Please join us to celebrate THREE December Birthdays!

On Wednesday, December 18th @5PM in the Chief of Staff's office we will

I am writing in the hope that the nation's newspapers will raise their collective editorial voice in condemnation of Sen. Trent Lott's praise of Strom Thurmond's racist presidential candidacy in 1948.

Not since the days of Govs. Orval Faubus, George Wallace and Ross Barnett could I have imagined a U.S. senator declaring publicly that the nation would be better off under a regime of enforced segregation, as Sen. Lott apparently did while speaking at Sen. Thurmond's 100th birthday party earlier this month.

Sen. Lott is clearly lucid enough to recall that segregation was enforced through a de jure system of official and unofficial terrorism, coercion and violence that included (indeed featured) lynching, firebombings, and hooded night riders. It was a regime under which Americans residing in some regions of the United States risked death if they dared to register to vote or educate their fellow citizens about voter registration.

Perhaps the names of Andrew Goodman, James Chaney, Mickey Schwerner, Medgar Evers and countless other brave Americans (whose murders received less publicity) mean nothing to Sen. Lott. However, given the reign of terror required to enforce segregation, such murders were the predictable result of the attitudes and policies that Sen. Lott praised in nostalgic remembrance of Strom Thurmond's segregationist presidential bid in 1948.

Although Sen. Lott publicly stated that the country would have been better off had Sen. Thurmond won, a majority of the voters apparently disagreed as they elected Harry Truman.

Is it not ironic in this day when the nation's elected leaders are rallying the country against terrorism, that the majority leader of the U.S. Senate would publicly endorse the terrorism that once governed a significant region of this country and greatly influenced politics at the national level?

One need only recall John F. Kennedy's negotiations with the governors of Mississippi and Alabama, and Lyndon Johnson's political maneuvering to ensure passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act to appreciate the extent to which the politics of the Deep South influenced the politics of the nation. Many of us are outraged by Sen. Lott's declaration that "we wouldn't have had all these problems over all these years" if Sen. Thurmond had been elected president.

Fortunately, many Americans vehemently disagree. Many of us believe the country would be far better off if America's leaders dedicate themselves to eradicating the continuing effects of the attitudes that Sen. Thurmond's presidential candidacy sought to exploit.

Although America's democracy continues to grow and evolve, it appears that rumors of the demise of Jim Crow were premature. Let us hope that Sen. Lott's wistful praise of Sen. Thurmond's candidacy and all it symbolizes motivates each of us to work toward ennobling the human spirit and combating terrorism in all its insidious and murderous forms, rather than fondly remembering the subjugation and terror that was all too common in 1948.

Thanks to all who attended what was all around a terrific dinner. It was really great seeing everybody again; hard to believe two years have passed. On the book-keeping side, for those who had dinner, the cost was $135 / person. If you didn't have a chance to cover it on Thursday, pls respond to this e-mail (in the interim, Ben and I covered the difference.) Thanks again, and have a wonderful Holiday and New Year.

Ted.

Let's do 2:20 - need to have him in Specter's office by 2:50 pm so they can try to start the meeting early and get him back here in time for JSC prep.

We do need a JSC prep - right? If not the full 30 min let me know so I can send an email.

I am writing in the hope that the nation's newspapers will raise their collective editorial voice in condemnation of Sen. Trent Lott's praise of Strom Thurmond's racist presidential candidacy in 1948.

Not since the days of Govs. Orval Faubus, George Wallace and Ross Barnett could I have imagined a U.S. senator declaring publicly that the nation would be better off under a regime of enforced segregation, as Sen. Lott apparently did while speaking at Sen. Thurmond's 100th birthday party earlier this month.

Sen. Lott is clearly lucid enough to recall that segregation was enforced through a de jure system of official and unofficial terrorism, coercion and violence that included (indeed featured) lynching, firebombings, and hooded night riders. It was a regime under which Americans residing in some regions of the United States risked death if they dared to register to vote or educate their fellow citizens about voter registration.

Perhaps the names of Andrew Goodman, James Chaney, Mickey Schwerner, Medgar Evers and countless other brave Americans (whose murders received less publicity) mean nothing to Sen. Lott. However, given the reign of terror required to enforce segregation, such murders were the predictable result of the attitudes and policies that Sen. Lott praised in nostalgic remembrance of Strom Thurmond's segregationist presidential bid in 1948.

Although Sen. Lott publicly stated that the country would have been better off had Sen. Thurmond won, a majority of the voters apparently disagreed as they elected Harry Truman.

Is it not ironic in this day when the nation's elected leaders are rallying the country against terrorism, that the majority leader of the U.S. Senate would publicly endorse the terrorism that once governed a significant region of this country and greatly influenced politics at the national level?

One need only recall John F. Kennedy's negotiations with the governors of Mississippi and Alabama, and Lyndon Johnson's political maneuvering to ensure passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act to appreciate the extent to which the politics of the Deep South influenced the politics of the nation. Many of us are outraged by Sen. Lott's declaration that "we wouldn't have had all these problems over all these years" if Sen. Thurmond had been elected president.

Fortunately, many Americans vehemently disagree. Many of us believe the country would be far better off if America's leaders dedicate themselves to eradicating the continuing effects of the attitudes that Sen. Thurmond's presidential candidacy sought to exploit.

Although America's democracy continues to grow and evolve, it appears that rumors of the demise of Jim Crow were premature. Let us hope that Sen. Lott's wistful praise of Sen. Thurmond's candidacy and all it symbolizes motivates each of us to work toward ennobling the human spirit and combating terrorism in all its insidious and murderous forms, rather than fondly remembering the subjugation and terror that was all too common in 1948.

SUBJECT: DELEGATION OF RESPONSIBILITIES PURSUANT TO THE PIPELINE SAFETY IMPROVEMENTACT TO THE WHITE HOUSE TASK FORCE ON ENERGY PROJECT STREAMLINING

Please be advised that I am delegating to the White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining (the "Task Force") responsibility for implementing Section 16 of the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act (the "Act"). The Act directs the President to establish an Interagency Interagency Committee to implement a coordinated environmental review and permitting process to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs during time periods specified by rule by the Secretary of Transportation.

The Act establishes the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) as the chair of the Interagency Committee. It also names to the Interagency Committee representatives of Federal agencies with responsibilities relating to pipeline repair projects, including each of the following persons (or a designee thereof): the Secretary of Transportation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Assistant Administrator for Fisheries of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, the Director of the Minerals Management Service, the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, and the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The Act directs the Interagency Committee to evaluate Federal permitting requirements for access, excavation, and restoration activities in connection with pipeline repairs and to make recommendations for improvements, including the development of a compendium of best practices used by the industry. The Act also directs the members of the Interagency Committee to enter into a memorandum of understanding to provide for a coordinated and expedited pipeline repair permit review process.

A copy of section 16 of the Act is attached.

The Task Force will be developing draft strategy guidelines to satisfy responsibilities pursuant to Act and will be in touch with your offices soon. If you have any comments, questions, or suggestions prior to that, please contact Veronica Angulo at (202) 586-3316 or Veronica.Angulo@hq.doe.gov.

SEC. 16. COORDINATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEWS.

(a) IN GENERAL.--Chapter 601 is further amended by adding at the end the following:``?60133. Coordination of environmental reviews

``(a) INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE.--

``(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND PURPOSE.--Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, the President shall establish an Interagency Committee to develop and ensure implementation of a coordinated environmental review and permitting process in order to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary.

``(2) MEMBERSHIP.--The Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) shall chair the Interagency Committee, which shall consist of representatives of Federal agencies with responsibilities relating to pipeline repair projects, including each of the following persons (or a designee thereof):

``(A) The Secretary of Transportation.

``(B) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

``(C) The Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

``(D) The Assistant Administrator for Fisheries of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

``(E) The Director of the Bureau of Land Management.

``(F) The Director of the Minerals Management Service.

``(G) The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works.

``(H) The Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

``(3) EVALUATION.--The Interagency Committee shall evaluate Federal permitting requirements to which access, excavation, and restoration activities in connection with pipeline repairs described in paragraph (1) may be subject. As part of its evaluation, the Interagency Committee shall examine the access, excavation, and restoration practices of the pipeline industry in connection with such pipeline repairs, and may develop a compendium of best practices used by the industry to access, excavate, and restore the site of a pipeline repair.

``(4) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.--Based upon the evaluation required under paragraph (3) and not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the members of the Interagency Committee shall enter into a memorandum of understanding to provide for a coordinated and expedited pipeline repair permit review process to carry out the purpose set forth in paragraph (1). The Interagency Committee shall include provisions in the memorandum of understanding identifying those repairs or categories of repairs described in paragraph (1) for which the best practices identified under paragraph (3), when properly employed by a pipeline operator, would result in no more than minimal adverse effects on the environment and for which discretionary administrative reviews may therefore be minimized or eliminated. With respect to pipeline repairs described in paragraph (1) to which the preceding sentence would not be applicable, the Interagency Committee shall include provisions to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary. The Interagency Committee shall include in the memorandum of understanding criteria under which permits required for such pipeline repair activities should be prioritized over other less urgent agency permit application reviews. The Interagency Committee shall not enter into a memorandum of understanding under this paragraph except by unanimous agreement of the members of the Interagency Committee.

``(5) STATE AND LOCAL CONSULTATION.--In carrying out this subsection, the Interagency Committee shall consult with appropriate State and local environmental, pipeline safety, and emergency response officials, and such other officials as the Interagency Committee considers appropriate.

``(b) IMPLEMENTATION.--Not later than 180 days after the completion of the memorandum of understanding required under subsection (a)(4), each agency represented on the Interagency Committee shall revise its regulations as necessary to implement the provisions of the memorandum of understanding.

``(c) SAVINGS PROVISIONS; NO PREEMPTION.--Nothing in this section shall be construed--

``(1) to require a pipeline operator to obtain a Federal permit, if no Federal permit would otherwise have been required under Federal law; or

``(2) to preempt applicable Federal, State, or local environmental law.

``(d) INTERIM OPERATIONAL ALTERNATIVES.--

``(1) IN GENERAL.--Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, and subject to the limitations in paragraph (2), the Secretary of Transportation shall revise the regulations of the Department, to the extent necessary, to permit a pipeline operator subject to time periods for repair specified by rule by the Secretary to implement alternative mitigation measures until all applicable permits have been granted.

``(2) LIMITATIONS.--The regulations issued by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection shall not allow an operator to implement alternative mitigation measures pursuant to paragraph (1) unless--

``(A) allowing the operator to implement such measures would be consistent with the protection of human health, public safety, and the environment;

``(B) the operator, with respect to a particular repair project, has applied for and is pursuing diligently and in good faith all required Federal, State, and local permits to carry out the project; and

``(C) the proposed alternative mitigation measures are not incompatible with pipeline safety.

``(e) OMBUDSMAN.--The Secretary shall designate an ombudsman to assist in expediting pipeline repairs and resolving disagreements between Federal, State, and local permitting agencies and the pipeline operator during agency review of any pipeline repair activity, consistent with protection of human health, public safety, and the environment.

``(f) STATE AND LOCAL PERMITTING PROCESSES.--The Secretary shall encourage States and local governments to consolidate their respective permitting processes for pipeline repair projects subject to any time periods for repair specified by rule by the Secretary. The Secretary may request other relevant Federal agencies to provide technical assistance to States and local governments for the purpose of encouraging such consolidation.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.--The analysis for chapter 601 is amended by adding at the end the following:

RE: Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 (signed by the President on December 17, 2002)

The "Pipeline Safety Act" Section 16 (a) (1) calls for the President, not later than 30 days after the enactment date, to establish an Interagency Committee "to develop and ensure implementation of a coordinated environmental review and permitting process in order to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary." Section 16 (a) (2) names the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) as the chair of the Interagency Committee and lists the representatives of Federal agencies who shall serve on the committee.

Attached is a memo that I propose to send to the representatives named in the bill that would establish the committee and delegate implementing responsibilities to the White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining. This Task Force already has successfully negotiated an interagency agreement on natural gas permitting which should effectively dovetail with the new "Pipeline Safety Act" requirements.

PROMPT FOR ACTION: Please provide comment on this by 5:00 pm on December 20th. Comment should be sent to V.A. Stephens at CEQ.

If Judge and David agree, can you please reserve 20 minutes for Judge and David at 2:00 on Thursday, January 9, to talk briefly on judges to some outside groups that Tim Goeglein will bring in. The point would be to thank the groups for their work and to explain what's coming on judges. I regularly speak to the routinely scheduled coalition meetings (and get deep into the weeds with them on specific issues, questions, and nominees), but Tim Goeglein and I both think it would be useful that they hear an overview from Judge as we start the new year and new Congress, and also that they meet and hear from David. Thanks.

Introduction of Judge Kenneth W. Starr
(December 19, 2002)

Welcome to the White House. I am privileged to introduce Judge Ken Starr, who will speak about his recent book on the Supreme Court and answer some questions about the Court -- and maybe a few about some other interesting issues Judge Starr has been involved in during his extraordinary legal career.

Ken Starr is a native Texan . . . Judge Starr, that is a good thing around here . . . born in Vernon, Texas in 1946. He graduated from George Washington University and then Duke University Law School. After law school, he served for two years as a law clerk for Chief Justice Warren Burger. At the start of the Reagan Administration, Ken Starr was named Counselor to Attorney General William French Smith and played a key role in the judicial nomination process, including the nomination of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor in 1981.

In 1983, at age 37, Judge Starr himself was nominated by President Reagan and confirmed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, often considered America's second most important court. On that court, Judge Starr quickly earned a superb reputation -- a standout on a court that included judicial luminaries such as Scalia and Bork and Ruth Bader Ginsburg. In 1989, President George Bush asked Judge Starr to serve as Solicitor General of the United States, a role he ably performed for four years. He then returned to private practice in 1993.

In 1994, Judge Starr was called to his most famous public role, that of independent counsel in the Whitewater matter. As independent counsel, Judge Starr led many important investigations and prosecutions – earning the convictions of the sitting Arkansas Governor, a former Associate Attorney General, and the co-owners of the original Whitewater project. And of course, Judge Starr also led the investigation that ultimately resulted in the second impeachment of a President in American history. Through all the controversy that surrounded his tenure as independent counsel, Judge Starr maintained his dignity and devotion to the rule of law.

Judge Starr has now returned to private practice and continues to be a leader in the legal profession. He is counsel to Senator Mitch McConnell in the landmark campaign finance litigation, and he has written an excellent book about the Supreme Court. Stuart Taylor described Judge Starr's book as a "captivating, perceptive, fair-minded portrait of the world's most powerful court, its justices, and its history . . . accessible to lay readers and brimming with insights for experienced Court-watchers." Having read the book myself, I can say that I agree completely.

Judge Starr, I am not sure you heard the following when you served as independent counsel, but . . . welcome to the White House.

SUBJECT: DELEGATION OF RESPONSIBILITIES PURSUANT TO THE PIPELINE SAFETY IMPROVEMENTACT TO THE WHITE HOUSE TASK FORCE ON ENERGY PROJECT STREAMLINING

Please be advised that I am delegating to the White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining (the "Task Force") responsibility for implementing Section 16 of the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act (the "Act"). The Act directs the President to establish an Interagency Interagency Committee to implement a coordinated environmental review and permitting process to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs during time periods specified by rule by the Secretary of Transportation.

The Act establishes the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) as the chair of the Interagency Committee. It also names to the Interagency Committee representatives of Federal agencies with responsibilities relating to pipeline repair projects, including each of the following persons (or a designee thereof): the Secretary of Transportation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Assistant Administrator for Fisheries of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, the Director of the Minerals Management Service, the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, and the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The Act directs the Interagency Committee to evaluate Federal permitting requirements for access, excavation, and restoration activities in connection with pipeline repairs and to make recommendations for improvements, including the development of a compendium of best practices used by the industry. The Act also directs the members of the Interagency Committee to enter into a memorandum of understanding to provide for a coordinated and expedited pipeline repair permit review process.

A copy of section 16 of the Act is attached.

The Task Force will be developing draft strategy guidelines to satisfy responsibilities pursuant to Act and will be in touch with your offices soon. If you have any comments, questions, or suggestions prior to that, please contact Veronica Angulo at (202) 586-3316 or Veronica.Angulo@hq.doe.gov.

SEC. 16. COORDINATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEWS.

(a) IN GENERAL.--Chapter 601 is further amended by adding at the end the following:``?60133. Coordination of environmental reviews

``(a) INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE.--

``(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND PURPOSE.--Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, the President shall establish an Interagency Committee to develop and ensure implementation of a coordinated environmental review and permitting process in order to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary.

``(2) MEMBERSHIP.--The Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) shall chair the Interagency Committee, which shall consist of representatives of Federal agencies with responsibilities relating to pipeline repair projects, including each of the following persons (or a designee thereof):

``(A) The Secretary of Transportation.

``(B) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

``(C) The Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

``(H) The Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

``(3) EVALUATION.--The Interagency Committee shall evaluate Federal permitting requirements to which access, excavation, and restoration activities in connection with pipeline repairs described in paragraph (1) may be subject. As part of its evaluation, the Interagency Committee shall examine the access, excavation, and restoration practices of the pipeline industry in connection with such pipeline repairs, and may develop a compendium of best practices used by the industry to access, excavate, and restore the site of a pipeline repair.

``(4) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.--Based upon the evaluation required under paragraph (3) and not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the members of the Interagency Committee shall enter into a memorandum of understanding to provide for a coordinated and expedited pipeline repair permit review process to carry out the purpose set forth in paragraph (1). The Interagency Committee shall include provisions in the memorandum of understanding identifying those repairs or categories of repairs described in paragraph (1) for which the best practices identified under paragraph (3), when properly employed by a pipeline operator, would result in no more than minimal adverse effects on the environment and for which discretionary administrative reviews may therefore be minimized or eliminated. With respect to pipeline repairs described in paragraph (1) to which the preceding sentence would not be applicable, the Interagency Committee shall include provisions to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary. The Interagency Committee shall include in the memorandum of understanding criteria under which permits required for such pipeline repair activities should be prioritized over other less urgent agency permit application reviews. The Interagency Committee shall not enter into a memorandum of understanding under this paragraph except by unanimous agreement of the members of the Interagency Committee.

``(5) STATE AND LOCAL CONSULTATION.--In carrying out this subsection, the Interagency Committee shall consult with appropriate State and local environmental, pipeline safety, and emergency response officials, and such other officials as the Interagency Committee considers appropriate.

``(b) IMPLEMENTATION.--Not later than 180 days after the completion of the memorandum of understanding required under subsection (a)(4), each agency represented on the Interagency Committee shall revise its regulations as necessary to implement the provisions of the memorandum of understanding.

``(c) SAVINGS PROVISIONS; NO PREEMPTION.--Nothing in this section shall be construed--

``(1) to require a pipeline operator to obtain a Federal permit, if no Federal permit would otherwise have been required under Federal law; or

``(2) to preempt applicable Federal, State, or local environmental law.

``(d) INTERIM OPERATIONAL ALTERNATIVES.--

``(1) IN GENERAL.--Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, and subject to the limitations in paragraph (2), the Secretary of Transportation shall revise the regulations of the Department, to the extent necessary, to permit a pipeline operator subject to time periods for repair specified by rule by the Secretary to implement alternative mitigation measures until all applicable permits have been granted.

``(2) LIMITATIONS.--The regulations issued by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection shall not allow an operator to implement alternative mitigation measures pursuant to paragraph (1) unless--

``(A) allowing the operator to implement such measures would be consistent with the protection of human health, public safety, and the environment;

``(B) the operator, with respect to a particular repair project, has applied for and is pursuing diligently and in good faith all required Federal, State, and local permits to carry out the project; and

``(C) the proposed alternative mitigation measures are not incompatible with pipeline safety.

``(e) OMBUDSMAN.--The Secretary shall designate an ombudsman to assist in expediting pipeline repairs and resolving disagreements between Federal, State, and local permitting agencies and the pipeline operator during agency review of any pipeline repair activity, consistent with protection of human health, public safety, and the environment.

``(f) STATE AND LOCAL PERMITTING PROCESSES.--The Secretary shall encourage States and local governments to consolidate their respective permitting processes for pipeline repair projects subject to any time periods for repair specified by rule by the Secretary. The Secretary may request other relevant Federal agencies to provide technical assistance to States and local governments for the purpose of encouraging such consolidation.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.--The analysis for chapter 601 is amended by adding at the end the following:

RE: Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 (signed by the President on December 17, 2002)

The "Pipeline Safety Act" Section 16 (a) (1) calls for the President, not later than 30 days after the enactment date, to establish an Interagency Committee "to develop and ensure implementation of a coordinated environmental review and permitting process in order to enable pipeline operators to commence and complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary." Section 16 (a) (2) names the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (or a designee of the Chairman) as the chair of the Interagency Committee and lists the representatives of Federal agencies who shall serve on the committee.

Attached is a memo that I propose to send to the representatives named in the bill that would establish the committee and delegate implementing responsibilities to the White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining. This Task Force already has successfully negotiated an interagency agreement on natural gas permitting which should effectively dovetail with the new "Pipeline Safety Act" requirements.

PROMPT FOR ACTION: Please provide comment on this by 5:00 pm on December 20th. Comment should be sent to V.A. Stephens at CEQ.

Exciting news! My last day here at the White House will be on Tuesday, January 7, 2003 (that's not the good part). I will be off to start my new position as Executive Assistant to the Secretary at the Department of Energy (good part!) I am very excited for this new opportunity but sad to leave all of you wonderful people at the White House. It has been so much fun here in the West Wing and I look forward for our paths to cross again.

and please keep in touch,
jeannie

Lisa Murkowski picked to be Alaska's newest senator Governor selects daughter to take over his seat in Congress

The Associated Press

(Published: December 20, 2002)

Saying it was time for the next generation of Alaskans to start building seniority in Congress, Gov.
Frank Murkowski Friday appointed his daughter to succeed him in the U.S. Senate.

remaining two years of my term should be someone who shares my basic philosophy, my values, but particularly one who shares on the issues of Alaska matters that are before us. Someone whose judgment I trust in representing the state and all of its people," Murkowski said in naming his daughter, Lisa, to the seat he held for 22 years.

Lisa Murkowski, 45, is a Republican state representative who was reelected last month to a third term and was selected as House Majority leader.

Frank Murkowski resigned the Senate seat he held for more than two decades when he was sworn in as governor Dec. 2.

At a news conference Friday in Anchorage Gov. Murkowski said he whittled his list of potential candidates down from 26 to 11 and conducted interviews since he was sworn in Dec. 2.

"In some ways, this is probably one of the most important decisions I will make as your governor, recognizing this responsibility, I've reached out to Alaskans from all over the state," the governor said.

Murkowski said he wanted to choose someone with legislative experience who could get things done in Washington D.C. and establish their own identity in the U.S Senate.

Following her father's announcement, Lisa Murkowski called her appointment an incredible and awesome responsibility.

"We have a great deal in common besides sharing a name," she said of her father. "We share the same vision for the state. We share the same values."

Lisa Murkowsi is a lawyer and is married with two children. She lives in Anchorage. She received her bachelor's in economics from Georgetown University in 1980 and her law degree from Willamette College of Law in 1985. She worked as district attorney in Anchorage from 1987 to 1989 and has worked in private practice.

"I'm committed to filling the big shoes you've left behind and working closely with Ted (Sen. Ted Stevens) and Don (Rep. Don Young) as part of the Alaskan team. The Stevens, Murkowski, Young team -- I guess we don't need to change the name there -- has produced great results for our state for well over 20 years now."

During the legislative session, Lisa Murkowski was a key member of a bipartisan caucus proposing new taxes and revenue measures to close the state's chronic budget shortfall and she sponsored an increase in the state's alcohol tax.

Lisa Murkowski says she supports legal abortion only when a mother's life is in danger or in cases of rape or incest. She voted against a bill to limit state funding for abortions.

"out west?" what, are you trying to fashion yourself as some sort of cowboy? If I recall, you are playing golf... in Vegas. somehow I don't see the idea of a "golf cart cowboy" working for you.

Talks about ARG and the political benefits his appointment would bring as well as "delicate ethnic balancing". has a sr. administration official quoted as saying "I don't think there's any question the president would turn to him."

Also talks about J. Harvey Wilkinson, Luttig, Janica Rogers Brown, Judge Alito and even Estrada.

Hatch is in there basically calling on any justice who plans to step down to go ahead and say so.

Another thing on ARG, "One official noted that Mr. Gonzales had cultivated the notion that he was reluctant to be named to the court but that was untrue. The official noted that he still likes to be addressed as "Judge Gonzales."
I thought that was pretty cheap.

Anyway, I figured you hadn't been able to get your hands on it, and I knew you'd want to be aware of it.
have fun,
Anne

Please find attached the DOJ draft submission due today in the Frazier case. As previewed, the submission is short and concedes the Section 201 point:
It is the Government's position that, as a result of the passage of TRIA Section 201, certain blocked assets are eligible for attachment and execution notwithstanding 31 C.F.R. õ 575.202(e). The petitioners in all three actions must still prove, however, and the Court should determine, that the petitioners have met the requirements of TRIA Section 201 by establishing, for example, that the assets are blocked assets of the terrorist party (or of any agency or instrumentality) against whom judgment was entered, within the meaning of TRIA Section 201.
Please provide any comments/concurrence as soon as possible as DOJ must file today. Thank you. Jock Draft submission attached must be filed today.

My phone number is 718.422.5637.

In this version, I have removed the reference to takings because, after further consideration, (i) I do not think the Government should be on the record as suggesting that these actions raise takings concerns, and (ii) the position the Government is taking is one of inaction, and, therefore, I do not understand how we could be construed as being involved in a taking.

Frazier, et al. v. Bank of New York, No. 02 Civ. 10157 (unassigned)

Dear Judge Sprizzo:

The Government makes this submission in response to the petitions filed in the above-referenced actions. As described herein, the petition in Frazier, et al. v. O'Neill, et al., No. 02 Civ. 7642 (JES) ("Frazier I") should be dismissed at the outset, as against the Government. The remainder of this submission constitutes the Government's statement of interest in all three actions and is made pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 517.

In September 2002, the Frazier I petition was filed, seeking execution of certain judgments against the Republic of Iraq and Saddam Hussein. The Frazier I petitioners seek to execute those judgments against assets held by J.P. Morgan Chase & Co.[1] that are blocked by the Iraq sanctions regulations set forth at 31 C.F.R. Part 375. Secretary of the Treasury Paul H. O'Neill, in his official capacity, was named as an additional respondent in Frazier I, presumedly because the Office of Foreign Assets Control ("OFAC"), which is part of the Department of the [1] The Government understands that JPMorgan Chase Bank is in fact the entity that maintains accounts on its books in the name of certain agencies and instrumentalities of the Republic of Iraq, and the Government has consented to the substitution of JPMorgan Chase Bank for J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. as a respondent in Frazier I.

Treasury, is responsible for implementing the Iraq sanctions regulations. At the time Frazier I was filed, the Government intended to move to have the petition denied in its entirety.[2]

On November 26, 2002, the President signed into law the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-297 ("TRIA"). Section 201 of TRIA addresses "Satisfaction of Judgments from Blocked Assets of Terrorists, Terrorist Organizations, and State Sponsors of Terrorism."

Subsequent to TRIA's passage, the petitions in Daliberti, et al. v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., et al., No. 02 Civ. 9773 (JES) ("Daliberti") and Frazier, et al. v. Bank of New York, No. 02 Civ. 10157 (unassigned) ("Frazier II") were filed. Like the petition in Frazier I, the Daliberti and Frazier II petitions seek to execute judgments against assets that have been blocked pursuant to the Iraq sanctions regulations. The petitioners in Frazier I and Frazier II (the "Frazier Petitioners") are identical, and the Frazier Petitioners seek to execute the same judgments in both actions. The petitions in Frazier II and Daliberti, however, invoke TRIA Section 201 as the legal basis for execution and do not name any Government respondent.

The Government Should Be Dismissed From Frazier I For Lack Of Subject Matter Jurisdiction

On a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff has the burden of establishing that subject matter jurisdiction exists over his complaint. See Malik v. Meissner, 82 F.3d 560, 562 (2d Cir. 1996). The Frazier Petitioners cannot meet this burden.

The Frazier Petitioners do not seek any relief against the Government. See Frazier I Pet., Prayer for Relief. Even if the Frazier Petitioners sought relief against the Government, however, no subject matter jurisdiction would lie for such relief. The Government enjoys immunity from suit except where it expressly has consented to be sued. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 475 (1994). The Government has not waived its sovereign immunity with respect to Frazier I. Therefore, the Government should be dismissed as a party from Frazier I for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

The Frazier Petitioners assert that subject matter jurisdiction arises under the federal question statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2). Frazier I, Pet. at ¶ 2. However, the mere fact that the Frazier Petitioners raise issues of federal law does not confer jurisdiction over the Government. See B.K. Instrument, Inc. v. United States, 715 F.2d 713, 724 (2d Cir. 1983); Can v. United States, 820 F. Supp. 106, 110 (S.D.N.Y. 1993), aff'd, 14 F.3d 160 (2d Cir. 1994). Because the Frazier Petitioners seek equitable relief instead of money damages, see Frazier I Pet., Prayer for Relief, the Tucker Act is not a basis for jurisdiction.

[2] An amended petition, dated November 22, 2002, was subsequently filed in Frazier I. The amended petition named additional petitioners.

Polanco v. DEA, 158 F.3d 647, 652 (2d Cir. 1998).

In addition, this action is not brought pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 201 et seq. (the "APA"). The APA provides for judicial review of final agency action. See 5 U.S.C. § 704; Top Choice Distributors, Inc. v. United States Postal Serv., 138 F.3d 463, 466 (2d Cir. 1998). Persons seeking the release of assets blocked by the Iraq sanctions regulations must apply to OFAC for a license authorizing release of the assets. See 31 C.F.R. §§ 575.202(e), 575.301, 575.801. Although OFAC decisions on license applications "constitute final agency action," 31 C.F.R. § 501.802, the Frazier Petitioners do not allege that they applied to OFAC for a license or that OFAC has made a decision on any such license application. Accordingly, any APA challenge would at this point be premature, and thus could not provide subject matter jurisdiction. See Can, 820 F. Supp. at 111-112 (APA waiver of sovereign immunity did not apply where party challenging OFAC blocking regulation did not first seek a license unblocking assets); Lary v. Republic of Cuba, 643 F. Supp. 194, 197-98 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (U.S. national's complaint "dismissed for failure to obtain a Treasury Department license prior to . . . commencing an action"), aff'd, 814 F.2d 653 (2d Cir. 1987).

Finally, the decision by the Frazier Petitioners to decline to name the Government in the Frazier II petition indicates their recognition that the Government is not a necessary party to these actions.

Issues Relating To The President's Waiver Of 28 U.S.C. § 1610(f)(1) Are Moot

The Frazier I petition relies on 28 U.S.C. § 1610(f)(1) as a basis for execution of judgments against assets blocked by the Iraq sanctions regulations. The President waived 28 U.S.C. § 1610(f)(1) pursuant to the waiver authority clearly granted by Congress in 28 U.S.C. § 1610(f)(3). Moreover, the President's waiver falls squarely within his "'very delicate, plenary and exclusive power . . . as the sole organ of the federal government in the field of international relations — a power which does not require as a basis for its exercise an act of Congress.'" See Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 645, 661 (1981). The President's waiver, therefore, is not subject to judicial review. See generally id. The Frazier Petitioners attempted to avoid the President's waiver by arguing in Frazier I that the President's waiver authority violated the Presentment Clause of the U.S. Constitution. This issue, along with all other issues relating to the President's waiver under 28 U.S.C. 1610(f)(3), have been mooted by TRIA Section 201, which provides a new mechanism for petitioners to seek to attach the assets at issue.

The Frazier Petitioners appear to concede this, as the briefing schedule in Frazier I was repeatedly extended on consent due to the passage of TRIA, and the Frazier II petition relies exclusively on TRIA Section 201. Therefore, it is the Government's understanding that the Frazier I petition is now being brought pursuant to TRIA Section 201 and that the Frazier Petitioners are no longer relying on 28 U.S.C. § 1610(f)(1).

TRIA Section 201

It is the Government's position that, as a result of the passage of TRIA Section 201, certain blocked assets are eligible for attachment and execution notwithstanding 31 C.F.R. § 575.202(e). The petitioners in all three actions must still prove, however, and the Court should determine, that the petitioners have met the requirements of TRIA Section 201 by establishing, for example, that the assets are blocked assets of the terrorist party (or of any agency or instrumentality) against whom judgment was entered, within the meaning of TRIA Section 201. In these actions, the terrorist party is the Republic of Iraq (and, in Frazier I and Frazier II, Saddam Hussein). The petitioners must also comply with any additional procedural requirements for obtaining a writ of execution, which may include, for example, identifying and providing third-party claimants with proper notice.

The Government intends to participate in these actions pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 517 to the extent additional issues arise that implicate federal policy concerns. The Government also respectfully requests that the Court docket this submission in Frazier I, Daliberti, and Frazier II.

Respectfully submitted,

TPO is in OMB as you know under FRA. So you'll want to loop in Phil Perry's office re: any questions about OMB e-mail.

OHS and other WHO e-mail is under the PRA and basically should not be leaving WHO. So yes -- it's fine to tell the IT folks that the answer is no, unless there is specific and individual approval from counsel.

One of our IT branches raised a good issue this morning. As various Homeland Office and TPO folks prepare to leave for the Homeland Department, OA technical staff are anticipating requests to copy their e-mail, network drives and other electronic media to take to the new Department. My general guidance to technical staff is not to fulfill requests to take records to another office or agency unless we receive approval by counsel for the office that owns the records. Are there any particular rules or a process that you would like us to follow when this comes up?

Adam,

There is a process in place to handle requests such as this. The "expert" is Nancy Smith, who works for the National Archives (202) 501-5705. Mike Murphy could contact her, and she will walk him through the process necessary to get the table transferred to the Reagan Library.

If I understood the process as Nancy described it, when the property falls under the control of the White House Curator, an agreement is done between the White House and the "borrower" of the property. Brett Kavanaugh has drafted these agreements and Nancy co-signs them.

If the property does not fall under the control of the White House Curator, there is a different process. Nancy can help Mike with that process as well.

Our Special Projects Office has the table in use as a conference room table. Consistent with our direction from M&A, we'd like to promptly accommodate their request.

Ken-
Ruben wanted me to get your thoughts on a letter we received from NY Sen. Majority Leader Joseph Bruno. His letter is in support of NYC hosting the 2004 Republican National Convention. Is there any particular way you think we should handle this letter? Or would a general "Thank you for your letter" response be adequate? Thanks for your help.

Keith

Adam,

There is a process in place to handle requests such as this. The "expert" is Nancy Smith, who works for the National Archives (202) 501-5705. Mike Murphy could contact her, and she will walk him through the process necessary to get the table transferred to the Reagan Library.

If I understood the process as Nancy described it, when the property falls under the control of the White House Curator, an agreement is done between the White House and the "borrower" of the property. Brett Kavanaugh has drafted these agreements and Nancy co-signs them.

If the property does not fall under the control of the White House Curator, there is a different process. Nancy can help Mike with that process as well.

Subject: Reagan Library Request (Sit Rm Conf Table)

Charlotte/Libby:

A rep from the Reagan Library has called and would like to have the Sit

Rm conference table from the Reagan Administration for a new display in the Reagan Library. Our Special Projects Office has the table in use as a conference room table. Consistent with our direction from M&A,

like to promptly accommodate their request.

Please forward this email to the Associate Counsel who customarily handles such matters. We're standing by to transfer the table, but want to ensure we've accomplished the necessary paperwork and that there are no limiting factors of which we're unaware.

Thanks.

Can someone check to see if today is the day we've planned for "The American people to . . . wake up and discover that they have lost fundamental rights, liberties, and protections that they thought were theirs forever." I'm not quite sure when that's scheduled.

Subject: Ralph Neas' New Year's message to PFAW members

As 2003 begins, I have two messages for PFAW members and activists: thanks for your support, and get ready to rumble! The next 12 to 24 months could determine the law of the land and the shape of our government for the next generation. The country needs us, and we need you!

It is likely that one or two vacancies will give President Bush the chance to put his stamp on the Supreme Court for decades to come. This will be a monumental struggle over the nation,s future. We must prevent ideologues who want to return our Constitution and country to the "states' rights" era from dominating our highest court.

The debate over the federal judiciary is part of an epic battle over the role of the federal government. The two-prong strategy of right-wing Republicans and the Bush administration is simple but breathtakingly radical. First, enact a permanent $6 trillion tax cut targeted primarily to the wealthiest Americans. That will in effect starve the federal government over the next 20 years so that it will be unable to fund many vital governmental functions performed since the New Deal.

The second prong is to pack the federal judiciary with states, rights ideologues whose judicial philosophy would turn back the clock on civil rights, environmental protections, religious liberty, reproductive rights and privacy and so much more.

Take away the money. And then take away legal rights that have been part of our constitutional framework for 65 years. The American people have a right to know what is at stake before they wake up one morning and discover that they have lost fundamental rights, liberties, and protections that they thought were theirs forever.

People For the American Way is going to make sure that we have that national debate) and that Americans understand what is at stake this year.

We,ll provide a clear voice for protecting the Constitution while we protect national security) an even more challenging task if the nation goes to war. We,ll fight to make sure that we invest in stronger public schools and real election reform. And we,ll continue to stand up to efforts by Religious Right activists both inside and outside the government to undermine separation of church and state and eliminate a woman,s right to choose.

That,s a lot to tackle. We can get our message to the American people through creative communications, effective coalition work, intensive grassroots and electronic organizing, and the generous support and activism of people who share our commitment to the best values of the American Way.

It is exciting to be right in the middle of the defining struggles of our time. We,re glad you,re here with us.

interesting tidbit from yesterday's paper. The MS prosecutor who prosecuted Klan leader Sam Bowers in 1998 has asked Judge Pickering to swear him in today.

Helfrich will be sworn in Monday by Pickering
Lea Crager
American Staff Writer A new judge will take his seat on the 12th Circuit Court District bench for the first time in 20 years Monday.
U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering will swear in Bob Helfrich at 11 a.m. in the Forrest County Courthouse's Circuit Courtroom.
Helfrich, 49, said he chose Pickering for the ceremony out of respect.
"It's very likely that he'll be going to the (U.S.) Court of Appeals," he said. "He ought to be going to the Court of Appeals. I've just got a lot of respect for Judge Pickering. You have to realize that in the '60s, Judge Pickering testified against Sam Bowers. He's a man from Jones County who testified against Sam Bowers and the Klan of Jones County. That took a lot of courage."
President Bush last year nominated Pickering for the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, but Democratic senators blocked the appointment.
Bush has said he will renominate Pickering this year for the vacancy.
Helfrich, a former assistant district attorney, defeated five-term incumbent Dicky McKenzie in November.
As a prosecutor, Helfrich prosecuted Jones County Klan leader Sam Bowers in 1998 for the 1966 fire-bombing death of Vernon Dahmer.
Helfrich said he wants to establish a court docket to help clear the backlog of cases, which he estimates to be in the thousands. And he expects to begin work immediately.
"We're going to select a grand jury for this term at 9 a.m. before the ceremony," Helfrich said. "I've got to sit down and go over what's been pre-set and see what we can work around to get into. We're trying to get moved in and get this place organized now."

bc-bush-book - a1850
(ATTN: National editors) (Includes optional trims)
Book by Former Insider Sheds Light on Bush White House (Washn)
By James Gerstenzang
(c) 2003, Los Angeles Times
WASHINGTON ? In the first insider book about the Bush White House, a former speech writer depicts a president who is impatient, quick to anger and sometimes lacking in curiosity, but whose shortcomings are outweighed by his decency and tenacity.
The book, by David Frum, delivers a mixed verdict on the Bush presidency, presenting a look that is at once sharply critical but also unstinting in its praise ? a detailed and complex look at a presidency as it pivoted from an uncertain peacetime policy to lead a nation attacked by terrorists.
In the months before Sept. 11, 2001, Bush was "not on his way to a very successful presidency," writes Frum in "The Right Man," which goes on sale Tuesday. With the exception of chief political aide Karl Rove, Frum views Bush as surrounded by genial lieutenants ? few of whom impressed the author with their intellectual power.
He says Bush himself is often glib ? he would refer to environmentalists as "green-green-lima-beans." Frum also describes Bush as "often uncurious and as a result ill informed" on some matters that Frum does not specify.
But the terrorist attacks, Frum stresses, drew out Bush's greatest strength: His resolve.
"George Bush, the uncertain peacetime president, has been nothing short of superb as a wartime leader," Frum writes.
Confronting a common criticism of the president, Frum also says: "Bush was not a lightweight. He was, rather, a very unfamiliar type of heavyweight. Words often failed him, his memory sometimes betrayed him, but his vision was large and clear. And when he perceived new possibilities, he had the courage to act on them ? a much less common virtue in politics than one might suppose."
Although the account is largely positive, the book is likely to cause an instant ripple because it breaks the Bush White House's code of silence. Almost without exception, the president's aides have refused to air internal disputes or provide unscripted accounts of the president or the workings of his staff.
Asked for comment, Scott McClellan, a deputy White House press secretary, said, "There are a number of books being written that will offer a variety of perspectives" on the administration. He added: "It's not the place of the White House to do book reviews or book promotions."
Frum, a native of Toronto, was credited with drafting the term "axis of evil" to describe Iraq, Iran and North Korea that Bush used in his State of the Union address last January. Frum had submitted his resignation shortly before the speech and was not viewed as having left on bad terms. But he was never part of the president's inner circle.
In contrast to close confidantes who have been at Bush's side since his days as Texas governor, Frum was a conservative writer for the Weekly Standard who was hired as a speech writer several days after the president was inaugurated.

His book provides a more detailed look than previous newspaper or magazine articles of the two aides on whom Bush has relied the most ? Rove and Karen Hughes. The latter left the White House payroll in July to return to Texas with her family, but she still serves as a key adviser to the president.

"Rove was a risk taker and an intellectual. Hughes loathed risk and abhorred ideas. Rove was a reader and a questioner ? a curious man, always eager to learn. Hughes rarely read books and distrusted people who did ? anything she did not already know she saw no point in knowing."

Hughes, he writes, is something of a "mother substitute" for Bush. She alone can criticize him, and when he performs well, he appears to take pride in reporting his success to her.

"She is a very valuable person," Frum says. "She does things for Bush that nobody else would do. Her methods work, time after time, and she has good judgment."

It was Hughes who laid down various rules for speech writers, Frum says: Parents would be referred to as "moms and dads"; "tax cuts" would be called "tax relief," to come across as "a healing balm."

Hughes' office in Texas said she was on her way to Afghanistan, on a State Department mission, and was not available to respond to Frum's comments.

Frum's year helping turn Bush's thoughts into speeches gave him a unique perspective on the president's work habits and leadership.

In the Oval Office, Frum says of his first meeting with the president, "Bush was a sharp exception to the White House code of niceness. He was tart, not sweet."

While even critics would pay tribute to his image of likability, Frum says of the president, "in private, Bush was not the easy, genial man he was in public. Close up, one saw a man keeping a tight grip on himself."

(Begin optional trim)

He also describes Bush as someone whose attention could turn to a single light left burning ? or an entire building of undimmed bulbs. Finishing a practice session before a speech one day, he pointed to a table lamp, and demanded: "Do you think it's going to occur to anybody to turn that lamp off when we leave the room?" He flicked it off himself.

"It vexed him to look out the windows of the White House family quarters before sunrise and see the Executive Office Building bright with lights that had been carelessly left burning overnight," Frum writes.

(End optional trim)

Frum said Monday his goal in writing the book was to present a picture of Bush as he saw him ? without betraying any confidences. "What I wanted to do was present a picture of a man I admire who has a great story to tell," he said.

"The Bush administration is one of the more mysterious administrations America has known. It was my experience that the better I got to know George Bush, the better I liked him, and I thought other people might have that experience," he said.

(Optional add end)

Frum was not impressed with most of Bush's staff.

"One seldom heard an unexpected thought in the Bush White House or met someone who possessed unusual knowledge. Aside from the witty and ingenious Mitch Daniels at the Office of Management and Budget and, of course, Karl Rove, who played the unusual dual role of political guru and leading intellectual, conspicuous intelligence seemed actively unwelcome in the Bush White House," he writes.

As a workplace, the Bush White House is formal ? strictly blue and gray suits for men, few bright colors for women. Language is clean ? even a mild "damn" is frowned on.

Frum, a self-described "not especially observant Jew," found himself working in "the culture of modern Evangelicalism" that prevails.

He added:

"The television show 'The West Wing' might as well have been set aboard a Klingon starship for all it resembled life inside the Bush White House."

David, thanks for taking the time yesterday. I spoke with Ed Moy today, and I guess we'll see where that takes us.

One more thing I wanted to bring to your attention. We recently lost a FOIA case that has serious implications for whether we can protect negotiating documents we share with foreign governments. One solution is to classify all of these documents, but that is a tremendous burden given the range of documents we will have to deal with in the many negotiations we have going on. I have enclosed a brief description of the case, but please don't distribute this as it is a draft and could be harmful if it gets out. I bring this to your attention because of the implications for safeguarding key presidential documents in the area of trade and foreign affairs. We are working with Justice/Civil to stay the decision, and to move forward on an appeal. But, Justice has not yet been convinced that we should appeal, and I could use your help in this regard. Give me a call (or have one of your attorneys) if you have any questions. Thanks.

SUBJECT: FOIA Ruling on Chile FTA Negotiating Documents

ISSUE

In mid-December, DC federal court judge Paul Friedman ruled against us in a suit filed under the Freedom of Information Act seeking all USTR records documents related to our FTA negotiations with Chile. The suit was filed by the Center for International Environmental Law, Friends of the Earth, and Public Citizen. While he found we could properly withhold certain types of documents, Judge Friedman said we had no basis under the FOIA for withholding unclassified negotiating texts and related documents we had exchanged with Chile.

If sustained, the ruling will require us to classify virtually all documents we send to or receive from other governments (or international organizations) in the course of trade negotiations or risk having them made public under the FOIA.

We have requested a stay from Judge Friedman while we consult with the Department of Justice on whether to pursue an appeal.

Background

In their FOIA request, the plaintiffs sought all: 1) documents exchanged with Chile containing either government's negotiating positions, and 2) internal USTR and interagency documents generated in developing U.S. negotiating positions. The judge found that we had grounds under the FOIA for withholding the second category of documents, since some were classified and others reflected intra- or inter-agency deliberations.

The negotiating documents (proposed texts, minutes of meetings, and summaries of negotiations) were not classified and so we could not argue they could be withheld on that basis. Instead, we said the court should view them as intra- or inter-agency deliberative in character and thus exempt from disclosure – despite the fact that they had been exchanged with Chile.

We argued that the negotiating documents we exchanged with Chile were part of a protracted deliberative exercise by USTR and other USG agencies on the text of a final free trade agreement with Chile. The fact that we exchanged those documents with a foreign government, we argued, did not change their deliberative nature. We cited precedent under which courts have routinely read the FOIA exemption for agency-deliberative documents to apply even they are provided to outside experts for advice in agency decision-making.

The plaintiffs pointed to Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1 (2001) to support their argument that the negotiating documents lost any agency-deliberative character they might have when we exchanged them with Chile. In Klamath, the Supreme Court said that when an agency shares information with an outside entity having an interest in a government benefit, such as the distribution of water rights in the Klamath Valley, the government must share the information with all parties interested in the water rights.

We argued that our exchange of documents with Chile was not covered by Klamath because our negotiations with Chile were consultative rather than adversarial in nature. The exchange of negotiating texts, we said, was part of a collaborative effort to craft a final agreement that benefitted both governments. The court disagreed, holding that our negotiations with Chile were at least in partly adversarial and thus any documents we exchanged with Chile could not be characterized as entirely advisory in character. For that reason, the court said, we had no ground for protecting the documents from disclosure under FOIA.

If the ruling is not reversed, we will need to classify all documents we provide to or receive from our trading partners or international organizations if we do not want them to be made public in response to a FOIA request. Our understanding is that the State Department routinely classifies its exchanges with other governments. Over the years, our practice has varied somewhat, but we have normally sought to classify only our most trade-sensitive negotiating proposals. That approach is in line with recent Executive Orders seeking to limit the amount of materials agencies classify. It also reduces the administrative burdens associated with safeguarding and distributing classified materials. However, after we received the FOIA request for the Chile documents, we began classifying all negotiating documents in both the Chile and Singapore FTA negotiations.

The Senate Judiciary Committee requires nominees to (1) "list sources and amount of income received during the calendar year preceding the nomination" or, alternatively, to provide a copy of "the financial disclosure report, required by the Ethic in Government act of 1978" (i.e., the SF-278) and (2) complete a "the financial net worth statement in detail" and "[a]dd schedules as called for." Note: The "Financial Statement: Net Worth" form provided by the Senate Judiciary Committee says nothing of a $1,000 disclosure floor. I have a hard copy of that form and am happy to fax it if it is helpful. What's your fax number?

I am not aware of any other standard form used by the White House -- other than the 278s or the SJC's net worth form.

Brett or Kyle --

Senate Gov't Affairs Comm. staff say that WHCO has used a standard form (or maybe they mean a standard format) for the net worth statement they require for nominees like Gov. Ridge. What they ask for is "a personal financial statement which identifies and states the value of all assets of $1,000 or more".

Do we have/use a form or format for such a personal financial statement? (Obviously we can fashion a basic, ala carte net worth statement, but they seem to be insisting that WHCO uses a standardized format.)

Pls let me know if you have any such samples or models. Thanks -- E.

Bush Renominates Pickering, Other Judges

By JESSE J. HOLLAND
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- President Bush has renominated appellate court nominees Charles Pickering of Mississippi and Priscilla Owen of Texas, who were rejected by the Democrat-controlled Senate last year but will likely have a better shot of confirmation under the newly Republican-controlled chamber.

Pickering and Owen's nominations were returned to the Senate on Tuesday along with 28 other judicial nominations who were not considered by the full Senate last year. Pickering and Owen, however, were the only two who were specifically rejected last year by the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

"All judicial nominees deserve consideration by the full Senate," White House spokeswoman Ashley Snee said.

There was some question about whether Pickering, who was accused of being racially insensitive by Democrats, would be renominated after one of his patrons, Sen. Trent Lott, stepped down as Senate GOP leader after making racially insensitive remarks.

And Senate Democrats immediately pledged to do whatever they could to keep Pickering from getting a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, including a possible filibuster of the nomination.

"Unfortunately, they have not learned from the Trent Lott episodes and I am going to do everything I can to stop the Pickering nomination from going forward," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

Pickering, a U.S. District judge in Hattiesburg, Miss., and a Lott friend, was blocked by Senate Democrats last year after civil rights groups accused him of racial insensitivity.

"Those accusations ring hollow," Snee said. "These nominees have earned bipartisan support and respect from those who know them."

Owen also was voted down by the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee last year while seeking a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Democrats complained that Owen has been an anti-abortion and pro-business judicial activist whose opinions and rulings were overly influenced by her personal beliefs.

After almost sweeping the November elections, Republicans - behind new Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist of Tennessee - now control the Senate by a 51-48-1 margin, with independent Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont voting with the Democrats.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, "is pleased that the president is acting as soon as possible on nominations. We have a lot of leftover work to do," spokeswoman Margarita Tapia said.

Pickering's opponents have said that in view of Lott's comments, the White House should not renominate the Mississippi judge.

Lott triggered an uproar last month when he said that Mississippians were proud to have voted for retired South Carolina Sen. Strom Thurman in 1948 on the pro-segregationist Dixiecrat ticket. "And if the rest of the country had followed our lead, we wouldn't have had all these problems over all these years either," Lott said.

Lott said last month that he expected Pickering's opponents to invoke his name in opposition to the Mississippi judge. "Obviously people will try to use it against him," Lott said. "They used a lot of things against him last time that were very unfair."

Senate Democrats say Pickering's renomination shows the GOP did not learn anything from Lott's controversy.

"Given the encouraging rhetoric of this administration on civil rights over the last few weeks, it's astonishing that when it's time to match that rhetoric with real action they nominate Charles Pickering to serve on the second highest court in the nation," said Sen. Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Kennedy said Democrats "will use every tool in our arsenal to ensure that his nomination is rejected again this year."

Pickering was defeated 10-9 in committee last March after civil rights groups said he supported segregation as a young man in Mississippi. Pickering's opponents also pointed to his conservative voting record as a Mississippi state lawmaker and decisions as a judge.

Pickering's supporters, including some Mississippi Democrats and black leaders, said Pickering supported civil rights efforts as far back as the middle 1960s.

The Senate last year confirmed 100 of Bush's 131 appellate and district court nominees under Democratic control. Bush plans on making new judicial nominations before the end of April, Snee said.

Bush Reopens Partisan Fight with 31 Judicial Nominations
BYLINE: By Ron Hutcheson

BODY:
WASHINGTON -- Reopening a partisan fight on the first day of the new Congress, President Bush on Tuesday resubmitted 31 judicial nominations that had stalled in the Democratic-controlled Senate last year.

The move signaled Bush's determination to make the most of the new Republican Senate majority and revived a racially charged debate over Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, a candidate for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Liberal critics had charged that Pickering is suspect in his attitudes on race. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said Democrats would fight Pickering's nomination "with every tool in our arsenal."

Other controversial nominees on the president's list of candidates included Priscilla Owen of Texas for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals and Miguel Estrada of Virginia for the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Liberals say both are extreme ideological conservatives. The White House denies it.

Bush resubmitted the nominations hours after Republicans took control of the Senate, where they hold a narrow 51-48-1 majority thanks to the November elections. Twenty-nine of the 31 judicial nominees did not come to a vote in the last Congress, when Democrats were in charge. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee blocked the other two -- Pickering and Owen -- in straight party-line votes.

Democrats pounced on the resubmitted Pickering nomination as a chance to revive the racial controversy that led to Mississippi Sen. Trent Lott's ouster as Republican leader last month. Sen. Bill Frist of Tennessee replaced Lott as majority leader after a furor over Lott's seeming embrace of past segregation.

Critics contend that Pickering, a close friend of Lott's who serves as a federal district judge, was friendly with segregationist groups as a Mississippi state legislator in the 1970s. He also has been accused of being overly lenient with a defendant in a 1994 case involving a group of whites who burned a cross outside the home of a mixed-race couple.

In a statement, Kennedy called Pickering's resubmitted nomination astonishing in light of the Lott controversy.

"Judge Pickering's record reflects a hostility to civil rights and a vision of the Republican Party that reminds Americans of a painful time in our nation's history," Kennedy said.

White House officials accused Democrats of distorting Pickering's record. The Senate had unanimously confirmed his nomination to the district court, and he won endorsements from prominent African-Americans in his home state.

"Such accusations ring hollow to anyone who independently reviews the facts and records," White House spokeswoman Ashley Snee said. "The nominees have earned bipartisan support and praise from those who know them best."

Democrats also contend that Owen and Estrada are conservative extremists who would use their authority to promote their views. Owen serves on the Texas Supreme Court. Estrada, a lawyer in private practice, once worked at the Justice Department.

President Renominating Federal Judge Lott Backed (NYTimes)

The New York Times, January 08, 2003

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 - President Bush said tonight that he was renominating Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi to a federal appeals court, a step that will almost certainly set off a Senate debate over racial issues reminiscent of those that toppled Senator Trent Lott as majority leader.

Mr. Bush also named 30 other candidates for federal judgeships, many of them nominated, but like Judge Pickering not confirmed, in the last Congressional session, when Democrats controlled the Senate.

Judge Pickering, of the Federal District Court in Hattiesburg, Miss., seeks a seat on the federal appeals court in New Orleans. Mr. Bush initially nominated him largely at the behest of Mr. Lott, a longtime political supporter from Judge Pickering's home state. But the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected the nomination along party lines last March, after heated arguments over his record on civil rights in Mississippi.

Administration officials said at the time that Judge Pickering had been treated unfairly, and they planned to have the president renominate him after the new Senate convened this month under Republican control.

But that plan became uncertain when a firestorm developed over Mr. Lott's praise in December for the 1948 presidential candidacy of Strom Thurmond, who ran on a segregationist platform.

Senior Justice Department officials then recommended against Judge Pickering's renomination, fearing that the administration would otherwise be inviting a painful debate on the issue of race and how Southern Republicans like Mr. Lott and Judge Pickering had treated it.

Officials said today that the White House had wavered on whether to renominate the judge. One important reason Mr. Bush decided to go ahead, they said, was a belief that he had accumulated substantial political capital on race by severely criticizing Mr. Lott's comments on the Thurmond candidacy.

"By taking on a member of his own party over race," one official said, "he gained significant moral standing that can be used to argue that Judge Pickering is a good man whose record should not be distorted."

Last session's debate about Judge Pickering, who turns 66 this spring, raised the question of how accountable a white Southerner should be for positions taken early in a career, during a different era.

His critics have described him as a throwback to the days of segregation, citing among other things an article he wrote as a law student in 1959 that seemed to urge a strengthening of the state's anti-miscegenation laws.

At his committee hearing last February, Judge Pickering said he had never opposed mixed marriages. But detractors have pointed to his extraordinary efforts from the bench, after becoming a federal judge in 1990, to reduce the sentence of a man convicted of burning a cross on the lawn of a mixed-race couple.

The committee debate also touched on Mr. Pickering's contacts, as a state legislator in the 1970's, with the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, created by the state in 1956 to take the lead in preserving segregation.

Yet his supporters asserted that over the course of decades in Mississippi's turbulent racial atmosphere, Mr. Pickering acted honorably, even testifying against members of the Ku Klux Klan at a murder trial in the 1960's, when it was dangerous to do so. After that, he lost a run for re-election as a local prosecutor.

The Republicans hold 51 of the Senate's 100 seats. So if they stand together, the nomination can be defeated only through a filibuster, which would require 60 votes to break. Tonight Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, appeared to threaten one.

"We will use every tool in our arsenal," Mr. Kennedy said, "to ensure that his nomination is rejected again this year."

Mr. Bush said that like Judge Pickering, Justice Priscilla Owen of the Texas Supreme Court was being renominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The Judiciary Committee rejected Justice Owen's nomination in September after Democrats accused her of injecting her personal views opposing abortion into her state judicial opinions.

The other candidates announced by Mr. Bush tonight included Miguel Estrada and John Roberts, Washington lawyers who have argued many cases before the Supreme Court, both nominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and Justice Deborah Cook of the Ohio Supreme Court and Jeffrey Sutton, an Ohio lawyer, both nominated to the Sixth Circuit court, in Cincinnati.

Bush Sends Senate 31 Judicial Nominations (WTimes)

Stephen Dinan and Amy Fagan

The Washington Times, January 08, 2003

President Bush yesterday sent 31 judicial nominees to the Senate, including renominations of several candidates whom the Democrats blocked last year when they controlled the Judiciary Committee.

Among the names is U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr., who Mr. Bush wants to serve on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. His nomination was rejected on a party-line vote in the Judiciary Committee last year.

The list also includes Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Richman Owen for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Miguel A. Estrada, who the administration wants to serve on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

White House spokeswoman Ashley Snee said the two judges had been nominated previously but never received a full Senate vote.

Submitting the names sets up the first big challenge for the new majority, and Republicans said they were anxious to get to work on the nominees.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican, "is pleased that the president is acting as soon as possible on nominations. We have a lot of leftover work to do," said Margarita Tapia, a spokeswoman for Mr. Hatch, the incoming Judiciary Committee chairman.

But the nominations can't move until the two parties resolve how committees will be organized. As the majority party, Republicans will eventually control the gavel, but Democrats are demanding near-parity in committee staff and funding.

Without a new agreement, last year's arrangements remain in place, and that means Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, still holds the Judiciary chairmanship and can block action.

"It depends on when the Democratic minority lets the Republican majority have chairmanships of committees," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican and a member of the Judiciary panel. "As soon as they do, we'll move forward."

Democrats said they will do what they can to block Judge Pickering in particular.

"Judge Pickering's record reflects a hostility to civil rights and a vision of the Republican Party that reminds Americans of a painful time in our nation's history," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat and a senior member of the Judiciary Committee, who promised that Democrats will "use every tool in our arsenal to ensure that his nomination is rejected again this year."

Judge Pickering's chief supporter was Sen. Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, who was forced to resign as Senate Republican leader last month after he made comments some took as an endorsement of segregation. Democrats are bound to note that in their opposition.

But Rep. Charles W. "Chip" Pickering Jr., Mississippi Republican and the judge's son, yesterday said the renomination showed Mr. Bush's confidence in his father and said Judge Pickering's past had been distorted during last year's hearings.

"My father's record is one of fighting the Klan and supporting integration in his children's schools and working for reconciliation," the congressman said.

He said he sees his father's nomination as a chance for Mr. Bush to continue the theme from his Philadelphia speech criticizing Mr. Lott.

"He can now have the opportunity to challenge leaders of the other party to stop using the issue of race to divide our country for political gain," Mr. Pickering said.

Ms. Snee also disputed Democrats' characterization of Judge Pickering.

"These accusations ring hollow to anyone who reviews the facts and the records," she said, pointing out that Judge Pickering was "unanimously confirmed [as a district judge] by the Senate 12 years ago."

President Renominates Miss. Judge, 29 Others

By Mike Allen and Charles Lane
Washington Post Staff Writers
Wednesday, January 8, 2003; Page A01

Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi, who was rejected for a federal appellate judgeship last year by Democrats who questioned his commitment to civil rights, was renominated by President Bush yesterday just hours after Republicans took control of the Senate.

Bush asked the Senate to consider 29 other candidates for federal judgeships who had been blocked or defeated when Democrats controlled the Senate. Among them is Priscilla R. Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice who was voted down in September by Democrats who objected to her anti-abortion views and said she was anti-labor.

Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.) is a longtime Pickering friend and was his chief promoter. Democratic officials said they were stunned Bush would reopen the fight so soon after Lott resigned as Senate Republican leader because of outrage over his praise for the segregationist presidential ticket of 1948.

The White House announcement, made at dinnertime on the day Bush unveiled his economic plan, seemed designed to minimize attention. A senior administration official said the timing was worked out with Senate Republican leaders, who wanted to immediately begin reconsidering the nominations -- one of the major advan- tages to a GOP Senate that Bush cited while campaigning this fall.

"We were eager to allow well-qualified judges to get a fair hearing," the official said. "We don't believe many of them got a fair hearing the first time around under the Democrat control."

The official voiced hearty support for Pickering, a federal district judge from Hattiesburg whose nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, in New Orleans, was rejected last March. The official said Lott's comment, which Bush condemned, presented "a completely different issue from the gross distortions about Judge Pickering, including the alleged intent of writings from his days in college, when he has the support of many black leaders and testified against the Ku Klux Klan."

The new majority leader, Sen. Bill Frist (R-Tenn.), supports Pickering, an aide said.

The Judiciary Committee chairman, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) plans to schedule hearings swiftly, an aide said.

Pickering and Owen, also nominated for the 5th Circuit, were defeated in the Judiciary Committee. Like most of Bush's failed nominees, they were never considered on the Senate floor.

Bush's announcement galvanized Democrats on the day they yielded control of the Senate to Republicans after 19 months in the majority. Democrats said they viewed the nominations as a hostile opening move by Bush and portended a rancorous session.

A Democratic Senate strategist said opposition to Pickering and Owen remains "deep and wide," and aides said several senators would filibuster if necessary. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) said he found the Pickering nomination astonishing, "given the encouraging rhetoric of this administration on civil rights over the last few weeks."

Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), referring to racially divisive tactics of past Republican campaigns, said the Pickering decision "shows that Nixon's 'southern strategy' is alive and well in this White House."

Liberal groups began hastily organizing opposition campaigns last night. Kate Michelman, president of the abortion rights group NARAL Pro-Choice America, said Pickering and Owen "were rejected specifically because of their hostility to the civil and constitutional rights of women and African Americans."

Other prospective judges whose candidacies were revived were Miguel A. Estrada and John G. Roberts Jr., nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, which is often called the second-most powerful court in the land after the Supreme Court. They now seem assured of speedy confirmation.

Estrada, a 41-year-old Washington lawyer often considered a possible choice as the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court, was granted a hearing last September, but the committee did not vote on his nomination. Roberts, also a lawyer in Washington who once served as a law clerk to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, has not received a hearing.

The confirmation of Estrada and Roberts would tilt the D.C. Circuit to the right. Currently, its membership is split evenly, 4 to 4, between appointees of Democratic and Republican presidents.

Bush's nominees would also change the ideological complexion of the left-leaning U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, in Cincinnati. That court is split 6 to 4 in favor of the Democratic appointees. Of the 6th Circuit nominees, Jeffrey Sutton, drew fire from disability rights groups for his successful advocacy in the Supreme Court on behalf of states seeking immunity from private lawsuits under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Bush's determination to proceed with his nominees shows the strong influence on this issue of the Republican Party's conservative wing, for whom the future of the judiciary is a paramount issue. "Everyone on the right agreed in 2000 that judicial nominations were the single most important reason to be for Bush," said Clint Bolick, a former Justice Department official in the Reagan administration.

Besides the 30 nominees for appellate and U.S. District courts, Bush nominated 10 judges for other federal courts, including Fern Flanagan Saddler to be an associate judge of D.C. Superior Court.

Hamdi case

- The U.S. Court of Appeals today concluded -- unanimously -- that the United States has acted lawfully in detaining Yaser Hamdi as an enemy combatant.

    - The Court observed that Hamdi was captured in a zone of active combat in a foreign theater of conflict, and the Court pointed out that the Supreme Court had ruled previously that "citizenship in the United States of an enemy belligerent does not relieve him from the consequences of a belligerency which is unlawful."

    - Based on that Supreme Court precedent, the Court of Appeals concluded that "one who takes up arms against the United States in a foreign theater of war, regardless of his citizenship, may properly be designated an enemy combatant and treated as such."

    - The Court noted that Hamdi is "not any American citizen alleged to be an enemy combatant by the government; he is an American citizen captured and detained by American allied forces in a foreign theater of war during active hostilities and determined by the United States military to have been indeed allied with enemy forces."

Thanks, Brad! Do we want to see if DoJ can crunch some comparison numbers? Like, our %s compared to past administrations or compared to the current level of African Americans on the bench? Or even compared to the % of African Americans represented in the legal field (the pool from which we select judges). I'm just thinking it might be helpful for all of us to have these stats...

For circuit and district seats, the President has nominated African-Americans to 3 of the 32 circuit seats (9.4%) and to 8 of the 98 district court seats (8.2%), for an overall total of 11 of 130 (8.5%).

Senate Repub Policy Committee (Kyl) is pulling together a doc that is essentially a counter to the Dem's allegations that Repubs are anti-civil rights. Along these lines, they would like to know how many african americans we've nominated to the federal bench. Do we have any stats on this kind of thing? They also expect that the number isn't that high, so they'd like our help in "spinning" it the right way (like maybe comparing the numbers/percentages to past administrations?)

Anything like this floating around?

Adam,
; I received an OA65 today requesting that we copy to CD all data from the computer of Barbara Chaffee so she can take it with her to TPO and then DHS. It states in the remarks that Brett Kavanaugh approved this action. Is that approval a green light for us to complete the request for her? Thanks. Bart (x50945)

Op-Ed on Pickering from Mobile Register:

Attack on Pickering shows rank hypocrisy
01/10/03

PUT YOURSELF, hypothetically, in the shoes of a Democrat in the U.S. Senate.
President Bush has nominated a federal district judge from Mississippi to be promoted to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and you must decide whether to approve the nomination. But this judge isn't a stereotypical Mississippi Republican.
Back in 1967, he testified in a murder trial against members of the Ku Klux Klan when it likely was dangerous to do so -- and lost his run for re-election as a local prosecutor as a result. He has testified that he believes anti-miscegenation statutes are unconstitutional. He led the effort to establish the Institute of Racial Reconciliation at the University of Mississippi.
Black leaders in Mississippi, including four of the five black city council members in his hometown of Laurel, support the judge's promotion almost unanimously. The fifth councilman objects on the odd grounds that the judge worked in favor of integrating a school system. And Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, wrote a column for The Wall Street Journal supporting the judge.
It is true that the judge has been criticized for efforts to reduce the sentence of a man convicted in a cross-burning case. But prosecutors from the Civil Rights Division of President Clinton's Justice Department eventually agreed that the judge was correct -- in part, effectively, because they had erred by letting the two more culpable violators in the three-person crime escape with no prison sentences at all.
When the judge sentenced the third man to 27 months in jail, the judge told him: "The type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated. ... You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act. ... I would suggest to you that during the time you're in prison that you do some reading on race relations and maintaining good race relations."
Frank Hunger, the assistant U.S. attorney general under Janet Reno, had spoken at length about the case with the judge. Mr. Hunger, an active Democrat, is Al Gore's brother-in-law. Mr. Hunger supports the judge's nomination.
For that matter, the American Bar Association -- called by Senate Democrats "the gold standard" in determining a nominee's fitness -- has proclaimed the judge "well qualified" for the new post.

Back in 1990, both the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate approved the nominee -- unanimously -- for the district judgeship he now holds.
Among today's leading Senate Democrats who approved the nomination then are former Judiciary Committee Chairman Pat Leahy of Vermont, Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts, and potential 2004 presidential contender Joseph Biden of Delaware.
If you're a Senate Democrat, wouldn't you feel good about voting for this judge?
Maybe so, but the Democrats on the Judiciary Committee last year killed the nomination of this judge, Charles Pickering, without even letting it receive a vote by the full Senate. They said they objected to his ruling on the cross-burning case, and on a theoretical legal essay on interracial marriage that he wrote in 1959.
Now that President Bush has renominated Judge Pickering, New York's senior Democratic senator, Charles Schumer, says the nomination is evidence that the Bush administration "wants the courts to become the sword that destroys" the "basic civil rights in this country."
Sen. Schumer's attack on Judge Pickering is despicable. The Senate ought to confirm the judge's promotion, and quickly.

Kathy,

Brett handles the rules on allocating and accounting for trips between political and official when it is a mixed trip so I will leave it to his judgment. I get involved when an outside group is actually furnishing the tickets/meals/hotel and a "Travel Expense from Outside Source" form is needed. For the Lincoln Club of Northern California, the bylaws they sent are helpful, but I would also note their website states:

The Lincoln Club of Northern California is the preeminent organization of Republican business and community leaders in the greater Bay Area, with membership from Monterey to Sacramento.ÿ

ÿ ÿ Its primary purpose is to identify, recruit, and elect quality Republican candidates to federal, state and local office.ÿ Through the caliber of its members and the success of their efforts, The Lincoln Club has gained high respect and a reputation for strong leadership among Republican office holders and the public.

Ruben will be traveling to California for three speeches. Two of the organization's have political affilations that may me wonder if I should have them cover a portion of the expenses. The Lincoln Club of Northern California sent me a brief overview of their organization including tax status. Could you clarify if this would be approved official travel? Under a separate email I will forward background on the New Majority (another group with political leanings) they would like Ruben to address a luncheon in Orange County. If not sanctioned as official travel, I would like to split the ticket between official and political.

Tentative Schedule
DEP Washington en route to San Francisco
Address Lincoln Club
DEP San Francisco to John Wayne Airport
Address New Majority in Orange County
DEP Orange County en route to Los Angeles
Address CA State Legislators at event sponsored by UCLA School of Government
DEP Los Angeles en route to Washington

Thanks,
Kathy

I think these answers would suggest a brief where we embraced the Powell opinion, embraced diversity as a compelling governmental interest, and expressly embraced the idea that race could be a factor in admissions. Assuming we file the narrow tailoring brief that I think will be filed, that is all inaccurate. Instead, we should say:

Q: Why is the Michigan program unconstitutional? Isn't diversity a compelling government interest? Isn't ensuring that minorities are represented in colleges a compelling government interest?

A: The Michigan program is unconstitutional because race-neutral programs should be employed, where possible, to achieve the goal of ensuring diversity and ensuring that minorities have access to and are represented in universities. And we know from Texas, Florida, and California that such race-neutral programs in fact will work to ensure diversity and ensure that minorities have access to and are represented in universities. Diversity and remedying the continuing effects of societal discrimination against minorities are very important goals, but they must be achieved where possible through race-neutral programs such as the Texas program.

Q: You say "where possible." What if race-neutral programs do not work?

A: They do work, as we have seen in Texas, Florida, and California. And if there were ever a case where they did not work, then the courts would assess a university's admissions program under the standards that the Supreme Court has outlined for such circumstances.

Q: Is your position consistent with that of Justice Powell in Bakke?

A: Ensuring diversity and ensuring that minorities are represented in universities are very important goals, but must be achieved where possible through race-neutral programs such as the Texas program. The need to employ race-neutral programs, where possible, to achieve diversity is a consistent element of Supreme Court opinions over the past 20 years. And we know that these race-neutral programs work. (Justice Powell's opinion does not address the question whether race-neutral programs can achieve these goals.)

Q: If the goal of advancing diversity and ensuring that minorities are represented are permissible goals, why is it that a university must choose race-neutral programs rather than race-based programs to achieve those goals? Is there any real difference?

A: There is a real difference because race-neutral programs treat us all as individuals and do not define us solely as members of racial groups. That is why the Supreme Court has emphasized that race-neutral programs must be the first choice and race-based programs employed only as a last resort.

Policy: Brief opposing the Michigan Plan, but not ruling out other efforts to promote diversity

Education plays a unique role in our society) it provides the foundation that launches people on the path to opportunity and achievement.; ;The educational experience becomes richer and more valuable when it includes voices and viewpoints from many perspectives.;; For these reasons, institutions of higher education have a compelling governmental interest in obtaining a student body that reflects America,s diverse heritage. ;

Unfortunately, the Michigan admissions policies made race an overwhelming factor in deciding admissions, and are impossible to square with the Constitution.; Michigan,s admissions policies ignore the fact that race-neutral policies like the Texas 10 Percent Plan, the Florida One plan, and California,s &Comprehensive Review8 plan have achieved diversity without using race at all.; Because diversity in education can be achieved in a race-neutral manner, the Michigan race-conscious programs are invalid.;

Q. Do you mean by &diversity in education8 racial diversity?
R. As stated by Justice Powell, the constitutionally permissible goal for an institution of higher education is not racial diversity; it is diversity that &encompasses a far broader array of qualifications and characteristics of which racial or ethnic origin is but a single though important element.8

Q. What justifies this compelling governmental interest in diversity in education?; Is it diversity to benefit an individual applicant?
R. Enormous educational value is gained by having a student body that is diverse because a great deal of learning occurs informally.; The broader the views and ideas being exchanged, the more the entire student body benefits.

Q. Michigan asserts that racial and ethnic diversity is a compelling governmental interest.; Do you agree with that assertion?
R. Achieving racial or ethnic diversity purely for the sake of racial or ethnic diversity is not the point.; The point is to have a diverse student body, and a prospective student,s race or ethnicity is just one factor a school should look at when it decides whether to accept the applicant, along with academic success, geography, economic status, and life history.

Q. If diversity is the desired goal, why wouldn,t quotas be the most narrowly tailored means of achieving it? Quotas would more directly ensure diversity that reflects America,s heritage it attained.
R. Attaining a diverse student body does not mean enrolling a class that is statistically parallel with the ethnic population in America.; Each applicant must be treated as an individual in the process, and must be analyzed on the basis of the combination of qualifications and attribute he or she possesses.; It does not assist diversity to enroll 20 upper class Hispanic male candidates from Detroit in a class that also includes 20 upper class white males from Detroit, and 20 upper class black males from Detroit.; Diversity does not require racial diversity) a disadvantaged white female from Miami would add diversity to a class largely populated with middle class males from Indiana.

Q. Isn,t this policy unfair to non-minority rejected applicants with higher academic credentials than minority applicants who are accepted?; Doesn,t this policy discriminate against them?
R. Universities consistently apply non-academic factors when making acceptance decisions.; The athlete, the thespian, the legacy, the person who has lived abroad) these and endless other non-academic qualities are factors routinely taken into account.; But candidates of identical backgrounds should not be treated differently purely because of race.; And everyone should have the opportunity to be considered as an individual.

Q. If diversity can be achieved through race-neutral admissions policies such as that in Texas, why should the Court depart from its general rule that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are intended to remedy carefully documented effects of past discrimination?
R. We agree the Court need not reach that question, because the Michigan policies do not survive the narrow tailoring prong of the suspect classification analysis.

Q. Doesn,t this policy &split the difference,8 without really answering the essential question of whether race can be a factor in admissions?

R. No.; There are two essential principles in question here, diversity and equal treatment.; The President believes that universities, as well as other institutions, can achieve the goal of diversity without resorting to unconstitutional behavior such as unequal treatment.;

You reviewed these facts, correct?

In the programs under review by the Supreme Court, the University of Michigan has established an admissions process based on race.; At the undergraduate level, African American students, some Hispanic students, and American Indian students receive 20 points out of a maximum of 150 not because of any academic achievement or life experience, but solely because they are African American, Hispanic or Native American.; To put this in perspective, a perfect SAT score is worth only 12 points under the Michigan system.; Students who accumulate 100 points are generally admitted, and so those twenty points awarded solely based on race are often the decisive factor.; At the law school, some minority students are admitted to meet percentage targets, while other applicants with higher grades and better scores are passed over.; This means that students are being selected or rejected based primarily on the color of their skin.; The motivation for such an admissions policy may be very good, but its result is discrimination, and that discrimination is wrong.;

Hatch Reacts to Administration's Position on Michigan Racial Discrimination Case

Washington - Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) today issued the following statement in response to President Bush's announcement on the Michigan racial discrimination case:

"I am pleased that today President Bush has shown that his administration shares Dr. King's vision for a color blind society. The President's position on the Michigan cases reflects the tradition of Lincoln, the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution, and the Civil Rights legislation of the 1950's and 1960's.

"I share the President's belief that diversity is beneficial in higher education, but that the University of Michigan's diversity rationale cannot justify discrimination on the basis of a person's skin color or national origin. Michigan's racial preference system for admissions is fatally flawed under our Constitution.

"I am especially motivated to support the administration's decision to enter the Michigan cases given the unfortunate procedural clouds that have followed these cases as shockingly detailed in the extraordinary dissenting opinion of Circuit Judge Danny Boggs, suggesting inappropriate manipulation of rules and procedure on the 6th Circuit in the pursuit of a particular result.

"I urge the President to pursue the Top Ten Percent policy he implemented in Texas. The administration should applaud the University of Georgia, which has increased minority enrollment despite elimination of racial quotas in admissions. Diversity in our society and educational system is and should be our goal, however, discrimination based on race to achieve such diversity is an ill-advised and failed means to achieve such a goal.

"I also urge the administration to advocate the promotion of alternatives to the tired policies of race-based discrimination to achieve diversity in education. Such programs include economic-based affirmative action that gives a hand to young people from disadvantaged communities. I believe that such reinvention of affirmative action will be more effective to advancing a color-blind society and welcomed by the American people of all races. Americans of all races and ethnicities aspire to equal opportunity for all and oppose discrimination toward any race. In my opinion Michigan's program fails in this aspiration."

same conclusion as in e-mail below is contained an amicus brief on web that was just filed in support of petitioners (by Covington & Burling for Natl Association of Scholars). The brief concludes that the Brennan opinion in Bakke is actually the narrowest ground re use of race as a factor -- and thus argues that race can be used as a factor in admissions only if narrowly tailored to remedy past discrimination and that Michigan hs not met that standard here.

At some point, the tension Noel notes will become an issue. A very, very, very technical answer to the tension (which I discussed with Paul) is that the Court's stamp of approval for the Harvard plan was predicated on the consideration of race being deemed "necess[ary]" to ensure minority representation (see footnote 1 of Brennan opinion, the conclusion of which is narrower on the Harvard-plan issue than Powell's opinion), and we have shown that race is not necessary in 2003 to ensure minority representation in higher educational institutions given the available race-neutral alternatives. So the brief's analytical framework is consistent with the analytical framework in Bakke. But this obviously raises as many questions as it answers, and we almost certainly never want to get down to this level of discussion.

Larry Thompson asked me to communicate his view that we should stress the bigotry and stereotyping inherent in the diversity rationale in that it assumes there is a black way of thinking.; This is obviously not a point that would be highlighted by our focus on narrow tailoring in the context of Michigan, but for what it's worth I pulled this from one of his speeches:
BLACKS AS PROSECUTORS

;;;;;As we reflect on the conduct of this war and our role in it as prosecutors, it is evident that African-Americans share the same aspirations to liberty and the same threat of harm as all of our countrymen. Now more than ever, these principles of liberty serve as the bulwark of our nation against the assaults of terrorism. As our country wages war against a tenacious and ruthless enemy, we stand together first as simply Americans.

;;;;;When I look around the administration in Washington, I find myself but one of a sizable - and influential - number of African-Americans in positions of authority, especially in our nation's fight against terrorism.

;;;;;I believe all of you know 2 of them: Secretary of State Colin Powell and National Security Advisor Dr. Condoleezza Rice -- two of President Bush's closest advisors.

;;;;;But, there are others:

;;;;;There is Ambassador Frank Taylor, who is in charge of the State Department's counter-terrorism efforts. Before we launched the military offensive against the Taliban, Amb. Taylor traveled the world making the case against Bin Laden.

;;;;;There is also Deputy Secretary of Health and Human Services, Claude Allen. Mr. Allen is responsible for our country's war against chemical and biological terrorism. He is coordinating our country's medical and scientific efforts against the anthrax attack we experienced some time ago.

;;;;;Within the Justice Department, the Assistant Attorneys General in charge of Civil Rights and Antitrust are also both African-Americans, as well as being distinguished lawyers. They direct policy on many of the major matters affecting our economy and our liberties.

;;;;;My friend and colleague Alphonso Jackson, the Deputy Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development is an influential advocate on a range of issues that effect cities across the country and a close advisor to the President.

;;;;;As much as we have in common as Americans, we in the black community enjoy the same right as other Americans to have individual views, something black prosecutors must have. As African-Americans, we know better than anyone that we are not a monolithic people. And we should not allow anyone to try to put all of our thoughts into one column or fit all of our dreams into one box.

;;;;;Remember what Dr. Martin Luther King once said:

"Many people fear nothing more terribly than to take a position which stands out sharply and clearly from the prevailing opinion."

;;;;;It is in this context that I want to address the criticism some have leveled: that blacks should never be prosecutors because we cannot single-handedly defeat racism present in the criminal justice system. We all know from our personal experience the tensions that arise where a significant majority of prosecutors are white, while a substantial number of criminal defendants are minorities.

;;;;;One of the things that was striking to me when I was in private practice was that, as I had an opportunity to litigate cases against each and every litigating division of the Department of Justice, I seldom saw a minority attorney representing the government across the negotiating table or in federal court. That was puzzling to me since I knew there are talented minority attorneys all across the country.

;;;;;As Deputy Attorney General, one of my priorities is working on diversifying the ranks of the Department. Attorney General Ashcroft and I are dedicated to making the Department's diversity plan work in as meaningful and effective a way as possible. We plan to do this, not only for the legal divisions at Justice, but also for the FBI, DEA, U.S. Marshals and all other agencies at the Department. In fact, for those of you here today who are law students or judicial clerks, I invite you to apply to join us at the Department of justice through the Attorney General's Honors Program which brings new lawyers into the Department. Information about the program is on our web site and you can apply on-line.

;;;;;Our attempt to improve the diversity of the Department of Justice reflects our commitment to recognize the valuable role that all segments of our society should play in enforcing our society's laws. If all Americans are to have confidence in the Justice Department, it is important that the Department be as diverse as it possibly can. Improving diversity is one of the attorney general's top ten initiatives. And blacks should serve as prosecutors because we can add our insight and, most importantly, our discretion to the criminal justice system and help ameliorate its flaws.

;;;;;As Professor Randall Kennedy has pointed out2 <http://www.usdoj.gov/dag/speech/2002/080802nbparemarks.htm#N_2_>, those who attack the idea of blacks as prosecutors are preying on the unfounded suspicion that blacks can only advance through "the opportunism or the indulgence of white folks or by serving as a front for white puppeteers." This suspicion "robs black people of authority over their own choices, responsibilities and achievements."

;;;;;As the sometimes-described liberal syndicated columnist Clarence Page 3 <http://www.usdoj.gov/dag/speech/2002/080802nbparemarks.htm#N_3_> put it in defending one of our colleagues who was prosecuting a black man who had killed another black man:

"When people say that good men like [this prosecutor] are traitors to the black community, I wonder which 'community they are talking about. It is a myth - a dangerous racist myth - that black people are soft on crime. Quite the opposite, black people are, on the whole, quite tough on crime. After all, they are more likely to be its victims. Just ask the young black males who have been swelling the rolls in prisons in recent years. Most were sent there by black jurors."

Bush administration calls affirmative action plan ``plainly unconstitutional''

By ANNE GEARAN Associated Press Writer

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; WASHINGTON (AP); The Bush administration told the Supreme Court on Thursday that university admissions programs that gave an edge to minority students are unconstitutional and ignore race-neutral alternatives that could boost minority presence on campuses.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The administration urged the high court to strike down admissions policies at the University of Michigan and its law school.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The admissions policies amount to unconstitutional quota systems and unfairly discriminate against white students, the administration argued in a friend-of-the-court brief filed in the lawsuit challenging the Michigan school's practices.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; Solicitor General Theodore Olson wrote: ``The court should hold that the university's race- and ethnic-based undergraduate admissions policies are unconstitutional because proven race-neutral alternatives to achieving the laudable goals of educational openness and diversity remain available.''

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; Both admissions policies fail the constitutional test of equal protection for everyone under the law and cannot be reconciled with previous Supreme Court rulings that severely limit the use of race as a factor in government decisions, Olson wrote.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The filings do not go as far as some of President Bush's most conservative supporters had hoped.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The administration did not stake a categorical position against any use of race in university admissions, and did not ask the court to overturn an affirmative action ruling that for 25 years has allowed some role for an applicant's race.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The case marks the court's first statement on racial preference programs in academic admissions since the 1978 Bakke case, which affirmative action critics and backers alike say has muddied the waters for a quarter century.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The 1978 case, the last college affirmative action case at the high court, involved Allan Bakke, a white man rejected for admission to a California medical school while minorities with lower test scores got in through a special program.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The court on a 5-4 vote outlawed racial quotas in university admissions, but left room for race to be a ``plus factor.'' Michigan and many other public universities have used the ruling to design programs that can help minorities who might be rejected if only test scores and grades are considered.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; In practice, that has ``become a wholesale invitation to ... mechanically admit students who have questionable academic credentials and records merely because they self-identify themselves as falling within a favored category,'' said Catholic University law school dean Douglas Kmiec, who supports the Bush position.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The administration is not a party to the Michigan fight and did not have to take any position. Affirmative action, however, is the most watched issue before the high court this year and it would have been unusual for the White House to remain on the sidelines.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The issue is politically touchy because it is seemingly impossible to please both Bush's conservative political base and the Hispanic and black voters the Republican party hopes to attract during what is presumed to be Bush's re-election campaign next year.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The deadline for filing court papers in the Michigan case also came close on the awkward, racially charged exit of Trent Lott, R-Miss., as the Senate's Republican leader. Bush condemned remarks Lott made last month that seemed to long for the days of segregation.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The high court, which will hear arguments on the case in March, could do what the Bush friend-of-the-court brief apparently will not and conclude race can never be a factor when a government-funded school decides whom to let in.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; That position would eliminate the leeway from the Bakke case. Some think that may be what the White House wants, even if Bush is not saying so.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; ``His public rhetoric of no quotas is obviously quite different than the position they hope the Supreme Court will take,'' University of Southern California constitutional law professor Erwin Chemerinsky said.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The court, which is expected to rule by summer, could redraw the rules for when race may be considered.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; Applicants for Michigan's undergraduate classes are scored by points, with minorities or some poor applicants receiving a boost of 20 points on a scale of 150. At the law school, admissions officers use a looser formula that tries to make sure that each class has about 10 percent or 12 percent minority enrollment.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The administration says the point system is skewed toward minorities, noting that a perfect SAT score is worth just 12 points, and an outstanding essay gets three points.

;;;;;;;;;;; ;; The cases are Grutter v. Bollinger, 02-241 and Gratz v. Bollinger, 02-516.

Brett: Ed asked me to forward to you -- at this point, for your review alone -- a draft of the guidance we discussed this morning. Ed is still on the Hill and has not been able to review it in detail, but he has seen an earlier and slightly different version. He is calling you to flag a couple of questions. One further question for you is whether we should say anything in the "request-and-approve" process about classified materials people may want to take over to DHS.
Also, this draft is skimpy on practical guidance on boxing, filing, inventorying, etc. My sense is that there should be a separate Exec Sec-type memo to accompany this, giving all those thoughts. The shorter we keep each memo, the likelier each is to be read -- and followed.

MEMORANDUM TO WHO, OMB AND OTHER STAFF TRANSFERRING TO DHS

FROM: BRETT KAVANAUGH, ASSOCIATE COUNSEL,WHC
PHIL PERRY, GENERAL COUNSEL, OMB
ED McNALLY, GENERAL COUNSEL, OHS

RE: HANDLING OF WH AND TPO MATERIALS UPON TRANSFER TO DHS

This memorandum is designed to provide you with guidance concerning the handling of White House materials and TPO (or other OMB) materials that are in your keeping before you assume your new duties at DHS.

General Rules. White House materials (which means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter that was originated in or received by a White House entity, including OHS) are subject to the Presidential Records Act. Under that statute, all such materials in your keeping – whether an original or copy – must remain in the possession of the EOP after you transfer over to DHS. This requirement applies whether you are currently employed by a White House entity or by OMB (including TPO). As discussed further below, however, you may, in appropriate circumstances, take with you copies of White House materials that you will need to perform your mission at DHS.

TPO (or other OMB) materials are subject to the Federal Records Act rather than the Presidential Records Act. Nevertheless, in the case of TPO staff transferring over to DHS, any such materials should remain at OMB after your transfer to DHS, rather than being taken with you to DHS. Again, however, these employees may, in appropriate circumstances, take copies of such materials with them to DHS. [Comment: We will need a brief description from OMB/GC of OMB's standard conditions, especially if OMB requires more than "need" to take away copies.] [Should there be a separate OMB/GC memo?]

Transferring TPO personnel who have in their keeping White House materials that have originated in or been received from a White House entity should return those materials to that entity before their transfer. E.g., if you are transferring from TPO to DHS and have received White House materials from an OHS contact, you should return those materials to that contact (if he or she remains at OHS) or to the OHS Executive Secretariat.

Transferring OHS personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to [OHS Exec Sec?] before their transfer. Other transferring EOP personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to [whatever is SOP] before their transfer.

When Copies of Materials May Be Taken to DHS. You are likely to need access in many cases to White House and/or OMB materials that are currently in your keeping after you transfer over to DHS; without such access, you may well be unable to perform your new duties and discharge your new missions efficiently and effectively. To ensure that these compelling DHS needs are served, transferring personnel are authorized to make copies of such needed materials, and to bring those copies with them to DHS, provided that a) they identify the materials, affirm that they are needed for their DHS mission, and request approval to take copies of them; and b) receive the approval of their request from appropriate counsel [after review]. "Appropriate counsel" means OHS counsel in the case where the materials sought originated in OHS; WH counsel in the case in which the materials originated elsewhere in the EOP; and OMB counsel in any case of non-White House materials. A sample request-and-approval form is attached. [1] [Comment: This procedure can be complicated, because a single person would have to categorize the materials correctly and might need three separate sets of sign-offs. An alternative would be to advise OHS or TPO transferees to consult the counsel for their agency -- and for others to consult WHC. The disadvantage here, emphasized by Steve Aitken, is that this approach would have OMB counsel approving the transfer of WH materials.]

Specific Categories of Materials: Specific advice regarding particular categories of materials may be useful.

Typed papers and memoranda. Such documents may well fall into the category of White House materials, even if they are in the keeping of TPO personnel. If they do fall into that category, OHS or WH counsel (as appropriate) should be consulted before any copies of these materials are taken to DHS. If they do not fall into that category, OMB counsel should be consulted.

Copies of such documents may be taken to DHS provided that the general request-and-approval procedure described above is followed. (Originals of such documents must remain at the EOP or at OMB, as appropriate; only copies may be taken away.)

E-Mail Messages. If you are currently in OHS (or another EOP entity), any emails sent from or to your OHS (or EOP) e-mail address are considered White House materials. If you are currently at TPO, any e-mails sent from or to your TPO e-mail address are TPO materials. The same e-mail content may therefore be both a presidential record and an agency record.

Copies of e-mails (whether in typed or electronic form) may be taken to DHS provided that the general request-and-approval procedure described above is followed.

Computer discs, computer files, and computers. Materials on computer discs are usually to be treated like any other kind of materials. Requests to download and take entire computer files to DHS are subject to closer review by counsel. Requests to take computers themselves are [?].

Retrieval of Materials. If you have left materials behind without copying them and discover after your transfer that you need a copy of them for your work at DHS, you will be able to secure a copy. [Describe SOP for EOP, OMB.] Retrieval of material sought will be facilitated if you [describe recommended procedure for boxing, filing, inventorying – or just refer to separate Exec Sec memo for guidance.]

If you have any questions, please contact [].

Just so that you know the general routine, this is the way these stories often come about because we also have to inform the home-state Senators (R or D) when the FBI background investigation of a prospective judge begins. And the Senators then generally let it become public one way or another. Even if the Senators do not, it often gets out when the FBI starts doing its BI and interviewing everyone for the background check. In any event, as you can see below, the Senators often do it publicly and unabashedly.

By Laurence Arnold
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON)) President Bush will nominate the government's chief criminal prosecutor, Michael Chertoff, to a federal appeals court that handles cases for New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania and the Virgin Islands, a lawmaker says.
Chertoff was the U.S. attorney for New Jersey and an attorney in private practice before Bush brought him to Washington as head of the Justice Department's criminal division.
The White House notified Sen. Jon Corzine, D-N.J., on Wednesday that Bush would nominate Chertoff to the U.S. 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals. Corzine "views it very favorably," said his spokesman, David Wald, adding that the senator looks forward to talking with Chertoff in detail.
The Justice Department declined to comment.
Chertoff has been the administration's top anti-terrorism prosecutor. In a college commencement address in New Jersey last year, Chertoff said the United States had ample evidence that a devastating terrorist attack on U.S. soil was likely long before Sept. 11, 2001.
As federal prosecutor in New Jersey from 1990 to 1994, Chertoff oversaw high-profile prosecutions of Jersey City Mayor Gerald McCann, New York chief judge Sol Wachtler and the kidnappers and killers of Exxon executive Sidney Reso.
Later, as chief Republican counsel to the Senate Whitewater Committee during the administration of President Bill Clinton, Chertoff played a major role in the investigation of the Clintons' Arkansas business dealings; the suicide of Vincent Foster, a Clinton aide and former law partner of Hillary Clinton; and other allegations against the Clintons.
Most recently, he worked in Trenton as special counsel to the state Senate Judiciary Committee that investigated racial profiling in New Jersey.

Subject: Re: Draft docs memo to WHO staff transferring to DHS -- comments due Tues. a.m.

I will be out of the office on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. I have forwarded the draft WH memo to Phil Perry (and to John Wood and Kimberley Luczynski of OMB OGC), and explained that the plan is for Phil to issue a parallel memo to TPO staff. I have also explained that comments on the WH draft are requested by Tuesday at 10 am.

I had two general comments on the draft memo.

The draft memo appears to state that departing staff can take electronic copies of email and wordprocessing documents. If TPO staff can take electronic copies, then -- because of the press of time and for convenience -- the TPO staff will want OA to generate and hand them "backup tapes" of all their emails on the ARMS system. Adam Greenstone (OA GC) called me this week to say that OA has already begun to receive such requests from TPO. If this occurs, then there would likely be wholesale movements of TPO emails to DHS. This may not be a problem in terms of policy, etc., but it is considerable tension with the draft memo's statement that "you must first receive approval from counsel" before departing with the copies. There is no way in which OMB OGC staff could meaningfully review hundreds (if not thousands) of emails next Thursday as TPO employees are preparing to depart. The alternative, of limiting departing staff to paper copies of emails, would avoid wholesale movements of emails outside the Complex , and it would necessarily require some focus by departing staff on which emails they will really need at DHS. I don't know which approach is best (electronic or paper), but I wanted to flag the issue for consideration.

The second comment concerns the following paragraph about departing staff preparing all their files for records storage. While such preparation is certainly necessary, I don't know whether the timing (i.e., next week) is realistic, because departing DHS and TPO staff are likely to be very busy working on urgent matters regarding DHS's establishment on Friday, and the staff won't have the time to do this records preparation.

Transferring WHO personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to the White House Office of Records Management (ORM) before going to DHS. Therefore, also attached are ORM?s instructions on preparing your materials for storage, as well as ORM?s check out form

MEMORANDUM TO WHO STAFF TRANSFERRING TO DHS

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: PRE-TRANSFER HANDLING OF WHO MATERIALS

This memorandum is designed to provide all White House staff who are transferring to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS) with guidance concerning the handling of White House materials before you assume your new duties at DHS. By way of background, please note the attached copy of my February 26, 2001 memo concerning the Presidential Records Act (PRA), as well as the July 26, 2002 memo regarding White House materials made available to the DHS Transition Planning Office (TPO).

General Rules. White House materials (which means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter that was originated in or received by the White House Office, including OHS) are subject to the Presidential Records Act. Under that statute, all such materials in your keeping – whether an original or copy – must remain in the possession of the Executive Office of the President (EOP) when you transfer over to DHS. However, you may, in appropriate circumstances, take with you copies of White House materials (including copies of computer disks or e-mails) that you will need to perform your mission at DHS, but you must first receive approval from counsel.

Transferring WHO personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to the White House Office of Records Management (ORM) before going to DHS. Therefore, also attached are ORM's instructions on preparing your materials for storage, as well as ORM's check out form.

Retrieval of Materials. If you have left materials behind without copying them and discover after your transfer that you need a copy of them for your work at DHS, you will be able to secure a copy by contacting ORM. Retrieval of material sought will be facilitated if you follow the guidance in the attached ORM materials. If you have any questions, please contact ORM at 6-2242 (www.eop.gov/ORM). For counsel's approval for taking copies with you, please contact Faisal Gill for OHS, _____ for NSC, or Brett Kavanaugh for WHO generally. (TPO staff, obviously, should consult with OMB counsel.)

I don't mind leaving ARG memos out but I do think they shld be referenced re: definition of PRA and future litigation (which is whatall this is about anyway). An abundance of caution does no harm.

The ORM 1-pager is incredibly user friendly, how-to doc, and it shld stay.

Almost surely. Libby is one, some from PPO, NSC and others (mybe OVP?) I know about. Count and players change daily. Remember we want to cover the map for future litigation purposes. And NOT do this ad hoc, office by office. Let's just do this once.

Presumably OMB (Steve Aitken?) will be preparing a similar memo (as OMB GC did for TPO in July 2002), but that is OMB's call.

John Bellinger -- pls note the blank in the last sentence -- which NSC lawyer wld you like to approve any doc requests from NSC personnel who are at the TPO or moving to the new DHS?

Please send all edits and comments to OHS Assoc. Counsel Faisal Gill by 10:00 a.m. Tuesday.

MEMORANDUM TO WHO STAFF TRANSFERRING TO DHS

SUBJECT: PRE-TRANSFER HANDLING OF WHO MATERIALS

This memorandum is designed to provide all White House staff who are transferring to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS) with guidance concerning the handling of White House materials before you assume your new duties at DHS. By way of background, please note the attached copy of my February 26, 2001 memo concerning the Presidential Records Act (PRA), as well as the July 26, 2002 memo regarding White House materials made available to the DHS Transition Planning Office (TPO).

General Rules. White House materials (which means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter that was originated in or received by the White House Office, including OHS) are subject to the Presidential Records Act. Under that statute, all such materials in your keeping – whether an original or copy – must remain in the possession of the Executive Office of the President (EOP) when you transfer over to DHS. However, you may, in appropriate circumstances, take with you copies of White House materials (including copies of computer disks or e-mails) that you will need to perform your mission at DHS, but you must first receive approval from counsel.

Transferring WHO personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to the White House Office of Records Management (ORM) before going to DHS. Therefore, also attached are ORM's instructions on preparing your materials for storage, as well as ORM's check out form.

Retrieval of Materials. If you have left materials behind without copying them and discover after your transfer that you need a copy of them for your work at DHS, you will be able to secure a copy by contacting ORM. Retrieval of material sought will be facilitated if you follow the guidance in the attached ORM materials. If you have any questions, please contact ORM at 6-2242 (www.eop.gov/ORM). For counsel's approval for taking copies with you, please contact Faisal Gill for OHS, _____ for NSC, or Brett Kavanaugh for WHO generally. (TPO staff, obviously, should consult with OMB counsel.)

I have some thoughts on the memo generally, which I'll pass on to Ed separately. I would like to see a copy of the 2/26/01 PRA memo.

As to Steve's particular point, note that the memo says nothing at all about TPO documents -- it's addressed to WHO staff, which by definition and design does not include TPO. And since TPO is not under the same legal regime relative to documents as the WHO, it seems to me that it (and OMB on its behalf) could chose to follow a completely different path on this issue (such as permitting wholesale copying) if it so chooses. Am I missing something?

The question remains, however, whether as to WHO staff this is the right policy and is one that can practically be followed. If we continue to believe it's the right policy, as I'm inclined to but not thoroughly wedded to, then we could address the problem Steve raises by adding some text at the end of the "General rules" section that reads: "Counsel will not approve requests for wholesale copying of e-mails or other computer records. Instead, each employee should make a determination of individual items that are in fact necessary to perform the mission of DHS and request approval to take copies of those particular items only."

Four points.

1. We need to be concerned about documents from OHS or other "White House" entities that are subject to the Presidential Records Act. OMB is not part of the "White House" for this purpose -- it is an "agency" subject to the Federal Records Act. While it might make sense for Ed and Robert to scrutinize sensitive emails or other documents from the West Wing, OHS or other "White House" entities before such documents are transmitted by to DHS, it is not sensible to spend the same amount of time scrutinizing documents that originated from OMB. OMB, like DHS, is an "agency" generally subject to FOIA. Thus, DHS, just like OMB, will claim a "deliberative process" privilege to a FOIA request for our deliberative materials regarding the new department. OMB makes deliberative communications to agencies everyday. We always claim a FOIA exemption.

2. In the coming days, my office will work up an appropriate memo to the DHS GC's Office outlining the proper procedure for dealing with OMB documents that are taken to DHS. With some very limited possible exceptions, we will not require an unwieldy pre-clearance procedure to move OMB documents to DHS.

3. I suspect that Ed and Robert are working with OA to segregate electronically the email that flowed from the "White House" to TPO under the special arrangements made for such email. Although I haven't had time to look into that issue, I would think that our IT staff, if pushed, should be able to simplify this task.

4. Steve Aitken will be absent on Tuesday and Wednesday. Kimberly Luczynski will be my office's contact on these issues.

Subject: Re: Draft docs memo to WHO staff transferring to DHS -- comments due Tues. a.m.

I will be out of the office on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. I have forwarded the draft WH memo to Phil Perry (and to John Wood and Kimberley Luczynski of OMB OGC), and explained that the plan is for Phil to issue a parallel memo to TPO staff. I have also explained that comments on the WH draft are requested by Tuesday at 10 am.

I had two general comments on the draft memo.

The draft memo appears to state that departing staff can take electronic copies of email and wordprocessing documents. If TPO staff can take electronic copies, then -- because of the press of time and for convenience -- the TPO staff will want OA to generate and hand them "backup tapes" of all their emails on the ARMS system. Adam Greenstone (OA GC) called me this week to say that OA has already begun to receive such requests from TPO. If this occurs, then there would likely be wholesale movements of TPO emails to DHS. This may not be a problem in terms of policy, etc., but it is considerable tension with the draft memo's statement that "you must first receive approval from counsel" before departing with the copies. There is no way in which OMB OGC staff could meaningfully review hundreds (if not thousands) of emails next Thursday as TPO employees are preparing to depart. The alternative, of limiting departing staff to paper copies of emails, would avoid wholesale movements of emails outside the Complex, and it would necessarily require some focus by departing staff on which emails they will really need at DHS. I don't know which approach is best (electronic or paper), but I wanted to flag the issue for consideration.

The second comment concerns the following paragraph about departing staff preparing all their files for records storage. While such preparation is certainly necessary, I don't know whether the timing (i.e., next week) is realistic, because departing DHS and TPO staff are likely to be very busy working on urgent matters regarding DHS's establishment on Friday, and the staff won't have the time to do this records preparation.

Transferring WHO personnel should provide all materials in their keeping to the White House Office of Records Management (ORM) before going to DHS. Therefore, also attached are ORM,s instructions on preparing your materials for storage, as well as ORM,s check out form

The ORM "check out" attachments and instructions are standard and can be viewed on the ORM website cited in the memo here.
Presumably OMB (Steve Aitken?) will be preparing a similar memo (as OMB GC did for TPO in July 2002), but that is OMB's call.

No one in Washington can be as ominously sympathetic as Dick Cheney. He was that way last week, when he placed a call to Theodore Olson, solicitor general. President George W. Bush was preparing to take a politically explosive step, filing friend of the court briefs opposing the University of Michigan,s use of racial preferences in admissions.

IT WAS IMPORTANT that the &rollout8 of the briefs be as careful*as Escher-like in its eye-of-the-beholder balance*as the briefs themselves. And Olson was a problem.
ÿ ÿ ÿ ÿHere was a conservative purist, to whom preferences of any kind were abhorrent and who wanted to advise the Supreme Court to reverse the landmark Bakke case of 1978, which held that race can be &a factor8 in college admissions. But Bush had decided to move surgically, making only a relatively narrow (though still potentially far-reaching) attack on the U of M procedures. Olson,s shop could draft the briefs, but final decisions would rest with the White House counsel, Alberto Gonzales. Olson was furious: it was a slap at the powers of the SG (who would normally run the show) and, in his view, a cave-in. &If you want to be SG, that,s fine!8 he barked at Gonzales. Indeed, NEWSWEEK learned, Olson even considered quitting.

Olson on a rampage could hurt the administration*big time*with its conservative base. So Cheney made his call. He told Olson that he was sympathetic to his position, but that wasn,t what The Boss wanted to say. Time to get onboard. Cheney didn,t have to add*but Olson apparently understood*the rest of the message: shut up. The SG did so, signing the brief but otherwise staying out of sight while other hard-core conservatives were in full cry. (A Justice Department spokeswoman declined to comment.)ÿ ÿ ÿ

The Greenhouse Effect--I

Last Wednesday President Bush made a tough speech arguing against racial preferences and announcing that his administration would weigh in on behalf of plaintiffs challenging the University of Michigan's admissions policies in a pair of Supreme Court cases. On Thursday Solicitor General Theodore Olson filed the briefs in the cases of Gratz v. Bollinger (undergraduate) and Grutter v. Bollinger (law school). On Friday the New York Times published a "news analysis" in which Supreme Court reporter Linda Greenhouse claimed that "the reality of [the brief's] legal argument diverged substantially from the rhetoric of the president's prime-time statement." The administration, Greenhouse suggests, pulled a fast one on its conservative supporters.

Well, over the weekend we sat down and read the the Grutter brief (link in PDF form), and we're pleased to report that the delightfully named Greenhouse is full of hot air.

Here's her argument:

True to [President Bush's] promise, the briefs did ask the court to declare unconstitutional the undergraduate and law school admissions programs in dispute. But it did so by means of a legal analysis that, far from insisting that any consideration of race was impermissible, did not even ask the justices to overturn the Bakke decision, the 1978 landmark ruling that by allowing race to be used as a "plus factor" ushered in a generation of affirmative action in public and private college admissions.

It was as if the administration had filed a brief denouncing abortion without asking the court to overturn Roe v. Wade.

"In the end, this case requires this court to break no new ground" in order to hold the law school's admissions policy unconstitutional, the administration said.

That's the extent of her legal analysis; the rest of the piece consists of speculation about the motives behind the administration's purported two-faced approach to the case.

Greenhouse's analysis is laughable. When the administration says that the case requires the court "to break no new ground," that just means it's basing its argument on existing Supreme Court precedent. And it's true that the administration doesn't ask the court to overturn Bakke. Indeed, it cites that 1978 case repeatedly in support of its argument. But why would Greenhouse expect otherwise? After all, in Bakke the court came down on the same side the administration is taking now. It struck down the University of California's race-based admissions policy.

Greenhouse doesn't seem to have interviewed any conservative legal activists for this story. If she had, she would have learned that some are indeed disappointed in the brief, because the administration stops short of denying that "diversity" is a "compelling interest" that can justify the use of race in university admissions decisions. Terry Eastland is among those making this case.

It turns out, however, that there's less to this conservative complaint than meets the eye.

On page 14 of the brief (page 15 of the PDF document), the administration takes note of the law school's claim that diversity is a compelling interest. Two pages later, the brief declares:

Ensuring that public institutions are open and available to all segments of American society, including people of all races and ethnicities, represents a paramount government objective.

It sounds as if the administration accepts the argument that diversity is a compelling interest. But it's unclear if "ensuring" that institutions are "open and available" is the same as "diversity," and while "paramount government objective" sounds like roughly the same thing as "compelling interest," it's actually an evasion, a phrase devoid of legal meaning, as blogger Josh Chafetz points out in a valuable analysis.

The administration thus takes no position--at least so far--on whether diversity is a compelling interest. Instead, it bases its case against the Michigan admissions policy on two arguments:

1. Even when trying to achieve a "compelling interest," a government agency cannot take race into account unless it does so in a "narrowly tailored" way and--crucially--unless there are no "race-neutral alternatives."

2. Even if the interest is compelling and race-neutral alternatives nonexistent, "quotas" are still unconstitutional. The Michigan plan explicitly seeks to enroll a "critical mass" of students from particular ethnic groups, a quota all but in name. (The university, of course, denies that a "critical mass" is a quota.)

These arguments rest on well-settled Supreme Court precedent, and they ought to be sufficient to strike down the Michigan policy. The administration's conservative critics, however, contend that these arguments are insufficient because they fail to knock down "diversity" as a rationale for racial preferences.

Yet the brief does challenge the idea of diversity, albeit slyly. For Ted Olson has hidden an Easter egg at page 24: "Although respondents [the University of Michigan] have not been clear about what they mean by diversity, we assume that they are not pursuing racial diversity for its own sake." That's actually not true; the University of Michigan brief acknowledges that the policy's aim is "to achieve meaningful racial diversity in its student body." But that admission runs afoul of Justice Lewis Powell's deciding opinion in Bakke, which Olson's brief quotes: "Preferring members of any one group for no reason other than race or ethnic origin is discrimination for its own sake."

The implication is that while diversity of some sort may be a compelling interest (then again, it may not), racial diversity not only is not compelling; it is illegitimate. Thus the only thing the brief concedes--and concedes by omission, not explicitly--is that promoting diversity of something other than race may be a compelling interest that would justify taking race into account (but not using quotas) if there's no race-neutral way of achieving the same goal. To put it more simply, the use of race in university admissions is constitutional (if ever) only if it is the only means to a nonracial end--which seems close to a logical impossibility.

In Bakke, Justice Powell managed to come down on both sides of the diversity question. While he rejected racial diversity "for its own sake," he also maintained that "racial or ethnic origin" was an "important element" of "the diversity that furthers a compelling state interest." It is upon the latter of these logically contradictory propositions that a quarter century of justifications for racial preferences in higher education have been built. That's rather amazing when you consider that these were the views of one man only; not a single other justice joined the portions of Powell's opinion dealing with diversity.

That's why the Bush administration isn't asking the court to "overturn Bakke." On the central issue in question, whether diversity is a compelling interest, there is no precedent to overturn. In any case, Justice Powell's view collapses under the weight of its own illogic. The Supreme Court may not accept every element of the administration's argument, but if it does, conservatives will have won a total victory.

White With Fury

Boston Globe columnist Derrick Jackson weighs in on the Michigan case:

Bush's effort is so special that this may very well be the first Martin Luther King. Jr. birthday during which the loudest celebrations come not from black churches and integrated downtown breakfasts but from the hallways of segregated suburbia to the romantic enclaves of the Confederacy. Finally for them, this is the day to shout "We Have Overcome." This is the day that a lot of God's white people--Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics--are holding hands and singing in the words of their new spiritual, "Free at last, free at last, thank God almighty, we are free at last!" . . . Lying is all Bush can do now that he has decided to make the White House the national headquarters of the NAACP--the National Association for the Advancement of Caucasian People.

The objections to this are too obvious to enumerate. But there is something slightly daring about the way in which Jackson approaches the issue, for he violates what surely is the first rule of debate over American racial issues: Always seek the moral high ground. Those who argue for preferences and those who argue against them usually cast their argument in terms of grand principles (equality, justice) or of outcomes no one could be against (diversity, opportunity). You're supposed to accuse your opponent of racism; if you harbor racial resentments, you keep them to yourself.

To be sure, these rules don't apply evenly. A white opponent of racial preferences could never write about blacks for the mainstream media the way Jackson, a black proponent of preferences, writes about whites. Such a double standard is entirely understandable, and it's worth noting that it hasn't always been this way. It used to be white racists who expressed their resentment openly, as when Strom Thurmond declared, during his 1948 presidential campaign: "All the laws of Washington and all the bayonets of the Army cannot force the Negro into our homes, our schools, our churches."

The civil-rights movement overcame not only the segregationist laws Thurmond was defending but also the attitudes he embodied. Thus hardly anyone defended Trent Lott last month, when he implicitly endorsed Thurmond's 1948 views. Meanwhile, a black columnist for a major newspaper is free to indulge in hate-whitey rhetoric. We don't mean to draw an equivalence between Jackson and Thurmond; while the latter was defending an abominable, oppressive system, the former is more of a crank than a menace. But it's certainly a measure of how much the country has changed.

Duke U: Terrorists Have Rights Too!

A truism about American higher education is that when university officials aren't suppressing free speech, they can usually be found invoking it to deflect criticism. Duke University has officially responded to our Thursday item noting that its African and African-American studies program will be providing a forum to terrorist Laura Whitehorn, who bombed the U.S. Capitol in 1983 and subsequently spent 14 years in prison. The statement from Duke flack David Jarmul is oh so predictable:

Duke does not exert control over or pressure its faculty and departments in their selection of campus speakers. One of our nation's greatest values, and one we at Duke celebrate, is the freedom for people to express their thoughts openly. Students, faculty and other members of the Duke community benefit from hearing and debating a wide variety of ideas. We have confidence in the ability of the members of our community to analyze and critique the arguments they hear, an activity that is central to democracy, and to universities in particular.

Duke hosts speakers with a wide array of views. During the week Ms. Whitehorn will appear, for instance, it will also hold campus events on topics ranging from spiritual responses to environmental problems to intellectual property in cyberspace. Some speakers may hold views that others consider too radical or tainted to be provided a forum. Nonetheless, Duke remains committed to the academic freedom that has contributed so much to the traditions and strength of our nation.

Of course, no one is objecting to the "freedom for people to express their thoughts openly." Laura Whitehorn, a felon who has served her time, is entitled to exercise her right to free speech. The issue is whether it is appropriate for a prestigious university to provide a forum to a violent criminal who is, by all accounts, totally unrepentant. Jarmul's statement explains that Whitehorn "was invited to speak about HIV/AIDS in prisons." A worthy topic, no doubt--but couldn't Duke have found someone knowledgeable on the subject who isn't a terrorist?

We have won a small victory. The African and African-American studies program has changed its description of Whitehorn in its announcement of her appearance. Originally, as we noted, it described her as having been a "political prisoner." The new version tells the truth: "Laura Whitehorn spent more than 14 years in federal prison for her role in planting a bomb in the U.S. Capitol building in 1983."

We hadn't made the connection until a reader reminded us, but one of Whitehorn's partners in crime, Linda Sue Evans, was among the recipients of 11th-hour clemency from Bill Clinton. "I'm not repentant, that's for sure," she remarked after winning her freedom, as we noted in April 2001. Evans printed fake IDs that enabled the bombers to buy explosives. As far as we know, she has not yet been invited to speak at Duke--a mere oversight, we're sure.

289 Million Americans Back War

Saturday was a big day for those of us who favor the liberation of Iraq. "Anti-anti-war demonstrators gathered in grocery stores, shopping malls and private homes to proclaim their disagreement with protestors marching in the streets of Washington D.C. and San Francisco," ScrappleFace.com reports. "Police across the nation estimate the crowd that avoided [Saturday's] anti-war demonstrations at about 289 million."

No disturbances were reported. "It was a normal Saturday in America," one law-enforcement officer tells ScrappleFace.

The liberal media, however, chose to cover the tiny pro-Saddam demonstrations instead. According to the Washington Post, turnout at the Washington rally, sponsored by the communist front group International Answer, was somewhere between 30,000 and 500,000. Even if you accept the implausible estimate of half a million, that's still a mere 1/578th of the turnout for the pro-war demonstrations--surely within the margin of error, meaning that it's statistically possible no one showed up to the "antiwar" rallies.

Even so, according to Reuters, "President Saddam Hussein hailed worldwide anti-war demonstrations on Saturday and said the protests showed that Iraq had international support for standing up to the United States."

How to Keep a Secret

"America's Ultra-Secret Weapon," reads the headline of a Time magazine article. We won't describe the weapon in question--after all, it's a secret--but it seems to us this is a big embarrassment for Time magazine. If the weapon is still a secret even after Time magazine has published an article about it, that means no one reads Time magazine. Then again, maybe it's not such an embarrassment. If no one reads Time magazine, then no one will see this article.

The Moral Authority of the United Nations

Reuters reports that the U.N. Human Rights Commission has elected a new chairman--Najat al-Hajjaji of Libya. That's right, Libya, a country still subject to U.N. sanctions because it blew up an American commercial plane back in 1988. Normally the chairmanship rotates among the world's regions; Africa's turn was up, and its delegates settled on Libya. In an unusual move, the U.S. forced a vote, which came out 33-3 in favor of Libya, with 17 abstentions. (The ballot was secret, but three cheers for Canada, which announced beforehand it would vote with America.) As America's Ambassador Kevin Moley said, "This is not a defeat for the United States, this is a defeat for the Human Rights Commission."

An earlier Reuters dispatch reported that "Asian and Middle Eastern states are increasingly opposed to the singling out of states for criticism" by the commission. Does this mean no more ritual denunciations of Israel? Don't hold your breath.

The answer, according to "50 Saudi female intellectuals and educationalists"? "They advised Saudi families--and women in particular--to accept a more modest dowry." It reminds us of an old joke. With New York City facing a fiscal crisis and graffiti having returned to the subways, Mayor Mike Bloomberg knows what his priorities are. "Bloomberg is fuming mad over Rolling Stones members smoking on stage at Madison Square Garden during an nationally televised concert this weekend," according to the Drudge Report. "HBO cameras captured band members Keith Richards and Ron Wood smoking cigarettes while performing," Drudge reports:

"The mayor sent cops to issue summonses," one stage source told the Drudge Report late Saturday. "But the cops watched the show, off stage, by a monitor, instead of stopping the concert." . . . "The band raced out of the Garden after they finished their last number, avoiding the police," an insider said. "The music had not even finished playing; and they were in cars already, spinning away. They did not even go to their dressing rooms!"

The Clinton Legacy
Ronald Barker of Escondido, Calif., has been convicted of "conspiring with his girlfriend to kill her boss after she slept with the boss on a date, a crime the prosecutor called 'the worst kind of territorial marking,' " reports the San Diego Union-Tribune. Barker, 38, shot David Stevens to death more than three years ago, but the crime went unsolved until the girlfriend, Ny Nourn, now 20, made a videotaped confession to police. Nourn is to go on trial this week; Barker acted as his own lawyer:

Although Barker admitted his role in the killing to police, at trial he said he was tricked into giving a false confession.

"Let me remind you of a statement," Barker told the jury in an effort to demonstrate that police are capable of lying. " 'I did not have sexual relations with that woman.' The man who made that testimony was the highest official in the United States of America."

Speaking of Bill Clinton, London's Guardian reports that Gerhard Schroeder, Germany's chancellor, "was last night said to be seething over a British Sunday newspaper's blatant defiance of a court order issued in Germany forbidding it to repeat claims about his private life." The Mail on Sunday picked up reports that Schroeder was having an extramarital affair; the chancellor argues that the German court's order, based on his country's strict privacy laws, applies throughout the European Union.

Good thing the Europeans are so sophisticated about sex, or this would be a really messy affair.

Subject: Affirmative Action ideas

Below is the text of Jerry Reynolds' document --reviewed by all in our senior team --with ideas for announcement this week. They have also recommended that RP come back from Texas tomorrow after the Perry inaugural and be available for a possible event at the Press Club in DC on Wednesday. Thoughts??? These are just ideas --nothing is confirmed at all until we get your direction. HOpe you had a great weekend, my friend, and that Robert is on the mend!

MEMORANDUM

To: Secretary Paige
From: Gerald A. Reynolds

Subject: Outreach on Affirmative Action Issues

Date: January 17, 2003

We believe that the Department can support the President's decision on affirmative action in a number of ways. The following are a series of ideas you might consider:

1. Publish a report describing the innovative race-neutral approaches that the President referred to in his speech.

As you know, we have been doing background research on this topic for the past several months. We propose publishing a report on race-neutral alternatives that would help guide educational institutions across the country as they attempt to provide equal opportunity without running afoul of the Constitution. We have prepared a detailed outline of this report (attached). If you authorize us to continue with this work, we expect that we could deliver a draft of the report by the end of next week.

2. The Department could sponsor a national conference on race-neutral approaches to educational diversity.

During the last Administration, OCR sponsored a national conference on desegregation issues. We propose holding a similar national conference on race-neutral approaches. The speakers could include:

* Top education officials in Florida, Texas and California, who would describe all of the innovative new programs being experimented with in their states.

* People who worked closely with the President in developing the race-neutral alternatives implemented in Texas, such as Raul Romero of the Board of Regents of the University of Texas.

* Noted scholars who have specialized their research in the area of race-neutral alternatives, including Dr. George LaNoue of the University of Maryland and Richard Kahlenberg of the New Century Foundation (the national expert on socio-economic approaches).

3. Issue formal regulatory guidance on race-neutral alternatives.

In the past, OCR has issued regulatory guidance on issues such as using race as a factor in financial aid decisions. We could issue similar legal guidance on this issue. This approach could be used to clarify our Title VI regulations (specifically, 34 C.F.R. 100.3(b)(6)(ii) and 100.5(i)) to make clear that educational institutions have a legal obligation under the Constitution to seek diversity first through race-neutral measures, prior to resorting to racial preferences. Our Title VI regulations and policy guidance would then be consistent with the position laid out in the brief filed with the Supreme Court this week.

4. Train OCR staff on race-neutral alternatives, and ask them to disseminate this information in their meetings around the country.

OCR has a series of authorized power-point presentations on various topics, such as disability law. OCR staff use these power-point presentations in dozens of meetings with school officials around the country. We could prepare a power-point presentation on race-neutral approaches, train OCR to fully understand the issues, and then ask them to make the presentation at meetings across the country.

5. Establish a blue-ribbon advisory committee on race-neutral approaches.

The Secretary could establish a blue-ribbon committee to provide him with expert guidance on race-neutral approaches to diversity in education. The advisory group could be composed of education officials from the ground-breaking states (Texas, California and Florida), as well as leading academics on this issue. The advisors would have credibility because of their impeccable credentials and that they represent both political parties. This blue-ribbon advisory committee could be assembled and announced in relatively short order.

6. Explain the President's position to the higher-education community.

We understand that on January 28 you will be meeting with several of the most notable leaders of the higher education community. While we expect that there are many topics that you need to discuss with these leaders, we recommend that you also talk with them about the need to develop race-neutral alternatives to current admissions practices.

7. Possible venue for any announcements.

We understand that you will be in Texas next week, and specifically at the University of Texas. Since Texas is at the center of the race-neutral innovations being implemented, this may present you with an appropriate venue for an announcement.

RACE NEUTRAL ALTERNATIVES REPORT

Introduction

- Schools seeking to achieve student diversity have adopted a number of innovative race-neutral programs in the wake of the Hopwood case, Proposition 209, and other challenges to racial preferences. This report catalogs the race-neutral alternatives that schools have been implementing over the past several years.

- Why catalog race-neutral alternatives? (1) Because these programs can expand equal opportunity. These programs have the potential to promote a true diversity of viewpoint and experience without employing racial preferences. That is, they have the potential to meet the goals of those on both sides of the "affirmative action" debate. (2) Because many of these programs are innovative approaches, and are consistent with the principles and goals of NCLB (3) Because these programs help minimize litigation risks, since most race-conscious programs are likely to produce costly and probably unsuccessful litigation. Since the Supreme Court's decisions in City of Richmond v. Croson (1989) and Adarand Constructors v. Pena (1994), federal courts have heard challenges to race-conscious government programs in many areas, including contracting and education. There now appears to be an overwhelming judicial consensus that governments must make a serious effort to use and evaluate race-neutral efforts before relying on race-conscious means. (The courts differ, however, about how intensive the required efforts must be and how the success of those efforts is properly measured).

- This is primarily a secondary analysis - a literature review. We hope in the future to expand the project to include a primary analysis of these programs; to provide a sense of what the effects of these programs are.

- This report covers post-secondary education, although we do discuss certain examples from elementary and secondary school level (particularly in the section on preferences based on socioeconomic status). The longer range project would hopefully include K-12 as well.

- We do not assess these programs - this is not an effort to develop a "best practices" guide. Much research is being done and needs to be done before these programs can be assessed. We are merely providing a catalog of the programs.

Systemic Approaches

This section catalogs programs that (1) build skills in students who without intervention would not be competitive in the admissions process; and (2) provide support throughout the post-secondary educational experience for these students.

In other words, this section looks at plans that help to expand the pool of competitive applicants, and then helps to ensure that those students have long-term success.

- Skills development - prepare students from low performing schools for higher education through a variety of approaches, including supplemental teacher training, additional Advanced Placement coursework, and establishing a relationship between public universities and these schools. Specifically:

(1) University of Texas Advanced Placement Initiative

(2) Florida's "The A+ Plan," which focuses on promoting achievement among the bottom 25% of every school in the state

(3) The University of California systems' partnerships with low-performing high schools

(4) Florida's "Opportunity Alliances," which also pair up colleges with low-performing schools

(5) Florida's commitment to provide the PSAT to all tenth graders in the state
(6) Florida's partnership with the College Board

(7) Supplemental teacher training

(8) Additional college course work for those admitted under alternative admission schemes
(9) Others

- Information initiatives - efforts to ensure that parents and young teenagers get sufficient information so that they know they can attend and succeed in college. Specifically:

(1) Advice to parents of young teens on how they can afford to send a child to college

(2) Information to young teens to ensure that they catch a vision for attending college (to ensure they are aware that they have options)

(3) Expanding career guidance programs

(4) Spreading the word widely about the availability of scholarships

(5) Ensuring students from low-performing schools that they would be welcome in college

(6) All "recruitment and outreach" activities

Admissions Approaches

This section focuses on the straightforward question asked by admissions officers: who do we admit? We will catalog various race-neutral efforts that have been made to determine which students are admitted and which are not. Note that the approaches described in this section are often paired with systemic approaches as described above.

- Class rank approaches:

(1) Texas's "Ten Percent Plan"

(2) Florida's "Talented Twenty Plan"

(3) California's "Four Percent Plan."

- Preferences based on socioeconomic status - This approach, sometimes called "needs-based affirmative action," promotes diversity by conferring admissions preferences based on socioeconomic disadvantage.

(1) UCLA Law School approach

(2) La Crosse, Wisconsin school district

(3) Wake County, North Carolina school district

- Other programs - comprehensive review; lotteries; etc.

Conclusion

- Although the evidence is preliminary, it appears that already there are positive developments from these race-neutral programs:

(1) Achieving goals such as increasing regional and socioeconomic diversity and promoting opportunity for persons who have overcome adversity.

(2) Achieving goals such as racial diversity. However, caution that if an educational institution attempts to establish certain racial targets through seemingly race-neutral measures 1) It presents litigation risks as it is of questionable constitutionality; and (2) that would undercut the philosophy of "race-neutral" programs.

- Other gains that are evident - for example, innovation is now encouraged. Many new ideas are being implemented because the old approaches have been disallowed by the courts or referendums.

from Raleigh News Observer

More North Carolina voters disapprove of Sen. John Edwards' White House ambitions than approve, and George W. Bush would soundly defeat Edwards in his home state if the 2004 presidential election were held today, according to a new poll conducted for The News & Observer.
Underscoring the sales job Edwards has ahead, the poll found that 47 percent of active Tar Heel voters disapprove of the senator's decision to seek the presidency, compared with 39 percent who approve. The remaining 14 percent were unsure.

poll methods

The News & Observer Poll is based on telephone interviews conducted Monday through Thursday with 603 likely North Carolina voters. Those surveyed were selected with random telephone calls made across the state.
The poll has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points. This means that there is 95 percent probability that the true figure would fall within that range if the state's entire population was polled.
To conduct the poll, The N&O hired Research2000, a nonpartisan firm in Rockville, Md., that conducts surveys for the media, advocacy groups, trade associations and businesses.

bush or edwards?

N&O POLL OF 603 ACTIVE N.C. VOTERS: If the 2004 election for president were held today, whom would you vote for if the choice were between John Edwards, the Democrat, and George W. Bush, the Republican?
40% Edwards
56% Bush

Opinions diverged sharply along partisan lines, with 67 percent of Democrats backing Edwards' bid and 72 percent of Republicans opposing his plans.
If the 2004 election were held today, the poll found, Bush would win handily over Edwards in North Carolina, 56 percent to 40 percent. That is a slightly larger margin than Bush enjoyed in his win over Al Gore in the state in 2000.
"Right now, Edwards doesn't exactly look like he's the favorite of favorite sons," said Del Ali, president of Research2000, which conducted the poll for The N&O. "In order to reach out nationally, you've got to show strength in your own state. But Edwards got in knowing he has lots of work to do."
The poll, conducted roughly two weeks after Edwards announced his presidential bid in Raleigh, is the first in a series The N&O has planned to track home-state response to Edwards' run for the White House and the effect it might have on the race for his Senate seat, which also is on the ballot in 2004.
Aides to Edwards pointed to the backing among home-state Democrats as positive news.
"We're pleased at the overwhelming support of North Carolina Democrats who know Senator Edwards best, and we look forward to bringing along enlightened Republicans and independents," said David Ginsberg, an Edwards campaign spokesman. "North Carolinians are just beginning to hear John's ideas about why he's running for president, and we're confident support will grow as he gets his message out."
To garner more support back home, Edwards will need to do a better job connecting with voters such as Eddie Peatross of Winston-Salem, who is registered as an unaffiliated voter.
Peatross, 50, said he backed Edwards in 1998 when he ran for Senate. "I don't have any negative feelings about his performance, but personally I don't think he's qualified to be president," said Peatross, who is retired. "It's not an age thing, but I'm not sure he's been in Washington long enough to really get his feet wet. I just don't have much confidence in his abilities. In time, that may change."
The poll found 47 percent of active Tar Heel voters do not believe Edwards is qualified to be president, while 38 percent believe he is. The remaining 15 percent are unsure.
Democrats' confidence was much higher: 60 percent believe Edwards is qualified, 27 percent believe he is not, and 13 percent are unsure.
Among those who still need convincing is Paul Langan, a Durham bank branch manager and a registered Democrat. "I think he is too young," said Langan, 37. "He might be a good candidate next time."
Ali said the poll offers relatively good news for Edwards about his re-election prospects. At this point, 39 percent of likely voters would choose to re-elect Edwards.

Ali said a majority of those who say they would consider replacing Edwards now would probably wind up supporting him in November 2004, giving him enough support to win a second term.

"The U.S. Senate seat is really his to lose at this point," Ali said.

Asked to rate Edwards' job performance as a senator, 49 percent of those polled said "excellent" or "good," while 40 percent said Edwards is doing a "fair" or "poor" job. Those ratings are similar to those of Democratic Gov. Mike Easley.

North Carolinians give Bush much higher marks. Sixty-seven percent of those polled rated the Republican president's performance as "excellent" or "good"; 31 percent said it is "fair" or "poor."

Although Bush enjoys a solid lead over Edwards in North Carolina, the poll suggested Tar Heel Democrats are not inclined at this point to support another presidential candidate from their party. Asked whom they would vote for in the primary, 51 percent of the Democrats polled -- by far the largest block -- chose Edwards.

Edwards' standing in North Carolina is important because presidential contenders are generally expected to carry their home states.

Moreover, one of the arguments pushed by Edwards boosters is that he has the potential to carry Southern states against Bush, who swept the region in 2000. If Edwards' numbers do not start rising at home, that argument will likely be undermined.

In his bid to show strength in North Carolina, Edwards has history working against him. The last time North Carolina voted for a Democratic presidential candidate was 1976, when Jimmy Carter ran from Georgia. Bill Clinton came close in 1992, losing to the elder President Bush by less than a percentage point.

But in 1996, the margin widened to 5 points against Clinton when he ran for re-election against former Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas. In 2000, George W. Bush beat Gore by 13 points in the Tar Heel state.

Not surprisingly, the N&O poll found that in a hypothetical 2004 match-up, Edwards and Bush would receive the lion's share of support from members of their own party in North Carolina: 77 percent of home-state Democrats would back Edwards, while 91 percent of Tar Heel Republicans would back Bush.

One group with which Edwards could gain traction is the growing number of independents in the state, Ali said. As of now, they favor Bush, 59 percent to 37 percent.

Edwards' suggestion in recent weeks that his presidential bid would be good for North Carolina seems to have gained limited traction, the poll found. Of those polled, 31 percent agreed that his White House run would be good for the state, while 45 percent disagreed; 24 percent had no opinion.

The Soft Bigotry of the Teachers Union

The New Jersey Education Association's Web site features a brochure for download called "Getting Involved in Your Child's School." It comes in three versions; the first is simply described as "a parent's resource" (links in PDF format). The second is written in Spanish, but the third is curious. It's called the "African-American version."

Why is an African-American version necessary? Who knows, but there are differences between the text of two versions. For example, here's how the "parent's resource" answers the question: "Why do teachers need my help?":

Today, there is an increasing emphasis on individualized instruction--fitting the curriculum to the child. Teachers want to employ new methods and materials to give each child personal guidance.

When you assist teachers with growing paperwork, make instructional materials, or conduct a science experiment, you give them more time for planning activities, for trying new teaching strategies, and for working directly with children. As a parent volunteer, you allow them to be more effective teachers--and the school obtains your skills and services that might be unavailable due to financial limitations.

Here's how the "African-American version" answers the same question:

Today, teachers want to use new methods and materials to give each child personal guidance.

When you assist teachers, you give them more time to work with children. You allow them to be more effective teachers.

We actually like the African-American version better; it takes just 36 words to say the same thing the parent's resource says in 91. But another way of looking at it is that the New Jersey teachers union seems to think their material has to be dumbed down for the benefit of black parents.

1) let me re-phrase: i have been told by whca personnel at the events that they are recorded for the national archives; i am not certain whether when and how they are given to the archives (for all i know, they don't turn them over until the end of the administration?) - but they are recorded for that purpose.

2) i don't know what rights they have over the tape (this is the issue for which i think it's important to have counsel's ofc there)

3) i feel confident that no one reviews the tape for any comments that could be misintepreted.

They have already been provided to Archives..... yes, i think such a meeting would be helpful. and, i do think it's an important issue for counsel - specifically, the issue of who has control / power over the tapes, especially after he leaves office. are they subject to FOIA and/or a subpoena. (< i presume the answer to both of these questions is "yes" another little known fact: if whca a/v provides sound for any event (e.g., even if they just wire a microphone in rm 450), they record his remarks on tape to go to the national archives. technically, the event is "closed press" - and even if i decide that whtv coverage is not necessary - the event is being recorded for history - only difference being that is audio only and not video. (< a perfect example is a private fundraiser at a residence. i do not ask whtv to cover any strictly political receptions, unless it is open or pool press. however, the president's remarks at dwight and martha scharr's residence in mclean, or the event at the kennedy's residence in florida - were recorded and provided to the national archives.).

Subject: Re: << OLE Object: StdOleLink >>

the practice for the last 2 years (and to my knowledge, before that) is that the aide and whtv coordinate which events will be covered.
in my case, i have a daily phone call with whtv in the morning to discuss the day's coverage. they are always included for OPEN and POOL events.
for closed events, it is a case-by-case basis. and, how much of those closed events (e.g., the whole thing vs. "top of only") is also determined by me (based on the day, nature of the event, input from the event organizer, how many similar events they already have footage of, the president's mood, etc.).

there are a few special events like the KC honors, ford's theatre, christmas in washington, nbc's "day in the life", sit-down interviews, etc., which are taped for tv ... these events are not technically "open press" - b/c only one network has their cameras there - but they will be aired by the media. these are the types of events at which it would be inappropriate to have whtv. these are the events for which i want to make sure whtv is somehow obtaining the footage.

(there is a similar, but slightly different, issue on foreign trips. e.g., whtv was not let into the president's mtg with the pope b/c of space limitations. i think it would be a tragedy for the library not to have footage of that meeting. in those cases, i propose that we request a copy of the foreign government's host tv footage.)

one last note: the issue of control over whtv footage is one that i expressed some concern about to brett kavanaugh several months ago (we tried to get together to talk about it - but it was a really busy time. i will re-raise the issue and try to set up a mtg). currently, reed dickens is the one who authorizes tapes to be released (to media publications / foreign gov'ts (e.g., during an official visit) / private citizens). my main concern is that reed authorizes the videos without first reviewing them to determine the exact contents (and whether anything on them could accidentally be misinterpreted). it seems like a dangerous process with very little control, and one which offers little, if any, protection of the president.

Blake, this is important as well for other reasons. Is it historically the case that in a small space only one camera is used? In other words, in other Administrations?

Also, I thought that Scott did have the rough footage. Maybe he has it and not WHTV.

Tim --

Here is the revised guidance on how to proceed with congressional inquiries of the type attached below -- that is, the emailed questions received from various congressional staffers:

1. When you receive them, please forward them to me to review (or in the case where it involves anything related to OVP to David Addington and "cc" me on the email).

2. The substance of the inquiry will determine how we proceed.
If the subject is a fairly straightforward non-sensitive request (for example, how much did OA spend on computer cables?), OA (that is, you) would respond. However, I would like to review the responses before they are sent.

3. If the subject is sensitive or inappropriate, we may ask to receive a letter from the Chairman requesting the information or respond in a different manner.

4. Of course, in some cases, the answers may determine how we proceed -- that is, an inquiry may appear straightforward, but when OA puts together the answer, it may contain sensitive information.

To make this all a bit more concrete, I attached the two congressional emails that you requested guidance on how to proceed. Both emails are from Mike Malone, who I understand is a staffer for Steny Hoyer (D-MD). Hoyer is the new Democratic Whip and a member of the Appropriations Committee (including the Subcomm. on Treas, Postal, and General Govt). Here is how we should proceed:

A. Jan 2 email on the vehicle fleet and use of non-fed funds for renovations of GSA facilities occupied by EOP.

1. Question #1 concerns the vehicle leases. Please put together the information for the answers and I (or someone else in WHCO if they worked on the leases) will review it before you send it. I am not sure what EO the email is referring to or if it is actually applicable to the leases.

2. Question #2 concerns the use of non-fed funds for renovation/furnishings in GSA facilities occupied by EOP. If you could compile the applicable answers to the extent they are within OA's area of responsibility and forward to me, we will review it and determine how to proceed. Jen Newstead has some concerns on this issue she may want to discuss with you. Note that the inquiry is limited to GSA facilities.

B. Jan 21 email on Off Global Comm.

1. If you could send me a proposed answer, I will review it before you send it.

An important note: When I refer to "put together answers", I am referring to subjects clearly within OA's area of responsibility. For example, in the OGC email, Malone asks "why is OGC an EOP function and not a State Dept function?" That answer has nothing to do with OA and you could just say "OA is not involved in those type of determinations." (we might also refer him to http://www.whitehouse.gov/ogc/ which contains the EO and a discussion of OGC's relationship to the State Dept).
OA does not need to (and should not) go searching for answers, or interviewing people, throughout EOP to respond to these emails -- to the extent it concerns OA subject matter, a response may be appropriate. You should not be in the position of responding on matters that are beyond OA -- it may be that WH Leg Affairs needs to work with the staffer on particular policy issues, etc.

Please let me know if anyone disagrees with this guidance.

Tim --

I saw a newsclip today that said the president signed an Executive Order formally designating something named the Office of Global Communications. Since the E.O. isn't on the White House's website yet and the only info I have comes from press accounts, can you give me more details? How does this impact the 03 and 04 budgets? What account(s) pays for the operation of this office currently? How much was spent in FY02 and FY03 (to date) on the operations of this function? Is the cost and size of this office expected to grow in the future? Why is this an EOP function/responsibility (as opposed to a State Department or other agency function)?

Just for background (and I know you weren't there to know any of this), I have been asking questions about this operation since June of 2002. I wanted more details when I heard non-US government entities were assisting the operation of this office out of the Indian Treaty Room. I again asked for information after the ITR operation was shut down and the office assumed a lower profile. Each time I was promised that I would be kept informed as this evolved. Unfortunately, this didn't happen and now I'm trying to find out information after the news accounts hit the wires. Whatever you can share with me will be much appreciated.

Mike

Subject: Budget Questions

Tim --

I have a couple of questions on other issues:

1) The EOP's FY03 budget request included a significant increase for vehicle leases. Under the previous contract, each vehicle cost the EOP $94 per month to lease. Since the FY03 budget was put together and submitted long before the EOP vehicle contract was recompeted, the EOP requested enough funds to cover costs of up to $500 per vehicle per month. Now that we are more than a quarter into FY03, I assume the new contract is in place.

What is the per vehicle cost under the new contract? What vendor was selected for this years contract? Are 75% of the vehicles under the new contract alternative fuel vehicles as required under Executive Order? What is the make and model of the sedans used to transport White House senior staff under the new contract?

2) Since 1/20/01, have any non-Federal funds been used for renovations and/or furnishings in the GSA facilities occupied by the Executive Office of the President? Which Federal agency (i.e., GSA, OA/Facilities) coordinated the work that was paid for using non-Federal funds? What were the sources and amounts of the non-Federal funds used for renovations and/or furnishings? Please also provide a description of each project for which non-Federal funds were provided. Why were non-Federal funds used to renovate and/or furnish these GSA facilities? Which agency's gift authority was used to accept the contribution of non-Federal funds for renovations and/or furnishings?

Thanks for your help on these questions.

Mike

Honor guardsman is fired for blessings
Patrick Cubbage says he followed his training. A supervisor calls it a breach.
By David O'Reilly
Inquirer Staff Writer
As a military honor guardsman, Patrick Cubbage had a simple message to the families of deceased veterans at graveside services.
"God bless you and this family, and God bless the United States of America," he would say as he presented a folded flag to them.
Because of that, Cubbage was fired in October from his job at the Brig. Gen. William C. Doyle Veterans Memorial Cemetery in Burlington County, near McGuire Air Force Base.
He breached cemetery protocol, his supervisor said, by deviating from the script.
"No family member ever objected," Cubbage, 54, a Vietnam combat veteran, retired Philadelphia police officer, and former city bail commissioner, said in a recent interview at his Northeast Philadelphia home.
"They were always very grateful - and sometimes very moved. People would even grip my hand and say things like 'Thank you so much.' "
Cubbage said he found the blessing in training literature he got when he began working as a part-time guardsman at Doyle, making $16 an hour, in October 2001.
But Lt. Col. Roberta Niedt, spokeswoman for the New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, said Doyle - the state's largest veterans cemetery - has a "standard phrase [for the flag presentation] for each service."

Cubbage was dismissed not for the blessing, Niedt said, but for departing from the standard presentation protocol.
Cubbage insisted, however, that he was operating within the rules for honor guards. Opening a slender pamphlet that he said the cemetery gave him when he started, he turned to a page topped by the words Flag Presentation Protocol.
After Taps, it explains, the honor guard folds an American flag into a triangle, and a guardsman then steps before the appropriate family member. Depending on the branch of service, the presenter next is to say such words as: "This flag is presented on behalf of a grateful nation and the United States Army as a token of appreciation for your loved one's honorable and faithful service," and then to hand the flag to the deceased's kin.
"If the next of kin has expressed a religious preference or belief," the instructions continue, "add: 'God bless you and this family, and God bless the United States of America.' "
"It doesn't say, 'You may add ...,' " Cubbage, an evangelical Christian who attends Calvary Chapel in Northeast Philadelphia, said as he tapped sternly at the pamphlet. "And I said it only if the family had a chapel service or had clergy at the grave."
Although a part-time employee at Doyle, he said, he typically worked from 25 to 35 hours a week, and he estimated that he participated in about 2,000 burial ceremonies last year. "I probably said the blessing 500 times."
But two of his fellow honor guardsmen complained in October, he said, and on Oct. 16 Iven Dumas, the cemetery's honor guard coordinator, ordered him to stop the blessings.
He said he protested, noting, "It's right in the manual." Dumas replied that the blessing could offend Jews and Muslims, he said, and should be used only when next of kin notify the cemetery office that they want a blessing.
"Jews and Muslims believe in God," Cubbage said he replied.
Dumas, he said, responded by handing him a copy of state regulations prohibiting "harassment or hostile environments" in the workplace.
Dumas declined to be interviewed and referred inquiries to Niedt's office.
On Oct. 24, Joan L. Edwards, affirmative-action officer for the state Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, wrote to Dumas to clarify policy. Cubbage received a photocopy of the letter.
Government employees "must not engage in activities or expression that a reasonable observer would interpret as government endorsement ... of religion," she wrote.
Unless the next of kin expresses a religious preference "one way or another," she continued, "then, the protocol would be to omit the saying, 'God bless ...,' portion of the presentation. This is not optional."
Cubbage said he reluctantly stopped saying the blessing - until Oct. 31. That day, he said, "this funeral procession pulls in for a burial, and I see the 'fish' sign [a traditional symbol in Christianity] on the back of one of the cars."
"So, I start a conversation with the driver, who turns out to belong to Calvary Chapel. I asked him if the family would mind if I said the blessing. He said, 'Oh, they're very religious. I'm sure they'd welcome it.' "
The widow, who was in a wheelchair, bowed her head at the blessing, Cubbage recalled.
But one of the other guardsmen "practically ran to the office" to report him, he said.
He said Dumas called him into the office and demanded an explanation. He said he explained that a family friend had assured him they would welcome the blessing, but Dumas - citing Cubbage's "disregard for stated policy" - fired him that day.
"I was in shock. I'm still in shock," he said.
"I was proud to serve the veterans who have served us," said Cubbage, who in 2001 reenlisted in the New Jersey National Guard just so that he could be the first enlisted man to salute his son, Adam, when he became an Army officer.
Adam Cubbage is now a captain in the 108th Air Squadron - his father's unit in the Vietnam War.

"I just don't get it," Patrick Cubbage said of his firing. "When you give people that flag, you see them look into it and remember a whole time in their loved one's life. So why in God's name did they fire me? Because in God's name, they did fire me."

"If the next of kin has expressed a religious preference or belief," the instructions continue, "add: 'God bless you and this family, and God bless the United States of America.' "
"It doesn't say, 'You may add ...,' " Cubbage, an evangelical Christian who attends Calvary Chapel in Northeast Philadelphia, said as he tapped sternly at the pamphlet. "And I said it only if the family had a chapel service or had clergy at the grave."
Although a part-time employee at Doyle, he said, he typically worked from 25 to 35 hours a week, and he estimated that he participated in about 2,000 burial ceremonies last year. "I probably said the blessing 500 times."
But two of his fellow honor guardsmen complained in October, he said, and on Oct. 16 Iven Dumas, the cemetery's honor guard coordinator, ordered him to stop the blessings.
He said he protested, noting, "It's right in the manual." Dumas replied that the blessing could offend Jews and Muslims, he said, and should be used only when next of kin notify the cemetery office that they want a blessing.
"Jews and Muslims believe in God," Cubbage said he replied.
Dumas, he said, responded by handing him a copy of state regulations prohibiting "harassment or hostile environments" in the workplace.
Dumas declined to be interviewed and referred inquiries to Niedt's office.
On Oct. 24, Joan L. Edwards, affirmative-action officer for the state Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, wrote to Dumas to clarify policy. Cubbage received a photocopy of the letter.
Government employees "must not engage in activities or expression that a reasonable observer would interpret as government endorsement ... of religion," she wrote.
Unless the next of kin expresses a religious preference "one way or another," she continued, "then, the protocol would be to omit the saying, 'God bless ...,' portion of the presentation. This is not optional."
Cubbage said he reluctantly stopped saying the blessing - until Oct. 31. That day, he said, "this funeral procession pulls in for a burial, and I see the 'fish' sign [a traditional symbol in Christianity] on the back of one of the cars."
"So, I start a conversation with the driver, who turns out to belong to Calvary Chapel. I asked him if the family would mind if I said the blessing. He said, 'Oh, they're very religious. I'm sure they'd welcome it.' "
The widow, who was in a wheelchair, bowed her head at the blessing, Cubbage recalled.
But one of the other guardsmen "practically ran to the office" to report him, he said.
He said Dumas called him into the office and demanded an explanation. He said he explained that a family friend had assured him they would welcome the blessing, but Dumas - citing Cubbage's "disregard for stated policy" - fired him that day.
"I was in shock. I'm still in shock," he said.
"I was proud to serve the veterans who have served us," said Cubbage, who in 2001 reenlisted in the New Jersey National Guard just so that he could be the first enlisted man to salute his son, Adam, when he became an Army officer.
Adam Cubbage is now a captain in the 108th Air Squadron - his father's unit in the Vietnam War.

Subject: Re: << OLE Object: StdOleLink >>

the practice for the last 2 years (and to my knowledge, before that) is that the aide and whtv coordinate which events will be covered.
in my case, i have a daily phone call with whtv in the morning to discuss the day's coverage. they are always included for OPEN and POOL events.
for closed events, it is a case-by-case basis. and, how much of those closed events (e.g., the whole thing vs. "top of only") is also determined by me (based on the day, nature of the event, input from the event organizer, how many similar events they already have footage of, the president's mood, etc.).

there are a few special events like the KC honors, ford's theatre, christmas in washington, nbc's "day in the life", sit-down interviews, etc., which are taped for tv ... these events are not technically "open press" - b/c only one network has their cameras there - but they will be aired by the media. these are the types of events at which it would be inappropriate to have whtv. these are the events for which i want to make sure whtv is somehow obtaining the footage.

(there is a similar, but slightly different, issue on foreign trips. e.g., whtv was not let into the president's mtg with the pope b/c of space limitations. i think it would be a tragedy for the library not to have footage of that meeting. in those cases, i propose that we request a copy of the foreign government's host tv footage.)

one last note: the issue of control over whtv footage is one that i expressed some concern about to brett kavanaugh several months ago (we tried to get together to talk about it - but it was a really busy time. i will re-raise the issue and try to set up a mtg). currently, reed dickens is the one who authorizes tapes to be released (to media publications / foreign gov'ts (e.g., during an official visit) / private citizens). my main concern is that reed authorizes the videos without first reviewing them to determine the exact contents (and whether anything on them could accidentally be misinterpreted). it seems like a dangerous process with very little control, and one which offers little, if any, protection of the president.

Blake, this is important as well for other reasons. Is it historically the case that in a small space only one camera is used? In other words, in other Administrations?

Also, I thought that Scott did have the rough footage. Maybe he has it and not WHTV.

What Does Disarmament Look Like?

THE WHITE HOUSE

JANUARY 2003

REV_00156559

WHAT DOES DISARMAMENT LOOK LIKE?

INTRODUCTION

On September 12, 2002, President Bush called on the United Nations to live up to its founding purpose and enforce the determination of the international community – expressed in 16 UN Security Council resolutions – that the outlaw Iraqi regime be disarmed of its weapons of mass destruction.

On November 8, the Security Council unanimously passed UNSCR 1441, which gave the Iraqi regime "a final opportunity to comply with its disarmament obligations" (OP 2). Recognizing that genuine disarmament can only be accomplished through the willing cooperation of the Iraqi regime, the resolution called for the reintroduction of weapons inspectors into Iraq, to test whether or not the regime had made a strategic decision to give up its mass destruction weapons.

The world knows what successful cooperative disarmament looks like. When a country decides to disarm, and to provide to the world verifiable evidence that it has disarmed, there are three common elements to its behavior:

- The decision to disarm is made at the highest political level;
- The regime puts in place national initiatives to dismantle weapons and infrastructure; and
- The regime fully cooperates with international efforts to implement and verify disarmament; its behavior is transparent, not secretive.

EXAMPLES OF COOPERATIVE DISARMAMENT

In recent years, there have been several notable examples of countries that have chosen to give up mass destruction weapons, and willingly cooperated with the international community to verify its disarmament. These countries include:

- South Africa
- Ukraine
- Kazakhstan

REV_00156560

High level Political Commitment

President de Klerk decided in 1989 to end South Africa's nuclear weapons production and in 1990 to dismantle all weapons. South Africa joined the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) in 1991 and later that year accepted full scope International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards.

Under the leadership of President Kravchuk and President Nazarbayev, Ukraine and Kazakhstan, respectively, ratified the Nuclear Nonproliferation and START Treaties. This created high-level political commitments to give up the nuclear weapons and strategic delivery vehicles they inherited upon the dissolution of the Soviet Union.

National Initiatives to Dismantle Weapons of Mass Destruction

South Africa, Ukraine, and Kazakhstan each charged high-level organizations with implementing disarmament. In South Africa it was the Atomic Energy Commission and ARMSCOR. In Kazakhstan it was primarily the Ministries of Defense and Atomic Energy. In Ukraine it was mainly the Ministry of Defense. Each of these organizations worked cooperatively with outside organizations - for example, the IAEA in South Africa and the United States and Russia in Ukraine and Kazakhstan - to implement disarmament.

Full Cooperation and Transparency

The true measure of cooperation is to answer questions without being asked. In each of these examples, weapons programs were disclosed fully and voluntarily.

South Africa began its disclosure with a declaration to the IAEA on its nuclear program, which was expanded over time. South Africa allowed the IAEA complete access to operating and defunct facilities, provided thousands of current and historical documents, and allowed detailed, unfettered discussions with personnel involved in the South African program.

An IAEA article from 1994 sums up the cooperative South African approach to nuclear disarmament and IAEA verification:

> "In the case of South Africa, the results of extensive inspection and assessment, and the transparency and openness shown, have led to the conclusion that there were no indications to suggest that the initial inventory is incomplete or that the nuclear weapon programme was not completely terminated and dismantled. However, in the future, and without prejudice to the IAEA's rights under the safeguards agreement, the IAEA plans to take up the standing invitation of the South African Government -- under its reiterated policy of transparency -- to provide the IAEA with full access to any location or facility associated with the former nuclear weapons program and to grant access, on a case-by-case basis, to other locations or facilities that the IAEA may specifically wish to visit."

Given the full cooperation of both governments, implementation of the disarmament decision was smooth. All nuclear warheads were returned to Russia by 1996, and all missile silos and heavy bombers were destroyed before the December 2001 START deadline. The United States had full access, beyond Treaty requirements, to confirm silo and bomber destruction, which were done with U.S. assistance.

Both countries have also gone farther in disarmament than the NPT and START Treaty require. For example, Kazakhstan no longer has strategic missiles and Ukraine is well on the way to giving up its strategic missiles. Ukraine asked for U.S. assistance to destroy its Backfire bombers and also air-launched cruise missiles.

In the early 1990s, Kazakhstan revealed to us a stockpile of more than 500 kg. of HEU, and asked that we remove it to safety in the United States. It has also shut down its plutonium-producing reactor and is using U.S. assistance to ensure the long-term safe storage of the spent fuel. Finally, Kazakhstan used U.S. assistance to destroy all nuclear test tunnels and bore holes -- a total of almost 200 -- at the former Soviet test site there.

IRAQI NON-COOPERATION

The behavior of the Iraqi regime contrasts sharply with successful disarmament examples.

Instead of high-level commitment to disarm, highly organized concealment efforts, staffed by thousands of Iraqis, are led from the very top of the Iraqi regime.

- Iraq's concealment activities are run by the Special Security Organization (SSO), under the control of Qusay Saddam Hussein, Saddam Hussein's son.

Instead of charging organizations to work with outside groups to disarm, the regime tasks key institutions with thwarting the inspectors.

- The National Monitoring Directorate -- whose stated function is to facilitate inspections -- actually serves as an "anti-inspections" organization that:
    - Provides tip-offs to inspection sites; and
    - Uses "minders" to intimidate witnesses.
        - The minders are often former engineers and scientists with direct WMD experience, and first-hand knowledge of what needs to be protected from the inspectors when they arrive at a facility.

REV_00156562

- Thousands of personnel from Iraqi security agencies provide manpower for hiding documents and materiel from inspectors, policing inspection sites, and monitoring the inspectors' activities.

    - Such organizations include the Military Industrialization Organization, the SSO, the Special Division for Baghdad Security, the Iraqi Intelligence Service (IIS), the Special Republican Guard, the Republican Guard, and the Directorate of General Security.

    - These "anti-inspectors" vastly outnumber the 200 UNMOVIC and the IAEA personnel on the ground in Iraq.

Instead of cooperation and transparency Iraq has chosen to conceal and to lie.

- Iraq's declaration is not "currently accurate, full, and complete." It is inaccurate and incomplete.

    - Anthrax and Other Undeclared Biological Agents
        - The UN Special Commission concluded that Iraq did not verifiably account for, at a minimum, 2160kg of growth media. This is enough to produce 26,000 liters of anthrax -- 3 times the amount Iraq declared; 1200 liters of botulinum toxin; and, 2200 liters of aflatoxin, a carcinogen.

    - Ballistic Missiles
        - Iraq has declared its attempt to manufacture missile fuels suited only to a type of missile which Iraq's declaration does not admit to developing.
        - Iraq claims that its designs for a larger diameter missile fall within the UN-mandated 150km limit. But Dr. Blix has cited 13 recent Iraqi missile tests which exceed the 150km limit.

    - Nuclear Weapons
        - The Declaration ignores efforts to procure uranium from abroad.

- VX
  - In 1999, UN Special Commission and international experts concluded that Iraq needed to provide additional, credible information about VX production. UNSCOM concluded that Iraq had not accounted for 1.5 tons of VX, a powerful nerve agent. Former UNSCOM head Richard Butler wrote that "a missile warhead of the type Iraq has made and used can hold some 140 liters of VX . . . A single such warhead would contain enough of the chemical to kill up to 1 million people."

  - The declaration provides no information to address these concerns.

- Chemical and Biological Weapons Munitions
  - In January 1999, the UN Special Commission reported that Iraq failed to provide credible evidence that 550 mustard gas-filled artillery shells and 400 biological weapon-capable aerial bombs had been lost or destroyed.

  - The Iraqi regime has never adequately accounted for hundreds, possibly thousands, of tons of chemical precursors.

- Empty Chemical Munitions
  - There is no adequate accounting for nearly 30,000 empty munitions that could be filled with chemical agents.

    - If one of those shells were filled with the nerve agent Sarin, which Iraq is known to have produced, it would contain over 40,000 lethal doses.

- Unmanned Aerial Vehicles (UAV) Programs
  - Iraq denies any connection between UAV programs and chemical or biological agent dispersal. Yet, Iraq admitted in 1995 that a MIG-21 remote-piloted vehicle tested in 1991 was intended to carry a biological weapon spray system.

  - Iraq already knows how to put these biological agents into bombs and how to disperse biological agent using aircraft or unmanned aerial vehicles.

- Mobile Biological Weapons Agent Facilities
  - The Iraqi declaration provides no information about its mobile biological weapon agent facilities.

REV_00156564

- Iraq continues its tactics of "cheat and retreat" that defeated prior inspections efforts, and Iraq continues its efforts to hide prohibited WMD programs.

    - This fall, satellite photos revealed activity at several suspected WMD facilities, apparently in anticipation of the resumption of inspections.

    - We have multiple reports of the intensified efforts to hide documents in spaces considered unlikely to be found, such as private homes of low level officials and universities. On January 16, 2003, a joint UNMOVIC/IAEA team found a significant cache of documents related to Iraq's uranium enrichment program in the home of Iraqi scientist Faleh Hassan.

    - We have many reports of WMD material being buried, concealed in lakes, relocated to agricultural areas and private homes, or hidden beneath Mosques or hospitals. In one report such material was buried in the banks of the Tigris river during a low water period. Furthermore, according to these reports, the material is moved constantly, making it difficult to trace or to find without absolutely fresh intelligence.

- The regime routinely conducts well-organized surveillance of inspectors.

    - The SSO tracks the number, expertise, equipment, vehicles, location, and heading of inspectors.

    - Iraq has in the past used, and is likely again to use, cyber attack methods in its efforts to collect intelligence.

        - Computer systems used to store, process, or communicate UNMOVIC and IAEA inspection schedules, methods, criteria, or findings will be particularly high-value targets.

        - At a minimum, Iraq can apply tools and methods readily available from publicly accessible Internet sources, many of which are quite effective and require only moderate skill to implement.

        - According to Iraqi defector Dr. Khidhir Hamza, Iraq's Babylon Software Company was developing cyber warfare capabilities on behalf of the Iraqi Intelligence Service as early as the 1990s. People assigned to Babylon initially worked on information security technologies and techniques, but some of the programmers were segregated into a "highly compartmented unit" and tasked with breaking into foreign computers in order to download sensitive data or infect the computers with viruses. Some of the programmers reported that they had accumulated enough expertise to break into moderately protected computer systems.

- Yet the Iraqis accuse the inspectors of being spies – the gravest accusation that a totalitarian government can make.
  - In mid-January Iraqi Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan said "We know they [the inspectors] are playing an intelligence role. The way they are conducting their inspections and the sites they are visiting have nothing to do with weapons of mass destruction. But we are cooperating with inspection teams in a positive way in order to expose the lies of those who have bad intentions."

- Iraq has not provided "immediate, unimpeded, unrestricted and private access to witnesses."
  - Instead inspectors have been expected to interview Iraqis with minders under unsecure conditions.
  - The regime has resisted allowing interviews outside the country.
- Iraq's list of WMD scientists together with their associated work places and dates ends in 1991 although UNSCOM proved that the programs did not.
- Iraq refuses to provide key documents, some of which have been demanded by inspectors for years.
- Iraq has impeded the inspectors' demand to begin aerial surveillance.

REV_00156566

CONCLUSION

Iraq's behavior contrasts sharply with successful disarmament stories.

Instead of a high-level commitment to disarm, Iraq's concealment efforts are led by Saddam's son Qusay. The inspectors are labeled spies and treated as the enemy, not as a partner in disarmament.

Instead of national initiatives to disarm, Iraq's SSO and National Monitoring Directorate are national programs involving thousands of people to target inspectors and thwart their duties.

Instead of cooperation and transparency, Iraq has chosen concealment and deceit best exemplified by a 12,000 page declaration which is far from "currently accurate, full, and complete," as required by the United Nations Security Council.

1) let me re-phrase: i have been told by whca personnel at the events that they are recorded for the national archives; i am not certain whether when and how they are given to the archives (for all i know, they don't turn them over until the end of the administration?) - but they are recorded for that purpose.

2) i don't know what rights they have over the tape (this is the issue for which i think it's important to have counsel's ofc there)

3) i feel confident that no one reviews the tape for any comments that could be misintepreted.

yes, i think such a meeting would be helpful. and, i do think it's an important issue for counsel - specifically, the issue of who has control / power over the tapes, especially after he leaves office. are they subject to FOIA and/or a subpoena. (< i presume the answer to both of these questions is "yes" another little known fact: if whca a/v provides sound for any event (e.g., even if they just wire a microphone in rm 450), they record his remarks on tape to go to the national archives. technically, the event is "closed press" - and even if i decide that whtv coverage is not necessary - the event is being recorded for history - only difference being that is audio only and not video. (< a perfect example is a private fundraiser at a residence. i do not ask whtv to cover any strictly political receptions, unless it is open or pool press. however, the president's remarks at dwight and martha scharr's residence in mclean, or the event at the kennedy's residence in florida - were recorded and provided to the national archives.).

1) let me re-phrase: i have been told by whca personnel at the events that they are recorded for the national archives; i am not certain whether when and how they are given to the archives (for all i know, they don't turn them over until the end of the administration?) - but they are recorded for that purpose.

2) i don't know what rights they have over the tape (this is the issue for which i think it's important to have counsel's ofc there)

3) i feel confident that no one reviews the tape for any comments that could be misintepreted.

They have already been provided to Archives..... I wonder if this should cause any concern and why they would take possession so soon .... what rights do they have once they are in their possession .... and again, does anyone listen to them first to make sure nothing inappropriate is recorded when perhaps people thought they were not being recorded!

yes, i think such a meeting would be helpful. and, i do think it's an important issue for counsel - specifically, the issue of who has control / power over the tapes, especially after he leaves office. are they subject to FOIA and/or a subpoena. (< i presume the answer to both of these questions is "yes" another little known fact: if whca a/v provides sound for any event (e.g., even if they just wire a microphone in rm 450), they record his remarks on tape to go to the national archives. technically, the event is "closed press" - and even if i decide that whtv coverage is not necessary - the event is being recorded for history - only difference being that is audio only and not video. (< a perfect example is a private fundraiser at a residence. i do not ask whtv to cover any strictly political receptions, unless it is open or pool press. however, the president's remarks at dwight and martha scharr's residence in mclean, or the event at the kennedy's residence in florida - were recorded and provided to the national archives.).

Therefore, we need to take steps asap to put a system in place to ensure this does not happen. Not really a Counsel's office issue, but do you think they, along with Hagin, and other relevant parties should discuss this and what the process should be?

the practice for the last 2 years (and to my knowledge, before that) is that the aide and whtv coordinate which events will be covered.
in my case, i have a daily phone call with whtv in the morning to discuss the day's coverage. they are always included for OPEN and POOL events.
for closed events, it is a case-by-case basis. and, how much of those closed events (e.g., the whole thing vs. "top of only") is also determined by me (based on the day, nature of the event, input from the event organizer, how many similar events they already have footage of, the president's mood, etc.).

there are a few special events like the KC honors, ford's theatre, christmas in washington, nbc's "day in the life", sit-down interviews, etc., which are taped for tv ... these events are not technically "open press" - b/c only one network has their cameras there - but they will be aired by the media. these are the types of events at which it would be inappropriate to have whtv. these are the events for which i want to make sure whtv is somehow obtaining the footage.

(there is a similar, but slightly different, issue on foreign trips. e.g., whtv was not let into the president's mtg with the pope b/c of space limitations. i think it would be a tragedy for the library not to have footage of that meeting. in those cases, i propose that we request a copy of the foreign government's host tv footage.)

one last note: the issue of control over whtv footage is one that i expressed some concern about to brett kavanaugh several months ago (we tried to get together to talk about it - but it was a really busy time. i will re-raise the issue and try to set up a mtg). currently, reed dickens is the one who authorizes tapes to be released (to media publications / foreign gov'ts (e.g., during an official visit) / private citizens). my main concern is that reed authorizes the videos without first reviewing them to determine the exact contents (and whether anything on them could accidentally be misinterpreted). it seems like a dangerous process with very little control, and one which offers little, if any, protection of the president.

Blake, this is important as well for other reasons. Is it historically the case that in a small space only one camera is used? In other words, in other Administrations?

Also, I thought that Scott did have the rough footage. Maybe he has it and not WHTV.

CHARLES E. SCHUMER

RULES

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, DC 20510

January 23, 2003

The Honorable John Ashcroft
Attorney General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20530

Dear General Ashcroft:

I write to respond to the claims you make in your Department's letter of October 8, 2002, in which you argue that both historical precedent and policy considerations support not disclosing documents written by Mr. Miguel Estrada, a nominee to a lifetime seat on the D.C. Circuit, when he was Assistant to the Solicitor General. I write also to ask that you reconsider your decision not to disclose Mr. Estrada's memoranda.

Your argument on historical precedent boils down to a claim that the Department has never turned over such documents written by individuals who held the position Mr. Estrada held at the Department. You list several nominees who were also Assistants to the Solicitor General (or who held similar positions) and point out that the Department did not disclose these types of writings with regard to their nominations. While your assertion is true, no Senator ever requested any such materials for these nominees, so this is hardly precedent for refusing to provide them now that Congress has actually asked for them.

If the factual record ended there, you would have a persuasive case. But it does not. There is ample historical precedent for the request we have made, policy considerations argue in favor of disclosing the materials we have asked for, and this Bush Administration has already disclosed similar memoranda in connection with a Senate-confirmed nominee. Your concerns about keeping secret some once-sensitive information from long-settled cases is unpersuasive, as is your contention that current employees of the Department will somehow be chilled by the disclosure you seek.

The historical record I refer to includes the disclosure of previously confidential, internal documents relating to the nominations of:

Robert H. Bork, to become an Associate Justice on the Supreme Court;
- William Bradford Reynolds, the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, to become Associate Attorney General;
- Benjamin Civiletti to become Attorney General;
- Stephen Trott to become a judge on the Ninth Circuit; and
- Justice William H. Rehnquist to become Chief Justice.

Documents provided in the course of Judge Bork's nomination are particularly illustrative. I understand that at the Committee's request, the Department disclosed to the Senate memoranda written to then-Solicitor General Bork by lower level attorneys (in the same capacity as Mr. Estrada) making recommendations about appeals. For example, the Justice Department apparently provided the Senate Judiciary Committee with memoranda related to its legal analysis of school integration cases, memoranda from Seventh Circuit Judge Frank Easterbrook when he was an Assistant Solicitor General, internal memoranda and non-public material related to Bork's analysis of President Nixon's refusal to release his Watergate-related tapes, and other memoranda regarding the pocket veto, executive privilege, and the firing of Archibald Cox.

Just as the historical precedent supports the disclosure of the requested documents, the policy considerations at stake here weigh heavily in favor of production of these materials to Congress. Perhaps the most important policy consideration is that the Senate's "consent" power, granted by the Constitution, not be thwarted. It should be exercised – pro or con – only after the Senate obtains adequate information about a nominee. No Senator could relish the prospect of voting on nominees who refuse to answer questions and whose views of the law are a near-total mystery.

You suggest that the Senate can sufficiently evaluate Mr. Estrada's qualifications for the federal bench by reviewing his already public written work. But that is simply not good enough. Mr. Estrada's work on behalf of clients in private practice and as directed by superiors at the Department of Justice does not tell us what we need to know.

Mr. Estrada's abject refusal to discuss even the most innocuous Supreme Court cases leaves Senators with distressingly little to go on in evaluating whether or not he has extreme views that may make him an unacceptable choice for a seat on the very important D.C. Circuit. When Mr. Estrada testified before the Judiciary Committee, he declined to answer all questions about his approach to the law. I asked him to name any case from recent Supreme Court jurisprudence of which he was critical. I asked him to comment on a case of which I have been critical. He declined both requests.

Given the red flags that have been raised about Mr. Estrada, it is imperative that we understand how he would approach legal questions were he confirmed. That he is nominated to the D.C. Circuit, the second-highest court in the land, and would be the swing vote on that court, makes it especially important that we know more about Mr. Estrada's views. We simply cannot rely on the scant amount of information already public to do that.

Not only do historical precedent and policy argue in favor of disclosure, but the current practice of this Administration belies your refusals. This President has already taken a position contrary to that which you advance here. Just last year, the Administration disclosed legal memoranda written by an attorney from the White House Counsel's office in connection with the nomination of Jeffrey Holmstead to be Assistant Administrator at the Environmental Protection Agency, a term appointment of far less import than this powerful lifetime appellate post. Nonetheless, in Mr. Estrada's case, the Administration has refused to provide any of the documents sought. Such refusal raises questions about the reasons underlying the Administration's unwillingness to disclose Mr. Estrada's writings. Those questions only sound more alarm bells regarding this nomination.

Finally, I would like to address two seemingly reasonable concerns that you expressed in your letter and explain why they are just ephemeral justifications for keeping Mr. Estrada's work secret longer.

You note the Department's interest in keeping the writings of members of the Office of the Solicitor General private. I can appreciate the sensitivity of these memoranda, but we are requesting documents relating to cases that likely were resolved years ago. (Should any case remain active, we would be glad to discuss appropriate precautions to ensure no damage is done to the government's interests.) I see no prejudice to the Department's interests on this score.

The other point you argue is that current employees will feel a chilling effect if they know that one day their writings may be made public. Given the public nature of the work they are tasked with, I fail to see why Assistant Solictors General would be worried that their analyses of cases might be given to Congress. Any time one of these memoranda is written, the employee must assume that his/her advice will be accepted by a superior and the views articulated in the memo will become the official position of the United States – a step that necessarily would make the substance within the memo a matter of public record. It is hard to see how a risk of future publicization creates a chilling effect under these circumstances.

We cannot properly exercise our Constitutional responsibilities on lifetime judicial appointments without adequate information. The information we need to consider Mr. Estrada's nomination is the hands of the Department of Justice. I sincerely hope that both the Bush Administration and Mr. Estrada will reconsider the efforts to block the Senate's access to this important information before we are forced into an untimely vote on his confirmation.

Sincerely

Charles E. Schumer

MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING (MOU) AND MEMORANDA OF AGREEMENT (MOA)

1. Purpose

This directive establishes the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) procedures for entering into Memoranda of Understanding (MOU's) and Memoranda of Agreement (MOA's). It highlights the differences between the two documents, indicates the limiting characteristics of a MOU/MOA, provides a standard MOU/MOA format, and distinguishes the MOU/MOA from other commonly used agreements.

2. Scope

This directive applies to all DHS Headquarters elements.

3. Authorities

The Homeland Security Act of 2002, codified in Title 6, US Code.

4. Definitions

A. Memorandum of Understanding (MOU): A document that describes very broad concepts of mutual understanding, goals and plans shared by the parties.

B. Memorandum of Agreement (MOA): A document describing in detail the specific responsibilities of, and actions to be taken by, each of the parties so that their goals may be accomplished. A MOA may also indicate the goals of the parties, to help explain their actions and responsibilities.

C. Parties: The parties to a MOU/MOA covered by this instruction are the DHS and one or more governmental or private entities.

D. Designated DHS Official: Senior DHS officials as designated by the Secretary, Deputy Secretary or Under Secretaries.

5. Responsibilities

A. All Under Secretaries and Designated DHS Officials: when exercising any authority vested in them by law or delegated by the Secretary, shall be responsible for complying with this instruction when drafting or signing an MOU or MOA.

B. The General Counsel: shall be responsible for providing legal review of all MOUs and MOAs drafted to ensure compliance with applicable laws, rules and regulations. This responsibility may be further delegated by the General Counsel.

6. Policy & Procedures

A. Policy:

1. Every DHS MOU and MOA must be consistent with the DHS mission and be authorized by federal law, regulations and funding constraints. Additionally, the existence of a MOU or MOA does not eliminate or diminish the need for additional contracts, documents, or agreements to execute the activities contemplated by the parties. Neither this directive nor any MOU/MOA can be used as the sole authority or means to acquire or procure goods or services, exchange funds or property, or transfer or assign personnel. Although the MOU/MOA can address those issues and indicate the goals and intent of the parties, all DHS personnel must comply fully with pertinent contracting and procurement regulations.

2. PROHIBITED INDEMNIFICATION AGREEMENTS OR CLAUSES. An agreement to indemnify is an agreement to assume financial, legal, or other liabilities on behalf of that other party. Neither the DHS nor any person in the DHS may agree to indemnify any other party absent specific federal statutory authorization. Federal law, 31 U.S.C. 341(a)(1)(A) and 1341(a)(1)(B), commonly referred to as the Anti-Deficiency Act, prohibits all officers and employees of the United States from making or authorizing expenditures or obligations exceeding appropriated funding and from obligating payment of money before it is appropriated. A typical indemnification clause violates both provisions of that Act because it potentially obligates the federal government (or DHS) to pay an unspecified, unlimited, and unappropriated amount of money should someone else's property be lost, damaged or destroyed, some person be injured or killed, or other parties to the MOU/MOA incur legal liabilities or expenses. Should any prospective party to a MOU/MOA request or demand that the DHS agree to an indemnification clause, contact the General Counsel's office for assistance.

B. Procedures:

1. Each employee drafting or signing an MOU/MOA should comply with the following procedures:

    a) NEGOTIATIONS. When negotiating with another party, the DHS official involved should clearly indicate that he or she cannot commit the DHS until the position advanced has been approved by the Office of General Counsel for legal sufficiency and other policy offices, as appropriate.

b) FORMAT. Enclosure (1) is the format for a two-party MOU/MOA used when the MOU/MOA originates with the DHS. The wording of the agreement may be appropriately changed to reflect multiple parties. Enclosure (1) may also be tailored to accommodate the subject matter of the agreement and needs of the parties, or to conform to an applicable law, regulation or directive. If a party other than the DHS originates the MOU/MOA, the format may differ from enclosure (1). However, every MOU/MOA in which the DHS is a party should include the following basic information:

1. Parties. The parties to be bound by the agreement must be identified.

2. Authority. The legal authority for the agreement must be cited. Federal law, applicable DHS Rules, Regulations or other directives are referenced.

3. Purpose. The purpose or reason for entering the agreement must be stated.

4. Responsibilities. A description of the duties and responsibilities of the parties must be provided. The description should be as specific and detailed as necessary. Extreme details may be provided in an appendix rather than the body of the MOU/MOA.

5. Reporting and Documentation. The MOU/MOA must specify whether follow-up reports or documentation of actions taken are required and state how often and to whom they are to be submitted.

6. Points of Contact. Points of Contact for all parties are provided, including names, office symbols, addresses and phone numbers. Fax numbers, e-mail and Internet addresses should also be provided if available.

7. Modification. A provision stating how to modify or amend the agreement is included. Modifications can be formal (written) or informal (oral). They can be approved by the Points of Contact, by the signatories, or other appropriate individuals. While it is often appropriate for those at the working level to make modifications, either orally or in writing, modifications that change central provisions of the agreement should normally be made in writing and agreed to by the individuals who originally approved the MOU/MOA or their successors.

8. Effective Date. The date the MOU/MOA becomes effective must be stated. This may be a specified date after the MOU/MOA is signed by all parties or it may be the date the last party signs the agreement.

9. Termination. The MOU/MOA must contain several provisions regarding termination. The document will indicate that it will terminate on a certain date, upon the accomplishment of its purpose, or upon agreement of the parties. The MOU/MOA will also contain a provision indicating whether the duration of the agreement may be extended and, if so, the extension mechanism (e.g. by written agreement of the parties). Finally, the agreement will indicate whether a party may terminate the agreement early (usually by written notice to the other parties).

c) APPROVING OFFICIAL. The DHS is a party to the agreement, not the person signing for the DHS. Therefore, that person must have the authority to sign the MOU/MOA and commit the DHS. In determining who that official is, refer to the statute, regulation or directive authorizing DHS participation in the MOU/MOA. Other sources of authority are the DHS Delegations of Authority. Also, prior to signing any MOU or MOA, the person signing for DHS must ensure that Office of General Counsel has reviewed the document for legal sufficiency and approved it. If the head of another Department or Agency is signing the agreement for another party, the agreement must be coordinated with the Office of the Secretary of Homeland Security. Even if the authority to sign a MOU/MOA has been delegated to a lower level, if a higher-level official is signing for another party, it may be appropriate to elevate the signing of the MOU/MOA within DHS as a matter of protocol.

d) CLEARANCE. Clearance of a proposed MOU/MOA can be either consecutive or concurrent. Early coordination and communication with interested offices, and the use of e-mail for reviewing and editing a draft MOU/MOA is encouraged. Prior to submitting a MOU/MOA to the approval authority for signature, the originating office shall ensure that the MOU/MOA does not conflict with any preexisting agreements. The originating office shall also ensure that all interested program offices and the General Counsel has reviewed the MOU/MOA

C. Questions or Concerns Regarding the Process: Any questions or concerns regarding this directive should be addressed to the General Counsel.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

JAN 23 2003

The Honorable Charles E. Schumer
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Schumer:

I am responding to your letter dated January 23, 2003, in which you once again requested that the Department disclose the confidential and privileged appeal, certiorari and amicus memoranda that Miguel Estrada authored when he was a career lawyer in the Office of the Solicitor General. You continue to insist that disclosure of this sensitive material is necessary to allow you adequately to address Mr. Estrada's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit -- a nomination that has been pending for some 624 days. As you know, Mr. Estrada has received a unanimous "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, the ABA's highest rating.

We addressed fully the assertions made in your most recent correspondence in our previous letters to you dated June 5, 2002, and October 8, 2002 (attached herewith). Our previous explanations remain equally applicable today, and we therefore must again respectfully decline your request. As we have explained, the relevant historical, policy and legal considerations implicated by your request establish that disclosure of these memoranda from the Office of Solicitor General would undermine the integrity of the decisionmaking process in that Office. Notwithstanding our previous letters, several specific items in your letter merit discussion.

At Mr. Estrada's hearing, you asserted that the Department disclosed memoranda written by Judge Easterbrook in connection with his confirmation hearing. In response to that claim, as we noted in our letter of October 8, 2002, we comprehensively reviewed the Department's files and the public record of Judge Easterbrook's confirmation hearing and we found absolutely no evidence that the Department authorized the release of these memoranda in connection with Judge Easterbrook's nomination. Your most recent letter now asserts that the Easterbrook documents "apparently" were provided to the Committee in connection with Judge Bork's nomination. However, the public record of Judge Bork's confirmation hearings contains no mention of the Easterbrook memoranda you reference. As we explained previously, your mere possession of these documents does not suggest that the Department waived applicable privileges nor authorized their disclosure in connection with either nomination.

You also suggest in your letter that the Administration's decision to disclose legal memoranda from the White House Counsel's Office in connection with the nomination of Jeffrey Holmstead to serve as Assistant Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency serves as precedent for disclosing Mr. Estrada's highly privileged work product. As you may be aware, the White House initially declined to provide all of Mr. Holmstead's files as requested by the Senate Environment and Public Work Committee, on the basis of the deliberative process, attorney-client and work product privileges. In response, the Environment Committee, based on its particularized concerns and allegation of misconduct regarding one specific subject, requested a small subset of documents related only to that matter. Because of the specificity of the Environment Committee's concerns, the White House permitted the Committee to review that limited subset of materials, which answered the allegation in question. This example, if anything, further demonstrates the overbreadth and impropriety of the current request -- a request that some have characterized as a fishing expedition requesting all documents authored by Mr. Estrada about all subjects during his entire tenure in the Office.

Finally, we respectfully submit that, despite your view to the contrary, your request threatens the proper functioning of the Office of the Solicitor General. All seven living former Solicitors General, including Archibald Cox, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger and Seth Waxman, have written to the Senate Judiciary Committee and explained the debilitating impact your request would have on the ability of the Office to represent the United States in litigation. The letter -- authored by distinguished lawyers of both parties -- noted that their "decisonmaking process required the unbridled, open exchange of ideas -- an exchange that simply cannot take place if attorneys have reason to fear that their private recommendations are not private at all, but vulnerable to public disclosure." While we respect your right to disagree with these seven former Solicitors General, we must defer to their considered judgments about the impact of disclosure based on their collective experience of decades heading the Office. Thus, we respectfully adhere to our previous decision to protect these highly privileged documents from disclosure.

Thank you for considering the Department's views on this matter. As we have noted previously, the public record is more than adequate for the Committee to evaluate Mr. Estrada's qualifications to be a Circuit Judge on the D.C. Circuit. We look forward to Mr. Estrada's prompt consideration by the Committee and confirmation by the full Senate.

Sincerely,

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

June 5, 2002

The Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to your letter dated May 15, 2002, requesting appeal recommendations, certiorari recommendations, and amicus recommendations that Miguel Estrada worked on when he was employed at the Department of Justice.

The categories of documents that you have requested are among the most highly privileged and deliberative documents generated within the Department of Justice. The Solicitor General must have the benefit of candid and confidential advice in order to discharge his critical responsibility of deciding what appeals the Government will take and what positions the Government will adopt in pending litigation. Attorneys like Mr. Estrada who serve as Assistants to the Solicitor General are asked to render candid, unbiased, and professional advice about the merits of potential appeals. They do so by preparing exactly the kinds of recommendation memoranda that you have requested. These documents review the substantive legal issues in a case, the broader jurisprudential implications of the case, policy considerations, the strength of the factual record, and the overall likelihood of success on appeal.

If highly privileged and deliberative documents of this kind are not shielded from disclosure, the Department will face the grave danger that Assistants to the Solicitor General, and others in comparable positions, will be chilled in the future from providing the candid and independent analysis that is essential to high-level decisionmaking. As the unanimous Supreme Court recognized: "Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process." United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705 (1974). The Court observed that "the importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion." Id. Simply put, the Department cannot function properly if our attorneys write these kinds of documents with one eye focused on the effect that their words, if made public, might have on their qualification for future office.

For these reasons, the Department has a longstanding policy -- which has endured across Administrations of both parties -- of declining to release publicly or make available to Congress the kinds of documents you have requested.

We trust that you will appreciate the important institutional interests that lead us to decline your request. In our judgment, the Committee has had ample time and alternative means for obtaining assessments of how Mr. Estrada's performance as an Assistant to the Solicitor General bears on the merits of his nomination. In particular, you have been free to inquire of the Solicitors General under whom Mr. Estrada served their views as to his qualifications for the position to which he has been nominated.

On January 25, 2002, you promised a Committee hearing for Mr. Estrada this year. So that the Committee can meet your commitment, we would request that you contact me or Judge Gonzales, as soon as possible to discuss this matter if you have any questions or concerns.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

October 8, 2002

The Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

During the hearing on September 26, 2002, on the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, you and Senator Schumer restated your request that the Department of Justice disclose certain confidential and privileged appeal, certiorari, and amicus memoranda that Mr. Estrada authored when he was a career lawyer in the Office of the Solicitor General.

As we indicated in our letter of June 5, 2002, we must respectfully decline your request. The relevant historical, policy, and legal considerations implicated by your request demonstrate that disclosure of these memoranda from the Office of the Solicitor General would undermine the integrity of the decisionmaking process in that Office.

The Committee's request threatens the proper functioning of the Office of the Solicitor General. Indeed, all seven living former Solicitors General—from Archibald Cox to Seth P. Waxman—have written to the Committee and explained that the Committee's broad and unprecedented request would have a debilitating effect on the ability of the United States to represent itself in litigation. Their letter explained that, as Solicitors General, their "decisionmaking process required the unbridled, open exchange of ideas—an exchange that simply cannot take place if attorneys have reason to fear that their private recommendations are not private at all, but vulnerable to public disclosure." Thus, "[a]ny attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests—a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself."

Longstanding historical Senate practice reinforces the position of the former Solicitors General that confidential, deliberative documents from the Office of Solicitor General have been, and should remain, confidential during confirmation hearings. As the attached charts demonstrate, since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Those 67 nominees—of whom 38 had no prior judicial experience—include eight former lawyers with the Office of the Solicitor General. Our review of each of these 67 nominees' hearing records establishes that in none of these cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the nominee while a Department lawyer. In fact, we could find no nominee for whom the Senate Judiciary Committee even requested that the Department produce such materials.[1] The Committee's request with respect to Mr. Estrada therefore is unprecedented.

Of particular relevance are the appellate-court nominees who previously had been Assistants to the Solicitor General or Deputy Solicitors General, and had not served as judges at the time of their nomination—the same position Mr. Estrada occupies now. The nominees, nominated by Presidents of both political parties and confirmed by Senates controlled by both political parties, are:

- Samuel A. Alito Jr. (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1981-85; confirmed to the Third Circuit, 1990);
- Danny J. Boggs (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1973-75; confirmed to the Sixth Circuit, 1986);
- William C. Bryson (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1978-79; Deputy Solicitor General, 1986-94; confirmed to the Federal Circuit, 1994);
- Frank H. Easterbrook (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1974-77; Deputy Solicitor General, 1978-79; confirmed to the Seventh Circuit, 1985);
- Daniel M. Friedman (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1959-68; Deputy Solicitor General, 1968-78; confirmed to the appellate division of the Court of Claims (later the Federal Circuit), 1982);
- Richard A. Posner (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1965-67; confirmed to the Seventh Circuit, 1981); and
- A. Raymond Randolph (Deputy Solicitor General, 1975-77; confirmed to the D.C. Circuit, 1990).

In none of these cases did the Department of Justice provide to the Committee the nominees' appeal, certiorari, or amicus recommendations. And in none of these cases did the Committee request that the Department do so.

The policy considerations implicated by the Committee's request underscore the strength of the Department's position and demonstrate that previous Senate Judiciary Committees have recognized the essential, long-term interest of the United States in protecting the integrity of such memoranda. The need to ensure the integrity of the process by which the Solicitor General makes litigation decisions for the United States is extraordinarily important. As the former Solicitors General explained, the interest in receiving honest, candid assessments of possible litigation positions, agency interests,

[1] The nomination of Stephen S. Trott to the Ninth Circuit was delayed by a dispute between the Committee and the Department with respect to access to internal documents wholly unrelated to Judge Trott. See Ruth Marcus, "Impasse Over Justice Documents Ends; Papers Turned Over; Senate Confirms Trott to Court of Appeals," Wash. Post., Mar. 25, 1998, at A23. The Committee never requested that the Department provide it with documents created by Judge Trott as a Department lawyer.

and Supreme Court opinions would be severely compromised by disclosure in this context. It is important to add, furthermore, that memoranda written by Assistants to the Solicitor General present legal arguments supporting the litigation position of the United States, not their personal views. These memoranda seek to determine the legal arguments that are appropriate in government briefs, not the legal or policy preferences of their author.

Furthermore, the Committee's need to assess a nominee's performance, intellect, and integrity can be accommodated in ways other than intruding into the deliberative process of the Office of the Solicitor General. For example, the Committee can review the nominee's written briefs and oral arguments, consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time, and examine the nominee's written performance reviews. In Mr. Estrada's case, for example, there is a substantial body of information about his tenure in the Office of the Solicitor General. Former Solicitor General Seth Waxman, who supervised Mr. Estrada, has written to the Committee in support of his nomination. Mr. Waxman wrote:

> During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views—or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States.

Moreover, 14 of Mr. Estrada's former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General have written the Committee to emphasize his ability, collegiality, and integrity:

> We also know Miguel to be a delightful and charming colleague, someone who can engage in open, honest, and respectful discussion of legal issues with others, regardless of their ideological perspectives. Based on our experience as his colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, we are confident that he possesses the temperament, character, and qualities of fairness and respect necessary to be an exemplary judge. In combination, Miguel's exceptional legal ability and talent, his character and integrity, and his deep and varied experience as a public servant and in private practice make him an excellent candidate for service on the federal bench.

Finally, Mr. Estrada has sent the Judiciary Committee copies of his performance evaluations from his tenure in the Office. These documents indicate that Mr. Estrada's supervisors gave him ratings of "outstanding"—the highest possible score—in every category for every evaluation period.

It bears emphasis that the long-standing historical practice, policy considerations, and views of the former Solicitors General are fully supported by applicable legal principles. At the outset, it is important to note that the memoranda sought by the Committee are indisputably within the scope of the deliberative process, attorney-client, and attorney work-product privileges. The Supreme Court has recognized "the valid need for protection of communications between high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties." Houchins v. KQED, 438 U.S. 1, 35 n.27 (1978). Indeed, the Court has explained that "the importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion. Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process." Id. (internal quotation omitted). The deliberative process privilege's ultimate purpose is to prevent injury to the quality of agency decisions by allowing government officials freedom to debate alternative approaches in private. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 151 (1975). Based on these principles, courts have long recognized the Executive Branch's authority to protect the integrity of documents and other materials which would reveal advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated.[2] See In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 737 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

As a matter of law and tradition, these privileges can be overcome only when Congress establishes a "demonstrably critical" need for the requested information. Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 731 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc). It is insufficient for the requested material merely to "have some arguable relevance" to appropriate Congressional function. Id. at 733. In assessing whether Congress' possesses a "demonstrably critical" need for the material in question, one crucial consideration is whether Congress can obtain reasonably equivalent information from alternative sources that would satisfy its legitimate needs. In this instance, we again note that the Committee has full access to Mr. Estrada's briefs and oral arguments, to the information provided by Mr. Waxman, to the letter from former colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, and to his performance reviews. The Committee also is free to contact any of Mr. Estrada's former supervisors and colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General to seek further information about Mr. Estrada's temperament, fairness, analytical skills and abilities or any other matters the Committee appropriately deems relevant to its inquiry. Because the Committee has adequate sources of information about Mr. Estrada, among other reasons, it cannot establish the "demonstrably critical" need for the deliberative materials in question.

None of the seven examples cited during Mr. Estrada's hearing as precedent for the Committee's request—the nominations of Judge Frank Easterbrook to the Seventh Circuit, Judge Robert Bork and Chief Justice William Rehnquist to the Supreme Court, Benjamin Civiletti to be Attorney General and Deputy Attorney General, William Bradford Reynolds to be Associate Attorney General, Judge Stephen Trott to the Ninth Circuit, and Jeffrey Holmstead to be Assistant Administrator at the Environmental Protection Agency—supports the Committee's request in this matter.

Of the seven cited nominees, the hearings of only two—Judge Bork and Judge Easterbrook—involved documents from their service in the Office of the Solicitor General. Senator Schumer placed into Mr. Estrada's hearing record a single, two-page amicus recommendation memorandum that Judge Easterbrook authored as an Assistant to the Solicitor General. The official record of Judge Easterbrook's confirmation hearing contains no references to this document, and based on a comprehensive review of the Department's files, we do not believe that the Department authorized its release in connection with Judge Easterbrook's nomination. Senator Schumer's possession of this memorandum does not suggest that the Department waived applicable privileges and authorized its disclosure in connection with Judge Easterbrook's or any other nomination.

The hearing record of Judge Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court demonstrates that the Committee received access to a limited number of documents related to three specific subjects of heightened interest to the Committee, two of which were related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues and triggered specific concerns by the Committee. The vast majority of memoranda authored or received by Judge Bork when he served as Solicitor General were neither sought nor produced. And the limited category of documents that were produced to the Committee did not reveal the internal deliberative recommendations or analysis of Assistants to the Solicitor General regarding appeal, certiorari, or amicus recommendations in pending cases.

The remaining five nominations cited at the hearing similarly do not justify the disclosure of deliberative material authored by Mr. Estrada. None of the limited documents disclosed in the hearings for those five nominations involved deliberative memoranda from the Office of the Solicitor General. The Committee with respect to those five nominations requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Moreover, as noted above, with respect to the nomination of Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents wholly unrelated to Judge Trott's service with the Department. Again, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda authored or received by these nominees were never sought or received by the Committee. In sum, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memoranda from Office of Solicitor General—and deliberative Department of Justice materials more broadly—must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process.

In conclusion, we emphasize that the Department of Justice appreciates and profoundly respects the Judiciary Committee's legitimate need to evaluate Mr. Estrada's qualifications for the federal bench. We again suggest, however, that the information currently available is more than adequate to allow the Committee to determine whether Mr. Estrada is qualified to be a federal judge.

Thank you for considering the Department's views on this matter. Mr. Estrada's nomination for a position on an important federal court of appeals has now been pending for 518 days. There is no disagreement about the fact that he is a talented, experienced and exceptionally well-qualified nominee with strong and widespread bipartisan support. In fact, after an intensive investigation, the American Bar Association found Mr. Estrada to be unanimously well-qualified for a judgeship on the District of Columbia Circuit. We sincerely hope that the Committee and the Senate will approve Mr. Estrada's nomination before the close of the 107th Congress.

Sincerely,

From the looks of this AP story that Chris Bartolomucci just sent around, looks like the press isn't getting the message.

Pickering, Owen to Get Senate Hearings

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two of President Bush's most contentious court nominations, Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering and Texas Judge Priscilla Owen, will face new questions this year from the same Democrats who rejected the appeals court appointments last year.

Pickering and Owen were the only two White House judicial nominees voted down by Judiciary Democrats when they controlled the Senate last year. Committee chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, plans to let senators question the two again in hopes of rehabilitating their nominations.

Bush renominated the two earlier this month, much to the Democrats' chagrin.

"I'm trying to be cooperative," Hatch said. "We'll have a hearing on Pickering because I'm trying to show deference to them."

Pickering, a U.S. District judge in Hattiesburg, Miss., and a friend of Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., was blocked by Democrats last year after civil rights groups questioned his race-relations record. Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice and a friend of the president, was rejected after Democrats complained that her rulings were overly influenced by her personal beliefs.

Both were nominated for seats on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which handles federal appeals from Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana.

Opposition to Pickering's nomination increased among Democrats after Lott made racially insensitive remarks and ultimately stepped down as GOP leader.

Pickering's hearing - which could come as early as March - would be his third before the Senate Judiciary Committee since his May 2001 nomination. Hatch did not give a timetable for Owen. "We've got to see whether there will be obstructionist tactics," Hatch said.

Democrats say the Judiciary Committee has already rejected both, and they have threatened to filibuster Pickering's nomination if it goes to the full Senate. Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the panel's top Democrat, noted that the Republicans did not start their year by trying to get either Pickering or Owen approved quickly.

"Perhaps this is a sign that the Republicans on this committee recognize the unprecedented nature of these renominations and the divisiveness they engender," Leahy said in a statement.

Instead, the GOP will start with a Judiciary Committee vote on Miguel Estrada, who wants a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. That court has often been a stepping stone to the Supreme Court.

Estrada received a unanimous well-qualified recommendation from the American Bar Association. If confirmed, he would become the first Hispanic on what is considered the second-highest court in the nation. He also has been mentioned as a possible Supreme Court nominee if a vacancy occurs during Bush's presidency.

A member of the law firm that represented Bush in his successful Supreme Court fight for the presidency in 2000, Estrada had to be renominated earlier this year because the Democratic-controlled Senate did not act on his nomination last year. Estrada has been waiting for a committee vote since May 2001. Republicans now control the Senate.

"It's an important vote," Hatch, R-Utah, said Friday. "I think he will pass out with significant support from this committee."

But Democrats, outnumbered 10-9 on the committee, already are gathering their forces to oppose Estrada.

"His selection for this court has generated tremendous controversy," Leahy said. "I think that is, in part, because he appears to have been groomed to be an activist appellate judge by well-placed conservatives."

During Estrada's five-hour confirmation hearing last year, Democrats repeatedly contended that he lacked judicial experience. That, plus his refusal to answer questions about specific cases, gave Democrats little to review, they said.

The Justice Department's solicitor general's office, where Estrada used to work, refused to release copies of memos and opinions he produced when he worked there.

"Miguel Estrada refused to answer question after question regarding his judicial philosophy and his views on Supreme Court cases of national interest," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. "He gave senators no real insight into his judicial philosophy."

Hatch has further clarified what he meant this morning when he said in the mark up that he would be holding hearings on Owen and Pickering.

First he hung out for quite awhile after the hearing and basically fudged a bit on what he meant, saying that he didn't think it necessary to do hearings again but he may/he may not.

Also, he does not plan on bringing Owen back for an actual hearing. He's thinking of a hearing of supporters/detractors for both Owen and Pickering (separate hearings). Not bringing them back up again. This is better than we thought, but obviously not ideal.

I'm going to talk to KBH and Cornyn (actually already talked to him) about weighing in w/Hatch about Owen (no hearing). I think it's important though that we (admin folks) keep our criticism of the Chairman's idea on this private and limited only to conversations with him and his staff, not public.

I know I flagged for most of you the prospect of a joint RPC/SRC Member meeting on Judicial Nominees. That meeting is talking place Wed, Jan. 29th at 2pm. Brett, as you may recall, they initially indicated that they might want the Judge to take part in this conference; no need to hold this time on the Judge's schedule. They have opted to go with having Viet Dinh brief them on judicial emergencies, nominees, etc.

Catholics move to the center of the bench
By TIM UNSWORTH
Sometime in the early 1940s, my father returned from a business trip and announced to his family: &Shake the hand that shook the hand of Justice Frank Murphy.8 During that same trip, he stopped in Kansas City, Mo., and was introduced to Harry Truman, who had been a senator from that state since 1934. But my father had barely heard of him. It was Murphy, the only Catholic on the Supreme Court, that caught his baptized eye.
It was a period in Catholic thinking during which we celebrated Catholic all-American ping-pong teams. Besides, Murphy, a former mayor of Detroit, governor of Michigan and U.S. attorney general, was only the fifth Catholic to serve on the court since it was established in 1789, a period of 151 years. The Jews had to wait 127 years until Louis D. Brandeis, the first Jewish justice, was appointed by Woodrow Wilson in 1916. Compare that to the 32 Episcopalian behinds that have warmed the bench since George Washington appointed John Jay (Episcopalian) in 1789.
Now comes George W. Bush, who sees at least one vacancy on the court (maybe two) at the end of the present term. Seven of the nine justices have been appointed by Republican presidents, but the president is uncomfortable with any Dem-ocrats hanging around. It is likely that William Rehnquist, Lutheran and chief justice, who is almost 79, will leave the court after 31 years. Further, Sandra Day O,Connor (Episcopalian), who will be 73 in 2003, is making sounds that she may return to her California home.
The oldest justice is John Paul Stevens, an 82-year-old Protestant with a Catholic wife. However, he has given little indication that he,s ready to hang up his gavel. Further, with an average age of nearly 69, these nine justices could almost compete with the College of Cardinals. The aging court could use a bladder control prayer group. Any one of them could make the Last Judgment at any time.
According to The New York Times, President Bush has staffers making lists of potential candidates in order to meet the late spring deadline and to mount a strong defense of his choices who will likely be even more conservative than he is.
At the moment, the front-runner for the first vacancy is Alberto R. Gonzales, a White House counselor and former legal adviser to Bush when he was governor of Texas. Reports suggest that Harvard Law School graduate Gonzales, who came from a poor Texas family, has the requisite loyalty and philosophical conservatism that Bush craves. More important, if nominated and approved, he would be the first Hispanic to serve.
President Bush needs Hispanic votes. The nation now has over 35,300,000 Latinos -- most of them with roots in Mexico. His brother, Jeb, governor of Florida, is married to a Latina-American and has converted to Catholicism. Jeb helped to deliver Florida,s electoral votes, the ones that put George in office, even though he lost the general election. Allegedly, Gonzales wants the post. Even now, his staff suggests that he likes to be addressed as &Judge Gonzales.8 He is conservative, antiabortion -- and Catholic.

Two other possible candidates are Samuel Alito, judge of the appeals court in Newark, N.J. However, Alito is Italian-American as is Justice Antonin Scalia. Alito once clerked for Scalia and earned the nickname &Scalito.8 Then, there is Miguel Estrada, perhaps a more reliable conservative than Gonzales. The hard-nosed conservatives don,t amount to that big a political block, however.

It,s just that they,re louder and Bush is fearful of them. In any case, all three potential justices are Roman Catholics.

That suggests there may be four, maybe five Catholics on the court by next spring -- an extraordinary shift. The new justice -- or two -- would join Scalia, Anthony Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

There hasn,t been a Catholic chief justice in 82 years. Bush might prefer Scalia but the opinionated justice would have a hard time even with the new Republican Congress. He,s a brilliant justice but he shaves with his tongue. He could become another Robert Bork. Both Scalia and Kennedy will be 67 in 2003. And Clarence Thomas, 55 this year, is still recovering from the Anita Hill debacle. Further, he is regarded as a Scalia clone. (Thomas is a convert to Catholicism. He drifted away from the church for some 28 years but has returned, often attending Mass at St. Joseph,s on Capitol Hill, just behind the court.)

The first Catholic to serve was Roger B. Taney, son of a wealthy slave-owning family, who raised tobacco. Years later, as chief justice, he supported slavery even for descendants of slaves. This was a period during which some Catholic colleges and seminaries used slave labor (now called athletics). Taney, a former Federalist, was the fifth chief justice, appointed by Andrew Jackson in 1836. He served until 1864, long enough to incur the wrath of Abraham Lincoln.

Edward D. White of Louisiana was appointed to the court in 1894 by Grover Cleveland. He was named chief justice in 1910 and led the court until 1921. White graduated from the Jesuit College in New Orleans and then went on to Georgetown. He was the court,s ninth chief justice and was generally considered a conservative, although he did help to speed the advent of the eight-hour day for railroad workers. He was enshrined in Statuary Hall in 1955, together with 13 other Catholics.

Joseph McKenna, a William McKinley appointee, served for 26 years (1898-1925). He had been the U.S. attorney general but had little consistent legal policy. For a few years, he shared the bench with Pierce Butler, a Warren Harding ap-pointee from Minnesota, who served for 16 years (1923-39) and was generally considered a conservative.

Then came Frank Murphy, a New Deal Democrat, appointed in 1940 by Franklin D. Roosevelt. Prior to his nomination, he was widely recognized for his relief efforts. He left the court to serve in World War II but returned and served until 1949. The first -- and next to last -- of the Catholic liberals, he condemned the wartime imprisonment of the Japanese.

William J. Brennan was recognized as a liberal Catholic judge. He served 33 years (1956-90) before retiring, sometimes drawing criticism from major bishops who were growing more conservative. He ruled often for a greater guarantee of justice for the poor. By the time he left the court, two other papist justices, Antonin Scalia and Anthony Kennedy, were serving.

The potential of the voting power of four Catholics on a nine-member court is worth pondering. Only one additional vote from a Jewish justice or a lonely WASP could produce some of the many 5-4 decisions. Ruth Bader Ginsburg, 69, second female and a Jew, was appointed by Bill Clinton in 1993. Stephen G. Breyer was appointed in 1994. (He does not list himself as Jewish by religion but is considered a cultural Jew.)

Unfortunately, the four Catholics are conservative, two of them -- Scalia and Thomas -- to the right of Attila the Hun (a devout barbarian), and two others -- Kennedy and (maybe) Gonzales, leaning to the right. There are no

Murphys or Brennans.
Presently, there are issues such as capital punishment, just war, abortion, disabilities, immigration, school vouchers, welfare, wages, homosexual unions, sodomy, fair employment and college admissions practices, and so on, that need to be sorted out. Responses all have roots in church teaching but, with the exception of abortion and cloning, it doesn,t seem to matter much anymore. The situation is not unlike the laity, s response to Humanae Vitae, the encyclical on birth control. The bishops continue to rant about birth control but the Catholics in the pew pay no attention. Neither will the justices.
Just when Catholic justices have moved to the center of the bench, it doesn,t seem to matter if they are Cath-olics or Rosicrucians. It,s a shame. My long-deceased father, who finished only grammar school, would not have washed his hands for decades after shaking the hands of four Catholic justices.

n the most sweeping challenge yet to the federal fund intended to compensate relatives of Sept. 11 victims, the families of seven victims who worked at Cantor Fitzgerald have filed a lawsuit accusing the fund's administrator of acting illegally and unfairly, thereby shortchanging the families of all New York victims.

The lawsuit calls the administrator, Kenneth R. Feinberg, autocratic and arrogant, and accuses him of having "run roughshod" over legislation governing the the Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund. It also says Mr. Feinberg has "alienated and disenfranchised the very constituency he was appointed to serve."

And it says that the fund violates New York law by calculating awards based on after-tax projections of lost income, discriminates against unmarried victims and imposes an illegal cap that could leave some high-income families with as little as one-tenth of what they should be awarded under the law establishing the fund.

The lawsuit, which was filed in Federal District Court in Manhattan on Saturday, details many misgivings that have been circulating for months among some families and companies that lost relatives and employees in the attack on the World Trade Center.

If successful, the lawsuit could force Mr. Feinberg, whose title is special master of the fund, to pay out hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars more than the $4 billion to $5 billion the fund is expected to cost taxpayers. He would also have to review, and possibly recalibrate, the 154 awards that have already been offered to decedents' families. Those awards have totaled $240 million, an average of $1.56 million per family.

The failure of the suit could also work against Mr. Feinberg and the fund because some families may agree that its formulas calculate awards that are too low. Those families might then decide to sue the airlines, airport-security companies and other entities that have been cited as bearing some responsibility for allowing the hijacking of the four jetliners involved in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

But against the current backdrop of impending war and economic malaise, the tide of public opinion could also shift in favor of Mr. Feinberg and against the families for seemingly blurring the lines between grief and greed.

Reached at his home yesterday, Mr. Feinberg said he had not seen the suit. "I know nothing about it," he said, "and I have no comment. After I read it, I will turn the complaint over to the Department of Justice."

The lawsuit does not seek to overturn the statute that created the compensation fund as part of an airline bailout package after Sept. 11. Nor does it seek damages. Instead, it challenges the rules of the fund and the formulas Mr. Feinberg has come up with to determine monetary awards. It also seeks to create a single class of the approximately 2,800 victims who died at the World Trade Center.

It does not include those people who died in the planes that crashed into the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania.

The lawsuit was filed by John F. Cambria, managing partner of the New York office of Salans, an international law firm. The seven Cantor employees named in the suit were of varying ages and work experience. Their annual salaries ranged from less than $50,000 to more than $1 million.

Some of the lawsuit's arguments echo those made in a September report on the fund's shortcomings that was prepared by Cantor; the New York law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom; and the economic consulting firm of Chicago Partners. They also mirror arguments made either formally or informally by other companies that lost employees in the trade center attack.

Pamela S. Falk, a professor at the City University of New York who has no connection to the suit, said, "The court will have to weigh a strong and sympathetic case by the victims that they have not been fairly compensated against a longstanding tradition in U.S. law to give deference to government administrators."

And Perry Binder, a professor at Georgia State University in Atlanta, said that while the lawsuit may be technically correct, the courts may decide that Mr. Feinberg has not been unreasonable or unfair. But the real question, Mr. Binder said, was whether Congress would amend a hastily drawn and flawed statute.
"We all should have seen this lawsuit coming," he said.

The first of the four major areas of contention in the 30-page suit concerns taxes. Under New York law, pretax earnings are used in computing wrongful death awards. But Mr. Feinberg uses after-tax earnings, the complaint charges. As a result, while the survivor of a victim who made $225,000 a year should stand to receive $4.48 million under New York law, the fund would offer $3.35 million.

The second concerns the rate at which single people spend money. In computing wrongful-death awards, New York law does not differentiate between married and unmarried decedents. But according to the complaint, Mr. Feinberg calculates that a single decedent with an annual income of $70,000 spent 60.8 percent of that income, while a married decedent spent 17.4 percent because married people tend to spend less and can avail themselves of their spouses' income.

The complaint also charges that Mr. Feinberg computes income levels by averaging the years 1998 through 2000, and ignores the annualized earnings of 2001, which were presumably higher in part because of the strength of the local economy, particularly Wall Street, in the early part of the year. It accuses Mr. Feinberg of using national, not New York, statistics in calculating the growth rates of annual compensation and also says that he ignored stock options and other forms of compensation beyond salaries and bonuses.

Finally, the complaint says that Mr. Feinberg has "played a cat-and-mouse game" when it comes to figuring awards for victims who earned more than $231,000 a year.

The plaintiffs' lawyer, Mr. Cambria, said Mr. Feinberg has been loath to offer awards of more than $5 million or $6 million even though under his formula, a mother of two children who lost a 35-year-old husband should be offered $20 million.

Mr. Cambria stressed that his high-income clients ? as well as the hundreds of others who died on Sept. 11 ? do not expect to receive awards of quite that magnitude. But still, he said, they felt that the numbers were far too low, and unfair.

"Some of what he has said sounds like he views his job as the sentry at the federal treasury," Mr. Cambria said. "But it's not his job to balance the budget, or bring this project in under a certain number. It's his job to carry out this statute passed by Congress."

Mr. Cambria said that his clients did not want to be interviewed because of privacy concerns and personal grief. But in a statement released by Mr. Cambria, one widow, who was not identified, said: "My husband worked a second job to support our children and me, and now he's gone. The amount of money we'll get if Feinberg's rules stay the way they are now is unfair. The simple fact is that we need more help."

Mr. Feinberg and the federal government have 60 days to respond to the complaint, Mr. Cambria said. But given the fact that the deadline to apply to the fund is Dec. 21, 2003, and that other legal matters related to Sept. 11 are still pending, Mr. Cambria said that he anticipated an expedited resolution.

He suggested that the best solution would be a settlement that adjusted the formulas worked out by Mr. Feinberg, who Mr. Cambria said also wanted to do right by the families.

"We believe in the fund," Mr. Cambria said. "I think the fund is a good thing. And at the end of the day, the amount of money between the way Feinberg wants to do it and the way the statute requires it ? that delta is, in terms of the federal budget or other Congressionally mandated programs, very insignificant. But to my clients, it's life or death. It's the rest of their lives."

n the most sweeping challenge yet to the federal fund intended to compensate relatives of Sept. 11 victims, the families of seven victims who worked at Cantor Fitzgerald have filed a lawsuit accusing the fund's administrator of acting illegally and unfairly, thereby shortchanging the families of all New York victims.

The lawsuit calls the administrator, Kenneth R. Feinberg, autocratic and arrogant, and accuses him of having "run roughshod" over legislation governing the the Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund. It also says Mr. Feinberg has "alienated and disenfranchised the very constituency he was appointed to serve."

And it says that the fund violates New York law by calculating awards based on after-tax projections of lost income, discriminates against unmarried victims and imposes an illegal cap that could leave some high-income families with as little as one-tenth of what they should be awarded under the law establishing the fund.

The lawsuit, which was filed in Federal District Court in Manhattan on Saturday, details many misgivings that have been circulating for months among some families and companies that lost relatives and employees in the attack on the World Trade Center.

If successful, the lawsuit could force Mr. Feinberg, whose title is special master of the fund, to pay out hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars more than the $4 billion to $5 billion the fund is expected to cost taxpayers. He would also have to review, and possibly recalibrate, the 154 awards that have already been offered to decedents' families. Those awards have totaled $240 million, an average of $1.56 million per family.

The failure of the suit could also work against Mr. Feinberg and the fund because some families may agree that its formulas calculate awards that are too low. Those families might then decide to sue the airlines, airport-security companies and other entities that have been cited as bearing some responsibility for allowing the hijacking of the four jetliners involved in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

But against the current backdrop of impending war and economic malaise, the tide of public opinion could also shift in favor of Mr. Feinberg and against the families for seemingly blurring the lines between grief and greed.

Reached at his home yesterday, Mr. Feinberg said he had not seen the suit. "I know nothing about it," he said, "and I have no comment. After I read it, I will turn the complaint over to the Department of Justice."
The lawsuit does not seek to overturn the statute that created the compensation fund as part of an airline bailout package after Sept. 11. Nor does it seek damages. Instead, it challenges the rules of the fund and the formulas Mr. Feinberg has come up with to determine monetary awards. It also seeks to create a single class of the approximately 2,800 victims who died at the World Trade Center.
It does not include those people who died in the planes that crashed into the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania.
The lawsuit was filed by John F. Cambria, managing partner of the New York office of Salans, an international law firm. The seven Cantor employees named in the suit were of varying ages and work experience. Their annual salaries ranged from less than $50,000 to more than $1 million.
Some of the lawsuit's arguments echo those made in a September report on the fund's shortcomings that was prepared by Cantor; the New York law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom; and the economic consulting firm of Chicago Partners. They also mirror arguments made either formally or informally by other companies that lost employees in the trade center attack.
Pamela S. Falk, a professor at the City University of New York who has no connection to the suit, said, "The court will have to weigh a strong and sympathetic case by the victims that they have not been fairly compensated against a longstanding tradition in U.S. law to give deference to government administrators."
And Perry Binder, a professor at Georgia State University in Atlanta, said that while the lawsuit may be technically correct, the courts may decide that Mr. Feinberg has not been unreasonable or unfair. But the real question, Mr. Binder said, was whether Congress would amend a hastily drawn and flawed statute.
"We all should have seen this lawsuit coming," he said.
The first of the four major areas of contention in the 30-page suit concerns taxes. Under New York law, pretax earnings are used in computing wrongful death awards. But Mr. Feinberg uses after-tax earnings, the complaint charges. As a result, while the survivor of a victim who made $225,000 a year should stand to receive $4.48 million under New York law, the fund would offer $3.35 million.
The second concerns the rate at which single people spend money. In computing wrongful-death awards, New York law does not differentiate between married and unmarried decedents. But according to the complaint, Mr. Feinberg calculates that a single decedent with an annual income of $70,000 spent 60.8 percent of that income, while a married decedent spent 17.4 percent because married people tend to spend less and can avail themselves of their spouses' income.
The complaint also charges that Mr. Feinberg computes income levels by averaging the years 1998 through 2000, and ignores the annualized earnings of 2001, which were presumably higher in part because of the strength of the local economy, particularly Wall Street, in the early part of the year. It accuses Mr. Feinberg of using national, not New York, statistics in calculating the growth rates of annual compensation and also says that he ignored stock options and other forms of compensation beyond salaries and bonuses.
Finally, the complaint says that Mr. Feinberg has "played a cat-and-mouse game" when it comes to figuring awards for victims who earned more than $231,000 a year.
The plaintiffs' lawyer, Mr. Cambria, said Mr. Feinberg has been loath to offer awards of more than $5 million or $6 million even though under his formula, a mother of two children who lost a 35-year-old husband should be offered $20 million.
Mr. Cambria stressed that his high-income clients * as well as the hundreds of others who died on Sept. 11 * do not expect to receive awards of quite that magnitude. But still, he said, they felt that the numbers were far too low, and unfair.
"Some of what he has said sounds like he views his job as the sentry at the federal treasury," Mr. Cambria said. "But it's not his job to balance the budget, or bring this project in under a certain number. It's his job to carry out this statute passed by Congress."

Mr. Cambria said that his clients did not want to be interviewed because of privacy concerns and personal grief. But in a statement released by Mr. Cambria, one widow, who was not identified, said: "My husband worked a second job to support our children and me, and now he's gone. The amount of money we'll get if Feinberg's rules stay the way they are now is unfair. The simple fact is that we need more help."

Mr. Feinberg and the federal government have 60 days to respond to the complaint, Mr. Cambria said. But given the fact that the deadline to apply to the fund is Dec. 21, 2003, and that other legal matters related to Sept. 11 are still pending, Mr. Cambria said that he anticipated an expedited resolution.

He suggested that the best solution would be a settlement that adjusted the formulas worked out by Mr. Feinberg, who Mr. Cambria said also wanted to do right by the families.

"We believe in the fund," Mr. Cambria said. "I think the fund is a good thing. And at the end of the day, the amount of money between the way Feinberg wants to do it and the way the statute requires it * that delta is, in terms of the federal budget or other Congressionally mandated programs, very insignificant. But to my clients, it's life or death. It's the rest of their lives."

Subject: Presidentiall Diarist

A long, long time ago, we were trying to set up a meeting to discuss this position. It currently reports to Scheduling, but I suspect there is very little contact in that regard, and hence that position has no supervision or guidance.

Further, we have come up with many questions as to what exactly the offices does, type of information being collected, the process for collecting information, where the records are kept (hard copy and computer version), which of these records is protected and which are not, what the Usher's Office provides in the way of logs, etc.

We know she has all the information in a stand-alone computer system, but what exactly does this mean. I am going to ask Ellen to send us a couple of examples of what his days look like ... maybe a regular day in the Oval, one on the road, and one a weekend at Camp David. At present we never see what goes in there and have no way of checking the accuracy of the information or providing input on ways to capture what we are hoping to include.

I would like to renew the request to set up a meeting w/Counsel's office et al to discuss the background of this position and what the logical reporting structure should be. I feel strongly that it should not be Scheduling, but rather should more likely report to OOO! Then we should set up a meeting with the Diarist to get a full rundown/status report of what's been worked on ... how current or far behind they are, etc.

Thanks.

Hans Blix Delivers Inspections Report To U.N. 01/27/03

BLIX: Mr. President, Mr. Secretary General, the resolution adopted by the Security Council on Iraq in November of last year asks UNMOVIC and the IAEA to, quote-unquote, ``update the council 60 days after the resumption of inspections.'' This is today.

The updating, it seems, forms part of an assessment by the council and its members of the results so far of the inspections and of their role as a means to achieve verifiable disarmament in Iraq.

As this is an open meeting of the council, it may be appropriate briefly to provide some background for a better understanding of where we stand today.

With your permission, I should do so.

I begin by recalling that inspections as a part of a disarmament process in Iraq started in 1991, immediately after the Gulf War. They went on for eight years, until 1998 when inspectors were withdrawn.

BLIX: Therefore, for nearly four years, there were no inspectors. They were resumed only at end of November last year. While the fundamental aim of inspections in Iraq has always been to verify disarmament, the successive resolutions adopted by the council over the years had varied somewhat in emphasis and approach.

In 1991, Resolution 687 adopted unanimously as a part of the cease-fire after the Gulf War had five major elements; the three first related to disarmament. They called for declarations by Iraq of its programs of weapons of mass destruction and long-range missiles; verification of the declarations through UNSCOM and the IAEA; supervision by these organizations of the destruction or the elimination of proscribed programs and items.

BLIX: After the completion of the disarmament, the council would have the authority to proceed to a lifting of the sanctions and the inspecting organizations would move to long-term, ongoing monitoring and verification.

Resolution 687 in 1991, like the subsequent resolutions I shall refer to, required cooperation by Iraq, but such was often withheld or given grudgingly.

Unlike South Africa, which decided on its own to eliminate its nuclear weapons and welcomed the inspection as a means of creating confidence in its disarmament, Iraq appears not to have come to a genuine acceptance, not even today, of the disarmament which was demanded of it and which it needs to carry out to win the confidence of the world and to live in peace.

As we know, the twin operation declare and verify, which was prescribed in Resolution 687, too often turned into a game of hide and seek. Rather than just verify in declarations and supporting evidence, the two inspecting organizations found themselves engaged in efforts to map the weapons programs and to search for evidence through inspections, interviews, seminars, inquiries with suppliers and intelligence organizations.

BLIX: As a result, the disarmament phase was not completed in the short time expected. Sanctions remained and took a severe toll until Iraq accepted the oil-for-food program, and the gradual development of that program mitigated the affects of the sanctions.

The Implementation Resolution 687, nevertheless brought about considerable disarmament results. It has been recognized that more weapons of mass destruction were destroyed under this resolution than were destroyed during the Gulf War. Large quantities of chemical weapons were destroyed under UNSCOM supervision before 1994. While Iraq claims, with little evidence, that it destroyed all biological weapons unilaterally in 1991, it is certain that UNSCOM destroyed large biological weapons production facilities in 1996. The large nuclear infrastructure was destroyed and the fissionable (ph) material was removed from Iraq by the IAEA.

One of three important questions before us today is, how much might remain undeclared and intact from before 1991 and possibly thereafter? The second question is, what, if anything, was illegally produced or procured after 1998 when the inspectors left. And the third question is, how it can be prevented that any weapons of mass destruction be produced or procured in the future?

BLIX: In December 1999, after one year without inspections in Iraq, Resolution 1284 was adopted by the council, with four abstentions. Supplementing the basic resolutions of 1991 and the following years, it provided Iraq with a somewhat less ambitious approach.

In return for cooperation in all respects for a specified period of time, including progress in the resolution of key remaining disarmament tasks, it opened the possibility not for the lifting, but the suspension of sanctions.

For nearly three years, Iraq refused to accept any inspections by UNMOVIC. It was only after appeals by the secretary general and Arab states and pressure by the United States and other member states that Iraq declared on 16 September last year that it would again accept inspections without conditions.

Resolution 1441 was adopted on 8 November last year and emphatically reaffirmed the demand on Iraq to cooperate. It required this cooperation to be immediate, unconditional and active. The resolution contained many provisions which we welcome as enhancing and strengthening the inspection regime. The unanimity by which it was adopted sent a powerful signal that the council was of one mind in creating a last opportunity for peaceful disarmament in Iraq through inspection.

UNMOVIC shares the sense of urgency felt by the council to use inspection as a path to attain, within a reasonable time, verifiable disarmament of Iraq. Under the resolutions I have cited, it would be followed by monitoring for such time as the council feels would be required.

The resolutions also point to a zone free of weapons of mass destruction as the ultimate goal.

As a subsidiary body of the council, UNMOVIC is fully aware of and appreciates the close attention which this council devotes to the inspections in Iraq. While today's updating is foreseen in Resolution 1441, the council can and does call for additional briefings whenever it wishes. One was held on the 19th of January, and a further such briefing is tentatively set for the 14th of February.

I turn now, Mr. President, to the key requirement of cooperation and Iraq's response to it. Cooperation might be said to relate to both substance and process. It would appear from our experience so far that Iraq has decided in principle to provide cooperation on process, notably access.

A similar decision is indispensable to provide cooperation on substance in order to bring the disarmament task to completion through the peaceful process of inspection and to bring the monitoring task on a firm course.

BLIX: An initial minor step would be to adopt the long overdue legislation required by the resolutions.

I shall deal first with cooperation on process. In this regard, it has regard to the procedures, mechanisms, infrastructure and practical arrangements to pursue inspections and seek verifiable disarmament. While the inspection is not built on the premise of confidence, but may lead to confidence if it is successful, there must nevertheless be a measure of mutual confidence from the very beginning in running the operation of inspection. Iraq has, on the whole, cooperated rather well so far with UNMOVIC in this field.

The most important point to make is that access has been provided to all sites we have wanted to inspect. And with one exception, it has been problems. We have further had a great help in building up the infrastructure of our office in Baghdad and the field office in Mosul. Arrangements and services for our plane and our helicopters have been good.

The environment has been workable. Our inspections have included universities, military bases, presidential sites and private residences. Inspections have also taken place on Fridays, the Muslim day of rest, on Christmas Day and New Year's Day. These inspections have been conducted in the same manner as all other inspections. We seek to be both effective and correct.

In this updating, I'm bound, however, to register some problems. The first are related to two kinds of air operations. While we now have the technical capability to send a U-2 plane placed at our disposal for aerial imagery and for surveillance during inspections and have informed Iraq that we plan to do so, Iraq has refused to guarantee its safety unless a number of conditions are fulfilled.

As these conditions went beyond what is stipulated in Resolution 1441 and what was practiced by UNSCOM and Iraq in the past, we note that Iraq is not so far complying with our requests. I hope this attitude will change.

Another air operation problem, which was so during our recent talks in Baghdad, concerned the use of helicopters flying into the no-fly zones. Iraq had insisted on sending helicopters of their own to accompany ours.

BLIX: This would have raised a safety problem.

The matter was solved by an offer on our part to take the accompanying Iraqi minders in our helicopters to the sites, an arrangement that had been practiced by UNSCOM in the past.

I'm obliged to note some recent disturbing incidents and harassment. For instance, for some time farfetched allegations have been made publicly that questions posed by inspectors were of an intelligence character. While I might not defend every question that inspectors might have asked, Iraq knows that they do not serve intelligence purposes and Iraq should not say so.

On a number of occasions, demonstrations have taken place in front of our offices and at inspection sites. The other day, a site-seeing excursion by five inspectors to a mosque was followed by an unwarranted public outburst. Inspectors went without U.N. insignia and were welcomed in the kind manner that is characteristic of the normal Iraqi attitude to foreigners. They took off their shoes and were taken around. They asked perfectly innocent questions and parted with the invitation to come again.

Shortly thereafter, we received protests from the Iraqi authorities about an unannounced inspection and about questions not relevant to weapons of mass destruction. Indeed, they were not.

Demonstrations and outbursts of this kind are unlikely to occur in Iraq with initiative or encouragement from the authorities. We must ask ourselves what the motives may be for these events. They do not facilitate an already difficult job, in which we try to be effective, professional, and at the same time correct. Where our Iraqi counterparties have some complaint, they can take it up in a calmer and less unpleasant manner.

The substantive cooperation required relates above all to the obligation of Iraq to declare all programs of weapons of mass destruction and either to present items and activities for elimination or else to provide evidence supporting the conclusions that nothing proscribed remains.

Paragraph 9 of Resolution 1441 states that this cooperation shall be, quote/unquote, ``active.'' It is not enough to open doors. Inspection is not a game of catch as catch can. Rather, as I noted, it is a process of verification for the purpose of creating confidence. It is not built upon the premise of trust. Rather, it is designed to lead to trust, if there is both openness to the inspectors and action to present them with items to destroy or credible evidence about the absence of any such items.

On 7th of December, 2002, Iraq submitted a declaration of some 12,000 pages in response to paragraph 3 of Resolution 1441, and within the time stipulated by the Security Council. In the fields of missiles and biotechnology, the declaration contains a good deal of new material and information covering the period from 1998 and onward. This is welcome.

One might have expected that in preparing the declaration Iraq would have tried to respond to, clarify and submit supporting evidence regarding the many open disarmament issues which the Iraqi side should be familiar with from the UNSCOM documents 9994 and the so-called Almarim (ph) report of March 1999. These are questions which UNMOVIC, governments and independent commentators have often cited.

While UNMOVIC has been preparing its own list of current unresolved disarmament issues and key remaining disarmament tasks in response to requirements in the Resolution 1284, we find the issues listed in the two reports I mentioned as unresolved professionally justified.

These reports do not contend that weapons of mass destruction remain in Iraq, but nor do they exclude that possibility. They point to a lack of evidence and inconsistencies which raise question marks which must be straightened out if weapons dossiers are to be closed and confidence is to arise. They deserve to be taken seriously by Iraq, rather than being brushed aside as evil machinations of UNSCOM.

Regrettably, the 12,000-page declaration, most of which is a reprint of earlier documents, does not seem to contain any new evidence that will eliminate the questions or reduce their number. Even Iraq's letter sent in response to our recent discussions in Baghdad to the president of the Security Council on 24th of January does not lead us to the resolution of these issues.

I shall only give some examples of issues and questions that need to be answered, and I turn first to the sector of chemical weapons.

The nerve agent VX is one of the most toxic ever developed. Iraq has declared that it only produced VX on a pilot scale, just a few tons, and that the quality was poor and the product unstable. Consequently, it was said that the agent was never weaponized.

BLIX: Iraq said that the small quantity of agent remaining after the Gulf War was unilaterally destroyed in the summer of 1991.

UNMOVIC, however, has information that conflicts with this account. There are indications that Iraq had worked on the problem of purity and stabilization and that more had been achieved than has been declared. Indeed, even one of the documents provided by Iraq indicates that the purity of the agent, at least in laboratory production, was higher than declared.

There are also indications that the agent was weaponized. In addition, there are questions to be answered concerning the fate of the VX precursor chemicals, which Iraq states were lost during bombing in the Gulf War or were unilaterally destroyed by Iraq.

I would now like to turn to the so-called air force document that I have discussed with the council before. This document was originally found by an UNSCOM inspector in a safe in Iraqi air force headquarters in 1998, and taken from her (ph) by Iraqi minders. It gives an account of the expenditure of bombs, including chemical bombs by Iraq in the Iraq-Iran War. I'm encouraged by the fact that Iraq has now provided this document to UNMOVIC.

The document indicates that 13,000 chemical bombs were dropped by the Iraqi air force between 1983 and 1998; while Iraq has declared that 19,500 bombs were consumed during this period. Thus, there is a discrepancy of 6,500 bombs. The amount of chemical agent in these bombs would be in the order of about 1,000 tons. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we must assumed that these quantities are now unaccounted for.

The discovery of a number of 122-millimeter chemical rocket warheads in a bunker at the storage depot, 170 kilometers southwest of Baghdad, was much publicized. This was a relatively new bunker, and therefore the rockets must have been moved here in the past few years at a time when Iraq should not have had such munitions. The investigation of these rockets is still proceeding.

Iraq states that they were overlooked from 1991 from a batch of some 2,000 that were stored there during the Gulf War. This could be the case. They could also be the tip of a submerged iceberg. The discovery of a few rockets does not resolve, but rather points to the issue of several thousand of chemical rockets that are unaccounted for. The finding of the rockets shows that Iraq needs to make more effort to ensure that its declaration is currently accurate.

During my recent discussions in Baghdad, Iraq declared that it would make new efforts in this regard and has set up a committee of investigation. Since then, it has reported that it has found four chemical rockets at a storage depot in al-Haji (ph). I might further mention that inspectors have found at another site a laboratory quantity of thiodylykol (ph), a mustard precursor.

While addressing chemical issues, I should mention a matter which I reported on 19th of December last year concerning equipment at a civilian chemical plant at al-Fallujah. Iraq has declared that it had repaired chemical processing equipment previously destroyed under UNSCOM supervision and had installed it at Fallujah for the production of chlorine and phenols. We have inspected this equipment and are conducting a detailed technical evaluation of it. On completion, we will decide whether this and other equipment that has been recovered by Iraq should be destroyed.

I turn to biological weapons. I mention the issue of anthrax to the council on previous occasions, and I come back to it as it is an important one. Iraq has declared that it produced about 8,500 liters of this biological warfare agent, which it states it unilaterally destroyed in the summer of 1991.

BLIX: Iraq has provided little evidence for this production and no convincing evidence for its destruction.

There are strong indications that Iraq produced more anthrax than it declared and that at least some of this was retained over the declared destruction date. It might still exist.

Either it should be found and be destroyed under UNMOVIC supervision or else convincing evidence should be produced to show that it was indeed destroyed in 1991.

As I reported to the council on the 19th of December last year, Iraq did not declare a significant quantity, some 650 kilos or bacterial growth media, which was acknowledged as reported in Iraq's submission to the Almarim (ph) panel in February 1999. As a part of its 7 December, 2002, declaration Iraq resubmitted the Almarim (ph) panel document but they table showing this particular import of media was not included. The absence of this table would appear to be deliberate, as the pages of the resubmitted document were renumbered.

In the letter of 24th of January this year to the president of the Security Council, Iraq's foreign minister stated that, I quote, ``All imported quantities of growth media were declared,'' unquote. This is not evidence. I note that the quantity of media involved would suffice to produce, for example, about 5,000 liters of concentrated anthrax.

I turn, Mr. President, now to the missile sector. There remain significant questions as to whether Iraq retained Scud-type missiles after the Gulf War. Iraq declared the consumption of a number of Scud missiles as targets in the development of an anti-ballistic missile defense system during the 1980s, yet no technical information has been produced about that program or data on the consumption of the missiles.

There has been a range of developments in the missile field during the past four years, presented by Iraq in the declaration as non-proscribed activities. We are trying to gather a clear understanding of them through inspections and on-site discussions.

Two projects in particular stand out. They are the development of a liquid-fueled missile named Al-Samud II (ph) and a solid propellant missile called Al-Fatam (ph). Both missiles have been tested to arrange in excess of the permitted range of 150 kilometers, with the Al-Samud II (ph) being tested to a maximum of 183 kilometers and the Al-Fatam (ph) to 161 kilometers. Some of both types of missiles have already been provided to the Iraqi armed forces, even though it is stated that they're still undergoing development.

The Al-Samud's (ph) diameter was increased from an earlier version to the president 760 millimeters. This modification was made despite a 1994 letter from the executive chairman of UNSCOM directing Iraq to limit its missile diameters to less than 600 millimeter. Furthermore, a November 1997 letter from the executive chairman of UNSCOM to Iraq prohibited the use of engines from certain surface-to-air missiles for the use in ballistic missiles.

During my recent meeting in Baghdad, we were briefed on these two programs. We were told that the final range for both systems would be less than the permitted maximum of 150 kilometers.

These missiles might well represent prima facie cases of proscribed systems. The test ranges in excess of 150 kilometers are significant, but some further technical considerations need to be made before we reach a conclusion on this issue. In the meantime, we have asked Iraq to cease flight tests of both missiles.

In addition, Iraq has refurbished its missile production infrastructure. In particular, Iraq reconstituted a number of casting chambers which had previously been destroyed under UNSCOM's supervision. They had been used in the production of solid fuel missiles.

Whatever missile system these chambers are intended for, they could produce motors for missiles capable of ranges significantly greater than 150 kilometers.

Also associated with these missiles and related developments is the import which has been taking place during the last two years of a number of items despite the sanctions, including as late as December 2002. Foremost among these is import of 300 rockets engines which may be used for the Al-Samud II (ph).

Iraq has also declared the recent import of chemicals used in propellants, test instrumentation and guidance and control system. These items may well be for proscribed purposes; that is yet to be determined.

What is clear is that they were illegally brought into Iraq; that is, Iraq or some company in Iraq circumvented the restrictions imposed by various resolutions.

Mr. President, I have touched upon some of the disarmament issues that remain open and that need to be answered if dossiers are to be closed and confidence is to arise.

Which are the means at the disposal of Iraq to answer these questions?

BLIX: I have pointed to some during my presentation of the issues, let me be a little more systematic. Our Iraqi counterparts are fond of saying that there are no proscribed items and if no evidence is presented to the contrary, they should have the benefit of the doubt; be presumed innocent.

UNMOVIC, for its part, is not presuming that there are proscribed items and activities in Iraq. But nor is it, or I think anyone else, after the inspections between 1991 and '98 presuming the opposite, that no such items and activities exist in Iraq. Presumptions do not solve the problem; evidence and full transparency may help.

Let me be specific. Information provided by member-states tells us about the movement and concealment of missiles and chemical weapons and mobile units for biological weapons production. We shall certainly follow-up any credible leads given to us and report what we might find, as well as any denial of access.

So far, we have reported on the recent find of a small number of empty 122-millimeter warheads for chemical weapons. Iraq declared that it appointed a commission of inquiry to look for more. Fine. Why not extend the search to other items? Declare what may be found and destroy it under our supervision.

When we have urged our Iraqi counterparts to present more evidence, we have all too often met the response that there are no more documents. All existing relevant documents have presented, we are told. All documents relating to the biological weapons program were destroyed together with the weapons.

However, Iraq has all the archives of the government and its various departments, institutions and mechanisms. It should have budgetary documents, requests for funds and reports and how they have been used. They should also have letters of credit and bills of lading, reports and production and losses of material.

In response to a recent UNMOVIC request for a number of specific documents, the only new documents Iraq provided was a ledger of 1,093 pages which Iraq stated included all imports from 1983 to 1990 by the Technical and Scientific Importation Division, the importing authority for the biological weapons programs. Potentially, it might help to clear some open issues.

The recent inspection find in the private home of a scientist of a box of some 3,000 pages of documents, much of it relating to the lacing (ph) enrichment of uranium, support a concern that has long existed that documents might be distributed to the homes of private individuals. This interpretation is refuted by the Iraqi side which claims that research staff sometimes may bring papers from their work places.

On our side, we cannot help but think that the case might not be isolated and that such placements of documents is deliberate to make discovery difficult and to seek to shield documents by placing them in private homes.

Any further sign of the concealment of documents will be serious. The Iraqi side committed itself at our recent talks to encourage persons to accept access also to private sites. There can be no sanctuaries for proscribed items, activities or documents. A denial of prompt access to any site will be very serious matter.

When Iraq claims that tangible evidence in the form of documents is not available, it ought, at least, to find individuals, engineers, scientists and managers (ph) to testify about their experience. Large weapons programs are moved and managed by people. Interviews with individuals who may have worked in programs in the past may fill blank spots in our knowledge and understanding. It could also be useful to learn that they are now employed in peaceful sectors. These are the reasons why UNMOVIC ask for a list of such persons in accordance with Resolution 1441.

Some 400 names for all biological and chemical weapons programs, as well as their missile programs, were provided by the Iraqi side. This can be compared to over 3,500 names of people associated with those past weapons programs that UNSCOM either interviewed in the 1990s or knew from documents and other sources.

BLIX: At my recent meeting in Baghdad, the Iraqis have committed themselves to supplementing the list, and some 80 additional names have been provided.

In the past, much valuable information came from interviews. There are also cases in which the interviewee was clearly intimidated by the presence of an interruption (ph) by Iraq officials.

This was the background to Resolution 1441's provision for a right for UNMOVIC and the IAEA to hold private interviews, I quote, ``in the mode or the location,'' unquote of our choice in Baghdad or even abroad.

Today, 11 individuals were asked for interviews in Baghdad by us. The replies have been that the individual would only speak at Iraq's Monitoring Directorate or at any rate in the presence of an Iraq official.

This could be due to a wish on the part of the invited to have evidence that they have not said anything that the authorities did not wish them to say. At our recent talks in Baghdad, the Iraqi side committed itself to encourage persons to accept interviews in private, that is to say alone with us. Despite this, the pattern has not changed.

However, we hope that with further encouragement from the authorities, knowledgeable individuals will accept private interviews in Baghdad or abroad.

Mr. President, I must not conclude this update without some notes on the growing capability of UNMOVIC. In the past two months, UNMOVIC has built up its capabilities in Iraq from nothing to 260 staff members from 60 countries. This includes approximately 100 UNMOVIC inspectors, 60 air operations staff, as well as security personnel, communication, translation and interpretation staff, medical support and other services at our Baghdad office and also (ph) Mosul field office.

All serve the United Nations and report to no one else.

Furthermore, I'll roster of inspectors will continue to grow as our training program continues. Even at this moment, we have a training course in session in Vienna. At the end of that course, we should have a roster of about 350 qualified experts from which to draw inspectors.

The team supplied by the Swiss government is refurbishing our office in Baghdad which had been empty for four years. The government in New Zealand has contributed both a medical team and a communications team. The German government will contribute unmanned aerial vehicles for surveillance and a group of specialists to operate them for us within Iraq. And the government of Cyprus has kindly allowed us to set up a field office in Larnaca.

All of these contributions have an assistance in quickly starting up our inspections and enhancing our capabilities, so has help from the U.N. in New York and from sister organizations in Baghdad.

In the past two months, during which we have built up our presence in Iraq, we have conducted about 300 inspections to more than 230 different sites. Of these, more than 20 were sites that had not been inspected before.

By the end of December, UNMOVIC began using helicopters, both for the transport of inspectors and for actual inspection work. We now have eight helicopters. They have already proved invaluable in helping to freeze large sites by observing the movement of traffic in and around the area.

Setting up the field office in Mosul has facilitated rapid inspections of sites in northern Iraq. We plan to establish soon a second field office in the Basra area where we have already inspected a number of sites.

Mr. President, we now have an inspection apparatus that permits us to send multiple inspections teams every day all over Iraq by road or by air. Let me end by simply noting that that capability, which has been built up in a short time and which is now operating, is at the disposal of the Security Council.

To the Editor:

I write regarding your January 22, 2003, article on Judge Glenda Sanders. The reporter characterized the White House's consideration and evaluation of Judge Glenda Sanders for a federal position on the basis of an anonymous source. Judge Sanders is a highly qualified candidate for a federal judicial position who has a very impressive record. She has acted forthrightly and honorably with the White House and Department of Justice throughout all aspects of the selection process. Finally, no nomination for the seat in question has been made.

Sincerely,

Catholics move to the center of the bench
By TIM UNSWORTH

Sometime in the early 1940s, my father returned from a business trip and announced to his family: ?Shake the hand that shook the hand of Justice Frank Murphy.? During that same trip, he stopped in Kansas City, Mo., and was introduced to Harry Truman, who had been a senator from that state since 1934. But my father had barely heard of him. It was Murphy, the only Catholic on the Supreme Court, that caught his baptized eye.

It was a period in Catholic thinking during which we celebrated Catholic all-American ping-pong teams. Besides, Murphy, a former mayor of Detroit, governor of Michigan and U.S. attorney general, was only the fifth Catholic to serve on the court since it was established in 1789, a period of 151 years. The Jews had to wait 127 years until Louis D. Brandeis, the first Jewish justice, was appointed by Woodrow Wilson in 1916. Compare that to the 32 Episcopalian behinds that have warmed the bench since George Washington appointed John Jay (Episcopalian) in 1789.

Now comes George W. Bush, who sees at least one vacancy on the court (maybe two) at the end of the present term. Seven of the nine justices have been appointed by Republican presidents, but the president is uncomfortable with any Dem-ocrats hanging around. It is likely that William Rehnquist, Lutheran and chief justice, who is almost 79, will leave the court after 31 years. Further, Sandra Day O?Connor (Episcopalian), who will be 73 in 2003, is making sounds that she may return to her California home.

The oldest justice is John Paul Stevens, an 82-year-old Protestant with a Catholic wife. However, he has given little indication that he?s ready to hang up his gavel. Further, with an average age of nearly 69, these nine justices could almost compete with the College of Cardinals. The aging court could use a bladder control prayer group. Any one of them could make the Last Judgment at any time.

According to The New York Times, President Bush has staffers making lists of potential candidates in order to meet the late spring deadline and to mount a strong defense of his choices who will likely be even more conservative than he is.

At the moment, the front-runner for the first vacancy is Alberto R. Gonzales, a White House counselor and former legal adviser to Bush when he was governor of Texas. Reports suggest that Harvard Law School graduate Gonzales, who came from a poor Texas family, has the requisite loyalty and philosophical conservatism that Bush craves. More important, if nominated and approved, he would be the first Hispanic to serve.

President Bush needs Hispanic votes. The nation now has over 35,300,000 Latinos -- most of them with roots in Mexico. His brother, Jeb, governor of Florida, is married to a Latina-American and has converted to Catholicism. Jeb helped to deliver Florida?s electoral votes, the ones that put George in office, even though he lost the general election. Allegedly, Gonzales wants the post. Even now, his staff suggests that he likes to be addressed as ?Judge Gonzales.? He is conservative, antiabortion -- and Catholic.

Two other possible candidates are Samuel Alito, judge of the appeals court in Newark, N.J. However, Alito is Italian-American as is Justice Antonin Scalia. Alito once clerked for Scalia and earned the nickname ?Scalito.? Then, there is Miguel Estrada, perhaps a more reliable conservative than Gonzales. The hard-nosed conservatives don?t amount to that big a political block, however.

It?s just that they?re louder and Bush is fearful of them. In any case, all three potential justices are Roman Catholics.

That suggests there may be four, maybe five Catholics on the court by next spring -- an extraordinary shift. The new justice -- or two -- would join Scalia, Anthony Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

There hasn?t been a Catholic chief justice in 82 years. Bush might prefer Scalia but the opinionated justice would have a hard time even with the new Republican Congress. He?s a brilliant justice but he shaves with his tongue. He could become another Robert Bork. Both Scalia and Kennedy will be 67 in 2003. And Clarence Thomas, 55 this year, is still recovering from the Anita Hill debacle. Further, he is regarded as a Scalia clone. (Thomas is a convert to Catholicism. He drifted away from the church for some 28 years but has returned, often attending Mass at St. Joseph?s on Capitol Hill, just behind the court.)

The first Catholic to serve was Roger B. Taney, son of a wealthy slave-owning family, who raised tobacco. Years later, as chief justice, he supported slavery even for descendants of slaves. This was a period during which some Catholic colleges and seminaries used slave labor (now called athletics). Taney, a former Federalist, was the fifth chief justice, appointed by Andrew Jackson in 1836. He served until 1864, long enough to incur the wrath of Abraham Lincoln.

Edward D. White of Louisiana was appointed to the court in 1894 by Grover Cleveland. He was named chief justice in 1910 and led the court until 1921. White graduated from the Jesuit College in New Orleans and then went on to Georgetown. He was the court?s ninth chief justice and was generally considered a conservative, although he did help to speed the advent of the eight-hour day for railroad workers. He was enshrined in Statuary Hall in 1955, together with 13 other Catholics.

Joseph McKenna, a William McKinley appointee, served for 26 years (1898-1925). He had been the U.S. attorney general but had little consistent legal policy. For a few years, he shared the bench with Pierce Butler, a Warren Harding ap-pointee from Minnesota, who served for 16 years (1923-39) and was generally considered a conservative.

Then came Frank Murphy, a New Deal Democrat, appointed in 1940 by Franklin D. Roosevelt. Prior to his nomination, he was widely recognized for his relief efforts. He left the court to serve in World War II but returned and served until 1949. The first -- and next to last -- of the Catholic liberals, he condemned the wartime imprisonment of the Japanese.

William J. Brennan was recognized as a liberal Catholic judge. He served 33 years (1956-90) before retiring, sometimes drawing criticism from major bishops who were growing more conservative. He ruled often for a greater guarantee of justice for the poor. By the time he left the court, two other papist justices, Antonin Scalia and Anthony Kennedy, were serving.

The potential of the voting power of four Catholics on a nine-member court is worth pondering. Only one additional vote from a Jewish justice or a lonely WASP could produce some of the many 5-4 decisions. Ruth Bader Ginsburg, 69, second female and a Jew, was appointed by Bill Clinton in 1993. Stephen G. Breyer was appointed in 1994. (He does not list himself as Jewish by religion but is considered a cultural Jew.)

Unfortunately, the four Catholics are conservative, two of them -- Scalia and Thomas -- to the right of Attila the Hun (a devout barbarian), and two others -- Kennedy and (maybe) Gonzales, leaning to the right. There are no Murphys or Brennans.

Presently, there are issues such as capital punishment, just war, abortion, disabilities, immigration, school vouchers, welfare, wages, homosexual unions, sodomy, fair employment and college admissions practices, and so on, that need to be sorted out. Responses all have roots in church teaching but, with the exception of abortion and cloning, it doesn?t seem to matter much anymore. The situation is not unlike the laity?s response to Humanae Vitae, the encyclical on birth control. The bishops continue to rant about birth control but the Catholics in the pew pay no attention. Neither will the justices.

Just when Catholic justices have moved to the center of the bench, it doesn?t seem to matter if they are Cath-olics or Rosicrucians. It?s a shame. My long-deceased father, who finished only grammar school, would not have washed his hands for decades after shaking the hands of four Catholic justices.

HEADLINE: Activists protest against judge with anti-abortion views
BYLINE: By Howard Mintz

SAN JOSE, Calif. _ Mounting political hostilities over the Bush administration's judicial nominations have officially spilled into California, where dozens of women's organizations and civil rights groups on Friday took aim at a Los Angeles judge picked to join the influential federal appeals court that interprets laws throughout the West.

In both San Francisco and Los Angeles, critics launched what they promised would be a vigorous campaign against Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, recently renominated by the White House for a slot on the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which hears cases from California and eight other states. President Bush first nominated Kuhl to the 9th Circuit more than two years ago, but she was stalled in the Senate, primarily the result of opposition from California Sen. Barbara Boxer, a Democrat. Bush, emboldened by last fall's Republican takeover of the Senate, renominated Kuhl earlier this month, along with a group of other judicial hopefuls Democrats consider too conservative for the federal bench. Kuhl's opponents are now turning up the heat on her nomination, vowing a major fight to keep her off the 9th Circuit.

Critics, including Boxer, have targeted Kuhl for what they consider her conservative views on civil rights and abortion, citing a brief she wrote for the Justice Department during the Reagan administration criticizing the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision. This week is the 30th anniversary of the landmark ruling.

"I think we've been way too polite," said Tracy Salkowitz, executive director of the California Abortion Rights Action League. "It's time to not be polite."

Kuhl, a Superior Court judge appointed in 1995 by former Gov. Pete Wilson, declined comment Friday. But the Bush administration strongly defended Kuhl's record and qualifications.

"Judge Kuhl has demonstrated intelligence, fairness, impartiality and professionalism in her seven years on the bench in California, and those who know her best are enthusiastically supporting her nomination," said Monica Goodling, a spokeswoman for the Justice Department.

Kuhl has gained bipartisan support from the legal community, many of whom have written letters to the Senate Judiciary Committee supporting her nomination. In addition, the American Bar Association rated her "well qualified" for the 9th Circuit.

But the 50-year-old Kuhl is being labeled a "right wing ideologue" by civil rights organizations and abortion rights advocates. And the basis for much of the opposition revolves around Kuhl's legal work for the Justice Department during the Reagan administration.

Among other things, Kuhl argued in a brief in the U.S. Supreme Court in 1986 that the Roe vs. Wade decision was "flawed" and should be reconsidered. She also submitted a brief advocating tax-exempt status for Bob Jones University, which at the time was racially segregated.

With growing concerns among Democrats that Bush might tilt the federal judiciary against abortion rights, Kuhl has become one of a handful of hotly contested nominees.

"Judge Kuhl's record raises deep concerns for me," Boxer said in a statement.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has not yet scheduled a hearing on Kuhl's nomination, but one is expected soon. Until recently, Boxer was able to block a vote in the committee through a procedure that allows a home state senator to "blue slip" a nominee, but Republicans have indicated they might abolish the time-honored Senate practice.

Bush has thus far managed to get only one judge, Hawaii's Richard Clifton, on the 28-member 9th Circuit, a court dominated by 17 Democratic appointees that is widely considered the nation's most liberal appeals court.

Kuhl has been picked for one of four vacancies on the court; Nevada attorney Jay Bybee, who has not encountered opposition so far, has also been nominated. The Bush administration is also believed to be close to nominating San Francisco Superior Court Judge Carlos Bea.

The Associated Press, January 24, 2003, Friday, BC cycle
HEADLINE: Groups oppose Kuhl nomination to federal appeals court
BYLINE: By DAVID KRAVETS, AP Legal Affairs Writer

Environmental, civil rights and women's groups formally announced their opposition Friday to President Bush's nomination of a Los Angeles County judge to a federal appeals court.

They are opposing Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a former Reagan administration lawyer appointed to the bench by California Gov. Pete Wilson in 1995. Bush has tapped her for a lifetime appointment to the San Francisco-based 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The opposition groups, which include the California Abortion Rights Action League, the Sierra Club and the NAACP of San Francisco, said they oppose Kuhl for what they say was her work against legalized abortion, the environment and racial equality.

Hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the 50-year-old's nomination have not been scheduled.

"President Bush has put political opportunism over women's health," said Tracy Salkowitz, executive director of the California Abortion Rights Action League.

As a Justice Department lawyer, Kuhl urged the Supreme Court in a 1985 case to "abandon" Roe v. Wade, the 30-year-old decision legalizing abortion.

The Duke University School of Law graduate supported parental notification of teenagers to acquire birth control pills, tax-exempt status for Bob Jones University when it was racially segregated and argued for a more-narrowed definition of sexual harassment.

"Confirmation of Kuhl and other anti-civil rights judicial nominees would do irreversible damage to civil rights, workers' rights, environmental protections, freedom of choice and the elimination of racial discrimination," said Eva Paterson, executive director of the San Francisco-based Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights.

Kuhl declined comment.

The Bush administration defended its nomination Friday. The administration noted that the American Bar Association ranked Kuhl as well qualified. "The administration couldn't agree more," said Monica Goodling, a Justice Department spokeswoman.

Goodling added that "Judge Kuhl has demonstrated intelligence, fairness, impartiality and professionalism in her seven years on the bench in California."

Opponents point to a 2001 state appeals court decision reinstating an invasion of privacy case that Kuhl had dismissed. A breast cancer patient sued her doctor, who allowed a drug salesman to watch the woman's examination.

Environmental groups objected to her representing an oil company, when she was a private lawyer, that was refusing to clean contaminated property.

The San Francisco Chronicle, JANUARY 25, 2003, SATURDAY
HEADLINE: Bush choice for U.S. judge draws fire;
Various groups ask Senate to reject her again
BYLINE: Bob Egelko

Civil rights, abortion rights, labor and environmental advocates joined forces Friday to urge U.S. Senate rejection of Carolyn Kuhl, a Los Angeles judge nominated by President Bush to the federal appeals court in San Francisco.

Kuhl has "an extremist and hostile record against workers' rights, civil rights, and women's issues," Judy Goff, executive secretary-treasurer of the Alameda County Central Labor Council, said in a statement distributed at a San Francisco news conference.

The Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights, the Sierra Club, the National Lawyers Guild, the California Abortion Rights Action League and the National Center for Lesbian Rights were among those opposing Kuhl, a Los Angeles Superior Court judge and former Justice Department lawyer under President Ronald Reagan. Kuhl was appointed to the Los Angeles court by then-Gov. Pete Wilson in 1995 and was nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit by Bush in June 2001. She was denied a hearing in the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee because of opposition by Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif.

After Republicans regained control of the Senate, Bush renominated Kuhl on Jan. 7 along with 29 other candidates who had failed to win approval.

In the Justice Department, Kuhl worked on legal arguments calling for the reversal of the Roe vs. Wade decision, which legalized abortion, and was widely reported to have supported tax-exempt status for Bob Jones University, which banned interracial dating. She also argued before the U.S. Supreme Court that unions could not sue on behalf of their members, a position that the Sierra Club said Friday could also weaken environmental groups.

On Friday, opponents criticized some of her judicial rulings, including a 1999 dismissal of a suit by a breast cancer patient who said her privacy was invaded by the presence of a drug salesman in her doctor's office during a breast examination. Kuhl's ruling was overturned on appeal.

The Bush administration noted that the American Bar Association -- an organization whose assessments the administration no longer seeks on judicial nominees -- rated Kuhl as well-qualified.

"Judge Kuhl has demonstrated intelligence, fairness, impartiality and professionalism in her seven years on the bench in California, and those who know her best are enthusiastically supporting her nomination," Justice Department spokeswoman Monica Goodling said.

She cited the endorsement of Vilma Martinez, former head of the Mexican American legal Defense and Educational Fund, who said she disagreed with Kuhl politically but considered her "mainstream . . . a very good judge."

Los Angeles Times, January 25, 2003
HEADLINE: Liberal Groups Urge Rejection of Bush Court Choice; Coalition asks Boxer, Feinstein to do all they can toprevent Senate confirmation of the conservative nominee for 9thCircuit bench.
BYLINE: Jean Guccione, Times Staff Writer

A coalition of liberal groups representing women, minorities and workers urged California's two U.S. senators Friday to do everything in their power, including a filibuster on the Senate floor, to stop the nomination of conservative Judge Carolyn B. Kuhl to the federal appeals court in San Francisco.

The opposition to Kuhl's nomination could be a warmup for a larger fight over the ideology of judicial candidates if a seat opens on the U.S. Supreme Court this year.

Kuhl, a Los Angeles County Superior Court judge, was renominated to the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals by President Bush this month after the Republicans won control of the Senate in November. Her first nomination effort ended last year without a hearing before the Democrat-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. Critics said at a Los Angeles news conference Friday that Kuhl's conservative ideology alone makes her unfit for the federal appellate bench. The American Bar Assn. has rated Kuhl "well-qualified" for the job.

"She poses an imminent threat to women if she is confirmed," said Katherine Spillar, executive director of the Feminist Majority. "She has gone on the record repeatedly, completely opposed to abortion rights in this country."

As a deputy attorney general in the Reagan administration, Kuhl wrote a friend-of-the-court brief urging the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn Roe vs. Wade and outlaw abortion. She also lobbied for tax-exempt status for Bob Jones University despite its policy against mixed-race dating on campus.

Representatives of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People Legal Defense Fund, United Farm Workers and disability rights and taxpayer groups joined women's rights advocates Friday in opposing Kuhl and other Bush nominees they believe would bring their "right-wing ideology" to the federal bench.

Lawyer Mark Kleinman, who represents the national consumer group Taxpayers Against Fraud, said he represented a whistle-blower who was denied attorney fees by Kuhl in a Los Angeles courtroom. Kuhl's decision was reversed on appeal.

"I'm here to tell you that this nomination is worse than a mistake. It is dangerous," he said. "To the present day, she has demonstrated not just a disregard ... but an active hostility toward any statute that might protect whistle-blowers or the public from companies that do horrible things."

One speaker after another urged Democratic Sens. Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein to oppose Kuhl's nomination in any way, from blocking her committee hearing to filibustering to stop the Republican-controlled Senate from casting a confirmation vote.

Last year, Boxer opposed the nominee and did not return "a blue slip," a process named for the blue consent form on which home-state senators voice their opinions on whether the nominee should receive a committee hearing.

Boxer said in a statement released Friday that she opposes Kuhl's nomination because she is "out of the mainstream and not representative of the values shared by most Californians on such matters as women's rights, civil rights, defense of tobacco companies, privacy rights, whistle-blower protection and consumer rights."

A spokesman for Feinstein said that the senator has taken no position on Kuhl's nomination and that she believes the judge should have a hearing before the Senate.

Kuhl declined to comment Friday through a spokesperson, but the Bush administration maintained its support for her. "The president is strongly committed to this nominee," a White House official said Friday.

Subject: from NY Times re suit over 9/11 fund

n the most sweeping challenge yet to the federal fund intended to compensate relatives of Sept. 11 victims, the families of seven victims who worked at Cantor Fitzgerald have filed a lawsuit accusing the fund's administrator of acting illegally and unfairly, thereby shortchanging the families of all New York victims.
The lawsuit calls the administrator, Kenneth R. Feinberg, autocratic and arrogant, and accuses him of having "run roughshod" over legislation governing the the Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund. It also says Mr. Feinberg has "alienated and disenfranchised the very constituency he was appointed to serve."
And it says that the fund violates New York law by calculating awards based on after-tax projections of lost income, discriminates against unmarried victims and imposes an illegal cap that could leave some high-income families with as little as one-tenth of what they should be awarded under the law establishing the fund.
The lawsuit, which was filed in Federal District Court in Manhattan on Saturday, details many misgivings that have been circulating for months among some families and companies that lost relatives and employees in the attack on the World Trade Center.
If successful, the lawsuit could force Mr. Feinberg, whose title is special master of the fund, to pay out hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars more than the $4 billion to $5 billion the fund is expected to cost taxpayers. He would also have to review, and possibly recalibrate, the 154 awards that have already been offered to decedents' families. Those awards have totaled $240 million, an average of $1.56 million per family.

The failure of the suit could also work against Mr. Feinberg and the fund because some families may agree that its formulas calculate awards that are too low. Those families might then decide to sue the airlines, airport-security companies and other entities that have been cited as bearing some responsibility for allowing the hijacking of the four jetliners involved in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

But against the current backdrop of impending war and economic malaise, the tide of public opinion could also shift in favor of Mr. Feinberg and against the families for seemingly blurring the lines between grief and greed.

Reached at his home yesterday, Mr. Feinberg said he had not seen the suit. "I know nothing about it," he said, "and I have no comment. After I read it, I will turn the complaint over to the Department of Justice."

The lawsuit does not seek to overturn the statute that created the compensation fund as part of an airline bailout package after Sept. 11. Nor does it seek damages. Instead, it challenges the rules of the fund and the formulas Mr. Feinberg has come up with to determine monetary awards. It also seeks to create a single class of the approximately 2,800 victims who died at the World Trade Center.

It does not include those people who died in the planes that crashed into the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania.

The lawsuit was filed by John F. Cambria, managing partner of the New York office of Salans, an international law firm. The seven Cantor employees named in the suit were of varying ages and work experience. Their annual salaries ranged from less than $50,000 to more than $1 million.

Some of the lawsuit's arguments echo those made in a September report on the fund's shortcomings that was prepared by Cantor; the New York law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom; and the economic consulting firm of Chicago Partners. They also mirror arguments made either formally or informally by other companies that lost employees in the trade center attack.

Pamela S. Falk, a professor at the City University of New York who has no connection to the suit, said, "The court will have to weigh a strong and sympathetic case by the victims that they have not been fairly compensated against a longstanding tradition in U.S. law to give deference to government administrators."

And Perry Binder, a professor at Georgia State University in Atlanta, said that while the lawsuit may be technically correct, the courts may decide that Mr. Feinberg has not been unreasonable or unfair. But the real question, Mr. Binder said, was whether Congress would amend a hastily drawn and flawed statute.

"We all should have seen this lawsuit coming," he said.

The first of the four major areas of contention in the 30-page suit concerns taxes. Under New York law, pretax earnings are used in computing wrongful death awards. But Mr. Feinberg uses after-tax earnings, the complaint charges. As a result, while the survivor of a victim who made $225,000 a year should stand to receive $4.48 million under New York law, the fund would offer $3.35 million.

The second concerns the rate at which single people spend money. In computing wrongful-death awards, New York law does not differentiate between married and unmarried decedents. But according to the complaint, Mr. Feinberg calculates that a single decedent with an annual income of $70,000 spent 60.8 percent of that income, while a married decedent spent 17.4 percent because married people tend to spend less and can avail themselves of their spouses' income.

The complaint also charges that Mr. Feinberg computes income levels by averaging the years 1998 through 2000, and ignores the annualized earnings of 2001, which were presumably higher in part because of the strength of the local economy, particularly Wall Street, in the early part of the year. It accuses Mr. Feinberg of using national, not New York, statistics in calculating the growth rates of annual compensation and also says that he ignored stock options and other forms of compensation beyond salaries and bonuses.

Finally, the complaint says that Mr. Feinberg has "played a cat-and-mouse game" when it comes to figuring awards for victims who earned more than $231,000 a year.
The plaintiffs' lawyer, Mr. Cambria, said Mr. Feinberg has been loath to offer awards of more than $5 million or $6 million even though under his formula, a mother of two children who lost a 35-year-old husband should be offered $20 million.
Mr. Cambria stressed that his high-income clients * as well as the hundreds of others who died on Sept. 11 * do not expect to receive awards of quite that magnitude. But still, he said, they felt that the numbers were far too low, and unfair.
"Some of what he has said sounds like he views his job as the sentry at the federal treasury," Mr. Cambria said. "But it's not his job to balance the budget, or bring this project in under a certain number. It's his job to carry out this statute passed by Congress."
Mr. Cambria said that his clients did not want to be interviewed because of privacy concerns and personal grief. But in a statement released by Mr. Cambria, one widow, who was not identified, said: "My husband worked a second job to support our children and me, and now he's gone. The amount of money we'll get if Feinberg's rules stay the way they are now is unfair. The simple fact is that we need more help."
Mr. Feinberg and the federal government have 60 days to respond to the complaint, Mr. Cambria said. But given the fact that the deadline to apply to the fund is Dec. 21, 2003, and that other legal matters related to Sept. 11 are still pending, Mr. Cambria said that he anticipated an expedited resolution.
He suggested that the best solution would be a settlement that adjusted the formulas worked out by Mr. Feinberg, who Mr. Cambria said also wanted to do right by the families.
"We believe in the fund," Mr. Cambria said. "I think the fund is a good thing. And at the end of the day, the amount of money between the way Feinberg wants to do it and the way the statute requires it * that delta is, in terms of the federal budget or other Congressionally mandated programs, very insignificant. But to my clients, it's life or death. It's the rest of their lives."

NOTICE TO COURT AND COUNSEL RE: WHITE HOUSE E-MAIL

Undersigned counsel wish to advise the Court and counsel that, thirty days from today, or soon thereafter, the Office of Administration ("OA") within the Executive Office of the President ("EOP") intends to delete an excess of Presidential e-mail and related records originally created during the Clinton Administration, but nevertheless still currently residing on the EOP's Automated Records Management System ("ARMS"). These e-mail records (together with a small number of pager and calendar records) were copied, and, following verification, the copy set was transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration ("NARA"), in accordance with the Presidential Records Act ("PRA"). See 44 U.S.C. § 2203(f)(1) (requiring that, at the end of a President's term, the Archivist of the United States assume responsibility for "the custody, control, and preservation of, and access to, the Presidential records of that President").

As this Court is aware, EOP and NARA entered into a Memorandum of Understanding at the end of the Clinton Administration governing the recovery of e-mail records, known as the Calverton Tape Restoration Project (TRP).1 Although the original intention of the parties had been to furnish to NARA (in accordance with the PRA) all copies of the restored data set of ARMS and TRP e-mail records at the end of the Project, an additional set of the original, incomplete ARMS data set has continued to reside at EOP.2

1 See Memorandum of Understanding between [NARA] and [EOP] Concerning the Continuation and Completion, after January 20, 2001, of the Tape Restoration, 'Multi Host,' and Reformatting Projects for Clinton-Gore Administration Electronic Mail Records Associated With [ARMS] ("MOU"), attached as Exhibit 3 to [EOP's] Brief on the Presidential Records Act, filed January 19, 2001. Pursuant to the MOU, EOP and NARA acknowledged and agreed that, as of January 20, 2001, legal custody of all

Accordingly, OA intends to delete the EOP set of these Presidential electronic records thirty days from the date of this notice, or soon thereafter.3 Because copies of the records in question are properly in the custody of the Archivist, the Archivist does not object to the deletion of these copies that remain in the physical custody of the EOP.

Dated:DATE

Clinton Administration electronic mail records governed by the PRA would transfer to NARA. See MOU, §§ I, III(A).

2 This set also includes copies of Presidential records that had been provided to NARA following an earlier EOP restoration project, which restored copies of e-mail, pager, and calendar records from backups made between November 1992 and July 1994 (including records of the George H.W. Bush and Clinton Administrations), pursuant to the litigation in Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, Civ. No. 89-0142 (D.D.C.).

3 The ARMS data set continuing to reside at EOP also includes email records created by staff in components of the EOP covered under the Federal Records Act; copies of these records also were previously provided to NARA. Once a verification process currently underway is sufficiently completed at NARA, NARA will be prepared to assume legal custody of these separate federal record emails, at which time EOP intends to delete the excess copies of these records still residing on ARMS.

The Center for Data Analysis at Heritage has created a preliminary estimate of the economic and fiscal effects of the President's plan to end the double taxation of corporate dividends.

This plan will:

Increase the Gross Domestic Product (GDP) by an average of $40 during 2003-2012.
The static cost of the proposal is estimated to be $367 billion over ten years. The reality-based score of the proposal is $102 billion.
This proposal will add an average of 311,000 jobs to the nation's employment level during 2003-2012.

Further refinements to these estimates will be put on the heritage.org web page as we are now doing daily economic growth briefings and updates, Adam.

KEY POINTS

Eighty days ago, on November 8, in a historic display of unity, the UN Security Council gave Iraq a final opportunity to voluntarily disarm.

The purpose of UN Resolution 1441 was disarmament. Inspections are a means to an end and they cannot be expected to succeed when a country has an active program of denial and deception, as is the case with Iraq.

For 11 years before Resolution 1441, Saddam Hussein

NOTICE TO COURT AND COUNSEL RE: WHITE HOUSE E-MAIL

Undersigned counsel wish to advise the Court and counsel that, thirty days from today, or soon thereafter, the Office of Administration ("OA") within the Executive Office of the President ("EOP") intends to delete an excess of Presidential e-mail and related records originally created during the Clinton Administration, but nevertheless still currently residing on the EOP's Automated Records Management System ("ARMS"). These e-mail records (together with a small number of pager and calendar records) were copied, and, following verification, the copy set was transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration ("NARA"), in accordance with the Presidential Records Act ("PRA"). See 44 U.S.C. § 2203(f)(1) (requiring that, at the end of a President's term, the Archivist of the United States assume responsibility for "the custody, control, and preservation of, and access to, the Presidential records of that President").

As this Court is aware, EOP and NARA entered into a Memorandum of Understanding at the end of the Clinton Administration governing the recovery of e-mail records, known as the Calverton Tape Restoration Project (TRP).1 Although the original intention of the parties had been to furnish to NARA (in accordance with the PRA) all copies of the restored data set of ARMS and TRP e-mail records at the end of the Project, an additional set of the original, incomplete ARMS data set has continued to reside at EOP.2

1 See Memorandum of Understanding between [NARA] and [EOP] Concerning the Continuation and Completion, after January 20, 2001, of the Tape Restoration, 'Multi Host,' and Reformatting Projects for Clinton-Gore Administration Electronic Mail Records Associated With [ARMS] ("MOU"), attached as Exhibit 3 to [EOP's] Brief on the Presidential Records Act, filed January 19, 2001. Pursuant to the MOU, EOP and NARA acknowledged and agreed that, as of January 20, 2001, legal custody of all

Accordingly, OA intends to delete the EOP set of these Presidential electronic records thirty days from the date of this notice, or soon thereafter.3 Because copies of the records in question are properly in the custody of the Archivist, the Archivist does not object to the deletion of these copies that remain in the physical custody of the EOP.

Dated:DATE

Clinton Administration electronic mail records governed by the PRA would transfer to NARA. See MOU, §§ I, III(A).

2 This set also includes copies of Presidential records that had been provided to NARA following an earlier EOP restoration project, which restored copies of e-mail, pager, and calendar records from backups made between November 1992 and July 1994 (including records of the George H.W. Bush and Clinton Administrations), pursuant to the litigation in Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, Civ. No. 89-0142 (D.D.C.).

3 The ARMS data set continuing to reside at EOP also includes email records created by staff in components of the EOP covered under the Federal Records Act; copies of these records also were previously provided to NARA. Once a verification process currently underway is sufficiently completed at NARA, NARA will be prepared to assume legal custody of these separate federal record emails, at which time EOP intends to delete the excess copies of these records still residing on ARMS.

Dan Bartlett Is Interviewed On CBS'S ``Early Show'' 01/28/03

SMITH: White House communications director Dan Bartlett has been busy helping President Bush prepare for tonight's speech. Mr. Bartlett joins us this morning from the White House.

Good morning, Dan.

BARTLETT: Good morning, Harry. How are you?

SMITH: Very well.

Will the president make a case tonight for the United States going to war with Iraq without the backing of the United Nations?

BARTLETT: Well, tonight is an opportunity for the president to address the American people about the state of our union. He'll talk about many issues that are of particular concern to the American people, particularly as many Americans are waking up this morning and reading the papers or they experience in their daily lives. There are great challenges that the country faces both at home and abroad. He'll talk about those challenges and why we're equal to the task.

He'll talk about the economy and the reason why he thinks we need to create more jobs in this new economy. He'll talk about the fact that the rising cost of health care is making it very difficult for many seniors to afford prescription drugs. He'll talk about a plan in which Congress can come together and actually renew our commitment to America's seniors by extending prescription drugs to every senior who needs them.

He'll also talk about the fact that we have much to do to continue to prosecute this war on terror. We're a nation at war right now. He'll talk about the progress we're making in dismantling the terrorist network.

He'll also talk about the great steps we're taking here at home to protect the American people and the next bold steps we ought to take to continue to protect the American people.

SMITH: Right.

BARTLETT: On the issue of...

SMITH: Dan, Dan, take a breath. The question was about Iraq.

BARTLETT: It's a very important issue. President Bush has outlined very clearly that after 9/11 we've been forced to think differently about the way we way protect the American people. The fact of the matter is that there are rogue regimes, such as Iraq, that are out there either already in possession of or acquiring weapons of mass destruction. It's very important, and that's exactly why he went to the U.N. Security Council to explain to the American people why this man is a direct threat.

Tonight, he'll talk specifically in a very detailed way why Saddam Hussein is a threat to the American people.

Yesterday, we heard from the U.N. inspectors' team. They have again declared that the Iraqi regime has not cooperating, that they're not living up to the demands of the world. Saddam Hussein is making the case against himself.

SMITH: All right. A year ago, polls showed three-quarters of the American people thought the president was taking the country in the right direction. That number is down to half now. What can he say tonight to reverse that trend?

BARTLETT: Well, what President Bush will talk about is of particular concern to the American people, outline a broad vision and show his confidence in the true character to the American people that we're up to the task.

There are very important issues as we go forward in this coming year. And he's putting forward a very detailed plan with specific initiatives to address specific concerns of the American people. And I believe and he believes that the Congress will rally, enact his initiatives. And it's going to be a great year.

SMITH: Tom Daschle said yesterday, the president says the right things but he doesn't do the right things. Would you care to respond to that?

BARTLETT: Well, it's amazing, only in Washington can politicians go out and criticize a speech they haven't even heard yet.

So President Bush is going to work with members of Congress that are interested in making progress for the American people, and he'll speak to them directly tonight.

SMITH: All right. Dan Bartlett, thanks for joining us this morning.

BARTLETT: Thanks, Harry.

Hispanic Caucus Decries Nominee's Presence At Speech

Responding to reports that Miguel Estrada, President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, will be First Lady Laura Bush's guest at the State of the Union address tonight, Congressional Hispanic Caucus Chairman Ciro Rodriguez, D-Texas, said today that Estrada does not represent Hispanic ideals and does not have judicial experience. "We will support President Bush's Hispanic judicial nominees when they have a demonstrated commitment to protecting the rights of Latinos, and to preserving and expanding the progress that has been made on civil rights and individual liberties," Gonzalez said. Estrada, who is from Honduras, is a partner with the firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. He served as a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, was an assistant U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York and an assistant to the Justice Department's solicitor general under former President Clinton. - by April Fulton

Manual:

We have gathered 90 well-informed members in 70 media markets for our national panel to provide practicing lawyer perspectives on the judicial nominees. Our web site will be enhanced next week with the list for the media to refer to by market. Reporters will be linked to our individual member biographical pages and encouraged to contact the lawyers directly.
We should talk about whether you want these people to be funneled into whatever mechanism you are developing to service media requests for radio and television talk show appearances. I'll be in the office all day Friday if you want to call. We will provide you a finalized list that day which fills-in the remaining major markets.

Finest Regards,

Brett --

I just got invited by the YLSAA to hear you speak about "Selection and Confirmation of Bush Administration Judges" on February 26. I would love to attend, but Steve, Susan, Stacey, and I already have opera tickets for that night. Please let me know if you're ever doing a similar event in the future; I'd be very interested to hear your thoughts on the topic.

I'm having a great time at OLC, by the way. Thanks again for counseling me to come here. The work is, if anything, even more interesting than I anticipated, and my colleagues are first rate. I hope you are still enjoying the White House Counsel's Office, and I hope that our paths cross again soon.

CRS Report for Congress
Received through the CRS Web

Cloture Attempts on Nominations

Richard S. Beth Specialist in the Legislative Process
Government and Finance Division

Summary

Cloture is the only means by which the Senate can vote to limit debate on a matter, and thereby overcome a possible filibuster. Until 1949, cloture could not be invoked on nominations, and before 1980 this action was attempted only twice. From 1949 through 2000, cloture was sought on 30 nominations, and invoked on 17. Among the 30 nominees, only three, on each of whom the Senate rejected cloture, were not confirmed. Until the 103rd Congress (1993-1994), the nominations involved were primarily judicial, and that Congress is the only one in which cloture was sought on more than three nominations.

This report is to be updated at the end of each Congress in which additional nominations are subjected to cloture attempts. Filibusters and cloture are discussed more generally in CRS Report RL30360, Filibusters and Cloture in the Senate.

Relation Between Cloture Attempts and Filibusters

Senate rules place no general limits on how long consideration of a nomination (or most other matters) may last. Owing to of this lack of general time limits, opponents of a nomination may be able to use extended debate or other delaying actions to prevent a vote from occurring. Although a voting majority of Senators may be prepared to vote for a nominee, the nomination cannot be confirmed as long as other Senators, presumably a voting minority, are able to prevent the vote from occurring. The use of dilatory actions for such a purpose is a filibuster.

The motion for cloture is the only procedure by which the Senate can vote to place time limits on its consideration of a matter. It is therefore the Senate's most usual means of attempting to overcome a filibuster. When the Senate adopts a cloture motion on a matter, known as "invoking cloture," further consideration of the matter is limited to 30 hours.[1] By invoking cloture, the Senate may be able to ensure that a question will ultimately come to a vote, and can be decided by a voting majority.

The cloture rule permits Senators to move for cloture repeatedly, if necessary. The Senate, however, can impose the constraints of cloture only by a super-majority vote. For most matters, including nominations, three-fifths of the full Senate, or 60 votes, is required. As a result, even if a majority of Senators support a nomination, opponents may still be able to prevent a vote on it by defeating any attempt to invoke cloture.

It would be incorrect to assume that situations in which cloture is sought correspond completely with those in which filibusters occur. Even if opponents attempt to block a nomination through delaying tactics, supporters may decide not to move for cloture. This situation is perhaps uncommon today, but does seem to have occurred in relation to nominations. Conversely, supporters of a nomination may move for cloture, in order to speed action, even when opponents may not consider themselves to be conducting a filibuster against it, or when they may have only threatened, but not actually conducted, a filibuster.

Since filibusters may be conducted through a variety of tactics, there are no specific actions that definitively indicate the occurrence of a filibuster, much less of a mere threat to filibuster. To this extent, the presence of cloture attempts may at least be a readily available means for attempting to identify some cases in which filibusters may have occurred.

Nominations on Which Cloture was Sought

The Senate first adopted a cloture rule in 1917. Until 1949, cloture could be moved only on legislative measures, and nominations could not be subjected to cloture attempts.[2] From 1949 through 2000 (81st-106th Congresses), cloture was sought on 30 nominations.[3] Table 2 identifies the 30 nominations, the number of cloture motions filed on each, the outcome of the cloture attempt, and the disposition of each nomination. Many of these nominations have been to clearly secondary or subordinate positions; only three have been to the Supreme Court, and one to the President's Cabinet.

Slack under the direction of Grayson Winterling, Staff Director (Washington: GPO, 1995), sec. 22.2. During the 30 hours, no single Senator, other than the party floor leaders and the managers of the debate, may occupy more than one hour in debate.

[3] For these purposes five State Department nominations considered concurrently are counted as one, and the nomination of one individual to two positions is counted as one.

Table 1. Cloture Attempts and Action on Nominations

Cloture Action	Action on Nomination
	Confirmed	Not confirmed
Invoked	17	0
No vote	6	0

As shown by the summary in Table 1, the Senate invoked cloture on 17 of these 30 nominations. On another six, cloture motions were offered, but never came to a vote. On the remaining seven, the Senate voted only against imposing cloture.

All 17 nominations on which cloture was invoked were confirmed. Of the 13 nominations on which cloture was sought but not invoked, ten were confirmed. Only three of the 30 nominees ultimately failed of confirmation, and on all three of these the Senate had rejected cloture. These were:

- Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice in 1968,
- Sam Brown to be Ambassador in 1994, and
- Dr. Henry Foster to be Surgeon General in 1995.

Historical Development of Cloture Attempts on Nominations

Even after Senate rules began to permit cloture on nominations, cloture was sought on none until 1968, when a motion to proceed to consider the nomination of Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice was debated at length. After the Senate rejected cloture, 45-43, President Lyndon B. Johnson withdrew the nomination. In 1969 and 1970, the nominations of Clement F. Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court were defeated after lengthy debate, but no cloture motion was filed on either. When the Senate considered the nomination to the Supreme Court of William H. Rehnquist late in the 1971 session, however, cloture was quickly sought. Though the Senate did not invoke cloture (52-42), the nomination was subsequently confirmed.

Cloture was sought on no other nomination until 1980. In the meantime, in 1975, the majority required for cloture on most matters, including nominations, was changed from two-thirds of Senators present and voting to three-fifths of the full membership of the Senate (normally 60).[4] The 1980 occurrence was the first in which cloture was sought on a nomination to an executive branch position, that of William G. Lubbers to be General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. Cloture was invoked in this case and the nomination was confirmed.

[4] Committee on Rules and Administration, Senate Cloture Rule, pp. 30-32, 53-54, 119-121.

Cloture has never been sought on more than three nominations in the same Congress, except for the 103rd (1993-1994). The 103rd was the first Congress of a new presidency, so that the number of nominations to be considered was presumably especially large (it was also the only Congress between 1981 and 2000 in which the presidency, Senate, and House were all controlled by the same political party). During this Congress, cloture action occurred on 12 nominations, ten of which were for executive branch positions. Cloture was invoked on only three of these ten nominations, a much lower proportion than in other cases.

Before the 103rd Congress, most nominations on which cloture was sought had been for judicial positions (8 of 12), perhaps reflecting the Senate's traditional inclination to permit the President generally wide latitude in selecting officials to serve under him in executive branch positions. The six nominations on which cloture has been sought since the 103rd Congress have been evenly split between executive and judicial. Table 2 summarizes the outcomes of cloture action on executive and judicial nominations during various time periods.

[a] These five nominations to various positions in the State Department received consideration and cloture action concurrently, and are counted as one case in the table.

[b] Cloture motion became moot and received no action.

[c] Tigert was nominated simultaneously for these two positions, and cloture action took place on each nomination in turn; the table counts these events as one case.

[d] Senate unanimously consented to treat the cloture motion as having no effect.

I would think there is some risk of complaints and stories about "politicization" if Iraq is a subject of discussion or questions, which I would imagine it would be.

Brett:

I hope you're doing well. Looks like the judicial nominations are finally moving forward. Congratulations!

Sen. Kyl has asked Deputy Secretary of Defense Wolfowitz and Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Doug Feith to address the Republican Bicameral Retreat at the Greenbrier a week from tomorrow. The requested topic is national defense and foreign policy issues. The retreat is hosted by the House and Senate Republican leadership and I understand that it is not a fundraiser.

I don't see a legal problem with Wolfowitz's and Feith's attendance, as it is consistent with DoD policy on political activities. I wanted to run this by you, however, due to the optics. While DoD officials have addressed similar Republican gatherings on Capitol Hill, I haven't been able to find an example of addressing an off-site retreat like this. Do you have any concerns about their attendance?

Also, Jim Haynes is going to send a letter to Ted Olson today on the Densberger case. I'll shoot you a copy once it's signed. What is your fax?

Thanks!

Re: Densberger v. United Technologies Corp., 297 F.3d 66 (2d Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 2003 WL 95363 (2003)

Dear Mr. Solicitor General:

As you may know, the Supreme Court recently denied the petition for certiorari filed by defendant United Technologies Corporation (UTC) in this matter. To everyone's surprise, the Court did not seek the views of the United States. UTC is preparing a petition for rehearing. Paul Clement recommended to Whit Cobb that we write you. Accordingly, I ask that you prepare and file a contemporaneous amicus brief or otherwise bring to the attention of the Court the views of the United States in this important case. I understand that the deadline for filing is Friday, February 7.

It is unusual, although not unheard of, for the government to make such a filing. I think that doing so is warranted in this case.

On the merits, the substantive legal question raised by UTC deserves clarification by the Supreme Court. The central focus of the petition for certiorari involves the application of the government contractor defense (GCD) in the context of "failure to warn" claims. As recounted in memos prepared by DOJ and DoD, the circuits are split as to how this defense should be applied. Moreover, the Second Circuit's restrictive Densberger formulation would require that the government affirmatively "proscribe" or "prescribe" the warnings that a contractor must provide. This is simply unrealistic and highly impractical in the typical government contracting scenario.[1]

This case presents an example of a rare, appropriate circumstance for filing an amicus brief in support of a petition for rehearing. Under the Court's rules on petitions for rehearing, the central question normally is whether there have been "intervening circumstances of a substantial or controlling effect or . . . other substantial grounds not previously presented." Sup. Ct. R. 44.2. The substantial "intervening circumstance" here is the enactment of the Homeland Security legislation on November 25, which occurred after the latest date by which the government could have filed an amicus brief under the Court's rules (November 18). This legislation expressly recognizes the applicability of the GCD to homeland security procurements, yet it does not define the contents of the defense. Prompt and effective implementation of the legislation is a matter of paramount importance to the government. Importing the Densberger-generated uncertainty regarding the GCD into the procurement activities of the new Homeland Security Department is undesirable. Accordingly, the United States can point to this intervening development as justifying the Court's taking special note of the issues posed by the UTC certiorari petition.

We think that preparing a filing at this stage would be appropriate in light of the history of this case. My office has been in touch with DOJ since last spring, when UTC sought rehearing en banc before the Second Circuit. Since then, we have discussed with DOJ on a number of occasions the question of the appropriate time for the government to step into this dispute. In light of the issue in the previous paragraph, there is still an opportunity to present the government's views.

In sum, we think that the legal uncertainty created by Densberger should be clarified by the Court. The enactment of the Homeland Security legislation presents ample reason to request such clarification, even at this relatively late stage in the proceedings.

The Office of Management and Budget concurs in this request. I hope that you agree, but in the event you do not, or if you have any questions, I would appreciate your contacting my office to discuss the matter further. My point of contact is Whit Cobb, Deputy General Counsel (Legal Counsel), who may be reached at (703) 697-2714.

You, Paul, and your entire staff have my thanks for the attention that you all have paid to this and many other important matters for the Department of Defense.

Sincerely,

William J. Haynes II

Federal Candidates and Officeholders

BCRA places limits on the amounts and types of funds that can be raised by Federal candidates and officeholders for both Federal and State candidates. See 2 U.S.C. 441i(e). The Commission is proposing to place the regulations that address these limitations in 11 CFR part 300, subpart D.
ÿ
1. General Prohibitions

The restrictions apply to Federal candidates and officeholders, their agents, and entities directly or indirectly established, maintained, or controlled by, or acting on behalf of, any such candidate(s) or officeholder(s). As defined in 2 U.S.C. 431(3) and existing 11 CFR 100.4, "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States, Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States. There is a similar definition of "Federal officeholder" in 11 CFR 113.1(c). Please note that these restrictions encompass candidate PACs and leadership PACs. Persons covered by these restrictions may not "solicit, receive, direct, transfer or spend" non-Federal funds unless certain requirements are satisfied.

BCRA prohibits any Federal candidate or officeholder, his or her agent, or any entity described above, from raising non-Federal funds in connection with an election for Federal, State, or local office. 2 U.S.C. 441i (e)(1)(A) and (B); proposed 11 CFR 300.61. These prohibitions encompass raising money for section 527 organizations, whether or not such organizations are Federal political committees. With limited exceptions, such persons may raise and spend Federal money in connection with a non-Federal election only in amounts and from sources that are consistent with State law, and that do not exceed the Act's contribution limits or come from prohibited sources under the Act. 2 U.S.C. 441i(e)(1)(B); proposed 11 CFR 300.62.

The prohibitions in 11 CFR 300.61 and 300.62 encompass "leadership" and "candidate" PACs since these PACs are entities directly or indirectly established, financed, maintained, or controlled by, Federal candidates and/or officeholders. Specifically, leadership PACs and candidate PACs are political organizations set up by congressional leaders and other Federal candidates and officeholders as a way to support other candidates' campaigns. In 2001, at least 110 members of Congress had leadership PACs.

As Senator McCain explained in the Senate debate, "A Federal officeholder or candidate is prohibited from soliciting contributions for a Leadership PAC that do not comply with the Federal hard money source and amount limitations." See 148 Cong. Rec. S2140 (Daily ed. March 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. McCain). Consequently, under proposed 11 CFR 300.61, Federal candidates, Federal officeholders, and their leadership PACs and candidate PACs cannot solicit, receive, direct, transfer, or spend funds for a Federal account of a leadership or candidate PAC unless the funds are subject to the prohibitions, limitations, and reporting requirements of the Act. Similarly, Federal candidates, Federal officeholders, and their leadership PACs and candidate PACs cannot solicit, receive, direct, transfer, or spend funds for a non-Federal account of a leadership PAC or candidate PAC unless the funds are subject to the prohibitions and limitations of the Act. Thus, neither the Federal nor non-Federal accounts of a Federal candidate's leadership PAC or candidate PAC could receive or spend corporate treasury or labor organization funds or funds from individuals and political committees that exceed the limitations of the Act. Additionally, funds in the non-Federal account of these PACs must not be used for Federal election activities or in connection with a Federal election. See 148 Cong. Rec. S2140 (Daily ed. March 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. McCain).

2. Exceptions for State and Local Candidates and for Fundraising Events

An exception applies when a Federal candidate or Federal officeholder is also a candidate for State or local office. Such candidates may raise and spend non-Federal funds for their State campaign, as long as their activities are consistent with State law and refer only to their status as a State or local candidate, to other candidates for that same office, or both. 2 U.S.C. 441i(e)(2); proposed 11 CFR 300.63. Please note that if a State or local candidate is simultaneously a candidate for Federal office, he or she must raise and spend only Federal funds in connection with the Federal campaign.

BCRA contains a further exemption, for Federal candidates and officeholders who attend, speak, or appear as a featured guest at a State, district, or local party committee fundraising event. See 2 U.S.C. 441i (e)(3); proposed 11 CFR 300.64. The Commission seeks comment on how it should construe and implement this provision, particularly in light of the separate general prohibition on Federal candidates and officeholders from soliciting non-Federal funds in connection with an election for Federal, State, or local office.

Sen. McCain explained in the Senate debate that "[t]he rule here is simple: Federal candidates and officeholders cannot solicit soft money funds, funds that do not comply with Federal contribution limits and source prohibitions, for any party committee-national, State, or local." 148 Cong. Rec. S2139 (daily ed. March 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. McCain). Thus, under the proposed rules, while such individuals may attend, speak, or be a featured guest at a State or local party fundraising event, they cannot solicit funds at any such event.

However, the Commission seeks comments on whether the fundraising event provision is a total exemption from the general solicitation ban, whereby Federal candidates and officeholders and their agents may attend and speak freely at such events without restriction or regulation. In ÿ[*35673]ÿ addition, the Commission seeks comments on how it should construe BCRA's phrase permitting Federal candidates and officeholders to "attend, speak, or be a featured guest" at a fundraising event. Specifically, the phrase "featured guest" strongly suggests that State, district, or local party committees may publicize in advance that a Federal candidate or officeholder will be attending and speaking at an event. Does this mean that Federal candidates and officeholders may be referred to in invitation materials for the event? May they appear as members of a host committee of an event? May they be honored at the event? Should the general solicitation bar be construed to mean that Federal candidates and officeholders are strictly prohibited from doing anything that would constitute a "solicitation" under the Internal Revenue Code that would trigger IRS disclaimer obligations?

11 CFR 300.64 Exemption for Attending, Speaking, or Appearing as a Featured Guest at Fundraising Events

BCRA contains an exemption from the fundraising prohibition for Federal candidates and officeholders who attend, speak, or appear as a featured guest at a State, district, or local party committee fundraising event. 2 U.S.C. 441i(e)(3). The NPRM sought comment on how to construe and implement this exemption, particularly in light of the separate general prohibition on Federal candidates and officeholders soliciting non-Federal funds in connection with an election for Federal, State, or local office. The NPRM sought comment on the provision in light of Sen. McCain's ÿ [*49108]ÿ explanation in the Senate debate that Federal candidates and officeholders "cannot solicit soft money funds, funds that do not comply with Federal contribution limits and source prohibitions, for any party committee-national, State, or local." 148 Cong. Rec. S2139 (daily ed. March 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. McCain). The Commission initially sought comment on a rule proposing that, while such individuals could attend, speak, or be a featured guest at a State or local party fundraising event, they could not say anything that could be construed as soliciting or otherwise seeking non-Federal funds. In the alternative, the NPRM sought comment on whether the fundraising event provision was a total exemption from the general solicitation ban, whereby Federal candidates and officeholders and their agents may attend and speak freely at such events. The phrase "featured guest" strongly suggests that State, district, or local party committees may publicize in advance that a Federal candidate or officeholder will be attending and speaking at an event, and the Commission sought comments on whether this means that Federal candidates and officeholders may be referred to in invitation materials for the event, or appear as members of a host committee, or be honored at the event.

The Commission received a range of comments on these issues. Some advocated a restrictive approach, arguing that any other construction would undercut the fundraising prohibition. Others noted that it could be almost impossible for a Federal candidate or officeholder not to become involved in at least indirect fundraising, such as thanking people in a rope line for their support, by virtue of the fact that they are appearing and speaking at a fundraising event, which the statutory exemption expressly permits. Some claimed that monitoring every word the speaker said could turn the Commission into "speech police," raising First Amendment concerns. U.S. CONST. amend. I ("Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech * * *"). Also, the fact that a candidate or officeholder is to be honored at an event implies that his or her name or picture may appear prominently on invitations, flyers, and other material distributed in connection with the event.

The Commission has decided to construe the statutory exemption permitting Federal candidates and officeholders to attend, speak, and appear as a featured guest at State, district or local party committee fundraising events without regulation or restriction. This conclusion is compelled by the plain language of the section and the structure of the section within BCRA. The structure of the statute requires the Commission to construe the provision as a total exemption to the solicitation prohibition, applicable to Federal candidates and officeholders, when attending and speaking at party fundraising events, because the statutory section is styled as such. To conclude otherwise would require the Commission to read the restrictions itemized in the general prohibition into a statutory exemption that clearly and unambiguously excludes those restrictions by it own terms. It would also require the Commission to regulate and potentially restrict what candidates and officeholders say at political events, which is contrary to the plain meaning of the statutory exemption and would raise serious constitutional concerns. Accordingly, candidates and officeholders are free under the rule to speak at such functions without regulation or restriction. In addition, as several commenters urged, State, district, and local party committees are free within the rule to publicize featured appearances of Federal candidates and officeholders at these events, including references to these individuals in invitations. The Commission concludes, however, that Federal candidates and officeholders are prohibited from serving on "host committees" for a party fundraising event or from personally signing a solicitation in connection with a State, local, or district party fundraising event, on the basis that these pre-event activities are outside the permissible activities described above flowing from a Federal candidate's or officeholder's appearance or attendance at the event. The rule, consistent with the statute, places no restriction on the speech of Federal candidates and individuals holding Federal office at these fundraising events.

A brief summary of where we stand on this issue:

As you know, before enactment of the campaign finance law, all Executive Branch officials were expressly permitted by law to appear as guest speakers at political events and fundraisers, including fundraisers for state and local candidates, so long as the officials did not personally solicit funds.

The judgment we had and have reached is that the new campaign finance law does not alter that conclusion. Yesterday, however, Ben Ginsberg noted what he believes to be an unintended ambiguity/absurdity in one aspect of the new campaign finance law: regarding guest speaking at events and fundraisers for state and local candidates (as distinct from guest speaking at federal party or federal candidate events or state party events, all of which he agrees is still clearly permissible). We do not share Ben's view that this ambiguity is created by the new law. The Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice agrees with us.

To be very cautious and to alleviate any possible issue, however, the Department of Justice will send us their formal written opinion on the question; we should have that shortly. In addition, both political parties are seeking confirmation from the FEC in the next week on this question.

Apologies for confusion caused by this. We will have it cleared up shortly. And obviously, please call with any questions. Thanks.

Hey, just wanted to draw to your attn that there's going to be some considerable overlap b/w those of us who need to be on the Hispanic call and the coalitions meeting. (call begin at 2:45 and coalitions meeting at 2:30). Not sure this will work? should one be moved forward or back?

That's perfect. What do you think about an end of the day internal meeting, say at 4pm or so, following Hispanic call? Ought to include those of you on email, but also Schlapp, Mercy, Snee, etc. Maybe gather in Brett's office or if one of you have better accommodations?

One thing is for sure, Heather and Brett are popular people.

How does this work?

For the Hispanic call, we will start at 3:15 - 20pm.

Manny, Robert, Mercy and I will front end it, hopefully giving Brett, Heather and Matt time to join at the end.

The language you suggest would be correct. "In the case of a vacancy" in the newly created statutory position of Director of the Violence Against Women Office at the Justice Department, "the President may designate an officer or employee who shall act as Director during the vacancy." Pub. L. 107-273, õ 402. A vacancy in the office will arise when the position springs into existence 90 days after the legislation was enacted on November 22, 2002 (this may already have happened?). Thus, õ 402 provides a basis, independent of the Vacancies Reform Act, for the President to make an acting designation. (And, I would note, that the acting designation under õ 402, unlike the Vacancies Reform Act, does not appear to place a temporal limit on the appointment.)

Rep. Wolf has drafted a bill similar to the Blunt bill that would expand the VCF to include victims of the East Africa embassies bombings, WTC '98, USS Cole, etc. The significant distinctions b/w the Blunt and Wolf bills is that Wolf's includes caps (20% for administrative resolution and 25% in the case of litigation) and claims must be filed within one year of the date of enactment of the legislation. You will recall that the Administration, with OMB's approval, provided comment last fall on the merits of the Blunt bill. Your thoughts on if or how we should respond to Wolf's request for comments (or SAP)? Thanks, Paul

Testimony

R. Glenn Hubbard
Chairman, Council of Economic Advisers

before the

Senate Dirksen Building, Room 628

Chairman Craig, Ranking Member Breaux, and members of the Committee, I thank you for the opportunity to discuss how the President's Jobs and Growth Initiative will affect America's seniors. The central role of the package is to support near-term economic growth at the same time it improves the long-run productivity of the economy. This approach to fiscal policy is appropriate in the short run, because it focuses on what the economy needs now: faster investment and higher job growth for today's workers. But by raising long-run productivity, the package will help America's seniors as well. To start with, ending the double tax on corporate income will directly benefit seniors who receive dividend checks. About half of all dividend income goes to America's seniors, who often rely on those checks for a steady source of retirement income. But just as important as increasing after-tax dividend income is the effect that the President's package will have the overall productivity of the economy. Higher taxes on corporate capital act to reduce investment, which in turns lowers the amount of capital that workers can use at their jobs. With less capital, workers are less productive, so they are paid less. By ending the double tax on corporate income and permanently raising expensing limits for small firms, the President's package encourages investment. This starts the virtuous circle of higher investment and job growth today, with higher capital stocks, productivity, and wages tomorrow. In the end, the more productive economy will be better able to support the large number of workers who will soon retire.

REV_00157188

Because so many seniors depend on Social Security and Medicare, any discussion of how the proposal will affect seniors must also discuss how it affects the government's fiscal position. One of the most important lessons of the past several years is the importance of strong economic growth for the Federal government's books. Accordingly, the central role for fiscal policy is to craft a tax policy that reduces tax-based distortions that hinder growth, while at the same time limiting the growth of government outlays to a sustainable path. Given the importance of economic growth to the government's fiscal position, I will start my testimony today by reviewing the economic situation currently facing our Nation. I will then discuss the ways in which the President's proposals contribute to higher growth, specifically by targeting business spending on investment.

At the start, however, I would like to stress an important fact. While the last two years have presented many challenges to the American economy – the long decline in the stock market and the terrorist attacks and economic contraction in 2001 – our long-run economic outlook is as strong as its has been in a generation. As Chart 1 shows, the trend rate of U.S. labor productivity growth has risen from rate of 1.4 percent per year from 1973 to 1995 to 2.5 percent per year from 1995 to 2000. Because higher productivity growth is the foundation of higher incomes and living standards, the productivity acceleration is good news for all of us. What is more, over the last four quarters for which we have data, labor productivity has risen by 5.6 percent – the best four-quarter change in productivity since the early 1970s. The ongoing productivity revival speaks well for the long-term outlook. Additionally, inflation remains low and stable, which helps the economy interpret relative price signals efficiently and which gives policymakers the room to support near-term growth.

THE ECONOMIC SITUATION IN 2002

In many ways, the economy's recent behavior has been different than that of past recoveries. Typically, business investment declines most sharply in recessions and expands most briskly in recoveries. By contrast, the household and government sectors do not fluctuate as much. In 2002, however, the recovery from the economic contraction of the previous year took place amid continued weakness in business investment and strength in the household sector. After rising at an annual rate of 3.4 percent during the first three quarters, GDP rose at an annual rate of 0.7 percent in the fourth quarter. Business fixed investment rose at an annual rate of 1.5

percent – the first quarterly increase since mid-2000 – but much larger rates of increase will be needed for the recovery to be fully established.

Household sector. In large part, the strength of the household sector last year stemmed from the aggressive monetary easing by the Federal Reserve in 2001. Over the course of that year, the Federal Reserve cut its target federal funds rate eleven times, lowering the target from 6.5 percent to 1.75 percent. Given the well-known lags in monetary policy, these reductions continued to provide stimulus throughout 2002. Lower interest rates, for example, allowed motor vehicle companies to offer aggressive financing incentives, which have supported auto sales through much of the year.

Additionally, the substantial cuts in the target federal funds rate by the Federal Reserve have translated into lower mortgage interest rates, supporting housing starts and mortgage refinancing. In the first three quarters of 2002, mortgage refinancing alone injected more than $100 billion into home owners' pocketbooks. After they paid down second mortgages and outstanding home equity loans, they had more than $59 billion left over to spend in other ways. Survey evidence indicates that about half of this $59 billion was probably used for consumption and home improvements – two components of aggregate demand – which would have raised nominal GDP by about 0.4 percent in the first three quarters of 2002. All in all, the interest rates cuts were helpful in maintaining the recovery last year. The most recent rate reduction of 50 basis points undertaken on November 6, 2002, will provide further support for the recovery in 2003.

Fiscal policy has also been an important force behind robust consumption in 2002. In addition to enhancing long-term economic efficiency, the tax cut proposed by the President and passed by Congress in 2001 provided valuable support for disposable income, which has been far more robust than is typical at this stage of a recovery. The upshot has been solid growth in both personal consumption expenditures and residential investment that has supported the recovery so far.

Business investment. In contrast to positive impetus from the household sector, business investment has been the economy's key weak spot. As I noted earlier, during the current business cycle, the decline in business investment has been sharper, and the recovery more modest, than an average postwar business cycle. On average, the peak-to-trough decline in nonresidential investment in the typical post-war recession is 6.2 percent. Assuming that the trough in the most recent recession occurred during the fourth quarter of 2001 – a decision that ultimately resides with the National Bureau of Economic Research – the corresponding decline in the most recent recession was 8 percent. Comparing the typical pace of recovery, during the first three quarters of this recovery, business investment fell 2.0 percent further, compared to a typical increase of roughly 2.7 percent. Chart 2 displays the current weakness investment graphically, by comparing it to the typical experience of recoveries since 1960. Simply put, the recovery in investment that one would expect at this stage of the business cycle has yet to materialize.

The current weakness in investment results is linked to adverse developments in equity markets during the past three years. Indeed, both stem in large part from the same underlying shock – a scaling back of expected profit growth. Evidence that earnings growth was adjusted downward comes from surveys of Wall Street analysts who track individual firms. According to one such survey, five-year-ahead earnings growth forecasts for the firms in the S&P 500 fell from a peak of more than 18 percent per year in mid-2000 to slightly more than 13 percent per year by September 2002. Another factor in lowering both equity values and business investment is the current risk climate. Higher levels of uncertainty in the economy and/or higher aversion to risk on the part of investors reduce the willingness of investors to hold corporate equities and lowers stock prices and investment. One reflection of the risk outlook is the spread between yields on corporate bonds and U.S. Treasury securities, because corporate bonds are subject to default risk while U.S. Treasuries are not. The widening gap between yields for corporate and Treasury securities after 2000 coincided closely with the decline in the stock market during this period. Spreads continued to widen sharply in 2002, reaching near-record levels, indicating that risk aversion played a key role in markets in the months following September 11, 2001 as well.

Inventory investment contributed strongly to the economic slowdown in 2001, but by early in 2002, the pace of inventory decline slowed, providing a significant boost to production. In some sectors of the economy, evidence suggests that inventory restocking is underway. Over the next several quarters, as inventory and sales growth come together, inventory investment's role in real GDP growth should provide upward momentum to the recovery.

Government purchases. The war on terror continued to exert upward pressure on Federal government purchases in 2002. In late March, for example, the President requested that Congress provide an additional appropriation of $27.1 billion, primarily to fund the effort in the war against terror. More than half of this amount was allocated to the activities of the Defense Department and various intelligence agencies. Most of the rest was needed for homeland security (mainly for the new Transportation Security Administration) and for the emergency response and recovery efforts in New York City. Though most of this spending was required for one-time outlays only, it nevertheless contributed to the large 6.4 percent annual rate of increase in real Federal government purchases in the first three quarters of 2002. State and local government purchases rose by a more moderate 1.7 percent annual rate during the same period.

External sector. While the United States economy remained below potential in 2002, its growth rate still outpaced that of many other industrialized countries. Growth in Canada – America's largest trading partner – was a healthy 4.0 percent in during the four quarters ending in the third quarter of 2002, but growth in many other countries, such as Mexico, France, Japan, and Italy lagged behind. Low demand for U.S. exports combined with the emerging recovery in the United States (and the subsequent increase in the U.S. demand for imports) caused the U.S. trade deficit to reach record levels in 2002.

The widening trade deficit placed additional downward pressure on the U.S. current account, which reached almost five percent of GDP in the middle of 2002. As a matter of accounting, the current account is simply the difference between net domestic investment and net domestic saving. Several factors can raise the current account deficit, including higher investment in the within our borders on the part of foreign investors, or lower savings rates on the part of U.S. citizens. In light of the large number of trade-related and financial forces operating on the current account, it is impossible to label a current account deficit as either "good" or "bad." Indeed, one factor contributing to high U.S. investment relative to savings is the rapid increase in U.S. productivity relative to many other major countries, which makes the United States a good place to invest. Because productivity growth is ultimately responsible for rising living standards, the current account deficit reflects at least in part good news about the American economy. Even so, a current account deficit indicates that the United States is consuming and investing more than it is producing, and the U.S. current account has typically been in deficit for the past two decades. As a result, the net international investment position in the United States has moved from an accumulated surplus of slightly less than 10 percent of GDP in the late 1970s to a deficit of almost 20 percent of GDP in 2001.

Recent increases in the current account deficit have led to some concerns that continued current account deficits (and the subsequent increases in international debt that would result) could not be sustained. Because debt has to be serviced by the repatriation of capital income abroad, the ratio of a country's debt to its income must stabilize at some point. Yet the U.S. is currently far from the point at which servicing our international debt becomes burdensome. In fact, until 2002, more investment income was generated by U.S. investment in foreign countries than was generated by foreign investments inside the United States.

In the end, the key determinant of the sustainability of the U.S. international debt position is continued confidence in the economic policies of the United States. As long as the United States pursues its current market-oriented, pro-growth policies, then the current account deficit will not represent an impediment to continued economic growth.

Labor market. The unemployment rate hovered between 5.5 and 6.0 percent throughout the year after rising 1.8 percentage points in 2001. Nonfarm payroll employment in 2002 was similarly weak, with 181,000 jobs lost in 2002, compared with 1.4 million jobs lost the previous year.

As in past business cycles, declines in manufacturing employment have been especially pronounced. Factory employment fell 592,000 in 2002, following a decline of 1.3 million in 2001 and about 100,000 in 2000. Another feature of previous business cycles that has recurred in the past two years is the increase in the number of workers who report a long unemployment spell. Like the overall unemployment rate, the number of workers unemployed for 26 weeks or more rose in the 2001 and remained high in 2002. Yet the pattern of long-term unemployment observed in 2001 and 2002 was similar to patterns traced out in previous postwar fluctuations. Like the overall unemployment rate, the level of long-term unemployment remains moderate relative to past business cycles.

RISKS TO THE OUTLOOK

The slowing of GDP growth and weakness in labor markets in the fourth quarter of 2002 highlight the risks the recovery currently faces. In order of importance, these risks include:

A Delayed Investment Recovery. The key to transforming the current recovery into sustained robust growth is an increase in the pace of business fixed investment. Only with robust business investment will labor markets improve. A recovery in investment is a key factor in creating more jobs because when companies build new factories, they hire directly and boost employment in capital-goods industries.

While private forecasters expect business investment spending to recover in 2003, there are several potential sources of a delay in an investment recovery. One risk is weaker profit growth. Due to a sharp increase in the fourth quarter of 2001, corporate profits have rebounded from recessionary lows. (This is the most recent quarter for which we have data on corporate profits.) Yet the recovery in profits has been uneven. In the first three quarters of 2002, profits as a share of income averaged 7.5 percent. While this represents a recovery from the 7.2 percent share in 2001, it is still below shares of 8.7 percent in 1999 and 7.9 percent in 2000. Moreover, on a quarterly basis, corporate profits declined in each of the first three quarters of 2002. Because current profits are an indicator of future profits, firms may interpret recent weakness in profit growth as an indication of reduced investment opportunities. Moreover, the decline in profits may have an even more negative impact on investment at firms that depend on retained earnings (rather than external capital markets) to fund investment projects.

A second potential setback to the investment recovery reflects an increase in the level of uncertainty about the course of the near term events or higher levels of risk aversion on the part of investors. Higher levels of uncertainty in the economy can also make firms delay new projects until the uncertainty is resolved. This delay is translated into a higher expected rate of return in order for new projects to be undertaken, which reduces the level of investment that is undertaken in the near term. Additionally, higher levels of risk aversion on the part of investors can reduce investment by making it harder for firms to raise external funds.

A Decline in Consumer Spending. As mentioned, the recent business cycle stands apart from the typical postwar recession in that household income growth has been stable while stock price declines have eroded household wealth. In the typical recession, incomes and net worth move together, but in the most recent recession, net worth fell dramatically relative to income. Yet in contrast to the negative effect of lower equity values on business investment, consumption has remained remarkably robust, even as household net worth has suffered. The contrast in the pattern of spending mirrors a reversal of conventional income and wealth dynamics. In the current cycle personal income – especially disposable personal income, supported by the tax cuts of 2001 – has held up quite well, even as household balance sheet positions have weakened.

The deterioration in household wealth over the past three years raises the possibility that consumers will increase their active saving out of disposable income in order to restore at least some of their lost wealth. An increase in precautionary saving of this type could have a substantial effect on yearly consumption. From the first quarter of 2000 to the last quarter of 2002, households lost nearly $7 trillion in equity wealth. A rough rule of thumb suggested by aggregate data on wealth and consumption is that yearly consumption declines by 3 to 5 cents for every dollar of lost equity wealth. Based on the midpoint of this range, the $7 trillion reduction in equity wealth since early 2000 would be expected to eventually lower yearly consumption by about $280 billion per year. For comparison, a reduction of this amount would represent nearly 4 percent of consumption and almost 3 percent of GDP in 2002.

Empirical findings also suggest that response of consumption to stock market wealth is drawn out over time, a fact which has crucial implications for the precise path of consumption over the next few years. Because the appreciation of equity prices before 2000 would be expected to increase consumption, some of the implied $280 billion drop in consumption after 2000 may simply represent a "cancellation" of an implied consumption increase that had not yet taken place. Moreover, positive influences from the other determinants of consumption (such as current income and the continuing appreciation in housing wealth) are likely to offset the stock market's negative effects on personal spending. Even so, the possibility that consumers might pull back somewhat represents a risk to the recovery in the near term.

An Increase in Oil Prices. Oil prices trended upward in 2002, with the spot price of the benchmark West Texas Intermediate rising from about $20 per barrel at the start of the year to about $32 by year's end. Much of the increase was due to the recent turmoil in Venezuela. The general strike in that country began in the first week of December; since then, the WTI price has risen from around $27 dollars per barrel to about $33 dollars per barrel today. Concerns over the failure of the Iraqi regime to disarm in a credible way may have also been partly responsible for the increase in oil prices in 2002.

The effect of further oil price increases on the economy is difficult to determine. To be sure, there are "rules of thumb" that are often used to quantify the effect of export disruption on oil prices as well as the subsequent effect of higher oil prices on GDP. For disturbances of a few million barrels per day, a reduction of oil supplies of one million barrels per day typically raises prices by about 3 to 5 dollars per barrel. Additionally, a sustained increase in oil prices of $10 per barrel would be expected to lower GDP growth by about 0.25 to 0.50 percentage points after six months to one year. While these rules of thumb are useful guideposts, the actual effect to the economy could vary greatly from episode to episode. For example, a disruption of oil production that was that was expected to last indefinitely would affect prices differently from one that was likely to be unwound quickly. Moreover, if higher oil prices accompany a serious deterioration in consumer and business confidence, their ultimate effect on GDP could be much larger than a simple rule of thumb would suggest.

THE PRESIDENT'S JOBS AND GROWTH INITIATIVE

In light of the risks to the near-term outlook, the President has advanced a proposal to enhance long-term growth while providing near-term support against downside risks to the Nation's economic outlook. It is important to note that the recovery is not in immediate jeopardy. Private forecasters expect the recovery to gather momentum over the coming year, with both higher investment and improved job growth. Yet the presence of current risks suggests that insurance against unforeseen deterioration in economic activity is especially valuable. The best proposals are those that will raise the rate of long-term growth even if the recovery takes shape as private forecasters anticipate.

The President's proposal targets the areas that are most fundamental to the continued health of the current recovery – investment, consumption, and job growth. Specifically:

1. Accelerate to January 1, 2003 features of the 2001 tax cut currently scheduled to be phased-in: the reductions in marginal income tax rates, additional marriage penalty relief, a larger child credit, and a wider 10 percent income tax bracket.
2. Eliminate the double taxation of corporate income, whether this income is paid out to individuals as dividends or retained by the firm. Dividend income will no longer be taxable on the individual level, while a step-up in basis will be allowed in order to reflect the effect of retained earnings on share prices.
3. Increase to $75,000 the size of small business investment incentives – the amount that they may deduct from their taxable income in the year the investment takes place.
4. Provide $3.6 billion of funds to the states to fund Personal Reemployment Accounts. These accounts provide up to $3,000 to assist unemployed workers who are likely to need help in finding or training for a new job. If a new job is found quickly, the unspent balance in the account can be kept as a "reemployment bonus."

How the Proposals Will Help the Economy in the Near Term

REV_00157196

Supporting investment. To be effective in aiding the current recovery, any proposal must support investment. The President's proposals do this in three ways: ending the double taxation of corporate income, raising the expensing limits for small businesses, and lowering individual marginal tax rates (which are the relevant tax rates for small firms that pass through their income to their owners).

The most immediate effect of ending the double taxation of corporate income will be to lower the cost of capital faced by firms in equity markets. Under the double taxation inherent in the current law, investment projects funded with new equity capital face effective federal taxation of up to 60 percent. The President's proposals address this problem by removing the layer of tax at the individual level. Corporate income will be taxed once – and only once – which will make corporate equities more attractive to investors and lower the implicit cost that firms pay for equity-financed investment. As an example, the cost of capital for equity-financed equipment investment in the corporate sector would fall by more than 10 percent. For investment in structures – the weakest part of the investment outlook today – the decline in the cost of corporate equity capital would be more than one-third. For equipment investment, this decline in the cost of capital is equivalent to an investment tax credit of from four to seven percent.

In addition to the direct stimulative effects of lower costs of equity capital, ending the double taxation of corporate income will rationalize dividend payout policy among American companies. This will also aid investment, even in the short run. Currently, the tax code encourages firms to retain earnings and remit income to shareholders through share repurchases. This gives firms an incentive to inflate their reported earnings, so that their stock prices will rise. A main goal of the President's policy is to reduce this incentive by making tax policy neutral with respect to retaining earnings or paying dividends. Firms wanting to transmit their profitability to outside investors need only show them the money, in the form of dividend checks. With less uncertainty about the true profitability of firms, investment funds will flow more easily to firms with good investment prospects. This will not only make financial markets more efficient, but – like the reduction in the equity cost of capital – rational payout policy may also raise the total level of investment as well.

Other parts of the proposal support investment for smaller firms. Small firms will be allowed to expense up to $75,000 in new investment, which will lower the tax-adjusted cost of capital significantly. Eligibility for this immediate deduction would begin to phase out for small businesses with investment in excess of $325,000, which is increased from $200,000. (Both the expensing limit and the phase-out range will be indexed to inflation.) Additionally, the acceleration of the marginal tax rate reductions will help firms that pass-through earnings to their owners. According to the Treasury Department, more than 30 million individual returns listed small business income in 2000. Virtually all of these firms will enjoy marginal tax relief by accelerating the rate reductions which have already been approved by Congress.

Supporting consumption. Consumption accounts for about two-thirds of economic activity, and consumption spending must remain vigorous if the recovery is going to continue. The President's proposals will accelerate the tax relief that has already been enacted, which will put more money in the pockets of consumers this year – when it is needed most. The Treasury estimates that calendar-year tax liabilities will be reduced by almost $100 billion in 2003. Of this amount, about $29 billion will be due to the marginal rate reductions, while another $16 billion will result from the acceleration of the increase in the child credit. On a "cash-out-the-door" basis, the proposal as a whole will infuse around $52 billion into the economy this year, and tax savings for individual families will be substantial. A typical family of four with two earners making a combined $39,000 in income will receive a total of $1,100 in tax relief under the President's plan.

As with any attempt to increase economic activity with a tax cut, an important question is how much of the cut will actually be spent. An acceleration of the marginal tax reductions the 2001 tax cut is likely to result in significant spending increases, because the acceleration is done in the context of long-term tax relief. Delivering tax relief now, rather than in 2004 and 2006, sends a message that the government will meet its commitment to the American people to allow them to keep more of what they earn. As taxpayers realize that their long-term disposable income has risen, their spending plans will rise as well. By contrast, tax policy based on temporary changes to tax rates, or one-time tax rebates, has rarely worked as advertised. A temporary tax increase did not rein in the economy in 1968, a temporary tax cut did not stimulate the economy in 1975, and a temporary tax cut is not the right policy for 2003. Former Federal Reserve governor and CEA member Alan Blinder has written that in the year after enactment, a temporary tax cut has only about half the effect of a permanent tax cut.

Supporting job growth. The best policies for improved job growth are those that insure the economy itself will continue to grow. Still, government policy can affect the rate at which unemployed workers find and train for the jobs that a growing economy provides. The Reemployment Accounts in the President's proposal build on the existing Workforce Development System and empower unemployed workers by giving them more flexibility and personal choice over their assistance. Unemployed workers have a wide range of needs and are best-suited to understand their particular circumstances. Some workers may want extensive retraining. Others may not require retraining, but may need help relocating or may need child care while looking for work. Economists have long recognized that except in rare circumstances, giving individuals choices over how to spend their money improves their welfare. In this case, giving unemployed workers a choice of whether to receive training or to receive alternative services for which they may have a greater need will not only improve the efficiency of government services (by matching unemployed workers with the services they need most), it will improve unemployed workers' welfare at the same time.

The potential to receive a reemployment bonus would provide eligible workers a greater incentive to find new employment. At various times from 1984 to 1989, four states—Illinois, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington—conducted controlled experiments to determine the effectiveness of providing reemployment bonuses to unemployed workers. In these experiments, a random sample of new UI claimants were told they would receive a cash bonus if they became reemployed quickly. The advantage of these experiments is that the effect of offering a reemployment bonus on the duration of unemployment and on earnings upon reemployment can be directly evaluated by comparing the experiences of UI claimants randomly chosen to be offered a reemployment bonus with those of UI claimants not chosen for the bonus (who received the regular state UI benefit).

An evaluation by the Department of Labor of the reemployment bonus experiments conducted in the states of Washington, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania showed that a reemployment bonus of $300 to $1,000 motivated the recipients to become reemployed, reduced the duration of UI by almost a week, and resulted in new jobs comparable in earnings to those obtained by workers who were not eligible for the bonus and remained unemployed longer. Similarly, a study of the experiment conducted in Illinois—and published in a leading American

Therefore it is likely that giving unemployed workers the option of receiving the unspent balance in their Personal Reemployment Accounts will provide them an incentive to find a new job quickly, reducing the time spent unemployed, but will not result in workers taking lower paying jobs than they would get if they searched longer.

Total effect on the economy. CEA estimates that the package will deliver 1.0 percentage point higher growth in 2003 (measured fourth-quarter 2002 to fourth-quarter 2003) and an additional 0.8 percentage point of growth in 2004. This increase in GDP will immediately put more Americans back to work, delivering about 510,000 jobs in 2003 alone. The next year, the plan will create about 891,000 more jobs. The plan works so well because it is focused on what the economy needs now; it encourages an investment rebound while supporting continuing growth in consumption.

How the Proposals Will Help the Economy in the Long Run

In the near term, the President's proposal insures that the recovery proceeds by supporting investment. In the long run, the higher investment delivered by the plan leads to higher productivity – the fundamental source of higher standards of living for American workers. Economists have long known that from the workers' point of view, the optimal rate of capital taxation is no taxation at all. The reason for this surprising result concerns the burden, or "incidence" of the capital tax. An investor with an extra dollar to spend can either use it to fund consumption today or save it to fund a larger amount of consumption later. His or her preferences for consuming now versus consuming later determine how much extra consumption he or she must enjoy in the future in order to resist consuming the dollar's worth of goods and services today. Lowering the capital tax means that investors receive much larger after-tax returns on their investments. This change in returns makes it more likely that households will defer consumption and invest, which will raise the amount of savings available to firms that want to borrow in financial markets. As firms invest more, the amount of capital that workers available to workers goes up, as does their productivity. In the end, higher productivity raises workers' wages and their standard of living. This line of reasoning shows that even though workers may not write a check to the IRS for dividend taxes, all of us as workers still pay part of the dividend tax in the form of lower wages, because the dividend tax reduces the amount of capital in the economy.

Workers enjoy long-run gains from the President's proposals in other ways as well. Marginal rate reductions and permanently higher expensing limits for small business will also raise investment, which in turn raises productivity and wages for the same reasons outlined above. The rationalization of dividend payout policy will improve corporate governance and place corporations on equal footing with non-corporate users of capital. Both of these developments will improve the efficiency of markets. (A 1992 Treasury Department report on the double taxation of corporate equity showed that the reallocation of capital toward more efficient uses would permanently raise economic well-being by the equivalent of $36 billion worth of consumption per year in today's dollars.) Additionally, ending the double tax in the way in which the President has suggested will increase economic efficiency by reducing the incentives for corporations to engage in tax sheltering activities, because only income on which corporate taxes have been paid can be transmitted to shareholders tax free.

The Effect of the Proposals on National Saving and Budget Balance

Some critics of tax relief have argued that now is not the time to cut taxes, but to raise them. The view is that if the government adopts deficit reduction as its number one goal, growth will somehow follow. I disagree. To begin with, surpluses tend to follow growth, not the other way around. Raising taxes may lower the deficit, but this is not equivalent to spending restraint that limits the size of government in the economy and lets the private sector create jobs. Standard models of the economy suggest that an increase in debt of $200 billion dollars would raise long-term interest rates by 3 to 5 basis points. This modest decrease in interest rates must be set against the large costs that a current tax increase would entail – higher distortions on saving, risk-taking and entrepreneurship, as well as the loss of credibility that comes when the government reneges on its promise to tax relief.

In addition, tax relief of the size that the President has suggested in his January package does not significantly worsen the government's fiscal position. One way to judge the effect of tax proposals on the government's fiscal position is to view them in the context of a "fiscal anchor," such as the debt-to-GDP ratio, or the share of Federal outlays that go to service the government's debt. Chart 3 shows that even with the President's proposal, the debt-to-GDP ratio declines in the out-years of the budget window. Moreover, the effect on net interest on GDP is far less than a tenth of a percentage point in any year. In short, according to either of these potential fiscal anchors, the tax relief offered in the President's proposals remains sound policy.

CONCLUSION

Though the long-term fundamentals for the U.S. economy are strong, we still face a number of challenges. The recovery which began in the fourth quarter of 2001 must be maintained, and fiscal policy must remain on sound foundation. By focusing on the economy's most uncertain component – business investment – the President's proposals insure that the recovery will proceed. Although the proposals focus on the economy's near-term needs, they also promote stronger growth in the long term as well. In doing so, they insure that the standard of living enjoyed by American workers will continue to improve in the coming years.

Chairman Craig, ~~Bennett and~~ Ranking Member Breaux, and members of the Committee, I _____, thank you for the opportunity to discuss how the President's Jobs and Growth Initiative will affect America's seniors. The central role of the package is to support near-term economic growth at the same time it improves the long-run productivity of the economy. This approach to fiscal policy is appropriate in the short run, because it focuses on what the economy needs now: faster investment and higher job growth for today's workers. But by raising long-run productivity, the package will help America's seniors as well. To start with, ending the double tax on corporate income will directly benefit seniors who receive dividend checks. About half of all dividend income goes to America's seniors, who often rely on those checks for a steady source of retirement income. But just as important as increasing after-tax dividend income is the effect that the President's package will have the overall productivity of the economy. Higher taxes on corporate capital act to reduce investment, which in turns lowers the amount of capital that workers can use at their jobs. With less capital, workers are less productive, so they are paid less. By ending the double tax on corporate income and permanently raising expensing limits for small firms, the President's package encourages investment. This starts the virtuous circle of higher investment and job growth today, with higher capital stocks, productivity, and wages tomorrow. In the end, the more productive economy will be better able to support the large number of workers who will soon retire.~~testify today on the economic situation facing the Nation. In many ways, the economy's recent behavior has been different than that of past recoveries in many ways. Typically, business investment declines most sharply in recessions and expands most briskly in recoveries. By contrast, the household and government sectors do not fluctuate as much. In 2002, however, the recovery from the economic contraction in the previous year took place amid continued weakness in business investment and strength in the household sector. Weakness in investment, in turn, has reduced job growth below what is normal for this stage of the expansion. In the near term, the central challenge for the economy will be to support rising investment, so that robust job growth can resume.~~

Because so many seniors depend on Social Security and Medicare, any discussion of how the proposal will affect seniors must also discuss how it affects the government's fiscal position. One of the most important lessons of the past several years is the importance of strong economic growth for the Federal government's books. Accordingly, the central role for fiscal policy is to craft a tax policy that reduces tax-based distortions that hinder growth, while at the same time limiting the growth of government outlays to a sustainable path. Given the importance of economic growth to the government's fiscal position, I will start my testimony today by reviewing the economic situation currently facing our Nation. I will then discuss the ways in which the President's proposals contribute to higher growth, specifically by targeting business spending on investment.

At the start, however, I would like to stress an important fact. While the last two years have presented many challenges to the American economy – the long decline in the stock market and the terrorist attacks and economic contraction in 2001 – our long-run economic outlook is as strong as its has been in a generation. As Chart 1 shows, the trend rate of U.S. labor productivity growth has risen from rate of 1.4 percent per year from 1973 to 1995 to 2.5 percent per year from 1995 to 2000. Because higher productivity growth is the foundation of higher incomes and living standards, the productivity acceleration is good news for all of us. What is more, over the last four quarters for which we have data, labor productivity has risen by 5.6 percent – the best four-quarter change in productivity since the early 1970s. The ongoing productivity revival speaks well for the long-term outlook. Additionally, inflation remains low and stable, which helps the economy interpret relative price signals efficiently and which gives policymakers the room to support near-term growth.

~~Over longer horizons, the fundamental strengths of the American economy are clear. Most importantly, the productivity acceleration that began in the late 1990s continued in 2002. (Chart 1.) Over the last four quarters for which we have data, labor productivity has risen by 5.6 percent—the best four-quarter change in productivity since the early 1970s. Because productivity growth is the key to growth in living standards, the ongoing productivity revival speaks well for the long-term outlook. Additionally, inflation remains low and stable, which helps the economy interpret relative price signals efficiently and which gives policymakers the room to support near-term growth.~~

~~GDP data for the fourth quarter of 2002, which was released earlier this morning, highlight the importance of supporting near-term growth with a fiscal policy that improves long-run outcomes as well. After rising at an annual rate of 3.4 percent during the first three quarters, GDP~~ ~~rose/declined~~ ~~at an annual rate of~~ ~~x.x percent~~ ~~in the fourth quarter. As was the case throughout 2002, much of the weakness in economic activity was reflected in weakness in business investment. The role of investment in the current recovery and the importance of productivity growth in the long run provide the context for the President's jobs and growth proposals, which I will discuss extensively today. In the short term, the focused, specific proposals that the President has outlined are the most appropriate way to insure that the investment recovery proceeds as expected. In the long run, the proposals will raise long-run living standards by increasing investment and the capital stock, which will make workers more productive and thereby raise their standard of living. Before I turn to those proposals, I will review the recent performance of the U.S. economy. Doing so will illustrate how the President's proposals support the immediate recovery as well as improve incentives for long-term growth.~~

In many ways, the economy's recent behavior has been different than that of past recoveries. Typically, business investment declines most sharply in recessions and expands most briskly in recoveries. By contrast, the household and government sectors do not fluctuate as much. In 2002, however, the recovery from the economic contraction of the previous year took place amid continued weakness in business investment and strength in the household sector.

REV_00157205

After rising at an annual rate of 3.4 percent during the first three quarters, GDP rose at an annual rate of 0.7 percent in the fourth quarter. Business fixed investment rose at an annual rate of 1.5 percent – the first quarterly increase since mid-2000 – but much larger rates of increase will be needed for the recovery to be fully established.

Household sector. ~~Household sector. The household sector was a robust and consistent source of final demand in 2002.~~ In large part, the strength of the household sector last year stemmed from the aggressive monetary easing by the Federal Reserve in 2001. Over the course of that year, the Federal Reserve cut its target federal funds rate eleven times, lowering the target from 6.5 percent to 1.75 percent. Given the well-known lags in monetary policy, these reductions continued to provide stimulus throughout 2002. Lower interest rates, for example, allowed motor vehicle companies to offer aggressive financing incentives, which have supported auto sales through much of the year.

Additionally, the substantial cuts in the target federal funds rate by the Federal Reserve have translated into lower mortgage interest rates, supporting housing starts and mortgage refinancing. In the first three quarters of 2002, mortgage refinancing alone injected more than $100 billion into home owners' pocketbooks. After they paid down second mortgages and outstanding home equity loans, they had more than $59 billion left over to spend in other ways. Survey evidence indicates that about half of this $59 billion was probably used for consumption and home improvements – two components of aggregate demand – which would have raised nominal GDP by about 0.4 percent in the first three quarters of 2002. All in all, the interest rates cuts were helpful in maintaining the recovery last year. The most recent rate reduction of 50 basis points undertaken on November 6, 2002, will provide further support for the recovery in 2003.

Fiscal policy has also been an important force behind robust consumption in 2002. In addition to enhancing long-term economic efficiency, the tax cut proposed by the President and passed by Congress in 2001 provided valuable support for disposable income, which has been far more robust than is typical at this stage of a recovery. The upshot has been solid growth in both personal consumption expenditures and residential investment that has supported the recovery so far.

Business investment. In contrast to positive impetus from the household sector, business investment has been the economy's key weak spot. As I noted earlier, during the current business cycle, the decline in business investment has been sharper, and the recovery more modest, than an average postwar business cycle. On average, the peak-to-trough decline in nonresidential investment in the typical post-war recession is 6.2 percent. Assuming that the trough in the most recent recession occurred during the fourth quarter of 2001 – a decision that ultimately resides with the National Bureau of Economic Research – the corresponding decline in the most recent recession was 8 percent. Comparing the typical pace of recovery, during the first three quarters of this recovery, business investment fell 2.0 percent further, compared to a typical increase of roughly 2.7 percent. ~~(~~Chart 2 displays the current weakness investment graphically, by comparing it to the typical experience of recoveries since 1960. Simply put, the recovery in investment that one would expect at this stage of the business cycle has yet to materialize~~)~~.

The current weakness in investment results is linked to adverse developments in equity markets during the past three years. Indeed, both stem in large part from the same underlying shock – a scaling back of expected profit growth. Evidence that earnings growth was adjusted downward comes from surveys of Wall Street analysts who track individual firms. According to one such survey, five-year-ahead earnings growth forecasts for the firms in the S&P 500 fell from a peak of more than 18 percent per year in mid-2000 to slightly more than 13 percent per year by September 2002. Another factor in lowering both equity values and business investment is the current risk climate. Higher levels of uncertainty in the economy and/or higher aversion to risk on the part of investors reduce the willingness of investors to hold corporate equities and lowers stock prices and investment. One reflection of the risk outlook is the spread between yields on corporate bonds and U.S. Treasury securities, because corporate bonds are subject to default risk while U.S. Treasuries are not. The widening gap between yields for corporate and Treasury securities after 2000 coincided closely with the decline in the stock market during this period. Spreads continued to widen sharply in 2002, reaching near-record levels, indicating that risk aversion played a key role in markets in the months following September 11, 2001 as well.

Formatted: Normal, Indent: First line: 0.5", Line spacing: 1.5 lines

Inventory investment contributed strongly to the economic slowdown in 2001, but by early in 2002, the pace of inventory decline slowed, providing a significant boost to production. In some sectors of the economy, evidence suggests that inventory restocking is underway. Over the next several quarters, as inventory and sales growth come together, inventory investment's role in real GDP growth should provide upward momentum to the recovery.

REV_00157207

Government purchases. The war on terror continued to exert upward pressure on Federal government purchases in 2002. In late March, for example, the President requested that Congress provide an additional appropriation of $27.1 billion, primarily to fund the effort in the war against terror. More than half of this amount was allocated to the activities of the Defense Department and various intelligence agencies. Most of the rest was needed for homeland security (mainly for the new Transportation Security Administration) and for the emergency response and recovery efforts in New York City. Though most of this spending was required for one-time outlays only, it nevertheless contributed to the large 6.4 percent annual rate of increase in real Federal government purchases in the first three quarters of 2002. State and local government purchases rose by a more moderate 1.7 percent annual rate during the same period.

External sector. While the United States economy remained below potential in 2002, its growth rate still outpaced that of many other industrialized countries. Growth in Canada – America's largest trading partner – was a healthy~~robust~~ 4.0 percent in during the four quarters ending in the third quarter of 2002, but growth in many other countries, such as Mexico, ~~the United Kingdom,~~ France, Japan, and Italy lagged behind. Low demand for U.S. exports combined with the emerging recovery in the United States (and the subsequent increase in the U.S. demand for imports) caused the U.S. trade deficit to reach record levels in 2002.

The widening trade deficit placed additional downward pressure on the U.S. current account, which reached almost five percent of GDP in the middle of 2002. As a matter of accounting, the current account is simply the difference between net domestic investment and net domestic saving. Several factors can raise the current account deficit, including higher investment in the within our borders on the part of foreign investors, or lower savings rates on the part of U.S. citizens. In light of the large number of trade-related and financial forces operating on the current account, it is impossible to label a current account deficit as either "good" or "bad." Indeed, one factor contributing to high U.S. investment relative to savings is the rapid increase in U.S. productivity relative to many other major countries, which makes the United States a good place to invest. Because productivity growth is ultimately responsible for rising living standards, the current account deficit reflects at least in part good news about the American economy. Even so, a current account deficit indicates that the United States is consuming and investing more than it is producing, and the U.S. current account has typically been in deficit for the past two decades. As a result, the net international investment position in the United States has moved from an accumulated surplus of slightly less than 10 percent of GDP in the late 1970s to a deficit of almost 20 percent of GDP in 2001.

Recent increases in the current account deficit have led to some concerns that continued current account deficits (and the subsequent increases in international debt that would result) could not be sustained. Because debt has to be serviced by the repatriation of capital income abroad, the ratio of a country's debt to its income must stabilize at some point. Yet the U.S. is currently far from the point at which servicing our international debt becomes burdensome. In fact, until 2002, more investment income was generated by U.S. investment in foreign countries than was generated by foreign investments inside the United States.

In the end, the key determinant of the sustainability of the U.S. international debt position is continued confidence in the economic policies of the United States. As long as the United States pursues its current market-oriented, pro-growth policies, then the current account deficit will not represent an impediment to continued economic growth.

Labor market.—~~Most major labor market indicators showed little progress over the course of the year.~~ The unemployment rate hovered between 5.5 and 6.0 percent throughout the year after rising 1.8 percentage points in 2001. Nonfarm payroll employment in 2002 was similarly weak, with 181,000 jobs lost in 2002, compared with 1.4 million jobs lost the previous year.

As in past business cycles, declines in manufacturing employment have been especially pronounced. Factory employment fell 592,000 in 2002, following a decline of 1.3 million in 2001 and about 100,000 in 2000. Another feature of previous business cycles that has recurred in the past two years is the increase in the number of workers who report a long unemployment spell. Like the overall unemployment rate, the number of workers unemployed for 26 weeks or more rose in the 2001 and remained high in 2002. Yet the pattern of long-term unemployment observed in 2001 and 2002 was similar to patterns traced out in previous postwar fluctuations. Like the overall unemployment rate, the level of long-term unemployment remains moderate relative to past business cycles.

RISKS TO THE OUTLOOK

The slowing of GDP growth and weakness in labor marketsjob creation in the fourth quarter of 2002 highlight the risks the recovery currently faces. In order of importance, these risks include:

A Delayed Investment Recovery. The key to transforming the current recovery into sustained robust growth is an increase in the pace of business fixed investment. Only with robust business investment will labor markets improve. A recovery in investment is a key factor in creating more jobs because when companies build new factories, they hire directly and boost employment in capital-goods industries.

While private forecasters expect business investment spending to recover in 2003, there are several potential sources of a delay in an investment recovery. One risk is weaker profit growth. Due to a sharp increase in the fourth quarter of 2001, corporate profits have rebounded from recessionary lows., and profit growth was more than 12 percent in the four quarters ending in the third quarter of 2002. (This is the most recent quarter for which we have data on corporate profits.) Yet the recovery in profits has been uneven. In the first three quarters of 2002, profits as a share of income averaged 7.5 percent. While this represents a recovery from the 7.2 percent share in 2001, it is still below shares of 8.7 percent in 1999 and 7.9 percent in 2000. Moreover, on a quarterly basis, corporate profits declined in each of the first three quarters of 2002. Because current profits are an indicator of future profits, firms may interpret recent weakness in profit growth as an indication of reduced investment opportunities. Moreover, the decline in profits may have an even more negative impact on investment at firms that depend on retained earnings (rather than external capital markets) to fund investment projects.

A second potential setback to the investment recovery reflects an increase in the level of uncertainty about the course of the near term events or higher levels of risk aversion on the part of investors. Higher levels of uncertainty in the economy can also make firms delay new projects until the uncertainty is resolved. This delay is translated into a higher expected rate of return in order for new projects to be undertaken, which reduces the level of investment that is undertaken in the near term. Additionally, higher levels of risk aversion on the part of investors can reduce investment by making it harder for firms to raise external funds.

A Decline in Consumer Spending. As mentioned, the The recent business cycle stands apart from the typical postwar recession in that household income growth has been stable while stock price declines have eroded household wealth. In the typical recession, incomes and net worth move together, but in the most recent recession, net worth fell dramatically relative to income. Yet in contrast to the negative effect of lower equity values on business investment, consumption has remained remarkably robust, even ~~has~~ household net worth has suffered. The contrast in the pattern of spending mirrors a reversal of conventional income and wealth dynamics. In the current cycle personal income – especially disposable personal income, supported by the tax cuts of 2001 – has held up quite well, even as household balance sheet positions have weakened.

The deterioration in household wealth over the past three years raises the possibility that consumers will increase their active saving out of disposable income in order to restore at least some of their lost wealth. An increase in precautionary saving of this type could have a substantial effect on yearly consumption. From the first quarter of 2000 to the last quarter of 2002, households lost nearly $7 trillion in equity wealth. A rough rule of thumb suggested by aggregate data on wealth and consumption is that yearly consumption declines by 3 to 5 cents for every dollar of lost equity wealth. Based on the midpoint of this range, the $7 trillion reduction in equity wealth since early 2000 would be expected to eventually lower yearly consumption by about $280 billion per year. For comparison, a reduction of this amount would represent nearly 4 percent of consumption and almost 3 percent of GDP in 2002.

Empirical findings also suggest that response of consumption to stock market wealth is drawn out over time, a fact which has crucial implications for the precise path of consumption over the next few years. Because the appreciation of equity prices before 2000 would be expected to increase consumption, some of the implied $280 billion drop in consumption after 2000 may simply represent a "cancellation" of an implied consumption increase that had not yet taken place. Moreover, positive influences from the other determinants of consumption (such as current income and the continuing appreciation in housing wealth) are likely to offset the stock market's negative effects on personal spending. Even so, the possibility that consumers might pull back somewhat represents a risk to the recovery in the near term.

An Increase in Oil Prices. Oil prices trended upward in 2002, with the spot price of the benchmark West Texas Intermediate rising from about $20 per barrel at the start of the year to about $32 by year's end. Much of the increase was due to the recent turmoil in Venezuela. The general strike in that country began in the first week of December; since then, the WTI price has risen from around $27 dollars per barrel to about $33~~35~~ dollars per barrel today.~~.~~ Concerns over the failure of the Iraqi regime to disarm in a credible way may have also been partly responsible for the increase in oil prices in 2002.

The effect of further oil price increases on the economy is difficult to determine. To be sure, there are "rules of thumb" that are often used to quantify the effect of export disruption on oil prices as well as the subsequent effect of higher oil prices on GDP. For disturbances of a few million barrels per day, a reduction of oil supplies of one million barrels per day typically raises prices by about 3 to 5 dollars per barrel. Additionally, a sustained increase in oil prices of $10 per barrel would be expected to lower GDP growth by about 0.25 to 0.50 percentage points after six months to one year. While these rules of thumb are useful guideposts, the actual effect to the economy could vary greatly from episode to episode. For example, a disruption of oil production that was that was expected to last indefinitely would affect prices differently from one that was likely to be unwound quickly. Moreover, if higher oil prices accompany a serious deterioration in consumer and business confidence, their ultimate effect on GDP could be much larger than a simple rule of thumb would suggest.

THE PRESIDENT'S JOBS AND GROWTH INITIATIVE

In light of the risks to the near-term outlook, the President has advanced a proposal to enhance long-term growth while providing near-term support against downside risks to the Nation's economic outlook. It is important to note that the recovery is not in immediate jeopardy. Private forecasters expect the recovery to gather momentum over the coming year, with both higher investment and improved job growth. Yet the presence of current risks suggests that insurance against unforeseen deterioration in economic activity is especially valuable. The best proposals are those that will raise the rate of long-term growth even if the recovery takes shape as private forecasters anticipate.

The President's proposal targets the areas that are most fundamental to the continued health of the current recovery – investment, consumption, and job growth. Specifically:

1. Accelerate to January 1, 2003 features of the 2001 tax cut currently scheduled to be phased-in: the reductions in marginal income tax rates, additional marriage penalty relief, a larger child credit, and a wider 10 percent income tax bracket.
2. Eliminate the double taxation of corporate income, whether this income is paid out to individuals as dividends or retained by the firm. Dividend income will no longer be taxable on the individual level, while a step-up in basis will be allowed in order to reflect the effect of retained earnings on share prices.

3. Increase to $75,000 the size of small business investment incentives – the amount that they may deduct from their taxable income in the year the investment takes place.
4. Provide $3.6 billion of funds to the states to fund Personal Reemployment Accounts. These accounts provide up to $3,000 to assist unemployed workers who are likely to need help in finding or training for a new job. If a new job is found quickly, the unspent balance in the account can be kept as a "reemployment bonus."

How the Proposals Will Help the Economy in the Near Term

Supporting investment. To be effective in aiding the current recovery, any proposal must support investment. The President's proposals do this in three ways: ending the double taxation of corporate income, raising the expensing limits for small businesses, and lowering individual marginal tax rates (which are the relevant tax rates for small firms that pass through their income to their owners).

The most immediate effect of ending the double taxation of corporate income will be to lower the cost of capital faced by firms in equity markets. Under the double taxation inherent in the current law, investment projects funded with new equity capital face effective federal taxation of up to 60 percent. The President's proposals address this problem by removing the layer of tax at the individual level. Corporate income will be taxed once – and only once – which will make corporate equities more attractive to investors and lower the implicit cost that firms pay for equity-financed investment. As an example, the cost of capital for equity-financed equipment investment in the corporate sector would fall by more than~~about~~ 10 percent. For investment in structures – the weakest part of the investment outlook today – the decline in the cost of corporate equity capital would be more than one-third. For equipment investment, this decline in the cost of capital is equivalent to an investment tax credit of from four to seven~~29~~ percent.

In addition to the direct stimulative effects of lower costs of equity capital, ending the double taxation of corporate income will rationalize dividend payout policy among American companies. This will also aid investment, even in the short run. Currently, the tax code encourages firms to retain earnings and remit income to shareholders through share repurchases.

This gives firms an incentive to inflate their reported earnings, so that their stock prices will rise. A main goal of the President's policy is to reduce this incentive by making tax policy neutral with respect to retaining earnings or paying dividends. Firms wanting to transmit their profitability to outside investors need only show them the money, in the form of dividend checks. With less uncertainty about the true profitability of firms, investment funds will flow more easily to firms with good investment prospects. This will not only make financial markets more efficient, but – like the reduction in the equity cost of capital – rational payout policy may also raise the total level of investment as well.

~~The proposal to eliminate the double taxation of corporate income supports investment by firms that are large enough to have chosen the corporate form of organization.~~ Other parts of the proposal support investment for smaller firms. Small firms will be allowed to expense up to $75,000 in new investment, which will lower the tax-adjusted cost of capital significantly. Eligibility~~The amount of investment qualifying~~ for this immediate deduction would begin to phase out for small businesses with investment in excess of $325,000, which is increased from $200,000. (Both the expensing limit and the phase-out range ~~that determines the size of qualifying firms~~ will be indexed to inflation.) Additionally, the acceleration of the marginal tax rate reductions will help firms that pass-through earnings to their owners. According to the Treasury Department, more than 30 million individual returns listed small business income in 2000. Virtually all of these firms will enjoy marginal tax relief by accelerating the rate reductions which have already been approved by Congress.

Supporting consumption. Consumption accounts for about two-thirds of economic activity, and consumption spending must remain vigorous if the recovery is going to continue. The President's proposals will accelerate the tax relief that has already been enacted, which will put more money in the pockets of consumers this year – when it is needed most. The Treasury estimates that calendar-year tax liabilities will be reduced by almost $100 billion in 2003. Of this amount, about $29 billion will be due to the marginal rate reductions, while another $16 billion will result from the acceleration of the increase in the child credit. On a "cash-out-the-door" basis, the proposal as a whole will infuse around $52~~58~~ billion into the economy this year, and tax savings for individual families will be substantial. A typical family of four with two earners making a combined $39,000 in income will receive a total of $1,100 in tax relief under the President's plan.

As with any attempt to increase economic activity with a tax cut, an important question is how much of the cut will actually be spent. An acceleration of the marginal tax reductions the 2001 tax cut is likely to result in significant spending increases, because the acceleration is done in the context of long-term tax relief. Delivering tax relief now, rather than in 2004 and 2006, sends a message that the government will meet its commitment to the American people to allow them to keep more of what they earn. As taxpayers realize that their long-term disposable income has risen, their spending plans will rise as well. By contrast, tax policy based on temporary changes to tax rates, or one-time tax rebates, has rarely worked as advertised. A temporary tax increase did not rein~~reign~~ in the economy in 1968, a temporary tax cut did not stimulate the economy in 1975, and a temporary tax cut is not the right policy for 2003. Former Federal Reserve governor and CEA member Alan Blinder has written that in the year after enactment, a temporary tax cut has only about half the effect of a permanent tax cut.

Supporting job growth. The best policies for improved job growth are those that insure the economy itself will continue to grow. Still, government policy can affect the rate at which unemployed workers find and train for the jobs that a growing economy provides. The Reemployment Accounts in the President's proposal build on the existing Workforce Development System and empower unemployed workers by giving them more flexibility and personal choice over their assistance. Unemployed workers have a wide range of needs and are best-suited to understand their particular circumstances. Some workers may want extensive retraining. Others may not require retraining, but may need help relocating or may need child care while looking for~~in order to return to~~ work. Economists have long recognized that except in rare circumstances, giving individuals choices over how to spend their money improves their welfare. In this case, giving unemployed workers a choice of whether to receive training or to receive alternative services for which they may have a greater need will not only improve the efficiency of government services (by matching unemployed workers with the services they need most), it will improve unemployed workers' welfare at the same time.

The potential to receive a reemployment bonus would provide eligible workers ~~reemployment~~re-ea greater incentive to find new employment. At various times from 1984 to 1989, four states—Illinois, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington—conducted controlled experiments to determine the effectiveness of providing reemployment bonuses to unemployed workers. In these experiments, a random sample of new UI claimants were told they would receive a cash bonus if they became reemployed quickly. The advantage of these experiments is that the effect of offering a reemployment bonus on the duration of unemployment and on earnings upon reemployment can be directly evaluated by comparing the experiences of UI claimants randomly chosen to be offered a reemployment bonus with those of UI claimants not chosen for the bonus (who received the regular state UI benefit).

An evaluation by the Department of Labor of the reemployment bonus experiments conducted in the states of Washington, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania showed that a ~~reemployment~~re-ereemployment bonus of ~~as little as~~ $300 to $1,000 motivated the recipients to become reemployed, reduced the duration of UI by almost a week, and resulted in new jobs comparable in earnings to those obtained by workers who were not eligible for the bonus and remained unemployed longer. ~~previous employment.~~ Similarly, a study of the ~~re-e~~experiment conducted in Illinois—and published in ~~the~~ a leading American economics journal—found that a ~~re-e~~reemployment bonus of $500 reduced the duration ~~average number of weeks~~ of unemployment by more than a week and did not lead to lower earnings at the worker's next job. Therefore it is likely that giving unemployed workers the option of receiving the unspent balance in their Personal Reemployment Accounts will provide them an incentive to find a new job quickly, reducing the time spent unemployed, but will not result in workers taking lower paying jobs than they would get if they searched longer.

Total effect on the economy. CEA estimates that the package will deliver 1.0 percentage point higher growth in 2003 (measured fourth-quarter 2002 to fourth-quarter 2003) and an additional 0.8 percentage point of growth in 2004. This increase in GDP will immediately put more Americans back to work, delivering about 510,000 jobs in 2003 alone. The next year, the plan will create about 891,000 more jobs. The plan works so well because it is focused on what the economy needs now; it encourages an investment rebound while supporting continuing growth in consumption.

How the Proposals Will Help the Economy in the Long Run

In the near term, the President's proposal insures that the recovery proceeds by supporting investment. In the long run, the higher investment delivered by the plan leads to higher productivity – the fundamental source of higher standards of living for American workers. Economists have long known that from the workers' ~~workers~~ point of view, the optimal rate of capital taxation is no taxation at all. The reason for this surprising result concerns the burden, or "incidence" of the capital tax. An investor with an extra dollar to spend can either use it to fund consumption today or save it to fund a larger amount of consumption later. His or her preferences for consuming now versus consuming later determine how much extra consumption he or she must enjoy in the future in order to resist consuming the dollar's worth of goods and services today. Lowering the capital tax means that investors receive much larger after-tax returns on their investments. This change in returns makes it more likely that households will defer consumption and invest, which will raise the amount of savings available to firms that want to borrow in financial markets. As firms invest more, the amount of capital that workers available to workers goes up, as does their productivity. In the end, higher productivity raises workers' wages and their standard of living. This line of reasoning shows that even though workers ~~workers'~~ may not write a check to the IRS for dividend taxes, all of us as workers still pay part of the dividend tax in the form of lower wages, because the dividend tax reduces the amount of capital in the economy.

Workers enjoy long-run gains from the President's proposals in other ways as well. Marginal rate reductions and permanently higher expensing limits for small business will also raise investment, which in turn raises productivity and wages for the same reasons outlined above. The rationalization of dividend payout policy will improve corporate governance and place corporations on equal footing with non-corporate users of capital. Both of these developments will improve the efficiency of markets. (A 1992 Treasury Department report on the double taxation of corporate equity showed that the reallocation of capital toward more efficient uses would permanently raise economic well-being by the equivalent of $36 billion worth of consumption per year in today's dollars.) ~~forever.)~~ Additionally, ending the double tax in the way in which the President has suggested will increase economic efficiency by reducing~~reduce~~ the incentives for corporations~~firms~~ to engage in tax sheltering activities~~shelter income~~, because only income on which corporate taxes have been paid can be transmitted to shareholders tax free.

The Effect of the Proposals on National Saving and Budget Balance

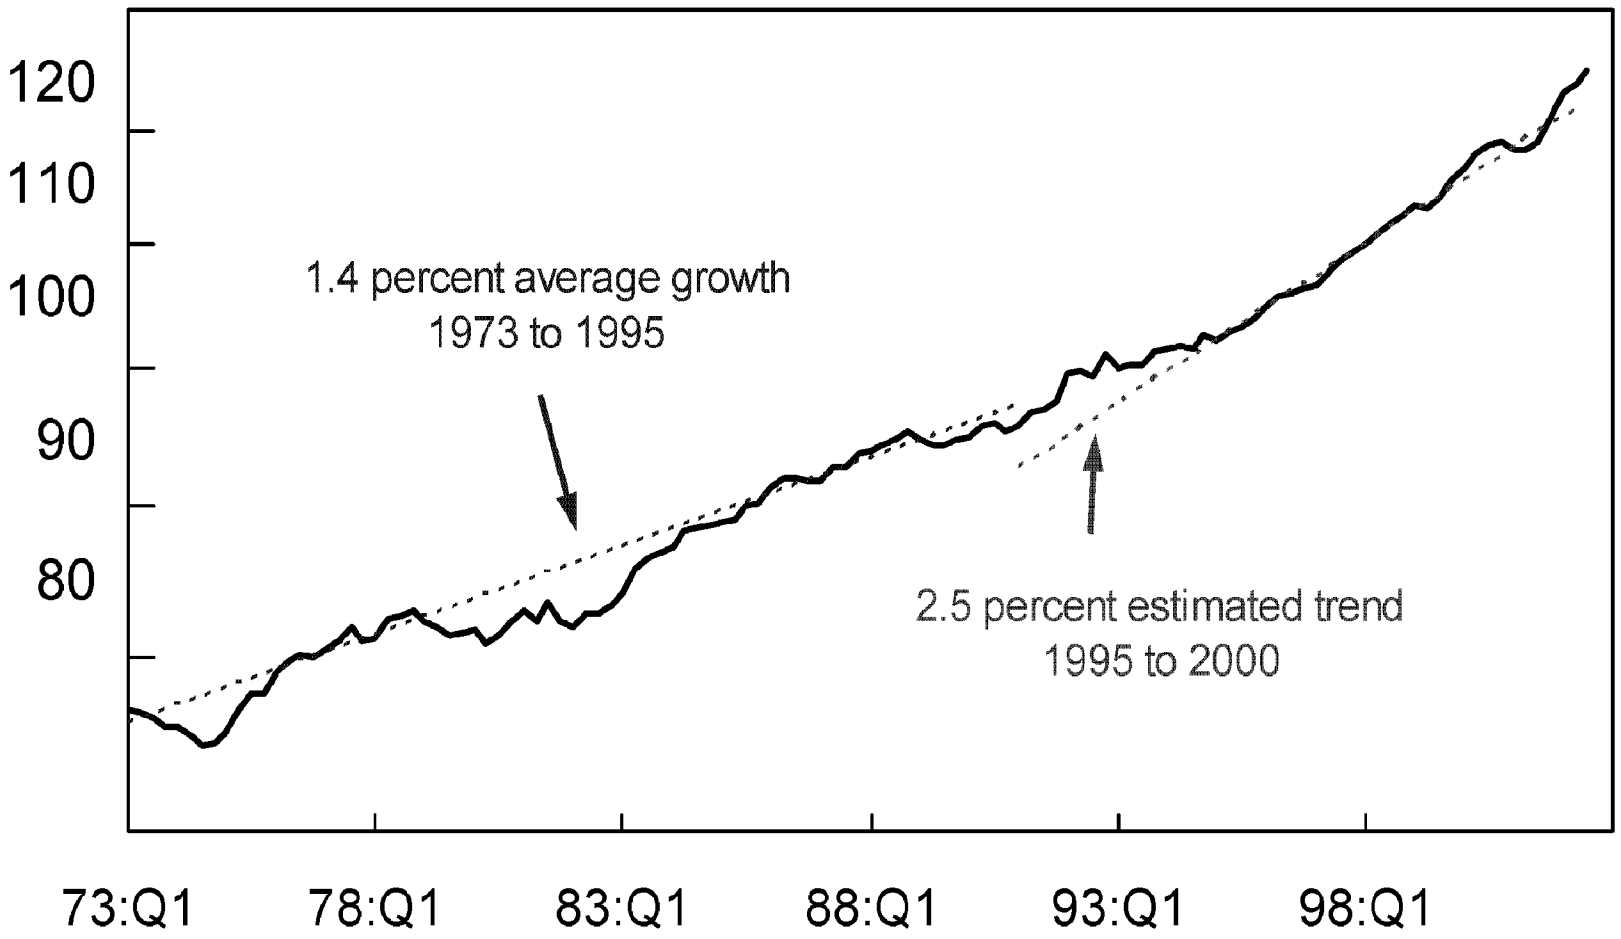
Some critics ~~Effect on national saving and budget balance. Critics~~ of tax relief have argued that now is not the time to cut taxes, but to raise them. The view is that if the government adopts deficit reduction as its number one goal, growth will somehow follow. I disagree. To begin with, surpluses tend to follow growth, not the other way around. Raising taxes may lower the deficit, but this is not equivalent to spending restraint that limits the size of government in the economy and lets the private sector create jobs. Standard models of the economy suggest that an increase in debt of $200 billion dollars would raise long-term interest rates by 3 to 5 basis points. This modest decrease in interest rates must be set against the large costs that a current tax increase would entail – higher distortions on saving, risk-taking and entrepreneurship, as well as the loss of credibility that comes when the government reneges on its promise to tax relief.

In addition, ~~Moreover,~~ tax relief of the size that the President has suggested in his January package does not significantly worsen the government's fiscal position. One way to judge the effect of tax proposals on the government's fiscal position is to view them in the context of a "fiscal anchor," such as the debt-to-GDP ratio, or the share of Federal outlays that go to service the government's debt. Chart 3 shows that even with the President's proposal, the debt-to-GDP ratio declines in the out-years of the budget window. Moreover, the effect on net interest on GDP is far less than a tenth of a percentage point in any year. In short, according to~~By~~ either of these potential fiscal anchors~~measures~~, the tax relief offered in the President's proposals remains sound policy. ~~For example, the proposals would raise the debt-to-GDP ratio by less than one percentage point in the year of adoption, and the debt-to-GDP ratio would decline in the out-years of the budget window.~~

Formatted: Indent: First line: 0.5"

CONCLUSION



Though the long-term fundamentals for the U.S. economy are strong, we still face a number of challenges. The recovery which began in the fourth quarter of 2001 must be maintained, and fiscal policy must remain on sound foundation. By focusing on the economy's most uncertain component – business investment – the President's proposals insure that the recovery will proceed. Although~~(Chart 3.) Moreover, by raising investment in the long run,~~ the proposals focus on the economy's near-term needs, they also promote stronger growth in the long term as well. In doing so, they insure that the standard of living enjoyed by American workers will continue to improve~~grow~~ in the coming years.

Estrada Headed to Full Senate Vote
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: Miguel Estrada has finally been voted out of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

It took 631 days, but Miguel Estrada was finally favorably voted out of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday.

Estrada, the controversial judicial nominee who came under harsh criticism from liberal senators for his conservative views, was approved along party lines -- 10 Republicans for him, nine Democrats against.

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said Estrada never shared his views on controversial issues.

"We know Mr. Estrada has thoughts on these subjects. He just refused to share them. I don't think that's enough, Mr. Chairman," Schumer said.

But Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, wouldn't have any of that.

"Some of these groups were unable to find anything bad about him, which led them simply to resort to their fall-back line that we do not know enough about Mr. Estrada to confirm him. Well, that's frankly silly," Hatch said. "The fact is, we know as much about him as we've ever known about any nominee."

The committee is known for its divisive partisanship. Tom Jipping, senior fellow of legal studies for Concerned Women for America, said the voting outcome says a lot about the liberals.

"I think it was tragic that not a single Democrat could put aside ideology and partisan politics to support someone identical in experience and qualifications to many nominees that they have voted for in the past," Jipping said.

The Estrada saga now moves to the Senate floor, where he will likely face continued opposition from Democrats. Some liberals have threatened to filibuster the nomination. The only way Republicans can halt that is to have 60 senators vote to stop the delay tactic.

It's unclear if Republicans have the votes to stop a filibuster. There are 51 Republicans, so they would need nine Democrats to join them to make 60. But it's not a good sign that every Democrat voted against Estrada in committee.

TAKE ACTION:
Democrats strongly oppose this nomination, and many say it's based on the amount of calls and e-mails they have received against the nomination of Miguel Estrada. A full Senate vote on Estrada could happen as early as Tuesday. Please contact your two senators and urge them to vote in favor of the nomination of Miguel Estrada, and also urge them to vote against any filibuster attempts. Free Web site Porn for U.S. Troops?
By Bob Kellogg, correspondent

SUMMARY: A pornographer has created a Web site where U.S. soldiers can order free porn movies.

A potential war with Iraq and the ongoing battle against terrorism concerns many. However, one pornographer sees the troop deployment as a golden opportunity.

Aaron Gordon, of DirectLink Media Group, has created a Web site where any soldier can get free porn movies if they pay for the shipping and handling.

"We wanted to do our part," Gordon said in a news release.

Jan LaRue, of Concerned Woman of America, said Gordon's plan is unscrupulous.

"This is an abominable marketing trick by pornographers who care nothing about our troops," LaRue said.

Retired Lt. Col. Bob Maginnis, who serves as a Fox News military analyst, said Gordon doesn't understand the military life in the field.

"I don't know a commander that would allow this to be shown in a troop unit situation," Maginnis said.

He added watching porn videos would demean female soldiers serving with men. In addition, he said soldiers preparing for war are far too busy for such distractions.

LaRue noted there's another factor making the viewing of such videos unlikely to those stationed overseas.

"These Muslim countries generally don't allow anything like this," she said.

LaRue pointed out that U.S. soldiers also had trouble during the Gulf War bringing in Bibles to Kuwait.

Benjamin Bull, an attorney with the Alliance Defense Fund, a pro-family legal foundation based in Scottsdale, Ariz., thinks DirectLink Media needs to be investigated.

"The interstate distribution of obscene material is a criminal violation, and U.S. attorneys and even the FBI should investigate this guy if he's violating the law," Bull said.

Aaron Gordon, the president of DirectLink, did not return a call requesting an interview.

Conservatives Meet at D.C. Conference
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: The Conservative Political Action Conference brings together conservative grassroots organizations.

This year, more than 70 of the nation's conservative grassroots organizations are gathering in Washington to take part in the Conservative Political Action Conference. It's a chance for the conservative movement to build momentum and strategize for the future.

The 30-year-old conference is billed as the nation's oldest and largest national gathering of grassroots conservative organizations. Many political leaders speak to the gathering as a way of gauging their support.

The atmosphere at this year's conference was upbeat, to say the least. Most agree the conservative movement is gaining momentum, citing the results of the mid-term elections.

Ron Greer is an up-and-coming politician from Wisconsin. Though he lost in his November bid to become a U.S. congressman from Madison, he said the conservative road map is clearly defined.

"They're looking more and more towards the conservative values and views", Greer said. "There's a need to restore an appreciation of value in the family. There's a need to restore an understanding and acceptance of some greater principles -- moral principles -- and without those things the country is doomed."

One of the more noticeable aspects at the conference is the huge number of young people attending this year.

Melissa Moskal is with the Young America's foundation, a group that preaches conservatism to high school and college-age students.

"College campuses have gotten so bad that students are looking for an alternative," Moskal said.

She added the future of the movement is rooted in its past.

"Everyone here is for limited government, strong national defense, traditional values, free market economics and those sorts of things," Moskal said.

There are some differences in how conservatives view the future. Ian Walters, from the American Conservative Union, said the "big brother" concerns are an example.

"There are some folks, especially in the post 9/11 world, who want to figure out what we're going to do with civil liberties in a time of war," said Walters.

But many believe those concerns won't derail the conservative train, which is clearly building up steam.

Evangelicals Help Fight AIDS in Africa
By Steve Jordahl, correspondent

SUMMARY: Evangelicals helping to fight AIDS in Africa get some credit from the Bush administration.

The Bush Administration is crediting -- in part -- pressure from Evangelical Christians for his newly announced African AIDS initiative.

Dr. Clive Calver, of World Relief, is one of those trying to answer the cry for help from half a world away.

"What is the biggest danger in the world today? It's that we might be so absorbed with our problems that we might miss the way that AIDS is destroying half of the world today," Calver said.

World Relief is among the Evangelical Christian organizations that have been pushing the Bush administration to act. Calver said the president is listening. He added that his call now is to the American Church.

"I am thrilled with the president's initiative but I'm utterly, totally committed that the Church might live in the vanguard of that initiative," he said.

The fact that the Church is leading the way in the fight against AIDS really shouldn't be a surprise. Rodney Stark, a sociology professor at the University of Washington, said the Church has historically championed social movements.

"The churches have always been -- at least the Christian churches in the West -- very active in what people might call social movements and good causes. It's nothing unusual," Stark said.

While the AIDS epidemic is still claiming thousands a day, Stark noted many of the victims are coming to Christ before they die.

"Christianity is growing at a rate that's almost inconceivable in Africa at the moment," he said.

It provides the hope that is the strongest medicine for a deadly disease.

S.C. Governor Will Honor Reservist Duty if Called

South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford has announced that if his Air Force Reserve unit is called up, he will answer the call.

The governor has decided that his duty to country supercedes his duty to the state. Oran Smith, of South Carolina's Palmetto Family Council, said Sanford announced at a news conference that he was going for his sons.

"I think (this) sends the message not only that he is a person of his word -- which is a good fatherly message to send -- but also that he's very patriotic and believes in defending his country, and that's a wonderful legacy that he can leave," Smith said.

Sanford would likely serve as a military hospital administrator in his wartime duties.

More Reserve units are being called up across the country than at any time since the Vietnam War -- a fact that leads many to think it's likely the governor will get the call.

Head Start Gets Congressional Push

There's a congressional push to increase support for and expand the Head Start program. But is it as good as it sounds?

A bipartisan group of U.S. representatives hailed the Head Start program at the National Head Start Association meeting this week. Education analyst Dick Carpenter said from the beginning, under President Lyndon Johnson's administration, Head Start sounded good. But he said even Head Start cannot replace parental influence in getting kids started on the right track educationally and emotionally.

"If Head Start in any way displaces the role of the parent or family, then I have serious questions about whether we're meeting that laudable goal in the most effective way possible," Carpenter said.

Currently, there are more than 923,000 children in Head Start programs.

Conn. Court Dismisses Civil Union Case

The Connecticut Supreme Court has dismissed a case -- which sought to recognize a Vermont civil union as marriage in Connecticut -- because of the death of the plaintiff.

Glen Rosengarten and Peter Downes entered into a Vermont civil union in 2000. After entering into the union, they returned to Connecticut where their relationship deteriorated. Rosengarten moved to dissolve the union in Connecticut under Connecticut law. He asked the court to recognize his civil union as a binding marriage so that he could terminate it under Connecticut law.

After Rosengarten's death, the court placed a hold on the case and then ultimately dismissed it.

ACLU Loses Ten Commandments Case

A federal district court judge ruled Wednesday that a display of the Ten Commandments in Mercer County, Ky., is constitutional when it is displayed with other historical documents.

The decision ended a challenge by the American Civil Liberties Union to have the display removed from the county courthouse. Judge Karl Forrester wrote in his opinion that "the display clearly has a legitimate secular purpose of, including but not limited to, acknowledging the historical influence of the Commandments on the development of this country's laws and this record is devoid of any evidence indicating a religious purpose by the government."

The Honorable Ted Stevens Committee on Appropriations
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Stevens:

The purpose of this letter is to provide the Administration's views on the current House and Senate versions of the remaining eleven appropriations bills. The Administration applauds the commitment of the Appropriations Committee Chairmen to the top line agreement with the President.

The Administration will support versions of the remaining eleven bills that are consistent with the agreed upon non-defense discretionary spending limit of $385.9 billion, the amount remaining within the top line after enactment of the Defense and Military Construction Appropriations Acts. It is important that this limit be reached transparently. Should the final version of the bill exceed this level, including expanded use of advance appropriations or other "gimmicks," the President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill.

There are several other issues that may impact the agreed upon top line funding level discussed above, including the $3.9 billion in essential funding for defense included in the Senate bill, which the Administration supports. The Administration would support additional drought assistance for those truly in need as long as it is offset within existing agriculture funding. At the time of enactment, the 2002 Farm Bill was estimated to provide $180 billion, an increase of $82 billion above the baseline -- an historically high level of agriculture spending that can accommodate funding for emergencies, economic assistance, rural development, and other purposes. Further, the Administration believes that physician fees in Medicare need to be adjusted and that those costs can and should be fully offset through statutory changes or legislative action. We look forward to working with the Congress to address this critical matter.

The Federal government has been operating under a series of Continuing Resolutions for nearly one-half of FY 2003. Completion of the nation's budget for the current year is long overdue, and we look forward to working with the Congress to ensure an acceptable bill is presented to the President. Spending restraint is critical to encouraging continued economic growth. We appreciate your consideration of these views.

Homeland Security

On November 25, 2002, the President signed the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (HSA). The legislation transfers 22 Federal agencies and programs to the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS). The Act lays out an orderly process for transferring entities to DHS. Provisions that would preclude, complicate, or delay transfers of functions or resources to DHS are unacceptable.

Both the House and Senate bills, as currently written, include numerous unacceptable restrictions that undermine implementation of the HSA. Most broadly, a number of the House bills prohibit the transfer of funds unless the transfer is provided for in an Appropriations Act. This is contrary to existing law, which provides the authority to execute these transfers. Many bills contain specific unacceptable prohibitions on individual programs. For example, both the House and Senate bills seek to prohibit the transfer of Customs aircraft from the Treasury Department, and the House bill seeks to prevent the transfer of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center. In addition, while funds are provided in the Senate version of bill for the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) Chimera IT and Entry-Exit systems, these funds are not provided within INS, complicating consolidation within DHS. The conferees must correct these restrictive provisions.

The House version of the bill cuts the request for the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) by $200 million, and the Senate bill earmarks nearly $400 million, for unrequested and lower-priority activities.

The Senate version of the bill underfunds the homeland security programs of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), including the Entry-Exit System. The Senate version of the bill also includes unacceptable restrictions on the National Security Entry-Exit Registration System (NSEERS), an Administration initiative to enhance homeland security by requiring certain foreign nationals to register with the INS.

The Senate bill earmarks funding provided for our nation's First Responders, which will prevent the program from funding the highest priority programs. The Administration believes that these funds would be better targeted for homeland security and Federal law enforcement activities. The Senate version of the bill underfunds the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Disaster Relief Fund, by nearly $1 billion. The Administration urges the conferees to adopt the House level for Disaster Relief to ensure adequate resources are available to address emergency situations.

Finally, the Senate bill provides $3.3 billion for bioterrorism defense and research, which is $370 million less than the request. It is critical that the House and Senate provide the full amount requested for NIH biodefense research, including the request to accelerate investments in biodefense research infrastructure. The Administration is concerned as it appears that the Senate bill does not fund the $250 million requested for a next-generation anthrax vaccine. The Administration urges the Senate to restore funding for this important program that will help defend against the anthrax threat as well as inspire new vaccine research breakthroughs.

Other High-Priority Issues

A few significant problems remain to be addressed before a final version of an Omnibus bill would be acceptable to the President. The current House and Senate versions of the eleven remaining bills underfund major areas of responsibility and divert these funds to lesser needs. The Administration's major concerns are outlined below:

Education Funding. The Administration appreciates the House's support for funding for the Education Department. The Senate's use of gimmicks that will compromise next year's budget by increasing advance appropriations for several programs in Education, including IDEA and Title I, is unacceptable. This is a misleading practice to avoid spending limitations that Congress and the Administration agreed to curtail last year.

The Administration strongly urges the Congress to adopt the House mark for the Pell Grant program, which maintains the maximum award at the current $4,000 level and provides $11.2 billion to help address the program's current funding shortfall. The Senate bill raises the Pell Grant maximum award to students while failing to provide sufficient funding, significantly increasing the shortfall above the House level.

Transportation Department. The Senate bill proposes $31.8 billion for highways, an unsustainable level of spending that breaks dramatically with the tradition of tying highway spending to trust fund revenue. This would put the program on a path to an inevitable gas tax increase, which the Administration strongly opposes. The Administration strongly supports the highway funding level authorized by the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act and included in the House version. The Senate bill also provides $1.2 billion for Amtrak without including any of the reforms necessary to improve its operations and promote financial stability. We urge the conferees to adopt the House position and institute operational and structural reforms as a condition for increased funding for Amtrak. Finally, funding earmarks in the bill would significantly constrain flexibility in the Office of the Secretary of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Election Reform. The Administration strongly supports the inclusion of funds to support reform and improvement of election administration systems in the Senate bill.

Wildland Firefighting. The Administration supports the inclusion of the $825 million for wildland firefighting in the Senate bill within the top line funding agreement.

Unemployment Insurance. The Senate bill raises the contingency trigger in the Unemployment Insurance program significantly. As a result, many unemployed workers may not receive timely benefit payments and States will incur workload for which there will be no federal financing. Conferees are urged to adopt the Administration's contingency trigger level.

LIHEAP. We appreciate the House's support for the overall Administration request for this important program. Conferees are encouraged to adopt the House position.

Farm Bill Conservation Programs. The Administration strongly objects to Senate language prohibiting the use of funding in USDA's Conservation Operations account to implement the recently-enacted Farm bill conservation programs. This is contrary to past practice and, without enacting the Administration's proposed budget amendment, would result in only about 10 percent of this year's authorized Farm bill conservation activities being implemented. The Administration's proposal would provide appropriate funding to ensure the farm conservation programs are properly implemented.

Energy Department. The Administration appreciates that the Senate version of the bill includes the Price-Anderson Act indemnification provisions. However, the Administration strongly objects to the Senate's reduction of $255 million for Yucca Mountain, which would severely delay and diminish the quality of DOE's submission to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to proceed with construction of this vital facility. The Administration urges the conferees to support the request, which would enable DOE to submit its repository license application to the NRC by December 2004, accelerate essential national transportation-related activities, and ensure the site is a safe working environment.

Housing Programs. The Senate bill contains an unacceptable provision that, as currently drafted, could result in considerable additional costs in the Housing Certificate program. The House's reform approach is acceptable provided that amounts in the final bill are sufficient to support all units under lease. We look forward to working with the conferees to ensure proposed changes to the program do not result in unintended costs.

Treasury/IRS. The Administration urges the conferees to provide the $70 million requested for the Internal Revenue Service to address new requirements under P.L. 107-210, the Trade Act of 2002, which established a new refundable Health Insurance Tax Credit (HITC) program.

Patent Office (PTO). The Senate bill would reduce requested funding for PTO by almost $300 million, compromising PTO's ability to carry out its new strategic plan.

Justice Department. The Senate bill does not provide adequate funding for the Department of Justice's core legal staff, including the U.S. Attorneys and Justice's Legal Divisions, which would severely hamper the Department's efforts in the war on terrorism. The Administration is concerned with Senate bill language that earmarks funding, thus constraining the FBI and the Bureau of Prisons from responding to emerging events such as the war on terrorism or prison emergencies.

The Senate bill reduces the request for the FBI by $75 million by requiring the use of prior year unobligated balances to fund 2003 initiatives. The Administration believes that these prior year funds are still required by the FBI and urges that they not be diverted.

The House and Senate bills provide significantly more funds for crime prevention grant programs than requested. The Administration believes that these funds would be better targeted for homeland security programs, especially funds for first responders.

Mother-to-Child HIV/AIDS Transmission Initiative. The Administration urges the conferees to fully fund the $100 million requested for each USAID and HHS for this important initiative. The Senate bill provides the request for USAID, without cutting into base HIV/AIDS programs, as the House bill does. It appears both the House and Senate have underfunded the HHS portion of this initiative by $60 million.

State Department/Foreign Affairs. The Administration strongly encourages the conferees to fund State Department Diplomatic and Consular Programs at a level that supports ongoing operations and the Diplomatic Readiness Initiative. The Administration strongly supports the language included in the Senate bill allowing funds to pay for the costs of debt reduction for Pakistan and Jordan.

Corps of Engineers. The House and the Senate have provided funds well in excess of the request that could be re-directed to higher priority items; the House and Senate bills provide nearly $600 million and $400 million, respectively, above the request for the Corps of Engineers. The bills divert funds from the large backlog of existing projects and fund activities outside the Corps main mission areas. They also fund projects that have not been previously approved or authorized. The Administration urges the conferees to redirect funds to higher-priority national projects.

Objectionable Language Provisions

The current version of the Senate bill omits several current law provisions relating to abortion. If the final version of the bill did not include all current law provisions prohibiting the use of federal funds for abortions, the President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill. The Administration also urges the conferees to support the Administration position on UNFPA, including full compliance with Kemp-Kasten.

The House bill contains provisions that would weaken current sanctions against the Cuban government. The Administration believes it is vitally important to maintain these sanctions. Lifting the sanctions now would provide a helping hand to a desperate and repressive regime, whereas the President's policy calls for reaching out to help the Cuban people. As noted in the July 11, 2002 letter from Secretaries Powell and O'Neill, the President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto a bill that contained such changes.

The Administration also objects to a number of provisions, which, inconsistent with the Supreme Court ruling in INS vs. Chadha, purport to require Committee approval before Executive Branch execution.

The Administration supports final passage of an Omnibus bill that meets our national priorities and is within the agreed upon top line funding level. We are committed to working with the Congress as the process moves forward to enact the remaining eleven appropriations bills as expeditiously as possible. We look forward to working with the conferees to address our mutual concerns as a final version of the bill is developed.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, February 4, 2003

KEY POINTS

- We are in the final phase of the 12 year effort to disarm Saddam Hussein.

- The gravest danger we face is outlaw regimes that sponsor terror and possess or seek weapons of mass destruction.

- As part of the cease-fire agreement at the end of the Gulf War in 1991, Saddam was required to declare and destroy all his weapons of mass destruction.

- For over a decade, Saddam has consistently flouted these obligations. Eight weeks have now passed since Saddam was given his final chance. Six hundred weeks have passed since he was given his first chance.

- The UN and U.S. intelligence sources have known for some time that Saddam Hussein has materials to produce chemical and biological weapons, but he has not accounted for them, nor has he accounted for almost 30,000 munitions capable of delivering chemical agents.

- Thousands of Iraqi security personnel are at work hiding documents and materials from the UN inspectors. Iraqi officials accompany all inspectors in order to intimidate witnesses, and Saddam Hussein has ordered that scientists who cooperate with the UN be killed, along with their families.

- Saddam Hussein aids and protects terrorists. Al-Qaida members are known to have been in Iraq. He could provide hidden weapons to terrorists or help them develop their own. It would take just one vial, one canister, one crate slipped into our country to bring a day of horror like none we have ever known.

- The United States has asked the UN Security Council to convene this week to consider the facts of Iraq

's ongoing defiance of the world. We will consult.
But if Saddam Hussein does not disarm, we will act for the safety of our people, and for the peace of the world.

DRAFT: Snow Opening FY04 Budget Statement

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Baucus, and distinguished members of the Finance committee, before I begin my testimony today I would like to thank you for the trust you expressed to me last week by reporting out my nomination to be Secretary of the Treasury. I intend to do my utmost to live up to the tremendous responsibility you and the President have given to me.

Before describing a few of the highlights of the President's budget, I would like to describe my view of the essential background for the budget: the United States economy and President Bush's economic growth plan, which promises to create jobs, accelerate America's economic recovery, and increase our growth for years to come.

As every American knows by now – whether from having lost a job, knowing someone who has, or worrying about losing theirs – our economy took a turn for the worse beginning in the summer of 2000. By the time President Bush took office the undercurrent was running against the economy.

Additional shocks followed. The unprovoked and unprecedented terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001 triggered a recession, while the discovery of serious abuses of trust by some corporate business leaders slowed our recovery from it. In response to this confluence of adverse events, President Bush led decisively. Acting with Congress in a bipartisan fashion, he took the steps necessary to protect a shaken nation and a fragile economy. In 2001, when relief was needed most, he signed the most sweeping tax relief in a generation. As evidence of the damage became clearer, he acted again in March 2002 to further bolster the economy. This was precisely the right medicine at precisely the right time and these actions made the recession shorter and shallower – in fact the mildest since World War II – than it would have been.

In the face of extreme adversity, our economy, like our nation, remains resilient. Despite a sequence of economic slowdown, attack on our homeland, war abroad, and weakened investor confidence, the economy is recovering. But as the President has stated, we can and must do better. Relative success is not sufficient. Too many Americans are out of work today, and too many Americans are insecure about their tomorrow.

We must build on the proven strengths of our economy. We must continue to move towards policies that will create more good jobs and raise living standards for all. As long as there are Americans who want a job and can't find one, the economy is not growing fast enough. That's why President Bush's jobs and growth package is so important. Under the President's proposal, 92 million taxpayers and their families would receive, on average, a tax cut of $1,083 in 2003. In fact, a typical family of four with two earners making a combined $39,000 in income will receive a total of $1,100 in tax relief under the President's plan. They would receive this relief not just once this year, but in each and every year. And his plan will create hundreds of thousand of additional jobs by the end of this year and well over a million more by the end of next year.

The package will not only help America return to its economic potential, it will increase it. I believe that is what everyone in this room and across America seeks.

Before I turn to the budget, a word about deficits. We are all troubled by them and they are never welcome. But there are times such as these when they are unavoidable. And when misguided attempts to treat the symptoms, and not the disease, will only make the economy sicker, not better. Even without the President's economic growth and jobs package, homeland security, war of terrorism, we would have deficits now. Are these deficits welcome? No. Are they understandable? Yes.

The surpluses we enjoyed were the product of a strong economy, not a weak one. We will not return to economic strength by taxing our economy when it is struggling, any more than we would increase our nation's security by being unwilling to fund its defense when it is threatened. The formula for weakening the economy and maintaining deficits is just the reverse: profligate spending and job-killing tax hikes. The prescription for returning to surpluses is this: hold the line on spending and grow the economy. This is the direction the President has chosen to lead. We are not going to let the war on terrorism bring either our nation or our economy to its knees.

Finally, we should remember that current deficits are small relative to our unique circumstances and to our economy as a whole. Even at their depth they remain below the levels of the last 30 years and begin a pronounced improvement after next year.

We face new threats and challenges but job creation and economic growth are keys not only to our near-term but our long-term success as well. If we are to meet the threats of today and the challenges of tomorrow, we must have a strong economy. We must not simply return America to prosperity, we must seek a higher plane of prosperity for America. That means rewarding hard work, encouraging hard work and creating the opportunities for work for all Americans. These are the values that brought America to where we are today and they are the ones that we must allow to lead us into the future. We must also remember that our success and our example in this endeavor promises not only a brighter, better future for our people and our children, but for the rest of the world as well.

The Jobs and Growth Package, our new initiatives to promote savings, our proposal to promote health care coverage, to encourage charitable giving, and to promote responsible energy production, and improved compliance measures from the Internal Revenue Service are all important budget initiatives. Each of these is described in more detail in our request.

The Treasury Department's portion of the 2004 budget is nearly a third reduced from 2003, owing mainly to the separation of homeland security functions from the Treasury Department this year. Adjusting for that change, Treasury's request is an increase of about 3.5% over last year's request.

Treasury's budget request will allow us to build on our recent accomplishments and highlights our commitments to:

1) Fight the war against terrorist financing;
2) Ensure that the tax system is fair for all Americans through a comprehensive compliance effort that includes high income taxpayers;
3) Increase Treasury's efficiency and effectiveness by streamlining operations; and
4) Maintain the integrity of our nation's financial systems and currency.

I look forward to discussing that plan and the rest of the President's budget with you today.

DRAFT: Snow Opening FY04 Budget Statement

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Baucus, and distinguished members of the Finance committee, before I begin my testimony today I would like to thank you for the trust you expressed to me last week by reporting out my nomination to be Secretary of the Treasury. I intend to do my utmost to live up to the tremendous responsibility you and the President have given to me.

Before describing a few of the highlights of the President's budget, I would like to describe my view of the essential background for the budget: the United States economy and President Bush's economic growth plan, which promises to create jobs, accelerate America's economic recovery, and increase our growth for years to come.

As every American knows by now – whether from having lost a job, knowing someone who has, or worrying about losing theirs – our economy took a turn for the worse beginning in the summer of 2000. By the time President Bush took office the undercurrent was running against the economy.

Additional shocks followed. The unprovoked and unprecedented terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001 triggered a recession, while the discovery of serious abuses of trust by some corporate business leaders slowed our recovery from it. In response to this confluence of adverse events, President Bush led decisively. Acting with Congress in a bipartisan fashion, he took the steps necessary to protect a shaken nation and a fragile economy. In 2001, when relief was needed most, he signed the most sweeping tax relief in a generation. As evidence of the damage became clearer, he acted again in March 2002 to further bolster the economy. This was precisely the right medicine at precisely the right time and these actions made the recession shorter and shallower – in fact the mildest since World War II – than it would have been.

In the face of extreme adversity, our economy, like our nation, remains resilient. Despite a sequence of economic slowdown, attack on our homeland, war abroad, and weakened investor confidence, the economy is recovering. But as the President has stated, we can and must do better. Relative success is not sufficient. Too many Americans are out of work today, and too many Americans are insecure about their tomorrow.

We must build on the proven strengths of our economy. We must continue to move towards policies that will create more good jobs and raise living standards for all. As long as there are Americans who want a job and can't find one, the economy is not growing fast enough. That's why President Bush's jobs and growth package is so important. Under the President's proposal, 92 million taxpayers and their families would receive, on average, a tax cut of $1,083 in 2003. In fact, a typical family of four with two earners making a combined $39,000 in income will receive a total of $1,100 in tax relief under the President's plan. They would receive this relief not just once this year, but in each and every year. And his plan will create hundreds of thousand of additional jobs by the end of this year and well over a million more by the end of next year.

The package will not only help America return to its economic potential, it will increase it. I believe that is what everyone in this room and across America seeks.

Before I turn to the budget, a word about deficits. We are all troubled by them and they are never welcome. But there are times such as these when they are unavoidable. And when misguided attempts to treat the symptoms, and not the disease, will only make the economy sicker, not better. Even without the President's economic growth and jobs package, homeland security, war of terrorism, we would have deficits now. Are these deficits welcome? No. Are they understandable? Yes.

The surpluses we enjoyed were the product of a strong economy, not a weak one. We will not return to economic strength by taxing our economy when it is struggling, any more than we would increase our nation's security by being unwilling to fund its defense when it is threatened. The formula for weakening the economy and maintaining deficits is just the reverse: profligate spending and job-killing tax hikes. The prescription for returning to surpluses is this: hold the line on spending and grow the economy. This is the direction the President has chosen to lead. We are not going to let the war on terrorism bring either our nation or our economy to its knees.

Finally, we should remember that current deficits are small relative to our unique circumstances and to our economy as a whole. Even at their depth they remain below the levels of the last 30 years and begin a pronounced improvement after next year.

We face new threats and challenges but job creation and economic growth are keys not only to our near-term but our long-term success as well. If we are to meet the threats of today and the challenges of tomorrow, we must have a strong economy. We must not simply return America to prosperity, we must seek a higher plane of prosperity for America. That means rewarding hard work, encouraging hard work and creating the opportunities for work for all Americans. These are the values that brought America to where we are today and they are the ones that we must allow to lead us into the future. We must also remember that our success and our example in this endeavor promises not only a brighter, better future for our people and our children, but for the rest of the world as well.

The Jobs and Growth Package, our new initiatives to promote savings, our proposal to promote health care coverage, to encourage charitable giving, and to promote responsible energy production, and improved compliance measures from the Internal Revenue Service are all important budget initiatives. Each of these is described in more detail in our request.

The Treasury Department's portion of the 2004 budget is nearly a third reduced from 2003, owing mainly to the separation of homeland security functions from the Treasury Department this year. Adjusting for that change, Treasury's request is an increase of about 3.5% over last year's request.

Treasury's budget request will allow us to build on our recent accomplishments and highlights our commitments to:

1) Fight the war against terrorist financing;
2) Ensure that the tax system is fair for all Americans through a comprehensive compliance effort that includes high income taxpayers;
3) Increase Treasury's efficiency and effectiveness by streamlining operations; and
4) Maintain the integrity of our nation's financial systems and currency.

I look forward to discussing that plan and the rest of the President's budget with you today.

Snow Takes Oath as Treasury Chief, to Push Tax Cut
By Simon Kennedy and Brendan Murray

Washington, Feb. 3 (Bloomberg) -- John Snow was sworn in as the 73rd U.S. Treasury secretary the day before he is to begin campaigning for President George W. Bush's proposed $690 billion tax cut.

The former chief executive of CSX Corp. stepped into the top Treasury post at a private ceremony held at the department he will now run. His predecessor, Paul O'Neill, left office Dec. 31 after being fired.

Snow is now the leader of Bush's revamped economic team, charged by the president with the task of persuading Congress to lower taxes during the next decade to bolster an economy that has lost jobs for two straight years and a stock market that has dropped for three.

``He is looking forward to implementing President Bush's agenda to strengthen economic growth and create jobs,'' said Rob Nichols, the Treasury's acting assistant secretary of public affairs.

Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam, who ran the department on an interim basis after O'Neill left, administered the oath to Snow, whose wife held a copy of the Bible. Two of Snow's three sons, one of his daughters-in-law and all of his three grandchildren attended the ceremony, which took place beneath a portrait of Alexander Hamilton, the first Treasury secretary, in the secretary's office on the third floor of the Treasury building.

The new Treasury chief is expected to appear before a series of congressional panels this week to lobby for the tax cut and for Bush's fiscal 2004 budget. He is to start tomorrow afternoon with the House Ways and Means Committee before visiting the House Budget and Senate Finance panels Wednesday. The Senate confirmed his nomination Thursday.

Growth Forecasts

Bush overhauled his economics team Dec. 6, firing O'Neill and chief White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey. Stephen Friedman, a former Goldman Sachs Group Inc. co-chairman was appointed to succeed Lindsey.

After falling into recession in March 2001, the economy is expected to grow less than 3 percent for the third successive year in 2003, according to Bush's fiscal 2004 budget, released today. It will grow 2.9 percent this year and 3.6 percent in 2004 after a 2.4 percent expansion last year, the budget forecast.

The tepid recovery and the war on terrorism mean the government will run a budget deficit of $199 billion this year and won't log a surplus until 2007, the Congressional Budget Office said last week. Wall Street analysts have said this year's shortfall will be closer to $300 billion after Congress approves tax cuts and additional spending. The White House today estimated the deficit at $304 billion on its $2.23 trillion budget proposal for fiscal 2004.

Snow on the Deficit

The administration said the projected deficit for this year would amount to 2.8 percent of gross domestic product, well below the 6 percent of 1983, which was the most since World War II.

Bush hopes his call to eliminate taxes on dividends, accelerate income-tax reductions and aid the unemployed will bolster the economy and help him win re-election in 2004.

Snow, who campaigned for balanced budgets in the 1990s as chairman of the Business Roundtable, last week told the Senate that Bush's plan would create 500,000 jobs by year end and leave ``relatively modest'' deficits that wouldn't harm growth or worry financial markets.

``Getting the economy strong is the best way to service that debt,'' Snow told the Senate Finance panel. ``Reducing taxes stimulates the economy and puts us in a better position to do that.''

Democrats complain Bush's plan is biased toward the rich, will boost the deficit and would do little for the economy. ``His plan will push up interest rates, retard economic growth, and create massive problems,'' said Senator Kent Conrad of North Dakota, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee.

Student of Two Nobelists

The 63-year old Snow has a net worth of around $100 million and has pledged to sell his stock in CSX and 60 other companies within 90 days. CSX, the No.
3 railroad company, named Michael Ward, its president, to replace him as chief executive and chairman.

Snow holds a doctorate in economics from the University of Virginia, where he was a student of two Nobel laureates. He has also been employed as a lawyer and as an academic. He served as a deputy secretary of Transportation under President Gerald Ford and last year co-chaired a Conference Board study of corporate malfeasance. He joined CSX in 1977.

At the Treasury, Snow will earn $171,900 a year and oversee an $11 billion annual budget. His initial staff of 117,000 will drop by around a quarter as Treasury agencies such as the Secret Service and the Customs Service are absorbed by the new Homeland Security Department.

Paris Debut

As well as formulating domestic economic and tax policy, Snow will be responsible for leading the U.S. crackdown on terrorism financing, managing the nation's debt and crafting the Bush administration's approach to international financial institutions.

His debut on the world stage will come Feb. 21 when he travels to Paris for a meeting of finance ministers from the Group of Seven industrial nations. The gathering was scheduled for last week until the French government delayed it amid doubt Snow would receive Senate confirmation in time to attend.

Snow's signature will also begin appearing on U.S. dollar bills and notes in April or May, according to the Bureau of Engraving and Print.

Snow Sworn in As Treasury Secretary

By JEANNINE AVERSA, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Former CSX railroad executive John Snow was sworn in Monday as the nation's 73rd treasury secretary, and he has his work cut out for him: Trying to steer the wobbly U.S. economy back onto firmer footing.

One of Snow's first major jobs will be selling President Bush (news - web sites)'s $695 billion tax-cut plan, aimed at energizing the $10.5 trillion economy. The proposal was included in the $2.23 trillion budget for 2004 that Bush sent to Congress on Monday.

Snow - sworn in during a private ceremony at 5 p.m. - was confirmed by the Senate last week and spent all day Monday getting briefed on the president's budget, said Treasury Secretary Rob Nichols. Snow will testify on the president's 2004 budget on Capitol Hill three times in the next two days, Nichols said.

The private ceremony took place inside the blue office of the treasury secretary and underneath the portrait of the nation's first treasury secretary, Alexander Hamilton. Snow's wife, Carolyn, two of his sons and his grandchildren attended.

Snow has pledged to sell his extensive stock holdings in CSX Corp. and 60 other companies and put his money in diversified mutual funds. He will do so within 90 days. Snow has said he would recuse himself from participating in any decisions involving CSX while at Treasury, and would forego a lucrative severance package estimated at up to $15 million.

Snow, the head of railroad giant CSX for the past 14 years, was picked by Bush in December to replace Paul O'Neill after the president decided to shake up his economic team in an effort to find more effective salesmen for his new economic stimulus package.

Ken Dam, the deputy treasury secretary who took over the department's helm after O'Neill's departure, administered the oath of office to Snow. A public ceremony for Snow could take place at the White House this week. A ceremony was slated for Tuesday but was moved because of a memorial service in Houston for the Columbia shuttle astronauts.

Tuesday afternoon he will testify before the House Ways and Means Committee.
Wednesday morning he is set to appear before the House Budget Committee, followed by the Senate Finance Committee in the afternoon.

"During those hearings, Secretary Snow will share his views on the President's jobs and growth package and what the President is doing to accelerate economic growth," Nichols said.

Treasury has been without a secretary since the end of last year, when Secretary Paul O'Neill resigned under pressure. O'Neill's last day on the job was Dec. 31 and Dam has been serving as acting Treasury secretary.

Snow stepped down last week from his job as chairman and chief executive of CSX Corp. (CSX). Friday CSX named Michael Ward as the railroad company's new chairman and CEO.

The clock has started ticking for Snow and his wife to sell their stock holdings. In an ethics agreement released last month, Snow and his wife also pledged to sell their holdings in CSX and some 70 other companies, including AOL Time Warner Inc. (AOL), CarMax Inc. (KMX), Duke Energy Corp. (DUK), HSBC
Holdings PLC (HBC) and Tyco International Ltd. (TYC). The money will be reinvested in diversified mutual funds, among other ventures.

Snow's personal financial-disclosure form doesn't list his specific net wealth, but said it is at least $70 million. Snow said he and his wife would sell CSX stock within 90 days of confirmation, which was Jan. 30, and he pledged to disqualify himself involving matters involving CSX Corp. for the duration of his Treasury term.

In addition to Monday's private swearing-in ceremony, Snow may go through a public ceremony with the President later this week, in line with usual procedure for appointments.

Snow Sworn in as New Treasury Secretary
Mon February 03, 2003 06:09 PM ET

By Glenn Somerville

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Railroad executive John Snow was sworn in on Monday as treasury secretary, taking over the senior Cabinet post left vacant by the resignation under fire of Paul O'Neill in December.

Snow, attended by his wife Carolyn and other family members, was sworn in to office by acting Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam at a private ceremony at the Treasury. Typically, there is a public ceremony later with President Bush, but it was unclear when that would happen.

Snow will be the principal spokesman for Bush's economic policies, including his $2.24-trillion budget for next year, sent to Congress on Monday. He also has the job of selling Bush's $674-billion economic stimulus program, a task

he will begin with three appearances before lawmakers on Capitol Hill on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Snow spent all day on Monday being briefed on the budget proposals.

He was scheduled to testify on Tuesday morning to the Senate Finance Committee, but that was rescheduled to Wednesday so lawmakers can attend a memorial ceremony for the seven astronauts lost in the Columbia space shuttle tragedy on Saturday.

TRIPLE TESTIMONY AHEAD

Snow will testify on Tuesday before the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee. On Wednesday, he will testify twice -- before the House Budget Committee in the morning and to the Senate Finance Committee in the afternoon.

Snow is expected to face tough questioning from lawmakers on the budget proposals, which project deficits of $304 billion for the current fiscal year ending Sept. 30 and $307 billion next year, surpassing a 1992 record of $290 billion.

The 63-year-old Snow was chairman of regional freight giant CSX Corp., a position he surrendered at the end of last week. The wealthy industrialist also said he will give up the directorships he holds on the boards of other companies to avoid any conflicts of interest.

Treasury spokesman Robert Nichols said Snow was preparing for his new duties. "Secretary Snow is looking forward to implementing President Bush's agenda to strengthen economic growth and create jobs," Nichols said.

At his hearing last Tuesday, Snow said he supported a strong dollar and, in written questions and answers made public before Thursday night's confirmation vote, he pledged to push the United States' trading partners to do more to boost their economic growth.

Snow will get an early chance to do that when finance ministers from the Group of Seven industrial nations -- the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan -- gather in Paris on Feb. 21-22. The session was originally scheduled to take place on last weekend but was rescheduled to accommodate Snow.

Snow Takes Oath as Treasury Chief, to Push Tax Cut
By Simon Kennedy and Brendan Murray

Washington, Feb. 3 (Bloomberg) -- John Snow was sworn in as the 73rd U.S. Treasury secretary the day before he is to begin campaigning for President George W. Bush's proposed $690 billion tax cut.

The former chief executive of CSX Corp. stepped into the top Treasury post a t a private ceremony held at the department he will now run. His predecessor, Pau l O'Neill, left office Dec. 31 after being fired.

Snow is now the leader of Bush's revamped economic team, charged by the president with the task of persuading Congress to lower taxes during the next decade to bolster an economy that has lost jobs for two straight years and a stock market that has dropped for three.

``He is looking forward to implementing President Bush's agenda to strengthe n economic growth and create jobs,'' said Rob Nichols, the Treasury's acting assistant secretary of public affairs.

Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam, who ran the department on an interim basis after O'Neill left, administered the oath to Snow, whose wife held a copy of the Bible. Two of Snow's three sons, one of his daughters-in-law and all of his three grandchildren attended the ceremony, which took place beneath a portrait of Alexander Hamilton, the first Treasury secretary, in the secretary' s office on the third floor of the Treasury building.

The new Treasury chief is expected to appear before a series of congressiona l panels this week to lobby for the tax cut and for Bush's fiscal 2004 budget. He is to start tomorrow afternoon with the House Ways and Means Committee before visiting the House Budget and Senate Finance panels Wednesday. The Senate confirmed his nomination Thursday.

Growth Forecasts

Bush overhauled his economics team Dec. 6, firing O'Neill and chief White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey. Stephen Friedman, a former Goldman Sachs Group Inc. co-chairman was appointed to succeed Lindsey.

After falling into recession in March 2001, the economy is expected to grow less than 3 percent for the third successive year in 2003, according to Bush's fiscal 2004 budget, released today. It will grow 2.9 percent this year and 3.6 percent in 2004 after a 2.4 percent expansion last year, the budget forecast.

The tepid recovery and the war on terrorism mean the government will run a budget deficit of $199 billion this year and won't log a surplus until 2007, th e Congressional Budget Office said last week. Wall Street analysts have said this year's shortfall will be closer to $300 billion after Congress approves tax cut s and additional spending. The White House today estimated the deficit at $304 billion on its $2.23 trillion budget proposal for fiscal 2004.

Snow on the Deficit

The administration said the projected deficit for this year would amount to 2.8 percent of gross domestic product, well below the 6 percent of 1983, which was the most since World War II.

Bush hopes his call to eliminate taxes on dividends, accelerate income-tax reductions and aid the unemployed will bolster the economy and help him win re-election in 2004.

Snow, who campaigned for balanced budgets in the 1990s as chairman of the Business Roundtable, last week told the Senate that Bush's plan would create 500,000 jobs by year end and leave ``relatively modest'' deficits that wouldn't harm growth or worry financial markets.

``Getting the economy strong is the best way to service that debt,'' Snow told the Senate Finance panel. ``Reducing taxes stimulates the economy and puts us in a better position to do that.''

Democrats complain Bush's plan is biased toward the rich, will boost the deficit and would do little for the economy. ``His plan will push up interest rates, retard economic growth, and create massive problems,'' said Senator Kent Conrad of North Dakota, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee.

Student of Two Nobelists

The 63-year old Snow has a net worth of around $100 million and has pledged to sell his stock in CSX and 60 other companies within 90 days. CSX, the No. 3 railroad company, named Michael Ward, its president, to replace him as chief executive and chairman.

Snow holds a doctorate in economics from the University of Virginia, where h e was a student of two Nobel laureates. He has also been employed as a lawyer and as an academic. He served as a deputy secretary of Transportation under President Gerald Ford and last year co-chaired a Conference Board study of corporate malfeasance. He joined CSX in 1977.

At the Treasury, Snow will earn $171,900 a year and oversee an $11 billion annual budget. His initial staff of 117,000 will drop by around a quarter as Treasury agencies such as the Secret Service and the Customs Service are absorbed by the new Homeland Security Department.

Paris Debut

As well as formulating domestic economic and tax policy, Snow will be responsible for leading the U.S. crackdown on terrorism financing, managing the nation's debt and crafting the Bush administration's approach to international financial institutions.

His debut on the world stage will come Feb. 21 when he travels to Paris for a meeting of finance ministers from the Group of Seven industrial nations. The gathering was scheduled for last week until the French government delayed it amid doubt Snow would receive Senate confirmation in time to attend.

Snow's signature will also begin appearing on U.S. dollar bills and notes in April or May, according to the Bureau of Engraving and Print.

By JEANNINE AVERSA, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Former CSX railroad executive John Snow was sworn in Monday as the nation's 73rd treasury secretary, and he has his work cut out for him: Trying to steer the wobbly U.S. economy back onto firmer footing.

One of Snow's first major jobs will be selling President Bush (news - web sites)'s $695 billion tax-cut plan, aimed at energizing the $10.5 trillion economy. The proposal was included in the $2.23 trillion budget for 2004 that Bush sent to Congress on Monday.

Snow - sworn in during a private ceremony at 5 p.m. - was confirmed by the Senate last week and spent all day Monday getting briefed on the president's budget, said Treasury Secretary Rob Nichols. Snow will testify on the president's 2004 budget on Capitol Hill three times in the next two days, Nichols said.

The private ceremony took place inside the blue office of the treasury secretary and underneath the portrait of the nation's first treasury secretary, Alexander Hamilton. Snow's wife, Carolyn, two of his sons and his grandchildren attended.

Snow has pledged to sell his extensive stock holdings in CSX Corp. and 60 other companies and put his money in diversified mutual funds. He will do so within 90 days. Snow has said he would recuse himself from participating in any decisions involving CSX while at Treasury, and would forego a lucrative severance package estimated at up to $15 million.

Snow, the head of railroad giant CSX for the past 14 years, was picked by Bush in December to replace Paul O'Neill after the president decided to shake u p his economic team in an effort to find more effective salesmen for his new economic stimulus package.

Ken Dam, the deputy treasury secretary who took over the department's helm after O'Neill's departure, administered the oath of office to Snow. A public ceremony for Snow could take place at the White House this week. A ceremony was slated for Tuesday but was moved because of a memorial service in Houston for the Columbia shuttle astronauts.

KEY POINTS

- We are in the final phase of the 12 year effort to disarm Saddam Hussein.

- The gravest danger we face is outlaw regimes that sponsor terror and possess or seek weapons of mass destruction.

- As part of the cease-fire agreement at the end of the Gulf War in 1991, Saddam was required to declare and destroy all his weapons of mass destruction.

- For over a decade, Saddam has consistently flouted these obligations. Eight weeks have now passed since Saddam was given his final chance. Six hundred weeks have passed since he was given his first chance.

- The UN and U.S. intelligence sources have known for some time that Saddam Hussein has materials to produce chemical and biological weapons, but he has not accounted for them, nor has he accounted for almost 30,000 munitions capable of delivering chemical agents.

- Thousands of Iraqi security personnel are at work hiding documents and materials from the UN inspectors. Iraqi officials accompany all inspectors in order to intimidate witnesses, and Saddam Hussein has ordered that scientists who cooperate with the UN be killed, along with their families.

- Saddam Hussein aids and protects terrorists. Al-Qaida members are known to have been in Iraq. He could provide hidden weapons to terrorists or help them develop their own. It would take just one vial, one canister, one crate slipped into our country to bring a day of horror like none we have ever known.

- The United States has asked the UN Security Council to convene today to consider the facts of Iraq

's ongoing defiance of the world. We will consult.
But if Saddam Hussein does not disarm, we will lead a coalition of the willing for the safety of our people, and for the peace of the world.

With Secretary Powell's mission to the U.N., it is now up to the Security Council to make the right one as well."

Extending America's Compassion to the World's Neediest Citizens

Today in Africa, 30 million people are at risk of starvation or are facing severe food shortages, including 14 million people in Ethiopia alone. The United States is the world's largest contributor of food relief, contributing 52% of total contributions to the UN World Food Program's emergency operations, and over 40% of contributions to the World Food Program's emergency appeals for Southern Africa last year.

KEY POINTS

- We are in the final phase of the 12 year effort to disarm Saddam Hussein.
- The gravest danger we face is outlaw regimes that sponsor terror and possess or seek weapons of mass destruction.
- As part of the cease-fire agreement at the end of the Gulf War in 1991, Saddam was required to declare and destroy all his weapons of mass destruction.
- For over a decade, Saddam has consistently flouted these obligations. Eight weeks have now passed since Saddam was given his final chance. Six hundred weeks have passed since he was given his first chance.
- The UN and U.S. intelligence sources have known for some time that Saddam Hussein has materials to produce chemical and biological weapons, but he has not accounted for them, nor has he accounted for almost 30,000 munitions capable of delivering chemical agents.
- Thousands of Iraqi security personnel are at work hiding documents and materials from the UN inspectors. Iraqi officials accompany all inspectors in order to intimidate witnesses, and Saddam Hussein has ordered that scientists who cooperate with the UN be killed, along with their families.
- Saddam Hussein aids and protects terrorists. Al-Qaida members are known to have been in Iraq. He could provide hidden weapons to terrorists or help them develop their own. It would take just one vial, one canister, one crate slipped into our country to bring a day of horror like none we have ever known.
- The United States has asked the UN Security Council to convene today to consider the facts of Iraq's ongoing defiance of the world. We will consult. But if Saddam Hussein does not disarm, we will lead a coalition of the willing for the safety of our people, and for the peace of the world.

Subject: Windsor Village United Methodist Church POTUS Participation

You have asked the Counsel's Office whether the President may attend the Pyramid Community Development Corporation ("CDC") banquet and provide a keynote speech for the CDC's tenth anniversary, where the proceeds from the event will go to three projects: (1) an endowment for the Pyramid CDC; (2) an entrepreneurs' empowerment program that provides low-interest loans; and (3) the Village of Hope a residential drug treatment facility for women and children that utilizes faith based solutions to the issues of addiction.

Short Answer: Yes, provided all practical safeguards and vetting procedures as described more fully below are scrupulously adhered to.

Issues and Short Answers:

May the President give an official speech at a non-profit organization annual banquet where that organization funds three faith based programs that incidentally will benefit from the President's presence?

Yes. Under federal ethics laws the President may give an official speech on a subject matter that relates to his official duties where the event at which the speech is to be given provides an appropriate forum for the dissemination of the information to be presented and provided that the President does not request donations or other support for the nonprofit organization. 5 C.F.R. section 2635.808(3).

Discussion

Although the ethics regulations and the examples contained therein do not reference the President, Example 1provides an analogous example of appropriate conduct in the context of a nonprofit organization. Specifically, the regulations approve the following hypothetical. "The Secretary of Labor is invited to speak at a banquet honoring a distinguished labor leader, the proceeds of which will benefit a nonprofit organization that assists homeless families. She devotes a major portion of her speech to the Administration's Points of Light initiative, an effort to encourage citizens to volunteer their time to help solve serious social problems. Because she is authorized to speak on Administration policy, her remarks at the banquet are an official speech. However, the Secretary would be engaged in fund-raising if she were to conclude her official speech with a request for donations to the nonprofit organization." See 5 C.F.R. section 2635.808(3)(Example 1).

Applying this analysis to these facts leads to a similar conclusion. First, it is beyond doubt that the President of the United States is authorized to "speak on Administration policy" and the remarks the President would make would at the CDC banquet qualify as an "official speech."

The President's recent State of the Union address demonstrates the President's focus on problems of homelessness, addiction and economic development, issues that are being addressed by the CDC and its affiliates. In his State of the Union the President stated: "Our . . . goal is to apply the compassion of America to the deepest problems of America. For so many in our country--the homeless, the fatherless, the addicted--the need is great." Similarly, the President emphasized his administration's concern regarding addiction. "Another cause of hopelessness is addiction to drugs. Addiction crowds out friendship, ambition, moral conviction, and reduces all the richness of life to a single destructive desire." Finally, while increasing funding for addiction treatment programs, the President demonstrated his particular commitment to faith based treatment programs. "Our Nation is blessed with recovery programs that do amazing work. One of them is found at the Healing Place Church in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. A man in the program said, 'God does miracles in people's lives, and you never think it could be you.'"

I therefore conclude that the analysis applied under federal ethics regulations--provided no solicitation occurs and provided you receive commitments from that CDC that the CDC will not use the President's or the First Lady's name in connection with any fund-raising efforts nor include their names on any fund-raising solicitations or stationary--allows the President to attend this banquet where proceeds will fund the nonprofit entities and to give an official speech.

Have all appropriate vetting procedures been completed?

Short Answer:
Not yet, but these can be quickly completed by the Office of Faith Based Initiatives.

Discussion

The Counsel's Office has suggested several vetting procedures that should be followed in all instances involving the President's or the First Lady's involvement with charitable organizations. By copy of this e-mail I am asking the Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives to undertake this vetting process immediately and to provide the Office of the Counsel to the President the opportunity to review the results to ensure that adequate due diligence has been completed.

Based on the facts provided to me by the Director of the Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives, the President regularly has attended the Windsor Village United Methodist Church and the Minister, Reverend Kirbyjon H. Caldwell is a close personal friend of the First Family and the President who is invited to stay as an overnight guest in the White House residence. These facts indicate a number of factors relevant to the Counsel's Office policy guidance as follows:

Does the President or First Lady have an existing relationship with the charitable organization?
Could the association with the organization reflect negatively on the President or the First Lady?

From these facts, the first two prongs of the vetting analysis appear to be satisfied.
By way of analogy, it is worth mentioning that the President and the First Lady do serve as honorary co-chairs of charitable and non-profit organizations and these organizations engage in fund-raising efforts on behalf of their organizations, which precedent also lends support to these facts.

A few issues do remain to be researched and evaluated however;other factors that the OFB and CI needs to analyze and provide assurances to the Office of the Counsel include the following:

Is the charitable organization engaged in litigation against the United States?
Is the organization or any of its directors officers or trustees under investigation by law enforcement?
Is the charitable organization in compliance with all laws and regulations, including tax laws, that apply to it?

Assuming the results to these questions is positive, this request appears to be lawful and appropriate under ethics laws; please ensure that all materials relating to this event are pre-approved by the Counsel's office to conform with this guidance.

Let me know if I can be of further help; of course, it goes without saying that the actual Presidential decision to participate rests with the President and his close advisors. Also, decisions regarding the use of the President's likeness and seal are carefully monitored by my colleague Noel Francisco in the Counsel's Office, should these issues arise. I am also copying Brett Kavanaugh, who also frequently fields similar-type issues.

LIBERAL DEMOCRATS THREATEN FILIBUSTER ON MIGUEL ESTRADA

Democrat Senator Kennedy And His Liberal Colleagues Seek To Block
First Hispanic To Serve On U.S. Court Of Appeals For The D.C. Circuit

---

?It Is Hard To Imagine A Worse Parody Of A Judicial Confirmation Process Than The Unfolding Drama Of Miguel Estrada?s Nomination . . . .? (Editorial, ?Exploiting Estrada,? The Washington Post, September 29, 2002)

democrats plan to filibuster

Democrats Plan To ?Portray The Nominees As Extremists? And Filibuster.
?The Democrats? plan appears to be to portray the nominees as extremists who are well outside the mainstream of the law. If Democrats can make that label stick, they hope to hold their party together on the Senate floor and quash Republican efforts to block a filibuster and bring the nominees to a vote.? (Jonathan Groner, ?Hatch Off To A Fast Start On Judges,? Legal Times, February 3, 2003)

Senator Ted Kennedy (D-MA) Is ?Angry? Over Estrada Nomination And ?Pledged To Fight.? ?Angry about what he termed a bid to rush controversial nominations through the Judiciary Committee without serious scrutiny, Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., pledged to fight for the Senate?s constitutionally delegated responsibility to give ?advice and consent? on nominees.. ?If we have to exercise all our rights in order to protect them, so be it,? Kennedy said.? (Jennifer A. Dlouhy, ?No Letup In Judiciary Wars As Party-Line Vote Advances Disputed Estrada Nomination,? Congressional Quarterly Weekly, February 1, 2003)

ESTRADA IS ?WELL QUALIFIED?

The Washington Post Says Estrada Is ?Well-Regarded? And Should Be Confirmed. Estrada is ?a well-regarded appellate lawyer . . . . There is no sound basis on which to oppose him. . . . At the end of the day, Mr. Estrada must be considered on his merits. His confirmation is an easy call.? (Editorial, ?Exploiting Estrada,? The Washington Post, September 29, 2002)

The American Bar Association Says Estrada Is ?Well Qualified.? The American Bar Association (ABA) has given Miguel Estrada a unanimous ?Well Qualified? rating, the highest possible rating. The ABA bases its ratings on ?integrity, professional competence and judicial temperament.? Democrats have called the ABA rating the ?gold standard.? (Jonathan Ringel, ?ABA Approves More Bush Nominees,? Legal Times, July 16, 2001; Amy Goldstein, ?Bush Set To Curb ABA?s Role In Court Appointments,? The Washington Post, March 18, 2001)

? The Senate Has Rejected Only One Nominee With A Unanimous ?Well Qualified? Rating. If Democrats play politics with Estrada?s nomination, he would be only the second nominee given an unanimous ?Well Qualified? rating from the American Bar Association (ABA) to be rejected by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The other nominee, Priscilla Owen, was rejected on partisan political grounds September 5, 2002. (Senator Orrin Hatch (R-UT), Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing, July 23, 2002; Chuck Lindell, ?Senate Democrats Reject Bush Pick For Appeals Court As ?Too Extreme,?? The Atlanta Journal Constitution, September 6, 2002)

Estrada Is ?Remarkably Qualified.? Gabriela Lemus, spokeswoman for the League of United Latin American Citizens, said, ?So often you hear there are not enough qualified Latinos for these positions, but he is remarkably qualified.? (Frank Davies, ?Battle Is Brewing Over Court Nominee,? St. Paul Pioneer Press, January 6, 2002)

Estrada Has A ?Proven Record Of Success.? Fraternal Order of Police President Steve Young said, ?A necessary qualification for any candidate for a position within the Federal Judiciary should be a proven record of success as a practicing attorney. I believe that it is also necessary for a candidate to be familiar with the inner-workings of the Court, and to have respect for the law enforcement community of which they are an important part. Mr. Estrada meets both of these important criteria . . . .? (White House Fact Sheet: ?What They Are Saying About Miguel Estrada.?)

Estrada Has Superb Academic And Professional Credentials:

? Estrada has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court. He won two-thirds of those cases.

? From 1992 to 1997, Estrada served as Assistant to the Solicitor General of the United States.

? Estrada graduated magna cum laude from Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the Harvard Law Review.

? Estrada graduated magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Columbia College, New York.

? Estrada served as a clerk to Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy.

? Estrada is a partner with Gibson, Dunn, & Crutcher LLP, where he is a member of the firm?s Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group and the Business Crimes and Investigations Practice Group.

? Estrada served as Assistant U.S. Attorney and Deputy Chief of the Appellate Section for the U.S. Attorney?s Office, Southern District of New York. Estrada tried 10 cases as a prosecutor and argued 7 cases before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

The New York Times, September 24, 2002; Charles Lane, ?Nominee For Court Faces Two Battles,? The Washington Post, September 24, 2002; White House Fact Sheet: ?Who Is Miguel Estrada??; White House Fact Sheet: ?Miguel Estrada.?)

BI-PARTISAN SUPPORT FOR ESTRADA

?An Absolutely Brilliant Lawyer.? Robert Litt, who served as Associate Deputy Attorney General in the Criminal Division at the Clinton Justice Department, said, ?Miguel is an absolutely brilliant lawyer . . . . I always felt that he was a talented and responsible advocate.? (?Bench Book: New Faces For The Federal Courts,? Legal Times, May 14, 2001)

?Model Of Professionalism And Competence.? Seth P. Waxman, Solicitor General under President Clinton, said Estrada is a ?model of professionalism and competence? and that he has ?great respect for both Mr. Estrada?s intellect and for his integrity.? (Seth P. Waxman, Letter To The Senate Judiciary Committee, As Quoted In Alberto R. Gonzales, Letter To Diane Feinstein, February 3, 2003)

?Brilliant, Dedicated, And Principled.? In a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Randolph Moss, President Clinton?s former Assistant Attorney General in the Office of Legal Counsel wrote, ?Although I am [sic] Democrat and Miguel and I do not see eye-to-eye on every issue, I hold Miguel in the highest regard and I urge the Committee to give favorable consideration to his nomination . . . . Miguel is a brilliant, dedicated, and principled lawyer.? (?Miguel Estrada: An American Success Story,? The Latino Coalition)

?Genuinely Compassionate.? Vice President Gore?s former Chief of Staff, Ronald Klain, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote the ?challenges [Estrada] has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need . . . .? (?Miguel Estrada: An American Success Story,? The Latino Coalition)

?Superb Analytical Lawyer.? Robert S. Litt, Clinton Justice Department Associate Deputy Attorney General, said, ?Miguel has an absolutely brilliant mind. He is a superb analytical lawyer and he?s an outstanding oral advocate.? (Bill Miller, ?Appeals Court Nominees Share Conservative Roots,? The Washington Post, May 23, 2001)

Many Groups Have Announced Their Support For Mr. Estrada?s Nomination, Including:

? Hispanic National Bar Association

? League of the United Latin American Citizens (LULAC)

? U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce

? Fraternal Order of Police

? Hispanic Business Roundtable

? The Latino Coalition

? Hispanic Engineers Business Corporation

? Hispanic Contractors of America, Inc.

(?Miguel Estrada: An American Success Story,? The Latino Coalition; White House Fact Sheet: ?Miguel Estrada.?)

ESTRADA WILL FOLLOW THE LAW, NOT MAKE IT

Estrada Will ?Faithfully Follow The Law.? Vice President Gore?s former Chief of Staff, Ronald Klain said Mr. Estrada would be able to ?faithfully follow the law.? (Bill Miller, ?Appeals Court Nominees Share Conservative Roots,? The Washington Post, May 23, 2001)

Estrada ?Will Follow A Legal Argument Where It Takes Him.? Randolph D. Moss, an official in the Clinton Justice Department, said, ?As a matter of fundamental integrity, Miguel will follow a legal argument where it takes him and will not succumb to leaps of faith or lapses of logic to reach a desired result.? (White House Fact Sheet, ?What They Are Saying About Miguel Estrada.?)

Estrada Will ?Faithfully Apply The Precedents Of His Court.? Ronald Klain, former Chief of Staff to Vice President Gore, said, ?I have no doubt that on the bench, Miguel will faithfully apply the precedents of his court, and the Supreme Court, without regard to his personal views or his political perspectives. His belief in the rule of law, in a limited judiciary, and in the separation of powers is too strong for him to act otherwise.? (White House Fact Sheet, ?What They Are Saying About Miguel Estrada.?)

Estrada Is Within Mainstream Legal Analysis. Clinton Justice Department Associate Deputy Attorney General Robert Litt said, ?I have never felt that the arguments he made were in any way outside the scope of legitimate legal analysis. While I may disagree with some aspects of Mr. Estrada?s legal philosophy, I believe that he is eminently qualified to serve on the Court of Appeals, and I hope that he will be confirmed.? (?Miguel Estrada: An American Success Story,? The Latino Coalition)

Estrada?s Record Shows He Is Not An ?Ideologue.? ?[A] close examination of his record and career belie his portrayal by some interest groups as a right-wing ideologue.? (Jonathan Groner, ?When Labels Don?t Fit,? Legal Times, June 25, 2001)

Estrada Would ?Keep An Open Mind.? Columbia University law professor John Manning, who has known Estrada since law school, said, ?He would, as a judge, absolutely keep an open mind in any type of case . . . . He?s a lawyer?s lawyer.? (Jonathan Groner, ?When Labels Don?t Fit,? Legal Times, June 25, 2001)

Estrada Is ?Independent? And ?Fair.? Ronald Klain, who was Vice President Gore?s Chief of Staff, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote that Estrada has an ?independent streak . . . [that] will give every litigant, from any point of view, a fair chance to persuade Miguel of the rightness of his or her case . . . . He will ask tough questions of both sides, and give both sides a chance to win.? (?Miguel Estrada: An American Success Story,? The Latino Coalition)

Estrada Does Not Allow His Personal Views To Interfere With His Professional Work.

? While at Gibson, Dunn, & Crutcher, Estrada donated 450 hours of his time to represent a death row inmate before the Supreme Court, attempting to persuade the Court ?to set aside a Virginia death sentence on the grounds of prosecutorial misconduct.? Estrada is personally in favor of capital punishment. (Mark Helm, ?GOP, Democrats Sparring Over Court Nomination,? [Albany] Times Union, December 2, 2001)

? While he worked at the Clinton Justice Department, Estrada filed an amicus brief on behalf of the government on the same side of the case as the National Organization of Women. The Supreme Court unanimously agreed with Estrada in NOW v. Scheidler that the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) could be applied to abortion protestors. (Jonathan Groner, ?When Labels Don?t Fit,? Legal Times, June 25, 2001)

? Estrada served for four years in the Department of Justice under President Clinton, and argued many cases on behalf of the government at that time. (White House Fact Sheet: ?Miguel Estrada: The Myths V. The Facts.?)

? Seth P. Waxman, former Solicitor General under President Clinton, said ?In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views ? or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States.? (Seth P. Waxman, Letter To The Senate Judiciary Committee, As Quoted In Alberto R. Gonzales, Letter To Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-CA), February 3, 2003)

LATINO COALITION FOR MIGUEL ESTRADA

February 4, 2003

Dear Senator:

At a time of a serious judicial vacancy crisis in our country, it is simply disingenuous that the Senate Democratic leadership is threatening to filibuster a nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals, who received a unanimous "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association.

On May 9, 2001, President Bush nominated Miguel A. Estrada to fill a vacancy on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Mr. Estrada would be the first Hispanic in history to sit on that court, which is widely viewed as the most important and prestigious Court of Appeals in the nation. No wonder George Herrera, President and Chief Executive Officer of the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, concludes that "Estrada's nomination can be a historic event for the Hispanic community. Latinos in this country have worked hard to break the barriers and obstacles that have stood in our way for too long and we now have the opportunity to do so. Estrada's appointment will also be a role model for Latino youth by demonstrating that a Latino can be appointed to one of the highest courts in the nation." He is just one of the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic grassroots organizations that are enthusiastically supporting his nomination, not just because he is Hispanic, but because he is superbly qualified.

Mr. Estrada is unique in another respect, too. As his colleagues can attest, both conservatives and liberals alike, Mr. Estrada is one of the most brilliant and effective appellate lawyers in the country. Having worked at the Justice Department under Republican and Democratic Administrations, he has demonstrated a commitment to upholding the integrity of the law and a dedication to public service. During his career, he has argued fifteen cases before the Supreme Court—all before reaching the age of 40. He richly deserves the unanimous "well qualified" rating the American Bar Association bestowed on him—the organization's highest possible evaluation.

But Miguel Estrada is more than just a talented lawyer. He represents the potential of a growing population and what is possible in the United States. A native of Honduras, Mr. Estrada arrived in the United States at age 17, unable to speak much English. Just five years later he had graduated from Columbia University, and five years after that he was clerking for a Justice of the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Estrada's own journey from immigrant to successful attorney has inspired him to devote much of his career to serving his fellow Americans. Both in government service and in private practice, he has sought to ensure that all citizens receive the law's fullest protections and benefits, whether they are death-row inmates, abortion clinics targeted by violent protestors, or inner-city residents victimized by gang violence.

Never has a judicial nominee that has been voted out of the Judiciary Committee has been filibustered in the Senate. Estrada's opponents can only argue that he is a Hispanic in name only and is an ideologue. This is absolute non-sense.

725 Massachusetts Avenue, N.E. • Washington, DC 20002 • 202-546-0008

How can they call him an ideologue when Ron Klein, the former Chief of Staff of Vice President Gore, and Clinton's Solicitor General have called him "an extraordinary legal talent" and 'genuinely compassionate". But how can any U.S. Senator threaten to kill this nomination arguing with a straight face that Mr. Estrada does not understand or represent the values of our community? Under normal circumstances, this argument would be so absurd that we would have ignored it. But under the current partisan environment, we cannot stand by and allow them to use unprecedented tactics to kill this nomination just to score political points.

The Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), The Latino Coalition, the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the American Association for the Advancement of Mexican Americans, MANA – a national Latina organization, and the Mexican American Grocers Association are among the hundreds of Hispanic organizations supporting the nomination of Miguel Estrada.

Miguel Estrada is a perfect example of an American success story, who deserves an up or down vote on the Senate floor. He brings to the court a distinguished legal record based on his many years of work in the public and private sector. Mr. Estrada also brings a unique perspective and human experience understood only by those who have migrated to a foreign land as a teenager not knowing the language.

It is for this cultural depth and his unique legal qualifications that on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country, we urge the leadership of both parties in the U.S. Senate to put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land.

I have two suggestions:
(1) I would delete "except in unique circumstances like the September 11 attacks," from the second paragraph of the DOJ views, as that invites questions as to why other terrorist attacks are different.
(2) My inclination would be for DOJ to take a position on the attorneys fee provision rather than merely noting the ambiguity. I would suggest changing the last paragraph to something like:
"Finally, the proposed amendment, unlike the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, would limit 'fees paid for legal services.'
The Department notes that the Fund does not provide payments for attorneys fees. Thus, the Department would construe the language in the proposed amendment as limiting the amount attorneys can draw from a claimants' award from the Fund. The limitation on attorneys, fees for those pursuing litigation would need to be interpreted by the courts."

The language of the amend:

"Sec. ___. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, United States citizens who suffered death or physical harm as a result of the bombings of the Untied embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998, or the World Trade Center in 1998, or as a result of the attack on the U.S.S. Cole on October 12, 2000, or as a result of the bombing of the national Guard's Program Management Office in Saudi Arabia on November 13, 1995, or the representatives of any of the aforementioned persons, shall be eligible for compensation from the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 [citation omitted] to the extent and under the same conditions as the victims of the September 11, 2001 tragedies, provided that fees paid for legal services shall not exceed 20% of any compensation award for an administrative resolution or 25% in case of litigation; and provided further, that any claim for such compensation must be filed within one year of the date of enactment of this section."

Justice's Views

The proposed amendment to the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 (the "Fund") would expand the application of the Fund to include victims (or their representatives) who are citizens of the Untied States and suffered death or physical harm as a result of the bombings of the United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998, or the World Trade Center in 1998, or as a result of the attack on the U.S.S. Cole on October 12, 2000. If the Fund were expanded to include these victims of terrorism, the Department believes the Fund would not effectively serve the initial goals for its enactment.

The Department believes that the compensation program envisioned by the proposed amendment would not provide victims with fair and expeditious compensation. For one, the bill would provide different levels of compensation to high-income victims than it would to victims with lower incomes. The Department believes, except in unique circumstances like the September 11 attacks, every victim should receive a set amount of compensation, similar to the federal no-fault benefit for public safety officers killed in the line of duty (42 U.S.C. 3796). The need for a prompt compensation process further weighs against providing different amounts to different victims based upon their individual financial circumstances, as envisioned under the proposed amendment, because any program with differential awards necessarily would require a burdensome and fact-intensive administrative claims process. Any claims process resulting from a new (or amended) federal compensation program should be quick, streamlined, and as simple as possible, in order to help victims' families in their time of need.

Finally, the Fund does not provide for federal subsidization of attorneys' fees, nor does it establish any limitations on the amount an attorney can collect from a claimant. With that as background, the last provision of the proposed amendment related to attorneys' fees is unclear. Specifically, it is unclear whether the proposed amendment envisions the federal government paying the attorneys' fees of claimants entering the Fund, or, rather, whether it limits the amount attorneys can draw from a claimants' award, which otherwise would not include amounts for attorneys' fees. The limitiation on attorneys' fees for those pursuing litigation is equally unclear. Accordingly, the Department would need clarification on this provision before providing any substantive comments.

With devotion to the president and the office, Alberto Gonzales '82 tackles the complications and controversies of the White House counsel's job

by Lewis Rice <mailto:lrice@law.harvard.edu>

Alberto Gonzales '82 (in his West Wing office) advises President Bush on all legal issues concerning the president and the White House.

Alberto Gonzales '82 was back in Texas not long after he left for his first job outside his home state. He stood at the front of a lecture hall at Rice University, where as a youngster he had sold soft drinks in the football stadium. Now it was his alma mater, and he was a local boy made good, made famous even. And he spoke about who had made him good, who had made him famous. He was answering a question he gets a lot, about who his heroes are, and he answered it--at least at first--in a way a lot of people do. Though he had more reason than most to choose as heroes his parents: natives of Mexico with little education or money, who raised eight children in a two-bedroom house and, he noted, not once asked for help from the government. But he also called his boss a hero. It may sound self-serving, he said, but that doesn't make it untrue. For he has seen his boss, who happens to be the president of the United States, not only as an employer, but as a statesman, a father, a friend, a mentor.

That admiration and respect for George W. Bush infuse everything Gonzales does in a job that is as unpredictable as it is demanding: the White House counsel, the lawyer for the president and for the presidency, a person with an imprint on almost everything that originates from the seat of executive power. The job has catapulted Gonzales to the center of attention and contention on such issues as judicial nominations, Iraq and executive privilege. It is the fourth time he has taken a job at the behest of Bush, his fourth once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, he says. And the Washington chatter indicates that it may not be the last: Gonzales, many say, is a leading contender to fill the next vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court. Such talk is flattering, Gonzales says, but he has enough to worry about now.

He painstakingly outlines those concerns in his speech, listing nine responsibilities of the job, including vetting people appointed to work in the White House, drafting legislation, monitoring litigation in the Department of Justice, developing policy, offering legal advice on national security matters and chairing the White House judicial selection committee. Then there are the responsibilities that can't be anticipated, of which he's had many.

Sometimes the job seems to entail, more than anything, responding to the crisis of the moment, he says in an interview with the Bulletin. He's there in the meetings that drive the White House operation, answering legal questions when they come up. And there are times when he practices very little law. But his most crucial function, he says, is simply to be there for the person at whose pleasure he serves.

"For me, the most important part of this job is being able to work for this president based upon my relationship with him, and that is what makes this job so special for me--being able to help him in an extraordinarily difficult time," said Gonzales. "It is a tremendously burdensome position. Everything that I say, everything that I do publicly, is monitored, is analyzed, is cataloged away for future reference."

Put another way, the job can be "one damn thing after another," as a White House counsel for Ronald Reagan once described it. But that's not the kind of language or tone Gonzales would use; during a visit to his West Wing office, he shows why people who work with him call him "the judge," a formal title from his stint as a Texas Supreme Court justice but also an affectionate description of a courtly manner: polite, soft-spoken, reflective. He describes himself as mild-mannered, as do those who know him. But that mildness should not be mistaken for weakness, nor should his lack of wordiness be taken as lack of conviction, says Viet Dinh '93, who has worked closely with Gonzales as head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy.

"He is a very effective leader because he has a quiet resolve--he provides leadership and does it through consensus rather than steamrolling," said Dinh. "Any fear that his consensus is not backed by leadership is misplaced because behind the congenial operating manner is a very clear vision and very good leadership style."

That style has helped him negotiate the many shared responsibilities of the Justice Department and the counsel's office, says Dinh, who crafted the USA Patriot Act and credits Gonzales as "critical to its passage." Just as they did to everyone else in the administration, the attacks of 9/11 turned Gonzales' focus to anti-terror measures and thrust him into the debate over a possible war with Iraq. Over the summer, the counsel reportedly advised the president that congressional approval was not required to take action against Iraq. But on the same day in October that the president would sign the joint congressional resolution authorizing him to use force against Iraq if necessary, Gonzales would rather talk about the drafting of the language in the counsel's office and the series of meetings with staff and leadership in Congress that led to agreement. The point, said Gonzales, is that the president decided to go to Congress to get authorization. And he got it done.

President Bush returns to the White House on Sept. 11, 2001, followed by Karen Hughes, then White House counselor, and Gonzales.

Gonzales will always credit the president first, not least for leading him to the place he is today. Many people with much more privileged backgrounds don't get the same opportunities, but he has, he says, because one person believed in him.

"I owe all that, really, to the president," said Gonzales. "Sometimes life works out that way; there is really no good explanation. All you can do is prepare yourself, get a good education, get good training, and the next time the next George W. Bush comes along, you're there and you're ready, and that person could turn the tables for you."

Gonzales began the training for his career after serving in the U.S. Air Force, attending the Air Force Academy and getting his bachelor's degree from Rice. He had never seen Harvard Law School before arriving as a student in the summer of 1979. That first day, he remembers riding a 10-speed bike and parking in front of Langdell Hall, and feeling joy and pride and even awe at being a part of such a place. But soon enough came another feeling, one not as often associated with students at HLS. He felt comfortable. It helped that he was older than many other students, and it helped to realize that it wouldn't be the end of the world if he didn't make straight A's (which was a good thing because he didn't). He hung around with a group of students who shared his feeling of calm and feeling of good fortune, people who knew they would get great jobs, were there to learn but also to enjoy themselves. They knew the world, eventually, would come to them.

It did to Gonzales in the form of an offer from Vinson & Elkins in Houston. He worked there on corporate transactions, aiming for partnership. He even declined a job offer from George H.W. Bush to serve in his administration in Washington. It was a low-level position, and Gonzales saw better opportunities ahead if he stayed and made partner.

He proved himself on a public offering that took half a year and involved local counsels in more than a dozen states, according to Robert Baird '69, a partner at Vinson & Elkins. Gonzales was a "get-the-job-done kind of guy," said Baird, working hard and showing sound judgment. Just as important, however, was the way he did it.

"Being the kind of gentleman that Al is," he said, "is probably the most effective way to approach the situation, because most corporate transaction projects are projects where different constituencies with different interests are working together toward a common end, and there is a lot of persuasion involved. So if you get everybody on your team and you get everyone working in parallel, the transaction goes so much more smoothly. I think Al, with his personality, is superb at that. And I would guess that quality is extremely important in the kind of arena that he is playing in now."

Gonzales eventually did make partner and made a good living at it. So some people questioned whether it really was a better opportunity when Texas Gov. George W. Bush, then a political newcomer, asked him to serve as his general counsel at the recommendation of local attorneys. But he wanted to do something different, wanted to go into public service and, though he didn't know Bush well then, saw his chance to do something important. After three years in the counsel job, he went on to serve as Texas secretary of state and a justice on the Supreme Court of Texas. Over the years, Gonzales says, he and Bush have built a good relationship. The president, he says, is comfortable with his style of providing advice. One of the first things Bush did after he became president-elect was ask Gonzales, with his wife and three boys, to come with him to Washington. Gonzales didn't really need to think about it. "I am not sure that there will ever be a job that I would say 'no' to, if he asked me to do it," he said.

The words "first" and "Hispanic" cling to Gonzales in life and on the page. They are used in the typical summary of him: the first Hispanic White House counsel, the first Hispanic partner at his firm, a leading candidate to become the first Hispanic justice on the Supreme Court (though, depending on how one defines the term, Benjamin Cardozo, a Sephardic Jew of Portuguese descent who served on the high court from 1932 to 1938, may actually have been the first Hispanic justice). Throughout Gonzales' career, he has belonged to Hispanic organizations, serving as president of the Houston Hispanic Bar Association and chairman of the Republican National Hispanic Assembly of Harris County, Texas. In 1999, the Hispanic National Bar Association gave him the Latino Lawyer of the Year award.

His heritage is important to him and also important to a president who has emphasized including people of all backgrounds and ethnicities in his administration, Gonzales says. When the White House counsel wrote an op-ed in the Washington Post in September advocating for Miguel Estrada's ('86) confirmation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit (the confirmation was stalled in committee last year), he noted that Estrada "is an inspiration to Hispanics and to all Americans." Many people do feel special pride in seeing someone who looks like them in positions of prominence, he says.

"It is true that, for some Americans, they couldn't care less that I am Hispanic, doing this job. What they care about is that the job gets done right," he said. "But I am always very mindful that for another segment of the population, there is a special pride that someone named Gonzales is advising the president of the United States on legal issues."

But he also is quick to note that there is no Hispanic way to judge a case or to do a job, and that, while it pleases Bush when a well-qualified person may also happen to be Hispanic or another minority, merit will always be the priority for the president. Gonzales agrees, and that's why he says he doesn't concern himself with debates on whether he got this far because of his heritage. It's what he has done with the opportunities that matters, he says.

Judging that, of course, may depend largely on what you think of what President Bush has done in office. Gonzales doesn't like to talk about the advice he's given to the president, but he has helped guide Bush through legal questions surrounding the war on terrorism, such as military tribunals and detaining suspects without counsel. Tribunals, Gonzales said, "would provide basic rights to terrorists, but they would be structured in a way which would ensure the continued protection of the national security of this country." And in every war this country has fought, he says, people have been detained without access to a lawyer, even if they are American citizens. "I think legally we are right, and that will be confirmed in the courts," said Gonzales. "[But] maybe we need to do a better job of educating the American public about what we are doing here and the need for that course of action."

Though his office tries to find ways to allow the president to do what he believes needs to be done to protect the country, there are times, Gonzales says, when he has to tell the president what he doesn't want to hear. An effective White House counsel is one who can say "no" to his boss. That has happened occasionally, particularly on questions of executive privilege. People have criticized the secrecy of this White House, but that charge is leveled against most administrations, he says. The White House has released most documents that Congress has requested, Gonzales says, and has reached agreement on releasing some disputed records, such as those detailing the administration's contacts with Enron. In addition, the president may want to turn over communications that, in the opinion of his counsel, should be privileged, and his counsel doesn't hesitate to advise him that he shouldn't. "My job is to protect the institution of the presidency, and so, in that case, my job is to make the president understand that 'by doing this, Mr. President, you'll weaken the institution of the presidency,'" said Gonzales. "This president has great respect for that institution, so when someone tells him that it weakens it, he considers that very, very seriously."

Gonzales also advises the president on the judiciary, an institution of government that he fears has been weakened by the Senate's failure to fill a number of vacancies. Indeed, by the end of November the Senate had confirmed only about half of Bush's circuit court nominees, while it confirmed a much higher percentage for recent presidents in their first two years in office. The dearth of confirmations and the long delays in hearings for many nominees are frustrating, he acknowledges. Particularly unfortunate, he says, was the failed 5th Circuit nomination last year of Priscilla Owen, with whom he served on the Supreme Court of Texas. (In January, she was renominated to the appeals court.) Her critics cited Gonzales' own words in an abortion case, in which he characterized Owen's interpretation of a statute as an "unconscionable act of judicial activism," as evidence of her unfitness for the court of appeals. But disagreement, he notes, should not mean disqualification, a point he made in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Earlier last year, he cited the judicial issue as one key reason that the Republicans needed to take back the Senate in the fall elections. Before the Republican victory, in fact, came to pass, Bush and his counsel unveiled a proposal that would streamline the judicial confirmation process. The initiative calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination and for the full Senate to vote on each nominee within 180 days after the nomination is submitted. "All Americans would see a more dignified process and have their federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and their liberties," Bush said. "And the vacancy crisis would be resolved once and for all."

At its core, the wrangling over judicial nominees exemplifies a fundamental disagreement on what makes a person qualified for the job, according to Gonzales. "That person should come to the bench with no personal agenda to follow," he said. "Certain Democrats on the Judiciary Committee believe that judges do come with a personal agenda. . . . [They] ask, 'What are your personal beliefs about an issue?' because they believe that that is going to impact your decision making as a judge. I think that that is wholly inappropriate; I think it is wrong for a judge to pursue a personal agenda, and their own personal beliefs, in my judgment, are wholly irrelevant to how they should do their job as a judge."

He believed the same when he was a judge. And he has been criticized for it by people in his own party, as in the abortion case in which he differed from Owen. In that opinion, he ruled with the majority to overturn a lower court ruling, thereby allowing a minor to have an abortion without parental consent. In doing so, he was following the law, not his own values, he wrote: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the Court's decision may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the Legislature."

That deference to legislative intent pervaded Gonzales' time on the bench, according to Supreme Court of Texas Chief Justice Thomas Phillips ' 74. For example, Gonzales' opinion in another case, Fitzgerald v. Advanced Spine Fixation Systems, reads as a "paean to strict statutory construction," he said.

Gonzales' decisions "show an equal disdain for activism, regardless of what side of the political spectrum it comes from," Phillips said. "I never saw anything inconsistent on that, and I never had any sense that he was casting any votes based on whether somebody--a former employee, a contributor, a friend who was governor or anybody else--would approve or disapprove."

On the court, Gonzales was soft-spoken, not confrontational, said Phillips: "He tried to prevail through reason rather than intimidation." Perhaps it is a testimony to that style that the case Phillips cites to praise his former colleague is one in which he took the opposite side.

Kenneth Starr's book about the Rehnquist court, "First Among Equals," lies on a shelf outside Gonzales' office on the day of the interview. Whether Gonzales will be a member of that court is a topic of much speculation. But of course no one who has any say in the matter, least of all Gonzales himself, is talking about it. Viet Dinh, who helps recommend judges to the president, was asked what he would think of a candidate for the Supreme Court with Judge Gonzales' credentials. He laughed and laughed at the question, and he didn't stop laughing until he said goodbye.

Such talk is not a distraction to Gonzales at all, he says. There is nothing he can do about it, and he is a person who focuses on what he can do. But he does worry about something, on top of the worries inherent in his current role. He wonders what he will do next after his job in the White House is done, what will be as exciting and satisfying. After all, how many once-in-a-lifetime opportunities can one person have?

The Loyalist

With devotion to the president and the office, Alberto Gonzales '82 tackles the complications and controversies of the White House counsel's job

by Lewis Rice

Alberto Gonzales

Alberto Gonzales '82 (in his West Wing office) advises President Bush on all legal issues concerning the president and the White House.

Alberto Gonzales '82 was back in Texas not long after he left for his first job outside his home state. He stood at the front of a lecture hall at Rice University, where as a youngster he had sold soft drinks in the football stadium. Now it was his alma mater, and he was a local boy made good, made famous even. And he spoke about who had made him good, who had made him famous. He was answering a question he gets a lot, about who his heroes are, and he answered it--at least at first--in a way a lot of people do. Though he had more reason than most to choose as heroes his parents: natives of Mexico with little education or money, who raised eight children in a two-bedroom house and, he noted, not once asked for help from the government. But he also called his boss a hero. It may sound self-serving, he said, but that doesn't make it untrue. For he has seen his boss, who happens to be the president of the United States, not only as an employer, but as a statesman, a father, a friend, a mentor.

That admiration and respect for George W. Bush infuse everything Gonzales does in a job that is as unpredictable as it is demanding: the White House counsel, the lawyer for the president and for the presidency, a person with an imprint on almost everything that originates from the seat of executive power. The job has catapulted Gonzales to the center of attention and contention on such issues as judicial nominations, Iraq and executive privilege. It is the fourth time he has taken a job at the behest of Bush, his fourth once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, he says. And the Washington chatter indicates that it may not be the last: Gonzales, many say, is a leading contender to fill the next vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court. Such talk is flattering, Gonzales says, but he has enough to worry about now.

He painstakingly outlines those concerns in his speech, listing nine responsibilities of the job, including vetting people appointed to work in the White House, drafting legislation, monitoring litigation in the Department of Justice, developing policy, offering legal advice on national security matters and chairing the White House judicial selection committee. Then there are the responsibilities that can't be anticipated, of which he's had many.

Sometimes the job seems to entail, more than anything, responding to the crisis of the moment, he says in an interview with the Bulletin. He's there in the meetings that drive the White House operation, answering legal questions when they come up. And there are times when he practices very little law. But his most crucial function, he says, is simply to be there for the person at whose pleasure he serves.

"For me, the most important part of this job is being able to work for this president based upon my relationship with him, and that is what makes this job so special for me--being able to help him in an extraordinarily difficult time," said Gonzales. "It is a tremendously burdensome position. Everything that I say, everything that I do publicly, is monitored, is analyzed, is cataloged away for future reference."

Put another way, the job can be "one damn thing after another," as a White House counsel for Ronald Reagan once described it. But that's not the kind of language or tone Gonzales would use; during a visit to his West Wing office, he shows why people who work with him call him "the judge," a formal title from his stint as a Texas Supreme Court justice but also an affectionate description of a courtly manner: polite, soft-spoken, reflective. He describes himself as mild-mannered, as do those who know him. But that mildness should not be mistaken for weakness, nor should his lack of wordiness be taken as lack of conviction, says Viet Dinh '93, who has worked closely with Gonzales as head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy.

"He is a very effective leader because he has a quiet resolve--he provides leadership and does it through consensus rather than steamrolling," said Dinh. "Any fear that his consensus is not backed by leadership is misplaced because behind the congenial operating manner is a very clear vision and very good leadership style."

That style has helped him negotiate the many shared responsibilities of the Justice Department and the counsel's office, says Dinh, who crafted the USA Patriot Act and credits Gonzales as "critical to its passage." Just as they did to everyone else in the administration, the attacks of 9/11 turned Gonzales' focus to anti-terror measures and thrust him into the debate over a possible war with Iraq. Over the summer, the counsel reportedly advised the president that congressional approval was not required to take action against Iraq. But on the same day in October that the president would sign the joint congressional resolution authorizing him to use force against Iraq if necessary, Gonzales would rather talk about the drafting of the language in the counsel's office and the series of meetings with staff and leadership in Congress that led to agreement. The point, said Gonzales, is that the president decided to go to Congress to get authorization. And he got it done.

President Bush followed byKaren Hughes and Gonzales

President Bush returns to the White House on Sept. 11, 2001, followed by Karen Hughes, then White House counselor, and Gonzales.

Gonzales will always credit the president first, not least for leading him to the place he is today. Many people with much more privileged backgrounds don't get the same opportunities, but he has, he says, because one person believed in him.

"I owe all that, really, to the president," said Gonzales. "Sometimes life works out that way; there is really no good explanation. All you can do is prepare yourself, get a good education, get good training, and the next time the next George W. Bush comes along, you're there and you're ready, and that person could turn the tables for you."

Gonzales began the training for his career after serving in the U.S. Air Force, attending the Air Force Academy and getting his bachelor's degree from Rice. He had never seen Harvard Law School before arriving as a student in the summer of 1979. That first day, he remembers riding a 10-speed bike and parking in front of Langdell Hall, and feeling joy and pride and even awe at being a part of such a place. But soon enough came another feeling, one not as often associated with students at HLS. He felt comfortable. It helped that he was older than many other students, and it helped to realize that it wouldn't be the end of the world if he didn't make straight A's (which was a good thing because he didn't). He hung around with a group of students who shared his feeling of calm and feeling of good fortune, people who knew they would get great jobs, were there to learn but also to enjoy themselves. They knew the world, eventually, would come to them.

It did to Gonzales in the form of an offer from Vinson & Elkins in Houston. He worked there on corporate transactions, aiming for partnership. He even declined a job offer from George H.W. Bush to serve in his administration in Washington. It was a low-level position, and Gonzales saw better opportunities ahead if he stayed and made partner.

He proved himself on a public offering that took half a year and involved local counsels in more than a dozen states, according to Robert Baird '69, a partner at Vinson & Elkins. Gonzales was a "get-the-job-done kind of guy," said Baird, working hard and showing sound judgment. Just as important, however, was the way he did it.

"Being the kind of gentleman that Al is," he said, "is probably the most effective way to approach the situation, because most corporate transaction projects are projects where different constituencies with different interests are working together toward a common end, and there is a lot of persuasion involved. So if you get everybody on your team and you get everyone working in parallel, the transaction goes so much more smoothly. I think Al, with his personality, is superb at that. And I would guess that quality is extremely important in the kind of arena that he is playing in now."

Gonzales eventually did make partner and made a good living at it. So some people questioned whether it really was a better opportunity when Texas Gov. George W. Bush, then a political newcomer, asked him to serve as his general counsel at the recommendation of local attorneys. But he wanted to do something different, wanted to go into public service and, though he didn't know Bush well then, saw his chance to do something important. After three years in the counsel job, he went on to serve as Texas secretary of state and a justice on the Supreme Court of Texas. "I am not sure that there will ever be a job that I would say 'no' to, if he asked me to do it," he said.

The words "first" and "Hispanic" cling to Gonzales in life and on the page. They are used in the typical summary of him: the first Hispanic White House counsel, the first Hispanic partner at his firm, a leading candidate to become the first Hispanic justice on the Supreme Court (though, depending on how one defines the term, Benjamin Cardozo, a Sephardic Jew of Portuguese descent who served on the high court from 1932 to 1938, may actually have been the first Hispanic justice). Throughout Gonzales' career, he has belonged to Hispanic organizations, serving as president of the Houston Hispanic Bar Association and chairman of the Republican National Hispanic Assembly of Harris County, Texas. In 1999, the Hispanic National Bar Association gave him the Latino Lawyer of the Year award.

His heritage is important to him and also important to a president who has emphasized including people of all backgrounds and ethnicities in his administration, Gonzales says. new letter sent to Senate today:

The Honorable Thomas A. Daschle

Senate Minority Leader

Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Daschle:

As the Chief Operating Officer of the American GI Forum of the United States (AGIF) located in Washington, DC, I am writing to call on the Senate to confirm Miguel A. Estrada for the position of United States Circuit Judge for the District of Columbia.

The AGIF is the only Hispanic congressionally chartered veterans' organization representing more than 1.5 million Hispanic veterans and their families with more than 500 chapters in the United States and Puerto Rico. The AGIF has been actively involved with veterans' legislative issues, education and civil rights since its founding in 1948.

Mr. Estrada, who came to the United States from his native Honduras at age 17, has an impressive judicial background. He is currently a partner with Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, where he is a member of the firm's Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group and the Business Crimes and Investigations Practice Group and has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mr. Estrada has proven he has the judicial skills to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. He served as a Law Clerk for the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy, Supreme Court of the United States. He also served as an assistant to the Solicitor General and served both the Democrat and Republican Administrations. He attended Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the Harvard Law Review and received a J.D. degree magna cum laude in 1986 and graduated from Columbia College in New York with an A.B. magna cum laude.

When confirmed, Mr. Estrada will become the first Hispanic to sit on the D.C. Circuit Court. The confirmation of this historic appointment will help open doors for more Hispanic Judges.

The American GI Forum of the United States urges the Senate to confirm Miguel A. Estrada to fill a vacancy on the Unites States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Sincerely,

Samuel Calderon

Chief Operating Officer

He obviously liked Judge's letter to Feinstein:

The White House Case for Miguel Estrada

A final attempt to correct the record.

Senate debate is set to begin today on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a place on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is still not clear whether Democrats will attempt to block a vote on Estrada, who won approval from the Senate Judiciary Committee last week on a straight party-line vote. On Monday, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales sent a letter to Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein in a last attempt to gain her support — if not for the nomination itself, then at least for allowing a full-Senate vote. Although the letter is framed as an effort to correct some of the "inaccurate or incomplete information" that Feinstein has cited in her opposition to Estrada, it is in fact the most concise and effective argument the White House has yet made for the nomination. What follows is the full text of the Gonzales letter.

— Byron York

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

"states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."

"[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."

"[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."

"[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."

"[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views - or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

LATINO COALITION FOR MIGUEL ESTRADA

February 4, 2003

Dear Senator:

At a time of a serious judicial vacancy crisis in our country, it is simply disingenuous that the Senate Democratic leadership is threatening to filibuster a nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals, who received a unanimous "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association.

On May 9, 2001, President Bush nominated Miguel A. Estrada to fill a vacancy on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Mr. Estrada would be the first Hispanic in history to sit on that court, which is widely viewed as the most important and prestigious Court of Appeals in the nation. No wonder George Herrera, President and Chief Executive Officer of the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, concludes that "Estrada's nomination can be a historic event for the Hispanic community. Latinos in this country have worked hard to break the barriers and obstacles that have stood in our way for too long and we now have the opportunity to do so. Estrada's appointment will also be a role model for Latino youth by demonstrating that a Latino can be appointed to one of the highest courts in the nation." He is just one of the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic grassroots organizations that are enthusiastically supporting his nomination, not just because he is Hispanic, but because he is superbly qualified.

Mr. Estrada is unique in another respect, too. As his colleagues can attest, both conservatives and liberals alike, Mr. Estrada is one of the most brilliant and effective appellate lawyers in the country. Having worked at the Justice Department under Republican and Democratic Administrations, he has demonstrated a commitment to upholding the integrity of the law and a dedication to public service. During his career, he has argued fifteen cases before the Supreme Court—all before reaching the age of 40. He richly deserves the unanimous "well qualified" rating the American Bar Association bestowed on him—the organization's highest possible evaluation.

But Miguel Estrada is more than just a talented lawyer. He represents the potential of a growing population and what is possible in the United States. A native of Honduras, Mr. Estrada arrived in the United States at age 17, unable to speak much English. Just five years later he had graduated from Columbia University, and five years after that he was clerking for a Justice of the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Estrada's own journey from immigrant to successful attorney has inspired him to devote much of his career to serving his fellow Americans. Both in government service and in private practice, he has sought to ensure that all citizens receive the law's fullest protections and benefits, whether they are death-row inmates, abortion clinics targeted by violent protestors, or inner-city residents victimized by gang violence.

Never has a judicial nominee that has been voted out of the Judiciary Committee been successfully filibustered in the Senate. Estrada's opponents can only argue that he is a Hispanic in name only and is an ideologue. This is absolute non-sense.

How can they call him an ideologue when prominent Democrats like Ron Klain, the former Chief of Staff of Vice President Gore, and Seth Waxman, Clinton's Solicitor General support him? Klain calls Estrada "an extraordinary legal talent" and 'genuinely compassionate". But how can any U.S. Senator threaten to kill this nomination arguing with a straight face that Mr. Estrada does not understand or represent the values of our community? Under normal circumstances, this argument would be so absurd that we would have ignored it. But under the current partisan environment, we cannot stand by and allow them to use unprecedented tactics to kill this nomination just to score political points.

The Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), The Latino Coalition, the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the American Association for the Advancement of Mexican Americans, MANA – a national Latina organization, and the Mexican American Grocers Association are among the hundreds of Hispanic organizations supporting the nomination of Miguel Estrada.

Miguel Estrada is a perfect example of an American success story, who deserves an up or down vote on the Senate floor. He brings to the court a distinguished legal record based on his many years of work in the public and private sector. Mr. Estrada also brings a unique perspective and human experience understood only by those who have migrated to a foreign land as a teenager not knowing the language.

It is for this cultural depth and his unique legal qualifications that on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country, we urge the leadership of both parties in the U.S. Senate to put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land.

The White House Case for Miguel Estrada

A final attempt to correct the record.

Senate debate is set to begin today on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a place on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is still not clear whether Democrats will attempt to block a vote on Estrada, who won approval from the Senate Judiciary Committee last week on a straight party-line vote. On Monday, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales sent a letter to Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein in a last attempt to gain her support — if not for the nomination itself, then at least for allowing a full-Senate vote. Although the letter is framed as an effort to correct some of the "inaccurate or incomplete information" that Feinstein has cited in her opposition to Estrada, it is in fact the most concise and effective argument the White House has yet made for the nomination. What follows is the full text of the Gonzales letter.

— Byron York

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:
I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. Jack Straw Addresses The United Nations 02/05/03

STRAW: Mr. President, may I, like the foreign minister for China, congratulate Germany on taking the presidency of the Security Council and congratulate you personally on assuming the chair this morning.

Mr. President, we've just heard a most powerful and authoritative case against the Iraqi regime set out by United States Secretary of State Powell. The international community owes him its thanks for laying bare the deceit practiced by the regime of Saddam Hussein, and worse, the very great danger which that regime represents.

Three months ago, we united to send Iraq an uncompromising message: Cooperate fully with weapons inspectors or face disarmament by force.

After years of Iraqi deception, when resolutions were consistently flouted, Resolution 1441 was a powerful reminder of the importance of international law and of the authority of the Security Council itself.

United and determined, we gave Iraq a final opportunity to rid itself of its weapons of mass terror; of gasses which can poison thousands in one go; of bacilli and viruses like anthrax and smallpox, which can disable and kill by the tens of thousands; of the means to make nuclear weapons, which can kill by the million.

By Resolution 1441, we strengthened inspections massively. The only missing ingredient was full Iraqi compliance--immediate, full and active cooperation.

And the truth is, and we all know this, without that full and active cooperation, however strong the inspectors' powers, however good the inspectors, inspections in a country as huge as Iraq could never be sure of finding all Iraqi weapons of mass destruction.

Now, Mr. President, sadly, the inspectors' reports last week and Secretary Powell's presentation today can leave us under no illusions about Saddam Hussein's response. Saddam Hussein holds United Nations Security Council Resolution 1441 in the same contempt as all previous resolutions in respect of Iraq.

And let us reflect on what that means: That Saddam is defying every one of us, every nation here represented. He questions our resolve and is gambling that we will lose our nerve rather than enforce our will.

Paragraph 1 of 1441 said that Saddam was and remained in material breach of Security Council resolutions. Paragraph 4 of 1441 then set two clear tests for a further material breach by Iraq.

First, that Iraq must not make false statements or omissions in its declaration. But the Iraqi document submitted to us on the 7th of December, as we've heard from Secretary Powell, was long on repetition but short on fact. It was neither full nor accurate nor complete. And by anyone's definition, it was a false statement. Its central premise, that Iraq possesses no weapons of mass destruction, is a lie.

STRAW: This outright lie was repeated yesterday on television by Saddam Hussein.

And the declaration also has obvious omissions, not least in the failure to explain what has happened to the large quantities of chemical and biological weapons material and munitions unaccounted for by U.N. weapons inspectors in 1998.

And there is no admission of Iraq's extensive efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction since the last round of UNSCOM inspections ended in December 1998.

Mr. President, paragraph 4 goes on to set a second test for a further material breach; namely, and I quote, ``a failure by Iraq at any time to comply with and to cooperate fully in the implementation of Resolution 1441.''

Following the presentation by the inspectors last week and today's briefing by Secretary Powell, it is clear that Iraq has failed this test. These briefings have confirmed our worst fears: that Iraq has no intention of relinquishing its weapons of mass destruction, no intention of following the path of peaceful disarmament set out in Security Council Resolution 1441.

Instead of open admissions and transparency, we have a charade where a veneer of superficial cooperation masks willful concealment, the extent of which has been devastatingly revealed this morning by Secretary Powell.

Mr. President, in his report last week, Dr. Blix set out a number of instances where Iraqi behavior reveals a determination to avoid compliance.

Why is Iraq refusing to allow UNMOVIC to use a U-2 plane to conduct aerial imagery and surveillance operations? When will Iraq account for the 6,500 bombs which could carry up to 1,000 tons of chemical agent? How will Iraq justify having a prohibited chemical precursor for mustard gas. But how will Iraq explain the concealment of nuclear documents and the development of a missile program in clear contravention of United Nations resolutions?

And there is, Mr. President, only one possible conclusion from all of this, which is that Iraq is in further material breach as set out in United Nations Security Council Resolution 1441. And I believe that all colleagues here, all members will share our deep sense of frustration that Iraq is choosing to spurn this final opportunity to achieve a peaceful outcome.

Mr. President, given what has to follow and the difficult choice now facing us, it would be easy to turn a blind eye to the wording of Resolution 1441 and hope for a change of heart by Iraq. Easy but wrong, because if we did so, we would be repeating the mistakes of the past 12 years and empowering a dictator who believes that his diseases and poison gases are essential weapons to suppress his own people and to threaten his neighbors and that by defiance of the United Nations he can indefinitely hoodwink the world.

Mr. President, under the French presidency two weeks ago, we had a special session on the dangers of international terrorism, which I greatly welcomed, that session, of the grave danger to the world of terrorists acquiring weapons of mass destruction through the connivance of rogue states.

Secretary Powell has today set out deeply worrying reports about the presence in Iraq of one of Osama bin Laden's lieutenants, al-Zaqawi (ph), and other members of Al Qaida and their efforts to develop poisons.

STRAW: It defies imagination that all of this could be going on without the knowledge of Saddam Hussein. And the recent discovery of the poison ricin in London has underlined again that this is a threat which all of us face.

Mr. President, Saddam must be left in no doubt as to the serious consequences and the serious situation which he now faces. The United Kingdom does not want war. What we want is for the United Nations system to be upheld.

But the logic of Resolution 1441 is inescapable. Time is now very short. This council will have further reports from the inspectors on Friday week, the 14th of February. If noncooperation continues, this council must meet its responsibilities.

Mr. President, our world faces many threats, from poverty and disease to civil war and terrorism. Working through this great institution, we have the capacity to tackle these challenges together. But if we are to do so, then the decisions we have to take must have a force beyond mere words.

This is a moment of choice for Saddam and for the Iraqi regime, but it is also a moment of choice for this institution, the United Nations.

The United Nations' pre-war predecessor, the League of Nations, had the same fine ideals as the United Nations, but the league failed because it could not create actions from its words. It could not back diplomacy with a credible threat and where necessary, the use of force.

So small evils went unchecked. Tyrants became emboldened. Then greater evils were unleashed.

At each stage good men said, ``Wait, the evil is not big enough to challenge.'' Then before their eyes, the evil became too big to challenge. We slipped slowly down a slope, never noticing how far we had gone until it was too late.

Mr. President, we owe it to our history, as well as to our future, not to make the same mistake again.

Thank you.

IRAQ'S "EVASION AND DECEPTION"
SECRETARY POWELL SPEAKS TO THE U.N. SECURITY COUNCIL

Today, United States Secretary of State Colin Powell presented a thorough and deeply troubling case that Saddam Hussein and his regime:
- Possess weapons of mass destruction;
- Are working to acquire more and more lethal WMD;
- Continue to hide current stocks and procurement efforts;
- Continue to harbor and sponsor terrorists;
- Continue to abuse the human rights of the Iraqi people; and
- Have made no attempt to disarm as required by Security Council Resolution 1441.

The United States presented material from a variety of sources -- U.S. and foreign, human and technical. This represents an unprecedented effort to declassify sensitive material.

The U.S. took this step because Iraq's weapons present real and immediate dangers to the region and the world.

Secretary Powell shared new, detailed information with the Security Council about:

- Iraq's weapons of mass destruction;
- Iraq's systematic efforts to conceal prohibited materials; and
- Iraq's involvement in terrorism.

WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION: DENIAL AND DECEPTION

Secretary Powell's presentation began with audiotapes of intercepted communications.
- In the first, two senior Iraqi officers discuss the need to hide something from inspectors.
- In the second, an officer is directed by headquarters to destroy an order related to inspectors finding "forbidden ammo."

Secretary Powell described the Iraqi concealment effort, headed by Iraq's Vice President Ramadan.

Secretary Powell showed satellite photos of increased activity at several weapons sites, including clear signs that chemical and biological agents were being moved, presumably to thwart inspectors.

He also detailed Iraq's efforts to block interviews with Iraqi scientists, which include public accusations that the inspectors are spies and private death threats to potential witnesses and their families.

BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS

Dr. Blix has recently confirmed that Iraq has not accounted for large quantities of biological agents based on evidence from UNSCOM before inspections ended in 1998 (up to 25,000 liters of anthrax and 38,000 liters of botulinum toxin).

We have firsthand descriptions of biological weapons factories on wheels and rails. There are at least seven such factories.- Together, they can produce in a matter of months more biological agent than Iraq admitted to producing before the Gulf War.
- They are mobile, to evade inspectors.CHEMICAL WEAPONS

As with biological weapons, Iraq has never accounted for vast quantities of chemical weapons, including:
- 550 artillery shells filled with mustard agent;- About 30,000 empty chemical munitions; and
- Enough precursors to produce much as 500 tons of chemical agents.Dr. Blix also recently cited 6,500 unaccounted-for aerial chemical bombs, which would contain around 1,000 tons of chemical agents.

Iraq could not, and did not need to, make its chemical weapons manufacturing mobile. Instead, it is carrying out these activities under the cover of dual-use civilian manufacturing.- Satellite imagery documented transshipment activity of chemical weapons at a site called al-Musayyib. After the transshipment was over, further imagery revealed that the complex was sanitized.

Secretary Powell detailed extensive reporting on covert procurement efforts for chemical and biological agent production. He also played a taped conversation between officers of the 2nd Republican Guard (which oversees the garrison at al-Musayyib). In this conversation, the junior officer is ordered to "remove the expression 'nerve agents'" from wireless instructions.

Secretary Powell cited reports that Iraq has experimented on human beings with chemical or biological agents.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

We know that Saddam has kept together cadres of nuclear scientists and that he has a bomb design.

So far as we know, Iraq lacks fissile material, but is seeking the means to enrich uranium.- Procurement efforts include high specification aluminum tubes for gascentrifuges used to enrich uranium;
- A production plant for magnets suitable in centrifuge work, and- Machines suitable for balancing centrifuge rotors.

Secretary Powell noted that procurement efforts for aluminum tubes have continued past the adoption of Resolution 1441.

The world underestimated Saddam's nuclear program before. Prior to the Gulf War, most allied intelligence agencies estimated that Iraq was at least five years away from developing a nuclear weapon. Information obtained from Iraqi defectors after the Gulf war showed that ? if not for that war ? Iraq could have produced a nuclear weapon by 1993.

DELIVERY SYSTEMS

U.S. intelligence assesses that Iraq retains a force of up to a few dozen prohibited SCUD-variant missiles.

UNSCOM discovered that Iraq had an active Unmanned Arial Vehicle (UAV) program with ties to its chemical and biological weapons programs.

TIES TO TERRORISM - A LONG HISTORY

Secretary Powell was clear: Iraq has been involved with terrorism for decades:- Palestinian terrorist groups, including the Palestine Liberation Front, train in Iraq;
- Saddam funnels money to the families of suicide bombers;- Iraq has hosted conference attended by Palestine Islamic Jihad;
- Hamas opened an office in Baghdad in 1999;- Saddam's Iraqi Intelligence Service (IIS) has been involved in dozens of attacks, planned and/or attempted assassinations since the 1990s, including a worldwide campaign of foiled attacks against U.S. Embassies during the Gulf war and plans to attack Radio Free Europe.

IRAQ AND AL-QAIDA: WHAT WE KNOW TODAY

Iraq harbors a deadly terrorist network headed by senior al-Qaida operative Musab al-Zarqawi -- a Palestinian-Jordanian, and collaborator of Usama Bin Laden.

- We know Zarqawi came to Baghdad in May 2002 for medical treatment.- Zarqawi oversees the cell responsible for the assassination of USAID officer Lawrence Foley in Amman last October.
- Zarqawi directs a poisons/toxins laboratory in northeastern Iraq alongside the radical Islamist organization, Ansar al-Islam. Many of Zarqawi's colleagues remain in Baghdad, where they have been operating for more than 8 months. The network there coordinates the movement of people, money, and supplies into and throughout Iraq.
- Law enforcement and intelligence operations have disrupted Zarqawi's poison plotting in France, Britain, Spain, Italy, Germany, and Russia. A British officer was killed in the raid of the cell which was identified with ricin. In total, at last count, 116 operatives with Zarqawi's network have been arrested.

IRAQ AND AL-QAIDA: HISTORY

Secretary Powell spelled out how Iraq-al-Qaida ties were forged by secret high-level contacts in the 1990s, including at least eight senior level meetings. Their relationship is prompted by mutual hatred for the United States, Israel, the Saudi royal family, and by bin Ladin's interest in both WMD and future safe havens.

As the Secretary said, there is more:

A senior al-Qaida terrorist, now detained, who had been responsible for bin Ladin's training in Afghanistan, reports that al-Qaida was intent on obtaining WMD assistance from Iraq.- According to this source deceased al-Qaida leader Muhammad 'Atif did not believe that al-Qaida labs in Afghanistan were capable enough to manufacture BW and CW.
- He turned to Iraq for assistance.- Iraq agreed to provide chemical and biological weapons training for two al-Qaida associates starting in December 2000.

IRAQ'S DEPLORABLE HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD

Saddam Hussein's regime is unsurpassed in its brutality and viciousness..

What has the international community found and documented?
- The regime practices systemic and indiscriminate torture, detention,disappearance, expulsion, and murder.- Rape is a policy of the Iraqi government, used for torture and intimidation.
- The regime has used chemical weapons against civilians.- The Iraqi regime has more forced disappearance cases than any country in the world.- For two decades, the Iraqi regime has practiced phased terror against the Kurdish people, including the destruction of some 2,000 villages.- Saddam's campaign of ethnic cleansing has displaced some 700,000 people throughout Iraq.- Saddam's unprovoked invasion of Iran in 1980 resulted in an estimated one million Iranians dead, and his 1990 invasion of Kuwait killed at least 1,000 Kuwaitis.

And we cannot forget that it is precisely the totalitarian, oppressive nature of Saddam's regime that enables his deception and continued stockpiling and pursuit of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

IRAQ'S "EVASION AND DECEPTION"
SECRETARY POWELL SPEAKS TO THE U.N. SECURITY COUNCIL

Today, United States Secretary of State Colin Powell presented a thorough and deeply troubling case that Saddam Hussein and his regime:

- Possess weapons of mass destruction;
- Are working to acquire more and more lethal WMD;
- Continue to hide current stocks and procurement efforts;
- Continue to harbor and sponsor terrorists;
- Continue to abuse the human rights of the Iraqi people; and
- Have made no attempt to disarm as required by Security Council Resolution 1441.

The United States presented material from a variety of sources -- U.S. and foreign, human and technical. This represents an unprecedented effort to declassify sensitive material.

The U.S. took this step because Iraq's weapons present real and immediate dangers to the region and the world.

Secretary Powell shared new, detailed information with the Security Council about:

- Iraq's weapons of mass destruction;
- Iraq's systematic efforts to conceal prohibited materials; and
- Iraq's involvement in terrorism.

Weapons of Mass Destruction: Denial and Deception

Secretary Powell's presentation began with audiotapes of intercepted communications.

- In the first, two senior Iraqi officers discuss the need to hide something from inspectors.
- In the second, an officer is directed by headquarters to destroy an order related to inspectors finding "forbidden ammo."

Secretary Powell described the Iraqi concealment effort, headed by Iraq's Vice President Ramadan.

Secretary Powell showed satellite photos of increased activity at several weapons sites, including clear signs that chemical and biological agents were being moved, presumably to thwart inspectors.

He also detailed Iraq's efforts to block interviews with Iraqi scientists, which include public accusations that the inspectors are spies and private death threats to potential witnesses and their families.

Biological Weapons

Dr. Blix has recently confirmed that Iraq has not accounted for large quantities of biological agents based on evidence from UNSCOM before inspections ended in 1998 (up to 25,000 liters of anthrax and 38,000 liters of botulinum toxin).

We have firsthand descriptions of biological weapons factories on wheels and rails. There are at least seven such factories.

- Together, they can produce in a matter of months more biological agent than Iraq admitted to producing before the Gulf War.
- They are mobile, to evade inspectors.

Chemical Weapons

As with biological weapons, Iraq has never accounted for vast quantities of chemical weapons, including:

- 550 artillery shells filled with mustard agent;
- About 30,000 empty chemical munitions; and
- Enough precursors to produce much as 500 tons of chemical agents.

Dr. Blix also recently cited 6,500 unaccounted-for aerial chemical bombs, which would contain around 1,000 tons of chemical agents.

Iraq could not, and did not need to, make its chemical weapons manufacturing mobile. Instead, it is carrying out these activities under the cover of dual-use civilian manufacturing.

- Satellite imagery documented transshipment activity of chemical weapons at a site called al-Musayyib. After the transshipment was over, further imagery revealed that the complex was sanitized.

Secretary Powell detailed extensive reporting on covert procurement efforts for chemical and biological agent production. He also played a taped conversation between officers of the 2nd Republican Guard (which oversees the garrison at al-Musayyib). In this conversation, the junior officer is ordered to "remove the expression 'nerve agents'" from wireless instructions.

Secretary Powell cited reports that Iraq has experimented on human beings with chemical or biological agents.

Nuclear Weapons

We know that Saddam has kept together cadres of nuclear scientists and that he has a bomb design.

So far as we know, Iraq lacks fissile material, but is seeking the means to enrich uranium.

- Procurement efforts include high specification aluminum tubes for gas centrifuges used to enrich uranium;
- A production plant for magnets suitable in centrifuge work, and
- Machines suitable for balancing centrifuge rotors.

Secretary Powell noted that procurement efforts for aluminum tubes have continued past the adoption of Resolution 1441.

The world underestimated Saddam's nuclear program before. Prior to the Gulf War, most allied intelligence agencies estimated that Iraq was at least five years away from developing a nuclear weapon. Information obtained from Iraqi defectors after the Gulf war showed that – if not for that war – Iraq could have produced a nuclear weapon by 1993.

Delivery Systems

U.S. intelligence assesses that Iraq retains a force of up to a few dozen prohibited SCUD-variant missiles.

UNSCOM discovered that Iraq had an active Unmanned Arial Vehicle (UAV) program with ties to its chemical and biological weapons programs.

Ties to Terrorism - A Long History

Secretary Powell was clear: Iraq has been involved with terrorism for decades:

- Palestinian terrorist groups, including the Palestine Liberation Front, train in Iraq;
- Saddam funnels money to the families of suicide bombers;
- Iraq has hosted conference attended by Palestine Islamic Jihad;
- Hamas opened an office in Baghdad in 1999;
- Saddam's Iraqi Intelligence Service (IIS) has been involved in dozens of attacks, planned and/or attempted assassinations since the 1990s, including a worldwide campaign of foiled attacks against U.S. Embassies during the Gulf war and plans to attack Radio Free Europe.

Iraq and Al-Qaida: What We Know Today

Iraq harbors a deadly terrorist network headed by senior al-Qaida operative Musab al-Zarqawi -- a Palestinian-Jordanian, and collaborator of Usama Bin Laden.

- We know Zarqawi came to Baghdad in May 2002 for medical treatment.

- Zarqawi oversees the cell responsible for the assassination of USAID officer Lawrence Foley in Amman last October.

- Zarqawi directs a poisons/toxins laboratory in northeastern Iraq alongside the radical Islamist organization, Ansar al-Islam. Many of Zarqawi's colleagues remain in Baghdad, where they have been operating for more than 8 months. The network there coordinates the movement of people, money, and supplies into and throughout Iraq.

- Law enforcement and intelligence operations have disrupted Zarqawi's poison plotting in France, Britain, Spain, Italy, Germany, and Russia. A British officer was killed in the raid of the cell which was identified with ricin. In total, at last count, 116 operatives with Zarqawi's network have been arrested.

Iraq and Al-Qaida: History

Secretary Powell spelled out how Iraq-al-Qaida ties were forged by secret high-level contacts in the 1990s, including at least eight senior level meetings. Their relationship is prompted by mutual hatred for the United States, Israel, the Saudi royal family, and by bin Ladin's interest in both WMD and future safe havens.

As the Secretary said, there is more:

- A senior al-Qaida terrorist, now detained, who had been responsible for bin Ladin's training in Afghanistan, reports that al-Qaida was intent on obtaining WMD assistance from Iraq.
    - According to this source deceased al-Qaida leader Muhammad 'Atif did not believe that al-Qaida labs in Afghanistan were capable enough to manufacture BW and CW.
    - He turned to Iraq for assistance.
    - Iraq agreed to provide chemical and biological weapons training for two al-Qaida associates starting in December 2000.

Iraq's Deplorable Human Rights Record

Saddam Hussein's regime is unsurpassed in its brutality and viciousness.

Is Treasury consulting us on this?

?The federal government will run out of borrowing authority in about two weeks, forcing the Bush administration to ask Congress to boost the debt limit while selling a budget that envisions even bigger deficits. The Treasury said Wednesday that it expects to hit the statutory limit on how much debt it can issue around Feb. 20, although it could use several bookkeeping maneuvers to delay that to the beginning of April. The current debt ceiling is $6.4 trillion. As of Tuesday, debt subject to that ceiling stood at $6.34 trillion, meaning only $60 billion more can be issued.?

FOUR on one page. I think it is worth pointing out that they are free to raise money and exercise their first amendment rights. But we are not obligated to do their bidding or jump when they say so. Perhaps calling attention to them will only help their cause, but it might also get people focused on the need to get engaged on the other side. Further, it can help reveal just how weakkneed the Dems are on this matter. You ought to consider blowing up the page and having Hatch make a statement of it on the floor...that this is about special interest politics and fundraising.

I just read the version w/Brett's edits and it looks good. Brett, I know it still has some stuff on the numbers game, but I don't think it's too much. The thrust of the oped is exactly what we need. So consider it a sign off from here.

I hope they'll be trying to place this asap? The sooner the better.... I sense them starting to break, so need to keep it up! thanks!!

Basic Rules

The basic rules are straightforward. You are legally permitted to engage in a variety of political activity, as detailed more fully below, subject to certain important restrictions:

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly permit your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. You also may not use your official authority to coerce any person to engage in political activity.

- Second, you may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers.

On-Duty Activity

Most employees in the Cabinet departments and agencies can engage in permitted political activity only when they are off duty and not in a government building. However, a different rule applies to: (i) PAS officials and (ii) those employees in the Executive Office of the President whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post. Officials in these two categories are permitted to engage in political activity -- such as meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties -- while on duty and in the office. However, any such activity should be limited so that it is not inconsistent with official duties or otherwise inappropriate. In addition, any non-incidental costs associated with that activity must be paid by a political entity (either in advance or through reasonable reimbursement). Finally, political fundraising events may not occur on government property.

Travel and Costs

There are a few rules to keep in mind with respect to political travel and costs.

- First, as a matter of policy, you should not travel on corporate aircraft for political trips. You may travel on charter aircrafts that the political entity leases from a charter company.

- Second, as indicated above, when an official engages in political activity, the government must be reimbursed for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

    - The issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government need not be reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity.

- The appropriate political entity must pay any additional costs of political activity or political events in government buildings -- for example, the costs "used to cater the political activity." 5 C.F.R. 734.503(d) (Example 1).

Classification of Activity as Official or Political

At times, there may be difficulty classifying activity as official or political, which is relevant for payment of costs, for example. An activity or event is generally considered political if it is conducted for a partisan election or campaign or for a political party. An event or activity should be classified as official or political on an objective basis, not based on the possible political ramifications of an event. Speakers at official events should take care to avoid expressly advocating the election of a candidate.

Leave

You may engage in political activity while on leave.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions discussed above, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
    - being a member of a political party;
    - serving as an officer of a political party;
    - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
    - participating in a political convention or rally; and
    - serving as a delegate to a political convention.
- participation in political campaigns, which includes:
    - canvassing for votes;
    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.
- participation in elections, including:
    - voting; and
    - driving voters to polling places.

- participation in fundraising:

  You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, you may:

  - make political contributions;
  - attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers;
  - speak at political fundraisers;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser (but the invitation should not list your official title); and
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

DRAFT

PRIMARY LEGAL/APPEARANCE ISSUES RELATED TO RE-ELECTION

What legal restrictions apply to White House officials with respect to the campaign?

The law expressly permits White House officials and Senate-confirmed officials in the Executive Branch to engage in extensive political activity, including while on duty and in their offices. White House officials therefore may exercise significant responsibility over the conduct of the President's re-election campaign (and White House officials have done so for past Presidents). In addition, White House personnel in offices such as speechwriting, scheduling, and correspondence may assist the President as he performs political activities.

The main restrictions on White House officials are that they may not (i) solicit contributions, (ii) knowingly use their official titles on invitations to political events such as fundraisers, or (iii) "coerce" others such as subordinates or those with business before the government into political activity.

How do the legal restrictions on the President differ?

The President's title always may be used, and he may solicit contributions. But he should not solicit funds in a government office, including by use of the telephone in a government office. (This was the issue with Vice President Gore.) The President may solicit funds in calls made from the Residence, although appearance issues can arise with such calls.

What about the use for campaign purposes of government equipment such as computers, printers, paper, copiers, FAXes, telephones, and e-mail?

The government must be reimbursed for those non-incidental costs that the government would not have incurred but for the political activity. In practice, this principle applies primarily to paper and long-distance telephone calls that are charged on a per-call basis (no additional costs are ordinarily incurred from additional use of the other equipment listed above). Out of an abundance of caution, however, it may be prudent to ensure that those White House officials with significant involvement in the campaign have separate equipment or only campaign-provided equipment (as well as separate campaign e-mail addresses). The Office of Political Affairs has followed this practice. At a minimum, we should ensure that the campaign pays (in advance, where possible) a clearly sufficient amount for use of existing government equipment.

Who pays for travel costs when the President travels on campaign activity?

A long-standing formula is employed to divide costs between the government and the campaign. The campaign generally will pay equivalent first-class airfare, as well as hotel, food, and related costs, for the President and the other "political travelers," including those doing advance work. Costs related to security and secure communications are always paid by the government, and certain travelers are always deemed official, such as the Secret Service, personal aide, Chief of Staff, and National Security Advisor.

Are any additional rules or policies imposed on travel by Executive Branch officials other than the President?

As a matter of policy, we have prevented Executive Branch officials from flying on corporate-owned aircraft to political events, even if reimbursed by the political entity. This policy has worked well so far.

What additional rules apply to non-PAS employees in Cabinet departments?

These officials may engage in political activity, but may not do so while on duty or in a government building. They must take leave for any political activity that will keep them away from their official duties.

What about communications between campaign officials and White House officials?

There are no legal restrictions on communications between campaign officials and White House officials. Appearance issues can arise when campaign officials seek to improperly influence official decisions on particular matters (as distinct from broad policy decisions).

Does the Presidential Records Act apply?

The Act expressly exempts records related to the President's campaign. However, e-mails to and from the White House system may be archived, and the National Archives therefore would be responsible for withholding them after the conclusion of the Presidency.

What are the likely "appearance" issues that will receive media scrutiny, and how can we avoid them or respond to them?

First, as in the mid-term cycle, we can expect stories about the costs of Presidential travel on Air Force One and the costs of the associated official personnel (such as Secret Service) who travel with the President.

Response: These stories are largely unavoidable; we would simply continue to emphasize that we are complying with law and bipartisan tradition and that the only alternative is for the President either not to travel at all or to travel without necessary security precautions and communications equipment.

Second, as revealed in the 1996 Presidential campaign, fundraising activities are closely scrutinized from many angles: (i) the location where fundraising activities occur (e.g., government office telephones), (ii) the nature and location of donor maintenance events (e.g., White House coffees), (iii) the identities of the people who contribute, and (iv) the White House benefits purportedly bestowed upon contributors (e.g., Lincoln bedroom sleepovers).

Response: We must continue to monitor all issues related to Presidential political fundraising. We would continue to caution against donor maintenance events or benefits (for donors qua donors) in government buildings. We also would recommend that donors be strictly scrutinized by the campaign officials.

Third, the use of government-purchased equipment for political purposes has received attention in the past.

Response: As outlined above, we recommend that we use precise and strict (and easily understood) procedures to ensure that the government incurs no additional costs as a result of campaign activity.

Fourth, there routinely are stories about official action allegedly taken for political purposes.

Response: Such stories are largely unavoidable. The theme that "good policy is good politics" is a proper response.

Subject: Appearances as guest speakers at events and fundraisers for state and local candidates

A brief summary of where we stand on this issue:

As you know, before enactment of the campaign finance law, all Executive Branch officials were expressly permitted by law to appear as guest speakers at political events and fundraisers, including fundraisers for state and local candidates, so long as the officials did not personally solicit funds.

The judgment we had and have reached is that the new campaign finance law does not alter that conclusion. Yesterday, however, Ben Ginsberg noted what he believes to be an unintended ambiguity/absurdity in one aspect of the new campaign finance law: regarding guest speaking at events and fundraisers for state and local candidates (as distinct from guest speaking at federal party or federal candidate events or state party events, all of which he agrees is still clearly permissible). We do not share Ben's view that this ambiguity is created by the new law. The Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice agrees with us.

To be very cautious and to alleviate any possible issue, however, the Department of Justice will send us their formal written opinion on the question; we should have that shortly. In addition, both political parties are seeking confirmation from the FEC in the next week on this question.

Apologies for confusion caused by this. We will have it cleared up shortly. And obviously, please call with any questions. Thanks.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Saturday, February 8, 2003

KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS ON IRAQ 2-6-03**

- The Iraqi regime's violations of Security Council resolutions are evident, and they continue to this hour. The regime has never accounted for a vast arsenal of deadly biological and chemical weapons, and is pursuing an elaborate campaign to conceal its weapons materials, and to hide or intimidate key experts and scientists.

- This deception is directed from the highest levels of the Iraqi regime, including Saddam Hussein, his son, the Vice President, and the very official responsible for cooperating with inspectors.

- Sources tell us Saddam Hussein recently authorized Iraqi field commanders to use chemical weapons - the very weapons the dictator tells the world he does not have.

- The same terrorist network operating out of Iraq is responsible for the recent murder of an American diplomat, Laurence Foley. The same network has plotted terrorism against France, Spain, Italy, Germany, the Republic of Georgia, and Russia, and was caught producing poisons in London. The danger Saddam Hussein poses reaches across the world.

- Saddam Hussein was given a final chance; he is throwing that chance away. The Security Council must show whether its words have any meaning. Having made its demands, the Security Council must not back down, when those demands are defied and mocked by a dictator.

- The United States would welcome and support a new resolution which makes clear that the Security Council stands behind its previous demands. Yet resolutions mean little without resolve. And the United States, along with a growing coalition of nations, is resolved to take whatever action is necessary to defend ourselves and disarm the Iraqi regime.

- On September 11, 2001, America saw what terrorists could do by turning four airplanes into weapons. We will not wait to see what terrorists or terrorist states could do with chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear weapons.

- Saddam Hussein has made Iraq into a prison, a poison factory, and a torture chamber for patriots and dissidents. He has the motive, means, recklessness and hatred to threaten the American people. Saddam Hussein will be stopped.

David,

After our discussion yesterday, I thought I would posit how I envision the change in positions:

1.) I would keep many of my current responsibilities such as handling all red tags (Staff Secretary Memos) and OMB Legislative Referral Memoranda.
2.) I would also continue assisting the Judge with correspondence, speeches, research, phones, and scheduling.
3.) I would give to the staff assistants across the street the responsibilities of logging in the mail, ordering supplies, assisting in filing, and shuttling around between the two buildings.
4.) In turn, I would like to play a larger role in the judicial selection process including the JSC and POTUS binders. I think my familiarity with the binders and with Staff Secretary procedures would be beneficial to this task.

Of course, I would be open to any changes in this that you see appropriate. I have served in this office for over a year now and would welcome some new challenges.

In addition, I feel that it is not essential that someone in a staff assistant position sit at my desk in the West Wing. From mid-September 2001 to January 2002 (n.b., the period right after 9/11), my seat was vacant because the staff assistant left for OHS. Libby and Allison were able to perform their jobs during this demanding period without a staff assistant.

Finally, I was able to speak to Brett about these ideas this morning, and he was supportive of this change.

Thanks for thinking about this. I appreciate it.

2.) I would also continue assisting the Judge with correspondence, speeches, research, phones, and scheduling.

3.) I would give to the staff assistants across the street the responsibilities of logging in the mail, ordering supplies, assisting in filing, and shuttling around between the two buildings.

4.) In turn, I would like to play a larger role in the judicial selection process including the JSC and POTUS binders. I think my familiarity with the binders and with Staff Secretary procedures would be beneficial to this task.

Of course, I would be open to any changes in this that you see appropriate. I have served in this office for over a year now and would welcome some new challenges.

In addition, I feel that it is not essential that someone in a staff assistant position sit at my desk in the West Wing. From mid-September 2001 to January 2002 (n.b., the period right after 9/11), my seat was vacant because the staff assistant left for OHS. Libby and Allison were able to perform their jobs during this demanding period without a staff assistant.

Finally, I was able to speak to Brett about these ideas this morning, and he was supportive of this change.

Thanks for thinking about this. I appreciate it.

Supreme Court: Moving On, Moving In, Moving Up

Bush may tap California Supreme Court Justice Janice Rogers Brown, a conservative judge who ruled against affirmative action and abortion rights, if a spot opens on the U.S. Supreme Court

A vacancy could open up in the U.S. Supreme Court soon

Feb. 17 issue * ;It,s been nine years since the last vacancy opened up on the U.S. Supreme Court. That historically long drought could end this year with at least one resignation. Eager White House aides are stepping up preparation efforts, vetting candidates and contemplating a special media operation to deal with a potential confirmation battle.

; ; ; ; WITH THE WHITE HOUSE and the Senate both in Republican hands, GOP-nominated Justices William Rehnquist, 78, and Sandra Day O,Connor, 72, are considered most likely to depart. Some reports suggested that Rehnquist has already given President George W. Bush a heads up on his departure. But a senior administration official dismisses the idea, saying the White House has no &inside information.8

; ; ; ; Bush aides had contemplated the idea of elevating Associate Justice Antonin Scalia, 66, to replace Rehnquist as chief. Some administration officials relished the idea of courting a major confirmation battle over Scalia*a folk hero to conservatives. Nominating Scalia to be chief would fire up Bush,s conservative base, some argued. And some Democratic senators might find it tough to oppose Scalia since they already voted for him once: he cleared the Senate by a vote of 98-0 in 1986. But in the end, sources tell NEWSWEEK, White House officials rejected the idea, concluding that the brilliant but pugnacious justice would not be a consensus builder*an important quality for a chief justice. &We discussed it seriously, but rejected it definitively,8 says a source familiar with the process.
; ; ; ; Many strategists have predicted Bush will fill the open seat with the court,s first Hispanic justice. Early betting centered on White House counsel and Bush confidant Alberto Gonzales. But some elements of Bush,s conservative base seem to have cooled on the idea. And White House insiders say Gonzales himself has never been enthusiastic about going on the high court. (More likely, the sources say, is that Gonzales, succumbing to President Bush,s personal entreaties, would fill a second vacancy.) Other possibilities: appellate Judge Emilio M. Garza of Texas and, if he,s confirmed to the D.C. Circuit Court, lawyer Miguel Estrada.

; ; ; ; Other observers think Bush could take another approach, appointing California Supreme Court Justice Janice Rogers Brown instead. Brown is a conservative African-American who,s ruled against affirmative action and abortion rights. Her nomination would let Bush add the court,s third woman and second African-American in one swoop. And White House lawyers have already interviewed her. Tom Goldstein, a Washington lawyer who argues cases before the court, believes Brown could even get the nod for chief justice. &An African-American female nominee is not going to be filibustered,8 he says. &She doesn,t have a record that will stop Democrats in their tracks.8 And after months of bitter Senate fights over nominations to lower courts, that could have an appeal all its own.

OUR VIEW

Estrada worthy of appellate seat
Atlanta Journal Constitution
February 10, 2003

Miguel Estrada, a Harvard-educated lawyer who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, is well qualified for the federal appellate bench. Democrats, who are threatening to stall a vote on this confirmation, are choosing the wrong target.

In recent years, unfortunately, leaders in both parties have treated nominations to the federal judiciary as an extension of partisan politics rather than a serious constitutional responsibility. Nominations and confirmation debates should center on meritorious legal qualifications and performance.

President Bush himself has often failed to meet that standard. He sent a string of conservative ideologues to the Senate Judiciary Committee, and then used legitimate questions about their suitability for the bench as an inflammatory partisan theme during the last election.

Still, that is no reason for Democratic senators to play the same game. Estrada is no right-wing nut. The scholarly Latino lawyer, who came to this country at age 17 from Honduras, has earned respect for his intellect and his legal acumen.

While its true his lack of judicial experience has left no record for the Senate to examine, he would not be the first nominee to a high court in that position.

U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist had never served as a judge, either, though he had been an assistant U.S. attorney general during the Nixon administration. Estrada was an assistant U.S. solicitor general during the Clinton years.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) and other members of the Judiciary Committee asked Estrada to submit nonconfidential legal memos from his days in the solicitor's office, which could shed light on his judicial philosophy; Estrada made a mistake in not producing those.

Still, the 41-year-old lawyer, whose confirmation is scheduled for debate on the Senate floor this week, should be approved for a post on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. There are some scary ideologues among the nominees that Bush has sent forward, but Estrada is not one of them.

Filibuster Threat On Estrada Does The Democrats No Honor

Published: Feb 8, 2003
Tampa Tribune
N ow that the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee cannot cynically distort the record of President Bush's appointments to federal appeals courts in an effort to block the nominations, they are threatening another maneuver - the filibuster.
Leading the charge are committee members picked by the Democratic leadership precisely because of their ideological bent. Until the new Congress was seated, they thought nothing of thwarting the constitutional mandate that gives the Senate - the full Senate - the advise and consent power over judicial nominations.
These are senators who have maliciously maligned Bush's nominees to cater to the left-wing base of their party, never mind that the lawyers and judges they have discredited and rejected or delayed have received the highest recommendation of the American Bar Association, the party's so-called gold standard.
Never mind that they have distorted the records of some nominees beyond recognition.
The Democrats claim they are concerned about protecting civil rights and liberties, about defending the right to abortion, about making sure there will not be another Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas on the court.
Currently their fangs are out for Miguel Estrada, a 41-year-old lawyer whose biography would thrill most champions of diversity. The native of Honduras moved to the United States as a teenager, learned English, succeeded in school, wound up at Harvard, clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy and worked in Bill Clinton's Justice Department.
He has the enthusiastic support of, among others, Ron Klain, who helped run Al Gore's campaign in 2000.
Yet the Democrats claim they don't know enough about Estrada. They have demanded to see copies of his work in the Justice Department, intentionally seeking papers they knew to be confidential. Because Estrada did not turn them over, they have attempted to crucify him, this despite letters from former solicitors general complaining that their demand amounted to legislative overreach and that acceding to it would set a dangerous precedent.
Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, who occasionally shows some modicum of fair-mindedness, calls Estrada a cipher, and now committee members, because they didn't have the votes to deny him full consideration by the Senate, threaten to use the filibuster.
We suspect they will fail because some sane Democrats in the Senate, such as Louisiana's John Breaux, have said they would not support a filibuster. We hope that other moderates, like Florida's Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, come around.
Estrada needs only 50 votes for confirmation, but to stop a filibuster, the Republicans would need 60. So let the Democrats try if they dare. The judiciary was a major theme in the last election. Let's see how they will explain to voters how subverting the confirmation process with a months-long delay is in the public good.

JUDICIARY: Blocking Hispanics

If the system were functioning as the founders intended, Miguel Estrada would be confirmed quickly to the federal D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. He is extremely qualified in both education and experience -- and the American Bar Association unanimously awarded him its highest possible rating. Democrats have called the ABA rating their "gold standard" for evaluating judicial nominees. Estrada has been endorsed by previous administration legal officials and numerous Hispanic groups that normally support Democrats.

Estrada also has a compelling personal story, as an immigrant who arrived speaking virtually no English and a few years later graduated from Harvard law school.

Nevertheless, Democrats kept Estrada's nomination bottled up in committee until they lost the Senate -- and now may filibuster, hoping to prevent a floor vote they would lose.

Far-left interest groups don't question Estrada's qualifications. However, Rep. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., says Estrada isn't Hispanic enough. By that, he means Estrada is suspected of being insufficiently liberal. But, under his rules, Menendez wouldn't recognize most residents of Miami's "Little Havana" area as Hispanic.

Liberals worry that Estrada will prove himself worthy of someday becoming the first Hispanic on the U.S. Supreme Court -- a position that would make him, and perhaps his moderate philosophy, a role model for young Hispanics nationwide. They fear that might hurt them politically. The founders, however, tried to isolate the courts from politics.

Fanaticism will serve only to alienate the party further from the public.
