jurisdiction. Rather, it is intended to enforce those standards – and to correct the occasional extreme outlier. Because ISCRAA incorporates a fee formula that is substantially more liberal than the usual practices of the federal courts in $100 million cases, we can be confident that high-quality legal representation will remain available to plaintiffs in these large litigations. See, e.g. in re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (RICO and Commodities Exchange Act case resulting in $116 million recovery; attorneys reviewed millions of pages of documents located throughout the world, many requiring translation from Japanese; federal district court awards multiplier of 250% for total fee of $32 million).

Fiduciary Restraints on Attorney Fee Contracts

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."[21] (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

> "[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."[22]

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."[23] (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."[24] (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."[25] (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

> "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."[26]

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

> "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[27]

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

> "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[28]

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."[29] (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."[30] (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA's Effective Date

Another subject that I would like to address today is ISCRAA's effective date. ISCRAA applies to attorney fee payments received after June 1, 2002. This effective date is appropriate under the circumstances of the state tobacco settlement for several reasons: first, Congress routinely enacts major tax legislation with effective dates that look back much further than does ISCRAA. The Supreme Court has "repeatedly upheld [such moderately] retroactive tax legislation against a due process challenge." United States v. Carlton, 512 U.S. 26, 30-31 (1994); see id. at 33 (upholding tax whose "actual retroactive effect * * * extended for a period only slightly greater than one year").

Second, ISCRAA is not even truly retroactive. ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorneys fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."[31] (Emphasis added.)

As I described earlier, to enforce fiduciary standards, ISCRAA codifies and applies a very generous version of the fee multiplier system, allowing attorneys fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This is considerably more generous than what federal courts typically allow in large-judgment cases. No attorney can be heard to complain that he is subjected to a law that is more generous than his existing fiduciary obligations.

Further, none of the tobacco-settlement attorneys can reasonably maintain that they have a vested right to see their fiduciary duties to the states go unenforced. Nevertheless, in order to be fair to all parties, ISCRAA's excise taxes are applied only to fees that were paid after June 1, 2002. By this date, all of the tobacco lawyers twice had received notice from George W. Bush that he intended to enact legislation to enforce their fiduciary obligations. In February 2000, then-candidate Bush promised that he would "extend[] the 'excess benefits' provision of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities," with "the reasonableness of the fees * * * [to] be determined by the standard judicial 'lodestar' method." And as early as February 2001, the current Administration announced that it anticipated providing "additional public health resources for the States from the President's proposal to extend fiduciary responsibilities to the representatives of States in tobacco lawsuits." See A BLUEPRINT FOR NEW BEGINNINGS: A RESPONSIBLE BUDGET FOR AMERICA'S PRIORITIES 80, Office of Management and Budget, February 28, 2001.

Under ISCRAA, all of the attorneys who participated in the state tobacco settlement still will be very liberally compensated. Because ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. Every one of the tobacco lawyers will have more than enough money left to pay for the yachts, luxury cars, and vacation homes that were purchased with the tobacco proceeds. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

State Recovery of Excess MSA Payments

But most importantly, because ISCRAA applies to the last year's worth of tobacco fee payments, and to all future payments, it will return a substantial amount of funds to the states – money that already should belong to the states under any reasonable interpretation of fiduciary standards. It is critical that these funds be restored in this time of widespread fiscal crisis. Today a large number of the states face massive budget deficits that threaten their ability to provide health care to the indigent, to fully fund public education, and to guarantee adequate and effective law enforcement. When such needs risk going unmet, fee abuses that cost the states billions of dollars simply can no longer be ignored. The states must receive their fair share of the tobacco settlement proceeds – funds that are badly needed to support basic public services.

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state,

California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

Subject: Kyl-Cornyn mass tort fees bill

Senators Kyl and Cornyn today introduced ISCRAA, a bill to apply an attorneys fee formula in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA would allow attorneys to receive fees of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. Because it applies to continuing fee payments from the state tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA would restore income with a present value of approximately $9 billion to the states. Attached please find: 1. a one-page summary of the bill; 2. a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover from the tobacco settlement fee awards under the bill; 3. a footnoted version of Senator Kyl's speech introducing the bill; 4. and the bill itself.

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. CORNYN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003" (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

"(a) INITIAL TAXES.—There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(c) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION; EXCESS FEE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

"(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of—

"(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

"(ii) a reasonable fee based on—

"(I) the number of hours of non-duplicative, professional quality legal work provided by the collecting attorney of material value to the outcome of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (D) of subsection (h)(2),

"(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

"(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

"(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is—

"(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

"(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal

work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

"(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

"(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

"(iv) LIMITATION.—An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES.—Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee—

"(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and

"(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

"(2) EXCESS FEE.—The term 'excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

"(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.—For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

"(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF.—For purposes of this section, the term 'applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

"(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—The term 'collecting attorney' means any person engaged in the practice of law who represents—

"(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

"(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

"(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

"(D) any assignee or other holder of claims described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

"(2) TAXABLE PERIOD.—The term 'taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of—

"(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or

"(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

"(3) CORRECTION.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

"(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

"(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS.—In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

"(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE.—No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

"(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE.—Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

"(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT.—The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney—

"(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

"(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

"(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

"(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including—

"(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

"(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

"(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

"(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

"(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

"(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

REV_00162931

"(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

"(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

"(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF.—The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

"(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations to prevent avoidance of the purposes of this section and regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.".

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

_____ISCRAA: The Kyl-Cornyn Bill to Enforce Fiduciary Attorney Fee Standards in Mass Tort Litigation

The Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act (ISCRAA) limits attorneys fees to no more than 500% of reasonable hourly rates in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA uses an existing provision of the tax code to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. To avoid punitive tax rates, an attorney would be required to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the client. Because ISCRAA applies to current and future fees paid pursuant to the state Medicaid tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states.

ISCRAA's Benefits:

- Limiting speculative, fee-driven mass tort litigation. The current mass-tort litigation crisis is driven in large part by the enormous and unethical fees commanded by some plaintiffs attorneys. Because their fees are so grossly disproportionate to their actual efforts, these lawyers can pursue even speculative lawsuits that lack a legitimate foundation – even only an occasional victory produces massive profits. By requiring that fees be proportional to attorneys' actual work, ISCRAA inevitably will limit this type of litigation. To prevent evasion of its standards, ISCRAA also aggregates identical claims when brought against common defendants – thereby limiting the coercive effects of this type of litigation.

- Protecting Fiduciary Interests. Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 states, is the attorney's duty to not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Thus courts traditionally have read a reasonableness requirement into every attorneys fee contract.

- Protecting Interstate Commerce. Because of the large size of the litigations to which it applies, ISCRAA unquestionably is an appropriate exercise of Congress's power to regulate and protect interstate commerce. Experts have estimated that ISCRAA probably will apply to only 15-20 litigations a year. $100 million is a standard threshold used by the federal government to determine whether an economic transaction significantly impacts interstate commerce.

- Guaranteeing Mass-Tort Plaintiffs Access to Counsel. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA protects fiduciary interests, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in large lawsuits.

ISCRAA: RESTITUTION TO THE STATES

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

SENATOR KYL
INTRODUCTION OF ISCRAA

Mr. KYL: I rise today to introduce the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA). This legislation will restore to the states billions of dollars in revenue due to them from a massive lawsuit recently conducted on their behalf – the tobacco-related Medicaid expenses litigation. ISCRAA amends an existing provision of the federal tax code in order to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. By applying these standards to the attorneys who represented the states in the tobacco settlement, ISCRAA reasonably can be expected to restore to the states income with a present value of approximately $9 billion. I have included at the end of my statement a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover.

ISCRAA's tax formula is borrowed from the 1996 Tax Act's Intermediate Sanctions Tax (IST), which applies a two-step excise tax to any excessive or unreasonable compensation that the managers of a trust pay to themselves from the assets of the trust. The IST framework encourages the trustee to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the trust – when he does so, the IST's punitive taxes do not apply.

ISCRAA extends the IST to another type of trust relationship: that between a lawyer and his client. ISCRAA applies the IST tax formula to any unreasonable or excessive income that a lawyer collects from litigation resulting in a judgment or settlement in excess of $100 million. To avoid IST taxes, an attorney must restore the excessive portion of the fee to the client.

As my colleague Senator CORNYN will explain today, the ethical and legal abuses that resulted from the 1998 state tobacco settlement make the need for this legislation manifest. Senator CORNYN also will discuss the law of attorneys' fiduciary obligations, which establishes that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured.

I will discuss today how ISCRAA will affect massive litigations generally. In order to gauge the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee award, ISCRAA adopts and codifies a liberal version of the lodestar-multiplier system. As I will later explain in greater detail, ISCRAA allows fee multipliers of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This limit is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA's fee formula guarantees that attorneys' fiduciary obligations will be respected, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in these types of cases.

Massive Litigations and the Prospect of Tax Farming

Federal supervision of fee awards resulting from $100 million litigations is appropriate for several reasons. First, because of their shear size, these types of lawsuits inevitably operate as a tax on the consuming public. Few defendants actually can afford to pay such judgments with cash on hand. Instead, the affected industries simply will raise the prices that they charge to their customers.

This is exactly what has happened in the state Medicaid tobacco settlement – according to the leading proponents of that litigation. The first state attorney general to file suit against the tobacco companies has admitted that "what always happens in these cases is the industry passes the costs to the consumer."[1] Other commentators agree that this has occurred in the tobacco litigation. As one law-review article notes, "the [tobacco] settlement * * * is a tax because it's a set of payments made by tobacco companies that depend on how many packs they sell; in short, it looks like a tax and quacks like a tax."[2]

Because of the way that these massive judgments typically are satisfied, it is particularly important to ensure that attorneys are paid in proportion to the services that they provided – rather than solely on the basis of the size of the recovery. Again, the state tobacco settlement highlights the nature of the problem. As two of the leading academic commentators have noted, it is "very troubl[ing]" that under that agreement, "a group of private citizens [are] getting paid a percentage of a tax increase they helped pass."[3] The shear size of the tobacco settlement – and the fact that attorneys fees were based on this size, rather than on the attorneys' actual efforts – has given the fee awards an uncanny resemblance to the medieval practice of tax farming. In all but name, the government has licensed a group of private individuals to collect a tax from the consuming public.

I would emphasize at this point that ISCRAA is not an attack on the state tobacco lawsuits. The bill does not pass judgment on the merits or the appropriateness of this type of litigation. ISCRAA simply is designed to ensure that when such lawsuits are brought on the public's behalf, the public receive its fair share of the proceeds. If a state chooses to seek compensatory revenue from industry for past harms, then the resulting tax on the public – minus the reasonable value of the legal services actually provided – must go to the state treasury.

$100 Million Lawsuits Are Different

There are several reasons why $100 million is an appropriate threshold for applying ISCRAA's fee formula. First, the courts themselves have indicated that fee agreements based primarily on the size of the recovery tend to become unreasonable when judgements reach this size. As one court has stated, "in much smaller cases, a fee award of 33% does not present the danger of providing the plaintiff's counsel with the windfall that would accompany a 'megafund' settlement of $100 million or upwards. But it is quite different when the figures hit the really big time."[4] Or as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded [for attorneys fees] as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[5]

The logic of avoiding judgment-based awards in these very large cases is straightforward. As one court explains, "it is not 150 times more difficult to prepare, try, and settle a $150 million case than it is to try a $1 million case, but the application of a percentage comparable to that in a smaller case may yield an award 150 times greater."[6] Thus (according to another court) "there is considerable merit" to disallowing standard percentage awards as the "size of the [recovery] fund increases. In many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel."[7]

It also bears mention that because of its $100 million threshold, ISCRAA applies to a fairly limited universe of cases. As courts have remarked, "there are few so-called 'megafund' cases with settlements over $100 million."[8] In 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit attempted to catalogue all common-fund cases in federal court that resulted in recoveries greater than $100 million. Though such litigations have been more frequent in recent years, the Third Circuit identified only 22 such cases since 1985. See in re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 737 (3d Cir. 2001).

ISCRAA is somewhat broader than the criteria that Cendant Corp. employed to collect cases. ISCRAA is not limited to common-fund cases – it also applies to judgments won on behalf of tax-exempt entities or even single individuals. ISCRAA also applies to cases brought in state court, and it aggregates identical claims that are brought against common defendants in separate actions, in order to prevent evasion of its limits through the subdivision of actions. Nevertheless, ISCRAA's scope remains fairly narrow. An academic specialist who is familiar with developments in this field has reviewed the bill and concluded that because of its "relatively high threshold," ISCRAA probably would apply only to about 15-20 litigations per year. I will include a copy of this professor's letter to me in the congressional record.

Finally, a $100 million threshold also is appropriate because it limits ISCRAA's reach to litigations that are a natural subject of congress's authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is well-established that "Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress's power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

Guaranteeing Adequate Incentives to Plaintiffs' Lawyers

Another point that I would like to emphasize today is that ISCRAA is not an anti-plaintiffs' lawyer bill. It is not stingy toward trial attorneys. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts' practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers' professional associations.

Federal courts primarily rely on two systems for calculating attorneys fees in cases (such as class actions) in which they are required to set "reasonable fees:" the percentage method and the lodestar-multiplier method. The percentage method, as its name implies, calculates fees as a percentage of the total recovery. The lodestar system, by contrast, requires a court to first calculate a fee based on the number of hours that the lawyer worked multiplied by prevailing hourly rates (the "lodestar"). The court then multiplies this lodestar fee again in order to reward the attorney for the risk of nonpayment of fees that he assumed and for any exceptional services that he provided.

Litig., 886 F.Supp 445, 462 (E.D.Pa. 1995) ("The number of cases involving a common fund in the neighborhood of [$100 million] is relatively small").

Over the last thirty years, courts have moved back and forth between these two systems.[9] Only a few courts make lodestar-multipliers the exclusive means of awarding attorneys fees. But as one academic commentator has noted, "lodestar, or hours-based methods, have been adopted in every [federal judicial] circuit."[10]

And more importantly, in large-recovery cases, there has been very little difference between lodestar and percentage systems. This is because even when courts apply a percentage to calculate fees, and as judgements become very large, courts typically also calculate a reasonable lodestar in order to determine what constitutes a reasonable percentage. Thus, again, as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[11]

Courts have been wary of awarding fees based on percentages alone. As one state supreme court explains:

> "to begin the assessment by arbitrarily picking a percentage amount without any reliance on a cognizable structure invites decisions that are nonobjective and inconsistent. What constitutes a reasonable percentage may differ from one judge to another depending on each judge's predilections, background, and geographical location in the state."[12]

Thus "courts that employ the percentage approach appear to be motivated in part by a lodestar dynamic. Because courts are reluctant to give fee awards totally incommensurate with the efforts of the attorneys, percentage awards generally decrease as the amount of the recovery increases."[13]

One result of the cross-use of the lodestar and percentage systems is that even when courts use the percentage system, those awards overwhelmingly tend to reflect a reasonable lodestar multiplier. Therefore, even percentage-based cases tend to provide evidence of the range of multipliers that the courts consider to be reasonable.

In 2001, the Third Circuit "set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used."[14] (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and "the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99." And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.[15]

Other courts, surveying smaller cases than the $100 million recoveries examined in Cendant Corp., have identified larger multipliers. One federal district court has "observe[d] that in virtually every case where the court notes a lodestar but awards fees based upon a percentage, the lodestar multiplier converted from this percentage is in the range of 1 to 4."[16] Another federal district court has found that "the range of lodestar multipliers in large and complicated class actions runs from a low of 2.26 to a high of 4.5."[17]

By contrast, some courts have declared that they would allow only lower multipliers. One federal court has stated that "only in the most exceptional circumstances would this court award a multiplier of 3 or greater. * * * this court believes that lodestars enhanced by multipliers less than 3 should adequately compensate even the most talented counsel."[18] And the Seventh Circuit has suggested that "it may be that a doubling of the lodestar would provide a sensible ceiling."[19]

On the other hand, the Florida Supreme Court – which is generally regarded as one of the more plaintiff-friendly courts in the United States – has announced that:

> "we set the maximum multiplier available in this common-fund category of cases at 5. * * * * [A] multiplier which increases fees to five times the accepted hourly rate is sufficient to alleviate the contingency risk factor involved and attract high level counsel to common fund cases while producing a fee that remains within the bounds of reasonableness. We emphasize that 5 is a maximum multiplier."[20]

ISCRAA adopts this more liberal standard. It allows fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. ISCRAA awards multipliers based on two criteria: it allows up to 300% to be added onto the amount of reasonable hourly fees if a case that involved a substantial risk of nonrecovery of fees, and allows an additional 100% add-on if the attorney provided exceptional services that improved the plaintiff's recovery.

The criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as necessary prerequisites to the legitimacy of a contingency fee. "Courts in general have insisted that a contingent fee be truly contingent. The typically elevated fee reflecting the risk to the lawyer of receiving no fee will be permitted only if the representation indeed involves a significant degree of risk." Charles W. Wolfram, MODERN LEGAL ETHICS § 9.4, at 532 (1986). The risk requirement has been recognized ever since contingency fees first were allowed in the United States. The American Bar Association even noted at that time that "a contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by law, should be reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation." ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 13 (1908). Indeed, even the professional associations of plaintiffs' attorneys have, at times, acknowledged that contingent fees should be based on an actual contingency. In a guide to its members, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America has "recommend[ed]" that attorneys "exercise sound judgment in using a percentage in the contingent fee contract that is commensurate with the risk, cost and effort required." ATLA, KEYS TO THE COURTHOUSE: QUICK FACTS ON THE CONTINGENCY FEE SYSTEM 13 (1994).

The criteria that ISCRAA employs are universally accepted – and the limits that it sets should be universally acceptable. ISCRAA is not intended to alter the considered standards of any jurisdiction. Rather, it is intended to enforce those standards – and to correct the occasional extreme outlier. Because ISCRAA incorporates a fee formula that is substantially more liberal than the usual practices of the federal courts in $100 million cases, we can be confident that high-quality legal representation will remain available to plaintiffs in these large litigations. See, e.g. in re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (RICO and Commodities Exchange Act case resulting in $116 million recovery; attorneys reviewed millions of pages of documents located throughout the world, many requiring translation from Japanese; federal district court awards multiplier of 250% for total fee of $32 million).

Fiduciary Restraints on Attorney Fee Contracts

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."[21] (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

> "[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."[22]

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."[23] (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."[24] (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."[25] (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

> "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."[26]

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

> "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[27]

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee

be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

> "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[28]

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."[29] (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."[30] (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA's Effective Date

Another subject that I would like to address today is ISCRAA's effective date. ISCRAA applies to attorney fee payments received after June 1, 2002. This effective date is appropriate under the circumstances of the state tobacco settlement for several reasons: first, Congress routinely enacts major tax legislation with effective dates that look back much further than does ISCRAA. The Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) ("A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client"); Trinkle v. Leeney, 650 N.E.2d 749, 754 (Ind.Ct.App.1995) ("Under no circumstances is a lawyer entitled to more than the reasonable value of his or her services. Supreme Court has "repeatedly upheld [such moderately] retroactive tax legislation against a due process challenge." United States v. Carlton, 512 U.S. 26, 30-31 (1994); see id. at 33 (upholding tax whose "actual retroactive effect * * * extended for a period only slightly greater than one year").

Second, ISCRAA is not even truly retroactive. ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorneys fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."[31] (Emphasis added.)

As I described earlier, to enforce fiduciary standards, ISCRAA codifies and applies a very generous version of the fee multiplier system, allowing attorneys fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This is considerably more generous than what federal courts typically allow in large-judgment cases. No attorney can be heard to complain that he is subjected to a law that is more generous than his existing fiduciary obligations.

Further, none of the tobacco-settlement attorneys can reasonably maintain that they have a vested right to see their fiduciary duties to the states go unenforced. Nevertheless, in order to be fair to all parties, ISCRAA's excise taxes are applied only to fees that were paid after June 1, 2002. By this date, all of the tobacco lawyers twice had received notice from George W. Bush that he intended to enact legislation to enforce their fiduciary obligations. In February 2000, then-candidate Bush promised that he would "extend[] the 'excess benefits' provision of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities," with "the reasonableness of the fees * * * [to] be determined by the standard judicial 'lodestar' method." And as early as February 2001, the current Administration announced that it anticipated providing "additional public health resources for the States from the President's proposal to extend fiduciary responsibilities to the representatives of States in tobacco lawsuits." See A BLUEPRINT FOR NEW BEGINNINGS: A RESPONSIBLE BUDGET FOR AMERICA'S PRIORITIES 80, Office of Management and Budget, February 28, 2001.

Under ISCRAA, all of the attorneys who participated in the state tobacco settlement still will be very liberally compensated. Because ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. Every one of the tobacco lawyers will have more than enough money left to pay for the yachts, luxury cars, and vacation homes that were purchased with the tobacco proceeds. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

State Recovery of Excess MSA Payments

But most importantly, because ISCRAA applies to the last year's worth of tobacco fee payments, and to all future payments, it will return a substantial amount of funds to the states – money that already should belong to the states under any reasonable interpretation of fiduciary standards. It is critical that these funds be restored in this time of widespread fiscal crisis. Today a large number of the states face massive budget deficits that threaten their ability to provide health care to the indigent, to fully fund public education, and to guarantee adequate and effective law enforcement. When such needs risk going unmet, fee abuses that cost the states billions of dollars simply can no longer be ignored. The states must receive their fair share of the tobacco settlement proceeds – funds that are badly needed to support basic public services.

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state,

California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

Supreme Court Justice Warns on Nominees

By ANNE GEARAN
The Associated Press
Thursday, April 10, 2003; 8:10 PM
CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. - The increasingly fractious and partisan climate surrounding nominees for federal judgeships may damage the court system, and both political parties are to blame, Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy said Thursday.
The Supreme Court cannot tell the Senate how to handle judicial nominations, Kennedy acknowledged during remarks to law students at the University of Virginia.
"But they had better start thinking about the dangers to judicial independence from insisting on nominees that have particular views," Kennedy said.
"They are politically elected and act in a political way," said Kennedy, who was nominated for the high court by President Reagan. But "there should be a recognition that a good judge can be willing to change his mind or change her mind."
Kennedy was asked specifically about the Senate filibuster of one of President Bush's nominees for a seat on a federal appeals court. Democrats are trying to put off a vote on the nominee, lawyer Miguel Estrada, but Kennedy said the real problem is broader.
"What's going on now, there's a lot of fingerpointing, 'Oh, the Democrats are holding this up,'" Kennedy said. "Both parties have been guilty of this, there's some payback going on here, but I think it's time for them to come together."
The bitter partisanship surrounding the failed nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court ultimately led to Kennedy's own easy confirmation as a consensus candidate in 1988. The nomination process became even more fraught in 1991, when Clarence Thomas was accused of sexual harassment during his marathon confirmation hearings. He in turn called the process a "high-tech lynching."
The nomination battles over lower federal judges play out with far less public scrutiny, but many lawyers and politicians see the Estrada impasse as a dress rehearsal for a political fight over any vacancy on the Supreme Court.
None of the current nine justices has announced plans to retire, and Kennedy did not address that possibility Thursday.
Kennedy took questions from students after giving an informal talk about the high court.
Kennedy told the students that the court's oral arguments are the first chance for one justice to hear what a colleague thinks of a particular case.
"We don't talk about the cases beforehand," he said.
Each side gets just 30 minutes to present its case, but that is frequently enough to change justices' minds, Kennedy said. He seemed to recognize the plight of many lawyers who argue before the court, and quickly find themselves outgunned by rapid-fire questioning from the bench.

"Wen interrupt and sometimes behave rather badly, " Kennedy said. "We're what's called a hot bench in the trade."

See message from John Laster below. In short, the two pending Reagan notices do include some P5.

The pending Bush notices don't mention P5 because they are still within the 12 year period, and, therefore, we are withholding all P5.

I hope that clarifies your question. Let me know if you need any additional information.

In response to Brett's question, we did inform him in the letter dated 1/28/03 that NLMS 2002-024 included 73 pages of P5 material. Copies of this material (along with all other material proposed for opening in this notice) were delivered to his office on that day.

Also, we did inform him in the letter dated 11/18/02 that NLMS 2002-046 included 220 pages of P5 material. Copies of this material were delivered to his office that same day.

The rest of the notices that are currently pending at the White House (with the exception of a final privilege call for the 74 pages and 15:38 minutes of videotape for NLMS 2002-023) are Bush Presidential records and are still closed under P2 and/or P5.

Let me know if you need anything else.

Senators delay LR lawyer's judgeship confirmationBY KEVIN FREKING

ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE

WASHINGTON - The confirmation of Leon Holmes as a United States district judge hit a roadblock Thursday, when a Republican senator asked that a vote be delayed so that he could study comments Holmes has made on abortion and the role of women in society.

Holmes, a Little Rock lawyer, has been an avowed opponent of abortion, but has told the committee that he would follow the law of the land on abortion issues.

Four Democratic senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee attacked some of Holmes' comments and writings as "extremist."

In particular, senators had trouble with a statement about abortion that a Democratic staff member said Holmes made in December 1980: "Concern for rape victims is a red herring, because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami."

Said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., "According to the weather almanac we've consulted, it has snowed in Miami exactly once in the last 100 years. According to a study published in the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology, over 32,000 women a year become pregnant as a result of rape or incest.

"These 32,000 women a year aren't a myth. They aren't, to use Mr. Holmes' words, a red herring. They are real women, in real pain, making traumatic decisions about whether to give birth to their tormentors' children."

Sens. Diane Feinstein, D-Calif., and Richard Durbin, D-Ill., also cited comments they attributed to Holmes in his legal writings and commentary, which had been reviewed by Judiciary Committee staff members.

After the three Democratic senators had voiced their opposition to Holmes, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said he was unaware that any controversial nominations were up for a vote Thursday and asked that more time be allowed to study Holmes' record. The committee chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, granted that request.

President Bush nominated Holmes as district judge for the Eastern District of Arkansas on the 2002 recommendation of Republican Sen. Tim Hutchinson, who lost his re-election bid to Democrat Mark Pryor.

Both Pryor and Arkansas' senior senator, Democrat Blanche Lincoln, have strongly supported Holmes, as have members of the Arkansas legal profession, including some who support abortion rights.

But Lincoln said Thursday that she needed to take a second look at the nomination. "Of course I was not aware of these public remarks at the time I met with Leon Holmes and agreed to support him," Lincoln said in a statement. "I have asked him to address them personally with me, and I will have a further statement at that time."

A spokesman for Pryor said he would still vote to confirm Holmes.

"The senator has said, 'hey, I might not agree with everything he says and believes, but I see him as a smart and accomplished lawyer, and that's what he's going on,'" said Roddell Mollineau.

Holmes said he could not comment on the day's events. He referred a reporter to a Justice Department spokesman who could not be reached late Thursday.

District Court nominations are rarely controversial. Senators usually give much more scrutiny to nominees to U.S. Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court. It appeared that would be the case with Holmes nomination, too, because he had such strong backing from both Arkansas senators. But Thursday's events clearly has altered that momentum, a few Democratic staff members said.

Durbin, in particular, raised a concern about a comment that Holmes made in the April 12, 1997, issue of Arkansas Catholic.

In an article written with his wife, Susan, Holmes advanced the positions that "the wife is to subordinate herself to her husband" and "the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man."

Durbin said Holmes would have to adjudicate cases involving sexual discrimination, and that the committee needs to consider whether he comes to the job with a biased perspective.

Republican staff members countered the criticism by releasing several letters from members of the Arkansas legal profession who said they endorsed Holmes' confirmation, regardless of whether he agreed with them on the issue of abortion.

"I heartily recommend Mr. Holmes to you," wrote Cathleen Compton of the Little Rock law firm of Dudley & Compton. "While he and I differ dramatically on the pro-choice, pro-life issue, I am fully confident he will do his duty as the law and facts of a given case require."

Senators delay LR lawyer's judgeship confirmationBY KEVIN FREKING
ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE

WASHINGTON - The confirmation of Leon Holmes as a United States district judge hit a roadblock Thursday, when a Republican senator asked that a vote be delayed so that he could study comments Holmes has made on abortion and the role of women in society.
Holmes, a Little Rock lawyer, has been an avowed opponent of abortion, but has told the committee that he would follow the law of the land on abortion issues.
Four Democratic senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee attacked some of Holmes' comments and writings as "extremist."
In particular, senators had trouble with a statement about abortion that a Democratic staff member said Holmes made in December 1980: "Concern for rape victims is a red herring, because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami."

Said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., "According to the weather almanac we've consulted, it has snowed in Miami exactly once in the last 100 years. According to a study published in the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology, over 32,000 women a year become pregnant as a result of rape or incest.
"These 32,000 women a year aren't a myth. They aren't, to use Mr. Holmes' words, a red herring. They are real women, in real pain, making traumatic decisions about whether to give birth to their tormentors' children."
Sens. Diane Feinstein, D-Calif., and Richard Durbin, D-Ill., also cited comments they attributed to Holmes in his legal writings and commentary, which had been reviewed by Judiciary Committee staff members.

DRAFT 4-04-03

A BILL

To reform the federal deposit insurance system and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as "The Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2003".

SEC. 2 MERGER OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUNDS

(a) IN GENERAL-

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND – There is established a fund to be known as the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(2) MERGER – The Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be merged into the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(3) DISPOSITION OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES – All assets and liabilities of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be transferred to the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(4) NO SEPARATE EXISTENCE – The separate existence of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall cease.

(b) REPEAL OF OUTDATED MERGER PROVISION – Section 2704 of P.L. 104-208 (the Deposit Insurance Funds Act of 1996) (12 U.S.C. 1821 note) is repealed.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- This section shall be effective on the first day of the first calendar quarter that begins after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3 ASSESSMENTS; DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO

(a) Section 7(b)(2)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)(A)) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking clause (i) and inserting the following:

(i) IN GENERAL.

(I) SENSE OF CONGRESS - It is the sense of the Congress that the Corporation should assess each insured depository institution for the benefits of federal deposit insurance;

(II) ASSESSMENTS - After considering the factors in clause (ii), the Board of Directors shall set assessments for insured depository institutions in accordance with this section. "

(2) By striking clause (iii) "LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENT".

(3) By redesignating existing clause (iv) as clause (iii) and amending it as follows:

"(iii) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO DEFINED- (I) IN GENERAL-- The designated reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund for each year shall be-

(aa) 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits; or
(bb) a percentage between 1.15 percent and 1.50 percent of estimated insured deposits, as the Board of Directors determines is justified for that year, taking into account the factors in subclause (II).
(II) FACTORS - In establishing the designated reserve ratio under subclause (I), the Board of Directors shall take into account -

(aa) the risk of losses to the Deposit Insurance Fund during that year and future years;
(bb)economic conditions generally affecting or likely to affect insured depository institutions with the goal of allowing the designated reserve ratio to increase under more favorable economic conditions and to decrease under less favorable economic conditions;
(cc) the desirability of avoiding sharp swings in the assessment rates of insured depository institutions; and
(dd) other factors that the Board of Directors deems appropriate."

(4) By adding the following new clause (iv) and striking existing clause (v):

"(iv) NOTICE AND COMMENT- The Board may determine the designated reserve ratio pursuant to clause (iii)(I)(bb) of this subparagraph only by regulation after notice and public comment and no more than once annually."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

SEC. 4 RAISING THE RESERVE RATIO TO THE DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO

(a) Section 7(b)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking existing subparagraph (B) and redesignating existing subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(2) By redesignating subparagraph (E) as subparagraph (C) and amending it as follows:

" (C) MINIMUM ASSESSMENTS - The Corporation shall design the risk-based assessment system for the Deposit Insurance Fund so that, if the Corporation has borrowings outstanding on behalf of the Fund under section 14(a) or (b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1824(a) and (b)), or if the Board of Directors is required to set assessment rates pursuant to paragraph (3)(A)(ii) of this subsection, the minimum assessment rate in the risk-based assessment system, after application of any assessment credits provided under section 7(e)(2), shall be no less than 5 basis points for each insured depository institution."

(3) By striking subparagraphs (F) and (G) and redesignating existing subparagraph (H) as subparagraph (E).

(b) Section 7(b)(3)(A)-(C) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1817(b)(3)(A)-(C)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR RECAPITALIZING UNDERCAPITALIZED FUND

(A) IN GENERAL – If the reserve ratio of the deposit insurance fund is less than the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under paragraph (2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb), the Board of Directors shall set assessment rates -

(i) that are sufficient to increase the reserve ratio for the Fund to the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio not later than 1 year after such rates are set; or

(ii) in accordance with a recapitalization schedule promulgated by the Corporation under subparagraph (B).

(B) RECAPITALIZATION SCHEDULES. For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the Corporation shall, by regulation, promulgate and implement a schedule that specifies, at semiannual intervals, target reserve ratios for the Fund, culminating in a reserve ratio equal to the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio not later than 6 years after the date on which the recapitalization schedule is implemented."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

REV_00162999

SEC. 5 ASSESSMENT CREDITS AND CASH REBATES

(a) Section 7(e)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1817(e)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) ASSESSMENT CREDITS

(A) IN GENERAL - The Corporation shall establish, by regulation, criteria and procedures for providing insured depository institutions with the credits described in subparagraphs (B) and (C) to offset the institution's deposit insurance assessments that become due for assessment periods after the effective date of regulations implementing assessments pursuant to this Act.

(B) TRANSITION CREDITS –

(i) DETERMINATION OF TRANSITION CREDIT FOR ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS - The Board of Directors shall determine the amount of transition credit to be provided to each eligible institution based on the assessment base of the institution as of December 31, 1996, as compared to the combined aggregate assessment base of all eligible institutions as of that date, as well as other factors that the Board may determine to be appropriate.

(ii) AGGREGATE AMOUNT - The aggregate amount of transition credits available to all eligible institutions under this subparagraph (B) shall be equal to 9 basis points of the combined assessment base of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund as of December 31, 2002.

(iii) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTION DEFINED – For purposes of this subparagraph, an eligible institution is an insured depository institution that (I) was in existence on December 31, 1996 and paid a federal deposit insurance assessment prior to that date; or (II) is a successor to any insured depository institution described in subclause (I).

(C) (i) ADDITIONAL CREDITS – In addition to the transition credits authorized by subparagraph (B), if as of the most recent quarter for which information is available at such time that assessments are set for each assessment period, the reserve ratio exceeds the greater of the designated reserve ratio or 1.25 percent of reserves to estimated insured deposits, the Board of Directors may provide credits to insured depository institutions for assessment periods beginning on, or after, the first assessment period to which a transition credit under subparagraph (B) applies. In establishing any additional credit for each institution and the aggregate amount of such credit, the Board of Directors shall take into account:

(I) the factors under subsection (b)(2) for setting assessments and for setting the designated reserve ratio;

(II) the ratio of the assessment base of each insured depository institution (including any predecessor) as of December 31, 1996 to the assessment base of all insured depository institutions as of that date;

(III) previous assessments levied with respect to an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) to the Deposit Insurance Fund (and any predecessor deposit insurance fund) on or after January 1, 1997;

(IV) that portion of assessments levied with respect to an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) that reflects higher levels of risk assumed by such institution; and

(V) such other factors as the Board may determine to be appropriate.

(ii) CASH REBATES IN LIEU OF ASSESSMENT CREDITS-- The Corporation may, in its sole discretion, elect to provide cash rebates in lieu of all or part of any assessment credits that would otherwise have been provided under this subparagraph, but only if the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund exceeds the upper bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under subsection (b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb) and would remain above the upper bound after any such cash rebate.

(D) APPLICATION OF CREDIT –For credits authorized under subparagraphs (B) or (C),

(i) the Board of Directors may suspend or limit the use of such credits if, as of the most recent quarter for which information is available at such time that assessments are set for each assessment period, the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund is below the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under subsection (b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb); and

(ii) the amount of any credit that may be applied in an assessment period against the assessment on an insured depository institution that –

(I) exhibits financial, operational, or compliance weaknesses ranging from moderately severe to unsatisfactory, or

(II) is not adequately capitalized (as defined in section 38),

as of the date the risk-based assessment classification is made pursuant to the Corporation's regulations implementing the risk-based assessment system under subsection (b), may not exceed the amount calculated by applying to that depository institution the average assessment rate on all insured depository institutions for such assessment period.

(E) CHALLENGES TO CREDIT AMOUNTS – The regulations required by subparagraph (A) shall include procedures allowing an insured depository institution a reasonable opportunity to challenge administratively the amount of its credit or cash rebate under this paragraph. The Corporation's determination of the amount of any credit or cash rebate following any such challenge shall be final and not subject to judicial review."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

SEC. 6. REGULATIONS REQUIRED

(a) IN GENERAL.-Not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall prescribe final regulations, after notice and opportunity for comment, to implement sections 3, 4, and 5 of this Act and the amendments made by these sections.

(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.-No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed as affecting the authority of the Corporation to set or collect deposit insurance assessments before the effective date of the final regulations prescribed under subsection (a).

SEC. 7 ASSESSMENT BASE STUDY

ASSESSMENT BASE STUDY AND REPORT- Within one year of the date of enactment of this Act, the Corporation shall complete a study of the Deposit Insurance Fund assessment base and shall report to Congress.

(a) STUDY - In conducting the assessment base study, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall

(1) consult with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and

(2) take into account, among other factors, the risks posed to the Deposit Insurance Fund by the composition of insured depository institution liabilities.

(b) REPORT – The Corporation's report to Congress shall include recommendations for any changes in the assessment base and the Corporation's plans for implementing such changes.

SEC. 8 ASSESSMENTS-RELATED RECORDS RETENTION AND STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

(a) Records Retention. –

Paragraph (5) of section 7(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) Records to be maintained by insured depository institution. – Each insured depository institution shall maintain all records that the Corporation may require for verifying the correctness of the institution's assessments until the later of–

(A) 3 years from the due date of each assessment payment; or
(B) the date of the final determination of any dispute between the insured depository institution and the Corporation over the amount of any assessment.".

(b) Statute of Limitations for Assessment Actions. –

Subsection (g) of section 7 (12 U.S.C. 1817)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) Statute of Limitations for Assessment Actions. – Notwithstanding any other provision in Federal law, or the law of any State:

(1) Any action by an insured depository institution to recover from the Corporation the overpaid amount of any assessment shall be brought within 3 years from the date the assessment payment was due.

(2) Any action by the Corporation to recover from an insured depository institution the underpaid amount of any assessment shall be brought within 3 years from the date the assessment payment was due, subject only to the exception in paragraph (3).

(3) If an insured depository institution has made a false or fraudulent statement with intent to evade any or all of its assessment, the Corporation shall have 3 years from the date of discovery of the false or fraudulent statement in which to bring an action to recover the underpaid amount.

(4) The limitations periods set forth in this subsection may be tolled to allow for administrative review by the Corporation of any assessment claim, pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Corporation establishing procedures for resolving such claims.

(5) Assessment and deposit information contained in records no longer required to be maintained pursuant to subsection (b)(5) shall be considered conclusive and not subject to change.

(6) This section shall not apply to the underpaid or overpaid amount of any assessment if payment of that assessment became due before the effective date of this subsection.".

Democrats complain, but they refuse to be consulted

Listen to Democrats discuss the Bush administration's judicial nominations and you'll hear endless complaints that the White House is determined to appoint right-wing ideologues to the federal bench — and doesn't care what Senate Democrats think.

"We're not asked to give advice," Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) groused last year. "A lot of these troubles, I think, could be avoided if there was more consultation between the White House and the Senate."

Maybe — and maybe not. Just look at one of the most contentious of the current judicial battles, the fight between the White House and Michigan Democratic senators Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow over the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Last month Levin and Stabenow used their "blue slip" power to block four — four — Bush nominees to the 6th Circuit (for good measure, they blocked Bush's only Michigan nominee to the lower federal district court, too).

It's a fight that goes back to the Clinton administration, when the Democratic White House nominated two women, Kathleen McCree Lewis and Helene White (who just happens to be married to Carl Levin's cousin), to places on the 6th Circuit. Neither nomination was acted on by the GOP-controlled Senate. That wasn't terribly unusual; a few years before, the Democratic-controlled Senate failed to act on two of the first President Bush's 6th Circuit nominations from Michigan. But, no matter. Levin was very, very angry that his cousin's wife had not been given a hearing or a confirmation vote.

So when the new President Bush came into office, Levin, along with Stabenow, demanded that the president renominate Lewis and White. Bush declined, although in an unprecedented gesture of goodwill, he did renominate two of Clinton's other choices.

In the months that followed, Levin complained that the White House was "not that interested in consultation" over lover judicial nominations. But a newly released chronology of contacts between the White House and the senators reveals that the Bush administration virtually bent over backwards soliciting Levin's views.

The chronology, contained in a March 28 letter from White House counsel Alberto Gonzales to Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), outlines a long-running series of attempts to engage Levin on the nominations issue.

It began in early April 2001, when Levin and Stabenow first demanded that Bush renominate the two failed Clinton nominees. "Nominating others in their stead would .. be inconsistent with your stated goal of bipartisanship," the senators wrote the president. The White House promised to consider Lewis and White but said the president would make his own decisions.

The next month, on May 17, Levin and Stabenow went to the White House, where Gonzales gave them a list of prospective nominees and asked for the senators' comments. Levin told Gonzales he would not respond until "the larger issue" was resolved.

A week later, Gonzales again asked Levin for feedback on the potential nominees, but got no response. On June 7, Gonzales asked again. Still no answer. On June 15, he asked yet again. Nothing. He asked again on June 21, and again on July 9, and again on August 8. He got no response until August 10, when Levin told him nothing had changed. On August 14, the White House formally notified Levin that Lewis and White would not be renominated.

On August 22, Levin demanded that Bush create a bipartisan commission to select circuit court judges. Bush said no, arguing (correctly) that such an arrangement would be an unprecedented surrender of presidential power.

On October 9, Gonzales met with Levin, and on October 31, the White House made one last request for his views. Levin again refused, and on November 8, 2001, Bush sent his judicial choices to the Senate.

"After several months, with no sign of progress, and having received no specific objections to any of the individuals in question, the president proceeded with his nominations," Gonzales wrote in his recent letter to Hatch. "I believe that any reasonable observer would agree that the ... White House engaged in appropriate consultations with respect to the ... Michigan judicial nominees."

Yes, any reasonable observer would agree. But not Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow. In coming months, you'll undoubtedly hear Democrats complain that the White House has not consulted them about judicial nominations. When you do, just remember the case of the Michigan judges.

Treasury continues to tell us that there is no sectional analysis of the bill and that they do not have any kind of summary to provide us. Our understanding is that this is coming from Assistant Secretary for Financial Institutions Wayne Abernathy. We also understand that Kevin Warsh in NEC is the lead Wite House staff person on this issue.

Subject: LRM OGG29 - - TREASURY Draft Bill on Federal Deposit Insurance Reform

We are seeking your review of a draft bill on Federal deposit insurance reform. A transmittal letter will be circulated for clearance shortly that would be signed by Treasury, the Federal Reserve, FDIC, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Office of Thrift Supervision. According to Treasury, although the attached language is intended as technical drafting assistance for the Senate Banking Committee, their plan is that the letter will specifically endorse legislative action on this language. Also, please note that Treasury has not provided a sectional analysis of the bill. Please provide comments by no later than 12:00 P.M. Monday, April 14th.

DRAFT 4-04-03

A BILL

To reform the federal deposit insurance system and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as "The Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2003".

SEC. 2 MERGER OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUNDS

(a) IN GENERAL-

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND – There is established a fund to be known as the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(2) MERGER – The Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be merged into the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(3) DISPOSITION OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES – All assets and liabilities of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be transferred to the Deposit Insurance Fund.

(4) NO SEPARATE EXISTENCE – The separate existence of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall cease.

(b) REPEAL OF OUTDATED MERGER PROVISION – Section 2704 of P.L. 104-208 (the Deposit Insurance Funds Act of 1996) (12 U.S.C. 1821 note) is repealed.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- This section shall be effective on the first day of the first calendar quarter that begins after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3 ASSESSMENTS; DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO

(a) Section 7(b)(2)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)(A)) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking clause (i) and inserting the following:

(i) IN GENERAL.

(I) SENSE OF CONGRESS - It is the sense of the Congress that the Corporation should assess each insured depository institution for the benefits of federal deposit insurance;

(II) ASSESSMENTS - After considering the factors in clause (ii), the Board of Directors shall set assessments for insured depository institutions in accordance with this section. "

(2) By striking clause (iii) "LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENT".

(3) By redesignating existing clause (iv) as clause (iii) and amending it as follows:

"(iii) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO DEFINED- (I) IN GENERAL-- The designated reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund for each year shall be-

(aa) 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits; or
(bb) a percentage between 1.15 percent and 1.50 percent of estimated insured deposits, as the Board of Directors determines is justified for that year, taking into account the factors in subclause (II).
(II) FACTORS - In establishing the designated reserve ratio under subclause (I), the Board of Directors shall take into account -

(aa) the risk of losses to the Deposit Insurance Fund during that year and future years;
(bb)economic conditions generally affecting or likely to affect insured depository institutions with the goal of allowing the designated reserve ratio to increase under more favorable economic conditions and to decrease under less favorable economic conditions;
(cc) the desirability of avoiding sharp swings in the assessment rates of insured depository institutions; and
(dd) other factors that the Board of Directors deems appropriate."

(4) By adding the following new clause (iv) and striking existing clause (v):

"(iv) NOTICE AND COMMENT- The Board may determine the designated reserve ratio pursuant to clause (iii)(I)(bb) of this subparagraph only by regulation after notice and public comment and no more than once annually."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

SEC. 4 RAISING THE RESERVE RATIO TO THE DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO

(a) Section 7(b)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)) is amended as follows:

(1) By striking existing subparagraph (B) and redesignating existing subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(2) By redesignating subparagraph (E) as subparagraph (C) and amending it as follows:

" (C) MINIMUM ASSESSMENTS - The Corporation shall design the risk-based assessment system for the Deposit Insurance Fund so that, if the Corporation has borrowings outstanding on behalf of the Fund under section 14(a) or (b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1824(a) and (b)), or if the Board of Directors is required to set assessment rates pursuant to paragraph (3)(A)(ii) of this subsection, the minimum assessment rate in the risk-based assessment system, after application of any assessment credits provided under section 7(e)(2), shall be no less than 5 basis points for each insured depository institution."

(3) By striking subparagraphs (F) and (G) and redesignating existing subparagraph (H) as subparagraph (E).

(b) Section 7(b)(3)(A)-(C) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1817(b)(3)(A)-(C)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR RECAPITALIZING UNDERCAPITALIZED FUND

(A) IN GENERAL – If the reserve ratio of the deposit insurance fund is less than the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under paragraph (2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb), the Board of Directors shall set assessment rates -

(i) that are sufficient to increase the reserve ratio for the Fund to the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio not later than 1 year after such rates are set; or

(ii) in accordance with a recapitalization schedule promulgated by the Corporation under subparagraph (B).

(B) RECAPITALIZATION SCHEDULES. For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the Corporation shall, by regulation, promulgate and implement a schedule that specifies, at semiannual intervals, target reserve ratios for the Fund, culminating in a reserve ratio equal to the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio not later than 6 years after the date on which the recapitalization schedule is implemented."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

SEC. 5 ASSESSMENT CREDITS AND CASH REBATES

(a) Section 7(e)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1817(e)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) ASSESSMENT CREDITS

(A) IN GENERAL - The Corporation shall establish, by regulation, criteria and procedures for providing insured depository institutions with the credits described in subparagraphs (B) and (C) to offset the institution's deposit insurance assessments that become due for assessment periods after the effective date of regulations implementing assessments pursuant to this Act.

(B) TRANSITION CREDITS –

(i) DETERMINATION OF TRANSITION CREDIT FOR ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS - The Board of Directors shall determine the amount of transition credit to be provided to each eligible institution based on the assessment base of the institution as of December 31, 1996, as compared to the combined aggregate assessment base of all eligible institutions as of that date, as well as other factors that the Board may determine to be appropriate.

(ii) AGGREGATE AMOUNT - The aggregate amount of transition credits available to all eligible institutions under this subparagraph (B) shall be equal to 9 basis points of the combined assessment base of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund as of December 31, 2002.

(iii) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTION DEFINED – For purposes of this subparagraph, an eligible institution is an insured depository institution that (I) was in existence on December 31, 1996 and paid a federal deposit insurance assessment prior to that date; or (II) is a successor to any insured depository institution described in subclause (I).

(C) (i) ADDITIONAL CREDITS – In addition to the transition credits authorized by subparagraph (B), if as of the most recent quarter for which information is available at such time that assessments are set for each assessment period, the reserve ratio exceeds the greater of the designated reserve ratio or 1.25 percent of reserves to estimated insured deposits, the Board of Directors may provide credits to insured depository institutions for assessment periods beginning on, or after, the first assessment period to which a transition credit under subparagraph (B) applies. In establishing any additional credit for each institution and the aggregate amount of such credit, the Board of Directors shall take into account:

(I) the factors under subsection (b)(2) for setting assessments and for setting the designated reserve ratio;

(II) the ratio of the assessment base of each insured depository institution (including any predecessor) as of December 31, 1996 to the assessment base of all insured depository institutions as of that date;

(III) previous assessments levied with respect to an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) to the Deposit Insurance Fund (and any predecessor deposit insurance fund) on or after January 1, 1997;

(IV) that portion of assessments levied with respect to an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) that reflects higher levels of risk assumed by such institution; and

(V) such other factors as the Board may determine to be appropriate.

(ii) CASH REBATES IN LIEU OF ASSESSMENT CREDITS-- The Corporation may, in its sole discretion, elect to provide cash rebates in lieu of all or part of any assessment credits that would otherwise have been provided under this subparagraph, but only if the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund exceeds the upper bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under subsection (b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb) and would remain above the upper bound after any such cash rebate.

(D) APPLICATION OF CREDIT –For credits authorized under subparagraphs (B) or (C),

(i) the Board of Directors may suspend or limit the use of such credits if, as of the most recent quarter for which information is available at such time that assessments are set for each assessment period, the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund is below the lower bound of the range for the designated reserve ratio under subsection (b)(2)(A)(iii)(I)(bb); and

(ii) the amount of any credit that may be applied in an assessment period against the assessment on an insured depository institution that –

(I) exhibits financial, operational, or compliance weaknesses ranging from moderately severe to unsatisfactory, or

(II) is not adequately capitalized (as defined in section 38),

as of the date the risk-based assessment classification is made pursuant to the Corporation's regulations implementing the risk-based assessment system under subsection (b), may not exceed the amount calculated by applying to that depository institution the average assessment rate on all insured depository institutions for such assessment period.

(E) CHALLENGES TO CREDIT AMOUNTS – The regulations required by subparagraph (A) shall include procedures allowing an insured depository institution a reasonable opportunity to challenge administratively the amount of its credit or cash rebate under this paragraph. The Corporation's determination of the amount of any credit or cash rebate following any such challenge shall be final and not subject to judicial review."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE – The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 6 of this Act become effective.

SEC. 6. REGULATIONS REQUIRED

(a) IN GENERAL.-Not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall prescribe final regulations, after notice and opportunity for comment, to implement sections 3, 4, and 5 of this Act and the amendments made by these sections.

(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.-No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed as affecting the authority of the Corporation to set or collect deposit insurance assessments before the effective date of the final regulations prescribed under subsection (a).

SEC. 7 ASSESSMENT BASE STUDY

ASSESSMENT BASE STUDY AND REPORT- Within one year of the date of enactment of this Act, the Corporation shall complete a study of the Deposit Insurance Fund assessment base and shall report to Congress.

(a) STUDY - In conducting the assessment base study, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall

(1) consult with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and

(2) take into account, among other factors, the risks posed to the Deposit Insurance Fund by the composition of insured depository institution liabilities.

(b) REPORT – The Corporation's report to Congress shall include recommendations for any changes in the assessment base and the Corporation's plans for implementing such changes.

SEC. 8 ASSESSMENTS-RELATED RECORDS RETENTION AND STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

(a) Records Retention. –

Paragraph (5) of section 7(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) Records to be maintained by insured depository institution. – Each insured depository institution shall maintain all records that the Corporation may require for verifying the correctness of the institution's assessments until the later of–

(A) 3 years from the due date of each assessment payment; or
(B) the date of the final determination of any dispute between the insured depository institution and the Corporation over the amount of any assessment.".

(b) Statute of Limitations for Assessment Actions. –

Subsection (g) of section 7 (12 U.S.C. 1817)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) Statute of Limitations for Assessment Actions. – Notwithstanding any other provision in Federal law, or the law of any State:

(1) Any action by an insured depository institution to recover from the Corporation the overpaid amount of any assessment shall be brought within 3 years from the date the assessment payment was due.

(2) Any action by the Corporation to recover from an insured depository institution the underpaid amount of any assessment shall be brought within 3 years from the date the assessment payment was due, subject only to the exception in paragraph (3).

(3) If an insured depository institution has made a false or fraudulent statement with intent to evade any or all of its assessment, the Corporation shall have 3 years from the date of discovery of the false or fraudulent statement in which to bring an action to recover the underpaid amount.

(4) The limitations periods set forth in this subsection may be tolled to allow for administrative review by the Corporation of any assessment claim, pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Corporation establishing procedures for resolving such claims.

(5) Assessment and deposit information contained in records no longer required to be maintained pursuant to subsection (b)(5) shall be considered conclusive and not subject to change.

(6) This section shall not apply to the underpaid or overpaid amount of any assessment if payment of that assessment became due before the effective date of this subsection.".

SEC. 9. LATE PAYMENT FEES FOR FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENTS.

Subsection (h) of section 18 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1828) is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Late Payment Fees. – Any insured depository institution which fails or refuses to pay any assessment shall be subject to a late payment fee of 1 percent of the required assessment for each day the violation continues after the payment was due. The Corporation may, in its sole discretion, waive all or part of any late payment fee upon a finding that good cause prevented the timely payment of the assessment. This subsection shall not be applicable under the circumstances stated in the proviso of subsection (b).".

SEC. 10. EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLANS.

Section 11(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(1)) is amended by striking subparagraph (D) and inserting the following:

"(D) COVERAGE FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN DEPOSITS. –

(i) PROHIBITION ON ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFIT PLAN DEPOSITS. -- An insured depository institution may accept employee benefit plan deposits only if the institution is:
(I) well capitalized, or
(II) adequately capitalized and has received a waiver under section 29(c).

(ii) PASS-THROUGH INSURANCE. -- Notwithstanding the requirements of clause (i), the Corporation shall provide pass-through deposit insurance for the deposits of any employee benefit plan.

(iii) DEFINITIONS. -- For purposes of this subparagraph, the following definitions shall apply:

(I) CAPITAL STANDARDS- The terms `well capitalized' and `adequately capitalized' have the same meanings as in section 38.

(II) EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN- The term `employee benefit plan' has the same meaning as in paragraph (8)(B)(ii), and includes any eligible deferred compensation plan described in section 457 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(III) PASS-THROUGH DEPOSIT INSURANCE. -- The term `pass-through deposit insurance' means, with respect to an employee benefit plan, deposit insurance coverage provided on a pro rata basis to the participants in, or beneficiaries of, the plan in accordance with the interest of each participant or beneficiary.".

SEC. 11– TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT RELATING TO THE MERGER OF THE DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUNDS.

No one from WH should be guest speaker at GOPAC. Karen is a different story since she is not a government employee. Thanks.

JC Watts has invited Ken to speak to the GOPAC Conference on April 28th. I have tentatively scheduled a time, but wanted to make sure that they were not the same situation as the RGA. Ken thought they might be. They would also like our help in finding a speaker for the keynote dinner. They have asked for Karl or Karen.

COMMITTEE BUSINESS

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003

United States Senate,

Committee on the Judiciary,

Washington, D.C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:10 a.m., in room SD-226, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Orrin G. Hatch, Chairman of the Committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Hatch, Grassley, Specter, Kyl, DeWine, Craig, Chambliss, Cornyn, Leahy, Kennedy, Kohl, Feinstein, Feingold, Schumer, and Durbin.

Chairman Hatch. Let us get going this morning. We have enough people here to at least start talking.

We have decided the way to break some of the logjams on these judges is to bring Roberts back into the Committee for a one-day appearance, with the understanding that he could be put on the very next markup even if it is a very short time, with no put-over for a week, and we vote on him.

But Cook will have a right to be up at any time thereafter. In other words, from this day on, within a week, on the floor. She can be called up right after the Roberts' hearing, the day after if the majority leader wants to.

Let me just think what else there was to that. Mr. Sutton will be brought up tomorrow. Senator Harkin will be given opportunity to make whatever statements he desires and then we will vote on Sutton when we come back, as I understand it.

We are going to recess for just a second or two. We will be right back.

[The Committee was recessed from 10:13 a.m. to 10:20 a.m.]

Chairman Hatch. I would like to welcome everybody to this markup. We have several important matters on today's agenda including five nominations that I would like to have voted on today. They are: J. Leon Holmes to be District Judge for the Eastern District of Arkansas; Cecilia Altonaga to be District Judge for the Southern District of Florida; Patricia Minaldi to be District Judge for the Western District of Louisiana; Susan Braden and Charles Lettow to be Judges for the Court of Federal Claims.

I am also looking forward to picking up where we left off last week on S. 274, the Bipartisan Class Action Fairness Act.

Is there any objection to these four judges? Senator Feinstein.

First let me have the ranking member make any remarks. He is allowed to say a few words here, isn't he?

Senator Leahy. Just to help speed things up, I will hold off my opening statement till after we have voted on the judges. My understanding was Patricia Minaldi was being held over. We were going to have votes on-- Chairman Hatch. We will hold Patricia Minaldi.

Senator Leahy. We were going to have actual votes on the other four.

Chairman Hatch. That is right. The Senator is correct.

Senator Leahy. Then I will make my opening statement after we have done that. I know how difficult it is to hold 10 people here.

Chairman Hatch. The clerk will call the roll on J. Leon Holmes.

I am sorry. Excuse me. Senator Feinstein. I am sorry. I apologize.

Senator Feinstein. Let me begin, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I have never voted against a district judge, and in reading this record and listening to the comments that this man has made, I do not see how anyone can divine from these comments that he has either the temperament or the wisdom to be a judge. Frankly, I was shocked by some of them. Let me read a couple.

In 1980 he wrote a letter to the editor stating that abortion should not be available to rape victims because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami. That may be a smart kind of statement to make, but nonetheless, I think it shows what is beneath the surface. He co-wrote an article in which he stated that, "The wife is to subordinate herself to her husband," and "The woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." How could I ever vote for this man to be a judge?

In a recent article written with his son, Jeremy, he argues that, "Christianity in principle cannot accept subordination to the political authorities, for the end to which it directs men is higher than the end of the political order." He wrote that, "The abortion issue is the simplest issue this country has faced since slavery was made unconstitutional, and it deserves the same response."

He wrote a column attempting to recast the Lincoln-Douglas presidential debates in the 1850s as equivalent to the abortion debate, and stated that Douglas was "pro-choice on the slavery issue." He has compared abortion to the Holocaust, writing, "The pro-abortionists counsel us to respond to these problems by abandoning what little morality our society still recognizes. This was attempted by one highly-sophisticated historically christian nation in our century, Nazi Germany."

I have a very hard time seeing where this man has the temperament to take his personal views out of his judicial conduct. How could I as a woman ever bring a case before a man that says in everything I do I must be subordinate to the man? So if that is the case, it would leave 50 percent of our population out from any kind of fair decisionmaking. So I guess all things have a first, and I will cast my first "no" vote on a district court judge.

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. The Senator from New York.

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I feel the exact same way as Senator Feinstein. I am just amazed that this man is being nominated for district court judge. Again, me too. You give the benefit of the doubt on district court judges. I cannot think of one we have contested. Just look at my record. It is similar to all of us. Are we being obstructionist? We voted for 111 of 116 judges. I have voted for judge after judge who disagrees with my views on choice or the Commerce Clause of the First Amendment or the Second Amendment. We are not trying to have any kind of litmus test here, but sometimes you get someone who is so far off the deep end, that it is just amazing to me that this man has gotten this far. I find it hard to believe that we are nominating him here. I think it shows what some of us have been trying to say, that some of these nominees are so extreme, can we not do better? Can we not be consistent with what the President and the majority party believe, but not have someone who is so far off the deep end, this man is an embarrassment to be nominated. He is going to make a laughingstock, not of those of us who are opposing him, but of those who are supporting him, to say that--and I just want to get the quote exactly right--he said that, "Rape leads to pregnancy about as often as snow falls in Miami." It is not just insulting. I mean this guy just makes it up as he goes along. We checked the almanac. It snowed in Miami once in the last hundred years.

32,000 women became pregnant last year because of rape, 32,000. Imagine the anguish of each one of them, of each of their families. Now, we can have a debate on what the consequence of that should be, but the man is so blinded by his ideology he does not even look at the facts. These are real women. They are in pain. They have to make traumatic decisions. I am sure many of those women who were raped are not for abortion, and to take their agony, that is not 32,000 total, that is 32,000 a year. Then maybe you say, well, maybe that was a flip comment, but he does it over and over again as Senator Feinstein noted. He said that it's a woman's duty to subordinate herself to her husband and to place herself under the authority of the man. We have had a series of nominees who have done things that just show such disrespect for women.

I asked him some written questions. I asked him if a woman, who was advancing a battered woman's defense against her husband lacked confidence in his impartiality, and he said he does not see why anything he has written would justify any concern that he could not be impartial. Not only does this nominee refuse to disavow. We asked him would he disavow his assertion that women are bound to subordinate themselves to me. He did not. So these are not slips of the tongue. These are not little mistakes in an otherwise distinguished career. This is a pattern of thought to which he clings.

If a woman were in a legal dispute with a man and my case were assigned to Mr. Holmes, should he be confirmed, I would be worried if I were a woman in a dispute with a man. There is more to be worried about. He believes that the Supreme Court rulings banning prayer in public schools, those compelling public school busing, those guaranteeing a woman's right to choose, constituted a revolution, and he accused the judges behind those rulings of being authoritarians. He has defended and endorsed Booker T. Washington's view--this is 2003--that slavery was a consequence of divine providence designed to teach white people how to be more Christ-like. He is saying that the Almighty said that slavery was a good thing.

What is going on here? Have we lost all sense of reality? I do not know why this man was nominated. But this goes off the deep end. He said that in all the cases in history he would have wanted to argue, the creation case is right there at the top of the list. I am not sure why since John Scopes was convicted back in 1920 whenever, but I guess he thinks he could have done a better job of defending a law that bans the teaching of evolution in our public schools, and he has not disavowed any of these views. He has continued to stand by them. In one sense I admire that. We are not getting somebody in this case who refuses to tell us what he thinks, but the bottom line is what he thinks is so bad.

That is one of the reasons we want to know people's views because there are going to be a few nominees that are off the deep end, and it is not enough in a case like this for him to say, I will follow the law, and we just march like soldiers and say any time any potential nominee utters that mantra, then we say, yes, sir, and approve it. That is not what we should be doing here. That is not some elixir that banishes all of these views.

I want to work with you. I want to support most judges, even when I don't agree with them. I don't like judges on the far left as well as the far right, and my own Judicial Committee has knocked out judges like that when they have been here. This guy is so far off the deep end, that can't we call a halt to this at some point?

Chairman Hatch. If I could just respond. I have to admit I am concerned about some of those comments. Mr. Holmes has taken public stands on many issues while in private life and certainly had a right to do so as an American citizen, and I would encourage all of our citizens to express themselves freely in this democratic process, and I think we all recognize that these are divisive issues about which many persons feel strongly, very strongly on both sides. The issue today is not whether one view is right or wrong but whether Mr. Holmes is able to set aside his personal views, whatever they may be, and act as a judge should act.

Let me make a few points in this regard, and then I have a suggestion for the Committee. Mr. Holmes had unqualified support from his Democratic home State Senators, Senators Lincoln and Pryor. He has unqualified support from the Arkansas Democrat Gazette, and numerous Democratic and pro-choice lawyers. This all represents strong testimony of his ability to remain objective once a judge. Senator Lincoln testified at the hearing that Mr. Holmes is trusted, he is respected by his friends and colleagues. She looked at his skills, his experience, his intellect and ability to understand and apply the law, and she expressed her conviction that he is able to apply the law fairly and without bias.

Senator Pryor has known Mr. Holmes since 1986. He has worked with him. He has testified Mr. Holmes has a reputation for being one of Arkansas's best attorneys. Senator Pryor talked about Mr. Holmes, they cited his qualifications, his ability to administer justice in a fair manner and above all his integrity. Most striking are the letters that the Committee has received from pro-choice attorneys, both men and women throughout Arkansas, who strongly believe that Mr. Holmes will fairly adjudicate any case including abortion cases that come before him. They personally attest to his integrity and character and commitment to following the law.

For example, Beth Deere, at attorney with Mr. Holmes' prior firm, Williams and Anderson, she wrote the Committee, quote, "I am proud to be a Democrat. I am also proud to recommend Leon Holmes as Federal District Judge even though he and I disagree on issues including a woman's right to choose," unquote. She concludes, quote, "Mr. Holmes is shot through with integrity. He will, I believe, uphold and apply the law with the utmost care and diligence," unquote.

Eileen Woods Harrison, a self-described pro-choice Democrat and a former administrative law judge with the Arkansas Workers Compensation Commission, had the opportunity to observe Mr. Holmes' legal work firsthand when he represented the opposing side in a lawsuit that she filed. She writes, quote, "I commend Mr. Holmes to you. He is a brilliant man and a great lawyer and a fine person. Mr. Holmes conducted himself in the most professional and ethical manner throughout my case. I gained a great respect for him during the course of the litigation."

I will put copies of those letters in the record.

Chairman Hatch. Now, his former law partner, Philip Anderson, is a recent past President of the American Bar Association. He strongly supports Holmes, even though he disagrees with him on some of these issue. Now, Mr. Anderson has written the Committee, quote, "Mr. Holmes is a person or rock solid integrity and sterling character. He is compassionate and even-handed. He has an innate sense of fairness. He is temperamentally suited for the bench. In short, he has all of the qualities that one would hope to find in a Federal judge," unquote.

I will submit that as a copy for the record as well, without objection.

In addition to these attorneys, Mr. Holmes' local newspaper, the Arkansas Democrat Gazette has heartily endorsed him. What is interesting about this endorsement is that it was announced before he was even nominated. In endorsing Holmes the Democrat Gazette Editorial Board reviewed a list of seven district court candidates former Senator Hutchinson had submitted to the White House for consideration. Out of that, quote, "impressive list of possibles," unquote, the newspaper wrote, "One name stood out. One name was reminiscent of Judge Richard S. Arnold, formerly Chief Judge on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals." Now to quote the editorial, speaking of Judge Arnold, quote, "His is the kind of light that illuminates, not just flares. It isn't agreeing or disagreeing with where Judge Arnold has come out on a legal question that educates, but seeing how he got there. Great judges are like that," unquote.

The editorial continues, quote, "The same light settled on one name. The name might as well have been in italics, Leon Holmes," unquote. Quote, "What distinguishes Mr. Holmes is the rare blend of qualities he brings to the law, intellect, scholarship, conviction and detachment," unquote. The editorial concludes, quote, "Their politics and their approach to many aspects of the law may be different, yet Richard Arnold and Leon Holmes cast the same illuminating light," unquote.

I might add that Judge Arnold was appointed by President Carter to the U.S. District Court in Arkansas, and then the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, and is often mentioned as a U.S. Supreme Court candidate.

Now let me just add to that, during the Clinton years.

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt you for just a moment?

Chairman Hatch. Yes.

Senator Specter. As I had mentioned to you before we started, I have to go to chair another hearing at 11:00, and while we are hearing this matter, I had been advised by staff that the five nominees were all noncontroversial. I know this nominee has been held over for a week, but I would suggest that we hold him over beyond so we can examine this.

Chairman Hatch. If the Senator would just hold in abeyance that request, let me just finish here, because I have a suggestion.

Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized too.

Chairman Hatch. Of course. Let me just end this because this bothers me too. I can say that I was Chairman during six years of President Clinton's administration, and I can tell you that Judge Arnold was really at the top of the list for the Supreme Court, there is no question. And I think the only reason--maybe I shouldn't comment on that. It was a legitimate reason by the President. There was only one reason why he wasn't chosen, and that was a concern about age and health. I certainly told the President that I would support him, that I thought he was an excellent judge. Well, they are comparing this man with Judge Arnold, so apparently the people in Arkansas know a lot more than we do.

Let me just make a suggestion to us. I would be happy to put him over for a week at the request of Senator Specter, but I think there is a way of resolving this perhaps, and that is, if you are willing, to report him out without recommendation, and then we all go to the Arkansas Senators, and they will have to move his nomination on the floor if they want to continue to push him.

We could do that or we can put him over for a week and study it a little bit more, but I am concerned about some of those remarks, but everything I hear about the man is that he is a person of inestimable legal ability, intellect, capacity, decency, honor. The fact that he has made some of these statements that are very questionable in my eyes, as has been explained by my colleagues, I have to rely a lot on the two Democrat Senators and I might add the vetting of the administration, and the fact that the American Bar Association gives him a well-qualified rating, a majority well-qualified rating, and I certainly want to rely on the home State Senators here if I can.

Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman?

Senator Leahy. I would like to say something too.

Chairman Hatch. Senator Leahy first and then Senator Durbin.

Senator Leahy. Just briefly, if I might--

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, before we begin, could I just ask unanimous consent that my entire record--that my statement be put into the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection. We will put statements of anybody in the record without objection.

Senator Schumer. I don't need my entire record to be in the record.

[Laughter.]

2 [The prepared statement of Senator Schumer follows:]

REV_00163076

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, I apologize for stepping out. I have trouble with nosebleeds, not that you give them to me, I want to hasten to add.

Chairman Hatch. I would never claim that.

Senator Leahy. But if this is going to be put over I have a longer statement. I was listening to Senator Feinstein and Senator Schumer earlier, and one thing that stuck in my mind, and it also stuck in my mind last night as I was reading over some of the report on this--and I appreciate the concern of the Senator from Pennsylvania in wanting to look at it further. I would urge all Senators to. There is almost a flippant disregard of the question of rape. It brought me back to a memory, and I won't identify the victim any more closely than this because she was a juvenile at the time. It was a case I had as a young prosecutor, of a young woman, teenage, well under 16, where you would be an adult, she had been raped and did become pregnant, a very violent rape by a family member. The trauma, enormous trauma to this young woman, and I know that it took her years to get over this. I doubt if she ever fully got over it, but I know what she went through and what her family went through. The Senator from California is absolutely right in talking about these kind of issues. There seems almost sometimes, people sort of take this, well, rape, that is that. Unless you spent some time working with rape victims, as I have and several others around this table have, as horrible as it is, I don't think especially we men can fully grasp what a terrible traumatic event this is.

What bothers me so much with Mr. Holmes, of course everybody has a right to say whatever they want, but what he says seems to reflect a cavalier attitude to such a terrible, terrible traumatic incident. That bothers me. I don't mind that somebody disagrees with me on choice questions or a whole lot of other issues, assuming that they are going to be sensitive to people who hold differing views. But when you have something which appears to be a cavalier attitude toward what is a horrendous crime. We have had people here that I have been very much against who seemed very much concerned about property crimes, but not concerned about something that goes way beyond any property crime. So if this is going to be held over, I will speak further on it, but I wanted to compliment the Senator from California and the Senator from New York for their comments.

Chairman Hatch. If we are going to hold them over, could we reserve our comments for the next time, or do you really need to speak today, Senator? Senator Durbin.

Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman, I will make it brief because I think this is the right thing to do, to hold him over. Words count in life and in the law particularly, and the words of a judge will determine the outcome of a trial and the rights of the parties in the courtroom, and the words of Leon Holmes convict him of insensitivity to some of the most basic values and issues that come before a Federal Court.

I know that we disagree, Mr. Holmes and I, on the issue of abortion, but I can certainly tell you that of the 115 nominees from President Bush, the vast majority of them don't hold the same position that I do on the issue of abortion, and yet I have given the President his nominees. But Mr. Holmes' views reach a much different level. Let me give you a specific illustration.

I asked Leon Holmes in a written question whether he would recuse himself as a Federal District Court Judge if any of the eight different anti-abortion organizations that he has represented as an attorney would come before him in the court. He refused. He will not recuse himself when these organizations that he has represented as an attorney come before him in the court. Nor is he willing to commit to recusing himself on any type of abortion cases, despite his long history.

I also asked a question which is not a trick question. It has become boilerplate. I asked Mr. Holmes to name three Supreme Court cases with which he disagreed. I hope that you will read his response, and I would like to read it. "As a citizen I am troubled by the Supreme Court decisions in Dred Scott, Buck v. Bell," which is a case of involuntary sterilization by the State, "and Roe v. Wade, because in my view, each of those decisions failed to respect the dignity and worth of the human person."

How can a person make that statement about Roe v. Wade and then quickly add that, "I will apply this law with objectivity." I think it is almost impossible.

Let me tell you, when you go into the specific issues that have been raised here, he did say, in fairness to Mr. Holmes--and I don't know if you have seen this, Mr. Chairman; you should, and I am certain that you will quote it back to me at some future point. But when he was asked about this statement, about the likelihood of rape victims conceiving, and was quoted as saying, "Because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami," he said, and I quote, "I have to acknowledge that my own rhetoric, particularly when I first became involved in the issue in 1980 and perhaps some years thereafter, but sometimes has been unduly strident and inflammatory. The sentence about rape victims which was made in a letter to an editor in 1980 is particularly troublesome to me from a distance of 23 years later. Regardless of the merits of the issue, the articulation in that sentence reflects an insensitivity for which there is no excuse and for which I apologize."

That was part of his response to me, and that should be part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection, that will be made part of the record.

/ COMMITTEE INSERT

REV_00163080

Chairman Hatch. I appreciate you bringing that out.

Senator Durbin. But I do want to make another point, and my last point. When I asked him specifically about this statement that he made, that a wife is to subordinate herself to her husband and the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man, I am very troubled by his response to me. And his response, which I will make a part of the record, says that the article that I mentioned was a discussion of the historic teachings of the Catholic Church and is based on the sacramental theology of the Catholic Church. "In my view these teachings ennoble and dignify both men and women. They do not demean either." He goes on to explain that this was in the context of ordaining priests and so forth, but I will tell you, as a person with a Catholic background, that is a troubling statement for him to make. I don't believe that that type of statement, which reflects a narrow view of Catholic theology, should be used to in any way justify a statement which by contemporary standards should not be followed by any Federal District Court Judge in any State.

I will close by saying this: I am certain that of the millions of people in Arkansas and the thousands of attorneys in Arkansas, and maybe the thousands of Republican attorneys in Arkansas, there has to be a nominee that can be brought forward that can do that State proud. Mr. Holmes is not such a nominee.

Chairman Hatch. With that, we will put him over for a week, and I suggest that every member of the Committee chat with the two Senators from Arkansas, and hopefully they will be able to persuade us that the Arkansas Gazette is right and all of these others are right as well. But I have to admit I think probably most people have made some inappropriate statements during their lifetime that they wish they hadn't. I know I have, and especially in your younger years. There is no question about it. But let us look at it. I am troubled by the same statements that you are, and on the other hand, I do place great weight on the two Senators and also on the people down in Arkansas, and especially those who have worked with him in the courts and so forth. We are going to put him over.

What is would like to do is move to a vote on Susan G. Braden at this point. Is that okay with you, or do you want me--

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, I am going to have to leave to chair a hearing at 11 o'clock, and I would ask if we might take up a very brief amendment under the class action case. Senator Feinstein are prepared to offer and speak just a minute or two.

Chairman Hatch. Is there any objection?

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection. I just have a statement that I want to make before we go to the two Court of Federal Claims nominees, but I can wait.

Chairman Hatch. Then we will take that out of turn and the Senator can bring up his amendment.

Senator Specter. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you all. Senator Feinstein and I are moving to strike on page 19, lines 18 through 25, and on page 20, lines 1 through 7. These are additions to this class action bill, and I have had considerable comment, and Senator Feinstein advises me that she has also. These matters do not relate to class actions, but the (i) relates to private attorneys general, somebody who initiates a suit on behalf of other unnamed people, and (ii) refers to mass tort claims, which again doesn't involve class actions.

I support this class action bill for reasons that I have discussed before, but these are add-ons, and have not been considered by the Committee, and would make really very, very material changes.

[Mr. Specter's Amendment follows:]

Senator Feinstein. Mr. Chairman, may I speak?

I would like to add my voice of support to what Senator Specter has said. I believe he is absolutely correct. This came to our attention late yesterday. I didn't catch it on my reading of the bill, and it has apparently been added to the bill a year or so ago. It was not in the original bill. It is really directed at California law, although other jurisdictions which have similar law it may be applied against. This law allows individuals to sue on behalf of a general public in lieu of the attorney general, so they are called private attorney general actions, and what they do is they allow individual groups or local district attorneys or Government officials or even individual consumers to sue corporations on behalf of the people of the State. These suits are generally to recover illegally gained profits or to enforce California law against companies that do business in my State. As Senator Specter said, they are not class actions, and this is a class action bill. But the bill essentially deems these suits to be class actions, and therefore moves many of them to Federal Court even if the plaintiffs are all in California.

Now, this is of great concern to me. Yesterday my staff, Mr. Chairman, worked with your staff to see if something could be worked out, but at this point it hasn't happened. Let me give you an example. If a California consumer sued Enron on behalf of the general public in an attempt to force Enron to disgorge illegally gotten profits and return that money to the Government of California, this bill would not change anything. While your staff was unwilling to agree to a compromise, which I understand because of the lateness of the hour, I just can't let this go ahead. As you know, I am prepared to support this bill with a diversity amendment that I will propose. But this is a direct strike against State law in a way that puts a whole category of actions that are not now class actions into the class action arena. In a sense it is an overreach, and I don't think it belongs in this bill.

Chairman Hatch. If I could comment, frankly, these are representative actions that are a little bit different from class actions, but in all honesty, it means that the out-of-state plaintiffs can't remove to Federal Court. I see very little difference. I see every reason to want to be able to do that, but I am prepared to vote on it.

Senator Grassley. Could I ask?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Grassley.

Senator Grassley. The impression here is that this is something new to this bill? This was in this bill that last--it wasn't in the bill three congresses ago.

Senator Feinstein. That is correct.

Senator Grassley. It was in this bill the last Congress.

Senator Feinstein. Correct.

Senator Grassley. And it has been in the bill all this year, so what is this story about you don't know what is in the bill?

Senator Feinstein. The story is I read the bill twice, and I am sorry I didn't catch it. It was brought to our attention yesterday by numerous phone calls by a whole host of organizations. I try to do my homework. I have read the bill. We just didn't catch it.

Senator Grassley. Well, I would like to have amendments filed so we know about them. This is the first time we have seen this amendment.

Chairman Hatch. Are there any other comments? Senator Kyl.

Senator Kyl. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, our Committee procedures are to circulate amendments in advance, and I don't have any idea what this amendment is. I am familiar with the provision in the bill. I am happy to vote. Apparently it is pretty important, and I would like to try to understand what the issue is.

Chairman Hatch. I wonder if you could make a good faith effort between now and the floor to resolve this to satisfy you, because I hate to take it out right now. It has been in there. Frankly, I can see a reason for it being in there. I don't really think it conflicts with California law. I really believe that it can be beneficial, but I will work in good faith to try and resolve it with you.

Senator Kyl. Mr. Chairman, might I just say, most states, under common law, had a provision like this. I don't know whether there are differences between California law and Arizona law, for example, but this is not unique to California.

Chairman Hatch. I would be happy to work--

Senator Kyl. There has always been a private attorneys general kind of action that can be taken.

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, the difference is that it confers Federal Court jurisdiction. This is a class action bill, and there has been general agreement that we need reform on class actions, but these provisions do not relate to class actions. They are not class actions, and (ii) is a provision for mass torts, and there is great concern about overburdening the Federal Courts. Where you have class actions we have had reasons to remove to the Federal Courts, and there has been a defeat of that when one plaintiff is a citizen of the same State as the defendant; diversity falls. That has been really a subterfuge to move a lot of cases to very questionable jurisdictions, but there has been no showing that on mass tort cases that that problem exists.

And on the private attorneys general, that is a very complex area. I used to be in the field as a district attorney as to bringing those actions. It is very hard. There has to be a showing of failure or refusal to act before, and some generalized public interest and a failure by the public official to act. But these are very, very important issues, and I don't think anybody has to apologize for not noticing all of the provisions of this complex bill. With what we have to do around here, we focus on it when we can, and it frequently is at the last minute. Other people read the bills and call the matters to our attention. I commend Senator Feinstein for reading the bill twice. I haven't read it once.

[Laughter.]

Senator Specter. I would like to take polygraphs as to how many people have read this bill.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. Well, we don't want to start that.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. Let me just say, before I turn to Senator Feinstein, that you still have to have diversity of citizenship. You still have to have 100 or more, and you still have to meet the requisite monetary amounts.

Senator Specter. No, Mr. Chairman, you don't have to have diversity. This confers Federal jurisdiction without diversity.

Chairman Hatch. I don't believe it does.

Senator Specter. Without diversity, where somebody makes a representation they are representing a lot of people with similar interests. And you don't have to have diversity if you have 100 or more people on what is a mass tort. That is the point. Diversity goes, and I think it ought to go on class actions for what has happened.

Chairman Hatch. You still have to have an out-of-state defendant. That is diversity. I think diversity does apply. But look, I am willing to work with you, and it may be that we just take it out.

Senator Feinstein. And I really appreciate that, but let me say this. As you know, we have worked on the diversity provisions. I think we have worked something out hopefully which will gain the acceptance of the supporters of this bill, and I have taken a lot of flak to support this bill.

Chairman Hatch. Yes, you have.

Senator Feinstein. I cannot support it with this in it, and I cannot vote for it in this Committee with this in it.

Chairman Hatch. Then we will strike--

Senator Feinstein. I have even the district attorneys opposed to this section.

Chairman Hatch. Okay. Let me solve it this way. We will strike the provision, but we will between here and the floor. We will reverse the order. Instead of leaving it in and working together, we will work between here and the floor together to see if we can come up with language that will be more satisfactory because I do want the distinguished Senator to be a supporter of this bill.

Senator Specter. How about two distinguished--or how about one distinguished Senator and one other Senator?

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. I want two very distinguished Senators, along with everybody else, to be supportive of this bill. I will try to be a little more accurate in the future on those type of things, especially on--

Senator Leahy. I am not sure what we have done.

Chairman Hatch. Well, I move to strike the provision. Is there any objection?

Senator Leahy. Does that mean you accept the Specter/Feinstein amendment?

Chairman Hatch. I accept the language. He moved to strike. I accept the language. Is there any objection? Without objection, the provision will be stricken.

Now, let us go back to these judges and then let us get to the bill. The clerk will call the roll on--

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I have a comment, as I mentioned earlier on the Court of Federal Claims nominees.

Chairman Hatch. Will the Senator be quite short on this?

Senator Schumer. I will try to be short. It is an important point.

Chairman Hatch. Because if he is not going to be, I would like to just go to the bill and we will wait. But go ahead.

Senator Schumer. Well, I will be less than 5 minutes. Is that short enough?

Chairman Hatch. Not for me, but I guess I have to--

[Laughter.]

Senator Schumer. For me that is short, for another nondistinguished Senator.

What I would like to talk about here today is the Court of Federal Claims. It is of real importance to the property rights movement, and environmental protection concerns, one on your side of the aisle, one on ours. And the court's rulings have a profound impact on the enforcement of environmental protection laws and regulations. I am not going to get into a fight today over what is happening ideologically on this CFC, because in my mind there is a bigger question.

I was reviewing the records of the four recent nominees to the CFC, and I asked my staff why we need a Court of Federal Claims at all. We were discussing the court, and it seems the work the CFC does is done by district court judges around the country. I asked my staff to explain the value of having a specialty court that doesn't do anything at all. Well, maybe I need to get better staff, but they couldn't the question.

[Laughter.]

Senator Schumer. So we started looking a little deeper and we learned some facts about this court. I just wish my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, would look at this chart. The average Federal District Court Judge carries 355 cases at a given time. The CFC, with the current staffing, it has 24 judges, each one carries 24--oh, it is up there. They are better than I thought.

[Laughter.]

Senator Leahy. You are lucky to have them.

Senator Schumer. I sure am.

Anyway, the average CFC under current staffing, 24, if we add these new nominees, the pending nominees, the average judge will have 19 cases. Now, a few of them are complicated cases; they are not run-of-the-mill Federal District Court cases, but many of them on the district court are just as complicated if not more. So it doesn't begin to explain the disparity.

Then we did a little sleuthing, and we learned that no one is burning the midnight oil over at the CFC. It has been described to us by some who have served there as one of the cushiest places to work in Washington. Now, I have no problem with people getting their work done and going home to their families, but I do have a problem with Government wasting taxpayers' money. If we confirm these CFC nominees the President has sent us, the average caseload, as I mentioned, drops to 19 cases a judge. That is compared to 355 on the district court. They will barely have to come to the office at all.

Senator Grassley actually did research a few years back, and each Federal judgeship, according to his research, costs the taxpayers one million dollars a year, and that was a while ago, so probably the number has risen. As we continue to work out the details of the budget and we scrape for every extra dollar, I say there is an irony here. I believe in job creation, but this is going a little bit too far.

So I would just like to say that we have argued we shouldn't add a new judge a while ago to the D.C. Circuit. Many of my colleagues, Senator Grassley, Senator Sessions, Senator Kyl, had called for hearings about why we had to fill vacancies a year or two ago. Let us have some bipartisan agreement here. Let us not force the Treasury to spend money on these judges unless we really need them.

The Washington Post, which my friend from Utah quotes favorably time and time again when it comes to judges, editorialized yesterday in favor of abolishing the CFC. I don't know whether that is the right thing to do, but we should consider it.

The nominees here today have the votes to pass on the merits. I don't want anything I say to be taken the wrong way, because under normal circumstances they get my vote, but I don't know we are adding two more judges to a court that doesn't have hardly a caseload at all right now.

In my State of New York we desperately need Customs and Border Agents and DEA agents in Plattsburg. Those are vacant. I suggest we table these nominations, and that maybe Senator Sessions and I, on the Court Subcommittee, work to schedule hearings about whether we need these judges or we need these courts. We might be able to save some millions of dollars if we just hold off a few weeks and examine the situation, and that is what I would like us to do, whether you are for or against these nominees.

[The prepared statement of Senator Schumer follows:]

Chairman Hatch. All right. Senator.

Senator DeWine. Could I ask a question to my colleague? Do those figures factor in senior status?

Senator Schumer. Yes, they do.

Senator DeWine. So you have taken out senior status; those do not include senior status?

Senator Schumer. No, they include senior status.

Senator DeWine. So they do include senior status?

Senator Schumer. Yes.

Senator DeWine. I have not done any of the research that you have done at all. It would seem to me that probably the best way to compare it would be apples to apples, would be if we factored out senior status in both district and--

Senator Schumer. I will be happy to do that.

Senator DeWine. I think that would be an interesting comparison as well. Senior status, they do do work.

Senator Schumer. Yes, no question.

Senator DeWine. What is hard to figure is some senior judges do a certain percent, and others do a different percentage, and so that makes it different.

Senator Schumer. Well, I would just say we factored it in on both sides, so we are not comparing apples and oranges. Maybe oranges and oranges is better than apples, apples. I would be happy to entertain that.

Senator DeWine. It would be interesting to see it both ways.

Senator Schumer. The disparity is so great, that I doubt it is going to change it too much.

So what I would like to do, Mr. Chairman, and I am not trying to be-- Chairman Hatch. If the Senator would hold his motions, let us have Senator Leahy make his remarks.

Senator Schumer. Okay, thanks.

Senator Leahy. I will be very brief. I will put my statement in the record, but the Senator from Ohio raises a good question. If these nominees pass out of here today, maybe we ought to, before we have any vote on the floor, either have a hearing on what the caseload is or just have the Republican and Democratic staff work together to get those exact numbers for us, because the question comes to my mind. The numbers that I have seen certainly establish what a number of senators in this Committee have said in both parties, that we ought to just get rid of the court. I think the Washington Post has called it a court of extravagance. An academic expert who specializes delivered a paper examining its redundant--and then he said--and incoherent caseload, speaking about mainly the same kind of numbers. Senator Sessions and Senator Grassley have both argued that vacancies should not be filled because of the million dollar a year cost to add a judge.

I wonder if perhaps though what may have motivated the White House more than anything else, we have always handled this in a bipartisan fashion, these judges. As the Chairman remembers, I worked with the White House under President Clinton to put in a staff member of his, then brought up, when I was a chairman, nominated another staff member of his to it. President Clinton had followed a bipartisan example we used before he renominated Christine Miller, who was a Reagan appointee, a Republican, to the Court of Federal Claims. That has usually been done. The current White House, the first one in six presidents I have served here with, has stopped doing that. I am not quite sure where, but maybe that is why we suddenly have these people up here. I wish somebody at the White House was brought in to talk to us on these issues. They seem unwilling. But maybe that is why we have them. The Democrats are summarily kicked off. The Republicans are put into these million dollar a year cost positions, and it is unfortunate that the procedures have not been followed the way they have always, at least in the 29 years I have been here, with both Republican and Democratic presidents have been followed, but the White House has decided that. It also doesn't obviate the issue that we have before us of whether we need to spend a million dollars for what one said an in coherent system, but I will Post article in the record.

Chairman Hatch. The statement is in the record.

[The prepared statement of Senator Leahy follows:]

Chairman Hatch. I am not going to spend any more time on this. I will just say one thing about it.

Senator Kyl. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you are going to say one more thing, could I say 30 seconds worth?

Chairman Hatch. Okay.

Senator Kyl. Go ahead.

Chairman Hatch. In a letter to the editor of the Washington Post yesterday the president of the Court of Claims Bar Association made a very strong point. He said that the docket of the court, quote, "consists of more than 4,000 cases, opinions by the judges are recognized as well written and well considered, and reflecting of the complexity of the caseload. Those practicing before the court know that its judges are busy." Now, this is a letter from an attorney who actually practices before the Court, who took direct issue with the Post recommendation.

Look, it is obvious to me that the criticism of the courts--

Senator Leahy. Is he sucking up to the court?

Chairman Hatch. Never know.

Senator Schumer. Wanted the judges to see his letter.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. I will put the letter in the record. Since he is literally the president of the Court of Claims Bar Association, I would give him a little more deference than saying he is sucking up to the court. But in any event, it is apparent that you are not going to.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. But in any event, I want to vote on these two nominees. We will give 30 seconds to Senator Kyl and then we will vote.

Senator Kyl. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you know, I have thought for some time we have one too many judges on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. I also believe that we are almost of unanimous opinion that we are woefully short of staffing our district and in particular our circuit courts. The Ninth Circuit is either 8 or 10 judges short, according to everybody's consensus. So if we are going to take a look at these courts, I submit that we finally take a look at adding judges to those circuits where everyone agrees they are short.

Chairman Hatch. Well, I am going to try to do that.

If the clerk would call the roll on Susan G. Braden to be judge for the Court of Federal Claims.

Senator DeWine. Mr. Chairman, I have a written statement I would like to put in the record.

Chairman Hatch. It will be in the record.

5A [The prepared statement of Senator DeWine follows:]

REV_00163099

Senator Schumer. I had a motion to table.

Chairman Hatch. The Senator's motion to table of Susan G. Braden. An aye vote would be to table the Braden nomination; a no vote will be against tabling. I recommend that we vote no. The clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk. Mr. Grassley?

Senator Grassley. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Specter?

Chairman Hatch. No, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Kyl?

Senator Kyl. No.

The Clerk. Mr. DeWine?

Senator DeWine. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Sessions?

Chairman Hatch. No, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Graham?

Chairman Hatch. No, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Craig?

Chairman Hatch. No, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chambliss?

Senator Chambliss. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Cornyn?

Senator Cornyn. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Leahy?

Senator Leahy. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Kennedy?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Biden?

Senator Leahy. Pass.

The Clerk. Mr. Kohl?

Senator Leahy. Mr. Kohl passes.

The Clerk. Mrs. Feinstein?

Senator Feinstein. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Feingold?

Senator Feingold. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Schumer?

Senator Schumer. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Durbin?

Senator Durbin. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Edwards?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman, the votes are 7 yeas, 10 nays.

Chairman Hatch. The motion fails. The motion--

Senator Chambliss. Mr. Chairman, can I ask a question before we vote? Are these newly-created positions, or are we filling two vacancies?

Chairman Hatch. We are filling two vacancies.

Senator Chambliss. Thank you.

Chairman Hatch. The clerk will call the roll on Susan G. Braden to be Judge for the Court of Federal Claims.

The Clerk. Mr. Grassley?

Senator Grassley. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Specter?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Kyl?

Senator Kyl. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. DeWine?

Senator DeWine. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Sessions?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Graham?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Craig?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chambliss?

Senator Chambliss. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Cornyn?

Senator Cornyn. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Leahy?

Senator Leahy. Pass.

The Clerk. Mr. Kennedy?

Senator Leahy. Mr. Kennedy also passes.

The Clerk. Mr. Biden?

Senator Leahy. Mr. Biden passes.

The Clerk. Mr. Kohl?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mrs. Feinstein?

Senator Feinstein. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Feingold?

Senator Feingold. Pass.

The Clerk. Mr. Schumer?

Senator Schumer. Pass.

The Clerk. Mr. Durbin?

Senator Durbin. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Edwards?

Senator Leahy. Mr. Edwards passes.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman, the votes are 12 yeas and 1 nay.

Chairman Hatch. She will be reported to the floor.

The clerk will now call the roll on the motion to table Charles F. Lettow, if that is correct, Senator Schumer's motion. A vote to table would be aye. A vote against tabling will be no. I recommend a no vote.

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, I just--

Chairman Hatch. You will stipulate the same two votes? That will be fine. We will accept that.

Then the clerk will call the roll on--

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, could I just--

Chairman Hatch. Senator Leahy?

Senator Leahy. I understand that we should have been voting "present" and not "pass." So I would ask consent to change it.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

Senator Feingold. Mr. Chairman, I assume that applies to the others who voted "pass?"

Chairman Hatch. Yes, to everybody.

The clerk will call the roll on Charles F. Lettow to be Judge for the Court of Federal Claims.

Senator Leahy. Sorry about that.

The Clerk. Mr. Grassley?

Senator Grassley. Yes, for going to the floor.

The Clerk. Mr. Specter?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Kyl?

Senator Kyl. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. DeWine?

Senator DeWine. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Sessions?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Graham?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Craig?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chambliss?

Senator Chambliss. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Cornyn?

Senator Cornyn. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Leahy?

Senator Leahy. Present.

The Clerk. Mr. Kennedy?

Senator Leahy. Present by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Biden?

Senator Leahy. Pass.

The Clerk. Mr. Kohl?

Senator Leahy. Aye by proxy.

The Clerk. Mrs. Feinstein?

Senator Feinstein. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Feingold?

Senator Feingold. Present.

The Clerk. Mr. Schumer?

Senator Schumer. Present by being present.

[Laughter.]

The Clerk. Mr. Durbin?

Senator Durbin. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Edwards?

Senator Edwards. Present.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman, the votes are 12 yeas, 1 nay.

Chairman Hatch. Mr. Lettow will be reported to the floor.

The clerk will now call the roll in Cecilia M. Altonaga to be United States District Judge for the Seventh District of Florida.

The Clerk. Mr. Grassley?

Senator Grassley. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Specter?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Kyl?

Senator Kyl. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. DeWine?

Senator DeWine. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Sessions?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Graham?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Craig?

Chairman Hatch. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chambliss?

Senator Chambliss. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Cornyn?

Senator Cornyn. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Leahy?

Senator Leahy. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Kennedy?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Biden?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Kohl?

Senator Leahy. Aye by proxy.

The Clerk. Mrs. Feinstein?

Senator Feinstein. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Feingold?

Senator Feingold. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Schumer?

Senator Leahy. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Durbin?

Senator Durbin. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Edwards?

Senator Edwards. Aye, by proxy.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Aye.

The Clerk. Mr. Chairman, the votes are 19 yeas and no nays.

Chairman Hatch. She will be reported to the floor then.

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Leahy?

Senator Leahy. I want to commend both Senator Graham and Senator Nelson of Florida for their efforts on this nominee. She becomes the first Cuban-American woman ever reported to be a Federal Judge. I suspect she will get through the Senate very easily. I would ask again that we move forward on the nomination of Judge Edward Prado to be the circuit judge. We have cleared all Democrats that said they have no objection to go forward on that.

He was reported unanimously out of this Committee and I would urge the Republican leadership to allow him to go forward. We have cleared it on our side of the aisle.

But I did especially want to commend not only Cecilia Altonaga, but also the Senators who worked closely with the White House and with the bar and others in Florida to bring her forward. She was in her hearing and is a very impressive person.

Chairman Hatch. All right. We will now move to S. 224, The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003. I won't make an opening statement, other than to say that this is a good bill. It is much-needed legislation to curb class action abuses that are all too rampant. I will put the rest of my statement in the record.

[The prepared statement of Chairman Hatch follows:]

/ COMMITTEE INSERT

Chairman Hatch. I will turn to Senator Leahy.

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, I find difficulty with this even though there have been real efforts on the parts of the Senators on both sides to improve it. I would oppose it because I don't think it is fair. I think it makes it harder for citizens to protect themselves against violations of State civil rights and consumer, health and environmental protection laws. I think it puts those cases out of convenient State courts and into Federal courts with a lot of barriers.

I joined, I think it was two weeks ago now, with Senators Kennedy, Biden, Feingold, Durbin and Edwards in requesting a hearing on class action litigation to see if we could get some consensus on this subject in a way that could help both defendants and plaintiffs.

While my letter went unanswered, I would ask consent that it be made part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

/ COMMITTEE INSERT

Senator Leahy. The reason for that was I was hoping the Committee could do a deliberate, careful review of information from parties actually involved in class action litigation, and we could get some idea of the benefits and burdens of such things. Instead, we are going ahead with legislation that really has failed to pass the Senate in recent years.

But I do want to acknowledge the hard work and dedication displayed by the Senator from California. She made a comment this morning about having read the bill. The Senator from California has a well-deserved reputation for not only reading the bills, but reading transcripts of hearings. And it is something I would commend to others on both sides. She undertook an enormous task in attempting through her amendment to rectify some of the harms created by S. 274, and I think she deserves our respect for that.

But at its core, I worry that S. 274 deprives citizens of the right to sue on State law claims in their own State courts if the principal defendant is a citizen of another State, even if that defendant has a substantial presence in the plaintiff's home State, and even if the harm was done in the plaintiff's home State. I don't think that the amendments take care of that.

I know that there has been a great deal of effort also by my friend from Wisconsin, Senator Kohl, and his efforts are appreciated.

I think some special interest groups--and the distinguished Chairman always likes to talk about special interest groups--I think some are distorting the state of class action litigation by relying on a few anecdotes in an ends-oriented attempt to bring class action cases. But that is all the more reason for having a hearing, have something where we find out what is fact and what is fiction.

We can and we should necessary steps to correct problems in class action litigation, and there are some. But if you simply shove most suits into Federal courts and then you have one-sided rules, that doesn't really correct the problems that are faced by both plaintiffs and defendants.

Let's not forget that in 50 States, the State-based tort system remains one of the greatest and most powerful vehicles for justice anywhere in the world. I think of when the Soviet Union broke up and they started dealing with how you put together a real court system. I remember so many of those people coming to see me, as they did a number of other people around this table. They came to my own State of Vermont and they looked at our court system. They looked at the court systems in numerous other States and they were amazed at how well it works.

I recall one who sat in my office, from the Duma, who said, I have one question for you. We have heard that there are actually cases where somebody sues the government and the government loses. I said, yes, it happens all the time. He said, you mean you don't fire the judge and do it over again? I said, no, that is the integrity and independence of our courts.

And, of course, in class actions that is how we get people who can band together; ordinary people can band together and bring it--defrauded investors, deceived consumers, victims of defective products, environmental torts. That is what happens.

I am old enough to remember the civil rights battles of the 1950s and 1960s, and the impact of class actions in validating basic rights through our courts. Brown v. Board of Education was the culmination of appeals from four class action cases, three from Federal court decisions in Kansas, South Carolina and Virginia, but one from the State Supreme Court of Delaware.

Interestingly enough, what happened is only the State Supreme Court of Delaware got the case right by deciding for the African American plaintiffs. They knew they were constrained by the existing Supreme Court law, but they held that the segregated schools of Delaware violated the 14th Amendment. Before any Federal court did so, a State court rejected separate and unequal schools, and then a unanimous U.S. Supreme Court upheld that.

Many civil rights advocates, including the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, the National Asian Pacific Legal Consortium, have written opposing this.

These civil rights advocates concluded that this legislation would discourage civil rights class actions, impose substantial barriers to settling class actions, and render Federal courts unable to provide swift and effective administration of justice.

I will place in the record their letter, if there is no objection.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

/ COMMITTEE INSERT

Senator Leahy. Now, defense lawyers get paid by the hour, and are usually well paid. If you don't consolidate procedures, I am afraid that a lot of people aren't going to be able to afford lawyers. Plaintiffs' lawyers in this type of setting tend to work without pay for the possibility of obtaining some of the proceeds, if successful. It may well prove uneconomical for counsel to take on government or corporate defendants if they have to do it on a case-by-case basis.

You know, if you cheat a whole lot of people by just a little, it is still cheating. If you cheat by a cent or two on a gallon of gas when any one of us fills up or car, it doesn't cost very much, but it can be millions of dollars by the time you get done. If you cheat just a little bit on your phone bill or cable bill or whatever else, it may not cost the individual very much, but if you add it up, it gets into millions of dollars.

Class actions made it possible for individual tobacco victims to band together. It allows stockholders and small investors to join together. Think of the Firestone Tire debacle. A national tire recall was started, in part, from the disclosure of internal corporate documents on consumer complaints of tire defects, and then filing of litigation against Bridgestone/Firestone.

Then the plaintiffs' attorneys turned this over to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and months later 6.5 million tires were recalled based on what was found in these plaintiff suits. But that was after 101 fatalities, 400 injuries, and 2,226 consumer complaints. As Time magazine pointed out at the time, it is doubtful that the internal corporate consumer complaint information would have ever seen the light of day if they hadn't had civil discovery.

So when you are talking about protecting consumers, investors and employees, whether it is in Enron, WorldCom or other corporate scandals, these rights aren't going to be protected in S. 274. This is not going to make corporate America more accountable. In fact, I think it undercuts Congress' other efforts to make companies more responsible.

Legislation that makes it more difficult for the victims of corporate wrongdoing--the kind of wrongdoing we saw in Enron and WorldCom and all--things that make it more difficult to join together and to make them accountable ought to be just the opposite of what we want to do.

I would include a letter from the Consumers Union, the Consumer Federation of America and U.S. PIRG, if I might, Mr. Chairman, in the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

Senator Leahy. Last year, a group of investors recovered millions in lost investments under State corporate fraud laws. In Baptist Foundation of Arizona v. Arthur Andersen, mostly elderly investors banded together to successfully recoup $217 million from Arthur Andersen for questionable accounting things. That is just one example of how State-based class action litigation can hold corporate wrongdoers accountable.

I am concerned what it might do for those who want to stop pollution and other environmental damage. It will remove almost important environmental class actions from State to Federal court. It denies the State courts the ability to act.

This sort of runs roughshod over any question of States' rights. I think of the situation in Alabama, in Anniston, Alabama, when the Monsanto Company manufactured PCBs from 1929 to 1971. For 40 years, they dumped them, untreated and unfiltered, into the streams and landfills of Anniston. It caused enormous environmental and health damage. It wasn't until the residents sued in State court that they were able to recover. We have got a State court that handled it and this Act would say "get out of there."

The Judicial Conference, headed by Chief Justice Rehnquist, wrote a letter dated March 26, 2003, opposing this bill because its provisions would add substantially to the workload of the Federal courts, inconsistent with the principles of federalism. Chief Justice Rehnquist's letter singled out serious environmental disasters as an example of class actions that should remain in the State courts.

Mr. Chairman, I will put the rest of my statement in the record, but I am really concerned that what we are doing is telling the States, you know, you guys are all incompetent, all 50 States, and we here on the Senate Judiciary Committee know better. I can't accept that.

[The prepared statement of Senator Leahy follows:]

Chairman Hatch. We will take Senator Kohl's speech and then we are going to go to amendments, and we will go the Feinstein amendment first.

Senator Kohl?

Senator Kohl. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for agreeing to mark up the Class Action Fairness Act. This legislation addresses several problems in class action litigation--perhaps most importantly, unfair and abusive settlements that short-change plaintiff class members. In class action cases, consumers often get the short end of the stick, recovering coupons or pocket change, while their lawyers oftentimes reap millions of dollars.

Our remedy is straightforward. Class action notices should be written in plain English so consumers understand their rights and responsibilities. State attorneys generals should be notified of proposed class action settlements to stop abusive cases, if they so choose. And a class action consumer bill of rights will help limit coupon and other unfair settlements.

Finally, we allow many class action lawsuits to be removed to Federal court. I believe this makes sense. These are oftentimes national cases affecting consumers in all 50 States. If the court rules were being drafted today, these are the types of cases that we would want and expect to be tried in Federal court.

No one can argue with a straight face that the class action process is not in serious need of reform. Take, for example, a big class action suit against Blockbuster Video. Consumer plaintiffs received coupons for one dollar off their next rental, while their lawyers received over $9 million.

Or consider Martha Preston, from Wisconsin, who was a member of the Bank of Boston case. When her class action suit was over, Mrs. Preston had technically won the case, but she ended up owing $75 to her lawyers and defending a lawsuit that her own lawyers filed against her in State court.

We do not claim that this bill is perfect. We have stated repeatedly that we are agreeable to other proposals which attempt to keep more cases in State court. The main sponsors of this bill have worked very closely with Senator Feinstein on her suggestions to do just that, and we are pleased that we have been able to reach a consensus that makes important improvements to the bill.

With Senator Feinstein's changes and the consumer protections in our bill, we are confident that we have gone a long way toward correcting the imbalance that tilts the benefits of class action lawsuits away from consumers that such cases are intended to protect.

One final point, Mr. Chairman. I would like to discuss another court reform proposal that I support and that a bipartisan majority of this Committee has supported in the past. The Sunshine in Litigation Act ensures that judges review secret settlements with an eye toward whether the information being kept secret may affect public health and safety.

For example, consumers did not know for years about the hidden dangers of Bridgestone/Firestone tires. In those cases, the defendant insisted as a part of the settlement on secrecy provisions which hid harmful product defects and then led to dozens more injuries.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am introducing this legislation today and I ask that a hearing from you on this important issue be granted.

I thank you very much.

Senator Feingold. Mr. Chairman?

Senator Feinstein. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Feingold, I think, was next.

Senator Feinstein. I beg your pardon?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Feingold wanted to say a few words.

Senator Feingold. Mr. Chairman, I will oppose S. 274, the Class Action Fairness Act, and the main reason is that I, just like the ranking member, don't think it is fair. I don't think it is fair to citizens who are injured by corporate wrongdoers and are entitled to prompt and fair resolution of their claims in a court of law.

I don't think it is fair to our State courts, which are treated by this bill as if they cannot be trusted to issue fair judgments in cases brought before them. I don't think it is fair to State legislatures, which are entitled to have the laws that they pass to protect their citizens interpreted and applied by their own courts. So, Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is not only mis-named; it is bad policy and it should be defeated.

I want to note first that the Committee is holding this markup, as was mentioned before, without the benefit of a hearing during this Congress. There was a hearing held last summer, chaired by Senator Leahy, but Senator Leahy and a number of other members of the Committee believe that the Committee would benefit from another hearing. We requested that a hearing be held in a letter to the Chairman. There are a number of members who are new to the Committee and this is not exactly the same bill that was reviewed in the hearing last year.

I am disappointed that we are in such a rush in April of the first year of this Congress that we cannot observe the normal legislative process and have a hearing on a major piece of legislation before marking it up. Why not give this bill the consideration it deserves?

Now, I would like to make a few comments on the bill before us. Make no mistake, by loosening the requirements for Federal diversity jurisdiction over class actions, Senate bill 274 will result in nearly all class actions being removed to Federal court, and this is actually a radical change in our Federal system of justice.

We have 50 States in this country, Mr. Chairman, with their own laws and courts. State courts are an integral part of our system of justice. They have worked well for our entire history as a Nation. It is hard to imagine why this Committee, which includes many ardent defenders of federalism and the prerogatives of State courts and State lawmakers, would support this wholesale stripping of jurisdiction from the States over class actions. In my opinion, the need for such a radical step has not been demonstrated.

Yes, of course, there are abuses in some class action suits. Some of the most disturbing have to do with class action settlements that offer only discount coupons to the members of the class and a big pay-off to the plaintiffs' lawyers. But those abuses have occurred, Mr. Chairman, in Federal cases as well as State class actions. This bill does nothing to address those problems. It just moves them all to the Federal court.

Mr. Chairman, class actions are an extremely important tool in our justice system. They allow plaintiffs with very small claims to band together to seek redress. Lawsuits are expensive, so without the opportunity to pursue a class action, a single plaintiff in many cases simply cannot afford his or her day in court. But with a class action, justice can be done and compensation can be obtained.

There are three possible outcomes if this bill goes into effect. Either the State courts will be deluged with individual claims, since class actions can no longer be maintained there, or there will be a huge increase in the workload of the Federal courts, or many injured people will simply never get redress for their injuries. I don't think any of these three choices are acceptable.

Particularly troubling is the increase in the workload of the Federal courts. As we talked about in an earlier part of this proceeding this morning, these courts are already overloaded. This Committee had led the way in bringing and more litigation to the Federal courts, particularly criminal cases. Criminal cases, of course, take precedence in the Federal courts because of the Speedy Trial Act.

So the net result of removing virtually all class actions to the Federal court will be to actually delay these cases. There is an old saying with which I am sure we are all familiar: justice delayed is justice denied. I hope my colleagues will think about that aphorism before voting for this bill. St the very least, we should provide in the bill some priority to class certification motions brought in Federal class actions.

Some in the business community have expressed concern about resolving nationwide class actions, like some of the tobacco litigation, in a single State court, and I can understand why that would seem unfair to some. But this bill doesn't just address that situation; it goes well beyond that. It also prevents a group of plaintiffs who are all from the same

State from pursuing a class action in their own State courts even if one defendant is from another State.

Proponents of this bill have chosen a remedy that goes far beyond the alleged problem. That raises questions about what the intent behind the bill really is.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of amendments scheduled to be offered that will ease some of the harshness of the bill. One that I will propose will carve out from the bill class actions that raise claims under State consumer protection laws. This will allow State courts to interpret and apply the laws that their legislatures have passed to protect their citizens.

Another amendment that I intend to offer deals with a catch-22 that is set up for this bill for class actions that are removed to Federal court under the new lenient diversity jurisdiction rules, but then dismissed because for some reason the class cannot be certified under Rule 23.

The bill now provides that such cases will just be dismissed. If the plaintiffs re-file in State court, they can again be removed and again dismissed. This kind or revolving door or merry-go-round situation could actually prevent injured people from ever having their cases heard. My amendment would prohibit subsequent removals of a case that is removed, but then remanded for failure to satisfy Rule 23.

I have further remarks to make concerning the Feinstein amendment when it is offered. I just want to note now that having examined it over the last week--and I do appreciate the chairman having given us that additional time to look at it--none of what I would have said about this bill is lessened by that amendment.

I know that the Senator from California means well, but I think her amendment quite possibly makes this bill worse by providing more uncertainty and more opportunities for delay that will keep injured people from having their day in court. In any event, it certainly does not change this bill in a significant enough way to make the bill acceptable, at least to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred to have had a hearing on the bill and the Feinstein amendment, and to have a chance to examine it carefully in the Committee, but I look forward to this debate and to acting on these amendments. It seems clear that this unfair Class Action Fairness Act will emerge from the Committee, but I believe that it should not be enacted.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman Hatch. Thank you, Senator.

Let me just make an announcement to the Committee. AOL is hosting a reception right here in this room at 4:30 for Shawn Bentley, who has served this Committee very, very well in the intellectual property area, but all other areas as well. So I hope we can get a lot of you to come to that reception tonight.

We will go to Senator Cornyn next.

Senator Cornyn. Mr. Chairman, I have a written statement which I would ask be made part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

[The prepared statement of Senator Cornyn follows:]

Senator Cornyn. I do want to say just a couple of things about this bill. I am pleased to be a cosponsor. I enthusiastically support it. If it were up to me, the bill would go much further than it goes now, but I understand the necessity of gaining consensus on the bill and I think it makes an important step in the right direction.

I believe Senator Kohl just a few moments ago identified some of those important steps, but I want to congratulate and commend Senator Grassley for his hard work and perseverance, as well as everyone, including the Chairman, who have worked to move this bill forward.

The reality of this bill is not that class actions will be prevented, but merely that they will get the sort of meaningful review, and especially appellate review, that is so important to assuring that they serve their intended purpose.

Class action litigation does serve an important purpose, and I think we are all familiar with that, allowing the aggregation of relatively small claims and being able to find some lawyer who will be willing to take it on in order to vindicate the rights of the persons who have been harmed.

But the reality of modern class action litigation today is that--well, I think it was a country and western song where, to paraphrase, the lawyers get the gold mine and the consumer gets the shift. That is what happens today in much class action litigation, and my own experience, as I will just mention very briefly, is some proof of that.

When I served for seven years on the Texas Supreme Court, we would get class action cases from time to time. The very last case we got that I wrote the majority opinion on, nine to zero, involved a claim for economic loss due to the existence of side-saddle gasoline pickup trucks on GMC vehicles.

General Motors figured out one way they could avoid any further litigation would be to agree to something that frankly would enrich the lawyers, who got $9.5 million in cold hard cash. The consumers got a coupon, redeemable upon the purchase of a new GMC pickup truck. It was a great marketing device for General Motors. They figured they would make the best they could out of a bad situation.

But the truth is many consumers who got the coupon were unable to use those, and so they were virtually worthless. And so what drives modern class action litigation today is in too many cases, not all, but in too many cases, entrepreneurial lawyers who are taking advantage of the current system to get rich and consumers don't get any meaningful relief. That is a travesty. It is a perversion of our civil justice system, and I believe this bill, although it doesn't go as far as I would like, is a demonstrable improvement.

For example, I don't see any reason why, in class action litigation, the rules shouldn't be people who want to litigate ought to opt in rather than opt out. Of course, class members are supposed to get notice. But as we all know, human nature being what it is, many class members aren't even aware that they have somehow become a member of a class and their rights litigated, in essence, or resolved by a settlement until they get some notice in the mail or they get a coupon or something else that has really no meaning and no value.

So I do support this legislation. I appreciate your letting me have these few moments to express my views on it. As we go to the floor, if there is debate, I will hope to participate in that. In the meantime, I don't think some of the statements that have been made about this being somehow the end of the world as we know it or that big corporations will romp and stomp on the rights of consumers or, as one Senator said last week, class action litigation is necessary to save the soul of corporate America--I don't think those sorts of outrageous comments have any relationship to reality.

With that, I yield. Thank you.

Chairman Hatch. Senator Durbin.

Senator Durbin. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the mission of this Senate Judiciary Committee is clear. Time and again we are locking the courthouse doors so that consumers, average taxpayers and the less financially articulate in our society are denied their day in court.

Second, we are appointing men and women to the bench so biased in favor of the entrenched and powerful, that if any citizen makes it to the court, they will be dispatched empty handed.

This law before us is a double-header win for our gilded Committee. We lock the doors of State courts so that the sick, the injured, the victims of discrimination, the victims of exploitation, are denied their day in court. And then we relegate those lucky few who make it to the Federal courts to the wisdom and compassion of those styptic-hearted nominees that parade through this Committee every week.

When I first started practicing law in Springfield, Illinois my firm represented a railroad. The first motion we would always file in State suits was to remove the case to Federal court. We wanted to sent our fate to the loving arms of the Federal District Court Judge we knew and loved, and we as a railroad would go into his chambers to argue our motion. He kept a bowl of lemon drops on his desk. He invited us to have one. And then as we argued the motion, he would suck loudly on the lemon drops and stare at the ceiling, and you knew that you only had as much time to argue the motion as he had to finish the lemon drop. And when the sucking noise stopped, he wheeled around, faced us, and ruled for the railroad every single time. That was our forum shopping, and it worked without fail, and that is exactly what this bill is all about. We want to force these class actions into the loving arms of the more conservative judiciary in the Federal Courts.

I listened a while ago when Senator Kyl was talking about the enormous caseload in the Federal Courts. I am sorry he is not here. I may be wrong, but doesn't this law result, won't it result in more cases being sent to Federal Courts? I think it might. But frankly, we have to accept the obvious. There are class action cases that are frivolous. They should be limited, but this bill will eliminate class actions that are worthy, cases asserting the rights of an aggrieved group which no single member of the group could or would pursue. Who wants this bill? I think it is fairly obvious. Phillip Morris, gun manufacturers, polluters, pharmaceutical companies, every insurance company in America, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Financial Services Roundtable and some Republican State Attorneys General.

Now, who opposes the bill? This is an interesting list. Turns out the Judicial Conference. Well, that would be Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Why would he oppose this bill? Because we are channeling these class action cases into an already glutted docket in the Federal Courts. The American Heart Association opposes it, the Lung Association. The list just goes on and on, and I will submit it for the record.

I know the fate of this bill. With two Democrats co-sponsoring it, it is going to come sailing out of this Committee, and there will be more to follow. I think we are going to get this wonderful idea from the House soon that we are going to absolve gun manufacturers from civil liability. This is truly a gilded age for this Congress. I think this bill is consistent with that, and I am sorry that it is going to be reporting out of this Committee, but not with my vote.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Kennedy.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, I want to say amen to what my friend from Illinois has pointed out. This is in a long line of activities that the Congress have been undertaking for some period of time. We found that it wasn't long ago we had regulatory reform to undermine the protection of consumers. We have regulatory reform. I can remember the day when a law firm that was being paid by major utilities in the State of Virginia came on up and briefed staff here in the Judiciary Committee room, and the next day we marked up the regulatory reform bill, which would have effectively undermined the protections for health and safety that were being provided by the Federal Government, and it was reported out, and came within one vote of getting cloture. It would have been passed, which would have undermined the food and safety laws, occupational health and safety laws, environmental safety laws, the whole range of different regulatory, the attempt to undermine it.

Secondly, we had the activities of the administration, once they recognized that they couldn't do that, to cut back on the support for the enforcement of these kinds of protections that were out there in terms of protecting consumers, and we saw the battles that took place as we saw the undermining, the targeting of resources that were out there to protect consumers. They don't want to have regulations that are going to be out there protecting, and they want to effectively close the courts. They want it both ways. This isn't, just as the Senator pointed out, a singular kind of activity. This is a continuum, a continuum. And this legislation falls into that category. Consumers beware, my friends, because this is a continued march that has been undertaken for a number of years and will continue, and whether we like it or not--and I do--the trial bar is the one bar that is strong enough to be able to try and protect consumers, protect consumers. They are about the last institution that is out there that stands between the exploitation of consumers in so many instances involving life and death and people being maimed and the protection of consumers. The history will reflect it.

Now, I regret that once again we are being asked to act on a proposal which makes drastic changes in an important area without the preparation information that the proposal deserves. The bill before us reflects a one-side approach of a difficult problem, and ignores the pleas of the Judicial Conference, the United States; represents the judges will have to interpret and apply the law, who are asking us to stop and think this through more thoroughly, pays too little attention to the years of thoughtful work of the advisory committee on civil rules on this issue, which goes to the heart of one of the most serious problems, collusive settlements. And once again, as with the gun carry bill, the proposal is a serious intrusion in State prerogative, in State institutions. It is a mystery that colleagues who say they are defenders of the States' rights are the first in line to intrude on the states' rights at the request of the special interest groups.

If we could genuinely work together, we could probably reach a consensus, make needed improvements in class action cases, probably get agreement on Section 3 of the bill, and Section 6 in a matter of days. If we are serious about Section 6, we want to know how the judges feel about the issue, why does the bill ignore the advice that they have already given us?

So I commend Senator Feinstein for her efforts to begin the process of accommodation and cooperation, but it is too important a subject to try to handle on a last-minute basis. Her amendment provides one approach, that we need the opinion of the judges and other experts on the implication and possible unintended consequence before we adopt it, so let us take the time to do it right. If we act on the bill now, I will be offering amendments to make two necessary changes, to exempt civil rights actions and exempt actions against gun manufacturers. In both of these areas State laws and State courts have much to contribute, and the rights of the public cannot be fully protected without access to the State courts as well as the Federal courts.

I am going to just take a moment, Mr. Chairman, on a matter that has been before this Committee, and which the Committee has taken action in a conference in this past week, and probably will be a matter that will be on the floor of the Senate probably this afternoon. That is the Amber bill, the Amber bill in terms of protecting abducted children.

As you remember, Mr. Chairman, the Senate passed the Amber bill on September 10th, 2002, and once again January 21st, 2003. So the Senate passed this legislation virtually unanimously without any kind of controversy, and it should be law, it should be law. But it was held up in the House of Representatives. It has been held up in the House of Representatives. In the last few moments of the floor consideration of the Amber bill the managers of the bill took what is called the Feeney Amendment, with 20 minutes of debate, which effectively undermines all of the sentencing and Sentencing Guidelines that had been set up by this Committee years ago, years and years ago, took a great deal of time and bipartisan support.

I notified and indicated to the Chair that we were hopeful that we could work out some kind of procedures. If the concern was about the amount of sentencing time that was given to those found guilty, we ought to deal with those particular issues, and we were prepared to deal with those in the conference. We had suggested in the conference that we refer this matter to the Sentencing Commission for 180 days to let them get a review, and then we would be able to take action whether we wanted to accept those kinds of requirements, or we could have gone back and increased the penalties. Those requests were denied.

In the course of the conference I requested that this Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Graham, who is the Chairman of the Crime Subcommittee, hold specific hearings, and that we would agree to reporting out recommendations at that time, and that we could go to the floor of the United States Senate and have a debate on this, and then move ahead in a timely way. That was rejected. That was rejected.

Then you announced, Mr. Chairman, that you had a compromise. You labeled it as such and presented it as such, as restricting all of the various sentencing requirements, only to be limited to the provisions dealing with child abductions. That was a misrepresentation, a gross misrepresentation of what was in the proposal that was advanced in that conference.

It was only at 2 o'clock in the morning when the staff found out just how bad, that they began to bring about even alterations and changes. It still violates that. I believe it exceeds the scope of the conference itself in a number of different ways, changing the makeup of the requirements with regards to the Sentencing Commission membership, which was never even debated or talked about.

The sentencing changes in guidelines were a result of the 1968 Brown Commission report that was done about the growth of crime in this country. They had a number of recommendations. One of the recommendations was the recodification of the criminal code. We did that on two different occasions. The House failed to do that. It will not be recodified for 200 more years. It has never been recodified. They made recommendations about the Police death benefit programs, which started off at 15, $25,000, is now up to $250,000, worthwhile. And they made the recommendations that we get busy in terms of the disparity in sentencing that was taking place in the Federal Courts and notoriously in the State courts. They believed that without that, that a key element in terms of crime was the fact that both criminal and victims alike has such little confidence in the sentencing provisions.

In the 1970s I introduced legislation; 1980s Senator Biden had legislation. And we passed that with the help and the assistance of the Reagan Administration, which you were a part of, Senator Thurmond was a part of in a bipartisan effort, and it has been put in place.

Chairman Hatch. Would the Senator yield for just one minute?

Senator Kennedy. Yes, I will.

Chairman Hatch. When we agreed to put this over for a week, we did so under the good faith that we would resolve this matter, and that we would vote on the amendments today.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, I reclaim my time.

Chairman Hatch. No, let me--

Senator Kennedy. No, I haven't--

Chairman Hatch. I want to put through your bill. I want to put your resolution through, because we have one minute, and I will put it through for you. I will show you some courtesy that I am not being shown.

Senator Kennedy. Well, I object then. You don't have to do me any courtesy. I am not in here to be pandered to by the Chairman of it. I am looking out after the people that are interested in fairness in the court systems and in the sentencing provisions. So you don't have to be nice to me, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman Hatch. I am not trying to be nice to you. I just want to do it.

Senator Kennedy. Well, I am going to continue. I am going to continue.

Chairman Hatch. You are going to continue for one minute more, and then I am going to recess the Committee because somebody on your side has violated good faith after last week and after my good faith in doing this.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman--

Chairman Hatch. You go ahead. You have the time for another minute.

Senator Kennedy. I have the time for one minute, and I will tell the Chair that I was the one, and I will tell you why. Because I had been notified that the Amber bill will be on the floor of the United States Senate starting at noontime, and I feel that the Amber bill, which is a bill that is relevant to this Committee, that the sentencing provisions that have been put in there are absolutely outrageous and irresponsible, and I am going to meet my obligation to meet you on the floor of the United States Senate, and without that kind of protection, I wouldn't have that chance to do it. I would have thought fairness and justice would have said that you would have recessed this Committee for the consideration of that, and since you have shown so little kind of consideration for a matter that is before the Committee, then I took those steps and I have objected to it. I have objected to it.

I will look forward to continuing this debate and discussion on the floor of the United States Senate as soon as the Amber bill comes to the floor.

Chairman Hatch. Thank you, Senator.

We have 30 seconds left. I move that the resolution by Senator Kennedy and Senator Stevens, recognizing the 100th anniversary of the Laborers' International Union, be passed. Is there any objection?

[No response.]

Chairman Hatch. Without objection, we pass it.

9 [The resolution follows:]

REV_00163140

Chairman Hatch. Now, let me just say one other thing. I didn't know that was coming up at 12 noon, but I am darn glad it has. I can tell you one this. I was the one who took that doggone problem of sentencing and worked it out to apply only to children--

Senator Kennedy. That is not true.

Chairman Hatch. Yes, it is true.

Senator Kennedy. No, it is not.

Chairman Hatch. And sexual matters, no question about it.

Senator Kennedy. No, it is not true.

Chairman Hatch. It is true. And I will tell you this, I worked hard to try and accommodate the distinguished Senator, not tried to hurt him. I am disappointed that he feels the way he does. He has a right to feel that way if he wants to, but I made a good faith effort to resolve that in conference, and I think I did. Now, we will debate it on the floor. I didn't know it was coming up at 12:00, but I would be willing to ask the majority leader to put it off for a while until we resolve this matter.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, you brought that compromise up and dropped it in front of the conference, and then presented it as a compromise. What kind of activity is that? You dropped that out there and said, "This represents a compromise." The idea that these provisions only apply to children in this crime is absolutely, categorically false, and your representation of that was false on that. If that had been the kind of case, you would have had an agreement, you would have had an agreement for me, but you exceeded that, and there is chapter and verse on that matter. It has exceeded the scope, and we will wait for an opinion of the parliamentarian on that.

Chairman Hatch. I am sorry the Senator is disappointed in that, but like all conferences, we do have amendments at conferences, and this was an amendment that was trying to accommodate the Senator.

Now, look, I am sorry I disappointed you.

Senator Kennedy. I would ask for regular order, Mr. Chairman, because I will either--if you are going to talk, I would like to reclaim my time.

Chairman Hatch. Regular order. The Committee is recessed until further notice, and we will wait till the end of the session today, and then the Committee will meet again or tomorrow morning. I will call the Committee to order.

[Whereupon, at 12:03 p.m., the Committee was recessed until Chairman's call.]

DRAFT

The Honorable Richard C. Shelby
Chairman
Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Shelby:

During the recent hearing before your committee, you asked us to work in cooperation to develop legislative language on deposit insurance reform that would best reflect the consensus presented in our testimonies. The enclosed draft bill is the successful result of those efforts.

As you noted at the hearing, we began with a great deal of agreement on the important elements of reform and also some less important differences. But in a strong cooperative spirit, each of us went to some lengths to understand and accommodate each other's views.

The draft legislative language that we are submitting to you represents a consensus of the interests and concerns expressed by the five agencies. And while we each have our preferences as we presented in our testimony, each of us would be pleased to see the bill we submit to you today enacted into law.

Thank you for giving us the opportunity to advance the cause of real deposit insurance reform. We look forward to working with you and the Congress on this important matter in the days ahead.

Sincerely,

[To be signed by the Treasury, Federal Reserve, FDIC, OCC, and OTS]

I don't think the letter should imply, as it does, the different agencies in the Executive Branch disagree and had to compromise, etc.

Do you know whether WHC or OLC ever issued a memo on DOT's Section 411 authority during the prior Bush Administration, especially a memo indicating that DOT would not bring enforcement actions against conduct permitted by the other antitrust laws? I don't know of such a memo, but Jay is hoping there might be one.

;;;;;;; ;;;;;;; The other possible example is that during DOJ,s monopolization investigation of American Airlines, DOT deferred issuing final competition guidelines relating to predatory conduct by dominant hub carriers, and eventually shelved its proposed guidelines after DOJ filed its lawsuit.; Although Hew Pate uses this example, I think it is much weaker than the certificate-transfer policy.; DOT delayed in part because of strong opposition to its proposed guidelines, and while DOT never issued final guidelines, it did issue findings and conclusions in) you guessed it) January 2001 suggesting that DOT would consider bringing section 411 enforcement actions against future price decreases that do not satisfy the definition of &predatory pricing8 under the antitrust laws.

;;;;;;; ;;;;;;; The shorter answer is that yes, the DOT opinion is the only good example that Hew has been able to identify.; This is not entirely surprising, because DOT (like FTC) has institutional, public relations, and legal incentives not to state in writing that it has a policy of not using its section 411 authority to go beyond the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING
BRIEFERS: SECRETARY OF DEFENSE DONALD RUMSFELD; JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF CHAIRMAN GENERAL RICHARD MYERS

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA
1:32 P.M. EDT, TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003

SEC. RUMSFELD: Good afternoon.

;;;;;; We are very grateful that seven American prisoners of war in Iraq have been recovered. But even as we celebrate, we note that there are still four U.S. service members whose whereabouts are unknown; and a number of a coalition POWs that are still missing from 1991, a number of Kuwaitis and one American. We'll continue to work to find them until all have been accounted for.

;;;;;; Coalition forces now control Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit, and only a few Iraqi cities remain contested. Our forces are now going back to the smaller cities and towns they initially bypassed, to deal with any regime forces that may remain. We'll continue these efforts until Saddam Hussein's regime has been removed from every corner of Iraq.

;;;;;; Once conditions on the ground permit, the civil administration team will deploy to Baghdad. Even before they do so, the coalition is beginning to hold regional meetings with free Iraqis from all walks of life to discuss the way ahead. The purpose is to begin a dialogue with Iraqis on the future of their country, to build momentum for the formation of an Iraqi interim authority, and to help pave the way for a free Iraqi government that will eventually be chosen by the Iraqi people.

;;;;;; The first of these meetings was held today, in Nasiriyah. It is noteworthy that even before the coalition's civil administration team has arrived in Baghdad, they are meeting with free Iraqis to discuss handing over authority to the Iraqi people. It underscores our intention to give responsibility for governance of that country to Iraqis as quickly as is possible.

;;;;;; The makeup and responsibilities of an Iraqi interim authority will be up to the Iraqi people, but we envision that it could take on at least two main tasks. First, it could allow Iraqis to have an immediate role in the administration of their country, including responsibility for running a number of the ministries. Second, it could take responsibility for laying the foundations of a new Iraqi government, including formation of a draft constitution, the reform of the legal system, economic reform, electoral planning and the outlines of a bill of rights, to assure a just system that guarantees that all Iraqis -- diverse population has a voice in the governance of their country.

;;;;;; The specific institutions of a new Iraqi government will be decided by Iraqis. A free society should really not be imposed from the outside. We can help by bringing Iraqis together and by helping to create conditions of stability and security that are necessary for a free society to take root. But building a free Iraq is the right -- and indeed the responsibility -- of the Iraqi people.

;;;;;; Moreover, a free society is about more than just elections or specific institutions of government. Free nations across the world have different institutions that reflect their unique cultures and their traditions. What they share in common are certain principles that undergird those institutions: freedom of speech, freedom of religion, individual rights, equal justice under law, checks and balances, protecting minorities against the tyranny of the majority, and ultimately a government that is chosen by and answers to the people.

;;;;;; The interim authority will be a stepping stone in that process. This much is certain: it will be temporary. It will be large, involving Iraqis from all walks of life. And it will be open to participation by new leaders from across the country as they emerge from the shadow of Saddam Hussein's repression. It will evolve, to use the American phrase, from the "big tent" approach.

;;;;;; These meetings will help set in motion a process that will lead to an Iraqi government that does not threaten its neighbors or the world with weapons of mass destruction, that does not support terrorist networks, that guarantees the rights of religious and ethnic groups, that permits political freedom, individual liberty and rule of law to prevail so that no Iraqi is forced to live in terror or fear.

;;;;;; General Myers.

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Thank you, Mr. Secretary.

;;;;;; Well, General Brooks gave a complete brief this morning, so I don't have anything to add from an operational viewpoint.

;;;;;; On behalf of all of us in uniform, I would like to add our welcome home to the seven former POWs. We are very proud of them and wish them a joyful reunion with their families.

;;;;;; My congratulations go to the Marines who rescued them. Thank you for bringing them home. And as the secretary said, you can be sure that we will continue to look and hunt for those that are still missing.

;;;;;; I'd also like to add my condolences to the families of those service members killed in combat-related actions or accidents over the past few days. I think it reminds us the battlefield is still a dangerous place, and we need to maintain our focus on our day-to-day operations.

;;;;;; And with that, we'll take questions.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, there's an oil pipeline that runs from Iraq to Syria, through which traders say, despite denials from Damascus and Baghdad, that up to 200,000 barrels a day has flowed for several years, making millions of dollars for both countries in violation of the oil-for-food program. There are reports that the U.S. military has disabled or perhaps destroyed that pipeline. Can you clarify that or give us any information on that?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I am sure that no coalition forces destroyed a pipeline. We don't -- we have preserved infrastructure in that country. I am hopeful that they have shut it off, and I have heard that that has happened. But I cannot assure you that all illegal oil flowing from Iraq into Syria is shut off; I just hope it is.

;;;;;; Q General?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, there have been --

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I was going to say, just to back -- just to add a little bit to what the secretary said, they would not destroy the pipeline or any of the other infrastructure, whether it's oil or other infrastructure. They did it with the -- upon the technical advice of engineers.

;;;;;; Q Well, so they -- you say they have not destroyed it, but have they shut it off?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: And I answered.

;;;;;; Q You say there were reports of that.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I said we have been told that they have shut off a pipeline. Whether it's the only one, and whether that has completely stopped the flow of oil between Iraq and Syria, I cannot tell you. We do not have perfect knowledge. We do know that they were instructed to shut it down, and they have told us that they have.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; Q Now that there's no longer a need for no-fly zones over the north and the south of Iraq, what's the future of the U.S. military presence in Turkey and in Saudi Arabia?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We have, with the Turkish government, discontinued the Turkish no-fly zone.

;;;;;; Q As of when?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yesterday or the day before.

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: You announced it, I think, up here.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Did I?

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: The end of Operation Northern Watch. And the assets there that were supporting it have redeployed.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, there has been --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Let me finish. The southern no-fly zone we're still flying out of, obviously, although it's not in a no-fly-zone mode. We're doing what we do, our folks are. The subject of a footprint for the United States post-Iraq is something that we're discussing and considering, and we don't have any announcements to make on it. But that will take some time to sort through.

;;;;;; Q But the Incirlik operation has been not only closed down, but all the aircraft have left, I understand --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: No, all we said was that the Operation Northern Watch has been shut down and the assets that were there for that sole purpose have been redeployed.

;;;;;; Q So there are still U.S. assets --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I didn't say that. I've said --

;;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't know why this is hard. We have shut down Operation Northern Watch. The assets that were there for that purpose have been redeployed. We have not made final decisions with respect to the footprint of the United States in that part of the world, and won't for some months.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, there's been some tough talk by you and by Secretary Powell and by the president about Syria, and --

;;;;;; Q (Sneeze.)

;;;;;; Q Bless you.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: My goodness gracious. (Laughter.)

;;;;;; Q -- saying, in effect, to Syria to cease and desist aiding and abetting those of the Saddam regime and also in building or harboring weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;;; The bottom-line question is, specifically -- underline the word "specifically" -- how does the Bush administration intend to make that happen? How can you prevent Syria from doing these things?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't have anything else to add on that. The president's spoken on it. Secretary Powell has spoken on it. I'll leave that to them.

;;;;;; Q But you haven't said anything on --

;;;;;; Q You mentioned a missing American pilot from '91. I'm assuming that's Captain Scott Speicher. Can you update us on the progress that's being made, or lack of it, in trying to account for him?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: If and when we have anything to announce, we will. We, needless to say, have teams of people who have very much focused on the question of prisoners of war.

;;;;;; They've had some good success thus far. We are working on the problems and hoping that we'll have success. But we have nothing that we can report.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes? Yes, Andrea?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, given there was a lot of talk about needing to have a -- before the war, having a lighter, more mobile, faster- deploying force, and given the rapid, record speed that the 3rd Infantry --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: You think we ought to slow down? Is that --

;;;;;; (Soft laughter.)

;;;;;; Q That's not my question. That's not my question.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Just checking.

;;;;;; Q Given the record speed that the 3rd Infantry, you know, got to Baghdad from Kuwait, would you say, first of all, do you now -- is that lighter, more mobile, faster force now a reality? And if it is, is that because of something that you and your -- and this administration has done, or was that started before this present administration and -- or is it a combination of both?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, first, I would say that the 3rd Infantry Division and the Marines and the other forces and units and elements that have been doing such a wonderful job in Iraq have all performed exceedingly well, including the Special Operations people and the Navy and the air assets.

;;;;;; The phrase you used of swifter or more agile or faster are things that militaries have been striving for, for decades. Hundreds of years they've been trying to learn to do things better than they've done them in the past. And my impression is that the armed forces of the United States had been focused on improving themselves for some time, are today and will be in the future. And I think that looking for kind of demarcation you've suggested really is kind of chasing the wrong rabbit.

;;;;;; Yes, Pam?

;;;;;; Q I understand that as troops are moving through, they're bringing much-needed medical care and some surprise to folks that they're coming across. However, in Baghdad there remain a great number of people who are seriously hurt, some of them from the bombing, and aren't getting proper medical care, according to reports that are coming out there and pictures that we've seen.

;;;;;; At the same time there's a hospital ship that has 800 empty beds, and I'm wondering if there's any consideration being given to moving some of the folks, maybe the worst cases, in the Baghdad hospitals down there for more appropriate care -- special burn care, amputations.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The hospital -- I don't know which ship you're talking about, but I know one hospital ship has some, I believe, 307 Iraqi people that they have taken aboard and are providing first class medical treatment for. The medical situation as of the 13th -- today is the 15th, two days ago -- in Baghdad the hospitals do have a heavy load. Jordan announced a plan to send a field hospital into the Baghdad area this week. Medical supplies have been flown into Baghdad last night -- on the night of the 12th for distribution by the ICRC. And the -- there is a massive effort, bringing people in.

;;;;;; The UAE has also announced that it is receiving individuals who need medical assistance, Iraqi citizens who need medical assistance. And that process is taking place.

;;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- no plans to fill up those empty beds on the hospital ship.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't know what empty beds you're talking about. The --

;;;;;; Q It's a thousand -- it's a thousand-bed hospital ship, and the last briefing we had, there were about 200 beds full.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yeah. I just happen not to know --

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I think as a general rule we're making medical care available wherever we have it, and, you know, if it's appropriate. I would say since the 13th -- a couple of additional items. They opened two additional hospitals in north-central Baghdad that are under U.S. control and security. And the ICRC opened up the big 1,200-bed Titin (sp) hospital in Baghdad as well. The secretary said lots of medical supplies coming in, lots of help from several countries to help with the medical situation.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The medical situation -- you've got to remember two things. One is that hospitals and schools and mosques were used as headquarters for the Ba'ath Party and for the Iraqi military. And there was a lot of damage done to hospitals and schools and mosques as a result of that decision on their part -- their decision.

;;;;;; Every day that has gone by since the United States has been in that country, the medical situation has gotten better than it was the day before.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: And that will continue on a -- at an increased rate in the days and weeks ahead.

;;;;;; Yes?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, the meeting at Ur outside of Nasiriyah was boycotted by Shi'a groups, subjected to protest --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: It was also attended by a very large number of people.

;;;;;; Q Well, you described the tent approach that the U.S. would like to see.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: (Inaudible.) (Soft laughter.)

;;;;;; Q What is the answer to the boycott? How do you get the groups that are boycotting inside the tent?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, you don't. We don't. What's going to happen is it's going to get sorted out on the ground, and that's fine. People demonstrate in the United States and boycott political rallies and things; that's what free people do. And it ought not to come as a surprise.

;;;;;; Our attitude about it is is that the Iraqis are going to have to sort this out. There ought to be a big tent; everyone who subscribes to the principles that I indicated in my opening statement today ought to be able to participate. What's going to happen is as that happens, they'll have meetings. And if you do something, somebody's not going to like it; that's certain in life. It's also true if you don't do something, somebody's not going to like it. But the fact is, if you do do something, somebody's not going to like it, and that's what's happening.

;;;;;; So, someone will come up and say something and somebody else, as happens in democracies, in free systems -- somebody's going to say, "I don't agree with that." And they'll either say it from inside the tent or outside the tent. And what's going to happen is that over each week that goes by, people are going to see that this is going to be a process that's going to go forward, it's going to include everyone in that country that wants to participate, based on fundamental principles that I've indicated, and they'll find that they've got a much better chance of affecting it from inside than they do from outside.

;;;;;; And therefore, you say, "What are you going to do about it?" What's going to happen is the Iraqi people will do something about it. If they don't want those people in and those people don't subscribe to the principles that we've set forth, and indeed, that the Iraqis have set forth -- I just read this e-mail on the statement they made, which is very interesting and very positive, in my view -- then they'll stay out, and that's life. Some people do that. Some people don't vote in our country.

;;;;;; On the other hand, if they decide they want to have an influence and an effect on it, they'll decide to become a part of that process. And it's an interim process, it's a temporary process, and it's moving through phases towards a more permanent government. And then they'll have a chance to do that, and that's a good thing.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, how confident are you that Iraq still has Scud missiles? And during your evaluation of the battle damage assessments of your bombing in the western part of Iraq, have you found any sort of evidence there?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Not to my knowledge.

;;;;;; Q None at all? Not even like shells or anything like that?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: (Mocking) "Please? A little?" (Laughter.) A half of one, is that what you want?

;;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- launchers or anything like that?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Look -- look, there are still people shooting and getting killed in that country. The western area where the Scud baskets were is enormous! It's enormous! And people are -- there's a handful of people out there -- Americans. I mean, there are just not large numbers of special operators out there. They went out there, they went to the Scud baskets, they were successful in dealing with the people that were out there doing things. And now we're in a stage where, as the fighting starts to end and die down, there will be opportunities for individuals to then look around and see what they find.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, you had mentioned earlier that you're still looking at a decision to be made on what size of footprint the U.S. would have in the region. Would you just clarify to make certain that -- you've always said that the U.S. will certainly leave Iraq. I would presume by that you're not saying in Iraq but in the region?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I'm just stating a fact, that right now we have forces in Iraq. Our first choice is to begin drawing them down, and we have been doing that. A carrier battle group, it's already been announced, is leaving. There will be other forces that will be drawn down over time.

;;;;;; We have forces in other parts of that region -- and I spoke of a region, not a country -- and we will be looking at what that footprint ought to be going forward, and it's not something that we've come to closure on.

;;;;;; Yes?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, in your opening statement you talked about the political future of Iraq and letting the Iraqis decide. Are there, however, any specific conditions that we're attaching, such as bans on a particular party or an individual, or a particular size of an army or the type of weapons that they might have?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: What we have said is fairly simple, and we've repeated it and repeated it from the outset, that Iraq ought to be a single country, and if people want to participate who think they ought to divide up that country into pieces, then we don't care -- we'd prefer they not participate. It ought to be a country that doesn't have weapons of mass destruction and doesn't threaten its neighbors, and if there are people who think it ought to, then our preference is that they not participate.

;;;;;; It ought to be a country that sets itself on a path towards a government that is responsive to the people and respectful of minorities and different -- the diversity in the country, of religious diversity and ethnic diversity. And if people want to have a different kind of government, then we'd prefer they not participate.

;;;;;; Beyond that, we would -- we'd also prefer that people not participate who basically don't represent Iraq, but who think they represent some of the neighboring countries. And that would -- that's an unhelpful thing, it seems to me.

;;;;;; So those are basically the standards. And they're not complicated, and they're not restrictive. They allow for a great deal of variety and diversity within those basics.

;;;;;; Q Who, if I may follow, would do the vetting of those conditions?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Oh, we just keep repeating the conditions, and the people will do the vetting. People on the ground know these folks. They know the bad ones. And yeah, the -- I mean, we'll -- you did ask about parties. There's no question but that this country's got to go through a de-Ba'athification process. The Ba'ath Party is not -- does not fit the conditions that I've described. We know what they think. And therefore we know that they ought not to be participants. And we would be hopeful that that's the case.

;;;;;; Yes, sir.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, who is going to control Kirkuk and Mosul, since there is a lot of concern in Ankara, Turkey? In the meantime, any communication with the Turkish government vis-a-vis to the Kurdish people of northern Iraq? And above all, how do you comment on the cooperation which has been announced among Turkey, Syria and Iran vis- a-vis to the -- (inaudible)?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: You want to respond on that?

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: The situation that we have in northern Iraq with respect to coordination and cooperation with the Turkish military is that as soon as we had U.S. forces in Kirkuk and in Mosul, that we invited in immediately Turkish military liaison officers so we could establish together the ground truth in those areas. As you know, rumors start fairly frequently, and somebody has to establish the ground truth. And that's why we are in northern Iraq with U.S. forces and with Turkish liaison forces. That seems to be working very well. I've talked to General Jones, our EUCOM commander, today, who had been talking to General Ozkok in Turkey, the chief of the Defense staff there, who is, I think -- can be reported as pleased with this level of cooperation. And we think that's gone a long way to sort of dispelling some of the rumors that have come out of northern Iraq. The situation in Kirkuk is calm. The peshmerga are out of there. The situation in Mosul is a little less calm, but still very stable. And that continues.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, on the issue of follow-on forces, you've said that this plan has been flexible from the beginning and that there were other forces in the pipeline, that you could turn off the spigot, if you will. Have you decided to turn off the spigot?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes.

;;;;;; Q And how so, sir?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: One of the elements that was in the queue has been taken out of the queue, and we still have other forces that are flowing in. In some cases they'll be additive; in some cases they'll be replacing other forces over time. And in some cases, portions of elements may not go. Portions would go.

;;;;;; We're also on a very active effort to attract and encourage other countries to offer forces for the phase four stabilization process. We've had good luck, good fortune. I was on the phone today with ministers of defense of the U.K. and of Poland and talking to them about the process. We all will be coordinating through the CENTCOM liaison people and talking to other countries about forces that they may want to offer up to provide for a stabilization period so that, over a period of time, we'll be able to have the kind of security environment that is safe and allows a country to fashion a new government and a new approach to how they want to live their lives.

;;;;;; Q If I could follow. General Myers, we've heard about the naval assets and the Air Force assets pulling out. What about ground forces pulling out?

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I think the secretary covered that. Some of the reason that the forces that continue to flow are flowing is with a look towards in the future, to be determined by Central Command and by the secretary, on when you might replace some forces that have been there for some time yet. So that's all part of the planning that Central Command is doing right now.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Jamie?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, as impressive as the U.S. military operation has been, no military plan is perfect. Would you concede in retrospect that perhaps the plan failed to adequately protect Iraq's antiquities, particularly the looting, providing enough security for the museum in Baghdad?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Looting is an unfortunate thing. Human beings are not perfect. We've seen looting in this country. We've seen riots at soccer games in various countries around the world. We've seen destruction after athletic events in our own country.

;;;;;; No one likes it. No one allows it. It happens, and it's unfortunate. And to the extent it can be stopped, it should be stopped. To the extent it happens in a war zone, it's difficult to stop.

;;;;;; The United States is concerned about the museum in Baghdad, and the president and the secretary of the State and I have all talked about it, and we are in the process of offering rewards for people who will bring things back or to assist us in finding where those things might be. And I would suspect that over time we'll find that a number of things were in fact hidden prior to the conflict. That's what most people in -- run -- who run museums do prior to a conflict which was obviously well telegraphed in advance.

;;;;;; But to try to lay off the fact of that unfortunate activity on a defect in a war plan -- it strikes me as a stretch.

;;;;;; Q But weren't you urged specifically by scholars and others about the danger to that museum? And weren't you urged to provide a greater level of protection and security in the initial phases of the operation?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Not to my knowledge. It may very well have been, but certainly the targeting people were well aware of where it was, and they certainly avoided targeting it, and it was not hit by any U.S. -- this was -- whatever damage was done was done from the ground.

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: And we did get advice on archaeological sites around Baghdad and in fact I think it was the Archaeological -- American Archaeological Association -- I believe that's the correct title -- wrote the secretary of some concerns. Those were passed to Central Command, and those sites around Baghdad were obviously -- we tried to avoid hitting those. To my knowledge, we didn't hit any of them.

;;;;;; Can I say this -- can I say this -- a bit on the plan piece? You know, some have suggested, "Well, gee, you should have delayed combat operations to protect against looting, or you should have had more forces, should have waited till more forces arrived." To that I would say this: The best way to ensure fewer casualties on coalition side and fewer civilian casualties is to have combat operations proceed as quickly as possible and not prolong them. And so it gets back to the -- a matter of priorities. And we're dealing with some of those issues that you just brought up, Jamie, but the first thing you have to deal with is loss of life, and that's what we dealt with. And if you remember, when some of that looting was going on, people were being killed, people were being wounded, as I made reference to in my opening remarks.

;;;;;; So I think it's, as much as anything else, a matter of priorities.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, you said that you had taken one element, one unit out of the queue to replace or reinforce the troops you now have. Can you describe your evolving philosophy of the kind of forces you now want in? It would seem that heavy armor is less and less necessary. So why are -- what have you taken out of the queue, and sort of what is your thinking at this moment as you begin to reassess what is in that queue and what you may need in terms of the type of things?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, this is a process that involves the Central Command, and they make an assessment of what they see on the ground and what they think they need, and then they discuss it with General Myers and with me. And over a period of days, we discuss the various elements of it. One element is how many foreign forces do we think we're going to be able to attract to come in and give us some assistance, because that affects the number of U.S. forces that we need. What's the mix of forces you need -- land, sea, air? What are the kinds of capabilities? Do you need heavy tanks or do you need people more engaged in peacekeeping type activities?

;;;;;; And as the nature of the conflict winds down, which it most assuredly is, the need for certain types of things declines and the need for other types of things increases. And it is something that we talk about each day. We've been doing it almost continuously for some months now, first as to what ought to go in, and then what ought to come out. And it's not easy. There is no formula for it, and it depends on changing circumstances almost from day to day.

;;;;;; Q What have you removed from the queue?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: (Aside) Do we -- do we -- announced anything?

;;;;;; Q First Cavalry?

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I don't know, have we announced --

;;;;;; STAFF: First Cav acknowledged they had a deployment order, sir, from previously.

;;;;;; MORE

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: They had an earlier deployment order and that they no longer do.

;;;;;; STAFF: That hasn't been --

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: That hasn't been announced? Then we'll not announce that. (Laughter.)

;;;;;; Yes? (Laughs.)

;;;;;; Q What's your latest thinking on whether the senior Iraqi leadership had some kind of plan in place for a particular moment when U.S. forces arrived in Baghdad, and that's the reason that they all disappeared so suddenly and collectively, as if that plan was implemented?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I think we'll learn more about that as we go along. I think that the -- this is speculation, but I would speculate that they very likely expected Gulf War II, a long air war that would give them time to do whatever they thought they wanted to do, leave or take cover and what have you, followed at some distance by a ground war, and probably a massive ground war, probably including the 4th Infantry Division, which was still up in the Mediterranean. And it's entirely possible when people are interviewed after this is all over that we'll find that they did not expect a ground war to start before an air war and they did not expect a ground war to start without the 4th Infantry Division while it was still up in the Mediterranean. I also suspect that they didn't expect the first air attack that took place the day before the ground war began on the Dora Farms. But one can't know these things; you can't climb into their minds and know what they were thinking.

;;;;;; But we do know that because of the way General Franks conducted the conflict, a lot of bad things didn't happen. The oil wells were not set afire like they were last time. We don't have massive internally displaced people. We don't have a million refugees flooding into neighboring countries. We didn't have high collateral damage because we didn't have a long air war. We had precision weapons instead of dumb bombs. The ground war went so much faster, that the opportunity for people to reorganize and to reconstitute forces in areas where they could provide a more aggressive defense didn't exist; they were passed very rapidly.

;;;;;; MORE So there were a lot of things that -- there wasn't time to use ballistic missiles in the western part of the country to attack neighboring countries as happened last time. There's just a whole list of things that didn't go wrong, that could have been terrible and didn't happen, because of the way that General Franks and his team conducted that. They did a superb job.

;;;;;; Q And what would that tell you about their whereabouts right now?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Not much. They're either dead or alive.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, what are the concerns, Mr. Secretary, that former Iraqi regime leaders attempting to flee to Syria may not only be seeking a safe haven in Syria but may be attempting to set up a base of operations to plot and launch any kind of future terrorist attacks against U.S. targets or Iraq?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Oh, I think that there is no question there are going to be some people who will escape out of that country. It's got porous borders and they'll go in many different directions. We'll find some of them. Some countries will cooperate in helping us to find them, and they will be pleased they did; and others may not be helpful. But life goes on.

;;;;;; Q But given -- if I could follow up, but given Syria's support for terrorism, is there a concern that Iraqis could in fact -- former regime leaders could use Syria as a haven from which to plot and carry out terrorist attacks?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The -- I don't have anything else to say about Syria. The president's been discussing it. Secretary Powell's been discussing it. I've discussed it. And I don't know what one can add. Obviously, the people in Iraq who ran that government are on our list.

;;;;;; And we'd like to have them. And we'll get a lot of them. We may even get most of them over time. And life will go on.

;;;;;; Tom?

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, each of the armed services has a very formal lessons learned process that within weeks or months they'll roll out. I'm curious where you stand today, sir, what lessons you learned about how the American military does its job that you think were good, things that need to be improved. Have you personally learned anything from this war that will influence how you conduct business in the months ahead?

;;;;;; And General Myers, if you could take a whack at that, I'd be grateful.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: First of all -- I don't want to say that it would be a mistake for the services to engage in service-centric lessons learned. But to some extent, I will say it. This was not a war fought by the Army or the Navy or the Air Force. It was -- or the Marines. It was a war that's been fought by joint forces under excellent leadership. And there isn't any one service that could have done what was done. It was the force multiplier, the leverage that was achieved by the combined -- joint and combined effort between the United States and Great Britain and Poland and other countries. Therefore the lessons learned will be looked at not by service alone, but by the Joint Forces Command and others, who will do a very thorough job.

;;;;;; It started almost when the war started, the lessons learned process. When Dick and I meet every day with the people in the Central Command, sitting off the side you can see people who are on the lessons learned team. And they've been doing it in real time, at General Franks' instance and at Ed Giambastiani's instance. And it will be a good thing, and it will be valuable, and it will save lives and save money and improve the capability of the armed forces of the United States considerably.

;;;;;; Have I learned things? You bet. But --

;;;;;; Q Such as?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: -- I'll save those things for another time.

;;;;;; Q (Laughs.)

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: General Myers?

;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I'm going to save mine for another time as well. (Laughter.)

;;;;;; But there are lots of them, and as the secretary said, this process was started even before conflict began. It had senior mentors involved, as well as military people. And Admiral Giambastiani down in Joint Forces Command is overall responsible to gather the lessons learned that we'll see and the secretary will see. And he's also going to try to pull together the service lessons learned into that so we have, you know, a fairly good composite picture, and inform us how to proceed in the future.

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: And they'll relate to both war-fighting as well as the process of getting there, the flow of forces and how that works. There's -- this department's got a lot of areas that we can improve, and we're working like the dickens trying to improve it and trying to make it more efficient, more effective, so that it best serves the American people and our values and our principles.

;;;;;; Thank you very much.

;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, has the war been won? Has the war been won, Mr. Secretary?

;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I'll let you know, Bill. (Subdued laughter.)

END.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, et al., Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)	No. 1:01CV02447 (CKK)
NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION, et al., Defendants.	)

NOTICE WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN RECORDS

Defendants, National Archives and Records Administration and John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, hereby provide notice with respect to certain records referenced in plaintiffs' supplemental statement of undisputed facts in support of their motion for summary judgment. In their supplemental statement, plaintiffs noted that 1,654 pages of Reagan presidential records and video segments totaling approximately 15 minutes in length "have been subject to the review process called for by Executive Order 13,233, and have been withheld by the Archives pending completion of that process." See Supplemental Statement at ¶ 3. These records are not subject to plaintiffs' complaint (including their request for a mandatory injunction), and we have not endeavored to provide the Court with updates with respect to the status of these records during the course of their review by former President Reagan and President Bush. Nevertheless, so that the record is clear, we wish to inform the Court that, during the review process, neither former President Reagan nor President Bush asserted a constitutional privilege over 1,580 of the 1,654 pages. These 1,580 pages are available at the Reagan Library in Simi Valley, California. We wish to further inform the Court that, during the review process, former President Reagan asserted constitutional privilege over the remaining 74 pages and the video segments. The Executive Office of the President is continuing to examine these records in accordance with Executive Order 13,233. We will inform the Court when review of these records is complete.

DRAFT DRAFT DRAFT

The Honorable Christopher Cox
United States House of Representatives
2402 Russell House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Representative Cox:

I want to commend you for your laudable efforts to extend the moratorium on Internet access and discriminatory taxes through H.R. 49, the "Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act."

The Internet is an innovative force that opens the vast potential economic and social benefits of e-commence and enables such applications as distance learning, telemedicine, and precision farming. Government must do its part to make access to these services affordable. It should not raise costs through additional taxation. As the President stated at the Waco Economic Forum in 2002, "We will continue to work to prevent new access taxes on broadband technology. If you want something to be used more, you don't tax it."

I encourage Congress to act expeditiously to send legislation to extend the moratorium the President's desk before it expires on November 1 of this year. Thank you again for your outstanding leadership on this important issue to both current and future national economic growth. If you should have any further questions or concerns, please feel free to contact me at (202) 482-2112, or Brenda Becker, Assistant Secretary for Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, at (202) 482-3663.

Sincerely,

Donald L. Evans

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 49

To permanently extend the moratorium enacted by the Internet Tax Freedom Act, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JANUARY 7, 2003

Mr. COX (for himself, Mr. CALVERT, Mr. CANNON, Mr. CHABOT, Mr. CUNNINGHAM, Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia, Mr. DREIER, Mr. FLAKE, Mr. GOODLATTE, Mr. HERGER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. ISSA, Mr. MCKEON, Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California, Mr. OSE, Mr. PENCE, Mr. PLATTS, Mr. POMBO, Mr. ROHRABACHER, Mr. WELDON of Florida, Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mrs. MUSGRAVE, Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida, Mr. SWEENEY, Mr. FRANKS of Arizona, Mr. KING of Iowa, Mr. MCCOTTER, Mr. BLUMENAUER, Mr. ROYCE, Mr. TANCREDO, Mr. BLUNT, Mr. DICKS, Mr. LEWIS of California, and Mr. BEAUPREZ) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To permanently extend the moratorium enacted by the Internet Tax Freedom Act, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act".

REV_00163231

SEC. 2. PERMANENT EXTENSION OF INTERNET TAX FREEDOM ACT MORATORIUM.

(a) PERMANENT EXTENSION; INTERNET ACCESS TAXES.—Section 1101 of the Internet Tax Freedom Act (47 U.S.C. 151 note) is amended—

(1) by striking "taxes during the period beginning on October 1, 1998, and ending on November 1, 2003—" and inserting "taxes after September 30, 1998:";

(2) by striking paragraph (1) of subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"(1) Taxes on Internet access.",

(3) by striking "multiple" in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) and inserting "Multiple";

DRAFT DRAFT DRAFT

The Honorable Christopher Cox
United States House of Representatives
2402 Russell House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Representative Cox:

I want to commend you for your laudable efforts to extend the moratorium on Internet access and discriminatory taxes through H.R. 49, the "Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act."

The Internet is an innovative force that opens the vast potential economic and social benefits of e-commence and enables such applications as distance learning, telemedicine, and precision farming. Government must do its part to make access to these services affordable. It should not raise costs through additional taxation. As the President stated at the Waco Economic Forum in 2002, "We will continue to work to prevent new access taxes on broadband technology. If you want something to be used more, you don't tax it."

I encourage Congress to act expeditiously to send legislation to extend the moratorium the President's desk before it expires on November 1 of this year. Thank you again for your outstanding leadership on this important issue to both current and future national economic growth. If you should have any further questions or concerns, please feel free to contact me at (202) 482-2112, or Brenda Becker, Assistant Secretary for Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, at (202) 482-3663.

Sincerely,

Donald L. Evans

I

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 49

To permanently extend the moratorium enacted by the Internet Tax Freedom Act, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JANUARY 7, 2003

Mr. COX (for himself, Mr. CALVERT, Mr. CANNON, Mr. CHABOT, Mr. CUNNINGHAM, Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia, Mr. DREIER, Mr. FLAKE, Mr. GOODLATTE, Mr. HERGER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. ISSA, Mr. MCKEON, Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California, Mr. OSE, Mr. PENCE, Mr. PLATTS, Mr. POMBO, Mr. ROHRABACHER, Mr. WELDON of Florida, Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mrs. MUSGRAVE, Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida, Mr. SWEENEY, Mr. FRANKS of Arizona, Mr. KING of Iowa, Mr. MCCOTTER, Mr. BLUMENAUER, Mr. ROYCE, Mr. TANCREDO, Mr. BLUNT, Mr. DICKS, Mr. LEWIS of California, and Mr. BEAUPREZ) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To permanently extend the moratorium enacted by the Internet Tax Freedom Act, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act".

REV_00163249

SEC. 2. PERMANENT EXTENSION OF INTERNET TAX FREEDOM ACT MORATORIUM.

(a) PERMANENT EXTENSION; INTERNET ACCESS TAXES.—Section 1101 of the Internet Tax Freedom Act (47 U.S.C. 151 note) is amended—

(1) by striking "taxes during the period beginning on October 1, 1998, and ending on November 1, 2003—" and inserting "taxes after September 30, 1998:";

(2) by striking paragraph (1) of subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"(1) Taxes on Internet access.",

(3) by striking "multiple" in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) and inserting "Multiple";

(4) by striking subsection (d); and

(5) by redesignating subsections (e) and (f) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1104(10) of the Internet Tax Freedom Act (47 U.S.C. 151 note) is amended by striking "unless" and all that follows through "1998".

White House Website Privacy and Security Policy

En Espa¤ol

Thank you for visiting the White House Website and reviewing our privacy policy. Our privacy policy is clear: We will collect no personal information about you when you visit our website unless you choose to provide that information to us.

Here is how we handle information about your visit to our website:

White House Internet Security Policy

For site security purposes and to ensure that this service remains available to all users, this government computer system employs software programs to monitor network traffic to identify unauthorized attempts to upload or change information, or otherwise cause damage.

Unauthorized attempts to upload information or change information on this service are strictly prohibited and may be punishable under the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1986 and the National Information Infrastructure Protection Act.

Information Collected and Stored Automatically

If you do nothing during your visit but browse through the website, read pages, or download information, we will gather and store certain information about your visit automatically. This information does not identify you personally. We automatically collect and store only the following information about your visit:

The Internet domain (for example, "xcompany.com" if you use a private Internet access account, or "yourschool.edu" if you connect from a university's domain) and IP address (an IP address is a number that is automatically assigned to your computer whenever you are surfing the Web) from which you access our website;

The type of browser and operating system used to access our site;
The date and time you access our site;
The pages you visit; and

If you linked to the White House website from another website, the address of that website.
We use this information to help us make our site more useful to visitors -- to learn about the number of visitors to our site and the types of technology our visitors use. We do not track or record information about individuals and their visits.

If You Send Us Personal Information

If you choose to provide us with personal information by sending an e-mail to the President or someone else in the White House, or by filling out a form with your personal information and submitting it through our website, we use that information to respond to your message and to help us provide you with information that you request. If you submit your resume through our website, we use your personal identification information only in considering your application for employment; If you request a greeting through our website, we will use information about individuals you submit only to process your request.; We do not collect personal information for any other purposes. The information you provide is not given to any private organizations or private persons. The White House does not collect or use information for commercial marketing.

We would share your e-mail with another federal government agency only if your inquiry related to that agency or if we were required to do so by law. The Presidential Records Act requires us to maintain some documents, including e-mails, received by the White House and requires public disclosure of some of these documents twelve years after President Bush leaves office. In addition, we would release documents, including e-mails, if required to do so by a congressional or judicial subpoena.

If you submit resume information through the Presidential Personnel Application, this information will be shared only with White House employees involved in making hiring decisions and, if you express interest in employment with a federal executive agency other than the White House, with officials responsible for making hiring decisions in that agency. We are required by the Presidential Records Act to maintain your resume as a record, but your personal resume information is not subject to public disclosure under the Act.

Links to Other Sites

Our website has links to the websites of many other federal agencies. In a few cases, we link to private organizations, with their permission. To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

April 10, 2003

Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. CORNYN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003' (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

`SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) INITIAL TAXES- There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY- In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION-

determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

`(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE- For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of--

`(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

`(ii) a reasonable fee based on--

`(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

`(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE-

`(i) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

`(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is--

`(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

`(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

`(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

`(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

`(iv) LIMITATION- An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES- Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee--

`(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and

`(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

`(2) EXCESS FEE- The term `excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

`(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY- For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

`(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF- For purposes of this section, the term `applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

`(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES- For purposes of this section--

`(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

`(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

`(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

`(2) TAXABLE PERIOD- The term `taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of--

`(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or

`(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

`(3) CORRECTION-

`(A) GENERAL RULE- Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

`(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

`(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS- In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

`(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS-

`(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE- Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

`(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT- The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney--

`(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

`(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

`(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM-

`(1) IN GENERAL- In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

`(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including--

`(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

`(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

`(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

`(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

`(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

`(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

`(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

`(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

`(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF- The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

`(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS-

(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 4963 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(2) Subsection (e) of section 6213 of such Code is amended by inserting `4959 (relating to excess fee transactions),' before `4971'.

(3) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 7422(g) of such Code are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(4) The heading for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

`Subchapter D--Failure by Certain Charitable Organizations and Persons to Meet Certain Qualification Requirements and Fiduciary Standards'.

(5) The table of subchapters for chapter 42 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to subchapter D and inserting the following:

`SUBCHAPTER D. Failure by certain charitable organizations and persons to meet certain qualification requirements and fiduciary standards'.

(6) The table of sections for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

`Sec. 4959. Taxes on excess fee transactions.'.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to excess fees paid on or after June 1, 2002.

SEC. 3. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to judicial proceedings) is amended by redesignating section 7437 as section 7438 and by inserting after section 7436 the following new section:

`SEC. 7437. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO TAX ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) IN GENERAL- In a case of actual controversy involving--

`(1) a determination by the Secretary or the collecting attorney with respect to the imposition of the excise tax on excess fee transactions on such collecting attorney under section 4959, or

upon the filing of an appropriate pleading by an applicable plaintiff, the Tax Court may make a declaration with respect to such determination or failure. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court and shall be reviewable as such.

`(b) DEFERENTIAL REVIEW- If a collecting attorney's fee has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959(c)(1)(D) or by the Secretary pursuant to section 4959, the Tax Court shall review the fee only for an abuse of discretion.

`(c) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In any petition for a declaration referred to in subsection (a):

`(1) NO PREVIOUS REPORT- If a report by a legal auditing firm that meets the requirements of section 4959(h) has not been previously produced and relied on by another court, the Tax Court shall hire such a legal auditing firm and rely on its report pursuant to the procedures in section 4959(h).

`(2) SECOND REPORT-

`(A) IN GENERAL- If a report by a legal auditing firm has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959, the Tax Court shall hire a second legal auditing firm upon the request of the petitioner.

`(B) FEE FOR REPORT- The Tax Court may direct the petitioner to pay the fee for any report of a legal auditing firm provided pursuant to subparagraph (A).

`(d) TIME FOR BRINGING ACTION- No proceeding may be initiated under this section by any person until 90 days after such person first notifies the Secretary of the excess fee transaction with respect to which the proceeding relates.

`(e) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section, any term used in this section and also in section 4959 shall have the meaning given such term by section 4959.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking the item relating to section 7437 and by inserting the following new items:

`Sec. 7438. Cross references.'.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to actions after the date of the enactment of this Act.

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

April 10, 2003

Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. CORNYN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003' (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

`SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) INITIAL TAXES- There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY- In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION-

`(A) IN GENERAL- The term `excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

`(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE- For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of--

`(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

`(ii) a reasonable fee based on--

`(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

`(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE-

`(i) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

`(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is--

`(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

`(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

`(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

`(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

`(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES- Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee--

`(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and

`(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

`(2) EXCESS FEE- The term `excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

`(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY- For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

`(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF- For purposes of this section, the term `applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

`(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES- For purposes of this section--

`(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

`(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

`(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

`(2) TAXABLE PERIOD- The term `taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of--

`(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or

`(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

`(3) CORRECTION-

`(A) GENERAL RULE- Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

`(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

`(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS- In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

`(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE- No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

`(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS-

`(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE- Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

`(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT- The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney--

`(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

`(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

`(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM-

`(1) IN GENERAL- In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

`(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including--

`(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

`(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

`(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

`(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

`(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

`(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

`(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

`(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

`(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF- The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

`(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS-

(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 4963 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(2) Subsection (e) of section 6213 of such Code is amended by inserting `4959 (relating to excess fee transactions),' before `4971'.

(3) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 7422(g) of such Code are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(4) The heading for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

`Subchapter D--Failure by Certain Charitable Organizations and Persons to Meet Certain Qualification Requirements and Fiduciary Standards'.

(5) The table of subchapters for chapter 42 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to subchapter D and inserting the following:

`SUBCHAPTER D. Failure by certain charitable organizations and persons to meet certain qualification requirements and fiduciary standards'.

(6) The table of sections for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

`Sec. 4959. Taxes on excess fee transactions.'.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to excess fees paid on or after June 1, 2002.

SEC. 3. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to judicial proceedings) is amended by redesignating section 7437 as section 7438 and by inserting after section 7436 the following new section:

`SEC. 7437. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO TAX ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) IN GENERAL- In a case of actual controversy involving--

`(1) a determination by the Secretary or the collecting attorney with respect to the imposition of the excise tax on excess fee transactions on such collecting attorney under section 4959, or

upon the filing of an appropriate pleading by an applicable plaintiff, the Tax Court may make a declaration with respect to such determination or failure. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court and shall be reviewable as such.

`(b) DEFERENTIAL REVIEW- If a collecting attorney's fee has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959(c)(1)(D) or by the Secretary pursuant to section 4959, the Tax Court shall review the fee only for an abuse of discretion.

`(c) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In any petition for a declaration referred to in subsection (a):

`(1) NO PREVIOUS REPORT- If a report by a legal auditing firm that meets the requirements of section 4959(h) has not been previously produced and relied on by another court, the Tax Court shall hire such a legal auditing firm and rely on its report pursuant to the procedures in section 4959(h).

`(2) SECOND REPORT-

`(A) IN GENERAL- If a report by a legal auditing firm has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959, the Tax Court shall hire a second legal auditing firm upon the request of the petitioner.

`(B) FEE FOR REPORT- The Tax Court may direct the petitioner to pay the fee for any report of a legal auditing firm provided pursuant to subparagraph (A).

`(d) TIME FOR BRINGING ACTION- No proceeding may be initiated under this section by any person until 90 days after such person first notifies the Secretary of the excess fee transaction with respect to which the proceeding relates.

`(e) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section, any term used in this section and also in section 4959 shall have the meaning given such term by section 4959.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking the item relating to section 7437 and by inserting the following new items:

`Sec. 7437. Declaratory judgments relating to tax on excess fee transactions.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to actions after the date of the enactment of this Act.

During this congressional recess, we are working to heighten the sense of urgency for enactment of asbestos litigation reform legislation. As part of this effort, we are buying full-page ads in the major daily papers. Although the actual ad buy is relatively spare, we will leverage and amplify the content of the paid media with earned media (e.g., outreach to key reporters and editorial boards at papers which have not yet editorialized on the subject), as well as direct grassroots contacts.

The papers in which the ads will be running April 22:

* CA: Orange County Register, San Francisco Chronicle, San Jose Mercury News, Sacramento Bee, Fresno Bee
* CT: Hartford Courant, New Haven Register, Stamford Advocate/Greenwich Times
* DE: Wilmington New Journal
* OK: Tulsa World, Oklahoman
* UT: Salt Lake Tribune/Deseret News
* WI: Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, Wisconsin State Journal/Capital Times, Appleton Post Crescent
* VT: Burlington Free Press

Taglines on the ad either will urge members to stand up for asbestos litigation reform, praise them for working for reform or thank them for their leadership. A draft sample ad is attached FYI. The signatories will comprise a balanced representation of members of our third-party grassroots coalitions in each state where we have them; in the other states, signatories will be national third-party organizations we have recruited.

We Believe in Delaware. We Believe in Asbestos Litigation Reform.

We believe in a strong and thriving economy.

We believe in growing businesses, good jobs and a secure retirement.

We believe in helping sick people.

This is why groups and leaders in Delaware are concerned about the asbestos litigation epidemic. Hundreds of thousands of asbestos cases clog America's courts, exacting a staggering toll on our economy. Lost jobs. Busted retirement plans. Bankrupt businesses. Most of these cases are filed by people encouraged to sue even though they aren't sick from asbestos. That's right. You don't have to be sick from asbestos to file a claim in our current system. This means that communities, businesses and people who are truly sick from asbestos are waiting for help they desperately need. Senator Tom Carper is helping. He is working in Congress to pass Asbestos Litigation Reform, establishing real medical standards that will ensure available money goes directly to help sick people most in need. Asbestos Litigation Reform will strengthen our economy, stabilize 401(k) retirement plans and protect jobs in Delaware. Most importantly, it will help grant real asbestos victims the justice they urgently need, and deserve. We believe Asbestos Litigation Reform is an urgent priority for Delaware, and for America.

EDITORIAL: Not enough hours

As the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court in Washington, D.C., languishes in a filibuster, another judicial appointee is mired in partisan quicksand: Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen.

Justice Owen was selected in May 2001 to fill a vacancy on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Her appointment seemed dead in the water last fall, when the Democratic-led Senate Judiciary Committee rejected her on a party-line vote. But after the November election, when control of the Senate (and its committees) switched to the Republicans, the newly constituted Judiciary Committee approved Justice Owen's nomination and sent it to the Senate for a floor vote.

And so the stalling began anew. Last week, when Republicans tried to compel senators to vote up-or-down on the nomination -- some 23 months after the justice's name was first submitted -- Democrats again went into the capital's version of the Four Corners delay. Sen. Robert Bennett, R-Utah, made a suggestion that after Democrats and Republicans each received 10 hours to debate Ms. Owen's qualifications a confirmation vote would follow.

Nevada's own Harry Reid, D-Beltway, said no. "There is not a number (of hours) in the universe that would be sufficient," Sen. Reid said.

The reason for Democrats' opposition: an opinion authored by Justice Owen upholding a Texas law that requires any minor who seeks an abortion to notify one of her parents.

Is this alone sufficient grounds to disqualify Justice Owen for a federal appellate court? The American Bar Association must think not, since its Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary considers her "well qualified."

But any formal discussion of this appointment has been stifled for now, as Sen. Reid -- who's also point man for the filibuster stalling Mr. Estrada -- remains captive of narrow special interests whose views are far from those of the mainstream.

It's a shameful exhibition of partisan politics.

On 1, they tell me that the vast majority of Ellipse parking is already reserved for WH parkers. They also tell me there is no legal problem with sectioning off spaces for 150 WH parkers as requested. (For security reasons, the Ellipse is closed to public parkers, which then makes it available for WH parkers.)

1. We haven't decided how to resolve the Ellipse parking problem. I am still wondering if it is an option to section off some of the Ellipse for WH parkers. Could potentially be 150 parkers.

2. The IRS issue had to do with the Travel Office and the Press. I'll ask Eric Terrell about it again on Monday.

1. Parking: Interior tells me that Anne Bowman Smith has been helping on this and that it is all but resolved. Is that accurate?
2. Greenstone does not think there are any action items now on the IRS issue. (Does this relate to parking and W2's?) If you disagree, let me know.

ÿUNDER THE DOME Edwards on trail in Iowa

By ROB CHRISTENSEN AND JOHN WAGNER, Staff Writers
Raleigh (NC) News & Observer
U.S. Sen. John Edwards said Thursday that if elected president he would not apply a "litmus test" on abortion to his nominees to the U.S. Supreme Court and other judicial posts.
The North Carolina Democrat made his comments during a breakfast in Waterloo, Iowa, that kicked off a day of campaigning in the nation's first presidential caucus state. He was responding to a question from an activist about recent comments on the subject by rival 2004 candidate, U.S. Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts.
Edwards said he believes strongly in reproductive choice, but he said, "I would not apply any single litmus to any candidates." Edwards said a candidate's views on abortion would be one of several factors considered.
Earlier this month, Kerry told a group of female Democrats that if elected president he would nominate to the high court only supporters of abortion rights under its Roe v. Wade decision.
During Edwards' six-city swing Thursday, he also stepped up criticism of President Bush as out of touch on the economy.
During a luncheon that drew more than 100 people to Davenport, Edwards praised the economic stewardship of President Clinton and said Bush had put the country "back in that deficit ditch."
"He's walking around in the Rose Garden promoting budget-busting tax cuts while people out here in the real world are hurting," Edwards said.
Also noteworthy about Thursday's time on the trail: Edwards, who supports the war against Iraq, said he thinks the U.S. should approach the threat of Syria through diplomacy.
"Syria does have a very bad history," including the harboring of terrorists, Edwards said. "But at the end of the day, this is something that should be dealt with diplomatically."
He called Iraq "a unique case."

Mess Holiday Hours

In observance of the Holiday, the White House Mess will close for business at 3:00 PM on Friday, April 18 and remain closed through Sunday, April 20. Normal business hours will resume at 6:45 AM on Monday, April 21. If the need arises, necessary arrangements will be made to meet any unforeseen demands.

We apologize for any inconvenience.

Thank you.

Mess Holiday Hours

In observance of the Holiday, the White House Mess will close for business at 3:00 PM on Friday, April 18 and remain closed through Sunday, April 20. Normal business hours will resume at 6:45 AM on Monday, April 21. If the need arises, necessary arrangements will be made to meet any unforeseen demands.

We apologize for any inconvenience.

Thank you.

In the past when PFIAB required access to archived records, we simply called or sent a note to Nancy Smith advising her of that need, the name of the person who would be showing up, at her door and the general reason: need to research personnel, ethics or security issue re: past member or staff; need to research past Board work/findings on a particular sunstantive issue; need to verify or previous Board membership; etc.

Rosemary,

Would you have a moment on Tuesday afternoon when I could conference you, Brett, Tim, and maybe Harriet or Jonathan in to talk about the timing question concerning EOs that extend other EOs and expiration dates?

I want to be sure that I am giving the WH Staff Secretary and the Clerk's Office the most accurate information and the greatest flexibility to work within the President's busy schedule.

Thank you, Mac

have given to Mintz and will let you know. thanks. one question. Is it possible to add a sentence giving the Court the total number of pages from the Reagan Library that have been cleared for public access since the EO went into effect. Gary should have latest numbers on that, and it may be helpful for context.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, et al., Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)	No. 1:01CV02447 (CKK)
NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION, et al., Defendants.	)

NOTICE WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN RECORDS

Defendants, National Archives and Records Administration and John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, hereby provide notice with respect to certain records referenced in plaintiffs' supplemental statement of undisputed facts in support of their motion for summary judgment. In their supplemental statement, plaintiffs noted that 1,654 pages of Reagan presidential records and video segments totaling approximately 15 minutes in length "have been subject to the review process called for by Executive Order 13,233, and have been withheld by the Archives pending completion of that process." See Supplemental Statement at ¶ 3. These records are not subject to plaintiffs' complaint (including their request for a mandatory injunction), and we have not endeavored to provide the Court with updates with respect to the status of these records during the course of their review by former President Reagan and President Bush. Nevertheless, so that the record is clear, we wish to inform the Court that, during the review process, neither former President Reagan nor President Bush asserted a constitutional privilege over 1,580 of the 1,654 pages. These 1,580 pages are available at the Reagan Library. We wish to further inform the Court that, during the review process, former President Reagan asserted constitutional privilege over the remaining 74 pages and the video segments. The incumbent Administration currently has this matter under review in accordance with Executive Order 13,233.

Adam, here is the proposed agenda that we cleared through you sometime back. We do not expect to go into detail on most of these things at this initial meeting, but thought it would be useful to have a list of what we have on our minds. Which is why I have kept in number 4, even if some of that is more appropriate for a meeting folks in the White House Office.

DRAFT DRAFT DRAFT

The Honorable Christopher Cox
United States House of Representatives
2402 Russell House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Representative Cox:

I want to commend you for your laudable efforts to extend the moratorium on Internet access and discriminatory taxes on electronic commerce through H.R. 49, the "Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act."

The Internet is an innovative force that opens vast potential economic and social benefits of e-commence and enables such applications as distance learning, telemedicine, e-business, e-government and precision farming. The next-generation, broadband Internet offers even greater impact, and this Administration is making aggressive deployment of broadband networks a priority. In this regard, government must not slow the roll-out or usage of Internet services by establishing administrative barriers or imposing additional taxation. As the President stated at the Waco Economic Forum in 2002, "If you want something to be used more, you don't tax it."

I encourage Congress to expeditiously pass legislation to extend the moratorium before it expires on November 1 of this year. Thank you again for your outstanding leadership on this important issue. If you should have any further questions or concerns, please feel free to contact me at (202) 482-2112, or Brenda Becker, Assistant Secretary for Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, at (202) 482-3663.

Sincerely,

Donald L. Evans

ok, I would just make sure the exact number is right. It's sometimes better to use something like "more than 30" unless you are 100% sure.

Ok, we'll go with "vacancy crisis."

FYI, he wanted to put in some examples or details re judges getting through in the final year of a presidency. I discussed it with him in detail, explaining that 1992, which is the year at issue, is actually full of (34) examples of judges nominated and confirmed in the final year, but that 1996 and 2000 are not as good. He said that he understands, but still does want to put in some detail. So I will mention the 34 figure for 1992.

Also, you will be happy to learn that the Judge said "I don't care one way or the other about how we end the letter -- with an invitation for proposals or not -- so if you want to leave it out I'm OK with that." And I have now changed it to just conclude "Thank you again for your letter."

Brett: The Judge has made an edit to the letter that would have us refer to the "vacancy crisis in the Sixth Circuit" -- but he asked me to confirm if that's true. Is "crisis" a term that we use, or do we usually say "judicial emergency" (or "emergencies" -- when several seats involved, i.e. one emergency per seat)?

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, et al., Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)	No. 1:01CV02447 (CKK)
NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION, et al., Defendants.	)

NOTICE WITH RESPECT TO PROCESSING OF RECORDS

Defendants, National Archives and Records Administration and John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, hereby provide this notice to generally update the Court with respect to processing of presidential records of former President Reagan under Executive Order 13,233. Since Executive Order 13,233 went into effect in November 2001, more than 164,000 pages of Reagan presidential records have been released in full or in part. No privilege was asserted by former President Reagan over these pages or any portions thereof (portions of these pages were redacted pursuant to non-privilege-related Freedom of Information Act exemptions), and President Bush concurred in the decision to authorize access under Executive Order 13,233. Since Executive Order 13,233 went into effect, former President Reagan has asserted privilege over 74 pages of Reagan presidential records and video segments totaling approximately 15 minutes in length. These records and video segments are a subset of the materials described in paragraph 3 of plaintiffs' supplemental statement of undisputed facts in support of their motion for summary judgment (the remaining records described in that paragraph have been released). The incumbent Administration is reviewing those 74 pages and video segments, as well as certain other pending requests as to which no privilege was asserted by former President Reagan, in accordance with Executive Order 13,233, including under § 4 of that Order. Finally, since

Executive Order 13,233 went into effect, more than 1,700 pages of George H.W. Bush vice-presidential records have been released in full or in part. No privilege was asserted by former Vice President Bush over these pages or any portions thereof (portions of these pages were redacted pursuant to non-privilege-related Freedom of Information Act exemptions), and President Bush concurred in the decision to authorize access under Executive Order 13,233.

Is a meeting necessary? Aren't the basic answers: (1) a temporally limited executive order expires at the end of the last day specified in the order, just like CR's; and (2) that said, we should try to be clear up front in drafting orders to specify the precise time when the order expires so that future Exec Branch officials need not go through this same drill and to avoid general confusion?

In one of the many comments flying around on the proposed Pocket Veto of the Clean Diamonds bill, OLA states:;
3. The Administration has yet to define its "pocket veto" policy. Although a pocket veto is certainly within constitutiional limits during a two week adjournment of the Congress, most Adminstrations, including the last two, have notiifed Congress in advance that the pocket veto would only be used after sine die adjournment.
Have we looked at this issue?; If not, I would like to consult with OLC so that we know what posture we're in not just for purposes of this bill but for upcoming adjournments.;

Thanks for the materials. I see that the Horowitz proposal was one of the proposals that was originally discussed by the tort reform group, but it fell out of the process between the initial meeting of the group (1/8/2002) and the final memo (2/27/2002). Having reviewed your docs, do you recall what happened to that idea? Do you still have the memo/document where the pros and cons of each proposal were listed?

Brett,

The organization 60+ is a 501(c)(4), which has been supportive of administration policies in the past. They would like Secretary Thompson to headline a speech in his official capacity. Normally, we would just approve it as an official event.

I just wanted to make sure that 501(c)(4) weren't impacted by the McCain Feingold law. Any ideas or anyone to whom you could refer me?

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, et al., Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)	No. 1:01CV02447 (CKK)
NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION, et al., Defendants.	)

NOTICE WITH RESPECT TO PROCESSING OF RECORDS

Defendants, National Archives and Records Administration and John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, hereby provide this notice to generally update the Court with respect to processing of presidential records of former President Reagan under Executive Order 13,233. Since Executive Order 13,233 went into effect in November 2001, more than 164,000 pages of Reagan presidential records have been released in full or in part, including the approximately 68,000 pages of Reagan presidential records that were the subject of plaintiffs' complaint and their request for a mandatory injunction. No privilege was asserted by former President Reagan over these pages or any portions thereof (portions of these pages were redacted pursuant to non-privilege-related Freedom of Information Act exemptions), and President Bush concurred in the decision to authorize access under Executive Order 13,233. Since Executive Order 13,233 went into effect, former President Reagan has asserted privilege over 74 pages of Reagan presidential records and video segments totaling approximately 15 minutes in length. These records and video segments – which are not subject to plaintiffs' complaint (including their request for a mandatory injunction) – are a subset of the materials described in paragraph 3 of plaintiffs' supplemental statement of undisputed facts in support of their motion for summary judgment (the remaining records described in that paragraph have been released). The incumbent Administration is reviewing those 74 pages and video segments, as well as certain other pending requested records as to which no privilege was asserted by former President Reagan, in accordance with Executive Order 13,233, including § 4 of that Order. Finally, since Executive Order 13,233 went into effect, more than 1,700 pages of George H.W. Bush vice-presidential records have been released in full or in part. No privilege was asserted by former Vice President Bush over these pages or any portions thereof (portions of these pages were redacted pursuant to non-privilege-related Freedom of Information Act exemptions), and President Bush concurred in the decision to authorize access under Executive Order 13,233.

Cool. Thanks Brett. Any way to zero in on whether and or why some bankruptcy judges arguably allow an airline out of bankruptcy too soon? What is the standard or test that a debtor must meet to be released? Is there some judgement of feasibility?

It was a very weak standard that allowed debtors pretty much carte blanche to reject contracts, as the standard was intepreted by the Supreme Court. The day the Supreme Court decision came out offering this interpretation, the unions went nuts and persuaded Congress to quickly pass legislation we now have.

Brett - Thank you so much for looking into this. So from a legal standpoint the '84 change has made it more difficult for airlines to cut its labor costs in bankruptcy. What exactly was the pre-'84 procedure? Did bankruptcy provide total protection to the debtor, allowing it to simply declare a contract void?

Subject: Re: bankruptcy

I can talk about your first question when you want.

It certainly appears that the amendment to the Bankruptcy Code in 1984, which undermined the Bildisco decision, has hindered the ability of airlines to reject collective bargaining agreements when in bankruptcy. The statute set forth a 3-part test that courts must apply before allowing a debtor to reject a CBA. (Note that this is not an airline-only carve-out.) Beyond the requirements of the statutory test itself, an added problem is that the standards used by courts in applying this test to assess when and under what circumstances a collective bargaining agreement may be rejected are vague and unpredictable. Indeed, there is a circuit split between the Second and Third Circuits on one key issue (the application of the "necessary" standard), with the Second Circuit granting the debtor more flexibility in modifying or rejecting a collective bargaining agreement.

I cannot describe with certainty the economic ramifications of all of this, but the ability of a debtor to reject collective bargaining agreements was significantly circumscribed by the 1984 statutory amendment; moreover, the standards outlined in the statute have caused great uncertainty in the courts. I am sure the airlines have described this to you in some depth. I would be happy to write this up in any form you wish.

Subject: Re: bankruptcy

We're looking into this as part of our effort to understand possible impediments to the health of the industry. I just need an understanding of how airline collective bargaining contracts are protected under bankruptcy law. My understanding is that pre-1984, labor contracts were the same as any other contract once an airline went into bankruptcy. They could be abrogated or rewritten by the company fairly easily. Since 1984 the labor contracts have been treated differently. Airlines must go to the bankruptcy judge to amend its contracts and 20 years of case law governs the judges ability to approve those amendments.
Does this restriction - that I think is a carve out for airline unions - seem to unnecessarily hamper their ability to cut labor costs in bankruptcy. Are their barriers to liquidation - could a bankruptcy judge force an airline to stay in business because of "public interest" even though its viability is in question? Do airlines emerge too weak because of the interference or rulings of bankruptcy judges? These are very subjective obviously, but could probably be explored if I had a better understanding of where the pressure points are in an airline bankruptcy.

Thanks a lot Brett.

I have a rookie question: Do people observe "Administrative Professionals' Day" (aka Secretaries' Day) around here? I noticed that it is today, and although my preference is to ignore it and find other ways to express appreciation throughout the year, I didn't want to inadvertently give offense by failing to do something nice for those who work with us. It occurs to me that, unlike the career secretaries at law firms or elsewhere in government, our staff may not even be aware of this occasion... Any thoughts?

Before the completion of the Senate Judiciary Committee markup of S. 274, the class action reform proposal, and the beginning of the current congressional recess I had started developing a sick feeling that "our" collective commitment and determination to wage and win the critical war on judicial nominations was loosing enthusiasm in the Senate. There were off hand comments, seemingly missed opportunities to press the case - - signs here and there.

I hoped my feeling was more a product of the influence of difficult efforts to deal with last minute speed bumps in the S. 274 markup than a real deflation of enthusiasm. In my view the cause is so important - - critical to the winning and survival of "our" agenda - - and so winnable and, perhaps for the first time in decades, a cause with the potential for political advantages - - that I assumed I would see things differently when I returned from a week off.

Now, however, catching up on reading, etc., I have seen Bob Novak's reference of last week.

Any thoughts, reassurances, ideas, corrections?

WASHINGTON -- Senate Republicans are tiring of the battle to confirm contested judicial nominees, indicating that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's Democratic plan to prevent President Bush from shaping the federal judiciary is succeeding.

Weekly meetings of Republican senators produce increased grumbling. The complaining senators ask the White House and the Republican leadership why they should keep fighting to confirm as appellate judges Washington, D.C., lawyer Miguel Estrada and Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen. Not only liberal GOP senators but also some old guard committee chairmen claim this fight is neither important nor politically prudent.

Kennedy's unprecedented plan to block Bush's judicial selections always has been based on the theory that Republican senators soon would tire of the struggle.

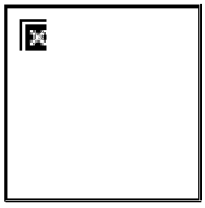
Before the completion of the Senate Judiciary Committee markup of S. 274, the class action reform proposal, and the beginning of the current congressional recess I had started developing a sick feeling that "our" collective commitment and determination to wage and win the critical war on judicial nominations was loosing enthusiasm in the Senate. There were off hand comments, seemingly missed opportunitie s to press the case - - signs here and there.

I hoped my feeling was more a product of the influence of difficult efforts to deal with last minute speed bumps in the S. 274 markup than a real deflation of enthusiasm. In my vie w the cause is so important - - critical to the winning and survival of "our" agenda - - and so winnable and, perhaps for the first time in decades, a cause with the potential for political advantages - - that I assumed I woul d see things differently when I returned from a week off.



Now, however, catching up on reading, etc., I have seen Bob Novak's reference of last week.

Any thoughts, reassurances, ideas, corrections?

As well as for taking the heat should any be offended. In other words, I fully support Jenny giving out gifts on our behalf, unless anyone takes offense, in which case I had nothing to do with it.

I have a rookie question: Do people observe "Administrative Professionals' Day" (aka Secretaries' Day) around here? I noticed that it is today, and although my preference is to ignore it and find other ways to express appreciation throughout the year, I didn't want to inadvertently give offense by failing to do something nice for those who work with us. It occurs to me that, unlike the career secretaries at law firms or elsewhere in government, our staff may not even be aware of this occasion... Any thoughts?

To amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that service performed by an air traffic controller who is transferred or promoted to a supervisory or staff position continue to be treated as controller service for retirement purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 12, 2003

Mr. OBERSTAR introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Government Reform

A BILL

To amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that service performed by an air traffic controller who is transferred or promoted to a supervisory or staff position continue to be treated as controller service for retirement purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Air Traffic Controller Retirement Reform Act of 2003'.

SEC. 2. DEFINITION OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER.

(a) Civil Service Retirement System- Section 8331 of title 5, United States Code, is amended--

(1) by striking `and' at the end of paragraph (27);
(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (28) and inserting `; and'; and
(3) by adding at the end the following:
`(29) `air traffic controller' or `controller' means--
`(A) a controller within the meaning of section 2109(1); and
`(B) a civilian employee of the Department of Transportation or the Department of Defense holding a supervisory, managerial, executive, technical, semiprofessional, or professional position for which experience as a controller (within the meaning of section 2109(1)) is a prerequisite.'.

(b) Federal Employees' Retirement System- Section 8401 of title 5, United States Code, is amended--

(1) by striking `and' at the end of paragraph (33);
(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (34) and inserting `; and'; and
(3) by adding at the end the following:
`(35) `air traffic controller' or `controller' means--
`(A) a controller within the meaning of section 2109(1); and

(c) Mandatory Separation Treatment Not Affected-
(1) Civil service retirement system- Section 8335(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: `For purposes of this subsection, the term `air traffic controller' or `controller' has the meaning given to it under section 8331(29)(A).'.
(2) Federal employees' retirement system- Section 8425(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: `For purposes of this subsection, the term `air traffic controller' or `controller' has the meaning given to it under section 8401(35)(A).'.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) In Genera- This Act and the amendments made by this Act--
(1) shall take effect on the 60th day after the date of the enactment of this Act; and
(2) shall apply with respect to--
(A) any annuity entitlement to which is based on an individual's separation from service occurring on or after that 60th day; and
(B) any service performed by any such individual before, on, or after that 60th day, subject to subsection (b).

(b) Deposit Required for Certain Prior Service To Be Creditable as Controller Service-
(1)Deposit requirement- For purposes of determining eligibility for immediate retirement under section 8412(e), the amendment made by section 2(b) shall, with respect to any service described in paragraph (2), be disregarded unless thee is deposited into the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, with respect to such service, in such time, form, and manner as the Office of Personnel Management by regulation requires, an amount equal to the amount by which--
(A) the deductions from pay which would have been required for such service if the amendments made by this Act had been in effect when such service was performed, exceeds
(B) the unrefunded deductions or deposits actually made under subchapter II of chapter 84 of such title 5 with respect to such service.
The amount under the preceding sentence shall include interest, computed under paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 8334(e) of such title 5.
(2) Prior service described- This subsection applies with respect to any service performed by an individual, before the 60th day following the date of the enactment of this Act, as an employee described in section 8401(35)(B) of such title 5 (as set forth in section 2(b)).

Asbestos Accord Said to Be Near
By ALEX BERENSON

Companies, insurers, unions and Democratic and Republican senators are nearing an agreement in principle to end all asbestos lawsuits and instead pay people with asbestos-related diseases from a national privately financed trust, according to people from all sides who have participated in the talks.

The trust, which would be subject to approval by Congress and President Bush, would pay more than $100 billion to hundreds of thousands of asbestos victims over the next 30 years. It would stop the flood of asbestos lawsuits, 200,000 in the last two years alone, that have strained businesses and the court system.

It would be the second-largest lawsuit settlement ever, exceeded only by tobacco companies' agreement in 1998 to pay states $246 billion for their Medicaid spending on victims of cigarette smoking.

Many details of the trust remain to be worked out, including the exact size of payments to victims and who will pay if the trust unexpectedly runs short of money, and the negotiations could still stall.

Unlike the fund Congress created to compensate victims of the Sept. 11 attacks, an asbestos trust would not allow people to opt out and sue instead. All new and existing claims would be settled through the trust, which would largely or entirely be financed by businesses and insurers, people involved in the talks said. Victims would receive payments more quickly, while businesses would avoid the risk of huge verdicts. And both sides would pay much less to lawyers, who now receive more than half of all the money spent on asbestos litigation, studies say.

Efforts to reduce the rights of asbestos claimants to sue have repeatedly failed in the past. In addition, the law creating a trust would be complicated, and complexity is generally the enemy of legislation. So some experts on asbestos said a trust had little chance of becoming law.

But negotiators for all sides said they disagreed. Democrats and Republicans in Congress seem to agree that the number of asbestos lawsuits has become a crisis, and a trust is the only concept with significant bipartisan support.

In addition, Frederick M. Baron, an influential trial lawyer who has participated in the negotiations, said that the Association of Trial Lawyers of America would not oppose a trust if it offers payments similar to the net amounts, after lawyers' fees, that victims now receive in lawsuits.

Some lawyers will fiercely oppose a trust. But if their lobby stands aside, and unions, companies and insurers can reach a deal, the legislation could pass, Mr. Baron said.

While it might seem surprising that the trial lawyers' group is not fighting a trust, the group has been on the defensive since Republicans gained control of the Senate, and asbestos lawsuits have become particularly controversial.

"A national trust is the best solution," said David Austern, president of an asbestos trust fund that resolves claims against the Johns-Manville Corporation, once the leading maker of asbestos.

Mr. Austern who has watched efforts to resolve asbestos lawsuits since 1988, when he became counsel for the Manville trust, said he thought the trust had a better-than-even chance of becoming law. (Mr. Austern has consulted with Senate staff members, as well as a group of large companies, about the proposed trust. He said he had not been paid for the consulting.)

Creating a trust is a priority for many big businesses, especially manufacturers. Companies worry that they will have to pay hundreds of billions of dollars in claims unless Congress limits lawsuits against them from people who were exposed to asbestos but are not sick. Their concerns have grown in the last two years, after a spate of very large verdicts against companies that did not make asbestos but used it in their factories or products.

Already, lawsuits have forced into bankruptcy almost 70 companies, some of which were only peripherally connected to asbestos. Most American companies stopped using asbestos decades ago, but the number of lawsuits continues to rise. About 700,000 claims have been filed, including 200,000 in the last two years.

At the same time, the trust would ensure that tens of thousands of people who will die over the next 30 years from exposure to asbestos, as well as many others sickened by exposure, will be compensated.

Under the current system of lawsuits, some people who are sick or dying from asbestos exposure receive little money if their exposure happens to have come from companies that are already in bankruptcy. Others, including some who are not sick, get millions of dollars from sympathetic juries.

Most of the money in the trust would go to the sickest people, with the largest payments exceeding $1 million. People who have been exposed to asbestos but are not sick might get up to $1,000, although business groups would prefer much less. The level of payments to people who are not sick is crucial, because if it is set too high, millions of people may apply for payments, draining the trust of money it needs to compensate sick people, said Stephen Carroll, a senior economist at the Rand Institute for Civil Justice who has studied asbestos suits.

While more than half the money paid in the current system goes to plaintiff and defense lawyers, the trust under discussion would pay nearly all its money to victims if they are new claimants. But lawyers who represent people who have already filed claims would receive their standard fees of up to 40 percent of any settlement, meaning those claimants would cost the fund more.

People involved in the discussions say companies that made asbestos or used it in their products, as well as insurance companies, have together offered to pay $90 billion over the next 25 years to pay claims. Insurers and companies would each pay for half its cost. The government might also contribute a nominal amount, or help pay for medical monitoring of people who have been exposed to asbestos but are not sick.

Since the trust's principal would accumulate interest over time, the fund would pay out more than $100 billion in all. That figure is less than half as much as analysts forecast that companies and insurers would eventually spend to resolve asbestos claims under the current system. But because much of the money goes to lawyers under the current system, the companies say, victims would do as well. Trial lawyers say companies and insurers will have to contribute more than $100 billion so that victims do not lose out.

The efforts to build a trust have gained momentum since a meeting on April 1 that included senators and top representatives from the major interest groups. Staff members for Senator Orrin G. Hatch, Republican of Utah and chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Senator Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the committee's ranking Democrat, are meeting regularly to hammer out details. Mr. Hatch has said that he would like to introduce legislation next month, people involved in the talks say.

Proponents of a trust have focused on the Senate because it has killed asbestos bills in the past andthey assume that if a bill passes the Senate with the endorsement of business, it will clear the House and be signed by the president. A White House spokeswoman said any legislation would be reviewed.

"Right now everyone's at the table," said Ed Pagano, an aide to Senator Leahy.
Barry B. Direnfeld, a lawyer who represents the Asbestos Study Group, an association of about a dozen large companies, including General Electric and General Motors, that strongly favors a trust, said: "We are close to an agreement. Now we're wrestling with the tough decisions to make it a reality."

Still, efforts to end asbestos litigation have foundered in the past, and this plan faces many hurdles. Although they have reached broad agreement on financing, businesses and insurers have not yet decided exactly how much each company would pay or how such assessments would be determined.

Nor has business agreed with labor on how much money the trust would pay to different types of victims, a factor that will determine the overall size of the trust.

The A.F.L.-C.I.O. believes that the $90 billion that companies and insurers have offered is inadequate, said Damon Silvers, the union's associate general counsel.

Another potential complication is that one of the biggest beneficiaries of any such settlement could be Halliburton, the oil services company, which faces asbestos suits that have depressed its stock price. Because Vice President Dick Cheney was chairman of the company, any settlement that benefits Halliburton may be criticized by Democrats.

"The trust creates a number of problems, " said Lester Brickman, a professor at Yeshiva University and an expert on asbestos who is not involved in the talks. "The complexity of it, the decisions about who contributes and how much."

But Mr. Silvers said the disagreement over the size of payments can be resolved. "We can see far clearer than we could a few weeks ago that there's a meeting point on the financial numbers," he said. "We think there's a win-win number."

While more than half the money paid in the current system goes to plaintiff and defense lawyers, the trust under discussion would pay nearly all its money to victims if they are new claimants. But lawyers who represent people who have already filed claims would receive their standard fees of up to 40 percent of any settlement, meaning those claimants would cost the fund more.

People involved in the discussions say companies that made asbestos or used it in their products, as well as insurance companies, have together offered to pay $90 billion over the next 25 years to pay claims. Insurers and companies would each pay for half its cost. The government might also contribute a nominal amount, or help pay for medical monitoring of people who have been exposed to asbestos but are not sick.

Since the trust's principal would accumulate interest over time, the fund would pay out more than $100 billion in all. That figure is less than half as much as analysts forecast that companies and insurers would eventually spend to resolve asbestos claims under the current system. But because much of the money goes to lawyers under the current system, the companies say, victims would do as well. Trial lawyers say companies and insurers will have to contribute more than $100 billion so that victims do not lose out.

The efforts to build a trust have gained momentum since a meeting on April 1 that included senators and top representatives from the major interest groups. Staff members for Senator Orrin G. Hatch, Republican of Utah and chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Senator Patrick J. Leahy of Vermo nt, the committee's ranking Democrat, are meeting regularly to hammer out details. Mr. Hatch has said that he would like to introduce legislation next month, people involved in the talks say.

Proponent s of a trust have focused on the Senate because it has killed asbestos bills in the past andthey assume that if a bill passes the Senate with the endorsement of business, it will clear the House and be signed by the president. A White House spokeswoman said any legislation would be reviewed.

"Rig ht now everyone's at the table," said Ed Pagano, an aide to Senator Leahy. Barry B. Direnfeld, a lawyer who represents the Asbestos Study Group, an association of about a dozen large companies, including General Electric and General Motors, that strongly favors a trust, said: "We are close to an agreement. Now we're wrestling with the tough decisions to make it a reality."

Still, efforts to end asbestos litigation have foundered in the past, and this plan faces many hurdles. Although they have reached broad agreement on financing, businesses and insurers have not yet decided exactly how much each company would pay or how such assessments would be determined.

Nor has business agreed with labor on how much money the trust would pay to different types of victims, a factor that will determine the overall size of the trust. < /span>

The A.F.L.-C.I.O. believes that the $90 billion that companies and insurers have offered is inadequate, said Damon Silvers, the union's associate general counsel.

Another potential complication is that one of the biggest beneficiaries of any such settlement could be Halliburton, the oil services company, which faces asbestos suits that have depressed its stock price. Because Vice President Dick Cheney was chairman of the company, any settlement that benefits Halliburton may be criticized by Democrats.

"The trust creates a number of problems, " said Lester Brickman, a professor at Yeshiva University and an expert on asbestos who is not involved in the talks. "The complexity of it, the decisions about who contributes and how much."

But Mr. Silvers said the disagreement over the size of payments can be resolved. "We can see far clearer than we could a few weeks ago that there's a meeting point on the financial numbers," he said. "We think there's a win-win number."

I don't know what vetting of this occurred but generally we do not endorse organizations and we really are going on the line and saying this organization is wonderful in a difficult industry--one where there are great opportunities for allegations of problems. It needs to be thoroughly checked out that the President should be on record commending this organization setting it up as a model. We also have no familiarity with the award that I know. Is it an award that we recognize year to year?

Good Morning -
Regarding this letter, it is on Mr. Kavanaugh's desk; however, Jon Ganter, in Kavanaugh's office, and I were just curious as to why you had suggested it go through their office - then we will know for future reference.

Thank you very much!
Kimberly

Hi Brett! I am so sorry -- you should have been invited in the first instance!! The meeting is at 8:30 in 476. The agenda is to discuss options for airline policy changes. There will be a brief options paper, but it may not be distributed until the meeting tomorrow (hopefully later tonight though). Thanks for your help on Bankruptcy and NMB! I have a follow-up antitrust question, but I will write a separate email.

Asbestos Litigation Talks Continue As Deal Remains Elusive
There is no deal yet on asbestos litigation reform legislation, congressional and industry sources participating in the negotiations said today. Meetings are ongoing and negotiators are "working hard," they said, but contrary to a published report today that proclaimed an accord was close at hand, sources on all sides of the issue said that is not the case. That does not mean the involved parties are not optimistic, or are at least maintaining a public facade of optimism. Key parties in labor, industry and senators on both sides of the aisle agreed several weeks ago to make a good faith effort to pursue the trust fund concept as a means for settling a flood of asbestos claims. In that respect, and in the context of the bitter disputes that punctuated past congressional debates on asbestos reform, "we're closer now than we've ever been," one source remarked. However, negotiators' effort to put meat on the conceptual framework continues. The Senate Judiciary Committee "still plans a May markup, and I think that's the time you'll see people coming together to say this is what we're going to work off of," predicted one source.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch before the start of the April recess also said he planned to have the formal drafting of the asbestos litigation bill wrapped up by the time senators returned. However, sources privy to the negotiations said the talks and drafting, while productive, remain largely in the conceptual stage, and there is little possibility of formal legislative language being nailed down by the week's end. Indeed, several sources said negotiators with the AFL-CIO, who are representing the interests of the larger labor community, planned to submit its version of medical criteria to the committee Friday. "What we're trying to get [resolved] are the big structural issues and the money issues. It doesn't mean we can't get there," said Damon Silvers, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO said. "It means we have a lot of hard work in front of us." Sources concurred that many of the tough questions relating to the construction of the trust fund, the medical criteria used to establish access to that fund, the individual case values, and the allocation of payments among defendant companies and their insurers -- in short, the thorniest of issues, remain unresolved.

Another key unresolved issue centers on the finality of the settlement and whether asbestos victims would be guaranteed ample compensation even if the trust fund were to go bankrupt. That is apt to constitute a contentious fight, inasmuch as it raises the question of whether the federal government, or perhaps the private sector, would be on the hook for paying those asbestos claims. That is likely to "be the last issue to be solved," Silvers predicted. "Victims cannot be the ones to bear that risk," he added. "If Hatch wants to do a consensus bill, [he has to] figure out a way to solve this problem. A federal backstop is the simplest way to do it." -- by Pamela Barnett

Not sure this warrants discussion at a meeting, but tried to simplify:

Bankruptcy Code

Background

Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code allows financially troubled companies to stay in business by giving them time to reorganize their finances. Several sections of the Code are especially relevant to airline bankruptcies. Of most relevance to the labor issue, Section 1113 allows debtors to modify existing labor contracts under certain circumstances with court approval. The statute imposes an affirmative duty on employers to bargain with the union before modifying or rejecting any contracts or agreements. The debtor must then show that the change is &necessary8 to save the airline from liquidation. There are two problems with this provision: (i) the standard is vague; and (ii) there is a circuit split over the meaning of the standard, with the Third Circuit allowing rejection only if necessary to prevent immediate liquidation and the Second Circuit allowing rejection if necessary to complete the reorganization process successfully.

Discussion

The airlines have not proposed changes to the bankruptcy laws or expressed concern about the operation of the process. However, as part of an overall package of legislative reforms, it may be beneficial to ensure a clearer standard under Section 1113 for airline bankruptcies to avoid the current confusion and uncertainty over the standard. As to the contents of the standard, the Second Circuit standard, which more readily allows airlines to reject labor contracts, is preferable to the Third Circuit standard and is consistent with the purposes of the bankruptcy laws.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

Bush to nominate Raleigh lawyer
Selection would break impasse in 4th Circuit

By JOHN WAGNER, Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON -- President Bush on Monday intends to nominate Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan to serve on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, according to aides in North Carolina Senate offices who have been notified of the White House's plans.

Duncan's name first surfaced publicly in January in a news report in which U.S. Sen. John Edwards, a North Carolina Democrat, said he would likely support her nomination.

Duncan, a black Republican, is a former state appeals court judge and is president-elect of the N.C. Bar Association.

Her confirmation would end a long-running impasse that has kept North Carolina from having any judges on the 4th Circuit, which hears cases from five Southeastern states.

The court is the last stop for federal cases from those states before the U.S. Supreme Court.

In a letter sent this week both to Edwards and U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Dole, a North Carolina Republican, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Bush plans Monday to nominate two African-Americans for the 4th Circuit, including "one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina."

Mike Briggs, Edwards' press secretary, said his office has been notified that Duncan is Bush's choice.

Gonzales describes the second nominee as someone "who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina." The identity of that individual could not be learned Thursday.

In his letter, Gonzales notes that ideally North Carolina should have four or five judges on the 15-member 4th Circuit and that he considers the panel "significantly out of geographic balance."

There are four vacancies on the court.

Feuding between North Carolina's senators has kept the state from having a judge on the panel since 1999. Under Senate tradition, senators have effective veto power over nominees from their states.

The nomination to the 4th Circuit of another North Carolinian, U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle, has been stalled since May 2001.

Edwards has not consented to the nomination, partly in response to the blockage of a string of North Carolina nominees by U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, Dole's Republican predecessor, during the Clinton administration.

After Duncan is nominated, it is unclear how quickly she will get a confirmation hearing.

Mary Brown Brewer, a spokeswoman for Dole, said the senator prefers that Boyle be granted a hearing first since he was nominated first.

In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. DRAFT

Statement of Honorable Leo S. Mackay, Jr., Ph.D.
DEPUTY SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS
SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS

APRIL 30, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for providing me the opportunity to testify before you this morning on three measures affecting Department of Veterans Affairs education and vocational rehabilitation programs and small-business opportunities for veterans. The three bills on today's hearing agenda include: H.R. 1460, the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"; H.R. 1716, the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"; and H.R. 1712, the "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003." VA supports a majority of the proposals set forth in these measures.

Before I discuss the bills the Subcommittee is considering today, I would like to note that, although the Budget Enforcements Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002, the Administration supports the extension of these budget enforcement mechanisms in a manner that ensures fiscal discipline and is consistent with the President's budget. As you know, these measures would affect direct spending and receipts and, therefore, the support VA expresses for the bills is contingent on accommodating the provisions within the overall budget submitted by the President.

H.R. 1460 – "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of H.R. 1460 would amend provisions of title 38, United States Code, to permit veterans to use VA educational assistance benefits to enroll in non-degree, non-credit business "entrepreneurship" courses offered by small business development centers or offered by the National Veterans Small Business Development Corporation. Specifically, section 2 of the bill would provide that State approving agencies may approve non-credit courses of business education that enable or assist persons to start or enhance small business enterprises. "Qualified providers" of such entrepreneurship courses would include small business development centers, as defined by section 21 of the Small Business Act, and the National Veterans Business Development Corporation. A person would not be considered by VA as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of an entrepreneurship course solely because he or she is the owner or operator of a business. These amendments apply to courses approved by State approval agencies after the date of enactment of the Act.

Veterans would receive several benefits from such courses. Some veterans are not willing or able to complete a degree program. This program offers a viable alternative to a complete degree program for those wishing to start a small business. Moreover, veterans who take advantage of these courses are more likely to succeed as small-business entrepreneurs. The potential for positive effects on the economy, with enhanced competition and creativity within the marketplace, is significant. The bill's provision for oversight of these courses by State Approving Agencies should ensure program quality. For these reasons, we strongly support enactment of this provision.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $1.5 million in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $32 million.

Section 3 of H.R. 1460 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 3104 to provide that, for purposes of pursuing a program of vocational rehabilitation under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, a disabled veteran may establish "self-employment" in a small business enterprise as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement of unemployability.

Current law permits us to serve veterans with the most severe service-connected disabilities who require self employment and/or homebound training in order to achieve an acceptable level of vocational rehabilitation. We are also able to provide limited assistance to other veterans with employment handicaps.

Mr. Chairman, last month the Department established a new advisory committee, the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (VR&E) Task Force, and charged it with conducting an independent review of the VR&E program. Among other responsibilities, it will evaluate eligibility criteria for vocational rehabilitation services under VA's program, and report its recommendations to the Secretary. We are asking the Task Force to evaluate the merits of the change in law proposed by section 3 of H.R. 1460, and will be furnishing you our official views once we have the benefit of that advice.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $750,000 in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $101 million.

Section 4 of H.R. 1460 would authorize a contracting officer to make sole source awards to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans (SDVBs) if such business is determined to be capable of performing the contract, award can be made at a fair price, there is no reasonable expectation that two or more SDVBs would submit offers, and certain dollar thresholds are not exceeded. It would also authorize contracting officers to restrict competition to SDVBs if there is a reasonable expectation that at least two SDVBs will submit offers and award can be made at a fair market price. The Administrator of the Small Business Administration would have the authority to appeal contracting officers' decisions not to award a contract opportunity to SDVBs to the Secretary of the department or agency head. This law would not supercede any other preference under law for prison-made (Federal Prison Industries) products or products made by the blind or disabled (JWOD).

VA supports section 4 of H.R. 1460. Providing business opportunities to veterans who own small businesses is altogether consistent with VA's mission to serve our Nation's veterans and will help VA and the Nation honor its commitment to them.

We estimate the total cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1460 to be $2.25 million for fiscal year 2004 and $133 million over ten years.

H.R. 1716 – "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1716 would amend title 38, United States Code, to improve VA educational assistance programs for apprenticeship and other on-job training.

Section 2 of the bill would modify the computation of on-job training and apprenticeship benefit entitlements under chapters 34 and 35 of title 38, United States Code, to be the same as the entitlement charged under chapters 30 and 32, of that title, as well as under the chapter 1606, title 10 U.S.C. program. This would provide needed uniformity in calculating use of entitlement for such training regardless of the benefit chapter under which a student is eligible, resulting in greater equity for veterans.

Section 3 of the bill would establish an incentive payment for program participants who finish their apprenticeship training early by requiring VA to pay the trainee a lump-sum payment for the months of VA entitlement remaining that would have ordinarily been needed to complete the apprenticeship. We believe the incentive would motivate competent individuals to complete their apprenticeship training sooner, thereby resulting in a more efficient use of benefits.

Section 4 of the bill would increase the monthly VA benefit for trainees who simultaneously pursue apprenticeships or on-job training and related classroom instruction (whether or not the trainee was pursuing the academic instruction as a requirement of the apprenticeship or voluntarily under the trainee's own initiative). Currently, education benefits for apprenticeship and on-the-job training start at 75 percent of the benefit rate payable for full-time institutional training and these job training benefits decrease in stages as the individual progresses through the training program. This section would pay the full-time institutional rate for periods when the individual is in required classroom courses while also in the job training program. It will also allow individuals who voluntarily enroll in related courses to receive an increase based on the combined training, but not to exceed the full-time institutional rate. We support this proposal.

Section 5 of the bill would codify VA's authority to pay benefits for competency-based apprenticeships. It would require VA to take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor. Apprenticeships offered in industries that choose not to register with the Secretary of Labor, and that are approved for veterans' training by a state approving agency, would continue to be available. It would also authorize VA to use up to $3 million to develop the computer systems and procedures needed to carry out the above provisions of the bill. Current law permits approval of only time-based, fixed length apprenticeships. The 1990's saw a steady move away from time-based apprenticeships toward competency-based apprenticeships. We support this change as it would bring approval of apprenticeships into the 21st century and allow VA to pay educational assistance to more veterans.

Section 6 of the bill would require VA to establish a pilot program to furnish on-job benefits to claims adjudicators training in its disability compensation, dependency and indemnity (DIC), and pension programs. The pilot program would permit on-the-job training programs of up to 3 years to be approved for claims adjudicators who handle VA's Compensation and Pension programs. VA supports this program for claims adjudicators. Based on our past experience, the duration of this type of training would be approximately two years.

Section 7 of the bill would require coordination of information among the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Defense, and Labor with respect to on-job training. The Secretary of Defense would be required to furnish to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during his or her active duty service. It would also require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, to encourage and assist states and private organizations to accord credit to servicemembers for skills in any related apprenticeship the servicemember may pursue in civilian life. We believe such level of coordination would be beneficial so that veterans can receive full credit for their military training and not have to unnecessarily repeat training they received while on active duty.

We estimate the benefits cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1716 to be $47.7 million for fiscal year 2004 and $548.4 million over ten years.

H.R. 1712 – "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1712 would require the Administrator of the Small Business Administration (SBA) to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by service disabled veterans similar to the Section 8(a) program for small business in general, where SBA executes a contract with an agency and subcontracts the work to the small business. The bill reauthorizes the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, first created in 1999, and adds reporting and planning requirements such as 5 year strategic and financial plans. The Corporation was created to expand the provision of and improve access to technical assistance regarding entrepreneurship for the Nation's veterans.

The bill sets a Government-wide goal of 28 percent for prime contracts awarded to small business concerns. It further breaks that goal down to 3 percent for veteran-owned, 3 percent for service-disabled-veteran-owned, 3 percent for HUBZone, 5 percent for socially and economically disadvantaged, and 5 percent for women-owned. Double counting of small businesses that meet more than one criterion is prohibited. Beginning in Fiscal Year 2004, for any agency that failed to meet the goals, funding would be restricted in the following fiscal year for awards solely to the specific subcategories of small businesses (whether prime contracts or approved subcontracting plans). This would be phased in for the various categories of small businesses between FY's 2004 and 2008.

The bill would allow an agency to restrict competition to specific categories of small businesses to meet the procurement goals. The bill would require in negotiated procurements that agencies include evaluation factors regarding small business subcontracting plans.

VA supports the provisions of section 4 of H.R. 1712 that would establish a goal of 3 percent for award of contracts to veteran-owned small businesses. As you may be aware, VA has established its own internal goal for award to veterans. However, I am concerned with other provisions of section 4 and section 5 that would raise the small business goal, prohibit double counting of acquisitions, restrict the use of appropriations, and mandate the use of certain evaluation factors in negotiated acquisitions. The Government is already struggling to meet its current goals, and raising those goals would not be beneficial. Prohibiting double counting would have the effect of raising the thresholds further and making it that much more difficult for agencies to meet their goals. Furthermore, the provisions of section 4 that place restrictions on the use of funds in the case of agency failure to meet goals would create a quota system for award of contracts to socioeconomic groups. That, and the evaluation factor mandate, removes the flexibility agencies need to be able to successfully carry out their missions.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my testimony.

I

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1460

To amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the use of education benefits under such title for certain entrepreneurship courses, to permit veterans enrolled in a vocational rehabilitation program under chapter 31 of such title to have self-employment as a vocational goal, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MARCH 27, 2003

Mr. RENZI (for himself, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. EVANS, Mr. BROWN of South Carolina, Mr. MANZULLO, Mr. BEAUPREZ, and Mr. MICHAUD) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and in addition to the Committee on Small Business, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the use of education benefits under such title for certain entrepreneurship courses, to permit veterans enrolled in a vocational rehabilitation program under chapter 31 of such title to have self-employment as a vocational goal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00163898

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION FOR STATE APPROVING AGENCIES TO APPROVE CERTAIN ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.

(a) APPROVAL OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3675 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) A State approving agency may approve the entrepreneurship courses offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'entrepreneurship course' means a non-degree, non-credit course of business education that enables or assists a person to start or enhance a small business enterprise.

"(3) Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) do not apply to—

"(A) an entrepreneurship course offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses; and

"(B) a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses by reason of such provider offering one or more entrepreneurship courses.".

(b) BUSINESS OWNERS NOT TREATED AS ALREADY QUALIFIED.—Section 3471 of such title is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following: "The Secretary shall not treat a person as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses solely because such person is the owner or operator of a business.''.

(c) INCLUSION OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF PROGRAM OF EDUCATION.—Subsection (b) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any course, or combination of courses, offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''

(d) INCLUSION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION.—Subsection (c) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''.

(e) DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3452 of such title is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(h) The term 'qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses' means—

''(1) a small business development center described in section 21 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648), and

REV_00163900

"(2) the National Veterans Business Development Corporation (established under section 33 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 657c)) insofar as the Corporation offers or sponsors an entrepreneurship course (as defined in section 3675(c)(2) of this title).".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to courses approved by State approving agencies after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT AS A VOCATIONAL GOAL FOR VETERANS RECEIVING VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Section 3104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Any person entitled to a rehabilitation program under this chapter may establish self-employment as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement that the person be unemployable.".

SEC. 4. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

REV_00163901

"SEC. 36. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

"(a) SOLE SOURCE CONTRACTS.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award a sole source contract to any small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if—

"(1) such concern is determined to be a responsible contractor with respect to performance of such contract opportunity and the contracting officer does not have a reasonable expectation that 2 or more small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers for the contracting opportunity;

"(2) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) will not exceed—

"(A) $5,000,000, in the case of a contract opportunity assigned a standard industrial classification code for manufacturing; or

"(B) $3,000,000, in the case of any other contract opportunity; and

"(3) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price.

REV_00163902

"(b) RESTRICTED COMPETITION.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award contracts on the basis of competition restricted to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that not less than 2 small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers and that the award can be made at a fair market price.

"(c) APPEAL BY ADMINISTRATOR.—Not later than 5 days after the date on which the Administration is notified of a contracting officer's decision not to award a contract opportunity under this section to a small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans, the Administrator may notify the contracting officer of the intent to appeal the contracting officer's decision, and within 15 days of such date the Administrator may file a written request for reconsideration of the contracting officer's decision with the Secretary of the department or agency head.

"(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER CONTRACTING PREFERENCES.—A procurement may not be made from a source on the basis of a preference provided under subsection (a) or (b) if the procurement would otherwise be made from a different source under section 4124 or 4125

of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(e) ENFORCEMENT; PENALTIES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (5) and (6) of section 8(m) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(f) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this section, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5))."

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1716

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (for himself, Mr. EVANS, Mr. BROWN of South Carolina, and Mr. MICHAUD) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and in addition to the Committee on Armed Services, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act".

REV_00163905

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Educational assistance programs for veterans for apprenticeship and on-job training of the Department of Veterans Affairs assist employers to hire and retain skilled workers.

(2) These programs establish a link between training afforded to servicemembers while serving in the Armed Forces and training available in civilian settings for purposes of occupational licensing and credentialing.

(3) These programs develop a more highly educated and productive work force.

(c) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. MODIFICATION OF BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT CHARGES FOR CERTAIN ON-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(a) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

REV_00163906

ANCE.—Section 3687 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) For each month that an individual (as defined in paragraph (3)) is paid a training assistance allowance under subsection (a), the entitlement of the individual shall be charged at a percentage rate (rounded to the nearest percent) that is equal to the ratio of—

"(A) such training assistance allowance for the period of months involved, to

"(B) the applicable monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for such period of months.".

"(2) For any month in which an individual fails to complete 120 hours of training, the entitlement otherwise chargeable under paragraph (1) shall be reduced in the same proportion as the monthly training assistance allowance payable is reduced under subsection (b)(3).

"(3) In this section, the term 'individual' means—

"(A) an eligible veteran for purposes of chapter 34 of this title who is entitled, under chapter 30 or 34 of this title, as the case may be, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3015(e) of this title, or

"(B) an eligible person for purposes chapter 35 of this title, who is entitled, under section 3510 of this title, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3532(a) of this title as the case may be.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INCENTIVE PAYMENT FOR EARLY COMPLETION OF APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 3032(c) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

''(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

''(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

REV_00163908

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter (and chapter 34 of this title, if applicable) shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).".

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in paragraph (2)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly benefit payment payable under this section for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of monthly benefit payments that could have been paid to the individual under this section for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of monthly benefit payments paid to the individual for the program under this section.

REV_00163909

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsections (c) and (d)."

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in subsection (b)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 3687, as amended by section 2(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual (as defined in subsection (e)(3) who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under subsection (a) for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under subsection (a).

REV_00163910

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsection (e).".

(d) SELECTED RESERVE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 16131(d) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

"(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).''.

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking ''Except as provided in paragraph (2)'' and inserting ''Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to programs of training beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. INCREASE IN BENEFIT FOR INDIVIDUALS PURSUING APPRENTICESHIP OR ON-JOB TRAINING AND RELATED POSTSECONDARY CLASSROOM EDUCATION TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—Section 3032(c), as amended by section 3(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5)(A) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3015 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3015 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under such section 3015 to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233, as amended by section 3(b), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to that individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under this section shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3231 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(B) In no case may the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under subparagraph (A) exceed the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(3)(A) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this section.

"(B) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (2) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under paragraph (2).

"(C) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(2) Section 3231(a)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking "(2) Except as provided in paragraph (5)(E) of this subsection and in subsection (e) of this section" and inserting "(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), paragraph (5)(E),"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for appropriately reduced rates of the amount of the monthly payment otherwise applicable under subparagraph (A) for programs of educational or vocational assistance pursued on less than a full-time basis.".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

ANCE.—Section 3687, as amended by section 3(c), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) In the case of an individual (as defined in subsection (e)(3)) pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly training assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount of educational assistance allowance payable under section 3015(e) of this title or under section 3532(a) of this title, as the case may be, who is pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training, as the case may be, who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly training assistance allowance payable to the individual under this section shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3015 of this title, or section 3532(a), as the case may be, for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(B) In no case may the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under subparagraph (A) exceed the amount of educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under section 3015(e) of this or under section 3532(a) of this title, as the case may be, who is pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(3)(A) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1) for a month, the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this section.

"(B) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (2) for a month, the charge to the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under paragraph (2).

"(C) Any such charge to the entitlement of the individual shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(d) SELECTED RESERVE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—Section 16131 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 3(d), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 38, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under subsection (b) to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 38 that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under subsection (b) for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under subsection (b) to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. AUTHORITY FOR COMPETENCY-BASED APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 3672(c) is amended—

(1) by striking "(1)" and "(2)" and inserting, "(A)" and "(B)" respectively;

(2) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The period of a program of apprenticeship may be determined based upon a specific period of time (commonly referred to as a 'time-based program'), based upon the demonstration of successful mastery of skills (commonly referred to as a 'competency-based program'), or based upon a combination thereof.

"(3)(A) In the case of a competency-based program of apprenticeship, in determining the period of such a program, the Secretary shall take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor.

"(B) The sponsor of a competency-based program of apprenticeship shall provide notice to the Secretary of any such standards that may apply to the program and the proposed approximate period of training under the program.

"(4) The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary upon the successful completion of a program of apprenticeship by a veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.".

(b) INCREASED USE OF APPRENTICESHIPS.—Section 3672(d)(1) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Labor shall provide such assistance and services to the Secretary, and to State approving agencies, to increase the use of apprenticeships.".

(c) ON-JOB TRAINING.—Section 3677 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The sponsor of any program of training on the job shall submit notice to the Secretary upon the successful completion of the program by the veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.

"(2) The term 'training on the job' includes training commonly referred to as 'on-job learning'.".

(d) FUNDING FOR DEPARTMENT COMPUTER SYSTEM MODIFICATIONS.—From amounts appropriated to the Department of Veterans Affairs for fiscal year 2004 for readjustment benefits, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall use an amount not to exceed $3,000,000 to modify computer systems and to develop procedures required to carry out the amendments made by subsection (a) and sections 2, 3, and 4.

SEC. 6. PILOT PROGRAM TO PROVIDE ON-JOB BENEFITS TO TRAIN DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS' CLAIMS ADJUDICATORS.

Section 3677, as amended by section 5(c), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a pilot program under which, the Secretary shall operate a program of training on the job under this section for a period (notwithstanding subsection (c)(2)) of up to three years in duration to train employees of the Department to become qualified adjudicators of claims for compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, and pension.

"(2) Amounts of educational assistance, monthly benefit payments, and training assistance allowance under chapters 30, 31, 32, 34, and 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be payable to such employees during each month of training under the program.

"(3)(A) Not later than 3 years after the implementation of the pilot project, the Secretary shall submit to Congress an initial report on the pilot project. The report shall include an assessment of the usefulness of the program in recruiting and retaining of personnel of the Department as well as an assessment of the value of the program as a training program.

"(B) Not later than 18 months after the date on which the initial report under subparagraph (A) is submitted, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a final report on the pilot project. The final report shall include recommendations of the Secretary with respect to continuation of the pilot project and with respect to expansion of the types of claims for which the extended period of on the job training is available to train such employees.

"(4) The pilot project shall terminate 5 years after the date of the implementation of the project.".

SEC. 7. REQUIREMENT FOR COORDINATION OF DATA AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.

Section 3694 is amended—

REV_00163924

(1) by striking "In carrying out" and inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) COORDINATION OF INFORMATION AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.—At the time of a servicemember's discharge or release from active duty service, the Secretary of Defense shall furnish to the Secretary such pertinent information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during the period of active duty service of the servicemember. The Secretary, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, shall encourage and assist States and private organizations to give credit to servicemembers for the registered apprenticeship program so pursued in the case of any related apprenticeship program the servicemember may pursue as a civilian.".

SEC. 8. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) DEFINITION OF TRAINING ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 3452(e) is amended by striking "or any State apprenticeship agency, or any State board of vocational education, or any joint apprenticeship committee, or the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the

"National Apprenticeship Act" (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.)," and inserting "any State board of vocational education, any Federal or State apprenticeship registration agency, any joint apprenticeship committee established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the 'National Apprenticeship Act' (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.),".

(b) CLARIFICATION OF APPLICABLE APPRENTICESHIP STANDARDS.—(1) Section 3672(c), as amended by section 5(a), is amended in subparagraph (A) by inserting "apprenticeship" before "standards".

(2) Section 3672(d)(1) is amended by striking "of programs of training on the job (including programs of apprenticeship)" and inserting "of apprenticeship and on the job training programs".

(c) JOB TRAINING AND PLACEMENT FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT.—(1) Section 4102A, as amended by section 4(a) of the Jobs for Veterans Act (Public Law 107–288; 116 Stat. 2038), is amended by striking "October 1, 2002" in subsection (c)(2)(B)(ii) and inserting "October 1, 2003".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect as if included in the enactment of section 4(a) of the Jobs for Veterans Act (Public Law 107–288; 116 Stat. 2038).

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. EVANS (for himself, Mr. FILNER, Mr. MICHAUD, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business

A BILL

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00163927

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003''.

SEC. 2. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

''SEC. 36. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this section, the Administrator shall establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans. The program established under this section shall be similar to the program described in sections 7(j) and 8(a).

''(b) ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES; RULES.—The program established under this section shall provide assistance and services, and be governed by rules, similar to the assistance and services provided under, and rules described in, subsections (a)(20) and (j) of section 7 and section 8(a).

''(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

REV_00163928

"(1) QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'qualified service-disabled veteran' means a service-disabled veteran who is economically disadvantaged within the meaning of section 8(a)(6), except that, solely for purposes of determining personal income under this section, no amount received by such veteran by reason of such veteran's service-connected disability or service as a member of the Armed Forces shall be taken into account in determining whether such veteran is economically disadvantaged.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans' has the meaning given the term 'small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans' in section 3(q)(2), except that 'qualified service-disabled veteran' shall be substituted for 'service-disabled veteran'.".

SEC. 3. REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF THE NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION.—Subsection (k) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(k)) is amended by striking paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following new paragraphs:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Corporation to carry out this section—

"(A) $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004; and

"(B) $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 and 2006.

"(2) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—The amount made available to the Corporation for any fiscal year may not exceed the amount that the Corporation certifies that it will provide for that fiscal year from sources other than the Federal Government.".

(b) NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REPORTS.—Subsection (g) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(g)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) REPORTS.—

REV_00163930

"(1) ANNUAL REPORT.—On or before October 1 of each year, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the activities and accomplishments of the Corporation for the preceding year. Such report shall include—

"(A) the Corporation's findings regarding the efforts of Federal, State, and private organizations to assist veterans in the formation and expansion of small business concerns;

"(B) a description of the progress made by the Corporation during such year in achieving its specified annual performance goals and objectives; and

"(C) any revisions to annual performance goals or indicators required to achieve specified strategic goals and objectives.

REV_00163931

Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the strategic objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include—

"(A) a comprehensive mission statement covering the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(B) the general outcome related strategic goals and objectives for each of the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(C) a description of the means and strategies, addressing both financial and non-financial resources, to be employed by the Corporation to achieve those specified strategic goals and objectives;

"(D) a description of the annual output and outcome related performance strategies, with associated performance goals and indicators, to be employed by the Corporation to help achieve the general goals and objectives contained in the strategic plan;

"(E) an identification of key factors that could affect the achievement of the Corporations general goals and objectives; and

"(F) a description of the program evaluations and performance indicators to be used by the Corporation to assess its achievement of strategic and annual performance goals and objectives.

"(3) 5-YEAR BUSINESS PLAN.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 5 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the financial objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include a description of the specific plans to be implemented to achieve such objectives and the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (k) and to provide for the long-term financial viability of the Corporation.

"(4) AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 2 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate an audited financial statement of the Corporation. Such statement shall be prepared by an independent external auditor and shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.''.

(c) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS BUSINESS AFFAIRS.—Subsection (h) of section 203 of the Veterans Entrepreneurship and Small Business Development Act of 1999 is amended by striking ''2004'' and inserting ''2009''.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE PROCUREMENT GOAL FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS; AUTHORIZATION OF RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS; ETC.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 15(g) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(g)) is amended to read as follows:

''(g) GOVERNMENT-WIDE AND AGENCY SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT GOALS.—

REV_00163934

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT BY PRESIDENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—The President shall annually establish Government-wide goals for procurement contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 28 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(3) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(5) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by qualified HUBZone small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(6) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(7) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY WOMEN.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by women in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

REV_00163936

"(8) AGENCY GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal agency shall have annual goals that present, for that agency, the maximum practicable opportunity for each specified category of small business concerns to perform prime contracts let by such agency and subcontracts under such prime contracts.

"(B) NOT LESS THAN GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—No Federal agency may have an agency goal under subparagraph (A) which is less than the corresponding Government-wide goal established by the President under paragraph (1).

"(C) PROCEDURE FOR ESTABLISHMENT.—Each year, the Administration and the head of each Federal agency shall jointly establish the goals described in subparagraph (A) for such agency. Whenever the Administration and the head of any Federal agency fail to agree on established goals, the disagreement shall be submitted to the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy for final determination.

"(D) EXPANSION OF PARTICIPATION.—For the purpose of establishing goals under this paragraph, the head of each Federal agency shall make consistent efforts to annually expand participation by small business concerns from each industry category in procurement contracts of the agency, including participation by each specified category of small business concerns. The head of each Federal agency, in attempting to attain such participation, shall consider—

"(i) contracts awarded as the result of unrestricted competition;

"(ii) contracts awarded as the result of restricted competition under this section and under the programs established under sections 8(a), 31, and 36; and

"(iii) subcontracts awarded pursuant to subcontracting plans required under paragraphs (4) or (5) of section 8(d).

"(9) DOUBLE COUNTING PROHIBITED.—In the case of a small business concern that is part of more than 1 specified subcategory of small business concerns, with respect to any prime contract or subcontract awarded to such concern, a Federal agency

shall treat such concern as part of only 1 such specified subcategory for purposes of this subsection.

"(10) RESTRICTION ON USE OF FUNDS IN CASE OF FAILURE TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of fiscal year 2004 and each fiscal year thereafter, if an agency fails to meet the Government-wide goal established under this subsection for such fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable amount of any amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to such agency for the following fiscal year shall be used only for—

"(i) procurements under any prime contract awarded to such specified subcategory of small business concerns, and

"(ii) that portion of procurements under any prime contract (with respect to which a subcontracting plan is required under paragraph (4) or (5)) which is attributable to the goal for the utilization as subcontractors of such specified subcategory of small business concerns under such plan.

REV_00163939

"(B) APPLICABLE AMOUNT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable amount' means, with respect to any agency that fails to meet a Government-wide goal for a fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable percentage for such fiscal year of the total value of all prime contract awards made by such agency for such fiscal year.

"(C) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the Government-wide percentage goal for participation by such specified subcategory of small business concerns for the fiscal year.

"(ii) TRANSITION RULES.—In the case of fiscal years 2004 through 2008:

"(I) 3 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, small business concerns owned and

controlled by service-disabled veterans, and qualified HUBZone small business concerns, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	0.5%
2005	1%
2006	1.5%
2008	2.5%.

"(II) 5 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals and small business concerns owned and controlled by women, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	1%
2005	2%
2006	3%
2007	4%
2008	5%.

"(11) RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this paragraph, a contracting officer may restrict competition for any contract for the procurement of goods or services by the Federal Government to any specified category of small business concerns, if—

REV_00163941

"(i) the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that two or more small business concerns of such category will submit offers for the contract;

"(ii) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) does not exceed the simplified acquisition threshold;

"(iii) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price;

"(iv) the award of such contract to a small business concern of such category will not result in the agency exceeding the greater of the Government-wide goal or the agency goal under this subsection with respect to such category; and

"(v) each of the concerns—

"(I) is certified by the Administrator or any person or entity approved by the Administrator as a small business concern of such category; or

REV_00163942

"(II) certifies to the contracting officer that it is a small business concern of such category and provides adequate documentation, in accordance with standards established by the Administration, to support such certification.

"(B) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER CONTRACTING PREFERENCES.—A procurement shall not be made from a source on the basis of a preference provided in subparagraph (A), if the procurement would otherwise be made from a different source under section 4124 or 4125 of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(C) VERIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—In carrying out this paragraph, the Administrator shall establish procedures relating to—

"(i) the filing, investigation, and disposition by the Administration of any challenge to the eligibility of a small business concern to receive assistance under this paragraph (including a challenge, filed by an interested party, relating to the veracity of a certification referred to in subparagraph (A)(v)); and

"(ii) verification by the Administrator of the accuracy of any certification made or information provided under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(D) EXAMINATIONS.—The procedures established under subparagraph (C) may provide for program examinations (including random program examinations) by the Administrator of any small business concern certified under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(E) PROVISION OF DATA.—Upon the request of the Administrator, the head of any Federal agency shall promptly provide to the Administrator such information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this paragraph.

"(F) PENALTIES.—In addition to the penalties described in section 16(d), any small business concern that is determined by the Administrator to have misrepresented the status of that concern as part of a specified category of small business concerns for purposes of this paragraph shall be subject to—

"(i) section 1001 of title 18, United States Code; and

"(ii) sections 3729 through 3733 of title 31, United States Code.

"(G) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5)).

"(12) APPLICABLE SUBCONTRACTS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'applicable subcontract' means any subcontract under a contract that is subject to the requirements of paragraph (4) or (5) of section 8(d).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 15(h)(2) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F), and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) The total number and dollar value of prime contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns through—

"(i) noncompetitive negotiation;

REV_00163945

"(ii) competition restricted to such specified category; and

"(iii) unrestricted competition.

"(E) The total number and dollar value of applicable subcontracts (as defined in subsection (g)(12)) awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(F) The information described in subparagraphs (D) and (E) stated separately with respect to each agency.".

SEC. 5. REQUIREMENTS RELATED TO SUBCONTRACTING PLANS.

(a) FACTORS FOR EVALUATING OFFERS.—Subparagraph (G) of section 8(d)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(G) In the case of any contract that is awarded pursuant to the negotiated method of procurement, the following shall be treated as significant factors for purposes of evaluating offers for any such contract:

"(i) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan for small business participation in the performance of the contract exceeds the requirement described in paragraph (6)(A).

"(ii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan provides for the use of small business concerns with respect to which the contractor is serving as a mentor under a mentoring program established by the agency.

"(iii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the offeror attained applicable goals for small business participation in the performance of past and current contracts.".

(b) MINIMUM GOAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 8(d)(6) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) percentage goals for the utilization as subcontractors of each specified category of small business concerns (determined in accordance with the requirement of section 15(g)(9)), which goal for the utilization of small business concerns shall be not less than the percentage goal established under section 15(g)(2);".

(c) REQUIRED PENALTY FOR MATERIAL BREACH.—Paragraph (8) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(8)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "If a contracting officer finds the prime contractor or any subcontractor to be in material breach under this paragraph, such prime contractor shall pay a penalty in an amount determined by such officer, except that such penalty shall not be less than 10 percent of the total dollar value of the contract under which the prime contractor or subcontractor is in material breach. Rules similar to the rules of paragraph (4)(F)(ii) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amount of any penalty collected under this paragraph shall be paid over to the agency that let the contract and may be retained and used by such agency for any operating expense of the agency.''.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

(a) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 3(q) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(q)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'service-disabled veteran' means any veteran with a disability that is—

''(A) service-connected (as defined in section 101(16) of title 38, United States Code); and

''(B) rated at 10 percent or more disabling by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs or, in the case of a disability not rated by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, by the Secretary concerned

REV_00163948

(as defined in section 101(25) of title 38, United States Code).".

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—A small business concern that is receiving assistance under this Act (or if fully approved to receive such assistance) on the date of the enactment of this Act shall not cease to qualify for such assistance solely because of the amendment made by paragraph (1). The preceding sentence shall not make such concern eligible for any other assistance.

"(r) SPECIFIED CATEGORY OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each of following is a specified category of small business concerns:

"(1) Small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans.

"(2) Small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans.

"(3) Qualified HUBZone small business concerns.

REV_00163949

"(4) Small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals.

"(5) Small business concerns owned and controlled by women.

"(6) Small business concerns.

"(s) SPECIFIED SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each specified category of small business concerns described in paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (r) is a specified subcategory of small business concerns.".

SEC. 7. UNIFORM APPLICATION OF DEFINITIONS OF SPECIFIED CATEGORIES AND SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Section 8(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(1)) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women," and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women"

and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(2) Paragraphs (4)(D), (4)(E), (6)(C), (6)(F), and (10)(B) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 15(h) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(4) Section 16(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(d)(1)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'," and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

(5) Section 16(e) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(e)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'" and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

REV_00163951

(b) APPLICATION TO CONTRACT CLAUSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(3)) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences of subparagraph (A), by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears in each sentence and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns";

(B) by striking subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), (F), and (G); and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) As used in this contract, the term 'specified category of small business concerns' has the meaning given such term pursuant to section 3 of the Small Business Act and relevant regulations promulgated thereto.

"(D) The contractor shall presume that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a) of the Small Business Act.

"(E) Contractors acting in good faith may rely on written representations by their subcontractors regarding their status as being part of any specified category of small business concerns.".

"(t) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this Act:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals' means a small business concern—

"(A) which is at least 51 percent owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; or, in the case of any publicly owned business, at least 51 percent of the stock of which is owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; and

"(B) whose management and daily business operations are controlled by one or more of such individuals.".

"(2) APPLICATION OF DEFINITION BY PERSONS OTHER THAN THE ADMINISTRATION.—Any individual or entity (other than the Administration) shall presume for purposes of carrying out any program that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a).".

(3) TREATMENT OF REFERENCES TO DEFINITIONS.—Any reference in a law, regulation, or other document of the United States to the meaning or definition given to the term "small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals", "small business concern owned and controlled by women", "small business concern owned and controlled by veterans", or "qualified HUBZone small business concern" in section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C.

637(d)(3)) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) shall be treated as a reference to the meaning or definition given such term in section 3 of the Small Business Act (as amended by this Act).

From Tim Muris:

Section 411 of the Federal Aviation Act, currently codified as 49 U.S.C. Section 41712, authorizes the Department of Transportation (DOT) to prohibit unfair and deceptive practices and unfair methods of competition by airlines and ticket agents in air transportation and the sale of air transportation. This provision's key language is identical to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 45, which proscribes "[u]nfair methods of competition . . . and unfair or deceptive acts or practices."

The Supreme Court long has recognized that the ban on "unfair methods of competition" in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act permits the FTC to proscribe behavior not already condemned by cases interpreting the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act. See Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233, 239 (1972); Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Services Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394-95 (1953); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 708 (1948); see also ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 608-15 (5th ed. 2002) (describing efforts by FTC to apply Section 5 to practices that do not violate the other antitrust laws). Since 1981, however, there have been few instances in which the Commission has premised a competition case upon the capacity of Section 5 to reach beyond prevailing judicial interpretations of the other antitrust statutes. The agency's modern enforcement practice routinely has been to anchor its antitrust complaints in theories grounded in Sherman Act or Clayton Act case law. See, e.g., Toys "R" Us, 126 F.T.C. 415 (1998), aff'd, 221 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000).

Two factors account for this development. The first is the growing awareness among academics and practitioners that the Sherman Act and Clayton Act are sufficiently flexible to redress conduct that poses genuine danger to consumer welfare. Given the adaptability inherent in the Sherman and Clayton Acts, there has been little perceived urgency to invoke Section 5 as a separate basis for establishing liability.

The second reason is the broad consensus inside and outside the Commission that FTC efforts to apply the distinctive authority of Section 5 seldom have succeeded. Experience with FTC antitrust cases initiated in the 1970s played a key role in shaping this perspective. In the 1970s, the FTC frequently relied on Section 5 to attack behavior and industry structure outside the scope of existing Sherman Act and Clayton Act jurisprudence. Representative matters included challenges to the "maintenance of a noncompetitive market structure," see Kellogg Co., 99 F.T.C. 8 (1982), Exxon Corp., 98 F.T.C. 453 (1981); a refusal to deal in which the alleged anticompetitive effects of the challenged behavior fell outside the market in which the defendant competed, see Reuben H. Donnelley Corp., 95 F.T.C. 1 (1980), enforcement denied sub nom. Official Airline Guides, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 630 F.2d 920 (2d Cir. 1980); and the parallel, noncollusive adoption of various facilitating practices, see Ethyl Corp., 101 F.T.C. 425 (1983), enforcement denied sub nom. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 729 F.2d 128 (2d Cir. 1984). In some instances, such as the Exxon and Kellogg shared monopoly prosecutions, the Commission declined to find liability and dismissed its complaint. When respondents sought review of FTC decisions finding liability under Section 5 theories, the courts of appeals typically refused to endorse the Commission's position (e.g., Official Airline Guides and Ethyl) and often raised questions about the FTC's ability to articulate principles that properly would delimit the application of Section 5.

As a group, the matters described immediately above have induced caution within the Commission about using Section 5 to address business phenomena standing outside the ambit of Sherman Act or Clayton Act jurisprudence. As its antitrust enforcement policy has evolved over the past two decades, the Commission has relied upon the distinctive powers of Section 5 only when the conduct at issue involves demonstrable, direct injury to consumers or poses a high likelihood of imposing such harm to consumers. This authority has been used very sparingly. In any event, it bears no relation to the competitor-protection theories that DOT uses under its "unfair methods" jurisprudence.

Thisÿis a straightforward request. However, the required information for you to make a "permanent" commitment is not available now and I am only asking for you to express a willingness to agree to participate in the subject program if eventual schedules permit.

Basics

The U.S.-Ukraine Foundation is preparing a proposal for a U.S.-Ukraine Policy Dialog Exchange that would be sponsored by the Office of Citizen Exchanges of the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs at the Department of State.ÿ If the proposal is accepted the dialogue will be conducted through four working groups and there will be no more than two meetings involving your participation over a two-year period.

The Request

Would you agree to consider participating in the dialogue exchange if the U.S.-Ukraine Foundation's proposal is accepted and dates for a "dialogue" can be accomodated in your schedule

Background

The Foundation's proposal targets the NATO-Ukraine Action Plan as the overall agenda to be addressed in this dialog, which addresses key issues that impact Ukraine's democratic and market-oriented development and its eventual integration into the Euro-Atlantic community.

This dialog will be organized along four working groups - internal politics and governance, informational issues (independent media), foreign policy and security, and economic and business issues.

To date, several well-know DC institutions have agreed to participate and we expect favorable responses from several others in the next couple of days.

The two-year program envisions two meetings held in Washington and two in Kyiv attended by 15 participants from each country. The purpose of the program is to advance constructive dialog and enhance relationships among experts in the United States and Ukraine by providing an on-going forum through which they can freely exchange ideas and discuss issues and concerns of mutual interest in the context of the bilateral relationship between the two nations. The proposal calls for meetings with government and private sector experts in each of the focus areas.

Politics, Governance

ú democratic and electoral institutions

ú rule of law, independent judicial authority

ú continued development and strengthening of civil society

ú fundamental human rights and freedoms of citizens

ú balance of power between the three branches of the government administrative reform

Melissa, Jurgen Schrempp, Chair of Daimler Chrysler, is coming from Germany to join the meeting with the President in the Roosevelt Room on Tuesday, 29. Because Schrempp is missing an important board meeting, he is asking to get a letter signed by the Chief to assure his board that the reason for missing his meeting is as imporant as it is. I am told that Schrempp and Andy know each other well. Marc Lampkin left you a voicemail to this effect today.

I've attached a draft letter that can be edited as you wish. Can you check w/the Chief and see if he is willing to sign this letter? They want Event has been formally approved for May 9 in morning in Rose Garden. I am not sure what other time may have been reserved on calendar. May 9 is the 2-year anniversary of his initial 11 nominations, including Estrada and Owen. He will speak on judges, vacancy crisis, confirmation process, judicial independence (which is theme of Law Day this year), etc. Some of the content depends on action in Senate this week. Invitees will be various Senators, bar leaders, etc. Basic ideas are continued advocacy for his well-qualified nominees on the merits and for a fair and cosntitutional Senate process.

Forthcoming clash for the court
By James L. Swanson

At the Supreme Court of the United States, October Term 2002 is drawing to a close. The justices hear their last oral arguments on April 30, and in late June they will take to the bench for the last time to announce their final opinions of the term. Court watchers await decisions in several important cases, including free-speech and affirmative-action issues, which may not come down until the last day of the term. But that is not the only reason why court watchers have circled the last week in June on the calendar. That is when oddsmakers are betting on the retirement of at least one member of the court.

For months, pundits have speculated that Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor or Justice John Paul Stevens will step down this year. Why?

Because justices traditionally retire under the political party that appointed them, and this is the last chance for these three Republican appointees to retire during President Bush's first term with the assurance that he can fill a vacancy before the 2004 election.

Because, in the case of the chief justice, he has, in three decades of service, gone from lone dissenter to leader of the court's return to the first principles of limited government and federalism, and will go down as one of the most important chief justices in history.

Because, in the case of Justice O'Connor, the press spread rumors that she wanted to retire.

Because, in the case of Justice Stevens, he is 83 years old.

It is impossible to know whether these or any other members of the Supreme Court are planning to retire this year. Many self-styled experts have embarrassed themselves by attempting to predict a justice's vote in a single case, let alone a retirement from the bench. Nor is this to suggest that any of the nine justices should retire. The performance of the oldest justice (John Paul Stevens) to the youngest (Clarence Thomas), of the longest serving (William H. Rehnquist) to the briefest (Stephen Breyer) reveals that all remain able and engaged. Their written opinions confirm that none has suffered an intellectual decline. One may disagree with their views, but not their competence to serve. If a retirement comes, it will occur because the justice wants to step down, not because he or she has to.

It might not happen until the end of June. But it could also happen tomorrow. Justices Potter Stewart, Warren E. Burger and Thurgood Marshall waited until the end of their final terms and made June announcements. But Byron White and Harry Blackmun announced their retirements early, on March 3, 1993, and April 6, 1994, respectively, to give President Clinton ample time to nominate their successors, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen Breyer, and to win Senate confirmation by, in both cases, the beginning of August.

Although it is impossible to know if or when a vacancy will occur, one thing is easy to predict: how Democrats will respond to Mr. Bush's first nomination of a Supreme Court justice. Senate Democrats, in combination with a cabal of special interest groups, intend to politicize the Supreme Court and oppose any Bush nominee, regardless of who the nominee is. History, both recent and reaching back to the Reagan and first Bush presidencies, offers little encouragement that the Senate will conduct itself professionally and responsibly.

The pattern emerged over time: the Democrats' defeat of Judge Robert H. Bork's nomination to the court in 1987; their near-killing of Judge Clarence Thomas' nomination in 1991; their rage against the Supreme Court for "handing" the presidency to the Republicans in the 2000 election; the notorious Washington Post op-ed by Abner Mikva (former Clinton White House counsel and retired U.S. Court of Appeals judge) calling on the Senate to block any Supreme Court nominations by President Bush; their bottling up superbly qualified appellate court nominees for nearly two years on the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee; their obsession with Roe vs. Wade and their imposition of ideological litmus tests; their celebration of the American Bar Association seal of approval as the "gold standard" - until the ABA began giving many of Mr. Bush's nominees the highest possible rating; their filibustering of the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington to prevent an up or down vote even after a majority of senators announced that they will vote to confirm him; their threatened filibuster against Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

That history, and more, exposes what Democrats will do to fight a Bush Supreme Court nomination. The attack will be waged on two fronts, one substantive, the other procedural.

The substantive attack will have six parts.

Retirement day blitzkrieg. If the retiring justice is a Republican, and gives the White House advance, confidential notice of his or her intention to retire, as Chief Justice Warren Burger did in 1986, the president will have an opportunity to announce a retirement and a nomination on the same day. Within one hour of that nomination, a leading Democratic senator, probably Tom Daschle, Edward Kennedy, Patrick Leahy or Chares Schumer, will attack the nominee's character, integrity or competence. (Recall Mr. Kennedy's outburst within 45 minutes of President Reagan's nomination of Judge Bork: "Robert Bork's America is a land in which women would be forced into back-alley abortions, blacks would sit at segregated lunch counters, rogue policemen could break down citizen's doors in midnight raids, school children could not be taught about evolution, writers and artists could be censured at the whim of government." Sundry left wing "public interest" (actually, special interest) groups will join the chorus. The purpose of the first day blitzkrieg is to set the president and the nominee reeling on their heels and destroy the momentum of the nomination. The blitzkrieg aims to spin that night's TV coverage and the next morning's newspaper stories.

The paper blizzard. Within hours of the nomination, senators and special interest groups will inundate the press with letters, reports, memos and even small books that purport to expose the unfitness of the nominee. In many cases, those scripts have already been written. For more than two years, Democrats have been doing "opposition research," as though preparing for a political campaign, to uncover damaging information on the 10 to 15 people rumored to be on the president's short list for the court. The purpose of the paper blizzard is to turn public opinion against the nominee long before the Senate Judiciary Committee even convenes a hearing on the nomination.

The indictment. The paper blizzard will include some or all of the following accusations: The nominee is not "sensitive" to the rights of women, children, black Americans and other racial minorities, the disabled, workers, unions, farmers, native Americans and others. The nominee is "out of the mainstream" of the American legal tradition; is too "right wing"; is even "radical." (Democrats perfected their use of those smear tactics against Judge Bork, stooping so low as to suggest he might not believe in God. Apparently a godless conservative is even more dangerous than a god-fearing one.) With much hand-wringing, Democrats will cry crocodile tears, sighing "if only the president had nominated a moderate conservative, we would be delighted to confirm him or her." If the nominee does not have an extensive body of scholarly writings, Democrats will tar him as a "stealth" candidate who possesses hidden and alarming views. If, on the other hand, the nominee has written extensively, those writings will be denounced as "out of the mainstream." (Remember that phrase). If the nominee believes in a color-blind society and equal treatment under the laws, and questions the constitutionality of race-conscious policies called affirmative action by some, then of course the nominee is a "racist" who will want to "turn back the clock" on civil rights, overturn Brown vs. Board of Education, repeal the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments, and reintroduce slavery.

Beyond attacking the nominee personally, the paper blizzard will suggest that he or she represents a so-called transformative appointment who will upset the alleged delicate balance of the court. Some Democrats will seek cover by claiming that they have nothing against the nominee, he or she is just the wrong person at the wrong time for the best interests of the court and the country.

Rancorous hearings. Mr. Bush's first nominee to the court should not expect a cordial reception from Democrats on the Judiciary Committee. They will attempt to grill the nominee for three to six days. They will ask hundreds of questions. Many hostile witnesses will be called. Special interest groups will haunt the hearing room and loiter in the halls, murmuring against the nominee and handing out attack literature.

The partisan committee vote. For the Democrats, the hearings are mainly for show and to posture before the cameras for their constituencies and the left-wing special interest groups. They will have already decided their vote before the hearing begins or the nominee speaks one word. Of course that vote is "no." Because Republicans are a majority on the committee, the nomination will be reported to the Senate favorably by a party-line vote.

The Senate vote. Once the Judiciary Committee reports the nomination to the full Senate, Democrats opposing the nomination will continue to fight it on the floor by insisting on a lengthy debate. Then they will try to persuade their colleagues to vote against the nominee. Ultimately they will lose. The president's nominee will be confirmed because the Republican majority, plus a number of responsible Democrats, will vote to confirm him. If there is a vote, that is.

Along with their substantive attack on the nominee, Democrats will mount a procedural attack. That plan has two elements.

Delay the Judiciary Committee hearing. Upon making a nomination, the president will ask Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch to schedule hearings by early July, with the goal of having a Senate floor vote by late July or early August. Democrats on the committee will vigorously oppose that goal and attempt to delay the hearing until September. They will bleat that there must be no "rush to judgment," and claim that they require months to "study" the nominee. Their ability to stall Judge Bork's hearings until September contributed to the nomination's defeat. Democrats and the special interest groups had all summer to mobilize their onslaught against Judge Bork. The White House failed to anticipate the viciousness of the assault and was taken off guard. Because the Republicans now control the committee, the Democrats will find it harder to stall the hearings.

The filibuster trump card. When all else fails to cow the president's nominee into withdrawing, when the Democrats have been unable to stall the Judiciary Committee hearing, when they can't stop the committee from reporting the nomination favorably to the full Senate, after they fail to turn mainstream America against the nominee, when they count heads and discover that a majority of senators, including many Democrats, intend to vote to confirm the president's nominee, look for the leaders of the opposition to play their favorite, anti-democratic, Democratic trump card - the filibuster. Democrats challenged the president on Miguel Estrada, and they believe they have found the president wanting. Although Mr. Bush has called Mr. Estrada one of his most important appellate nominees, the White House has, for the past two years, been unable to confirm him. The Democrats' successful filibuster against Miguel Estrada, the first ever against a nominee to a U.S. Court of Appeals, has emboldened them to challenge Mr. Bush when he makes his first nomination to the High Court. The Democrats have paid no price for their Estrada filibuster. Look for them to test the president again.

Yes, that is the worst-case scenario, and it may not unfold. In any event, if there is a vacancy on the court, the nominee must be treated civilly, fairly and allowed an up or down vote by the full Senate, as the Constitution contemplates. The president had better be prepared for a fight. His opponents are certainly ready. If the president prevents the politicization of nominations to the lower federal courts, and to the U.S. Supreme Court, he will win the most important domestic battle of his first term. If he loses that battle, he may not get a second chance.

James L. Swanson, editor in chief of the Cato Institute's "Supreme Court Review," was on the Department of Justice Office of Legal Counsel team that staffed the nomination and confirmation hearings of Judge Robert H. Bork for the Supreme Court.

The Senate Judiciary Committee's closed-door discussions with labor and industry over asbestos litigation reform legislation are expected to continue this week.

ÿÿÿÿÿThose talks began before the spring recess and remained the focus of some intense negotiating over the last two weeks. Sources maintain that Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch remains intent on marking up a bill by May.

ÿÿÿÿÿAs of late last week, several outstanding pieces of the legislation had yet to be resolved, although sources said they were optimistic that a deal remains "doable," as one source close to the talks put it.

ÿÿÿÿÿClass action reform legislation, which is tentatively slated for floor action in May, also remains the subject of private debate. The bill was reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee before the spring recess, but included an amendment offered by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., that some bill supporters believe undermines the intent of the legislation.

ÿÿÿÿÿMeanwhile, pressure remains on pro-bill lobbyists between now and May to gather cosponsors and commitments of floor support from Democrats. About a dozen or so would be needed to ensure a cloture-proof majority for the bill.

ÿÿÿÿÿBusiness and insurance lobbyists have targeted numerous Democrats as possible cosponsors, including Senate Minority Whip Reid , who before the spring recess said he had made no decisions on that score. Lobbyists also had planned to mount vigorous campaigns on behalf of the class action legislation within the home states of targeted senators over the spring work period.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable George Allen
The Honorable Elizabeth Dole
The Honorable John R. Edwards
The Honorable Barbara A. Mikulski
The Honorable Paul S. Sarbanes
The Honorable John W. Warner

MEMORANDUM FOR ANDREW CARD

THROUGH: Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

FROM: Donald R. Arbuckle

SUBJECT: Heads-Up on DOT and DHS Rules for Security Threat Assessments Affecting Truck Drivers

We have concluded review of DOT and DHS interim final rules to implement Patriot Act provisions that require background checks for those drivers with endorsements to their licenses permitting them to transport hazardous materials. These rules also respond to the Safe Explosives Act, which authorized DOJ to levy potential criminal penalties on persons who transport explosives; this provision has caused great concern in the transportation industry. However, with the issuance of DOT and DHS rules to require background checks, DOT will "occupy the field", superceding DOJ's authority to impose criminal penalties for activities affecting transportation in commerce.

This rule will apply to 3.5 million drivers. Because TSA will not be able to conduct fingerprint-based background checks on all drivers immediately, TSA will initially conduct name-based security threat assessments, including criminal checks and terrorist-watch-list checks. Four months after the rules are issued, current drivers will become disqualified for hazmat endorsements if they fail certain criteria such as criminal history and citizenship. After six months, drivers must submit fingerprints when applying for new or renewal hazmat endorsements. The rules allow an individual to appeal a TSA security threat determination or request waivers from the disqualification criteria.

The rules may generate some press attention. There are also likely to be complaints, during the start-up period, from the States as well as the trucking industry, concerning the disqualification procedures as well as job dislocations that may be caused by the rules.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Subject: Hispanic media training

Brett-

Following our Hispanic appointees conference call, the following inquiry below came to our attention.

Mercy has been talking with Nicolle in making this happen. Is it possible to coordinate this training at the RNC???

Q:

Possibly hold a media training for all Hispanic Spokespersons (with special emphasis on Spanish-language interviews) and mid and/or high level Adminstration officials often called to do Spanish-language interviews.

I have had the benefit of getting some media training at work and have found it to be quite helpful. It has made me pretty confident and able when called to do an interview in Spanish. I now even sometimes coach and brief other attorneys for Spanish and English mainstream interviews.

Subject: 334-7215 if the Judge sees any mistakes

The White House counsel, Alberto R. Gonzales, is kidded even within the West Wing about his ability to coyly hide his views and emotions until late in a debate or when he has his client--President Bush--to himself. The soft-spoken Texan even emulates Bush,s technique of letting subordinates argue competing points of view in front of him, then surprising them with his arbitration as if he were a court handing down an opinion.

But administration officials said that as inscrutable as Gonzales prides himself on being, he has left a clear stamp on his office by providing Bush with the legal grounding for an aggressive assertion of executive authority in disputes with Congress and government power in the war on terrorism.

&We push the envelope, but never beyond what the Constitution permits, in my judgment,8 Gonzales said in a rare interview.

Well before the terrorists attacks in the seventh month of his presidency, Bush made it clear that his administration would push to reestablish many of the powers that he believed presidents had unwisely ceded to Congress since Watergate. He resisted sending documents or witnesses to Capitol Hill, imposed vast new restrictions on access to the papers of former presidents and rapidly filled the confirmation pipeline with hard-core conservative candidates for judgeships.

As Bush refocused his administration around the war on terrorism, he issued orders making himself the personal arbiter of which terrorist suspects will be subject to military tribunals, and limiting the rights of captives from the war in Afghanistan and detainees in terrorism cases, some of whom were held for long periods without charges or access to lawyers.

Courts have not immediately overturned any of Bush,s major decisions, but Gonzales acknowledges that could eventually happen.

&We do believe very strongly in the protection of civil liberties, but there is a competing interest of the protection of the national security of this country,8 Gonzales said. &The key for the government is to try find the appropriate balance. We think we find that. But ultimately, quite frankly, it is going to be up to the courts to tell us if we,ve made the right decision.8

Gonzalez is known around the West wing as &The Judge8 for his brief service as a Bush appointee on the Texas Supreme Court. People involved in vetting Bush,s potential nominees for the U.S. Supreme Court say Gonzales has a strong chance of one day being called &Justice8 if, as expected, Bush has the chance to fill an opening or two.

Bush,s aides have made no secret of their thirst to put the first Hispanic on the high court. And Gonzales, 47, has a long and quietly comfortable relationship with Bush, who made him counsel in the Texas governor,s office, then appointed him Texas secretary of state and a justice on the state Supreme Court before bringing him to Washington.
A note of considerable drama has been added to Gonzales,s prospects for the high court by the objections of several powerful conservatives, including some high-level appointees in the Justice Department. These critics, several of whom have expressed their reservations to the White House privately, regard Gonzales as insufficiently conservative, or at least are suspicious about how committed he really is to their most important issues, including the elimination of affirmative action.
&The judge follows the model of treating the president as his client,8 an associate said. &He is not as conservative as a lot of people around Bush, but Bush is not as conservative as some of the people around him.8
Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee tried to bolster the impression of Gonzales as a moderate during a confirmation hearing last year for one of Bush,s appellate court nominees, Texas Supreme Court Justice Patricia Owen, who was blocked and was renominated this year. The Democrats used dissenting, moderate-sounding quotations from Gonzales to try to portray Owen as being too conservative for the court,s mainstream.
Many conservatives were disappointed that Bush did not issue a sweeping condemnation of affirmative action when he weighed in against the University of Michigan,s race-conscious admissions system earlier this year. Sources involved in the process said Gonzales played a crucial role in convincing Bush to take the narrow of calling Michigan,s system unconstitutional but remaining silent on the broader question of affirmative action.
&It took five or six meetings before the judge showed where he was,8 said a senior administration official who participated in the decision. & But his view was the one that the staff coalesced around. It was taken to the president and he eventually approved it.8
The conservatives, biggest complaint is that in 2000, Gonzales voted with the majority of the Texas Supreme Court to narrowly construe a law Bush had championed requiring a minor to get parental permission before an abortion. Opponents of the decision, which split the court, said it would make it easy for girls to qualify for exceptions to the law. Steven Goode, a law professor at the University of Texas, said Gonzales was &a middle-of-the-road conservative who was less disposed toward business interests than the more conservative members of the court.8
White House officials said that in addition to serving as a moderating influence in the affirmative-action case, Gonzales played a similar role during debate over the status of captured combatants at Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba who had fought for Afghanistan,s Taliban regime. The administration originally denied them the protections a prisoner of war would receive under the Geneva Conventions.
&That bothered the judge,8 said a person involved in the case.
Protests flowing in from around the world and Bush reversed himself, declaring that the principles of the Geneva Conventions would apply to Taliban soldiers but not to members of the al Qaeda terrorist network.
Nevertheless, a private group called Human Rights Watch has concluded that the Geneva Conventions are being ignored or applied narrowly, with enemy combatants being held without charges or access to lawyers. &The U.S. has a history of being a leading proponent of the laws of armed conflict,8 said James D. Ross, the group,s senior legal adviser. &This administration is ignoring that.8
Several of the administration,s Gonzales-guided decisions have been upheld by courts. In January, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, in Richmond, ruled that a wartime president can indefinitely detain U.S. citizens captured as enemy combatants and deny them access to lawyers. Steven G. Calabresi, a Northwestern University law professor and Federal Society founder, said Bush,s approach looks reasonable compared to President Harry Truman,s decision during the Korean War to try to seize steel mills, which was overturned by the Supreme Court.
A few conservative leaders said opposition to Gonzales appears to be waning, partly because Bush,s inner circle has made it clear that they have heard the objections, and have assured critics that Gonzales would not be the automatic first choice for a Supreme Court vacancy.

Members said Gonzales was well-received when he spoke to the conservative Federalist Society, hotbed of his critics. The speech drew 250, a heavy attendance for the society,s luncheon events. One conservative leader praised Gonzales for putting on a tuxedo and attending the group,s 20th anniversary gala in November, even though he was not a speaker.
&Conservatives have been burned by uncertainty and unpredictability in the past, so they,re a lot less willing to cut any slack with someone like Judge Gonzales who has less of a clear record on many issues,8 said one well-known conservative who refused to be identified. &One of the things you hear is that he,s not comfortable with conservatives, but I don,t think that,s ultimately true.8
For now, Gonzales is clearly comfortable with only audience that counts: Bush. Gonzales is one of the very few aides who meets with Bush alone, and he recently recalled standing quietly on the Truman Balcony, thinking how far they had come together.
Bush,s style gives his counsel considerable sway. &He delegates a lot,8 Gonzales said. &We have the ability to make to make decisions that have to be made and not burden him with those decisions, but to exercise good judgment in going to him with decisions that he needs to make and he needs to be aware of.8
A.E. Dick Howard, a constitutional law professor at the University of Virginia, said Gonzales,s record on the Texas Supreme Court was in the mold of Justice Sandra Day O,Connor, a moderate conservative who emphasizes a fact-based approach to cases, while his record as White House counsel suggested more the approach of Justice Antonin Scalia, who is more disposed to an expansive view of government power.
&Which is the real Alberto Gonzales?8 Howard asked. &If he gets on the Supreme Court, we,ll find out.8

The White House counsel, Alberto R. Gonzales, is kidded even within the West Wing about his ability to coyly hide his views and emotions until late in a debate or when he has his client--President Bush--to himself. The soft-spoken Texan even emulates Bush,s technique of letting subordinates argue competing points of view in front of him, then surprising them with his arbitration as if he were a court handing down an opinion.

But administration officials said that as inscrutable as Gonzales prides himself on being, he has left a clear stamp on his office by providing Bush with the legal grounding for an aggressive assertion of executive authority in disputes with Congress and government power in the war on terrorism.

&We push the envelope, but never beyond what the Constitution permits, in my judgment,8 Gonzales said in a rare interview.

Well before the terrorists attacks in the seventh month of his presidency, Bush made it clear that his administration would push to reestablish many of the powers that he believed presidents had unwisely ceded to Congress since Watergate. He resisted sending documents or witnesses to Capitol Hill, imposed vast new restrictions on access to the papers of former presidents and rapidly filled the confirmation pipeline with hard-core conservative candidates for judgeships.

As Bush refocused his administration around the war on terrorism, he issued orders making himself the personal arbiter of which terrorist suspects will be subject to military tribunals, and limiting the rights of captives from the war in Afghanistan and detainees in terrorism cases, some of whom were held for long periods without charges or access to lawyers.

Courts have not immediately overturned any of Bush,s major decisions, but Gonzales acknowledges that could eventually happen.

&We do believe very strongly in the protection of civil liberties, but there is a competing interest of the protection of the national security of this country,8 Gonzales said. &The key for the government is to try find the appropriate balance. We think we find that. But ultimately, quite frankly, it is going to be up to the courts to tell us if we,ve made the right decision.8

Gonzalez is known around the West wing as &The Judge8 for his brief service as a Bush appointee on the Texas Supreme Court. People involved in vetting Bush,s potential nominees for the U.S. Supreme Court say Gonzales has a strong chance of one day being called &Justice8 if, as expected, Bush has the chance to fill an opening or two.

Bush,s aides have made no secret of their thirst to put the first Hispanic on the high court. And Gonzales, 47, has a long and quietly comfortable relationship with Bush, who made him counsel in the Texas governor,s office, then appointed him Texas secretary of state and a justice on the state Supreme Court before bringing him to Washington.

A note of considerable drama has been added to Gonzales,s prospects for the high court by the objections of several powerful conservatives, including some high-level appointees in the Justice Department. These critics, several of whom have expressed their reservations to the White House privately, regard Gonzales as insufficiently conservative, or at least are suspicious about how committed he really is to their most important issues, including the elimination of affirmative action.

&The judge follows the model of treating the president as his client,8 an associate said. &He is not as conservative as a lot of people around Bush, but Bush is not as conservative as some of the people around him.8

DRAFT

Statement of Honorable Leo S. Mackay, Jr., Ph.D.
DEPUTY SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS
SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS

APRIL 30, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for providing me the opportunity to testify before you this morning on three measures affecting Department of Veterans Affairs education and vocational rehabilitation programs and small-business opportunities for veterans. The three bills on today's hearing agenda include: H.R. 1460, the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"; H.R. 1716, the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"; and H.R. 1712, the "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003." VA supports a majority of the proposals set forth in these measures.

Before I discuss the bills the Subcommittee is considering today, I would like to note that, although the Budget Enforcements Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002, the Administration supports the extension of these budget enforcement mechanisms in a manner that ensures fiscal discipline and is consistent with the President's budget. As you know, these measures would affect direct spending and receipts and, therefore, the support VA expresses for the bills is contingent on accommodating the provisions within the overall budget submitted by the President.

H.R. 1460 – "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of H.R. 1460 would amend provisions of title 38, United States Code, to permit veterans to use VA educational assistance benefits to enroll in non-degree, non-credit business "entrepreneurship" courses offered by small business development centers or offered by the National Veterans Small Business Development Corporation. Specifically, section 2 of the bill would provide that State approving agencies may approve non-credit courses of business education that enable or assist persons to start or enhance small business enterprises. "Qualified providers" of such entrepreneurship courses would include small business development centers, as defined by section 21 of the Small Business Act, and the National Veterans Business Development Corporation. A person would not be considered by VA as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of an entrepreneurship course solely because he or she is the owner or operator of a business. These amendments apply to courses approved by State approval agencies after the date of enactment of the Act.

Veterans would receive several benefits from such courses. Some veterans are not willing or able to complete a degree program. This program offers a viable alternative to a complete degree program for those wishing to start a small business. Moreover, veterans who take advantage of these courses are more likely to succeed as small-business entrepreneurs. The potential for positive effects on the economy, with enhanced competition and creativity within the marketplace, is significant. The bill's provision for oversight of these courses by State Approving Agencies should ensure program quality. For these reasons, we strongly support enactment of this provision.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $1.5 million in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $32 million.

Section 3 of H.R. 1460 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 3104 to provide that, for purposes of pursuing a program of vocational rehabilitation under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, a disabled veteran may establish "self-employment" in a small business enterprise as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement of unemployability.

Current law permits us to serve veterans with the most severe service-connected disabilities who require self employment and/or homebound training in order to achieve an acceptable level of vocational rehabilitation. We are also able to provide limited assistance to other veterans with employment handicaps.

Mr. Chairman, last month the Department established a new advisory committee, the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (VR&E) Task Force, and charged it with conducting an independent review of the VR&E program. Among other responsibilities, it will evaluate eligibility criteria for vocational rehabilitation services under VA's program, and report its recommendations to the Secretary. We are asking the Task Force to evaluate the merits of the change in law proposed by section 3 of H.R. 1460, and will be furnishing you our official views once we have the benefit of that advice.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $750,000 in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $101 million.

Section 4 of H.R. 1460 would authorize a contracting officer to make sole source awards to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans (SDVBs) if such business is determined to be capable of performing the contract, award can be made at a fair price, there is no reasonable expectation that two or more SDVBs would submit offers, and certain dollar thresholds are not exceeded. It would also authorize contracting officers to restrict competition to SDVBs if there is a reasonable expectation that at least two SDVBs will submit offers and award can be made at a fair market price. The Administrator of the Small Business Administration would have the authority to appeal contracting officers' decisions not to award a contract opportunity to SDVBs to the Secretary of the department or agency head. This law would not supercede any other preference under law for prison-made (Federal Prison Industries) products or products made by the blind or disabled (JWOD).

VA supports section 4 of H.R. 1460. Providing business opportunities to veterans who own small businesses is altogether consistent with VA's mission to serve our Nation's veterans and will help VA and the Nation honor its commitment to them.

We estimate the total cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1460 to be $2.25 million for fiscal year 2004 and $133 million over ten years.

H.R. 1716 – "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1716 would amend title 38, United States Code, to improve VA educational assistance programs for apprenticeship and other on-job training.

Section 2 of the bill would modify the computation of on-job training and apprenticeship benefit entitlements under chapters 34 and 35 of title 38, United States Code, to be the same as the entitlement charged under chapters 30 and 32, of that title, as well as under the chapter 1606, title 10 U.S.C. program. This would provide needed uniformity in calculating use of entitlement for such training regardless of the benefit chapter under which a student is eligible, resulting in greater equity for veterans.

Section 3 of the bill would establish an incentive payment for program participants who finish their apprenticeship training early by requiring VA to pay the trainee a lump-sum payment for the months of VA entitlement remaining that would have ordinarily been needed to complete the apprenticeship. We believe the incentive would motivate competent individuals to complete their apprenticeship training sooner, thereby resulting in a more efficient use of benefits.

Section 4 of the bill would increase the monthly VA benefit for trainees who simultaneously pursue apprenticeships or on-job training and related classroom instruction (whether or not the trainee was pursuing the academic instruction as a requirement of the apprenticeship or voluntarily under the trainee's own initiative). Currently, education benefits for apprenticeship and on-the-job training start at 75 percent of the benefit rate payable for full-time institutional training and these job training benefits decrease in stages as the individual progresses through the training program. This section would pay the full-time institutional rate for periods when the individual is in required classroom courses while also in the job training program. It will also allow individuals who voluntarily enroll in related courses to receive an increase based on the combined training, but not to exceed the full-time institutional rate. We support this proposal.

Section 5 of the bill would codify VA's authority to pay benefits for competency-based apprenticeships. It would require VA to take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor. Apprenticeships offered in industries that choose not to register with the Secretary of Labor, and that are approved for veterans' training by a state approving agency, would continue to be available. It would also authorize VA to use up to $3 million to develop the computer systems and procedures needed to carry out the above provisions of the bill. Current law permits approval of only time-based, fixed length apprenticeships. The 1990's saw a steady move away from time-based apprenticeships toward competency-based apprenticeships. We support this change as it would bring approval of apprenticeships into the 21st century and allow VA to pay educational assistance to more veterans.

Section 6 of the bill would require VA to establish a pilot program to furnish on-job benefits to claims adjudicators training in its disability compensation, dependency and indemnity (DIC), and pension programs. The pilot program would permit on-the-job training programs of up to 3 years to be approved for claims adjudicators who handle VA's Compensation and Pension programs. VA supports this program for claims adjudicators. Based on our past experience, the duration of this type of training would be approximately two years.

Section 7 of the bill would require coordination of information among the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Defense, and Labor with respect to on-job training. The Secretary of Defense would be required to furnish to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during his or her active duty service. It would also require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, to encourage and assist states and private organizations to accord credit to servicemembers for skills in any related apprenticeship the servicemember may pursue in civilian life. We believe such level of coordination would be beneficial so that veterans can receive full credit for their military training and not have to unnecessarily repeat training they received while on active duty.

We estimate the benefits cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1716 to be $47.7 million for fiscal year 2004 and $548.4 million over ten years.

H.R. 1712 – "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1712 would require the Administrator of the Small Business Administration (SBA) to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by service disabled veterans similar to the Section 8(a) program for small business in general, where SBA executes a contract with an agency and subcontracts the work to the small business. The bill reauthorizes the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, first created in 1999, and adds reporting and planning requirements such as 5 year strategic and financial plans. The Corporation was created to expand the provision of and improve access to technical assistance regarding entrepreneurship for the Nation's veterans.

The bill sets a Government-wide goal of 28 percent for prime contracts awarded to small business concerns. It further breaks that goal down to 3 percent for veteran-owned, 3 percent for service-disabled-veteran-owned, 3 percent for HUBZone, 5 percent for socially and economically disadvantaged, and 5 percent for women-owned. Double counting of small businesses that meet more than one criterion is prohibited. Beginning in Fiscal Year 2004, for any agency that failed to meet the goals, funding would be restricted in the following fiscal year for awards solely to the specific subcategories of small businesses (whether prime contracts or approved subcontracting plans). This would be phased in for the various categories of small businesses between FY's 2004 and 2008.

The bill would allow an agency to restrict competition to specific categories of small businesses to meet the procurement goals. The bill would require in negotiated procurements that agencies include evaluation factors regarding small business subcontracting plans.

VA supports the provisions of section 4 of H.R. 1712 that would establish a goal of 3 percent for award of contracts to veteran-owned small businesses. As you may be aware, VA has established its own internal goal for award to veterans. However, I am concerned with other provisions of section 4 and section 5 that would raise the small business goal, prohibit double counting of acquisitions, restrict the use of appropriations, and mandate the use of certain evaluation factors in negotiated acquisitions. The Government is already struggling to meet its current goals, and raising those goals would not be beneficial. Prohibiting double counting would have the effect of raising the thresholds further and making it that much more difficult for agencies to meet their goals. Furthermore, the provisions of section 4 that place restrictions on the use of funds in the case of agency failure to meet goals would create a quota system for award of contracts to socioeconomic groups. That, and the evaluation factor mandate, removes the flexibility agencies need to be able to successfully carry out their missions.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my testimony.

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the use of education benefits under such title for certain entrepreneurship courses, to permit veterans enrolled in a vocational rehabilitation program under chapter 31 of such title to have self-employment as a vocational goal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00164081

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION FOR STATE APPROVING AGENCIES TO APPROVE CERTAIN ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.

(a) APPROVAL OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3675 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) A State approving agency may approve the entrepreneurship courses offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'entrepreneurship course' means a non-degree, non-credit course of business education that enables or assists a person to start or enhance a small business enterprise.

"(3) Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) do not apply to—

"(A) an entrepreneurship course offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses; and

"(B) a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses by reason of such provider offering one or more entrepreneurship courses.".

(b) BUSINESS OWNERS NOT TREATED AS ALREADY QUALIFIED.—Section 3471 of such title is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following: "The Secretary shall not treat a person as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses solely because such person is the owner or operator of a business.''.

(c) INCLUSION OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF PROGRAM OF EDUCATION.—Subsection (b) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any course, or combination of courses, offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''

(d) INCLUSION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION.—Subsection (c) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''.

(e) DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3452 of such title is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(h) The term 'qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses' means—

''(1) a small business development center described in section 21 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648), and

REV_00164083

"(2) the National Veterans Business Development Corporation (established under section 33 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 657c)) insofar as the Corporation offers or sponsors an entrepreneurship course (as defined in section 3675(c)(2) of this title).".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to courses approved by State approving agencies after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT AS A VOCATIONAL GOAL FOR VETERANS RECEIVING VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Section 3104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Any person entitled to a rehabilitation program under this chapter may establish self-employment as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement that the person be unemployable.".

SEC. 4. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

REV_00164084

"SEC. 36. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

"(a) SOLE SOURCE CONTRACTS.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award a sole source contract to any small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if—

"(1) such concern is determined to be a responsible contractor with respect to performance of such contract opportunity and the contracting officer does not have a reasonable expectation that 2 or more small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers for the contracting opportunity;

"(2) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) will not exceed—

"(A) $5,000,000, in the case of a contract opportunity assigned a standard industrial classification code for manufacturing; or

"(B) $3,000,000, in the case of any other contract opportunity; and

"(3) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price.

REV_00164085

"(b) RESTRICTED COMPETITION.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award contracts on the basis of competition restricted to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that not less than 2 small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers and that the award can be made at a fair market price.

"(c) APPEAL BY ADMINISTRATOR.—Not later than 5 days after the date on which the Administration is notified of a contracting officer's decision not to award a contract opportunity under this section to a small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans, the Administrator may notify the contracting officer of the intent to appeal the contracting officer's decision, and within 15 days of such date the Administrator may file a written request for reconsideration of the contracting officer's decision with the Secretary of the department or agency head.

of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(e) ENFORCEMENT; PENALTIES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (5) and (6) of section 8(m) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(f) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this section, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5))."

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1716

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (for himself, Mr. EVANS, Mr. BROWN of South Carolina, and Mr. MICHAUD) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and in addition to the Committee on Armed Services, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act".

REV_00164088

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Educational assistance programs for veterans for apprenticeship and on-job training of the Department of Veterans Affairs assist employers to hire and retain skilled workers.

(2) These programs establish a link between training afforded to servicemembers while serving in the Armed Forces and training available in civilian settings for purposes of occupational licensing and credentialing.

(3) These programs develop a more highly educated and productive work force.

(c) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. MODIFICATION OF BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT CHARGES FOR CERTAIN ON-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(a) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

REV_00164089

ANCE.—Section 3687 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) For each month that an individual (as defined in paragraph (3)) is paid a training assistance allowance under subsection (a), the entitlement of the individual shall be charged at a percentage rate (rounded to the nearest percent) that is equal to the ratio of—

"(A) such training assistance allowance for the period of months involved, to

"(B) the applicable monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for such period of months.".

"(2) For any month in which an individual fails to complete 120 hours of training, the entitlement otherwise chargeable under paragraph (1) shall be reduced in the same proportion as the monthly training assistance allowance payable is reduced under subsection (b)(3).

"(3) In this section, the term 'individual' means—

"(A) an eligible veteran for purposes of chapter 34 of this title who is entitled, under chapter 30 or 34 of this title, as the case may be, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3015(e) of this title, or

"(B) an eligible person for purposes chapter 35 of this title, who is entitled, under section 3510 of this title, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3532(a) of this title as the case may be.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INCENTIVE PAYMENT FOR EARLY COMPLETION OF APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 3032(c) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

''(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

''(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

REV_00164091

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter (and chapter 34 of this title, if applicable) shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).".

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in paragraph (2)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly benefit payment payable under this section for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of monthly benefit payments that could have been paid to the individual under this section for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of monthly benefit payments paid to the individual for the program under this section.

REV_00164092

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsections (c) and (d)."

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in subsection (b)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 3687, as amended by section 2(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual (as defined in subsection (e)(3) who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under subsection (a) for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under subsection (a).

REV_00164093

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsection (e).".

(d) SELECTED RESERVE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 16131(d) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

"(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).''.

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking ''Except as provided in paragraph (2)'' and inserting ''Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to programs of training beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. INCREASE IN BENEFIT FOR INDIVIDUALS PURSUING APPRENTICESHIP OR ON-JOB TRAINING AND RELATED POSTSECONDARY CLASSROOM EDUCATION TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—Section 3032(c), as amended by section 3(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5)(A) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3015 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3015 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under such section 3015 to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233, as amended by section 3(b), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to that individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under this section shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3231 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(B) In no case may the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under subparagraph (A) exceed the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(3)(A) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this section.

"(B) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (2) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under paragraph (2).

"(C) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(2) Section 3231(a)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking "(2) Except as provided in paragraph (5)(E) of this subsection and in subsection (e) of this section" and inserting "(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), paragraph (5)(E),"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for appropriately reduced rates of the amount of the monthly payment otherwise applicable under subparagraph (A) for programs of educational or vocational assistance pursued on less than a full-time basis.".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under subsection (b) for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under subsection (b) to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. AUTHORITY FOR COMPETENCY-BASED APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 3672(c) is amended—

(1) by striking "(1)" and "(2)" and inserting, "(A)" and "(B)" respectively;

(2) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The period of a program of apprenticeship may be determined based upon a specific period of time (commonly referred to as a 'time-based program'), based upon the demonstration of successful mastery of skills (commonly referred to as a 'competency-based program'), or based upon a combination thereof.

"(3)(A) In the case of a competency-based program of apprenticeship, in determining the period of such a program, the Secretary shall take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor.

"(B) The sponsor of a competency-based program of apprenticeship shall provide notice to the Secretary of any such standards that may apply to the program and the proposed approximate period of training under the program.

"(4) The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary upon the successful completion of a program of apprenticeship by a veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.".

(b) INCREASED USE OF APPRENTICESHIPS.—Section 3672(d)(1) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Labor shall provide such assistance and services to the Secretary, and to State approving agencies, to increase the use of apprenticeships.".

(c) ON-JOB TRAINING.—Section 3677 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The sponsor of any program of training on the job shall submit notice to the Secretary upon the successful completion of the program by the veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.

"(2) The term 'training on the job' includes training commonly referred to as 'on-job learning'.".

(d) FUNDING FOR DEPARTMENT COMPUTER SYSTEM MODIFICATIONS.—From amounts appropriated to the Department of Veterans Affairs for fiscal year 2004 for readjustment benefits, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall use an amount not to exceed $3,000,000 to modify computer systems and to develop procedures required to carry out the amendments made by subsection (a) and sections 2, 3, and 4.

SEC. 6. PILOT PROGRAM TO PROVIDE ON-JOB BENEFITS TO TRAIN DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS' CLAIMS ADJUDICATORS.

Section 3677, as amended by section 5(c), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a pilot program under which, the Secretary shall operate a program of training on the job under this section for a period (notwithstanding subsection (c)(2)) of up to three years in duration to train employees of the Department to become qualified adjudicators of claims for compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, and pension.

"(2) Amounts of educational assistance, monthly benefit payments, and training assistance allowance under chapters 30, 31, 32, 34, and 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be payable to such employees during each month of training under the program.

"(3)(A) Not later than 3 years after the implementation of the pilot project, the Secretary shall submit to Congress an initial report on the pilot project. The report shall include an assessment of the usefulness of the program in recruiting and retaining of personnel of the Department as well as an assessment of the value of the program as a training program.

"(B) Not later than 18 months after the date on which the initial report under subparagraph (A) is submitted, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a final report on the pilot project. The final report shall include recommendations of the Secretary with respect to continuation of the pilot project and with respect to expansion of the types of claims for which the extended period of on the job training is available to train such employees.

"(4) The pilot project shall terminate 5 years after the date of the implementation of the project.".

SEC. 7. REQUIREMENT FOR COORDINATION OF DATA AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.

Section 3694 is amended—

REV_00164107

(1) by striking "In carrying out" and inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) COORDINATION OF INFORMATION AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.—At the time of a servicemember's discharge or release from active duty service, the Secretary of Defense shall furnish to the Secretary such pertinent information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during the period of active duty service of the servicemember. The Secretary, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, shall encourage and assist States and private organizations to give credit to servicemembers for the registered apprenticeship program so pursued in the case of any related apprenticeship program the servicemember may pursue as a civilian.".

SEC. 8. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) DEFINITION OF TRAINING ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 3452(e) is amended by striking "or any State apprenticeship agency, or any State board of vocational education, or any joint apprenticeship committee, or the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the

"National Apprenticeship Act" (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.)," and inserting "any State board of vocational education, any Federal or State apprenticeship registration agency, any joint apprenticeship committee established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the 'National Apprenticeship Act' (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.),".

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1712

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. EVANS (for himself, Mr. FILNER, Mr. MICHAUD, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business

A BILL

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00164110

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003''.

SEC. 2. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

''SEC. 36. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this section, the Administrator shall establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans. The program established under this section shall be similar to the program described in sections 7(j) and 8(a).

''(b) ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES; RULES.—The program established under this section shall provide assistance and services, and be governed by rules, similar to the assistance and services provided under, and rules described in, subsections (a)(20) and (j) of section 7 and section 8(a).

''(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

REV_00164111

"(1) QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'qualified service-disabled veteran' means a service-disabled veteran who is economically disadvantaged within the meaning of section 8(a)(6), except that, solely for purposes of determining personal income under this section, no amount received by such veteran by reason of such veteran's service-connected disability or service as a member of the Armed Forces shall be taken into account in determining whether such veteran is economically disadvantaged.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans' has the meaning given the term 'small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans' in section 3(q)(2), except that 'qualified service-disabled veteran' shall be substituted for 'service-disabled veteran'.".

REV_00164112

SEC. 3. REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF THE NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION.—Subsection (k) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(k)) is amended by striking paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following new paragraphs:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Corporation to carry out this section—

"(A) $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004; and

"(B) $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 and 2006.

"(2) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—The amount made available to the Corporation for any fiscal year may not exceed the amount that the Corporation certifies that it will provide for that fiscal year from sources other than the Federal Government.".

(b) NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REPORTS.—Subsection (g) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(g)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) REPORTS.—

REV_00164113

"(1) ANNUAL REPORT.—On or before October 1 of each year, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the activities and accomplishments of the Corporation for the preceding year. Such report shall include—

"(A) the Corporation's findings regarding the efforts of Federal, State, and private organizations to assist veterans in the formation and expansion of small business concerns;

"(B) a description of the progress made by the Corporation during such year in achieving its specified annual performance goals and objectives; and

"(C) any revisions to annual performance goals or indicators required to achieve specified strategic goals and objectives.

REV_00164114

Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the strategic objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include—

"(A) a comprehensive mission statement covering the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(B) the general outcome related strategic goals and objectives for each of the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(C) a description of the means and strategies, addressing both financial and non-financial resources, to be employed by the Corporation to achieve those specified strategic goals and objectives;

"(D) a description of the annual output and outcome related performance strategies, with associated performance goals and indicators, to be employed by the Corporation to help achieve the general goals and objectives contained in the strategic plan;

"(E) an identification of key factors that could affect the achievement of the Corporations general goals and objectives; and

"(F) a description of the program evaluations and performance indicators to be used by the Corporation to assess its achievement of strategic and annual performance goals and objectives.

"(3) 5-YEAR BUSINESS PLAN.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 5 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the financial objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include a description of the specific plans to be implemented to achieve such objectives and the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (k) and to provide for the long-term financial viability of the Corporation.

"(4) AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 2 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate an audited financial statement of the Corporation. Such statement shall be prepared by an independent external auditor and shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.''.

(c) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS BUSINESS AFFAIRS.—Subsection (h) of section 203 of the Veterans Entrepreneurship and Small Business Development Act of 1999 is amended by striking ''2004'' and inserting ''2009''.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE PROCUREMENT GOAL FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS; AUTHORIZATION OF RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS; ETC.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 15(g) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(g)) is amended to read as follows:

''(g) GOVERNMENT-WIDE AND AGENCY SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT GOALS.—

REV_00164117

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT BY PRESIDENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—The President shall annually establish Government-wide goals for procurement contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 28 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(3) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(4) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(5) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by qualified HUBZone small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(6) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(7) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY WOMEN.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by women in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

REV_00164119

"(8) AGENCY GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal agency shall have annual goals that present, for that agency, the maximum practicable opportunity for each specified category of small business concerns to perform prime contracts let by such agency and subcontracts under such prime contracts.

"(B) NOT LESS THAN GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—No Federal agency may have an agency goal under subparagraph (A) which is less than the corresponding Government-wide goal established by the President under paragraph (1).

"(C) PROCEDURE FOR ESTABLISHMENT.—Each year, the Administration and the head of each Federal agency shall jointly establish the goals described in subparagraph (A) for such agency. Whenever the Administration and the head of any Federal agency fail to agree on established goals, the disagreement shall be submitted to the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy for final determination.

"(D) EXPANSION OF PARTICIPATION.—For the purpose of establishing goals under this paragraph, the head of each Federal agency shall make consistent efforts to annually expand participation by small business concerns from each industry category in procurement contracts of the agency, including participation by each specified category of small business concerns. The head of each Federal agency, in attempting to attain such participation, shall consider—

"(i) contracts awarded as the result of unrestricted competition;

"(ii) contracts awarded as the result of restricted competition under this section and under the programs established under sections 8(a), 31, and 36; and

"(iii) subcontracts awarded pursuant to subcontracting plans required under paragraphs (4) or (5) of section 8(d).

"(9) DOUBLE COUNTING PROHIBITED.—In the case of a small business concern that is part of more than 1 specified subcategory of small business concerns, with respect to any prime contract or subcontract awarded to such concern, a Federal agency

shall treat such concern as part of only 1 such specified subcategory for purposes of this subsection.

"(10) RESTRICTION ON USE OF FUNDS IN CASE OF FAILURE TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of fiscal year 2004 and each fiscal year thereafter, if an agency fails to meet the Government-wide goal established under this subsection for such fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable amount of any amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to such agency for the following fiscal year shall be used only for—

"(i) procurements under any prime contract awarded to such specified subcategory of small business concerns, and

"(ii) that portion of procurements under any prime contract (with respect to which a subcontracting plan is required under paragraph (4) or (5)) which is attributable to the goal for the utilization as subcontractors of such specified subcategory of small business concerns under such plan.

REV_00164122

"(B) APPLICABLE AMOUNT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable amount' means, with respect to any agency that fails to meet a Government-wide goal for a fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable percentage for such fiscal year of the total value of all prime contract awards made by such agency for such fiscal year.

"(C) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the Government-wide percentage goal for participation by such specified subcategory of small business concerns for the fiscal year.

"(ii) TRANSITION RULES.—In the case of fiscal years 2004 through 2008:

"(I) 3 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, small business concerns owned and

controlled by service-disabled veterans, and qualified HUBZone small business concerns, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	0.5%
2005	1%
2006	1.5%
2007	2%
2008	2.5%.

"(II) 5 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals and small business concerns owned and controlled by women, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	1%
2005	2%
2006	3%
2007	4%
2008	5%.

"(11) RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this paragraph, a contracting officer may restrict competition for any contract for the procurement of goods or services by the Federal Government to any specified category of small business concerns, if—

REV_00164124

"(i) the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that two or more small business concerns of such category will submit offers for the contract;

"(ii) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) does not exceed the simplified acquisition threshold;

"(iii) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price;

"(iv) the award of such contract to a small business concern of such category will not result in the agency exceeding the greater of the Government-wide goal or the agency goal under this subsection with respect to such category; and

"(v) each of the concerns—

"(I) is certified by the Administrator or any person or entity approved by the Administrator as a small business concern of such category; or

REV_00164125

"(II) certifies to the contracting officer that it is a small business concern of such category and provides adequate documentation, in accordance with standards established by the Administration, to support such certification.

"(B) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER CONTRACTING PREFERENCES.—A procurement shall not be made from a source on the basis of a preference provided in subparagraph (A), if the procurement would otherwise be made from a different source under section 4124 or 4125 of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(C) VERIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—In carrying out this paragraph, the Administrator shall establish procedures relating to—

"(i) the filing, investigation, and disposition by the Administration of any challenge to the eligibility of a small business concern to receive assistance under this paragraph (including a challenge, filed by an interested party, relating to the veracity of a certification referred to in subparagraph (A)(v)); and

"(ii) verification by the Administrator of the accuracy of any certification made or information provided under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(D) EXAMINATIONS.—The procedures established under subparagraph (C) may provide for program examinations (including random program examinations) by the Administrator of any small business concern certified under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(E) PROVISION OF DATA.—Upon the request of the Administrator, the head of any Federal agency shall promptly provide to the Administrator such information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this paragraph.

"(F) PENALTIES.—In addition to the penalties described in section 16(d), any small business concern that is determined by the Administrator to have misrepresented the status of that concern as part of a specified category of small business concerns for purposes of this paragraph shall be subject to—

"(i) section 1001 of title 18, United States Code; and

"(ii) sections 3729 through 3733 of title 31, United States Code.

"(G) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5)).

"(12) APPLICABLE SUBCONTRACTS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'applicable subcontract' means any subcontract under a contract that is subject to the requirements of paragraph (4) or (5) of section 8(d).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 15(h)(2) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F), and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) The total number and dollar value of prime contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns through—

"(i) noncompetitive negotiation;

REV_00164128

"(ii) competition restricted to such specified category; and

"(iii) unrestricted competition.

"(E) The total number and dollar value of applicable subcontracts (as defined in subsection (g)(12)) awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(F) The information described in subparagraphs (D) and (E) stated separately with respect to each agency.".

SEC. 5. REQUIREMENTS RELATED TO SUBCONTRACTING PLANS.

(a) FACTORS FOR EVALUATING OFFERS.—Subparagraph (G) of section 8(d)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(G) In the case of any contract that is awarded pursuant to the negotiated method of procurement, the following shall be treated as significant factors for purposes of evaluating offers for any such contract:

"(i) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan for small business participation in the performance of the contract exceeds the requirement described in paragraph (6)(A).

"(ii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan provides for the use of small business concerns with respect to which the contractor is serving as a mentor under a mentoring program established by the agency.

"(iii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the offeror attained applicable goals for small business participation in the performance of past and current contracts.".

(b) MINIMUM GOAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 8(d)(6) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) percentage goals for the utilization as subcontractors of each specified category of small business concerns (determined in accordance with the requirement of section 15(g)(9)), which goal for the utilization of small business concerns shall be not less than the percentage goal established under section 15(g)(2);".

(c) REQUIRED PENALTY FOR MATERIAL BREACH.—Paragraph (8) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(8)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "If a contracting officer finds the prime contractor or any subcontractor to be in material breach under this paragraph, such prime contractor shall pay a penalty in an amount determined by such officer, except that such penalty shall not be less than 10 percent of the total dollar value of the contract under which the prime contractor or subcontractor is in material breach. Rules similar to the rules of paragraph (4)(F)(ii) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amount of any penalty collected under this paragraph shall be paid over to the agency that let the contract and may be retained and used by such agency for any operating expense of the agency.''.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

(a) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 3(q) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(q)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'service-disabled veteran' means any veteran with a disability that is—

''(A) service-connected (as defined in section 101(16) of title 38, United States Code); and

''(B) rated at 10 percent or more disabling by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs or, in the case of a disability not rated by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, by the Secretary concerned

REV_00164131

(as defined in section 101(25) of title 38, United States Code).".

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—A small business concern that is receiving assistance under this Act (or if fully approved to receive such assistance) on the date of the enactment of this Act shall not cease to qualify for such assistance solely because of the amendment made by paragraph (1). The preceding sentence shall not make such concern eligible for any other assistance.

(b) SPECIFIED CATEGORIES AND SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—Section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(r) SPECIFIED CATEGORY OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each of following is a specified category of small business concerns:

"(1) Small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans.

"(2) Small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans.

"(3) Qualified HUBZone small business concerns.

REV_00164132

"(4) Small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals.

"(5) Small business concerns owned and controlled by women.

"(6) Small business concerns.

"(s) SPECIFIED SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each specified category of small business concerns described in paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (r) is a specified subcategory of small business concerns.".

SEC. 7. UNIFORM APPLICATION OF DEFINITIONS OF SPECIFIED CATEGORIES AND SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Section 8(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(1)) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women," and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women"

and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(2) Paragraphs (4)(D), (4)(E), (6)(C), (6)(F), and (10)(B) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 15(h) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(4) Section 16(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(d)(1)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'," and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

(5) Section 16(e) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(e)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'" and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

REV_00164134

(b) APPLICATION TO CONTRACT CLAUSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(3)) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences of subparagraph (A), by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears in each sentence and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns";

(B) by striking subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), (F), and (G); and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) As used in this contract, the term 'specified category of small business concerns' has the meaning given such term pursuant to section 3 of the Small Business Act and relevant regulations promulgated thereto.

"(D) The contractor shall presume that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a) of the Small Business Act.

"(E) Contractors acting in good faith may rely on written representations by their subcontractors regarding their status as being part of any specified category of small business concerns.".

"(t) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this Act:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals' means a small business concern—

"(A) which is at least 51 percent owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; or, in the case of any publicly owned business, at least 51 percent of the stock of which is owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; and

"(B) whose management and daily business operations are controlled by one or more of such individuals.".

"(2) APPLICATION OF DEFINITION BY PERSONS OTHER THAN THE ADMINISTRATION.—Any individual or entity (other than the Administration) shall presume for purposes of carrying out any program that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a).".

(3) TREATMENT OF REFERENCES TO DEFINITIONS.—Any reference in a law, regulation, or other document of the United States to the meaning or definition given to the term "small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals", "small business concern owned and controlled by women", "small business concern owned and controlled by veterans", or "qualified HUBZone small business concern" in section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C.

637(d)(3)) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) shall be treated as a reference to the meaning or definition given such term in section 3 of the Small Business Act (as amended by this Act).

I had not seen Haynes' letter on this until today. In light of that letter (which opposes inclusion of military members in the proposal), I have added the Sec. of Defense to the consultation list and changed the military exclusion to exclude all military personnel on active duty. I will have LRD circulate this version per Jay's request.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable George Allen
The Honorable Elizabeth Dole
The Honorable John R. Edwards
The Honorable Barbara A. Mikulski
The Honorable Paul S. Sarbanes

Subject: 4th Circuit Md./Va. seat

I'm interested in the issue of the 4th Circuit Md./Va. seat. Irrespective of Mr. Allen's merits, the moving of this seat seems pretty aggressive to me. On the other hand, I understand that y'all have had real trouble finding names the Md. senators would do business over. I know that both you and Keisler were discussed and that one or the other of the Md. senators said no. Are there others as well? Can you give me any kind of sense of why, in your judgment, this step was necessary?

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

REQUEST: White House Briefing for the Corporate Council on Africa and Liberty Education Forum

BACKGROUND:

Corporate Council on Africa:

The Corporate Council on Africa (CCA), established in 1992, is at the forefront of strengthening and facilitating the commercial relationship between the United States and the African continent. CCA works closely with governments, multilateral groups and business to improve the African continent's trade and investment climate, and to raise the profile of Africa in the US business community.

CCA programs are designed to bring together potential business partners and raise Africa's investment profile in the US by developing critical contacts and business relationships and providing a forum for the exchange of information and ideas.

Liberty Education Forum

Liberty Education Forum (LEF) was originally established to provide a non-partisan education and research component to complement the work of the Log Cabin Republicans. But with a full-scale launching on July 21, 2001, the Liberty Education Forum is a brand new educational think tank - based in Washington, D.C. - that is dedicated to new ideas and new directions for the gay community, with a centrist approach. The mission of the Liberty Education Forum is to work toward achieving individual freedom and fairness for gay Americans by applying the principles of individual rights, individual responsibilities, free markets and limited government. The Log Cabin Republicans are a part of the White House Judicial Coalition as well as the AIDS Coalition.

MEASURING PENSION LIABILITIES

Testimony of the Honorable Peter R. Fisher
Under Secretary for Domestic Finance
U.S. Department of the Treasury

Before the Subcommittee on Select Revenue Measures
Committee on Ways and Means
United States House of Representatives

April 30, 2003

Chairman McCrery, Ranking Member McNulty, and members of the Committee, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss with you the need to strengthen Americans' retirement security by measuring accurately pension liabilities.

There is a pension funding problem in America today. Although Wall Street firms estimate that current pension underfunding runs to hundreds of billions of dollars, the markets do not have accurate, timely data on corporate pension liabilities. The absence of a clear picture of the extent of defined benefit pension underfunding creates a cloud of uncertainty in equity markets. Moreover, without an accurate measure of liabilities, the minimum funding rules, which rely upon an accurate measurement of pension liabilities, could lead to insufficient (or excessive) funding of pension promises.

To deal with this challenge, an important step is to develop a more accurate, reliable, and timely measure of pension liabilities.

As we go about this task, we must remember that behind all the technical details we will discuss is the retirement security of hardworking Americans. Our ultimate goal must be to improve pension security for workers and retirees by strengthening the financial health of the voluntary defined benefit pension system that they rely upon. That system is complex, with many interdependent parts. Achieving our objective of secure pensions requires that those pensions be well-funded, that plan sponsors be able and willing to support the defined benefit system, and that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation's financial integrity be assured. All three of these groups have an interest in a sustainable program, so all have an interest in getting to the right solution. In addition, any changes we undertake need to be implemented in a manner that promotes the stability and resiliency of our financial system and financial markets.

Before proceeding, let me first note that H.R. 1776, the Pension Preservation and Savings Expansion Act of 2003, recognizes the urgency of pension reform and of promoting retirement security. Its chief sponsors, Congressmen Portman and Cardin, are to be commended for their leadership in this complex, but critical area of public policy. I would also note that H.R. 1000, the Pension Security Act of 2003, introduced by Rep. Boehner advances principles for improving the defined contribution system that the President set forth last year. My testimony, however, will focus just on the issue of measuring pension liabilities.

In our view, overall pension reform that will lead to more secure pensions for American workers and retirees requires three steps: first, develop a more accurate, reliable, and timely measure of pension liabilities; second, fix the pension funding rules; and third, establish transition rules so as to avoid an abrupt change in firms' funding plans.

The predicate step to making pensions more secure is to develop a more precise measurement of pension liabilities. My testimony today will focus on this critical step and, in particular, on the issue of replacing the 30-year Treasury rate as the discount rate used in measuring pension liabilities. As I will explain, it is critical that Congress develop an appropriate, permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities. However, there are many critical questions that need to be answered before settling upon that replacement. Thus, to give firms the certainty they need to plan for their short-term pension funding obligations, we recommend extending the current temporary corridor for two more years. At the same time, we need to begin work immediately on getting to that permanent replacement and to dealing with other problems with the current system.

Discounting Future Pension Benefit Payments to Today's Dollars

Making pensions more secure requires a more precise measurement of pension liabilities. The amount of pension liabilities determines a plan sponsor's annual funding obligation. Without a reliable measure of pension liabilities, plan sponsors may not contribute sufficient funds to their pension plan – or may contribute more than they need to for the obligations undertaken.

In addition, without accurate, reliable measures neither plan beneficiaries, investors, nor the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation know how big the pension obligation may be for a given firm. Investors that do not have a clear picture of a company's pension liabilities factor that uncertainty into their credit evaluation of the firm, raising its borrowing costs and lowering its stock price.

In order to get to a more accurate measure of pension liabilities, we need to agree on how to discount future benefit payments to today's dollars. After describing why this is so, I will then describe why we believe that we should be working towards a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities.

Using a Discount Rate to Measure Pension Liabilities

REV_00164236

Pension liabilities are measured as the discounted present value of the future benefit payments to be made to a pension plan's participants. These future benefit payments depend upon numerous factors, including the terms of the particular plan and actuarial and mortality assumptions about plan participants.

To get the present value – that is, the cost in today's dollars of these future payments – those future payments must be "discounted" by some interest rate to show how many dollars today are equivalent to those payments in the future. As the interest rate that is used to discount future benefit payments declines, the value of those liabilities increases.

A simple example explains this concept. Suppose someone was offered the choice between $100 today and $110 a year from now. If that person could invest $100 today at a 10 percent annual return, the two offers would have the same economic value. If however, interest rates were lower and the person could only earn 5 percent annually, the offers would not have the same economic value. Instead, the person would need to be offered $104.76 today for the offers to be economically equivalent. Thus as interest rates decline, the amount of money a pension plan needs today (to have in discounted present value terms the amount of money needed to make future benefit payments) increases.

Background on the Use of the 30-Year Treasury Rate

Federal law sets minimum funding rules for private pension plans. These rules reflect the complex actuarial work needed to determine the amount of assets that a plan should hold to meet its benefit obligations many years into the future. One of the most important of these rules is the interest rate for discounting pension liabilities. Since 1987, the law has used the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds as the basis for this interest rate. The measurement of a pension plan's liabilities calculated using this rate is the basis for the federal "backstop" funding rules applied to underfunded pension plans.

Congress chose the 30-year Treasury rate as an approximation of interest rates used in the group annuity market. In other words, Congress wanted a discount rate that would reflect how much an insurance company would charge a pension plan to assume responsibility for the plan's benefit obligations.

Although additional refinements have occurred since 1987, the rate on the 30-year Treasury bond continues to play a prominent role in determining pension liabilities for funding purposes. Until recently, pension plans could determine the value of their pension liabilities using any rate between 90 percent and 105 percent of the four-year moving average of the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds. As I will explain shortly, last year, Congress temporarily increased the upper end of this corridor to 120 percent. Note that the upper end of the corridor produces a larger discount rate and hence a smaller measured liability and a smaller funding requirement. The lower end of the corridor produces the reverse – a larger measured liability and hence greater required funding.

However, the Treasury Department does not believe that using the 30-year Treasury bond rate produces an accurate measurement of pension liabilities.

Why We Need to Replace the 30-Year Rate in Measuring Pension Liabilities

The discontinuation of the issuance of the 30-Year bond – which was part of much needed changes in Treasury financing of government debt – makes replacement of the 30-year rate in pension law necessary. However, we believe that regardless of whether the discontinuation had occurred or not, there was already growing evidence and concern that the 30-year Treasury was becoming less relevant as a benchmark for use in pension calculations.

One reason the 30-year Treasury has become less relevant is because of changes in pensions themselves. The lengthy time structure of the 30-year bond makes it less and less relevant when compared to the shortening time structure of the payments of many defined benefit pension plans. This shortened time structure is the consequence of the increasing average age of active and terminated deferred participants and the increased proportion of participants represented by retirees. Using a long-term rate to discount all pension obligations understates the true cost of obligations that will be paid sooner whenever the yield curve is upward sloping (as is true now and is generally the case).

In addition, changes in the Treasury bond market and in financial markets more broadly have made the 30-year Treasury rate less reflective of the cost of group annuities and less accurate as a benchmark for pension liabilities. The difference between the Treasury yield curve and a high-grade corporate bond curve is not fixed, and that spread is wider today than it was in 1987.

In response to these concerns, last year Congress provided for a temporary expansion of the upper range of the allowable corridor surrounding the 30-year Treasury for calculating the interest rate used to determine current liability. This temporary change expires at the end of this year. In the absence of a permanent replacement or an extension of last year's expansion of the upper range, the law will "snap back" to 105 percent as the upper end of the corridor.

Such an outcome would, in our view, increase the discrepancy between the discount rate mandated in the law and that used to price group annuities. And since minimum funding rules are based upon measured (current) liabilities, a discount rate that further distorts that measurement will also distort the funding requirements.

Consequently, we believe that Congress should take action this year to avoid this "snap back." And, since firms need to make plans now for the funding contributions they will make next year, we also believe that Congress needs to act quickly on this matter.

Finding a Permanent Replacement for the 30-year Treasury Rate

We need to get to a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in computing pension liabilities.

H.R. 1776 offers a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury with a measure based upon long-term high-quality corporate bond rates. We believe that moving from a Treasury full faith and credit discount rate to one based on rates on high-quality long-term corporate bonds could improve the accuracy of measuring pension liabilities. Pension benefit promises made by private sponsors are not without risk since pension sponsors, unlike the Federal government, can and do go out of business. We think that this risk should be reflected in the computation of pension liabilities. We also understand that high-grade corporate bond rates are used in group annuity pricing.

Before Congress selects any permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate, however, it will be necessary to consider several key issues, including the following.

First, different pension plans have different benefit payment schedules, some with quite immediate payment requirements and others whose expected payments are distant in the future. We know that the yields available on financial instruments are different for these different maturities; typically yields relevant to closer maturities are lower. Thus the question arises whether an accurate present value measurement of these different benefit payments – some made in the near-term and some in the distant future – should be discounted at rates appropriate to their respective timing.

Both economic theory and current practice in fixed-income markets suggest that the most accurate way to measure the present value of a stream of future cash flows would be to match the cash flows occurring at a particular time with a discount rate that reflects the interest rate on a portfolio of financial instruments with the same maturity date. In this way, the discount rates used would be reflecting the time structure of the cash flows. In principle, an accurate measurement of pension liabilities, which is the present value of a series of benefit payments to be made over time, could be more accurately measured if the discount rate used was related to the time structure of those benefit payments.

Thus, we suggest it would be important to consider whether and how to reflect the time structure of a pension plan's future benefit payments in determining the appropriate discount rate to use.

Second, under current law, the measurement of both assets and liabilities involve "smoothing" techniques, as do the funding requirements. Properly measured, pension liabilities are the cost in today's prices of meeting a pension plan's future obligations. If a pension plan's obligations were to be settled today in the group annuity market, their value would be determined using today's interest rates rather than an average of rates over the past several years, which is the current practice.

Using current, unsmoothed interest rates would promote transparency. An accountant or analyst evaluating a pension plan can readily determine the funded status of the plan if asset values are expressed at current market prices and liabilities are computed using current unsmoothed discount rates. When either or both of these measures are smoothed, however, it is very difficult to determine the plan's funded status with any degree of certainty. While there may be sound reasons to measure current interest rates for discounting purposes using something other than the spot rates on a particular trading day, the current practice of using a four-year average of interest rates raises important questions as to the accuracy of the resulting liability measurement.

Thus, we suggest that consideration be given to whether continuing this practice advances the ultimate objective. It may be that there are compelling arguments to allow for some smoothing with respect to the funding contributions that plan sponsors make to their pension plans. We need to carefully review whether four-year smoothing of the discount rate used for purposes of measuring a pension plan's liabilities continues to make sense.

Third, under current law, pension liabilities are calculated using one discount rate but lump sum payments made by pension plans are calculated using a different discount rate. The pension liability measurement we are discussing is the basis for funding contributions to be made by plan sponsors – some of which will ultimately fund workers' annuity pension payments but some of which will be paid to workers in the form of a lump sum. Thus, we suggest that it would be worth considering whether and how a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities should relate to any possible changes in the discount rate used to calculate lump sum payments.

To this point, my remarks have focused on issues to consider in selecting a permanent replacement discount rate for measuring pension liabilities. While these issues are critical to the goal of achieving an accurate measurement of those liabilities, there are additional issues unrelated to the discount rate replacement that should also be considered.

Thus, we suggest that, in the process of working towards a more accurate measurement of pension liabilities, the mortality table and the retirement assumptions that underlie the computation of current liability also be evaluated. There is also the question of whether a sponsor in computing current liability should be allowed to recognize that some retirees opt for lump sums rather than annuities at retirement. Under current law current liability assumes that all retirees take their retirement in the form of an annuity. These questions require further study.

I believe that we all need to consider the issues that I have just described to ensure that any permanent replacement to the 30-year Treasury rate results in an accurate measurement of pension liabilities. The consequence of failing to replace the 30-year Treasury rate with an appropriate discount rate methodology will lead to inaccurate measurement of pension liabilities. Such an outcome, in turn, will lead to under- or over-funding of pension plans. The former outcome would make pensions less secure for workers and retirees. The latter outcome could place an undue burden on plan sponsors by shifting more corporate funds to the pension plan than are necessary to fund the company's pension obligations.

Interim Steps

Companies have told us that they need to know what their cash requirements are for funding next year's funding obligation by the end of the second quarter of this year, but further work is needed to define an accurate measurement of pension liability. While we have considered alternatives to the discount rate methodology proposed in H.R. 1776, we are not yet to the point of offering a specific replacement. Yet we agree with those who say that quick congressional action on modifying current law is essential, both because in the absence of such action the law reverts to a discount rate methodology that would be even more distorting than the current rate and because plan sponsors need certainty soon in order to plan for next year's funding requirements.

To that end, we recommend that Congress enact legislation before the end of this June to extend the short-term interest rate corridor relief that Congress provided in 2002. We would propose that, for plan years beginning in 2004 and 2005, the upper bound of the interest rate corridor for the deficit reduction contribution continue to be 120 percent of the 4-year weighted average of the yield on 30-year Treasury securities.

During the time offered by the two year extension, we would look forward to working with Congress and pension stakeholders to work through the complex but critical issues I have described that must be addressed to ensure accurate pension liability measurement and, more importantly, advance our ultimate objective of making pensions more secure.

The change in the method of determining pension liabilities may result in changes in the annual contribution amounts, so transition relief will be required. In addition, these changes may lead us to consider changes in the current funding rules which would increase the security of the pension promises made to America's workers and their families.

I would like to stress the need for quick action on this temporary extension of the corridor. This action is needed to give companies time to budget for next year's funding obligation. At the same time, however, we must also move quickly to deal with the complex questions I have outlined in my testimony. We need to work expeditiously to come up with a permanent solution, not just for how best to measure liabilities but also for the funding rule changes that are needed. The testimony you are about to receive from PBGC's Executive Director Steve Kandarian illustrates the urgency of the work before us. We look forward working with you to advance this interim solution and to satisfy the long-term need for accuracy in the measurement of pension liabilities.

Conclusion

Defined benefit pensions are a valuable benefit and the cornerstone of many workers' retirement security. Recent financial market trends have exposed underlying weaknesses in the system, weaknesses that must be corrected if that system is to remain viable in the long run. It will take considerable time and effort to fix the system. Developing acceptable solutions will also require the cooperation and flexibility of all interested parties.

While we must avoid unnecessary delay, the seriousness of current pension problems and the complexity of the defined benefit system suggest that repairing the system will require time for study and for consensus building. That is why we recommend that Congress, rather than making a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate this year, extend for an additional two year period the temporary increase of the pension discount rate used to compute current liability.

During this two year period government, industry, and participants will have adequate time to develop a set of consistent coherent proposals that will insure that pension funding is adequate, that pension demands on firm finances are reasonable and that the financial integrity of the pension insurance system will be maintained for the workers and retirees that are counting on it for their retirement security. DRAFT

Statement of Honorable Leo S. Mackay, Jr., Ph.D.
DEPUTY SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS
SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS

APRIL 30, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for providing me the opportunity to testify before you this morning on three measures affecting Department of Veterans Affairs education and vocational rehabilitation programs and small-business opportunities for veterans. The three bills on today's hearing agenda include: H.R. 1460, the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"; H.R. 1716, the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"; and H.R. 1712, the "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003." VA supports a majority of the proposals set forth in these measures.

Before I discuss the bills the Subcommittee is considering today, I would like to note that, although the Budget Enforcements Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002, the Administration supports the extension of these budget enforcement mechanisms in a manner that ensures fiscal discipline and is consistent with the President's budget. As you know, these measures would affect direct spending and receipts and, therefore, the support VA expresses for the bills is contingent on accommodating the provisions within the overall budget submitted by the President.

H.R. 1460 – "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of H.R. 1460 would amend provisions of title 38, United States Code, to permit veterans to use VA educational assistance benefits to enroll in non-degree, non-credit business "entrepreneurship" courses offered by small business development centers or offered by the National Veterans Small Business Development Corporation. Specifically, section 2 of the bill would provide that State approving agencies may approve non-credit courses of business education that enable or assist persons to start or enhance small business enterprises. "Qualified providers" of such entrepreneurship courses would include small business development centers, as defined by section 21 of the Small Business Act, and the National Veterans Business Development Corporation. A person would not be considered by VA as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of an entrepreneurship course solely because he or she is the owner or operator of a business. These amendments apply to courses approved by State approval agencies after the date of enactment of the Act.

Veterans would receive several benefits from such courses. Some veterans are not willing or able to complete a degree program. This program offers a viable alternative to a complete degree program for those wishing to start a small business. Moreover, veterans who take advantage of these courses are more likely to succeed as small-business entrepreneurs. The potential for positive effects on the economy, with enhanced competition and creativity within the marketplace, is significant. The bill's provision for oversight of these courses by State Approving Agencies should ensure program quality. For these reasons, we strongly support enactment of this provision.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $1.5 million in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $32 million.

Section 3 of H.R. 1460 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 3104 to provide that, for purposes of pursuing a program of vocational rehabilitation under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, a disabled veteran may establish "self-employment" in a small business enterprise as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement of unemployability.

Current law permits us to serve veterans with the most severe service-connected disabilities who require self employment and/or homebound training in order to achieve an acceptable level of vocational rehabilitation. We are also able to provide limited assistance to other veterans with employment handicaps.

Mr. Chairman, last month the Department established a new advisory committee, the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (VR&E) Task Force, and charged it with conducting an independent review of the VR&E program. Among other responsibilities, it will evaluate eligibility criteria for vocational rehabilitation services under VA's program, and report its recommendations to the Secretary. We are asking the Task Force to evaluate the merits of the change in law proposed by section 3 of H.R. 1460, and will be furnishing you our official views once we have the benefit of that advice.

Enactment of this section would result in a cost of $750,000 in fiscal year 2004 and a ten-year total cost of $101 million.

Section 4 of H.R. 1460 would authorize a contracting officer to make sole source awards to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans (SDVBs) if such business is determined to be capable of performing the contract, award can be made at a fair price, there is no reasonable expectation that two or more SDVBs would submit offers, and certain dollar thresholds are not exceeded. It would also authorize contracting officers to restrict competition to SDVBs if there is a reasonable expectation that at least two SDVBs will submit offers and award can be made at a fair market price. The Administrator of the Small Business Administration would have the authority to appeal contracting officers' decisions not to award a contract opportunity to SDVBs to the Secretary of the department or agency head. This law would not supercede any other preference under law for prison-made (Federal Prison Industries) products or products made by the blind or disabled (JWOD).

VA supports section 4 of H.R. 1460. Providing business opportunities to veterans who own small businesses is altogether consistent with VA's mission to serve our Nation's veterans and will help VA and the Nation honor its commitment to them.

We estimate the total cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1460 to be $2.25 million for fiscal year 2004 and $133 million over ten years.

H.R. 1716 – "Veterans Earn and Learn Act"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1716 would amend title 38, United States Code, to improve VA educational assistance programs for apprenticeship and other on-job training.

Section 2 of the bill would modify the computation of on-job training and apprenticeship benefit entitlements under chapters 34 and 35 of title 38, United States Code, to be the same as the entitlement charged under chapters 30 and 32, of that title, as well as under the chapter 1606, title 10 U.S.C. program. This would provide needed uniformity in calculating use of entitlement for such training regardless of the benefit chapter under which a student is eligible, resulting in greater equity for veterans.

Section 3 of the bill would establish an incentive payment for program participants who finish their apprenticeship training early by requiring VA to pay the trainee a lump-sum payment for the months of VA entitlement remaining that would have ordinarily been needed to complete the apprenticeship. We believe the incentive would motivate competent individuals to complete their apprenticeship training sooner, thereby resulting in a more efficient use of benefits.

Section 4 of the bill would increase the monthly VA benefit for trainees who simultaneously pursue apprenticeships or on-job training and related classroom instruction (whether or not the trainee was pursuing the academic instruction as a requirement of the apprenticeship or voluntarily under the trainee's own initiative). Currently, education benefits for apprenticeship and on-the-job training start at 75 percent of the benefit rate payable for full-time institutional training and these job training benefits decrease in stages as the individual progresses through the training program. This section would pay the full-time institutional rate for periods when the individual is in required classroom courses while also in the job training program. It will also allow individuals who voluntarily enroll in related courses to receive an increase based on the combined training, but not to exceed the full-time institutional rate. We support this proposal.

Section 5 of the bill would codify VA's authority to pay benefits for competency-based apprenticeships. It would require VA to take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor. Apprenticeships offered in industries that choose not to register with the Secretary of Labor, and that are approved for veterans' training by a state approving agency, would continue to be available. It would also authorize VA to use up to $3 million to develop the computer systems and procedures needed to carry out the above provisions of the bill. Current law permits approval of only time-based, fixed length apprenticeships. The 1990's saw a steady move away from time-based apprenticeships toward competency-based apprenticeships. We support this change as it would bring approval of apprenticeships into the 21st century and allow VA to pay educational assistance to more veterans.

Section 6 of the bill would require VA to establish a pilot program to furnish on-job benefits to claims adjudicators training in its disability compensation, dependency and indemnity (DIC), and pension programs. The pilot program would permit on-the-job training programs of up to 3 years to be approved for claims adjudicators who handle VA's Compensation and Pension programs. VA supports this program for claims adjudicators. Based on our past experience, the duration of this type of training would be approximately two years.

Section 7 of the bill would require coordination of information among the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Defense, and Labor with respect to on-job training. The Secretary of Defense would be required to furnish to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during his or her active duty service. It would also require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, to encourage and assist states and private organizations to accord credit to servicemembers for skills in any related apprenticeship the servicemember may pursue in civilian life. We believe such level of coordination would be beneficial so that veterans can receive full credit for their military training and not have to unnecessarily repeat training they received while on active duty.

We estimate the benefits cost associated with enactment of H.R. 1716 to be $47.7 million for fiscal year 2004 and $548.4 million over ten years.

H.R. 1712 – "Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003"

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1712 would require the Administrator of the Small Business Administration (SBA) to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by service disabled veterans similar to the Section 8(a) program for small business in general, where SBA executes a contract with an agency and subcontracts the work to the small business. The bill reauthorizes the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, first created in 1999, and adds reporting and planning requirements such as 5 year strategic and financial plans. The Corporation was created to expand the provision of and improve access to technical assistance regarding entrepreneurship for the Nation's veterans.

The bill sets a Government-wide goal of 28 percent for prime contracts awarded to small business concerns. It further breaks that goal down to 3 percent for veteran-owned, 3 percent for service-disabled-veteran-owned, 3 percent for HUBZone, 5 percent for socially and economically disadvantaged, and 5 percent for women-owned. Double counting of small businesses that meet more than one criterion is prohibited. Beginning in Fiscal Year 2004, for any agency that failed to meet the goals, funding would be restricted in the following fiscal year for awards solely to the specific subcategories of small businesses (whether prime contracts or approved subcontracting plans). This would be phased in for the various categories of small businesses between FY's 2004 and 2008.

The bill would allow an agency to restrict competition to specific categories of small businesses to meet the procurement goals. The bill would require in negotiated procurements that agencies include evaluation factors regarding small business subcontracting plans.

VA supports the provisions of section 4 of H.R. 1712 that would establish a goal of 3 percent for award of contracts to veteran-owned small businesses. As you may be aware, VA has established its own internal goal for award to veterans. However, I am concerned with other provisions of section 4 and section 5 that would raise the small business goal, prohibit double counting of acquisitions, restrict the use of appropriations, and mandate the use of certain evaluation factors in negotiated acquisitions. The Government is already struggling to meet its current goals, and raising those goals would not be beneficial. Prohibiting double counting would have the effect of raising the thresholds further and making it that much more difficult for agencies to meet their goals. Furthermore, the provisions of section 4 that place restrictions on the use of funds in the case of agency failure to meet goals would create a quota system for award of contracts to socioeconomic groups. That, and the evaluation factor mandate, removes the flexibility agencies need to be able to successfully carry out their missions.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my testimony.

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the use of education benefits under such title for certain entrepreneurship courses, to permit veterans enrolled in a vocational rehabilitation program under chapter 31 of such title to have self-employment as a vocational goal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00164257

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Entrepreneurship Act of 2003".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION FOR STATE APPROVING AGENCIES TO APPROVE CERTAIN ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.

(a) APPROVAL OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3675 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) A State approving agency may approve the entrepreneurship courses offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'entrepreneurship course' means a non-degree, non-credit course of business education that enables or assists a person to start or enhance a small business enterprise.

"(3) Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) do not apply to—

"(A) an entrepreneurship course offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses; and

"(B) a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses by reason of such provider offering one or more entrepreneurship courses.".

(b) BUSINESS OWNERS NOT TREATED AS ALREADY QUALIFIED.—Section 3471 of such title is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following: "The Secretary shall not treat a person as already qualified for the objective of a program of education offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses solely because such person is the owner or operator of a business.''.

(c) INCLUSION OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF PROGRAM OF EDUCATION.—Subsection (b) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any course, or combination of courses, offered by a qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''

(d) INCLUSION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES IN DEFINITION OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION.—Subsection (c) of section 3452 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Such term also includes any qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses.''.

(e) DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED PROVIDER OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP COURSES.—Section 3452 of such title is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(h) The term 'qualified provider of entrepreneurship courses' means—

''(1) a small business development center described in section 21 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648), and

REV_00164259

"(2) the National Veterans Business Development Corporation (established under section 33 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 657c)) insofar as the Corporation offers or sponsors an entrepreneurship course (as defined in section 3675(c)(2) of this title).".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to courses approved by State approving agencies after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT AS A VOCATIONAL GOAL FOR VETERANS RECEIVING VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Section 3104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Any person entitled to a rehabilitation program under this chapter may establish self-employment as a vocational goal without regard to any requirement that the person be unemployable.".

SEC. 4. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

REV_00164260

"SEC. 36. PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

"(a) SOLE SOURCE CONTRACTS.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award a sole source contract to any small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if—

"(1) such concern is determined to be a responsible contractor with respect to performance of such contract opportunity and the contracting officer does not have a reasonable expectation that 2 or more small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers for the contracting opportunity;

"(2) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) will not exceed—

"(A) $5,000,000, in the case of a contract opportunity assigned a standard industrial classification code for manufacturing; or

"(B) $3,000,000, in the case of any other contract opportunity; and

"(3) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price.

REV_00164261

"(b) RESTRICTED COMPETITION.—In accordance with this section and not withstanding any other provision of law, a contracting officer may award contracts on the basis of competition restricted to small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans if the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that not less than 2 small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans will submit offers and that the award can be made at a fair market price.

"(c) APPEAL BY ADMINISTRATOR.—Not later than 5 days after the date on which the Administration is notified of a contracting officer's decision not to award a contract opportunity under this section to a small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans, the Administrator may notify the contracting officer of the intent to appeal the contracting officer's decision, and within 15 days of such date the Administrator may file a written request for reconsideration of the contracting officer's decision with the Secretary of the department or agency head.

of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(e) ENFORCEMENT; PENALTIES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (5) and (6) of section 8(m) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(f) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this section, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5))."

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1716

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (for himself, Mr. EVANS, Mr. BROWN of South Carolina, and Mr. MICHAUD) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and in addition to the Committee on Armed Services, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve educational assistance programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs for apprenticeship or other on-job training, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Earn and Learn Act".

REV_00164264

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Educational assistance programs for veterans for apprenticeship and on-job training of the Department of Veterans Affairs assist employers to hire and retain skilled workers.

(2) These programs establish a link between training afforded to servicemembers while serving in the Armed Forces and training available in civilian settings for purposes of occupational licensing and credentialing.

(3) These programs develop a more highly educated and productive work force.

(c) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. MODIFICATION OF BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT CHARGES FOR CERTAIN ON-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(a) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

REV_00164265

ANCE.—Section 3687 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) For each month that an individual (as defined in paragraph (3)) is paid a training assistance allowance under subsection (a), the entitlement of the individual shall be charged at a percentage rate (rounded to the nearest percent) that is equal to the ratio of—

"(A) such training assistance allowance for the period of months involved, to

"(B) the applicable monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for such period of months.".

"(2) For any month in which an individual fails to complete 120 hours of training, the entitlement otherwise chargeable under paragraph (1) shall be reduced in the same proportion as the monthly training assistance allowance payable is reduced under subsection (b)(3).

"(3) In this section, the term 'individual' means—

"(A) an eligible veteran for purposes of chapter 34 of this title who is entitled, under chapter 30 or 34 of this title, as the case may be, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3015(e) of this title, or

"(B) an eligible person for purposes chapter 35 of this title, who is entitled, under section 3510 of this title, to monthly educational assistance allowances payable under section 3532(a) of this title as the case may be.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INCENTIVE PAYMENT FOR EARLY COMPLETION OF APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 3032(c) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

''(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

''(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

REV_00164267

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter (and chapter 34 of this title, if applicable) shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).".

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in paragraph (2)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly benefit payment payable under this section for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of monthly benefit payments that could have been paid to the individual under this section for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of monthly benefit payments paid to the individual for the program under this section.

REV_00164268

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsections (c) and (d)."

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by striking "Except as provided in subsection (b)" and inserting "Subject to the succeeding provisions".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 3687, as amended by section 2(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual (as defined in subsection (e)(3) who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under subsection (a) for the successful completion of that program, and

"(B) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under subsection (a).

REV_00164269

"(2) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1), the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be charged at the applicable rate under subsection (e).".

(d) SELECTED RESERVE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—(1) Section 16131(d) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) In the case of an individual who successfully completes a full-time program of apprenticeship before entitlement to monthly educational assistance allowance payable under this subsection for that program is exhausted, the Secretary shall pay to the individual a lump-sum amount equal to the difference between—

"(i) the total amount of educational assistance allowances that could have been paid to the individual under this subsection for the successful completion of that program, and

"(ii) the amount of educational assistance allowance paid to the individual for the program under this subsection.

"(B) In the case of a lump sum payment paid to an individual under subparagraph (A), the individual's entitlement under this chapter shall be charged at the applicable rate under paragraph (3).''.

(2) Paragraph (1) of such section is amended by striking ''Except as provided in paragraph (2)'' and inserting ''Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to programs of training beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. INCREASE IN BENEFIT FOR INDIVIDUALS PURSUING APPRENTICESHIP OR ON-JOB TRAINING AND RELATED POSTSECONDARY CLASSROOM EDUCATION TRAINING.

(a) MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—Section 3032(c), as amended by section 3(a), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5)(A) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3015 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3015 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under such section 3015 to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(b) POST-VIETNAM ERA VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Section 3233, as amended by section 3(b), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to that individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of this title that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under this section shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3231 of this title for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(B) In no case may the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under subparagraph (A) exceed the amount payable under section 3231 of this title to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(3)(A) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this section.

"(B) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (2) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under paragraph (2).

"(C) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(2) Section 3231(a)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking "(2) Except as provided in paragraph (5)(E) of this subsection and in subsection (e) of this section" and inserting "(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), paragraph (5)(E),"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for appropriately reduced rates of the amount of the monthly payment otherwise applicable under subparagraph (A) for programs of educational or vocational assistance pursued on less than a full-time basis.".

(c) VETERANS' EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AND SURVIVORS' AND DEPENDENTS' EDUCATIONAL ASSIST-

REV_00164275

ANCE.—Section 3687, as amended by section 3(c), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) In the case of an individual (as defined in subsection (e)(3)) pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly training assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount of educational assistance allowance payable under section 3015(e) of this title or under section 3532(a) of this title, as the case may be, who is pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training, as the case may be, who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, the amount of the monthly training assistance allowance payable to the individual under this section shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under section 3015 of this title, or section 3532(a), as the case may be, for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(B) In no case may the amount of the monthly benefit payment payable to the individual under subparagraph (A) exceed the amount of educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under section 3015(e) of this or under section 3532(a) of this title, as the case may be, who is pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(3)(A) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (1) for a month, the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this section.

"(B) In the case of a monthly benefit payment paid to an individual under paragraph (2) for a month, the charge to the entitlement of the individual under chapter 30, 34, or 35 of this title for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under paragraph (2).

"(C) Any such charge to the entitlement of the individual shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(d) SELECTED RESERVE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.—Section 16131 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 3(d), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) In the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who, as a requirement of such program, is enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 38, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course is the amount payable under subsection (b) to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in the case of an individual pursuing a full-time program of apprenticeship or other on-job training under this chapter who has voluntarily enrolled in a course of classroom instruction approved under subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 38 that is related to such program, notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under this subsection shall be increased for each month (or fraction thereof) the individual is enrolled in such course by an amount equal to the applicable reduced rate established by the Secretary under subsection (b) for an approved program of education pursued on less than a full-time basis.

"(ii) In no case may the amount of the monthly educational assistance allowance payable to the individual under clause (i) exceed the amount payable under subsection (b) to an individual pursuing a program of education on a full-time basis.

"(C)(i) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (A) for a month, the individual's entitlement under this chapter for that month shall be charged at the rate that otherwise would apply but for this subsection.

"(ii) In the case of a monthly educational assistance allowance paid to an individual under subparagraph (B) for a month, the charge to the individual's entitlement for that month shall be increased proportionately in accordance with the increase in payment under subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Any such charge to the individual's entitlement shall be reduced proportionately in accordance with the reduction in payment under paragraph (2).".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. AUTHORITY FOR COMPETENCY-BASED APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 3672(c) is amended—

(1) by striking "(1)" and "(2)" and inserting, "(A)" and "(B)" respectively;

(2) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The period of a program of apprenticeship may be determined based upon a specific period of time (commonly referred to as a 'time-based program'), based upon the demonstration of successful mastery of skills (commonly referred to as a 'competency-based program'), or based upon a combination thereof.

"(3)(A) In the case of a competency-based program of apprenticeship, in determining the period of such a program, the Secretary shall take into consideration the approximate term of the program recommended in registered apprenticeship program standards recognized by the Secretary of Labor.

"(B) The sponsor of a competency-based program of apprenticeship shall provide notice to the Secretary of any such standards that may apply to the program and the proposed approximate period of training under the program.

"(4) The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary upon the successful completion of a program of apprenticeship by a veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.".

(b) INCREASED USE OF APPRENTICESHIPS.—Section 3672(d)(1) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Labor shall provide such assistance and services to the Secretary, and to State approving agencies, to increase the use of apprenticeships.".

(c) ON-JOB TRAINING.—Section 3677 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The sponsor of any program of training on the job shall submit notice to the Secretary upon the successful completion of the program by the veteran, eligible veteran, or eligible person, as the case may be.

"(2) The term 'training on the job' includes training commonly referred to as 'on-job learning'.".

(d) FUNDING FOR DEPARTMENT COMPUTER SYSTEM MODIFICATIONS.—From amounts appropriated to the Department of Veterans Affairs for fiscal year 2004 for readjustment benefits, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall use an amount not to exceed $3,000,000 to modify computer systems and to develop procedures required to carry out the amendments made by subsection (a) and sections 2, 3, and 4.

SEC. 6. PILOT PROGRAM TO PROVIDE ON-JOB BENEFITS TO TRAIN DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS' CLAIMS ADJUDICATORS.

Section 3677, as amended by section 5(c), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a pilot program under which, the Secretary shall operate a program of training on the job under this section for a period (notwithstanding subsection (c)(2)) of up to three years in duration to train employees of the Department to become qualified adjudicators of claims for compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, and pension.

"(2) Amounts of educational assistance, monthly benefit payments, and training assistance allowance under chapters 30, 31, 32, 34, and 35 of this title, as the case may be, shall be payable to such employees during each month of training under the program.

"(3)(A) Not later than 3 years after the implementation of the pilot project, the Secretary shall submit to Congress an initial report on the pilot project. The report shall include an assessment of the usefulness of the program in recruiting and retaining of personnel of the Department as well as an assessment of the value of the program as a training program.

"(B) Not later than 18 months after the date on which the initial report under subparagraph (A) is submitted, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a final report on the pilot project. The final report shall include recommendations of the Secretary with respect to continuation of the pilot project and with respect to expansion of the types of claims for which the extended period of on the job training is available to train such employees.

"(4) The pilot project shall terminate 5 years after the date of the implementation of the project.".

SEC. 7. REQUIREMENT FOR COORDINATION OF DATA AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.

Section 3694 is amended—

REV_00164283

(1) by striking "In carrying out" and inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) COORDINATION OF INFORMATION AMONG THE DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, DEFENSE, AND LABOR WITH RESPECT TO ON-JOB TRAINING.—At the time of a servicemember's discharge or release from active duty service, the Secretary of Defense shall furnish to the Secretary such pertinent information concerning each registered apprenticeship pursued by the servicemember during the period of active duty service of the servicemember. The Secretary, in conjunction with the Secretary of Labor, shall encourage and assist States and private organizations to give credit to servicemembers for the registered apprenticeship program so pursued in the case of any related apprenticeship program the servicemember may pursue as a civilian.".

SEC. 8. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) DEFINITION OF TRAINING ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 3452(e) is amended by striking "or any State apprenticeship agency, or any State board of vocational education, or any joint apprenticeship committee, or the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the

"National Apprenticeship Act" (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.)," and inserting "any State board of vocational education, any Federal or State apprenticeship registration agency, any joint apprenticeship committee established pursuant to the Act of August 16, 1937, popularly known as the 'National Apprenticeship Act' (29 U.S.C. 50 et seq.),".

(b) CLARIFICATION OF APPLICABLE APPRENTICESHIP STANDARDS.—(1) Section 3672(c), as amended by section 5(a), is amended in subparagraph (A) by inserting "apprenticeship" before "standards".

(2) Section 3672(d)(1) is amended by striking "of programs of training on the job (including programs of apprenticeship)" and inserting "of apprenticeship and on the job training programs".

(c) JOB TRAINING AND PLACEMENT FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT.—(1) Section 4102A, as amended by section 4(a) of the Jobs for Veterans Act (Public Law 107–288; 116 Stat. 2038), is amended by striking "October 1, 2002" in subsection (c)(2)(B)(ii) and inserting "October 1, 2003".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect as if included in the enactment of section 4(a) of the Jobs for Veterans Act (Public Law 107–288; 116 Stat. 2038).

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 1712

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. EVANS (for himself, Mr. FILNER, Mr. MICHAUD, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business

A BILL

To amend the Small Business Act to establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans, to reauthorize the programs of the National Veterans Business Development Corporation, to establish a Government-wide procurement goal for small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00164286

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Veterans Federal Procurement Opportunity Act of 2003''.

SEC. 2. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 36 as section 37 and by inserting after section 35 the following new section:

''SEC. 36. DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this section, the Administrator shall establish a development program for small business concerns owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans. The program established under this section shall be similar to the program described in sections 7(j) and 8(a).

''(b) ASSISTANCE AND SERVICES; RULES.—The program established under this section shall provide assistance and services, and be governed by rules, similar to the assistance and services provided under, and rules described in, subsections (a)(20) and (j) of section 7 and section 8(a).

''(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

REV_00164287

"(1) QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'qualified service-disabled veteran' means a service-disabled veteran who is economically disadvantaged within the meaning of section 8(a)(6), except that, solely for purposes of determining personal income under this section, no amount received by such veteran by reason of such veteran's service-connected disability or service as a member of the Armed Forces shall be taken into account in determining whether such veteran is economically disadvantaged.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY QUALIFIED SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by qualified service-disabled veterans' has the meaning given the term 'small business concern owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans' in section 3(q)(2), except that 'qualified service-disabled veteran' shall be substituted for 'service-disabled veteran'.".

REV_00164288

SEC. 3. REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF THE NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS OF NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION.—Subsection (k) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(k)) is amended by striking paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following new paragraphs:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Corporation to carry out this section—

"(A) $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004; and

"(B) $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 and 2006.

"(2) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—The amount made available to the Corporation for any fiscal year may not exceed the amount that the Corporation certifies that it will provide for that fiscal year from sources other than the Federal Government.".

(b) NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REPORTS.—Subsection (g) of section 33 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657c(g)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) REPORTS.—

REV_00164289

"(1) ANNUAL REPORT.—On or before October 1 of each year, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the activities and accomplishments of the Corporation for the preceding year. Such report shall include—

"(A) the Corporation's findings regarding the efforts of Federal, State, and private organizations to assist veterans in the formation and expansion of small business concerns;

"(B) a description of the progress made by the Corporation during such year in achieving its specified annual performance goals and objectives; and

"(C) any revisions to annual performance goals or indicators required to achieve specified strategic goals and objectives.

REV_00164290

Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the strategic objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include—

"(A) a comprehensive mission statement covering the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(B) the general outcome related strategic goals and objectives for each of the major functions and operations of the Corporation;

"(C) a description of the means and strategies, addressing both financial and non-financial resources, to be employed by the Corporation to achieve those specified strategic goals and objectives;

"(D) a description of the annual output and outcome related performance strategies, with associated performance goals and indicators, to be employed by the Corporation to help achieve the general goals and objectives contained in the strategic plan;

"(E) an identification of key factors that could affect the achievement of the Corporations general goals and objectives; and

"(F) a description of the program evaluations and performance indicators to be used by the Corporation to assess its achievement of strategic and annual performance goals and objectives.

"(3) 5-YEAR BUSINESS PLAN.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 5 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate a report describing the financial objectives of the Corporation for the 5-year period beginning on such date. Such report shall include a description of the specific plans to be implemented to achieve such objectives and the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (k) and to provide for the long-term financial viability of the Corporation.

"(4) AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS.—On or before October 1, 2003, and every 2 years thereafter, the Board of Directors shall transmit to the President, the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate an audited financial statement of the Corporation. Such statement shall be prepared by an independent external auditor and shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.''.

(c) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS BUSINESS AFFAIRS.—Subsection (h) of section 203 of the Veterans Entrepreneurship and Small Business Development Act of 1999 is amended by striking ''2004'' and inserting ''2009''.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE PROCUREMENT GOAL FOR SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS; AUTHORIZATION OF RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS; ETC.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 15(g) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(g)) is amended to read as follows:

''(g) GOVERNMENT-WIDE AND AGENCY SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT GOALS.—

REV_00164293

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT BY PRESIDENT OF GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—The President shall annually establish Government-wide goals for procurement contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 28 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(3) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY VETERANS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(4) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(5) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by qualified HUBZone small business concerns in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 3 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(6) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

"(7) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY WOMEN.—The Government-wide goal for participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by women in prime contracts or applicable subcontracts shall be established at not less than 5 percent of the total value of all prime contract awards for each fiscal year.

REV_00164295

"(8) AGENCY GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal agency shall have annual goals that present, for that agency, the maximum practicable opportunity for each specified category of small business concerns to perform prime contracts let by such agency and subcontracts under such prime contracts.

"(B) NOT LESS THAN GOVERNMENT-WIDE GOALS.—No Federal agency may have an agency goal under subparagraph (A) which is less than the corresponding Government-wide goal established by the President under paragraph (1).

"(C) PROCEDURE FOR ESTABLISHMENT.—Each year, the Administration and the head of each Federal agency shall jointly establish the goals described in subparagraph (A) for such agency. Whenever the Administration and the head of any Federal agency fail to agree on established goals, the disagreement shall be submitted to the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy for final determination.

"(D) EXPANSION OF PARTICIPATION.—For the purpose of establishing goals under this paragraph, the head of each Federal agency shall make consistent efforts to annually expand participation by small business concerns from each industry category in procurement contracts of the agency, including participation by each specified category of small business concerns. The head of each Federal agency, in attempting to attain such participation, shall consider—

"(i) contracts awarded as the result of unrestricted competition;

"(ii) contracts awarded as the result of restricted competition under this section and under the programs established under sections 8(a), 31, and 36; and

"(iii) subcontracts awarded pursuant to subcontracting plans required under paragraphs (4) or (5) of section 8(d).

"(9) DOUBLE COUNTING PROHIBITED.—In the case of a small business concern that is part of more than 1 specified subcategory of small business concerns, with respect to any prime contract or subcontract awarded to such concern, a Federal agency

shall treat such concern as part of only 1 such specified subcategory for purposes of this subsection.

"(10) RESTRICTION ON USE OF FUNDS IN CASE OF FAILURE TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of fiscal year 2004 and each fiscal year thereafter, if an agency fails to meet the Government-wide goal established under this subsection for such fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable amount of any amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to such agency for the following fiscal year shall be used only for—

"(i) procurements under any prime contract awarded to such specified subcategory of small business concerns, and

"(ii) that portion of procurements under any prime contract (with respect to which a subcontracting plan is required under paragraph (4) or (5)) which is attributable to the goal for the utilization as subcontractors of such specified subcategory of small business concerns under such plan.

REV_00164298

"(B) APPLICABLE AMOUNT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable amount' means, with respect to any agency that fails to meet a Government-wide goal for a fiscal year with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the applicable percentage for such fiscal year of the total value of all prime contract awards made by such agency for such fiscal year.

"(C) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to any specified subcategory of small business concerns, the Government-wide percentage goal for participation by such specified subcategory of small business concerns for the fiscal year.

"(ii) TRANSITION RULES.—In the case of fiscal years 2004 through 2008:

"(I) 3 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, small business concerns owned and

controlled by service-disabled veterans, and qualified HUBZone small business concerns, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	0.5%
2005	1%
2006	1.5%
2007	2%
2008	2.5%.

"(II) 5 PERCENT GOALS.—With respect to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals and small business concerns owned and controlled by women, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"In the case of fiscal year:	The applicable percentage is:
2004	1%
2005	2%
2006	3%
2007	4%
2008	5%.

"(11) RESTRICTED COMPETITION TO ACHIEVE GOALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with this paragraph, a contracting officer may restrict competition for any contract for the procurement of goods or services by the Federal Government to any specified category of small business concerns, if—

REV_00164300

"(i) the contracting officer has a reasonable expectation that two or more small business concerns of such category will submit offers for the contract;

"(ii) the anticipated award price of the contract (including options) does not exceed the simplified acquisition threshold;

"(iii) in the estimation of the contracting officer, the contract award can be made at a fair and reasonable price;

"(iv) the award of such contract to a small business concern of such category will not result in the agency exceeding the greater of the Government-wide goal or the agency goal under this subsection with respect to such category; and

"(v) each of the concerns—

"(I) is certified by the Administrator or any person or entity approved by the Administrator as a small business concern of such category; or

REV_00164301

"(II) certifies to the contracting officer that it is a small business concern of such category and provides adequate documentation, in accordance with standards established by the Administration, to support such certification.

"(B) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER CONTRACTING PREFERENCES.—A procurement shall not be made from a source on the basis of a preference provided in subparagraph (A), if the procurement would otherwise be made from a different source under section 4124 or 4125 of title 18, United States Code, or the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. 46 et seq.).

"(C) VERIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—In carrying out this paragraph, the Administrator shall establish procedures relating to—

"(i) the filing, investigation, and disposition by the Administration of any challenge to the eligibility of a small business concern to receive assistance under this paragraph (including a challenge, filed by an interested party, relating to the veracity of a certification referred to in subparagraph (A)(v)); and

"(ii) verification by the Administrator of the accuracy of any certification made or information provided under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(D) EXAMINATIONS.—The procedures established under subparagraph (C) may provide for program examinations (including random program examinations) by the Administrator of any small business concern certified under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(E) PROVISION OF DATA.—Upon the request of the Administrator, the head of any Federal agency shall promptly provide to the Administrator such information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this paragraph.

"(F) PENALTIES.—In addition to the penalties described in section 16(d), any small business concern that is determined by the Administrator to have misrepresented the status of that concern as part of a specified category of small business concerns for purposes of this paragraph shall be subject to—

"(i) section 1001 of title 18, United States Code; and

"(ii) sections 3729 through 3733 of title 31, United States Code.

"(G) CONTRACTING OFFICER.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'contracting officer' has the meaning given such term in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5)).

"(12) APPLICABLE SUBCONTRACTS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'applicable subcontract' means any subcontract under a contract that is subject to the requirements of paragraph (4) or (5) of section 8(d).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 15(h)(2) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F), and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) The total number and dollar value of prime contracts awarded to each specified category of small business concerns through—

"(i) noncompetitive negotiation;

REV_00164304

"(ii) competition restricted to such specified category; and

"(iii) unrestricted competition.

"(E) The total number and dollar value of applicable subcontracts (as defined in subsection (g)(12)) awarded to each specified category of small business concerns.

"(F) The information described in subparagraphs (D) and (E) stated separately with respect to each agency.".

SEC. 5. REQUIREMENTS RELATED TO SUBCONTRACTING PLANS.

(a) FACTORS FOR EVALUATING OFFERS.—Subparagraph (G) of section 8(d)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(G) In the case of any contract that is awarded pursuant to the negotiated method of procurement, the following shall be treated as significant factors for purposes of evaluating offers for any such contract:

"(i) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan for small business participation in the performance of the contract exceeds the requirement described in paragraph (6)(A).

"(ii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the subcontracting plan provides for the use of small business concerns with respect to which the contractor is serving as a mentor under a mentoring program established by the agency.

"(iii) A factor that is based on the extent to which the offeror attained applicable goals for small business participation in the performance of past and current contracts.".

(b) MINIMUM GOAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 8(d)(6) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) percentage goals for the utilization as subcontractors of each specified category of small business concerns (determined in accordance with the requirement of section 15(g)(9)), which goal for the utilization of small business concerns shall be not less than the percentage goal established under section 15(g)(2);".

(c) REQUIRED PENALTY FOR MATERIAL BREACH.—Paragraph (8) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(8)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "If a contracting officer finds the prime contractor or any subcontractor to be in material breach under this paragraph, such prime contractor shall pay a penalty in an amount determined by such officer, except that such penalty shall not be less than 10 percent of the total dollar value of the contract under which the prime contractor or subcontractor is in material breach. Rules similar to the rules of paragraph (4)(F)(ii) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amount of any penalty collected under this paragraph shall be paid over to the agency that let the contract and may be retained and used by such agency for any operating expense of the agency.''.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

(a) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 3(q) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(q)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) SERVICE-DISABLED VETERAN.—The term 'service-disabled veteran' means any veteran with a disability that is—

''(A) service-connected (as defined in section 101(16) of title 38, United States Code); and

''(B) rated at 10 percent or more disabling by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs or, in the case of a disability not rated by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, by the Secretary concerned

REV_00164307

(as defined in section 101(25) of title 38, United States Code).".

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—A small business concern that is receiving assistance under this Act (or if fully approved to receive such assistance) on the date of the enactment of this Act shall not cease to qualify for such assistance solely because of the amendment made by paragraph (1). The preceding sentence shall not make such concern eligible for any other assistance.

(b) SPECIFIED CATEGORIES AND SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—Section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(r) SPECIFIED CATEGORY OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each of following is a specified category of small business concerns:

"(1) Small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans.

"(2) Small business concerns owned and controlled by service-disabled veterans.

"(6) Small business concerns.

"(s) SPECIFIED SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—For purposes of this Act, each specified category of small business concerns described in paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (r) is a specified subcategory of small business concerns.".

SEC. 7. UNIFORM APPLICATION OF DEFINITIONS OF SPECIFIED CATEGORIES AND SUBCATEGORIES OF SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Section 8(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(1)) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women," and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women"

and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(2) Paragraphs (4)(D), (4)(E), (6)(C), (6)(F), and (10)(B) of section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 15(h) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(h)) are each amended by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns".

(4) Section 16(d)(1) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(d)(1)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'," and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

(5) Section 16(e) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 645(e)) is amended by striking "as a 'small business concern'" and all that follows through "women'" and inserting "as being part of any specified category of small business concerns".

REV_00164310

(b) APPLICATION TO CONTRACT CLAUSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(3)) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences of subparagraph (A), by striking "small business concerns" the first place it appears in each sentence and all that follows through "women" and inserting "each specified category of small business concerns";

(B) by striking subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), (F), and (G); and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) As used in this contract, the term 'specified category of small business concerns' has the meaning given such term pursuant to section 3 of the Small Business Act and relevant regulations promulgated thereto.

"(D) The contractor shall presume that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a) of the Small Business Act.

"(E) Contractors acting in good faith may rely on written representations by their subcontractors regarding their status as being part of any specified category of small business concerns.".

"(t) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this Act:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals' means a small business concern—

"(A) which is at least 51 percent owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; or, in the case of any publicly owned business, at least 51 percent of the stock of which is owned by one or more socially and economically disadvantaged individuals; and

"(B) whose management and daily business operations are controlled by one or more of such individuals.".

"(2) APPLICATION OF DEFINITION BY PERSONS OTHER THAN THE ADMINISTRATION.—Any individual or entity (other than the Administration) shall presume for purposes of carrying out any program that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals include Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, other minorities, and any other individual found to be disadvantaged by the Administration pursuant to section 8(a).".

(3) TREATMENT OF REFERENCES TO DEFINITIONS.—Any reference in a law, regulation, or other document of the United States to the meaning or definition given to the term "small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals", "small business concern owned and controlled by women", "small business concern owned and controlled by veterans", or "qualified HUBZone small business concern" in section 8(d)(3) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C.

637(d)(3)) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) shall be treated as a reference to the meaning or definition given such term in section 3 of the Small Business Act (as amended by this Act).

Hatch Warns Labor, Industry to Reach Asbestos Agreement

Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch warned Tuesday that he planned to press ahead with a May markup of asbestos litigation reform legislation - regardless of whether labor and industry had worked out their differences on an allocation formula for compensating victims.

Negotiations between those parties over funding have been ongoing since before the April recess, but have yet to yield an agreement.

"There will be a bill," Hatch said in an interview. "We're going ahead, one way or the other."

He added, "Business and labor have got to get together." If they do not, the status quo will prevail "as far as I'm concerned," Hatch said. However, Hatch said he believes labor has the most to loose under that scenario. "This is a big, big thing," he said.

Prodded by Hatch, Negotiators Closer to Asbestos Deal
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
Business lobbyists are nearing agreement on a key element of a prospective bill to rein in the crush of lawsuits related to asbestos exposure, knowing that Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch is vowing to proceed with legislation with or without them.
The lobbyists are debating how companies facing liability claims would contribute to a fund for claims payments. If they reach an agreement * and strike a separate deal with labor officials on medical criteria for claims payments and on payment amounts * the fund probably will be a central feature of legislation being drafted by Hatch, R-Utah.
If they do not, Hatch has made it clear he will act anyway * and he repeated those sentiments in his strongest terms yet on Tuesday.
"We're going to do it one way or another," Hatch said. "If [business lobbyists or labor officials] want to kill the bill, they can live with the situation the rest of their lives as far as I'm concerned."

House Republican leaders are waiting for the Senate to act first.
Businesses and their insurers want Congress to define how much they have to pay in claims related to asbestos exposure. The substance, which has been linked to lung cancer and other diseases, was long used as insulation. The total cost of past and future claims could run as high as $265 billion.
Hatch has outlined an approach that calls for a special tribunal, consisting of perhaps five judges, that would administer claims lodged by individuals who meet defined medical criteria.
Business lobbyists are discussing whether to press for bill language that would prevent a sick claimant from receiving compensation for asbestos exposure, then suing in federal or state court for the same illness on different grounds, such as exposure to silica, a form of silicon used to make glass, ceramics and other substances.
The Asbestos Study Group, which includes General Electric Co. and General Motors Corp., earlier this month proposed a $90 billion fund, to be initially funded by $5 billion in annual payments split evenly between defendant companies and insurers. Labor officials say the $90 billion figure is too low, but prefer to concentrate on medical criteria and individual payment amounts.
"From the victim's perspective, we don't really care what the big number [in the fund] is," said Damon Silvers, associate general counsel at the AFL-CIO.
The study group and a committee of members of the Asbestos Alliance, another business coalition that includes ExxonMobil Corp. and The Hartford Financial Services Group, have tentatively agreed on how to allocate the initial $2.5 billion annual payment from defendant companies.
Six Tiers
The corporations would be placed into six tiers based on their total legal and insurance costs related to asbestos. Within five of the six tiers, companies would be further grouped into three subcategories based on their gross revenues.
For example, companies that have more than $75 million in asbestos-related costs would have to contribute either $15 million, $20 million or $25 million in the first year of the fund, depending on individual company revenue.
The sixth tier would consist of defendants that have filed for bankruptcy but which have not received a judge's approval for a creditor repayment plan.
Despite Hatch's expressed intent, substantial disagreement persists among the defendant companies. Small and mid-sized firms are worried that they will have to contribute a disproportionate share to the fund. The plan would allow companies to appeal the size of their trust fund payments.
Business lobbyists hope they can at least come to a general agreement on the plan on Thursday.
If business and labor cannot agree on the details of a fund, Hatch's bill probably will mandate that independent commissions set company and insurer contributions.

Restoring hope.

Kentucky's health services budget is over $8,000,000,000. Yet thousands and thousands of hard working Kentuckians can't afford insurance. Many literally can't afford to get sick! Others can't afford to buy the medicines they desperately need to get well.

This is intolerable . . . But the story gets even worse.

Thanks to jackpot justice and misguided decisions out of Frankfort, local hospitals are struggling and qualified doctors are leaving Kentucky because it's too expensive to practice here. And every time an obstetrician leaves the state, 140 women are suddenly without care. In less than ten years, over 45 health insurance carriers have been driven out of our state, eliminating competition. The result: raised prices and less healthcare availability for all of us. The number of uninsured just grows and grows.

Our healthcare situation is now a crisis. And it won't improve without strong leadership and determined action.

Dr. Ernie Fletcher is just the leader we urgently need. As a respected physician, he knows first-hand all sides of this complicated issue. That's why President George W. Bush asked Dr. Fletcher to lead the fight for patients' rights and affordable healthcare in Congress.

As our Governor, Ernie Fletcher will finally bring commonsense solutions to make healthcare available and affordable for all working families.

Vote Ernie Fletcher, a doctor who will heal healthcare for all of us, on May 20th.

AMENDED OPINION AND AMENDED CONCURRENCE/DISSENT

Before: ALFRED T. GOODWIN, STEPHEN REINHARDT and FERDINAND F. FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by Judge Goodwin; Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge Fernandez

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals pro se a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164416

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

---

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[2] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'" Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a

[2] Compelling students to recite the Pledge was held to be a First Amendment violation in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

recommendation that the district court hold that the daily Pledge ceremony in the schools did not violate the Establishment Clause. District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties in the district court. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-561).

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. Amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[3] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions . . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

Id. at 687-88 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[3] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n. 4 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792).

REV_00164423

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court first examined the degree of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. Because we conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act and accordingly hold the policy unconstitutional, we need not consider whether the policy fails the endorsement test or the Lemon test as well.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since

1954—monotheism. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. The school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, including the religious values it incorporates.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[4] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n.14. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642.

[4] Barnette was decided before "under God" was added, and thus the Court's discussion was limited to the political ideals contained in the Pledge.

REV_00164426

The school district's policy here, like the school's action in Lee, places students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. The defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal. To an atheist or a believer in non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, however, this phrase may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in Lee: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the non-believer or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592.

The coercive effect of the policy here is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[5] Furthermore, under Lee, non-compulsory participation is no basis for distinguishing Barnette [sic] from the case at bar because, even without a

[5] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-believing school-children that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

REV_00164427

recitation requirement for each child, the mere presence in the classroom every day as peers recite the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[6] The coercive effect of the Pledge is also made even more apparent when we consider the legislative history of the Act that introduced the phrase "under God." These words were designed to be recited daily in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower).[7] All in all, there can be little doubt that under the controlling Supreme

[6] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593.

[7] In addition, the legislative history of the 1954 Act makes it plain that the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins." This statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N 2339, 2341.

Court cases the school district's policy fails the coercion test.[8]

The Supreme Court has addressed the Pledge in passing, and we owe due deference to its dicta. See United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996). Our opinion, however, is not inconsistent with this dicta. In Allegheny, the Court noted that it had "considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." 492 U.S. at 602-03. And in Lynch, the Court observed that students recited the pledge daily, but only to support its point that there is a long tradition of "official acknowledgment" of religion. 465 U.S. at 674, 676. Neither of these two references speaks to the issue here. We may assume arguendo that public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge, yet it does not follow that schools may coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates.

Our decision is not inconsistent with Engel, which approved of encouraging students to "recit[e] historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence

[8] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

which contain references to the Deity or . . . sing[ ] officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being." 370 U.S. at 435 n.21. The Pledge differs from the Declaration and the anthem in that its reference to God, in textual and historical context, is not merely a reflection of the author's profession of faith. It is, by design, an affirmation by the person reciting it. "I pledge" is a performative statement. See J.L. Austin, How to Do Things with Words (J.O. Urmsson & Marina Sbisa eds., Harvard Univ. Press 1975) (1962). To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently."

Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. For the reasons we have already explained, this question is simply not dispositive of whether the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.

In light of Supreme Court precedent, we hold that the school district's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the inclusion of the added words "under God," violates the Establishment Clause.

In addition to the relief that Newdow seeks against the school district—relief to which he is entitled—Newdow seeks a declaration as to the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. The district court did not discuss that question because it dismissed Newdow's complaint on the basis of its holding that the school district's policy did not violate the First Amendment. Given our contrary holding, we must consider whether to grant Newdow's claim for declaratory relief as to the Act. Normally, whether to decide a claim for declaratory judgment is left to the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); see also Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Dizol, 133 F.3d 1220, 1222-23 (9th Cir. 1998). We doubt that, given the relief to which we decide Newdow is entitled, the district court would have exercised its discretionary power to resolve, in the present case, the additional issue as to which Newdow seeks declaratory relief. Accordingly, we decline to reach that issue here.

The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to Newdow's claim that the school district's Pledge policy violates the Establishment Clause and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

REV_00164432

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.[1]

We can run through some or all of the tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534, U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L. But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our

[1] Although the majority now formally limits itself to holding that it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge in public classrooms, its message that something is constitutionally infirm about the Pledge itself abides and remains a clear and present danger to all similar public expressions of reverence. At the very least, it deprives children in public schools of the benefits derived from those expressions.

Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity. Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring) ("A civic reference to God does not become permissible . . . only when . . . it is sapped of religious significance." The Pledge is constitutional and "[w]e need not drain the meaning from the reference [to God] to reach this conclusion."

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America The Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe all of us, including our children, must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance in any setting, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

---

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all. By the way, I am not the first to apply the de minimis concept to this area of the law. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 861, 120 S. Ct. 2530, 2569, 147 L. Ed. 2d 660 (2000) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (evidence of improper use of funds was de minimis and did not affect constitutional inquiry); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 630-31, 112 S. Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge FERNANDEZ.

OPINION

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164440

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day."[2]

The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

[2] The SCUSD, the school district that Newdow claims his daughter may in the future attend, has promulgated a similar rule: "Each school shall conduct patriotic exercises daily. . . . The Pledge of Allegiance to the flag will fulfill this requirement." However, as discussed infra, Newdow lacks standing to challenge the SCUSD's rule requiring recitation of the Pledge.

liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[3] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'"

Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sover-

The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation; District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03, 112 S. Ct. 2767, 120 L.Ed.2d 636 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 501, 18 L.Ed. 437 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503, 95 S. Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09, 95 S. Ct. 1813. Although the district court lacks jurisdiction over the President and the Congress, the question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act remains before us. While the court correctly dismissed the claim against those parties, it survives against others.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties either below or here. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180, 120 S. Ct. 693 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560- 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130).

The final question of standing relates to the 1954 Act. Specifically, has Newdow suffered an "injury in fact" that is "fairly traceable" to the enactment of the 1954 Act? Id.

We begin our inquiry by noting the general rule that the standing requirements for an action brought under the Establishment Clause are the same as for any other action. Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 488-90, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L.Ed.2d 700 (1982). "The requirement of standing focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated. Moreover, we know of no principled basis on which to create a hierarchy of constitutional values or a complementary 'sliding scale' of standing which might permit respondents to invoke the judicial power of the United States." Id. at 484, 102 S. Ct. 752 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In Valley Forge, an organization dedicated to the separation of church and state brought suit challenging the federal government's grant of surplus federal property to a church-related college. The suit alleged that this grant of real property, without any financial payment by the college, was a violation of the Establishment Clause. The Supreme Court found that the plaintiff had standing neither as a taxpayer, see id. at 479-80, 102 S. Ct. 752, nor as a party personally injured as a consequence of the alleged unconstitutional action, see id. at 484-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The "psychological consequence presumably produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees . . . . is not an injury sufficient to confer standing under Art. III, even though the disagreement is phrased in constitutional terms." Id. at 485-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The Court emphasized that "'[t]he assumption that if respondents have no standing to sue, no one would have standing, is not a reason to find standing.'" Id. at 489, 102 S. Ct. 752 (quoting Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 227, 94 S. Ct. 2925, 41 L.Ed.2d 706 (1974)).

While Valley Forge remains good law, the Supreme Court in more recent opinions has indirectly broadened the notion of Establishment Clause standing in public education cases by holding that the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation. In Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985), the Court considered an Establishment Clause challenge to an Alabama statute that originally had authorized a one-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation," but was later amended to authorize a period of silence "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40-42, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Although the previous form of the statute specifically allowed students to use the moment of silence for

"meditation," silent prayer was always an option. "[I]t is undisputed that at the time of the enactment of [the amended statute] there was no governmental practice impeding students from silently praying for one minute at the beginning of each schoolday." Id. at 57 n.45, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Nor were students, under the amended form of the statute, compelled to use the allotted time for prayer. In sum, the amendment to the Alabama statute had no discernible effect on public school students other than to inform them that the state was encouraging them to engage in prayer during their daily moment of silence. Because the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that standing is a jurisdictional requirement, the existence of which each federal court must determine for itself, see Lujan, 504 U.S. at 559-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 230-31, 110 S. Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), we may presume that in Wallace the Court examined the standing question before deciding the merits, and that the Court determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to challenge the amended Alabama statute.

Our reading of Wallace is supported by Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L.Ed.2d 295 (2000), where the Court upheld a facial challenge to a school district's policy of permitting, but not requiring, prayer initiated and led by a student at high school football games. Noting that "the Constitution also requires that we keep in mind 'the myriad, subtle ways in which the Establishment Clause values can be eroded,'" id. at 314, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, 694 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring)), the Court held that the "mere passage by the District of a policy that has the purpose and perception of government establishment of religion," id., violated the Establishment Clause. "[T]he simple enactment of this policy, with the purpose and perception of school endorsement of student prayer, was a constitutional violation." Id. at 316, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (emphasis added).

In Wallace and Santa Fe, the Court looked at the language of each statute, the context in which the statute was enacted, and its legislative history to determine that the challenged statute caused an injury in violation of the Establishment Clause. "We refuse to turn a blind eye to the context in which this policy arose, and that context quells any doubt that this policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer." Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Wallace noted that whether a statute actually conveys a message of endorsement of religion is "not entirely a question of fact . . . . The relevant issue is whether an objective observer, acquainted with the text, legislative history, and implementation of the statute, would perceive it as state endorsement of prayer in public schools." 472 U.S. at 76, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment). In Santa Fe, "[t]he text and history of this policy . . . reinforce our objective student's perception that the prayer is, in actuality, encouraged by the school." 530 U.S. at 308, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In evaluating the purpose of the school district policy, the Court found "most striking . . . the evolution of the current policy." Id. at 309, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In Wallace, a review of the legislative history led the Court to conclude that enactment of the amended statute "was not motivated by any clearly secular purpose—indeed, the statute had no secular purpose."

REV_00164449

472 U.S. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479; see also id. at 57-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

Operating within the above-described legal landscape, we now turn to the question initially posed, namely, does Newdow have standing to challenge the 1954 Act? Initially, we note that the 1954 statute challenged by Newdow is similar to the Alabama statute struck down in Wallace. Neither statute works the traditional type of "injury in fact" that is implicated when a statute compels or prohibits certain activity, nor do the amendments brought about by these statutes lend themselves to "as-applied" constitutional review. Nevertheless, the Court in Wallace, at least implicitly, determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to attack the challenged statute. Moreover, the legislative history of the 1954 Act shows that the "under God" language was not meant to sit passively in the federal code unbeknownst to the public; rather, the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," and this statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341. Taken within its context, the 1954 addendum was designed to result in the recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms throughout the land on a daily basis, and therefore constituted as much of an injury-in-fact as the policies considered in Wallace and

REV_00164450

Santa Fe. As discussed earlier, Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. The mere enactment of the 1954 Act in its particular context constitutes a religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter. Accordingly, we hold that Newdow has standing to challenge the 1954 Act.

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch, and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[4] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions. . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are > outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

[4] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n.4, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792, 103 S. Ct. 3330).

Id. at 687-88, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[5] The Court first examined the degree

---

[5] Although this formulation is referred to as the "coercion" test, it should be noted that coercion is not a necessary element in finding an Establishment Clause violation. "The Establishment Clause, unlike the Free Exercise Clause, does not depend upon any showing of direct governmental compulsion. . . ." Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 430, 82 S. Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601 (1962). "[T]his court has never relied on coercion alone as the touchstone of Establishment Clause analysis. To require a showing of coercion, even indirect coercion, as an essential element of an Establishment Clause violation would make the free Exercise Clause a redundancy." Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 628, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (O'Connor, J., concurring). "Over the years, this Court has declared the invalidity of many noncoercive state laws and practices conveying a message of religious endorsement." Lee, 505 U.S. at 618, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (Souter, J., concurring).

of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. The Supreme Court has not repudiated Lemon; in Santa Fe, it found that the application of each of the three tests provided an independent ground for invalidating the statute at issue in that case; and in Lee, the Court invalidated the policy solely on the basis of the coercion test. Although this court has typically applied the Lemon test to alleged Establishment Clause violations, see, e.g., Am. Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1120-21 (9th Cir. 2002), we are not required to apply it if a practice fails one of the other tests. Nevertheless, for purposes of completeness, we will analyze the school district policy and the 1954 Act under all three tests.

We first consider whether the 1954 Act and the EGUSD's policy of teacher-led Pledge recitation survive the endorsement test. The magistrate judge found that "the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs." Supreme Court precedent does not support that conclusion.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is an endorsement of religion. It is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since 1954—monotheism. The text of the official Pledge, codified in federal law, impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. "[T]he government must pursue a course of complete neutrality toward religion." Wallace, 472 U.S. at 60, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Furthermore, the school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, and thus amounts to state endorsement of these ideals. Although students cannot be forced to participate in recitation of the Pledge, the school district is nonetheless conveying a message of state endorsement of a religious belief when it requires public school teachers to recite, and lead the recitation of, the current form of the Pledge.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, 63 S. Ct. 1178, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633, 63 S. Ct. 1178. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[6] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n. 14, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178.

The Pledge, as currently codified, is an impermissible government endorsement of religion because it sends a message to unbelievers "that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 688, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice Kennedy, in his dissent in Allegheny, agreed:

> [B]y statute, the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag describes the United States as 'one nation under God.' To be sure, no one is obligated to recite this phrase, . . . but it borders on sophistry to suggest that the reasonable atheist would not feel less than a full member of the political community every time

[6] Barnette was decided before "under God" was added, and thus the Court's discussion was limited to the political ideals contained in the Pledge.

REV_00164457

> his fellow Americans recited, as part of their expression of patriotism and love for country, a phrase he believed to be false.

Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 672, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[7] Consequently, the policy and the Act fail the endorsement test.

Similarly, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test. Just as in Lee, the policy and the Act place students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in that case: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the nonbeliever or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Although the defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal, to an atheist or a believer in certain non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, it may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. The coercive effect of this policy is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[8] Furthermore, under Lee, the fact that

[7] For Justice Kennedy, this result was a reason to reject the endorsement test.

[8] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-

REV_00164458

students are not required to participate is no basis for distinguishing Barnette from the case at bar because, even without a recitation requirement for each child, the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[9] The coercive effect of the Act is apparent from its context and legislative history, which indicate that the Act was designed to result in the daily recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower). Therefore, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test.[10]

believing schoolchildren that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

[9] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

[10] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722, 97 S. Ct.

Finally we turn to the Lemon test, the first prong of which asks if the challenged policy has a secular purpose. Historically, the primary purpose of the 1954 Act was to advance religion, in conflict with the first prong of the Lemon test. The federal defendants "do not dispute that the words 'under God' were intended" "to recognize a Supreme Being," at a time when the government was publicly inveighing against atheistic communism. Nonetheless, the federal defendants argue that the Pledge must be considered as a whole when assessing whether it has a secular purpose. They claim that the Pledge has the secular purpose of "solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future, and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355.

The flaw in defendants' argument is that it looks at the text of the Pledge "as a whole," and glosses over the 1954 Act. The problem with this approach is apparent when one considers the Court's analysis in Wallace. There, the Court struck down Alabama's statute mandating a moment of silence for "meditation or voluntary prayer" not because the final version "as a whole" lacked a primary secular purpose, but because the state legislature had amended the statute specifically and solely to add the words "or voluntary prayer." 472 U.S. at 59-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

By analogy to Wallace, we apply the purpose prong of the Lemon test to the amendment that added the words "under God" to the Pledge, not to the Pledge in its final version. As was the case with the amendment to the Alabama statute in Wallace, the legislative history of the 1954 Act reveals that the Act's sole purpose was to advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." [T]he First Amendment requires that a statute must be invalidated if it is entirely motivated by a purpose to advance religion." Id. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (citations omitted) (applying the Lemon test). As the legislative history of the 1954 Act sets forth:

> At this moment of our history the principles underlying our American Government and the American way of life are under attack by a system whose philosophy is at direct odds with our own. Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being. Underlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp. The inclusion of God in our pledge therefore would further acknowledge the dependence of our people and our Government upon the moral directions of the Creator. At the same time it would serve to deny the atheistic and materialistic concepts of communism with its attendant subservience of the individual.

H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 1-2 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2340. This language reveals that the purpose of the 1954 Act was to take a position on the question of theism, namely, to support the existence and moral authority of God, while "deny[ing] . . .

atheistic and materialistic concepts." Id. Such a purpose runs counter to the Establishment Clause, which prohibits the government's endorsement or advancement not only of one particular religion at the expense of other religions, but also of religion at the expense of atheism.

> [T]he Court has unambiguously concluded that the individual freedom of conscience protected by the First Amendment embraces the right to select any religious faith or none at all. This conclusion derives support not only from the interest in respecting the individual's freedom of conscience, but also from the conviction that religious beliefs worthy of respect are the product of a free and voluntary choice by the faithful, and from recognition of the fact that the political interest in forestalling intolerance extends beyond intolerance among Christian sects—or even intolerance among "religions"—to encompass intolerance of the disbeliever and the uncertain.

Wallace, 472 U.S. at 52-54, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

In language that attempts to prevent future constitutional challenges, the sponsors of the 1954 Act expressly disclaimed a religious purpose. "This is not an act establishing a religion. . . . A distinction must be made between the existence of a religion as an institution and a belief in the sovereignty of God. The phrase 'under God' recognizes only the guidance of God in our national affairs." H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341-42. This alleged distinction is irrelevant for constitutional purposes. The Act's affirmation of "a belief in the sovereignty of God" and its recognition of "the guidance of God" are endorsements by the government of religious beliefs. The Establishment Clause is not limited to "religion as an institution"; this is clear from cases such as Santa Fe, where the Court struck down student-initiated and student-led prayer at high school football games. 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. The Establishment Clause guards not only against the establishment of "religion as an institution," but also against the endorsement of religious ideology by the government. Because the Act fails the purpose prong of Lemon, we need not examine the other prongs. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-14, 91 S. Ct. 2105.

Similarly, the school district policy also fails the Lemon test. Although it survives the first prong of Lemon because, as even Newdow concedes, the school district had the secular purpose of fostering patriotism in enacting the policy, the policy fails the second prong. As explained by this court in Kreisner v. City of San Diego, 1 F.3d 775, 782 (9th Cir. 1993), and by the Supreme Court in School District of Grand Rapids v. Ball, 473 U.S. 373, 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267 (1985), the second Lemon prong asks "whether the challenged government action is sufficiently likely to be perceived by adherents of the controlling denominations as an endorsement, and by the nonadherents as a disapproval, of their individual religious choices."[11] Ball, 473

[11] Although Ball was overruled in part by Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 236, 117 S. Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391 (1997), as the Court stated in Agostini, Ball's statement of the general principles and relevant tests to be used in determining what constitutes an Establishment Clause violation remain intact; only the underlying factual assumptions and presumptions have changed. In particular, the Court rejected the following three core assumptions of Ball:

REV_00164463

U.S. at 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216. Given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, as discussed above, particularly within the confined environment of the classroom, the policy is highly likely to convey an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God. Therefore the policy fails the effects prong of Lemon, and fails the Lemon test. In sum, both the policy and the Act fail the Lemon test as well as the endorsement and coercion tests.[12]

> (i) any public employee who works on the premises of a religious school is presumed to inculcate religion in her work; (ii) the presence of public employees on private school premises creates a symbolic union between church and state; and (iii) any and all public aid that directly aids the educational function of religious schools impermissibly finances religious indoctrination, even if the aid reaches such schools as a consequence of private decisionmaking.

Agostini, 521 U.S. at 222, 117 S. Ct. 1997. Therefore, Ball's restatement of the second prong of Lemon remains valid even after Agostini.

[12] We recognize that the Supreme Court has occasionally commented in dicta that the presence of "one nation under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. See Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. 3086; Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676, 104 S. Ct. 1355; id. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303-04, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); id. at 306-08, 83 S. Ct. 1560 (Goldberg, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring); Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n. 21, 82 S. Ct. 1261. However, the Court has never been presented with the question directly, and has always clearly refrained from deciding it. Accordingly, it has never applied any of the three tests to the Act or to any school policy regarding the recitation of the Pledge. That task falls to us, although the final word, as always, remains with the Supreme Court.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently." Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee or the endorsement test from Lynch. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. Relying in part on Supreme Court dicta regarding the Pledge, the court answers this question in the negative, determining that "under God" is a statement which, taken within its context in the Pledge, is devoid of any significant religious content, and therefore constitutional. Id. at 447-48. At the very least, as discussed above in the text, the Supreme Court requires that any policy alleged to be an Establishment Clause violation must be held to the scrutiny of the established tests. Our application of all of the tests compels the conclusion that the policy and the Act challenged here violate the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Thus, we must respectfully differ from the Seventh Circuit.

In conclusion, we hold that (1) the 1954 Act adding the words "under God" to the Pledge, and (2) EGUSD's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the added words included, violate the Establishment Clause. The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to these two claims, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

REV_00164466

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C[1] of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.

We can run through the litany of tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534 U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L.Ed.2d 256 (2001); Goehring v. Brophy, 94 F.3d 1294,

[1] I admit, however, to serious misgivings about standing to attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 itself. Congress has not compelled anyone to do anything. It surely has not directed that the Pledge be recited in class; only the California authorities have done that. Even if a general lack of standing to directly attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 would deprive federal courts of the opportunity to strike "under God" from that statute, any lament would be no more than a complaint about the limits on federal judges' constitutional power. Nonetheless, that ultimately makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case.

1306-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (Fernandez, J., concurring). But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 3106, 3143, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n. 5, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985); *Lynch v. [3] The citations to the four preceding Supreme Court opinions are to majority opinions, concurring opinions, and dissents. Because my point is that a number of Justices have recognized the lack of danger and because I hope to avoid untoward complication in the setting out of the citations, I have not designated which Justices have joined in which opinion. All in all, however, perusing those opinions indicates that Chief Justice Burger, Chief Justice Rehnquist, and Justices Harlan, Brennan, White, Goldberg, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy have so recognized.

Murray, 588 F.2d 1144, 1144 (5th Cir. 1979) (per curiam); Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242, 243-44 (9th Cir. 1970); cf. Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 795, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983) (legislative prayer). I think it is worth stating a little more about two of the cases which I have just cited. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity.

REV_00164469

Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

---

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring).

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America the Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe we all must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion

[8] Nor will we be able to stray into the fourth stanza of "My Country 'Tis of Thee" for that matter.

REV_00164471

in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

No. 00-16423
D.C. No. CV 00-00495-MLS/PAN

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT

v.

U.S. CONGRESS; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; GEORGE W. BUSH,* PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES; STATE OF CALIFORNIA; ELK GROVE UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; DAVID W. GORDON, SUPERINTENDENT EGUSD; SACRAMENTO CITY UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; JIM SWEENEY, SUPERINTENDENT SCUSD, DEFENDANTS-APPELLEES

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, Milton L. Schwartz, Senior Judge, Presiding

Argued and Submitted: March 14, 2002
Filed: June 26, 2002
Amended: February 28, 2003

ORDER

The opinion filed June 26, 2002, is ordered amended. The Clerk is instructed to file the amended opinion with

* George W. Bush is substituted for his predecessor, William Jefferson Clinton, as President of the United States. Fed. R. App. P. 43(c)(2).

REV_00164473

Judge Fernandez's amended concurrence/dissent. Judge Reinhardt's concurrence in the order denying rehearing en banc, along with Judge O'Scannlain's and Judge McKeown's dissent from that order shall also be filed.

The Clerk is also instructed not to accept for filing any new petitions for rehearing and petitions for rehearing en banc in this case.

With the opinion thus amended, the panel has voted unanimously to deny the petitions for rehearing.

The full court has been advised of the petitions for rehearing en banc. An active judge requested a vote on whether to rehear the matter en banc. The matter failed to receive a majority of the votes of the non-recused active judges in favor of en banc consideration. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

The petitions for rehearing are DENIED and the petitions for rehearing en banc are DENIED.

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, concurring in the order:

My views as to the merits of this issue are set forth in the amended majority opinion authored by Judge Goodwin, and I adhere to them fully. I write separately for two reasons unrelated to the contents of that opinion. I write first to comment on the separate dissent to the denial of rehearing en banc authored by Judge McKeown and joined in by Judges Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson, in which my colleagues appear to express the view that a case should be reheard en banc whenever it involves "a question of exceptional importance." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a)(2).[1] Second, I am

[1] While the brief separate dissent is deliberately opaque and uninformative, I would suspect that not all of its signatories compelled to register my strong disagreement with one particularly unfortunate aspect of Judge O'Scannlain's principal dissent that reflects a serious misconception of fundamental constitutional principles and the proper role of the federal judiciary.

I

As to the first question, I disagree with the notion that the importance of an issue is a sufficient reason to take a case en banc, either under the Rule or as a matter of judicial policy. Rule 35(a) advises this court of its discretionary power to order that a case already decided by a three-judge panel be reheard by the full court. Specifically, the rule begins by stating that a "majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) (emphasis added). Subsection two guides such discretionary consideration by stating that one compelling reason to grant rehearing en banc is the "exceptional importance" of a particular case.

The most reasonable construction of the Rule is that this court should rehear a case en banc when it is both of exceptional importance and the decision *requires correctio*n. See United States v. Burdeau, 180 F.3d 1091, 1092 (9th Cir. 1999) (Tashima, J., concurring in the order denying rehearing en banc) ("Subject to rare exceptions. . . . we should review the statements in three[-]judge panel opinions only to 'determine whether the [panel's] legal error resulted in an erroneous believe that the general rule they appear to advocate should apply regardless of the "correctness" of the panel opinion. The concept that "exceptional importance" is, without more, a sufficient reason for en banc review is, however, shared by at least several members of the Court and accordingly merits some discussion.

judgment . . . .'") (quoting Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984)). A decision may warrant correction because a three-judge panel has reached a result or adopted a legal rule or principle that conflicts with our existing circuit law or that the majority of our court believes is incorrect and needs further review. The fact that three-judge panels often decide cases of exceptional importance, whether it be the constitutionality of a state's decision to execute an individual who may be innocent, the existence or non-existence of a fundamental right, or the ability of the Congress to require the states to comply with federal law—an issue that some of us thought had been settled by the successful end to the Civil War—is an unremarkable, but undeniably important, aspect of our appellate system. See Tracey E. George, The Dynamics and Determinants of the Decision to Grant En Banc Review, 74 WASH. L. REV. 213, 218 (1999) (stating that three-judge panels "representing and acting on behalf of the whole court" is a "basic tenet of our intermediate appellate system"). Unless reconsidered en banc, a decision of a three-judge panel is a decision of our court and speaks for our court. Moreover, it ordinarily constitutes the final judicial decision.[2]

To rehear a case en banc simply on the basis that it involves an important issue would undermine the three-

---

[2] While the Supreme Court unquestionably has the authority to review any or all of the decisions of the Court of Appeals, the Court has elected to hear a remarkably small number of cases in recent years. For example, in the 2001 term, of the 7,852 case filings, the Court heard argument in 88 cases, and disposed of 85 in 76 signed opinions. See Supreme Court of the United States, 2002 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, at http://www.supremecourtus.gov/publicinfo/year-end/2002year-endreport.html.

REV_00164476

judge panel system and create an impractical and crushing burden on what otherwise should be, as Rule 35(a) suggests, an exceptional occurrence. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) ("An en banc hearing or rehearing is not favored . . . ."). According to statistics kept by the Clerk of the court, in 2002 this court decided 5,190 cases on the merits, more than 98% of which were finally decided by three-judge panels. These decisions are not measures of "rough justice," later to be refined by the en banc court. Unless they decide issues of exceptional importance erroneously, create a direct intra-circuit split, or unless the interests of justice require that the decision be corrected, the opinions of three-judge panels should constitute the final action of this court.

II

I also feel compelled to discuss a disturbingly wrong-headed approach to constitutional law manifested in the dissent authored by Judge O'Scannlain. The dissent suggests that this court should be able to conclude that the panel's holding was erroneous by observing the "public and political reaction" to its decision. Dissent at 2783. This is not the first time that the magnitude of the political response regarding an issue has distracted certain members of this court. An equally disturbing misunderstanding of the nature of our Constitution and the role of the federal judiciary was manifested in Coalition for Econ. Equity v. Wilson, 122 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 1997), a case involving a California initiative on the subject of affirmative action. There, the three-judge panel, in a case that unfortunately was not taken en banc, notwithstanding its exceptional importance, made the following remarkable statement: "A system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy." Id. at 699 (O'Scannlain, J.).

The Bill of Rights is, of course, intended to protect the rights of those in the minority against the temporary passions of a majority which might wish to limit their freedoms or liberties. As Justice Jackson recognized:

> The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943). It is the highest calling of federal judges to invoke the Constitution to repudiate unlawful majoritarian actions and, when necessary, to strike down statutes that would infringe on fundamental rights, whether such statutes are adopted by legislatures or by popular vote. The constitutional system that vests such power in an independent judiciary does not "test[ ] the integrity of . . . democracy." It makes democracy vital, and is one of our proudest heritages.

Moreover, Article III judges are by constitutional design insulated from the political pressures governing members of the other two branches of government. We are given life tenure and a secured salary so that, in our unique capacity to "say what the law is," Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803), we may decide constitutional issues without regard to popular vote, political consequence, or the prospect of future career advancement.[3] Most federal judges do not question the wisdom of this approach. When the federal judiciary is so firmly separated by constitutional structure from the direct influence of politics, we must not undermine that structure by allowing political pressures, polls, or "focus groups" to influence our opinions, even indirectly.

This is not to say that federal judges should be completely sequestered from the attitudes of the nation we serve, even though our service is accomplished not through channeling popular sentiment but through strict adherence to established constitutional principles. The Constitution contemplates occasions when we must be responsive to long-term societal trends—when determining, for example, that which is "cruel and unusual," see Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9 (1992), whether in the execution of the mentally retarded, see Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, ___, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2247 (2002), or the execution of juvenile offenders, see In re Stanford, 123 S.Ct. 472, 474 (2002) (Stevens, J., dissenting from the denial of an application for an original writ of habeas corpus). This broader long-term

[3] Alexander Hamilton was admirably cognizant of the danger of relying on temporary political whimsy:

> This independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humors which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjectures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information, and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency, in the meantime, to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community.

social conscience, however, is a matter far different from responding to particular immediate political pressures. We may not—we must not—allow public sentiment or outcry to guide our decisions. It is particularly important that we understand the nature of our obligations and the strength of our constitutional principles in times of national crisis; it is then that our freedoms and our liberties are in the greatest peril. Any suggestion, whenever or wherever made, that federal judges should be encouraged by the approval of the majority or deterred by popular disfavor is fundamentally inconsistent with the Constitution and must be firmly rejected.

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge, with whom KLEINFELD, GOULD, TALLMAN, RAWLINSON, and CLIFTON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

Last June, a two-judge majority of a three-judge panel of this court ruled that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional simply because of the presence of two offending words: "under God." It was an exercise in judicial legerdemain which, not surprisingly, produced a public outcry across the nation. Since that time we, as a court, have had the opportunity to order reconsideration of that decision en banc, yet a majority of the 24 active judges eligible to vote has decided not to do so. While there are, no doubt, varied and plausible reasons why this result occurred, I respectfully conclude that our court has made a serious mistake and thus must dissent from its order denying reconsideration.

I

While I cannot say that a randomly selected 11-judge panel would have ruled differently, I believe that neither the June 2002 version, Newdow v. United States Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Newdow I"), nor today's slightly revised version, ___ F.3d ___ ("Newdow II") to essentially the same effect, is defensible. We should have reheard Newdow I en banc, not because it was controversial, but because it was wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.[1] We should have given 11 judges a chance to determine whether the two-judge majority opinion truly reflects the law of the Ninth Circuit.[2] Reciting the Pledge of Allegiance cannot possibly be an "establishment of religion" under any reasonable interpretation of the Constitution.[3]

Perhaps in an effort to avoid ultimate Supreme Court review, Newdow II which replaces it, avoids expressly reaching the technical question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. Fundamentally, however, the amended decision is every bit as bold as its predecessor. It bans

[1] Judge Reinhardt's protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, I, too, believe that "[o]ur judicial charge is to stand above the inflamed passions of the public." Dazo v. Globe Airport Sec. Serv., 295 F.3d 934, 943 (9th Cir. 2002) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring and dissenting). My disagreement with the panel majority has nothing to do with bending to the will of an outraged populace, and everything to do with the fact that Judge Goodwin and Judge Reinhardt misinterpret the Constitution and 40 years of Supreme Court precedent. That most people understand this makes the decision no less wrong. It doesn't take an Article III judge to recognize that the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school does not violate the First Amendment.

[2] This case presents the classic situation required for our court to rehear a case en banc. En banc consideration would have allowed us to correct the error of a prior panel's decision with respect to the Pledge and resolve a constitutional question of exceptional importance that affects the lives of millions of school children who reside within the geographical boundaries of the Ninth Circuit. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a). The exceptional importance of this case reinforces the need for correction of the panel's mistaken view of our Constitution.

the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in the public schools of the nine western states thereby directly affecting over 9.6 million students,[4] necessarily implies that both an Act of Congress[5] and a California law[6] are unconstitutional, clearly conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Cmty. Consol. Sch. Dist. 21 of Wheeling Township, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), and threatens cash-strapped school districts and underpaid teachers with the specter of civil actions for money damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Newdow I, the subject of our en banc vote, no longer exists; it was withdrawn after the en banc call failed. The panel majority has evolved to this extent: in Newdow I the Pledge was unconstitutional for everybody; in Newdow II the Pledge is only unconstitutional for public school children and teachers. The remainder of this dissent is directed entirely to Newdow II, which, as shall be demonstrated, differs little from Newdow I in its central holding. With grim insistence, the majority in Newdow II continues to stand by its original error—that voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school violates the Establishment Clause because, according to the two-judge panel majority, it is "a religious act." Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Common sense would seem to dictate otherwise, as the public and political reaction should by now have made clear. If reciting the Pledge is truly "a religious act" in violation of the Establishment Clause, then so is the recitation of the Constitution[7] itself, the Declaration of Independence,[8] the Gettysburg Address,[9] the National Motto,[10] or the singing of the National Anthem.[11] Such an assertion would make hypocrites out of the Founders, and would have the effect of

[7] U.S. Const. Art. VII. ("Year of our Lord") (emphasis added).

[8] The Declaration of Independence contains multiple references to God. The founders claimed the right to "dissolve the political bands" based on "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God." The most famous passage, of course, is that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." Subsequently, the signatories "appeal[ ] to the Supreme Judge of the world to rectify their intentions."

[9] On November 19, 1863, President Lincoln declared "that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that Government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

[11] See 36 U.S.C. § 301(a) ("The composition consisting of the words and music known as the Star-Spangled Banner is the national anthem."). In fact, the Anthem is much more explicitly religious in content than the Pledge, and much more than a 'mere' profession of the composer's faith in a Supreme Being, as the majority would have it. See Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Consider the following passage from the fourth stanza: "Blest with victory and peace, may the heaven-rescued land, Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation. Then conquer we must, when our cause is just, And this be our motto: 'In God is our trust.' "(emphasis added).

driving any and all references to our religious heritage out of our schools, and eventually out of our public life.

II

The Newdow II majority's primary legal argument is that the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992), a school prayer case, controls the outcome of this case. In fact, rather than merely following Lee and its predecessors, the two-judge panel majority makes a radical departure from Lee and the cases it purports to apply. To understand why this is so, an examination of the Supreme Court's school prayer decisions which culminate in Lee is in order.

The fountainhead of all school prayer cases is Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962). In Engel the Court considered a school policy whereby children were directed to say aloud a prayer composed by state officials. The Court found that this practice was inconsistent with the Establishment Clause, reasoning that "[the] program of daily classroom invocation of God's blessings as prescribed in the Regents' prayer is a religious activity. It is a solemn avowal of divine faith and supplication for the blessings of the Almighty. The nature of such a prayer has always been religious." Id. at 424-25. The Court concluded by stating that the state should leave prayer, "that purely religious function, to the people themselves." Id. at 435. In a footnote, it reasoned as follows:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to > express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21. The Court drew an explicit distinction between patriotic invocations of God on the one hand, and prayer, an "unquestioned religious exercise," on the other. Concurring, Justice Douglas wrote that the narrow question presented was whether the state "oversteps the bounds when it finances a religious exercise." Id. at 439 (Douglas, J., concurring). Justice Douglas noted that the Pledge of Allegiance, "like . . . prayer, recognizes the existence of a Supreme Being." Id. at 440 n.5. However, he noted that the House Report recommending the addition of the words "under God" to the Pledge stated that those words "in no way run contrary to the First Amendment but recognize 'only the guidance of God in our national affairs.'" Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3).

The following year, the Supreme Court decided Abington School Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963). In that case, the Court considered the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania statute requiring that "[a]t least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read, without comment, at the opening of each public school on each school day." Id. at 205. The practice in public schools

was for a teacher or student volunteer to read the required Bible verses each morning. This in turn was followed by a recitation of the Lord's prayer. Finally, the class would recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Id. at 207-08. The Court struck down the Bible reading and the practice of reciting the Lord's prayer as a state prescribed "religious ceremony," id. at 223, but said nothing about the practice of reciting the Pledge.

As in Engel, the Court took pains to point to the character of the exercises it found wanting. The Court reasoned that "reading . . . the verses . . . possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance. The devotional and religious nature of the morning exercises is made all the more apparent by the fact that the Bible reading is followed immediately by a recital in unison by the pupils of the Lord's prayer." Id. at 210. "The pervading religious character of the ceremony," wrote Justice Clark, "cannot be gainsaid," and led to the conclusion that the exercises violated the Establishment Clause. Id. at 224.

The concurring opinions in Schempp were all to the same effect. Justice Douglas agreed with the majority's conclusion that the practices at issue violated the Establishment Clause because "the State is conducting a religious exercise." Id. at 229 (Douglas, J., concurring). In a lengthy concurrence, Justice Brennan wrote that "[t]he religious nature of the exercises here challenged seems plain." Id. at 266 (Brennan, J., concurring). After surveying the history of devotional exercises in American public schools, Justice Brennan stated that "the panorama of history permits no other conclusion than that daily prayers and Bible readings in the public schools have always been designed to be, and have been regarded as, essentially religious exercises." Id. at 277-78. For Justice Brennan, "religious exercises in the public schools present a unique problem" but "not every involvement of religion in public life violates the Establishment Clause." Id. at 294. He warned that "[a]ny attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers." Id. at 301. Specifically, he wrote that "[t]he reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance . . . may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact." Id. at 304.

Justice Goldberg also wrote separately, stating that "the clearly religious practices presented in these cases are . . . wholly compelling." Id. at 305 (Goldberg, J., concurring). He reasoned that "[t]he pervasive religiosity and direct governmental involvement inhering in the prescription of prayer and Bible reading in the public schools . . . cannot realistically be termed simply accommodation." Id. at 307. Like Justice Brennan, Justice Goldberg cautioned that the decision "does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause." Id. at 307-08. He then quoted in full the passage from Engel which drew a distinction between patriotic invocations of God, and unquestioned religious exercises that give rise to Establishment Clause violations. Id.

3

The next case in this line is Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38 (1985). That case considered the constitutionality of an Alabama statute authorizing a 1-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40. The Court found that "[t]he wholly religious character" of the challenged law was "plainly evident from its text." Id. at 58. The legislature's one and only purpose in enacting the law was "to return prayer to the public schools." Id. at 59-60. Justice Powell's separate concurrence was "prompted by Alabama's persistence in attempting to institute state-sponsored prayer in the public schools." Id. at 62 (Powell, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote separately to suggest that moment-of-silence statutes were not "a religious exercise," and therefore were constitutional. Id. at 72 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote further that "the words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion with 'the legitimate secular purposes of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future.'" Id. at 78 n.5 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring)) (alterations in original). In contrast, the Alabama statute at issue was very different from the Pledge—the state had "intentionally crossed the line [by] affirmatively endorsing the particular religious practice of prayer." Id. at 84.

4

Finally, there is the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman. The issue presented was "whether including clerical members who offer prayers as part of the official school graduation ceremony" is consistent with the Establishment Clause. 505 U.S. at 580. The graduating students entered as a group in a processional, after which "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers." Id. at 583. Justice Kennedy wrote that "the significance of the prayers lies . . . at the heart of [the] case." Id. He framed the inquiry as follows:

> These dominant facts mark and control the confines of our decision: State officials direct the performance of a formal religious exercise at promotional and graduation ceremonies for secondary schools. Even for those students who object to the religious exercise their attendance and participation in the state-sponsored religious activity are in a fair and real sense obligatory, though the school district does not require attendance as a condition for receipt of the diploma.

Id. at 586.

The Court in Lee concluded that Engel and its progeny controlled the outcome, writing that "[c]onducting this formal religious observance conflicts with settled rules pertaining to prayer exercises for students." Id. at 587. As in Engel, Schempp, and Wallace, the crucial factor was the nature of the exercise in which the students were asked to participate. Time and again the Court went out of its way to stress the nature of the exercise, writing that prayer was "an overt religious exercise," id. at 588, and that "prayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion." Id. at 592. The practice was unconstitutional because "the State has in every practical sense compelled attendance and participation in an explicit religious exercise at an event of singular importance to every student." Id. at 598. Just like the decisions in Engel and Schempp, the Court in Lee took pains to stress the confines of its holding, concluding that "[w]e do not hold that every state action implicating religion is invalid if one or a few citizens find it offensive," id. at 597, and that "[a] relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion from every aspect of public life could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution." Id. at 598.

B

Two fundamental principles may therefore be derived from the school prayer cases culminating in Lee.

1

Formal religious observances are prohibited in public schools because of the danger that they may effect an establishment of religion. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 424-25 ("[D]aily classroom invocation of God's blessings . . . is a religious activity."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 (Bible reading followed by the Lord's prayer "possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (Prayer is of a "wholly religious character."); Lee, 505 U.S. at 586 (Prayer written by state officials constitutes a "formal religious exercise"). In each of these cases, the Court took pains to stress that not every reference to God in public schools was prohibited. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n.21 ("patriotic or ceremonial occasions" which contain "references to the Deity" bear "no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise" of prayer); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 301 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("the words 'under God' in the Pledge" are not unconstitutional); Lee, 505 U.S. at 598 ("A relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion . . . could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution.").

2

Once it is established that the state is sanctioning a formal religious exercise, then the fact that the students are not required to participate in the formal devotional exercises does not prevent those exercises from being unconstitutional. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 431 ("[T]he indirect coercive pressure upon religious minorities to conform" to the prayer exercises "is plain."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210-11 ("The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 57 (State-sanctioned voluntary prayer in public schools violates Establishment Clause); Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."). To be sure, Lee is the Court's most elaborate pronouncement with respect to indirect coercion. It identifies the circumstances in which indirect coercion may be said to be unconstitutional: when the government directs "the performance of a formal religious exercise" in such a way as to oblige the participation of objectors. Lee, 505 U.S. at 586.

III

No court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances. But Newdow II finesses all that, and the sleight of hand the majority uses becomes immediately apparent: obfuscate the nature of the exercise at issue and emphasize indirect coercion. The panel majority simply ignores, because they are inconvenient, the "dominant and controlling facts" in Lee and its predecessors: that Establishment Clause violations in public schools are triggered only when "State officials direct the performance of a *formal religious exercis*e." 505 U.S. at 586 (emphasis added); see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 ("devotional . . . religious observance" prohibited); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (activities of a "wholly religious character" prohibited).

To avoid a flagrant inconsistency with Lee, and with 40 years of Supreme Court precedent, the two-judge panel majority must first examine whether the act of pledging allegiance is "a religious act." As the Seventh Circuit in Sherman framed it, "Does 'under God' make the Pledge a prayer, whose recitation violates the establishment clause of the first amendment?" 980 F.2d at 445. That court answered the question in the negative; the Newdow II majority, in conclusory fashion, simply assumes the affirmative. ___ F.3d at ___ ("[W]e conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.") (emphasis added).

This assertion belies common sense. Most assuredly, to pledge allegiance to flag and country is a patriotic act. After the public and political reaction last summer, it is difficult to believe that anyone can continue to think otherwise. The fact the Pledge is infused with an undoubtedly religious reference does not change the nature of the act itself. The California statute under which the school district promulgated its policy is entitled "[d]aily performance of patriotic exercises in public schools." Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (emphasis added). The Pledge is recited not just in schools but also at various official events and public ceremonies, including perhaps the most patriotic of occasions—naturalization ceremonies. Generally, the Pledge is recited while standing, facing a United States flag, with the right hand held over the heart, much like the National Anthem. See 4 U.S.C. § 4 (articulating proper procedure for reciting Pledge); 36 U.S.C. § 301 (during anthem "all present . . . should stand at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart."). Whatever one thinks of the normative values underlying the Pledge, they are unquestionably patriotic in nature. Indeed, it is precisely because of the Pledge's explicitly patriotic nature that in 1943 the Supreme Court ruled that no one is required to Pledge allegiance against their will. West Virginia v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

In contrast, to pray is to speak directly to God, with bowed head, on bended knee, or some other reverent disposition. It is a solemn and humble approach to the divine in order to give thanks, to petition, to praise, to supplicate, or to ask for guidance. Communal prayer, by definition, is an even more forceful and profound experience for those present. Little wonder that the Supreme Court has recognized the "unique problem" and "particular risk" posed by school prayer to non-participating students. Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 (Brennan,

J., concurring) (noting that prayers in public schools "present a unique problem").

Not only does the panel majority's conclusion that pledging allegiance is "a religious act" defy common sense, it contradicts our 200-year history and tradition of patriotic references to God. The Supreme Court has insisted that interpretations of the Establishment Clause must comport "with what history reveals was the contemporaneous understanding of its guarantees." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 673; see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 ("[T]he line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.") (Brennan, J., concurring).

The majority's unpersuasive and problematic disclaimers notwithstanding, Newdow II precipitates a "war with our national tradition," McCollum v. Bd. of Ed., 333 U.S. 203, 211 (1948), and as Judge Fernandez so eloquently points out in dissent, only the purest exercise in sophistry could save multiple references to our religious heritage in our national life from Newdow II's axe. Of course, the Constitution itself explicitly mentions God, as does the Declaration of Independence, the document which marked us as a separate people. The Gettysburg Address, inconveniently for the majority, contains the same precise phrase—"under God"—found to constitute an Establishment Clause violation in the Pledge.[12] After Newdow II, are we to suppose that, were a school to permit—not require—the recitation of the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, or the Gettysburg Address in public schools, that too would violate the Constitution? Were the "founders of the United States . . . unable to understand their own handiwork[?]" Sherman, 980 F.2d at 445. Indeed, the recitation of the Declaration of Independence would seem to be the better candidate for the chopping block than the Pledge, since the Pledge does not require anyone to acknowledge the personal relationship with God to which the Declaration speaks.[13] So too with our National Anthem and our National Motto.

Our national celebration of Thanksgiving dates back to President Washington, which Congress stated was "to be observed by acknowledgment with grateful hearts, the many and signal favours of Almighty God." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675 n.2. Congress made Thanksgiving a permanent holiday in 1941,[14] and Christmas has been a national holiday since 1894.[15] Are pere [sic] Newdow's constitutional rights violated when his daughter is told not to attend school on Thanksgiving? On Christmas day? Must school outings to federal courts be prohibited, lest the children be unduly influenced by the dreaded intonation "God save these United States and this honorable Court"?[16] A theory of the Establishment Clause that would have the effect of driving out of our public life the multiple references to the Divine that run through our laws, our rituals, and our ceremonies is no theory at all.

B

As if all of this were not enough, the Supreme Court has gone out of its way to make it plain that the Pledge itself passes constitutional muster. In two of the school prayer cases, the Court noted without so much as a hint of disapproval the fact that the students, in addition to being subject to formal religious observances, also recited the Pledge of Allegiance. See Schempp, 374 U.S. at 207-08 (noting that the practice in public schools consisted of Bible reading and recitation of the Lord's prayer, followed by recitation of the Pledge); Lee, 505 U.S. at 583 (noting that "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers.").

Several other Supreme Court cases contain explicit references to the constitutionality of the Pledge. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 440 n.5 (Douglas, J., concurring) ("[The Pledge] in no way run[s] contrary to the First Amendment") (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("[R]eciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincolns' Gettysburg Address."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("[T]he words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion."); Co. of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (Blackmun, J., for the court) ("Our previous opinions have considered in dicta . . . the pledge, characterizing [it] as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief."); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668,

676 (1984) (Burger, C.J., for the court) ("Other examples of reference to our religious heritage are found . . . in the language 'One nation under God,' as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag. That pledge is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year.").

The panel majority's answer to these myriad statements from our high court is summarily to dismiss them as dicta. However, "dicta of the Supreme Court have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold. We should not blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." Zal v. Steppe, 968 F.2d 924, 935 (9th Cir. 1992) (Noonan, J., concurring and dissenting in part); see also United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[W]e treat Supreme Court dicta with due deference.").[17]

[17] Other courts have, unremarkably enough, not been so flippant when it comes to considering consistent Supreme Court dicta on this issue. See Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 ("[A]n inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so."); Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214, 217 (10th Cir. 1996) ("[T]his court considers itself bound by Supreme Court dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when the dicta is recent and not enfeebled by later statements."); ACLU v. Capital Square Review, 243 F.3d 289, 301 n.10 (6th Cir. 2001) ("We should . . . be amazed if the Supreme Court were now to question the constitutionality of the [revised Pledge]"). Indeed, the unanimity on this point relative to Newdow II is striking.

C

The Newdow II majority, then, finds itself caught between a rock and a hard place—the recitation of the Pledge is not a formal religious act, while patriotic invocations of God do not give rise to Establishment Clause violations. It nonetheless manages to skirt these obstacles to reach its indirect coercion analysis. Newdow II's conclusory foray into the social sciences is a case study, an advertisement, for why it is that the Supreme Court has anchored coercion analysis only to those situations where "formal religious exercises" take place in our public schools. The panel majority seeks to protect dissenters at the risk of courting some unpopularity, but this is not the test. "[O]ffense alone does not in every case show a violation . . . . and sometimes to endure social isolation or even anger may be the price of conscience or nonconformity." Lee, 505 U.S. at 597-98. The Newdow II majority's expansive application of the coercion test is ill-suited to a society as diverse as ours, since almost every cultural practice is bound to offend someone's sensibilities. In affording Michael Newdow the right to impose his views on others, Newdow II affords him a right to be fastidiously intolerant and self-indulgent. In granting him this supposed right, moreover, the two-judge panel majority has not eliminated feelings of discomfort and isolation, it has simply shifted them from one group to another.

Newdow II's psychological ipse dixit is also delivered without reference or regard to our collective experience in the half-century since the passage of the offending statute. In that time, generations of Americans have grown up reciting the Pledge, religious tolerance and diversity has flourished in this country, and we have become a beacon for other nations in this regard. As

Judge Fernandez observes, "it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954." Newdow II ___ F.3d at ___ n.4 (Fernandez, J., dissenting).

IV

In fairness to the Newdow II panel majority, its professed "neutrality" does have some plausible basis in the case law of the Supreme Court, which has undoubtedly constructed a "fractured and incoherent doctrinal path" in the Establishment Clause area, broadly speaking. Sep. of Church and State Comm. v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring). Indeed, its Establishment Clause cases sometimes "more closely resemble ad hoc Delphic pronouncements than models of guiding legal principles." Ingebretsen v. Jackson Pub. Sch. Dist., 88 F.3d 274, 282 (5th Cir. 1996) (Jones, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Supreme Court Justices themselves have recognized that if some of its reasoning "were to be applied logically, it would lead to the elimination" of many cherished, long-standing practices. Co. of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., dissenting).

With respect to the issue presented in this case, however, the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion. Even Justice Brennan, that most stalwart of separationists, recognized that some official acknowledgment of God is appropriate "if the government is not to adopt a stilted indifference to the religious life of the people." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 714 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The decision reached in Newdow II does precisely that: it adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people.

But Newdow II goes further, and confers a favored status on atheism in our public life. In a society with a pervasive public sector, our public schools are a most important means for transmitting ideas and values to future generations. The silence the majority commands is not neutral—it itself conveys a powerful message, and creates a distorted impression about the place of religion in our national life. The absolute prohibition on any mention of God in our schools creates a bias against religion. The panel majority cannot credibly advance the notion that Newdow II is neutral with respect to belief versus non-belief; it affirmatively favors the latter to the former. One wonders, then, does atheism become the default religion protected by the Establishment Clause?

In short, a lack of clarity in the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause cases generally does not help to explain or to justify the panel majority's decision with respect to this particular issue. Put simply, the panel was asked to decide whether the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools amounted to a government establishment of religion. The answer to that question is clearly, obviously, no. We made a grave error in failing to take Newdow I en banc, and we have failed to correct that error ourselves. Now we have Newdow II. Perhaps the Supreme Court will have the opportunity to correct the error for us. I must respectfully dissent from the order denying reconsideration en banc.

McKEOWN, Circuit Judge, with whom HAWKINS, THOMAS, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

The recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance by school children presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance that merits reconsideration by the en banc court. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2) (en banc hearing appropriate when "the proceeding involves a question of exceptional importance"). Although not every case of exceptional importance can or should be reheard en banc, this is a case that should be reheard. I respectfully dissent from the court's decision to deny rehearing en banc.

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Order by Judge GOODWIN; Concurrence by Judge FERNANDEZ.

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge.

After we issued our June 26, 2002 opinion in this case, Sandra Banning, the mother of Michael Newdow's daughter, filed a motion for leave to intervene, in order to, inter alia, challenge Newdow's standing to maintain this action. Banning attached to her motion as an exhibit a copy of a February 6, 2002 California Superior Court custody order. That order awarded Banning "sole legal custody" of the child. We have carefully reconsidered the question of Newdow's Article III standing in light of this custody order and affirm our holding that he has standing as a parent to continue to pursue his claim in federal court.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

When this case first reached us from the district court, no legal custody question or order had been disclosed to the federal courts. Newdow had alleged in the district court that he was the father, and had custody of the minor child. The record now indicates that Newdow and Banning formed a family consisting of an unmarried man, an unmarried woman, and their biological minor child, who lived together part of the time and lived in separate homes in Florida and California, from time to time, with informal visiting arrangements. This informal arrangement apparently was not subject to any custody order until February 6, 2002, after Newdow had appealed from the dismissal of the action he had commenced in federal district court to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the practice of reciting the pledge of allegiance in the public elementary school his child attends.

On February 6, the California Superior Court entered an order containing the following language:

> The child's mother, Ms. Banning, to have sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and > welfare of [the child]. Specifically, both parents shall consult with one another on substantial decisions relating to non-emergency major medical care, dental, optometry, psychological and educational needs of [the child]. If mutual agreement is not reached in the above, then Ms. Banning may exercise legal control of [the child] that is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order. The father shall have access to all of [the child's] school and medical records.

Thereafter, Newdow, alleging "changed circumstances," filed a motion in the Superior Court for a modification of the custody order, seeking, inter alia, joint legal custody with Banning of their child.

On September 25, 2002, the Superior Court (Judge Mize) entered an in personam order enjoining Newdow from pleading his daughter as an unnamed party or representing her as a "next friend" in this lawsuit. The United States promptly filed a motion, which we have granted, to enlarge the record to include the state court transcript of the September 25 hearing before Judge Mize. That transcript contemplates a full trial in the future on Newdow's motion for modification of the February 6 custody order.

Judge Mize appropriately reserved to this court, however, the question of Newdow's Article III standing in federal court. Newdow no longer claims to represent his child, but asserts that he retains standing in his own right as a parent to challenge alleged unconstitutional state action affecting his child while she attends public school in the Elk Grove Unified School District (EGUSD).

REV_00164505

II. DISCUSSION

Our original opinion in this case holds that a parent has Article III standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds state action affecting his child in public school. See Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc) and Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985)). Banning's motion for leave to intervene presents a question of first impression in this Circuit which we are required to consider, even though raised for the first time on appeal. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he jurisdictional issue of standing can be raised at any time."). Does the grant of sole legal custody to Banning deprive Newdow, as a noncustodial parent, of Article III standing to object to unconstitutional government action affecting his child?

A Seventh Circuit decision, Navin v. Park Ridge School District 64, 270 F.3d 1147 (7th Cir. 2001) (per curiam), addresses a noncustodial parent's standing to challenge a school's educational plan for his disabled child under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Though not controlling, the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Navin illustrates a useful method of analysis for the standing question presented here. The divorce decree in that case had granted the mother sole legal custody of her son. The Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act provided that the legal custodian may determine, absent an agreement by the parties to the contrary, "the child's uprising, including but not limited to, his education, health care and religious training." See 750 IL CH § 5/608(a). Contending that tutoring for his dyslexic son was being provided by a "crossing guard supervisor with no skill (or at least no certification) in educating dyslexic youths," the father in Navin had asked for an administrative hearing under the IDEA and filed suit in federal court when the hearing officer terminated the proceeding without addressing the merits. 270 F.3d at 1148. The district court dismissed the father's suit, holding that as a noncustodial parent, he had no standing to challenge action affecting his child in school. Id.

The Seventh Circuit held, however, that noncustodial parents do not automatically lack standing under the IDEA. Id. at 1149. Instead, the court of appeals explained that whether the noncustodial father in Navin had standing depended on the parental rights granted or reserved to him in the divorce decree in light of the mother's assertion of her rights so granted or reserved:

> If the decree had wiped out all of [the noncustodial father's] parental rights, it would have left him with no claim under the IDEA. But this is not what the divorce decree does. The district court did not analyze its language, but it is in the record and shows that [the noncustodial father] retains some important rights, including the opportunity to be informed about and remain involved in the education of his son. If [the father and mother] disagree about educational decisions, then [the mother's] view prevails—unless under state law the school district's view prevails over either parent's wishes, and in that event [the father's] rights under the decree to influence the school's choices are even more important.

270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit remanded the case to the district court, instructing it to "decide whether [the father's] claims [were] incompatible, not with the divorce decree itself, but with [the mother's] use of her rights under the decree." Navin, 270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (emphasis in original).

Navin's general approach to the problem of noncustodial parental standing is sound. We hold that a noncustodial parent, who retains some parental rights, may have standing to maintain a federal lawsuit to the extent that his assertion of retained parental rights under state law is not legally incompatible with the custodial parent's assertion of rights. This holding assumes, of course, that the noncustodial parent can establish an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to the challenged action, and it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Friends of the Earth v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000). Having already held that Newdow satisfies those Article III requirements, see Newdow, 292 F.3d at 603-05, we now turn to the question of whether he retains standing despite Banning's opposition as sole legal custodian to his maintaining this lawsuit.[1]

The February 6 custody order governing Banning's and Newdow's respective parental decision-making power remains operative and plainly does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights. Rather, that order establishes that Newdow retains rights with respect to his daughter's education and general welfare. He has

[1] It is unclear to us exactly what relief Banning seeks. In her motion papers, at times Banning appears to object only to Newdow's appearance as "next friend" of their daughter. At other places, she also seems to object to Newdow's standing in his own right.

REV_00164508

the right to consult with Banning regarding substantial non-emergency decisions (with Banning having ultimate decision-making power), as well as the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records regardless of Banning's position.

California state courts have recognized that noncustodial parents maintain the right to expose and educate their children to their individual religious views, even if those religious views contradict those of the custodial parent or offend her.[2] See Murga v. Petersen, 103 Cal. App.3d 498, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (1980). As the Murga court noted, it was following the "majority of American jurisdictions" in refusing to place restraints on a noncustodial parent who wished to expose his children to his particular religious views, absent a clear, affirmative showing that these religious activities would be harmful to the children. Id. at 504-05, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (emphasis added). The principle of nonintervention, the court noted, "reflects the protected nature of religious activities and expressions of belief, as well as the proscription against preferring one religion over another." Id. at 505, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79. It is not only the court that must not interfere; even more so, the state and federal government may not seek to indoctrinate the child with their religious views, particularly over the objection of either parent.

Murga was the basis for a later California state court decision, In re Mentry, 142 Cal. App.3d 260, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (1983), that reversed a restraining order against a noncustodial father that forbade him from

---

[2] As the Supreme Court has acknowledged, recognized religions exist that do not teach a belief in God, e.g., secular humanism. Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 495 n.11, 81 S. Ct. 1680, 6 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1961).

REV_00164509

engaging his children in any religious activities other than those approved by the custodial mother. The Mentry court stated that "the concept of family privacy embodies not simply a policy of minimum state intervention but also a presumption of parental autonomy. Many of the purposes served by this presumption become more important after dissolution [of the marriage or relationship] than they were before." 142 Cal. App.3d at 268, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (emphasis added). The type of "minimum state intervention" discussed in Mentry surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent. We conclude that Newdow retains sufficient parental rights to support his standing here.

The next question, then, is whether Banning's status as sole legal custodian empowers her to employ state law to defeat Newdow's standing. "'Sole legal custody' means that one parent shall have the right and the responsibility to make the decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of a child." Cal. Fam. Code § 3006. Thus, Newdow cannot disrupt Banning's choice of schools for their daughter. And, as Judge Mize's September 25 order makes clear, Newdow cannot name his daughter as a party to a lawsuit against Banning's wishes.

Judge Mize, however, appropriately declined to rule on whether Newdow has standing in his own right as a parent to maintain this case in federal court. We hold that Banning has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action. Newdow's assertion of his retained parental rights in this case, therefore, simply cannot be legally incompatible with any power Banning may hold pursuant to the custody order. Further, Ms. Banning may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights or waive Newdow's right to enforce his constitutional interests. Neither Banning's personal opinion regarding the Constitution nor her state court award of legal custody is determinative of Newdow's legal rights to protect his own interests.

When school teachers lead a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance according to school district policy, they present a message by the state endorsing not just religion generally, but a monotheistic religion organized "under God." While Newdow cannot expect the entire community surrounding his daughter to participate in, let alone agree with, his choice of atheism and his daughter's exposure to his views, he can expect to be free from the government's endorsing a particular view of religion and unconstitutionally indoctrinating his impressionable young daughter on a daily basis in that official view. The pledge to a nation "under God," with its imprimatur of governmental sanction, provides the message to Newdow's young daughter not only that non-believers, or believers in non-Judeo-Christian religions, are outsiders, but more specifically that her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom. Just as the foundational principle of the Freedom of Speech Clause in the First Amendment tolerates unpopular and even despised ideas, see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S. Ct. 1780, 29 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1971), so does the principle underlying the Establishment Clause protect unpopular and despised minorities from government sponsored religious orthodoxy tied to government services. See Santa Fe Independent Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L. Ed. 2d 295 (2000); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1992). Accordingly, we affirm Newdow's standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the EGUSD's practice of requiring his daughter to attend daily recitations of the 1954 version of the Pledge of Allegiance.

Banning's motion for leave to intervene is DENIED because she has no protectable interest at stake in this action.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the order, but write separately to emphasize that in this order we decide that Newdow's legal status under California law vis-à-vis his daughter does not deprive him of standing. Despite the order's allusions to the merits of the controversy, we decide nothing but that narrow standing issue.[1] Leastwise, I join nothing other than the narrow decision that the orders of the California courts have not deprived Newdow of standing.

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge.

Once we ruled on the merits of this case,[1] the United States Senate sought to intervene as a party and in that capacity to file a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing en banc. We deny the Motion to Intervene, but note our willingness to accept the petition and accompanying brief as an amicus brief, if the Senate consents to the latter use of its filing. Because of the respect that we owe to and have for the Senate, we are constrained to explain the reasons for our denial of intervention.

[1] Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002).

Initially, of course, we lay aside the usual intervention rule. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). This case is more in line with Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1), which allows intervention as of right "when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene." There is a special statute that applies to this motion. As relevant here, the statute first provides that the Senate Legal Counsel shall intervene or appear as amicus "when directed to do so by a resolution adopted by the Senate." 2 U.S.C. § 288b(c). There was a resolution here. See Senate Resolution 292, 107th Cong., 2d Sess. (2002), 148 Cong. Rec. S6105-06 (2002). The statute goes on to provide that Counsel shall intervene upon appropriate direction when "the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution of the United States are placed in issue," but should only do so if there is standing. See 2 U.S.C. § 288e(a). It then states:

> Permission to intervene as a party or to appear as amicus curiae under § 288e of this title shall be of right and may be denied by a court only upon an express finding that such intervention or appearance is untimely and would significantly delay the pending action or that standing to intervene has not been established under section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States.

2 U.S.C. § 288*l* (a).

Because the Senate waited until we had already ruled on the merits of this case on appeal, it would be possible, even accurate, to hold that the attempt to intervene is untimely. However, under the circumstances we are unable to hold that the proposed intervention to seek rehearing or en banc review would "significantly delay" the action. Especially is that true when, as here, some of the current parties to the action have themselves already sought both types of review. We must, therefore, turn our attention to the second exception in § 288*l*(a)—does the Senate have constitutional standing? To put it more precisely: does the Senate have constitutional standing to intervene in every case where the constitutionality of a United States statute is challenged? Because we determine that the answer to that question is no and because there is nothing about the statute at hand that would distinguish it from other statutes, the Senate does not have standing in this case.

Let it first be said that the issue is not whether the United States has standing to appear in support of the constitutionality of the statute in question. Nobody doubts that it does. See 28 U.S.C. § 2403(a). In fact, in this case it did appear for "the Congress of the United States; the United States of America; and William J. Clinton, President of the United States."[2] The question is whether the Senate, as a separate part of the government, has standing to intervene to support statutes on its own behalf, and not really as a representative of the United States itself. We need not, and do not,

[2] Perhaps it should also be recognized that "the three branches are but 'coordinate parts of one government,'" and in that sense there can be no doubt that the legislature is already represented here anyway. See United States v. Providence Journal Co., 485 U.S. 693, 701, 108 S. Ct. 1502, 1507, 99 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1988) (internal citation omitted).

decide whether Congress could designate the Senate Legal Counsel, upon a separate resolution of the Senate alone, to appear as the defender of all statutes on behalf of the United States itself. A law of that type might well have its own constitutional problems; it might even trench on the prerogatives of the executive branch of the United States, which has the authority to execute the laws of this country. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. At any rate, that has not occurred here. As already stated, a separate statute confers that authority upon the executive branch, and here the Senate seeks to appear to represent itself alone.

As the intervention statute at hand expressly recognizes, the Senate must show that it does have constitutional standing to intervene. That means at the very least that it must show that it has "suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is . . . concrete and particularized." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L. Ed.2d 351 (1992); see also Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818-20, 117 S. Ct. 2312, 2317-18, 138 L. Ed. 2d 849 (1997). That concrete and particularized harm is lacking in this case because no harm beyond frustration of a general desire to see the law enforced as written has been shown here.

In so stating, we are aware that there have been a number of cases wherein Senate intervention has been allowed without any particular remark or detailed consideration. See, e.g., INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 930 n.5, 103 S. Ct. 2764, 2773 n.5, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1983); Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 893 F.2d 205, 206 (9th Cir. 1990) (en banc); In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133, 1135 (9th Cir. 1987); see also Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 106 S. Ct. 3181, 92 L.

Ed. 2d 583 (1986). But those cases are not really apposite because they were of a character that directly (particularly) implicated the authority of Congress within our scheme of government, and the scope and reach of its ability to allocate power among the three branches. Thus, Chadha, 462 U.S. at 956-58, 103 S. Ct. at 2787, is a case that dealt with individual houses of Congress assuming the authority to review and veto executive decisions regarding the deportation of aliens. It, thus, implicated separation of powers doctrine and the whole scheme of our government. Lear Siegler dealt with whether Congress could allocate to a legislative agent—The Comptroller General—the authority to delay the procurement actions of the executive branch of the government. See Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1105-06 (9th Cir. 1988), vacated on other grounds, Lear Siegler, 893 F.2d at 208; see also Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 717, 106 S. Ct. at 3183. Finally, in Benny, 812 F.2d at 1141-42, the issue was whether Congress had the authority to prospectively extend the term of office of bankruptcy judges. In other words, in each of these cases the courts were dealing with a statute addressing legislative action regarding allocation of authority within the government, as opposed to action applying that authority to the behavior of the citizenry in general. The issues were the kind that intimately affected Congress's own place within our constitutional scheme.

More closely on point are cases which speak to the standing of legislators to bring actions, where their institutional power as members of the legislature is not being challenged. In Raines, 521 U.S. at 814-16, 117 S. Ct. at 2315-16, for example, a number of members of the Senate and House of Representatives sued pursuant to a provision of the Line Item Veto Act which declared that any member of Congress could challenge the Act. See, 2 U.S.C. § 692(a)(1). The Court declared that they had "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals . . ., the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed . . ., and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829, 117 S. Ct. at 2322. The Court did point out that they did not actually represent their separate houses of Congress and those houses actually opposed them, but did not indicate precisely how that affected their standing.[3] Id. The Court distinguished an earlier case wherein state legislators were accorded standing because their votes would have been deprived of all validity if an allegedly improper person were able to vote. See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 438, 59 S.Ct. 972, 975, 83 L. Ed. 1385 (1939). Thus, at least as to individual legislators, there is no standing unless their own institutional position, as opposed to their position as a member of the body politic, is affected.

The District of Columbia Circuit has followed the same approach. In 1977, a congressman sued the director of the Central Intelligence Agency partly on the basis that when that agency misused its budget, his vote as a congressman was impaired. See Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190, 204 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The court found that he lacked standing, and that a contrary rule would amount to giving him "a roving commission to obtain judicial relief under most circumstances." Id. at

[3] Of course, the Line Item Veto Act dealt with the allocation of power between the legislative and executive branches. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 691-692. However, the Senate was content to appear as amicus curiae. Raines, 521 U.S. at 813 n.*, 117 S. Ct. 2312.

REV_00164518

214. Along the way, the court noted that "his specific rights, interests and prerogatives lie in the power to make laws. As we have noted, this power has not been invaded, diminished, diluted, or injured by the challenged actions in this case." Id. at 213. A like result was reached when a member of Congress sued to prevent alleged misuse of federal funds by a national commission. See Hansen v. Nat'l Comm'n. on the Observance of Int'l Women's Year, 628 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1980). We said: "The injury alleged by appellant is an injury which he suffers along with all other citizens of the United States. He has not presented any facts which show he has sustained or is imminently in danger of sustaining an actual personal injury." Id. at 534. Thus, he had no standing. Id. And, when faced with a claim by congressmen that the military was using its budget to finance combat in other countries, despite laws prohibiting that, the Fourth Circuit had this to say: "Once a bill has become law, however, their interest is indistinguishable from that of any other citizen. They cannot claim dilution of their legislative voting power because the legislation they favored became law." Harrington v. Schlesinger, 528 F.2d 455, 459 (4th Cir. 1975). The court was no more impressed with the claim that their legislative duties would somehow be affected. See id. Other cases have sounded the same note. See, e.g., Baird v. Norton, 266 F.3d 408, 411-12 (6th Cir. 2001); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112, 112-13, 117 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012, 120 S. Ct. 1286, 146 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2000); Daughtrey v. Carter, 584 F.2d 1050, 1057-58 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Metcalf v. Nat'l Petroleum Council, 553 F.2d 176, 187-89 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

REV_00164519

These observations also apply to the Senate as a whole, when it seeks to have a roving commission to enter every case involving the constitutionality of statutes it has enacted. In those instances, its own "powers and responsibilities" are not really under attack. Once the Senate has approved a proposed bill, the House of Representatives agrees, and the President has signed the measure, it becomes public law. A public law, after enactment, is not the Senate's any more than it is the law of any other citizen or group of citizens in the United States. It is a law of the United States of America, and the government is already represented in this case by the Attorney General. Of course, every time a statute is not followed or is declared unconstitutional, the votes of legislators are mooted and the power of the legislature is circumscribed in a sense, but that is no more than a facet of the generalized harm that occurs to the government as a whole. By the same token, the President's signing of the legislation is also nullified, judges, who might have felt otherwise, are bound by the decision, and citizens who relied upon or desired to have the law enforced are disappointed.[4] Moreover, if the separate houses of Congress have standing, a challenger of a law would have to contend with fighting the United States itself, and separately defending himself against the Senate and the House of [4] All of this is underscored by the Senate's suggestion that it should have standing because it opens its daily sessions with the Pledge of Allegiance. That, of course, is an assertion that could be made by countless other organizations, governmental and otherwise, not to mention thousands of United States citizens.

Representatives, each of which would be able to appear as a separate litigating party in the case.[5]

Therefore, the motion of the Senate to intervene is DENIED. However, if the Senate wishes to have us deem its proposed brief to be an amicus brief and to consider it on that basis, we will do that. It should inform us of its desire in that regard within 30 days after the filing of this order.

[5] In principle, he might also have to separately contend against the President, whose ability to effectively sign the law in question can be said to have been affected. We see little other than mischief arising from a system of intervention as unregulated as that. Constitutional standing doctrine is the apotropaion for that threatened malady. It must be applied here.

CIV S-00-0495 MLS PAN PS

REV. DR. MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, PLAINTIFF

v.

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
ET AL., DEFENDANTS

[Filed: May 25, 2000]

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

On March 8, 2000, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging defendants Elk Grove School District and Sacramento City Unified School District violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment by requiring teachers [to] lead morning classes in recitation of the pledge of allegiance. Defendant school districts move to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

The only federal Court of Appeal directly to address this issue held that schools may lead the pledge of allegiance without violating the First Amendment so long as pupils are not compelled to participate, because the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs. Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District, 980 F.2d 437, 442-448 (11th Cir. 1992). While the

Supreme Court has not directly addressed the issue, it has noted that its "previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto ['In God We Trust'] and the pledge [of allegiance], characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (1989); see also id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring); id. at 716-17 (Brennan, J., dissenting); School District of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 449-50 (1962) (Stewart, J., dissenting). Two Courts of Appeal have stated, also in dicta, that the pledge is not an endorsement of religion. See Chandler v. James, 180 F.3d 1254, 1262 (11th Cir. 1999); Separation of Church and State Committee v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman and the statements in dicta noted above, while not binding on this court, are persuasive and directly on point. Whether the court employs the test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-613 (1971), or the more recent endorsement test, see Allegheny, supra, 492 U.S. at 593-594, the Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. Accordingly, I recommend plaintiff's complaint be dismissed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

1. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion; or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

2. Section 4 of Title 4 U.S.C. provides:

Pledge of allegiance to the flag; manner of delivery

The Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag, "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.", should be rendered by standing at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart. When not in uniform men should remove their headdress with their right hand and hold it at the left shoulder, the hand being over the heart. Persons in uniform should remain silent, face the flag, and render the military salute.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

The respondents are Michael A. Newdow, who was the plaintiff below, and the Elk Grove Unified School District and its Superintendent, David W. Gordon, who were defendants below. The Complaint also named as defendants the United States Congress, President George W. Bush,* the Sacramento City Unified School District, and its superintendent, Jim Sweeney. All of those defendants were dismissed from the case by the court of appeals. App., infra, 5a-8a. The Complaint also named the State of California as a defendant, but the State did not participate in the district court proceedings or in the court of appeals, until the rehearing stage, at which point the court of appeals rejected the State's appearance. Id. at 6a. The motions of Sandra Banning, the mother of respondent Newdow's child, and the United States Senate to intervene were denied by the court of appeals. Id. at 99a-109a.

---

* The Complaint originally listed President William J. Clinton as a defendant. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 43(c)(2), President Bush was substituted as his successor in office.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER

v.

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, ET AL.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The amended opinion of the court of appeals on rehearing (App., infra, 1a-24a) is reported at 321 F.3d 772. The original opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 25a-58a) is reported at 292 F.3d 597, and the court's subsequent opinion on standing (App., infra, 89a-98a) is reported at 313 F.3d 500. The opinion and orders of the court denying intervention (App., infra, 99a-109a) are reported at 313 F.3d 495 and 313 F.3d 506. The order of the district court (App., infra, 110a), adopting the Findings and Recommendation of the magistrate judge that the case be dismissed (App., infra, 111a-112a), is unreported.

REV_00164534

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its original judgment on June 26, 2002. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing on February 28, 2003. The court of appeals issued an order staying its mandate on March 4, 2003. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

No federal statute waives the sovereign immunity of the United States of America from a suit for declaratory or injunctive relief under the First Amendment, and thus the jurisdictional basis for respondent Newdow's suit against the United States is unclear.[1] However, the absence of such a waiver is without jurisdictional consequence in this case because the United States could have, and should hereby be deemed to have, intervened as of right in this action against the school district and its superintendent to defend the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance against Newdow's facial and as-applied challenges. See 28 U.S.C. 2403(a).[2]

[1] Other than a separate claim against the President in his official capacity, Newdow did not sue an officer or an agency of the United States, so his claim does not appear to fall within the scope of either Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), or the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 552. Nor is his federal constitutional claim cognizable under the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. 1346, 1402, 2671 et seq. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 477 (1994).

[2] Newdow's as-applied challenge to the recitation of the Pledge in elementary schools calls into question the federal government's practice under which the nearly 2500 military dependents attending its four schools within the Ninth Circuit are led in a voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance daily.

REV_00164535

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. * * *"

Section 4 of Title 4 of the United States Code provides that the Pledge of Allegiance to the United States Flag shall be: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

STATEMENT

1. In 1942, as part of an overall effort to "codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America," Congress enacted a Pledge of Allegiance to the United States flag. H.R. Rep. No. 2047, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942); S. Rep. No. 1477, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942). As originally enacted, the Pledge of Allegiance read: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Act of June 22, 1942, ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380.

Twelve years later, Congress amended the Pledge of Allegiance by adding the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Act of June 14, 1954, ch. 297, § 7, 68 Stat. 249. Accordingly, the Pledge now reads: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. 4.

In amending the Pledge, the Committee Reports noted that, "[f]rom the time of our earliest history our peoples and our institutions have reflected the traditional concept that our Nation was founded on a fundamental belief in God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954); see also S.

Rep. No. 1287, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954) ("Our forefathers recognized and gave voice to the fundamental truth that a government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed must look to God for divine leadership. * * * Throughout our history, the statements of our great national leaders have been filled with references to God."). Both Reports traced the numerous references to God in historical documents central to the founding and preservation of the United States, from the Mayflower Compact to the Declaration of Independence to President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the latter having employed the same reference to a "Nation[] under God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.

The Reports further explained that the amendment would highlight a foundational difference between the United States and Communist nations: "Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being" and "[u]nderlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 1-2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2. As amended, the Pledge would thus textually reject the "communis[t]" philosophy "with its attendant subservience of the individual." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2 ("The spiritual bankruptcy of the Communists is one of our strongest weapons in the struggle for men's minds and this resolution gives us a new means of using that weapon."). The House Report further noted that, through "daily recitation of the pledge in school," "the children of our land * * * will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," so that "[a]s they grow and advance in this understanding, they will assume the responsibilities of self-government equipped to carry on the traditions that have been given to us." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3.

Both the Senate and House Reports expressed the view that, under controlling precedent from this Court, the amendment "is not an act establishing a religion or one interfering with the 'free exercise' of religion." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3 (citing Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952)); see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.[3]

2. California law requires that each public elementary school in the State "conduct[] * * * appropriate patriotic exercises" at the beginning of the school day. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (West 1989). The law provides that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section." Ibid. In satisfaction of that statutory requirement, respondent Elk Grove Unified School District (Elk Grove) has adopted a policy that directs each of its elementary schools to "recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." App., infra, 27a. No child is compelled to join in reciting the Pledge. Id. at 28a.

Respondent Michael Newdow is the noncustodial father of a child enrolled in a public elementary school within the jurisdiction of respondent Elk Grove. App., infra, 2a, 90a-91a. In the school that Newdow's daughter attends, the teacher leads the students in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance daily. Id. at 3a.

mother, retains limited visitation rights, the right to access the child's school and medical records, and the right to "consult" on "substantial" decisions pertaining to the child's "educational needs," if the parents disagree, the child's mother "may exercise legal control of" the child as long as it "is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order." Id. at 91a.

In March 2000, Newdow filed suit against the President, the United States Congress, the United States of America, the State of California, and two California school districts and their superintendents, seeking a declaration that the 1954 statute adding the words "under God" to the Pledge is "facially unconstitutional" under the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment. Compl. 6, 36; App., infra, 4a-5a. He also sought injunctive relief requiring Congress and the President to remove those words from the Pledge and prohibiting California schools from leading students in reciting the Pledge. Compl. 37; App., infra, 4a-5a. The Complaint explains that Newdow's child is "an unnamed plaintiff whom he represents as 'next friend.'" Compl. 3. The Complaint asserts that the recitation of the Pledge in his child's school "results in the daily indoctrination of the Elk Grove Unified School District's students—including Plaintiff's daughter—with religious dogma," id. at 18-19, and that such actions "infringe[]" upon Newdow's "unrestricted right to inculcate in his daughter— free from governmental interference—the atheistic beliefs he finds persuasive." Id. at 20; see also id. at 36. The Complaint further asserts that Newdow's "position as the father of a child attending the State's public schools grants him standing in this matter in his own right and on behalf of his daughter." Id. at 26.

The district court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, relying on numerous decisions of this Court expressly addressing the Pledge and describing it as consistent with the Establishment Clause, as well as on a decision of the Seventh Circuit rejecting a similar challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 110a-112a (adopting magistrate judge's Findings and Recommendation, which cites County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984); School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Sherman v. Community Consol. Sch. Dist. 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993)).

3. a. A divided panel of the Ninth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. App., infra, 25a-58a. As an initial matter, all three members of the panel agreed that the President and Congress should be dismissed from the lawsuit, on the grounds that the President is not a proper defendant for challenging the constitutionality of a federal law under Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992) (plurality opinion), and that the Congress cannot be sued under the Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const. Art. I, § 6, Cl. 1. See App., infra, 29a-30a; id. at 53a (Fernandez, J., concurring and dissenting). The court also ruled that Newdow lacked standing to file suit against the Sacramento City Unified School District and its superintendent "because his daughter is not currently a student there." Id. at 32a.

The court did conclude, however, that Newdow has standing to challenge Elk Grove's policy of reciting the Pledge "because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school" in Elk Grove. App., infra, 32a. In addition, a majority of the court concluded that Newdow has standing in his own right to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act amending the Pledge because "the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation," id. at 33a, and the 1954 Act amounts to a "religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 37a.[4]

b. Turning to the merits of Newdow's complaint, the majority held that, with the addition of the phrase "under God," the Pledge of Allegiance violates the Establishment Clause. App., infra, 37a-42a. The majority began by explaining that this Court has adopted three different tests to analyze Establishment Clause violations (id. at 37a)—the three-prong test outlined in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971); the "endorsement test," County of Allegheny, supra; and the "coercion" test, Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992)—and that the court of appeals was "free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them." App., infra, 41a.

The majority held that the 1954 Act and the school district policy failed the "endorsement test" both because the Pledge's reference to God "is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism" and because it "impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God." App., infra, 41a-42a. The majority further concluded that the 1954 Act and the school district's policy fail the "coercion test" because "the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement 'one nation under God' has a coercive effect." Id. at 45a.

Finally, the majority concluded that the Pledge fails the Lemon test because it has the purpose of advancing religion. App., infra, 46a. In so holding, the majority rejected the United States' argument that the Pledge should be looked at "as a whole," and concluded that the "sole purpose" of the 1954 Act was to "advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." Id. at 46a-47a. The majority further concluded that Elk Grove's policy ran afoul of the Lemon test because it "convey[s] an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God." Id. at 50a.

The majority dismissed in a footnote the numerous statements by this Court and its Members expressly addressing the Pledge and affirming its constitutionality as "dicta" that was announced without "appl[ying] any of the three tests to the Act." App., infra, 50a-51a n.12. The majority also expressly disagreed with the analysis and conclusion of the Seventh Circuit in Sherman, supra, which upheld the Pledge against a similar Establishment Clause challenge. Ibid.

c. Judge Fernandez dissented. App., infra, 52a-58a. Judge Fernandez first expressed his "serious misgivings" about the majority's conclusion that Newdow had standing to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act, but ultimately concluded that the question "makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case." Id. at 53a n.1. With respect to the Establishment Clause challenge, Judge Fernandez explained that "such phrases as 'In God We Trust,' or 'under God' have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity." Id. at 55a. Judge Fernandez also noted that this Court has repeatedly indicated that the Pledge's text, as amended, does not violate the Establishment Clause, and he agreed with the Seventh Circuit that the court of appeals should "respect" those assurances: "If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so." Ibid. (quoting Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448). Finally, Judge Fernandez accused the majority of confining itself to legal "elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place." Id. at 57a; see also id. at 57a n.8 (noting that the majority's holding would preclude use of many patriotic songs, such as "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," in public ceremonial occasions).

d. While the case was pending on the United States' and Elk Grove's petitions for rehearing and rehearing en banc, the mother of Newdow's child notified the court that Newdow lacked legal custody of the child and legal control over the child's educational and religious upbringing. She further advised that, as the custodial parent, she "wish[es] for her child to be able to recite the Pledge at school exactly as it stands." Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10. The United States then filed a motion to enlarge the record and a supplemental brief arguing that Newdow lacks standing to prosecute his challenge to the Pledge on its face or as applied by Elk Grove.

The court of appeals issued a separate decision holding that Newdow has standing to prosecute his constitutional challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 89a-98a. The court concluded that, while Newdow no longer could prosecute the action on behalf of or to vindicate the interests of his child, Newdow continued to have standing in his own right to challenge "unconstitutional government action affecting his child." Id. at 92a. The court noted that the custody agreement does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights, because he retains the "the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records" and the "right to consult" on educational decisions, albeit with the mother "having ultimate decision-making power." Id. at 95a. The court then reasoned that, because California law recognizes a right in noncustodial parents to "expose" their children to their beliefs and values, Newdow was injured because state law "surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent." Id. at 96a. The court further reasoned that Newdow has standing because the mother "has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action." Ibid. Because the Pledge, in the court's view, "provides the message to Newdow's young daughter" that "her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom," the court concluded that Newdow has suffered a legally cognizable injury that provides him with Article III standing. Id. at 97a.[5]

4. a. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing. App., infra, 1a-24a. In its amended opinion, the court limited its Establishment Clause holding to the Pledge's use by Elk Grove in its schools. Id. at 18a. With respect to Newdow's challenge to the facial constitutionality of the Pledge, the court of appeals vacated the district court's decision in favor of the United States and remanded "for further proceedings consistent with our holding." Ibid.

In addition, the court amended its decision to hold only that Elk Grove's policy violated the coercion test, and did not address either the "endorsement test" or the Lemon test. App., infra, 11a. The panel, however, concluded that the recitation of the Pledge violated the coercion test for the same reasons that the original opinion found a violation of the endorsement test. Compare id. at 11a-13a, with id. at 41a-43a.

[5] Judge Fernandez concurred in the judgment on standing, but not in the majority's "allusions to the merits of the controversy." App., infra, 98a.

REV_00164544

The court also elaborated on its rejection of the numerous statements in this Court's opinions affirming the constitutionality of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage. The court assumed that "public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge," but that schools nevertheless could not "coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates." App., infra, 15a. The court also purported to distinguish references to God in the Pledge from those in the Declaration of Independence and National Anthem on the ground that the pledge "is a performative statement." Id. at 16a; see also ibid. ("To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.").

Judge Fernandez dissented from the court's Establishment Clause holding for the same reasons discussed in his initial dissenting opinion. App., infra, 19a-24a. Judge Fernandez also noted that, although the majority "now formally limits itself to holding that it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge in public classrooms, its message that something is constitutionally infirm about the Pledge itself abides and remains a clear and present danger to all similar public expressions of reverence." Id. at 19a n.1.

b. Judge O'Scannlain, joined by Judges Kleinfeld, Gould, Tallman, Rawlinson, and Clifton, filed a lengthy dissent from the court of appeals' denial of rehearing en banc. App., infra, 67a-87a. He described the panel opinion as > wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it

> set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.

Id. at 67a-68a (footnote omitted). Judge O'Scannlain stressed that this Court consistently has distinguished between "patriotic invocations of God on the one hand," and public school "prayer, an 'unquestioned religious exercise.'" Id. at 72a. Judge O'Scannlain further noted that, until the panel's decision here, "[n]o court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances." Id. at 78a-79a. Finally, Judge O'Scannlain noted that, while the panel "adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people," id. at 86a-87a, "the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion," id. at 86a.

Judges McKeown, Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson separately dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc on the ground that the case "presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance" that should be heard by the court en banc. App., infra, 88a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Two decisions of this Court have said without qualification that the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. Numerous other opinions, joined in by at least twelve Justices of this Court, have likewise expressly addressed and affirmed the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance notwithstanding its reference to God. No Justice has expressed the view that the Pledge violates the Establishment Clause. The court of appeals, however, dismissed those majority and separate opinions as unconsidered dicta. But a fair reading of this Court's decisions demonstrates that those consistent and oft-repeated statements stand as a fixed lodestar in this Court's

REV_00164546

Establishment Clause jurisprudence that has informed and directed the resolution of a number of the Court's cases. They reflect a point of exceptional unity and consistent agreement among Members of this Court within Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Whatever else the Establishment Clause may prohibit, this Court's precedents make clear that it does not forbid the government from officially acknowledging the religious heritage, foundation, and character of this Nation. That is what the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance does. The Pledge is therefore constitutional, as the Seventh Circuit held when confronted with the same Establishment Clause challenge. Because the court of appeals' error is so manifestly contrary to precedent, the Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the decision below.

1. This Court's review is warranted because the court of appeals' holding conflicts with repeated opinions of this Court and of individual Justices consistently explaining that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, do not violate the Establishment Clause. The holding below is also in direct conflict with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993), which rejected the same Establishment Clause challenge to the Pledge.

a. The court of appeals' decision is irreconcilable with this Court's repeated assurances that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, comports with the strictures of the Establishment Clause. In Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), the Court held that a city did not violate the Establishment Clause by including a nativity scene as part of a Christmas display. In upholding the display, the Court reasoned that "[t]here is an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life from at least 1789." Id. at 674. The Court noted that its own opinions had "asserted pointedly" that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 675 (quoting Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313 (1952), and citing School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 213 (1963)). The Court further reasoned that "examples of reference to our religious heritage are found * * * in the language "One nation under God," as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag," which "is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; see also ibid. (referring favorably to the National Motto, "In God We Trust," 36 U.S.C. 302, which appears on all United States currency, 31 U.S.C. 324).

Explaining that such official acknowledgments of our Nation's religious heritage do not "establish[] a religion or religious faith, or tend[] to do so," Lynch, 465 U.S. at 678, the Court concluded that the City's inclusion of a creche in its Christmas display likewise permissibly "depicts the historical origins of this traditional event long recognized as a National Holiday," id. at 680. To hold otherwise, the Court explained, would lead to the conclusion that "a host of other forms of taking official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage, are equally offensive to the Constitution." Id. at 686. "[P]ublic acknowledgment of the [Nation's] religious heritage long officially recognized by the three constitutional branches of government," the Court concluded, render "farfetched" "[a]ny notion that these symbols pose a real danger of establishment of a state church." Ibid.

In County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989), the Court invalidated the display of a creche at a county courthouse, but sustained the inclusion of a menorah as part of a holiday display. In so holding, the Court reaffirmed Lynch's approval of the reference to God in the Pledge, noting that all of the Justices in Lynch viewed the Pledge as "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." Id. at 602-603 (citations omitted). The Court then used the Pledge and the general holiday display approved in Lynch as benchmarks for what the Establishment Clause permits, ibid. On that basis, the Court concluded that the display of the creche by itself was unconstitutional because, unlike the Pledge, it gave "praise to God in [sectarian] Christian terms." Id. at 598; see also id. at 603 (finding an "obvious distinction" between the Pledge and the display of the creche).

Furthermore, while not referring specifically to the Pledge of Allegiance, the Court, in Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), upheld the historic practice of legislative prayer as "a tolerable acknowledgment of beliefs widely held among the people of this country." Id. at 792. In so holding, the Court discussed numerous other examples of constitutionally permissible religious references in official life "that form 'part of the fabric of our society,'" ibid., such as "God save the United States and this Honorable Court," which "occurs at all sessions of this Court," id. at 786. The Court also repeated its recognition that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 792.

Likewise, in Abington Township, supra, the Court explained, in the course of invalidating laws requiring Bible-reading in public schools, that "our national life reflects a religious people," and noted the numerous permissible public references to God in historical documents and ceremonial practices, such as oaths ending with "So help me God." 374 U.S. at 213.

Finally, in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962), in the course of invalidating official school prayers, the Court stressed:

REV_00164549

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise [official prayer] that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21.

In sum, this Court has repeatedly refused to "press the concept of separation of Church and State to * * * extremes" and to condemn as unconstitutional the "references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, [and] our ceremonies." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

b. The opinions of individual Justices have cemented as common ground the proposition that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, are constitutionally permissible. See Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 633-635 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Thomas, JJ.) (noting long historical practice, consistent with the Establishment Clause, of official references to God); id. at 638-639 (noting that the Court's invalidation of graduation prayer did not extend to the practice of also saying the Pledge of Allegiance at graduations); County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 623, 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("government recognition and acknowledgment of the role of religion in the lives of our citizens" serve the "secular purposes of 'solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society'"; in addition, because of their "history and ubiquity, such government acknowledgments of religion are not understood as conveying an endorsement of particular religious beliefs") (internal quotation marks omitted); id. at 657 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Brennan & Marshall, JJ.) ("Government policies of * * * acknowledgment, and support for religion are an accepted part of our political and cultural heritage."); id. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Scalia, JJ.) (explaining that the Court "will not proscribe" "the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance" and similar acknowledgments of religious culture); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n.5 (1985) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny, with specific reference to the Pledge of Allegiance); id. at 88 (Burger, C.J., dissenting) (the argument that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, violates the Establishment Clause "would of course make a mockery of our decisionmaking in Establishment Clause cases"); Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny with respect to "In God We Trust" and "God save the United States and this honorable court"); Abington Township, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("The reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance, for example, may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact."); id. at 303 (The Pledge and similar acknowledgments of religion are "interwoven * * * so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity" that their "use may not present that type of involvement which the First Amendment prohibits."); id. at

REV_00164551

307-308 (Goldberg, J., concurring, joined by Harlan, J.) ("[T]oday's decision does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause," citing to divine references in the Declaration of Independence and the National Anthem); Engel, 370 U.S. at 449 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (citing as consistent with the Establishment Clause the then recently amended Pledge of Allegiance, the National Motto "In God We Trust," and the National Day of Prayer).

c. The court of appeals dismissed that overwhelming and consistent authority as "dicta" that was "not inconsistent" with its invalidation of the Pledge. App., infra, 15a. While the court of appeals is correct that none of those cases involved direct challenges to the Pledge, it fundamentally erred in disregarding this Court's consistent statements validating the Pledge. That is because, "[w]hen an opinion issues for the Court, it is not only the result but also those portions of the opinion necessary to that result by which we are bound." Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 67 (1996). The Court's analysis of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion in Lynch and County of Allegheny were not "mere obiter dicta" that the court of appeals was free to disregard. Id. at 66. They were components of the "well-established rationale upon which the Court based the results of its earlier decisions." Id. at 66-67. Those references articulated the constitutional baseline for permissible official acknowledgments of religion under the Establishment Clause against which the governmental practices at issue in each of those cases were then measured. Indeed, for decades, the Court and individual Justices "have grounded [their] decisions in the oft-repeated understanding," id. at 67, that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar references, are constitutional.[6]

The court of appeals' failure to recognize the analytical import of this Court's past decisions and statements underlies its erroneous conclusion that recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in schools violates the Establishment Clause. First, in concluding that the Pledge results in unconstitutional coercion, the court of appeals failed to come to grips with this Court's repeated recognition that the Establishment Clause permits such historic, ubiquitous, and ceremonial acknowledgments of our Nation's religious character and heritage. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675, 677 (concluding that the words "under God" in the Pledge are an "acknowledgment of our religious heritage" similar to the "official references to the value and invocation of Divine guidance in deliberations and pronouncements of the Founding Fathers" that are "replete" in our nation's history). Such references are not reasonably and objectively understood as coercing individuals into silent assent to any particular religious doctrine. Rather, the Pledge is "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief," County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-603, because the ceremonial reference to God acknowledges the undeniable historical facts that the Nation was founded by individuals who believed in God, that the Constitution's protection of individual rights and autonomy reflects those religious convictions, and that the Nation

[6] See also County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 668 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("As a general rule, the principle of stare decisis directs us to adhere not only to the holdings of our prior cases, but also to their explications of the governing rules of law."); Local 28 of the Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. EEOC, 478 U.S. 421, 490 (1986) (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("Although technically dicta, * * * an important part of the Court's rationale for the result [that] it reache[s] * * * is entitled to greater weight.").

continues as a matter of demographic and cultural fact to be a predominantly "religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

Second, as Judge O'Scannlain explained in his dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc, App., infra, 69a-71a, 79a-83a, the court of appeals' decision proceeds from the faulty premise that the Pledge's acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage is the functional equivalent of prayer or a religious act like Bible reading. The decisions of this Court and individual Justices outlined above repeatedly admonish that not every reference to God amounts to impermissible government-endorsed religious exercise, and expressly refer to the Pledge and similar ceremonial references in contradistinction to formal religious exercises like prayer and Bible reading. See, e.g., Lynch, supra; Abington Township, supra; Engel, supra. The Pledge is no more of a coercive religious exercise than the requirement at the opening of federal courts that individuals stand while a court official announces "God save the United States and this honorable Court."

Third, the court of appeals erred in analyzing the phrase "under God" in isolation. In the court's view, pledging allegiance to the phrase "under God" compelled an endorsement of monotheism in the same manner as phrases like "under Jesus," "under Vishnu," or "under Zeus." App., infra, 12a. But Congress did not enact a pledge consisting just of the words "under God," and the school district does not lead students in reciting only the phrase "under God." Nor did Congress enact a pledge to God. Individuals pledge allegiance to "the Flag of the United States of America," and "to the Republic for which it stands." 4 U.S.C. 4. The remainder of the Pledge then describes the culture and character of that Republic—a unified Country, composed of individual States yet indivisible as a Nation, founded for the purposes of promoting liberty and justice for all, and founded by individuals who believed (and populated predominantly by people who continue to believe) that the Nation's character and destiny were rooted in the Divine.

In analyzing only Newdow's discomfiture with the phrase "under God," without considering its larger context, the court of appeals "plainly erred." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 680. In Lynch, this Court stressed that the Establishment Clause analysis looks at religious symbols and references in context, rather than "focusing almost exclusively on the" religious symbol alone. Ibid. The Lynch Court accordingly did not ask whether the government's display of a creche—a clearly religious symbol—was permissible. The Court analyzed whether the overall message conveyed by a display that included both that religious and other secular symbols of the Christmas holiday season conveyed a message of endorsement, and concluded that it did not. Id. at 680-686. The presence of the creche, the Court concluded, properly "depict[ed] the historical origins of this traditional event," id. at 680, and permissibly took "official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage," id. at 686.

Likewise, in County of Allegheny, the Court analyzed and upheld the "combined display" during the winter holiday season of a Christmas tree, Liberty sign, and menorah. 492 U.S. at 616. The Court thus looked at the content of the display as a whole, rather than focusing on the presence of the menorah and the religious message that the menorah alone conveys. Id. at 616-620.

That Congress added the phrase "under God" to a preexisting Pledge does not change the analysis. The city government in County of Allegheny had likewise added the menorah, after the fact, to a preexisting holiday display. Id. at 581-582. Yet this Court trained its constitutional analysis on the display as a whole, rather than scrutinizing the message conveyed by each component as it was added seriatim. Id. at 616-620 & n.64; see also Zelman v. Simmons-Harris,

536 U.S. 639, 655-657 (2002) (noting that the Establishment Clause inquiry must consider all relevant programs, not just the specific program challenged); id. at 672-676 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (later addition of "under God" to Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause because it "serve[s] as an acknowledgment of religion with the 'legitimate secular purpose of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future'").

The court of appeals attempted to distinguish the Pledge from other references to God in public life on the ground that the Pledge is "a performative statement," rather than simply "a reflection of [an] author's profession of faith." App., infra, 16a. As an initial matter, this Court's pronouncements have made no such distinction, consistently grouping the Pledge with the Motto, National Anthem, the Declaration of Independence, and similar public references, some of which frequently involve public performance (e.g., the National Anthem) and some of which do not.

More importantly, the distinction makes no sense. With respect to "impressionable young schoolchildren," id. at 15a, there simply is no coherent or discernible "performative" difference between having them say the Pledge, rather than memorize and recite the National Motto ("In God We Trust"), 36 U.S.C. 302 (emphasis added), the Declaration of Independence, 1 U.S.C. at XLIII ("We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men * * * are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights * * *."), or the Gettysburg Address ("[W]e here highly resolve * * * that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."). Indeed, the court of appeals' approach leads to the curious conclusion that the recitation of Bible passages or long-established prayers in public schools, which would require students "merely to repeat the words of an historical document," App., infra, 16a, trenches less upon Establishment

Clause principles than the Pledge's two-word acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage. That conclusion cannot be reconciled with this Court's precedent or established analytical principles guiding Establishment Clause jurisprudence.

d. This Court's review is warranted because the Ninth Circuit's decision squarely conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, supra, that the Pledge of Allegiance may constitutionally be recited in public elementary schools. Unlike the court of appeals here, the Seventh Circuit placed significant weight on this Court's repeated approval of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion, and concluded that the lower federal courts must "take [the Supreme Court's] assurances seriously." 980 F.2d at 448. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that its decision creates an inter-circuit conflict and that the courts' differing decisions were the product of different modes of analyzing Establishment Clause challenges to such official acknowledgments of religion. App., infra, 16a-17a. This Court's authoritative resolution of the question is therefore necessary.[7]

[7] The Ninth Circuit's decision is also in considerable tension with court of appeals' decisions upholding analogous acknowledgments of the Nation's religious history and character. See Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214 (10th Cir.) (upholding against Establishment Clause challenge the National Motto, "In God We Trust," and its imprint on all currency), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1211 (1996); O'Hair v. Murray, 588 F.2d 1144 (5th Cir.) (upholding National Motto), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 930 (1979); Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970) (same); Ganulin v. United States, 71 F. Supp. 2d 824 (S.D. Ohio 1999) (upholding constitutionality of 5 U.S.C. 6103, which makes Christmas Day a paid federal holiday), aff'd, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 973 (2001); Opinion of the Justices, 228 A.2d 161 (N.H. 1967) (posting of plaques in all public school classrooms bearing the National Motto, "In God We Trust," would not violate the Establishment Clause).

e. The question presented is one of great importance. An Act of Congress has been held unconstitutional as applied in one of its most important contexts. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; pp. 4-5, supra; App., infra, 14a & n.7. Furthermore, the impact of the decision below is potentially far-reaching. In addition to the practice at federally operated schools for military dependents, see n.2, supra, public schools within each of the 50 States lead students in voluntary recitations of the Pledge of Allegiance, see Idaho C.A. Amicus Curiae Br. 9-13 (citing state laws). It is untenable that a national Pledge of Allegiance to a national flag would have a different content depending on the judicial circuit in which it is uttered. Absent this Court's review, 9.6 million students in nine States (App., infra, 69a) will recite an abridged version of the Pledge, while the nearly 37 million students in the rest of the Country will recite the Pledge that Congress enacted. Students in the Ninth Circuit will also learn a different Pledge in school than they recite at other public and private events. The Pledge cannot serve its purpose of unifying and commonly celebrating the national identity unless it is one Pledge with one content for all citizens at all points in their lives. There is no reason to tolerate such disruption and disharmony in the schools of this Nation. The Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. This Court has repeatedly said so, and federal and state schools have acted in reliance on those assurances. The Ninth Circuit's disregard of this Court's decisions and their underlying analytical principles merits review.

2. The issue of Newdow's standing to bring his constitutional challenge is a necessarily antecedent question that this Court would need to address were it to grant review. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94 (1998). Although it is the court of appeals' erroneous ruling on the merits that warrants this Court's review, the court of appeals also committed three errors in concluding that

Newdow's status as a noncustodial parent did not deprive him of standing to challenge an educational practice at his child's school.[8]

First, and most fundamentally, Newdow has not suffered the invasion of any legally protected interest. A number of this Court's Establishment Clause cases have involved lawsuits by parents challenging practices or policies in public schools. See, e.g., Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290 (2000); Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills Sch. Dist., 509 U.S. 1 (1993); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972). In all of those cases, however, the parents had the legal right to sue as next friend to vindicate their children's legal interests and to protect the parents' own constitutional rights to direct and control the religious and educational upbringing of their children, see Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534-535 (1925).

Newdow can assert neither right. He has no legal right to sue as his child's next friend, or otherwise seek to vindicate his child's legal interests, as the court of appeals recognized. App., infra, 96a. That prerogative rests exclusively with the mother, who has sole legal custody. Ibid. While Newdow retains the right to "consult" with the mother on educational decisions and to have "access" to the child's educational records, id. at 91a, Newdow does not allege that Elk Grove's

[8] While the standing issue is necessarily antecedent to the merits of the Establishment Clause analysis, see Steel Co., supra, this Petition presents the Establishment Clause issue first because the court of appeals' erroneous constitutional judgment clearly merits this Court's review. Whether or not the Ninth Circuit's erroneous standing analysis would independently merit an exercise of this Court' s certiorari jurisdiction, it does not pose a barrier to review in this case. The Ninth Circuit's standing analysis is closely intertwined with its flawed Establishment Clause ruling, and the decision below, which not only erroneously invalidates the Pledge of Allegiance, but did so at the behest of a party without Article III standing, should not be allowed to stand.

use of the Pledge in its schools interferes with either of those rights. Nor, contrary to the court of appeals' opinion, does Newdow have any right "to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 7a. The custody order granted sole control over the child's "health, education and welfare" to the mother. Id. at 90a-91a. And the mother has made clear that she "wants her daughter to recite the Pledge as it stands as part of her education," Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10.[9]

Where, as here, the two parents disagree on an educational practice, the decision of the custodial parent controls and Newdow has no right to overturn it. If, as the noncustodial parent, Newdow believes the mother's educational decisions are causing harm to the child, the proper remedy is for him to resort to family court and seek a modification of the custody agreement. He cannot use federal litigation to circumvent that state-law process or to modify a state-law custody judgment. See District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482 (1983); Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413 (1923).[10]

[9] See also Burge v. City & County of San Francisco, 262 P.2d 6, 12 (Cal. 1953) (status as custodial parent "embrace[s] the sum of parental rights with respect to the rearing of a child, including its care. It includes the right * * * to direct his activities and make decisions regarding his care and control, education, health, and religion."); cf. Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 122-129 (1989).

[10] In apparent recognition of that limitation, the United States understands that Newdow has filed a motion in California Superior Court to alter the custody arrangement. That motion remains pending with a hearing date scheduled for July 31, 2003.

The court of appeals relied (App., infra, 92a-94a) on the Seventh Circuit's decision in Navin v. Park Ridge School District, 270 F.3d 1147 (2001) (per curiam), which held that a noncustodial father might be able to sue to enforce his son's rights under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, 20 U.S.C. 1415. In that case, however, the court concluded that the divorce decree did not strip the father of his parental interest in

Second, the court of appeals placed weight upon Newdow's residual right, under California law, to "expose" his child to his views. App., infra, 95a. But, again, Newdow has not alleged that Elk Grove or the United States has denied him any opportunity to expose his child to his particular viewpoints.

The court of appeals went further, however, and held that Newdow has a right not to have his message to his child interrupted or diluted by the government's educational practices. But, especially when that speech occurs with the consent of the custodial parent, the right of the non-custodial parent to "expose" the child to his views does not entitle that parent to close off all other views. Public schools routinely instruct students about evolution, war, and other matters with which some parents may disagree on religious, political, or moral grounds. What the Constitution protects, in those circumstances, is the parents' right to instill their own views in their children and to place them in a private school that is more consonant with their beliefs. See Pierce, supra.[11]

The court of appeals further erred in suggesting that Newdow's limited state-law right was somehow enhanced by that court's erroneous conclusion that his Establishment Clause challenge was meritorious. The court repeatedly ensuring the quality of his child's education. 270 F.3d at 1149. The court stressed, moreover, that the noncustodial parent could not use federal law "to upset choices committed to [the mother] by the state court," id. at 1150, which is exactly what Newdow's lawsuit attempts to do.

[11] Cf. West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630 (1943) (holding only that children whose parents have religious objections to the content of the Pledge have a right not to participate in its recitation in a classroom, where their refusal "does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so"); Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 717 (1977) (the government "may legitimately" "communicate to others an official view as to proper appreciation of history, state pride, and individualism," as long as individuals are not forced to "becom[e] the courier for such message[s]").

couched Newdow's purported Article III injury in terms of a right not to have his daughter "subjected to unconstitutional state action" and "official state indoctrination of * * * an official view of religion." App., infra, 96a (emphasis added). See also id. at 97a (the mother "may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights") (emphasis added).

That approach, however, confuses the standing inquiry with the ultimate question on the merits. The type of injury that Article III requires must be discernible separate and apart from the ultimate resolution of the case. The plaintiff must identify some action by the opposing party that affects the plaintiff's particularized, individual rights concretely and imminently—regardless of whether that action ultimately is found to be lawful or not. "The requirement of standing 'focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated." Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 484 (1982); see also Schaffer v. Clinton, 240 F.3d 878, 883 (10th Cir.) (denying standing where it "revolves around the asserted unconstitutionality of the [conduct as that] is a statement of [plaintiff's] view of the merits * * * and no more"), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 992 (2001).

Third, even if Newdow possesses some federal right not to have his message of atheism affected by his child's exposure to the Pledge, the court of appeals' limited invalidation of the Pledge in elementary schools does not redress that injury. Newdow's child remains subject to exposure to the Pledge in a wide variety of other assemblies and settings, public or private. In addition, the child's mother could place the child in private school where the official governmental Pledge could be recited daily. Unless the Establishment Clause compels courts to root out every reference to religion in public life, the relief ordered by the court here is incapable of inoculating Newdow's message of atheism against any perceived dilution.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted. The Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the court of appeals' judgment.

Respectfully submitted.

AMENDED OPINION AND AMENDED CONCURRENCE/DISSENT

Before: ALFRED T. GOODWIN, STEPHEN REINHARDT and FERDINAND F. FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by Judge Goodwin; Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge Fernandez

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals pro se a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164568

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[2] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'" Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation that the district court hold that the daily Pledge ceremony in the schools did not violate the Establishment Clause. District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties in the district court. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-561).

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. Amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[3] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions . . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

Id. at 687-88 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[3] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n. 4 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792).

REV_00164575

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court first examined the degree of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. Because we conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act and accordingly hold the policy unconstitutional, we need not consider whether the policy fails the endorsement test or the Lemon test as well.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since

1954—monotheism. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. The school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, including the religious values it incorporates.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[4] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n.14. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642.

The school district's policy here, like the school's action in Lee, places students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. The defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal. To an atheist or a believer in non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, however, this phrase may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in Lee: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the non-believer or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592.

The coercive effect of the policy here is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[5] Furthermore, under Lee, non-compulsory participation is no basis for distinguishing Barnette [sic] from the case at bar because, even without a

[5] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-believing school-children that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

REV_00164579

recitation requirement for each child, the mere presence in the classroom every day as peers recite the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[6] The coercive effect of the Pledge is also made even more apparent when we consider the legislative history of the Act that introduced the phrase "under God." These words were designed to be recited daily in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower).[7] All in all, there can be little doubt that under the controlling Supreme

[6] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593.

[7] In addition, the legislative history of the 1954 Act makes it plain that the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins." This statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N 2339, 2341.

Court cases the school district's policy fails the coercion test.[8]

The Supreme Court has addressed the Pledge in passing, and we owe due deference to its dicta. See United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996). Our opinion, however, is not inconsistent with this dicta. In Allegheny, the Court noted that it had "considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." 492 U.S. at 602-03. And in Lynch, the Court observed that students recited the pledge daily, but only to support its point that there is a long tradition of "official acknowledgment" of religion. 465 U.S. at 674, 676. Neither of these two references speaks to the issue here. We may assume arguendo that public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge, yet it does not follow that schools may coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates.

Our decision is not inconsistent with Engel, which approved of encouraging students to "recit[e] historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence

[8] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

which contain references to the Deity or . . . sing[ ] officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being." 370 U.S. at 435 n.21. The Pledge differs from the Declaration and the anthem in that its reference to God, in textual and historical context, is not merely a reflection of the author's profession of faith. It is, by design, an affirmation by the person reciting it. "I pledge" is a performative statement. See J.L. Austin, How to Do Things with Words (J.O. Urmsson & Marina Sbisa eds., Harvard Univ. Press 1975) (1962). To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently."

REV_00164582

Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. For the reasons we have already explained, this question is simply not dispositive of whether the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.

In light of Supreme Court precedent, we hold that the school district's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the inclusion of the added words "under God," violates the Establishment Clause.

REV_00164583

In addition to the relief that Newdow seeks against the school district—relief to which he is entitled—Newdow seeks a declaration as to the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. The district court did not discuss that question because it dismissed Newdow's complaint on the basis of its holding that the school district's policy did not violate the First Amendment. Given our contrary holding, we must consider whether to grant Newdow's claim for declaratory relief as to the Act. Normally, whether to decide a claim for declaratory judgment is left to the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); see also Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Dizol, 133 F.3d 1220, 1222-23 (9th Cir. 1998). We doubt that, given the relief to which we decide Newdow is entitled, the district court would have exercised its discretionary power to resolve, in the present case, the additional issue as to which Newdow seeks declaratory relief. Accordingly, we decline to reach that issue here.

The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to Newdow's claim that the school district's Pledge policy violates the Establishment Clause and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.[1]

We can run through some or all of the tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) Because my point is that a number of Justices have recognized the lack of danger and because I hope to avoid untoward complication in the setting out of the citations, I have not designated which Justices have joined in which opinion. All in all, however, perusing those opinions indicates that Chief Justice Burger, Chief Justice Rehnquist, and Justices Harlan, Brennan, White, Goldberg, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy have so recognized.

Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 795, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 3338, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1019 (1983) (legislative prayer). I think it is worth stating a little more about two of the cases which I have just cited. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity. Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring) ("A civic reference to God does not become permissible . . . only when . . . it is sapped of religious significance." The Pledge is constitutional and "[w]e need not drain the meaning from the reference [to God] to reach this conclusion."

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America The Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe all of us, including our children, must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance in any setting, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

---

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all. By the way, I am not the first to apply the de minimis concept to this area of the law. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 861, 120 S. Ct. 2530, 2569, 147 L. Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge FERNANDEZ.

OPINION

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164592

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day."[2]

The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

[2] The SCUSD, the school district that Newdow claims his daughter may in the future attend, has promulgated a similar rule: "Each school shall conduct patriotic exercises daily. . . . The Pledge of Allegiance to the flag will fulfill this requirement." However, as discussed infra, Newdow lacks standing to challenge the SCUSD's rule requiring recitation of the Pledge.

liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[3] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'"

Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation; District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

[3] Compelling students to recite the Pledge was held to be a First Amendment violation in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03, 112 S. Ct. 2767, 120 L.Ed.2d 636 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 501, 18 L.Ed. 437 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503, 95 S. Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09, 95 S. Ct. 1813. Although the district court lacks jurisdiction over the President and the Congress, the question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act remains before us. While the court correctly dismissed the claim against those parties, it survives against others.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties either below or here. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180, 120 S. Ct. 693 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560- 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130).

The final question of standing relates to the 1954 Act. Specifically, has Newdow suffered an "injury in fact" that is "fairly traceable" to the enactment of the 1954 Act? Id.

We begin our inquiry by noting the general rule that the standing requirements for an action brought under the Establishment Clause are the same as for any other action. Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 488-90, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L.Ed.2d 700 (1982). "The requirement of standing focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated. Moreover, we know of no principled basis on which to create a hierarchy of constitutional values or a complementary 'sliding scale' of standing which might permit respondents to invoke the judicial power of the United States." Id. at 484, 102 S. Ct. 752 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In Valley Forge, an organization dedicated to the separation of church and state brought suit challenging the federal government's grant of surplus federal property to a church-related college. The suit alleged that this grant of real property, without any financial payment by the college, was a violation of the Establishment Clause. The Supreme Court found that the plaintiff had standing neither as a taxpayer, see id. at 479-80, 102 S. Ct. 752, nor as a party personally injured as a consequence of the alleged unconstitutional action, see id. at 484-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The "psychological consequence presumably produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees . . . . is not an injury sufficient to confer standing under Art. III, even though the disagreement is phrased in constitutional terms." Id. at 485-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The Court emphasized that "'[t]he assumption that if respondents have no standing to sue, no one would have standing, is not a reason to find standing.'" Id. at 489, 102 S. Ct. 752 (quoting Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 227, 94 S. Ct. 2925, 41 L.Ed.2d 706 (1974)).

While Valley Forge remains good law, the Supreme Court in more recent opinions has indirectly broadened the notion of Establishment Clause standing in public education cases by holding that the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation. In Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985), the Court considered an Establishment Clause challenge to an Alabama statute that originally had authorized a one-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation," but was later amended to authorize a period of silence "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40-42, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Although the previous form of the statute specifically allowed students to use the moment of silence for

"meditation," silent prayer was always an option. "[I]t is undisputed that at the time of the enactment of [the amended statute] there was no governmental practice impeding students from silently praying for one minute at the beginning of each schoolday." Id. at 57 n.45, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Nor were students, under the amended form of the statute, compelled to use the allotted time for prayer. In sum, the amendment to the Alabama statute had no discernible effect on public school students other than to inform them that the state was encouraging them to engage in prayer during their daily moment of silence. Because the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that standing is a jurisdictional requirement, the existence of which each federal court must determine for itself, see Lujan, 504 U.S. at 559-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 230-31, 110 S. Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), we may presume that in Wallace the Court examined the standing question before deciding the merits, and that the Court determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to challenge the amended Alabama statute.

Our reading of Wallace is supported by Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L.Ed.2d 295 (2000), where the Court upheld a facial challenge to a school district's policy of permitting, but not requiring, prayer initiated and led by a student at high school football games. Noting that "the Constitution also requires that we keep in mind 'the myriad, subtle ways in which the Establishment Clause values can be eroded,'" id. at 314, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, 694 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring)), the Court held that the "mere passage by the District of a policy that has the purpose and perception of government establishment of religion," id., violated the Establishment Clause. "[T]he simple enactment of this policy, with the purpose and perception of school endorsement of student prayer, was a constitutional violation." Id. at 316, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (emphasis added).

In Wallace and Santa Fe, the Court looked at the language of each statute, the context in which the statute was enacted, and its legislative history to determine that the challenged statute caused an injury in violation of the Establishment Clause. "We refuse to turn a blind eye to the context in which this policy arose, and that context quells any doubt that this policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer." Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Wallace noted that whether a statute actually conveys a message of endorsement of religion is "not entirely a question of fact . . . . The relevant issue is whether an objective observer, acquainted with the text, legislative history, and implementation of the statute, would perceive it as state endorsement of prayer in public schools." 472 U.S. at 76, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment). In Santa Fe, "[t]he text and history of this policy . . . reinforce our objective student's perception that the prayer is, in actuality, encouraged by the school." 530 U.S. at 308, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In evaluating the purpose of the school district policy, the Court found "most striking . . . the evolution of the current policy." Id. at 309, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In Wallace, a review of the legislative history led the Court to conclude that enactment of the amended statute "was not motivated by any clearly secular purpose—indeed, the statute had no secular purpose."

472 U.S. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479; see also id. at 57-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

Operating within the above-described legal landscape, we now turn to the question initially posed, namely, does Newdow have standing to challenge the 1954 Act? Initially, we note that the 1954 statute challenged by Newdow is similar to the Alabama statute struck down in Wallace. Neither statute works the traditional type of "injury in fact" that is implicated when a statute compels or prohibits certain activity, nor do the amendments brought about by these statutes lend themselves to "as-applied" constitutional review. Nevertheless, the Court in Wallace, at least implicitly, determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to attack the challenged statute. Moreover, the legislative history of the 1954 Act shows that the "under God" language was not meant to sit passively in the federal code unbeknownst to the public; rather, the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," and this statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341. Taken within its context, the 1954 addendum was designed to result in the recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms throughout the land on a daily basis, and therefore constituted as much of an injury-in-fact as the policies considered in Wallace and

REV_00164602

Santa Fe. As discussed earlier, Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. The mere enactment of the 1954 Act in its particular context constitutes a religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter. Accordingly, we hold that Newdow has standing to challenge the 1954 Act.

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch, and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[4] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions. . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are > outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

[4] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n.4, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792, 103 S. Ct. 3330).

Id. at 687-88, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[5] The Court first examined the degree

---

[5] Although this formulation is referred to as the "coercion" test, it should be noted that coercion is not a necessary element in finding an Establishment Clause violation. "The Establishment Clause, unlike the Free Exercise Clause, does not depend upon any showing of direct governmental compulsion. . . ." Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 430, 82 S. Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601 (1962). "[T]his court has never relied on coercion alone as the touchstone of Establishment Clause analysis. To require a showing of coercion, even indirect coercion, as an essential element of an Establishment Clause violation would make the free Exercise Clause a redundancy." Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 628, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (O'Connor, J., concurring). "Over the years, this Court has declared the invalidity of many noncoercive state laws and practices conveying a message of religious endorsement." Lee, 505 U.S. at 618, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (Souter, J., concurring).

of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. The Supreme Court has not repudiated Lemon; in Santa Fe, it found that the application of each of the three tests provided an independent ground for invalidating the statute at issue in that case; and in Lee, the Court invalidated the policy solely on the basis of the coercion test. Although this court has typically applied the Lemon test to alleged Establishment Clause violations, see, e.g., Am. Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1120-21 (9th Cir. 2002), we are not required to apply it if a practice fails one of the other tests. Nevertheless, for purposes of completeness, we will analyze the school district policy and the 1954 Act under all three tests.

We first consider whether the 1954 Act and the EGUSD's policy of teacher-led Pledge recitation survive the endorsement test. The magistrate judge found that "the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs." Supreme Court precedent does not support that conclusion.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is an endorsement of religion. It is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since 1954—monotheism. The text of the official Pledge, codified in federal law, impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. "[T]he government must pursue a course of complete neutrality toward religion." Wallace, 472 U.S. at 60, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Furthermore, the school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, and thus amounts to state endorsement of these ideals. Although students cannot be forced to participate in recitation of the Pledge, the school district is nonetheless conveying a message of state endorsement of a religious belief when it requires public school teachers to recite, and lead the recitation of, the current form of the Pledge.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, 63 S. Ct. 1178, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633, 63 S. Ct. 1178. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[6] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n. 14, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178.

The Pledge, as currently codified, is an impermissible government endorsement of religion because it sends a message to unbelievers "that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 688, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice Kennedy, in his dissent in Allegheny, agreed:

> [B]y statute, the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag describes the United States as 'one nation under God.' To be sure, no one is obligated to recite this phrase, . . . but it borders on sophistry to suggest that the reasonable atheist would not feel less than a full member of the political community every time

---

[6] Barnette was decided before "under God" was added, and thus the Court's discussion was limited to the political ideals contained in the Pledge.

REV_00164609

> his fellow Americans recited, as part of their expression of patriotism and love for country, a phrase he believed to be false.

Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 672, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[7] Consequently, the policy and the Act fail the endorsement test.

Similarly, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test. Just as in Lee, the policy and the Act place students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in that case: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the nonbeliever or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Although the defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal, to an atheist or a believer in certain non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, it may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. The coercive effect of this policy is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[8] Furthermore, under Lee, the fact that

[7] For Justice Kennedy, this result was a reason to reject the endorsement test.

[8] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-

REV_00164610

students are not required to participate is no basis for distinguishing Barnette from the case at bar because, even without a recitation requirement for each child, the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[9] The coercive effect of the Act is apparent from its context and legislative history, which indicate that the Act was designed to result in the daily recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower). Therefore, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test.[10]

believing schoolchildren that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

[9] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

[10] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722, 97 S. Ct.

Finally we turn to the Lemon test, the first prong of which asks if the challenged policy has a secular purpose. Historically, the primary purpose of the 1954 Act was to advance religion, in conflict with the first prong of the Lemon test. The federal defendants "do not dispute that the words 'under God' were intended" "to recognize a Supreme Being," at a time when the government was publicly inveighing against atheistic communism. Nonetheless, the federal defendants argue that the Pledge must be considered as a whole when assessing whether it has a secular purpose. They claim that the Pledge has the secular purpose of "solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future, and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355.

The flaw in defendants' argument is that it looks at the text of the Pledge "as a whole," and glosses over the 1954 Act. The problem with this approach is apparent when one considers the Court's analysis in Wallace. There, the Court struck down Alabama's statute mandating a moment of silence for "meditation or voluntary prayer" not because the final version "as a whole" lacked a primary secular purpose, but because the state legislature had amended the statute specifically and solely to add the words "or voluntary prayer." 472 U.S. at 59-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

By analogy to Wallace, we apply the purpose prong of the Lemon test to the amendment that added the words "under God" to the Pledge, not to the Pledge in its final version. As was the case with the amendment to the Alabama statute in Wallace, the legislative history of the 1954 Act reveals that the Act's sole purpose was to advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." [T]he First Amendment requires that a statute must be invalidated if it is entirely motivated by a purpose to advance religion." Id. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (citations omitted) (applying the Lemon test). As the legislative history of the 1954 Act sets forth:

> At this moment of our history the principles underlying our American Government and the American way of life are under attack by a system whose philosophy is at direct odds with our own. Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being. Underlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp. The inclusion of God in our pledge therefore would further acknowledge the dependence of our people and our Government upon the moral directions of the Creator. At the same time it would serve to deny the atheistic and materialistic concepts of communism with its attendant subservience of the individual.

H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 1-2 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2340. This language reveals that the purpose of the 1954 Act was to take a position on the question of theism, namely, to support the existence and moral authority of God, while "deny[ing] . . .

atheistic and materialistic concepts." Id. Such a purpose runs counter to the Establishment Clause, which prohibits the government's endorsement or advancement not only of one particular religion at the expense of other religions, but also of religion at the expense of atheism.

> [T]he Court has unambiguously concluded that the individual freedom of conscience protected by the First Amendment embraces the right to select any religious faith or none at all. This conclusion derives support not only from the interest in respecting the individual's freedom of conscience, but also from the conviction that religious beliefs worthy of respect are the product of a free and voluntary choice by the faithful, and from recognition of the fact that the political interest in forestalling intolerance extends beyond intolerance among Christian sects—or even intolerance among "religions"—to encompass intolerance of the disbeliever and the uncertain.

Wallace, 472 U.S. at 52-54, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

In language that attempts to prevent future constitutional challenges, the sponsors of the 1954 Act expressly disclaimed a religious purpose. "This is not an act establishing a religion. . . . A distinction must be made between the existence of a religion as an institution and a belief in the sovereignty of God. The phrase 'under God' recognizes only the guidance of God in our national affairs." H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341-42. This alleged distinction is irrelevant for constitutional purposes. The Act's affirmation of "a belief in the sovereignty of God" and its recognition of "the guidance of God" are endorsements by the government of religious beliefs. The Establishment Clause is not limited to "religion as an institution"; this is clear from cases such as Santa Fe, where the Court struck down student-initiated and student-led prayer at high school football games. 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. The Establishment Clause guards not only against the establishment of "religion as an institution," but also against the endorsement of religious ideology by the government. Because the Act fails the purpose prong of Lemon, we need not examine the other prongs. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-14, 91 S. Ct. 2105.

Similarly, the school district policy also fails the Lemon test. Although it survives the first prong of Lemon because, as even Newdow concedes, the school district had the secular purpose of fostering patriotism in enacting the policy, the policy fails the second prong. As explained by this court in Kreisner v. City of San Diego, 1 F.3d 775, 782 (9th Cir. 1993), and by the Supreme Court in School District of Grand Rapids v. Ball, 473 U.S. 373, 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267 (1985), the second Lemon prong asks "whether the challenged government action is sufficiently likely to be perceived by adherents of the controlling denominations as an endorsement, and by the nonadherents as a disapproval, of their individual religious choices."[11] Ball, 473

[11] Although Ball was overruled in part by Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 236, 117 S. Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391 (1997), as the Court stated in Agostini, Ball's statement of the general principles and relevant tests to be used in determining what constitutes an Establishment Clause violation remain intact; only the underlying factual assumptions and presumptions have changed. In particular, the Court rejected the following three core assumptions of Ball:

REV_00164615

U.S. at 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216. Given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, as discussed above, particularly within the confined environment of the classroom, the policy is highly likely to convey an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God. Therefore the policy fails the effects prong of Lemon, and fails the Lemon test. In sum, both the policy and the Act fail the Lemon test as well as the endorsement and coercion tests.[12]

> (i) any public employee who works on the premises of a religious school is presumed to inculcate religion in her work; (ii) the presence of public employees on private school premises creates a symbolic union between church and state; and (iii) any and all public aid that directly aids the educational function of religious schools impermissibly finances religious indoctrination, even if the aid reaches such schools as a consequence of private decisionmaking.

Agostini, 521 U.S. at 222, 117 S. Ct. 1997. Therefore, Ball's restatement of the second prong of Lemon remains valid even after Agostini.

[12] We recognize that the Supreme Court has occasionally commented in dicta that the presence of "one nation under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. See Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. 3086; Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676, 104 S. Ct. 1355; id. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303-04, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); id. at 306-08, 83 S. Ct. 1560 (Goldberg, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring); Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n. 21, 82 S. Ct. 1261. However, the Court has never been presented with the question directly, and has always clearly refrained from deciding it. Accordingly, it has never applied any of the three tests to the Act or to any school policy regarding the recitation of the Pledge. That task falls to us, although the final word, as always, remains with the Supreme Court.

REV_00164616

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently." Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee or the endorsement test from Lynch. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. Relying in part on Supreme Court dicta regarding the Pledge, the court answers this question in the negative, determining that "under God" is a statement which, taken within its context in the Pledge, is devoid of any significant religious content, and therefore constitutional. Id. at 447-48. At the very least, as discussed above in the text, the Supreme Court requires that any policy alleged to be an Establishment Clause violation must be held to the scrutiny of the established tests. Our application of all of the tests compels the conclusion that the policy and the Act challenged here violate the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Thus, we must respectfully differ from the Seventh Circuit.

In conclusion, we hold that (1) the 1954 Act adding the words "under God" to the Pledge, and (2) EGUSD's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the added words included, violate the Establishment Clause. The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to these two claims, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C[1] of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.

We can run through the litany of tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534 U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L.Ed.2d 256 (2001); *Goehring v. [1] I admit, however, to serious misgivings about standing to attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 itself. Congress has not compelled anyone to do anything. It surely has not directed that the Pledge be recited in class; only the California authorities have done that. Even if a general lack of standing to directly attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 would deprive federal courts of the opportunity to strike "under God" from that statute, any lament would be no more than a complaint about the limits on federal judges' constitutional power. Nonetheless, that ultimately makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case.

1306-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (Fernandez, J., concurring). But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 3106, 3143, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n. 5, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985); *Lynch v. [3] The citations to the four preceding Supreme Court opinions are to majority opinions, concurring opinions, and dissents. Because my point is that a number of Justices have recognized the lack of danger and because I hope to avoid untoward complication in the setting out of the citations, I have not designated which Justices have joined in which opinion. All in all, however, perusing those opinions indicates that Chief Justice Burger, Chief Justice Rehnquist, and Justices Harlan, Brennan, White, Goldberg, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy have so recognized.

Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983) (legislative prayer). I think it is worth stating a little more about two of the cases which I have just cited. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity.

REV_00164621

Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring).

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America the Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe we all must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion

in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

No. 00-16423
D.C. No. CV 00-00495-MLS/PAN

v.

U.S. CONGRESS; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; GEORGE W. BUSH,* PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES; STATE OF CALIFORNIA; ELK GROVE UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; DAVID W. GORDON, SUPERINTENDENT EGUSD; SACRAMENTO CITY UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; JIM SWEENEY, SUPERINTENDENT SCUSD, DEFENDANTS-APPELLEES

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, Milton L. Schwartz, Senior Judge, Presiding

Argued and Submitted: March 14, 2002
Filed: June 26, 2002
Amended: February 28, 2003

ORDER

The opinion filed June 26, 2002, is ordered amended. The Clerk is instructed to file the amended opinion with

* George W. Bush is substituted for his predecessor, William Jefferson Clinton, as President of the United States. Fed. R. App. P. 43(c)(2).

REV_00164625

Judge Fernandez's amended concurrence/dissent. Judge Reinhardt's concurrence in the order denying rehearing en banc, along with Judge O'Scannlain's and Judge McKeown's dissent from that order shall also be filed.

The Clerk is also instructed not to accept for filing any new petitions for rehearing and petitions for rehearing en banc in this case.

With the opinion thus amended, the panel has voted unanimously to deny the petitions for rehearing.

The full court has been advised of the petitions for rehearing en banc. An active judge requested a vote on whether to rehear the matter en banc. The matter failed to receive a majority of the votes of the non-recused active judges in favor of en banc consideration. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

The petitions for rehearing are DENIED and the petitions for rehearing en banc are DENIED.

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, concurring in the order:

My views as to the merits of this issue are set forth in the amended majority opinion authored by Judge Goodwin, and I adhere to them fully. I write separately for two reasons unrelated to the contents of that opinion. I write first to comment on the separate dissent to the denial of rehearing en banc authored by Judge McKeown and joined in by Judges Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson, in which my colleagues appear to express the view that a case should be reheard en banc whenever it involves "a question of exceptional importance." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a)(2).[1] Second, I am

[1] While the brief separate dissent is deliberately opaque and uninformative, I would suspect that not all of its signatories compelled to register my strong disagreement with one particularly unfortunate aspect of Judge O'Scannlain's principal dissent that reflects a serious misconception of fundamental constitutional principles and the proper role of the federal judiciary.

I

As to the first question, I disagree with the notion that the importance of an issue is a sufficient reason to take a case en banc, either under the Rule or as a matter of judicial policy. Rule 35(a) advises this court of its discretionary power to order that a case already decided by a three-judge panel be reheard by the full court. Specifically, the rule begins by stating that a "majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) (emphasis added). Subsection two guides such discretionary consideration by stating that one compelling reason to grant rehearing en banc is the "exceptional importance" of a particular case.

The most reasonable construction of the Rule is that this court should rehear a case en banc when it is both of exceptional importance and the decision *requires correctio*n. See United States v. Burdeau, 180 F.3d 1091, 1092 (9th Cir. 1999) (Tashima, J., concurring in the order denying rehearing en banc) ("Subject to rare exceptions. . . . we should review the statements in three[-]judge panel opinions only to 'determine whether the [panel's] legal error resulted in an erroneous believe that the general rule they appear to advocate should apply regardless of the "correctness" of the panel opinion. The concept that "exceptional importance" is, without more, a sufficient reason for en banc review is, however, shared by at least several members of the Court and accordingly merits some discussion.

judgment . . . .'") (quoting Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984)). A decision may warrant correction because a three-judge panel has reached a result or adopted a legal rule or principle that conflicts with our existing circuit law or that the majority of our court believes is incorrect and needs further review. The fact that three-judge panels often decide cases of exceptional importance, whether it be the constitutionality of a state's decision to execute an individual who may be innocent, the existence or non-existence of a fundamental right, or the ability of the Congress to require the states to comply with federal law—an issue that some of us thought had been settled by the successful end to the Civil War—is an unremarkable, but undeniably important, aspect of our appellate system. See Tracey E. George, The Dynamics and Determinants of the Decision to Grant En Banc Review, 74 WASH. L. REV. 213, 218 (1999) (stating that three-judge panels "representing and acting on behalf of the whole court" is a "basic tenet of our intermediate appellate system"). Unless reconsidered en banc, a decision of a three-judge panel is a decision of our court and speaks for our court. Moreover, it ordinarily constitutes the final judicial decision.[2]

To rehear a case en banc simply on the basis that it involves an important issue would undermine the three-

[2] While the Supreme Court unquestionably has the authority to review any or all of the decisions of the Court of Appeals, the Court has elected to hear a remarkably small number of cases in recent years. For example, in the 2001 term, of the 7,852 case filings, the Court heard argument in 88 cases, and disposed of 85 in 76 signed opinions. See Supreme Court of the United States, 2002 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, at http://www.supremecourtus.gov/publicinfo/year-end/2002year-endreport.html.

REV_00164628

judge panel system and create an impractical and crushing burden on what otherwise should be, as Rule 35(a) suggests, an exceptional occurrence. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) ("An en banc hearing or rehearing is not favored . . . ."). According to statistics kept by the Clerk of the court, in 2002 this court decided 5,190 cases on the merits, more than 98% of which were finally decided by three-judge panels. These decisions are not measures of "rough justice," later to be refined by the en banc court. Unless they decide issues of exceptional importance erroneously, create a direct intra-circuit split, or unless the interests of justice require that the decision be corrected, the opinions of three-judge panels should constitute the final action of this court.

II

I also feel compelled to discuss a disturbingly wrong-headed approach to constitutional law manifested in the dissent authored by Judge O'Scannlain. The dissent suggests that this court should be able to conclude that the panel's holding was erroneous by observing the "public and political reaction" to its decision. Dissent at 2783. This is not the first time that the magnitude of the political response regarding an issue has distracted certain members of this court. An equally disturbing misunderstanding of the nature of our Constitution and the role of the federal judiciary was manifested in Coalition for Econ. Equity v. Wilson, 122 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 1997), a case involving a California initiative on the subject of affirmative action. There, the three-judge panel, in a case that unfortunately was not taken en banc, notwithstanding its exceptional importance, made the following remarkable statement: "A system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy." Id. at 699 (O'Scannlain, J.).

The Bill of Rights is, of course, intended to protect the rights of those in the minority against the temporary passions of a majority which might wish to limit their freedoms or liberties. As Justice Jackson recognized:

> The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943). It is the highest calling of federal judges to invoke the Constitution to repudiate unlawful majoritarian actions and, when necessary, to strike down statutes that would infringe on fundamental rights, whether such statutes are adopted by legislatures or by popular vote. The constitutional system that vests such power in an independent judiciary does not "test[ ] the integrity of . . . democracy." It makes democracy vital, and is one of our proudest heritages.

Moreover, Article III judges are by constitutional design insulated from the political pressures governing members of the other two branches of government. We are given life tenure and a secured salary so that, in our unique capacity to "say what the law is," Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803), we may decide constitutional issues without regard to popular vote, political consequence, or the prospect of future career advancement.[3] Most federal judges do not question the wisdom of this approach. When the federal judiciary is so firmly separated by constitutional structure from the direct influence of politics, we must not undermine that structure by allowing political pressures, polls, or "focus groups" to influence our opinions, even indirectly.

This is not to say that federal judges should be completely sequestered from the attitudes of the nation we serve, even though our service is accomplished not through channeling popular sentiment but through strict adherence to established constitutional principles. The Constitution contemplates occasions when we must be responsive to long-term societal trends—when determining, for example, that which is "cruel and unusual," see Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9 (1992), whether in the execution of the mentally retarded, see Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, ___, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2247 (2002), or the execution of juvenile offenders, see In re Stanford, 123 S.Ct. 472, 474 (2002) (Stevens, J., dissenting from the denial of an application for an original writ of habeas corpus). This broader long-term

[3] Alexander Hamilton was admirably cognizant of the danger of relying on temporary political whimsy:

> This independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humors which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjectures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information, and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency, in the meantime, to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community.

social conscience, however, is a matter far different from responding to particular immediate political pressures. We may not—we must not—allow public sentiment or outcry to guide our decisions. It is particularly important that we understand the nature of our obligations and the strength of our constitutional principles in times of national crisis; it is then that our freedoms and our liberties are in the greatest peril. Any suggestion, whenever or wherever made, that federal judges should be encouraged by the approval of the majority or deterred by popular disfavor is fundamentally inconsistent with the Constitution and must be firmly rejected.

REV_00164632

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge, with whom KLEINFELD, GOULD, TALLMAN, RAWLINSON, and CLIFTON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

Last June, a two-judge majority of a three-judge panel of this court ruled that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional simply because of the presence of two offending words: "under God." It was an exercise in judicial legerdemain which, not surprisingly, produced a public outcry across the nation. Since that time we, as a court, have had the opportunity to order reconsideration of that decision en banc, yet a majority of the 24 active judges eligible to vote has decided not to do so. While there are, no doubt, varied and plausible reasons why this result occurred, I respectfully conclude that our court has made a serious mistake and thus must dissent from its order denying reconsideration.

I

While I cannot say that a randomly selected 11-judge panel would have ruled differently, I believe that neither the June 2002 version, Newdow v. United States Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Newdow I"), nor today's slightly revised version, ___ F.3d ___ ("Newdow II") to essentially the same effect, is defensible. We should have reheard Newdow I en banc, not because it was controversial, but because it was wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.[1] We should have given 11 judges a chance to determine whether the two-judge majority opinion truly reflects the law of the Ninth Circuit.[2] Reciting the Pledge of Allegiance cannot possibly be an "establishment of religion" under any reasonable interpretation of the Constitution.[3]

REV_00164633

Perhaps in an effort to avoid ultimate Supreme Court review, Newdow II which replaces it, avoids expressly reaching the technical question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. Fundamentally, however, the amended decision is every bit as bold as its predecessor. It bans

[1] Judge Reinhardt's protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, I, too, believe that "[o]ur judicial charge is to stand above the inflamed passions of the public." Dazo v. Globe Airport Sec. Serv., 295 F.3d 934, 943 (9th Cir. 2002) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring and dissenting). My disagreement with the panel majority has nothing to do with bending to the will of an outraged populace, and everything to do with the fact that Judge Goodwin and Judge Reinhardt misinterpret the Constitution and 40 years of Supreme Court precedent. That most people understand this makes the decision no less wrong. It doesn't take an Article III judge to recognize that the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school does not violate the First Amendment.

[2] This case presents the classic situation required for our court to rehear a case en banc. En banc consideration would have allowed us to correct the error of a prior panel's decision with respect to the Pledge and resolve a constitutional question of exceptional importance that affects the lives of millions of school children who reside within the geographical boundaries of the Ninth Circuit. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a). The exceptional importance of this case reinforces the need for correction of the panel's mistaken view of our Constitution.

[3] U.S. Const. Amend. I. ("Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.") (emphasis added).

the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in the public schools of the nine western states thereby directly affecting over 9.6 million students,[4] necessarily implies that both an Act of Congress[5] and a California law[6] are unconstitutional, clearly conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Cmty. Consol. Sch. Dist. 21 of Wheeling Township, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), and threatens cash-strapped school districts and underpaid teachers with the specter of civil actions for money damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Newdow I, the subject of our en banc vote, no longer exists; it was withdrawn after the en banc call failed. The panel majority has evolved to this extent: in Newdow I the Pledge was unconstitutional for everybody; in Newdow II the Pledge is only unconstitutional for public school children and teachers. The remainder of this dissent is directed entirely to Newdow II, which, as shall be demonstrated, differs little from Newdow I in its central holding. With grim insistence, the majority in Newdow II continues to stand by its original error—that voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Alle-

Common sense would seem to dictate otherwise, as the public and political reaction should by now have made clear. If reciting the Pledge is truly "a religious act" in violation of the Establishment Clause, then so is the recitation of the Constitution[7] itself, the Declaration of Independence,[8] the Gettysburg Address,[9] the National Motto,[10] or the singing of the National Anthem.[11] Such an assertion would make hypocrites out of the Founders, and would have the effect of driving any and all references to our religious heritage out of our schools, and eventually out of our public life.

II

The Newdow II majority's primary legal argument is that the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992), a school prayer case, controls the outcome of this case. In fact, rather than merely following Lee and its predecessors, the two-judge panel majority makes a radical departure from Lee and the cases it purports to apply. To understand why this is so, an examination of the Supreme Court's school prayer decisions which culminate in Lee is in order.

The fountainhead of all school prayer cases is Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962). In Engel the Court considered a school policy whereby children were directed to say aloud a prayer composed by state officials. The Court found that this practice was inconsistent with the Establishment Clause, reasoning that "[the] program of daily classroom invocation of God's blessings as prescribed in the Regents' prayer is a religious activity. It is a solemn avowal of divine faith and supplication for the blessings of the Almighty. The nature of such a prayer has always been religious." Id. at 424-25. The Court concluded by stating that the state should leave prayer, "that purely religious function, to the people themselves." Id. at 435. In a footnote, it reasoned as follows:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to > express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21. The Court drew an explicit distinction between patriotic invocations of God on the one hand, and prayer, an "unquestioned religious exercise," on the other. Concurring, Justice Douglas wrote that the narrow question presented was whether the state "oversteps the bounds when it finances a religious exercise." Id. at 439 (Douglas, J., concurring). Justice Douglas noted that the Pledge of Allegiance, "like . . . prayer, recognizes the existence of a Supreme Being." Id. at 440 n.5. However, he noted that the House Report recommending the addition of the words "under God" to the Pledge stated that those words "in no way run contrary to the First Amendment but recognize 'only the guidance of God in our national affairs.'" Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3).

The following year, the Supreme Court decided Abington School Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963). In that case, the Court considered the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania statute requiring that "[a]t least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read, without comment, at the opening of each public school on each school day." Id. at 205. The practice in public schools

was for a teacher or student volunteer to read the required Bible verses each morning. This in turn was followed by a recitation of the Lord's prayer. Finally, the class would recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Id. at 207-08. The Court struck down the Bible reading and the practice of reciting the Lord's prayer as a state prescribed "religious ceremony," id. at 223, but said nothing about the practice of reciting the Pledge.

As in Engel, the Court took pains to point to the character of the exercises it found wanting. The Court reasoned that "reading . . . the verses . . . possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance. The devotional and religious nature of the morning exercises is made all the more apparent by the fact that the Bible reading is followed immediately by a recital in unison by the pupils of the Lord's prayer." Id. at 210. "The pervading religious character of the ceremony," wrote Justice Clark, "cannot be gainsaid," and led to the conclusion that the exercises violated the Establishment Clause. Id. at 224.

The concurring opinions in Schempp were all to the same effect. Justice Douglas agreed with the majority's conclusion that the practices at issue violated the Establishment Clause because "the State is conducting a religious exercise." Id. at 229 (Douglas, J., concurring). In a lengthy concurrence, Justice Brennan wrote that "[t]he religious nature of the exercises here challenged seems plain." Id. at 266 (Brennan, J., concurring). After surveying the history of devotional exercises in American public schools, Justice Brennan stated that "the panorama of history permits no other conclusion than that daily prayers and Bible readings in the public schools have always been designed to be, and have been regarded as, essentially religious exercises." Id. at 277-78. For Justice Brennan, "religious exercises in the public schools present a unique problem" but "not every involvement of religion in public life violates the Establishment Clause." Id. at 294. He warned that "[a]ny attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers." Id. at 301. Specifically, he wrote that "[t]he reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance . . . may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact." Id. at 304.

Justice Goldberg also wrote separately, stating that "the clearly religious practices presented in these cases are . . . wholly compelling." Id. at 305 (Goldberg, J., concurring). He reasoned that "[t]he pervasive religiosity and direct governmental involvement inhering in the prescription of prayer and Bible reading in the public schools . . . cannot realistically be termed simply accommodation." Id. at 307. Like Justice Brennan, Justice Goldberg cautioned that the decision "does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause." Id. at 307-08. He then quoted in full the passage from Engel which drew a distinction between patriotic invocations of God, and unquestioned religious exercises that give rise to Establishment Clause violations. Id.

3

The next case in this line is Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38 (1985). That case considered the constitutionality of an Alabama statute authorizing a 1-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40. The Court found that "[t]he wholly religious character" of the challenged law was "plainly evident from its text." Id. at 58. The legislature's one and only purpose in enacting the law was "to return prayer to the public schools." Id. at 59-60. Justice Powell's separate concurrence was "prompted by Alabama's persistence in attempting to institute state-sponsored prayer in the public schools." Id. at 62 (Powell, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote separately to suggest that moment-of-silence statutes were not "a religious exercise," and therefore were constitutional. Id. at 72 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote further that "the words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion with 'the legitimate secular purposes of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future.'" Id. at 78 n.5 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring)) (alterations in original). In contrast, the Alabama statute at issue was very different from the Pledge—the state had "intentionally crossed the line [by] affirmatively endorsing the particular religious practice of prayer." Id. at 84.

4

Finally, there is the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman. The issue presented was "whether including clerical members who offer prayers as part of the official school graduation ceremony" is consistent with the Establishment Clause. 505 U.S. at 580. The graduating students entered as a group in a processional, after which "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers." Id. at 583. Justice Kennedy wrote that "the significance of the prayers lies . . . at the heart of [the] case." Id. He framed the inquiry as follows:

> These dominant facts mark and control the confines of our decision: State officials direct the performance of a formal religious exercise at promotional and graduation ceremonies for secondary schools. Even for those students who object to the religious exercise their attendance and participation in the state-sponsored religious activity are in a fair and real sense obligatory, though the school district does not require attendance as a condition for receipt of the diploma.

Id. at 586.

The Court in Lee concluded that Engel and its progeny controlled the outcome, writing that "[c]onducting this formal religious observance conflicts with settled rules pertaining to prayer exercises for students." Id. at 587. As in Engel, Schempp, and Wallace, the crucial factor was the nature of the exercise in which the students were asked to participate. Time and again the Court went out of its way to stress the nature of the exercise, writing that prayer was "an overt religious exercise," id. at 588, and that "prayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion." Id. at 592. The practice was unconstitutional because "the State has in every practical sense compelled attendance and participation in an explicit religious exercise at an event of singular importance to every student." Id. at 598. Just like the decisions in Engel and Schempp, the Court in Lee took pains to stress the confines of its holding, concluding that "[w]e do not hold that every state action implicating religion is invalid if one or a few citizens find it offensive," id. at 597, and that "[a] relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion from every aspect of public life could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution." Id. at 598.

B

Two fundamental principles may therefore be derived from the school prayer cases culminating in Lee.

1

Formal religious observances are prohibited in public schools because of the danger that they may effect an establishment of religion. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 424-25 ("[D]aily classroom invocation of God's blessings . . . is a religious activity."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 (Bible reading followed by the Lord's prayer "possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (Prayer is of a "wholly religious character."); Lee, 505 U.S. at 586 (Prayer written by state officials constitutes a "formal religious exercise"). In each of these cases, the Court took pains to stress that not every reference to God in public schools was prohibited. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n.21 ("patriotic or ceremonial occasions" which contain "references to the Deity" bear "no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise" of prayer); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 301 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("the words 'under God' in the Pledge" are not unconstitutional); Lee, 505 U.S. at 598 ("A relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion . . . could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution.").

2

Once it is established that the state is sanctioning a formal religious exercise, then the fact that the students are not required to participate in the formal devotional exercises does not prevent those exercises from being unconstitutional. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 431 ("[T]he indirect coercive pressure upon religious minorities to conform" to the prayer exercises "is plain."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210-11 ("The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 57 (State-sanctioned voluntary prayer in public schools violates Establishment Clause); Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."). To be sure, Lee is the Court's most elaborate pronouncement with respect to indirect coercion. It identifies the circumstances in which indirect coercion may be said to be unconstitutional: when the government directs "the performance of a formal religious exercise" in such a way as to oblige the participation of objectors. Lee, 505 U.S. at 586.

III

No court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances. But Newdow II finesses all that, and the sleight of hand the majority uses becomes immediately apparent: obfuscate the nature of the exercise at issue and emphasize indirect coercion. The panel majority simply ignores, because they are inconvenient, the "dominant and controlling facts" in Lee and its predecessors: that Establishment Clause violations in public schools are triggered only when "State officials direct the performance of a *formal religious exercis*e." 505 U.S. at 586 (emphasis added); see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 ("devotional . . . religious observance" prohibited); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (activities of a "wholly religious character" prohibited).

To avoid a flagrant inconsistency with Lee, and with 40 years of Supreme Court precedent, the two-judge panel majority must first examine whether the act of pledging allegiance is "a religious act." As the Seventh Circuit in Sherman framed it, "Does 'under God' make the Pledge a prayer, whose recitation violates the establishment clause of the first amendment?" 980 F.2d at 445. That court answered the question in the negative; the Newdow II majority, in conclusory fashion, simply assumes the affirmative. ___ F.3d at ___ ("[W]e conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.") (emphasis added).

This assertion belies common sense. Most assuredly, to pledge allegiance to flag and country is a patriotic act. After the public and political reaction last summer, it is difficult to believe that anyone can continue to think otherwise. The fact the Pledge is infused with an undoubtedly religious reference does not change the nature of the act itself. The California statute under which the school district promulgated its policy is entitled "[d]aily performance of patriotic exercises in public schools." Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (emphasis added). The Pledge is recited not just in schools but also at various official events and public ceremonies, including perhaps the most patriotic of occasions—naturalization ceremonies. Generally, the Pledge is recited while standing, facing a United States flag, with the right hand held over the heart, much like the National Anthem. See 4 U.S.C. § 4 (articulating proper procedure for reciting Pledge); 36 U.S.C. § 301 (during anthem "all present . . . should stand at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart."). Whatever one thinks of the normative values underlying the Pledge, they are unquestionably patriotic in nature. Indeed, it is precisely because of the Pledge's explicitly patriotic nature that in 1943 the Supreme Court ruled that no one is required to Pledge allegiance against their will. West Virginia v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

In contrast, to pray is to speak directly to God, with bowed head, on bended knee, or some other reverent disposition. It is a solemn and humble approach to the divine in order to give thanks, to petition, to praise, to supplicate, or to ask for guidance. Communal prayer, by definition, is an even more forceful and profound experience for those present. Little wonder that the Supreme Court has recognized the "unique problem" and "particular risk" posed by school prayer to non-participating students. Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 (Brennan,

J., concurring) (noting that prayers in public schools "present a unique problem").

Not only does the panel majority's conclusion that pledging allegiance is "a religious act" defy common sense, it contradicts our 200-year history and tradition of patriotic references to God. The Supreme Court has insisted that interpretations of the Establishment Clause must comport "with what history reveals was the contemporaneous understanding of its guarantees." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 673; see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 ("[T]he line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.") (Brennan, J., concurring).

The majority's unpersuasive and problematic disclaimers notwithstanding, Newdow II precipitates a "war with our national tradition," McCollum v. Bd. of Ed., 333 U.S. 203, 211 (1948), and as Judge Fernandez so eloquently points out in dissent, only the purest exercise in sophistry could save multiple references to our religious heritage in our national life from Newdow II's axe. Of course, the Constitution itself explicitly mentions God, as does the Declaration of Independence, the document which marked us as a separate people. The Gettysburg Address, inconveniently for the majority, contains the same precise phrase—"under God"—found to constitute an Establishment Clause violation in the Pledge.[12] After Newdow II, are we to suppose that, were a school to permit—not require—the recitation of the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, or the Gettysburg Address in public schools, that too would violate the Constitution? Were the "founders of the United States . . . unable to understand their own handiwork[?]" Sherman, 980 F.2d at 445. Indeed, the recitation of the Declaration of Independence would seem to be the better candidate for the chopping block than the Pledge, since the Pledge does not require anyone to acknowledge the personal relationship with God to which the Declaration speaks.[13] So too with our National Anthem and our National Motto.

Our national celebration of Thanksgiving dates back to President Washington, which Congress stated was "to be observed by acknowledgment with grateful hearts, the many and signal favours of Almighty God." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675 n.2. Congress made Thanksgiving a permanent holiday in 1941,[14] and Christmas has been a national holiday since 1894.[15] Are pere [sic] Newdow's constitutional rights violated when his daughter is told not to attend school on Thanksgiving? On Christmas day? Must school outings to federal courts be prohibited, lest the children be unduly influenced by the dreaded intonation "God save these United States and this honorable Court"?[16] A theory of the Establishment Clause that would have the effect of driving out of our public life the multiple references to [16] Indeed, even our own court's formal announcement to open sessions contains the offending word: "Hear ye! hear ye! All persons having business with the honorable, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit will now draw near, give your attention and you will be heard, for this court is now in session. God save these United States and this honorable Court." (emphasis added).

the Divine that run through our laws, our rituals, and our ceremonies is no theory at all.

B

As if all of this were not enough, the Supreme Court has gone out of its way to make it plain that the Pledge itself passes constitutional muster. In two of the school prayer cases, the Court noted without so much as a hint of disapproval the fact that the students, in addition to being subject to formal religious observances, also recited the Pledge of Allegiance. See Schempp, 374 U.S. at 207-08 (noting that the practice in public schools consisted of Bible reading and recitation of the Lord's prayer, followed by recitation of the Pledge); Lee, 505 U.S. at 583 (noting that "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers.").

Several other Supreme Court cases contain explicit references to the constitutionality of the Pledge. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 440 n.5 (Douglas, J., concurring) ("[The Pledge] in no way run[s] contrary to the First Amendment") (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("[R]eciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincolns' Gettysburg Address."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("[T]he words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion."); Co. of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (Blackmun, J., for the court) ("Our previous opinions have considered in dicta . . . the pledge, characterizing [it] as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief."); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668,

676 (1984) (Burger, C.J., for the court) ("Other examples of reference to our religious heritage are found . . . in the language 'One nation under God,' as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag. That pledge is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year.").

The panel majority's answer to these myriad statements from our high court is summarily to dismiss them as dicta. However, "dicta of the Supreme Court have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold. We should not blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." Zal v. Steppe, 968 F.2d 924, 935 (9th Cir. 1992) (Noonan, J., concurring and dissenting in part); see also United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[W]e treat Supreme Court dicta with due deference.").[17]

---

[17] Other courts have, unremarkably enough, not been so flippant when it comes to considering consistent Supreme Court dicta on this issue. See Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 ("[A]n inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so."); Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214, 217 (10th Cir. 1996) ("[T]his court considers itself bound by Supreme Court dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when the dicta is recent and not enfeebled by later statements."); ACLU v. Capital Square Review, 243 F.3d 289, 301 n.10 (6th Cir. 2001) ("We should . . . be amazed if the Supreme Court were now to question the constitutionality of the [revised Pledge]"). Indeed, the unanimity on this point relative to Newdow II is striking.

C

The Newdow II majority, then, finds itself caught between a rock and a hard place—the recitation of the Pledge is not a formal religious act, while patriotic invocations of God do not give rise to Establishment Clause violations. It nonetheless manages to skirt these obstacles to reach its indirect coercion analysis. Newdow II's conclusory foray into the social sciences is a case study, an advertisement, for why it is that the Supreme Court has anchored coercion analysis only to those situations where "formal religious exercises" take place in our public schools. The panel majority seeks to protect dissenters at the risk of courting some unpopularity, but this is not the test. "[O]ffense alone does not in every case show a violation . . . . and sometimes to endure social isolation or even anger may be the price of conscience or nonconformity." Lee, 505 U.S. at 597-98. The Newdow II majority's expansive application of the coercion test is ill-suited to a society as diverse as ours, since almost every cultural practice is bound to offend someone's sensibilities. In affording Michael Newdow the right to impose his views on others, Newdow II affords him a right to be fastidiously intolerant and self-indulgent. In granting him this supposed right, moreover, the two-judge panel majority has not eliminated feelings of discomfort and isolation, it has simply shifted them from one group to another.

Newdow II's psychological ipse dixit is also delivered without reference or regard to our collective experience in the half-century since the passage of the offending statute. In that time, generations of Americans have grown up reciting the Pledge, religious tolerance and diversity has flourished in this country, and we have become a beacon for other nations in this regard. As

REV_00164651

Judge Fernandez observes, "it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954." Newdow II ___ F.3d at ___ n.4 (Fernandez, J., dissenting).

IV

In fairness to the Newdow II panel majority, its professed "neutrality" does have some plausible basis in the case law of the Supreme Court, which has undoubtedly constructed a "fractured and incoherent doctrinal path" in the Establishment Clause area, broadly speaking. Sep. of Church and State Comm. v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring). Indeed, its Establishment Clause cases sometimes "more closely resemble ad hoc Delphic pronouncements than models of guiding legal principles." Ingebretsen v. Jackson Pub. Sch. Dist., 88 F.3d 274, 282 (5th Cir. 1996) (Jones, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Supreme Court Justices themselves have recognized that if some of its reasoning "were to be applied logically, it would lead to the elimination" of many cherished, long-standing practices. Co. of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., dissenting).

With respect to the issue presented in this case, however, the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion. Even Justice Brennan, that most stalwart of separationists, recognized that some official acknowledgment of God is appropriate "if the government is not to adopt a stilted indifference to the religious life of the people." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 714 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The decision reached in Newdow II does precisely that: it adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people.

But Newdow II goes further, and confers a favored status on atheism in our public life. In a society with a pervasive public sector, our public schools are a most important means for transmitting ideas and values to future generations. The silence the majority commands is not neutral—it itself conveys a powerful message, and creates a distorted impression about the place of religion in our national life. The absolute prohibition on any mention of God in our schools creates a bias against religion. The panel majority cannot credibly advance the notion that Newdow II is neutral with respect to belief versus non-belief; it affirmatively favors the latter to the former. One wonders, then, does atheism become the default religion protected by the Establishment Clause?

In short, a lack of clarity in the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause cases generally does not help to explain or to justify the panel majority's decision with respect to this particular issue. Put simply, the panel was asked to decide whether the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools amounted to a government establishment of religion. The answer to that question is clearly, obviously, no. We made a grave error in failing to take Newdow I en banc, and we have failed to correct that error ourselves. Now we have Newdow II. Perhaps the Supreme Court will have the opportunity to correct the error for us. I must respectfully dissent from the order denying reconsideration en banc.

McKEOWN, Circuit Judge, with whom HAWKINS, THOMAS, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

The recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance by school children presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance that merits reconsideration by the en banc court. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2) (en banc hearing appropriate when "the proceeding involves a question of exceptional importance"). Although not every case of exceptional importance can or should be reheard en banc, this is a case that should be reheard. I respectfully dissent from the court's decision to deny rehearing en banc.

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Order by Judge GOODWIN; Concurrence by Judge FERNANDEZ.

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge.

After we issued our June 26, 2002 opinion in this case, Sandra Banning, the mother of Michael Newdow's daughter, filed a motion for leave to intervene, in order to, inter alia, challenge Newdow's standing to maintain this action. Banning attached to her motion as an exhibit a copy of a February 6, 2002 California Superior Court custody order. That order awarded Banning "sole legal custody" of the child. We have carefully reconsidered the question of Newdow's Article III standing in light of this custody order and affirm our holding that he has standing as a parent to continue to pursue his claim in federal court.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

When this case first reached us from the district court, no legal custody question or order had been disclosed to the federal courts. Newdow had alleged in the district court that he was the father, and had custody of the minor child. The record now indicates that Newdow and Banning formed a family consisting of an unmarried man, an unmarried woman, and their biological minor child, who lived together part of the time and lived in separate homes in Florida and California, from time to time, with informal visiting arrangements. This informal arrangement apparently was not subject to any custody order until February 6, 2002, after Newdow had appealed from the dismissal of the action he had commenced in federal district court to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the practice of reciting the pledge of allegiance in the public elementary school his child attends.

On February 6, the California Superior Court entered an order containing the following language:

> The child's mother, Ms. Banning, to have sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and > welfare of [the child]. Specifically, both parents shall consult with one another on substantial decisions relating to non-emergency major medical care, dental, optometry, psychological and educational needs of [the child]. If mutual agreement is not reached in the above, then Ms. Banning may exercise legal control of [the child] that is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order. The father shall have access to all of [the child's] school and medical records.

Thereafter, Newdow, alleging "changed circumstances," filed a motion in the Superior Court for a modification of the custody order, seeking, inter alia, joint legal custody with Banning of their child.

On September 25, 2002, the Superior Court (Judge Mize) entered an in personam order enjoining Newdow from pleading his daughter as an unnamed party or representing her as a "next friend" in this lawsuit. The United States promptly filed a motion, which we have granted, to enlarge the record to include the state court transcript of the September 25 hearing before Judge Mize. That transcript contemplates a full trial in the future on Newdow's motion for modification of the February 6 custody order.

Judge Mize appropriately reserved to this court, however, the question of Newdow's Article III standing in federal court. Newdow no longer claims to represent his child, but asserts that he retains standing in his own right as a parent to challenge alleged unconstitutional state action affecting his child while she attends public school in the Elk Grove Unified School District (EGUSD).

REV_00164657

II. DISCUSSION

Our original opinion in this case holds that a parent has Article III standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds state action affecting his child in public school. See Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc) and Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985)). Banning's motion for leave to intervene presents a question of first impression in this Circuit which we are required to consider, even though raised for the first time on appeal. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he jurisdictional issue of standing can be raised at any time."). Does the grant of sole legal custody to Banning deprive Newdow, as a noncustodial parent, of Article III standing to object to unconstitutional government action affecting his child?

A Seventh Circuit decision, Navin v. Park Ridge School District 64, 270 F.3d 1147 (7th Cir. 2001) (per curiam), addresses a noncustodial parent's standing to challenge a school's educational plan for his disabled child under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Though not controlling, the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Navin illustrates a useful method of analysis for the standing question presented here. The divorce decree in that case had granted the mother sole legal custody of her son. The Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act provided that the legal custodian may determine, absent an agreement by the parties to the contrary, "the child's uprising, including but not limited to, his education, health care and religious training." See 750 IL CH § 5/608(a). Contending that tutoring for his dyslexic son was being provided by a "crossing guard supervisor with no skill (or at least no certification) in educating dyslexic youths," the father in Navin had asked for an administrative hearing under the IDEA and filed suit in federal court when the hearing officer terminated the proceeding without addressing the merits. 270 F.3d at 1148. The district court dismissed the father's suit, holding that as a noncustodial parent, he had no standing to challenge action affecting his child in school. Id.

The Seventh Circuit held, however, that noncustodial parents do not automatically lack standing under the IDEA. Id. at 1149. Instead, the court of appeals explained that whether the noncustodial father in Navin had standing depended on the parental rights granted or reserved to him in the divorce decree in light of the mother's assertion of her rights so granted or reserved:

> If the decree had wiped out all of [the noncustodial father's] parental rights, it would have left him with no claim under the IDEA. But this is not what the divorce decree does. The district court did not analyze its language, but it is in the record and shows that [the noncustodial father] retains some important rights, including the opportunity to be informed about and remain involved in the education of his son. If [the father and mother] disagree about educational decisions, then [the mother's] view prevails—unless under state law the school district's view prevails over either parent's wishes, and in that event [the father's] rights under the decree to influence the school's choices are even more important.

270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit remanded the case to the district court, instructing it to "decide whether [the father's] claims [were] incompatible, not with the divorce decree itself, but with [the mother's] use of her rights under the decree." Navin, 270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (emphasis in original).

Navin's general approach to the problem of noncustodial parental standing is sound. We hold that a noncustodial parent, who retains some parental rights, may have standing to maintain a federal lawsuit to the extent that his assertion of retained parental rights under state law is not legally incompatible with the custodial parent's assertion of rights. This holding assumes, of course, that the noncustodial parent can establish an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to the challenged action, and it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Friends of the Earth v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000). Having already held that Newdow satisfies those Article III requirements, see Newdow, 292 F.3d at 603-05, we now turn to the question of whether he retains standing despite Banning's opposition as sole legal custodian to his maintaining this lawsuit.[1]

The February 6 custody order governing Banning's and Newdow's respective parental decision-making power remains operative and plainly does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights. Rather, that order establishes that Newdow retains rights with respect to his daughter's education and general welfare. He has

[1] It is unclear to us exactly what relief Banning seeks. In her motion papers, at times Banning appears to object only to Newdow's appearance as "next friend" of their daughter. At other places, she also seems to object to Newdow's standing in his own right.

REV_00164660

the right to consult with Banning regarding substantial non-emergency decisions (with Banning having ultimate decision-making power), as well as the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records regardless of Banning's position.

California state courts have recognized that noncustodial parents maintain the right to expose and educate their children to their individual religious views, even if those religious views contradict those of the custodial parent or offend her.[2] See Murga v. Petersen, 103 Cal. App.3d 498, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (1980). As the Murga court noted, it was following the "majority of American jurisdictions" in refusing to place restraints on a noncustodial parent who wished to expose his children to his particular religious views, absent a clear, affirmative showing that these religious activities would be harmful to the children. Id. at 504-05, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (emphasis added). The principle of nonintervention, the court noted, "reflects the protected nature of religious activities and expressions of belief, as well as the proscription against preferring one religion over another." Id. at 505, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79. It is not only the court that must not interfere; even more so, the state and federal government may not seek to indoctrinate the child with their religious views, particularly over the objection of either parent.

Murga was the basis for a later California state court decision, In re Mentry, 142 Cal. App.3d 260, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (1983), that reversed a restraining order against a noncustodial father that forbade him from

[2] As the Supreme Court has acknowledged, recognized religions exist that do not teach a belief in God, e.g., secular humanism. Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 495 n.11, 81 S. Ct. 1680, 6 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1961).

engaging his children in any religious activities other than those approved by the custodial mother. The Mentry court stated that "the concept of family privacy embodies not simply a policy of minimum state intervention but also a presumption of parental autonomy. Many of the purposes served by this presumption become more important after dissolution [of the marriage or relationship] than they were before." 142 Cal. App.3d at 268, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (emphasis added). The type of "minimum state intervention" discussed in Mentry surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent. We conclude that Newdow retains sufficient parental rights to support his standing here.

The next question, then, is whether Banning's status as sole legal custodian empowers her to employ state law to defeat Newdow's standing. "'Sole legal custody' means that one parent shall have the right and the responsibility to make the decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of a child." Cal. Fam. Code § 3006. Thus, Newdow cannot disrupt Banning's choice of schools for their daughter. And, as Judge Mize's September 25 order makes clear, Newdow cannot name his daughter as a party to a lawsuit against Banning's wishes.

Judge Mize, however, appropriately declined to rule on whether Newdow has standing in his own right as a parent to maintain this case in federal court. We hold that Banning has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action. Newdow's assertion of his retained parental rights in this case, therefore, simply cannot be legally incompatible with any power Banning may hold pursuant to the custody order. Further, Ms. Banning may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights or waive Newdow's right to enforce his constitutional interests. Neither Banning's personal opinion regarding the Constitution nor her state court award of legal custody is determinative of Newdow's legal rights to protect his own interests.

When school teachers lead a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance according to school district policy, they present a message by the state endorsing not just religion generally, but a monotheistic religion organized "under God." While Newdow cannot expect the entire community surrounding his daughter to participate in, let alone agree with, his choice of atheism and his daughter's exposure to his views, he can expect to be free from the government's endorsing a particular view of religion and unconstitutionally indoctrinating his impressionable young daughter on a daily basis in that official view. The pledge to a nation "under God," with its imprimatur of governmental sanction, provides the message to Newdow's young daughter not only that non-believers, or believers in non-Judeo-Christian religions, are outsiders, but more specifically that her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom. Just as the foundational principle of the Freedom of Speech Clause in the First Amendment tolerates unpopular and even despised ideas, see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S. Ct. 1780, 29 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1971), so does the principle underlying the Establishment Clause protect unpopular and despised minorities from government sponsored religious orthodoxy tied to government services. See Santa Fe Independent Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L. Ed. 2d 295 (2000); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1992). Accordingly, we affirm Newdow's standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the EGUSD's practice of requiring his daughter to attend daily recitations of the 1954 version of the Pledge of Allegiance.

Banning's motion for leave to intervene is DENIED because she has no protectable interest at stake in this action.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the order, but write separately to emphasize that in this order we decide that Newdow's legal status under California law vis-à-vis his daughter does not deprive him of standing. Despite the order's allusions to the merits of the controversy, we decide nothing but that narrow standing issue.[1] Leastwise, I join nothing other than the narrow decision that the orders of the California courts have not deprived Newdow of standing.

Dec. 4, 2002

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge.

Once we ruled on the merits of this case,[1] the United States Senate sought to intervene as a party and in that capacity to file a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing en banc. We deny the Motion to Intervene, but note our willingness to accept the petition and accompanying brief as an amicus brief, if the Senate consents to the latter use of its filing. Because of the respect that we owe to and have for the Senate, we are constrained to explain the reasons for our denial of intervention.

[1] Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002).

Initially, of course, we lay aside the usual intervention rule. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). This case is more in line with Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1), which allows intervention as of right "when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene." There is a special statute that applies to this motion. As relevant here, the statute first provides that the Senate Legal Counsel shall intervene or appear as amicus "when directed to do so by a resolution adopted by the Senate." 2 U.S.C. § 288b(c). There was a resolution here. See Senate Resolution 292, 107th Cong., 2d Sess. (2002), 148 Cong. Rec. S6105-06 (2002). The statute goes on to provide that Counsel shall intervene upon appropriate direction when "the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution of the United States are placed in issue," but should only do so if there is standing. See 2 U.S.C. § 288e(a). It then states:

> Permission to intervene as a party or to appear as amicus curiae under § 288e of this title shall be of right and may be denied by a court only upon an express finding that such intervention or appearance is untimely and would significantly delay the pending action or that standing to intervene has not been established under section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States.

2 U.S.C. § 288*l* (a).

Because the Senate waited until we had already ruled on the merits of this case on appeal, it would be possible, even accurate, to hold that the attempt to intervene is untimely. However, under the circumstances we are unable to hold that the proposed intervention to seek rehearing or en banc review would "significantly delay" the action. Especially is that true when, as here, some of the current parties to the action have themselves already sought both types of review. We must, therefore, turn our attention to the second exception in § 288*l*(a)—does the Senate have constitutional standing? To put it more precisely: does the Senate have constitutional standing to intervene in every case where the constitutionality of a United States statute is challenged? Because we determine that the answer to that question is no and because there is nothing about the statute at hand that would distinguish it from other statutes, the Senate does not have standing in this case.

Let it first be said that the issue is not whether the United States has standing to appear in support of the constitutionality of the statute in question. Nobody doubts that it does. See 28 U.S.C. § 2403(a). In fact, in this case it did appear for "the Congress of the United States; the United States of America; and William J. Clinton, President of the United States."[2] The question is whether the Senate, as a separate part of the government, has standing to intervene to support statutes on its own behalf, and not really as a representative of the United States itself. We need not, and do not,

[2] Perhaps it should also be recognized that "the three branches are but 'coordinate parts of one government,'" and in that sense there can be no doubt that the legislature is already represented here anyway. See United States v. Providence Journal Co., 485 U.S. 693, 701, 108 S. Ct. 1502, 1507, 99 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1988) (internal citation omitted).

decide whether Congress could designate the Senate Legal Counsel, upon a separate resolution of the Senate alone, to appear as the defender of all statutes on behalf of the United States itself. A law of that type might well have its own constitutional problems; it might even trench on the prerogatives of the executive branch of the United States, which has the authority to execute the laws of this country. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. At any rate, that has not occurred here. As already stated, a separate statute confers that authority upon the executive branch, and here the Senate seeks to appear to represent itself alone.

As the intervention statute at hand expressly recognizes, the Senate must show that it does have constitutional standing to intervene. That means at the very least that it must show that it has "suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is . . . concrete and particularized." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L. Ed.2d 351 (1992); see also Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818-20, 117 S. Ct. 2312, 2317-18, 138 L. Ed. 2d 849 (1997). That concrete and particularized harm is lacking in this case because no harm beyond frustration of a general desire to see the law enforced as written has been shown here.

In so stating, we are aware that there have been a number of cases wherein Senate intervention has been allowed without any particular remark or detailed consideration. See, e.g., INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 930 n.5, 103 S. Ct. 2764, 2773 n.5, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1983); Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 893 F.2d 205, 206 (9th Cir. 1990) (en banc); In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133, 1135 (9th Cir. 1987); see also Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 106 S. Ct. 3181, 92 L.

Ed. 2d 583 (1986). But those cases are not really apposite because they were of a character that directly (particularly) implicated the authority of Congress within our scheme of government, and the scope and reach of its ability to allocate power among the three branches. Thus, Chadha, 462 U.S. at 956-58, 103 S. Ct. at 2787, is a case that dealt with individual houses of Congress assuming the authority to review and veto executive decisions regarding the deportation of aliens. It, thus, implicated separation of powers doctrine and the whole scheme of our government. Lear Siegler dealt with whether Congress could allocate to a legislative agent—The Comptroller General—the authority to delay the procurement actions of the executive branch of the government. See Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1105-06 (9th Cir. 1988), vacated on other grounds, Lear Siegler, 893 F.2d at 208; see also Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 717, 106 S. Ct. at 3183. Finally, in Benny, 812 F.2d at 1141-42, the issue was whether Congress had the authority to prospectively extend the term of office of bankruptcy judges. In other words, in each of these cases the courts were dealing with a statute addressing legislative action regarding allocation of authority within the government, as opposed to action applying that authority to the behavior of the citizenry in general. The issues were the kind that intimately affected Congress's own place within our constitutional scheme.

More closely on point are cases which speak to the standing of legislators to bring actions, where their institutional power as members of the legislature is not being challenged. In Raines, 521 U.S. at 814-16, 117 S. Ct. at 2315-16, for example, a number of members of the Senate and House of Representatives sued pursuant to a provision of the Line Item Veto Act which declared that any member of Congress could challenge the Act. See, 2 U.S.C. § 692(a)(1). The Court declared that they had "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals . . ., the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed . . ., and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829, 117 S. Ct. at 2322. The Court did point out that they did not actually represent their separate houses of Congress and those houses actually opposed them, but did not indicate precisely how that affected their standing.[3] Id. The Court distinguished an earlier case wherein state legislators were accorded standing because their votes would have been deprived of all validity if an allegedly improper person were able to vote. See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 438, 59 S.Ct. 972, 975, 83 L. Ed. 1385 (1939). Thus, at least as to individual legislators, there is no standing unless their own institutional position, as opposed to their position as a member of the body politic, is affected.

The District of Columbia Circuit has followed the same approach. In 1977, a congressman sued the director of the Central Intelligence Agency partly on the basis that when that agency misused its budget, his vote as a congressman was impaired. See Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190, 204 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The court found that he lacked standing, and that a contrary rule would amount to giving him "a roving commission to obtain judicial relief under most circumstances." Id. at

[3] Of course, the Line Item Veto Act dealt with the allocation of power between the legislative and executive branches. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 691-692. However, the Senate was content to appear as amicus curiae. Raines, 521 U.S. at 813 n.*, 117 S. Ct. 2312.

REV_00164670

214. Along the way, the court noted that "his specific rights, interests and prerogatives lie in the power to make laws. As we have noted, this power has not been invaded, diminished, diluted, or injured by the challenged actions in this case." Id. at 213. A like result was reached when a member of Congress sued to prevent alleged misuse of federal funds by a national commission. See Hansen v. Nat'l Comm'n. on the Observance of Int'l Women's Year, 628 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1980). We said: "The injury alleged by appellant is an injury which he suffers along with all other citizens of the United States. He has not presented any facts which show he has sustained or is imminently in danger of sustaining an actual personal injury." Id. at 534. Thus, he had no standing. Id. And, when faced with a claim by congressmen that the military was using its budget to finance combat in other countries, despite laws prohibiting that, the Fourth Circuit had this to say: "Once a bill has become law, however, their interest is indistinguishable from that of any other citizen. They cannot claim dilution of their legislative voting power because the legislation they favored became law." Harrington v. Schlesinger, 528 F.2d 455, 459 (4th Cir. 1975). The court was no more impressed with the claim that their legislative duties would somehow be affected. See id. Other cases have sounded the same note. See, e.g., Baird v. Norton, 266 F.3d 408, 411-12 (6th Cir. 2001); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112, 112-13, 117 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012, 120 S. Ct. 1286, 146 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2000); Daughtrey v. Carter, 584 F.2d 1050, 1057-58 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Metcalf v. Nat'l Petroleum Council, 553 F.2d 176, 187-89 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

REV_00164671

These observations also apply to the Senate as a whole, when it seeks to have a roving commission to enter every case involving the constitutionality of statutes it has enacted. In those instances, its own "powers and responsibilities" are not really under attack. Once the Senate has approved a proposed bill, the House of Representatives agrees, and the President has signed the measure, it becomes public law. A public law, after enactment, is not the Senate's any more than it is the law of any other citizen or group of citizens in the United States. It is a law of the United States of America, and the government is already represented in this case by the Attorney General. Of course, every time a statute is not followed or is declared unconstitutional, the votes of legislators are mooted and the power of the legislature is circumscribed in a sense, but that is no more than a facet of the generalized harm that occurs to the government as a whole. By the same token, the President's signing of the legislation is also nullified, judges, who might have felt otherwise, are bound by the decision, and citizens who relied upon or desired to have the law enforced are disappointed.[4] Moreover, if the separate houses of Congress have standing, a challenger of a law would have to contend with fighting the United States itself, and separately defending himself against the Senate and the House of [4] All of this is underscored by the Senate's suggestion that it should have standing because it opens its daily sessions with the Pledge of Allegiance. That, of course, is an assertion that could be made by countless other organizations, governmental and otherwise, not to mention thousands of United States citizens.

Representatives, each of which would be able to appear as a separate litigating party in the case.[5]

Therefore, the motion of the Senate to intervene is DENIED. However, if the Senate wishes to have us deem its proposed brief to be an amicus brief and to consider it on that basis, we will do that. It should inform us of its desire in that regard within 30 days after the filing of this order.

[5] In principle, he might also have to separately contend against the President, whose ability to effectively sign the law in question can be said to have been affected. We see little other than mischief arising from a system of intervention as unregulated as that. Constitutional standing doctrine is the apotropaion for that threatened malady. It must be applied here.

ORDER

This matter was referred to the Honorable Peter A. Nowinski, United States Magistrate Judge, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 636, et seq., and Local Rule 72-302. On May 25, 2000, Judge Nowinski recommended that plaintiff's complaint be dismissed. Plaintiff has filed objections to the findings and recommendation.

The court has reviewed the file and finds the findings and recommendation to be supported by the record and by the magistrate judge's analysis. Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. The Findings and Recommendation filed May 25, 2000, are adopted in full; and

2. Plaintiff's complaint is dismissed.

DATE: July 21, 2000.

APPENDIX H

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

CIV S-00-0495 MLS PAN PS

REV. DR. MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, PLAINTIFF

v.

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
ET AL., DEFENDANTS

[Filed: May 25, 2000]

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

On March 8, 2000, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging defendants Elk Grove School District and Sacramento City Unified School District violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment by requiring teachers [to] lead morning classes in recitation of the pledge of allegiance. Defendant school districts move to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

The only federal Court of Appeal directly to address this issue held that schools may lead the pledge of allegiance without violating the First Amendment so long as pupils are not compelled to participate, because the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs. Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District, 980 F.2d 437, 442-448 (11th Cir. 1992). While the

Supreme Court has not directly addressed the issue, it has noted that its "previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto ['In God We Trust'] and the pledge [of allegiance], characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (1989); see also id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring); id. at 716-17 (Brennan, J., dissenting); School District of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 449-50 (1962) (Stewart, J., dissenting). Two Courts of Appeal have stated, also in dicta, that the pledge is not an endorsement of religion. See Chandler v. James, 180 F.3d 1254, 1262 (11th Cir. 1999); Separation of Church and State Committee v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman and the statements in dicta noted above, while not binding on this court, are persuasive and directly on point. Whether the court employs the test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-613 (1971), or the more recent endorsement test, see Allegheny, supra, 492 U.S. at 593-594, the Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. Accordingly, I recommend plaintiff's complaint be dismissed.

Dated: May 25, 2000.

APPENDIX I

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

1. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion; or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

2. Section 4 of Title 4 U.S.C. provides:

Pledge of allegiance to the flag; manner of delivery

The Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag, "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.", should be rendered by standing at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart. When not in uniform men should remove their headdress with their right hand and hold it at the left shoulder, the hand being over the heart. Persons in uniform should remain silent, face the flag, and render the military salute.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the inclusion of the phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the United States Flag violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment.

2. Whether a noncustodial parent, who lacks the legal authority to determine his child's education or religious upbringing, has Article III standing to challenge educational practices undertaken by the school in which the custodial parent has chosen to place the child.

REV_00164681

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

The respondents are Michael A. Newdow, who was the plaintiff below, and the Elk Grove Unified School District and its Superintendent, David W. Gordon, who were defendants below. The Complaint also named as defendants the United States Congress, President George W. Bush,* the Sacramento City Unified School District, and its superintendent, Jim Sweeney. All of those defendants were dismissed from the case by the court of appeals. App., infra, 5a-8a. The Complaint also named the State of California as a defendant, but the State did not participate in the district court proceedings or in the court of appeals, until the rehearing stage, at which point the court of appeals rejected the State's appearance. Id. at 6a. The motions of Sandra Banning, the mother of respondent Newdow's child, and the United States Senate to intervene were denied by the court of appeals. Id. at 99a-109a.

---

* The Complaint originally listed President William J. Clinton as a defendant. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 43(c)(2), President Bush was substituted as his successor in office.

v.

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, ET AL.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The amended opinion of the court of appeals on rehearing (App., infra, 1a-24a) is reported at 321 F.3d 772. The original opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 25a-58a) is reported at 292 F.3d 597, and the court's subsequent opinion on standing (App., infra, 89a-98a) is reported at 313 F.3d 500. The opinion and orders of the court denying intervention (App., infra, 99a-109a) are reported at 313 F.3d 495 and 313 F.3d 506. The order of the district court (App., infra, 110a), adopting the Findings and Recommendation of the magistrate judge that the case be dismissed (App., infra, 111a-112a), is unreported.

REV_00164686

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its original judgment on June 26, 2002. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing on February 28, 2003. The court of appeals issued an order staying its mandate on March 4, 2003. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

No federal statute waives the sovereign immunity of the United States of America from a suit for declaratory or injunctive relief under the First Amendment, and thus the jurisdictional basis for respondent Newdow's suit against the United States is unclear.[1] However, the absence of such a waiver is without jurisdictional consequence in this case because the United States could have, and should hereby be deemed to have, intervened as of right in this action against the school district and its superintendent to defend the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance against Newdow's facial and as-applied challenges. See 28 U.S.C. 2403(a).[2]

[1] Other than a separate claim against the President in his official capacity, Newdow did not sue an officer or an agency of the United States, so his claim does not appear to fall within the scope of either Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), or the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 552. Nor is his federal constitutional claim cognizable under the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. 1346, 1402, 2671 et seq. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 477 (1994).

[2] Newdow's as-applied challenge to the recitation of the Pledge in elementary schools calls into question the federal government's practice under which the nearly 2500 military dependents attending its four schools within the Ninth Circuit are led in a voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance daily.

REV_00164687

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. * * *"

Section 4 of Title 4 of the United States Code provides that the Pledge of Allegiance to the United States Flag shall be: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

STATEMENT

1. In 1942, as part of an overall effort to "codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America," Congress enacted a Pledge of Allegiance to the United States flag. H.R. Rep. No. 2047, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942); S. Rep. No. 1477, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942). As originally enacted, the Pledge of Allegiance read: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Act of June 22, 1942, ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380.

Twelve years later, Congress amended the Pledge of Allegiance by adding the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Act of June 14, 1954, ch. 297, § 7, 68 Stat. 249. Accordingly, the Pledge now reads: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. 4.

In amending the Pledge, the Committee Reports noted that, "[f]rom the time of our earliest history our peoples and our institutions have reflected the traditional concept that our Nation was founded on a fundamental belief in God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954); see also S.

Rep. No. 1287, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954) ("Our forefathers recognized and gave voice to the fundamental truth that a government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed must look to God for divine leadership. * * * Throughout our history, the statements of our great national leaders have been filled with references to God."). Both Reports traced the numerous references to God in historical documents central to the founding and preservation of the United States, from the Mayflower Compact to the Declaration of Independence to President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the latter having employed the same reference to a "Nation[] under God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.

The Reports further explained that the amendment would highlight a foundational difference between the United States and Communist nations: "Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being" and "[u]nderlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 1-2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2. As amended, the Pledge would thus textually reject the "communis[t]" philosophy "with its attendant subservience of the individual." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2 ("The spiritual bankruptcy of the Communists is one of our strongest weapons in the struggle for men's minds and this resolution gives us a new means of using that weapon."). The House Report further noted that, through "daily recitation of the pledge in school," "the children of our land * * * will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," so that "[a]s they grow and advance in this understanding, they will assume the responsibilities of self-government equipped to carry on the traditions that have been given to us." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3.

Both the Senate and House Reports expressed the view that, under controlling precedent from this Court, the amendment "is not an act establishing a religion or one interfering with the 'free exercise' of religion." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3 (citing Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952)); see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.[3]

2. California law requires that each public elementary school in the State "conduct[] * * * appropriate patriotic exercises" at the beginning of the school day. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (West 1989). The law provides that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section." Ibid. In satisfaction of that statutory requirement, respondent Elk Grove Unified School District (Elk Grove) has adopted a policy that directs each of its elementary schools to "recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." App., infra, 27a. No child is compelled to join in reciting the Pledge. Id. at 28a.

Respondent Michael Newdow is the noncustodial father of a child enrolled in a public elementary school within the jurisdiction of respondent Elk Grove. App., infra, 2a, 90a-91a. In the school that Newdow's daughter attends, the teacher leads the students in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance daily. Id. at 3a.

The child's mother has "sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and welfare of" the child. App., infra, 90a-91a. While Newdow, who was never married to the child's mother, retains limited visitation rights, the right to access the child's school and medical records, and the right to "consult" on "substantial" decisions pertaining to the child's "educational needs," if the parents disagree, the child's mother "may exercise legal control of" the child as long as it "is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order." Id. at 91a.

In March 2000, Newdow filed suit against the President, the United States Congress, the United States of America, the State of California, and two California school districts and their superintendents, seeking a declaration that the 1954 statute adding the words "under God" to the Pledge is "facially unconstitutional" under the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment. Compl. 6, 36; App., infra, 4a-5a. He also sought injunctive relief requiring Congress and the President to remove those words from the Pledge and prohibiting California schools from leading students in reciting the Pledge. Compl. 37; App., infra, 4a-5a. The Complaint explains that Newdow's child is "an unnamed plaintiff whom he represents as 'next friend.'" Compl. 3. The Complaint asserts that the recitation of the Pledge in his child's school "results in the daily indoctrination of the Elk Grove Unified School District's students—including Plaintiff's daughter—with religious dogma," id. at 18-19, and that such actions "infringe[]" upon Newdow's "unrestricted right to inculcate in his daughter— free from governmental interference—the atheistic beliefs he finds persuasive." Id. at 20; see also id. at 36. The Complaint further asserts that Newdow's "position as the father of a child attending the State's public schools grants him standing in this matter in his own right and on behalf of his daughter." Id. at 26.

The district court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, relying on numerous decisions of this Court expressly addressing the Pledge and describing it as consistent with the Establishment Clause, as well as on a decision of the Seventh Circuit rejecting a similar challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 110a-112a (adopting magistrate judge's Findings and Recommendation, which cites County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984); School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Sherman v. Community Consol. Sch. Dist. 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993)).

3. a. A divided panel of the Ninth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. App., infra, 25a-58a. As an initial matter, all three members of the panel agreed that the President and Congress should be dismissed from the lawsuit, on the grounds that the President is not a proper defendant for challenging the constitutionality of a federal law under Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992) (plurality opinion), and that the Congress cannot be sued under the Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const. Art. I, § 6, Cl. 1. See App., infra, 29a-30a; id. at 53a (Fernandez, J., concurring and dissenting). The court also ruled that Newdow lacked standing to file suit against the Sacramento City Unified School District and its superintendent "because his daughter is not currently a student there." Id. at 32a.

The court did conclude, however, that Newdow has standing to challenge Elk Grove's policy of reciting the Pledge "because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school" in Elk Grove. App., infra, 32a. In addition, a majority of the court concluded that Newdow has standing in his own right to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act amending the Pledge because "the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation," id. at 33a, and the 1954 Act amounts to a "religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 37a.[4]

b. Turning to the merits of Newdow's complaint, the majority held that, with the addition of the phrase "under God," the Pledge of Allegiance violates the Establishment Clause. App., infra, 37a-42a. The majority began by explaining that this Court has adopted three different tests to analyze Establishment Clause violations (id. at 37a)—the three-prong test outlined in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971); the "endorsement test," County of Allegheny, supra; and the "coercion" test, Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992)—and that the court of appeals was "free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them." App., infra, 41a.

The majority held that the 1954 Act and the school district policy failed the "endorsement test" both because the Pledge's reference to God "is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism" and because it "impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God." App., infra, 41a-42a. The majority further concluded that the 1954 Act and the school district's policy fail the "coercion test" because "the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement 'one nation under God' has a coercive effect." Id. at 45a.

Finally, the majority concluded that the Pledge fails the Lemon test because it has the purpose of advancing religion. App., infra, 46a. In so holding, the majority rejected the United States' argument that the Pledge should be looked at "as a whole," and concluded that the "sole purpose" of the 1954 Act was to "advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." Id. at 46a-47a. The majority further concluded that Elk Grove's policy ran afoul of the Lemon test because it "convey[s] an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God." Id. at 50a.

The majority dismissed in a footnote the numerous statements by this Court and its Members expressly addressing the Pledge and affirming its constitutionality as "dicta" that was announced without "appl[ying] any of the three tests to the Act." App., infra, 50a-51a n.12. The majority also expressly disagreed with the analysis and conclusion of the Seventh Circuit in Sherman, supra, which upheld the Pledge against a similar Establishment Clause challenge. Ibid.

c. Judge Fernandez dissented. App., infra, 52a-58a. Judge Fernandez first expressed his "serious misgivings" about the majority's conclusion that Newdow had standing to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act, but ultimately concluded that the question "makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case." Id. at 53a n.1. With respect to the Establishment Clause challenge, Judge Fernandez explained that "such phrases as 'In God We Trust,' or 'under God' have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity." Id. at 55a. Judge Fernandez also noted that this Court has repeatedly indicated that the Pledge's text, as amended, does not violate the Establishment Clause, and he agreed with the Seventh Circuit that the court of appeals should "respect" those assurances: "If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so." Ibid. (quoting Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448). Finally, Judge Fernandez accused the majority of confining itself to legal "elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place." Id. at 57a; see also id. at 57a n.8 (noting that the majority's holding would preclude use of many patriotic songs, such as "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," in public ceremonial occasions).

d. While the case was pending on the United States' and Elk Grove's petitions for rehearing and rehearing en banc, the mother of Newdow's child notified the court that Newdow lacked legal custody of the child and legal control over the child's educational and religious upbringing. She further advised that, as the custodial parent, she "wish[es] for her child to be able to recite the Pledge at school exactly as it stands." Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10. The United States then filed a motion to enlarge the record and a supplemental brief arguing that Newdow lacks standing to prosecute his challenge to the Pledge on its face or as applied by Elk Grove.

The court of appeals issued a separate decision holding that Newdow has standing to prosecute his constitutional challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 89a-98a. The court concluded that, while Newdow no longer could prosecute the action on behalf of or to vindicate the interests of his child, Newdow continued to have standing in his own right to challenge "unconstitutional government action affecting his child." Id. at 92a. The court noted that the custody agreement does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights, because he retains the "the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records" and the "right to consult" on educational decisions, albeit with the mother "having ultimate decision-making power." Id. at 95a. The court then reasoned that, because California law recognizes a right in noncustodial parents to "expose" their children to their beliefs and values, Newdow was injured because state law "surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent." Id. at 96a. The court further reasoned that Newdow has standing because the mother "has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action." Ibid. Because the Pledge, in the court's view, "provides the message to Newdow's young daughter" that "her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom," the court concluded that Newdow has suffered a legally cognizable injury that provides him with Article III standing. Id. at 97a.[5]

4. a. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing. App., infra, 1a-24a. In its amended opinion, the court limited its Establishment Clause holding to the Pledge's use by Elk Grove in its schools. Id. at 18a. With respect to Newdow's challenge to the facial constitutionality of the Pledge, the court of appeals vacated the district court's decision in favor of the United States and remanded "for further proceedings consistent with our holding." Ibid.

In addition, the court amended its decision to hold only that Elk Grove's policy violated the coercion test, and did not address either the "endorsement test" or the Lemon test. App., infra, 11a. The panel, however, concluded that the recitation of the Pledge violated the coercion test for the same reasons that the original opinion found a violation of the endorsement test. Compare id. at 11a-13a, with id. at 41a-43a.

[5] Judge Fernandez concurred in the judgment on standing, but not in the majority's "allusions to the merits of the controversy." App., infra, 98a.

The court also elaborated on its rejection of the numerous statements in this Court's opinions affirming the constitutionality of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage. The court assumed that "public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge," but that schools nevertheless could not "coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates." App., infra, 15a. The court also purported to distinguish references to God in the Pledge from those in the Declaration of Independence and National Anthem on the ground that the pledge "is a performative statement." Id. at 16a; see also ibid. ("To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.").

Judge Fernandez dissented from the court's Establishment Clause holding for the same reasons discussed in his initial dissenting opinion. App., infra, 19a-24a. Judge Fernandez also noted that, although the majority "now formally limits itself to holding that it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge in public classrooms, its message that something is constitutionally infirm about the Pledge itself abides and remains a clear and present danger to all similar public expressions of reverence." Id. at 19a n.1.

b. Judge O'Scannlain, joined by Judges Kleinfeld, Gould, Tallman, Rawlinson, and Clifton, filed a lengthy dissent from the court of appeals' denial of rehearing en banc. App., infra, 67a-87a. He described the panel opinion as > wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it

> set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.

Id. at 67a-68a (footnote omitted). Judge O'Scannlain stressed that this Court consistently has distinguished between "patriotic invocations of God on the one hand," and public school "prayer, an 'unquestioned religious exercise.'" Id. at 72a. Judge O'Scannlain further noted that, until the panel's decision here, "[n]o court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances." Id. at 78a-79a. Finally, Judge O'Scannlain noted that, while the panel "adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people," id. at 86a-87a, "the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion," id. at 86a.

Judges McKeown, Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson separately dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc on the ground that the case "presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance" that should be heard by the court en banc. App., infra, 88a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Two decisions of this Court have said without qualification that the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. Numerous other opinions, joined in by at least twelve Justices of this Court, have likewise expressly addressed and affirmed the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance notwithstanding its reference to God. No Justice has expressed the view that the Pledge violates the Establishment Clause. The court of appeals, however, dismissed those majority and separate opinions as unconsidered dicta. But a fair reading of this Court's decisions demonstrates that those consistent and oft-repeated statements stand as a fixed lodestar in this Court's

REV_00164698

Establishment Clause jurisprudence that has informed and directed the resolution of a number of the Court's cases. They reflect a point of exceptional unity and consistent agreement among Members of this Court within Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Whatever else the Establishment Clause may prohibit, this Court's precedents make clear that it does not forbid the government from officially acknowledging the religious heritage, foundation, and character of this Nation. That is what the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance does. The Pledge is therefore constitutional, as the Seventh Circuit held when confronted with the same Establishment Clause challenge. Because the court of appeals' error is so manifestly contrary to precedent, the Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the decision below.

1. This Court's review is warranted because the court of appeals' holding conflicts with repeated opinions of this Court and of individual Justices consistently explaining that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, do not violate the Establishment Clause. The holding below is also in direct conflict with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993), which rejected the same Establishment Clause challenge to the Pledge.

a. The court of appeals' decision is irreconcilable with this Court's repeated assurances that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, comports with the strictures of the Establishment Clause. In Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), the Court held that a city did not violate the Establishment Clause by including a nativity scene as part of a Christmas display. In upholding the display, the Court reasoned that "[t]here is an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life from at least 1789." Id. at 674. The Court noted that its own opinions had "asserted pointedly" that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 675 (quoting Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313 (1952), and citing School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 213 (1963)). The Court further reasoned that "examples of reference to our religious heritage are found * * * in the language "One nation under God," as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag," which "is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; see also ibid. (referring favorably to the National Motto, "In God We Trust," 36 U.S.C. 302, which appears on all United States currency, 31 U.S.C. 324).

Explaining that such official acknowledgments of our Nation's religious heritage do not "establish[] a religion or religious faith, or tend[] to do so," Lynch, 465 U.S. at 678, the Court concluded that the City's inclusion of a creche in its Christmas display likewise permissibly "depicts the historical origins of this traditional event long recognized as a National Holiday," id. at 680. To hold otherwise, the Court explained, would lead to the conclusion that "a host of other forms of taking official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage, are equally offensive to the Constitution." Id. at 686. "[P]ublic acknowledgment of the [Nation's] religious heritage long officially recognized by the three constitutional branches of government," the Court concluded, render "farfetched" "[a]ny notion that these symbols pose a real danger of establishment of a state church." Ibid.

In County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989), the Court invalidated the display of a creche at a county courthouse, but sustained the inclusion of a menorah as part of a holiday display. In so holding, the Court reaffirmed Lynch's approval of the reference to God in the Pledge, noting that all of the Justices in Lynch viewed the Pledge as "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." Id. at 602-603 (citations omitted). The Court then used the Pledge and the general holiday display approved in Lynch as benchmarks for what the Establishment Clause permits, ibid. On that basis, the Court concluded that the display of the creche by itself was unconstitutional because, unlike the Pledge, it gave "praise to God in [sectarian] Christian terms." Id. at 598; see also id. at 603 (finding an "obvious distinction" between the Pledge and the display of the creche).

Furthermore, while not referring specifically to the Pledge of Allegiance, the Court, in Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), upheld the historic practice of legislative prayer as "a tolerable acknowledgment of beliefs widely held among the people of this country." Id. at 792. In so holding, the Court discussed numerous other examples of constitutionally permissible religious references in official life "that form 'part of the fabric of our society,'" ibid., such as "God save the United States and this Honorable Court," which "occurs at all sessions of this Court," id. at 786. The Court also repeated its recognition that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 792.

Likewise, in Abington Township, supra, the Court explained, in the course of invalidating laws requiring Bible-reading in public schools, that "our national life reflects a religious people," and noted the numerous permissible public references to God in historical documents and ceremonial practices, such as oaths ending with "So help me God." 374 U.S. at 213.

Finally, in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962), in the course of invalidating official school prayers, the Court stressed:

REV_00164701

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise [official prayer] that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21.

In sum, this Court has repeatedly refused to "press the concept of separation of Church and State to * * * extremes" and to condemn as unconstitutional the "references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, [and] our ceremonies." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

b. The opinions of individual Justices have cemented as common ground the proposition that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, are constitutionally permissible. See Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 633-635 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Thomas, JJ.) (noting long historical practice, consistent with the Establishment Clause, of official references to God); id. at 638-639 (noting that the Court's invalidation of graduation prayer did not extend to the practice of also saying the Pledge of Allegiance at graduations); County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 623, 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("government recognition and acknowledgment of the role of religion in the lives of our citizens" serve the "secular purposes of 'solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society'"; in addition, because of their "history and ubiquity, such government acknowledgments of religion are not understood as conveying an endorsement of particular religious beliefs") (internal quotation marks omitted); id. at 657 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Brennan & Marshall, JJ.) ("Government policies of * * * acknowledgment, and support for religion are an accepted part of our political and cultural heritage."); id. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Scalia, JJ.) (explaining that the Court "will not proscribe" "the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance" and similar acknowledgments of religious culture); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n.5 (1985) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny, with specific reference to the Pledge of Allegiance); id. at 88 (Burger, C.J., dissenting) (the argument that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, violates the Establishment Clause "would of course make a mockery of our decisionmaking in Establishment Clause cases"); Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny with respect to "In God We Trust" and "God save the United States and this honorable court"); Abington Township, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("The reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance, for example, may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact."); id. at 303 (The Pledge and similar acknowledgments of religion are "interwoven * * * so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity" that their "use may not present that type of involvement which the First Amendment prohibits."); id. at

REV_00164703

307-308 (Goldberg, J., concurring, joined by Harlan, J.) ("[T]oday's decision does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause," citing to divine references in the Declaration of Independence and the National Anthem); Engel, 370 U.S. at 449 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (citing as consistent with the Establishment Clause the then recently amended Pledge of Allegiance, the National Motto "In God We Trust," and the National Day of Prayer).

c. The court of appeals dismissed that overwhelming and consistent authority as "dicta" that was "not inconsistent" with its invalidation of the Pledge. App., infra, 15a. While the court of appeals is correct that none of those cases involved direct challenges to the Pledge, it fundamentally erred in disregarding this Court's consistent statements validating the Pledge. That is because, "[w]hen an opinion issues for the Court, it is not only the result but also those portions of the opinion necessary to that result by which we are bound." Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 67 (1996). The Court's analysis of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion in Lynch and County of Allegheny were not "mere obiter dicta" that the court of appeals was free to disregard. Id. at 66. They were components of the "well-established rationale upon which the Court based the results of its earlier decisions." Id. at 66-67. Those references articulated the constitutional baseline for permissible official acknowledgments of religion under the Establishment Clause against which the governmental practices at issue in each of those cases were then measured. Indeed, for decades, the Court and individual Justices "have grounded [their] decisions in the oft-repeated understanding," id. at 67,

that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar references, are constitutional.[6]

The court of appeals' failure to recognize the analytical import of this Court's past decisions and statements underlies its erroneous conclusion that recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in schools violates the Establishment Clause. First, in concluding that the Pledge results in unconstitutional coercion, the court of appeals failed to come to grips with this Court's repeated recognition that the Establishment Clause permits such historic, ubiquitous, and ceremonial acknowledgments of our Nation's religious character and heritage. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675, 677 (concluding that the words "under God" in the Pledge are an "acknowledgment of our religious heritage" similar to the "official references to the value and invocation of Divine guidance in deliberations and pronouncements of the Founding Fathers" that are "replete" in our nation's history). Such references are not reasonably and objectively understood as coercing individuals into silent assent to any particular religious doctrine. Rather, the Pledge is "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief," County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-603, because the ceremonial reference to God acknowledges the undeniable historical facts that the Nation was founded by individuals who believed in God, that the Constitution's protection of individual rights and autonomy reflects those religious convictions, and that the Nation continues as a matter of demographic and cultural fact to be a predominantly "religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

Second, as Judge O'Scannlain explained in his dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc, App., infra, 69a-71a, 79a-83a, the court of appeals' decision proceeds from the faulty premise that the Pledge's acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage is the functional equivalent of prayer or a religious act like Bible reading. The decisions of this Court and individual Justices outlined above repeatedly admonish that not every reference to God amounts to impermissible government-endorsed religious exercise, and expressly refer to the Pledge and similar ceremonial references in contradistinction to formal religious exercises like prayer and Bible reading. See, e.g., Lynch, supra; Abington Township, supra; Engel, supra. The Pledge is no more of a coercive religious exercise than the requirement at the opening of federal courts that individuals stand while a court official announces "God save the United States and this honorable Court."

Third, the court of appeals erred in analyzing the phrase "under God" in isolation. In the court's view, pledging allegiance to the phrase "under God" compelled an endorsement of monotheism in the same manner as phrases like "under Jesus," "under Vishnu," or "under Zeus." App., infra, 12a. But Congress did not enact a pledge consisting just of the words "under God," and the school district does not lead students in reciting only the phrase "under God." Nor did Congress enact a pledge to God. Individuals pledge allegiance to "the Flag of the United States of America," and "to the Republic for which it stands." 4 U.S.C. 4. The remainder of the Pledge then describes the culture and character of that Republic—a unified Country, composed of individual States yet indivisible as a Nation, founded for the purposes of promoting liberty and justice for all, and founded by individuals who believed (and populated predominantly by people who continue to believe) that the Nation's character and destiny were rooted in the Divine.

In analyzing only Newdow's discomfiture with the phrase "under God," without considering its larger context, the court of appeals "plainly erred." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 680. In Lynch, this Court stressed that the Establishment Clause analysis looks at religious symbols and references in context, rather than "focusing almost exclusively on the" religious symbol alone. Ibid. The Lynch Court accordingly did not ask whether the government's display of a creche—a clearly religious symbol—was permissible. The Court analyzed whether the overall message conveyed by a display that included both that religious and other secular symbols of the Christmas holiday season conveyed a message of endorsement, and concluded that it did not. Id. at 680-686. The presence of the creche, the Court concluded, properly "depict[ed] the historical origins of this traditional event," id. at 680, and permissibly took "official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage," id. at 686.

Likewise, in County of Allegheny, the Court analyzed and upheld the "combined display" during the winter holiday season of a Christmas tree, Liberty sign, and menorah. 492 U.S. at 616. The Court thus looked at the content of the display as a whole, rather than focusing on the presence of the menorah and the religious message that the menorah alone conveys. Id. at 616-620.

That Congress added the phrase "under God" to a preexisting Pledge does not change the analysis. The city government in County of Allegheny had likewise added the menorah, after the fact, to a preexisting holiday display. Id. at 581-582. Yet this Court trained its constitutional analysis on the display as a whole, rather than scrutinizing the message conveyed by each component as it was added seriatim. Id. at 616-620 & n.64; see also Zelman v. Simmons-Harris,

536 U.S. 639, 655-657 (2002) (noting that the Establishment Clause inquiry must consider all relevant programs, not just the specific program challenged); id. at 672-676 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (later addition of "under God" to Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause because it "serve[s] as an acknowledgment of religion with the 'legitimate secular purpose of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future'").

The court of appeals attempted to distinguish the Pledge from other references to God in public life on the ground that the Pledge is "a performative statement," rather than simply "a reflection of [an] author's profession of faith." App., infra, 16a. As an initial matter, this Court's pronouncements have made no such distinction, consistently grouping the Pledge with the Motto, National Anthem, the Declaration of Independence, and similar public references, some of which frequently involve public performance (e.g., the National Anthem) and some of which do not.

More importantly, the distinction makes no sense. With respect to "impressionable young schoolchildren," id. at 15a, there simply is no coherent or discernible "performative" difference between having them say the Pledge, rather than memorize and recite the National Motto ("In God We Trust"), 36 U.S.C. 302 (emphasis added), the Declaration of Independence, 1 U.S.C. at XLIII ("We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men * * * are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights * * *."), or the Gettysburg Address ("[W]e here highly resolve * * * that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."). Indeed, the court of appeals' approach leads to the curious conclusion that the recitation of Bible passages or long-established prayers in public schools, which would require students "merely to repeat the words of an historical document," App., infra, 16a, trenches less upon Establishment

Clause principles than the Pledge's two-word acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage. That conclusion cannot be reconciled with this Court's precedent or established analytical principles guiding Establishment Clause jurisprudence.

d. This Court's review is warranted because the Ninth Circuit's decision squarely conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, supra, that the Pledge of Allegiance may constitutionally be recited in public elementary schools. Unlike the court of appeals here, the Seventh Circuit placed significant weight on this Court's repeated approval of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion, and concluded that the lower federal courts must "take [the Supreme Court's] assurances seriously." 980 F.2d at 448. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that its decision creates an inter-circuit conflict and that the courts' differing decisions were the product of different modes of analyzing Establishment Clause challenges to such official acknowledgments of religion. App., infra, 16a-17a. This Court's authoritative resolution of the question is therefore necessary.[7]

[7] The Ninth Circuit's decision is also in considerable tension with court of appeals' decisions upholding analogous acknowledgments of the Nation's religious history and character. See Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214 (10th Cir.) (upholding against Establishment Clause challenge the National Motto, "In God We Trust," and its imprint on all currency), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1211 (1996); O'Hair v. Murray, 588 F.2d 1144 (5th Cir.) (upholding National Motto), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 930 (1979); Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970) (same); Ganulin v. United States, 71 F. Supp. 2d 824 (S.D. Ohio 1999) (upholding constitutionality of 5 U.S.C. 6103, which makes Christmas Day a paid federal holiday), aff'd, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 973 (2001); Opinion of the Justices, 228 A.2d 161 (N.H. 1967) (posting of plaques in all public school classrooms bearing the National Motto, "In God We Trust," would not violate the Establishment Clause).

e. The question presented is one of great importance. An Act of Congress has been held unconstitutional as applied in one of its most important contexts. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; pp. 4-5, supra; App., infra, 14a & n.7. Furthermore, the impact of the decision below is potentially far-reaching. In addition to the practice at federally operated schools for military dependents, see n.2, supra, public schools within each of the 50 States lead students in voluntary recitations of the Pledge of Allegiance, see Idaho C.A. Amicus Curiae Br. 9-13 (citing state laws). It is untenable that a national Pledge of Allegiance to a national flag would have a different content depending on the judicial circuit in which it is uttered. Absent this Court's review, 9.6 million students in nine States (App., infra, 69a) will recite an abridged version of the Pledge, while the nearly 37 million students in the rest of the Country will recite the Pledge that Congress enacted. Students in the Ninth Circuit will also learn a different Pledge in school than they recite at other public and private events. The Pledge cannot serve its purpose of unifying and commonly celebrating the national identity unless it is one Pledge with one content for all citizens at all points in their lives. There is no reason to tolerate such disruption and disharmony in the schools of this Nation. The Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. This Court has repeatedly said so, and federal and state schools have acted in reliance on those assurances. The Ninth Circuit's disregard of this Court's decisions and their underlying analytical principles merits review.

2. The issue of Newdow's standing to bring his constitutional challenge is a necessarily antecedent question that this Court would need to address were it to grant review. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94 (1998). Although it is the court of appeals' erroneous ruling on the merits that warrants this Court's review, the court of appeals also committed three errors in concluding that

Newdow's status as a noncustodial parent did not deprive him of standing to challenge an educational practice at his child's school.[8]

First, and most fundamentally, Newdow has not suffered the invasion of any legally protected interest. A number of this Court's Establishment Clause cases have involved lawsuits by parents challenging practices or policies in public schools. See, e.g., Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290 (2000); Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills Sch. Dist., 509 U.S. 1 (1993); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972). In all of those cases, however, the parents had the legal right to sue as next friend to vindicate their children's legal interests and to protect the parents' own constitutional rights to direct and control the religious and educational upbringing of their children, see Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534-535 (1925).

Newdow can assert neither right. He has no legal right to sue as his child's next friend, or otherwise seek to vindicate his child's legal interests, as the court of appeals recognized. App., infra, 96a. That prerogative rests exclusively with the mother, who has sole legal custody. Ibid. While Newdow retains the right to "consult" with the mother on educational decisions and to have "access" to the child's educational records, id. at 91a, Newdow does not allege that Elk Grove's

[8] While the standing issue is necessarily antecedent to the merits of the Establishment Clause analysis, see Steel Co., supra, this Petition presents the Establishment Clause issue first because the court of appeals' erroneous constitutional judgment clearly merits this Court's review. Whether or not the Ninth Circuit's erroneous standing analysis would independently merit an exercise of this Court' s certiorari jurisdiction, it does not pose a barrier to review in this case. The Ninth Circuit's standing analysis is closely intertwined with its flawed Establishment Clause ruling, and the decision below, which not only erroneously invalidates the Pledge of Allegiance, but did so at the behest of a party without Article III standing, should not be allowed to stand.

use of the Pledge in its schools interferes with either of those rights. Nor, contrary to the court of appeals' opinion, does Newdow have any right "to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 7a. The custody order granted sole control over the child's "health, education and welfare" to the mother. Id. at 90a-91a. And the mother has made clear that she "wants her daughter to recite the Pledge as it stands as part of her education," Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10.[9]

Where, as here, the two parents disagree on an educational practice, the decision of the custodial parent controls and Newdow has no right to overturn it. If, as the noncustodial parent, Newdow believes the mother's educational decisions are causing harm to the child, the proper remedy is for him to resort to family court and seek a modification of the custody agreement. He cannot use federal litigation to circumvent that state-law process or to modify a state-law custody judgment. See District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482 (1983); Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413 (1923).[10]

[9] See also Burge v. City & County of San Francisco, 262 P.2d 6, 12 (Cal. 1953) (status as custodial parent "embrace[s] the sum of parental rights with respect to the rearing of a child, including its care. It includes the right * * * to direct his activities and make decisions regarding his care and control, education, health, and religion."); cf. Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 122-129 (1989).

[10] In apparent recognition of that limitation, the United States understands that Newdow has filed a motion in California Superior Court to alter the custody arrangement. That motion remains pending with a hearing date scheduled for July 31, 2003.

The court of appeals relied (App., infra, 92a-94a) on the Seventh Circuit's decision in Navin v. Park Ridge School District, 270 F.3d 1147 (2001) (per curiam), which held that a noncustodial father might be able to sue to enforce his son's rights under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, 20 U.S.C. 1415. In that case, however, the court concluded that the divorce decree did not strip the father of his parental interest in

Second, the court of appeals placed weight upon Newdow's residual right, under California law, to "expose" his child to his views. App., infra, 95a. But, again, Newdow has not alleged that Elk Grove or the United States has denied him any opportunity to expose his child to his particular viewpoints.

The court of appeals went further, however, and held that Newdow has a right not to have his message to his child interrupted or diluted by the government's educational practices. But, especially when that speech occurs with the consent of the custodial parent, the right of the non-custodial parent to "expose" the child to his views does not entitle that parent to close off all other views. Public schools routinely instruct students about evolution, war, and other matters with which some parents may disagree on religious, political, or moral grounds. What the Constitution protects, in those circumstances, is the parents' right to instill their own views in their children and to place them in a private school that is more consonant with their beliefs. See Pierce, supra.[11]

The court of appeals further erred in suggesting that Newdow's limited state-law right was somehow enhanced by that court's erroneous conclusion that his Establishment Clause challenge was meritorious. The court repeatedly ensuring the quality of his child's education. 270 F.3d at 1149. The court stressed, moreover, that the noncustodial parent could not use federal law "to upset choices committed to [the mother] by the state court," id. at 1150, which is exactly what Newdow's lawsuit attempts to do.

[11] Cf. West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630 (1943) (holding only that children whose parents have religious objections to the content of the Pledge have a right not to participate in its recitation in a classroom, where their refusal "does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so"); Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 717 (1977) (the government "may legitimately" "communicate to others an official view as to proper appreciation of history, state pride, and individualism," as long as individuals are not forced to "becom[e] the courier for such message[s]").

couched Newdow's purported Article III injury in terms of a right not to have his daughter "subjected to unconstitutional state action" and "official state indoctrination of * * * an official view of religion." App., infra, 96a (emphasis added). See also id. at 97a (the mother "may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights") (emphasis added).

That approach, however, confuses the standing inquiry with the ultimate question on the merits. The type of injury that Article III requires must be discernible separate and apart from the ultimate resolution of the case. The plaintiff must identify some action by the opposing party that affects the plaintiff's particularized, individual rights concretely and imminently—regardless of whether that action ultimately is found to be lawful or not. "The requirement of standing 'focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated." Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 484 (1982); see also Schaffer v. Clinton, 240 F.3d 878, 883 (10th Cir.) (denying standing where it "revolves around the asserted unconstitutionality of the [conduct as that] is a statement of [plaintiff's] view of the merits * * * and no more"), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 992 (2001).

Third, even if Newdow possesses some federal right not to have his message of atheism affected by his child's exposure to the Pledge, the court of appeals' limited invalidation of the Pledge in elementary schools does not redress that injury. Newdow's child remains subject to exposure to the Pledge in a wide variety of other assemblies and settings, public or private. In addition, the child's mother could place the child in private school where the official governmental Pledge could be recited daily. Unless the Establishment Clause compels courts to root out every reference to religion in public life, the relief ordered by the court here is incapable of inoculating Newdow's message of atheism against any perceived dilution.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted. The Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the court of appeals' judgment.

Respectfully submitted.

AMENDED OPINION AND AMENDED CONCURRENCE/DISSENT

Before: ALFRED T. GOODWIN, STEPHEN REINHARDT and FERDINAND F. FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by Judge Goodwin; Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge Fernandez

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals pro se a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164721

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

---

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[2] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'" Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a

[2] Compelling students to recite the Pledge was held to be a First Amendment violation in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

recommendation that the district court hold that the daily Pledge ceremony in the schools did not violate the Establishment Clause. District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

REV_00164724

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties in the district court. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-561).

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. Amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[3] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions . . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

Id. at 687-88 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[3] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n. 4 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792).

REV_00164728

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court first examined the degree of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. Because we conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act and accordingly hold the policy unconstitutional, we need not consider whether the policy fails the endorsement test or the Lemon test as well.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since

1954—monotheism. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. The school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, including the religious values it incorporates.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[4] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n.14. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642.

The school district's policy here, like the school's action in Lee, places students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. The defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal. To an atheist or a believer in non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, however, this phrase may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in Lee: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the non-believer or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592.

The coercive effect of the policy here is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[5] Furthermore, under Lee, non-compulsory participation is no basis for distinguishing Barnette [sic] from the case at bar because, even without a

[5] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-believing school-children that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

REV_00164732

recitation requirement for each child, the mere presence in the classroom every day as peers recite the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[6] The coercive effect of the Pledge is also made even more apparent when we consider the legislative history of the Act that introduced the phrase "under God." These words were designed to be recited daily in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower).[7] All in all, there can be little doubt that under the controlling Supreme

[6] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593.

[7] In addition, the legislative history of the 1954 Act makes it plain that the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins." This statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N 2339, 2341.

Court cases the school district's policy fails the coercion test.[8]

The Supreme Court has addressed the Pledge in passing, and we owe due deference to its dicta. See United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996). Our opinion, however, is not inconsistent with this dicta. In Allegheny, the Court noted that it had "considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." 492 U.S. at 602-03. And in Lynch, the Court observed that students recited the pledge daily, but only to support its point that there is a long tradition of "official acknowledgment" of religion. 465 U.S. at 674, 676. Neither of these two references speaks to the issue here. We may assume arguendo that public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge, yet it does not follow that schools may coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates.

Our decision is not inconsistent with Engel, which approved of encouraging students to "recit[e] historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence

[8] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

which contain references to the Deity or . . . sing[ ] officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being." 370 U.S. at 435 n.21. The Pledge differs from the Declaration and the anthem in that its reference to God, in textual and historical context, is not merely a reflection of the author's profession of faith. It is, by design, an affirmation by the person reciting it. "I pledge" is a performative statement. See J.L. Austin, How to Do Things with Words (J.O. Urmsson & Marina Sbisa eds., Harvard Univ. Press 1975) (1962). To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently."

Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. For the reasons we have already explained, this question is simply not dispositive of whether the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.

In light of Supreme Court precedent, we hold that the school district's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the inclusion of the added words "under God," violates the Establishment Clause.

REV_00164736

In addition to the relief that Newdow seeks against the school district—relief to which he is entitled—Newdow seeks a declaration as to the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. The district court did not discuss that question because it dismissed Newdow's complaint on the basis of its holding that the school district's policy did not violate the First Amendment. Given our contrary holding, we must consider whether to grant Newdow's claim for declaratory relief as to the Act. Normally, whether to decide a claim for declaratory judgment is left to the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); see also Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Dizol, 133 F.3d 1220, 1222-23 (9th Cir. 1998). We doubt that, given the relief to which we decide Newdow is entitled, the district court would have exercised its discretionary power to resolve, in the present case, the additional issue as to which Newdow seeks declaratory relief. Accordingly, we decline to reach that issue here.

The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to Newdow's claim that the school district's Pledge policy violates the Establishment Clause and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

REV_00164737

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.[1]

We can run through some or all of the tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534, U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L. But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity. Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring) ("A civic reference to God does not become permissible . . . only when . . . it is sapped of religious significance." The Pledge is constitutional and "[w]e need not drain the meaning from the reference [to God] to reach this conclusion."

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America The Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe all of us, including our children, must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance in any setting, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

---

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all. By the way, I am not the first to apply the de minimis concept to this area of the law. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 861, 120 S. Ct. 2530, 2569, 147 L. Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge FERNANDEZ.

OPINION

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

REV_00164745

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day."[2]

The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

[2] The SCUSD, the school district that Newdow claims his daughter may in the future attend, has promulgated a similar rule: "Each school shall conduct patriotic exercises daily. . . . The Pledge of Allegiance to the flag will fulfill this requirement." However, as discussed infra, Newdow lacks standing to challenge the SCUSD's rule requiring recitation of the Pledge.

liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[3] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'"

Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sover-

Ed. 1628 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

eign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation; District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03, 112 S. Ct. 2767, 120 L.Ed.2d 636 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 501, 18 L.Ed. 437 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503, 95 S. Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09, 95 S. Ct. 1813. Although the district court lacks jurisdiction over the President and the Congress, the question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act remains before us. While the court correctly dismissed the claim against those parties, it survives against others.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties either below or here. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180, 120 S. Ct. 693 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560- 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130).

The final question of standing relates to the 1954 Act. Specifically, has Newdow suffered an "injury in fact" that is "fairly traceable" to the enactment of the 1954 Act? Id.

We begin our inquiry by noting the general rule that the standing requirements for an action brought under the Establishment Clause are the same as for any other action. Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 488-90, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L.Ed.2d 700 (1982). "The requirement of standing focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated. Moreover, we know of no principled basis on which to create a hierarchy of constitutional values or a complementary 'sliding scale' of standing which might permit respondents to invoke the judicial power of the United States." Id. at 484, 102 S. Ct. 752 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In Valley Forge, an organization dedicated to the separation of church and state brought suit challenging the federal government's grant of surplus federal property to a church-related college. The suit alleged that this grant of real property, without any financial payment by the college, was a violation of the Establishment Clause. The Supreme Court found that the plaintiff had standing neither as a taxpayer, see id. at 479-80, 102 S. Ct. 752, nor as a party personally injured as a consequence of the alleged unconstitutional action, see id. at 484-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The "psychological consequence presumably produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees . . . . is not an injury sufficient to confer standing under Art. III, even though the disagreement is phrased in constitutional terms." Id. at 485-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The Court emphasized that "'[t]he assumption that if respondents have no standing to sue, no one would have standing, is not a reason to find standing.'" Id. at 489, 102 S. Ct. 752 (quoting Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 227, 94 S. Ct. 2925, 41 L.Ed.2d 706 (1974)).

While Valley Forge remains good law, the Supreme Court in more recent opinions has indirectly broadened the notion of Establishment Clause standing in public education cases by holding that the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation. In Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985), the Court considered an Establishment Clause challenge to an Alabama statute that originally had authorized a one-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation," but was later amended to authorize a period of silence "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40-42, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Although the previous form of the statute specifically allowed students to use the moment of silence for

"meditation," silent prayer was always an option. "[I]t is undisputed that at the time of the enactment of [the amended statute] there was no governmental practice impeding students from silently praying for one minute at the beginning of each schoolday." Id. at 57 n.45, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Nor were students, under the amended form of the statute, compelled to use the allotted time for prayer. In sum, the amendment to the Alabama statute had no discernible effect on public school students other than to inform them that the state was encouraging them to engage in prayer during their daily moment of silence. Because the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that standing is a jurisdictional requirement, the existence of which each federal court must determine for itself, see Lujan, 504 U.S. at 559-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 230-31, 110 S. Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), we may presume that in Wallace the Court examined the standing question before deciding the merits, and that the Court determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to challenge the amended Alabama statute.

Our reading of Wallace is supported by Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L.Ed.2d 295 (2000), where the Court upheld a facial challenge to a school district's policy of permitting, but not requiring, prayer initiated and led by a student at high school football games. Noting that "the Constitution also requires that we keep in mind 'the myriad, subtle ways in which the Establishment Clause values can be eroded,'" id. at 314, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, 694 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring)), the Court held that the "mere passage by the District of a policy that has the purpose and perception of government establishment of religion," id., violated the Establishment Clause. "[T]he simple enactment of this policy, with the purpose and perception of school endorsement of student prayer, was a constitutional violation." Id. at 316, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (emphasis added).

In Wallace and Santa Fe, the Court looked at the language of each statute, the context in which the statute was enacted, and its legislative history to determine that the challenged statute caused an injury in violation of the Establishment Clause. "We refuse to turn a blind eye to the context in which this policy arose, and that context quells any doubt that this policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer." Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Wallace noted that whether a statute actually conveys a message of endorsement of religion is "not entirely a question of fact . . . . The relevant issue is whether an objective observer, acquainted with the text, legislative history, and implementation of the statute, would perceive it as state endorsement of prayer in public schools." 472 U.S. at 76, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment). In Santa Fe, "[t]he text and history of this policy . . . reinforce our objective student's perception that the prayer is, in actuality, encouraged by the school." 530 U.S. at 308, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In evaluating the purpose of the school district policy, the Court found "most striking . . . the evolution of the current policy." Id. at 309, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In Wallace, a review of the legislative history led the Court to conclude that enactment of the amended statute "was not motivated by any clearly secular purpose—indeed, the statute had no secular purpose."

REV_00164754

472 U.S. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479; see also id. at 57-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

Operating within the above-described legal landscape, we now turn to the question initially posed, namely, does Newdow have standing to challenge the 1954 Act? Initially, we note that the 1954 statute challenged by Newdow is similar to the Alabama statute struck down in Wallace. Neither statute works the traditional type of "injury in fact" that is implicated when a statute compels or prohibits certain activity, nor do the amendments brought about by these statutes lend themselves to "as-applied" constitutional review. Nevertheless, the Court in Wallace, at least implicitly, determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to attack the challenged statute. Moreover, the legislative history of the 1954 Act shows that the "under God" language was not meant to sit passively in the federal code unbeknownst to the public; rather, the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," and this statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341. Taken within its context, the 1954 addendum was designed to result in the recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms throughout the land on a daily basis, and therefore constituted as much of an injury-in-fact as the policies considered in Wallace and

REV_00164755

Santa Fe. As discussed earlier, Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. The mere enactment of the 1954 Act in its particular context constitutes a religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter. Accordingly, we hold that Newdow has standing to challenge the 1954 Act.

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch, and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[4] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions. . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are > outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

[4] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n.4, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792, 103 S. Ct. 3330).

Id. at 687-88, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[5] The Court first examined the degree

---

[5] Although this formulation is referred to as the "coercion" test, it should be noted that coercion is not a necessary element in finding an Establishment Clause violation. "The Establishment Clause, unlike the Free Exercise Clause, does not depend upon any showing of direct governmental compulsion. . . ." Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 430, 82 S. Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601 (1962). "[T]his court has never relied on coercion alone as the touchstone of Establishment Clause analysis. To require a showing of coercion, even indirect coercion, as an essential element of an Establishment Clause violation would make the free Exercise Clause a redundancy." Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 628, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (O'Connor, J., concurring). "Over the years, this Court has declared the invalidity of many noncoercive state laws and practices conveying a message of religious endorsement." Lee, 505 U.S. at 618, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (Souter, J., concurring).

of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. The Supreme Court has not repudiated Lemon; in Santa Fe, it found that the application of each of the three tests provided an independent ground for invalidating the statute at issue in that case; and in Lee, the Court invalidated the policy solely on the basis of the coercion test. Although this court has typically applied the Lemon test to alleged Establishment Clause violations, see, e.g., Am. Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1120-21 (9th Cir. 2002), we are not required to apply it if a practice fails one of the other tests. Nevertheless, for purposes of completeness, we will analyze the school district policy and the 1954 Act under all three tests.

We first consider whether the 1954 Act and the EGUSD's policy of teacher-led Pledge recitation survive the endorsement test. The magistrate judge found that "the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs." Supreme Court precedent does not support that conclusion.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is an endorsement of religion. It is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since 1954—monotheism. The text of the official Pledge, codified in federal law, impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. "[T]he government must pursue a course of complete neutrality toward religion." Wallace, 472 U.S. at 60, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Furthermore, the school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, and thus amounts to state endorsement of these ideals. Although students cannot be forced to participate in recitation of the Pledge, the school district is nonetheless conveying a message of state endorsement of a religious belief when it requires public school teachers to recite, and lead the recitation of, the current form of the Pledge.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, 63 S. Ct. 1178, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633, 63 S. Ct. 1178. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[6] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n. 14, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178.

The Pledge, as currently codified, is an impermissible government endorsement of religion because it sends a message to unbelievers "that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 688, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice Kennedy, in his dissent in Allegheny, agreed:

> [B]y statute, the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag describes the United States as 'one nation under God.' To be sure, no one is obligated to recite this phrase, . . . but it borders on sophistry to suggest that the reasonable atheist would not feel less than a full member of the political community every time

[6] Barnette was decided before "under God" was added, and thus the Court's discussion was limited to the political ideals contained in the Pledge.

REV_00164762

> his fellow Americans recited, as part of their expression of patriotism and love for country, a phrase he believed to be false.

Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 672, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[7] Consequently, the policy and the Act fail the endorsement test.

Similarly, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test. Just as in Lee, the policy and the Act place students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in that case: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the nonbeliever or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Although the defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal, to an atheist or a believer in certain non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, it may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. The coercive effect of this policy is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[8] Furthermore, under Lee, the fact that students are not required to participate is no basis for distinguishing Barnette from the case at bar because, even without a recitation requirement for each child, the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[9] The coercive effect of the Act is apparent from its context and legislative history, which indicate that the Act was designed to result in the daily recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower). Therefore, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test.[10]

believing schoolchildren that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

[9] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

[10] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722, 97 S. Ct.

Finally we turn to the Lemon test, the first prong of which asks if the challenged policy has a secular purpose. Historically, the primary purpose of the 1954 Act was to advance religion, in conflict with the first prong of the Lemon test. The federal defendants "do not dispute that the words 'under God' were intended" "to recognize a Supreme Being," at a time when the government was publicly inveighing against atheistic communism. Nonetheless, the federal defendants argue that the Pledge must be considered as a whole when assessing whether it has a secular purpose. They claim that the Pledge has the secular purpose of "solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future, and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355.

The flaw in defendants' argument is that it looks at the text of the Pledge "as a whole," and glosses over the 1954 Act. The problem with this approach is apparent when one considers the Court's analysis in Wallace. There, the Court struck down Alabama's statute mandating a moment of silence for "meditation or voluntary prayer" not because the final version "as a whole" lacked a primary secular purpose, but because the state legislature had amended the statute specifically and solely to add the words "or voluntary prayer." 472 U.S. at 59-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

By analogy to Wallace, we apply the purpose prong of the Lemon test to the amendment that added the words "under God" to the Pledge, not to the Pledge in its final version. As was the case with the amendment to the Alabama statute in Wallace, the legislative history of the 1954 Act reveals that the Act's sole purpose was to advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." [T]he First Amendment requires that a statute must be invalidated if it is entirely motivated by a purpose to advance religion." Id. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (citations omitted) (applying the Lemon test). As the legislative history of the 1954 Act sets forth:

> At this moment of our history the principles underlying our American Government and the American way of life are under attack by a system whose philosophy is at direct odds with our own. Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being. Underlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp. The inclusion of God in our pledge therefore would further acknowledge the dependence of our people and our Government upon the moral directions of the Creator. At the same time it would serve to deny the atheistic and materialistic concepts of communism with its attendant subservience of the individual.

H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 1-2 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2340. This language reveals that the purpose of the 1954 Act was to take a position on the question of theism, namely, to support the existence and moral authority of God, while "deny[ing] . . .

atheistic and materialistic concepts." Id. Such a purpose runs counter to the Establishment Clause, which prohibits the government's endorsement or advancement not only of one particular religion at the expense of other religions, but also of religion at the expense of atheism.

> [T]he Court has unambiguously concluded that the individual freedom of conscience protected by the First Amendment embraces the right to select any religious faith or none at all. This conclusion derives support not only from the interest in respecting the individual's freedom of conscience, but also from the conviction that religious beliefs worthy of respect are the product of a free and voluntary choice by the faithful, and from recognition of the fact that the political interest in forestalling intolerance extends beyond intolerance among Christian sects—or even intolerance among "religions"—to encompass intolerance of the disbeliever and the uncertain.

Wallace, 472 U.S. at 52-54, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

In language that attempts to prevent future constitutional challenges, the sponsors of the 1954 Act expressly disclaimed a religious purpose. "This is not an act establishing a religion. . . . A distinction must be made between the existence of a religion as an institution and a belief in the sovereignty of God. The phrase 'under God' recognizes only the guidance of God in our national affairs." H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341-42. This alleged distinction is irrelevant for constitutional purposes. The Act's affirmation of "a belief in the sovereignty of God" and its recognition of "the guidance of God" are endorsements by the government of religious beliefs. The Establishment Clause is not limited to "religion as an institution"; this is clear from cases such as Santa Fe, where the Court struck down student-initiated and student-led prayer at high school football games. 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. The Establishment Clause guards not only against the establishment of "religion as an institution," but also against the endorsement of religious ideology by the government. Because the Act fails the purpose prong of Lemon, we need not examine the other prongs. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-14, 91 S. Ct. 2105.

Similarly, the school district policy also fails the Lemon test. Although it survives the first prong of Lemon because, as even Newdow concedes, the school district had the secular purpose of fostering patriotism in enacting the policy, the policy fails the second prong. As explained by this court in Kreisner v. City of San Diego, 1 F.3d 775, 782 (9th Cir. 1993), and by the Supreme Court in School District of Grand Rapids v. Ball, 473 U.S. 373, 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267 (1985), the second Lemon prong asks "whether the challenged government action is sufficiently likely to be perceived by adherents of the controlling denominations as an endorsement, and by the nonadherents as a disapproval, of their individual religious choices."[11] Ball, 473

[11] Although Ball was overruled in part by Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 236, 117 S. Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391 (1997), as the Court stated in Agostini, Ball's statement of the general principles and relevant tests to be used in determining what constitutes an Establishment Clause violation remain intact; only the underlying factual assumptions and presumptions have changed. In particular, the Court rejected the following three core assumptions of Ball:

REV_00164768

U.S. at 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216. Given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, as discussed above, particularly within the confined environment of the classroom, the policy is highly likely to convey an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God. Therefore the policy fails the effects prong of Lemon, and fails the Lemon test. In sum, both the policy and the Act fail the Lemon test as well as the endorsement and coercion tests.[12]

> (i) any public employee who works on the premises of a religious school is presumed to inculcate religion in her work; (ii) the presence of public employees on private school premises creates a symbolic union between church and state; and (iii) any and all public aid that directly aids the educational function of religious schools impermissibly finances religious indoctrination, even if the aid reaches such schools as a consequence of private decisionmaking.

Agostini, 521 U.S. at 222, 117 S. Ct. 1997. Therefore, Ball's restatement of the second prong of Lemon remains valid even after Agostini.

[12] We recognize that the Supreme Court has occasionally commented in dicta that the presence of "one nation under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. See Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. 3086; Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676, 104 S. Ct. 1355; id. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303-04, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); id. at 306-08, 83 S. Ct. 1560 (Goldberg, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring); Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n. 21, 82 S. Ct. 1261. However, the Court has never been presented with the question directly, and has always clearly refrained from deciding it. Accordingly, it has never applied any of the three tests to the Act or to any school policy regarding the recitation of the Pledge. That task falls to us, although the final word, as always, remains with the Supreme Court.

REV_00164769

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently." Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee or the endorsement test from Lynch. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. Relying in part on Supreme Court dicta regarding the Pledge, the court answers this question in the negative, determining that "under God" is a statement which, taken within its context in the Pledge, is devoid of any significant religious content, and therefore constitutional. Id. at 447-48. At the very least, as discussed above in the text, the Supreme Court requires that any policy alleged to be an Establishment Clause violation must be held to the scrutiny of the established tests. Our application of all of the tests compels the conclusion that the policy and the Act challenged here violate the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Thus, we must respectfully differ from the Seventh Circuit.

In conclusion, we hold that (1) the 1954 Act adding the words "under God" to the Pledge, and (2) EGUSD's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the added words included, violate the Establishment Clause. The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to these two claims, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

REV_00164771

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C[1] of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.

We can run through the litany of tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534 U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L.Ed.2d 256 (2001); Goehring v. Brophy, 94 F.3d 1294,

[1] I admit, however, to serious misgivings about standing to attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 itself. Congress has not compelled anyone to do anything. It surely has not directed that the Pledge be recited in class; only the California authorities have done that. Even if a general lack of standing to directly attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 would deprive federal courts of the opportunity to strike "under God" from that statute, any lament would be no more than a complaint about the limits on federal judges' constitutional power. Nonetheless, that ultimately makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case.

1306-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (Fernandez, J., concurring). But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 3106, 3143, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n. 5, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985); *Lynch v. [3] The citations to the four preceding Supreme Court opinions are to majority opinions, concurring opinions, and dissents. Because my point is that a number of Justices have recognized the lack of danger and because I hope to avoid untoward complication in the setting out of the citations, I have not designated which Justices have joined in which opinion. All in all, however, perusing those opinions indicates that Chief Justice Burger, Chief Justice Rehnquist, and Justices Harlan, Brennan, White, Goldberg, Marshall, Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, O'Connor, Scalia, and Kennedy have so recognized.

Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983) (legislative prayer). I think it is worth stating a little more about two of the cases which I have just cited. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity.

REV_00164774

Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring).

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

[7] I recognize that the Pledge did not then contain the phrase "under God."

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America the Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe we all must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all.

U.S. CONGRESS; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; GEORGE W. BUSH,* PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES; STATE OF CALIFORNIA; ELK GROVE UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; DAVID W. GORDON, SUPERINTENDENT EGUSD; SACRAMENTO CITY UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT; JIM SWEENEY, SUPERINTENDENT SCUSD, DEFENDANTS-APPELLEES

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, Milton L. Schwartz, Senior Judge, Presiding

Argued and Submitted: March 14, 2002
Filed: June 26, 2002
Amended: February 28, 2003

ORDER

The opinion filed June 26, 2002, is ordered amended. The Clerk is instructed to file the amended opinion with

* George W. Bush is substituted for his predecessor, William Jefferson Clinton, as President of the United States. Fed. R. App. P. 43(c)(2).

Judge Fernandez's amended concurrence/dissent. Judge Reinhardt's concurrence in the order denying rehearing en banc, along with Judge O'Scannlain's and Judge McKeown's dissent from that order shall also be filed.

The Clerk is also instructed not to accept for filing any new petitions for rehearing and petitions for rehearing en banc in this case.

With the opinion thus amended, the panel has voted unanimously to deny the petitions for rehearing.

The full court has been advised of the petitions for rehearing en banc. An active judge requested a vote on whether to rehear the matter en banc. The matter failed to receive a majority of the votes of the non-recused active judges in favor of en banc consideration. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

The petitions for rehearing are DENIED and the petitions for rehearing en banc are DENIED.

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, concurring in the order:

My views as to the merits of this issue are set forth in the amended majority opinion authored by Judge Goodwin, and I adhere to them fully. I write separately for two reasons unrelated to the contents of that opinion. I write first to comment on the separate dissent to the denial of rehearing en banc authored by Judge McKeown and joined in by Judges Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson, in which my colleagues appear to express the view that a case should be reheard en banc whenever it involves "a question of exceptional importance." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a)(2).[1] Second, I am

[1] While the brief separate dissent is deliberately opaque and uninformative, I would suspect that not all of its signatories compelled to register my strong disagreement with one particularly unfortunate aspect of Judge O'Scannlain's principal dissent that reflects a serious misconception of fundamental constitutional principles and the proper role of the federal judiciary.

I

As to the first question, I disagree with the notion that the importance of an issue is a sufficient reason to take a case en banc, either under the Rule or as a matter of judicial policy. Rule 35(a) advises this court of its discretionary power to order that a case already decided by a three-judge panel be reheard by the full court. Specifically, the rule begins by stating that a "majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) (emphasis added). Subsection two guides such discretionary consideration by stating that one compelling reason to grant rehearing en banc is the "exceptional importance" of a particular case.

The most reasonable construction of the Rule is that this court should rehear a case en banc when it is both of exceptional importance and the decision *requires correctio*n. See United States v. Burdeau, 180 F.3d 1091, 1092 (9th Cir. 1999) (Tashima, J., concurring in the order denying rehearing en banc) ("Subject to rare exceptions. . . . we should review the statements in three[-]judge panel opinions only to 'determine whether the [panel's] legal error resulted in an erroneous believe that the general rule they appear to advocate should apply regardless of the "correctness" of the panel opinion. The concept that "exceptional importance" is, without more, a sufficient reason for en banc review is, however, shared by at least several members of the Court and accordingly merits some discussion.

judgment . . . .'") (quoting Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984)). A decision may warrant correction because a three-judge panel has reached a result or adopted a legal rule or principle that conflicts with our existing circuit law or that the majority of our court believes is incorrect and needs further review. The fact that three-judge panels often decide cases of exceptional importance, whether it be the constitutionality of a state's decision to execute an individual who may be innocent, the existence or non-existence of a fundamental right, or the ability of the Congress to require the states to comply with federal law—an issue that some of us thought had been settled by the successful end to the Civil War—is an unremarkable, but undeniably important, aspect of our appellate system. See Tracey E. George, The Dynamics and Determinants of the Decision to Grant En Banc Review, 74 WASH. L. REV. 213, 218 (1999) (stating that three-judge panels "representing and acting on behalf of the whole court" is a "basic tenet of our intermediate appellate system"). Unless reconsidered en banc, a decision of a three-judge panel is a decision of our court and speaks for our court. Moreover, it ordinarily constitutes the final judicial decision.[2]

To rehear a case en banc simply on the basis that it involves an important issue would undermine the three-

[2] While the Supreme Court unquestionably has the authority to review any or all of the decisions of the Court of Appeals, the Court has elected to hear a remarkably small number of cases in recent years. For example, in the 2001 term, of the 7,852 case filings, the Court heard argument in 88 cases, and disposed of 85 in 76 signed opinions. See Supreme Court of the United States, 2002 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, at http://www.supremecourtus.gov/publicinfo/year-end/2002year-endreport.html.

judge panel system and create an impractical and crushing burden on what otherwise should be, as Rule 35(a) suggests, an exceptional occurrence. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) ("An en banc hearing or rehearing is not favored . . . ."). According to statistics kept by the Clerk of the court, in 2002 this court decided 5,190 cases on the merits, more than 98% of which were finally decided by three-judge panels. These decisions are not measures of "rough justice," later to be refined by the en banc court. Unless they decide issues of exceptional importance erroneously, create a direct intra-circuit split, or unless the interests of justice require that the decision be corrected, the opinions of three-judge panels should constitute the final action of this court.

II

I also feel compelled to discuss a disturbingly wrong-headed approach to constitutional law manifested in the dissent authored by Judge O'Scannlain. The dissent suggests that this court should be able to conclude that the panel's holding was erroneous by observing the "public and political reaction" to its decision. Dissent at 2783. This is not the first time that the magnitude of the political response regarding an issue has distracted certain members of this court. An equally disturbing misunderstanding of the nature of our Constitution and the role of the federal judiciary was manifested in Coalition for Econ. Equity v. Wilson, 122 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 1997), a case involving a California initiative on the subject of affirmative action. There, the three-judge panel, in a case that unfortunately was not taken en banc, notwithstanding its exceptional importance, made the following remarkable statement: "A system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy." Id. at 699 (O'Scannlain, J.).

The Bill of Rights is, of course, intended to protect the rights of those in the minority against the temporary passions of a majority which might wish to limit their freedoms or liberties. As Justice Jackson recognized:

> The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943). It is the highest calling of federal judges to invoke the Constitution to repudiate unlawful majoritarian actions and, when necessary, to strike down statutes that would infringe on fundamental rights, whether such statutes are adopted by legislatures or by popular vote. The constitutional system that vests such power in an independent judiciary does not "test[ ] the integrity of . . . democracy." It makes democracy vital, and is one of our proudest heritages.

Moreover, Article III judges are by constitutional design insulated from the political pressures governing members of the other two branches of government. We are given life tenure and a secured salary so that, in our unique capacity to "say what the law is," Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803), we may decide constitutional issues without regard to popular vote, political consequence, or the prospect of future career advancement.[3] Most federal judges do not question the wisdom of this approach. When the federal judiciary is so firmly separated by constitutional structure from the direct influence of politics, we must not undermine that structure by allowing political pressures, polls, or "focus groups" to influence our opinions, even indirectly.

This is not to say that federal judges should be completely sequestered from the attitudes of the nation we serve, even though our service is accomplished not through channeling popular sentiment but through strict adherence to established constitutional principles. The Constitution contemplates occasions when we must be responsive to long-term societal trends—when determining, for example, that which is "cruel and unusual," see Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9 (1992), whether in the execution of the mentally retarded, see Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, ___, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2247 (2002), or the execution of juvenile offenders, see In re Stanford, 123 S.Ct. 472, 474 (2002) (Stevens, J., dissenting from the denial of an application for an original writ of habeas corpus). This broader long-term

[3] Alexander Hamilton was admirably cognizant of the danger of relying on temporary political whimsy:

> This independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humors which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjectures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information, and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency, in the meantime, to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community.

social conscience, however, is a matter far different from responding to particular immediate political pressures. We may not—we must not—allow public sentiment or outcry to guide our decisions. It is particularly important that we understand the nature of our obligations and the strength of our constitutional principles in times of national crisis; it is then that our freedoms and our liberties are in the greatest peril. Any suggestion, whenever or wherever made, that federal judges should be encouraged by the approval of the majority or deterred by popular disfavor is fundamentally inconsistent with the Constitution and must be firmly rejected.

REV_00164785

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge, with whom KLEINFELD, GOULD, TALLMAN, RAWLINSON, and CLIFTON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

Last June, a two-judge majority of a three-judge panel of this court ruled that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional simply because of the presence of two offending words: "under God." It was an exercise in judicial legerdemain which, not surprisingly, produced a public outcry across the nation. Since that time we, as a court, have had the opportunity to order reconsideration of that decision en banc, yet a majority of the 24 active judges eligible to vote has decided not to do so. While there are, no doubt, varied and plausible reasons why this result occurred, I respectfully conclude that our court has made a serious mistake and thus must dissent from its order denying reconsideration.

I

While I cannot say that a randomly selected 11-judge panel would have ruled differently, I believe that neither the June 2002 version, Newdow v. United States Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Newdow I"), nor today's slightly revised version, ___ F.3d ___ ("Newdow II") to essentially the same effect, is defensible. We should have reheard Newdow I en banc, not because it was controversial, but because it was wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.[1] We should have given 11 judges a chance to determine whether the two-judge majority opinion truly reflects the law of the Ninth Circuit.[2] Reciting the Pledge of Allegiance cannot possibly be an "establishment of religion" under any reasonable interpretation of the Constitution.[3]

REV_00164786

Perhaps in an effort to avoid ultimate Supreme Court review, Newdow II which replaces it, avoids expressly reaching the technical question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. Fundamentally, however, the amended decision is every bit as bold as its predecessor. It bans

[1] Judge Reinhardt's protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, I, too, believe that "[o]ur judicial charge is to stand above the inflamed passions of the public." Dazo v. Globe Airport Sec. Serv., 295 F.3d 934, 943 (9th Cir. 2002) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring and dissenting). My disagreement with the panel majority has nothing to do with bending to the will of an outraged populace, and everything to do with the fact that Judge Goodwin and Judge Reinhardt misinterpret the Constitution and 40 years of Supreme Court precedent. That most people understand this makes the decision no less wrong. It doesn't take an Article III judge to recognize that the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school does not violate the First Amendment.

[2] This case presents the classic situation required for our court to rehear a case en banc. En banc consideration would have allowed us to correct the error of a prior panel's decision with respect to the Pledge and resolve a constitutional question of exceptional importance that affects the lives of millions of school children who reside within the geographical boundaries of the Ninth Circuit. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a). The exceptional importance of this case reinforces the need for correction of the panel's mistaken view of our Constitution.

[3] U.S. Const. Amend. I. ("Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.") (emphasis added).

the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in the public schools of the nine western states thereby directly affecting over 9.6 million students,[4] necessarily implies that both an Act of Congress[5] and a California law[6] are unconstitutional, clearly conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Cmty. Consol. Sch. Dist. 21 of Wheeling Township, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), and threatens cash-strapped school districts and underpaid teachers with the specter of civil actions for money damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Newdow I, the subject of our en banc vote, no longer exists; it was withdrawn after the en banc call failed. The panel majority has evolved to this extent: in Newdow I the Pledge was unconstitutional for everybody; in Newdow II the Pledge is only unconstitutional for public school children and teachers. The remainder of this dissent is directed entirely to Newdow II, which, as shall be demonstrated, differs little from Newdow I in its central holding. With grim insistence, the majority in Newdow II continues to stand by its original error—that voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school violates the Establishment Clause because, according to the two-judge panel majority, it is "a religious act." Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Common sense would seem to dictate otherwise, as the public and political reaction should by now have made clear. If reciting the Pledge is truly "a religious act" in violation of the Establishment Clause, then so is the recitation of the Constitution[7] itself, the Declaration of Independence,[8] the Gettysburg Address,[9] the National Motto,[10] or the singing of the National Anthem.[11] Such an assertion would make hypocrites out of the Founders, and would have the effect of

[7] U.S. Const. Art. VII. ("Year of our Lord") (emphasis added).

[8] The Declaration of Independence contains multiple references to God. The founders claimed the right to "dissolve the political bands" based on "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God." The most famous passage, of course, is that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." Subsequently, the signatories "appeal[ ] to the Supreme Judge of the world to rectify their intentions."

[9] On November 19, 1863, President Lincoln declared "that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that Government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

[11] See 36 U.S.C. § 301(a) ("The composition consisting of the words and music known as the Star-Spangled Banner is the national anthem."). In fact, the Anthem is much more explicitly religious in content than the Pledge, and much more than a 'mere' profession of the composer's faith in a Supreme Being, as the majority would have it. See Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Consider the following passage from the fourth stanza: "Blest with victory and peace, may the heaven-rescued land, Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation. Then conquer we must, when our cause is just, And this be our motto: 'In God is our trust.' "(emphasis added).

driving any and all references to our religious heritage out of our schools, and eventually out of our public life.

II

The Newdow II majority's primary legal argument is that the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992), a school prayer case, controls the outcome of this case. In fact, rather than merely following Lee and its predecessors, the two-judge panel majority makes a radical departure from Lee and the cases it purports to apply. To understand why this is so, an examination of the Supreme Court's school prayer decisions which culminate in Lee is in order.

The fountainhead of all school prayer cases is Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962). In Engel the Court considered a school policy whereby children were directed to say aloud a prayer composed by state officials. The Court found that this practice was inconsistent with the Establishment Clause, reasoning that "[the] program of daily classroom invocation of God's blessings as prescribed in the Regents' prayer is a religious activity. It is a solemn avowal of divine faith and supplication for the blessings of the Almighty. The nature of such a prayer has always been religious." Id. at 424-25. The Court concluded by stating that the state should leave prayer, "that purely religious function, to the people themselves." Id. at 435. In a footnote, it reasoned as follows:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to > express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21. The Court drew an explicit distinction between patriotic invocations of God on the one hand, and prayer, an "unquestioned religious exercise," on the other. Concurring, Justice Douglas wrote that the narrow question presented was whether the state "oversteps the bounds when it finances a religious exercise." Id. at 439 (Douglas, J., concurring). Justice Douglas noted that the Pledge of Allegiance, "like . . . prayer, recognizes the existence of a Supreme Being." Id. at 440 n.5. However, he noted that the House Report recommending the addition of the words "under God" to the Pledge stated that those words "in no way run contrary to the First Amendment but recognize 'only the guidance of God in our national affairs.'" Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3).

The following year, the Supreme Court decided Abington School Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963). In that case, the Court considered the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania statute requiring that "[a]t least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read, without comment, at the opening of each public school on each school day." Id. at 205. The practice in public schools

was for a teacher or student volunteer to read the required Bible verses each morning. This in turn was followed by a recitation of the Lord's prayer. Finally, the class would recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Id. at 207-08. The Court struck down the Bible reading and the practice of reciting the Lord's prayer as a state prescribed "religious ceremony," id. at 223, but said nothing about the practice of reciting the Pledge.

As in Engel, the Court took pains to point to the character of the exercises it found wanting. The Court reasoned that "reading . . . the verses . . . possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance. The devotional and religious nature of the morning exercises is made all the more apparent by the fact that the Bible reading is followed immediately by a recital in unison by the pupils of the Lord's prayer." Id. at 210. "The pervading religious character of the ceremony," wrote Justice Clark, "cannot be gainsaid," and led to the conclusion that the exercises violated the Establishment Clause. Id. at 224.

The concurring opinions in Schempp were all to the same effect. Justice Douglas agreed with the majority's conclusion that the practices at issue violated the Establishment Clause because "the State is conducting a religious exercise." Id. at 229 (Douglas, J., concurring). In a lengthy concurrence, Justice Brennan wrote that "[t]he religious nature of the exercises here challenged seems plain." Id. at 266 (Brennan, J., concurring). After surveying the history of devotional exercises in American public schools, Justice Brennan stated that "the panorama of history permits no other conclusion than that daily prayers and Bible readings in the public schools have always been designed to be, and have been regarded as, essentially religious exercises." Id. at 277-78. For Justice Brennan, "religious exercises in the public schools present a unique problem" but "not every involvement of religion in public life violates the Establishment Clause." Id. at 294. He warned that "[a]ny attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers." Id. at 301. Specifically, he wrote that "[t]he reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance . . . may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact." Id. at 304.

Justice Goldberg also wrote separately, stating that "the clearly religious practices presented in these cases are . . . wholly compelling." Id. at 305 (Goldberg, J., concurring). He reasoned that "[t]he pervasive religiosity and direct governmental involvement inhering in the prescription of prayer and Bible reading in the public schools . . . cannot realistically be termed simply accommodation." Id. at 307. Like Justice Brennan, Justice Goldberg cautioned that the decision "does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause." Id. at 307-08. He then quoted in full the passage from Engel which drew a distinction between patriotic invocations of God, and unquestioned religious exercises that give rise to Establishment Clause violations. Id.

3

The next case in this line is Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38 (1985). That case considered the constitutionality of an Alabama statute authorizing a 1-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40. The Court found that "[t]he wholly religious character" of the challenged law was "plainly evident from its text." Id. at 58. The legislature's one and only purpose in enacting the law was "to return prayer to the public schools." Id. at 59-60. Justice Powell's separate concurrence was "prompted by Alabama's persistence in attempting to institute state-sponsored prayer in the public schools." Id. at 62 (Powell, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote separately to suggest that moment-of-silence statutes were not "a religious exercise," and therefore were constitutional. Id. at 72 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote further that "the words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion with 'the legitimate secular purposes of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future.'" Id. at 78 n.5 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring)) (alterations in original). In contrast, the Alabama statute at issue was very different from the Pledge—the state had "intentionally crossed the line [by] affirmatively endorsing the particular religious practice of prayer." Id. at 84.

4

Finally, there is the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman. The issue presented was "whether including clerical members who offer prayers as part of the official school graduation ceremony" is consistent with the Establishment Clause. 505 U.S. at 580. The graduating students entered as a group in a processional, after which "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers." Id. at 583. Justice Kennedy wrote that "the significance of the prayers lies . . . at the heart of [the] case." Id. He framed the inquiry as follows:

> These dominant facts mark and control the confines of our decision: State officials direct the performance of a formal religious exercise at promotional and graduation ceremonies for secondary schools. Even for those students who object to the religious exercise their attendance and participation in the state-sponsored religious activity are in a fair and real sense obligatory, though the school district does not require attendance as a condition for receipt of the diploma.

Id. at 586.

The Court in Lee concluded that Engel and its progeny controlled the outcome, writing that "[c]onducting this formal religious observance conflicts with settled rules pertaining to prayer exercises for students." Id. at 587. As in Engel, Schempp, and Wallace, the crucial factor was the nature of the exercise in which the students were asked to participate. Time and again the Court went out of its way to stress the nature of the exercise, writing that prayer was "an overt religious exercise," id. at 588, and that "prayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion." Id. at 592. The practice was unconstitutional because "the State has in every practical sense compelled attendance and participation in an explicit religious exercise at an event of singular importance to every student." Id. at 598. Just like the decisions in Engel and Schempp, the Court in Lee took pains to stress the confines of its holding, concluding that "[w]e do not hold that every state action implicating religion is invalid if one or a few citizens find it offensive," id. at 597, and that "[a] relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion from every aspect of public life could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution." Id. at 598.

B

Two fundamental principles may therefore be derived from the school prayer cases culminating in Lee.

1

Formal religious observances are prohibited in public schools because of the danger that they may effect an establishment of religion. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 424-25 ("[D]aily classroom invocation of God's blessings . . . is a religious activity."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 (Bible reading followed by the Lord's prayer "possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (Prayer is of a "wholly religious character."); Lee, 505 U.S. at 586 (Prayer written by state officials constitutes a "formal religious exercise"). In each of these cases, the Court took pains to stress that not every reference to God in public schools was prohibited. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n.21 ("patriotic or ceremonial occasions" which contain "references to the Deity" bear "no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise" of prayer); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 301 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("the words 'under God' in the Pledge" are not unconstitutional); Lee, 505 U.S. at 598 ("A relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion . . . could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution.").

2

Once it is established that the state is sanctioning a formal religious exercise, then the fact that the students are not required to participate in the formal devotional exercises does not prevent those exercises from being unconstitutional. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 431 ("[T]he indirect coercive pressure upon religious minorities to conform" to the prayer exercises "is plain."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210-11 ("The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 57 (State-sanctioned voluntary prayer in public schools violates Establishment Clause); Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."). To be sure, Lee is the Court's most elaborate pronouncement with respect to indirect coercion. It identifies the circumstances in which indirect coercion may be said to be unconstitutional: when the government directs "the performance of a formal religious exercise" in such a way as to oblige the participation of objectors. Lee, 505 U.S. at 586.

III

No court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances. But Newdow II finesses all that, and the sleight of hand the majority uses becomes immediately apparent: obfuscate the nature of the exercise at issue and emphasize indirect coercion. The panel majority simply ignores, because they are inconvenient, the "dominant and controlling facts" in Lee and its predecessors: that Establishment Clause violations in public schools are triggered only when "State officials direct the performance of a *formal religious exercis*e." 505 U.S. at 586 (emphasis added); see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 ("devotional . . . religious observance" prohibited); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (activities of a "wholly religious character" prohibited).

To avoid a flagrant inconsistency with Lee, and with 40 years of Supreme Court precedent, the two-judge panel majority must first examine whether the act of pledging allegiance is "a religious act." As the Seventh Circuit in Sherman framed it, "Does 'under God' make the Pledge a prayer, whose recitation violates the establishment clause of the first amendment?" 980 F.2d at 445. That court answered the question in the negative; the Newdow II majority, in conclusory fashion, simply assumes the affirmative. ___ F.3d at ___ ("[W]e conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.") (emphasis added).

This assertion belies common sense. Most assuredly, to pledge allegiance to flag and country is a patriotic act. After the public and political reaction last summer, it is difficult to believe that anyone can continue to think otherwise. The fact the Pledge is infused with an undoubtedly religious reference does not change the nature of the act itself. The California statute under which the school district promulgated its policy is entitled "[d]aily performance of patriotic exercises in public schools." Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (emphasis added). The Pledge is recited not just in schools but also at various official events and public ceremonies, including perhaps the most patriotic of occasions—naturalization ceremonies. Generally, the Pledge is recited while standing, facing a United States flag, with the right hand held over the heart, much like the National Anthem. See 4 U.S.C. § 4 (articulating proper procedure for reciting Pledge); 36 U.S.C. § 301 (during anthem "all present . . . should stand at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart."). Whatever one thinks of the normative values underlying the Pledge, they are unquestionably patriotic in nature. Indeed, it is precisely because of the Pledge's explicitly patriotic nature that in 1943 the Supreme Court ruled that no one is required to Pledge allegiance against their will. West Virginia v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

In contrast, to pray is to speak directly to God, with bowed head, on bended knee, or some other reverent disposition. It is a solemn and humble approach to the divine in order to give thanks, to petition, to praise, to supplicate, or to ask for guidance. Communal prayer, by definition, is an even more forceful and profound experience for those present. Little wonder that the Supreme Court has recognized the "unique problem" and "particular risk" posed by school prayer to non-participating students. Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 (Brennan,

J., concurring) (noting that prayers in public schools "present a unique problem").

Not only does the panel majority's conclusion that pledging allegiance is "a religious act" defy common sense, it contradicts our 200-year history and tradition of patriotic references to God. The Supreme Court has insisted that interpretations of the Establishment Clause must comport "with what history reveals was the contemporaneous understanding of its guarantees." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 673; see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 ("[T]he line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.") (Brennan, J., concurring).

The majority's unpersuasive and problematic disclaimers notwithstanding, Newdow II precipitates a "war with our national tradition," McCollum v. Bd. of Ed., 333 U.S. 203, 211 (1948), and as Judge Fernandez so eloquently points out in dissent, only the purest exercise in sophistry could save multiple references to our religious heritage in our national life from Newdow II's axe. Of course, the Constitution itself explicitly mentions God, as does the Declaration of Independence, the document which marked us as a separate people. The Gettysburg Address, inconveniently for the majority, contains the same precise phrase—"under God"—found to constitute an Establishment Clause violation in the Pledge.[12] After Newdow II, are we to suppose that, were a school to permit—not require—the recitation of the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, or the Gettysburg Address in public schools, that too would violate the Constitution? Were the "founders of the United States . . . unable to understand their own handiwork[?]" Sherman, 980 F.2d at 445. Indeed, the recitation of the Declaration of Independence would seem to be the better candidate for the chopping block than the Pledge, since the Pledge does not require anyone to acknowledge the personal relationship with God to which the Declaration speaks.[13] So too with our National Anthem and our National Motto.

Our national celebration of Thanksgiving dates back to President Washington, which Congress stated was "to be observed by acknowledgment with grateful hearts, the many and signal favours of Almighty God." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675 n.2. Congress made Thanksgiving a permanent holiday in 1941,[14] and Christmas has been a national holiday since 1894.[15] Are pere [sic] Newdow's constitutional rights violated when his daughter is told not to attend school on Thanksgiving? On Christmas day? Must school outings to federal courts be prohibited, lest the children be unduly influenced by the dreaded intonation "God save these United States and this honorable Court"?[16] A theory of the Establishment Clause that would have the effect of driving out of our public life the multiple references to the Divine that run through our laws, our rituals, and our ceremonies is no theory at all.

As if all of this were not enough, the Supreme Court has gone out of its way to make it plain that the Pledge itself passes constitutional muster. In two of the school prayer cases, the Court noted without so much as a hint of disapproval the fact that the students, in addition to being subject to formal religious observances, also recited the Pledge of Allegiance. See Schempp, 374 U.S. at 207-08 (noting that the practice in public schools consisted of Bible reading and recitation of the Lord's prayer, followed by recitation of the Pledge); Lee, 505 U.S. at 583 (noting that "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers.").

Several other Supreme Court cases contain explicit references to the constitutionality of the Pledge. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 440 n.5 (Douglas, J., concurring) ("[The Pledge] in no way run[s] contrary to the First Amendment") (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("[R]eciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincolns' Gettysburg Address."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("[T]he words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion."); Co. of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (Blackmun, J., for the court) ("Our previous opinions have considered in dicta . . . the pledge, characterizing [it] as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief."); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668,

REV_00164802

676 (1984) (Burger, C.J., for the court) ("Other examples of reference to our religious heritage are found . . . in the language 'One nation under God,' as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag. That pledge is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year.").

The panel majority's answer to these myriad statements from our high court is summarily to dismiss them as dicta. However, "dicta of the Supreme Court have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold. We should not blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." Zal v. Steppe, 968 F.2d 924, 935 (9th Cir. 1992) (Noonan, J., concurring and dissenting in part); see also United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[W]e treat Supreme Court dicta with due deference.").[17]

---

[17] Other courts have, unremarkably enough, not been so flippant when it comes to considering consistent Supreme Court dicta on this issue. See Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 ("[A]n inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so."); Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214, 217 (10th Cir. 1996) ("[T]his court considers itself bound by Supreme Court dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when the dicta is recent and not enfeebled by later statements."); ACLU v. Capital Square Review, 243 F.3d 289, 301 n.10 (6th Cir. 2001) ("We should . . . be amazed if the Supreme Court were now to question the constitutionality of the [revised Pledge]"). Indeed, the unanimity on this point relative to Newdow II is striking.

C

The Newdow II majority, then, finds itself caught between a rock and a hard place—the recitation of the Pledge is not a formal religious act, while patriotic invocations of God do not give rise to Establishment Clause violations. It nonetheless manages to skirt these obstacles to reach its indirect coercion analysis. Newdow II's conclusory foray into the social sciences is a case study, an advertisement, for why it is that the Supreme Court has anchored coercion analysis only to those situations where "formal religious exercises" take place in our public schools. The panel majority seeks to protect dissenters at the risk of courting some unpopularity, but this is not the test. "[O]ffense alone does not in every case show a violation . . . . and sometimes to endure social isolation or even anger may be the price of conscience or nonconformity." Lee, 505 U.S. at 597-98. The Newdow II majority's expansive application of the coercion test is ill-suited to a society as diverse as ours, since almost every cultural practice is bound to offend someone's sensibilities. In affording Michael Newdow the right to impose his views on others, Newdow II affords him a right to be fastidiously intolerant and self-indulgent. In granting him this supposed right, moreover, the two-judge panel majority has not eliminated feelings of discomfort and isolation, it has simply shifted them from one group to another.

Newdow II's psychological ipse dixit is also delivered without reference or regard to our collective experience in the half-century since the passage of the offending statute. In that time, generations of Americans have grown up reciting the Pledge, religious tolerance and diversity has flourished in this country, and we have become a beacon for other nations in this regard. As

Judge Fernandez observes, "it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954." Newdow II ___ F.3d at ___ n.4 (Fernandez, J., dissenting).

IV

In fairness to the Newdow II panel majority, its professed "neutrality" does have some plausible basis in the case law of the Supreme Court, which has undoubtedly constructed a "fractured and incoherent doctrinal path" in the Establishment Clause area, broadly speaking. Sep. of Church and State Comm. v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring). Indeed, its Establishment Clause cases sometimes "more closely resemble ad hoc Delphic pronouncements than models of guiding legal principles." Ingebretsen v. Jackson Pub. Sch. Dist., 88 F.3d 274, 282 (5th Cir. 1996) (Jones, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Supreme Court Justices themselves have recognized that if some of its reasoning "were to be applied logically, it would lead to the elimination" of many cherished, long-standing practices. Co. of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., dissenting).

With respect to the issue presented in this case, however, the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion. Even Justice Brennan, that most stalwart of separationists, recognized that some official acknowledgment of God is appropriate "if the government is not to adopt a stilted indifference to the religious life of the people." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 714 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The decision reached in Newdow II does precisely that: it adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people.

But Newdow II goes further, and confers a favored status on atheism in our public life. In a society with a pervasive public sector, our public schools are a most important means for transmitting ideas and values to future generations. The silence the majority commands is not neutral—it itself conveys a powerful message, and creates a distorted impression about the place of religion in our national life. The absolute prohibition on any mention of God in our schools creates a bias against religion. The panel majority cannot credibly advance the notion that Newdow II is neutral with respect to belief versus non-belief; it affirmatively favors the latter to the former. One wonders, then, does atheism become the default religion protected by the Establishment Clause?

In short, a lack of clarity in the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause cases generally does not help to explain or to justify the panel majority's decision with respect to this particular issue. Put simply, the panel was asked to decide whether the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools amounted to a government establishment of religion. The answer to that question is clearly, obviously, no. We made a grave error in failing to take Newdow I en banc, and we have failed to correct that error ourselves. Now we have Newdow II. Perhaps the Supreme Court will have the opportunity to correct the error for us. I must respectfully dissent from the order denying reconsideration en banc.

McKEOWN, Circuit Judge, with whom HAWKINS, THOMAS, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

The recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance by school children presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance that merits reconsideration by the en banc court. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2) (en banc hearing appropriate when "the proceeding involves a question of exceptional importance"). Although not every case of exceptional importance can or should be reheard en banc, this is a case that should be reheard. I respectfully dissent from the court's decision to deny rehearing en banc.

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Order by Judge GOODWIN; Concurrence by Judge FERNANDEZ.

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge.

After we issued our June 26, 2002 opinion in this case, Sandra Banning, the mother of Michael Newdow's daughter, filed a motion for leave to intervene, in order to, inter alia, challenge Newdow's standing to maintain this action. Banning attached to her motion as an exhibit a copy of a February 6, 2002 California Superior Court custody order. That order awarded Banning "sole legal custody" of the child. We have carefully reconsidered the question of Newdow's Article III standing in light of this custody order and affirm our holding that he has standing as a parent to continue to pursue his claim in federal court.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

When this case first reached us from the district court, no legal custody question or order had been disclosed to the federal courts. Newdow had alleged in the district court that he was the father, and had custody of the minor child. The record now indicates that Newdow and Banning formed a family consisting of an unmarried man, an unmarried woman, and their biological minor child, who lived together part of the time and lived in separate homes in Florida and California, from time to time, with informal visiting arrangements. This informal arrangement apparently was not subject to any custody order until February 6, 2002, after Newdow had appealed from the dismissal of the action he had commenced in federal district court to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the practice of reciting the pledge of allegiance in the public elementary school his child attends.

On February 6, the California Superior Court entered an order containing the following language:

> The child's mother, Ms. Banning, to have sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and > welfare of [the child]. Specifically, both parents shall consult with one another on substantial decisions relating to non-emergency major medical care, dental, optometry, psychological and educational needs of [the child]. If mutual agreement is not reached in the above, then Ms. Banning may exercise legal control of [the child] that is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order. The father shall have access to all of [the child's] school and medical records.

Thereafter, Newdow, alleging "changed circumstances," filed a motion in the Superior Court for a modification of the custody order, seeking, inter alia, joint legal custody with Banning of their child.

On September 25, 2002, the Superior Court (Judge Mize) entered an in personam order enjoining Newdow from pleading his daughter as an unnamed party or representing her as a "next friend" in this lawsuit. The United States promptly filed a motion, which we have granted, to enlarge the record to include the state court transcript of the September 25 hearing before Judge Mize. That transcript contemplates a full trial in the future on Newdow's motion for modification of the February 6 custody order.

Judge Mize appropriately reserved to this court, however, the question of Newdow's Article III standing in federal court. Newdow no longer claims to represent his child, but asserts that he retains standing in his own right as a parent to challenge alleged unconstitutional state action affecting his child while she attends public school in the Elk Grove Unified School District (EGUSD).

REV_00164810

II. DISCUSSION

Our original opinion in this case holds that a parent has Article III standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds state action affecting his child in public school. See Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc) and Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985)). Banning's motion for leave to intervene presents a question of first impression in this Circuit which we are required to consider, even though raised for the first time on appeal. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he jurisdictional issue of standing can be raised at any time."). Does the grant of sole legal custody to Banning deprive Newdow, as a noncustodial parent, of Article III standing to object to unconstitutional government action affecting his child?

A Seventh Circuit decision, Navin v. Park Ridge School District 64, 270 F.3d 1147 (7th Cir. 2001) (per curiam), addresses a noncustodial parent's standing to challenge a school's educational plan for his disabled child under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Though not controlling, the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Navin illustrates a useful method of analysis for the standing question presented here. The divorce decree in that case had granted the mother sole legal custody of her son. The Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act provided that the legal custodian may determine, absent an agreement by the parties to the contrary, "the child's uprising, including but not limited to, his education, health care and religious training." See 750 IL CH § 5/608(a). Contending that tutoring for his dyslexic son was being provided by a "crossing guard supervisor with no skill (or at least no certification) in educating dyslexic youths," the father in Navin had asked for an administrative hearing under the IDEA and filed suit in federal court when the hearing officer terminated the proceeding without addressing the merits. 270 F.3d at 1148. The district court dismissed the father's suit, holding that as a noncustodial parent, he had no standing to challenge action affecting his child in school. Id.

The Seventh Circuit held, however, that noncustodial parents do not automatically lack standing under the IDEA. Id. at 1149. Instead, the court of appeals explained that whether the noncustodial father in Navin had standing depended on the parental rights granted or reserved to him in the divorce decree in light of the mother's assertion of her rights so granted or reserved:

> If the decree had wiped out all of [the noncustodial father's] parental rights, it would have left him with no claim under the IDEA. But this is not what the divorce decree does. The district court did not analyze its language, but it is in the record and shows that [the noncustodial father] retains some important rights, including the opportunity to be informed about and remain involved in the education of his son. If [the father and mother] disagree about educational decisions, then [the mother's] view prevails—unless under state law the school district's view prevails over either parent's wishes, and in that event [the father's] rights under the decree to influence the school's choices are even more important.

270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit remanded the case to the district court, instructing it to "decide whether [the father's] claims [were] incompatible, not with the divorce decree itself, but with [the mother's] use of her rights under the decree." Navin, 270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (emphasis in original).

Navin's general approach to the problem of noncustodial parental standing is sound. We hold that a noncustodial parent, who retains some parental rights, may have standing to maintain a federal lawsuit to the extent that his assertion of retained parental rights under state law is not legally incompatible with the custodial parent's assertion of rights. This holding assumes, of course, that the noncustodial parent can establish an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to the challenged action, and it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Friends of the Earth v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000). Having already held that Newdow satisfies those Article III requirements, see Newdow, 292 F.3d at 603-05, we now turn to the question of whether he retains standing despite Banning's opposition as sole legal custodian to his maintaining this lawsuit.[1]

The February 6 custody order governing Banning's and Newdow's respective parental decision-making power remains operative and plainly does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights. Rather, that order establishes that Newdow retains rights with respect to his daughter's education and general welfare. He has

[1] It is unclear to us exactly what relief Banning seeks. In her motion papers, at times Banning appears to object only to Newdow's appearance as "next friend" of their daughter. At other places, she also seems to object to Newdow's standing in his own right.

the right to consult with Banning regarding substantial non-emergency decisions (with Banning having ultimate decision-making power), as well as the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records regardless of Banning's position.

California state courts have recognized that noncustodial parents maintain the right to expose and educate their children to their individual religious views, even if those religious views contradict those of the custodial parent or offend her.[2] See Murga v. Petersen, 103 Cal. App.3d 498, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (1980). As the Murga court noted, it was following the "majority of American jurisdictions" in refusing to place restraints on a noncustodial parent who wished to expose his children to his particular religious views, absent a clear, affirmative showing that these religious activities would be harmful to the children. Id. at 504-05, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (emphasis added). The principle of nonintervention, the court noted, "reflects the protected nature of religious activities and expressions of belief, as well as the proscription against preferring one religion over another." Id. at 505, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79. It is not only the court that must not interfere; even more so, the state and federal government may not seek to indoctrinate the child with their religious views, particularly over the objection of either parent.

Murga was the basis for a later California state court decision, In re Mentry, 142 Cal. App.3d 260, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (1983), that reversed a restraining order against a noncustodial father that forbade him from

[2] As the Supreme Court has acknowledged, recognized religions exist that do not teach a belief in God, e.g., secular humanism. Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 495 n.11, 81 S. Ct. 1680, 6 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1961).

engaging his children in any religious activities other than those approved by the custodial mother. The Mentry court stated that "the concept of family privacy embodies not simply a policy of minimum state intervention but also a presumption of parental autonomy. Many of the purposes served by this presumption become more important after dissolution [of the marriage or relationship] than they were before." 142 Cal. App.3d at 268, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (emphasis added). The type of "minimum state intervention" discussed in Mentry surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent. We conclude that Newdow retains sufficient parental rights to support his standing here.

The next question, then, is whether Banning's status as sole legal custodian empowers her to employ state law to defeat Newdow's standing. "'Sole legal custody' means that one parent shall have the right and the responsibility to make the decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of a child." Cal. Fam. Code § 3006. Thus, Newdow cannot disrupt Banning's choice of schools for their daughter. And, as Judge Mize's September 25 order makes clear, Newdow cannot name his daughter as a party to a lawsuit against Banning's wishes.

Judge Mize, however, appropriately declined to rule on whether Newdow has standing in his own right as a parent to maintain this case in federal court. We hold that Banning has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action. Newdow's assertion of his retained parental rights in this case, therefore, simply cannot be legally incompatible with any power Banning may hold pursuant to the custody order. Further, Ms. Banning may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights or waive Newdow's right to enforce his constitutional interests. Neither Banning's personal opinion regarding the Constitution nor her state court award of legal custody is determinative of Newdow's legal rights to protect his own interests.

When school teachers lead a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance according to school district policy, they present a message by the state endorsing not just religion generally, but a monotheistic religion organized "under God." While Newdow cannot expect the entire community surrounding his daughter to participate in, let alone agree with, his choice of atheism and his daughter's exposure to his views, he can expect to be free from the government's endorsing a particular view of religion and unconstitutionally indoctrinating his impressionable young daughter on a daily basis in that official view. The pledge to a nation "under God," with its imprimatur of governmental sanction, provides the message to Newdow's young daughter not only that non-believers, or believers in non-Judeo-Christian religions, are outsiders, but more specifically that her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom. Just as the foundational principle of the Freedom of Speech Clause in the First Amendment tolerates unpopular and even despised ideas, see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S. Ct. 1780, 29 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1971), so does the principle underlying the Establishment Clause protect unpopular and despised minorities from government sponsored religious orthodoxy tied to government services. See Santa Fe Independent Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L. Ed. 2d 295 (2000); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1992). Accordingly, we affirm Newdow's standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the EGUSD's practice of requiring his daughter to attend daily recitations of the 1954 version of the Pledge of Allegiance.

Banning's motion for leave to intervene is DENIED because she has no protectable interest at stake in this action.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the order, but write separately to emphasize that in this order we decide that Newdow's legal status under California law vis-à-vis his daughter does not deprive him of standing. Despite the order's allusions to the merits of the controversy, we decide nothing but that narrow standing issue.[1] Leastwise, I join nothing other than the narrow decision that the orders of the California courts have not deprived Newdow of standing.

consents to the latter use of its filing. Because of the respect that we owe to and have for the Senate, we are constrained to explain the reasons for our denial of intervention.

Initially, of course, we lay aside the usual intervention rule. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). This case is more in line with Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1), which allows intervention as of right "when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene." There is a special statute that applies to this motion. As relevant here, the statute first provides that the Senate Legal Counsel shall intervene or appear as amicus "when directed to do so by a resolution adopted by the Senate." 2 U.S.C. § 288b(c). There was a resolution here. See Senate Resolution 292, 107th Cong., 2d Sess. (2002), 148 Cong. Rec. S6105-06 (2002). The statute goes on to provide that Counsel shall intervene upon appropriate direction when "the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution of the United States are placed in issue," but should only do so if there is standing. See 2 U.S.C. § 288e(a). It then states:

> Permission to intervene as a party or to appear as amicus curiae under § 288e of this title shall be of right and may be denied by a court only upon an express finding that such intervention or appearance is untimely and would significantly delay the pending action or that standing to intervene has not been established under section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States.

2 U.S.C. § 288*l* (a).

Because the Senate waited until we had already ruled on the merits of this case on appeal, it would be possible, even accurate, to hold that the attempt to intervene is untimely. However, under the circumstances we are unable to hold that the proposed intervention to seek rehearing or en banc review would "significantly delay" the action. Especially is that true when, as here, some of the current parties to the action have themselves already sought both types of review. We must, therefore, turn our attention to the second exception in § 288*l*(a)—does the Senate have constitutional standing? To put it more precisely: does the Senate have constitutional standing to intervene in every case where the constitutionality of a United States statute is challenged? Because we determine that the answer to that question is no and because there is nothing about the statute at hand that would distinguish it from other statutes, the Senate does not have standing in this case.

Let it first be said that the issue is not whether the United States has standing to appear in support of the constitutionality of the statute in question. Nobody doubts that it does. See 28 U.S.C. § 2403(a). In fact, in this case it did appear for "the Congress of the United States; the United States of America; and William J. Clinton, President of the United States."[2] The question is whether the Senate, as a separate part of the government, has standing to intervene to support statutes on its own behalf, and not really as a representative of the United States itself. We need not, and do not, decide whether Congress could designate the Senate Legal Counsel, upon a separate resolution of the Senate alone, to appear as the defender of all statutes on behalf of the United States itself. A law of that type might well have its own constitutional problems; it might even trench on the prerogatives of the executive branch of the United States, which has the authority to execute the laws of this country. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. At any rate, that has not occurred here. As already stated, a separate statute confers that authority upon the executive branch, and here the Senate seeks to appear to represent itself alone.

As the intervention statute at hand expressly recognizes, the Senate must show that it does have constitutional standing to intervene. That means at the very least that it must show that it has "suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is . . . concrete and particularized." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L. Ed.2d 351 (1992); see also Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818-20, 117 S. Ct. 2312, 2317-18, 138 L. Ed. 2d 849 (1997). That concrete and particularized harm is lacking in this case because no harm beyond frustration of a general desire to see the law enforced as written has been shown here.

In so stating, we are aware that there have been a number of cases wherein Senate intervention has been allowed without any particular remark or detailed consideration. See, e.g., INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 930 n.5, 103 S. Ct. 2764, 2773 n.5, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1983); Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 893 F.2d 205, 206 (9th Cir. 1990) (en banc); In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133, 1135 (9th Cir. 1987); see also Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 106 S. Ct. 3181, 92 L.

Ed. 2d 583 (1986). But those cases are not really apposite because they were of a character that directly (particularly) implicated the authority of Congress within our scheme of government, and the scope and reach of its ability to allocate power among the three branches. Thus, Chadha, 462 U.S. at 956-58, 103 S. Ct. at 2787, is a case that dealt with individual houses of Congress assuming the authority to review and veto executive decisions regarding the deportation of aliens. It, thus, implicated separation of powers doctrine and the whole scheme of our government. Lear Siegler dealt with whether Congress could allocate to a legislative agent—The Comptroller General—the authority to delay the procurement actions of the executive branch of the government. See Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1105-06 (9th Cir. 1988), vacated on other grounds, Lear Siegler, 893 F.2d at 208; see also Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 717, 106 S. Ct. at 3183. Finally, in Benny, 812 F.2d at 1141-42, the issue was whether Congress had the authority to prospectively extend the term of office of bankruptcy judges. In other words, in each of these cases the courts were dealing with a statute addressing legislative action regarding allocation of authority within the government, as opposed to action applying that authority to the behavior of the citizenry in general. The issues were the kind that intimately affected Congress's own place within our constitutional scheme.

More closely on point are cases which speak to the standing of legislators to bring actions, where their institutional power as members of the legislature is not being challenged. In Raines, 521 U.S. at 814-16, 117 S. Ct. at 2315-16, for example, a number of members of the Senate and House of Representatives sued pursuant to a provision of the Line Item Veto Act which declared that any member of Congress could challenge the Act. See, 2 U.S.C. § 692(a)(1). The Court declared that they had "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals . . ., the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed . . ., and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829, 117 S. Ct. at 2322. The Court did point out that they did not actually represent their separate houses of Congress and those houses actually opposed them, but did not indicate precisely how that affected their standing.[3] Id. The Court distinguished an earlier case wherein state legislators were accorded standing because their votes would have been deprived of all validity if an allegedly improper person were able to vote. See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 438, 59 S.Ct. 972, 975, 83 L. Ed. 1385 (1939). Thus, at least as to individual legislators, there is no standing unless their own institutional position, as opposed to their position as a member of the body politic, is affected.

The District of Columbia Circuit has followed the same approach. In 1977, a congressman sued the director of the Central Intelligence Agency partly on the basis that when that agency misused its budget, his vote as a congressman was impaired. See Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190, 204 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The court found that he lacked standing, and that a contrary rule would amount to giving him "a roving commission to obtain judicial relief under most circumstances." Id. at

[3] Of course, the Line Item Veto Act dealt with the allocation of power between the legislative and executive branches. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 691-692. However, the Senate was content to appear as amicus curiae. Raines, 521 U.S. at 813 n.*, 117 S. Ct. 2312.
