. This bankrupts defendants — who are not there when it comes time to seek compensation for cancer victims and their families," he said. "Moreover, non-malignant claims in particular accrue value they wouldn't otherwise have because they can find the courthouses with the most favorable procedural practices and the most generous juries."

When the Judiciary meets this afternoon, it should listen carefully to Mr. Kazan's powerful plea for reform.

URGENT ACTION ALERT:
CONTACT YOUR SENATOR ON THE NOMINATION OF JAY BYBEE

HRC opposes the nomination of Jay Bybee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Bybee's record shows a lack of respect for Supreme Court precedent on the constitutional rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Americans, and he has characterized sexual orientation-inclusive civil rights laws as "preferences" for "homosexuals." Bybee helped drafted a brief for the Justice Department regarding security clearance for gays and lesbians working in defense-related jobs. The Department of Defense labeled homosexuality "deviant sexual conduct" and lumped it together with "bestiality, fetishism, exhibitionism, necrophilia, nymphomania or satyriasis, masochism, sadism, pedophilia, transvestism, and voyeurism."

In addition, Bybee exhibited further disregard for civil rights protections with his critical views regarding a court ruling in Bob Jones University v. United States, which stated that the IRS could deny tax-exempt status to a university that banned interracial dating.

For further background on Jay Bybee, click <https://admin.grassroots.com/clientAdmin/campaigns/authoring/index.jhtml?view=actionPage&campaignID=2391&actionPageId=8145> here.

On Feb. 27, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 12-6 to approve Bybee's nomination. If your senator sits on the Judiciary Committee, please see how he or she voted in the list below.

Voting to approve were: Sens. Chambliss (R-GA), Cornyn (R-TX), Craig (R-ID), DeWine (R-OH), Graham (R-SC), Grassley (IA), Hatch (R-UT), Kohl (D-WI), Kyl (R-AZ), Schumer (D-NY), Sessions (R-AL), and Specter (R-PA).

Voting "NO" were Sens. Biden (D-Delaware), Durbin (D-IL), Edwards (D-NC), Feingold (D-WI), Feinstein (D-CA), and Kennedy (D-MA).

Senator Leahy (D-VT) voted "present/pass."

ACTIONS TO TAKE IMMEDIATELY:

* If you have not already contacted your senator, please send a free fax to your senator IMMEDIATELY by clicking on the "take action" button above. Urge him or her to oppose the nomination of Jay Bybee.

* For residents of New York, Vermont and Wisconsin: Please send your fax AND specifically call your Senator:

Schumer-NY 202/224-6542
Leahy-VT 202/224-4242
Kohl-WI 202/224-5653

Tell your senator, in a respectful and pleasant manner, that you are very concerned about Bybee's record on civil rights issues and you urge him to vote "NO" in a full floor vote.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski said today that she would introduce a bill this week to break up the 9th Circuit so that its Appeals Court would not hear Alaska cases, as it does now. The report adds that reducing the power of the 9th Circuit Court is a goal her father sought for many years when he was in the Senate.

Sen. Murkowski speaks out for 'under God' in pledge

SPONSOR: She plans to introduce bill to break up 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

By Liz Ruskin

Anchorage Daily News

(Published: March 5, 2003)

Washington -- Sen. Lisa Murkowski, in her first speech on the Senate floor, condemned a California court decision that would strike the words "under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools. A resolution she sponsored expressing the Senate's support for the pledge was approved 94-0.

"The day that my kids come home from school and say, 'Mom, we had to stop saying the pledge today,' I'm telling you, all hell is going to break loose," she told reporters before the vote.

In June, a three-judge panel of the California-based 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that because of the "under God" phrase, the pledge is an unconstitutional endorsement of religion when recited in public schools.

Friday, a larger panel of the court declined to review that decision.

The court's decision not to reconsider the case "represents a type of extremism carried out by individuals who want to substitute their values in place of the Constitution," Murkowski said. "What they want to do is simply eradicate any reference to religion in public life. That is not what the First Amendment mandates."

She also said she would introduce a bill this week to break up the 9th Circuit so that its Appeals Court would not hear Alaska cases, as it does now. Reducing the power of the 9th Circuit Court is a goal her father sought for many years when he was in the Senate.

A pledge ban -- or a ban on the words "under God" -- was to begin next week in Alaska and the eight other Western states that make up the 9th Circuit, but Tuesday the court put the ban on hold while the case is under appeal.

The pledge decision was extremely unpopular among lawmakers and many of their constituents.

A reporter suggested to Murkowski on Tuesday that the resolution supporting the pledge is an "easy political opportunity for you to take."

"Sure!" she responded. "It's a no-brainer." Her constituents feel as she does, she said.

"I bet you talk radio is burning up today over the 9th Circuit and the crazy rulings that come out of the 9th Circuit," she said.

Hardly anyone supports the court decision, she suggested.

Some do, though.

"The government should not link religion and patriotism," Barry Lynn, director of Americans United for Separation of Church and State, said last week. "An individual can express love of country regardless of his or her religious or philosophical outlook."

Public schools shouldn't coerce children into taking part in religious exercises, even seemingly generic and benign ones, he said.

Until a 1954 act of Congress, he points out, the pledge was recited without the words "under God."

Al Sundquist, a founder of the Alaska chapter of Americans United, said he agrees with Lynn's position.

County Republican Chairman Rich Stampahar decried the Army's ruling as "downright ludicrous."
"I can't believe someone would go against someone who is serving. I can't believe it. This is absolutely crazy," he said.

Army says Pippy can't run for state Senate or serve in House
Wednesday, March 05, 2003
By Mark Belko, Post-Gazette Staff Writer
Less than a week before the special election, the Army said today that state Rep. John Pippy could not be a candidate for state Senate in the 37th District, ruling that he is barred from running while serving on extended active duty.
The decision by Army Deputy General Counsel Matt Reres reverses a Feb. 14 ruling that had cleared the way for Pippy, a captain in the Army Reserves, to continue his candidacy.
"Contrary to the informal advice given by the Army to Mrs. [Katherine] Pippy on Feb. 14 that he did not need to withdraw from the race, it is the official Army position that he may not serve as a state representative, campaign or be a candidate for the state Senate while on extended active duty," Reres wrote.
Katherine Pippy said today that Rere's ruling is being reviewed and that she was confident it would be overturned.
"It is our belief that this letter will be rescinded," she said.
She declined further comment.
It was unclear this afternoon what impact the ruling will have on Tuesday's special election, in which Republican Pippy is facing Democrat Paul Gitnik to represent communities in Pittsburgh's southern and western suburbs.
Allison Hrestak, a spokeswoman for the Pennsylvania Department of State, said Pippy's name would remain on the ballot pending the outcome of a federal lawsuit filed earlier this week by three South Hills residents seeking an injunction to block Pippy's candidacy.
"At this point, it's too late to withdraw his name," she said. "There is nothing we can do, pending [the] decision in the court."
County Republican Chairman Rich Stampahar decried the Army's ruling as "downright ludicrous."
"I can't believe someone would go against someone who is serving. I can't believe it. This is absolutely crazy," he said.

Good afternoon all,

I'm finally set up on email correctly - you'll find me listed as J. Elizabeth Farrell in the address book (a change from yesterday), you can also use JFarrell.

Phone extension is 65942.

Carrie suggested I attach my resume to give you information about my background. Here's a short summary:

2000 - Communications at Bush/Cheney Campaign in Austin (worked in the war room with Brent Greenfield).
2001 - Faith-Based Initiative at HUD
2002 - Faith-Based Initiative at Education
Faith-Based Work: Because they were small start up offices, I did everything from policy, legal analysis and regulation reform to outreach, strategic planning and public speaking. While at Education, I developed and executed the initial regional conferences that the White House Faith-Based Office eventually adopted and continues to offer around the country.

Skills:
In college, I had the benefit of several undergrad law classes which covered basic constitutional law, law of politics and judicial process. These classes and my campaign work gave me extensive experience with Westlaw, Lexis and Nexis.

Issues:
Besides HUD, Education and Faith-Based Issues, I'm extremely interested in International Affairs and International Development. I would be more than happy to aid you in any of your work in these areas.

Future plans likely include a joint-degree program: JD/MA in International Development

I hope this information is helpful. It has been wonderful working with you this last week - please let me know how I can most effectively help you with your work.

Thanks,

Elizabeth

FTR SECTION;QUESTION;ANSWER
301-10.420;When may I use a taxi or shuttle service?;
(d); Between residence and office in cases of necessity.; Your agency may authorize/approve the usual taxicab fare plus tip for travel between your office and home when you perform official business at your official station and:(1) You are dependent on public transportation for officially ordered work outside regular working hours; and(2) The travel between your office and home is during hours of infrequently scheduled public transportation or darkness.
Colleen - The regulation is above.; There was definitely "infrequently scheduled public transportation" during the snowstorm on 2/18 when the staffer needed to get from her home to the Kennedy Center and back on official business.; Like all travel regulations, they are a bit open to interpretation, and when in doubt I always;consult WH Counsel. Let me know if you want me to ask Counsel to look at this particular case.; In my opinion;the regulation above clearly indicates that her choice of transportation that day was legitimate. ;Thanks.; Kathy

On the clothing/equipment question, we should pay out of WH appropriation (or DOD if we can) as we would for other equipment that employees need. On the travel cost issue, Ben is handling with Tucker. My understanding is that, as of now, WH may have to pay for travel out of WH money, but Ben and Tucker are working on that and will let you know.

Brett,

I work for David Thomas and he recently received a request from a group for videos of the President to use in a potential ad campaign. We spoke with people in Media Affairs who informed us that was not possible, which we told to these people. Now, they are going to pursue getting footage from a media outlet or C-Span and they want to know about permission. Do they need permission to use footage of the President? Who would give them that permission? Thanks for your advice.

Brett, I have an additional fact regarding the political event I sent to you for clearance on Tuesday, a breakfast for Republican elected officials held in conjunction with a National League of Cities conference. A second Department employee, Chris Gilbert (also a non-PAS employee in the Department's Office of Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs), has expressed interest in attending. As I mentioned in my first e-mail, the event is not a fundraiser.

It was unclear to us whether your direction to obtain White House clearance for political invitations extends to events which are not fundraisers. Unless we hear otherwise from you, we will assume that it does not cover such events. Likewise, because the breakfast in question is scheduled for Monday, we will advise our employees tomorrow that they may attend, unless you tell us otherwise.

A- this is the email I received from Dottie Morin. Brett had said he needed this information. I hope the net figure includes the cost of Mrs. Cheney's trip, or else they will be strapped to cover, and probably will not make any $.

John,

Based on 700 attendees at $30, the gross would be $21,000, net $8,400.
These numbers will of vary depending on the attendance. Hope this helps.

Lynne V. Cheney

Lynne V. Cheney, wife of Vice President Richard B. Cheney, has loved history for as long as she can remember, and she has spent much of her professional life writing and speaking about the importance of knowing history and teaching it well.

As chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities from 1986 to 1993, she published American Memory, a report that warned about the failure of schools to transmit knowledge of the past to upcoming generations. "A system of education that fails to nurture memory of the past denies its students a great deal," Mrs. Cheney wrote: "the satisfactions of mature thought, an attachment to abiding concerns, a perspective on human existence." Today, as a senior fellow at the American Enterprise Institute, she particularly emphasizes the value of knowing our nation's history. "One of the important lessons we can learn is that freedom isn't inevitable," she says. "This realization should make the liberty we enjoy all the more important to us, all the more worth defending."

Mrs. Cheney has written articles about history for numerous publications on topics ranging from woman suffrage in the West and the way Americans celebrated the country's centennial to more tongue-in-cheek assessments, such as the impact of technological advances like air conditioning, the Xerox machine, and the paper shredder on life in Washington, D. C. She was a member of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution and, more recently, served on Texas Governor George W. Bush's education team. She was part of a group that revised Texas standards for the study of history.

She is author or co-author of six books, including Kings of the Hill (second edition, 1996), a book about figures from Henry Clay to Sam Rayburn who played powerful roles in the House of Representatives. She wrote this book with her husband, who was a Congressman from Wyoming from 1979 to 1989. Mrs. Cheney's 1995, Telling the Truth (Simon & Schuster, paperback, 1996), analyzed the effect of postmodernism on study in the humanities.

Mrs. Cheney's most recent book is America: A Patriotic Primer, an alphabet book for children of all ages and their families. The book, released May 21, 2002, celebrates the ideas and ideals that are the foundations of our country. Mrs. Cheney is presently at her work on a second children's book on American history, A Is for Abigail Adams, to be published this fall. Mrs. Cheney's net proceeds from both children's books are being donated to charity.

Mrs. Cheney currently serves as a director of the Reader's Digest Association.

Mrs. Cheney earned her Bachelor of Arts degree with highest honors from Colorado College, her Master of Arts from the University of Colorado, and her Ph.D. with a specialization in 19th century British literature from the University of Wisconsin. She is the recipient of awards and honorary degrees from numerous colleges and universities.

Vice President and Mrs. Cheney were married in 1964. They have two grown daughters, Mary and Elizabeth, and three grandchildren, Kate, Elizabeth, and Grace.

URGENT ACTION ALERT:
CONTACT YOUR SENATOR ON THE NOMINATION OF JAY BYBEE

HRC opposes the nomination of Jay Bybee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Bybee's record shows a lack of respect for Supreme Court precedent on the constitutional rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Americans, and he has characterized sexual orientation-inclusive civil rights laws as "preferences" for "homosexuals." Bybee helped drafted a brief for the Justice Department regarding security clearance for gays and lesbians working in defense-related jobs. The Department of Defense labeled homosexuality "deviant sexual conduct" and lumped it together with "bestiality, fetishism, exhibitionism, necrophilia, nymphomania or satyriasis, masochism, sadism, pedophilia, transvestism, and voyeurism."

In addition, Bybee exhibited further disregard for civil rights protections with his critical views regarding a court ruling in Bob Jones University v. United States, which stated that the IRS could deny tax-exempt status to a university that banned interracial dating.

For further background on Jay Bybee, click < https://admin.grassroots.com/clientAdmin/campaigns/authoring/index.jhtml?view=actionPage&campaignID=2391&actionPageId=8145> here.

On Feb. 27, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 12-6 to approve Bybee's nomination. If your senator sits on the Judiciary Committee, please see how he or she voted in the list below.

Voting to approve were: Sens. Chambliss (R-GA), Cornyn (R-TX), Craig (R-ID), DeWine (R-OH), Graham (R-SC), Grassley (IA), Hatch (R-UT), Kohl (D-WI), Kyl (R-AZ), Schumer (D-NY), Sessions (R-AL), and Specter (R-PA).

Voting "NO" were Sens. Biden (D-Delaware), Durbin (D-IL), Edwards (D-NC), Feingold (D-WI), Feinstein (D-CA), and Kennedy (D-MA).

Senator Leahy (D-VT) voted "present/pass."

ACTIONS TO TAKE IMMEDIATELY:

* If you have not already contacted your senator, please send a free fax to your senator IMMEDIATELY by clicking on the "take action" button above. Urge him or her to oppose the nomination of Jay Bybee.

* For residents of New York, Vermont and Wisconsin: Please send your fax AND specifically call your Senator:

Schumer-NY 202/224-6542
Leahy-VT 202/224-4242
Kohl-WI 202/224-5653

Tell your senator, in a respectful and pleasant manner, that you are very concerned about Bybee's record on civil rights issues and you urge him to vote "NO" in a full floor vote.

Thank you for being a member of HRC's action network and for taking this important step towards equality.

The National Archives general counsel advised that, from their perspective as guardian of the Presidential Libraries, this was an appropriate official purchase. He thought it made sense to purchase out of WH funds. I can see a minor appearance issue, I suppose, but there is no legal problem.

Blake/Tim,

It wasn't so much that I was nervous, I was simply skeptical as to whether that was an appropriate use of WHO funds.

I spoke with Eric Lanman who is the Political Accounts team Accountant/Financial Analyst from OA and agreed that the books were not an appropriate use of WH funds and that the RNC or some other outside entity (GWB Library?) needed to provide payment for the books.

If Counsel's office believes that it is an acceptable use of funds, and Linda is fine with the expenditure, I'll be happy to order the books and use my WH credit card to pay for them.

Sorry if this has created unnecessary confusion.

Thanks,

Chad

I spoke to Chad Babin about the appropriate purchasing procedure for this project (the books published since the President's been in office). Here's the deal... Linda would have sign off on the purchasing of the books in a memo- have it approved through Mehlman- and then we'd send the bill to the RNC.

Joe said earlier today that this definitely isn't a federal issue, and should NOT be funded through RNC (even if they're reimbursed at a later date). So, until there is a GWB Library Fund set aside, I'll keep track of these books and hold off on the purchase.

Please let me know if you have any concerns. Thanks,

Tim

Debt Ceiling Discussion Paper

The federal government hit the $6.4 trillion debt ceiling on February 20th, but the Treasury Department, as it has in the past, is using a series of budget tools to ensure that the government remains solvent until Congress raises the statutory limit. This paper lays out the options available to the Treasury Department to forestall defaulting on its obligations as well as the legislative vehicles available to Congress to move a debt limit increase.

The first big hurdle facing Treasury will come in early April, when all the tools outlined below – with the exception of prematurely redeeming Civil Service fund securities through the declaration of a "debt suspension period" – will be insufficient to keep us below the debt ceiling. It is extremely unlikely Congress will have raised the debt ceiling by then, which means Treasury will need to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length to get us past April 15th.

Just how long the period should last, and which vehicle Congress will use, is the immediate question.

Background

The debt ceiling was last increased June 28, 2002 from $5.95 trillion to the current $6.4 trillion. This increase followed two periods (in early April and then in May/June) where debt levels ran up against the ceiling. In both cases, Treasury was forced to take steps to avoid exceeding the ceiling, including suspending investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund, suspending the sales of State and Local Government Series securities, and prematurely redeeming securities in the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund.

More recently, Treasury warned Congress that the debt ceiling again would be exceeded without appropriate action. Congress has failed to act in a timely manner, forcing Treasury to resort to suspending G Fund investments to keep the government below the ceiling. Below is a chronology of recent events:

- On December 24, 2002, Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam wrote to Congress warning that without congressional action, the Administration was projecting the statutory debt limit of $6.4 trillion would be reached "the latter half of February 2003."

- On February , Treasury issued a statement again calling on Congress to raise the debt ceiling and warning that the debt limit would be reached "on or about February 20th and will likely remain above the current debt ceiling thereafter."

- On February , Secretary Snow notified Congress that on February 20th, the debt limit would be reached and that the Treasury Department would begin taking steps to keep the government from defaulting on its obligations. The Secretary announced he would suspend investment in the Government Securities Investment Fund (G Fund) of the Federal Employees Retirement System.

Currently, Treasury is moving through the tools it has to keep federal borrowing below the ceiling.

Budget Tools

Treasury has identified five distinct tools it can use to keep federal debt levels below the statutory debt ceilings:

1. Suspension of investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund would provide approximately $49 billion of debt ceiling relief;

2. Accessing the funds from the Exchange Rate Stabilization Fund would provide another $10 billion;

3. Initiating a debt swap between the Federal Financing Bank and the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund would provide $15 billion in relief;

4. Utilizing the Compensating Balances would provide $31 billion; and

5. Declaring a "debt suspension period" would allow Treasury to redeem Civil Service fund securities earlier than normal and would provide approximately $4 billion for every month included in the debt suspension period (see next section for more complete discussion.)

According to Treasury calculations, the first four tools listed above are sufficient to keep the government below the debt limit into early April. Beyond that, it would be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to declare a debt suspension period (#5) of some length to provide the room needed to get past mid-April, when tax receipts start rolling in.

Debt Suspension Period

The Secretary of Treasury is authorized to redeem securities or other assets of the Civil Service fund before maturity to prevent the federal government from breeching the debt limit. Before making these redemptions, the Secretary must determine that a debt issuance period exists. The statute authorizing the debt suspension period and its legislative history are silent as to how to determine how long a suspension period should last.

- On May 16, 2002, Treasury redeemed about $4 billion of the Civil Service fund using this authority. This amount reflected a suspension period of approximately six weeks – May 16th to June 28th.

- In the fall of 1995, Treasury Secretary Rubin declared a 12-month debt suspension period, which allowed them to redeem about $40 billion in Civil Service securities.

Currently, Treasury estimates that each month included in a debt suspension period would allow Treasury to prematurely redeem $4 billion in Civil Service securities and make that amount available under the debt ceiling.[1] According to Treasury estimates, a debt suspension period declared the first few days of April and lasting at least 8 months is necessary to ensure Treasury gets past the critical period in early April. Once that hurdle is past, April tax receipts would provide enough solvency to keep federal debt below the ceiling until * (late May/early June).

Legislative Options

Raising the debt ceiling requires legislation be passed by both the House and the Senate and signed by the President. Here are the likely options:

Stand Alone Bill: While the last debt ceiling increase was adopted as a stand-alone bill, this should be seen as an unlikely option. The House would prefer to raise the debt ceiling as part of a larger effort that would distract attention from federal debt levels, while the Senate would like a debt ceiling attached to something considered "must pass," to curb efforts by the minority to extend debate. Timing: While a stand alone bill could be introduced in the House at any time, political concern about the vote and the lack of protection in the Senate could result in slow progress. Advance agreement to move the bill would be needed, especially with Senate Democrats.

Budget Reconciliation: Reconciliation bills are privileged in the Senate, so they cannot be filibustered or otherwise delayed. The only reconciliation bill contemplated this year, however, is to enact the President's Jobs and Growth plan. Attaching the debt limit increase the Jobs and Growth bill would prevent delay, but it would also present an unfortunately juxtaposition. The tax relief adopted in 2001 is the cause of just 20 percent of change in our fiscal status, (the economy and higher spending account for most of the rest) but that hasn't prevented opponents from blaming those tax cuts for the entire deficit problem. Timing is another concern. A reconciliation bill is created by the budget resolution conference report, which means the debt ceiling would not be increased until both the House and the Senate had adopted a budget conference report AND a reconciliation conference report.

[1] The trick is that, once a debt suspension is declared, each month that passes also reduces the amount Treasury can redeem by $4 billion. For example, if the Secretary declared a debt suspension period of 10 months, Treasury could redeem up to $40 billion at the beginning of month one. Two months later, the total Treasury could redeem would be $8 billion less, or $32 billion. Declaring a debt suspension period too early either reduces the usefulness making the declaration or requires Treasury to declare a longer suspension period than it otherwise would.

Gephardt Rule: House budget rules allow for a separate resolution to be sent to the Senate automatically upon adoption of a budget resolution conference report. This separate resolution would raise the debt ceiling to levels commensurate with the debt levels anticipated in the budget. This approach is the preferred choice of House leadership at the moment. In the Senate, the Gephardt Rule acts just like a stand-alone bill and fails to provide any of the protections they would prefer to help them get the limit through the Senate floor. Timing: Current plans are to complete a budget conference by April recess. Completion in early May is more likely, meaning the Senate would need to take up and pass legislation in the short space between adoption of the House conference report and date when Treasury would run out of space under the debt ceiling.

Supplemental Appropriations: A defense supplemental is anticipated by Congress to be presented in the near future. Such a bill would meet the various concerns of both the House and the Senate. It is of sufficient stature to obscure the politically sensitive vote and it is obviously "must pass" legislation. Timing: When the supplemental is requested would be determinate. If it is presented to Congress prior to adoption of the House budget resolution conference report, it has a good chance to move through both chambers faster than the Gephardt Rule product could.

Conclusions

The conclusions of this paper are 1) since Congress is unwilling and unable to pass a debt ceiling increase in the next four weeks, Treasury needs to prepare to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length keep the government under the debt ceiling into June at the least and 2) they should plan on the House using the Gephardt Rule to send a debt ceiling increase to the Senate, meaning the debt ceiling debate in the Senate would start only after the budget resolution conference report is adopted by the House. If a defense supplemental becomes available and moves through the House, Treasury should be opportunistic and encourage the use of that vehicle instead.

Debt Ceiling Discussion Paper

The federal government hit the $6.4 trillion debt ceiling on February 20th, but the Treasury Department, as it has in the past, is using a series of budget tools to ensure that the government remains solvent until Congress raises the statutory limit. This paper lays out the options available to the Treasury Department to forestall defaulting on its obligations as well as the legislative vehicles available to Congress to move a debt limit increase.

The first big hurdle facing Treasury will come in early April, when all the tools outlined below – with the exception of prematurely redeeming Civil Service fund securities through the declaration of a "debt suspension period" – will be insufficient to keep us below the debt ceiling. It is extremely unlikely Congress will have raised the debt ceiling by then, which means Treasury will need to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length to get us past April 15th.

Just how long the period should last, and which vehicle Congress will use, is the immediate question.

Background

The debt ceiling was last increased June 28, 2002 from $5.95 trillion to the current $6.4 trillion. This increase followed two periods (in early April and then in May/June) where debt levels ran up against the ceiling. In both cases, Treasury was forced to take steps to avoid exceeding the ceiling, including suspending investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund, suspending the sales of State and Local Government Series securities, and prematurely redeeming securities in the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund.

More recently, Treasury warned Congress that the debt ceiling again would be exceeded without appropriate action. Congress has failed to act in a timely manner, forcing Treasury to resort to suspending G Fund investments to keep the government below the ceiling. Below is a chronology of recent events:

- On December 24, 2002, Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam wrote to Congress warning that without congressional action, the Administration was projecting the statutory debt limit of $6.4 trillion would be reached "the latter half of February 2003."

- On February , Treasury issued a statement again calling on Congress to raise the debt ceiling and warning that the debt limit would be reached "on or about February 20th and will likely remain above the current debt ceiling thereafter."

- On February , Secretary Snow notified Congress that on February 20th, the debt limit would be reached and that the Treasury Department would begin taking steps to keep the government from defaulting on its obligations. The Secretary announced he would suspend investment in the Government Securities Investment Fund (G Fund) of the Federal Employees Retirement System.

Currently, Treasury is moving through the tools it has to keep federal borrowing below the ceiling.

Budget Tools

Treasury has identified five distinct tools it can use to keep federal debt levels below the statutory debt ceilings:

1. Suspension of investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund would provide approximately $49 billion of debt ceiling relief;

2. Accessing the funds from the Exchange Rate Stabilization Fund would provide another $10 billion;

3. Initiating a debt swap between the Federal Financing Bank and the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund would provide $15 billion in relief;

4. Utilizing the Compensating Balances would provide $31 billion; and

5. Declaring a "debt suspension period" would allow Treasury to redeem Civil Service fund securities earlier than normal and would provide approximately $4 billion for every month included in the debt suspension period (see next section for more complete discussion.)

According to Treasury calculations, the first four tools listed above are sufficient to keep the government below the debt limit into early April. Beyond that, it would be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to declare a debt suspension period (#5) of some length to provide the room needed to get past mid-April, when tax receipts start rolling in.

Debt Suspension Period

The Secretary of Treasury is authorized to redeem securities or other assets of the Civil Service fund before maturity to prevent the federal government from breeching the debt limit. Before making these redemptions, the Secretary must determine that a debt issuance period exists. The statute authorizing the debt suspension period and its legislative history are silent as to how to determine how long a suspension period should last.

- On May 16, 2002, Treasury redeemed about $4 billion of the Civil Service fund using this authority. This amount reflected a suspension period of approximately six weeks – May 16th to June 28th.

- In the fall of 1995, Treasury Secretary Rubin declared a 12-month debt suspension period, which allowed them to redeem about $40 billion in Civil Service securities.

Currently, Treasury estimates that each month included in a debt suspension period would allow Treasury to prematurely redeem $4 billion in Civil Service securities and make that amount available under the debt ceiling.[1] According to Treasury estimates, a debt suspension period declared the first few days of April and lasting at least 8 months is necessary to ensure Treasury gets past the critical period in early April. Once that hurdle is past, April tax receipts would provide enough solvency to keep federal debt below the ceiling until * (late May/early June).

Legislative Options

Raising the debt ceiling requires legislation be passed by both the House and the Senate and signed by the President. Here are the likely options:

Stand Alone Bill: While the last debt ceiling increase was adopted as a stand-alone bill, this should be seen as an unlikely option. The House would prefer to raise the debt ceiling as part of a larger effort that would distract attention from federal debt levels, while the Senate would like a debt ceiling attached to something considered "must pass," to curb efforts by the minority to extend debate. Timing: While a stand alone bill could be introduced in the House at any time, political concern about the vote and the lack of protection in the Senate could result in slow progress. Advance agreement to move the bill would be needed, especially with Senate Democrats.

Budget Reconciliation: Reconciliation bills are privileged in the Senate, so they cannot be filibustered or otherwise delayed. The only reconciliation bill contemplated this year, however, is to enact the President's Jobs and Growth plan. Attaching the debt limit increase the Jobs and Growth bill would prevent delay, but it would also present an unfortunately juxtaposition. The tax relief adopted in 2001 is the cause of just 20 percent of change in our fiscal status, (the economy and higher spending account for most of the rest) but that hasn't prevented opponents from blaming those tax cuts for the entire deficit problem. Timing is another concern. A reconciliation bill is created by the budget resolution conference report, which means the debt ceiling would not be increased until both the House and the Senate had adopted a budget conference report AND a reconciliation conference report.

[1] The trick is that, once a debt suspension is declared, each month that passes also reduces the amount Treasury can redeem by $4 billion. For example, if the Secretary declared a debt suspension period of 10 months, Treasury could redeem up to $40 billion at the beginning of month one. Two months later, the total Treasury could redeem would be $8 billion less, or $32 billion. Declaring a debt suspension period too early either reduces the usefulness making the declaration or requires Treasury to declare a longer suspension period than it otherwise would.

Gephardt Rule: House budget rules allow for a separate resolution to be sent to the Senate automatically upon adoption of a budget resolution conference report. This separate resolution would raise the debt ceiling to levels commensurate with the debt levels anticipated in the budget. This approach is the preferred choice of House leadership at the moment. In the Senate, the Gephardt Rule acts just like a stand-alone bill and fails to provide any of the protections they would prefer to help them get the limit through the Senate floor. Timing: Current plans are to complete a budget conference by April recess. Completion in early May is more likely, meaning the Senate would need to take up and pass legislation in the short space between adoption of the House conference report and date when Treasury would run out of space under the debt ceiling.

Supplemental Appropriations: A defense supplemental is anticipated by Congress to be presented in the near future. Such a bill would meet the various concerns of both the House and the Senate. It is of sufficient stature to obscure the politically sensitive vote and it is obviously "must pass" legislation. Timing: When the supplemental is requested would be determinate. If it is presented to Congress prior to adoption of the House budget resolution conference report, it has a good chance to move through both chambers faster than the Gephardt Rule product could.

Conclusions

The conclusions of this paper are 1) since Congress is unwilling and unable to pass a debt ceiling increase in the next four weeks, Treasury needs to prepare to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length keep the government under the debt ceiling into June at the least and 2) they should plan on the House using the Gephardt Rule to send a debt ceiling increase to the Senate, meaning the debt ceiling debate in the Senate would start only after the budget resolution conference report is adopted by the House. If a defense supplemental becomes available and moves through the House, Treasury should be opportunistic and encourage the use of that vehicle instead.

I'm sorry to bother you with this again. I believe that we've talked about mentioning the RNC in a letter, but I can't find a single email that says it's ok to do.

The letter I have is from a lady that sent a $200 donation to the RNC, but the contribution has not been credited to her account. She is writing the President to inquire about the check. I sent a copy of the letter to Kate Walters in Political Affairs, and she forwarded the information to the RNC. We would like to say, "We have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Republican National Committee Finance Department for review. They may contact you directly regarding your missing $200 donation."

Could you please advise on this language and let us know whether or not we can mention the RNC in our reply? Thank you so much.

else they will be strapped to cover, and probably will not make any $.

John,

Based on 700 attendees at $30, the gross would be $21,000, net $8,400.
These numbers will of vary depending on the attendance. Hope this helps.

Since the passage of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, the Securities and Exchange Commission has been very active setting up rules designed to deal with a series of corporate scandals that undermined investor confidence in U..S. corporations. The stock exchanges have also been busy implementing their own sets of corporate governance reforms. Do the exchanges have better incentives than the SEC to become the primary regulators of corporate governance, disclosure, and accounting? Should the SEC?s role be limited to the enforcement of those rules? Or do the rulemaking and enforcement functions rest with one government agency? Please join us for a timely discussion on the regulation of the securities markets.

Subject:	interesting essay in NR re Estrada and MALDEF/PRLDEF/etc.

Big Business vs. Estrada

Who the "Hispanics" opposing the judicial nominee are.

By Christopher Morris & Timothy P. Carney

mong the slew of lies Democrats use to justify their unprecedented filibuster of judicial-nominee Miguel Estrada is the claim that prominent groups representing Hispanics oppose the D.C. lawyer's appointment to the federal appellate bench.

To be sure, some well-heeled Latino groups have joined the fight to keep him off the court, but these lobbyists do not speak for Hispanics. Rather than grassroots, member-supported organizations, Estrada's opponents are liberal interest groups who fill their coffers with huge grants from the Ford Foundation, AT&T, and a handful of other fat-cat organizations.

The Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MALDEF) has led the charge against Honduran-born Estrada. Joining MALDEF are the Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project (SVREP), and the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund (PRLDEF).

It is important to know, however, whom these groups speak for.

The aforementioned groups have no members. They do not represent any portion of the population. They are activists who take huge checks from liberal foundations and gigantic corporations. This is in contrast to the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), an outspoken advocate of Estrada, which has over 100,000 members.

MALDEF's money comes primarily from the Ford Foundation; the left-wing cash cow has given at least $12 million to MALDEF since 1998. The Fannie Mae Foundation apparently believes that bankrolling a filibuster of the first Hispanic nominee to the federal appeals court is part of the "American Dream Business": they've given nearly a quarter-million dollars to MALDEF in the past five years.

Estrada's opponents also get help from the Carnegie Corporation to the tune of a million to MALDEF and $750,000 to PRLDEF since 1998. British Petroleum, Shell Oil, and Verizon also bankroll these attack groups.

SVREP has taken $400,000 in large grants in the past five years, mostly from phone companies.

In essence, then, Estrada's opponents are a handful of liberal lawyers who rely on a few left-wing deep pockets and have bamboozled big companies out of millions.

Beyond making the point that Estrada's opponents lack any credibility, this all raises another question: Why do AT&T, Verizon, Coca-Cola, Fannie Mae, Allstate Insurance, Shell Oil, British Petroleum, Bristol-Myers Squibb, Ford Motor, Bank of America, Wal-Mart, and others fund these groups — which have become little more than the ethnic arm of the Left's well-oiled attack machine?

It is interesting to note the importance of these groups for the Left. It is somewhat perilous for Tom Daschle, Chuck Schumer, and Ted Kennedy — white guys — to engage in their politics of personal destruction against women or minorities. This difficulty is a result of the current toxic racial environment crafted by the left itself — any attack on a minority can be spun to the credulous media as racist.

So the attack machine needs Hispanics if it wants to attack Hispanics. Unfortunately for them, Hispanics want Estrada on the bench. LULAC, Hispanic National Bar Association, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, the Latino Coalition, the Hispanic Engineers Business Corporation, and the Hispanic Contractors of America have all come out for the nominee.

LULAC, the nation's oldest Hispanic organization publicly endorsed Estrada wholeheartedly in February. LULAC has 115,000 members and has been active in the Hispanic community dating back to the 1920s. LULAC, while it has cordial relationships with MALDEF and PRDLF, differs from these anti-Estrada groups in one significant way: LULAC has a vast network of dues-paying members. In other words: LULAC speaks for real people, not just big money.

Gabriela Lemus, LULAC director of policy and legislation explains LULAC's endorsement of Estrada as a simple matter of qualifications.

MALDEF and PRLDF, on the other hand, are lawyers attempting to influence policy in Washington through legislative advocacy and class-action lawsuits. But they're all the Left has in their attack on Estrada, which is a smaller battle in the war over the Supreme Court — and ultimately over Roe v. Wade.

I'm sorry to bother you with this again. I believe that we've talked about mentioning the RNC in a letter, but I can't find a single email that says it's ok to do.

The letter I have is from a lady that sent a $200 donation to the RNC, but the contribution has not been credited to her account. She is writing the President to inquire about the check. I sent a copy of the letter to Kate Walters in Political Affairs, and she forwarded the information to the RNC. We would like to say, "We have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Republican National Committee Finance Department for review. They may contact you directly regarding your missing $200 donation."

Could you please advise on this language and let us know whether or not we can mention the RNC in our reply? Thank you so much.

3/9/2003 -- Debt Ceiling Discussion Paper

The federal government hit the $6.4 trillion debt ceiling on February 20th, but the Treasury Department, as it has in the past, is using a series of budget tools to ensure that the government remains solvent until Congress raises the statutory limit. This paper lays out the options available to the Treasury Department to forestall defaulting on its obligations as well as the legislative vehicles available to Congress to move a debt limit increase.

The first big hurdle facing Treasury will come in early April, when all the tools outlined below – with the exception of prematurely redeeming Civil Service fund securities through the declaration of a "debt suspension period" – will be insufficient to keep us below the debt ceiling. It is extremely unlikely Congress will have raised the debt ceiling by then, which means Treasury will need to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length to get us past April 15th.

Just how long the period should last, and which vehicle Congress will use, is the immediate question.

Background

The debt ceiling was last increased June 28, 2002 from $5.95 trillion to the current $6.4 trillion. This increase followed two periods (in early April and then in May/June) where debt levels ran up against the ceiling. In both cases, Treasury was forced to take steps to avoid exceeding the ceiling, including suspending investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund, suspending the sales of State and Local Government Series securities, and prematurely redeeming securities in the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund.

More recently, Treasury warned Congress that the debt ceiling again would be exceeded without appropriate action. Congress has failed to act in a timely manner, forcing Treasury to resort to suspending G Fund investments to keep the government below the ceiling. Below is a chronology of recent events:

- On December 24, 2002, Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam wrote to Congress warning that without congressional action, the Administration was projecting the statutory debt limit of $6.4 trillion would be reached "the latter half of February 2003."

- On February , Treasury issued a statement again calling on Congress to raise the debt ceiling and warning that the debt limit would be reached "on or about February 20th and will likely remain above the current debt ceiling thereafter."

- On February , Secretary Snow notified Congress that on February 20th, the debt limit would be reached and that the Treasury Department would begin taking steps to keep the government from defaulting on its obligations. The Secretary announced he would suspend investment in the Government Securities Investment Fund (G Fund) of the Federal Employees Retirement System.

Currently, Treasury is moving through the tools it has to keep federal borrowing below the ceiling.

Budget Tools

Treasury has identified five distinct tools it can use to keep federal debt levels below the statutory debt ceilings:

1. Suspension of investments into the Thrift Savings Plan "G" Fund would provide approximately $49 billion of debt ceiling relief;

2. Accessing the funds from the Exchange Rate Stabilization Fund would provide another $10 billion;

3. Initiating a debt swap between the Federal Financing Bank and the Civil Service Disability Retirement Fund would provide $15 billion in relief;

4. Utilizing the Compensating Balances would provide $31 billion; and

5. Declaring a "debt suspension period" would allow Treasury to redeem Civil Service fund securities earlier than normal and would provide approximately $4 billion for every month included in the debt suspension period (see next section for more complete discussion.)

According to Treasury calculations, the first four tools listed above are sufficient to keep the government below the debt limit into early April. Beyond that, it would be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to declare a debt suspension period (#5) of some length to provide the room needed to get past mid-April, when tax receipts start rolling in.

A complicating factor is Turkey, which may result in option #2 not being available and may result in additional outlays occurring in short order. This situation may further tie Treasury's hand and make getting past early April even more challenging.

Debt Suspension Period

The Secretary of Treasury is authorized to redeem securities or other assets of the Civil Service fund before maturity to prevent the federal government from breaching the debt limit. Before making these redemptions, the Secretary must determine that a debt issuance suspension period exists. The statute authorizing the debt suspension period and its legislative history are silent as to how to determine how long a suspension period should last.

REV_00111459

- On May 16, 2002, Treasury redeemed about $4 billion of the Civil Service fund using this authority. This amount reflected a suspension period of approximately six weeks – May 16th to June 28th.
- In the fall of 1995, Treasury Secretary Rubin declared a 12-month debt suspension period, which allowed them to redeem about $40 billion in Civil Service securities.

Currently, Treasury estimates that each month included in a debt suspension period would allow Treasury to prematurely redeem $4 billion in Civil Service securities and make that amount available under the debt ceiling.[1] According to Treasury estimates, a debt suspension period declared the first few days of April and lasting at least 10 months is necessary to ensure Treasury gets past the critical period in early April. Once that hurdle is past, April tax receipts would provide enough solvency to keep federal debt below the ceiling until * (late May/early June).

Legislative Options

Raising the debt ceiling requires legislation be passed by both the House and the Senate and signed by the President. Here are the likely options:

Stand Alone Bill: While the last debt ceiling increase was adopted as a stand-alone bill, this should be seen as an unlikely option. The House would prefer to raise the debt ceiling as part of a larger effort that would distract attention from federal debt levels, while the Senate would like a debt ceiling attached to something considered "must pass," to curb efforts by the minority to extend debate. Timing: While a stand alone bill could be introduced in the House at any time, political concern about the vote and the lack of protection in the Senate could result in slow progress. Advance agreement to move the bill would be needed, especially with Senate Democrats.

Budget Reconciliation: Reconciliation bills are privileged in the Senate, so they cannot be filibustered or otherwise delayed.[2] The only reconciliation bill contemplated this year, however, is to enact the President's Jobs and Growth plan. Attaching the debt limit increase the Jobs and Growth bill would prevent delay, but it would also present an unfortunately juxtaposition. The tax relief adopted in 2001 is the cause of just 20 percent of change in our fiscal status, (the economy

[1] The trick is that, once a debt suspension is declared, each month that passes also reduces the amount Treasury can redeem by $4 billion. For example, if the Secretary declared a debt suspension period of 10 months, Treasury could redeem up to $40 billion at the beginning of month one. Two months later, the total Treasury could redeem would be $8 billion less, or $32 billion. Declaring a debt suspension period too early either reduces the usefulness making the declaration or requires Treasury to declare a longer suspension period than it otherwise would.

[2] In 2001, the Democrat minority was actually filibustering the tax relief reconciliation bill by offering amendments after time had expired and demanding the Senate vote on them. What is unclear is how long this "filibuster by amendment" could have lasted had Senator Jeffords not chosen that moment to defect. By making adoption of the tax relief bill part of his defection demands, Senator Jeffords effectively ended the delaying tactic.

and higher spending account for most of the rest) but that hasn't prevented opponents from blaming those tax cuts for the entire deficit problem. Timing is another concern. A reconciliation bill is created by the budget resolution conference report, which means the debt ceiling would not be increased until both the House and the Senate had adopted a budget conference report AND a reconciliation conference report.

Gephardt Rule: House budget rules allow for a separate resolution to be sent to the Senate automatically upon adoption of a budget resolution conference report. This separate resolution would raise the debt ceiling to levels commensurate with the debt levels anticipated in the budget. This approach is the preferred choice of House leadership at the moment. In the Senate, the Gephardt Rule acts just like a stand-alone bill and fails to provide any of the protections they would prefer to help them get the limit through the Senate floor. Timing: Current plans are to complete a budget conference by April recess. Completion in early May is more likely, meaning the Senate would need to take up and pass legislation in the short space between adoption of the House conference report and date when Treasury would run out of space under the debt ceiling.

Supplemental Appropriations: A defense supplemental is anticipated by Congress to be presented in the near future. Such a bill would meet the various concerns of both the House and the Senate. It is of sufficient stature to obscure the politically sensitive vote and it is obviously "must pass" legislation. Timing: When the supplemental is requested would be determinate. If it is presented to Congress prior to adoption of the House budget resolution conference report, it has a good chance to move through both chambers faster than the Gephardt Rule product could.

Conclusions

The conclusions of this paper are:

1) Since Congress is unwilling and unable to pass a debt ceiling increase in the next four weeks, Treasury needs to prepare to declare a debt suspension period of sufficient length keep the government under the debt ceiling into June at the least; and

2) They should plan on the House using the Gephardt Rule to send a debt ceiling increase to the Senate, meaning the debt ceiling debate in the Senate would start only after the budget resolution conference report is adopted by the House. If a defense supplemental becomes available and moves through the House, Treasury should be opportunistic and encourage the use of that vehicle instead.

Judging Estrada: Democrats' gamble could help Bush

Published March 9, 2003

Having lost control of the Senate in 2002 elections, the Democrats have turned sour grapes into a bitter fight over President George W. Bush's historic nomination of a Latino immigrant to the appellate bench in Washington.

Democrats vow to continue to filibuster Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Fight it based on "principle." Fight it to the bitter end.

The end will be bitter, but there's little principle in the Democrats' cause. It's all political posturing, a trial run for the 2004 presidential election that serves to put Bush on notice about the battles ahead over any Supreme Court nominee.

Republicans are hoping that Democrats' obstreperousness will help Bush secure re-election with the help of the Latino vote in two years. For sure, the backlash against the Senate Democrats' blockade is growing. At least four Democrats, including Florida's Bill Nelson, have broken with party ranks to support a vote on Estrada.

Conspicuously absent from this debate is Sen. Bob Graham, who's running for president and, at last count, remains undecided. If Graham were to vote to end the filibuster, would he jeopardize his party's nomination? Or does he tow the liberal party line and write off Florida's substantial Cuban-American vote -- backing he has secured in past Senate bids -- figuring it would be a no-win in a national contest against the exiles' favorite anti-Castro hard-line son, George W. Bush?

I know. Graham's recovering from open-heart surgery. Good reason not to have voted last week to end the filibuster. But what's Graham's excuse for not publicly stating, at least, his opinion on Estrada?

It's not just conservatives who are bothered. Many Hispanic moderates and independents are appalled that Senate Democrats would try to stop a vote. Estrada is no Clarence Thomas, though Democratic leaders are treating him as if he hadn't a clue about the law or the ethical backbone to serve as judge.

Estrada has been ranked as "most qualified" by the American Bar Association. He's a Harvard grad with vast experience, arguing 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court for the U.S. Solicitor General's Office during the Bush (the elder) and Clinton administrations. He even took on a pro-bono death penalty case, which should be a plus for the liberals.

But no. Some Democrats blame Estrada's "silence" on such constitutional issues as privacy (aka abortion rights). Odd because Estrada answered the Senate Judiciary panel's questions with the same type of measured response that other confirmed judges have used. On the right to privacy, Estrada said, "The Supreme Court has so held" that right, and added he has "no view of any nature whatsoever that would keep me from applying that case law faithfully."

About Roe v. Wade, he said, "It is the law." And later, "I will follow it."

What more do Democrats want? They want to know Estrada's personal beliefs on abortion, but that's not ethically appropriate. Judicial candidates should be asked about their philosophy -- do they believe in judicial precedent, for instance? Do they adhere to or abhor judicial activism? They shouldn't be asked about specific legal issues that may come before the court.

There's another intriguing political puzzle to Estrada's nomination: his heritage. Were Estrada of Mexican or Puerto Rican heritage his historic nomination might have a very different trajectory even if it did come from a conservative president. But, alas, Estrada was born in Honduras. So Hispanic Democrats in Congress -- most of them of Puerto Rican or Mexican ancestry -- may feel their constituents don't much care about a Honduran-American getting on the bench.

All voters should care about the democratic process and simple fairness, though. Estrada deserves a vote, up or down. Graham, who's made tough calls before, should give Estrada that courtesy.

Mexican-Born Treasurer Becomes U.S. Icon

By JEANNINE AVERSA, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - If money is power, Rosario Marin has a whole lot of it.

It's not her own cash, actually, but the nation's. As treasurer of the United States, the Mexican-born Marin sits atop the money heap, overseeing the makers of America's greenbacks and its coins * the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the U.S. Mint.

Marin's is not a household name, but her autograph, along with that of the treasury secretary, is carried on billions of U.S. notes, tucked inside the wallets and pocketbooks of many Americans. The treasurer and the treasury secretary are the only two people who get to put their signatures on U.S. dollars.

For Marin, who came to the United States from Mexico at 14 unable to speak English, it has been an amazing journey, with unexpected twists and turns.

As the nation's 41st treasurer, and the first born outside the United States, the 44-year-old Marin is the highest-ranking Latin American woman in the Bush administration and a key player in the administration's efforts to reach out to Hispanic voters, the fastest-growing bloc.

She is being floated as a possible Republican contender for a Senate seat from California in 2004.

"My dad was a factory worker. My mom used to help him by sewing at home. We had a two-room house in Mexico," Marin said in a recent interview. "There were five kids." A sixth child was born after the family moved to California.

Going to college at night and working during the day at a bank, Marin planned a career in business. "I was going to be the owner of my own bank," she said. "I had plans. I knew what my future was going to be."

But those plans changed with the birth of her first son, Eric, in 1985. He was born with Down Syndrome. Marin said she stopped working on a master's in business administration, quit her job at the bank, and she and her husband, Alex, sold their house.

"It was that turning point in my life," she said.

She eventually decided she wanted to help people with disabilities and their families. Her political career began when she went to work for GOP California Gov. Pete Wilson in 1992 in the Department of Developmental Disabilities. She held various posts in Wilson's administration for nearly seven years.

Marin first crossed paths with George W. Bush when he was governor of Texas and she the Republican mayor of Huntington Park, Calif., a heavily Democratic city that is largely Hispanic. She worked as an unpaid volunteer for Bush's presidential campaign.

After Bush won the presidency, Marin said she was floored when he tapped her to be treasurer.

Clad in a green and black suit * similar to the colors on U.S. dollars * and wearing coin jewelry from the U.S. Mint, Marin joked that she did not know much about the treasurer's duties. But she knew her name would appear on greenbacks, and she had an aim for the job: Promote financial literacy.

"I felt I would have the bully pulpit to go out there and do as much as I could to educate America about personal finances," Marin said. And she has, in countless speeches since taking office in the summer of 2001.

Marin is especially passionate about educating the poor * a group most likely to pay excessive interest rates on loans. She has worked to try to get lower-income people and others into the banking system, helping them to set up savings and checking accounts. Treasury officials estimate that one in 10 American households are in the ranks of "unbanked."

Mike Madrid, a political consultant at the San Antonio firm Guerra DeBerry Coody, wants Marin to run for the Senate from California in 2004, taking on incumbent Barbara Boxer. It's a race he acknowledges would be an uphill battle given the Democratic Party's stronghold, and would be expensive.

Madrid said Marin was well received when she recently spoke at the California GOP convention.

"She has extremely high name recognition in the Hispanic community and that is a natural edge," Madrid said. "People reach in their wallets, pull out dollar bills and look for her name."

As to her own political aspirations, Marin is noncommital. "I am incredibly flattered," she said. "But it is something that I have not sought."

Marin remembers her reluctance to come to the United States, worried she would miss her "quinceanera" party, a rite of passage for a girl turning 15. She didn't. Her parents took her back to Mexico to celebrate with family and friends.

"It rained ... my dress was all muddy," but she was still thrilled, Marin recalled. "One of my little dreams had come true."

Brett, I never heard back from you on this question concerning the record status of this commission. Is there any reason not to assume it is creating presidential records?

>>> GaryM Stern 1/29/03 3:41:32 PM >>>
Brett, we have been made aware of the President's Commission on the United States Postal Service, established under EO 13278 on December 11, 2002. Although it is administratively associated with the Department of Treasury, the Commission is comprised of members appointed by the President, it reports solely to the President, and is slated to be finished by August 30, 2003.

Should we assume that it is creating Presidential records?

Given the very short duration of this Commission, it is important that NARA coordinate with it on records management as soon as possible. Can you please let us know your views on its record status as soon as you can.

Thanks.

Senate Democrats ignore constitutional duty in order to pursue partisan agenda
Spartanburg Herald-Journal

Senate Democrats voted this week to continue their obstruction. They refused to let the body vote on President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal judgeship.

Democratic senators like to deliver high-minded rhetoric over their sponsorship of gridlock. They want the country to think they are standing for a balanced judiciary.

The truth is that they are increasing the partisan nature of judicial nominations, undermining the constitutional separation of powers and preventing the Senate from fulfilling its constitutional duty.

The Constitution gives the full Senate the power of advice and consent on the president's judicial nominations. If the full Senate were to vote on Estrada's nomination, he would be easily confirmed.

But Democrats in the Senate won't let that happen. They are using a filibuster -- a Senate rule that allows them to endlessly debate the issue without taking a vote. Republicans need 60 votes to force a vote but only received 55 Thursday.

In other words, the minority is preventing the majority from taking a vote as the Constitution requires.

Senate Democrats don't even have a credible case against Estrada. In fact, their only argument is that they have been unable to come up with any material against him. They say they need more information.

They claim that Estrada was not as forthcoming in hearings as they wanted him to be. But the truth is that Estrada answered questions as fully as most other judicial nominees, including those former President Clinton nominated.

Senate Democrats also want copies of legal briefs that Estrada wrote when he worked for the White House in the Solicitor General's Office. They ask this despite the fact that these materials are not released to Congress.

The president depends on the solicitor general for honest and full legal advice. If lawyers know that these documents will end up being the subject of future hearings, it will color the advice they give the president.

This issue is so crucial that all living former solicitors general insist that the Bush administration should not give the Senate these documents. And most of them are Democrats.

It is an established fact that Estrada is a fine lawyer. His nomination has been en-dorsed by the American Bar Association. Senate Democrats have no real reason to oppose Estrada, but they suspect that he is too conservative for them. So they are willing to bog the Senate down with this endless battle. They are willing to twist the Constitution and impose their minority rule. And they are willing to further degrade the partisan nature of judicial confirmation battles.

President Bush is right when he calls it "a disgrace."

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <P_5BWJE003_WHO.TXT_1>

1) Why did the Republican Party do so well during the 2002 elections?

First, Republicans fielded a great team of candidates around the country. Second, these candidates campaigned on issues that resonated with voters, and they offered solutions to the problems people care about. Third, the President's support of these candidates helped to provide needed resources, to frame issues, and to provide a positive image for the Republican Party.

2) How big of a factor was the President in the 2002 elections?

As I said above, the President's support of these candidates helped to provide needed resources, to frame issues, and to provide a positive image for the Republican Party.

3) In 2000, when you were on the president's campaign for the White House, what were the workdays like?

Everyone on the President's campaign worked very long hours. I worked in the Political division where staffers would normally arrive around 7am, and rarely leave until late in the evening. It was a busy schedule, but our motivation to have then-Governor George W. Bush become President made the effort worthwhile.

4) What geographic areas of the country lean mostly Democratic? What areas lean mostly toward the GOP?

The President's leadership has helped Republicans to win all over the country.

In 2000, the President won West Virginia; a state not won by a non-incumbent Republican since 1928.

In 2001, New York City elected a Republican mayor, and in 2002 New York State re-elected a Republican governor. Also in 2002, Republicans won the governorships of Vermont and Massachusetts, two states that many might think lean Democrat. These examples show that the Republican Party and the issues it supports – resonate with voters all around the country.

5) What role does the White House Political Office have in elections?

Well, this is my first time working in the White House, so I can't address the office's role in previous elections (prior to 2002). But, in preparation for November's midterm elections our office tracked all the races, and made travel recommendations to the President, Vice-President, and members of the Cabinet.

The overall goal was to keep the House of Representatives under Republican control, and win enough seats in the Senate to recapture control. As you might know, we achieved both goals.

Another goal was to win governorships, and despite having to defend twenty-three of thirty-six governor's mansions, Republicans retained a majority.

6) What jobs are there for teenagers in a presidential campaign?

We had a number of young people, all over the country, who help President Bush in 2000. When the campaign season begins in 2003-2004, all the candidates – Democrat and Republican – will open campaign headquarters' in the states, volunteering on one of these is a great opportunity for young people to get involved and serve their country.

7) How do state political parties influence national elections?

State parties are very important in determining the outcome of national elections. On both the Republican and the Democratic sides, they motivate voters to cast ballots, advertise for candidates, and they help identify and mobilize volunteers.

Senate Math --
41 Is Greater Than 59!
By ZELL MILLER

A portly British statesman once famously said that "Democracy is based on reason and fair play." But there's nothing reasonable or fair about what's been happening in the Senate recently. The filibuster against Bush-nominee Miguel Estrada is not just an expensive waste of time and taxpayer money, it's also an affront to majority rule, the principle that Democracy operates on everywhere.

Everywhere, that is, but the Senate.

The Senate is the only place I know where 59 votes out of 100 cannot pass anything because 41 votes out of 100 can defeat it. Last week, of course, 55 senators -- a clear majority -- voted to end a filibuster against Mr. Estrada and still lost the day. Try explaining that at your local Rotary Club or to a constituent in the Wal-Mart parking lot or, for that matter, to the college freshman in Poly Sci 101. You can't because it stands democracy on its head.

The word "filibuster" comes from a Spanish word for "pirate," and that is exactly what the filibuster does; it hijacks the democratic process. The way it is being used in the Senate gives the minority an absolute veto on everything.

James Madison, the Father of the Constitution, feared some future political leaders would pervert the legislative process in just this way. And he warned in Federalist Paper Number 58 that when it happened, "The fundamental principle of free government would be reversed. It would be no longer the majority that would rule. The power would be transformed to the minority." I'm sure Madison is today spinning in his grave.

Some constitutional lawyers have argued that any kind of super majority vote is unconstitutional, other than for those five areas specified in the Constitution itself: treaty ratification, impeachment, override of a presidential veto, constitutional amendments, and expelling a member of Congress.

Perhaps it is time for someone to test its constitutionality. That's one possible remedy. There are others. We could abolish Rule XXII that protects this travesty and let the Senate operate under rules like every other democratic legislative body in the world. That's about as likely as a day dawning in Washington without 10 fund-raisers.

Or we could modify what I call the Two-Track Trick, installed a few years ago, which allows a "filibuster-lite" to proceed without any heavy lifting while another piece of legislation is being considered at the same time. With this devious device the Senate avoids the inconvenience and pain of a real filibuster. Powder puff, 16-ounce gloves are used instead of bare knuckles, but it still can go on and on ad nauseam. It's just that the public doesn't notice it as much. And that's the point -- public debate is turned down real low.

Over the years, many respected veterans of the Senate, not a newcomer like myself, have expressed dismay with the process. Henry Clay did before the Civil War and the process then was nothing like it would become late in the 20th century. Barry Goldwater and even the loquacious Hubert Humphrey expressed misgivings from time to time.

In the mid-1990s, there was a bipartisan group of distinguished citizens called "Action, Not Gridlock" who came together with great ballyhoo, intent on reforming Senate rules. They had the shelf-life of a ripe banana. And in 1995, Democratic Sens. Tom Harkin and Joe Lieberman introduced a rule change that I believe is the best that's been proposed. It still kept 60 votes on the initial cloture vote, but decreased it by three votes with each of the next three cloture attempts until finally it got down to the majority of 51. They argued, logically I believe, that this would preserve the Senate tradition while still giving the minority plenty of time to plead its case without blocking the majority forever.

All of this came to naught, however, after the Republicans solidly opposed it and Sen. Robert Byrd enlightened his fellow Democratic senators with the story of how Cato II, in 60 B.C., got the floor in the Roman Senate at midday and spoke until sundown, the time of adjournment, in order to thwart one of Julius Caesar's proposals. And that was the end of the Harkin-Lieberman filibuster reform bill.

Never mind that Caesar was not thwarted and 14 years later, in 46 B.C., Cato committed suicide while Caesar was at the height of his power and still going strong. Perhaps it is worth noting that the First Filibusterer in history ended up taking his own life. He made his point -- as senators love to do -- but ended up killing himself. Now that, my filibustering friends, is a history lesson worth pondering.

Mr. Miller is a Democratic senator from Georgia.

Brett:

Because of where things stand on the matter of Iraq, we decided to invite Ken Pollack to speak at our OSI Lecture Series. As you may know, Pollack wrote a groundbreaking book on the topic; it's one of the few books that has really influenced the public debate. He should be interesting -- and he'll certainly be timely. I hope you can join us on Thursday. Please let Kasey know if you can.

Pete

He has written one of the most important foreign policy books in a decade...
Before that, he worked on Iraq in the Clinton White House...
And next week, he'll talk about his book and Iraq at the Bush White House.

HEADLINE: Pickering rises above mudslinging

BYLINE: JIM WOOTEN

BODY:

Had President Bush not had the courage to renominate Judge Charles W. Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the nation would never have known the truth contained in the headline on the front of the @issue section of Sunday's paper:

"Evidence doesn't support charges of racism against Charles Pickering."

Not only does the evidence not support the brutal assaults on his character by left-wing extremists who are smearing individuals in a proxy campaign, but also the evidence proves quite the contrary. Pickering's character, even-handedness and his dedication to justice and fair play are the precise qualities that should be elevated on the bench.

The proxy war that has targeted Pickering, Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen and Miguel Estrada is part of a bitter national campaign by pro-abortion groups and the more liberal constituencies of the Democratic Party to keep Bush from appointing a conservative to the U.S. Supreme Court. None of the targeted nominees may ever be invited to serve in the event of a Supreme Court vacancy --- Pickering, who will be 66 in May, most surely won't --- but all are nominated to U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeal, one level below the Supreme Court.

District court judges --- two levels below --- generally pass through the Senate nominating process without orchestrated opposition. That's mainly because they're trial judges who are finding fact and not interpreting law. The Circuit Courts frame issues for the U.S. Supreme Court. Most of the orchestrated smear, therefore, is directed at Circuit Court nominees.

The reasons are related and seemed largely generated by activists and allied groups who are fanatically riveted to the politics of abortion and a paranoia that overturning Roe v. Wade is the secret motivation behind every Bush judicial nomination. Groups such as the National Abortion Rights Action League believe that the next Supreme Court justice is the key to doing just that. So the campaign now is to knock off potential Supreme Court nominees, such as Estrada, while creating an overall impression that Bush's nominees are out of the mainstream and perhaps even racist.

The Pickering story in Sunday's paper really should be required reading for every reporter and editor in the country. What it details is how a decent man --- who by all accounts led an exemplary life, treated people fairly and respectfully, and applied the law evenhandedly --- was caricatured as an unreconstructed Southern redneck maliciously dispensing renegade injustice when race was involved.

The evidence was that he had actively worked to get a lesser sentence for a Mississippi redneck convicted of burning a cross in the yard of an interracial couple. Closet racist on the bench. End of story.

The facts are more instructive. Two other rednecks, including the ringleader, had been given probation and home confinement. The third went to trial and was convicted. Federal prosecutors wanted the third redneck sentenced to 7 1/2 years. The disparity troubled Pickering. He worked to make the sentence more just, something he had done previously for black defendants.

When placed in the context of his life and career on the bench, an entirely different picture of Pickering emerges. The picture is of an honest and capable judge, one all of us would want in place when our lives and fortunes are at risk.

The horror of the injustice America was about to do Charles Pickering is only now evident --- and only now because Bush had the courage to renominate him after Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, on a party-line vote, had bowed to the shrill voices of their more liberal constituencies and cast his nomination aside.

It would have been a great American tragedy if Pickering had not been given a second chance to retrieve his reputation.

This is what judicial fights have become: reputations trashed with distortions and misrepresentations to advance hidden agendas.

Ask Miguel Estrada, against whom Democrats are filibustering the Senate.

ED wants to do a conference on race neutral education approaches, to include the virtues of NCLB, advanced placement programs and percent plans. They want to do this in Florida, April 7-8 because it is shortly after the arguments in the Michigan case.

Do we like this idea? Obviously they need a quick reply.

Angela,

Enclosed is an updated proposal for a national conference on race-neutral approaches. We are proposing that several senior officers in the Department address the conference (the Secretary, Under Secretary Hickock, Sally Stroup, Carol D'Amico, and Brian and Jerry as moderators). We would also include state education officials who are implementing many innovative programs, and several leading people from private organizations that are putting race-neutral approaches into practice.

We propose April 7 and 8. This would give the Administration something very positive to point to as all the media attention on affirmative action swells around April 1, when the Supreme Court hears oral arguments in this case. We believe that the Secretary's schedule could accomodate this, and we believe that we have a venue that would work (the Doral Resort in Miami).

If the Secretary and the WH agrees with our proposal, we need to begin making preparations immediately.

March 4

National Conference on Race Neutral Approaches to Educational Diversity

Objective:

The purpose of this conference would be to make education leaders aware of innovative race-neutral policies that they may be able to use in their elementary and secondary schools and postsecondary institutions. This conference will significantly support the President's January 15th remarks on affirmative action. The Department's role will not be to take positions on specific issues, but to facilitate the dialogue. A possible list of speakers and topics is below.

Audience:

An invitation-only conference for 75-100 top leaders in the education community, including perhaps some chief state school officers, university presidents, local school superintendents, university general counsels, and other similar officials. Billed as a private briefing from leading officials in the federal and state governments who are on the cutting edge of implementing race-neutral approaches to diversity.

Timing:

April 7 and 8 would be our first option. The oral argument in the Michigan cases will be held on April 1; if asked, the Secretary would be able to take the position that while advocates are debating and lawyers are arguing, he will be convening top education officials to constructively solve these problems. If we are to meet this timeframe, we must begin preparations immediately.

Venue:

It is important to hold the conference at a location where protestors would not be likely to disrupt the proceedings. We recommend somewhere in the state of Florida, since it is one of the leaders in the race-neutral innovations. We are aware that the Doral Resort and Golf Spa, in Miami, is available on April 7-8, and has favorable government rates available.

Action

We need approval from the White House and the Secretary to move forward.

The Office for Civil Rights is prepared to develop and arrange the conference, with assistance from a working group of senior officers at the Department. OCR will, of course, need assistance with logistical issues involved in the conference.

Possible content:

Host and welcoming remarks: Secretary Paige

State the Administration's vision on the role that race-neutral alternatives can play in constructively resolving the divisive debate about affirmative action, and connecting this to No Child Left Behind.

Moderators: Brian Jones, General Counsel, and Gerald A. Reynolds, Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights

Introduce speakers, facilitate Q and A sessions

Legal Context: Brian Jones, General Counsel

Explain that it is important to highlight these programs because implementing them will help to minimize litigation risks faced by educational institutions. Race-conscious programs are likely to produce costly and probably unsuccessful litigation. Given this legal context, it is prudent for educational institutions to carefully and seriously examine race-neutral approaches to achieving diversity.

Developmental Approaches:

This portion of the conference would examine projects being undertaken at the state and federal levels that help to expand the pool of competitive applicants. This will explain how states and the federal government are helping to prepare students from low performing schools for higher education through a variety of approaches. There should be sessions on at least the following:

- No Child Left Behind – how NCLB can effectively transform our educational system so that all children are receiving an effective education. Possible speaker: Under Secretary Hickok.
- The Advanced Placement Initiatives in Texas and Florida. Possible speakers: Raul Romero of the University of Texas Board of Regents and Prof. George LaNoue of the University of Maryland.
- The College Summit – this organization seeks to help increase the college enrollment rate of low-income students. Possible speakers: J.B. Schramm, founder of the organization.
- The University of California systems' partnerships with low-performing high schools (over 100,000 children are receiving direct tutoring and mentoring, and hundreds of schools are receiving direct aid). Possible speakers: an official(s) from California; an official(s) from Florida to talk about their "Opportunity Alliances," which also pair up colleges with low-performing schools; an official(s) from the University of Vermont and Christopher Columbus High School (Bronx, NY), which have entered into a partnership; and an official(s) from the University of Pennsylvania, which is a national leader in these types of partnerships.
- Florida's partnership with the College Board. Possible speakers: a Florida education official(s) plus Gaston Caperton, former Gov. of West Virginia and current President of the College Board.

- ED race-neutral initiatives such as GEAR-UP, the State Scholars Initiative, and the TRIO programs. Possible speakers: Sally Stroup, Carol D'Amico.

Admissions Approaches:

This portion of the conference would focus on various race-neutral efforts that have been made to determine which students are admitted and which are not.

- Class rank approaches. We could locate top officials from each of the three states to discuss these plans in depth:

  (1) Texas's "10 Percent Plan"
  (2) Florida's "Talented 20 Plan"
  (3) California's "4 Percent Plan."

- Preferences based on socioeconomic status. This approach, sometimes called "needs-based affirmative action," promotes diversity by conferring admissions preferences based on socioeconomic disadvantage. Possible speaker: Richard Kahlenberg of the New Century Foundation is the national expert on the subject. He could be joined by officials from various jurisdictions that have actually implemented these ideas.

Other potential speakers:

- On behalf of the Attorney General, Larry Thompson or Viet Dinh
- Ralph Boyd, the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights
- A White House official(s)

Some Questions For Bob Graham

Published: Mar 8, 2003
B ob Graham's running, all right. He's running for president and away from having to stake out a position on Miguel Estrada, President Bush's embattled nominee to the U.S Court of Appeals in Washington.
Graham skipped out on the cloture vote Thursday to stop the Democrats' filibuster of the nomination. A majority of senators would confirm Estrada, but the Democrats, in a dangerous precedent, stall.
Minority Leader Tom Daschle says Estrada has refused to answer questions, which is a false assertion, and has demanded Estrada turn over private working papers from his days at the Justice Department, a demand that cannot be taken seriously.
Graham hasn't decided whether to be part of the indefensible scheme, but we think it's time the would-be president tells us what he thinks.
Senator, just what is the appropriate constitutional role for the Senate in judicial nominations? Are you willing to subvert the Constitution and require a supermajority for confirmation?
What extreme views does Estrada hold? What question has he not answered? What do you need to know to vote? Why did you not need to know these things for, say, Ruth Bader Ginsburg?
Is a liberal president entitled to nominate liberals? Can you name a single trial or appellate judge who is too leftist to be elevated to the Supreme Court?
And finally, how, senator, can a nominee supported by a majority in the Senate be deemed too extreme or out of step with America to permit confirmation?

Hello Kate,
Just a quick question for you. The Eagles are having their April meeting in Austin on the 24th, as you are probably well aware of. Roger Williams did a personal ask to his friend Don Powell, Chairman of the FDIC, to speak to the Eagles at the Bush library - where Mr. Powell also holds a leadership position. Mr. Powell has agreed, but Jack wanted us to check to see that's it's okay for him to speak to the Eagles. Mr. Powell's name is listed on the fax sheet we want to send out today, so as usual, we're giving you this request at the last minute. For that I apologize, and we greatly appreciate your help on this. E-mail me or call me with questions at 863-8831.

Thank you,
Elissa

Dear [TEXAS SUPPORTER],

The 2000 presidential election cycle made history. You were a huge part of it. By supporting our President, the Republican Party was able to usher in a new era of responsibility and compassionate conservatism.

Our President needs us again. These times define us as Americans. We stand for freedom, for democracy and for core values that made this country great. As a fellow Texan, I am asking you to be part of the Republican Eagles. I am asking you to renew your commitment to this President and this country.

The Republican Eagles are coming to Texas. We will convene our 2003 spring meeting in Austin, Texas at the Four Seasons Hotel. It is the best opportunity for you to join this remarkable club and enjoy an incredible event, right in your own back yard. I have attached an itinerary so that you can see firsthand the line-up of speakers and activities. It is compelling—and it is time to inspire the Texas machine that was so instrumental in the victory of 2000.

The Eagles staff is eager to answer your questions and to sign you up—both for the Eagle and the spring meeting. Should you have questions, please call me at 817.613.8200—or Debbie LeHardy, Director of the Republican Eagles, at 202.863.8830.

The future is ours, should we choose to shape it.

May God Bless America and the Great State of Texas,

Roger Williams

Estrada deserves a vote

Democratic minority shouldn't keep qualified lawyer off the bench

ELIZABETH DOLE
Special to The Observer

It has been nearly two years since President George W. Bush nominated Miguel Estrada to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Since then, Estrada has been waiting for an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor, as provided by the U.S. Constitution.

Last week, doing the right thing lost out to partisan politics.

The Constitution only requires a majority of the Senate -- 51 votes -- to confirm a judicial nominee. On the Senate floor, a majority supported Estrada. But the 55 votes he received were not enough. Due to a Democratic filibuster, 60 votes are required to stop the talking and take action.

Sadly, 44 Democratic senators have decided that we should not vote, thereby holding Estrada to a double standard.

America is a land of hope, a land of faith, a land of opportunity. Miguel Estrada is an American success story.

He arrived in this country at age 17, an immigrant from Honduras, speaking little English. Through hard work and a strong respect for the U.S. legal system, he has risen to the top of the profession.

In every position -- whether editing the Harvard Law Review, clerking for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, arguing 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court or litigating in the solicitor general's office (one of the most prestigious offices in government) -- he has proven himself exceptionally qualified and experienced.

In fact, the America Bar Association, whose recommendation the Democratic Party regards as the gold standard, has given him its highest ranking.

Some Senate Democrats attempt to justify the filibuster by claiming they are concerned about Estrada's "unwillingness" to answer questions or to release written memos from the solicitor general's office.

Last Thursday, the White House offered that any senators who still have questions for Estrada could meet with him privately or put questions to him in writing. The White House also invited senators to speak to his former supervisors -- Democrats and Republicans -- for their opinion of the solicitor general memoranda.

Only one senator has taken the White House up on its offer. And all seven former solicitors general still living -- four Democrats and three Republicans -- have strongly argued that releasing the documents would seriously threaten the government's ability to defend national interests in court.

So these protests ring hollow.

Just three years ago, Democratic Senate Leader Tom Daschle called for an up-or-down vote on every judicial nomination, saying, "I find it simply baffling that a senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination. Thus, today, I implore, one more time, every senator to follow Sen. Leahy's advice, and treat every nominee `with dignity and dispatch.' Lift your holds, and let the Senate vote on every nomination." Mr. Daschle, it's time to end the filibuster of Miguel Estrada, and reassume our Senate duty under the Constitution.

Every president deserves to have his judicial nominees voted on, and not filibustered away.

Every senator has a responsibility to exercise his or her constitutional duty to advise and consent on the judicial nominees of the president.

And every judicial nominee, starting with Miguel Estrada, deserves an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor.

U.S. to follow Florida way to pick judges
BY FRANK DAVIES
Miami Herald

WASHINGTON - Sen. Bob Graham said Wednesday that White House officials, after months of discussions, had agreed to follow Florida's nonpartisan process for selecting nominees to be federal judges, prosecutors and U.S. marshals.
The agreement means that Graham, a Florida Democrat, will not object to the nomination of Cecilia Altonaga of Miami to a federal judgeship in South Florida, or to three U.S. marshal nominees in Florida. Altonaga would be the first Cuban-American woman on the federal bench.
It was not clear whether the agreement would affect Graham's vote today when GOP leaders in the Senate try for a second time to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked a vote on Miguel Estrada, President Bush's controversial nominee to an appellate judgeship in Washington, D.C.

Graham, who is recovering from heart surgery, was not present last week when Republicans mustered 55 votes, five short of the total needed to end debate. Graham did not say how he will vote today.
''There is no quid pro quo'' for the agreement with the White House announced Wednesday, said Paul Anderson, a Graham spokesman.
Last year, Graham complained that the Florida Federal Nominating Commission's three candidates for the South Florida judgeship were set aside, and the White House asked for three more names, eventually nominating Altonaga.
In a letter to Graham, White House chief of staff Andrew Card said Bush ``is committed to following the commission process in Florida and intends to abide by the rules of procedure for the nominating commission.''
''This is an important assurance,'' said Graham, who added that he had no objection to Altonaga, only to the circumvention of the process. ``This process has allowed the federal court system in Florida to retain public confidence and maintain its independence from political influence.''

From my experience, I know she is a jurist of integrity

ALBERTO GONZALES

Both the president and the Senate have constitutionally assigned roles in the appointment of federal judges. President Bush has fulfilled his responsibility by submitting highly qualified nominees who will be common-sense federal judges, such as Priscilla Owen, my former colleague on the Texas Supreme Court who has been nominated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Justice Owen will receive her Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on Thursday, which regrettably is more than 14 months after the president submitted her nomination to the Senate. Although the Senate has made progress in confirming federal trial court judges, it has failed to act promptly on the president's appeals court nominees, as illustrated by its delay in considering Justice Owen's nomination. Indeed, 23 of the president's 32 appeals court nominees still haven't received Senate votes, and 11 of the president's appeals court nominees, including Justice Owen, have been forced to wait more than a year just for hearings.

As a result of those delays, our courts of appeals are nearly 20 percent vacant, and many of the vacancies, including the 5th Circuit vacancy in Texas, have been classified as emergencies by the Judicial Conference of the United States. Chief Justice William Rehnquist recently labeled the situation "alarming" and echoed Mr. Bush's call for the Senate to grant prompt hearings and up-or-down votes for all judicial nominees.

Now that she finally is receiving her hearing, Justice Owen should be promptly confirmed by the Senate. She possesses exceptional integrity, character and intellect; extensive experience as a judge and lawyer in private practice; and the strong support of both senators from Texas. She has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995 (where I served with her).

Texas holds elections for judges: Priscilla Owen was re-elected in 2000 by an overwhelming majority, and every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her. Before becoming a judge, Justice Owen practiced law at a leading firm in Texas for 17 years. Her academic credentials are impeccable, having graduated with honors from Baylor Law School. She received the highest grade on the Texas Bar Exam. The American Bar Association unanimously rated her "well qualified," its highest possible rating.

Justice Owen also has used her talents to benefit others. She served as the Texas Supreme Court liaison to statewide committees regarding legal services to the poor and pro bono legal services. She worked on a committee that successfully encouraged the Texas Legislature to enact legislation that has resulted in millions of dollars in additional funds for providers of legal services to the poor. She helped organize a group that seeks to lessen the adversarial nature of legal proceedings when a marriage is dissolved.

As someone who had the privilege of serving with Priscilla Owen on the Texas Supreme Court, I can say without hesitation that she is extraordinarily well qualified to serve as a judge on the federal appeals court. Some have questioned Justice Owen's qualifications because she and I disagreed at times on the interpretation of a new Texas parental notification statute in 2000. As all judges know, cases of statutory construction often result in disagreements among judges honestly struggling to interpret the statute, particularly when the statute is vague or ambiguous.

The fact that Justice Owen and I disagreed in some cases is unremarkable. My experience serving with Justice Owen squares with the combined judgment of the president, Sen. Phil Gramm, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, the American Bar Association and many others: She is an outstanding jurist and will perform superbly as a federal appeals court judge.

The Senate should confirm Justice Owen promptly and then move quickly to schedule hearings and votes for all of the president's other long-pending nominees.

Alberto R. Gonzales is counsel to the president.

nominating Altonaga.
In a letter to Graham, White House chief of staff Andrew Card said Bush ``is committed to following the commission process in Florida and intends to abide by the rules of procedure for the nominating commission.''
''This is an important assurance,'' said Graham, who added that he had no objection to Altonaga, only to the circumvention of the process. ``This process has allowed the federal court system in Florida to retain public confidence and maintain its independence from political influence.''

Graham removes blockade on marshals, judge approvals

TALLAHASSEE -- U.S. Sen. Bob Graham has withdrawn his objections to all federal nominations in Florida, clearing the way for the appointment of three new U.S. marshals and two judges.

It was welcome news to Thomas Hurlburt Jr. and Dennis Williamson, nominees for marshal positions in Tampa and Tallahassee.

Hurlburt, a former public safety director and police chief in Orlando, and Williamson, former deputy director of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, quit their jobs in September, expecting to assume their new posts in October. But Graham objected when President Bush nominated Christina Pharo, a deputy marshal in Miami, to be U.S. marshal there. The nominating commission had not recommended Pharo.

"My complaint has never been with the qualifications of these individual nominees, but with the fact that the White House deviated from the nominating process which has so well served Floridians," Graham said.

Hurlburt and Williamson were both recommended by the commission, but their appointments got caught up in the controversy.

Wednesday, Graham said he is dropping his opposition to the three nominees for U.S. marshal positions as well as to judicial nominee Cecilia M. Altonaga, who would become the first Cuban-American woman to sit on the federal bench.

Graham also will accept the nominees to replace U.S. District Judge Lacey Collier of Pensacola, who is retiring later this year.

Graham attached a copy of a March 12 letter from White House chief of staff Andrew H. Card Jr., saying he wanted to "reiterate that the president is committed to following the commission process in Florida" and intends to follow it in the future.

U.S. to follow Florida way to pick judges

BY FRANK DAVIES

Miami Herald

WASHINGTON - Sen. Bob Graham said Wednesday that White House officials, after months of discussions, had agreed to follow Florida's nonpartisan process for selecting nominees to be federal judges, prosecutors and U.S. marshals.

The agreement means that Graham, a Florida Democrat, will not object to the nomination of Cecilia Altonaga of Miami to a federal judgeship in South Florida, or to three U.S. marshal nominees in Florida. Altonaga would be the first Cuban-American woman on the federal bench.

It was not clear whether the agreement would affect Graham's vote today when GOP leaders in the Senate try for a second time to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked a vote on Miguel Estrada, President Bush's controversial nominee to an appellate judgeship in Washington, D.C.

Graham, who is recovering from heart surgery, was not present last week when Republicans mustered 55 votes, five short of the total needed to end debate. Graham did not say how he will vote today.

"There is no quid pro quo" for the agreement with the White House announced Wednesday, said Paul Anderson, a Graham spokesman.

Last year, Graham complained that the Florida Federal Nominating Commission's three candidates for the South Florida judgeship were set aside, and the White House asked for three more names, eventually nominating Altonaga.

In a letter to Graham, White House chief of staff Andrew Card said Bush ``is committed to following the commission process in Florida and intends to abide by the rules of procedure for the nominating commission."

"This is an important assurance," said Graham, who added that he had no objection to Altonaga, only to the circumvention of the process. ``This process has allowed the federal court system in Florida to retain public confidence and maintain its independence from political influence."

Judicial nominating process revised

By Angel Wilson, Palm Beach Post Staff Writer

Thursday, March 13, 2003

WASHINGTON -- The Bush administration and Florida's U.S. senators have agreed to a revised process for nominating federal judges, prosecutors and U.S. marshals.

"This is an important assurance from Chief of Staff Andy Card that the White House will abide by the nominating process that has allowed the federal court system in Florida to retain public confidence and maintain its independence from political influence," said Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., who announced the agreement Wednesday.

Since the 1980s federal judicial nominees have been screened by a nonpartisan commission. Up until 2001, the commission members were appointed by the state's U.S. senators. Since 2001, the commission has been appointed by Gov. Jeb Bush and Reps., Bill Young, R-Indian Rocks Beach, and E. Clay Shaw Jr., R-Fort Lauderdale.

The commission usually recommends to the administration three people for each vacancy. Last year, the commission's initial recommendations to fill a judgeship in the Southern District of Florida were rejected by the White House and another set of nominees was later recommended.

Graham and Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., objected to the administration's actions. In a compromise, the White House has agreed to allow the nominating commission to send up to six names for consideration.

People already nominated or under consideration to fill a vacancy will not have to go through the new process, Graham said.

Currently, there are four people up for federal positions: Miami-Dade County Circuit Judge Cecilia M. Altonaga, a judicial nominee for the Southern District Court, who could become the first Cuban-American woman to sit on the federal bench; Christina Pharo, nominated for U.S. marshal in the Southern District; and two other marshal nominees in other Florida districts.

Graham said he "has never been (concerned) with the qualifications of these individual nominees, but with the fact that the White House deviated from the nominating process which has so well served Floridians."

Argued and Submitted

COUNSEL

Bruce A. Behrens, Chief Counsel; David Gossage, Deputy Chief Counsel; Janet Wong, Assistant Chief Counsel; Daniel P. Weingarten, Deputy Attorney, San Francisco, California, for the appellants.

James Wheaton, David Greene, Oakland California; G. Dana Scruggs, Austin B. Comstock, Santa Cruz, California, for the appellees.

WARDLAW, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether the California Department of Transportation's policy of permitting an individual to display United States flags, but no other expressive banners, on highway overpasses constitutes unreasonable viewpoint discrimination in violation of the First Amendment.

I. Background

In the wake of the September 11th terrorist attacks, an American citizenry united in grief, fear, and defense of country, joined in a spontaneous display of patriotism. Across America, her great national emblem, the United States flag, and its colors, became ubiquitous, appearing everywhere from cars to homes, buildings to clothes. The President of the United States, on September 21, 2001, addressed the nation: The only way to defeat terrorism as a threat to our way of life is to stop it, eliminate it and destroy it where it grows.[1] This declaration of a war on terrorism heightened the patriotic fervor, and, according to the California Department of Transportation (CalTrans), resulted in the proliferation of flags on California's highways.

Highway 17 in Santa Cruz, California, was no exception. Private individuals hung flags from the highway's overpasses. On November 27, 2001, Amy Courtney and Cassandra Brown, concerned over the public's apparent failure to question the prospect of going to war, hung a responsive banner adjacent to a flag reading, At What Cost?. A Scotts Valley police officer immediately removed the banner because it posed a safety risk.[2] The following week Courtney and Brown attempted again to voice their message, hanging another sign reading, At What Cost? as well as one reading, Are you Buying this War?. These anti-war banners were also immediately removed. Although the person who removed the banners is unknown, CalTrans has taken the position throughout this litigation that it would have removed them pursuant to its own policy if someone else had not.

It is CalTrans's stated encroachment permit policy that citizens who wish to display a sign on a California highway overpass must obtain a permit to do so. Even then, permits are only available for signs designating turnoffs for special

[1] President Bush's Address on Terrorism Before a Joint Meeting of Congress, N.Y. Times, Sept. 21, 2001, at B4.

[2] The lawsuit also originally named the Scotts Valley Police Department and Police Chief Tom Bush for this act. The district court dismissed these parties because their inclusion was based on a single officer's action, thus the Department was not engaged in a policy and practice of depriving citi-events. Citizens wishing to display any other message are prohibited from using the highway overpass to do so. Notwithstanding this policy, CalTrans does not prohibit the display of American flags, nor does it impose a permitting process for their display.

Brown and Courtney filed an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for deprivation of their First Amendment rights against CalTrans and its director Jeff Morales (collectively CalTrans). Finding Highway 17 to be a nonpublic forum under the First Amendment, the district court ruled that the CalTrans policy met neither the reasonableness nor viewpoint neutrality requirements for state infringement on speech in a nonpublic forum. Accordingly, it entered a preliminary injunction against CalTrans's policy of exempting American flags from permit requirements but requiring permits for, or prohibiting altogether, the display of all other expressive signs and banners.

CalTrans challenges entry of the injunction. It argues that because alternative means for expression of Courtney and Brown's anti-war messages are available, they failed to demonstrate the requisite risk of irreparable injury. CalTrans also asserts that Courtney and Brown failed to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits of their First Amendment claim, maintaining that its policy was both reasonable and viewpoint neutral. Because the policy is neither, and no equivalent alternative means of expression have been demonstrated, we affirm.[3]

II. Standard of Review

To obtain a preliminary injunction, Courtney and Brown must demonstrate either (1) a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm; or [3]We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1292(a)(1), allowing for the immediate appeal of an order granting a preliminary injunction.

REV_00111854

(2) that serious questions are raised and the balance of hardships tips in [their] favor. A & M Records, Inc. v. Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d 1004, 1013 (9th Cir. 2001). The formulas do not differ, but reflect two points on a sliding scale in which the degree of irreparable harm increases as the probability of success on the merits decreases. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Coalition for Econ. Equity, 950 F.2d 1401, 1410 (9th Cir. 1991).

We review the district court's grant of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. United States v. Peninsula Communications, Inc., 287 F.3d 832, 839 (9th Cir. 2002). We review a district court's conclusion of law de novo. Lovell v. Poway Unified Sch. Dist., 90 F.3d 367, 370 (9th Cir. 1996). Given the special solicitude we have for claims alleging the abridgment of First Amendment rights, we review a district court's findings of fact when striking down a restriction on speech for clear error. Id. Within this framework, we review the application of facts to law on free speech questions de novo. Planned Parenthood v. Am. Coalition of Life Activists, 290 F.3d 1058, 1070 (9th Cir. 2002) (en banc).

III. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

[1] To evaluate the likelihood of success on the merits of Courtney and Brown's free speech claim, we must address three issues. First, we must classify the highway under the Supreme Court's forum analysis to determine whether the Government's interest in limiting the use of its property . . . outweighs the interest of those wishing to use the property for other purposes. Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund, Inc., 473 U.S. 788, 800 (1985). Second, we assess the appropriate level of scrutiny for that forum. Children of the Rosary v. City of Phoenix, 154 F.3d 972, 976 (9th Cir. 1998). Finally, we must determine whether CalTrans's policy withstands this scrutiny. Id.

[2] In defining the relevant forum, the Court has focused on the access sought by the speaker. Id. Because Courtney and Brown hung their banners from highway overpass fences, the forum at issue is the highway overpass fence. We must next determine whether a highway overpass fence is a public, designated public, or nonpublic forum. A traditional public forum, such as a public park or sidewalk, is a place that has traditionally been available for public expression. DiLoreto v. Downey Unified Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 196 F.3d 958, 964 (9th Cir. 1999) (internal quotation marks omitted). However, [w]hen the government intentionally opens a nontraditional forum for public discourse it creates a designated public forum. Id. All remaining public property is considered nonpublic fora. Id. at 965.

[3] The district court determined, and Courtney and Brown do not contend otherwise, that California state highway overpass fences are not public fora. We agree. The State's highway overpass fences have not traditionally been available for public expression. Id at 964.
