214. Along the way, the court noted that "his specific rights, interests and prerogatives lie in the power to make laws. As we have noted, this power has not been invaded, diminished, diluted, or injured by the challenged actions in this case." Id. at 213. A like result was reached when a member of Congress sued to prevent alleged misuse of federal funds by a national commission. See Hansen v. Nat'l Comm'n. on the Observance of Int'l Women's Year, 628 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1980). We said: "The injury alleged by appellant is an injury which he suffers along with all other citizens of the United States. He has not presented any facts which show he has sustained or is imminently in danger of sustaining an actual personal injury." Id. at 534. Thus, he had no standing. Id. And, when faced with a claim by congressmen that the military was using its budget to finance combat in other countries, despite laws prohibiting that, the Fourth Circuit had this to say: "Once a bill has become law, however, their interest is indistinguishable from that of any other citizen. They cannot claim dilution of their legislative voting power because the legislation they favored became law." Harrington v. Schlesinger, 528 F.2d 455, 459 (4th Cir. 1975). The court was no more impressed with the claim that their legislative duties would somehow be affected. See id. Other cases have sounded the same note. See, e.g., Baird v. Norton, 266 F.3d 408, 411-12 (6th Cir. 2001); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112, 112-13, 117 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012, 120 S. Ct. 1286, 146 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2000); Daughtrey v. Carter, 584 F.2d 1050, 1057-58 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Metcalf v. Nat'l Petroleum Council, 553 F.2d 176, 187-89 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

These observations also apply to the Senate as a whole, when it seeks to have a roving commission to enter every case involving the constitutionality of statutes it has enacted. In those instances, its own "powers and responsibilities" are not really under attack. Once the Senate has approved a proposed bill, the House of Representatives agrees, and the President has signed the measure, it becomes public law. A public law, after enactment, is not the Senate's any more than it is the law of any other citizen or group of citizens in the United States. It is a law of the United States of America, and the government is already represented in this case by the Attorney General. Of course, every time a statute is not followed or is declared unconstitutional, the votes of legislators are mooted and the power of the legislature is circumscribed in a sense, but that is no more than a facet of the generalized harm that occurs to the government as a whole. By the same token, the President's signing of the legislation is also nullified, judges, who might have felt otherwise, are bound by the decision, and citizens who relied upon or desired to have the law enforced are disappointed.[4] Moreover, if the separate houses of Congress have standing, a challenger of a law would have to contend with fighting the United States itself, and separately defending himself against the Senate and the House of [4] All of this is underscored by the Senate's suggestion that it should have standing because it opens its daily sessions with the Pledge of Allegiance. That, of course, is an assertion that could be made by countless other organizations, governmental and otherwise, not to mention thousands of United States citizens.

Representatives, each of which would be able to appear as a separate litigating party in the case.[5]

Therefore, the motion of the Senate to intervene is DENIED. However, if the Senate wishes to have us deem its proposed brief to be an amicus brief and to consider it on that basis, we will do that. It should inform us of its desire in that regard within 30 days after the filing of this order.

[5] In principle, he might also have to separately contend against the President, whose ability to effectively sign the law in question can be said to have been affected. We see little other than mischief arising from a system of intervention as unregulated as that. Constitutional standing doctrine is the apotropaion for that threatened malady. It must be applied here.

REV. DR. MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, PLAINTIFF

v.

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
ET AL., DEFENDANTS

[Filed: May 25, 2000]

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

On March 8, 2000, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging defendants Elk Grove School District and Sacramento City Unified School District violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment by requiring teachers [to] lead morning classes in recitation of the pledge of allegiance. Defendant school districts move to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

The only federal Court of Appeal directly to address this issue held that schools may lead the pledge of allegiance without violating the First Amendment so long as pupils are not compelled to participate, because the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs. Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District, 980 F.2d 437, 442-448 (11th Cir. 1992). While the Supreme Court has not directly addressed the issue, it has noted that its "previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto ['In God We Trust'] and the pledge [of allegiance], characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (1989); see also id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring); id. at 716-17 (Brennan, J., dissenting); School District of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 449-50 (1962) (Stewart, J., dissenting). Two Courts of Appeal have stated, also in dicta, that the pledge is not an endorsement of religion. See Chandler v. James, 180 F.3d 1254, 1262 (11th Cir. 1999); Separation of Church and State Committee v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman and the statements in dicta noted above, while not binding on this court, are persuasive and directly on point. Whether the court employs the test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-613 (1971), or the more recent endorsement test, see Allegheny, supra, 492 U.S. at 593-594, the Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. Accordingly, I recommend plaintiff's complaint be dismissed.

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, ET AL.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The amended opinion of the court of appeals on rehearing (App., infra, 1a-24a) is reported at 321 F.3d 772. The original opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 25a-58a) is reported at 292 F.3d 597, and the court's subsequent opinion on standing (App., infra, 89a-98a) is reported at 313 F.3d 500. The opinion and orders of the court denying intervention (App., infra, 99a-109a) are reported at 313 F.3d 495 and 313 F.3d 506. The order of the district court (App., infra, 110a), adopting the Findings and Recommendation of the magistrate judge that the case be dismissed (App., infra, 111a-112a), is unreported.

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its original judgment on June 26, 2002. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing on February 28, 2003. The court of appeals issued an order staying its mandate on March 4, 2003. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

No federal statute waives the sovereign immunity of the United States of America from a suit for declaratory or injunctive relief under the First Amendment, and thus the jurisdictional basis for respondent Newdow's suit against the United States is unclear.[1] However, the absence of such a waiver is without jurisdictional consequence in this case because the United States could have, and should hereby be deemed to have, intervened as of right in this action against the school district and its superintendent to defend the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance against Newdow's facial and as-applied challenges. See 28 U.S.C. 2403(a).[2]

[1] Other than a separate claim against the President in his official capacity, Newdow did not sue an officer or an agency of the United States, so his claim does not appear to fall within the scope of either Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), or the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 552. Nor is his federal constitutional claim cognizable under the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. 1346, 1402, 2671 et seq. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 477 (1994).

[2] Newdow's as-applied challenge to the recitation of the Pledge in elementary schools calls into question the federal government's practice under which the nearly 2500 military dependents attending its four schools within the Ninth Circuit are led in a voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance daily.

REV_00164840

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. * * *"

Section 4 of Title 4 of the United States Code provides that the Pledge of Allegiance to the United States Flag shall be: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

STATEMENT

1. In 1942, as part of an overall effort to "codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America," Congress enacted a Pledge of Allegiance to the United States flag. H.R. Rep. No. 2047, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942); S. Rep. No. 1477, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942). As originally enacted, the Pledge of Allegiance read: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Act of June 22, 1942, ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380.

Twelve years later, Congress amended the Pledge of Allegiance by adding the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Act of June 14, 1954, ch. 297, § 7, 68 Stat. 249. Accordingly, the Pledge now reads: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. 4.

In amending the Pledge, the Committee Reports noted that, "[f]rom the time of our earliest history our peoples and our institutions have reflected the traditional concept that our Nation was founded on a fundamental belief in God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954); see also S.

Rep. No. 1287, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954) ("Our forefathers recognized and gave voice to the fundamental truth that a government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed must look to God for divine leadership. * * * Throughout our history, the statements of our great national leaders have been filled with references to God."). Both Reports traced the numerous references to God in historical documents central to the founding and preservation of the United States, from the Mayflower Compact to the Declaration of Independence to President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the latter having employed the same reference to a "Nation[] under God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.

The Reports further explained that the amendment would highlight a foundational difference between the United States and Communist nations: "Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being" and "[u]nderlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 1-2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2. As amended, the Pledge would thus textually reject the "communis[t]" philosophy "with its attendant subservience of the individual." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2 ("The spiritual bankruptcy of the Communists is one of our strongest weapons in the struggle for men's minds and this resolution gives us a new means of using that weapon."). The House Report further noted that, through "daily recitation of the pledge in school," "the children of our land * * * will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," so that "[a]s they grow and advance in this understanding, they will assume the responsibilities of self-government equipped to carry on the traditions that have been given to us." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3.

Both the Senate and House Reports expressed the view that, under controlling precedent from this Court, the amendment "is not an act establishing a religion or one interfering with the 'free exercise' of religion." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3 (citing Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952)); see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.[3]

2. California law requires that each public elementary school in the State "conduct[] * * * appropriate patriotic exercises" at the beginning of the school day. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (West 1989). The law provides that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section." Ibid. In satisfaction of that statutory requirement, respondent Elk Grove Unified School District (Elk Grove) has adopted a policy that directs each of its elementary schools to "recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." App., infra, 27a. No child is compelled to join in reciting the Pledge. Id. at 28a.

Respondent Michael Newdow is the noncustodial father of a child enrolled in a public elementary school within the jurisdiction of respondent Elk Grove. App., infra, 2a, 90a-91a. In the school that Newdow's daughter attends, the teacher leads the students in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance daily. Id. at 3a.

The child's mother has "sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and welfare of" the child. App., infra, 90a-91a. While Newdow, who was never married to the child's mother, retains limited visitation rights, the right to access the child's school and medical records, and the right to "consult" on "substantial" decisions pertaining to the child's "educational needs," if the parents disagree, the child's mother "may exercise legal control of" the child as long as it "is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order." Id. at 91a.

In March 2000, Newdow filed suit against the President, the United States Congress, the United States of America, the State of California, and two California school districts and their superintendents, seeking a declaration that the 1954 statute adding the words "under God" to the Pledge is "facially unconstitutional" under the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment. Compl. 6, 36; App., infra, 4a-5a. He also sought injunctive relief requiring Congress and the President to remove those words from the Pledge and prohibiting California schools from leading students in reciting the Pledge. Compl. 37; App., infra, 4a-5a. The Complaint explains that Newdow's child is "an unnamed plaintiff whom he represents as 'next friend.'" Compl. 3. The Complaint asserts that the recitation of the Pledge in his child's school "results in the daily indoctrination of the Elk Grove Unified School District's students—including Plaintiff's daughter—with religious dogma," id. at 18-19, and that such actions "infringe[]" upon Newdow's "unrestricted right to inculcate in his daughter— free from governmental interference—the atheistic beliefs he finds persuasive." Id. at 20; see also id. at 36. The Complaint further asserts that Newdow's "position as the father of a child attending the State's public schools grants him standing in this matter in his own right and on behalf of his daughter." Id. at 26.

The district court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, relying on numerous decisions of this Court expressly addressing the Pledge and describing it as consistent with the Establishment Clause, as well as on a decision of the Seventh Circuit rejecting a similar challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 110a-112a (adopting magistrate judge's Findings and Recommendation, which cites County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984); School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Sherman v. Community Consol. Sch. Dist. 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993)).

3. a. A divided panel of the Ninth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. App., infra, 25a-58a. As an initial matter, all three members of the panel agreed that the President and Congress should be dismissed from the lawsuit, on the grounds that the President is not a proper defendant for challenging the constitutionality of a federal law under Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992) (plurality opinion), and that the Congress cannot be sued under the Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const. Art. I, § 6, Cl. 1. See App., infra, 29a-30a; id. at 53a (Fernandez, J., concurring and dissenting). The court also ruled that Newdow lacked standing to file suit against the Sacramento City Unified School District and its superintendent "because his daughter is not currently a student there." Id. at 32a.

The court did conclude, however, that Newdow has standing to challenge Elk Grove's policy of reciting the Pledge "because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school" in Elk Grove. App., infra, 32a. In addition, a majority of the court concluded that Newdow has standing in his own right to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act amending the Pledge because "the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation," id. at 33a, and the 1954 Act amounts to a "religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 37a.[4]

b. Turning to the merits of Newdow's complaint, the majority held that, with the addition of the phrase "under God," the Pledge of Allegiance violates the Establishment Clause. App., infra, 37a-42a. The majority began by explaining that this Court has adopted three different tests to analyze Establishment Clause violations (id. at 37a)—the three-prong test outlined in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971); the "endorsement test," County of Allegheny, supra; and the "coercion" test, Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992)—and that the court of appeals was "free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them." App., infra, 41a.

The majority held that the 1954 Act and the school district policy failed the "endorsement test" both because the Pledge's reference to God "is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism" and because it "impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God." App., infra, 41a-42a. The majority further concluded that the 1954 Act and the school district's policy fail the "coercion test" because "the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement 'one nation under God' has a coercive effect." Id. at 45a.

Finally, the majority concluded that the Pledge fails the Lemon test because it has the purpose of advancing religion. App., infra, 46a. In so holding, the majority rejected the United States' argument that the Pledge should be looked at "as a whole," and concluded that the "sole purpose" of the 1954 Act was to "advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." Id. at 46a-47a. The majority further concluded that Elk Grove's policy ran afoul of the Lemon test because it "convey[s] an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God." Id. at 50a.

The majority dismissed in a footnote the numerous statements by this Court and its Members expressly addressing the Pledge and affirming its constitutionality as "dicta" that was announced without "appl[ying] any of the three tests to the Act." App., infra, 50a-51a n.12. The majority also expressly disagreed with the analysis and conclusion of the Seventh Circuit in Sherman, supra, which upheld the Pledge against a similar Establishment Clause challenge. Ibid.

c. Judge Fernandez dissented. App., infra, 52a-58a. Judge Fernandez first expressed his "serious misgivings" about the majority's conclusion that Newdow had standing to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act, but ultimately concluded that the question "makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case." Id. at 53a n.1. With respect to the Establishment Clause challenge, Judge Fernandez explained that "such phrases as 'In God We Trust,' or 'under God' have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity." Id. at 55a. Judge Fernandez also noted that this Court has repeatedly indicated that the Pledge's text, as amended, does not violate the Establishment Clause, and he agreed with the Seventh Circuit that the court of appeals should "respect" those assurances: "If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so." Ibid. (quoting Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448). Finally, Judge Fernandez accused the majority of confining itself to legal "elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place." Id. at 57a; see also id. at 57a n.8 (noting that the majority's holding would preclude use of many patriotic songs, such as "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," in public ceremonial occasions).

d. While the case was pending on the United States' and Elk Grove's petitions for rehearing and rehearing en banc, the mother of Newdow's child notified the court that Newdow lacked legal custody of the child and legal control over the child's educational and religious upbringing. She further advised that, as the custodial parent, she "wish[es] for her child to be able to recite the Pledge at school exactly as it stands." Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10. The United States then filed a motion to enlarge the record and a supplemental brief arguing that Newdow lacks standing to prosecute his challenge to the Pledge on its face or as applied by Elk Grove.

The court of appeals issued a separate decision holding that Newdow has standing to prosecute his constitutional challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 89a-98a. The court concluded that, while Newdow no longer could prosecute the action on behalf of or to vindicate the interests of his child, Newdow continued to have standing in his own right to challenge "unconstitutional government action affecting his child." Id. at 92a. The court noted that the custody agreement does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights, because he retains the "the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records" and the "right to consult" on educational decisions, albeit with the mother "having ultimate decision-making power." Id. at 95a. The court then reasoned that, because California law recognizes a right in noncustodial parents to "expose" their children to their beliefs and values, Newdow was injured because state law "surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent." Id. at 96a. The court further reasoned that Newdow has standing because the mother "has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action." Ibid. Because the Pledge, in the court's view, "provides the message to Newdow's young daughter" that "her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom," the court concluded that Newdow has suffered a legally cognizable injury that provides him with Article III standing. Id. at 97a.[5]

4. a. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing. App., infra, 1a-24a. In its amended opinion, the court limited its Establishment Clause holding to the Pledge's use by Elk Grove in its schools. Id. at 18a. With respect to Newdow's challenge to the facial constitutionality of the Pledge, the court of appeals vacated the district court's decision in favor of the United States and remanded "for further proceedings consistent with our holding." Ibid.

In addition, the court amended its decision to hold only that Elk Grove's policy violated the coercion test, and did not address either the "endorsement test" or the Lemon test. App., infra, 11a. The panel, however, concluded that the recitation of the Pledge violated the coercion test for the same reasons that the original opinion found a violation of the endorsement test. Compare id. at 11a-13a, with id. at 41a-43a.

The court also elaborated on its rejection of the numerous statements in this Court's opinions affirming the constitutionality of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage. The court assumed that "public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge," but that schools nevertheless could not "coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates." App., infra, 15a. The court also purported to distinguish references to God in the Pledge from those in the Declaration of Independence and National Anthem on the ground that the pledge "is a performative statement." Id. at 16a; see also ibid. ("To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.").

Judge Fernandez dissented from the court's Establishment Clause holding for the same reasons discussed in his initial dissenting opinion. App., infra, 19a-24a. Judge Fernandez also noted that, although the majority "now formally limits itself to holding that it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge in public classrooms, its message that something is constitutionally infirm about the Pledge itself abides and remains a clear and present danger to all similar public expressions of reverence." Id. at 19a n.1.

b. Judge O'Scannlain, joined by Judges Kleinfeld, Gould, Tallman, Rawlinson, and Clifton, filed a lengthy dissent from the court of appeals' denial of rehearing en banc. App., infra, 67a-87a. He described the panel opinion as > wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it

> set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.

Id. at 67a-68a (footnote omitted). Judge O'Scannlain stressed that this Court consistently has distinguished between "patriotic invocations of God on the one hand," and public school "prayer, an 'unquestioned religious exercise.'" Id. at 72a. Judge O'Scannlain further noted that, until the panel's decision here, "[n]o court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances." Id. at 78a-79a. Finally, Judge O'Scannlain noted that, while the panel "adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people," id. at 86a-87a, "the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion," id. at 86a.

Judges McKeown, Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson separately dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc on the ground that the case "presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance" that should be heard by the court en banc. App., infra, 88a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Two decisions of this Court have said without qualification that the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. Numerous other opinions, joined in by at least twelve Justices of this Court, have likewise expressly addressed and affirmed the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance notwithstanding its reference to God. No Justice has expressed the view that the Pledge violates the Establishment Clause. The court of appeals, however, dismissed those majority and separate opinions as unconsidered dicta. But a fair reading of this Court's decisions demonstrates that those consistent and oft-repeated statements stand as a fixed lodestar in this Court's

Establishment Clause jurisprudence that has informed and directed the resolution of a number of the Court's cases. They reflect a point of exceptional unity and consistent agreement among Members of this Court within Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Whatever else the Establishment Clause may prohibit, this Court's precedents make clear that it does not forbid the government from officially acknowledging the religious heritage, foundation, and character of this Nation. That is what the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance does. The Pledge is therefore constitutional, as the Seventh Circuit held when confronted with the same Establishment Clause challenge. Because the court of appeals' error is so manifestly contrary to precedent, the Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the decision below.

1. This Court's review is warranted because the court of appeals' holding conflicts with repeated opinions of this Court and of individual Justices consistently explaining that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, do not violate the Establishment Clause. The holding below is also in direct conflict with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993), which rejected the same Establishment Clause challenge to the Pledge.

a. The court of appeals' decision is irreconcilable with this Court's repeated assurances that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, comports with the strictures of the Establishment Clause. In Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), the Court held that a city did not violate the Establishment Clause by including a nativity scene as part of a Christmas display. In upholding the display, the Court reasoned that "[t]here is an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life from at least 1789." Id. at 674. The Court noted that its own opinions had "asserted pointedly" that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 675 (quoting Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313 (1952), and citing School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 213 (1963)). The Court further reasoned that "examples of reference to our religious heritage are found * * * in the language "One nation under God," as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag," which "is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; see also ibid. (referring favorably to the National Motto, "In God We Trust," 36 U.S.C. 302, which appears on all United States currency, 31 U.S.C. 324).

Explaining that such official acknowledgments of our Nation's religious heritage do not "establish[] a religion or religious faith, or tend[] to do so," Lynch, 465 U.S. at 678, the Court concluded that the City's inclusion of a creche in its Christmas display likewise permissibly "depicts the historical origins of this traditional event long recognized as a National Holiday," id. at 680. To hold otherwise, the Court explained, would lead to the conclusion that "a host of other forms of taking official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage, are equally offensive to the Constitution." Id. at 686. "[P]ublic acknowledgment of the [Nation's] religious heritage long officially recognized by the three constitutional branches of government," the Court concluded, render "farfetched" "[a]ny notion that these symbols pose a real danger of establishment of a state church." Ibid.

In County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989), the Court invalidated the display of a creche at a county courthouse, but sustained the inclusion of a menorah as part of a holiday display. In so holding, the Court reaffirmed Lynch's approval of the reference to God in the Pledge, noting that all of the Justices in Lynch viewed the Pledge as "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." Id. at 602-603 (citations omitted). The Court then used the Pledge and the general holiday display approved in Lynch as benchmarks for what the Establishment Clause permits, ibid. On that basis, the Court concluded that the display of the creche by itself was unconstitutional because, unlike the Pledge, it gave "praise to God in [sectarian] Christian terms." Id. at 598; see also id. at 603 (finding an "obvious distinction" between the Pledge and the display of the creche).

Furthermore, while not referring specifically to the Pledge of Allegiance, the Court, in Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), upheld the historic practice of legislative prayer as "a tolerable acknowledgment of beliefs widely held among the people of this country." Id. at 792. In so holding, the Court discussed numerous other examples of constitutionally permissible religious references in official life "that form 'part of the fabric of our society,'" ibid., such as "God save the United States and this Honorable Court," which "occurs at all sessions of this Court," id. at 786. The Court also repeated its recognition that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 792.

Likewise, in Abington Township, supra, the Court explained, in the course of invalidating laws requiring Bible-reading in public schools, that "our national life reflects a religious people," and noted the numerous permissible public references to God in historical documents and ceremonial practices, such as oaths ending with "So help me God." 374 U.S. at 213.

Finally, in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962), in the course of invalidating official school prayers, the Court stressed:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise [official prayer] that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21.

In sum, this Court has repeatedly refused to "press the concept of separation of Church and State to * * * extremes" and to condemn as unconstitutional the "references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, [and] our ceremonies." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

b. The opinions of individual Justices have cemented as common ground the proposition that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, are constitutionally permissible. See Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 633-635 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Thomas, JJ.) (noting long historical practice, consistent with the Establishment Clause, of official references to God); id. at 638-639 (noting that the Court's invalidation of graduation prayer did not extend to the practice of also saying the Pledge of Allegiance at graduations); County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 623, 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("government recognition and acknowledgment of the role of religion in the lives of our citizens" serve the "secular purposes of 'solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society'"; in addition, because of their "history and ubiquity, such government acknowledgments of religion are not understood as conveying an endorsement of particular religious beliefs") (internal quotation marks omitted); id. at 657 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Brennan & Marshall, JJ.) ("Government policies of * * * acknowledgment, and support for religion are an accepted part of our political and cultural heritage."); id. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Scalia, JJ.) (explaining that the Court "will not proscribe" "the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance" and similar acknowledgments of religious culture); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n.5 (1985) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny, with specific reference to the Pledge of Allegiance); id. at 88 (Burger, C.J., dissenting) (the argument that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, violates the Establishment Clause "would of course make a mockery of our decisionmaking in Establishment Clause cases"); Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny with respect to "In God We Trust" and "God save the United States and this honorable court"); Abington Township, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("The reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance, for example, may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact."); id. at 303 (The Pledge and similar acknowledgments of religion are "interwoven * * * so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity" that their "use may not present that type of involvement which the First Amendment prohibits."); id. at

307-308 (Goldberg, J., concurring, joined by Harlan, J.) ("[T]oday's decision does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause," citing to divine references in the Declaration of Independence and the National Anthem); Engel, 370 U.S. at 449 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (citing as consistent with the Establishment Clause the then recently amended Pledge of Allegiance, the National Motto "In God We Trust," and the National Day of Prayer).

c. The court of appeals dismissed that overwhelming and consistent authority as "dicta" that was "not inconsistent" with its invalidation of the Pledge. App., infra, 15a. While the court of appeals is correct that none of those cases involved direct challenges to the Pledge, it fundamentally erred in disregarding this Court's consistent statements validating the Pledge. That is because, "[w]hen an opinion issues for the Court, it is not only the result but also those portions of the opinion necessary to that result by which we are bound." Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 67 (1996). The Court's analysis of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion in Lynch and County of Allegheny were not "mere obiter dicta" that the court of appeals was free to disregard. Id. at 66. They were components of the "well-established rationale upon which the Court based the results of its earlier decisions." Id. at 66-67. Those references articulated the constitutional baseline for permissible official acknowledgments of religion under the Establishment Clause against which the governmental practices at issue in each of those cases were then measured. Indeed, for decades, the Court and individual Justices "have grounded [their] decisions in the oft-repeated understanding," id. at 67, that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar references, are constitutional.[6]

The court of appeals' failure to recognize the analytical import of this Court's past decisions and statements underlies its erroneous conclusion that recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in schools violates the Establishment Clause. First, in concluding that the Pledge results in unconstitutional coercion, the court of appeals failed to come to grips with this Court's repeated recognition that the Establishment Clause permits such historic, ubiquitous, and ceremonial acknowledgments of our Nation's religious character and heritage. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675, 677 (concluding that the words "under God" in the Pledge are an "acknowledgment of our religious heritage" similar to the "official references to the value and invocation of Divine guidance in deliberations and pronouncements of the Founding Fathers" that are "replete" in our nation's history). Such references are not reasonably and objectively understood as coercing individuals into silent assent to any particular religious doctrine. Rather, the Pledge is "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief," County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-603, because the ceremonial reference to God acknowledges the undeniable historical facts that the Nation was founded by individuals who believed in God, that the Constitution's protection of individual rights and autonomy reflects those religious convictions, and that the Nation continues as a matter of demographic and cultural fact to be a predominantly "religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

Second, as Judge O'Scannlain explained in his dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc, App., infra, 69a-71a, 79a-83a, the court of appeals' decision proceeds from the faulty premise that the Pledge's acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage is the functional equivalent of prayer or a religious act like Bible reading. The decisions of this Court and individual Justices outlined above repeatedly admonish that not every reference to God amounts to impermissible government-endorsed religious exercise, and expressly refer to the Pledge and similar ceremonial references in contradistinction to formal religious exercises like prayer and Bible reading. See, e.g., Lynch, supra; Abington Township, supra; Engel, supra. The Pledge is no more of a coercive religious exercise than the requirement at the opening of federal courts that individuals stand while a court official announces "God save the United States and this honorable Court."

Third, the court of appeals erred in analyzing the phrase "under God" in isolation. In the court's view, pledging allegiance to the phrase "under God" compelled an endorsement of monotheism in the same manner as phrases like "under Jesus," "under Vishnu," or "under Zeus." App., infra, 12a. But Congress did not enact a pledge consisting just of the words "under God," and the school district does not lead students in reciting only the phrase "under God." Nor did Congress enact a pledge to God. Individuals pledge allegiance to "the Flag of the United States of America," and "to the Republic for which it stands." 4 U.S.C. 4. The remainder of the Pledge then describes the culture and character of that Republic—a unified Country, composed of individual States yet indivisible as a Nation, founded for the purposes of promoting liberty and justice for all, and founded by individuals who believed (and populated predominantly by people who continue to believe) that the Nation's character and destiny were rooted in the Divine.

In analyzing only Newdow's discomfiture with the phrase "under God," without considering its larger context, the court of appeals "plainly erred." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 680. In Lynch, this Court stressed that the Establishment Clause analysis looks at religious symbols and references in context, rather than "focusing almost exclusively on the" religious symbol alone. Ibid. The Lynch Court accordingly did not ask whether the government's display of a creche—a clearly religious symbol—was permissible. The Court analyzed whether the overall message conveyed by a display that included both that religious and other secular symbols of the Christmas holiday season conveyed a message of endorsement, and concluded that it did not. Id. at 680-686. The presence of the creche, the Court concluded, properly "depict[ed] the historical origins of this traditional event," id. at 680, and permissibly took "official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage," id. at 686.

Likewise, in County of Allegheny, the Court analyzed and upheld the "combined display" during the winter holiday season of a Christmas tree, Liberty sign, and menorah. 492 U.S. at 616. The Court thus looked at the content of the display as a whole, rather than focusing on the presence of the menorah and the religious message that the menorah alone conveys. Id. at 616-620.

That Congress added the phrase "under God" to a preexisting Pledge does not change the analysis. The city government in County of Allegheny had likewise added the menorah, after the fact, to a preexisting holiday display. Id. at 581-582. Yet this Court trained its constitutional analysis on the display as a whole, rather than scrutinizing the message conveyed by each component as it was added seriatim. Id. at 616-620 & n.64; see also Zelman v. Simmons-Harris,

536 U.S. 639, 655-657 (2002) (noting that the Establishment Clause inquiry must consider all relevant programs, not just the specific program challenged); id. at 672-676 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (later addition of "under God" to Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause because it "serve[s] as an acknowledgment of religion with the 'legitimate secular purpose of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future'").

The court of appeals attempted to distinguish the Pledge from other references to God in public life on the ground that the Pledge is "a performative statement," rather than simply "a reflection of [an] author's profession of faith." App., infra, 16a. As an initial matter, this Court's pronouncements have made no such distinction, consistently grouping the Pledge with the Motto, National Anthem, the Declaration of Independence, and similar public references, some of which frequently involve public performance (e.g., the National Anthem) and some of which do not.

More importantly, the distinction makes no sense. With respect to "impressionable young schoolchildren," id. at 15a, there simply is no coherent or discernible "performative" difference between having them say the Pledge, rather than memorize and recite the National Motto ("In God We Trust"), 36 U.S.C. 302 (emphasis added), the Declaration of Independence, 1 U.S.C. at XLIII ("We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men * * * are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights * * *."), or the Gettysburg Address ("[W]e here highly resolve * * * that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."). Indeed, the court of appeals' approach leads to the curious conclusion that the recitation of Bible passages or long-established prayers in public schools, which would require students "merely to repeat the words of an historical document," App., infra, 16a, trenches less upon Establishment

Clause principles than the Pledge's two-word acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage. That conclusion cannot be reconciled with this Court's precedent or established analytical principles guiding Establishment Clause jurisprudence.

d. This Court's review is warranted because the Ninth Circuit's decision squarely conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, supra, that the Pledge of Allegiance may constitutionally be recited in public elementary schools. Unlike the court of appeals here, the Seventh Circuit placed significant weight on this Court's repeated approval of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion, and concluded that the lower federal courts must "take [the Supreme Court's] assurances seriously." 980 F.2d at 448. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that its decision creates an inter-circuit conflict and that the courts' differing decisions were the product of different modes of analyzing Establishment Clause challenges to such official acknowledgments of religion. App., infra, 16a-17a. This Court's authoritative resolution of the question is therefore necessary.[7]

[7] The Ninth Circuit's decision is also in considerable tension with court of appeals' decisions upholding analogous acknowledgments of the Nation's religious history and character. See Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214 (10th Cir.) (upholding against Establishment Clause challenge the National Motto, "In God We Trust," and its imprint on all currency), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1211 (1996); O'Hair v. Murray, 588 F.2d 1144 (5th Cir.) (upholding National Motto), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 930 (1979); Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970) (same); Ganulin v. United States, 71 F. Supp. 2d 824 (S.D. Ohio 1999) (upholding constitutionality of 5 U.S.C. 6103, which makes Christmas Day a paid federal holiday), aff'd, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 973 (2001); Opinion of the Justices, 228 A.2d 161 (N.H. 1967) (posting of plaques in all public school classrooms bearing the National Motto, "In God We Trust," would not violate the Establishment Clause).

e. The question presented is one of great importance. An Act of Congress has been held unconstitutional as applied in one of its most important contexts. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; pp. 4-5, supra; App., infra, 14a & n.7. Furthermore, the impact of the decision below is potentially far-reaching. In addition to the practice at federally operated schools for military dependents, see n.2, supra, public schools within each of the 50 States lead students in voluntary recitations of the Pledge of Allegiance, see Idaho C.A. Amicus Curiae Br. 9-13 (citing state laws). It is untenable that a national Pledge of Allegiance to a national flag would have a different content depending on the judicial circuit in which it is uttered. Absent this Court's review, 9.6 million students in nine States (App., infra, 69a) will recite an abridged version of the Pledge, while the nearly 37 million students in the rest of the Country will recite the Pledge that Congress enacted. Students in the Ninth Circuit will also learn a different Pledge in school than they recite at other public and private events. The Pledge cannot serve its purpose of unifying and commonly celebrating the national identity unless it is one Pledge with one content for all citizens at all points in their lives. There is no reason to tolerate such disruption and disharmony in the schools of this Nation. The Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. This Court has repeatedly said so, and federal and state schools have acted in reliance on those assurances. The Ninth Circuit's disregard of this Court's decisions and their underlying analytical principles merits review.

2. The issue of Newdow's standing to bring his constitutional challenge is a necessarily antecedent question that this Court would need to address were it to grant review. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94 (1998). Although it is the court of appeals' erroneous ruling on the merits that warrants this Court's review, the court of appeals also committed three errors in concluding that

Newdow's status as a noncustodial parent did not deprive him of standing to challenge an educational practice at his child's school.[8]

First, and most fundamentally, Newdow has not suffered the invasion of any legally protected interest. A number of this Court's Establishment Clause cases have involved lawsuits by parents challenging practices or policies in public schools. See, e.g., Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290 (2000); Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills Sch. Dist., 509 U.S. 1 (1993); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972). In all of those cases, however, the parents had the legal right to sue as next friend to vindicate their children's legal interests and to protect the parents' own constitutional rights to direct and control the religious and educational upbringing of their children, see Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534-535 (1925).

Newdow can assert neither right. He has no legal right to sue as his child's next friend, or otherwise seek to vindicate his child's legal interests, as the court of appeals recognized. App., infra, 96a. That prerogative rests exclusively with the mother, who has sole legal custody. Ibid. While Newdow retains the right to "consult" with the mother on educational decisions and to have "access" to the child's educational records, id. at 91a, Newdow does not allege that Elk Grove's

[8] While the standing issue is necessarily antecedent to the merits of the Establishment Clause analysis, see Steel Co., supra, this Petition presents the Establishment Clause issue first because the court of appeals' erroneous constitutional judgment clearly merits this Court's review. Whether or not the Ninth Circuit's erroneous standing analysis would independently merit an exercise of this Court' s certiorari jurisdiction, it does not pose a barrier to review in this case. The Ninth Circuit's standing analysis is closely intertwined with its flawed Establishment Clause ruling, and the decision below, which not only erroneously invalidates the Pledge of Allegiance, but did so at the behest of a party without Article III standing, should not be allowed to stand.

use of the Pledge in its schools interferes with either of those rights. Nor, contrary to the court of appeals' opinion, does Newdow have any right "to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 7a. The custody order granted sole control over the child's "health, education and welfare" to the mother. Id. at 90a-91a. And the mother has made clear that she "wants her daughter to recite the Pledge as it stands as part of her education," Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10.[9]

Where, as here, the two parents disagree on an educational practice, the decision of the custodial parent controls and Newdow has no right to overturn it. If, as the noncustodial parent, Newdow believes the mother's educational decisions are causing harm to the child, the proper remedy is for him to resort to family court and seek a modification of the custody agreement. He cannot use federal litigation to circumvent that state-law process or to modify a state-law custody judgment. See District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482 (1983); Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413 (1923).[10]

[9] See also Burge v. City & County of San Francisco, 262 P.2d 6, 12 (Cal. 1953) (status as custodial parent "embrace[s] the sum of parental rights with respect to the rearing of a child, including its care. It includes the right * * * to direct his activities and make decisions regarding his care and control, education, health, and religion."); cf. Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 122-129 (1989).

[10] In apparent recognition of that limitation, the United States understands that Newdow has filed a motion in California Superior Court to alter the custody arrangement. That motion remains pending with a hearing date scheduled for July 31, 2003.

The court of appeals relied (App., infra, 92a-94a) on the Seventh Circuit's decision in Navin v. Park Ridge School District, 270 F.3d 1147 (2001) (per curiam), which held that a noncustodial father might be able to sue to enforce his son's rights under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, 20 U.S.C. 1415. In that case, however, the court concluded that the divorce decree did not strip the father of his parental interest in

Second, the court of appeals placed weight upon Newdow's residual right, under California law, to "expose" his child to his views. App., infra, 95a. But, again, Newdow has not alleged that Elk Grove or the United States has denied him any opportunity to expose his child to his particular viewpoints.

The court of appeals went further, however, and held that Newdow has a right not to have his message to his child interrupted or diluted by the government's educational practices. But, especially when that speech occurs with the consent of the custodial parent, the right of the non-custodial parent to "expose" the child to his views does not entitle that parent to close off all other views. Public schools routinely instruct students about evolution, war, and other matters with which some parents may disagree on religious, political, or moral grounds. What the Constitution protects, in those circumstances, is the parents' right to instill their own views in their children and to place them in a private school that is more consonant with their beliefs. See Pierce, supra.[11]

The court of appeals further erred in suggesting that Newdow's limited state-law right was somehow enhanced by that court's erroneous conclusion that his Establishment Clause challenge was meritorious. The court repeatedly ensuring the quality of his child's education. 270 F.3d at 1149. The court stressed, moreover, that the noncustodial parent could not use federal law "to upset choices committed to [the mother] by the state court," id. at 1150, which is exactly what Newdow's lawsuit attempts to do.

[11] Cf. West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630 (1943) (holding only that children whose parents have religious objections to the content of the Pledge have a right not to participate in its recitation in a classroom, where their refusal "does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so"); Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 717 (1977) (the government "may legitimately" "communicate to others an official view as to proper appreciation of history, state pride, and individualism," as long as individuals are not forced to "becom[e] the courier for such message[s]").

couched Newdow's purported Article III injury in terms of a right not to have his daughter "subjected to unconstitutional state action" and "official state indoctrination of * * * an official view of religion." App., infra, 96a (emphasis added). See also id. at 97a (the mother "may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights") (emphasis added).

That approach, however, confuses the standing inquiry with the ultimate question on the merits. The type of injury that Article III requires must be discernible separate and apart from the ultimate resolution of the case. The plaintiff must identify some action by the opposing party that affects the plaintiff's particularized, individual rights concretely and imminently—regardless of whether that action ultimately is found to be lawful or not. "The requirement of standing 'focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated." Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 484 (1982); see also Schaffer v. Clinton, 240 F.3d 878, 883 (10th Cir.) (denying standing where it "revolves around the asserted unconstitutionality of the [conduct as that] is a statement of [plaintiff's] view of the merits * * * and no more"), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 992 (2001).

Third, even if Newdow possesses some federal right not to have his message of atheism affected by his child's exposure to the Pledge, the court of appeals' limited invalidation of the Pledge in elementary schools does not redress that injury. Newdow's child remains subject to exposure to the Pledge in a wide variety of other assemblies and settings, public or private. In addition, the child's mother could place the child in private school where the official governmental Pledge could be recited daily. Unless the Establishment Clause compels courts to root out every reference to religion in public life, the relief ordered by the court here is incapable of inoculating Newdow's message of atheism against any perceived dilution.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted. The Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the court of appeals' judgment.

Respectfully submitted.

AMENDED OPINION AND AMENDED CONCURRENCE/DISSENT

Before: ALFRED T. GOODWIN, STEPHEN REINHARDT and FERDINAND F. FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by Judge Goodwin; Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge Fernandez

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals pro se a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

[1] The relevant portion of California Education Code § 52720 reads:

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[2] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'" Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation that the district court hold that the daily Pledge ceremony in the schools did not violate the Establishment Clause. District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

[2] Compelling students to recite the Pledge was held to be a First Amendment violation in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties in the district court. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. Amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[3] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions . . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

Id. at 687-88 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[3] In Marsh, the Court "held that the Nebraska Legislature's practice of opening each day's session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the State did not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. [The] holding was based upon the historical acceptance of the practice that had become 'part of the fabric of our society.'" Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63 n. 4 (Powell, J., concurring) (quoting Marsh, 463 U.S. at 792).

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court first examined the degree of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. Because we conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act and accordingly hold the policy unconstitutional, we need not consider whether the policy fails the endorsement test or the Lemon test as well.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since 1954—monotheism. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. The school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, including the religious values it incorporates.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[4] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n.14. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642.

The school district's policy here, like the school's action in Lee, places students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. The defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal. To an atheist or a believer in non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, however, this phrase may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in Lee: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the non-believer or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592.

The coercive effect of the policy here is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[5] Furthermore, under Lee, non-compulsory participation is no basis for distinguishing Barnette [sic] from the case at bar because, even without a

[5] The "subtle and indirect" social pressure which permeates the classroom also renders more acute the message sent to non-believing school-children that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

recitation requirement for each child, the mere presence in the classroom every day as peers recite the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[6] The coercive effect of the Pledge is also made even more apparent when we consider the legislative history of the Act that introduced the phrase "under God." These words were designed to be recited daily in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower).[7] All in all, there can be little doubt that under the controlling Supreme

[6] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593.

[7] In addition, the legislative history of the 1954 Act makes it plain that the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins." This statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N 2339, 2341.

Court cases the school district's policy fails the coercion test.[8]

The Supreme Court has addressed the Pledge in passing, and we owe due deference to its dicta. See United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996). Our opinion, however, is not inconsistent with this dicta. In Allegheny, the Court noted that it had "considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." 492 U.S. at 602-03. And in Lynch, the Court observed that students recited the pledge daily, but only to support its point that there is a long tradition of "official acknowledgment" of religion. 465 U.S. at 674, 676. Neither of these two references speaks to the issue here. We may assume arguendo that public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge, yet it does not follow that schools may coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates.

Our decision is not inconsistent with Engel, which approved of encouraging students to "recit[e] historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or . . . sing[ ] officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being." 370 U.S. at 435 n.21. The Pledge differs from the Declaration and the anthem in that its reference to God, in textual and historical context, is not merely a reflection of the author's profession of faith. It is, by design, an affirmation by the person reciting it. "I pledge" is a performative statement. See J.L. Austin, How to Do Things with Words (J.O. Urmsson & Marina Sbisa eds., Harvard Univ. Press 1975) (1962). To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.

[8] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently."

Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. For the reasons we have already explained, this question is simply not dispositive of whether the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.

In light of Supreme Court precedent, we hold that the school district's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the inclusion of the added words "under God," violates the Establishment Clause.

In addition to the relief that Newdow seeks against the school district—relief to which he is entitled—Newdow seeks a declaration as to the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. The district court did not discuss that question because it dismissed Newdow's complaint on the basis of its holding that the school district's policy did not violate the First Amendment. Given our contrary holding, we must consider whether to grant Newdow's claim for declaratory relief as to the Act. Normally, whether to decide a claim for declaratory judgment is left to the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); see also Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Dizol, 133 F.3d 1220, 1222-23 (9th Cir. 1998). We doubt that, given the relief to which we decide Newdow is entitled, the district court would have exercised its discretionary power to resolve, in the present case, the additional issue as to which Newdow seeks declaratory relief. Accordingly, we decline to reach that issue here.

The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to Newdow's claim that the school district's Pledge policy violates the Establishment Clause and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

REV_00164889

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.[1]

We can run through some or all of the tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534, U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L. But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03, 672-73, 109 S. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity. Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring) ("A civic reference to God does not become permissible . . . only when . . . it is sapped of religious significance." The Pledge is constitutional and "[w]e need not drain the meaning from the reference [to God] to reach this conclusion."

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America The Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe all of us, including our children, must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance in any setting, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all. By the way, I am not the first to apply the de minimis concept to this area of the law. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 861, 120 S. Ct. 2530, 2569, 147 L. Partial Concurrence and Partial Dissent by Judge FERNANDEZ.

OPINION

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Michael Newdow appeals a judgment dismissing his challenge to the constitutionality of the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Newdow argues that the addition of these words by a 1954 federal statute to the previous version of the Pledge of Allegiance (which made no reference to God) and the daily recitation in the classroom of the Pledge of Allegiance, with the added words included, by his daughter's public school teacher are violations of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Newdow is an atheist whose daughter attends public elementary school in the Elk Grove Unified School District ("EGUSD") in California. In accordance with state law and a school district rule, EGUSD teachers begin each school day by leading their students in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance ("the Pledge"). The California Education Code requires that public schools begin each school day with "appropriate patriotic exercises" and that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy" this requirement. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720

(1989) (hereinafter "California statute").[1] To implement the California statute, the school district that Newdow's daughter attends has promulgated a policy that states, in pertinent part: "Each elementary school class [shall] recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day."[2]

The classmates of Newdow's daughter in the EGUSD are led by their teacher in reciting the Pledge codified in federal law. On June 22, 1942, Congress first codified the Pledge as "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Pub. L. No. 623, Ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380 (1942) (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 1972). On June 14, 1954, Congress amended Section 1972 to add the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Pub. L. No. 396, Ch. 297, 68 Stat. 249 (1954) ("1954 Act"). The Pledge is currently codified as "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. § 4 (1998) (Title 36 was revised and recodified by Pub. L. No. 105-225, § 2(a), 112 Stat. 1494 (1998). Section 172 was abolished, and the Pledge is now found in Title 4.)

> In every public elementary school each day during the school year at the beginning of the first regularly scheduled class or activity period at which the majority of the pupils of the school normally begin the schoolday, there shall be conducted appropriate patriotic exercises. The giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section.

[2] The SCUSD, the school district that Newdow claims his daughter may in the future attend, has promulgated a similar rule: "Each school shall conduct patriotic exercises daily. . . . The Pledge of Allegiance to the flag will fulfill this requirement." However, as discussed infra, Newdow lacks standing to challenge the SCUSD's rule requiring recitation of the Pledge.

Newdow does not allege that his daughter's teacher or school district requires his daughter to participate in reciting the Pledge.[3] Rather, he claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to "watch and listen as her state-employed teacher in her state-run school leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God, and that our's [sic] is 'one nation under God.'"

Newdow's complaint in the district court challenged the constitutionality, under the First Amendment, of the 1954 Act, the California statute, and the school district's policy requiring teachers to lead willing students in recitation of the Pledge. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, but did not seek damages.

The school districts and their superintendents (collectively, "school district defendants") filed a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Magistrate Judge Peter A. Nowinski held a hearing at which the school district defendants requested that the court rule only on the constitutionality of the Pledge, and defer any ruling on sovereign immunity. The United States Congress, the United States, and the President of the United States (collectively, "the federal defendants") joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the school district defendants. The magistrate judge reported findings and a recommendation; District Judge Edward J. Schwartz approved the recommendation and entered a judgment of dismissal. This appeal followed.

[3] Compelling students to recite the Pledge was held to be a First Amendment violation in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943) ("[T]he action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control."). Barnette was decided before the 1954 Act added the words "under God" to the Pledge.

DISCUSSION

A. Jurisdiction

Newdow asks the district court to order the President of the United States ("the President") to "alter, modify or repeal" the Pledge by removing the words "under God"; and to order the United States Congress ("Congress") "immediately to act to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge." The President, however, is not an appropriate defendant in an action challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802-03, 112 S. Ct. 2767, 120 L.Ed.2d 636 (1992) (plurality) (observing that a court of the United States " 'has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties' ") (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 501, 18 L.Ed. 437 (1866)).

Similarly, in light of the Speech and Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1, the federal courts lack jurisdiction to issue orders directing Congress to enact or amend legislation. See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 503, 95 S. Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324 (1975). Because the words that amended the Pledge were enacted into law by statute, the district court may not direct Congress to delete those words any more than it may order the President to take such action. All this, of course, is aside from the fact that the President has no authority to amend a statute or declare a law unconstitutional, those functions being reserved to Congress and the federal judiciary respectively.

Newdow nevertheless argues that because the 1954 Act violates the Establishment Clause, Congress should not be protected by the Speech and Debate Clause. This argument misses the jurisdictional, or separation of powers, point. As the Court held in Eastland, in determining whether or not the acts of members of Congress are protected by the Speech and Debate Clause, the court looks solely to whether or not the acts fall within the legitimate legislative sphere; if they do, Congress is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Clause against being "questioned in any other Place." Id. at 501. "If the mere allegation that a valid legislative act was undertaken for an unworthy purpose would lift the protection of the Clause, then the Clause simply would not provide the protection historically undergirding it." Id. at 508-09, 95 S. Ct. 1813. Although the district court lacks jurisdiction over the President and the Congress, the question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act remains before us. While the court correctly dismissed the claim against those parties, it survives against others.

B. The State of California as a defendant

The State of California did not join in the motion to dismiss or otherwise participate in the district court proceedings. It did, however, sub silentio, receive the benefit of the district court's ruling dismissing the complaint. Accordingly, a reversal of the order would result in the reinstatement of the complaint against the state. With respect to the validity of the California statute, however, unlike in the case of the Congressional enactment and the school district policy, no arguments, legal or otherwise, were advanced by the parties either below or here. Thus, we do not address separately the validity of the California statute.

C. Standing

Article III standing is a jurisdictional issue. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997). Accordingly, it "may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, including for the first time on appeal." See A-Z Intern. v. Phillips, 179 F.3d 1187, 1190-91 (9th Cir. 1999). To satisfy standing requirements, a plaintiff must prove that "(1) it has suffered an 'injury in fact' that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)).

Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. "Parents have a right to direct the religious upbringing of their children and, on that basis, have standing to protect their right." Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); see also Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985) ("Appellants have standing to challenge alleged violations of the establishment clause of the First Amendment if they are directly affected by use of [the challenged book] in the English curriculum. [Appellant] has standing as a parent whose right to direct the religious training of her child is allegedly affected.") (citation omitted).

Newdow has standing to challenge the EGUSD's policy and practice regarding the recitation of the Pledge because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school in the EGUSD. However, Newdow has no standing to challenge the SCUSD's policy and practice because his daughter is not currently a student there. The SCUSD and its superintendent have not caused Newdow or his daughter an "injury in fact" that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 180, 120 S. Ct. 693 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560- 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130).

The final question of standing relates to the 1954 Act. Specifically, has Newdow suffered an "injury in fact" that is "fairly traceable" to the enactment of the 1954 Act? Id.

We begin our inquiry by noting the general rule that the standing requirements for an action brought under the Establishment Clause are the same as for any other action. Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 488-90, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L.Ed.2d 700 (1982). "The requirement of standing focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated. Moreover, we know of no principled basis on which to create a hierarchy of constitutional values or a complementary 'sliding scale' of standing which might permit respondents to invoke the judicial power of the United States." Id. at 484, 102 S. Ct. 752 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In Valley Forge, an organization dedicated to the separation of church and state brought suit challenging the federal government's grant of surplus federal property to a church-related college. The suit alleged that this grant of real property, without any financial payment by the college, was a violation of the Establishment Clause. The Supreme Court found that the plaintiff had standing neither as a taxpayer, see id. at 479-80, 102 S. Ct. 752, nor as a party personally injured as a consequence of the alleged unconstitutional action, see id. at 484-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The "psychological consequence presumably produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees . . . . is not an injury sufficient to confer standing under Art. III, even though the disagreement is phrased in constitutional terms." Id. at 485-86, 102 S. Ct. 752. The Court emphasized that "'[t]he assumption that if respondents have no standing to sue, no one would have standing, is not a reason to find standing.'" Id. at 489, 102 S. Ct. 752 (quoting Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 227, 94 S. Ct. 2925, 41 L.Ed.2d 706 (1974)).

While Valley Forge remains good law, the Supreme Court in more recent opinions has indirectly broadened the notion of Establishment Clause standing in public education cases by holding that the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation. In Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (1985), the Court considered an Establishment Clause challenge to an Alabama statute that originally had authorized a one-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation," but was later amended to authorize a period of silence "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40-42, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Although the previous form of the statute specifically allowed students to use the moment of silence for "meditation," silent prayer was always an option. "[I]t is undisputed that at the time of the enactment of [the amended statute] there was no governmental practice impeding students from silently praying for one minute at the beginning of each schoolday." Id. at 57 n.45, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Nor were students, under the amended form of the statute, compelled to use the allotted time for prayer. In sum, the amendment to the Alabama statute had no discernible effect on public school students other than to inform them that the state was encouraging them to engage in prayer during their daily moment of silence. Because the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that standing is a jurisdictional requirement, the existence of which each federal court must determine for itself, see Lujan, 504 U.S. at 559-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 230-31, 110 S. Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), we may presume that in Wallace the Court examined the standing question before deciding the merits, and that the Court determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to challenge the amended Alabama statute.

Our reading of Wallace is supported by Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L.Ed.2d 295 (2000), where the Court upheld a facial challenge to a school district's policy of permitting, but not requiring, prayer initiated and led by a student at high school football games. Noting that "the Constitution also requires that we keep in mind 'the myriad, subtle ways in which the Establishment Clause values can be eroded,'" id. at 314, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, 694 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring)), the Court held that the "mere passage by the District of a policy that has the purpose and perception of government establishment of religion," id., violated the Establishment Clause. "[T]he simple enactment of this policy, with the purpose and perception of school endorsement of student prayer, was a constitutional violation." Id. at 316, 120 S. Ct. 2266 (emphasis added).

In Wallace and Santa Fe, the Court looked at the language of each statute, the context in which the statute was enacted, and its legislative history to determine that the challenged statute caused an injury in violation of the Establishment Clause. "We refuse to turn a blind eye to the context in which this policy arose, and that context quells any doubt that this policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer." Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Wallace noted that whether a statute actually conveys a message of endorsement of religion is "not entirely a question of fact . . . . The relevant issue is whether an objective observer, acquainted with the text, legislative history, and implementation of the statute, would perceive it as state endorsement of prayer in public schools." 472 U.S. at 76, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment). In Santa Fe, "[t]he text and history of this policy . . . reinforce our objective student's perception that the prayer is, in actuality, encouraged by the school." 530 U.S. at 308, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In evaluating the purpose of the school district policy, the Court found "most striking . . . the evolution of the current policy." Id. at 309, 120 S. Ct. 2266. In Wallace, a review of the legislative history led the Court to conclude that enactment of the amended statute "was not motivated by any clearly secular purpose—indeed, the statute had no secular purpose."

472 U.S. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479; see also id. at 57-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

Operating within the above-described legal landscape, we now turn to the question initially posed, namely, does Newdow have standing to challenge the 1954 Act? Initially, we note that the 1954 statute challenged by Newdow is similar to the Alabama statute struck down in Wallace. Neither statute works the traditional type of "injury in fact" that is implicated when a statute compels or prohibits certain activity, nor do the amendments brought about by these statutes lend themselves to "as-applied" constitutional review. Nevertheless, the Court in Wallace, at least implicitly, determined that the schoolchildren's parents had standing to attack the challenged statute. Moreover, the legislative history of the 1954 Act shows that the "under God" language was not meant to sit passively in the federal code unbeknownst to the public; rather, the sponsors of the amendment knew about and capitalized on the state laws and school district rules that mandate recitation of the Pledge. The legislation's House sponsor, Representative Louis C. Rabaut, testified at the Congressional hearing that "the children of our land, in the daily recitation of the pledge in school, will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," and this statement was incorporated into the report of the House Judiciary Committee. H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341. Taken within its context, the 1954 addendum was designed to result in the recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms throughout the land on a daily basis, and therefore constituted as much of an injury-in-fact as the policies considered in Wallace and

Santa Fe. As discussed earlier, Newdow has standing as a parent to challenge a practice that interferes with his right to direct the religious education of his daughter. The mere enactment of the 1954 Act in its particular context constitutes a religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter. Accordingly, we hold that Newdow has standing to challenge the 1954 Act.

D. Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," U.S. Const. amend. I, a provision that "the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable with full force to the States and their school districts." Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 580, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467 (1992). Over the last three decades, the Supreme Court has used three interrelated tests to analyze alleged violations of the Establishment Clause in the realm of public education: the three-prong test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971); the "endorsement" test, first articulated by Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in Lynch, and later adopted by a majority of the Court in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 106 L.Ed.2d 472 (1989); and the "coercion" test first used by the Court in Lee.

In 1971, in the context of unconstitutional state aid to nonpublic schools, the Supreme Court in Lemon set forth the following test for evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations. To survive the "Lemon test," the government conduct in question (1) must have a secular purpose, (2) must have a principal or primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S. Ct. 2105. The Supreme Court applied the Lemon test to every Establishment case it decided between 1971 and 1984, with the exception of Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 103 S. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983), the case upholding legislative prayer.[4] See Wallace, 472 U.S. at 63, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (Powell, J., concurring).

In the 1984 Lynch case, which upheld the inclusion of a nativity scene in a city's Christmas display, Justice O'Connor wrote a concurring opinion in order to suggest a "clarification" of Establishment Clause jurisprudence. 465 U.S. at 687, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor's "endorsement" test effectively collapsed the first two prongs of the Lemon test:

> The Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community. Government can run afoul of that prohibition in two principal ways. One is excessive entanglement with religious institutions. . . . The second and more direct infringement is government endorsement or disapproval of religion. Endorsement sends a message to nonadherents that they are > outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.

Id. at 687-88, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

The Court formulated the "coercion test" when it held unconstitutional the practice of including invocations and benedictions in the form of "nonsectarian" prayers at public school graduation ceremonies. Lee, 505 U.S. at 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Declining to reconsider the validity of the Lemon test, the Court in Lee found it unnecessary to apply the Lemon test to find the challenged practices unconstitutional. Id. at 587, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Rather, it relied on the principle that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise, or otherwise to act in a way which establishes a state religion or religious faith, or tends to do so." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[5] The Court first examined the degree of school involvement in the prayer, and found that "the graduation prayers bore the imprint of the State and thus put school-age children who objected in an untenable position." Id. at 590. The next issue the Court considered was "the position of the students, both those who desired the prayer and she who did not." Id. Noting that "there are heightened concerns with protecting freedom of conscience from subtle coercive pressure in the elementary and secondary public schools," id. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649, the Court held that the school district's supervision and control of the graduation ceremony put impermissible pressure on students to participate in, or at least show respect during, the prayer, id. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649. The Court concluded that primary and secondary school children may not be placed in the dilemma of either participating in a religious ceremony or protesting. Id. at 594, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

Finally, in its most recent school prayer case, the Supreme Court applied the Lemon test, the endorsement test, and the coercion test to strike down a school district's policy of permitting student-led "invocations" before high school football games. See Santa Fe, 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Citing Lee, the Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship." Id. at 312, 120 S. Ct. 2266. Applying the Lemon test, the Court found that the school district policy was facially unconstitutional because it did not have a secular purpose. Id. at 314-16. The Court also used language associated with the endorsement test. Id. at 315, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("[T]his policy was implemented with the purpose of endorsing school prayer."); id. at 317, 120 S. Ct. 2266 ("Government efforts to endorse religion cannot evade constitutional reproach based solely on the remote possibility that those attempts may fail.").

We are free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them. The Supreme Court has not repudiated Lemon; in Santa Fe, it found that the application of each of the three tests provided an independent ground for invalidating the statute at issue in that case; and in Lee, the Court invalidated the policy solely on the basis of the coercion test. Although this court has typically applied the Lemon test to alleged Establishment Clause violations, see, e.g., Am. Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1120-21 (9th Cir. 2002), we are not required to apply it if a practice fails one of the other tests. Nevertheless, for purposes of completeness, we will analyze the school district policy and the 1954 Act under all three tests.

We first consider whether the 1954 Act and the EGUSD's policy of teacher-led Pledge recitation survive the endorsement test. The magistrate judge found that "the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs." Supreme Court precedent does not support that conclusion.

In the context of the Pledge, the statement that the United States is a nation "under God" is an endorsement of religion. It is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism. The recitation that ours is a nation "under God" is not a mere acknowledgment that many Americans believe in a deity. Nor is it merely descriptive of the undeniable historical significance of religion in the founding of the Republic. Rather, the phrase "one nation under God" in the context of the Pledge is normative. To recite the Pledge is not to describe the United States; instead, it is to swear allegiance to the values for which the flag stands: unity, indivisibility, liberty, justice, and—since 1954—monotheism. The text of the official Pledge, codified in federal law, impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God. A profession that we are a nation "under God" is identical, for Establishment Clause purposes, to a profession that we are a nation "under Jesus," a nation "under Vishnu," a nation "under Zeus," or a nation "under no god," because none of these professions can be neutral with respect to religion. "[T]he government must pursue a course of complete neutrality toward religion." Wallace, 472 U.S. at 60, 105 S. Ct. 2479. Furthermore, the school district's practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge aims to inculcate in students a respect for the ideals set forth in the Pledge, and thus amounts to state endorsement of these ideals. Although students cannot be forced to participate in recitation of the Pledge, the school district is nonetheless conveying a message of state endorsement of a religious belief when it requires public school teachers to recite, and lead the recitation of, the current form of the Pledge.

The Supreme Court recognized the normative and ideological nature of the Pledge in Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628. There, the Court held unconstitutional a school district's wartime policy of punishing students who refused to recite the Pledge and salute the flag. Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court noted that the school district was compelling the students "to declare a belief," id. at 631, 63 S. Ct. 1178, and "requir[ing] the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas [the flag] . . . bespeaks," id. at 633, 63 S. Ct. 1178. "[T]he compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind." Id. The Court emphasized that the political concepts articulated in the Pledge[6] were idealistic, not descriptive: "'[L]iberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement." Id. at 634 n. 14, 63 S. Ct. 1178. The Court concluded that: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178.

The Pledge, as currently codified, is an impermissible government endorsement of religion because it sends a message to unbelievers "that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 688, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice Kennedy, in his dissent in Allegheny, agreed:

> [B]y statute, the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag describes the United States as 'one nation under God.' To be sure, no one is obligated to recite this phrase, . . . but it borders on sophistry to suggest that the reasonable atheist would not feel less than a full member of the political community every time

[6] Barnette was decided before "under God" was added, and thus the Court's discussion was limited to the political ideals contained in the Pledge.

> his fellow Americans recited, as part of their expression of patriotism and love for country, a phrase he believed to be false.

Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 672, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).[7] Consequently, the policy and the Act fail the endorsement test.

Similarly, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test. Just as in Lee, the policy and the Act place students in the untenable position of choosing between participating in an exercise with religious content or protesting. As the Court observed with respect to the graduation prayer in that case: "What to most believers may seem nothing more than a reasonable request that the nonbeliever respect their religious practices, in a school context may appear to the nonbeliever or dissenter to be an attempt to employ the machinery of the State to enforce a religious orthodoxy." Lee, 505 U.S. at 592, 112 S. Ct. 2649. Although the defendants argue that the religious content of "one nation under God" is minimal, to an atheist or a believer in certain non-Judeo-Christian religions or philosophies, it may reasonably appear to be an attempt to enforce a "religious orthodoxy" of monotheism, and is therefore impermissible. The coercive effect of this policy is particularly pronounced in the school setting given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, and their understanding that they are required to adhere to the norms set by their school, their teacher and their fellow students.[8] Furthermore, under Lee, the fact that [7] For Justice Kennedy, this result was a reason to reject the endorsement test.

students are not required to participate is no basis for distinguishing Barnette from the case at bar because, even without a recitation requirement for each child, the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement "one nation under God" has a coercive effect.[9] The coercive effect of the Act is apparent from its context and legislative history, which indicate that the Act was designed to result in the daily recitation of the words "under God" in school classrooms. President Eisenhower, during the Act's signing ceremony, stated: "From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our Nation and our people to the Almighty." 100 Cong. Rec. 8618 (1954) (statement of Sen. Ferguson incorporating signing statement of President Eisenhower). Therefore, the policy and the Act fail the coercion test.[10] believing schoolchildren that they are outsiders. See Lee, 505 U.S. at 592-93, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (stating that "the risk of indirect coercion" from prayer exercises is particularly "pronounced" in elementary and secondary public school because students are subjected to peer pressure and public pressure which is "as real as any overt compulsion").

[9] The objection to the Pledge in Barnette, like in the case at bar, was based upon a religious ground. The Pledge in the classroom context imposes upon schoolchildren the constitutionally unacceptable choice between participating and protesting. Recognizing the severity of the effect of this form of coercion on children, the Supreme Court in Lee stated, "the State may not, consistent with the Establishment Clause, place primary and secondary school children in this position." 505 U.S. at 593, 112 S. Ct. 2649.

[10] In Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970), this court, without reaching the question of standing, upheld the inscription of the phrase "In God We Trust" on our coins and currency. But cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 722, 97 S. Ct.

Finally we turn to the Lemon test, the first prong of which asks if the challenged policy has a secular purpose. Historically, the primary purpose of the 1954 Act was to advance religion, in conflict with the first prong of the Lemon test. The federal defendants "do not dispute that the words 'under God' were intended" "to recognize a Supreme Being," at a time when the government was publicly inveighing against atheistic communism. Nonetheless, the federal defendants argue that the Pledge must be considered as a whole when assessing whether it has a secular purpose. They claim that the Pledge has the secular purpose of "solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future, and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355.

The flaw in defendants' argument is that it looks at the text of the Pledge "as a whole," and glosses over the 1954 Act. The problem with this approach is apparent when one considers the Court's analysis in Wallace. There, the Court struck down Alabama's statute mandating a moment of silence for "meditation or voluntary prayer" not because the final version "as a whole" lacked a primary secular purpose, but because the state legislature had amended the statute specifically and solely to add the words "or voluntary prayer." 472 U.S. at 59-60, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752 (1977) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (stating that the majority's holding leads logically to the conclusion that "In God We Trust" is an unconstitutional affirmation of belief). In any event, Aronow is distinguishable in many ways from the present case. The most important distinction is that school children are not coerced into reciting or otherwise actively led to participating in an endorsement of the markings on the money in circulation.

By analogy to Wallace, we apply the purpose prong of the Lemon test to the amendment that added the words "under God" to the Pledge, not to the Pledge in its final version. As was the case with the amendment to the Alabama statute in Wallace, the legislative history of the 1954 Act reveals that the Act's sole purpose was to advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." [T]he First Amendment requires that a statute must be invalidated if it is entirely motivated by a purpose to advance religion." Id. at 56, 105 S. Ct. 2479 (citations omitted) (applying the Lemon test). As the legislative history of the 1954 Act sets forth:

> At this moment of our history the principles underlying our American Government and the American way of life are under attack by a system whose philosophy is at direct odds with our own. Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being. Underlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp. The inclusion of God in our pledge therefore would further acknowledge the dependence of our people and our Government upon the moral directions of the Creator. At the same time it would serve to deny the atheistic and materialistic concepts of communism with its attendant subservience of the individual.

H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 1-2 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2340. This language reveals that the purpose of the 1954 Act was to take a position on the question of theism, namely, to support the existence and moral authority of God, while "deny[ing] . . .

atheistic and materialistic concepts." Id. Such a purpose runs counter to the Establishment Clause, which prohibits the government's endorsement or advancement not only of one particular religion at the expense of other religions, but also of religion at the expense of atheism.

> [T]he Court has unambiguously concluded that the individual freedom of conscience protected by the First Amendment embraces the right to select any religious faith or none at all. This conclusion derives support not only from the interest in respecting the individual's freedom of conscience, but also from the conviction that religious beliefs worthy of respect are the product of a free and voluntary choice by the faithful, and from recognition of the fact that the political interest in forestalling intolerance extends beyond intolerance among Christian sects—or even intolerance among "religions"—to encompass intolerance of the disbeliever and the uncertain.

Wallace, 472 U.S. at 52-54, 105 S. Ct. 2479.

In language that attempts to prevent future constitutional challenges, the sponsors of the 1954 Act expressly disclaimed a religious purpose. "This is not an act establishing a religion. . . . A distinction must be made between the existence of a religion as an institution and a belief in the sovereignty of God. The phrase 'under God' recognizes only the guidance of God in our national affairs." H.R. Rep. No. 83-1693, at 3 (1954), reprinted in 1954 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2339, 2341-42. This alleged distinction is irrelevant for constitutional purposes. The Act's affirmation of "a belief in the sovereignty of God" and its recognition of "the guidance of God" are endorsements by the government of religious beliefs. The Establishment Clause is not limited to "religion as an institution"; this is clear from cases such as Santa Fe, where the Court struck down student-initiated and student-led prayer at high school football games. 530 U.S. at 310-16, 120 S. Ct. 2266. The Establishment Clause guards not only against the establishment of "religion as an institution," but also against the endorsement of religious ideology by the government. Because the Act fails the purpose prong of Lemon, we need not examine the other prongs. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-14, 91 S. Ct. 2105.

Similarly, the school district policy also fails the Lemon test. Although it survives the first prong of Lemon because, as even Newdow concedes, the school district had the secular purpose of fostering patriotism in enacting the policy, the policy fails the second prong. As explained by this court in Kreisner v. City of San Diego, 1 F.3d 775, 782 (9th Cir. 1993), and by the Supreme Court in School District of Grand Rapids v. Ball, 473 U.S. 373, 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267 (1985), the second Lemon prong asks "whether the challenged government action is sufficiently likely to be perceived by adherents of the controlling denominations as an endorsement, and by the nonadherents as a disapproval, of their individual religious choices."[11] Ball, 473

[11] Although Ball was overruled in part by Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 236, 117 S. Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391 (1997), as the Court stated in Agostini, Ball's statement of the general principles and relevant tests to be used in determining what constitutes an Establishment Clause violation remain intact; only the underlying factual assumptions and presumptions have changed. In particular, the Court rejected the following three core assumptions of Ball:

U.S. at 390, 105 S. Ct. 3216. Given the age and impressionability of schoolchildren, as discussed above, particularly within the confined environment of the classroom, the policy is highly likely to convey an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God. Therefore the policy fails the effects prong of Lemon, and fails the Lemon test. In sum, both the policy and the Act fail the Lemon test as well as the endorsement and coercion tests.[12]

> (i) any public employee who works on the premises of a religious school is presumed to inculcate religion in her work; (ii) the presence of public employees on private school premises creates a symbolic union between church and state; and (iii) any and all public aid that directly aids the educational function of religious schools impermissibly finances religious indoctrination, even if the aid reaches such schools as a consequence of private decisionmaking.

Agostini, 521 U.S. at 222, 117 S. Ct. 1997. Therefore, Ball's restatement of the second prong of Lemon remains valid even after Agostini.

[12] We recognize that the Supreme Court has occasionally commented in dicta that the presence of "one nation under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. See Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. 3086; Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676, 104 S. Ct. 1355; id. at 693, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303-04, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); id. at 306-08, 83 S. Ct. 1560 (Goldberg, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring); Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n. 21, 82 S. Ct. 1261. However, the Court has never been presented with the question directly, and has always clearly refrained from deciding it. Accordingly, it has never applied any of the three tests to the Act or to any school policy regarding the recitation of the Pledge. That task falls to us, although the final word, as always, remains with the Supreme Court.

The only other United States Court of Appeals to consider the issue is the Seventh Circuit, which held in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), that a policy similar to the one before us regarding the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance containing the words "one nation under God" was constitutional. The Sherman court first stated that:

> If as Barnette holds no state may require anyone to recite the Pledge, and if as the prayer cases hold the recitation by a teacher or rabbi of unwelcome words is coercion, then the Pledge of Allegiance becomes unconstitutional under all circumstances, just as no school may read from a holy scripture at the start of class.

980 F.2d at 444. It then concludes, however, that this reasoning is flawed because the First Amendment "[does] not establish general rules about speech or schools; [it] call[s] for religion to be treated differently." Id. We have some difficulty understanding this statement; we do not believe that the Constitution prohibits compulsory patriotism as in Barnette, but permits compulsory religion as in this case. If government-endorsed religion is to be treated differently from government-endorsed patriotism, the treatment must be less favorable, not more.

The Seventh Circuit makes an even more serious error, however. It not only refuses to apply the Lemon test because of the Supreme Court's criticism of that test in Lee, but it also fails to apply the coercion test from Lee or the endorsement test from Lynch. Circuit courts are not free to ignore Supreme Court precedent in this manner. Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."). Instead of applying any of the tests announced by the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit simply frames the question as follows: "Must ceremonial references in civic life to a deity be understood as prayer, or support for all monotheistic religions, to the exclusion of atheists and those who worship multiple gods?" 980 F.2d at 445. Relying in part on Supreme Court dicta regarding the Pledge, the court answers this question in the negative, determining that "under God" is a statement

In conclusion, we hold that (1) the 1954 Act adding the words "under God" to the Pledge, and (2) EGUSD's policy and practice of teacher-led recitation of the Pledge, with the added words included, violate the Establishment Clause. The judgment of dismissal is vacated with respect to these two claims, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with our holding. Plaintiff is to recover costs on this appeal.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

which, taken within its context in the Pledge, is devoid of any significant religious content, and therefore constitutional. Id. at 447-48. At the very least, as discussed above in the text, the Supreme Court requires that any policy alleged to be an Establishment Clause violation must be held to the scrutiny of the established tests. Our application of all of the tests compels the conclusion that the policy and the Act challenged here violate the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Thus, we must respectfully differ from the Seventh Circuit.

REV_00164923

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting:

I concur in parts A, B and C[1] of the majority opinion, but dissent as to part D.

We are asked to hold that inclusion of the phrase "under God" in this nation's Pledge of Allegiance violates the religion clauses of the Constitution of the United States. We should do no such thing. We should, instead, recognize that those clauses were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were written to avoid discrimination.

We can run through the litany of tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time. Were we to do so, the one that appeals most to me, the one I think to be correct, is the concept that what the religion clauses of the First Amendment require is neutrality; that those clauses are, in effect, an early kind of equal protection provision and assure that government will neither discriminate for nor discriminate against a religion or religions. See Gentala v. City of Tucson, 244 F.3d 1065, 1083-86 (9th Cir.) (en banc) (Fernandez, J., dissenting), cert. granted and judgment vacated by 534 U.S. 946, 122 S. Ct. 340, 151 L.Ed.2d 256 (2001); *Goehring v. [1] I admit, however, to serious misgivings about standing to attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 itself. Congress has not compelled anyone to do anything. It surely has not directed that the Pledge be recited in class; only the California authorities have done that. Even if a general lack of standing to directly attack 4 U.S.C. § 4 would deprive federal courts of the opportunity to strike "under God" from that statute, any lament would be no more than a complaint about the limits on federal judges' constitutional power. Nonetheless, that ultimately makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case.

1306-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (Fernandez, J., concurring). But, legal world abstractions and ruminations aside, when all is said and done, the danger that "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis. The danger that phrase presents to our First Amendment freedoms is picayune at most.

Judges, including Supreme Court Justices, have recognized the lack of danger in that and similar expressions for decades, if not for centuries, as have presidents[2] and members of our Congress. *See, e.g., County of Allegheny v. Because my point is that a number of Justices have recognized the lack of danger and because I hope to avoid untoward complication in the setting out of the citations, I have not designated which Justices have joined in which opinion. Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019 (1983) (legislative prayer). I think it is worth stating a little more about two of the cases which I have just cited. In County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-03, 109 S. Ct. at 3106, the Supreme Court had this to say: "Our previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto and the pledge, characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." The Seventh Circuit, reacting in part to that statement, has wisely expressed the following thought:

> Plaintiffs observe that the Court sometimes changes its tune when it confronts a subject directly. True enough, but an inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so.

Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448.

Some, who rather choke on the notion of de minimis, have resorted to the euphemism "ceremonial deism." See, e.g., Lynch, 465 U.S. at 716, 104 S. Ct. at 1382 (Brennan, J., dissenting). But whatever it is called (I care not), it comes to this: such phrases as "In God We Trust," or "under God" have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity.

Those expressions have not caused any real harm of that sort over the years since 1791, and are not likely to do so in the future.[4] As I see it, that is not because they are drained of meaning.[5] Rather, as I have already indicated, it is because their tendency to establish religion (or affect its exercise) is exiguous. I recognize that some people may not feel good about hearing the phrases recited in their presence, but, then, others might not feel good if they are omitted. At any rate, the Constitution is a practical and balanced charter for the just governance of a free people in a vast territory. Thus, although we do feel good when we contemplate the effects of its inspiring phrasing and majestic promises, it is not primarily a feel-good prescription.[6] In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630, 642, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 1181, 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943), for example, the Supreme Court did not say that the Pledge could not be recited in the presence of Jehovah's Witness children; it merely said that they did not have to recite it.[7] That fully protected their con-

[4] They have not led us down the long path to kulturkampf or worse. Those who are somehow beset by residual doubts and fears should find comfort in the reflection that no baleful religious effects have been generated by the existence of similar references to a deity throughout our history. More specifically, it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954.

[5] See also Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 (Manion, J., concurring).

[6] We, by the way, indicated as much in American Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 277 F.3d 1114, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002), which involved governmental conduct that was much more questionable than adoption of the phrase "under God." See id. at 1126-28 (Noonan, J., dissenting).

stitutional rights by precluding the government from trenching upon "the sphere of intellect and spirit." Id. at 642, 63 S. Ct. at 1187. As the Court pointed out, their religiously based refusal "to participate in the ceremony [would] not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so." Id. at 630, 63 S. Ct. at 1181. We should not permit Newdow's feel-good concept to change that balance.

My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. "God Bless America" and "America the Beautiful" will be gone for sure, and while use of the first three stanzas of "The Star Spangled Banner" will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the fourth.[8] And currency beware! Judges can accept those results if they limit themselves to elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place. But they do so at the price of removing a vestige of the awe we all must feel at the immenseness of the universe and our own small place within it, as well as the wonder we must feel at the good fortune of our country. That will cool the febrile nerves of a few at the cost of removing the healthy glow conferred upon many citizens when the forbidden verses, or phrases, are uttered, read, or seen.

In short, I cannot accept the eliding of the simple phrase "under God" from our Pledge of Allegiance, when it is obvious that its tendency to establish religion

[8] Nor will we be able to stray into the fourth stanza of "My Country 'Tis of Thee" for that matter.

in this country or to interfere with the free exercise (or non-exercise) of religion is de minimis.[9]

Thus, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

[9] Lest I be misunderstood, I must emphasize that to decide this case it is not necessary to say, and I do not say, that there is such a thing as a de minimis constitutional violation. What I do say is that the de minimis tendency of the Pledge to establish a religion or to interfere with its free exercise is no constitutional violation at all.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

No. 00-16423
D.C. No. CV 00-00495-MLS/PAN

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT

v.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, Milton L. Schwartz, Senior Judge, Presiding

Argued and Submitted: March 14, 2002
Filed: June 26, 2002
Amended: February 28, 2003

ORDER

The opinion filed June 26, 2002, is ordered amended. The Clerk is instructed to file the amended opinion with

* George W. Bush is substituted for his predecessor, William Jefferson Clinton, as President of the United States. Fed. R. App. P. 43(c)(2).

Judge Fernandez's amended concurrence/dissent. Judge Reinhardt's concurrence in the order denying rehearing en banc, along with Judge O'Scannlain's and Judge McKeown's dissent from that order shall also be filed.

The Clerk is also instructed not to accept for filing any new petitions for rehearing and petitions for rehearing en banc in this case.

With the opinion thus amended, the panel has voted unanimously to deny the petitions for rehearing.

The full court has been advised of the petitions for rehearing en banc. An active judge requested a vote on whether to rehear the matter en banc. The matter failed to receive a majority of the votes of the non-recused active judges in favor of en banc consideration. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

The petitions for rehearing are DENIED and the petitions for rehearing en banc are DENIED.

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, concurring in the order:

My views as to the merits of this issue are set forth in the amended majority opinion authored by Judge Goodwin, and I adhere to them fully. I write separately for two reasons unrelated to the contents of that opinion. I write first to comment on the separate dissent to the denial of rehearing en banc authored by Judge McKeown and joined in by Judges Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson, in which my colleagues appear to express the view that a case should be reheard en banc whenever it involves "a question of exceptional importance." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a)(2).[1] Second, I am

[1] While the brief separate dissent is deliberately opaque and uninformative, I would suspect that not all of its signatories compelled to register my strong disagreement with one particularly unfortunate aspect of Judge O'Scannlain's principal dissent that reflects a serious misconception of fundamental constitutional principles and the proper role of the federal judiciary.

I

As to the first question, I disagree with the notion that the importance of an issue is a sufficient reason to take a case en banc, either under the Rule or as a matter of judicial policy. Rule 35(a) advises this court of its discretionary power to order that a case already decided by a three-judge panel be reheard by the full court. Specifically, the rule begins by stating that a "majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc." FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) (emphasis added). Subsection two guides such discretionary consideration by stating that one compelling reason to grant rehearing en banc is the "exceptional importance" of a particular case.

The most reasonable construction of the Rule is that this court should rehear a case en banc when it is both of exceptional importance and the decision *requires correctio*n. See United States v. Burdeau, 180 F.3d 1091, 1092 (9th Cir. 1999) (Tashima, J., concurring in the order denying rehearing en banc) ("Subject to rare exceptions. . . . we should review the statements in three[-]judge panel opinions only to 'determine whether the [panel's] legal error resulted in an erroneous believe that the general rule they appear to advocate should apply regardless of the "correctness" of the panel opinion. The concept that "exceptional importance" is, without more, a sufficient reason for en banc review is, however, shared by at least several members of the Court and accordingly merits some discussion.

judgment . . . .'") (quoting Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984)). A decision may warrant correction because a three-judge panel has reached a result or adopted a legal rule or principle that conflicts with our existing circuit law or that the majority of our court believes is incorrect and needs further review. The fact that three-judge panels often decide cases of exceptional importance, whether it be the constitutionality of a state's decision to execute an individual who may be innocent, the existence or non-existence of a fundamental right, or the ability of the Congress to require the states to comply with federal law—an issue that some of us thought had been settled by the successful end to the Civil War—is an unremarkable, but undeniably important, aspect of our appellate system. See Tracey E. George, The Dynamics and Determinants of the Decision to Grant En Banc Review, 74 WASH. L. REV. 213, 218 (1999) (stating that three-judge panels "representing and acting on behalf of the whole court" is a "basic tenet of our intermediate appellate system"). Unless reconsidered en banc, a decision of a three-judge panel is a decision of our court and speaks for our court. Moreover, it ordinarily constitutes the final judicial decision.[2]

To rehear a case en banc simply on the basis that it involves an important issue would undermine the three-

[2] While the Supreme Court unquestionably has the authority to review any or all of the decisions of the Court of Appeals, the Court has elected to hear a remarkably small number of cases in recent years. For example, in the 2001 term, of the 7,852 case filings, the Court heard argument in 88 cases, and disposed of 85 in 76 signed opinions. See Supreme Court of the United States, 2002 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, at http://www.supremecourtus.gov/publicinfo/year-end/2002year-endreport.html.

judge panel system and create an impractical and crushing burden on what otherwise should be, as Rule 35(a) suggests, an exceptional occurrence. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(a) ("An en banc hearing or rehearing is not favored . . . ."). According to statistics kept by the Clerk of the court, in 2002 this court decided 5,190 cases on the merits, more than 98% of which were finally decided by three-judge panels. These decisions are not measures of "rough justice," later to be refined by the en banc court. Unless they decide issues of exceptional importance erroneously, create a direct intra-circuit split, or unless the interests of justice require that the decision be corrected, the opinions of three-judge panels should constitute the final action of this court.

II

I also feel compelled to discuss a disturbingly wrong-headed approach to constitutional law manifested in the dissent authored by Judge O'Scannlain. The dissent suggests that this court should be able to conclude that the panel's holding was erroneous by observing the "public and political reaction" to its decision. Dissent at 2783. This is not the first time that the magnitude of the political response regarding an issue has distracted certain members of this court. An equally disturbing misunderstanding of the nature of our Constitution and the role of the federal judiciary was manifested in Coalition for Econ. Equity v. Wilson, 122 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 1997), a case involving a California initiative on the subject of affirmative action. There, the three-judge panel, in a case that unfortunately was not taken en banc, notwithstanding its exceptional importance, made the following remarkable statement: "A system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy." Id. at 699 (O'Scannlain, J.).

The Bill of Rights is, of course, intended to protect the rights of those in the minority against the temporary passions of a majority which might wish to limit their freedoms or liberties. As Justice Jackson recognized:

> The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943). It is the highest calling of federal judges to invoke the Constitution to repudiate unlawful majoritarian actions and, when necessary, to strike down statutes that would infringe on fundamental rights, whether such statutes are adopted by legislatures or by popular vote. The constitutional system that vests such power in an independent judiciary does not "test[ ] the integrity of . . . democracy." It makes democracy vital, and is one of our proudest heritages.

Moreover, Article III judges are by constitutional design insulated from the political pressures governing members of the other two branches of government. We are given life tenure and a secured salary so that, in our unique capacity to "say what the law is," Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803), we may decide constitutional issues without regard to popular vote, political consequence, or the prospect of future career advancement.[3] Most federal judges do not question the wisdom of this approach. When the federal judiciary is so firmly separated by constitutional structure from the direct influence of politics, we must not undermine that structure by allowing political pressures, polls, or "focus groups" to influence our opinions, even indirectly.

This is not to say that federal judges should be completely sequestered from the attitudes of the nation we serve, even though our service is accomplished not through channeling popular sentiment but through strict adherence to established constitutional principles. The Constitution contemplates occasions when we must be responsive to long-term societal trends—when determining, for example, that which is "cruel and unusual," see Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9 (1992), whether in the execution of the mentally retarded, see Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, ___, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2247 (2002), or the execution of juvenile offenders, see In re Stanford, 123 S.Ct. 472, 474 (2002) (Stevens, J., dissenting from the denial of an application for an original writ of habeas corpus). This broader long-term

[3] Alexander Hamilton was admirably cognizant of the danger of relying on temporary political whimsy:

> This independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humors which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjectures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information, and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency, in the meantime, to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community.

social conscience, however, is a matter far different from responding to particular immediate political pressures. We may not—we must not—allow public sentiment or outcry to guide our decisions. It is particularly important that we understand the nature of our obligations and the strength of our constitutional principles in times of national crisis; it is then that our freedoms and our liberties are in the greatest peril. Any suggestion, whenever or wherever made, that federal judges should be encouraged by the approval of the majority or deterred by popular disfavor is fundamentally inconsistent with the Constitution and must be firmly rejected.

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge, with whom KLEINFELD, GOULD, TALLMAN, RAWLINSON, and CLIFTON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

Last June, a two-judge majority of a three-judge panel of this court ruled that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional simply because of the presence of two offending words: "under God." It was an exercise in judicial legerdemain which, not surprisingly, produced a public outcry across the nation. Since that time we, as a court, have had the opportunity to order reconsideration of that decision en banc, yet a majority of the 24 active judges eligible to vote has decided not to do so. While there are, no doubt, varied and plausible reasons why this result occurred, I respectfully conclude that our court has made a serious mistake and thus must dissent from its order denying reconsideration.

I

While I cannot say that a randomly selected 11-judge panel would have ruled differently, I believe that neither the June 2002 version, Newdow v. United States Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Newdow I"), nor today's slightly revised version, ___ F.3d ___ ("Newdow II") to essentially the same effect, is defensible. We should have reheard Newdow I en banc, not because it was controversial, but because it was wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.[1] We should have given 11 judges a chance to determine whether the two-judge majority opinion truly reflects the law of the Ninth Circuit.[2] Reciting the Pledge of Allegiance cannot possibly be an "establishment of religion" under any reasonable interpretation of the Constitution.[3]

Perhaps in an effort to avoid ultimate Supreme Court review, Newdow II which replaces it, avoids expressly reaching the technical question of the constitutionality of the 1954 Act. Fundamentally, however, the amended decision is every bit as bold as its predecessor. It bans

[1] Judge Reinhardt's protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, I, too, believe that "[o]ur judicial charge is to stand above the inflamed passions of the public." Dazo v. Globe Airport Sec. Serv., 295 F.3d 934, 943 (9th Cir. 2002) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring and dissenting). My disagreement with the panel majority has nothing to do with bending to the will of an outraged populace, and everything to do with the fact that Judge Goodwin and Judge Reinhardt misinterpret the Constitution and 40 years of Supreme Court precedent. That most people understand this makes the decision no less wrong. It doesn't take an Article III judge to recognize that the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school does not violate the First Amendment.

[2] This case presents the classic situation required for our court to rehear a case en banc. En banc consideration would have allowed us to correct the error of a prior panel's decision with respect to the Pledge and resolve a constitutional question of exceptional importance that affects the lives of millions of school children who reside within the geographical boundaries of the Ninth Circuit. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a). The exceptional importance of this case reinforces the need for correction of the panel's mistaken view of our Constitution.

[3] U.S. Const. Amend. I. ("Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.") (emphasis added).

the voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in the public schools of the nine western states thereby directly affecting over 9.6 million students,[4] necessarily implies that both an Act of Congress[5] and a California law[6] are unconstitutional, clearly conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Cmty. Consol. Sch. Dist. 21 of Wheeling Township, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), and threatens cash-strapped school districts and underpaid teachers with the specter of civil actions for money damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Newdow I, the subject of our en banc vote, no longer exists; it was withdrawn after the en banc call failed. The panel majority has evolved to this extent: in Newdow I the Pledge was unconstitutional for everybody; in Newdow II the Pledge is only unconstitutional for public school children and teachers. The remainder of this dissent is directed entirely to Newdow II, which, as shall be demonstrated, differs little from Newdow I in its central holding. With grim insistence, the majority in Newdow II continues to stand by its original error—that voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public school violates the Establishment Clause because, according to the two-judge panel majority, it is "a religious act." Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Common sense would seem to dictate otherwise, as the public and political reaction should by now have made clear. If reciting the Pledge is truly "a religious act" in violation of the Establishment Clause, then so is the recitation of the Constitution[7] itself, the Declaration of Independence,[8] the Gettysburg Address,[9] the National Motto,[10] or the singing of the National Anthem.[11] Such an assertion would make hypocrites out of the Founders, and would have the effect of driving any and all references to our religious heritage out of our schools, and eventually out of our public life.

[8] The Declaration of Independence contains multiple references to God. The founders claimed the right to "dissolve the political bands" based on "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God." The most famous passage, of course, is that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." Subsequently, the signatories "appeal[ ] to the Supreme Judge of the world to rectify their intentions."

In fact, the Anthem is much more explicitly religious in content than the Pledge, and much more than a 'mere' profession of the composer's faith in a Supreme Being, as the majority would have it. See Newdow II, ___ F.3d at ___. Consider the following passage from the fourth stanza: "Blest with victory and peace, may the heaven-rescued land, Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation. Then conquer we must, when our cause is just, And this be our motto: 'In God is our trust.' "(emphasis added).

II

The Newdow II majority's primary legal argument is that the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992), a school prayer case, controls the outcome of this case. In fact, rather than merely following Lee and its predecessors, the two-judge panel majority makes a radical departure from Lee and the cases it purports to apply. To understand why this is so, an examination of the Supreme Court's school prayer decisions which culminate in Lee is in order.

The fountainhead of all school prayer cases is Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962). In Engel the Court considered a school policy whereby children were directed to say aloud a prayer composed by state officials. The Court found that this practice was inconsistent with the Establishment Clause, reasoning that "[the] program of daily classroom invocation of God's blessings as prescribed in the Regents' prayer is a religious activity. It is a solemn avowal of divine faith and supplication for the blessings of the Almighty. The nature of such a prayer has always been religious." Id. at 424-25. The Court concluded by stating that the state should leave prayer, "that purely religious function, to the people themselves." Id. at 435. In a footnote, it reasoned as follows:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to > express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21. The Court drew an explicit distinction between patriotic invocations of God on the one hand, and prayer, an "unquestioned religious exercise," on the other. Concurring, Justice Douglas wrote that the narrow question presented was whether the state "oversteps the bounds when it finances a religious exercise." Id. at 439 (Douglas, J., concurring). Justice Douglas noted that the Pledge of Allegiance, "like . . . prayer, recognizes the existence of a Supreme Being." Id. at 440 n.5. However, he noted that the House Report recommending the addition of the words "under God" to the Pledge stated that those words "in no way run contrary to the First Amendment but recognize 'only the guidance of God in our national affairs.'" Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3).

The following year, the Supreme Court decided Abington School Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963). In that case, the Court considered the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania statute requiring that "[a]t least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read, without comment, at the opening of each public school on each school day." Id. at 205. The practice in public schools was for a teacher or student volunteer to read the required Bible verses each morning. This in turn was followed by a recitation of the Lord's prayer. Finally, the class would recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Id. at 207-08. The Court struck down the Bible reading and the practice of reciting the Lord's prayer as a state prescribed "religious ceremony," id. at 223, but said nothing about the practice of reciting the Pledge.

As in Engel, the Court took pains to point to the character of the exercises it found wanting. The Court reasoned that "reading . . . the verses . . . possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance. The devotional and religious nature of the morning exercises is made all the more apparent by the fact that the Bible reading is followed immediately by a recital in unison by the pupils of the Lord's prayer." Id. at 210. "The pervading religious character of the ceremony," wrote Justice Clark, "cannot be gainsaid," and led to the conclusion that the exercises violated the Establishment Clause. Id. at 224.

The concurring opinions in Schempp were all to the same effect. Justice Douglas agreed with the majority's conclusion that the practices at issue violated the Establishment Clause because "the State is conducting a religious exercise." Id. at 229 (Douglas, J., concurring). In a lengthy concurrence, Justice Brennan wrote that "[t]he religious nature of the exercises here challenged seems plain." Id. at 266 (Brennan, J., concurring). After surveying the history of devotional exercises in American public schools, Justice Brennan stated that "the panorama of history permits no other conclusion than that daily prayers and Bible readings in the public schools have always been designed to be, and have been regarded as, essentially religious exercises." Id. at 277-78. For Justice Brennan, "religious exercises in the public schools present a unique problem" but "not every involvement of religion in public life violates the Establishment Clause." Id. at 294. He warned that "[a]ny attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers." Id. at 301. Specifically, he wrote that "[t]he reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance . . . may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact." Id. at 304.

Justice Goldberg also wrote separately, stating that "the clearly religious practices presented in these cases are . . . wholly compelling." Id. at 305 (Goldberg, J., concurring). He reasoned that "[t]he pervasive religiosity and direct governmental involvement inhering in the prescription of prayer and Bible reading in the public schools . . . cannot realistically be termed simply accommodation." Id. at 307. Like Justice Brennan, Justice Goldberg cautioned that the decision "does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause." Id. at 307-08. He then quoted in full the passage from Engel which drew a distinction between patriotic invocations of God, and unquestioned religious exercises that give rise to Establishment Clause violations. Id.

3

The next case in this line is Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38 (1985). That case considered the constitutionality of an Alabama statute authorizing a 1-minute period of silence in public schools "for meditation or voluntary prayer." Id. at 40. The Court found that "[t]he wholly religious character" of the challenged law was "plainly evident from its text." Id. at 58. The legislature's one and only purpose in enacting the law was "to return prayer to the public schools." Id. at 59-60. Justice Powell's separate concurrence was "prompted by Alabama's persistence in attempting to institute state-sponsored prayer in the public schools." Id. at 62 (Powell, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote separately to suggest that moment-of-silence statutes were not "a religious exercise," and therefore were constitutional. Id. at 72 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Justice O'Connor wrote further that "the words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion with 'the legitimate secular purposes of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future.'" Id. at 78 n.5 (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring)) (alterations in original). In contrast, the Alabama statute at issue was very different from the Pledge—the state had "intentionally crossed the line [by] affirmatively endorsing the particular religious practice of prayer." Id. at 84.

Finally, there is the Supreme Court's decision in Lee v. Weisman. The issue presented was "whether including clerical members who offer prayers as part of the official school graduation ceremony" is consistent with the Establishment Clause. 505 U.S. at 580. The graduating students entered as a group in a processional, after which "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers." Id. at 583. Justice Kennedy wrote that "the significance of the prayers lies . . . at the heart of [the] case." Id. He framed the inquiry as follows:

> These dominant facts mark and control the confines of our decision: State officials direct the performance of a formal religious exercise at promotional and graduation ceremonies for secondary schools. Even for those students who object to the religious exercise their attendance and participation in the state-sponsored religious activity are in a fair and real sense obligatory, though the school district does not require attendance as a condition for receipt of the diploma.

Id. at 586.

The Court in Lee concluded that Engel and its progeny controlled the outcome, writing that "[c]onducting this formal religious observance conflicts with settled rules pertaining to prayer exercises for students." Id. at 587. As in Engel, Schempp, and Wallace, the crucial factor was the nature of the exercise in which the students were asked to participate. Time and again the Court went out of its way to stress the nature of the exercise, writing that prayer was "an overt religious exercise," id. at 588, and that "prayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion." Id. at 592. The practice was unconstitutional because "the State has in every practical sense compelled attendance and participation in an explicit religious exercise at an event of singular importance to every student." Id. at 598. Just like the decisions in Engel and Schempp, the Court in Lee took pains to stress the confines of its holding, concluding that "[w]e do not hold that every state action implicating religion is invalid if one or a few citizens find it offensive," id. at 597, and that "[a] relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion from every aspect of public life could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution." Id. at 598.

B

Two fundamental principles may therefore be derived from the school prayer cases culminating in Lee.

1

Formal religious observances are prohibited in public schools because of the danger that they may effect an establishment of religion. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 424-25 ("[D]aily classroom invocation of God's blessings . . . is a religious activity."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 (Bible reading followed by the Lord's prayer "possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (Prayer is of a "wholly religious character."); Lee, 505 U.S. at 586 (Prayer written by state officials constitutes a "formal religious exercise"). In each of these cases, the Court took pains to stress that not every reference to God in public schools was prohibited. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 435 n.21 ("patriotic or ceremonial occasions" which contain "references to the Deity" bear "no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise" of prayer); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 301 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God . . . in the classroom would be fraught with dangers."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("the words 'under God' in the Pledge" are not unconstitutional); Lee, 505 U.S. at 598 ("A relentless and all-pervasive attempt to exclude religion . . . could itself become inconsistent with the Constitution.").

Once it is established that the state is sanctioning a formal religious exercise, then the fact that the students are not required to participate in the formal devotional exercises does not prevent those exercises from being unconstitutional. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 431 ("[T]he indirect coercive pressure upon religious minorities to conform" to the prayer exercises "is plain."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210-11 ("The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 57 (State-sanctioned voluntary prayer in public schools violates Establishment Clause); Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."). To be sure, Lee is the Court's most elaborate pronouncement with respect to indirect coercion. It identifies the circumstances in which indirect coercion may be said to be unconstitutional: when the government directs "the performance of a formal religious exercise" in such a way as to oblige the participation of objectors. Lee, 505 U.S. at 586.

III

No court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances. But Newdow II finesses all that, and the sleight of hand the majority uses becomes immediately apparent: obfuscate the nature of the exercise at issue and emphasize indirect coercion. The panel majority simply ignores, because they are inconvenient, the "dominant and controlling facts" in Lee and its predecessors: that Establishment Clause violations in public schools are triggered only when "State officials direct the performance of a *formal religious exercis*e." 505 U.S. at 586 (emphasis added); see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 210 ("devotional . . . religious observance" prohibited); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 58 (activities of a "wholly religious character" prohibited).

To avoid a flagrant inconsistency with Lee, and with 40 years of Supreme Court precedent, the two-judge panel majority must first examine whether the act of pledging allegiance is "a religious act." As the Seventh Circuit in Sherman framed it, "Does 'under God' make the Pledge a prayer, whose recitation violates the establishment clause of the first amendment?" 980 F.2d at 445. That court answered the question in the negative; the Newdow II majority, in conclusory fashion, simply assumes the affirmative. ___ F.3d at ___ ("[W]e conclude that the school district policy impermissibly coerces a religious act.") (emphasis added).

This assertion belies common sense. Most assuredly, to pledge allegiance to flag and country is a patriotic act. After the public and political reaction last summer, it is difficult to believe that anyone can continue to think otherwise. The fact the Pledge is infused with an undoubtedly religious reference does not change the nature of the act itself. The California statute under which the school district promulgated its policy is entitled "[d]aily performance of patriotic exercises in public schools." Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (emphasis added). The Pledge is recited not just in schools but also at various official events and public ceremonies, including perhaps the most patriotic of occasions—naturalization ceremonies. Generally, the Pledge is recited while standing, facing a United States flag, with the right hand held over the heart, much like the National Anthem. See 4 U.S.C. § 4 (articulating proper procedure for reciting Pledge); 36 U.S.C. § 301 (during anthem "all present . . . should stand at attention facing the flag with the right hand over the heart."). Whatever one thinks of the normative values underlying the Pledge, they are unquestionably patriotic in nature. Indeed, it is precisely because of the Pledge's explicitly patriotic nature that in 1943 the Supreme Court ruled that no one is required to Pledge allegiance against their will. West Virginia v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

In contrast, to pray is to speak directly to God, with bowed head, on bended knee, or some other reverent disposition. It is a solemn and humble approach to the divine in order to give thanks, to petition, to praise, to supplicate, or to ask for guidance. Communal prayer, by definition, is an even more forceful and profound experience for those present. Little wonder that the Supreme Court has recognized the "unique problem" and "particular risk" posed by school prayer to non-participating students. Lee, 505 U.S. at 592 ("[P]rayer exercises in public schools carry a particular risk of indirect coercion."); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 (Brennan, J., concurring) (noting that prayers in public schools "present a unique problem").

Not only does the panel majority's conclusion that pledging allegiance is "a religious act" defy common sense, it contradicts our 200-year history and tradition of patriotic references to God. The Supreme Court has insisted that interpretations of the Establishment Clause must comport "with what history reveals was the contemporaneous understanding of its guarantees." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 673; see also Schempp, 374 U.S. at 294 ("[T]he line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.") (Brennan, J., concurring).

The majority's unpersuasive and problematic disclaimers notwithstanding, Newdow II precipitates a "war with our national tradition," McCollum v. Bd. of Ed., 333 U.S. 203, 211 (1948), and as Judge Fernandez so eloquently points out in dissent, only the purest exercise in sophistry could save multiple references to our religious heritage in our national life from Newdow II's axe. Of course, the Constitution itself explicitly mentions God, as does the Declaration of Independence, the document which marked us as a separate people. The Gettysburg Address, inconveniently for the majority, contains the same precise phrase—"under God"—found to constitute an Establishment Clause violation in the Pledge.[12] After Newdow II, are we to suppose that, were a school to permit—not require—the recitation of the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, or the Gettysburg Address in public schools, that too would violate the Constitution? Were [12] See infra footnote 9.

the "founders of the United States . . . unable to understand their own handiwork[?]" Sherman, 980 F.2d at 445. Indeed, the recitation of the Declaration of Independence would seem to be the better candidate for the chopping block than the Pledge, since the Pledge does not require anyone to acknowledge the personal relationship with God to which the Declaration speaks.[13] So too with our National Anthem and our National Motto.

Our national celebration of Thanksgiving dates back to President Washington, which Congress stated was "to be observed by acknowledgment with grateful hearts, the many and signal favours of Almighty God." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675 n.2. Congress made Thanksgiving a permanent holiday in 1941,[14] and Christmas has been a national holiday since 1894.[15] Are pere [sic] Newdow's constitutional rights violated when his daughter is told not to attend school on Thanksgiving? On Christmas day? Must school outings to federal courts be prohibited, lest the children be unduly influenced by the dreaded intonation "God save these United States and this honorable Court"?[16] A theory of the Establishment Clause that would have the effect of driving out of our public life the multiple references to [16] Indeed, even our own court's formal announcement to open sessions contains the offending word: "Hear ye! hear ye! All persons having business with the honorable, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit will now draw near, give your attention and you will be heard, for this court is now in session. God save these United States and this honorable Court." (emphasis added).

the Divine that run through our laws, our rituals, and our ceremonies is no theory at all.

B

As if all of this were not enough, the Supreme Court has gone out of its way to make it plain that the Pledge itself passes constitutional muster. In two of the school prayer cases, the Court noted without so much as a hint of disapproval the fact that the students, in addition to being subject to formal religious observances, also recited the Pledge of Allegiance. See Schempp, 374 U.S. at 207-08 (noting that the practice in public schools consisted of Bible reading and recitation of the Lord's prayer, followed by recitation of the Pledge); Lee, 505 U.S. at 583 (noting that "the students stood for the Pledge of Allegiance and remained standing during the rabbi's prayers.").

Several other Supreme Court cases contain explicit references to the constitutionality of the Pledge. See Engel, 370 U.S. at 440 n.5 (Douglas, J., concurring) ("[The Pledge] in no way run[s] contrary to the First Amendment") (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3); Schempp, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("[R]eciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincolns' Gettysburg Address."); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("[T]he words 'under God' in the Pledge . . . serve as an acknowledgment of religion."); Co. of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (Blackmun, J., for the court) ("Our previous opinions have considered in dicta . . . the pledge, characterizing [it] as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief."); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 676 (1984) (Burger, C.J., for the court) ("Other examples of reference to our religious heritage are found . . . in the language 'One nation under God,' as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag. That pledge is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year.").

The panel majority's answer to these myriad statements from our high court is summarily to dismiss them as dicta. However, "dicta of the Supreme Court have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold. We should not blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." Zal v. Steppe, 968 F.2d 924, 935 (9th Cir. 1992) (Noonan, J., concurring and dissenting in part); see also United States v. Baird, 85 F.3d 450, 453 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[W]e treat Supreme Court dicta with due deference.").[17]

[17] Other courts have, unremarkably enough, not been so flippant when it comes to considering consistent Supreme Court dicta on this issue. See Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448 ("[A]n inferior court had best respect what the majority says rather than read between the lines. If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so."); Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214, 217 (10th Cir. 1996) ("[T]his court considers itself bound by Supreme Court dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when the dicta is recent and not enfeebled by later statements."); ACLU v. Capital Square Review, 243 F.3d 289, 301 n.10 (6th Cir. 2001) ("We should . . . be amazed if the Supreme Court were now to question the constitutionality of the [revised Pledge]"). Indeed, the unanimity on this point relative to Newdow II is striking.

C

The Newdow II majority, then, finds itself caught between a rock and a hard place—the recitation of the Pledge is not a formal religious act, while patriotic invocations of God do not give rise to Establishment Clause violations. It nonetheless manages to skirt these obstacles to reach its indirect coercion analysis. Newdow II's conclusory foray into the social sciences is a case study, an advertisement, for why it is that the Supreme Court has anchored coercion analysis only to those situations where "formal religious exercises" take place in our public schools. The panel majority seeks to protect dissenters at the risk of courting some unpopularity, but this is not the test. "[O]ffense alone does not in every case show a violation . . . . and sometimes to endure social isolation or even anger may be the price of conscience or nonconformity." Lee, 505 U.S. at 597-98. The Newdow II majority's expansive application of the coercion test is ill-suited to a society as diverse as ours, since almost every cultural practice is bound to offend someone's sensibilities. In affording Michael Newdow the right to impose his views on others, Newdow II affords him a right to be fastidiously intolerant and self-indulgent. In granting him this supposed right, moreover, the two-judge panel majority has not eliminated feelings of discomfort and isolation, it has simply shifted them from one group to another.

Newdow II's psychological ipse dixit is also delivered without reference or regard to our collective experience in the half-century since the passage of the offending statute. In that time, generations of Americans have grown up reciting the Pledge, religious tolerance and diversity has flourished in this country, and we have become a beacon for other nations in this regard. As

Judge Fernandez observes, "it is difficult to detect any signs of incipient theocracy springing up since the Pledge was amended in 1954." Newdow II ___ F.3d at ___ n.4 (Fernandez, J., dissenting).

IV

In fairness to the Newdow II panel majority, its professed "neutrality" does have some plausible basis in the case law of the Supreme Court, which has undoubtedly constructed a "fractured and incoherent doctrinal path" in the Establishment Clause area, broadly speaking. Sep. of Church and State Comm. v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring). Indeed, its Establishment Clause cases sometimes "more closely resemble ad hoc Delphic pronouncements than models of guiding legal principles." Ingebretsen v. Jackson Pub. Sch. Dist., 88 F.3d 274, 282 (5th Cir. 1996) (Jones, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Supreme Court Justices themselves have recognized that if some of its reasoning "were to be applied logically, it would lead to the elimination" of many cherished, long-standing practices. Co. of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., dissenting).

With respect to the issue presented in this case, however, the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion. Even Justice Brennan, that most stalwart of separationists, recognized that some official acknowledgment of God is appropriate "if the government is not to adopt a stilted indifference to the religious life of the people." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 714 (Brennan, J., dissenting). The decision reached in Newdow II does precisely that: it adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people.

But Newdow II goes further, and confers a favored status on atheism in our public life. In a society with a pervasive public sector, our public schools are a most important means for transmitting ideas and values to future generations. The silence the majority commands is not neutral—it itself conveys a powerful message, and creates a distorted impression about the place of religion in our national life. The absolute prohibition on any mention of God in our schools creates a bias against religion. The panel majority cannot credibly advance the notion that Newdow II is neutral with respect to belief versus non-belief; it affirmatively favors the latter to the former. One wonders, then, does atheism become the default religion protected by the Establishment Clause?

In short, a lack of clarity in the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause cases generally does not help to explain or to justify the panel majority's decision with respect to this particular issue. Put simply, the panel was asked to decide whether the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools amounted to a government establishment of religion. The answer to that question is clearly, obviously, no. We made a grave error in failing to take Newdow I en banc, and we have failed to correct that error ourselves. Now we have Newdow II. Perhaps the Supreme Court will have the opportunity to correct the error for us. I must respectfully dissent from the order denying reconsideration en banc.

McKEOWN, Circuit Judge, with whom HAWKINS, THOMAS, and RAWLINSON, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc:

The recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance by school children presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance that merits reconsideration by the en banc court. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2) (en banc hearing appropriate when "the proceeding involves a question of exceptional importance"). Although not every case of exceptional importance can or should be reheard en banc, this is a case that should be reheard. I respectfully dissent from the court's decision to deny rehearing en banc.

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Order by Judge GOODWIN; Concurrence by Judge FERNANDEZ.

GOODWIN, Circuit Judge.

After we issued our June 26, 2002 opinion in this case, Sandra Banning, the mother of Michael Newdow's daughter, filed a motion for leave to intervene, in order to, inter alia, challenge Newdow's standing to maintain this action. Banning attached to her motion as an exhibit a copy of a February 6, 2002 California Superior Court custody order. That order awarded Banning "sole legal custody" of the child. We have carefully reconsidered the question of Newdow's Article III standing in light of this custody order and affirm our holding that he has standing as a parent to continue to pursue his claim in federal court.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

When this case first reached us from the district court, no legal custody question or order had been disclosed to the federal courts. Newdow had alleged in the district court that he was the father, and had custody of the minor child. The record now indicates that Newdow and Banning formed a family consisting of an unmarried man, an unmarried woman, and their biological minor child, who lived together part of the time and lived in separate homes in Florida and California, from time to time, with informal visiting arrangements. This informal arrangement apparently was not subject to any custody order until February 6, 2002, after Newdow had appealed from the dismissal of the action he had commenced in federal district court to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the practice of reciting the pledge of allegiance in the public elementary school his child attends.

On February 6, the California Superior Court entered an order containing the following language:

> The child's mother, Ms. Banning, to have sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and > welfare of [the child]. Specifically, both parents shall consult with one another on substantial decisions relating to non-emergency major medical care, dental, optometry, psychological and educational needs of [the child]. If mutual agreement is not reached in the above, then Ms. Banning may exercise legal control of [the child] that is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order. The father shall have access to all of [the child's] school and medical records.

Thereafter, Newdow, alleging "changed circumstances," filed a motion in the Superior Court for a modification of the custody order, seeking, inter alia, joint legal custody with Banning of their child.

On September 25, 2002, the Superior Court (Judge Mize) entered an in personam order enjoining Newdow from pleading his daughter as an unnamed party or representing her as a "next friend" in this lawsuit. The United States promptly filed a motion, which we have granted, to enlarge the record to include the state court transcript of the September 25 hearing before Judge Mize. That transcript contemplates a full trial in the future on Newdow's motion for modification of the February 6 custody order.

Judge Mize appropriately reserved to this court, however, the question of Newdow's Article III standing in federal court. Newdow no longer claims to represent his child, but asserts that he retains standing in his own right as a parent to challenge alleged unconstitutional state action affecting his child while she attends public school in the Elk Grove Unified School District (EGUSD).

II. DISCUSSION

Our original opinion in this case holds that a parent has Article III standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds state action affecting his child in public school. See Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 292 F.3d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Doe v. Madison Sch. Dist. No. 321, 177 F.3d 789, 795 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc) and Grove v. Mead Sch. Dist. No. 354, 753 F.2d 1528, 1532 (9th Cir. 1985)). Banning's motion for leave to intervene presents a question of first impression in this Circuit which we are required to consider, even though raised for the first time on appeal. See United States v. Viltrakis, 108 F.3d 1159, 1160 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he jurisdictional issue of standing can be raised at any time."). Does the grant of sole legal custody to Banning deprive Newdow, as a noncustodial parent, of Article III standing to object to unconstitutional government action affecting his child?

A Seventh Circuit decision, Navin v. Park Ridge School District 64, 270 F.3d 1147 (7th Cir. 2001) (per curiam), addresses a noncustodial parent's standing to challenge a school's educational plan for his disabled child under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Though not controlling, the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Navin illustrates a useful method of analysis for the standing question presented here. The divorce decree in that case had granted the mother sole legal custody of her son. The Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act provided that the legal custodian may determine, absent an agreement by the parties to the contrary, "the child's uprising, including but not limited to, his education, health care and religious training." See 750 IL CH § 5/608(a). Contending that tutoring for his dyslexic son was being provided by a "crossing guard supervisor with no skill (or at least no certification) in educating dyslexic youths," the father in Navin had asked for an administrative hearing under the IDEA and filed suit in federal court when the hearing officer terminated the proceeding without addressing the merits. 270 F.3d at 1148. The district court dismissed the father's suit, holding that as a noncustodial parent, he had no standing to challenge action affecting his child in school. Id.

The Seventh Circuit held, however, that noncustodial parents do not automatically lack standing under the IDEA. Id. at 1149. Instead, the court of appeals explained that whether the noncustodial father in Navin had standing depended on the parental rights granted or reserved to him in the divorce decree in light of the mother's assertion of her rights so granted or reserved:

> If the decree had wiped out all of [the noncustodial father's] parental rights, it would have left him with no claim under the IDEA. But this is not what the divorce decree does. The district court did not analyze its language, but it is in the record and shows that [the noncustodial father] retains some important rights, including the opportunity to be informed about and remain involved in the education of his son. If [the father and mother] disagree about educational decisions, then [the mother's] view prevails—unless under state law the school district's view prevails over either parent's wishes, and in that event [the father's] rights under the decree to influence the school's choices are even more important.

270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit remanded the case to the district court, instructing it to "decide whether [the father's] claims [were] incompatible, not with the divorce decree itself, but with [the mother's] use of her rights under the decree." Navin, 270 F.3d at 1149-1150 (emphasis in original).

Navin's general approach to the problem of noncustodial parental standing is sound. We hold that a noncustodial parent, who retains some parental rights, may have standing to maintain a federal lawsuit to the extent that his assertion of retained parental rights under state law is not legally incompatible with the custodial parent's assertion of rights. This holding assumes, of course, that the noncustodial parent can establish an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to the challenged action, and it is likely that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Friends of the Earth v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000). Having already held that Newdow satisfies those Article III requirements, see Newdow, 292 F.3d at 603-05, we now turn to the question of whether he retains standing despite Banning's opposition as sole legal custodian to his maintaining this lawsuit.[1]

The February 6 custody order governing Banning's and Newdow's respective parental decision-making power remains operative and plainly does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights. Rather, that order establishes that Newdow retains rights with respect to his daughter's education and general welfare. He has [1] It is unclear to us exactly what relief Banning seeks. In her motion papers, at times Banning appears to object only to Newdow's appearance as "next friend" of their daughter. At other places, she also seems to object to Newdow's standing in his own right.

the right to consult with Banning regarding substantial non-emergency decisions (with Banning having ultimate decision-making power), as well as the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records regardless of Banning's position.

California state courts have recognized that noncustodial parents maintain the right to expose and educate their children to their individual religious views, even if those religious views contradict those of the custodial parent or offend her.[2] See Murga v. Petersen, 103 Cal. App.3d 498, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (1980). As the Murga court noted, it was following the "majority of American jurisdictions" in refusing to place restraints on a noncustodial parent who wished to expose his children to his particular religious views, absent a clear, affirmative showing that these religious activities would be harmful to the children. Id. at 504-05, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79 (emphasis added). The principle of nonintervention, the court noted, "reflects the protected nature of religious activities and expressions of belief, as well as the proscription against preferring one religion over another." Id. at 505, 163 Cal. Rptr. 79. It is not only the court that must not interfere; even more so, the state and federal government may not seek to indoctrinate the child with their religious views, particularly over the objection of either parent.

Murga was the basis for a later California state court decision, In re Mentry, 142 Cal. App.3d 260, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (1983), that reversed a restraining order against a noncustodial father that forbade him from engaging his children in any religious activities other than those approved by the custodial mother. The Mentry court stated that "the concept of family privacy embodies not simply a policy of minimum state intervention but also a presumption of parental autonomy. Many of the purposes served by this presumption become more important after dissolution [of the marriage or relationship] than they were before." 142 Cal. App.3d at 268, 190 Cal. Rptr. 843 (emphasis added). The type of "minimum state intervention" discussed in Mentry surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent. We conclude that Newdow retains sufficient parental rights to support his standing here.

The next question, then, is whether Banning's status as sole legal custodian empowers her to employ state law to defeat Newdow's standing. "'Sole legal custody' means that one parent shall have the right and the responsibility to make the decisions relating to the health, education, and welfare of a child." Cal. Fam. Code § 3006. Thus, Newdow cannot disrupt Banning's choice of schools for their daughter. And, as Judge Mize's September 25 order makes clear, Newdow cannot name his daughter as a party to a lawsuit against Banning's wishes.

Judge Mize, however, appropriately declined to rule on whether Newdow has standing in his own right as a parent to maintain this case in federal court. We hold that Banning has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action. Newdow's assertion of his retained parental rights in this case, therefore, simply cannot be legally incompatible with any power Banning may hold pursuant to the custody order. Further, Ms. Banning may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights or waive Newdow's right to enforce his constitutional interests. Neither Banning's personal opinion regarding the Constitution nor her state court award of legal custody is determinative of Newdow's legal rights to protect his own interests.

When school teachers lead a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance according to school district policy, they present a message by the state endorsing not just religion generally, but a monotheistic religion organized "under God." While Newdow cannot expect the entire community surrounding his daughter to participate in, let alone agree with, his choice of atheism and his daughter's exposure to his views, he can expect to be free from the government's endorsing a particular view of religion and unconstitutionally indoctrinating his impressionable young daughter on a daily basis in that official view. The pledge to a nation "under God," with its imprimatur of governmental sanction, provides the message to Newdow's young daughter not only that non-believers, or believers in non-Judeo-Christian religions, are outsiders, but more specifically that her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom. Just as the foundational principle of the Freedom of Speech Clause in the First Amendment tolerates unpopular and even despised ideas, see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S. Ct. 1780, 29 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1971), so does the principle underlying the Establishment Clause protect unpopular and despised minorities from government sponsored religious orthodoxy tied to government services. See Santa Fe Independent Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 120 S. Ct. 2266, 147 L. Ed. 2d 295 (2000); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1992). Accordingly, we affirm Newdow's standing to challenge on Establishment Clause grounds the EGUSD's practice of requiring his daughter to attend daily recitations of the 1954 version of the Pledge of Allegiance.

Banning's motion for leave to intervene is DENIED because she has no protectable interest at stake in this action.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in the order, but write separately to emphasize that in this order we decide that Newdow's legal status under California law vis-à-vis his daughter does not deprive him of standing. Despite the order's allusions to the merits of the controversy, we decide nothing but that narrow standing issue.[1] Leastwise, I join nothing other than the narrow decision that the orders of the California courts have not deprived Newdow of standing.

Dec. 4, 2002

ORDER

Before: GOODWIN, REINHARDT and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judge.

Once we ruled on the merits of this case,[1] the United States Senate sought to intervene as a party and in that capacity to file a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing en banc. We deny the Motion to Intervene, but note our willingness to accept the petition and accompanying brief as an amicus brief, if the Senate consents to the latter use of its filing. Because of the respect that we owe to and have for the Senate, we are constrained to explain the reasons for our denial of intervention.

Initially, of course, we lay aside the usual intervention rule. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). This case is more in line with Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1), which allows intervention as of right "when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene." There is a special statute that applies to this motion. As relevant here, the statute first provides that the Senate Legal Counsel shall intervene or appear as amicus "when directed to do so by a resolution adopted by the Senate." 2 U.S.C. § 288b(c). There was a resolution here. See Senate Resolution 292, 107th Cong., 2d Sess. (2002), 148 Cong. Rec. S6105-06 (2002). The statute goes on to provide that Counsel shall intervene upon appropriate direction when "the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution of the United States are placed in issue," but should only do so if there is standing. See 2 U.S.C. § 288e(a). It then states:

> Permission to intervene as a party or to appear as amicus curiae under § 288e of this title shall be of right and may be denied by a court only upon an express finding that such intervention or appearance is untimely and would significantly delay the pending action or that standing to intervene has not been established under section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States.

2 U.S.C. § 288*l* (a).

Because the Senate waited until we had already ruled on the merits of this case on appeal, it would be possible, even accurate, to hold that the attempt to intervene is untimely. However, under the circumstances we are unable to hold that the proposed intervention to seek rehearing or en banc review would "significantly delay" the action. Especially is that true when, as here, some of the current parties to the action have themselves already sought both types of review. We must, therefore, turn our attention to the second exception in § 288*l*(a)—does the Senate have constitutional standing? To put it more precisely: does the Senate have constitutional standing to intervene in every case where the constitutionality of a United States statute is challenged? Because we determine that the answer to that question is no and because there is nothing about the statute at hand that would distinguish it from other statutes, the Senate does not have standing in this case.

Let it first be said that the issue is not whether the United States has standing to appear in support of the constitutionality of the statute in question. Nobody doubts that it does. See 28 U.S.C. § 2403(a). In fact, in this case it did appear for "the Congress of the United States; the United States of America; and William J. Clinton, President of the United States."[2] The question is whether the Senate, as a separate part of the government, has standing to intervene to support statutes on its own behalf, and not really as a representative of the United States itself. We need not, and do not, [2] Perhaps it should also be recognized that "the three branches are but 'coordinate parts of one government,'" and in that sense there can be no doubt that the legislature is already represented here anyway. See United States v. Providence Journal Co., 485 U.S. 693, 701, 108 S. Ct. 1502, 1507, 99 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1988) (internal citation omitted).

decide whether Congress could designate the Senate Legal Counsel, upon a separate resolution of the Senate alone, to appear as the defender of all statutes on behalf of the United States itself. A law of that type might well have its own constitutional problems; it might even trench on the prerogatives of the executive branch of the United States, which has the authority to execute the laws of this country. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. At any rate, that has not occurred here. As already stated, a separate statute confers that authority upon the executive branch, and here the Senate seeks to appear to represent itself alone.

As the intervention statute at hand expressly recognizes, the Senate must show that it does have constitutional standing to intervene. That means at the very least that it must show that it has "suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is . . . concrete and particularized." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L. Ed.2d 351 (1992); see also Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818-20, 117 S. Ct. 2312, 2317-18, 138 L. Ed. 2d 849 (1997). That concrete and particularized harm is lacking in this case because no harm beyond frustration of a general desire to see the law enforced as written has been shown here.

In so stating, we are aware that there have been a number of cases wherein Senate intervention has been allowed without any particular remark or detailed consideration. See, e.g., INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 930 n.5, 103 S. Ct. 2764, 2773 n.5, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1983); Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 893 F.2d 205, 206 (9th Cir. 1990) (en banc); In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133, 1135 (9th Cir. 1987); see also Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 106 S. Ct. 3181, 92 L.

Ed. 2d 583 (1986). But those cases are not really apposite because they were of a character that directly (particularly) implicated the authority of Congress within our scheme of government, and the scope and reach of its ability to allocate power among the three branches. Thus, Chadha, 462 U.S. at 956-58, 103 S. Ct. at 2787, is a case that dealt with individual houses of Congress assuming the authority to review and veto executive decisions regarding the deportation of aliens. It, thus, implicated separation of powers doctrine and the whole scheme of our government. Lear Siegler dealt with whether Congress could allocate to a legislative agent—The Comptroller General—the authority to delay the procurement actions of the executive branch of the government. See Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prod. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1105-06 (9th Cir. 1988), vacated on other grounds, Lear Siegler, 893 F.2d at 208; see also Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 717, 106 S. Ct. at 3183. Finally, in Benny, 812 F.2d at 1141-42, the issue was whether Congress had the authority to prospectively extend the term of office of bankruptcy judges. In other words, in each of these cases the courts were dealing with a statute addressing legislative action regarding allocation of authority within the government, as opposed to action applying that authority to the behavior of the citizenry in general. The issues were the kind that intimately affected Congress's own place within our constitutional scheme.

More closely on point are cases which speak to the standing of legislators to bring actions, where their institutional power as members of the legislature is not being challenged. In Raines, 521 U.S. at 814-16, 117 S. Ct. at 2315-16, for example, a number of members of the Senate and House of Representatives sued pursuant to a provision of the Line Item Veto Act which declared that any member of Congress could challenge the Act. See, 2 U.S.C. § 692(a)(1). The Court declared that they had "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals . . ., the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed . . ., and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829, 117 S. Ct. at 2322. The Court did point out that they did not actually represent their separate houses of Congress and those houses actually opposed them, but did not indicate precisely how that affected their standing.[3] Id. The Court distinguished an earlier case wherein state legislators were accorded standing because their votes would have been deprived of all validity if an allegedly improper person were able to vote. See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 438, 59 S.Ct. 972, 975, 83 L. Ed. 1385 (1939). Thus, at least as to individual legislators, there is no standing unless their own institutional position, as opposed to their position as a member of the body politic, is affected.

The District of Columbia Circuit has followed the same approach. In 1977, a congressman sued the director of the Central Intelligence Agency partly on the basis that when that agency misused its budget, his vote as a congressman was impaired. See Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190, 204 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The court found that he lacked standing, and that a contrary rule would amount to giving him "a roving commission to obtain judicial relief under most circumstances." Id. at [3] Of course, the Line Item Veto Act dealt with the allocation of power between the legislative and executive branches. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 691-692. However, the Senate was content to appear as amicus curiae. Raines, 521 U.S. at 813 n.*, 117 S. Ct. 2312.

REV_00164975

214. Along the way, the court noted that "his specific rights, interests and prerogatives lie in the power to make laws. As we have noted, this power has not been invaded, diminished, diluted, or injured by the challenged actions in this case." Id. at 213. A like result was reached when a member of Congress sued to prevent alleged misuse of federal funds by a national commission. See Hansen v. Nat'l Comm'n. on the Observance of Int'l Women's Year, 628 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1980). We said: "The injury alleged by appellant is an injury which he suffers along with all other citizens of the United States. He has not presented any facts which show he has sustained or is imminently in danger of sustaining an actual personal injury." Id. at 534. Thus, he had no standing. Id. And, when faced with a claim by congressmen that the military was using its budget to finance combat in other countries, despite laws prohibiting that, the Fourth Circuit had this to say: "Once a bill has become law, however, their interest is indistinguishable from that of any other citizen. They cannot claim dilution of their legislative voting power because the legislation they favored became law." Harrington v. Schlesinger, 528 F.2d 455, 459 (4th Cir. 1975). The court was no more impressed with the claim that their legislative duties would somehow be affected. See id. Other cases have sounded the same note. See, e.g., Baird v. Norton, 266 F.3d 408, 411-12 (6th Cir. 2001); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112, 112-13, 117 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012, 120 S. Ct. 1286, 146 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2000); Daughtrey v. Carter, 584 F.2d 1050, 1057-58 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Metcalf v. Nat'l Petroleum Council, 553 F.2d 176, 187-89 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

These observations also apply to the Senate as a whole, when it seeks to have a roving commission to enter every case involving the constitutionality of statutes it has enacted. In those instances, its own "powers and responsibilities" are not really under attack. Once the Senate has approved a proposed bill, the House of Representatives agrees, and the President has signed the measure, it becomes public law. A public law, after enactment, is not the Senate's any more than it is the law of any other citizen or group of citizens in the United States. It is a law of the United States of America, and the government is already represented in this case by the Attorney General. Of course, every time a statute is not followed or is declared unconstitutional, the votes of legislators are mooted and the power of the legislature is circumscribed in a sense, but that is no more than a facet of the generalized harm that occurs to the government as a whole. By the same token, the President's signing of the legislation is also nullified, judges, who might have felt otherwise, are bound by the decision, and citizens who relied upon or desired to have the law enforced are disappointed.[4] Moreover, if the separate houses of Congress have standing, a challenger of a law would have to contend with fighting the United States itself, and separately defending himself against the Senate and the House of [4] All of this is underscored by the Senate's suggestion that it should have standing because it opens its daily sessions with the Pledge of Allegiance. That, of course, is an assertion that could be made by countless other organizations, governmental and otherwise, not to mention thousands of United States citizens.

Representatives, each of which would be able to appear as a separate litigating party in the case.[5]

Therefore, the motion of the Senate to intervene is DENIED. However, if the Senate wishes to have us deem its proposed brief to be an amicus brief and to consider it on that basis, we will do that. It should inform us of its desire in that regard within 30 days after the filing of this order.

[5] In principle, he might also have to separately contend against the President, whose ability to effectively sign the law in question can be said to have been affected. We see little other than mischief arising from a system of intervention as unregulated as that. Constitutional standing doctrine is the apotropaion for that threatened malady. It must be applied here.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

On March 8, 2000, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging defendants Elk Grove School District and Sacramento City Unified School District violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment by requiring teachers [to] lead morning classes in recitation of the pledge of allegiance. Defendant school districts move to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

The only federal Court of Appeal directly to address this issue held that schools may lead the pledge of allegiance without violating the First Amendment so long as pupils are not compelled to participate, because the ceremonial reference to God in the pledge does not convey endorsement of particular religious beliefs. Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District, 980 F.2d 437, 442-448 (11th Cir. 1992). While the

Supreme Court has not directly addressed the issue, it has noted that its "previous opinions have considered in dicta the motto ['In God We Trust'] and the pledge [of allegiance], characterizing them as consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union, 492 U.S. 573, 602-03 (1989); see also id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 693 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring); id. at 716-17 (Brennan, J., dissenting); School District of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 303 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 449-50 (1962) (Stewart, J., dissenting). Two Courts of Appeal have stated, also in dicta, that the pledge is not an endorsement of religion. See Chandler v. James, 180 F.3d 1254, 1262 (11th Cir. 1999); Separation of Church and State Committee v. City of Eugene, 93 F.3d 617, 622 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman and the statements in dicta noted above, while not binding on this court, are persuasive and directly on point. Whether the court employs the test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-613 (1971), or the more recent endorsement test, see Allegheny, supra, 492 U.S. at 593-594, the Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. Accordingly, I recommend plaintiff's complaint be dismissed.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

The respondents are Michael A. Newdow, who was the plaintiff below, and the Elk Grove Unified School District and its Superintendent, David W. Gordon, who were defendants below. The Complaint also named as defendants the United States Congress, President George W. Bush,* the Sacramento City Unified School District, and its superintendent, Jim Sweeney. All of those defendants were dismissed from the case by the court of appeals. App., infra, 5a-8a. The Complaint also named the State of California as a defendant, but the State did not participate in the district court proceedings or in the court of appeals, until the rehearing stage, at which point the court of appeals rejected the State's appearance. Id. at 6a. The motions of Sandra Banning, the mother of respondent Newdow's child, and the United States Senate to intervene were denied by the court of appeals. Id. at 99a-109a.

* The Complaint originally listed President William J. Clinton as a defendant. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 43(c)(2), President Bush was substituted as his successor in office.

No.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER

v.

MICHAEL A. NEWDOW, ET AL.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The amended opinion of the court of appeals on rehearing (App., infra, 1a-24a) is reported at 321 F.3d 772. The original opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 25a-58a) is reported at 292 F.3d 597, and the court's subsequent opinion on standing (App., infra, 89a-98a) is reported at 313 F.3d 500. The opinion and orders of the court denying intervention (App., infra, 99a-109a) are reported at 313 F.3d 495 and 313 F.3d 506. The order of the district court (App., infra, 110a), adopting the Findings and Recommendation of the magistrate judge that the case be dismissed (App., infra, 111a-112a), is unreported.

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its original judgment on June 26, 2002. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing on February 28, 2003. The court of appeals issued an order staying its mandate on March 4, 2003. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

No federal statute waives the sovereign immunity of the United States of America from a suit for declaratory or injunctive relief under the First Amendment, and thus the jurisdictional basis for respondent Newdow's suit against the United States is unclear.[1] However, the absence of such a waiver is without jurisdictional consequence in this case because the United States could have, and should hereby be deemed to have, intervened as of right in this action against the school district and its superintendent to defend the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance against Newdow's facial and as-applied challenges. See 28 U.S.C. 2403(a).[2]

[1] Other than a separate claim against the President in his official capacity, Newdow did not sue an officer or an agency of the United States, so his claim does not appear to fall within the scope of either Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), or the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 552. Nor is his federal constitutional claim cognizable under the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. 1346, 1402, 2671 et seq. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 477 (1994).

[2] Newdow's as-applied challenge to the recitation of the Pledge in elementary schools calls into question the federal government's practice under which the nearly 2500 military dependents attending its four schools within the Ninth Circuit are led in a voluntary recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance daily.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. * * *"

Section 4 of Title 4 of the United States Code provides that the Pledge of Allegiance to the United States Flag shall be: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

STATEMENT

1. In 1942, as part of an overall effort to "codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America," Congress enacted a Pledge of Allegiance to the United States flag. H.R. Rep. No. 2047, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942); S. Rep. No. 1477, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 1 (1942). As originally enacted, the Pledge of Allegiance read: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Act of June 22, 1942, ch. 435, § 7, 56 Stat. 380.

Twelve years later, Congress amended the Pledge of Allegiance by adding the words "under God" after the word "Nation." Act of June 14, 1954, ch. 297, § 7, 68 Stat. 249. Accordingly, the Pledge now reads: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." 4 U.S.C. 4.

In amending the Pledge, the Committee Reports noted that, "[f]rom the time of our earliest history our peoples and our institutions have reflected the traditional concept that our Nation was founded on a fundamental belief in God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954); see also S.

Rep. No. 1287, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1954) ("Our forefathers recognized and gave voice to the fundamental truth that a government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed must look to God for divine leadership. * * * Throughout our history, the statements of our great national leaders have been filled with references to God."). Both Reports traced the numerous references to God in historical documents central to the founding and preservation of the United States, from the Mayflower Compact to the Declaration of Independence to President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the latter having employed the same reference to a "Nation[] under God." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.

The Reports further explained that the amendment would highlight a foundational difference between the United States and Communist nations: "Our American Government is founded on the concept of the individuality and the dignity of the human being" and "[u]nderlying this concept is the belief that the human person is important because he was created by God and endowed by Him with certain inalienable rights which no civil authority may usurp." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 1-2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2. As amended, the Pledge would thus textually reject the "communis[t]" philosophy "with its attendant subservience of the individual." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 2; see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2 ("The spiritual bankruptcy of the Communists is one of our strongest weapons in the struggle for men's minds and this resolution gives us a new means of using that weapon."). The House Report further noted that, through "daily recitation of the pledge in school," "the children of our land * * * will be daily impressed with a true understanding of our way of life and its origins," so that "[a]s they grow and advance in this understanding, they will assume the responsibilities of self-government equipped to carry on the traditions that have been given to us." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3.

Both the Senate and House Reports expressed the view that, under controlling precedent from this Court, the amendment "is not an act establishing a religion or one interfering with the 'free exercise' of religion." H.R. Rep. No. 1693, supra, at 3 (citing Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306 (1952)); see also S. Rep. No. 1287, supra, at 2.[3]

2. California law requires that each public elementary school in the State "conduct[] * * * appropriate patriotic exercises" at the beginning of the school day. Cal. Educ. Code § 52720 (West 1989). The law provides that "[t]he giving of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America shall satisfy the requirements of this section." Ibid. In satisfaction of that statutory requirement, respondent Elk Grove Unified School District (Elk Grove) has adopted a policy that directs each of its elementary schools to "recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag once each day." App., infra, 27a. No child is compelled to join in reciting the Pledge. Id. at 28a.

Respondent Michael Newdow is the noncustodial father of a child enrolled in a public elementary school within the jurisdiction of respondent Elk Grove. App., infra, 2a, 90a-91a. In the school that Newdow's daughter attends, the teacher leads the students in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance daily. Id. at 3a.

The child's mother has "sole legal custody as to the rights and responsibilities to make decisions relating to the health, education and welfare of" the child. App., infra, 90a-91a. While Newdow, who was never married to the child's mother, retains limited visitation rights, the right to access the child's school and medical records, and the right to "consult" on "substantial" decisions pertaining to the child's "educational needs," if the parents disagree, the child's mother "may exercise legal control of" the child as long as it "is not specifically prohibited or inconsistent with the physical custody order." Id. at 91a.

In March 2000, Newdow filed suit against the President, the United States Congress, the United States of America, the State of California, and two California school districts and their superintendents, seeking a declaration that the 1954 statute adding the words "under God" to the Pledge is "facially unconstitutional" under the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment. Compl. 6, 36; App., infra, 4a-5a. He also sought injunctive relief requiring Congress and the President to remove those words from the Pledge and prohibiting California schools from leading students in reciting the Pledge. Compl. 37; App., infra, 4a-5a. The Complaint explains that Newdow's child is "an unnamed plaintiff whom he represents as 'next friend.'" Compl. 3. The Complaint asserts that the recitation of the Pledge in his child's school "results in the daily indoctrination of the Elk Grove Unified School District's students—including Plaintiff's daughter—with religious dogma," id. at 18-19, and that such actions "infringe[]" upon Newdow's "unrestricted right to inculcate in his daughter— free from governmental interference—the atheistic beliefs he finds persuasive." Id. at 20; see also id. at 36. The Complaint further asserts that Newdow's "position as the father of a child attending the State's public schools grants him standing in this matter in his own right and on behalf of his daughter." Id. at 26.

The district court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, relying on numerous decisions of this Court expressly addressing the Pledge and describing it as consistent with the Establishment Clause, as well as on a decision of the Seventh Circuit rejecting a similar challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 110a-112a (adopting magistrate judge's Findings and Recommendation, which cites County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989); id. at 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984); School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring); Sherman v. Community Consol. Sch. Dist. 21, 980 F.2d 437 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993)).

3. a. A divided panel of the Ninth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. App., infra, 25a-58a. As an initial matter, all three members of the panel agreed that the President and Congress should be dismissed from the lawsuit, on the grounds that the President is not a proper defendant for challenging the constitutionality of a federal law under Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992) (plurality opinion), and that the Congress cannot be sued under the Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const. Art. I, § 6, Cl. 1. See App., infra, 29a-30a; id. at 53a (Fernandez, J., concurring and dissenting). The court also ruled that Newdow lacked standing to file suit against the Sacramento City Unified School District and its superintendent "because his daughter is not currently a student there." Id. at 32a.

The court did conclude, however, that Newdow has standing to challenge Elk Grove's policy of reciting the Pledge "because his daughter is currently enrolled in elementary school" in Elk Grove. App., infra, 32a. In addition, a majority of the court concluded that Newdow has standing in his own right to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act amending the Pledge because "the mere enactment of a statute may constitute an Establishment Clause violation," id. at 33a, and the 1954 Act amounts to a "religious recitation policy that interferes with Newdow's right to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 37a.[4]

b. Turning to the merits of Newdow's complaint, the majority held that, with the addition of the phrase "under God," the Pledge of Allegiance violates the Establishment Clause. App., infra, 37a-42a. The majority began by explaining that this Court has adopted three different tests to analyze Establishment Clause violations (id. at 37a)—the three-prong test outlined in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971); the "endorsement test," County of Allegheny, supra; and the "coercion" test, Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992)—and that the court of appeals was "free to apply any or all of the three tests, and to invalidate any measure that fails any one of them." App., infra, 41a.

The majority held that the 1954 Act and the school district policy failed the "endorsement test" both because the Pledge's reference to God "is a profession of a religious belief, namely, a belief in monotheism" and because it "impermissibly takes a position with respect to the purely religious question of the existence and identity of God." App., infra, 41a-42a. The majority further concluded that the 1954 Act and the school district's policy fail the "coercion test" because "the mere fact that a pupil is required to listen every day to the statement 'one nation under God' has a coercive effect." Id. at 45a.

Finally, the majority concluded that the Pledge fails the Lemon test because it has the purpose of advancing religion. App., infra, 46a. In so holding, the majority rejected the United States' argument that the Pledge should be looked at "as a whole," and concluded that the "sole purpose" of the 1954 Act was to "advance religion, in order to differentiate the United States from nations under communist rule." Id. at 46a-47a. The majority further concluded that Elk Grove's policy ran afoul of the Lemon test because it "convey[s] an impermissible message of endorsement to some and disapproval to others of their beliefs regarding the existence of a monotheistic God." Id. at 50a.

The majority dismissed in a footnote the numerous statements by this Court and its Members expressly addressing the Pledge and affirming its constitutionality as "dicta" that was announced without "appl[ying] any of the three tests to the Act." App., infra, 50a-51a n.12. The majority also expressly disagreed with the analysis and conclusion of the Seventh Circuit in Sherman, supra, which upheld the Pledge against a similar Establishment Clause challenge. Ibid.

c. Judge Fernandez dissented. App., infra, 52a-58a. Judge Fernandez first expressed his "serious misgivings" about the majority's conclusion that Newdow had standing to challenge the facial constitutionality of the 1954 Act, but ultimately concluded that the question "makes little difference to the resolution of the First Amendment issue in this case." Id. at 53a n.1. With respect to the Establishment Clause challenge, Judge Fernandez explained that "such phrases as 'In God We Trust,' or 'under God' have no tendency to establish a religion in this country or to suppress anyone's exercise, or non-exercise, of religion, except in the fevered eye of persons who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity." Id. at 55a. Judge Fernandez also noted that this Court has repeatedly indicated that the Pledge's text, as amended, does not violate the Establishment Clause, and he agreed with the Seventh Circuit that the court of appeals should "respect" those assurances: "If the Court proclaims that a practice is consistent with the establishment clause, we take its assurances seriously. If the Justices are just pulling our leg, let them say so." Ibid. (quoting Sherman, 980 F.2d at 448). Finally, Judge Fernandez accused the majority of confining itself to legal "elements and tests, while failing to look at the good sense and principles that animated those tests in the first place." Id. at 57a; see also id. at 57a n.8 (noting that the majority's holding would preclude use of many patriotic songs, such as "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," in public ceremonial occasions).

d. While the case was pending on the United States' and Elk Grove's petitions for rehearing and rehearing en banc, the mother of Newdow's child notified the court that Newdow lacked legal custody of the child and legal control over the child's educational and religious upbringing. She further advised that, as the custodial parent, she "wish[es] for her child to be able to recite the Pledge at school exactly as it stands." Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10. The United States then filed a motion to enlarge the record and a supplemental brief arguing that Newdow lacks standing to prosecute his challenge to the Pledge on its face or as applied by Elk Grove.

The court of appeals issued a separate decision holding that Newdow has standing to prosecute his constitutional challenge to the Pledge. App., infra, 89a-98a. The court concluded that, while Newdow no longer could prosecute the action on behalf of or to vindicate the interests of his child, Newdow continued to have standing in his own right to challenge "unconstitutional government action affecting his child." Id. at 92a. The court noted that the custody agreement does not strip Newdow of all of his parental rights, because he retains the "the right to inspect his daughter's school and medical records" and the "right to consult" on educational decisions, albeit with the mother "having ultimate decision-making power." Id. at 95a. The court then reasoned that, because California law recognizes a right in noncustodial parents to "expose" their children to their beliefs and values, Newdow was injured because state law "surely does not permit official state indoctrination of an impressionable child on a daily basis with an official view of religion contrary to the express wishes of either a custodial or noncustodial parent." Id. at 96a. The court further reasoned that Newdow has standing because the mother "has no power, even as sole legal custodian, to insist that her child be subjected to unconstitutional state action." Ibid. Because the Pledge, in the court's view, "provides the message to Newdow's young daughter" that "her father's beliefs are those of an outsider, and necessarily inferior to what she is exposed to in the classroom," the court concluded that Newdow has suffered a legally cognizable injury that provides him with Article III standing. Id. at 97a.[5]

4. a. The court issued an amended opinion on rehearing. App., infra, 1a-24a. In its amended opinion, the court limited its Establishment Clause holding to the Pledge's use by Elk Grove in its schools. Id. at 18a. With respect to Newdow's challenge to the facial constitutionality of the Pledge, the court of appeals vacated the district court's decision in favor of the United States and remanded "for further proceedings consistent with our holding." Ibid.

In addition, the court amended its decision to hold only that Elk Grove's policy violated the coercion test, and did not address either the "endorsement test" or the Lemon test. App., infra, 11a. The panel, however, concluded that the recitation of the Pledge violated the coercion test for the same reasons that the original opinion found a violation of the endorsement test. Compare id. at 11a-13a, with id. at 41a-43a.

The court also elaborated on its rejection of the numerous statements in this Court's opinions affirming the constitutionality of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage. The court assumed that "public officials do not unconstitutionally endorse religion when they recite the Pledge," but that schools nevertheless could not "coerce impressionable young schoolchildren to recite it, or even to stand mute while it is being recited by their classmates." App., infra, 15a. The court also purported to distinguish references to God in the Pledge from those in the Declaration of Independence and National Anthem on the ground that the pledge "is a performative statement." Id. at 16a; see also ibid. ("To pledge allegiance to something is to alter one's moral relationship to it, and not merely to repeat the words of an historical document or anthem.").

Judge Fernandez dissented from the court's Establishment Clause holding for the same reasons discussed in his initial dissenting opinion. App., infra, 19a-24a. Judge Fernandez also noted that, although the majority "now formally limits itself to holding that it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge in public classrooms, its message that something is constitutionally infirm about the Pledge itself abides and remains a clear and present danger to all similar public expressions of reverence." Id. at 19a n.1.

b. Judge O'Scannlain, joined by Judges Kleinfeld, Gould, Tallman, Rawlinson, and Clifton, filed a lengthy dissent from the court of appeals' denial of rehearing en banc. App., infra, 67a-87a. He described the panel opinion as > wrong, very wrong—wrong because reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is simply not "a religious act" as the two-judge majority asserts, wrong as a matter of Supreme Court precedent properly understood, wrong because it

> set up a direct conflict with the law of another circuit, and wrong as a matter of common sense.

Id. at 67a-68a (footnote omitted). Judge O'Scannlain stressed that this Court consistently has distinguished between "patriotic invocations of God on the one hand," and public school "prayer, an 'unquestioned religious exercise.'" Id. at 72a. Judge O'Scannlain further noted that, until the panel's decision here, "[n]o court, state or federal, has ever held, even now, that the Supreme Court's school prayer cases apply outside a context of state-sanctioned formal religious observances." Id. at 78a-79a. Finally, Judge O'Scannlain noted that, while the panel "adopts a stilted indifference to our past and present realities as a predominantly religious people," id. at 86a-87a, "the Supreme Court has displayed remarkable consistency—patriotic invocations of God simply have no tendency to establish a state religion," id. at 86a.

Judges McKeown, Hawkins, Thomas, and Rawlinson separately dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc on the ground that the case "presents a constitutional question of exceptional importance" that should be heard by the court en banc. App., infra, 88a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Two decisions of this Court have said without qualification that the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. Numerous other opinions, joined in by at least twelve Justices of this Court, have likewise expressly addressed and affirmed the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance notwithstanding its reference to God. No Justice has expressed the view that the Pledge violates the Establishment Clause. The court of appeals, however, dismissed those majority and separate opinions as unconsidered dicta. But a fair reading of this Court's decisions demonstrates that those consistent and oft-repeated statements stand as a fixed lodestar in this Court's

Establishment Clause jurisprudence that has informed and directed the resolution of a number of the Court's cases. They reflect a point of exceptional unity and consistent agreement among Members of this Court within Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Whatever else the Establishment Clause may prohibit, this Court's precedents make clear that it does not forbid the government from officially acknowledging the religious heritage, foundation, and character of this Nation. That is what the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance does. The Pledge is therefore constitutional, as the Seventh Circuit held when confronted with the same Establishment Clause challenge. Because the court of appeals' error is so manifestly contrary to precedent, the Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the decision below.

1. This Court's review is warranted because the court of appeals' holding conflicts with repeated opinions of this Court and of individual Justices consistently explaining that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar official acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, do not violate the Establishment Clause. The holding below is also in direct conflict with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, 980 F.2d 437 (1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 950 (1993), which rejected the same Establishment Clause challenge to the Pledge.

a. The court of appeals' decision is irreconcilable with this Court's repeated assurances that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, comports with the strictures of the Establishment Clause. In Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668 (1984), the Court held that a city did not violate the Establishment Clause by including a nativity scene as part of a Christmas display. In upholding the display, the Court reasoned that "[t]here is an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life from at least 1789." Id. at 674. The Court noted that its own opinions had "asserted pointedly" that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 675 (quoting Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313 (1952), and citing School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 213 (1963)). The Court further reasoned that "examples of reference to our religious heritage are found * * * in the language "One nation under God," as part of the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag," which "is recited by many thousands of public school children—and adults—every year." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; see also ibid. (referring favorably to the National Motto, "In God We Trust," 36 U.S.C. 302, which appears on all United States currency, 31 U.S.C. 324).

Explaining that such official acknowledgments of our Nation's religious heritage do not "establish[] a religion or religious faith, or tend[] to do so," Lynch, 465 U.S. at 678, the Court concluded that the City's inclusion of a creche in its Christmas display likewise permissibly "depicts the historical origins of this traditional event long recognized as a National Holiday," id. at 680. To hold otherwise, the Court explained, would lead to the conclusion that "a host of other forms of taking official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage, are equally offensive to the Constitution." Id. at 686. "[P]ublic acknowledgment of the [Nation's] religious heritage long officially recognized by the three constitutional branches of government," the Court concluded, render "farfetched" "[a]ny notion that these symbols pose a real danger of establishment of a state church." Ibid.

In County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573 (1989), the Court invalidated the display of a creche at a county courthouse, but sustained the inclusion of a menorah as part of a holiday display. In so holding, the Court reaffirmed Lynch's approval of the reference to God in the Pledge, noting that all of the Justices in Lynch viewed the Pledge as "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief." Id. at 602-603 (citations omitted). The Court then used the Pledge and the general holiday display approved in Lynch as benchmarks for what the Establishment Clause permits, ibid. On that basis, the Court concluded that the display of the creche by itself was unconstitutional because, unlike the Pledge, it gave "praise to God in [sectarian] Christian terms." Id. at 598; see also id. at 603 (finding an "obvious distinction" between the Pledge and the display of the creche).

Furthermore, while not referring specifically to the Pledge of Allegiance, the Court, in Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), upheld the historic practice of legislative prayer as "a tolerable acknowledgment of beliefs widely held among the people of this country." Id. at 792. In so holding, the Court discussed numerous other examples of constitutionally permissible religious references in official life "that form 'part of the fabric of our society,'" ibid., such as "God save the United States and this Honorable Court," which "occurs at all sessions of this Court," id. at 786. The Court also repeated its recognition that "[w]e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Id. at 792.

Likewise, in Abington Township, supra, the Court explained, in the course of invalidating laws requiring Bible-reading in public schools, that "our national life reflects a religious people," and noted the numerous permissible public references to God in historical documents and ceremonial practices, such as oaths ending with "So help me God." 374 U.S. at 213.

Finally, in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962), in the course of invalidating official school prayers, the Court stressed:

> There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which include the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise [official prayer] that the State of New York has sponsored in this instance.

Id. at 435 n.21.

In sum, this Court has repeatedly refused to "press the concept of separation of Church and State to * * * extremes" and to condemn as unconstitutional the "references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, [and] our ceremonies." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

b. The opinions of individual Justices have cemented as common ground the proposition that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar acknowledgments of the Nation's religious heritage and character, are constitutionally permissible. See Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 633-635 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Thomas, JJ.) (noting long historical practice, consistent with the Establishment Clause, of official references to God); id. at 638-639 (noting that the Court's invalidation of graduation prayer did not extend to the practice of also saying the Pledge of Allegiance at graduations); County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 623, 625 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("government recognition and acknowledgment of the role of religion in the lives of our citizens" serve the "secular purposes of 'solemnizing public occasions, expressing confidence in the future and encouraging the recognition of what is worthy of appreciation in society'"; in addition, because of their "history and ubiquity, such government acknowledgments of religion are not understood as conveying an endorsement of particular religious beliefs") (internal quotation marks omitted); id. at 657 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Brennan & Marshall, JJ.) ("Government policies of * * * acknowledgment, and support for religion are an accepted part of our political and cultural heritage."); id. at 674 n.10 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and White & Scalia, JJ.) (explaining that the Court "will not proscribe" "the reference to God in the Pledge of Allegiance" and similar acknowledgments of religious culture); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 78 n.5 (1985) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny, with specific reference to the Pledge of Allegiance); id. at 88 (Burger, C.J., dissenting) (the argument that the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God, violates the Establishment Clause "would of course make a mockery of our decisionmaking in Establishment Clause cases"); Lynch, 465 U.S. at 693 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same view as in County of Allegheny with respect to "In God We Trust" and "God save the United States and this honorable court"); Abington Township, 374 U.S. at 304 (Brennan, J., concurring) ("The reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance, for example, may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact."); id. at 303 (The Pledge and similar acknowledgments of religion are "interwoven * * * so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity" that their "use may not present that type of involvement which the First Amendment prohibits."); id. at

307-308 (Goldberg, J., concurring, joined by Harlan, J.) ("[T]oday's decision does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause," citing to divine references in the Declaration of Independence and the National Anthem); Engel, 370 U.S. at 449 (Stewart, J., dissenting) (citing as consistent with the Establishment Clause the then recently amended Pledge of Allegiance, the National Motto "In God We Trust," and the National Day of Prayer).

c. The court of appeals dismissed that overwhelming and consistent authority as "dicta" that was "not inconsistent" with its invalidation of the Pledge. App., infra, 15a. While the court of appeals is correct that none of those cases involved direct challenges to the Pledge, it fundamentally erred in disregarding this Court's consistent statements validating the Pledge. That is because, "[w]hen an opinion issues for the Court, it is not only the result but also those portions of the opinion necessary to that result by which we are bound." Seminole Tribe v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 67 (1996). The Court's analysis of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion in Lynch and County of Allegheny were not "mere obiter dicta" that the court of appeals was free to disregard. Id. at 66. They were components of the "well-established rationale upon which the Court based the results of its earlier decisions." Id. at 66-67. Those references articulated the constitutional baseline for permissible official acknowledgments of religion under the Establishment Clause against which the governmental practices at issue in each of those cases were then measured. Indeed, for decades, the Court and individual Justices "have grounded [their] decisions in the oft-repeated understanding," id. at 67,

that the Pledge of Allegiance, and similar references, are constitutional.[6]

The court of appeals' failure to recognize the analytical import of this Court's past decisions and statements underlies its erroneous conclusion that recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in schools violates the Establishment Clause. First, in concluding that the Pledge results in unconstitutional coercion, the court of appeals failed to come to grips with this Court's repeated recognition that the Establishment Clause permits such historic, ubiquitous, and ceremonial acknowledgments of our Nation's religious character and heritage. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 675, 677 (concluding that the words "under God" in the Pledge are an "acknowledgment of our religious heritage" similar to the "official references to the value and invocation of Divine guidance in deliberations and pronouncements of the Founding Fathers" that are "replete" in our nation's history). Such references are not reasonably and objectively understood as coercing individuals into silent assent to any particular religious doctrine. Rather, the Pledge is "consistent with the proposition that government may not communicate an endorsement of religious belief," County of Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 602-603, because the ceremonial reference to God acknowledges the undeniable historical facts that the Nation was founded by individuals who believed in God, that the Constitution's protection of individual rights and autonomy reflects those religious convictions, and that the Nation continues as a matter of demographic and cultural fact to be a predominantly "religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

Second, as Judge O'Scannlain explained in his dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc, App., infra, 69a-71a, 79a-83a, the court of appeals' decision proceeds from the faulty premise that the Pledge's acknowledgment of the Nation's religious heritage is the functional equivalent of prayer or a religious act like Bible reading. The decisions of this Court and individual Justices outlined above repeatedly admonish that not every reference to God amounts to impermissible government-endorsed religious exercise, and expressly refer to the Pledge and similar ceremonial references in contradistinction to formal religious exercises like prayer and Bible reading. See, e.g., Lynch, supra; Abington Township, supra; Engel, supra. The Pledge is no more of a coercive religious exercise than the requirement at the opening of federal courts that individuals stand while a court official announces "God save the United States and this honorable Court."

Third, the court of appeals erred in analyzing the phrase "under God" in isolation. In the court's view, pledging allegiance to the phrase "under God" compelled an endorsement of monotheism in the same manner as phrases like "under Jesus," "under Vishnu," or "under Zeus." App., infra, 12a. But Congress did not enact a pledge consisting just of the words "under God," and the school district does not lead students in reciting only the phrase "under God." Nor did Congress enact a pledge to God. Individuals pledge allegiance to "the Flag of the United States of America," and "to the Republic for which it stands." 4 U.S.C. 4. The remainder of the Pledge then describes the culture and character of that Republic—a unified Country, composed of individual States yet indivisible as a Nation, founded for the purposes of promoting liberty and justice for all, and founded by individuals who believed (and populated predominantly by people who continue to believe) that the Nation's character and destiny were rooted in the Divine.

In analyzing only Newdow's discomfiture with the phrase "under God," without considering its larger context, the court of appeals "plainly erred." Lynch, 465 U.S. at 680. In Lynch, this Court stressed that the Establishment Clause analysis looks at religious symbols and references in context, rather than "focusing almost exclusively on the" religious symbol alone. Ibid. The Lynch Court accordingly did not ask whether the government's display of a creche—a clearly religious symbol—was permissible. The Court analyzed whether the overall message conveyed by a display that included both that religious and other secular symbols of the Christmas holiday season conveyed a message of endorsement, and concluded that it did not. Id. at 680-686. The presence of the creche, the Court concluded, properly "depict[ed] the historical origins of this traditional event," id. at 680, and permissibly took "official note of Christmas, and of our religious heritage," id. at 686.

Likewise, in County of Allegheny, the Court analyzed and upheld the "combined display" during the winter holiday season of a Christmas tree, Liberty sign, and menorah. 492 U.S. at 616. The Court thus looked at the content of the display as a whole, rather than focusing on the presence of the menorah and the religious message that the menorah alone conveys. Id. at 616-620.

That Congress added the phrase "under God" to a preexisting Pledge does not change the analysis. The city government in County of Allegheny had likewise added the menorah, after the fact, to a preexisting holiday display. Id. at 581-582. Yet this Court trained its constitutional analysis on the display as a whole, rather than scrutinizing the message conveyed by each component as it was added seriatim. Id. at 616-620 & n.64; see also Zelman v. Simmons-Harris,

536 U.S. 639, 655-657 (2002) (noting that the Establishment Clause inquiry must consider all relevant programs, not just the specific program challenged); id. at 672-676 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (same); Wallace, 472 U.S. at 78 n.5 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (later addition of "under God" to Pledge does not violate the Establishment Clause because it "serve[s] as an acknowledgment of religion with the 'legitimate secular purpose of solemnizing public occasions, [and] expressing confidence in the future'").

The court of appeals attempted to distinguish the Pledge from other references to God in public life on the ground that the Pledge is "a performative statement," rather than simply "a reflection of [an] author's profession of faith." App., infra, 16a. As an initial matter, this Court's pronouncements have made no such distinction, consistently grouping the Pledge with the Motto, National Anthem, the Declaration of Independence, and similar public references, some of which frequently involve public performance (e.g., the National Anthem) and some of which do not.

More importantly, the distinction makes no sense. With respect to "impressionable young schoolchildren," id. at 15a, there simply is no coherent or discernible "performative" difference between having them say the Pledge, rather than memorize and recite the National Motto ("In God We Trust"), 36 U.S.C. 302 (emphasis added), the Declaration of Independence, 1 U.S.C. at XLIII ("We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men * * * are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights * * *."), or the Gettysburg Address ("[W]e here highly resolve * * * that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."). Indeed, the court of appeals' approach leads to the curious conclusion that the recitation of Bible passages or long-established prayers in public schools, which would require students "merely to repeat the words of an historical document," App., infra, 16a, trenches less upon Establishment

d. This Court's review is warranted because the Ninth Circuit's decision squarely conflicts with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sherman v. Community Consolidated School District 21, supra, that the Pledge of Allegiance may constitutionally be recited in public elementary schools. Unlike the court of appeals here, the Seventh Circuit placed significant weight on this Court's repeated approval of the Pledge and similar official acknowledgments of religion, and concluded that the lower federal courts must "take [the Supreme Court's] assurances seriously." 980 F.2d at 448. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit acknowledged that its decision creates an inter-circuit conflict and that the courts' differing decisions were the product of different modes of analyzing Establishment Clause challenges to such official acknowledgments of religion. App., infra, 16a-17a. This Court's authoritative resolution of the question is therefore necessary.[7]

[7] The Ninth Circuit's decision is also in considerable tension with court of appeals' decisions upholding analogous acknowledgments of the Nation's religious history and character. See Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214 (10th Cir.) (upholding against Establishment Clause challenge the National Motto, "In God We Trust," and its imprint on all currency), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1211 (1996); O'Hair v. Murray, 588 F.2d 1144 (5th Cir.) (upholding National Motto), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 930 (1979); Aronow v. United States, 432 F.2d 242 (9th Cir. 1970) (same); Ganulin v. United States, 71 F. Supp. 2d 824 (S.D. Ohio 1999) (upholding constitutionality of 5 U.S.C. 6103, which makes Christmas Day a paid federal holiday), aff'd, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 973 (2001); Opinion of the Justices, 228 A.2d 161 (N.H. 1967) (posting of plaques in all public school classrooms bearing the National Motto, "In God We Trust," would not violate the Establishment Clause).

e. The question presented is one of great importance. An Act of Congress has been held unconstitutional as applied in one of its most important contexts. See Lynch, 465 U.S. at 676; pp. 4-5, supra; App., infra, 14a & n.7. Furthermore, the impact of the decision below is potentially far-reaching. In addition to the practice at federally operated schools for military dependents, see n.2, supra, public schools within each of the 50 States lead students in voluntary recitations of the Pledge of Allegiance, see Idaho C.A. Amicus Curiae Br. 9-13 (citing state laws). It is untenable that a national Pledge of Allegiance to a national flag would have a different content depending on the judicial circuit in which it is uttered. Absent this Court's review, 9.6 million students in nine States (App., infra, 69a) will recite an abridged version of the Pledge, while the nearly 37 million students in the rest of the Country will recite the Pledge that Congress enacted. Students in the Ninth Circuit will also learn a different Pledge in school than they recite at other public and private events. The Pledge cannot serve its purpose of unifying and commonly celebrating the national identity unless it is one Pledge with one content for all citizens at all points in their lives. There is no reason to tolerate such disruption and disharmony in the schools of this Nation. The Pledge of Allegiance is constitutional. This Court has repeatedly said so, and federal and state schools have acted in reliance on those assurances. The Ninth Circuit's disregard of this Court's decisions and their underlying analytical principles merits review.

2. The issue of Newdow's standing to bring his constitutional challenge is a necessarily antecedent question that this Court would need to address were it to grant review. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94 (1998). Although it is the court of appeals' erroneous ruling on the merits that warrants this Court's review, the court of appeals also committed three errors in concluding that

Newdow's status as a noncustodial parent did not deprive him of standing to challenge an educational practice at his child's school.[8]

First, and most fundamentally, Newdow has not suffered the invasion of any legally protected interest. A number of this Court's Establishment Clause cases have involved lawsuits by parents challenging practices or policies in public schools. See, e.g., Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290 (2000); Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills Sch. Dist., 509 U.S. 1 (1993); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972). In all of those cases, however, the parents had the legal right to sue as next friend to vindicate their children's legal interests and to protect the parents' own constitutional rights to direct and control the religious and educational upbringing of their children, see Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534-535 (1925).

Newdow can assert neither right. He has no legal right to sue as his child's next friend, or otherwise seek to vindicate his child's legal interests, as the court of appeals recognized. App., infra, 96a. That prerogative rests exclusively with the mother, who has sole legal custody. Ibid. While Newdow retains the right to "consult" with the mother on educational decisions and to have "access" to the child's educational records, id. at 91a, Newdow does not allege that Elk Grove's

[8] While the standing issue is necessarily antecedent to the merits of the Establishment Clause analysis, see Steel Co., supra, this Petition presents the Establishment Clause issue first because the court of appeals' erroneous constitutional judgment clearly merits this Court's review. Whether or not the Ninth Circuit's erroneous standing analysis would independently merit an exercise of this Court' s certiorari jurisdiction, it does not pose a barrier to review in this case. The Ninth Circuit's standing analysis is closely intertwined with its flawed Establishment Clause ruling, and the decision below, which not only erroneously invalidates the Pledge of Allegiance, but did so at the behest of a party without Article III standing, should not be allowed to stand.

use of the Pledge in its schools interferes with either of those rights. Nor, contrary to the court of appeals' opinion, does Newdow have any right "to direct the religious education of his daughter." Id. at 7a. The custody order granted sole control over the child's "health, education and welfare" to the mother. Id. at 90a-91a. And the mother has made clear that she "wants her daughter to recite the Pledge as it stands as part of her education," Banning C.A. Mot. to Intervene 10.[9]

Where, as here, the two parents disagree on an educational practice, the decision of the custodial parent controls and Newdow has no right to overturn it. If, as the noncustodial parent, Newdow believes the mother's educational decisions are causing harm to the child, the proper remedy is for him to resort to family court and seek a modification of the custody agreement. He cannot use federal litigation to circumvent that state-law process or to modify a state-law custody judgment. See District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482 (1983); Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413 (1923).[10]

[9] See also Burge v. City & County of San Francisco, 262 P.2d 6, 12 (Cal. 1953) (status as custodial parent "embrace[s] the sum of parental rights with respect to the rearing of a child, including its care. It includes the right * * * to direct his activities and make decisions regarding his care and control, education, health, and religion."); cf. Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 122-129 (1989).

[10] In apparent recognition of that limitation, the United States understands that Newdow has filed a motion in California Superior Court to alter the custody arrangement. That motion remains pending with a hearing date scheduled for July 31, 2003.

The court of appeals relied (App., infra, 92a-94a) on the Seventh Circuit's decision in Navin v. Park Ridge School District, 270 F.3d 1147 (2001) (per curiam), which held that a noncustodial father might be able to sue to enforce his son's rights under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, 20 U.S.C. 1415. In that case, however, the court concluded that the divorce decree did not strip the father of his parental interest in

Second, the court of appeals placed weight upon Newdow's residual right, under California law, to "expose" his child to his views. App., infra, 95a. But, again, Newdow has not alleged that Elk Grove or the United States has denied him any opportunity to expose his child to his particular viewpoints.

The court of appeals went further, however, and held that Newdow has a right not to have his message to his child interrupted or diluted by the government's educational practices. But, especially when that speech occurs with the consent of the custodial parent, the right of the non-custodial parent to "expose" the child to his views does not entitle that parent to close off all other views. Public schools routinely instruct students about evolution, war, and other matters with which some parents may disagree on religious, political, or moral grounds. What the Constitution protects, in those circumstances, is the parents' right to instill their own views in their children and to place them in a private school that is more consonant with their beliefs. See Pierce, supra.[11]

The court of appeals further erred in suggesting that Newdow's limited state-law right was somehow enhanced by that court's erroneous conclusion that his Establishment Clause challenge was meritorious. The court repeatedly ensuring the quality of his child's education. 270 F.3d at 1149. The court stressed, moreover, that the noncustodial parent could not use federal law "to upset choices committed to [the mother] by the state court," id. at 1150, which is exactly what Newdow's lawsuit attempts to do.

[11] Cf. West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630 (1943) (holding only that children whose parents have religious objections to the content of the Pledge have a right not to participate in its recitation in a classroom, where their refusal "does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so"); Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 717 (1977) (the government "may legitimately" "communicate to others an official view as to proper appreciation of history, state pride, and individualism," as long as individuals are not forced to "becom[e] the courier for such message[s]").

couched Newdow's purported Article III injury in terms of a right not to have his daughter "subjected to unconstitutional state action" and "official state indoctrination of * * * an official view of religion." App., infra, 96a (emphasis added). See also id. at 97a (the mother "may not consent to unconstitutional government action in derogation of Newdow's rights") (emphasis added).

That approach, however, confuses the standing inquiry with the ultimate question on the merits. The type of injury that Article III requires must be discernible separate and apart from the ultimate resolution of the case. The plaintiff must identify some action by the opposing party that affects the plaintiff's particularized, individual rights concretely and imminently—regardless of whether that action ultimately is found to be lawful or not. "The requirement of standing 'focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before a federal court and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated." Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 484 (1982); see also Schaffer v. Clinton, 240 F.3d 878, 883 (10th Cir.) (denying standing where it "revolves around the asserted unconstitutionality of the [conduct as that] is a statement of [plaintiff's] view of the merits * * * and no more"), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 992 (2001).

Third, even if Newdow possesses some federal right not to have his message of atheism affected by his child's exposure to the Pledge, the court of appeals' limited invalidation of the Pledge in elementary schools does not redress that injury. Newdow's child remains subject to exposure to the Pledge in a wide variety of other assemblies and settings, public or private. In addition, the child's mother could place the child in private school where the official governmental Pledge could be recited daily. Unless the Establishment Clause compels courts to root out every reference to religion in public life, the relief ordered by the court here is incapable of inoculating Newdow's message of atheism against any perceived dilution.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted. The Court may wish to consider summary reversal of the court of appeals' judgment.

Respectfully submitted.

NOMINEE DOESN'T DESERVE CALUMNY HEAPED ON HER

Forum Column

By Vilma S. Martinez

As a member of Sen. Barbara Boxer's judicial screening committee during the Clinton administration, I was proud to recommend Judge Richard Paez for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. President Clinton nominated Paez, but his nomination languished for four years, and he was subjected to a campaign of half-truths and cruel caricatures.

California Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, characteristic of her sense of fairness and respect for an independent judiciary, stepped up to the plate. She wrote letters, made phone calls and exhorted her fellow Republicans to confirm Paez and other Clinton nominees.

Now that President Bush has nominated Kuhl to the 9th Circuit, many of the groups that supported Paez, ironically, have turned their fire on Kuhl, apparently to exact payback against Senate Republicans. This turnabout is not fair play. It is the continuation of a vicious cycle that punishes worthy judicial candidates in a misguided effort to use the judiciary to further narrow political ends.

I generally identify myself as a Democrat, am a veteran of civil rights battles and testified against Judge Robert Bork's nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court (on the basis of his inadequate judicial temperament). Like others dedicated to the independence of our judiciary, I certainly do not want ideologues serving as judges on our federal courts. That is why I think that Kuhl would make a great addition to the 9th Circuit.

Kuhl has served for seven years on the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Before that, she and I were law partners for nine years. Kuhl is what I think of as an "old fashioned" judge. She cares about due process for everyone. In her seven years on the Superior Court, she has shown that she is careful to hear both sides. She does not try to influence the outcome of a case to favor one side or the other. She is serious about her oath to follow the law, whatever the result. Kuhl takes as her guide the words of Justice Felix Frankfurter that the highest calling of a judge is to subordinate the judge's personal views to the law.

Kuhl hardly can be described as being on "the fringe" of the Los Angeles legal community. She is the first woman to serve as the supervising judge of the civil departments of the Los Angeles Superior Court, a court system that is larger than the entire federal trial court nationwide. She served as the supervising judge of that court's very successful complex litigation program in its experimental phase.

Both the plaintiff and defense bars in Los Angeles actively support Kuhl, even though she primarily represented defendants when she practiced law. California Supreme Court Justice Carlos Moreno, more than a dozen justices of the Court of Appeal and almost 100 judges of the Superior Court (including more than 25 women) have signed letters in support of Kuhl. Many of these supporters are active Democrats. They know Kuhl and, like me, they know that she has not been, and would not be, a result-oriented judge.

Prof. Erwin Chemerinsky recently argued, in the pages of this publication, that the battle over judges that was so unfair to nominees of Clinton should continue against Bush's nominees. "Look Closely," Forum, April 17. He also takes the position that candidates for judicial office should be judged by who their clients are and what positions they took on behalf of those clients.

The Los Angeles County Bar Association strongly disagrees. In its March 28 letter to the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the County Bar stated: "The recent trend in attacking the qualifications of judicial candidates on the basis of positions advocated on behalf of clients is misguided ... . [W]e urge that the Judiciary Committee give due consideration to those issues that are critical to assessing a nominees' qualifications - the nominees' professional abilities, intelligence, integrity, experience and judicial temperament - and not to those positions taken by nominees on behalf of their clients."

The letter explains that because of a lawyer's responsibility to explore and present all arguments that may advance a client's cause, "neither the identity of a lawyer's clients nor the zealous advocacy of their causes necessarily provides any insight into the lawyer's personal beliefs, nor do they necessarily provide any indication of how a nominee may view a particular case presented to him or her as a judge." The letter also notes that the type of personal attacks on candidates that have become common may discourage candidates from pursuing judicial nominations and discourage lawyers from taking on unpopular or controversial clients or causes.

I call on fellow members of the bar, both Democrats and Republicans, to step up to the plate to support Kuhl, just like she went to bat for Paez and other Clinton nominees. It is shameful that her generosity and dedication to an independent judiciary are being repaid with the same sort of calumny that Paez suffered. Until the politicians decide to play fair with judicial candidates, our system of justice will suffer grievously.

LAW DAY, U.S.A., 2003

- - - - - - -

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

America was founded on the ideals of liberty and equality for all, and the Framers of the Constitution created three branches of the national Government to uphold these principles. ~~One of these branches~~The third branch, the Judicial, is responsible for administering justice fairly and ~~efficiently~~impartially ~~and ensuring that the Constitution is followed~~. On Law Day, we recognize the ~~merits~~ achievements of our Nation's legal system and our independent Judiciary ~~in maintaining "checks and balances"~~ and in sustaining the rights and liberties we cherish.

George Washington ~~once~~ wrote, "The administration of justice is the firmest pillar of government." Our Judicial branch upholds the rule of law in our society and strengthens our democracy. Under the Constitution, judges ~~have been~~are granted the ~~significant~~olemn responsibility of providing fair and impartial resolution ~~when disputes arise or when individuals are charged with breaking the law~~of criminal and civil disputes.~~.~~

This year's Law Day theme, "Independent Courts Protect Our Liberties," focuses on one of the ~~most important tenets~~foundations ~~—~~ of our ~~legal~~constitutional system: judicial independence providing in the federal system by life tenure and an assured level of compensation.~~.~~ ~~In order to~~It ~~also r~~reminds us that in order to~~–~~ ensure ~~fairness and~~ equality for all citizens and fairness in the judicial process, our judges must serve as impartial arbiters who do not have a stake in their decisions or seek to achieve a biased~~the~~ outcome or particular result ~~of~~in the ~~court decisions~~cases they oversee.

~~Judicial independence upholds the separation of powers among our three branches of Government, and helps ensure that lawmakers create laws that do not favor one individual over another.~~ Our constitutional system of separation of powers places ~~By applying~~ careful limits on the powers of judges and separates~~ingseparating~~ the responsibilities of making laws and ~~applying~~interpreting laws between the ~~J~~Legislative and ~~j~~Judicial legislative and judicial branches.~~, our Constitution assures that no one branch of government holds too much power.~~ ~~J~~Judicial independence provides ~~eserves this separation of powers by providing~~ Federal judges the autonomy to make decisions unfettered by influences from the executive and legislative branches. ~~legal system encourages integrity and fulfills the promises of the Constitution~~In this way, we are assured that are laws will be ~~drafted fairly,~~ interpreted justly~~,~~ and applied with uniformity.

~~State systems provide for judicial independence by modeling their own systems after the Federal division of power and through their ethical cannons.~~

~~Because judges enjoy autonomy once they are appointed, it is~~ Our Nation's judges must be ~~crucial that~~ men and women of exemplary character,~~.~~ ~~are selected. The~~Both the nomination process of our

This Law Day, we recognize the vital role of independent judges in upholding justice in courts throughout our land, and we resolve to continue to support and strengthen the Judicial branch, and thereby that sustains our lives and our preservinge our rights and liberties.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, in accordance with Public Law 87-20, as amended, do hereby proclaim May 1, 2003, as Law Day, U.S.A. Class Action Amendment Provokes A Storm Among Biz Groups ÿÿÿÿÿAs reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee last month, class action reform legislation cosponsored by Judiciary Chairman Hatch and Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and others grants federal courts original jurisdiction over certain civil actions brought as a class.
ÿÿÿÿÿBut a key exception included in the measure threatens to undermine business' main goal of funneling most class actions into federal court, and the interests are doggedly seeking to strip it out as the bill goes to the Senate floor.
ÿÿÿÿÿInserted in committee at the behest of Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., and cosponsored by Feinstein, the provision would exempt from the bill both certain "case consolidations," which legal experts have described as being essentially class actions by a different name, and also "private attorney general" actions, which allow individual citizens to sue companies on behalf of the government or the public at large.
ÿÿÿÿÿThe first portion of that amendment, the effect of which would be to exempt a significant number of de facto class action lawsuits from the bill's reach, including in states considered favorable to plaintiffs such as Mississippi, is causing business lobbyists considerable heartburn.
ÿÿÿÿÿAlthough not willing to say so publicly, some have said privately that the amendment "guts" the bill. Sources said Hatch is communicating with Specter to try to determine exactly what Specter's intentions were with the amendment and to narrow it accordingly as the bill moves to the floor.
ÿÿÿÿÿ"It is clear -- Sen. Specter is very much willing to work with Sen. Hatch to really work [out] what his amendment is going do," said Matt Webb of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Institute for Legal Reform.
ÿÿÿÿÿWebb declined to say what would become of industry support for the measure if that provision remains intact, however. "I think there's a way to bridge that gap," Webb said. "That's a bridge we'll cross when we get there."

ÿÿÿÿÿVictor Schwartz, counsel for the American Tort Reform Association, said he believes the effect of Specter's amendment was "inadvertent."

ÿÿÿÿÿ"What he does is a technical thing, but it's a very important thing," Schwartz said. "But case consolidations that are really class actions should be within the letter and the spirit of the [new federal] law," he added.

ÿÿÿÿÿPublic Citizen, which agrees that some sort of class action reform is needed, nevertheless insists the Chamber's real agenda in the underlying bill is to make it harder for consumers to prevail, by funneling their cases to federal judges that are inclined to interpret state law conservatively.

ÿÿÿÿÿAsked by CongressDaily Tuesday whether he was amenable to altering his amendment, Specter said only that he was willing to take a look at anyone's suggested revisions.

ÿÿÿÿÿBy most counts, the business and insurance industry-dominated Class Action Coalition, led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is around three votes shy of the 60 votes needed to filibuster-proof the reform bill in the Senate.

ÿÿÿÿÿSenate Majority Leader Frist has expressed an interest in having that bill on that floor this month, although Senate sources this week expressed doubt that a pre-Memorial Day timetable is an achievable goal, given the crush of other legislative business. By Pamela Barnett

Issue Presented

"To vote without debating is perilous, but to debate and never vote is imbecile."
– Senator Henry Cabot Lodge (1893)

"Filibustering originally referred to mercenary warfare intended to destabilize a government."
– Catherine Fisk & Erwin Chemerinsky,
The Filibuster, 49 Stan. L. Rev. 181, 187 n.26 (1996)

"The Senate of the United States is the only legislative body in the world which cannot act when its majority is ready for action. A little group of willful men, representing no opinion but their own, have rendered the great Government of the United States helpless and contemptible.

The remedy? There is but one remedy. The only remedy is that the rules of the Senate shall be so altered that it can act."
– President Woodrow Wilson,
The New York Times, Mar. 5, 1917

The United States Senate is currently facing an unprecedented blockade of the President's judicial nominees. Never in the history of this nation has a majority of the Senate, when fully prepared to exercise its constitutional function to express its consent to a judicial nominee, been denied the opportunity to do so. This memorandum will explore the constitutional questions that arise out of the current crisis – a crisis in which a minority of Senators are arguably trying to change the Constitution by establishing a 60-vote requirement to confirm judicial nominees – and discuss potential solutions.

At a minimum, the current controversy clearly demonstrates that the judicial confirmation process is badly broken, and that the Senate needs a fresh start. The current crisis presents serious constitutional issues which the Senate should explore. But even if no constitutional or other legal problems with the current use of the Senate Rules to obstruct judicial nominations are ultimately identified, at the very least it is a gross abuse of the Rules, one that turns the filibuster into a tool of obstruction – just as the worst lawyers in our nation abuse our litigation system and use otherwise legitimate discovery tactics as tools of harassment. Obstruction by Senators and harassment by lawyers alike are intolerable in a fair and just society, and the American people rightfully demand a stop to both.

Defining the Issue

The constitutional issue presented by the current controversy is simply this:

Can a minority of Senators use the Senate Rules to prevent a majority of the Senate from exercising its constitutional function to consent to a judicial nominee, when the majority is fully prepared to do so?

The Senate clearly has the power to make its own rules. Article I, Section 5 states that "[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings." But that power is not unlimited. As the Supreme Court unanimously held in United States v. Ballin (1892), "[t]he constitution empowers each house to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained." Therefore, the question is whether the Senate can constitutionally establish a rule under which a majority can be prevented from expressing its consent to a judicial nominee as contemplated under Article II of the Constitution.

It is important that we not be distracted by what is not at issue in this controversy:

- The number of filibusters that have occurred in the past. The issue is not whether a filibuster is constitutional or not. The issue is whether a filibuster may be used specifically to prevent a majority of the Senate from exercising its constitutional authority to consent to a judicial nominee, when it is fully prepared and motivated to do so. A group of Senators may decide to filibuster in a situation in which there is no majority prepared to exercise its constitutional powers. Such a filibuster would not raise any constitutional questions whatsoever.

- The number of cloture votes taken in the past. Cloture is simply a parliamentary procedure by which the Senate may place a time limit on debate. Cloture votes thus have little to do with the constitutional issue presented here.

- Filibusters of legislation. Filibusters of legislation involve constitutionally and structurally different government powers than filibusters of judicial nominees. There is also a significantly broader tradition and practice to support filibusters of legislation than filibusters of judicial nominees. Evidence of the former therefore cannot be used to justify the latter.

- Senate Judiciary Committee procedures. Delay or rejection of a judicial nominee by the Senate Judiciary Committee (whether through the blue slip, through a committee vote of rejection, or through committee delay) does not directly implicate the constitutional issues addressed by this memorandum. What is at issue here is the power of a majority of the entire Senate to express its consent to a judicial nominee. Delay or rejection by the Senate Judiciary Committee does not raise constitutional questions. (A majority of the Senate can adopt a resolution of discharge pursuant to Senate Rule XVII to bring before the entire Senate a judicial nomination being held by the Senate Judiciary Committee.)

To fully appreciate the constitutional issues presented by the current controversy, one needs a precise understanding of the relevant terminology and concepts:

- The Fundamental Constitutional Principle of Majority Rule. Although the Constitution does not explicitly state that a majority of the Senate is required to consent to nominees (or to make rules or to enact legislation, for that matter), it has long been understood that majority rule is implied. As the Supreme Court unanimously held in United States v. Ballin (1892), "the general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that, when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations." Moreover, had the Founders intended for the Senate to set supermajority requirements for the confirmation of nominees, it presumably would have done so explicitly – as it did with respect to the authorization of treaties, the proposal of constitutional amendments, or the overturning of presidential vetoes of legislation.

- The Right to Debate. The Senate has long operated under a tradition of extended debate. That tradition of debate is not without limit, however. Indeed, according to section 17 of Thomas Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Procedure, which informally governed the Senate in the early Congresses, "[n]o one is to speak impertinently or beside the question, superfluously or tediously."

- Previous Question. For nearly the first two decades of Congress, the Senate operated under a rule in which a majority of Senators could force an immediate vote on a matter by approving a "motion for the previous question." This rule was operative from 1789 to 1806.

- Cloture. Cloture is a procedure provided by Senate Rule XXII under which sixty Senators may impose a 30-hour time limit on further debate. Thus, cloture is simply a parliamentary procedure to place limits on debates. A vote for cloture is not necessarily a vote in support of a particular matter, and a vote against cloture is not necessarily an act of obstruction. Refusal to invoke cloture therefore is not per se an offense against the majority's will on the underlying matter.

- Filibuster. An act of filibuster is likewise not a per se offense against majority will. There may not be a majority prepared to support a matter. Even if there is a majority prepared to support a matter, there may be a majority that wishes to allow debate at least for a certain period of time, just as a majority may vote for cloture even if only a minority supports the underlying matter.

Range of constitutional theories

There are a number of possible viewpoints on the current controversy. Under any of these viewpoints, however, the case for reform seems strong. The varying viewpoints are listed here, in increasing order of hostility to filibusters of judicial nominations:

1. Filibusters of judicial nominations, although an arguably legitimate tool for the minority to ensure an adequate opportunity to debate, are objectionable when they are abused.

   It is one thing for filibusters to be used to ensure adequate debate on a nomination. It is quite another thing, however, for filibusters to be used simply to change the Constitution and impose a 60-vote standard to confirm judicial nominees – which is precisely what is going on today.

   Senate Democrats have made clear that the real purpose of the current use of filibusters against judicial nominees is to permit the minority party to establish, at will, a 60-vote standard for confirmation. For example, on April 8, Senator Harry Reid objected to any time agreement for any number of hours of debate followed by a vote on Justice Owen, stating that, "[s]peaking for the Senator from Nevada, there is not a number in the universe that would be sufficient."

2. Filibusters of judicial nominees are not only objectionable, but raise serious constitutional questions. Under the Constitution, a majority of the Senate has the constitutional power to express its consent to judicial nominees, regardless of what Senate Rules may provide.

   The Constitution implicitly establishes a majority vote requirement for Senate confirmation of judicial nominations. In contrast, the Constitution expressly provides for supermajority vote requirements when the Founders believed that such requirements were appropriate. Therefore, any attempt to use the Senate Rules to impose a supermajority requirement for the confirmation of judges raises serious constitutional questions.

Unlike the enactment of legislation, the filibustering of judicial nominations lacks historical practice or pedigree. Indeed, only once in U.S. history has a majority of the Senate ever been prevented from consenting to a judicial nominee. That one example, Justice Abe Fortas*, is a poor precedent because Fortas suffered under a cloud of ethical and other controversies, his nomination was opposed by a bipartisan coalition of Senators, and President Johnson quickly withdrew his nomination after the first attempt to impose time limits on debate. There is no evidence that a majority was actually prepared to exercise its constitutional function to consent to Fortas over bipartisan opposition and despite serious ethical allegations.*

Only twice has a majority of the Senate been prevented from consenting to an executive branch nominee: the 1994 nomination of Sam Brown to be Ambassador to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the 1995 nomination of Dr. Henry Foster to be Surgeon General. Importantly, neither case involved critical positions in our nation's government which might have motivated a majority to press its constitutional right to consent to executive branch nominees.

The filibustering of judicial nominations raises greater constitutional concerns than the filibustering of legislation or even executive nominations. Congress exercises primary control and responsibility in the area of legislation. With respect to nominations, by contrast, the Senate is intruding upon an executive function, and traditional separation of powers analysis has always dictated that Congressional incursions into executive functions be construed narrowly in the absence of clear text. Filibusters of judicial nominations additionally poses a threat to judicial independence by increasing the politicization of the courts. Accordingly, judicial filibusters, even more so than filibusters of legislation or of executive nominations, are especially dubious, because they alone present this trifecta of constitutional concerns.

3. All filibusters, whether applied to legislation or nominations, raise serious constitutional questions.

The most aggressive opponents of filibusters – which include prominent Democrats like Lloyd Cutler and Senators Lieberman,

REV_00165183

Daschle, and Harkin – have argued that all filibusters are constitutionally problematic, because the Constitution dictates a majority rule for legislation and nominations alike, and no Senate rule can be used to prevent a majority from exercising those constitutional functions, regardless of historical practice. Such individuals typically point out that, during the Founding Era, debate could be ended in the Senate by majority vote, through a motion for the previous question – a practice that lasted in the Senate for nearly two decades.

This constitutional theory has even been the cause of litigation, although no court has ever addressed the issue on the merits.

It is unlikely that a majority of the Senate will coalesce around this position. Some members who may be willing to forego opportunities to filibuster judicial nominees may not be willing to forego opportunities to filibuster legislation. That said, it may be useful to point out that prominent Democrats adopt this view. After all, it would be very difficult to argue the inverse position: that filibusters of legislation are unconstitutional, but filibusters of nominations are permissible.

The Senate should also explore an additional constitutional question:

Whether a majority of the Senate has the constitutional power to change Senate rules, notwithstanding Rule XXII (under which debate on a rule change can be filibustered and cloture can be invoked only with the approval of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting).

A majority of the Senate always retains the constitutional power to change the rules, regardless of what the Senate Rules might state – as Vice Presidents Richard Nixon and Hubert Humphrey*, in their capacities as presiding officers of the Senate, and numerous legal scholars, from* Erwin Chemerinsky to John McGinnis*, have opined.*

Just as one Congress cannot enact a law that a subsequent Congress cannot amend by majority vote, one Senate cannot enact a rule that a subsequent Senate cannot amend by majority vote. Such power would be tantamount to amending the Constitution by majority vote.

Thus, the Supreme Court has unanimously held that "[t]he power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the house." After all, "[e]very succeeding legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power with respect to them as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil."

Even assuming the validity of this constitutional theory, however, a constitutional point of order is debatable and thus, under Senate Rule XXII, cannot be forcibly ended except with the support of three-fifths of the Senate.

AMENDING THE SENATE RULES

In 1994, a bipartisan group of former Senators established an organization known as Action, Not Gridlock!, to ensure that a majority could vote after reasonable time for debate. That group was comprised of Senators Birch Bayh (D-IN), Edward Brooke (R-MA), Dick Clark (D-IA), Barry Goldwater (R-AZ), Floyd Haskell (D-CO), Charles Mathias (R-MD), Gaylord Nelson (D-WI), William Proxmire (D-WI), and Robert Stafford (R-VT). The previous year, Norman Ornstein of the American Enterprise Institute and Thomas Mann of the Brookings Institution specifically urged that "the Senate should look hard at adopting a sliding scale for cloture votes, 60 votes required to cut off debate initially, 55 votes after a week of debate, and a simple majority 2 weeks after the initial cloture vote."[1]

In light of recent events, it is appropriate to revisit these efforts and to consider the need for reform. Indeed, just last year, the American Bar Association announced its policy under which "[t]he ABA urges the President to nominate candidates for vacant federal judicial positions promptly and urges the Senate to hear and vote on those nominations in an expeditious manner." And earlier this year, Chief Justice William Rehnquist reiterated in his 2002 year-end report on the federal judiciary what he had said at the end of both 1997 and 2001: "We simply ask that the President nominate qualified candidates with reasonable promptness and that the Senate act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them."

Under any of the possible viewpoints discussed in this memorandum, there is an argument for reform of the Senate Rules to ensure that, once adequate debate has taken place, a willing and ready majority of the Senate has the opportunity to exercise its constitutional function to consent to judicial nominees.

Proposals to Amend the Senate Rules

There are a number of proposals already on the table to change the Senate Rules in order to achieve final resolution and a vote after adequate debate.

- Senator Miller has reintroduced in the current Congress (as S. Res. 85) a proposal by Senators Harkin and Lieberman, which they had introduced just as they returned to minority status following the 1994 elections (as Amendment 1 to S. Res. 14). As he explained in a Wall Street Journal op-ed of March 10, 2003, the Miller proposal would dramatically strengthen the majority's ability to vote, by providing for a declining vote requirement for placing time limits on debate with each cloture petition. The first cloture petition would require 60 votes. The second would require 57 votes. The third would require 54 votes, and all subsequent cloture petitions would require 51 votes. As Senator Harkin explained in 1995, "the minority would have the opportunity to debate, focus public attention on a bill, and communicate their case to the public. In the end, though, the majority could bring the measure to a final vote, as it generally should in a democracy."

  On January 1, 1995, the New York Times editorialized that "[t]he Harkin plan . . . would go a long way toward making the Senate a more productive place to conduct the nation's business. . . . Now is the perfect moment . . . to get rid of an archaic rule that frustrates democracy and serves no useful purpose." On January 5, 19 Senators voted against a motion to table the Harkin-Lieberman proposal, and thereby voted to support it: Senators Bingaman, Boxer, Bryan, Bumpers, Feingold, Graham, Harkin, Kennedy, Kerrey, Kerry, Lautenberg, Lieberman, Moseley-Braun, Pell, Pryor, Robb, Sarbanes, Simon, Wellstone. The motion to table succeeded by a bipartisan vote of 76-19. But as Senator Lieberman stated just prior to the vote, "Senator Harkin and I are prepared to keep fighting until this change occurs because of what is on the line, which is the credibility and the productivity of the U.S. Senate."

  As currently crafted, the Miller proposal would apply to all filibusters, and not just filibusters of judicial nominations. The Miller proposal could be limited, however, to just cloture petitions filed on judicial nominations. Those who voted against the Harkin proposal could without being inconsistent vote for such a limited proposal.

- Senator Specter has proposed to go even further than the Miller proposal, which would only redress filibusters of nominations. As he explained in a Legal Times op-ed of July 8, 2002, Specter would propose a rule change to do two things: (1) restrict the discretion of the majority not to schedule votes, as well as the power of the minority to obstruct votes, by imposing strict time deadlines on both the majority and the minority for considering judicial nominees, and (2) remove the ability of the Senate Judiciary Committee to prevent floor action on judicial nominees.

  President Bush endorsed a similar proposal on October 30, 2002. That proposal echoed statements made by then-Governor Bush during the presidential campaign of 2000. Announcing "A New Approach" in Knoxville, Tennessee on June 8, 2000, Bush said that "I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November."

  Senator Leahy repeatedly endorsed Bush's campaign statements and urged colleagues to apply those same principles to the Senate's consideration of President Clinton's nominees. Moreover, in 1998, Leahy introduced S. 1906, which would have forbidden Senate recesses of more than 9 days, whenever a nomination for a judicial vacancy, designated an emergency pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 46, has been pending for 60 days or longer.

  Presumably, under the Specter-Bush-Leahy approach, a filibuster would not be permitted once the applicable time deadline has expired.

Under any of these approaches, there would be ample opportunity for debate on a judicial nominee. After a specified amount of time has passed, however, a majority of the Senate would have full opportunity to exercise its constitutional function and express its consent to a judicial nomination.

History of Majority Rule in the Senate

From 1789 to 1806, a majority of the Senate had the power to close debate through a motion for the previous question. Since 1806, the number of votes necessary to close debate has changed from time to time (from the highest possible requirement of unanimous consent, down to the current 3/5 vote of the entire Senate), but the voting requirement has never returned to a simple majority vote.

However, there have been a total of 30 proposals to restore the majority vote rule since 1806, and starting with the first recorded filibuster in 1841. Such proposals were made in 1841, 1850, 1869, 1873, 1883, 1890, 1893, 1918, 1925, 1947, 1951-58, 1960-68, 1995 and 2003.

Every instance in which the rule or proposed rule would have allowed a majority to close debate (whether a majority of the entire Senate, or just of all Senators present and voting) appears in underlined text.

- 1789-1806: For nearly the first two decades of Congress, the Senate operated under a rule in which a majority of the Senate could take immediate action on a matter under debate, by approving by a majority vote a "motion for the previous question." This rule was operative from 1789 to 1806.

- 1806: The previous question motion was eliminated from the Senate Rules, but the Senate nevertheless continued to operate in tranquility for decades. According to Senate records, the first filibuster did not take place until 1841.

- 1841: The Senate's first filibuster.

    - 1841: Proposal to restore previous question motion by Senator Henry Clay.

    - 1850: Proposal to restore previous question motion (Douglas).

    - 1869: Proposal to restore previous question motion.

    - 1873: Proposal to restore previous question motion (Wright).

    - 1883: Proposal to restore previous question motion (Frye).

REV_00165189

- 1890: Proposal to introduce majority vote cloture rule (Aldrich).

- 1893: Proposal to introduce majority vote cloture rule (Platt, Hoar, Hill and Gallinger).

- 1916: Proposal to introduce 2/3 vote cloture rule.

- 1917: 2/3 vote cloture rule enacted. President Wilson asked Congress to approve the arming of merchant ships against Germany in World War I. The measure was supported by an overwhelming majority, but the minority continued debate to deny Wilson a vote. Wilson angrily denounced the Senate and called for a rule change. The Senate adopted the Martin Resolution by a vote of 76-3. That resolution established a cloture rule – the precursor of today's Senate Rule XXII – which allowed 2/3 vote of those Senators present and voting to impose time limits on debate. It was a compromise measure between those who sought to impose majority rule and those who were opposed to cloture altogether.

  - 1918: Proposal to restore previous question motion (Underwood).

  - 1925: Proposal to restore previous question motion (Underwood).

  - 1947: Proposal to reduce cloture rule to majority vote (Saltonstall, Knowland, Morse and Pepper).

- 1949: Cloture rule amended. Cloture opponents and proponents agreed to a compromise amendment. Cloture could now be invoked to limit debate on motions or other pending matters, including purely procedural votes (except for rule changes), and not just substantive matters. But the vote requirement was raised from 2/3 vote of Senators present and voting to 2/3 vote of the entire Senate.

  - 1951-52: Proposal to reduce cloture rule to majority vote (Morse and Humphrey).

  - 1951-52: Proposal to reduce cloture rule to majority vote of the entire Senate (Ives and Lodge).

- 1957-58: Proposal to change cloture rule: 2/3 vote of Senators present and voting, but in no case less than a majority of entire Senate (Case).
- 1957-58: Proposal to change cloture rule to majority vote (Morse).
- 1957-58: Proposal to change cloture rule to majority vote (Ives).
- 1957-58: Proposal to change cloture rule: 2/3 vote of Senators present and voting (separate proposals by Knowland, Bush, and Jenner).

- 1959: Cloture rule amended to 2/3 vote of Senators present and voting. Cloture could now be invoked in debates on rule changes.
  - 1960: Proposal to reduce cloture rule to majority vote of the entire Senate (Javits).

  - 2003: Proposal to reduce cloture vote: first vote requirement would remain 60; second vote requirement would be reduced to 57; third vote requirement would be reduced to 54; fourth and subsequent vote requirements would be 51, a majority of the entire Senate (Miller).

Frequency of attempted filibusters

It is difficult to quantify the number of filibusters that have been attempted in the history of the United States Senate, in part because it is difficult to identify precisely when a filibuster is taking place. The taking of a cloture vote (since cloture was first made available in 1917) is one way to count filibusters, but it is an imprecise way. Cloture petitions can be used to attempt to limit debate when debate is being used to delay indefinitely consideration of a matter. But cloture can also be a simple way to manage the Senate, when there is no actual desire by any member to engage in a filibuster.

In 1994, the Democratic Study Group of the U.S. House of Representatives published a study, entitled A Look at the Senate Filibuster, which endeavored to count all filibusters in U.S. Senate history up to that date. The results of that count are listed below, by number of attempted filibusters per year.

Importantly, this count does not distinguish between filibusters used not to block all action, but simply to ensure adequate debate and opportunity for amendment, on the one hand, and filibusters used to block action altogether, on the other hand. Naturally, only those filibusters of the latter kind trigger constitutional questions.

The Dark History of the Filibuster

Arguably, the history of the filibuster is largely the history of obstruction to the progress of civil rights, including the feared filibuster of Thurgood Marshall and the current filibusters of Miguel Estrada and Justice Priscilla Owen.

- 1841: John C. Calhoun fought Henry Clay's efforts to restore the previous question motion and his alternative proposal to impose time limits on debates. Calhoun was motivated by a desire to accommodate the views of the slaveholding white South.

- 1879, 1890-91: Senator George Hoar tried to end Democratic filibuster of bill to allow military to police elections and combat intimidation of black voters in the South. Bill killed.

- 1922, 1935, 1938: Anti-lynching legislation filibustered.

- 1942, 44, 46: Anti-poll-tax legislation filibustered.

- 1946, 1950, 1957, 1960, 1962, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1968, 1972, 1975: Filibusters of anti-race discrimination statutes in employment, housing, public accommodation, and voting

- 1961: President Kennedy gave Marshall a recess appointment to the Second Circuit after determining that Senate Democrats might not quickly confirm him, and then sent his nomination to the Senate for its consideration. Senate Democrats considered, but ultimately decided not to conduct, a filibuster against Marshall. The Senate did not confirm Marshall, however, until eleven months after he first began serving his recess appointment. Marshall would serve on the Second Circuit until appointed Solicitor General in 1965, and then Associate Justice in 1967.[2]

- 2003: A bipartisan majority of Senators is prepared to confirm Miguel Estrada to the federal bench and make him the first Hispanic ever to serve on the prestigious U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, but a partisan minority of 45 Democrats will not allow the Senate to vote on his nomination.

FILIBUSTERS AND THE CONSTITUTION

Majority vs. supermajority voting rules in the Constitution

The text of the Constitution nowhere contemplates a supermajority vote requirement to confirm judges. To the contrary, Article II states that "[t]he President . . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges." It has long been understood that simple majority vote is always the implicit rule except where the Constitution expressly states otherwise.

- As the Supreme Court unanimously held in United States v. Ballin (1892), "the general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that, when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations."

- Section 41 of Thomas Jefferson's *Manual of Parliamentary Procedure, which still governs the House today, and which Thomas Jefferson used to govern the Senate when he was Vice President, states: "The voice of the majority decides. For the lex majoris partis is the law of all councils, elections, &c. where not otherwise expressly provided."

- In Federalist 22, Alexander Hamilton declared that "the fundamental maxim of republican government . . . requires that the sense of the majority should prevail."

- In Federalist 58, James Madison stated that "the fundamental principle of free government would be reversed" if supermajority voting requirements were the norm. "It would be no longer the majority that would rule: the power would be transferred to the minority."

REV_00165196

Had the Founders intended to impose supermajority requirements for the confirmation of nominees, they presumably would have done so explicitly. For example:

- "[T]he Concurrence of two thirds" of either the House or the Senate is required to expel a Member of Congress under Article I, Section 5.

- "[N]o Person shall be convicted" by the Senate in an impeachment trial "without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present," according to Article I, Section 3.

- Legislation can be enacted over presidential veto if "two thirds" of each House approves, pursuant to Article I, Section 7.

- The President is authorized to ratify treaties only if "two thirds of the Senators present concur," under Article II, Section 2.

- Congress may propose amendments to the Constitution "whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary," according to Article V.

- Under the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress is authorized, "by a vote of two-thirds of each House," to remove the disability from federal service of rebels who, having previously sworn allegiance to the United States as a federal or state office, subsequently supported the Confederacy during the Civil War.

- Under the Twenty-Fifth Amendment, Congress may determine "by two-thirds vote of both Houses" that "the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office."

In addition, article 9 of the Articles of Confederation stated that "[t]he United States in Congress assembled shall never . . . appoint a commander in chief of the army or navy, unless nine States assent to the same."

In light of these express supermajority voting requirements, it seems clear that the Founders did not intend to impose a supermajority voting rule for the confirmation of judges.

Finally, it would be odd to argue, for example, that treaties require a two-thirds vote, but that the Senate can set any vote requirement it wants for nominees – including a vote requirement even higher than two-thirds. The Founders clearly intended for Senate consent to treaties to be more difficult to obtain than Senate consent on nominees.

Indeed, the Senate Rules contemplate, but nowhere explicitly state, that a simple majority is required to confirm Presidential nominees. No express rule is necessary, because the constitutional implication is clear and unrebuttable.

Extraconstitutional supermajority voting rules

Given that the Constitution implicitly establishes a majority vote requirement for the confirmation of judicial nominees, it seems reasonable to conclude that the Senate may not use its power to make rules to add an extraconstitutional supermajority vote requirement.

After all, the Senate's power to make its own rules is not unlimited. As the Supreme Court unanimously held in United States v. Ballin (1892), "[t]he constitution empowers each house to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained."

A supermajority cloture rule to ensure adequate debate is one thing. Supermajority vote requirements to close debate prematurely arguably survives the Ballin test of reasonableness. But use of that supermajority cloture rule to effectively change the Constitution and increase the vote requirement altogether is quite another thing. At least as an initial matter, it is difficult to see how such a regime could survive scrutiny under Ballin.

- The strongest counterargument is that there is a long tradition of filibusters and supermajority cloture vote requirements preventing the enactment of legislation in the Senate. (This tradition is bolstered by House Rule XXI(5), enacted as part of the Contract with America in 1995, under which tax increases can be enacted only by a 3/5 vote.)

  The best legal response is that this tradition, however regrettable, at most applies primarily to legislation, and not to nominations. Moreover, as explained in the following pages, there are important constitutional distinctions between Congress's power with respect to legislation and its power respect to nominations.

- A second counterargument is that the cloture rule is not a substantive rule on the merits of the underlying matter, but rather a mere procedural rule.

  The best response is that such a distinction, especially when the cloture rule is being used effectively to change the vote requirement on the underlying matter, and not merely to ensure adequate debate, elevates form over substance and violates the Ballin rule of reasonableness.

REV_00165199

Prominent Democrats Who Call ALL Filibusters Unconstitutional

A number of prominent Democrats have previously argued that all filibusters – whether of legislation or any other matter requiring majority rule under the Constitution – are unconstitutional:

- Senator Lieberman on January 4, 1995: "the filibuster rule . . . there is no constitutional basis for it. . . . it is, in its way, inconsistent with the Constitution, one might almost say an amendment of the Constitution by rule of the U.S. Senate." And on January 5: "The Constitution states only five specific cases in which there is a requirement for more than a majority to work the will of this body: Ratification of a treaty, override of a Presidential veto, impeachment, adoption of a constitutional amendment, and expulsion of a Member of Congress. In fact, the Framers of the Constitution considered other cases in which a supermajority might have been required and rejected them. And we by our rules have effectively amended the Constitution--which I believe, respectfully, is not right--and added the opportunity of any Member or a minority of Members to require 60 votes." Congressional Record.

- Senator Daschle on January 30, 1995: "the Constitution is straightforward about the few instances in which more than a majority of the Congress must vote: A veto override, a treaty, and a finding of guilt in an impeachment proceeding. Every other action by the Congress is taken by majority vote. The Founders debated the idea of requiring more than a majority . . . . They concluded that putting such immense power into the hands of a minority ran squarely against the democratic principle. Democracy means majority rule, not minority gridlock." CR.

- Senator Harkin on March 1, 1994: "I really believe that the filibuster rules are unconstitutional. I believe the Constitution sets out five times when you need majority or supermajority votes in the Senate for treaties, impeachment." CR.

- Lloyd Cutler on April 19, 1993: "requirements of 60 votes to cut off debate and a two-thirds vote to amend the rules are both unconstitutional." And again on May 3, 1993: "the Senate rule requiring a super-majority vote to cut off debate is unconstitutional." Wash. Post.

The argument, if anything, is even stronger with respect to judicial nominations.

REV_00165200

Filibustering Legislation vs. Nominations

It is well established that Congress retains primary responsibility over legislation, while the President retains primary responsibility over the appointment power.

- Under Article I, Section 1, "[a]ll legislative Powers herein granted" are vested in Congress.

- The power to appoint judges and executive officials, by contrast, are vested in the President pursuant to Article II, Section 2.

It is well established that, unlike the power to enact legislation, the appointment power is an executive power.

- The Senate itself recognizes this dichotomy by establishing two separate calendars of business: the legislative calendar and the executive calendar. Senate business on nominations is recorded in a separate Senate executive journal, conducted during executive session, and coordinated by an executive clerk.

Thus, the Senate's tradition of allowing a minority to obstruct legislation by filibuster does not, alone, justify allowing a minority to obstruct nominations. Even assuming that the Senate's power to make rules extends to supermajority vote requirements in the legislative context, it does not automatically follow that such power extends to nominations as well. After all, the constitutional structure of our government dictates that the Senate's power with respect to nominations is necessarily narrower than its power with respect to legislation.

- Under traditional separation of powers analysis, Congressional incursions into executive power – such as the power of appointment – are construed narrowly, and are not permitted absent a clear expression in the constitutional text.

    - As Alexander Hamilton once noted, and the Supreme Court once quoted, "The general doctrine of our Constitution then is that the executive power of the nation is vested in the President, subject only to the exceptions and qualifications, which are expressed in the instrument." Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 138-39 (1926).

- The Founders deliberately made it difficult to enact legislation, by imposing both the constitutional requirement of bicameralism – approval by two separately elected representative bodies – and the element of presentment – approval by the President, or in the alternative, the approval of two-thirds of each house of Congress. The Founders did not intend, by contrast, to make it difficult to appoint individuals to government office. To the contrary, Article II mandates that the President "shall nominate" and, with the Senate's consent, "shall appoint" individuals such as judges.

- Filibusters of nominations are offensive to constitutional structure and separation of powers, because they effectively re-order the Constitution's allocation of executive power with respect to appointments. The Senate may not by rule enhance its own power at the expense of the President by giving itself a larger role in the appointment process than originally contemplated by the Constitution.

    - As D.C. Circuit Chief Judge Harry Edwards once explained, "[i]f Congress is allowed to employ the rulemaking clause to impose new supermajority requirements beyond those already stated in the Constitution, the potential for mischief is great." For example, the Senate might "adopt an internal rule of procedure that requires the votes of three-fifths, rather than one-half, of its Members to confirm a presidential appointee. The Senate, acting unilaterally, could thereby increase its own power at the expense of the President. I think it is clear that the Framers never intended for Congress to have such unchecked authority to impose supermajority voting requirements that fundamentally change the nature of our democratic processes." Skaggs v. Carle, 110 F.3d 831 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (Edwards, C.J., dissenting).

    - As one legal commentator has noted, "if the Senate were allowed to adopt such a rule, it would be able singlehandedly to upset the carefully crafted rules concerning appointment of both executive officials and judges and to unilaterally limit the power the Constitution gives to the President in the appointment process. This, I believe, would allow the Senate to aggrandize its own role and would unconstitutionally distort the balance of powers established by the Constitution." Susan Low Bloch, Congressional Self-Discipline: The

Constitutionality of Supermajority Rules, 14 Const. Comment. 1, 4 (1997).

- Filibusters of judicial nominations are especially offensive because they offend not only constitutional structure and separation of powers with respect to the executive branch, but also constitutional structure and separation of powers with respect to the judiciary. Article III clearly endeavors to establish an independent judiciary. Increasing the role of the Senate increases the politicization of the judiciary and presents an inherent threat to the constitutional independence of the judiciary.

REV_00165203

Absence of Filibuster Practice Against Nominations

Unlike the extensive Senate tradition of using filibusters against legislation to prevent a majority from enacting laws, no such tradition exists with respect to judicial nominations.

- According to the Congressional Research Service, only one judicial nominee has ever been blocked by filibuster.

    - In 1968, President Lyndon Johnson nominated Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice, but the Senate defeated a motion to invoke cloture by a vote of 45-43. In this case, there was apparently no majority of the Senate that was actually prepared to press its constitutional prerogative to consent to Fortas. Quite the contrary, Fortas suffered under a substantial ethical cloud – indeed, one that eventually led him to resign from the bench altogether, under threat of impeachment. So the strength of his support was likely quite weak. Moreover, opposition to Fortas was bipartisan – 24 Republicans and 19 Democrats voted against cloture – a significant obstacle that would obviously discourage any majority of the Senate from enforcing its constitutional authority. In any event, President Johnson withdrew Fortas's nomination just a few days after the cloture vote, thereby depriving the Senate from taking further action anyway. In addition, Fortas was unable to muster the support of 51 votes, let alone 60 votes, to invoke cloture, so it is hardly obvious that Fortas would have even received a majority had everyone voted.

- According to the Congressional Research Service, only two executive nominees have ever been blocked by filibuster: (1) the 1994 nomination of Sam Brown to be Ambassador to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and (2) the 1995 nomination of Dr. Henry Foster to be Surgeon General. Importantly, neither case involved critical positions in our nation's government which might have motivated a majority to press its constitutional right to consent to executive branch nominees. And in neither situation, of course, presented any threat to the independence of the judiciary.

The Senate has no tradition of tolerating filibusters of judicial nominees in the face of majority support. To the contrary, the Senate has repeatedly confirmed judicial nominees in recent years with the support of less than 60 votes. (See next page.)

Judges confirmed with less than 60 votes (97th-108th Congresses)

The tradition and practice of the Senate strongly favors confirmation when a majority of the Senate is prepared to exercise its constitutional power to give its consent to the President's judicial nominees. On numerous occasions when a judicial nominee has enjoyed the support of a majority of Senators, but fewer than the 60 votes necessary under the Senate's cloture rule, the Senate has confirmed the judicial nominee. This Senate tradition and practice has been applied at every level of the federal judiciary.

Judge	Court	Vote	Date of Vote
J. Harvie Wilkinson III	4th Cir.	58-39	Aug. 9, 1984
Alex Kozinski	9th Cir.	54-43	Nov. 7, 1985
Sidney A. Fitzwater	N.D. Tex.	52-42	Mar. 18, 1986
Daniel A. Manion	7th Cir.	48-46	June 26, 1986
Clarence Thomas	S. Ct.	52-48	Oct. 15, 1991
Susan O. Mollway	D. Haw.	56-34	June 22, 1998
William A. Fletcher	9th Cir.	57-41	Oct. 8, 1998
Richard A. Paez	9th Cir.	59-39	Mar. 9, 2000
Dennis W. Shedd	4th Cir.	55-44	Nov. 19, 2002
Timothy M. Tymkovich	10th Cir.	58-42	April 1, 2003
Jeffrey Sutton	6th Cir.	52-41	April 29, 2003

N.B. Opponents may cite the one judicial nominee whose confirmation was actually obstructed by filibuster. In 1968, President Johnson nominated Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice. The Senate denied cloture by a 45-43 vote.

We have a number of responses. The most important is that, in the Fortas case, there was apparently no majority of the Senate that was actually prepared to press its constitutional prerogative to consent to Fortas. Quite the contrary, Fortas suffered under a substantial ethical cloud – indeed, one that eventually led him to resign from the bench altogether, under threat of impeachment. So the strength of his support was likely quite weak. Moreover, opposition to Fortas was bipartisan – 24 Republicans and 19 Democrats voted against cloture – a significant obstacle that would obviously discourage any majority of the Senate from enforcing its constitutional authority. In any event, President Johnson withdrew Fortas's nomination just a few days after the cloture vote, thereby depriving the Senate from taking further action anyway. In addition, Fortas was unable to muster the support of 51 votes, let alone 60 votes, to invoke cloture, so it is hardly obvious that Fortas would have even received a majority had everyone voted.

Litigation against supermajority vote requirements

The constitutionality of filibusters, and other attempts to establish extraconstitutional supermajority voting rules, have been repeatedly challenged in court, in three distinct cases filed in the District of Columbia. No court has ever addressed the issue on the merits, however.

Courts instead have dismissed such challenges on procedural grounds – specifically, the absence of a qualified plaintiff with standing to sue. Moreover, it may be that courts have no jurisdiction whatsoever over these suits, because such issues are inherently political questions involving the Senate's internal rulemaking procedures and thus cannot be resolved by courts due to separation of powers concerns. For example, in Nixon v. United States (1993), the Supreme Court held that courts have no jurisdiction to opine upon the constitutionality of Senate impeachment trial proceedings and procedures. A similar principle could be applied to the making and interpretation of Senate rules.

That said, Lloyd Cutler has publicly opined that, "if you were able to get the issue before a court, it is a winnable case." Roll Call, Oct. 14, 1993. In two Washington Post op-eds, Cutler argued that the "requirements of 60 votes to cut off debate and a two-thirds vote to amend the rules are both unconstitutional." Washington Post, Apr. 19, 1993.

- In 1993, Douglas R. Page, a California voter, challenged the constitutionality of the supermajority voting rule for invoking cloture on legislation, in a case styled Page v. Dole. In 1994, the district court dismissed the case for lack of standing. In Page v. Dole, 1996 WL 310132 (D.C. Cir.), the D.C. Circuit ordered that the case be dismissed as moot, on the ground that the Democrats no longer held a majority of the Senate.

- Page filed suit again in Page v. Shelby, 995 F. Supp. 23 (D.D.C. 1998). The court again dismissed the complaint for lack of standing. In doing so, however, the court noted that "Mr. Page is not challenging a super-majority requirement for legislative passage, but an internal, procedural rule requiring a super-majority vote to close debate," even though such a distinction may elevate form over substance when the cloture rule is abused for purposes other than ensuring adequate debate. The D.C. Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal order for substantially the same reasons, 1998 WL 700165 (D.C. Cir.).

- Relatedly, in Skaggs v. Carle, 110 F.3d 831 (D.C. Cir. 1997), members of the House of Representatives challenged the constitutionality of the House's three-fifths rule for approving tax increases. On appeal, a majority of the court found no standing for the suit. The court found no injury in part because "the House Rules allow any Member to introduce a resolution to amend or to repeal" the three-fifths rule and "any such resolution could be adopted by the vote of a simple majority." The court also noted that "the appellants point to no instance in which a Member . . . proposed to waive the Rule but the House voted against waiving the rule." Accordingly, the rule did "did not appear in practice to prevent a simple majority from enacting an income tax increase."

  Moreover, Chief Judge Edwards dissented in Skaggs, addressed the merits, and concluded that the House rule is unconstitutional. He is apparently the only Article III judge ever to have commented on the merits of an extraconstitutional supermajority voting rule in a judicial opinion. He stated that, "[i]f Congress is allowed to employ the rulemaking clause to impose new supermajority requirements beyond those already stated in the Constitution, the potential for mischief is great." For example, the Senate might "adopt an internal rule of procedure that requires the votes of three-fifths, rather than one-half, of its Members to confirm a presidential appointee. The Senate, acting unilaterally, could thereby increase its own power at the expense of the President. I think it is clear that the Framers never intended for Congress to have such unchecked authority to impose supermajority voting requirements that fundamentally change the nature of our democratic processes."

  The Edwards dissent is carefully crafted not to condemn filibusters, however. Quite the contrary, Judge Edwards expressly stated that "[r]equiring a supermajority to pass a bill into law can be distinguished from procedural rules – like the Senate cloture rule – that require a supermajority to bring an issue to a vote. Although such supermajority requirements may hinder or help a bill to become law, these procedural rules do not explicitly conflict with the presentment clause requirement that a bill that has passed be presented to the President."

RULEMAKING AND THE CONSTITUTION

Separate and apart from the issue of whether Senate Rules may deny a majority its constitutional power to consent to judicial nominees is the question whether Senate Rules may deny a majority its constitutional power to make or change Senate Rules. Under Rule XXII, debate on a rule change can be forcibly ended only with the approval of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting. The Constitution implicitly imposes a majority vote requirement for making rules, however.

- Arguably, a majority of the Senate always retains the constitutional power to change the rules, regardless of what the Senate Rules might state. Vice Presidents Richard Nixon and Hubert Humphrey, in their capacities as presiding officers of the Senate, and numerous legal scholars, from Erwin Chemerinsky to John McGinnis, have so opined.

  (In previous Congresses, however, this constitutional view has been rejected by Senate majorities.)

- Just as one Congress cannot enact a law that a subsequent Congress cannot amend by majority vote, one Senate cannot enact a rule that a subsequent Senate cannot amend by majority vote.

  - Such power would violate our common law understandings that one parliament cannot bind another. As Blackstone once explained, "Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not. . . . Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if it's ordinances could bind the present parliament."

  - Such power would violate our U.S. Constitution because it would be a power tantamount to amending the Constitution by majority vote.

  - Thus, as the Supreme Court unanimously held in United States v. Ballin (1892), "[t]he power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the house."

REV_00165208

After all, "[e]very succeeding legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power with respect to them as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil." Newton v. Commissioner (1879).

"[E]ach subsequent legislature has equal power to legislate upon the same subject. The legislature has power at any time to repeal or modify [an] act." Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley (1898).

- It has been argued that, because the Senate is a continuing body, the Senate may restrict its authority to change its own rules in the future. Specifically, Senate Rule V states that "[t]he rules of the Senate shall continue from one Congress to the next Congress unless they are changed as provided in these rules."

    - But the Senate has precisely the same power to make its rules as the House. Neither the House nor the Senate possesses the constitutional power to entrench its own rules as against the will of future legislators.

REV_00165209

History of Majority Rule to Change Senate Rules

On a number of occasions, individual senators and even Vice Presidents (in their role as presiding officers of the Senate) have argued or concluded that, as a constitutional matter, a majority of the Senate has the power to change the rules, notwithstanding Rule XXII. The entire Senate has rejected such arguments on every occasion in which the argument has been attempted, however. (Also noteworthy: in 1967-68 and in 1975, it appears that the constitutional question could have been decided by non-debatable (and thus non-filibusterable) tabling motion, and thus by majority vote.)

Individuals whose names are underlined below took the position that Rule XXII cannot constitutionally prevent a majority from changing the rules.

- 1953: Senator Clinton Anderson (D-NM) moved at the opening of a new Congress that the Senate was not constitutionally bound by its old rules, and that a majority had the constitutional power to adopt new rules. The motion was tabled by Senator Robert Taft (R-OH) on a 70-21 vote.

- 1957: Senator Anderson again moved to adopt new rules by majority vote at the opening of a new Congress, and the motion was again tabled, this time by Senator Lyndon Johnson (D-TX) on a 55-38 vote. During the course of debate, however, Vice President Richard Nixon opined that, as a constitutional matter, the Senate could always adopt new rules by majority vote regardless of the Senate Rules. He stated that Rule XXII was unconstitutional as applied to rule changes supported by a majority. But he also concluded that constitutional questions, unlike nonconstitutional parliamentary procedural issues, could be decided only by the Senate itself, and not by the presiding officer.

- 1959: Senate adopts new rule expressly affirming the Senate's existence as a continuing body, stating that "[t]he rules of the Senate shall continue from one Congress to the next Congress unless they are changed as provided in these rules."

- 1961: Vice President Nixon reaffirmed his 1957 advisory opinion.

- 1967-68: Senators George McGovern (D-SD) and Thurston Morton (R-KY) proposed a rules change at the beginning of the Congress, and moved that, as a constitutional matter, the Senate could always adopt new rules by majority vote regardless of the Senate Rules. Senator Everett Dirksen (R-IL) raised a point of order that McGovern's motion violates Rule XXII. McGovern moved to table the Dirksen point of order. Vice President Hubert Humphrey ruled that the Senate must decide constitutional questions. Humphrey further ruled that a successful tabling motion would affirm the validity of McGovern's constitutional position. But the McGovern tabling motion failed on a 37-61 vote, and Dirksen's point of order subsequently carried on a 59-37 vote. Hence, the Senate rejected McGovern's constitutional motion.

- 1969: Senator Frank Church (D-ID) inquired of the Chair whether a majority of the Senate could vote to determine the constitutional issue of the majority's power to change the rules, notwithstanding Senate Rule XXII. Vice President Humphrey agreed, stating: "On a par with the right of the Senate to determine its rules . . . is the right of the Senate, a simple majority of the Senate, to decide constitutional questions." The Senate voted 51-47 in favor of Church's cloture motion, and Vice President Humphrey ruled that cloture had been successfully invoked, pursuant to the Constitution and notwithstanding Senate Rules. But the Vice President's decision was appealed and reversed on a 53-45 vote.

- 1971: Senator Javits appealed the decision of the Chair that cloture on a rule change had not been invoked pursuant to a 2/3 vote rule, raising the question whether the Senate could change the rules by majority vote notwithstanding Rule XXII. Majority Leader Mike Mansfield moved to table the appeal, and the motion to table carried on a 55-37 vote.

- 1975: Senator Pearson moved that a majority would be sufficient to close debate and to adopt a rule change to Rule XXII, notwithstanding Rule XXII. Mansfield raised a point of order that the effort to end debate by a simple majority vote violates Senate rules. A constitutional issue having been raised, Vice President Nelson Rockefeller submitted the question to the Senate whether Mansfield's point of order is well taken. On motion of Senator Mondale, the Senate tabled the point of order by a 51-42 vote and thereby temporarily endorsed majority cloture for rule changes as a constitutional matter. But the Senate subsequently reconsidered the vote to table Mansfield's point of order on a 53-38 vote, the motion to table was then rejected on a 40-51 vote, and the point of order is sustained on a 53-43 vote.

David/Brett:

The Offices of Cabinet Affairs, Presidential Personnel, Intergovernmental Affairs, Political Affairs, and the Council for Excellence in Government are together sponsoring a two-day conference entitled "Regional Appointees: Challenges and Opportunities," scheduled for May 19-20, 2003 in Washington, DC.

This conference will be the first of its kind during this Administration and will include regional appointees from several Cabinet and sub-Cabinet agencies such as Education, Interior, Labor, EPA, HHS, FEMA, GSA, HUD and SBA. It will be held at the nearby Mayflower Hotel, with several sessions taking place in Room 450 EEOB.

Given your office's stake in such an event, we want to involve you in the conference's program workshops and plenary sessions. In working with the agencies, we have identified roughly 85 regional political appointees that we have invited to attend the conference. Other local agency personnel, including inter-governmental affairs staff, will also be invited.

The purpose of the conference is to better engage our regional appointees as representatives of the President around the country and to give them a chance to meet and hear from senior White House officials and agency leaders. Sessions will focus on a variety of vital issues including:

ú Management Results / President's Management Team

ú Building Support for the President's Agenda

ú Freedom Corps / Faith-Based Initiatives

ú Hatch Act / Ethics

ú Policy Perspectives

ú Homeland Security

ú Working Together for Greater Regional Impact

ú Legislative Update

ú Foreign Policy Update

We have tentatively scheduled your presentation for Tuesday afternoon, May 20 in Room 450 EEOB (exact time is TBD). We would hope you could discuss your insights on the Hatch Act and ethics in government. We would also hope you could join us for a reception to be held later that evening.

We would greatly appreciate your participation, and I know that the Regional Appointees would appreciate hearing from you and will be happy to take your perspectives back with them to their respective regions. Please feel free to contact me should you have additional questions or you may have your assistant contact Christie Parell (6-2343) to confirm your availability.

Many thanks in advance,

Brian Montgomery

I think for now, our position is that we are generally not sympathetic to the goal, which is getting more money for the States in the growth bill.

Obviously, we need to see what this does for growth bill, which is the key objective.

But for now, we should certainly lie very low.

DRAFT

The provision of Rule 22 of the Standing Rules of the Senate that provides that an affirmative vote of "two-thirds of the Senators present and voting" shall be necessary for cloture on a motion to amend the Senate rules is unconstitutional.

- The Constitution provides: "Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a member." Art. I, § 5, cl. 2. This provision plainly contemplates that a majority of each House may determine its rules.

    - In a single sentence like this, the expressio unius inference is at its strongest. This sentence certainly appears to contemplate that a different, lower standard will be required to determine the Rules of Proceedings than to expel a member. Indeed, James Madison suggested that the two thirds provision be added precisely because "the right of expulsion … was too important to be exercised by a bare majority of a quorum: and in emergencies of faction might be dangerously abused." James Madison, 2 Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, 378. This indicates that he understood majority rule to be the background principle in this sentence in particular.

    - As the Supreme Court stated in a case involving the rulemaking authority of the House of Representatives: "[T]he general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that, when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except in so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations." United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 6 (1892).

- The Constitution prohibits the Senate from requiring a supermajority to change a rule. A House does not have the power to alienate its (and its successors') ability to revise its rules in the future.

    - It has universally been recognized that, absent a change in the foundational document, each legislature must have the same powers as its predecessors and its successors. This means that a legislature cannot bind, and thereby limit, the power of its successors.

        - As Blackstone explained: "Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not …. Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if it's [sic] ordinances could bind the present parliament."[1]

- The Supreme Court has ratified this principle of legislative equality over time in a long and unbroken string of opinions. For example:

    - "Every succeeding legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power … as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil." Newton v. Mahoning County Commissioners, 100 U.S. 548, 559 (1879).

    - "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. The supervision of both these subjects of governmental power is continuing in its nature, and they are to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them. . . . The power of governing is a trust committed by the people to the government, no part of which can be granted away. The people, in their sovereign capacity, have established their agencies for the preservation of the public health and the public morals, and the protection of public and private rights. These several agencies can govern according to their discretion, if within the scope of their general authority, while in power; but they cannot give away nor sell the discretion of those that are to come after them, in respect to matters the government of which, from the very nature of things, must vary with varying circumstances." Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U.S. 814, 819-20 (1879) (internal quotation omitted).

    - "The power [of each House] to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the house. . . ." United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 5 (1892).

    - "By dedicating the lands thus acquired to a particular public use, Congress declared a public policy, but did not purport to deprive itself of the power to change that policy by devoting the lands to other uses. The dedication expressed no more than the will of a particular Congress which does not impose itself upon those to follow in succeeding years." Reichelderfer v. Quinn, 287 U.S. 315, 318 (1932).

    - [Add any more recent cases]

- OLC has also embraced this principle:

    - In considering one supermajority proposal, for example, we opined: "[U]nlike a constitutional amendment, the draft legislation would not have a truly binding effect on Congress. Clearly, Congress cannot by legislation prevent itself from enacting future legislation pursuant to whatever procedures it chooses to follow at that future time. A future Congress can always legislatively change what a previous Congress has done. In a legally enforceable sense, therefore, such future lawmaking would be regulated only by the requirements of the Constitution. Thus, notwithstanding the provisions of the draft bill, a future Congress could follow whatever procedures it chooses to apply with respect to a particular appropriations bill, including passage by less than a supermajority." Memorandum for Arthur B. Culvahouse, Jr., Counsel to the President, from Charles J. Cooper, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, Re: Constitutionality of Draft Budget Process Reform Legislation, at 2 (May 26, 1987).

- In reviewing another statute, we found that a provision did purport to entrench itself, and thus "would prospectively nullify the ability of Congress and the President to enact effective legislation on a designated subject." We concluded that "[s]uch a measure is incompatible with the provisions for the enactment of laws set forth in Art. I, § 7 of the Constitution because it purports to invalidate by statute subsequent legislation duly enacted through valid constitutional processes." Memorandum for the General Counsel, Department of Veterans Affairs, Re: Gulf War Veterans Health Statutes, 1999 WL 33219988 (O.L.C.) (1999) (preliminary print).

- A long line of scholarship also affirms this principle:

  - In 1868, Thomas Cooley explained: "To say that the legislature may pass unrepealable laws, is to say that it may alter the very constitution from which it derives its authority; since in so far as one legislature could bind a subsequent one by its enactments, it could in the same degree reduce the legislative power of its successors, and the process might be repeated until, one by one, the subjects of legislation would be excluded altogether from their control, and the constitutional provision, that the legislative power shall be vested in two houses, would be to a greater or less degree rendered ineffectual." Thomas M. Cooley, A Treatise on Constitutional Limitations 125-26 (photo reprint 1972) (1868).

  - "Although the law made by any branch—whether by legislation, executive order, or judicial decision—may extend beyond the tenure of particular officeholders, the Constitution limits trans-temporal commandeering of a branch by its current occupants through the device of generally preventing any branch from making the meta-law necessary to tie the hands of future officeholders of that branch." Laurence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law §2-3, at 125 n.1 (3d ed. 2000). See also Catherine Fisk & Edwin Chemerinsky, The Filibuster, 49 Stan. L. Rev. 181, 245-52 (1996); John O. McGinnis & Michael B. Rappaport, The Constitutionality of Legislative Supermajority Requirements: A Defense, 105 Yale L.J. 483, 503-07 (1995); Nicholas Quinn Rosenkranz, Federal Rules of Statutory Interpretation, 115 Harv. L. Rev. 2085, 2114-2120 (2002).

- This principle also means that the Senate cannot bind itself through an entire Congress.

    - As OLC has previously stated: "In holding that an act of Congress cannot bind 'future Congresses,' Lopez Andino and other cases using such phrasing do not implicitly suggest that an act of Congress can bind the same Congress when that Congress subsequently undertakes to enact legislation contrary to the earlier enactment. In either circumstance, the controlling general principle is that an act of Congress (as distinguished, for example, from an amendment to the Constitution) cannot prohibit the enactment of subsequent contrary legislation through valid constitutional processes." Memorandum for the General Counsel, Department of Veterans Affairs, Re: Gulf War Veterans Health Statutes, 1999 WL 33219988 (O.L.C.) (1999), at n.2 (preliminary print).

    - In any event, the current Senate has not itself adopted Rule XXII. That rule remains in effect by virtue of having been adopted in a previous Congress. [When?]

- The two-thirds cloture rule, even though not a rule on final passage, effectively requires a supermajority to change a rule. It is therefore unconstitutional.

Here's the per curiam opinion from the district court, with a summary of the rulings. (Not the entire opinion, which can be accessed directly on the court's website, www.dcd.uscourts.gov.)

We're in the process of burning CDs and making paper copies for everyone, and will distribute as swiftly as possible. We hope to have the CDs burned within an hour or so, if you want to wait for them. If you let us know you're waiting, we'll bring them to you this evening.

The court just called. The opinion will be available for the parties on CD-ROM at 3:30. It's being announced to the press at 3:45. I was informed that the court's opinion is 1,600 pages long. I am not kidding.

I will go to the courthouse now and pick it up. (Anyone in Fed Programs who wants to join me is welcome.) We in Fed Programs will get the opinion distributed electronically and in hard copy as fast as we absolutely can.

MEMORANDUM OPINION
(May 1, 2003)

PER CURIAM[1]: Presently before this three-judge District Court are eleven consolidated actions challenging as unconstitutional the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-155, 116 Stat. 81 (2002) ("BCRA") and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to prohibit its enforcement. The wide range of legal challenges raised by this litigation are highly complex, interrelated, and raise issues of fundamental importance not only to the conduct and financing of federal election campaigns but to the other rights involved that we enjoy under the Constitution. Because of the complexity of our positions, this per curiam opinion, by Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, includes a schematic description of the three-judge panel's conclusions in regard to each of BCRA's challenged provisions and a chart as to the rulings on each provision's constitutionality. The per curiam opinion also includes: (1) a brief history of campaign finance regulation in the United States (pp. 16-42); (2) the legislative history behind BCRA's enactment (pp. 42-50); (3) a procedural history of the litigation in this case (pp. 50-57); (4) a description of the specific provisions in BCRA at issue in these lawsuits (pp. 57-80); (5) certain Findings of Fact relating to the identities of the parties and BCRA's disclosure provisions (pp. 80-106); and (6) conclusions of law relating to claims of the Paul Plaintiffs and most of BCRA's disclosure provisions (pp. 106-170). The separate opinions of each judge hearing this matter follow thereafter.

[1] Judge Henderson does not join this opinion.

I. DESCRIPTION AND CHART OF THE COURT'S RULINGS

In light of the number of provisions in BCRA being challenged, the complexity of the issues presented by each challenge, and the variety of positions and voting combinations taken by the three judges on this District Court, we set forth a brief description and a chart, on a section by section basis, of the various rulings

A. Title I

Section 323(a) of BCRA bans national parties from soliciting, receiving, directing, transferring, and spending nonfederal funds (i.e., soft money). Judge Henderson strikes this section down as unconstitutional in its entirety. Judge Leon, for different reasons, files a concurrence, joining with Judge Henderson, except with respect to the ban on national parties from using (i.e., "directing," "transferring," and "spending") nonfederal funds (i.e., soft money) for "federal election activity" of the type defined in Section 301(20)(A)(iii). As to that type of conduct, Judge Leon upholds the constitutionality of Congress's ban on the use of nonfederal funds by national parties for Section 301(20)(A)(iii) communications. Judge Kollar-Kotelly upholds Section 323 (a) in its entirety. Accordingly, Judge Leon's decision regarding Section 323(a) controls.

Section 323(b) prohibits state parties from using nonfederal money for "federal election activities" as defined in Section 301(20)(A) of BCRA. Judge Henderson strikes these sections down as unconstitutional in their entirety. Judge Leon, for different reasons, joins Judge Henderson in a separate concurrence, but only with respect to those party activities set forth in Subsections (i), (ii), and (iv) of Section 301(20)(A). As to Section 301(20)(A)(iii), Judge Leon upholds the constitutionality of Congress's prohibition on state and local parties from spending nonfederal funds for communications that promote, oppose, attack or support a specific federal candidate. In a separate opinion, Judge Kollar Kotelly finds Section 323(b) constitutional and concurs with Judge Leon's discussion of Section 301 (20)(A)(iii).

Section 323(d) prohibits national, state, and local parties from soliciting funds for, or making donations, to § 501(c) organizations that make expenditures, or disbursements, in connection with federal elections, or to § 527 national organizations. Judge Henderson strikes this section down as unconstitutional in its entirety. Judge Leon, for different reasons, joins in that conclusion in a separate concurrence. Judge Kollar-Kotelly files a separate dissent in which she finds the entire section constitutional.

Section 323(e) prohibits, but for certain enumerated exceptions, federal officeholders and candidates from soliciting, receiving, directing, transferring, or spending, nonfederal money in connection with any local, state, or federal election. Judge Henderson and Judge Kollar-Kotelly, for different reasons, in separate opinions uphold the constitutionality of this section in its entirety. Judge Leon concurs with respect to the restriction on federal officeholders and candidates receiving, directing, transferring or spending any nonfederal funds in connection with any federal or state election, but files a separate dissent with regard to any prohibitions on a federal candidate, or officeholder, from soliciting funds for the national parties.

Section 323(f) prohibits state officeholders and candidates from using nonfederal funds for public communications that refer to a clearly identified candidate for federal office and that promote, oppose, attack, or support a candidate for this office. Judge Leon upholds this section in its entirety. Judge Kollar-Kotelly concurs with Judge Leon's opinion. Judge Henderson, dissents and finds the entire section unconstitutional.

B. Title II

Section 201 of BCRA sets forth a primary, and "backup" definition, of an "electioneering communication" (i.e., so-called "issue ads"). In addition, it sets forth certain disclosure requirements for those who fund these electioneering communications. Judge Henderson strikes down both the primary and backup definition as unconstitutional. Judge Leon, for different reasons, concurs in her judgment with respect to the primary definition. Judge Kollar-Kotelly dissents and upholds the primary definition as constitutional as discussed in her separate opinion. With respect to the backup definition, Judge Leon, who writes a separate opinion, upholds its constitutionality with its final clause severed. Judge Kollar-Kotelly, as expressed in her opinion, concurs in that conclusion solely as an alternative to this Court's finding that the primary definition is unconstitutional. Finally, with regard to Section 201's disclosure requirements, Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion, uphold their constitutionality with one exception. Judge Henderson strikes down the disclosures requirements in a separate dissent.

Section 202 provides that disbursements by persons for electioneering communications, or contracts to purchase the same, that are coordinated with either a federal candidate or a candidate committee, or a political party committee will be treated as contributions to that candidate's campaign or political party committee. Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion, find this section constitutional. Judge Henderson, in a separate dissent concludes that this Section is unconstitutionally overbroad.

Section 203 of Title II prohibits labor unions, corporations and national banks from using money from their general treasury to fund "electioneering communications," as defined by Section 201. Instead, under Section 203, such communications must be paid from a separately segregated fund ("SSF"). Section 203 also includes an exception from the SSF requirement for certain nonprofit corporations (i.e., the "Snowe-Jeffords exception"). Judge Kollar-Kotelly upholds this section as constitutional. Judge Leon joins Judge Kollar-Kotelly's opinion upholding the constitutionality of this section as it applies to the backup definition in Section 201. Judge Henderson strikes down this Section as unconstitutional in its entirety. Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon additionally uphold the disclosure and SSF requirements as well as the Snowe-Jeffords exemption provision for certain nonprofit corporations organized under Sections 501(c)(4) and 527 of the Internal Revenue Code in their respective opinions.

Section 204 ("The Wellstone Amendment"), in effect, withdraws the Snowe-Jeffords exception of Section 203. Judge Henderson strikes down Section 204 in its entirety. Judge Leon concurs in her result as it applies to MCFL exempt organizations only. As to nonprofit corporations that do not qualify for the MCFL exemption, Judge Leon concurs with Judge Kollar-Kotelly's conclusion, but for different reasons, in upholding Section 204 as it applies to non MCFL organizations.

Section 212 provides certain reporting requirements for independent expenditures.

Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion, conclude that challenge to this provision is not ripe for review, and therefore hold that the Court does not have jurisdiction to resolve the plaintiffs' challenges at this time. Judge Henderson dissents from this view and finds Section 212 unconstitutional in its entirety.

Section 213 requires national parties, in essence, to choose between making coordinated expenditures under the Party Expenditures Provision or unlimited independent expenditures on behalf of their federal candidates. All three judges concur that this section is unconstitutional. Judge Henderson's opinion includes a discussion of her separate reasons. Judge Kollar-Kotelly concurs in Judge Leon's separate opinion on this section.

Section 214 addresses coordinated expenditures paid for by persons other than party committees and candidate committees. Section 214 repeals the current FEC regulations on coordinated expenditures, and directs the FEC to promulgate new regulations that do not require "an agreement or formal collaboration to establish coordination." Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion, find that the plaintiffs' challenge under Section 214(b) and Section 214(c) is nonjusticiable and the Court therefore lacks jurisdiction to consider their challenge. As to Sections 214(a) and 214(d), however, they find those sections constitutional for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion. Judge Henderson dissents, finding the Section unconstitutional in its entirety.

C. Title III and V

Sections 304, 316, & 319, collectively known as the "Millionaire Provisions," allow opponents of self-financed candidates, and in certain circumstances, to raise money in larger increments and accept unlimited coordinated party expenditures. All three judges conclude, for the reasons set forth in Judge Henderson's opinion, that this Court lacks standing to entertain challenges to these provisions.

Section 305 denies a candidate the "lowest unit charge" for broadcast advertisements on radio and television unless the candidate promises not to refer to another candidate in his or her advertisements. For the reasons set forth in Judge Henderson's opinion, all three judges conclude that this Court lacks standing to entertain the plaintiffs' challenge at this time.

As explained in Judge Henderson's opinion, the Court similarly finds that the plaintiffs do not have standing to challenge Section 307, which increases and indexes contribution limits.

Section 311 establishes certain disclosure requirements for the sponsors of electioneering communications. Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, for the reasons set forth in the per curiam opinion, uphold this provision as constitutional. Judge Henderson, dissents, and finds this section unconstitutional for the reasons set forth in her opinion.

Section 318 prohibits donations by minors to federal candidates, or to a committee of a political party. All three judges agree that this section is unconstitutional. Each judge writes a separate concurrence setting forth his/her reasoning as to this section.

Section 504 requires broadcast licenses to collect and disclose records of any request to purchase broadcast time for communications that "is made by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate for public office" or that relates "to any political matter of national importance," including communications relating to "a legally qualified candidate," "any election to federal office," and "a national legislative issue of public importance." Judge Henderson finds this section unconstitutional. Judge Leon and Judge Kollar-Kotelly, concur in that result, but not in her reasoning. Judge Kollar-Kotelly concurs in Judge Leon's separate opinion on this section.

II. BACKGROUND

It is necessary to canvass the history of federal campaign finance regulation in order to provide the appropriate context for understanding the structure and practices of federal campaign finance that Congress confronted when it enacted BCRA. See United States v. UAW-CIO, 352 U.S. 567, 570 (1957) ("UAW") ("Appreciation of the circumstances that begot this statute is necessary for its understanding, and understanding of it is necessary for adjudication of the legal problems before us."). Following this overview, the Court will move to a discussion of the legislation enacted by Congress to resolve the perceived shortcomings of the pre-BCRA campaign finance structure and a procedural history of the litigation in this case.

REV_00165348

A. The Framework of Federal Campaign Finance Regulation

One might be tempted to agree with Plaintiffs' assertion that the history of federal campaign finance regulation is "relatively short," McConnell Br. at 9, if one were comparing it to the history of Western civilization. In the judgment of Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Leon, however, the history of federal campaign finance regulation, having its origins in the Administration of President Theodore Roosevelt, is a long-standing and recurring problem that has challenged our government for nearly half of the life of our Republic.

At the close of the nineteenth century, the concentration of the nation's wealth in the hands of a "small portion of the population" began to threaten the stability and integrity of the political system. UAW, 352 U.S. at 570 (quoting 2 Morrison and Commager, The Growth of the American Republic at 355 (4th ed. 1950)). At the time, the widely accepted view was that "aggregated capital unduly influenced politics, an influence not stopping short of corruption." Id. To that end, many states began experimenting with disclosure laws requiring candidates and their political committees to make public the sources and amounts of contributions to their campaigns and the amounts of their campaign expenditures. Id. at 570-571. These laws proved to be largely futile. Id. at 571.

Concern with both the size and source of campaign funds relating to the 1904 presidential campaign "crystallized popular sentiment for federal action to purge national politics of what was conceived to be the pernicious influence of 'big money' campaign contributions." Id. at 571-72. President Roosevelt's presidential messages to Congress in both 1905 and 1906, strongly encouraged Congress to enact a law prohibiting political contributions by corporations. 40 Cong. Rec. 96 (1905); 41 Cong. Rec. 22 (1906). In response to these concerns, Congress enacted the Tillman Act, Ch. 420, 34 Stat. 864, which prohibited corporations from making any contribution in connection with any election for federal office and which represented "the first concrete manifestation of a continuing congressional concern for elections free from the power of money." UAW, 352 U.S. at 575 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Tillman Act demarcates the beginning of the "modern era" of federal campaign finance regulation and is the predecessor of the prohibition on corporate and labor union contributions and expenditures in connection with any federal election from their general treasuries that appears in the Federal Election Campaign Act ("FECA"). Buckley v. Valeo, 519 F.2d 821, 904 (D.C. Cir. 1975), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 424 U.S. 1 (1976).[2] The "underlying philosophy" of the Tillman Act was "to sustain the active, alert responsibility of the individual citizen in a democracy for the wise conduct of government." UAW, 352 U.S. at 575.

In 1909, Congress endeavored to broaden the Tillman Act by including within the Act's scope, state legislative races and in-kind contributions. See id. While this effort ended [2] The ban on corporate and labor union contributions and expenditures was eventually codified at 18 U.S.C. § 610, and later transferred to the Federal Election Campaign Act, 2 U.S.C. 441b, when Congress re-evaluated the Act in the aftermath of the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976). Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, P.L. 94-283, 90 Stat. 475. See also S. Rep. No. 677, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 2-3 (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 929, 930-31.

REV_00165350

in failure, in 1910, Congress "translated popular demand for further curbs upon the political power of wealth into a publicity law that required committees operating to influence the results of congressional elections in two or more States to report all contributions and disbursements and to identify contributors and recipients of substantial sums." Id. (citing Act of June 25, 1910, ch. 392, §§ 5-6, 36 Stat. 822, 823) (disclosure required of all transactions greater than $100). The 1910 law further directed the reporting of expenditures exceeding $50, made independently of a political committee for the purpose of influencing congressional elections in more than one State. Act of June 25, 1910, ch. 392, §§ 7, 36 Stat. 824. In 1911, Congress further amended the 1910 Act, and for the first time, included overall expenditure ceilings on campaigns for the House ($5,000) and for the Senate ($10,000). Buckley, 519 F.2d at 904-905 (citing Act of Aug. 19, 1911, ch. 33, § 2, 37 Stat. 26). Additionally, the 1911 provisions required all candidates for the Senate and the House of Representatives to make detailed reports with respect to their nominating and election campaigns. UAW, 352 U.S. at 576. Hence, candidate disclosures included primary, convention, and other pre-nomination periods. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 905. The 1911 law also prohibited candidates from promising employment for the purpose of securing an individual's support. UAW, 352 U.S. at 576 (citing 37 Stat. 25). In 1918, Congress again amended the law and added criminal penalties for offering anything of value to influence voting. Id. (citing Act of Oct. 16, 1918, ch. 187, 40 Stat. 1013).

convicted in Michigan of violating the expenditure ceiling in his 1918 primary campaign for the United States Senate. Newberry's conviction was overturned by the Supreme Court in 1921. The Court invalidated the law insofar as it extended to Senate primary elections. Newberry v. United States, 256 U.S. 232, 258 (1921) ("We cannot conclude that authority to control party primaries or conventions for designating candidates was bestowed on Congress by the grant of power to regulate the manner of holding elections."). Four Justices of the Court held that primaries were intra-party affairs not amenable to congressional regulation under the Elections Clause. Id. Justice Joseph McKenna, who provided the crucial fifth vote for judgment, limited the reach of the decision to the facts by concluding that the statute under consideration was enacted prior to the Seventeenth Amendment and, therefore, left open the question of whether that Amendment gave Congress authority to regulate Senate primary elections. Id.

In 1925, in the wake of Newberry, Congress passed the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, ch. 368, tit. III, 43 Stat. 1070, which was a comprehensive amalgamation of the surviving provisions of the existing campaign finance laws. UAW, 325 U.S. at 576. The Federal Corrupt Practices Act strengthened the Tillman Act by broadening the definition of contribution, extending the ban on corporate contributions to Delegates and Resident Commissioners that were elected to Congress, and punishing the recipient of any illegal contribution in addition to the contributor. Id. at 577. The law also generally broadened disclosure provisions. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 905.

The Supreme Court upheld the Federal Corrupt Practices Act in the Burroughs case of 1934:

> The power of Congress to protect the election of President and Vice President from corruption being clear, the choice of means to that end presents a question primarily addressed to the judgment of Congress. If it can be seen that the means adopted are really calculated to attain the end, the degree of their necessity, the extent to which they conduce to the end, the closeness of the relationship between the means adopted, and the end to be attained, are matters for congressional determination alone. Congress reached the conclusion that public disclosure of political contributions, together with the names of contributors and other details, would tend to prevent the corrupt use of money to affect elections. The verity of this conclusion reasonably cannot be denied. When to this is added the requirement contained in section 244, that the treasurer's statement shall include full particulars in respect of expenditures, it seems plain that the statute as a whole is calculated to discourage the making and use of contributions for purposes of corruption.

Burroughs v. United States, 290 U.S. 534, 547-48 (1934) (internal citation omitted). As is obvious from this language, the Burroughs opinion provided Congress with broad discretion to regulate federal elections including the financing of campaigns.

The next instance of congressional action in the area of campaign finance was in 1940 when Congress amended the Hatch Act, a law which placed restrictions on the political activities of the civil service, by making it unlawful for any political committee to receive contributions totaling more than $3,000,000 or to make expenditures of more than that amount in any calendar year. UAW, 352 U.S. at 577 (citing Act of July 19, 1940, ch. 640, 54 Stat. 767). The Hatch Act amendments also limited gifts to candidates or political committees to $5,000 in any calendar year. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 905 (citing Act of July 19, 1940, ch. 640, 54 Stat. 767).

One year later, the Supreme Court again returned to the question it had squarely addressed in Newberry: namely whether congressional power under the Elections Clause extended to the pre-election period. United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941). This time, the Court upheld the congressional enactment holding that "the authority of Congress, given by [Article I, section 4], includes the authority to regulate primary elections when, as in this case, they are a step in the exercise by the people of their choice of representatives in Congress." Id. at 317. The case involved a Louisiana Democratic primary for the House of Representatives, which history showed was the determinant of who would win the general election. Id. at 314. The Supreme Court in Classic disregarded Newberry because only four Justices in Newberry had adopted the view that the Elections Clause forbade congressional regulation of primary elections. Consequently, as the issue had never "been prejudged by any decision of [the Supreme] Court," Classic overruled the Newberry plurality. Id. at 317; see also id. at 325 n.8 ("No conclusion is to be drawn from the failure of the Hatch Act, to enlarge § 19 by provisions specifically applicable to primaries. Its failure to deal with the subject seems to be attributable to constitutional doubts, stimulated by Newberry v. United States, which are here resolved.") (internal citations omitted). Under Classic, Congress was given authority to impose criminal penalties for activities of state officials conducting a primary election for federal candidates under the auspices of state law. See id. at 307.

Following the rise of organized labor during World War II, in 1943, Congress passed the Smith-Connally Act which included a section that extended the Federal Corrupt Practices

REV_00165354

Act to organized labor. UAW, 352 U.S. at 578 (citing War Labor Disputes Act (Smith-Connally Act), ch. 144, § 9, 57 Stat. 163, 167) ("Wartime strikes gave rise to fears of the new concentration of power represented by the gains of trade unionism. And so the belief grew that, just as the great corporations had made huge political contributions to influence governmental action or inaction, whether consciously or unconsciously, the powerful unions were pursuing a similar course, and with the same untoward consequences for the democratic process."). Congressman Gerald Landis, the author of this provision in the Smith-Connally Act observed that "[t]he public was aroused by many rumors of huge war chests being maintained by labor unions, of enormous fees and dues being extorted from war workers, of political contributions to parties and candidates which later were held as clubs over the head of high Federal officials." Id. at 579 (quoting Hearings before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Labor on H.R. 804 and H.R. 1483, 78th Cong., 1st Sess. 1, 2, 4).

Despite the provision in the Smith-Connally Act tightening the reins on political activity of labor unions, Congress was prompted to investigate "enormous" financial outlays by some unions in connection with the 1944 national elections. Id. The Senate's Special Committee on Campaign Expenditures investigated and concluded that while there was "'no clear-cut violation of the Corrupt Practices Act,'" id. at 580 (quoting S. Rep. No. 101, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. 23), the law was being evaded by large scale spending by labor unions on expenditures (as opposed to contributions), which were not explicitly prohibited by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, id.[3] Congress, it appears, considered a prohibition on contributions to be equally applicable to expenditures. Id. at 582 ("'The committee is firmly convinced, after a thorough study of the provisions of the act, the legislative history of the same, and the debates on the said provisions when it was pending before the House, that the act was intended to prohibit such expenditures.'") (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 2739, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 40). In commenting on how this exception threatened to eviscerate the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, the House Committee studying this problem stated that "'[t]he intent and purpose of the provision of the act prohibiting any corporation or labor organization making any contribution in connection with any election would be wholly defeated if it were assumed that the term 'making any contribution' related only to the donating of money directly to a candidate, and excluded the vast expenditures of money in the activities herein shown to be engaged in extensively. Of what avail would a law be to prohibit [directly] contributing to a candidate and yet permit the expenditure of large sums in his behalf?" Id. at 581 (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 2739, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 40).

[3] A sampling of the extraordinary size of the expenditures by labor on federal elections demonstrates that "One [labor organization] was found to have an annual budget for 'educational' work approximating $1,500,000, and among other things regularly supplies over 500 radio stations with 'briefs for broadcasters.' Another, with an annual budget of over $300,000 for political 'education,' has distributed some 80,000,000 pieces of literature, including a quarter million copies of one article. Another, representing an organized labor membership of 5,000,000, has raised $700,000 for its national organizations in union contributions for political 'education' in a few months, and a great deal more has been raised for the same purpose and expended by its local organizations.'" UAW, 352 U.S. at 580-81 (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 2093, 78th Cong., 2d Sess. 3).

Therefore, in order to prevent further "evasion" and to "plug the existing loophole," Congress "again acted to protect the political process from what it deemed to be the corroding effect of money employed in elections by aggregated power." Id. at 582 (internal quotation and citations omitted). Accordingly, in 1947, Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947, ch. 120, 61 Stat. 136, which amended the Federal Corrupt Practices Act "to proscribe any 'expenditure' as well as 'any contribution' [and] to make permanent [its] application to labor organizations" in addition to corporations. Id. at 582-83. The Taft-Hartley Act implemented Classic by applying its provisions to primary elections. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 906.

Following the Taft-Hartley Act, from the late 1940's through the end of the 1950's, Congress sought unsuccessfully to amend the dollar expenditure limits to reflect more "realistic" costs, but no action was taken. Id. In 1960, the Senate passed a bill that strengthened reporting requirements for candidates and political committees, adopted individual contribution limits, rationalized current expenditure limits, and placed ceilings on Presidential campaigns. Id. The bill, however, died for lack of a companion in the House of Representatives. Id. In 1962, President Kennedy's Commission on Campaign Costs recommended "tax incentives and credits for small political contributions, realistic ceilings, and suspension of the equal time provision as to media debates." Id. In 1966, Congress passed a one dollar tax checkoff to provide public funding for Presidential general elections, which was later repealed in 1967. Id.

Late in 1971, Congress reinstituted the tax form checkoff to finance Presidential general elections and, in early 1972, passed the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971, Pub. L. No. 92-255, 86 Stat. 3 ("FECA"), requiring disclosure of all contributions in excess of $100 and disclosure of expenditures by all candidates and political committees spending more than $1000 per year. Id. The 1971 law also expressly provided corporations and unions with the ability to establish and administer separate, segregated funds for the purpose of making political contributions and expenditures. Pipefitters Local Union No. 562 v. United States, 407 U.S. 385, 410 (1972).

Despite passage of FECA, the "infinite ability" to "eviscerate[] statutory limitations on contributions and expenditures," which amounted to "wholesale circumvention" became a source of further congressional concern. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 837. Congress concluded that costs for federal elections had increased at an "'alarming'" rate. Id. (quoting H.R. Rep. No.93-1239, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1974), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1974, p. 5587). Congress was further troubled by the "interaction" between large-scale campaign expenditures and a reliance "on large contributions from monied and special interests." Id. In Buckley, it was undisputed that "one percent of the people accounted for 90 percent of the dollars contributed to federal candidates, political parties and committees." Id. (citing agreed to Findings of Fact). It was also undisputed that illegal contributions to both parties were made in 1972 by Gulf Oil and by American Milk Producers, Inc., a large dairy cooperative. Id. at 838. Notably, the circuit court in Buckley concluded:

> Large contributions are intended to, and do, gain access to the elected official after the campaign for consideration of the contributor's particular concerns. Senator Mathias not only describes this but also the corollary, that the feeling that big contributors gain special treatment produces a reaction that the average American has no significant role in the political process.

Id.; see also id. n.32 ("Congress found and the District Court confirmed that such contributions were often made for the purpose of furthering business or private interests by facilitating access to government officials or influencing governmental decisions, and that, conversely, elected officials have tended to afford special treatment to large contributors.") (citations omitted). Indeed, the lower Buckley court documented the "lavish contributions by groups or individuals with special interests to legislators from both parties." Id. at 840 n.37.

In 1974, in direct response to the 1972 elections which were a "watershed for public confidence in the electoral system," id. at 840, and the "shock of its aftermath," id. at 837, Congress enacted and President Gerald Ford signed the sweeping FECA Amendments of 1974. Id. Broadly speaking, the amendments imposed dollar limitations on contributions by individuals and by political committees to candidates for federal office, to political party committees, and to independent political committees. 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a). The 1974 amendments also imposed limits on expenditures that individuals, candidates, political committees, and political parties could spend to help federal candidates win elections. Moreover, the law treated expenditures that were "coordinated" with a candidate as contributions. 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(7)(B)(i) ("[E]xpenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate."). The amendments also included a variety of recordkeeping and disclosure requirements. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 432-434. The Federal Election Commission was also created by the amendments and tasked with monitoring and enforcing the campaign finance laws. See generally 2 U.S.C. §§ 437c(b)(1), 437d(a), 437g. Finally the law, as amended, provided public funding primarily for qualified presidential candidates and some public funding for nominating conventions of major political parties.

The first day after the FECA amendments went into effect, the law was challenged. Buckley, 519 F.2d at 901. In a lengthy opinion, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found all but one of the provisions of FECA constitutional. Id. at 843-44 (striking down disclosure provision 2 U.S.C. § 437a). In 1976, the Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part the D.C. Circuit's ruling in its decision in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976). Generally speaking, in examining FECA's provisions against the free speech and association provisions of the First Amendment the Supreme Court found constitutional FECA's contribution limitations, Buckley, 424 U.S. at 23-38, and unconstitutional those provisions of FECA that imposed expenditure limitations, id. at 39-59. The contribution-expenditure dichotomy first developed in Buckley was grounded in the Supreme Court's view that "[a] contribution serves as a general expression of support for the candidate and his views, but does not communicate the underlying basis for the support."

Id. at 21 (observing that "[t]he quantity of communication by the contributor does not increase perceptibly with the size of his contribution, since the expression rests solely on the undifferentiated, symbolic act of contributing."). Expenditure restrictions, on the other hand, "while neutral as to the ideas expressed, limit political expression at the core of our electoral process and of the First Amendment freedoms." Id. at 39 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

In Buckley, the Supreme Court upheld as well the general disclosure provisions contained in FECA. Id. at 60-84.[4] The Supreme Court likewise found constitutional the public funding scheme for presidential candidates. Id. at 85-109. Finally, the Supreme Court struck down the structure of the FEC as it was constituted under FECA in violation of the Appointments Clause of the Constitution. Id. at 109-143.

Hence, in the aftermath of Buckley, it was FECA's contribution restrictions that remained intact, while its expenditure provisions were vitiated.[5] Under FECA, as it emerged from Buckley, no "person"[6] was permitted to contribute in excess of $1,000 to a candidate

[4] The D.C. Circuit's decision striking down 2 U.S.C. § 437a was not appealed to the Supreme Court. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 11 n.7.

[5] Following Buckley, there have been a number of important Supreme Court opinions that have addressed application of Buckley in other contexts. It is more appropriate to discuss these cases in the context of each Judge's separate opinion.

[6] FECA defines "person" as "an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, labor organization, or any other organization or group of persons, but such term does not include the Federal Government or any authority of the Federal Government." 2 U.S.C. § 431(11).

for federal office, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1)(A); no person could contribute to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $20,000, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(1)(B); and no person could contribute to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1)(C).[7] In addition, no multicandidate political committee could contribute in excess of $5,000 to a candidate for federal office, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(2)(A); no multicandidate political committee could contribute in excess of $15,000 to the political committees established and maintained by a national political party, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(2)(B); and finally, no multicandidate political committee could contribute to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceeded $5,000, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(2)(C). In order to "prevent evasion" of these limitations Buckley upheld the Act's $25,000 limitation on total contributions during any calendar year. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 38. As a result, under 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(3), no individual was permitted to make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(3).[8] [7] Under BCRA, these contribution limits have been raised. Persons can now contribute $2,000 to candidates and $25,000 to national political party committees. BCRA §§ 307(a)(1), 307(a)(2); FECA § 315(a)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1). Also under BCRA, Congress has carved state party committees out of § 441a(a)(1)(C) and increased the contribution limit for state party committees from $5,000 to $10,000. BCRA § 102; FECA § 315(a)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1). Moreover, the contribution limits applicable to candidates and national party committees have been indexed to the consumer price index and will increase with inflation. BCRA § 307(d); FECA § 315(c); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(c).

In addition, under 2 U.S.C. § 441b, corporations and labor unions are prohibited from using their general treasury funds to "make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office." 2 U.S.C. § 441b(a). In sum, the Supreme Court found that:

> The overall effect of the Act's contribution ceilings is merely to require candidates and political committees to raise funds from a greater number of persons and to compel people who would otherwise contribute amounts greater than the statutory limits to expend such funds on direct political expression, rather than to reduce the total amount of money potentially available to promote political expression.

Buckley, 424 U.S. at 21-22. Indeed, what emerged from Buckley was a tightly focused regime whereby contributions (and coordinated expenditures) to candidates and political parties and committees were limited or even banned (in the case of corporate and union treasury funds) and independent political advocacy was left unimpeded.

Contribution is defined in FECA as including, "any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made by any person for the purpose of influencing any election for Federal office." 2 U.S.C. § 431(8)(A)(i).

Since the adoption of FECA, it is clear that the Commission has struggled with interpreting the phrase "for the purpose of influencing any election for Federal office." 2 U.S.C. § 431(8)(A)(i). In 1975, the FEC examined the case of a local party committee that had established separate accounts for federal funds and for corporate contributions which were permitted under state law, but which were prohibited by federal law for use in connection with federal elections. In Advisory Opinion 1975-21, the Commission determined that the appropriate course was to have the local party allocate both its administrative expenses and its voter registration drives between the two accounts, given that these expenses had an impact on both state and federal elections. FEC Advisory Op. 1975-21 (allocation based on the ratio of "the total amount which the [local party] directly contributes to and expends on behalf of Federal candidates, to . . . the total of all direct contributions to and expenditures on behalf of all candidates–Federal, State, and local"). The FEC slightly reversed course, in Informational Letter 1976-72, where it determined that voter registration efforts could not be paid for from an account containing funds raised from corporate and union general treasuries. FEC Informational Letter 1976-72 ("Thus, even though the Illinois law apparently permits corporate contributions for State elections, corporate/union treasury funds may not be used to fund any portion of a registration or get-out-the-vote drive conducted by a political party.").

However, in its 1977 rulemakings implementing FECA, the Commission permitted any political committee to make a choice between creating a separate federal account for its federal election activities, or to establish a single account containing only funds subject to the federal contribution limits to finance all of its activities with respect to both state and federal elections. 11 C.F.R. § 102.6(a)(2) (1977). To the extent that segregated accounts were created, the committees were required to "allocate administrative expenses on a reasonable basis between their Federal and non-Federal accounts in proportion to the amount of funds expended on Federal and non-Federal elections, or on another reasonable basis." 11 C.F.R. § 106.1(e) (1977) (emphasis added). The following year, the Commission essentially reversed its 1976 advisory opinion and in Advisory Opinion 1978-10, determined that "the costs of [voter] registration and get-out-the-vote drives" by a state party committee "should be allocated between" federal and nonfederal accounts "in the same manner as other general party expenditures" under the Commission's 1977 regulations. FEC Advisory Op. 1978-10. In Advisory Opinion 1979-17, the Commission extended the conclusions reached in Advisory Opinion 1978-10 regarding separate accounts to the national party committees. FEC Advisory Op. 1979-17 ("[Regulations] thus would permit the RNC to establish and administer separate, segregated bank accounts through an auxiliary organization of the national party which accounts could be used for the deposit and disbursement of funds designated specifically and exclusively to finance national party activity limited to influencing the nomination or election of candidates for public office other than elective 'Federal office.'") (citation omitted).

Accordingly, by the middle of 1979, the FEC permitted national and state party committees to solicit and accept donations outside of FECA's source and amount limitations ("nonfederal money")[9] provided that these monies were placed in separate accounts from the federal funds. In other words, political committees were permitted to establish two sets of accounts–one for federally-regulated money (federal accounts) and one for non-federally regulated money (nonfederal accounts).[10]

Essentially, the FEC's opinions and rulemakings permitted state and national party committees to pay for the nonfederal portion of their administrative costs and voter during the rulemaking process implementing BCRA, Prohibited and Excessive Contributions: Non-Federal Funds or Soft Money, 67 Fed. Reg. 49064 (July 29, 2002) ("Because the term 'soft money' is used by different people to refer to a wide variety of funds under different circumstances, the Commission is using the term 'non-Federal funds' in the final rules rather than the term 'soft money.'"), even though BCRA uses the term "soft money," BCRA § 101 (entitled "Soft money of political parties") (emphasis added) and even though on occasion the Supreme Court has also used the phrase "soft money," see, e.g., Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Committee v. FEC ("Colorado I"), 518 U.S. 604, 616 (1996) ("Unregulated 'soft money' contributions may not be used to influence a federal campaign, except when used in the limited, party-building activities specifically designated in the statute."). Despite the references in the case law and the statute to the term "soft money," for the sake of clarity in an area of law that demands absolute precision, the Court generally eschews the phraseology "hard money" or "soft money" in favor of "federal funds" or "nonfederal funds." Federal funds are those monies regulated under FECA, as amended, and nonfederal funds are those monies that may or may not be regulated under state law, but not federal law.

[10] In 1979 Congress again amended FECA to exempt two new sets of activities from the definition of contribution and expenditure. First, state and local party disbursements for campaign materials such as pins, bumper stickers, and yard signs used in connection with volunteer activities on behalf of the party's nominees were exempted from FECA's contribution limits provided that the activity was paid for with federal money. 2 U.S.C. §§ 431(8)(B)(ix), 9(B)(viii). The second exemption related to a state party's payment for "the costs of voter registration and [GOTV] activities" conducted on behalf of the party's presidential ticket. 2 U.S.C. §§ 431(8)(B)(xi), (9)(B)(ix). This exemption was also conditioned on the use of federal money for the activity. Hence, for both of these activities unlimited federal money could be used to pay for them because they were exempted from the definition of "contribution" and "expenditure." For state and local parties that opted to use nonfederal funds to pay for these activities, allocation was still permitted.

registration and turnout programs with monies raised under relevant state laws (not FECA), even if those state laws were in direct contravention of FECA, such as permitting contributions from corporate and labor union general treasury funds. As a result, national and state parties began to raise so-called "soft money," which described these nonfederal funds, not subject to FECA limits and restrictions, that were used to pay for these administrative and generic voter drive expenses.

With these developments, nonfederal funds became an increasingly important means of party financing. During the 1980 election, the RNC spent approximately $15 million in nonfederal funds and the DNC spent roughly $4 million, constituting 9% of the national parties total spending. Mann Expert Rep. at 12.[11] In 1984, the national parties spent collectively an estimated $21.6 million in nonfederal money, which accounted for 5% of their total spending. Id. By 1988, national party nonfederal money had increased to an approximate $45 million, or 11% of national party spending. Id.

In 1990, the FEC promulgated regulations to provide for some consistency in the methods used to determine the relative portions of federal and nonfederal money to be used in financing these generic party activities. Prior to 1990, the regulations specified that the allocation rate between nonfederal and federal accounts was to be done on a "reasonable basis." 11 C.F.R. § 106.1(e) (1977). The regulations promulgated by the Commission were designed to give certainty to this subjective standard and were in response to a district court's decision which held that the allocation rules required specific guidance from the Commission. Common Cause v. FEC, 692 F. Supp. 1391, 1396 (D.D.C. 1987) ("Indeed, it is possible that the Commission may conclude that no method of allocation will effectuate the Congressional goal that all monies spent by state political committees on those activities permitted in the 1979 amendments be 'hard money' under the FECA. That is an issue for the Commission to resolve on remand.").[12] Under the new regulations, national party committees (other than Senate and House national party committees) were required to allocate at least 65% of their administrative and generic voter drive expenses[13] to their federal accounts in [12] The Court observes that Common Cause v. FEC demonstrates that as early as 1984, before any official statistics on nonfederal funds were kept by the Commission, there was concern over the influence of these monies on federal elections. However, the Commission in 1984 determined that, "Common Cause has not presented evidence of instances in which 'soft money' has been used to influence federal elections sufficient to justify the stringent rules proposed in its petition." Common Cause, 692 F. Supp. at 1393 (citing the Commission's April 17, 1986, Notice of Disposition).

[11] As Defense Expert Mann plainly concedes, "Just what amount of soft money activity the parties pursued in the 1980s is less certain [because] '[n]onfederal' funds were not subject to federal disclosure requirements, only to the disclosure laws in states where soft money was spent." Mann Expert Report at 12. It was not until 1992 that the FEC began collecting official data on national parties use of nonfederal funds, so any attempts at pinpointing the amount of nonfederal funds spent by the national parties before 1992 are estimates. Notably, Plaintiffs do not challenge any of the pre-1992 estimates (or any of the post-1992 data collected by the Commission). Therefore, the Court relies on these statistics.

[13] The Commission permitted, inter alia, the following expenses to be allocated: administrative expenses, which included rent, utilities, office supplies, and salaries, 11 C.F.R. § 106.5(a)(2)(i) (1991); the direct costs of a fundraising program or event, where federal and nonfederal funds are collected by one committee, 11 C.F.R. § 106.5(a)(2)(ii) (1991); and "generic voter drives," which included voter identification, voter registration, and get-out-the-vote ("GOTV") drives where a specific candidate was not mentioned. 11 C.F.R. §106.5(a)(2)(iv) (1991).

presidential election years and 60% in non-presidential election years. 11 C.F.R. §§ 106.5(b)(2)(i), (ii) (1991). Senate and House committees were to allocate these expenses on the basis of the ratio of federal expenditures to total federal and nonfederal disbursements made by the committee during the two-year federal election cycle. 11 C.F.R. § 106.5(c)(i). For state and local parties, the allocation between the federal and nonfederal accounts for these expenses were determined by the proportion of federal offices to all offices on a state's general election ballot. 11 C.F.R. § 106.5(d) (1991). Generally, the state parties' allocation rate was substantially lower than the national party allocation rate. Mann Expert Rep. at 14. The new rules also mandated that the national party committees disclose the details of their nonfederal accounts. 11 C.F.R. §§ 104.8(e), (f) (1991) (requiring national parties to report for nonfederal and building fund accounts the donating individual's name, mailing address, occupation or type of business, and the date of receipt and amount of any such donation). State parties, however, were exempted from these disclosure requirements. 11 C.F.R. § 104.9(a) (1991) (reporting committees required to disclose information pertaining to "the committee's federal account(s) only"). The Commission's regulations, therefore, provided the national parties with an incentive to channel these expenditures through state party committees, since this approach generally permitted more nonfederal dollars to be spent than if a national party spent the money without disclosing the sources of the funds.

In 1992, spending on nonfederal money by the national parties reached $80 million, or 16% of the national parties total spending. Mann Expert Rep. at 15 (citing to official figures from the FEC). Of that total amount, the national parties contributed only $2 million directly to state and local candidates. Mann Expert Rep. at 16. In addition, the two national parties transferred over $15 million to state party committees–two thirds of which was transferred to presidential election battleground states. Id. Along these lines, the national parties expended $14 million in nonfederal funds for "generic" party advertising, consisting predominantly of television advertisements that did not mention candidates names, but urged viewers to simply vote for a particular party or stressed themes from the presidential campaigns. Id. Although the Commission had only approved the use of nonfederal funds by the national parties "for the exclusive and limited purpose of influencing the nomination or election of candidates for nonfederal office," by 1992, with the new allocation rules firmly in place, national parties were using nonfederal money to impact federal elections as permitted by the Commission. FEC Advisory Op. 1979-17.

With the 1996 election cycle, the national parties' total nonfederal funds spending reached $272 million, which was 30% of the national party committees' total spending. Mann Expert Rep. at 21. Starting in the Fall of 1995 and continuing through 1996, Democratic party committees used soft money to fund advertisements that either promoted President William J. Clinton by name or criticized his opponent by name, while avoiding words that expressly advocated either candidate's election or defeat.[14] Id. at 18. In May of

Although many of the advertisements featured the presidential candidates, none of the costs of these advertisements were charged as coordinated expenditures on behalf of the candidate's campaign, which would have subjected the expenditure to FECA's contribution limits. Instead, the parties paid the full cost, with a mix of federal and nonfederal funds as permitted by FEC allocation rules.[15] Often the advertisements were paid for by state party committees, where the allocation rules permitted greater spending of soft money. Mann unconstitutional vagueness the independent expenditure prohibitions, narrowed them to apply "only to expenditures for communications that in express terms advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate for federal office." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 44. In a footnote, the Buckley Court found that "[t]his [narrowing] construction would restrict the application of § 608(e)(1) to communications containing express words of advocacy of election or defeat, such as 'vote for,' 'elect,' 'support,' 'cast your ballot for,' 'Smith for Congress,' 'vote against,' 'defeat,' 'reject.'" Id. at 44 n.52. Even though the Supreme Court narrowed the provision of the law, it struck down the expenditure provision as unconstitutional as written and as narrowed by the Court. Id. at 44.

It was based on this language that the national parties in 1995 and 1996 argued that as long as they ran advertisements that did not mention "express words of advocacy of election or defeat," they could use nonfederal money to run advertisements that supported their presidential candidate or attacked his opponent.

[15] The FEC had previously ruled that party committees could sponsor issue advocacy advertisements that did not feature a federal candidate and pay for these advertisements with a combination of federal and nonfederal dollars as permitted under the allocation regulations. FEC Advisory Op. 1995-25 (discussing that allocation rules were permissible to allocate funding for "RNC plans to produce and air media advertisements on a series of legislative proposals being considered by the U.S. Congress, such as the balanced budget debate and welfare reform"). The national parties used this advisory opinion as justification for their issue advocacy campaigns featuring candidates for federal office and paid for with nonfederal money.

Expert Report at 22 (noting over $115 million was transferred from the national parties to the state party committees). In fact, state party nonfederal funds for political communication/advertising went from $2 million in 1992 to $65 million in 1996. Id. at 22; see also La Raja Expert Report at 18. A similar strategy was also used by the parties to support their candidates for congressional office. Mann Expert Report at 20. Following the 1996 election, the FEC began a series of investigations over the parties' 1996 election practices. Statement of Reasons of Commissioner Scott E. Thomas for MURs 4553 and 4671, 4713, 4407 and 4544 at 2-5 [DEV 51]. In 2000, the FEC deadlocked over whether there was reason to believe that the national parties advertising program constituted an excessive in-kind contribution to the presidential campaigns. Id. at 5.

The Senate and House also conducted extensive investigations into the 1996 federal elections. Both the majority and minority reports in the Senate investigation concluded that permitting nonfederal donations to political parties eviscerated FECA's longstanding ability to prevent corporate and labor union treasury funds from influencing federal elections. Investigation of Illegal or Improper Activities in Connection with 1996 Federal Election Campaigns, S. Rep. No. 105-167 (6 vols.), Mar. 10, 1998, ("Thompson Committee Report"); id. at 4468 (majority report) ("[S]oft money spending by political party committees eviscerates the ability of the FECA to limit the funds contributed by individuals, corporations, or unions for the defeat or benefit of specific candidates."); id. at 4572 (minority report) ("The soft money loophole undermines the campaign finance laws by enabling wealthy private interests to channel enormous amounts of money into political campaigns."). In the House, the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight conducted a wide ranging investigation, which culminated in public hearings during 1997, into, inter alia, campaign fundraising by political parties from foreign sources. See Campaign Finance Investigation: Hearings Before the House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, 105th Cong. 6 (October 8, 1997) (statement of Chairman Dan Burton) ("This Committee's hearings will cover many subjects . . . . Our initial focus has been how political parties took or raised contributions from foreign sources. I am gravely concerned about foreign governments, foreign companies or foreign nationals trying to influence our electoral processes."); Conduit Payments to the Democratic National Committee: Hearings Before the House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, 105th Cong. 6 (October 9, 1997) (statement of Chairman Dan Burton) ("Today, marks the first day of hearings into illegal foreign fundraising and other violations of law during recent campaigns.").

Nevertheless, without any congressional action, nonfederal funds emerged as a significant source of party resources. With these strategies firmly in place, the national parties spent $221 million of nonfederal money on the 1998 midterm elections, or 34% of their total spending, which was more than double the amount of nonfederal funds spent during the previous midterm election. Mann Expert Report at 23. With the 2000 elections, the national parties spent $498 million worth of nonfederal funds, which was 42% of their total spending. Id. at 24.

The use of nonfederal funds by the political parties was paralleled to some degree by a similar development in the rise of issue advocacy by corporations and labor unions. Aside from the political parties making advertisements that supported their candidates or attacked the opponent without using words of direct "express advocacy," unions and corporations began to mount "issue advocacy" campaigns, particularly beginning with the 1996 election, that were paid directly from their general treasuries. For example, in 1996 the AFL-CIO ran the following advertisement from September 26 to October 9 in the district of House Republican incumbent Steve Stockman:

> [Narrator] What's important to America's families? [Middle-aged man] "My pension is very important because it will provide a significant amount of my income when I retire." [Narrator] And where do the candidates stand? Congressman Steve Stockman voted to make it easier for corporations to raid employee pension funds. Nick Lampson opposes that plan. He supports new safeguards to protect employee pension funds. When it comes to your pension, there is a difference. Call and find out.

AFL-CIO 000593; [DEV 124] (emphasis added); see also AFL-CIO 000602.

Advertisements such as the above illustration were permitted by the Supreme Court's ruling in FEC v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc. In that case, the Supreme Court found that the prohibition on corporate and union treasury spending on expenditures found in 2 U.S.C. § 441(b) needed to be narrowly construed to only apply to express advocacy. FEC v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc., 479 U.S. 238, 249 (1986) ("MCFL") ("We therefore hold that an expenditure must constitute 'express advocacy' in order to be subject to the prohibition of § 441b."). As a result, corporations and labor unions were free to use general treasury funds to finance issue advocacy campaigns. It does not appear that prior to 1996, the practice of using issue advertising to influence federal elections was a widespread practice.

In addition, the issue advocacy campaigns by corporations and labor unions were free from the disclosure provisions upheld in Buckley because they were considered outside of FECA's regulatory purview. This lack of disclosure permitted various interest groups to conceal the true identity of the source behind the advertisement. Thus, following both the 1996 and 2000 elections, corporations and unions used their general treasury funds to run advertisements apparently aimed at influencing federal elections and avoiding FECA's longstanding disclosure provisions.

With regard to both political party spending of nonfederal funds and political party, corporate, and labor union issue advocacy, there does not appear to be any dispute among the litigants to the fact that much of this behavior was not regulated or was permitted by the FEC. Rather, the dispute between the parties centers around the effect of engaging in these tactics, whether the measures needed addressing, and how Congress ultimately remedied what it perceived to be a problem. It is the congressional response to which the Court now turns.

B. The Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002

In response to what it perceived were burgeoning problems with federal campaign finance laws, Congress began to consider reform legislation over six years ago, during the 105th Congress.[16] The overhaul of our Nation's existing campaign finance laws – culminating with the enactment of BCRA – would consume the attention of three separate Congresses[17] and require navigation through atypical parliamentary procedures.

During the 105th Congress, the House of Representatives considered House Bill 2183, the Bipartisan Campaign Integrity Act of 1997, offered by Representative Asa Hutchinson. The bill was first considered on May 22, 1998.[18] 144 Cong. Rec. H3774 (daily ed. May 22, 1998). On August 3, 1998, during consideration of Representative Hutchinson's bill on the House floor, the Committee of the Whole[19] adopted an amendment in the nature of a [18] According to Congressional Quarterly reporter David Mark, the House Leadership only allowed floor consideration of House Bill 2183 after it appeared that supporters of the bill had nearly secured the requisite 218 signatures on a discharge petition to automatically bring the bill to the floor, which did not require the consent of the leadership. See David Mark, Campaign Finance Discharge Petition Off to Fast Start, Congressional Quarterly Daily Monitor (July 31, 2001).

[19] When considering most major legislation, the House of Representatives typically adopts a rule, in the form of a House Resolution, that governs, and generally limits, debate on the underlining bill. In order to expedite consideration of the underlining bill, the rule suspends the proceedings of the House of Representatives, and the body operates as one large committee, the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union ("Committee of the Whole"). Walter J. Oleszek, Congressional Procedures and the Policy Process 151-53 (5th ed., CQ Press 2001). This parliamentary mechanism enables the House to act with a quorum less than the requisite 218 members; only 100 members are needed to constitute a quorum in the Committee of the Whole. Id. at 152. Finally, on August 6, 1998, the House passed House Bill 2183, as amended (the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 1998), by a vote of 252-179. 144 Cong. Rec. H7330 (daily ed. Aug. 6, 1998). The bill was referred to the Senate on September 9, 1998, 144 Cong. Rec. S10,114 (daily ed. Sept. 9, 1998), but was not considered prior to adjournment, sine die, on October 21, 1998. As a result, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 1998 died in the Senate during the 105th Congress.

On January 19, 1999, during the 106th Congress, Representative Shays introduced House Bill 417, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 1999, which attracted the support of 96 original cosponsors. See H.R. 417, 106th Cong. (1999). Upon introduction, the bill was referred to the Committee on House Administration, where it received an unfavorable report. H.R. Rept. 106-297, pt. 1, at 17 (1999). Nonetheless, the proponents of campaign finance reform secured floor consideration through the threat of a discharge petition. See David Mark, Campaign Finance Discharge Petition Off to Fast Start, Congressional Quarterly Daily Monitor (July 31, 2001). After the Committee of the Whole considers the underlining legislation, generally, the rule governing debate automatically dissolves the Committee of the Whole, and the House of Representatives reconvenes to vote on the underlining bill for final passage.

1999 reached the floor for a vote, it passed comfortably, by a vote of 252-177. 145 Cong. Rec. H8286 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 1999). On September 16, 1999, the Senate received House Bill 417, and on September 29, the Senate referred it to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, 145 Cong. Rec. S11,638 (daily ed. Sept. 29, 1999), where it would remain for the balance of the 106th Congress. The Senate responded to the House's action by considering Senate Bill 1593, also titled the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 1999, which was introduced on September 16, 1999, by Senators McCain and Feingold, shortly after House Bill 417 secured passage. S. 1593; see also 145 Cong. Rec. H8286 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 1999). The Senate, however, failed to invoke cloture,[21] thereby failing to limit debate on two separate amendments to Senate Bill 1593, and the bill floundered. 145 Cong. Rec. S12,800 (daily ed. Oct. 19, 1999); id. at S12,803. As a result, for the second time in as many years, the campaign finance reform bill died in the Senate.

Circumstances changed during the 107th Congress; this time it was the Senate that [21] While debate on the Senate floor does not always lead to an all-out filibuster, on controversial legislation, the Senate typically invokes cloture to end the threat of unlimited debate or simply to gauge support for the underlining bill. See Walter J. Under Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, if "three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn" (60 Senators if the Senate is at its full membership) vote in the affirmative on a motion for cloture, further debate on the question shall be limited to no more than one hour for each Senator, and the time for consideration of the matter shall be limited to 30 additional hours, unless increased by another three-fifths vote. See Standing Rules of the Senate, Rule XXII, available at http://rules.senate.gov/senaterules/rule22.htm.

acted first and passed campaign finance reform legislation, Senate Bill 27,[22] by a vote of 59-41. 147 Cong. Rec. S3258 (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001). The bill was then transferred to the House of Representatives.

Representatives Shays and Meehan had already introduced House Bill 380, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2001, when the Senate secured passage of Senate Bill 27. See H.R. 380, 106th Cong. (1999). On June 28, 2001, in an effort to make their legislation conform with the Senate-passed bill,[23] Representatives Shays and Meehan introduced new legislation, House Bill 2356, also titled the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2001. The House Leadership, which, through the Speaker of the House, controls access to the House floor,[24] agreed to consider House Bill 2356. However, in a last minute effort [23] Faced with the fact that Senate Bill 27 was unlikely to garner the support of a majority of the House, and given the fact that House Bill 380 differed from Senate Bill 27, Representatives Shays and Meehan met with members of the Senate to work out a compromise bill. The agreement they reached was reflected in House Bill 2356. See David Mark & John Cochran, House Panel to Mark Up Dueling Campaign Finance Bills, Congressional Quarterly Daily Monitor (June 27, 2001) ("The revisions are designed to encourage the Democratic-controlled Senate to accept a House-passed bill, thus avoiding the need for a conference committee. [24] The Speaker of the House picks the 9 majority-party members that serve on the powerful House Committee on Rules – the gateway to the House floor. The Rules Committee writes the rules that govern debate and determines which amendments will be considered. The committee currently consists of 13 members, 9 majority-party members chosen by the Speaker of the House and 4 minority-party members chosen by the House Minority Leader. See Walter J. to tweak the legislation, Representatives Shays and Meehan proposed several amendments. John Cochran, Not Victory but Vitriol for Campaign Finance Bill, Congressional Quarterly Weekly (July 13, 2001). The package of amendments offered by Shays and Meehan reflected the need for additional changes to ensure that House Bill 2356, if passed by the House, would be considered without amendment by the Senate, thereby eliminating the need for a conference committee.[25] See id. In addition, Shays and Meehan requested that the Rules Committee write a rule for consideration and debate on the House floor that would treat this package as a single amendment, which could be considered in one vote. Id. The Rules Committee refused, drafting a resolution for consideration and debate that would treat each change, fourteen in total, as separate amendments. Id.; see also H.R. Res. 188, 107th Cong. (2001). Shays, Meehan, and their supporters opposed the rule, claiming that the House Leadership used "technicalities" to defeat the bill, and called upon their colleagues to reject the rule. 147 Cong. Rec. House voted and the rule failed.[26] In the aftermath, however, the bill's proponents and the House Leadership were unable to come to an agreement over a compromise rule for the consideration and debate of House Bill 2356, John Cochran, Not Victory but Vitriol for Campaign Finance Bill, Congressional Quarterly Weekly (July 13, 2001), and the bill was pulled from the House Floor.

On July 30, 2001, Representative Jim Turner filed a discharge petition to bring House Bill 2356 to the floor for consideration. H.R. Discharge Pet. No. 3, available at http://clerkweb.house.gov/107/lrc/pd/Petitions/Dis3.htm. As congressional procedure scholar Walter J. Oleszek noted:

> [t]he discharge procedure, adopted in 1910, provides that if a bill has been before a standing committee for thirty legislative . . . days, any member can introduce a motion to relieve the panel of the measure. . . . If the requisite number of members (218) sign the petition, this procedure permits a majority of the House to bring a bill to the floor even if it is opposed by the committee that has jurisdiction over the measure, the majority leadership, and the Rules Committee.

Walter J. Oleszek, Congressional Procedures and the Policy Process 138 (5th ed., CQ Press 2001). While the discharge petition permits a majority of the House to circumvent a stacked committee or the House Leadership, it has not been a highly effective tool for passing legislation, let alone securing its enactment into law. As Walter Oleszek went on to observe:

> Few measures are discharged from committee. From 1931 through 1994

> (approximately the period during which the modern version of the rule has been in effect), more than five hundred discharge petitions were filed, but only forty-six attracted the required signatures and only nineteen bills were discharged and passed by the House. Of those, only two became law: the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and the Federal Pay Raise Act of 1960.

Id. at 139. Despite this history of failure, on January 24, 2002, Representative Turner's petition attracted 218 signatures, the requisite number to achieve discharge. See H.R. Discharge Pet. No. 3. Consequently, the bill was sent to the floor and scheduled for debate. See H.R. Res. 203, 107th Cong. (2001); H.R. Res. 344, 107th Cong. (2002); 148 Cong. Rec. H266 (daily ed. Feb. 12, 2002). On February 13, 2002, the House began to consider House Bill 2356. During consideration, the House rejected three substitute amendments – one offered by House Majority Leader Dick Armey[27] and two offered by House Administration Committee Chairman Robert Ney[28] – before agreeing to Representative Shays' substitute amendment by a vote of 240-191, 148 Cong. Rec. H411 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002). Like the earlier amendment package, the Shays Substitute was designed to avoid a conference committee, where opponents would have another opportunity to scuttle the bill,[29] by making [29] The process of going to conference creates three additional hurdles to the enactment of legislation. changes likely to garner the support of a majority of the Senate without forcing them to alter the text of the House-passed bill. See 148 Congr. Rec. H402 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. Shays) (observing that the Shays substitute amendment was drafted after having "met with Senators from both sides of the aisle to learn what was needed in that bill in order to pass [BCRA]").[30] After considering a series of amendments to the newly amended, underlining bill (House Bill 2356), the House passed BCRA by a vote of 240-189. 148 Cong. Rec. H465-66 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002). On March 20, 2002, the Senate followed suit, passing BCRA by a vote of 60-40. 148 Cong. Rec. S2160-61 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002).

On March 27, 2002, President George W. Bush signed BCRA into law; the first major overhaul of the Federal Election Campaign Act since the 1974 Amendments and their revision following Buckley. Broadly speaking, Title I attempts to regulate political party use of nonfederal funds, while Title II seeks to prohibit labor union and corporate treasury funds from being used to run issue advertisements that have an ostensible federal electioneering purpose.

hours, Senator McConnell and the National Rifle Association ("NRA") filed complaints challenging the constitutionality of various provisions in BCRA. On April 16, 2003, pursuant to Congress's directive, BCRA § 403(a)(1),[31] those cases were assigned to a district court of three judges consisting of District Court Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly, District Court Judge Richard J. Leon, and Circuit Court Judge Karen LeCraft Henderson. A week later, on April 23, 2002, the three-judge court held a status conference, in which it heard the parties' proposals on consolidation, intervention, discovery, and the filing of motions.

The primary issue confronting the Court at the status conference was the scope of discovery required to develop a satisfactory factual record. The defendants, in their pleading, argued that "wide-raging discovery" was necessary "even in the context of a facial challenge, . . . [in order to] look to the record of the case for evidence substantiating the governmental interests asserted in support of legislation said to violate the First Amendment." [33] At issue in Turner was a constitutional challenge to the "must-carry" provisions that required carriage of local broadcast stations on cable systems. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the three-judge district court, explaining that in order to assure that Congress drew "reasonable inferences based on substantial evidence" that a harm truly existed, the Court needed "substantial elaboration in the District Court of the predictive or historical evidence upon which Congress relied, or the introduction of some additional evidence." Id. at 667 (emphasis added). Because of the "paucity of evidence" and "lacking" of findings on the effect of the regulations, the Court could also not undertake the narrow tailoring step: "unless we know the extent to which the must-carry provisions in fact interfere with protected speech, we cannot say whether they suppress 'substantially more speech . . . than necessary' to ensure the viability of broadcast television." Id. at 667-68. What followed was "another 18 months of factual development on remand" to the three-judge panel, Turner Broadcasting Sys., Inc. v. FCC, 520 U.S. 180, 187 (1997) (citation and internal quotations omitted), and, here, the defendants in this case warned that "[t]he factual inquiry . . . could be on a scale similar to that of Turner," Status Conference Tr., April 23, 2002, at 48 (statement of James Gilligan).

Gilligan).[35] Notwithstanding Congress's directive "to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of the action and appeal," BCRA § 403(a)(4), it was also clear from the legislative record that Congress did not want this Court to "compromise informed and deliberate judicial decisionmaking in the process." See Def.'s Report in Response to the Court's Order of April 16, 2002, at 8. Indeed, Senator Feingold, one of the principal Senate sponsors, explained during the Senate debate:

> Finally, and most importantly, although [Section 403(a)(4)] provides for the expedition of these cases to the greatest possible extent, we do not intend to suggest that the courts should not take the time necessary to develop the factual record . . . This case will be one of the most important that the Court has heard in decades, with ramifications for the future of our political system for years to come. By expediting the case, we in no way want to rush the Court into making its decision without the benefit of a full and adequate record.

[35] In Colorado I, the Supreme Court remanded the issue of whether coordinated party expenditures are constitutional, Colorado I, 518 U.S. at 623-26; see also 2 U.S.C. § 441a(d)(3), and the Tenth Circuit subsequently passed the case on to the district court, stating that > [T]he issues are too important to be resolved in haste. It seems inevitable that not only this court but the Supreme Court itself will have to address these issues. We will both benefit by the parties fleshing out the record with any evidence they and the district court deem relevant to the issues' resolution.

FEC v. Colorado Republican Fed. Campaign Comm., 96 F.3d 471, 473 (1996). The district court then allowed the parties to conduct discovery for eleven and a half months, significantly longer than our total discovery schedule for many issues of similar complexity. Accordingly, the next day, the Court issued a unanimous order outlining a discovery and briefing schedule, which allowed for over five months of discovery and almost an additional month for cross-examination of fact and expert witnesses; set May 7, 2002, as a deadline by which all other actions would be filed; and decided that briefing was to take place between November 4 and November 25, 2002. In a highly unusual accommodation to Congress's request for expedition, the Court set oral arguments to begin on December 4, 2002, just over a week after the parties submitted their final briefs. See Scheduling Order of April 24, 2002. While this case required thirteen months from filing to disposition, the parties also undertook six months of discovery–at least four months of discovery and fact-finding more than that undertaken in Buckley. Id. at 902-03. That four months of discovery alone accounts for most of the discrepancy in the two expedited, yet complicated, campaign finance cases. Moreover, given the vast record developed through the six months of discovery in this case, it is not surprising that this Court required a few more months than the Buckley court to arrive at a decision after the arguments–for only careful consideration of the record before us could reduce the risk of committing clear error in our findings. *See Easley v. During the discovery process, the parties filed a total of twenty-three motions with the Court, including motions to compel responses to document requests, motions to compel responses to interrogatories, and motions for protective orders. At a hearing on July 25, 2002, the Court heard arguments as to many of the discovery disputes. D. Description of the Specific Provisions in BCRA At Issue in These Lawsuits

The Court briefly next sets forth the provision of the law that are at issue in the litigation.

1. Title I: Reduction of Special Interest Influence

a. The National Party Soft Money Ban: Section 323(a)

The first provision of Title I involves the addition of a new section to FECA, section 323, entitled "Soft Money Of Political Parties." Section 323(a) states that national party committees (including national congressional campaign committees) "may not solicit, receive, or direct to another person a contribution, donation, or transfer of funds or any other thing of value, or spend any funds, that are not subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and have worked, all of us on both sides of this case have worked harder than I ever believed I could be made to work in order to give you this record. . . . I think the ads itself and the reports and affidavits that have been submitted I think are very, very important. I know everybody feels that way.

Id. at 279-80 (statement of Seth Waxman).

[41] We disagree with Judge Henderson's statement that "there was a consensus [at the hearing] that the [Supreme] Court had to receive the case no later than early February." Henderson Op. at 6 n.1. A fair reading of former Solicitor General Waxman's colloquy with Judge Henderson, prompted by her questions, in our judgment, would be that the Supreme Court has the ability to adjust the briefing and oral argument schedule, and has done so in the past, to hear cases exactly such as this one. In short, neither former Solicitor General stated his conclusion in categorical terms, and neither provided an estimate of how long after a hearing the Supreme Court would need to issue its opinion. See generally Tr. at 18-20; 277-280.

reporting requirements of this Act." BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(a)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(a)(1). The law applies to "any . . . national committee, any officer or agent acting on behalf of such a national committee, and any entity that is directly or indirectly established, financed, maintained, or controlled by such a national committee." BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(a)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(a)(2). The clear import of this provision is that national party committees are banned from any involvement with nonfederal money.

b. The State and Local Party Soft Money Ban: Section 323(b)

In summary terms, Section 323(b) provides, that subject to certain exceptions, a State, district, or local committee of a political party may not use nonfederal funds to pay for "Federal election activity." BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(b); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(b).

In general, section 323(b)(1) prohibits state and local political parties from spending any money not raised in accordance with FECA on "Federal election activity." BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(b)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(b)(1). Federal election activity is defined by the Act as:

> (i) voter registration activity during the period that begins on the date that is 120 days before the date a regularly scheduled Federal election is held and ends on the date of the election; (ii) voter identification, get-out-the-vote activity, or generic campaign activity conducted in connection with an election in which a candidate for Federal office appears on the ballot (regardless of whether a candidate for State or local office also appears on the ballot); (iii) a public communication that refers to a clearly identified candidate for Federal office (regardless of whether a candidate for State or local office is also mentioned or identified) and that promotes or supports a candidate for that office, or attacks or opposes a candidate for that office

> (regardless of whether the communication expressly advocates a vote for or against a candidate); or (iv) services provided during any month by an employee of a State, district, or local committee of a political party who spends more than 25 percent of that individual's compensated time during that month on activities in connection with a Federal election.

BCRA §101(b); FECA § 301(20)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 431(20)(A). Federal election activity does not include:

> (i) public communication that refers solely to a clearly identified state or local candidate (unless the communication otherwise qualifies as Federal election activity, for instance, as GOTV); (ii) a contribution to a state or local candidate (unless designated to pay for some other kind of Federal election activity); (iii) a state or local political convention; or (iv) grassroots campaign materials (stickers, buttons, etc.) that name only a state or local candidate.

BCRA §101(b); FECA § 301(20)(B); 2 U.S.C. § 431(20)(B).

1) The Levin Amendment

Section 323(b)(2)–commonly referred to as the "Levin Amendment"–carves out an exception to the general rule in section 323(b)(1). BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(b)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(b)(2). Section 323(b)(2) permits state and local parties to use an allocation of nonfederal money ("Levin money" or "Levin funds") for voter registration, voter identification, and GOTV activities provided that certain specified conditions are met. First, the permitted activities may not refer to a clearly identified federal candidate. Second, those activities may not involve any broadcast communication except one that refers solely to a clearly identified state or local candidate. Third, no single donor may donate more than $10,000 to a state or local party annually for those activities. Finally, all money (federal and Levin money alike) spent on such activities must be "homegrown"–i.e., raised solely by the spending state or local party–and may not be transferred from or raised in conjunction with any national party committee, federal officeholder or candidate, or other state or local party. See BCRA §101(a); FECA §§ 323(b)(2)(B), 323(b)(2)(C); 2 U.S.C. §§ 441i(b)(2)(B), 441i(b)(2)(C).

REV_00165392

c. Fundraising Costs: Section 323(c)

Section 323(c) requires national, state, and local parties to use federally-regulated funds to raise any money that will be used on "federal election activities," as defined in the statute. BCRA §101(a); FECA § 323(c); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(c).

d. Tax Exempt Organization Soft Money Ban: Section 323(d)

Section 323(d) prohibits any political party committee–national, state, or local–or its agents from "solicit[ing]" funds for or "mak[ing] or direct[ing]" any donations to either: (i) any tax-exempt section 501 organization, see 26 U.S.C. § 501(c), that spends any money "in connection with an election for Federal office (including expenditures or disbursements for Federal election activity)"; or (ii) any section 527 organization, see 26 U.S.C. § 527, (other than a state or local party or the authorized campaign committee of a candidate for state or local office). BCRA §101(a); FECA §§ 323(d)(1), 323(d)(2); 2 U.S.C. §§ 441i(d)(1), 441i(d)(2). A section 501(c) organization is an organization that is tax exempt as described in that section of the tax code–a good example of which is a charity. A section 527 organization is a political committee that is exempt from taxation. See 26 U.S.C. § 527(a) ("A political organization shall be subject to taxation under this subtitle only to the extent provided in this section. A political organization shall be considered an organization exempt from income taxes for the purpose of any law which refers to organizations exempt from income taxes."); see also 26 U.S.C. §§ 527(e)(1) and (2) (defining a "political organization" as an organization that is "organized and operated primarily for the purpose of directly or indirectly accepting contributions or making expenditures, or both, for . . . the function of influencing or attempting to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any Federal, State, or local public office or office in a political organization, or the election of Presidential or Vice- Presidential electors").

e. Federal Officeholder and Candidate Soft Money Ban: Section 323(e)

Section 323(e) generally prohibits federal officeholders and candidates from soliciting, receiving, directing, transferring, or spending any soft money[42] (i) in connection with a federal election or (ii) in connection with a state or local election. BCRA § 101(a); FECA § 323(e)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441(e)(1). There are, however, several exceptions to the [42] If the federal candidate or officeholder is soliciting, receiving, directing, transferring, or spending funds in connection with an election for federal office, the funds must "be subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act." 2 U.S.C. § 441(e)(1)(A). However, if the candidate is doing so in connection with a state or local election, then the funds must be "not in excess of the amounts permitted with respect to contributions to candidates and political committees" and "not from sources prohibited by the Act from making contributions in connection with an election for Federal office." 2 U.S.C. § 441(e)(1)(B).

general prohibition in section 323(e). First, a federal officeholder or candidate may solicit money for state and local candidates from sources and in amounts that would be allowed by Federal law. BCRA § 101(a); FECA §§ 323(e)(1)(B)(i), 323(e)(1)(B)(ii); 2 U.S.C. §§ 441i(e)(1)(B)(i), 441i(e)(1)(B)(ii). Second, the federal officeholder or candidate ban on nonfederal funds does not apply to the solicitation, receipt, or spending of funds by an individual who is also a candidate for state or local office solely in connection with such election. BCRA § 101(a); FECA § 323(e)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(e)(2). Third, a federal officeholder or candidate may attend or speak at a fundraising event for a state or local political party. BCRA § 101(a); FECA § 323(e)(3); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(e)(3). Fourth, a federal officeholder or candidate may solicit such funds on behalf of any tax-exempt section 501 organization that spends money in connection with federal elections in either of two instances: (i) he or she may solicit unlimited funds for a section 501 organization whose "principal purpose" is not voter registration, voter identification, or GOTV activity, so long as the solicitation does not specify how the funds will be spent; and (ii) he or she may solicit up to $20,000 per person per year specifically for voter registration, voter identification, or GOTV activity, or for an organization whose "principal purpose" is to conduct any or all of those activities. See BCRA § 101(a); FECA §§ 323(e)(4); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(e)(4).

f. State Candidate Soft Money Ban: Section 323(f)

Lastly, Section 323(f) generally prohibits state officeholders or candidates from spending soft money (that is, money not raised pursuant to FECA's regulations) on any public communication that "refers" to a clearly identified candidate for federal office and "promotes," "supports," "attacks," or "opposes" a candidate for that office. BCRA § 101(a); FECA § 323(f); 2 U.S.C. § 441i(f).

2. Title II: Noncandidate Campaign Expenditures

a. Definition of Electioneering Communication: Section 201

Section 201[43] of BCRA amends section 304 of FECA by adding the following definition of an "electioneering communication":

> (i) The term "electioneering communication" means any broadcast, cable, or satellite communication which–
>
> (I) refers to a clearly identified candidate for Federal office;
>
> (II) is made within–
>
> (aa) 60 days before a general, special, or runoff election for the office sought by the candidate; or
> (bb) 30 days before a primary or preference election, or a convention or caucus of a political party that has authority to nominate a candidate, for the office sought by the candidate; and
> (III) in the case of a communication which refers to a candidate for an office other than President or Vice President, is targeted to the relevant electorate.

BCRA § 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(3)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(A).[44] Under this definition, in order to constitute an electioneering communication, therefore, the communication (a) must be disseminated by cable, broadcast, or satellite, (b) must refer to a clearly identified Federal [43] Section 201 also contains disclosure provisions which are discussed infra.

[44] The regulations implementing this definition clarify that the operative event for making an electioneering communication is the "dissemination of the communication, rather than the disbursement of funds related to creating a communication." Electioneering Communications, 67 Fed. Reg. 65190, 65191 (Oct. 23, 2002).

candidate, (c) must be distributed within certain time periods before an election, and (d) must be targeted to the relevant electorate. Id. The fact that the communication must be "targeted to the relevant electorate," means that, in the case of House and Senate races, the communication will not constitute an "electioneering communication" unless 50,000 or more individuals in the relevant congressional district or state that the candidate for the House or Senate are seeking to represent can receive the communication. BCRA § 201; FECA § 304(f)(3)(C); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(C). For example, if a broadcast advertisement refers to a federal House candidate within 60 days of the general election, but can only be received by 30,000 individuals, it is not an electioneering communication and permissibly could be made with funds from the general treasury of a corporation or labor union.

In the event that a court of competent jurisdiction finds the definition of electioneering communication to be constitutionally infirm, the statute provides a backup definition:

> (ii) If clause (i) is held to be constitutionally insufficient by final judicial decision to support the regulation provided herein, then the term "electioneering communication" means any broadcast, cable, or satellite communication which promotes or supports a candidate for that office, or attacks or opposes a candidate for that office (regardless of whether the communication expressly advocates a vote for or against a candidate) and which also is suggestive of no plausible meaning other than an exhortation to vote for or against a specific candidate.

BCRA § 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(3)(A)(ii); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(A)(ii). With the exception of the final clause, the fallback definition essentially tracks the language found in section 301(20)(A)(iii) of FECA which addresses one of the four activities which fall within the definition of the term Federal Election Activity. BCRA § 101(b); FECA § 301(20)(A)(iii);

2 U.S.C. § 431 (20)(A)(iii).

b. Prohibition of Corporate and Labor Union General Treasury Fund Disbursements for Electioneering Communications: Section 203 Rules Relating to Certain Targeted Electioneering Communications: Section 204

Section 203 of BCRA extends the prohibition on corporate and labor union general treasury funds being used in connection with a federal election to cover electioneering communications. BCRA § 203; FECA § 316(b)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(2) ("[T]he term 'contribution or expenditure' includes a contribution or expenditure, as those terms are defined in [FECA], and also includes any direct or indirect payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money, or any services, or anything of value . . . to any candidate, campaign committee, or political party or organization, in connection with any election to any of the offices referred to in this section or for any applicable electioneering communication.") (emphasis added). The prohibition on electioneering communications only applies to the general treasury funds of national banks, corporations, and labor unions, or any other person using funds donated by these entities.

Like the original prohibition in section 441b, Section 203 of BCRA, is not an absolute ban on corporate and labor union spending on "electioneering communication." FECA expressly permits corporations and labor unions to create "separate segregated fund[s] to be utilized for political purposes." 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(2)(C). These segregated funds are known as political committees under the Act (or PACs). 2 U.S.C. § 431(4)(B) (A political committee is "any separate segregated fund established under the provisions of section 441b(b) of this title."). These segregated accounts are subject to the source and amount limitations contained in FECA. See, e.g., 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1)(C) (providing that no person shall make contributions "to any other political committee in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000"). To fund the segregated account, a corporation is permitted to solicit contributions from "its stockholders and their families and its executive or administrative personnel and their families." 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(4)(A)(i).[45] Likewise, in establishing their segregated funds, labor unions are allowed to solicit contributions to the fund from their members and their families. 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(4)(A)(ii). From these accounts, corporations and labor unions are permitted to make contributions to federal candidates and spend unlimited amounts of segregated funds on electioneering communications and independent expenditures, provided that federal funds are used to pay for these activities.

Snowe-Jeffords Provision

BCRA Section 203 provides an exception to certain types of nonprofit corporations from the requirement that corporations, labor unions, and national banks must use separately segregated funds[46] — and not general treasury funds — to pay for electioneering

[45] For membership organizations, cooperatives, or corporations without capital stock, solicitations of the membership are permitted to fund the segregated account. 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(4)(C).

[46] As discussed supra, FECA section 304(f)(2)(E) refers to a segregated bank account made up of contributions for electioneering communications from United States citizens, nationals, or permanent residents where all the names and addresses of all contributors who (continued...)

communications. However, this exception, commonly known as the "Snowe-Jeffords Provision" after its sponsors, was later, in effect, withdrawn by Section 204, known as the "Wellstone Amendment," see infra at 69; compare BCRA § 203; FECA § 316(c)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(c)(2) (Snowe-Jeffords Provision) with BCRA § 204; FECA § 316(c)(6)(a); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(c)(6)(A) (Wellstone Amendment).

The Snowe-Jeffords Provision permits nonprofit organizations to use their general treasury funds to pay for electioneering communications if they are incorporated under Section 501(c)(4) and/or Section 527(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code. This exception for nonprofit corporations is an expansion of the law as it existed prior to BCRA. While FECA did not provide an exception from its separately segregated fund requirement for nonprofit corporations, the Supreme Court in FEC v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc., 479 U.S. 238 (1986)("MCFL") had provided an as-applied exception for nonprofit corporations which satisfied certain criteria set forth by the Supreme Court.[47] Under BCRA, it is not necessary contribute an aggregate amount of $1,000 or more to the account is disclosed. Also as discussed supra, FECA section 304(f)(2)(F) refers to electioneering communications paid from a general treasury. If an electioneering communication is paid for with general treasury funds under section 304(f)(2)(F), then all contributors of more than $1,000 in a calendar year have to disclose their name and address. Hence, under the Snowe-Jeffords Provision, 501(c)(4) organizations and 527(e)(1) organizations, who are permitted to make electioneering communications with money contributed by individuals, must disclose the names and addresses of those individuals who contributed the funds to pay for the electioneering communication. BCRA § 203; FECA § 316(c)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(c)(2).

[47]That is, 1) whether the corporation is "formed for the express purpose of promoting political ideas, and cannot engage in business activities"; 2) "has no shareholders or other (continued...)

that a nonprofit corporation establish that it has met the three criteria of MCFL in order to use its general treasury funds to pay for electioneering communications; instead, it may do so under Snowe-Jeffords simply by virtue of being incorporated under Sections 501(c)(4) or 527(e)(1).

While a nonprofit corporation under Snowe-Jeffords is permitted to use general treasury funds for electioneering communications, it is important to note that these corporations are not permitted to use funds donated by a corporation, labor union, or national bank to purchase them. Under Snowe-Jeffords, a nonprofit corporation may only use funds donated by individuals to pay for electioneering communications. If a nonprofit corporation, for example, has accepted corporate contributions and mixed those contributions with general treasury funds that contained individual donations, the nonprofit corporation would not be permitted to use their general treasury funds to engage in electioneering communications.

Finally, although Snowe-Jeffords exempts nonprofit corporations from the separately segregated fund requirement, they are not similarly exempted from the disclosure requirements set forth in Section 201. Nonprofit corporations, like any other entity engaging in electioneering communications, must make public the names and addresses of all contributors who contributed over $1,000 to the account from which the corporation paid for the communications.

The Wellstone Amendment

Despite drafting and including the Snowe-Jeffords' provision in the Act, an amendment offered by Senator Paul Wellstone and adopted by the Senate effectively eviscerates the Snowe-Jeffords' Provision from the Act. The "Wellstone Amendment," codified in section 204 of BCRA states that the exemption created by the Snowe-Jeffords Provision for section 501(c)(4) corporations and section 527(e)(1) corporations is inapplicable "in the case of a targeted communication." BCRA § 204; FECA § 316(c)(6)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(c)(6)(A). The Wellstone Amendment describes a "targeted communication" as "an electioneering communication" that is "distributed from a television or radio broadcast station or provider of cable or satellite television service and, in the case of a communication which refers to a candidate for an office other than President or Vice President, is targeted to the relevant electorate." BCRA § 204; FECA § 316(c)(6)(B); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(c)(6)(B). The direct consequence of the Wellstone Amendment is that organizations organized under section 501(c)(4) and section 527(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, or those entities who have received funds from corporations, are not permitted to use their general treasury funds for electioneering communications.

The Wellstone Amendment was codified in a separate section of BCRA in order to preserve severability: hence, if the Court finds the inclusion of section 501(c)(4) organizations and section 527 organizations within the ban on electioneering communications to be unconstitutional, the Wellstone Amendment can be cleanly struck from the law and the original Snowe-Jeffords exception for these groups will be restored. See BCRA § 401 (discussing that BCRA is subject to severability).

* * *

To briefly summarize, section 201 provides two definitions of "electioneering communication," a primary one and a backup definition in the event a court finds the main definition unconstitutional. Section 203, in conjunction with section 204, prohibits corporations and unions from using general treasury funds to pay for an electioneering communication. Corporations and unions need to establish political action committees if they want to engage in electioneering communication.

c. Disclosure of Electioneering Communications: Section 201

Section 201 amends Section 304 of FECA, 2 U.S.C. § 434, by requiring disclosures related to electioneering communications. Section 201's disclosure requirements mandate the reporting of "disbursements" for the "direct costs of producing and airing electioneering communications" aggregating more than $10,000 during any calendar year. BCRA 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(1). The reports must be made to the Commission within 24 hours of each "disclosure date." Id. The statute defines "disclosure date" as the first time during the calendar year a person's electioneering communication disbursements exceed $10,000, and each subsequent aggregation of $10,000 in electioneering communication disbursements made in the same calendar year. BCRA § 201(a); FECA §

304(f)(4); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(4). "Disbursements" under Section 201 include executed contracts to make disbursements for electioneering communications. BCRA 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(5); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(5).[48]

The section requires the reports, made under penalty of perjury, to include the following information:

- the identities of the person making the disbursement, any person sharing or exercising direction or control over that person, and the custodian of the books and accounts of the person making the disbursement;
- the person's principal place of business, if not an individual;
- the amount of each disbursement over $200 during the statement's period and the identity of the person who received the disbursement;
- the elections to which the electioneering communications pertain and the names of the candidates identified in the communications, if known;
- if the disbursements are made from a segregated account funded solely by direct contributions by individuals for the purpose of making electioneering communication disbursements, the names and addresses of all persons who contributed over $1,000 to the account during the calendar year; and
- if the disbursements are made from a different source, the names and addresses

[48] The provision states, "For purposes of this subsection, a person shall be treated as having made a disbursement if the person has executed a contract to make the disbursement." BCRA 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(5); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(5).

of all contributors to that source who contributed over $1,000 during the calendar year.

d. Coordinated Communications as Contributions: Section 202

Section 202 of BCRA amends Section 315(a)(7) of FECA, 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(7) by adding the following language:

> if—
> (i) any person makes, or contracts to make, any disbursement for any electioneering communication . . .; and > (ii) such disbursement is coordinated with a candidate or an authorized committee of such candidate, a Federal, State, or local political party or committee thereof, or an agent or official of any such candidate, party, or committee; > such disbursement or contracting shall be treated as a contribution to the candidate supported by the electioneering communication or that candidate's party and as an expenditure by that candidate or that candidate's party

BCRA § 202; FECA § 315(a)(7)(C); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(C). Section 202 essentially makes clear the import of the definitions of "electioneering communication" and "coordination" in Sections 201 and 214; coordinated electioneering communications constitute contributions.

e. Reporting Requirements for Certain Independent Expenditures: Section 212

Section 212 amends Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. § 434) by adding certain disclosure requirements for independent expenditures.[49] The provision requires persons, including political committees, to report independent expenditures, or contracts to make such expenditures, aggregating $1,000 or more after the twentieth day before the date of an election.[50] BCRA § 212; FECA § 304(g)(1)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 434(g)(1)(A). These reports must be made within 24 hours of making the expenditure or the contract to make the expenditure. Id. Such reports must be supplemented within 24 hours of making additional expenditure contracts or expenditures aggregating an additional $1,000 toward the same election. BCRA § 212; FECA § 304(g)(1)(B); 2 U.S.C. § 434(g)(1)(B). For expenditure > an expenditure by a person-- > (A) expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate; and > (B) that is not made in concert or cooperation with or at the request or suggestion of such candidate, the candidate's authorized political committee, or their agents, or a political party committee or its agents.

[49] Section 211 defines "independent expenditure" as:

BCRA § 211; FECA § 301; 2 U.S.C. § 431(17).

[50] The reports must be filed with the FEC and must include "the name of each candidate whom an expenditure is intended to support or oppose," BCRA § 212; FECA § 304; 2 U.S.C. § 434(g)(3)(B), as well as the name and address of each > person who receives any disbursement during the reporting period in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $200 within the calendar year (or election cycle, in the case of an authorized committee of a candidate for Federal office), in connection with an independent expenditure by the reporting committee, together with the date, amount, and purpose of any such independent expenditure and a statement which indicates whether such independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate, as well as the name and office sought by such candidate, and a certification, under penalty of perjury, whether such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such committee contracts or expenditures made more than twenty days before an election, persons must also file reports but only after the expenditures aggregate to $10,000 or more and they have 48 hours in which to file their disclosure. BCRA § 212; FECA § 304(g)(2)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 434(g)(2)(A). These reports must also be supplemented whenever additional expenditure contracts or expenditures aggregate an additional $10,000 toward the same election. BCRA § 212; FECA § 304(g)(2)(B); 2 U.S.C. § 434(g)(2)(B).

f. Coordination with Candidates or Political Parties: Section 214

The Supreme Court has found treating coordinated expenditures as contributions constitutionally justifiable under the rationale of preventing circumvention. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 47 ("[C]ontribution ceilings . . . prevent attempts to circumvent [FECA] through prearranged or coordinated expenditures amounting to disguised contributions."). Section 214 makes changes to FECA's coordinated expenditure regime.

Section 214(a) amends Section 315(a)(7)(B) of FECA, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B), by adding the following provision:

> (ii) expenditures made by any person (other than a candidate or candidate's authorized committee) in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a national, State, or local committee of a political party, shall be considered to be contributions made to such party committee

BCRA § 214(a); FECA § 315(a)(7)(B)(ii); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(ii). This language is virtually identical to that in 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(i)[51], passed in 1976 as an amendment to FECA, which defines expenditures made in coordination with candidates.[52]

Section 214 also repeals the FEC's regulations "on coordinated communications paid for by persons other than candidates, authorized committees of candidates, and party committees," and requires the FEC to promulgate new regulations. BCRA § 214(b), (c). Congress instructed that the new regulations "shall not require agreement or formal collaboration to establish coordination." BCRA § 214(c); 2 U.S.C. § 441a note. Congress also instructed that the regulations should address

> (1) payments for the republication of campaign materials;
> (2) payments for the use of a common vendor;
> (3) payments for communications directed or made by persons who previously served as an employee of a candidate or a political party; and > (4) payments for communications made by a person after substantial discussion about the communication with a candidate or a political party.

Lastly, Section 214 amends Section 316(b)(2) of FECA, 2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2), to include within the meaning of "contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations," the definitions of "contribution or expenditure" found in Section 301

("Colorado II"), the Supreme Court considered the applicability of Section 441a(a)(7)(B)(i) to political party expenditures. Despite the fact that four Justices found the provision overbroad, Colorado II, 533 U.S. at 467 (Thomas, J., dissenting), the majority found that Section 441a(a)(7)(B)(i) applied to political party expenditures coordinated with candidates, id at 465.

[52] As presently codified, the provision states: "expenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate". 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(i).

of FECA, 2 U.S.C. § 431(8), (9). BCRA § 214(d).

3. Title III: Miscellaneous

a. Use of Contributed Amount for Certain Purposes: Section 301

Section 301 sets forth the permitted and prohibited uses of contributions. For example, a candidate can transfer contributions to political parties but cannot convert contributions to personal use. BCRA § 301; FECA § 313; 2 U.S.C. § 439a.

b. "The Millionaire Provisions": Sections 304, 316, & 319

In Sections 304, 316, and 319 of BCRA, Congress allowed opponents of self-financed candidates to raise money in larger increments and, in certain circumstances, to accept unlimited coordinated party expenditures. Specifically, the provisions state that if a self-financed candidate's "opposition personal fund amount"[53] exceeds a threshold amount,[54] then the candidate's opponent can raise funds through increased contribution limits. BCRA § 304(a); FECA § 315(i); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(i); BCRA § 319; FECA § 315A; 2 U.S.C. § 441a-1. Moreover, if the opposition personal fund amount is ten times the threshold amount in Senate [53]The "opposition personal funds amount" is not simply the amount of personal funds expended by a self-financed candidate. It also takes into account the gross receipts advantage of both candidate's authorized committees so that incumbents with large war chests will not be able to take advantage of the new law unless the self-financed candidate expends an even greater amount of personal funds. BCRA §§ 304(a)(ii); FECA § 315(i)(1)(D); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(i)(1)(D); BCRA § 316; FECA § 315(i)(1)(E); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(i)(1)(E); see also BCRA § 319(a); FECA § 315A(a)(2); 2 U.S.C § 441a-1(a)(2).

[54]The threshold amount in Senate races is equal to the sum of $150,000 plus $.04 multiplied by the voting age population in the candidate's state, BCRA § 304(a)(2); FECA § 315(i)(1)(B); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(i)(1)(B), while in House races the threshold amount is simply $350,000. BCRA § 319(a)(1); FECA § 315A(a)(1); 2 U.S.C. § 441a-1(a)(1).

races, or merely exceeds the $350,000 threshold for House races, the self-financed candidate's opponent can also be exempted from limits on coordinated party expenditures imposed by 2 U.S.C. § 441a(d). Any contributions or party expenditures under the increased limits is capped to the amount spent by the self-financed candidate: the enhanced contributions cannot exceed 110% and 100% of the opposition personal funds amount for Senate and House races respectively.

c. Lowest Unit Charged: Section 305

In the 1972 FECA legislation, Congress added the "lowest unit charge" provision to the Communications Act of 1934. The provision states that, for forty-five days before a primary or sixty days before a general election, the broadcast stations have to sell a qualified candidate the "lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period." 47 U.S.C. 315(b)(1). BCRA Section 305, however, denies a candidate the lowest unit charge for broadcast advertisements on radio and television unless the candidate "provides written certification to the broadcast station that the candidate (and any authorized committee of the candidate) shall not make any direct reference to another candidate for the same office" in any broadcast. BCRA § 305; FECA § 315(b); 47 U.S.C. § 315(b). The candidate can be exempted from this provision, and thus be eligible for the lowest unit charge without such a promise, if the candidate clearly identifies himself at the end of the broadcast and states that he approves of the broadcast. In a television broadcast, this message must include the candidate's image for at least four seconds. Id.

REV_00165410

d. Increased Limits for Contributions and Indexing of Limits: Section 307

Section 307(a)(1) increases the amount individuals can contribute to candidates per election from $1000 to $2000. BCRA § 307(a)(1); FECA § 315(a)(1)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(1)(A). It also changes the aggregate amount of contributions a donor can give to candidates and political committees (including parties) from $25,000 in a calendar year to $37,500 in a two-year period to candidates and $57,500 in a two-year period to political committees. BCRA § 307(b); FECA § 315(a)(3)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(3)(A). Congress also increased the limits to a national party committee by $5,000 and doubled the amount of money individuals can donate to a state party committee, so that individuals may now contribute no more than $25,000 per calendar year to a national party committee, no more than $10,000 per calendar year to a state committee, and no more than $5,000 per calendar year to a local committee. BCRA §§ 102, 307(a)(2); FECA § 315(a)(1)(B), (D); 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)(B), 441a(a)(1)(C), 441a(a)(1)(D). Finally, Congress also indexed all contributions for inflation, except for limits on contributions to state and local party committees. BCRA § 307(d); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(c).

e. Identification of Sponsors: Section 311

Section 311 requires that "whenever any person . . . makes a disbursement for an electioneering communication," the communication, if it was authorized by a candidate or the candidate's political committee, must clearly identify the candidate or the candidate's political committee. If the communication was not authorized by the candidate or the candidate's political committee, then the communication "shall clearly state the name and permanent street address, telephone number, or World Wide Web address of the person who paid for the communication and state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee." BCRA § 311; FECA § 318(a)(3); 2 U.S.C. § 441d(a)(3).

f. Prohibition of Donations by Minors: Section 318

In Section 318, Congress prohibited minors, defined as any children under eighteen years of age, from making donations, regardless of the amount, to candidates or political parties. BCRA § 318; FECA § 324; 2 U.S.C. § 441k.

4. Title V: Additional Disclosure Provisions

a. Public Access to Broadcasting Records: Section 504

In Section 504, Congress requires broadcast licensees to collect and disclose records of any "request to purchase broadcast time" that "is made by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate for public office" or that relates "to any political matter of national importance," including communications relating to "a legally qualified candidate," "any election to Federal office," and "a national legislative issue of public importance." BCRA § 504; FECA § 315(e)(1); 47 U.S.C. § 315(e)(1). The record must include whether the request to purchase was accepted or rejected; the rate charged for the broadcast; the date and time on which the communication aired; the class of time that is purchased; the name of the candidate to which the communication refers and the office to which the candidate is seeking election, the election to which the communication refers, or the issue to which the communication refers; in the case of a request on behalf of a candidate, the name of the candidate, the authorized committee, and the treasurer of the committee; and in the case of any other request, the name of the person purchasing the time, the name and contact information for such person, and a list of chief executive officers or members of the executive committee or board of directors. Id.

B. Findings Regarding BCRA's Disclosure Provisions

41. The NRA presents evidence that some people have been reluctant to give money to the organization or the NRA PVF, the NRA's PAC, fearing that such contributions would be publicly reported. LaPierre Decl. ¶ 62 [NRA App. at 24-25] ("Throughout the years, hundreds, if not thousands, of NRA members have told me that they do not wish to disclose their contributions to the NRA. . . . If . . . members are forced to disclose their identities, I firmly believe that many will not make contributions that trigger such disclosure."); Adkins Decl. ¶¶ 4-6 [NRA App. at 50] ("A conspicuous and disproportionate number of contributors" to the NRA PVF "contribute just below the $200 disclosure level."). Members who have expressed their desire to keep their contributions confidential have provided a variety of reasons. LaPierre Dep. at 306 ("A lot over the years have said, I donate to you, but gee, I just don't want my neighbors to know. I don't want my school board to know. I don't want my employer to know. . . . I might lose my job. I might not get my school board thing. I might have – I mean, they fear– I mean, when you have as much hate as people have put out on this issue, it's natural for people to fear repercussions."); Adkins Dep. at 15-19 (testifying that notes received from individuals refusing to provide information for disclosure to the FEC did not give the reasons for their objections, or just stated they did not wish to have the information disclosed to the FEC); id. at 21-23 (testifying that she had received 3 telephone calls in the previous five or six years from individuals who feared their employer would find out that they donated to the NRA PVF). The NRA does not know the amount those who did protest disclosure gave to the organization. LaPierre Dep at 309; LaPierre Cross at 91; Adkins Dep. at 23. Of the between five and 50 persons estimated to have voiced disclosure concerns to LaPierre in 2000, LaPierre believes "not a lot" of those persons gave the NRA more than $1,000 in 2000 "[b]ecause we don't . . . get a lot of contributions more than $1,000." LaPierre Dep. at 306-309. The average NRA donor donates approximately $30 per year. LaPierre Cross at 92. Beginning in 2003, the NRA's policy is to "pay for [their] television and broadcast programming exclusively out of funds provided by individual members." Id. at 93. Mr. LaPierre states that "NRA's position . . . . is that . . . it ought to be disclosed who is running those ads [run with funds from anonymous donors]. . . . [a]nd who pays for the ads." LaPierre Dep. at 294-95 [JDT Vol. 14].

42. Edward Monroe, Director of Political Affairs for the Associated Builders and Contractors ("ABC") and the Treasurer of ABC's PAC, testifies that he had been told that a number of ABC contributors had suffered substantial vandalism after their names were disclosed and that the contributors believed the vandalism was the result of labor unions learning of their contributions. Monroe Cross at 86. He also testified that two corporations refused his solicitations due to their "policy of not supporting [ABC] based on previous incidents. . . . [T]hey did not elaborate." Id. at 87. Some contributors to ABC's PAC "specifically donate" less than $200. Id. at 88. Monroe believes this practice is the result of the contributors' desire to prevent public disclosure of the contributors' names. Id. Two corporations declined Mr. Monroe's solicitations because of "previous incidents," but did not elaborate. Id. at 87. Monroe also "believe[s]" that some companies do not contribute because they "do not trust [ABC's] ability to keep . . . information confidential." Id. at 89.

43. Stephen Sandherr, Chief Executive Officer of Associated General Contractors of America ("AGC"), testifies in a deposition that between a dozen and two dozen members had expressed concerns to him about their contributions being publicly disclosed. Sandherr Dep. at 43-44. He believes that the number of members who share this concern is much higher but, because the AGC has made an effort to publicize the fact they do not disclose the names of contributors, concerned members do not feel the need to bring the issue up. Id. These members expressed two reasons for concern. Some were concerned that if their contributions were made known, "their local building trades would take offense and would threaten actions on the job site or would threaten to make life miserable for them." Id. at 45. Others were concerned that if their union became aware of their contribution, they would "cease bargaining over industry advancement funds," that local chapters depend on to support their activities. Id. at 46. The non-unionized members who expressed their concerns about disclosure to Sandherr did not express their reasons for wanting to remain anonymous. Id. at 48. No contributor to AGC's PAC ever told Sandherr that they planned to contribute less than $200 in order to prevent disclosure of its identity, and no contributor to the AGC's PAC ever reported being subjected to retaliation from unions for giving money to the PAC. Id. at 55-56.

44. Bruce Josten, Executive Vice President for Government Affairs, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, gave deposition testimony that some contributors to "Americans Working for a Real Change," a coalition established to respond to AFL-CIO issue advertisements, did not want to be publicly identified. Josten Dep. at 13-14, 27. The reason these entities gave for not wanting to be identified was that they feared becoming "targets or recipients of corporate campaigns or other types of what some would call union harassment activities." Id. at 28.

45. Mr. Romero, the ACLU's legislative director, attests that "[m]any ACLU members and contributors request explicit assurances that their membership will remain confidential and that their contributions will remain anonymous. The ACLU has consistently defended the First Amendment right of its members and donors to remain anonymous if they so choose." Declaration of A. Romero ¶ 5. Mr. Romero notes that "[o]nly 212 individuals contributed more than $1,000 to the organization. Id. ¶ 6.

46. A poll conducted by Mark Mellman and Richard Wirthlin, two reputable political pollsters, found that 61 percent of Americans want to know who is paying for political advertisements, while 24 percent say knowing such information does not matter to them. Mark Mellman & Richard Wirthlin, Research Findings of a Telephone Study Among 1300 Adult Americans (Sept. 23, 2002) at 20 [DEV 2-Tab 5].

47. At least one study has found that the public has a difficult time determining who is responsible for issue advertisements that identify candidates.

> In response to the question asking who paid for an ad, just over 60 percent of survey participants correctly attributed the candidate ads and the pure issue ads to their actual sponsors. Identification of the sponsors of the candidate-oriented issue ads was much more scattered, with most people (38 to 48 percent) assuming in each case that they came from candidates and fewest (9 to 18 percent) assuming that they were paid for by an interest group. These results, of course, suggest that the disclaimers that appear on these ads are almost completely ineffective.

Krasno & Sorauf Expert Report at 78-79 (summarizing results from David B. Magleby, Dictum Without Data: The Myth of Issue Advocacy and Party Building, available at http://www.byu.edu/outsidemonev/dictum/index.html).

48. The problem of determining the true sponsors of issue advertisements is not only experienced by the general public; politicians and political strategists also have difficultly determining the source of these commercials. For example, former Senator Dale Bumpers, relates that

> [o]ne of the most insidious things about soft money "issue ads" is that the ordinary viewer doesn't have a clue as to who paid for the ad. I first noticed this problem in 1996, when I saw several issue ads before it ever dawned on me that those ads were not being paid for by the candidate. . . . At first I just assumed that the ads were paid for by the opposing candidates' campaign funds, though I did think it was very strange that the opposing candidates' names were never mentioned. In those ads, everything is honed in on the candidate the ad is trying to defeat. At that time, I did not know that they were soft money spots.

Declaration of Senator Dale Bumpers ¶ 29 [DEV 6-Tab 10]. Democratic political consultant Terry S. Beckett testifies that > [t]he Republican Leadership Council ("RLC") also ran so-called "issue ads" on television in the 2000 Congressional campaign. . . . [Two of t]hese ads accuse [Republican Candidate Ric] Keller of acting "like a liberal." I found it [] ironic, not to mention unsettling, to learn of reports that the hundreds of thousands of dollars the RLC spent on these ads trying to defeat Mr. Keller were actually provided by the Florida sugar industry. . . . . And the fact that I, a general consultant in this same race with long high-level experience in Florida politics, was not aware until earlier this year of whose money was behind these ads strongly underlines the need for disclosure of this kind of stealth electioneering financed with corporate funds.

Declaration of Terry S. Beckett ("Beckett Decl.") ¶ 14 [DEV 6-Tab 3].[56] Similarly, political media consultant Raymond Strother comments that > one of the biggest problems that a candidate's media consultant now faces is the lack of disclosure associated with third parties running these ads. A few years ago, Jill Docking ran for the United States Senate against Sam Brownback in Kansas. . . . In the last two weeks of a very tight election, an unidentifiable group came in and poured a million dollars into the race. They ran television, radio, direct mail, and push polls throughout Kansas telling voters that Jill wasn't a Christian, and all we could find was a fax machine. We had no idea where the money came from. I have had similar experiences in other races as well. Without knowing who is funding the groups that run these ads, we are often unable to correct the distortions.

Declaration of Raymond D. Strother ¶ 15 [DEV 9-Tab 40]. Joe Lamson, campaign manager for Bill Yellowtail's 1996 campaign, testified that

> The Yellowtail campaign had trouble finding out who was running the 1996 Citizens for Reform ads in Montana [which portrayed Yellowtail in a negative light]. As I recall, a local television station pointed us to a group in New Orleans. That group said they didn't know anything, but gave us a telephone number in Oklahoma that turned out to be connected to the J.C. Watts campaign. I believe someone there then flipped us to a phone number in Washington, D.C., and we finally [56] The following is an audio transcript from one of these "Florida sugar industry"-sponsored advertisements:

> Ric Keller has become an embarrassment. He claims to be a conservative but got caught getting help from liberal Democrat Linda Chapin, and Keller's law firm coughed up campaign contributions for liberal Democrat Buddy McKay. Ric Keller even supported the Clinton-Gore billion dollar tax on food. Ric Keller, who proclaims to be a conservative but gets caught acting like a liberal. How embarrassing. How wrong. How Clinton.

> found Citizens for Reform. We later learned that Citizens for Reform was actually a front for Triad, a group that ran broadcast attack ads against many Democrats nationwide in the 1996 election cycle.

Declaration of Joe Lamson ¶12 [DEV 7-Tab 26]; see also Declaration of Larry LaRocco (former Member of Congress, stating he was never able to find the source of attack advertisements run against him in the 1994 campaign because none of the sponsoring organizations were registered with the FEC); Magleby Expert Report at 29 [DEV 4-Tab 8] (providing examples illustrating the point that "even candidates and their campaign managers are unable to ascertain who some of the groups running ads [in the 2000 campaign] were").

49. Krasno and Sorauf find that:

> Secrecy is one of the outstanding characteristics of issue advertisements, especially those financed by interest groups. As a result, we - and regulators - are hampered by a remarkable paucity of information about them. The media tracking data we have referred to throughout our report fill in some of the blanks, but many key factual questions remain unanswered or may only be answered after painstaking investigation. . . . This secrecy, by itself, creates enormous opportunities for wrongdoing, for favors to be exchanged between issue advocates and public officials. . . . Among its various advantages, disclosure is thought to combat corruption by illuminating the dark corners in which undue influence may be exerted far from public view. The idea is that politicians eager for popularity and votes will be loath to enter into situations that cast doubt on their probity; thus, the more these situations are revealed, the stronger the politician's impulse to avoid them. One of the ironies of this litigation is that many of BCRA's opponents are otherwise champions of disclosure. . . . The public's interest in revealing these transactions is countered by the private interest of many groups and donors to keep them secret. Thus, the ability to route money to groups for candidate-oriented issue ads without disclosure has attracted an increasing amount of money to this > activity. In the growing opaqueness of campaign financing, the opportunity for donors and officeholders to forge close relationships or strike deals without risk of detection increases, too.

Krasno & Sorauf Expert Report at 73-75 [DEV 1-Tab 2 at 146]. According to Plaintiffs' expert Sidney Milkis, a professor at the University of Virginia, "the names of these [issue advertising] groups did little to tell viewers who the sponsors of these messages were; indeed, in some cases they were misleading." Milkis Decl. ¶ 49.

50. Defendants' Expert Report, produced by Professor David Magleby, finds that > [t]he current system places an unreasonable burden on voters to ascertain who is attempting to persuade them in an election. Our focus groups and survey data from 2000 show that to voters, party and interest group electioneering advertisements are indistinguishable from candidate advertisements. (See Table 2.) Even the candidates and their campaign managers are unable to ascertain who some of the groups running ads were. . . . And in the CSED national survey, I found that respondents were often confused as to whether party ads were paid for by candidates or parties. More than 40 percent of the time, the respondents thought the party ads were paid for by a candidate. . . . Voters, when asked, have consistently indicated that they would like to know who it is that is conducting electioneering. In 2000 voters in Montana faced a competitive U.S. Senate and a competitive U.S. House race. A late October Montana State University-Billings Poll found that, "78 percent of the survey respondents reported that it was 'very' or 'somewhat important' for them to know who 'pays for or sponsors a political ad.'" Our focus group participants in 2000 had very similar views on the question of the importance of their knowing who is paying for or sponsoring an ad. More than four-fifths (81%) said it was very or somewhat important to know the identity of the sponsor. In the national Knowledge Networks Survey in 2000, 78 percent said the same thing.

David B. Magleby, Report Concerning Interest Group Electioneering Advocacy and Party Soft Money Activity, at 29-30 [DEV 4-Tab 8].

REV_00165436

51. The Annenberg Public Policy Center finds that

> [b]ecause issue ads are not federally regulated, sponsors are not subject to disclosure requirements. As a result, who paid for an ad may not be apparent to viewers when they see it. Some organizations do identify themselves in the course of an advertisement, but their names may be unfamiliar to viewers and/or deliberately vague. For example, "Citizens for Better Medicare" is not a grass-roots generated group of citizens, but an arm of the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers Association (PhRMA).

Annenberg Report 2001 at 18; see also id. at 3 (commenting that "[t]racking spending on issue advocacy is far from an exact science" because of the lack of disclosure). One of the conclusions the Center has reached after seven years of study is that "[i]ssue advocacy masks the identity of some key players and by so doing, it deprives citizens of information about source of messages which research tells us is a vital part of assessing message credibility." Id. at 2.

52. A prominent example of an organization running advertisements that influenced a federal election but were able to skirt FECA's disclosure provisions is the "Republicans for Clean Air" campaign. The issue advocacy campaign sponsored by Republicans for Clean Air during the 2000 Republican primary highlights how groups can use candidate-centered issue advocacy to avoid FECA's disclosure requirements. Defendants' experts Krasno and Sorauf provided uncontroverted testimony that:

> [a]mong the mysterious groups sponsoring issue ads or the mysterious donors funding various organizations–all without making information known to the public–the example of "Republicans for Clean Air" stands > out. This group sponsored ads praising then-Governor Bush and criticizing Senator McCain before the 2000 Republican presidential primaries in three states. Eventually, after the first of these primaries (South Carolina's) reporters uncovered that Republicans for Clean Air consisted of two brothers, Charles and Sam Wyly, long-time friends and supporters of Governor Bush. Charles Wyly, in fact, was an authorized fundraiser for the Bush campaign. . . . According to press estimates, the Wylys spent $25 million on their ads for Governor Bush . . . . When the Wylys' involvement was later uncovered during the New York primary, the news qualified as a small bombshell and led to a wave of publicity critical of the brothers and the Bush campaign, which in turn distanced itself from "Republicans for Clean Air." . . . In sum, we have a major campaign conducted in secrecy during a key part of the 2000 Republican primary campaign, and a marked change in the level of scrutiny once its sponsors became known. Much as we applaud the ingenuity of the reporters who eventually broke the story, we strongly believe that there is a compelling governmental interest in making these facts known to all from the start.

Krasno and Sorauf Report at 75-76 (footnotes omitted) [DEV 1-Tab 2]; see also FEC MUR 4982, Statement of Reasons, Comm'rs Thomas and McDonald, April 2002, INT 003684 [DEV 133-Tab 1] ("The week before the 'Super Tuesday' primaries, a $2 million advertising campaign praising presidential candidate George W. Bush and attacking his opponent, John McCain, ran in the important primary states of California, New York, and Ohio. The ads stated that they were paid for by a group calling itself 'Republicans for Clean Air.' In actuality, the ads apparently were financed mostly by two brothers, both of whom were strong financial supporters of then Governor Bush and one of whom was an authorized fundraiser for the Bush presidential campaign. At issue in MUR 4982 was whether there should have been some disclosure to the voting public of who really paid for the ads; whether the ads were coordinated with any agent of the Bush campaign and, thus, should be viewed as an in-kind contribution to the Bush campaign, and finally, whether the advertising effort should have registered with the Federal Election Commission as a 'political committee' subject to the reporting requirements and funding restraints."). Even Plaintiffs' expert agrees that the candidate-centered issue advocacy of the Republicans for Clean Air highlights the fact that this technique can be used to influence federal elections without complying with FECA's disclosure provisions. La Raja Decl. ¶ 25(b) ("We could not determine the sponsors of this ad until reporters in Washington discovered that brothers from Texas, who strongly supported George W. Bush, paid for the advertisements using a P.O. Box in Herndon, Virginia. . . . This direct personal experience trying to monitor outside electoral activity revealed to me the potential difficulties of identifying the source of interest group campaign activities, including issue ads.").

IV. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

As part of the per curiam opinion, the Court resolves the Paul Plaintiffs' discrete claims and most of the new disclosure provisions of BCRA.

A. Paul Plaintiffs' Press Clause Challenge

Paul Plaintiffs[57] focus their complaint on the guarantees of free press embodied in the

REV_00165439

First Amendment. Paul Pls.' Br. at 8. Specifically, Paul Plaintiffs contend that BCRA imposes certain restrictions on their "press" activities, which violate the basic tenets on which the freedom of the press rests.[58] See id. at 10, 13-18. In doing so, Plaintiffs advance a new, if not novel, challenge – a tack that has not been used in the campaign finance realm. See id. at 11 ("To date, however, [campaign finance challengers] that are engaged in non-exempt press activities have not invoked the freedom of the press in their numerous challenges to the constitutionality of federal campaign finance regulations . . . .").[59] While the Court recognizes the import of Paul Plaintiffs' innovative legal theory, it finds their arguments unpersuasive.

57
Citizens United, Citizens United Political Victory Fund, Michael Cloud, and Carla Howell.

[58] According to Paul Plaintiffs, BCRA imposes unconstitutional licensing restrictions, economically burdensome regulations, editorial control, and prior restraint on their "press" activities.

[59] As discussed at oral argument:

> MR. TITUS: Now, if that's true of the institutional press, that a prior restraint has to be tested by such a high standard, all the more true for the Paul plaintiffs who in this particular case are indicating to you, Your Honors, that what they are engaged in are press activities, they are entitled to the same immunity from prior restraint as the institutional press.
> JUDGE LEON: Is that a novel theory?
> MR. TITUS: No, I don't believe it's a novel theory. I don't think it has ever been pressed.
> JUDGE LEON: Do you have any Supreme Court cases that support it or Circuit cases?
> MR. TITUS: In financial campaign law cases, no. No one has argued this claim in any campaign finance case that I know of.

Tr. at 340-41 (Titus).

REV_00165440

In essence, Paul Plaintiffs characterize their activities (for example, candidate press releases, broadcast and radio advertisements, and campaign literature)[60] as falling under the constitutional protections afforded to the press. The freedom of the press, as Plaintiffs contend, "was never designed as a special privilege of the institutional media," Paul Pls.' Br. at 11; rather it extends to "every freeman," see id. at 12 (citing Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 713-14 (1931)). They argue further that while other First Amendment rights – of speech and association, for example – may be limited by a compelling governmental interest, the freedom of the press is insulated from such limitations.[61] Id. at 9 n.3. Under Plaintiffs' theory, the same governmental interests that survive a constitutional challenge in Buckley v.

[60] The vast majority of activities cited by Paul Plaintiffs fall well-outside the scope of BCRA's prohibition on "electioneering communications." See BCRA § 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(3)(A); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(A) (not applying to press releases or campaign literature). Moreover, Paul Plaintiffs bring a facial challenge to the constitutionality of this statute, and have clearly not met their burden of demonstrating that the law is substantially overbroad.

[61] Paul Plaintiffs fail to provide the Court with a standard to apply where the government obstructs "press" activities, nor do they delineate the additional, substantive rights provided under the First Amendment Freedom of the Press Clause. Plaintiffs contend that "[t]he freedom of the press provides guarantees that are distinct from, and significantly greater than, the guarantees of free speech and association, and of equal protection . . . ." Paul Pls.' Br. at 9 n.3. Moreover, they note that "[w]hile the compelling government interest test has been applied to free speech, association, and equal protection claims, it is not applicable to the freedom of the press." Id. Plaintiffs do not, however, explicitly state instances where the freedom of the press has been found to be superior to the other guarantees provided under the First Amendment. Nonetheless, Paul Plaintiffs ask – although not explicitly – that the Court review any government interference with "press" activities under a more stringent standard than "exacting scrutiny," which would normally be applied where a law burdens core political speech. First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 786 (1978) (holding that state restrictions on political speech are subject to "exacting scrutiny"). Without guidance from the parties, the Court, therefore, assumes that Paul Plaintiffs request the application of a standard on par with strict scrutiny.

Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), may not be used to justify any limitation on the general press, which includes all persons and organizations disseminating information. See id. at 28 ("[T]he Paul Plaintiffs urge this Court not to follow Buckley v. Valeo here, because the press guarantee lays down a different and more stringent standard . . . .").

In order for Paul Plaintiffs' arguments to prevail, however, they must demonstrate that the freedom of the press provides rights superior to those under the Speech and Association Clauses of the First Amendment. If Paul Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that their claims warrant separate and unique guarantees – guarantees that are not provided under the other clauses of the First Amendment – then there is no need for the Court to treat their grievances separately.

The Supreme Court has not explicitly stated whether the freedom of the press affords greater protections than that of speech or association; two leading First Amendment scholars have observed, however, that the Press Clause provides no greater rights. 2 Rodney A. Smolla, Smolla and Nimmer on Freedom of Speech, § 22:10 (2002) ("Does the Press Clause today have jurisdictional significance distinct from the Speech Clause? For the most part, the answer appears to be 'no.'"); see also Laurence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law § 12-1, at 785 n.2 (2d ed. 1988).[62] Part of the problem, as Professor Smolla has observed, is that "in modern First Amendment jurisprudence, the Press Clause has largely been subsumed into the Speech Clause." Id. at § 22:6.

[62] Professor Tribe, in his chapter on "Rights of Communication and Expression," does not allude to any greater or distinct rights afforded by the First Amendment Freedom of the Press Clause. In fact, Tribe states: "Throughout this chapter, 'freedom of speech' will be employed as shorthand for the entire collection of freedoms (other than those pertaining (continued...)

The Supreme Court's treatment of the First Amendment in First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765 (1978), illustrates this point. In Bellotti, the Supreme Court considered a Massachusetts criminal statute that prohibited corporations "from making contributions or expenditures for the purpose of influencing or affecting the vote on any question submitted to the voters." Bellotti, 435 U.S. at 768 (internal quotations and ellipses omitted). The plaintiff-bank wanted to spend money to publicize its views on a proposed state constitutional amendment that was to be submitted to the voters as a ballot question in an upcoming election. Id. at 769. After being informed that the state Attorney General would enforce the statute, the bank sought declaratory relief. Id. The case was not exclusively framed around the Press Clause, see id. at 779, yet the Supreme Court engaged in a careful discussion of the freedom of the press and entertained whether media corporations enjoy superior rights as compared to those of general corporations. Id. at 781. The majority deemed that the "institutional" media "does not have a monopoly on the First Amendment," id. at 781-82, but went on to consider whether the state could "show[] a subordinating interest which is compelling" to justify the statute's impact on First Amendment rights, id. at 786. The Supreme Court then determined that the state's concern failed to meet the compelling interest test.[63] Id. at 788-91.

Bellotti is significant because, despite considering rights under the Press Clause, the Supreme Court nonetheless applied the compelling interest test. Id. In other words, in the context of an election law statute, as it applied to a non-media corporation, the Supreme Court treated the Press and Speech Clauses as indistinct.[64] What is more, the Supreme Court alluded to no rights under the Press Clause that are superior to or different than those under the other clauses of the First Amendment.

Even if the Court were to find that the Press Clause provides greater or different protections than the other provisions of the First Amendment, Plaintiffs' arguments must fail.[65] As noted above, Paul Plaintiffs have failed to identify any case that has applied

[63] The Supreme Court distinguished the statute in Bellotti from traditional campaign finance laws, which involve expenditures directed towards or otherwise contributed to candidates. Bellotti, 435 U.S. at 790. "Referenda are held on issues, not candidates for public office. The risk of corruption perceived in cases involved in candidate elections simply is not present in a popular vote on a public issue." Id. (citation omitted).

[64] The Supreme Court did not, however, consider whether the media exemption under most campaign finance laws, see, e.g., BCRA § 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(3)(B)(i); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(B)(i), violates the First Amendment or the Equal Protection Clause. That is, by exempting the "institutional" media, do such provisions unfavorably discriminate against the rights of the general press? The Supreme Court settled this question in Austin v. Michigan State Chamber of Commerce, 494 U.S. 652 (1990), when it simply stated: "Although the [institutional] press' unique societal role may not entitle the [institutional] press to greater protection under the Constitution, it does provide a compelling reason for the State to exempt media corporations from the scope of political expenditure limitations." Austin, 494 U.S. at 668.

"press" guarantees in the campaign finance context. Tr. at 341 (Titus); see also Paul Pls.' Br. at 11. To hold for Paul Plaintiffs would be to invite a new and wholly unsupported theory of First Amendment jurisprudence; litigants could besiege the courts with a host of challenges to laws previously upheld by the Supreme Court on First Amendment grounds, merely by characterizing themselves in their complaints as members of the "press" because their purpose is to disseminate information to the public. As Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Associate Justice Antonin Scalia observed in McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334 (1995), "of course, if every partisan cry of 'freedom of the press' were accepted as valid, our Constitution would be unrecognizable." McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 373 (Scalia, J., dissenting).[66] this distinction compelled Chief Justice Burger to write his concurring opinion in Bellotti. See Bellotti, 435 U.S. at 796 (Burger, C.J., concurring) (noting the "difficulty, and perhaps impossibility, of distinguishing, either as a matter of fact or constitutional law, media corporations from [non-media] corporations"). Nonetheless, this Court refuses to resolve Plaintiffs' Press Clause claims in this context.

[66] In McIntyre, the Supreme Court applied the Speech Clause to invalidate an Ohio statute that prohibited the anonymous distribution of campaign literature on general, referendum questions. McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 336-37, 349-51. Justice Thomas concurred in judgment, but "would [have applied] . . . a different methodology to [the] case." Id. at 358-59. According to Justice Thomas, the "practices and beliefs held by the Founders" provided for an author's right to publish anonymously under the Press and Speech Clauses. Id. at 360. Justice Scalia, with whom Chief Justice Rehnquist joined, was not persuaded by Justice Thomas's arguments. Id. at 373. As Justice Scalia observed, "not every restriction upon expression that did not exist in 1791 or in 1868 is ipso facto unconstitutional, or else modern election laws such as those involved in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) would be prohibited, as would . . . modern antinoise regulation . . . , and modern parade permitting regulation." Id. (citations omitted).

Paul Plaintiffs can cite no precedent in support of their claims. Since the Supreme Court has not affirmatively provided superior rights under the Press Clause, and has suggested that such claims fall under the general First Amendment compelling interest test, this Court rejects the argument that Paul Plaintiffs' claims under the Press Clause warrant a higher level of constitutional protection.[67] Therefore, this Court will apply the same scrutiny to all First Amendment claims, whether presented under the Speech or Press Clauses, and subsumes all of Paul Plaintiffs' Title I, and essentially all of their Title II, arguments into the First Amendment challenges advanced by the other litigants in this case.[68]

B. BCRA's Disclosure Provisions

Section 201: Disclosure Provisions

1. Introduction

With one exception, the Court also finds the disclosure provisions relating to "electioneering communications" constitutional. The factual record demonstrates that the [67] Given this conclusion, the Court holds that there is no reason to remand the Paul Plaintiffs' separate challenges to FECA's pre-BCRA provisions under this theory to a single-judge court. See Paul Pls.' Compl. ¶ 1 ("This is an action for declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to certain provisions of [BCRA] as it amends the [FECA], as well as certain related provisions of the FECA . . . on the grounds that these integrally related provisions deprive the Plaintiffs of the Freedom of the Press in violation of the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.") (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

[68] Paul Plaintiffs briefly challenge the constitutionality of section 301 of Title III in their pleadings – most notably and independent of their Press argument, that section 301 discriminates against non-incumbent office holders by placing limitations on personal use expenditures. Paul Pls.' Br. at 25. However, the Court is not able to discern any basis for these arguments in their Amended Complaint. Accordingly, the Court does not address this issue.

abuse of the present law not only permits corporations and labor unions to fund broadcast advertisements designed to influence federal elections, but permits them to do so while concealing their identities from the public. BCRA's disclosure provisions require these organizations to reveal their identities so that the public is able to identify the source of the funding behind broadcast advertisements influencing certain elections. Plaintiffs' disdain for BCRA's disclosure provisions is nothing short of surprising. Plaintiffs challenge BCRA's restrictions on electioneering communications on the premise that they should be permitted to spend corporate and labor union general treasury funds in the sixty days before the federal elections on broadcast advertisements, which refer to federal candidates, because speech needs to be "uninhibited, robust, and wide-open." McConnell Br. at 44 (quoting New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964)). Curiously, Plaintiffs want to preserve the ability to run these advertisements while hiding behind dubious and misleading names like: "The Coalition–Americans Working for Real Change" (funded by business organizations opposed to organized labor), "Citizens for Better Medicare" (funded by the pharmaceutical industry), "Republicans for Clean Air" (funded by brothers Charles and Sam Wyly). Findings ¶¶ 44, 51, 52. Given these tactics, Plaintiffs never satisfactorily answer the question of how "uninhibited, robust, and wide-open" speech can occur when organizations hide themselves from the scrutiny of the voting public. McConnell Br. at 44. Plaintiffs' argument for striking down BCRA's disclosure provisions does not reinforce the precious First Amendment values that Plaintiffs argue are trampled by BCRA, but ignores the competing First Amendment interests of individual citizens seeking to make informed choices in the political marketplace. As a result, the Court finds Section 201 facially constitutional, with the exception of one subsection which the Court determines to be broader than necessary to achieve the legitimate governmental interest at stake.

2. Discussion

The provision's disclosure requirements are challenged by the McConnell, AFL-CIO, Chamber of Commerce, NAB, NRA, and Paul Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' challenge to Section 201's disclosure provisions focuses on two aspects of the law: (1) its requirement of disclosure prior to the airing of electioneering communications; and (2) its requirement that disbursers disclose the names of contributors who gave over $1,000 to the disbursing fund. The Court addresses each in turn.

a. Prior Disclosure

The McConnell Plaintiffs, AFL-CIO, Chamber of Commerce, and NAM object to Section 201's disclosure requirements on the ground that they mandate disclosure of not only actually aired electioneering communications, but also contracts to make such communications. See McConnell Br. at 56 n.22; AFL-CIO Br. at 14-17; Chamber/NAM at 20 n.13. This advance disclosure, Plaintiffs argue, "serve[s] no governmental interest and will chill the exercise of free speech by forcing groups . . . to disclose ongoing and confidential political strategies and decision-making processes, and by giving adversaries the opportunity to try to thwart broadcasts or counter them with their own messages." AFL-CIO

REV_00165448

Br. at 16.[69]

Defendants argue that the then-pending (and now final) regulations interpret the notice requirements as not mandating disclosure until after the advertisements have been publicly distributed. Gov't Opp'n at 111. The content of the regulations, argue Defendants, "moot plaintiffs' concerns, [make] plaintiffs' claims to injury . . . wholly speculative[,] and their challenge to this aspect of BCRA's disclosure provisions is therefore unfit for judicial resolution." Id.

[69] McConnell Plaintiffs, the Chamber of Commerce and NAM make a passing suggestion that Section 201 might constitute a "prior restraint" in violation of the First Amendment. McConnell Plaintiffs Br. at 55-56 ("But if this Court agrees that the electioneering communications provisions cannot stand, the attendant disclosure provisions should likewise fall, because the disclosure provisions constitute a regulation of–and in some cases a prior restraint on– speech that the government may not regulate in the first place."); Chamber/NAM Br. at 20 n.13 ("The timing of the BCRA's electioneering communication disclosure requirement is an unconstitutional prior restraint.").

This argument cannot be squared with the Supreme Court's definition of "prior restraint." See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 795 n.5 (1989) ("[T]he regulations we have found invalid as prior restraints have 'had this in common: they gave public officials the power to deny use of a forum in advance of actual expression.'") (citing Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 553 (1975)); see also Blue Canary Corp. v. City of Milwaukee, 251 F.3d 1121, 1123 (7th Cir. 2001) ("By 'prior restraint' . . . modern courts . . . mean censorship--an effort by administrative methods to prevent the dissemination of ideas or opinions thought dangerous or offensive. The censor's concern is with the content of speech, and the ordinary judicial safeguards are lacking. 'Prior restraints' that do not have this character are reviewed under the much more permissive standard applicable to restrictions merely on the time, place, or manner of expression.") (citations omitted); Wisconsin Realtors Ass'n v. Ponto, No. 02-C-424-C, 2002 WL 31758663 * 12 (W.D. Wis. Dec. 11, 2002) (subjecting Wisconsin statute's prior reporting requirements to "time, place, or manner of expression" analysis); FEC Opp'n at 112.

Given the paucity of Plaintiffs' briefing on this matter and the precedent cited above, this Court believes further analysis of "prior restraint" in this context is not warranted.

REV_00165449

The Court cannot agree that Plaintiffs' challenge to the disclosure requirements in Section 201 is not ripe for review. Unlike the situation confronted by the Court in examining the disclosure requirement of Section 212, discussed infra at 140, the regulations promulgated for Section 201 do not eliminate Plaintiffs' prior disclosure concerns. The regulations, despite the FEC's explanation of the provision,[70] appear to still require prior disclosure of electioneering communications that have not yet aired. Specifically, the definition of "disclosure date" leaves uncertain what must be disclosed after the airing of an electioneering communication when the disburser has executed contracts for electioneering communications aggregating over $10,000.[71] The regulations suggest that if a person has

[70] In issuing the final regulations, the FEC noted that

> All of the commenters who addressed this issue . . . advocated adopting a final rule that would define ''disclosure date'' as the date of the public distribution of the electioneering communication. They argued that there is no electioneering communication, and therefore no reporting requirement, until the communication is actually publicly distributed. . . .
> This [adopted definition of disclosure] date reflects the Commission's concerns that there are legal and practical issues associated with compelling disclosure of potential electioneering communications before they are finalized and publicly distributed, and premature disclosure may require reporting entities to divulge confidential strategic and political information about their possible future activities.

Explanation and Justification of 11 C.F.R. 104.20, Reporting Electioneering Communications, 68 Fed. Reg. at 404, 409 (Jan. 3, 2003).

[71] The regulations provide in part:

(1) Disclosure date means:

> (i) The first date on which an electioneering communication is publicly distributed provided that the person making the electioneering communication has made one or more disbursements, or has executed one or more contracts to make disbursements, for the direct costs of producing or airing one or more executed $10,000 in electioneering communications contracts, 24 hours after the first such communication is aired, the disburser must make a disclosure encompassing all of the electioneering communications under the contract(s). The Court notes that its jurisdiction does not extend to the FEC's BCRA regulations, see BCRA § 403 (providing this Court with jurisdiction to hear challenges to "the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act"), and therefore it makes no determination on their validity or proper construction. However, given the uncertainty it finds with regard to the scope of the regulations, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs' challenge is not ripe.[72] "[T]he extent of the chill upon first amendment rights induced by vague or overbroad statutes is the most significant factor in determining whether an otherwise premature or abstract facial attack . . . is ripe for decision." Martin Tractor Co. v. FEC, 627 F.2d 375, 384 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

> electioneering communications aggregating in excess of $10,000; or > (ii) Any other date during the same calendar year on which an electioneering communication is publicly distributed provided that the person making the electioneering communication has made one or more disbursements, or has executed one or more contracts to make disbursements, for the direct costs of producing or airing one or more electioneering communications aggregating in excess of $10,000 since the most recent disclosure date during such calendar year.

BCRA Reporting; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures; Final Rules, 68 Fed. Reg. 404, 419 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 104.20) (emphasis added).

[72] In analyzing Section 212, infra at 140, the Court finds that the FEC's final regulations completely and unequivocally address Plaintiffs' concerns and therefore renders their challenge to that provision unripe for adjudication at this time. In the analysis of Section 214(c), infra at 155, the Court finds that the regulations related to Section 214, promulgated after briefing and oral argument in this case, have affected the contours of the dispute between the parties to such an extent that the challenge is not ripe for review.

REV_00165451

Where other cases have found facial First Amendment challenges ripe for review, "either the activities in which the complainants wished to (or had) engaged or the enforcing authority's particular intent to enforce the statute, or both, were clear enough to show the adversarial posture assumed by the parties and the contours of their dispute." Id. at 387. Here, Plaintiffs have clearly engaged in "electioneering communications" in the past, and the FEC regulations promulgated on January 3, 2003, indicate that the agency intends to enforce BCRA Section 201, including its "contracts" provision. Given these facts, the Court finds that Plaintiffs "have alleged an actual and well-founded fear that the law will be enforced against them," which threatens the danger of "self-censorship; a harm that can be realized even without an actual prosecution." Virginia v. Am. Booksellers Ass'n, 484 U.S. 383, 393 (1988).[73]

[73] The Court notes that arguments could be made that the FEC's regulations do render Plaintiffs' challenge unripe. For example, under the regulations, to be an "electioneering communication" the broadcast must be "publicly distributed within 60 days before a general election." BCRA, FCC Database on Electioneering Communications; Final Rules, 67 Fed. Reg. 65190, 65210 (Oct. 23, 2002) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 100.29(a)(2)). Therefore, it could be argued that a broadcast is not an "electioneering communication" until it is aired, and therefore contracts to make broadcasts are not contracts to make electioneering communications unless and until the broadcasts have been publicly disseminated.

This reasoning leads to the conclusion that one cannot have $10,000 in electioneering communications contracts to disclose until $10,000 worth of advertisements have been publicly disseminated. However, as this analysis demonstrates, such a conclusion is not unequivocally apparent, and therefore could lead to the chilling of First Amendment rights. Again, had the FEC promulgated regulations which clearly addressed this issue as it did for Section 212, the Court's ripeness determination for Section 201 would likely have been different. Given the possibility of different interpretations of the regulations, the chilling effect of that uncertainty, and the fact this Court lacks jurisdiction to rule on the regulations, (continued...)

Analysis of Section 201 commences with the guidance that disclosure provisions "in most applications appear to be the least restrictive means of curbing the evils of campaign ignorance and corruption." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 68. However, disclosure provisions are subject to exacting scrutiny analysis "because compelled disclosure has the potential for substantially infringing the exercise of First Amendment rights." Id. at 66. The Supreme Court has found three categories of "governmental interests sufficiently important to outweigh the possibility of infringement." Id. The Supreme Court stated:

> First, disclosure provides the electorate with information as to where political campaign money comes from and how it is spent by the candidate in order to aid the voters in evaluating those who seek federal office. It allows voters to place each candidate in the political spectrum more precisely than is often possible solely on the basis of party labels and campaign speeches. The sources of a candidate's financial support also alert the voter to the interests to which a candidate is most likely to be responsive and thus facilitate predictions of future performance in office.
> Second, disclosure requirements deter actual corruption and avoid the appearance of corruption by exposing large contributions and expenditures to the light of publicity. This exposure may discourage those who would use money for improper purposes either before or after the election. A public armed with information about a candidate's most generous supporters is better able to detect any post-election special favors that may be given in return . . . .
>
> Third, and not least significant, recordkeeping, reporting, and disclosure requirements are an essential means of gathering the data necessary to detect violations of the contribution limitations described above.

Id. at 66-68 (citations omitted). Buckley upheld the constitutionality of Section 434(e) of FECA, which required disclosure of independent expenditures, although the Supreme Court did limit the provision to only those expenditures used for "communications that expressly advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate." Id. at 80. The provision was found to be "part of Congress' effort to achieve total disclosure . . . in order to insure that the voters are fully informed and to achieve through publicity the maximum deterrence to corruption and undue influence as possible." Id. at 76 (footnote and quotation marks omitted). The Supreme Court deemed the measure "responsive to the legitimate fear that efforts would be made, as they had been in the past, to avoid the disclosure requirements by routing financial support of candidates through avenues not explicitly covered by the general provisions of FECA." Id. at 76 (footnote omitted). The Supreme Court also determined that > it is not fatal that [section] 434(e) encompasses purely independent expenditures uncoordinated with a particular candidate or his agent. The corruption potential of these expenditures may be significantly different, but the informational interest can be as strong as it is in coordinated spending, for disclosure helps voters to define more of the candidates' constituencies.

Buckley, 424 U.S. at 81.

Addressing Plaintiffs' prior disclosure concerns, Defendant FEC maintains that even with the "contracts" language, Section 201 is constitutional because it "does not prevent anyone from speaking," and "[t]he reports themselves would not have to reveal the specific content of the advertisements, yet they would perform an important function in informing the public about various candidates' supporters before election day." FEC Opp'n at 112 (emphasis in original). Although the Court agrees that the function cited is a substantial one, see Buckley, 424 U.S. at 67 ("[F]ull disclosure during an election campaign tends to prevent the corrupt use of money to affect elections.") (citation and quotation marks omitted), the FEC does not explain how this goal is any less served by requiring disclosures only after the expenditures for electioneering communications have been publicly disseminated. Information concerning contracts that have not been performed, and may never be performed, may lead to confusion and an unclear record upon which the public will evaluate the forces operating in the political marketplace. By limiting disclosures to expenditures actually made, the government's legitimate interest is served without the constitutional and practical shortcomings implicated by requiring prior disclosures. This is so because Section 201 requires disclosure within 24 hours of the disbursement.[74] The Court finds that Section 201,

REV_00165454

[74] The Court does not address the question of whether or not the 24-hour disclosure deadline included in Section 201 is constitutional, as this provision was not challenged nor its constitutionality briefed by Plaintiffs and consequently not responded to by Defendants. See McConnell Plaintiffs Br. at 56 n.22; AFL-CIO Br. at 14-17; ACLU Br. at 17-19; Chamber/NAM Br. at 18-20; NRA Br. at 48-50; FEC Opp'n at 112 n.116 ("In Citizens for Responsible Gov't State Political Action Comm. . . the court invalidated a 24-hour notice requirement because it believed 'such immediate notice' was unduly burdensome– claim [sic] not raised by plaintiffs here . . . .") by including subsection 5 of Section 201, BCRA § 201(a); FECA § 304(f)(5); 2. U.S.C. § 434(f)(5), which equates contracts to make disbursements with actual disbursements requiring disclosure of contracts to make electioneering communications prior to their public dissemination, lacks a "relevant correlation" or "substantial relation," Buckley, 424 U.S. at 64, to a legitimate governmental interest.

This constitutional flaw, however, does not render Section 201 unconstitutional in its entirety. BCRA provides that "[i]f any provision of this Act . . . or the application of a provision . . . to any person or circumstance[] is held to be unconstitutional, the remainder of this Act . . . and the application of the provisions . . . to any person or circumstance, shall not be affected by the holding." (1983); Buckley, 424 U.S. at 108-09 (finding that unconstitutional provisions did not render all of Subtitle H of FECA unconstitutional); Carlin Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 837 F.2d 546, 560-61 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding that "the words 'or indecent' are separable so as to permit them to be struck and the statute otherwise upheld. . . . [T]he invalid part of section 223 may be dropped and . . . the remainder of the statute is fully operative."), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 984 (1988). Given this guidance and the clear import of Section 401 of BCRA, the Court holds that the remainder of Section 201 is severable from subsection (5). It is clear that the value of disclosing electioneering communications disbursements is not dependent on their disclosure prior to broadcast, and the Court cannot say that it is "evident that the legislature would not have enacted" the remaining disclosure provisions of Section 201 in the absence of subsection (5). Buckley, 424 U.S. at 108-09. The remainder of Section 201 adequately serves the purpose of "informing the public about various candidates' supporters before election day," FEC Opp'n at 112 (emphasis in original), without requiring advance disclosures that could potentially chill the exercise of free speech rights.

The Court therefore finds that Section 201's requirement that electioneering communications that have not yet aired but have been contracted for is unconstitutional, but that by severing subsection (5), the provision's prior disclosure concerns are remedied and the remainder of the section is constitutional.

Plaintiffs ACLU, Chamber of Commerce, NAM, and NRA challenge Section 201's requirement that electioneering communications disbursers disclose the names of persons who have given $1,000 or more to the disbursing fund. Plaintiffs argue that for "controversial groups, such threatened disclosure can have a deadly chilling effect on the group's advocacy." ACLU Br. at 19; see also Chamber/NAM Br. at 19; NRA Br. at 50. The NRA argues that the provision suffers from the same infirmities as those in FECA struck down by the D.C. Circuit, as BCRA's "disclosure requirements reach the very same outside 'groups engaging in nonpartisan discussion.'" NRA Br. at 49-50 (quoting Buckley, 519 F.2d at 873). Finally, the Chamber of Commerce argues that Section 201's disclosure requirements are overbroad, because at least "[w]hen the advertiser is the Chamber [of Commerce], the interest served by the ad is reasonably clear." Chamber/NAM Br. at 20 (quoting Deborah Goldberg & Mark Kozlowski, Constitutional Issues in Disclosure of Interest Group Activities, 35 Ind. L. Rev. 755, 757 (2002)).

Defendants argue that the disclosure of individual contributors is necessary because many sponsors of issue advertisements conceal "their identity from the public by electioneering pseudonymously, through front organizations such as 'The Coalition: Americans Working for Real Change,' [sic] 'Citizens for Reform.'" FEC Br. at 173.[75]

[75] In justifying the provision, one Senator commented:

> We deter the appearance of corruption by shining sunlight on the undisclosed expenditures for sham issue advertisements. Corruption will be deterred when the public and the media are able to see clearly who is trying to influence the election. In addition our provisions will inform the voting public of who is sponsoring and paying for an electioneering communication.

Indeed, the Supreme Court has observed that "when individuals or corporations speak through committees, they often adopt seductive names that may tend to conceal the true identity of the source." Citizens Against Rent Control v. City of Berkeley, 454 U.S. 290, 298 (1981) (rejecting the argument that a limit on contributions to committees formed to support or oppose ballot measures was necessary "to make known the identity of supporters and opponents" of such measures, given that another provision of the ordinance "requires publication of lists of contributors in advance of the voting"). This observation has been buttressed by the evidence presented in this case. See Findings ¶¶ 48-52. For example, PhRMA, a pharmaceutical industry trade group, the Chamber of Commerce, and two brothers from Texas, have produced issue adds under the names "Citizens for Better Medicare," "Americans Working for a Real Change," and "Republicans for Clean Air," respectively. Id. ¶¶ 51, 44, 52. A recent poll showed that 61 percent of Americans want to know who is behind these issue advertisement organizations. Id. ¶ 46. Plaintiffs' briefs

> No one is trying to gag anybody. If they want to do a political ad that essentially wants people to vote for or against, what they say is [sic] fall within the independent expenditure and other provisions of the law, which has limits on what can be expended and has requirements for disclosure, which is not true of these ads that are clearly campaign ads, that are clearly political ads. But the people do not know who put the money up. They are hidden. They are endless. There is a flood of hidden, in terms of its support, of hidden money. That is what we say should not happen.

provide no evidence to the contrary and do not attempt to argue that the government lacks a legitimate interest related to the disclosure requirements; in fact, many of their experts voice the same concerns. Id. ¶¶ 49 (Milkis), 52 (La Raja). The Court finds that the evidence presented establishes that a legitimate governmental interest is served by the donors disclosure requirement, and reaffirms the Buckley observation that "[t]he corruption potential of [independent uncoordinated] expenditures may be significantly different [than coordinated expenditures], but the informational interest can be as strong as it is in coordinated spending, for disclosure helps voters to define more of the candidates' constituencies." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 81. Without disclosure of donors, it is difficult, if not impossible for the voting public to know who is sponsoring political advertisements under amorphous and nondescript pseudonyms. See Findings ¶¶ 47, 50-51. Indeed, even those experienced in politics, political scientists, and members of the media find it difficult to know who is behind some political advertisements. Id. ¶¶ 48, 52. Without Section 201's disclosure requirements, it will continue to be extremely difficult for the public to learn that groups, such as PhRMA, or individuals, like the Wylys, are the true source of millions of dollars in potential advertisements run under banners such as "The Coalition" or "Citizens for Better Medicare." Id.

This conclusion, however, does not end the inquiry. The Supreme Court has been mindful of the chilling effect disclosure can have on associational rights, and has declared that "state action which may have the effect of curtailing the freedom to associate is subject to the closest scrutiny." NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 460-61(1958). "The strict test established by NAACP v. Alabama is necessary because compelled disclosure has the potential for substantially infringing the exercise of First Amendment rights." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 66. Although disclosure requirements are often "the least restrictive means" of regulating campaign finance practices, "[i]n some instances disclosure may even expose contributors to harassment or retaliation." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 68.

In Buckley, the Supreme Court considered the argument that contributions made to independent candidates and minor parties should be exempt from FECA's disclosure requirements. The Supreme Court rejected the challenge, concluding that the evidence presented was "not of the sort proffered in NAACP v. Alabama."[76] Buckley, 424 U.S. at 71.

[76] In NAACP, the NAACP challenged a court order forcing the group "to reveal to the State's Attorney General the names and addresses of all of its Alabama members and agents." NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 451 (1958). The State had obtained a restraining order, enjoined the group from operating in Alabama due to its failure to file a corporate charter with the Secretary of State. Id. In response, the NAACP sought to dissolve the restraining order, but refused to comply with Alabama's request for the production of documents including the NAACP's "records containing the names and addresses of all Alabama members and agents of the Association." Id. at 453 (quotation marks omitted) (emphasis added). The court then ordered the NAACP to comply. Id. The evidentiary record before the Supreme Court consisted of uncontroverted evidence "showing that on past occasions revelation of the identity of [the NAACP's] rank-and-file members has exposed these member to economic reprisal, loss of employment, threat of physical coercion, and other manifestations of public hostility." Id. at 462. Based on this evidence, the Court found that > compelled disclosure of [the NAACP's] membership is likely to affect adversely the ability of [the NAACP] and its members to pursue their collective effort to foster beliefs which, they admittedly have the right to advocate, in that it may induce members to withdraw from the Association and

The evidence that was presented in Buckley was found by the Supreme Court to be "at best . . . the testimony of several minor-party officials that one or two persons refused to make contributions because of the possibility of disclosure," and therefore failed to persuade the Supreme Court that "the substantial public interest . . . outweighs the harm generally alleged." Id. Buckley instructs that when a legitimate government interest is served by a disclosure provision, constitutional challenges claiming the disclosure will chill associational rights must be accompanied by evidence which shows > a reasonable probability that the compelled disclosure of a party's contributors' names will subject them to threats, harassment, or reprisals from either government officials or private parties. The proof may include, for example, specific evidence of past or present harassment of members due to their associational ties, or of harassment directed against the organization itself. A pattern of threats or specific manifestations of public hostility may be sufficient.

Socialist Workers '74 Campaign Comm.*, 459 U.S. 87 (1982) (finding Ohio disclosure provisions could not be constitutionally applied to the Socialist Workers Party ("SWP") due to the "substantial evidence of both governmental and private hostility toward and harassment of SWP members and supporters").[77]

For this reason, the ACLU's facial challenge to Section 201 is unavailing. Neither NAACP nor Brown stand for the proposition that disclosure laws that apply to organizations "whose positions are often controversial and whose members and contributors frequently request assurances of anonymity" are facially unconstitutional. ACLU Opp'n at 10. Rather, as explained above, the statutes in those cases were held inapplicable to the groups in question based on the facts presented, not invalid on their face. See NAACP, 449 U.S. at 462-63 ("[W]e think it apparent that compelled disclosure of petitioner's Alabama membership is likely to affect adversely the ability of petitioner and its members" to engage in their freedom to associate.") The District Court in the case had found "substantial evidence of both governmental and private hostility toward and harassment of [Socialist Workers Party ("SWP")] members and supporters." Id. at 98-99. The evidence presented included specific incidents which took place within four years of the trial, and included "threatening phone calls and hate mail, the burning of SWP literature, the destruction of SWP members' property, police harassment of a party candidate, and the firing of shots at an SWP office. There was also evidence that in the 12-month period before trial 22 SWP members, including four in Ohio, were fired because of their party membership." Id. at 99. This evidence was found to present a reasonable probability that disclosing the names of contributors and recipients will subject them to threats, harassment, and reprisals. Id. at 100. The Supreme Court concluded that "[i]n light of the substantial evidence of past and present hostility from private persons and government officials against the SWP, Ohio's campaign disclosure requirements cannot be constitutionally applied to the Ohio SWP." Id. at 102.

confidentiality and no indication is given that revelation of their affiliation with the group would result in harassment, threats or reprisals. Since the ACLU has presented the Court with no facts that place it in the same category of threatened associations such as the NAACP or the Socialist Workers Party ("SWP"), see Finding ¶ 45[78] the Court finds no basis for invalidating the statute on its face or as applied to the ACLU based on the present record.

Plaintiffs have also provided evidence regarding the effect disclosure under Section 201 would have on four other organizations. The Court considers each in turn.

The NRA provides testimony that some of its members do not wish to have their contributions to the group disclosed, and estimates that between five and 50 persons voiced their concerns in the year 2000. Id. ¶ 41. The group also provides testimony that a "conspicuous and disproportionate number of contributors" to its PAC contribute "just below the $200 disclosure level." Id. Although Mr. LaPierre testified that one reason given for members not wanting their contributions disclosed was fear of losing one's job, many other reasons were given as well, such as a desire not to have one's neighbors or school board know about their affiliation with the organization. Id. Some simply stated that they did not wish to have such information provided to the government. Id. No evidence of the basis for these fears is presented to the Court, only speculations. Nor is any evidence presented to the [78] The ACLU provides no information as to why ACLU's donors wish to maintain their confidentiality and no indication is given that revelation of their affiliation with the group would result in harassment, threats or reprisals. As an aside, the Court notes that according to the ACLU, "[o]nly 212 individuals contributed more than $1,000 to the organization. Findings ¶ 45.

Court of actual instances of retaliation due to the disclosure of someone's membership in the NRA. These fears are the result of conjectures by those expressing them, but unless there is a reasonable probability that these fears will be realized as a result of disclosure, Buckley instructs that such worries do not overcome the state's legitimate interest in disclosure.

Edward Monroe, Director of Political Affairs for the Associated Builders and Contractors ("ABC") and the Treasurer of ABC's PAC, testified that he had been told that a number of ABC contributors had suffered substantial vandalism after their names were disclosed and that the contributors believed the vandalism was the result of labor unions learning of their contributions. Id. ¶ 42. This evidence is essentially hearsay and no evidence is presented showing that the vandalism was actually retaliation in response to the disclosure as opposed to speculation on the part of contributors. Although some contributors to ABC's PAC donate less than $200, the Court has no way of knowing why they donate at this level other than Mr. Monroe's belief that it is to prevent disclosure of their names. Id. The same is true for the two companies that declined Mr. Monroe's solicitations. Id. On the basis of this evidence alone, the Court cannot find that ABC meets the Buckley standard.

The Court also considers evidence regarding the membership of the Associated General Contractors of America ("AGC") and the Chamber of Commerce's coalition titled "Americans Working for a Real Change." Between a dozen and two dozen AGC members expressed concern to its Chief Executive Officer, Stephen Sandherr, that if their contributions to AGC are disclosed publicly they will be subjected to union action that "would threaten to make life miserable for them." Id. ¶ 43. Although this testimony demonstrates that AGC members may "fear" the potential consequences of their names being disclosed in connection with AGC, there is no evidence before the Court that these feared consequences have been, or would be, realized. Similarly, the Chamber of Commerce provides evidence that some contributors to its coalition, "Americans Working for a Real Change," did not want to be publicly identified due to fears of "what some would call union harassment activities." Id. ¶ 44. Once again, the Court was not presented with evidence of a reasonable basis for these fears. Furthermore, no member ever told Mr. Sandherr they were contributing $200 or less to AGC's PAC in order to avoid disclosure, and no contributor to AGC's PAC has reported union retaliation in response to their contribution to the PAC. Id. ¶ 43. Neither group's evidence meets the Buckley standard.

In sum, although many deponents relate what they believe, or have been told, were the reasons contributors did not want to have their names disclosed, that is union retaliation or employment termination, the lack of specific evidence about the basis for these concerns leaves the Court unable to find there exists "a reasonable probability that the compelled disclosure of [any of these organizations'] contributors' names will subject them to threats, harassment, or reprisals from either government officials or private parties." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 74. Furthermore, no Plaintiff cited to evidence, and the Court has found none, that their organization, as opposed to the organization's members or contributors, has been subjected to threats, harassment or reprisals. Although these groups take stands that are controversial to segments of the public, and may believe that they are targeted because of the positions they take, none has provided the Court with a basis for finding that their organization, and thereby their membership, faces the hardships that the NAACP and SWP were found to suffer by the Supreme Court. However, nothing in this Court's decision affects the ability of groups in the future from challenging, as the NAACP and the SWP did in the past, the application of Section 201's disclosure provisions to their organization.

The Court addresses next the NRA's argument that the D.C. Circuit's invalidation of FECA's Section 437a, Buckley, 519 F.2d at 878, renders Section 201's requirements invalid as well. In Buckley, the D.C. Circuit found FECA's independent expenditure disclosure provision[79] unconstitutional. The Court of Appeals stated that "issue discussions unwedded to the cause of a particular candidate hardly threaten the purity of elections . . . . [and] are vital and indispensable to a free society and an informed electorate. Thus the interest of a group engaging in nonpartisan discussion ascends to a high plane, while the governmental interest in disclosure correspondingly diminishes." Buckley, 519 F.2d at 873. Even so, the D.C. Circuit rested its decision on the overbreadth of Section 427a's "crucial terms[:]

[79] Section 437a's "demand for disclosure is activated–without any expending of any funds whatever–(1) by any act directed to the public for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election; or (2) by any material published or broadcast to the public which refers to a candidate (by name, description, or other reference) and which (a) advocates the election or defeat of such candidate, or (b) sets forth the candidate's position on any public issue, his voting record, or other official acts (in the case of a candidate who holds or has held Federal office), or (c) is otherwise designed to influence individuals to cast their votes for or against such candidate or to withhold their votes from such candidate." Buckley, 529 F.2d at 870 (paraphrasing FECA § 427a) (internal punctuation and footnotes omitted).

'purpose of influencing the outcome of an election' and 'design[] to influence' individuals in voting at an election." Buckley, 519 F.2d at 875. Unable to find a "readily available narrowing interpretation" of the crucial terms in light of Congress's manifested intent, Buckley, 519 F.2d at 877, the Court of Appeals held the section unconstitutional, id. at 878.

Given that the basis for the D.C. Circuit's invalidation of Section 427a rested on the provision's language and legislative history, the Court does not accept the NRA's suggestion that the Court of Appeals's decision controls this Court's analysis of Section 201's disclosure requirements. NRA Br. at 50. Section 201 only requires disclosure of "electioneering communications," the definition of which this Court finds is constitutional. The disclosure trigger is much narrower and more definite than that of FECA Section 427a, and does not include its invalidating "crucial terms." In addition, the record before the Court clearly demonstrates that contrary to the situation facing the Court of Appeals in 1975, where "issue discussions" were indeed "unwedded to the cause of a particular candidate," the evolving present use of issue advertisements, specifically the use of "issues" to cloak supportive or negative advertisements clearly identifying a candidate for federal office, "threaten the purity of elections." Buckley, 519 F.2d at 873.[80] For these reasons, the Court declines to find the Court of Appeals's decision on FECA Section 427a binding on this Court's disposition of the challenges to BCRA Section 201's disclosure requirements.

[80] For example, as mentioned above, the "group" "Republicans for Clean Air" spent $2 million the week before the "Super Tuesday primaries" in advertisements supporting presidential candidate George W. Bush and attacking his opponent John McCain. Findings ¶ 52. "Republicans for Clean Air" was actually a front for two brothers who had ties to the Bush campaign. Id.

Finally, the Chamber of Commerce argues that Section 201 as applied to its electioneering communications, is overbroad because the public knows that the Chamber represents the interests of American business. Chamber/ NAM Br. at 20. The Court interprets the Chamber's position, encompassing all of three sentences, to mean that under BCRA it should be sufficient that the Chamber report that it is behind advertisements sponsored by, for example, "Americans Working for a Real Change" and that listing its $1,000 contributors would be unnecessary for the voting public to know the interest behind the advertisement. The Court first notes that the Chamber does not provide, and the Court cannot formulate, a disclosure rule that would take into account the notoriety of the groups involved (for example, a law that exempts "well-known" groups from disclosing the names of their $1,000 contributors, while "less well-known" groups would be required to make the disclosures). In addition, the Chamber provides no legal support for its theory, and the Court declines to consider its argument based on a record comprised of a single quotation from the Indiana Law Review and the Chamber's statement that it "is a well-known association of American businesses that has been in existence for 90 years." Chamber/NAM Br. at 20. The Court therefore rejects the Chamber of Commerce's argument.

In conclusion, the Court states what Section 201's disclosure requirements do and do not require. First, they apply only to electioneering communications, which we find constitutional. Second, Section 201 does not prevent anyone from making electioneering communications; it only requires that when persons do make such advertisements that they disclose the source of the communication's funding after they are broadcast. Lastly, the provision does not require the wholesale disclosure of all donors to the sponsoring organization, rather only donors contributing $1,000 to the disbursing account must be disclosed. Organizations are free to set up "segregated bank account[s]," funded by individuals' contributions, for electioneering communication disbursements. BCRA §201(a); FECA § 434(f)(2)(E); 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(2)(E). If electioneering communication disbursements made from such segregated accounts then reach the $10,000 threshold, only the names of the segregated account's $1,000 contributors will have to be disclosed. Lastly, any group can file suit to challenge the constitutionality of the application of Section 201's disclosure provisions to their contributors based on a showing such as "threats, harassment, or reprisals from either government officials or private parties." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 74.

In conclusion, the Court finds Section 201 constitutional on its face, with the exception of subsection (5), which the Court determines to be broader than necessary to achieve the legitimate governmental interest at stake because of its inclusion of future contracts for electioneering communications. For that reason, the Court severs subsection (5) and finds the remainder of Section 201 constitutional.

Sections 202, 212, and 214[81]

1. Section 202

Section 202 is challenged by the Chamber of Commerce, NAM, and the McConnell Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' arguments with regard to Section 202 relate to those made with respect to Sections 201 and 214.[82] For example, Plaintiffs argue that the definition of "electioneering communication" is unconstitutional, and for that reason Section 202 must also be found unconstitutional. Chamber/NAM Br. at 12; McConnell Br. at 83 n.42. As this argument was addressed and rejected in this Court's examination of Section 201's definition of "electioneering communication," it is rejected here as well.

Plaintiffs also contend that "the First Amendment limits the coordination concept to express advocacy," and for that reason Section 202 should be found unconstitutional. Chamber/NAM Br. at 12. Although Plaintiffs cite to FEC Commissioner Smith for support, id., this view has been rejected by courts in this Circuit. See Orloski v. FEC, 795 F.2d 156, 167 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (finding the "express advocacy" limitation "not constitutionally required for those statutory provisions limiting contributions"); Christian Coalition, 52 F.

[81] Although Plaintiffs ask for judgment as to BCRA's Section 211, described supra, at oral argument they stated that they were not challenging the provision. See Tr. at 341-42 (Judge Henderson: Mr. Starr, I've got down that you all are challenging [Section] 211. Am I wrong about that? . . . . Baran: We are not challenging section 211. . .). Furthermore, other than a description of the provision, McConnell Br. at 82, Plaintiffs' briefs are silent on the provision.

[82] In addition, the Court observes that Plaintiffs' arguments blur Section 202's provisions with those of Sections 201 and 214, making the Court's task of discerning and addressing their arguments more difficult.

Supp. 2d at 86-87 & n.50 (finding the argument that "the 'express advocacy' limitation must apply to expressive coordinated expenditures" to be "untenable" in light of Orloski and Buckley).

Finally, the AFL-CIO contends that "the BCRA § 202 ban on coordinated 'electioneering communications' inevitably will criminalize efforts by the AFL-CIO to coordinate legislative public advocacy with Members of Congress, and interfere with ordinary and necessary lobbying contacts and the AFL-CIO's use of them to plan broadcast and other advocacy. For that reason alone, § 202 violates the First Amendment." AFL-CIO Br. at 14 (citing to the Declaration of Gerald M. Shea ¶¶ 57-59). The Court notes first that Section 202 bans nothing. What the Court presumes the AFL-CIO complains of is the effect of Section 202 on some entities as read in conjunction with BCRA Section 203. This issue is dealt with in this Court's examination of Section 203. The group's allegation that Section 202 will criminalize AFL-CIO contacts with Members of Congress and subsequent advocacy activities is conclusory and is asserted without any legal support. Similarly, the declaration of Gerald M. Shea, the AFL-CIO's Assistant to the President for Governmental Affairs, does nothing to help the Court discern the legal basis for its argument. Mr. Shea states that "[a]ny legal restrictions on the ability of an organization like the AFL-CIO to coordinate legislative and policy communications and activities with federal officeholders who happen to be candidates could substantially interfere with our ability to maintain ordinary and necessary working relationships with Members of Congress and their staffs." Shea Decl. ¶ 58. The fact that Mr. Shea believes that the AFL-CIO's current activities may be affected by Section 202 does not provide the Court with a legal basis for invalidating the provision. Furthermore, to the extent that the AFL-CIO challenges the scope of activities covered by BCRA's definition of "coordination," the Court finds, infra, that such arguments are not ripe given the statutory construction of Section 214 and the recent promulgation of final regulations on coordination by the FEC.[83]

The Court therefore finds that Plaintiffs' arguments are unavailing and the Court has been presented with no basis for finding Section 202 unconstitutional.

2. Section 212

Section 212 is challenged by the AFL-CIO and the McConnell Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs object to Section 212 on the grounds that it requires disclosure of not only actual expenditures, but also contracts to make independent expenditures. See McConnell Br. at 56 n.22; AFL-CIO Br. at 14-17. This advance disclosure, Plaintiffs argue, "serve[s] no governmental interest and will chill the exercise of free speech by forcing groups . . . to disclose ongoing and confidential political strategies and decision-making processes, and by giving adversaries the opportunity to try to thwart broadcasts or counter them with their own [83] In the Court's discussion of Section 214, infra, it is noted that the regulations contain an explicit "safe harbor for responses to inquiries about legislative or policy issues." See Final Rules; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures, 68 Fed. Reg. 421, 455 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 109.21(f).

messages." AFL-CIO Br. at 16.[84]

A Court may not entertain a suit that is not ripe for review. The basic rationale behind the ripeness doctrine is "to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties." Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148-49 (1967), overruled on other grounds, Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99 (1977). Furthermore, "[t]he power of courts . . . to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress arises only when the interests of the litigants require the use of this judicial authority for their protection against actual interference. A hypothetical threat is not enough." United Public Workers of America v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 89-90 (1946); see also id. at 90 n.22 ("It has long been this Court's 'considered practice not to decide abstract, hypothetical or contingent questions, . . . or to decide any constitutional question in advance of the necessity for its decision, . . . or to formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the precise facts to which it is to be applied, . . . or to decide any constitutional question except with reference to the particular facts to which it is to be applied . . . .'") (citing Alabama State Fed'n of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 461 (1945)). In situations [84] As they did for Section 201, McConnell Plaintiffs, the Chamber of Commerce and NAM make a passing suggestion that Section 212 might constitute a "prior restraint" in violation of the First Amendment. The Court addresses this argument in its discussion of Section 201. See supra note 69.

However, in those cases, plaintiffs must "allege[] an actual and well-founded fear that the law will be enforced against them" in order to assuage the troubling aspects of "the preenforcement nature of [such] suits." Id; see also Wisconsin Right to Life, Inc. v. Paradise, 138 F.3d 1183, 1185 (7th Cir. 1998) (Easterbrook, J.) Hershey*, 412 F.2d 1103, 1113-14 (D.C. Cir. 1969) ("[W]e are not persuaded that every plaintiff who alleges a First Amendment chilling effect and shivers in court has thereby established a case or controversy.").

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' challenge to Section 212 is not ripe for review. At the time of briefing in this case, the FEC had proposed regulations that required disclosure only after independent advertisements have been "publicly disseminated." These proposals were recently promulgated as final regulations. See BCRA Reporting; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures; Final Rules, 68 Fed. Reg. 404, 452 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 109.10).[85] This fact makes the challenge unfit for judicial resolution, as the regulations provide Plaintiffs with the exact remedy they seek: the FEC will not require disclosure of independent express advocacy expenditures prior to their "public[] disseminat[ion]." This situation presents the Court with the question Judge Easterbrook posed in Wisconsin Right to Life: "How can a suit present a 'case or controversy' when all the litigants are on the same side?" Wisconsin Right to Life, 138 F.3d at 1185.

This conclusion is bolstered by the decisions of other courts faced with similar circumstances. For example, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals rejected a group's claim that it had a "well-founded" fear of prosecution under Wisconsin campaign finance laws, where an advisory opinion of the Attorney General of Wisconsin and the Election Board's regulations codified the interpretation of the law the group sought. Wisconsin Right to Life, 138 F.3d at 1185-86; see also Citizens for Responsible Gov't State Political Action Comm.

[85] The regulations provide in part:

> The person making the independent expenditures [more than 20 days before an election] aggregating $10,000 or more must ensure that the Commission receives the report or statement by 11:59 p.m. Eastern Standard/Daylight Time on the second day following the date on which a communication is publicly distributed or otherwise publicly disseminated. . . .

> Every person making, after the 20th day, but more than 24 hours before 12:01 a.m. of the day of an election, independent expenditures aggregating $1,000 or more with respect to a given election must report those independent expenditures and ensure that the Commission receives the report or signed statement by 11:59 p.m. Eastern Standard/Daylight Time on the day following the date on which a communication is publicly distributed or otherwise publicly disseminated.

v. Davidson, 236 F.3d 1174, 1193 (10th Cir. 2000) (describing the Wisconsin Right to Life holding and distinguishing the case from the one before it, which lacked "such administrative regulations"). Similarly, in Shoemaker v. Handel, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the lower court's determination that amended regulations, put into effect before becoming final, cured the challengers' privacy concerns, and thus made "[t]heir privacy contentions . . . not ripe for adjudication." Shoemaker v. Handel, 795 F.2d 1136, 1144 (3d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 986 (1986). There was no need to enforce the amendments through injunctive or declaratory relief, because "[i]f the Commission cease[d] to comply with the proposed confidentiality rules, the [challengers could] return to court with a new lawsuit." Id.

Plaintiffs do not contest the import of the regulations. Instead, Plaintiff AFL-CIO argues that the FEC regulations do not remedy BCRA's alleged constitutional defect, as the regulations "may not be approved by Congress[,] [a]nd there is nothing to prevent the Commission itself from reversing its position as soon as this litigation is over, as part of a litigation settlement or independently." AFL-CIO Reply at 10; see also AFL-CIO Br. at 17 n.16 ("[G]iven the statutory text at issue plaintiffs have no assurance as to how the FEC will interpret or enforce it in the future."). These uncertainties amount to a "hypothetical threat" which the Supreme Court has stated "is not enough" to warrant judicial consideration. United Public Workers of America, 330 U.S. at 89-90. Should this hypothetical threat manifest itself as a "concrete factual dispute," Nat'l Treasury Employees Union, 600 F.2d at 988, nothing prevents Plaintiffs from "return[ing] to court with a new lawsuit," Shoemaker, 795 F.2d at 1144.

As Plaintiffs have presented "a controversy that has not yet arisen and may never arise," Wisconsin Right to Life, 138 F.3d at 1187-88, the Court lacks jurisdiction to resolve their challenge to Section 212 at this time.

3. Section 214

Section 214 is challenged by the McConnell Plaintiffs, the Chamber of Commerce, NAM, the RNC and the AFL-CIO. Plaintiffs' basic argument is that Section 214, "[b]y repealing the FEC's current regulation and failing to supply any clear statutory definition of what constitutes prohibited coordination, . . . will chill First Amendment speech and association." Chamber/NAM Br. at 11; see also ACLU Br. at 19-20; AFL-CIO Br. at 13 ("BCRA's vague and overbroad coordination standards will inevitably spur . . . wide-ranging and burdensome investigations" by the FEC.). Plaintiffs also charge that the directive of Section 214(c) that "'agreement or formal collaboration' not be a prerequisite to considering an expenditure 'coordinated,' . . . exceeds the constitutional bounds established in Buckley." McConnell Br. at 83; see also Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 8; RNC Br. at 72 (Section 214 "can only be understood as an impermissible effort to overrule this court's decision in FEC v. Christian Coalition . . . which warned against overbroad definitions of 'coordination.'"). The Chamber of Commerce and NAM, in their Opposition brief, argue that Section 214(a)(2), by classifying coordinated expenditures with parties as contributions, will "chill both party contacts, and contacts with legislators," and that Section 214(d) expands the definition of what may constitute a coordinated contribution or expenditure. Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 8.[86]

a. Section 214(a)

Under Section 214(a)(2), expenditures by a person, other than a candidate or a candidate's authorized committee, made in "cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a national, State or local committee of a political party," are considered to be contributions to those party committees. BCRA § 214(a)(2); FECA § 315(a)(7)(B)(ii); 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(ii).[87] As noted supra, this same definition has been applied to expenditures coordinated with political candidates for over 25 years and was recently found by the Supreme Court to apply to political party expenditures. See 2 U.S.C. § 441(a)(7)(B)(i); Colorado II, 533 U.S. at 467.

Plaintiffs argue that the definition of coordination in Section 214(a) is "unconstitutionally vague." McConnell Br. at 85 n.44. This lack of precision, Plaintiffs allege, violates the First Amendment's "demand[] that the conduct that constitutes [86] The Court notes at this juncture that Plaintiffs' Section 214 arguments, especially those involving Defendants' justiciability arguments, were sparse and in many instances difficult to discern. Although the Court understands that the page limitations imposed on the parties may have been a contributing factor, the lack of clarity has made the Court's task more difficult.

[87] For the sake of clarity, the Court points out that contrary to Plaintiffs' description, Section 214(a) does not establish a "ban" on coordination, Chamber/NAM at 8, or a "year round prohibition on all communications made by a corporation," ACLU Br. at 20. Section 214(a) classifies such contacts as contributions, but does not prevent coordination from taking place.

coordination be precisely, objectively, and narrowly defined," and leaves citizens unsure of what contact they may have with political parties without having future speech regulated as "coordinated." Chamber/NAM at 12. Plaintiffs discount the fact that BCRA orders the promulgation of clarifying regulations because regulations are "subject to the ebb and flow of administrative practice," and speakers "will thus be forced to 'steer far wider of the unlawful zone than if the boundaries of the forbidden areas were clearly marked.'" Id. (quoting Buckley, 424 U.S. at 41 n.48).[88] Finally, Plaintiffs maintain that the existence of an "agreement" is a constitutional prerequisite to finding an expenditure to be "coordinated" > for four key reasons: (i) some unconstitutional aspects such as its inclusion of 'electioneering communication' are clearly mandated and are beyond the FEC's power to change; (ii) the vagueness as to what conduct may constitute coordination, and hence make future speech unlawful, is chilling association and petitioning activities right now; and [sic] (iii) there is no assurance that the FEC will be able to agree on new regulations at all, [sic] and (iv) there is no assurance that any regulations that may be adopted will survive Congressional and judicial review.

[88] The Chamber of Commerce and NAM also allege that regulations cannot save Section 214(a)

Chamber/NAM Br. at 13. These arguments can be disposed of with expedition. First, the Court does not understand how Section 214(a), on its face, includes "electioneering communication" and Plaintiffs have not explained their statement. Second, alleged chilling of rights incurred prior to the promulgation of the FEC's regulations, as well as the uncertainty over whether the FEC would be able to agree on new regulations, are rendered moot by the promulgation of the final regulations in early January 2003. FECA also provides protection for those who act in good faith reliance on FEC regulations. See 2 U.S.C. § 438(e). Finally, the possibility that the regulations may be struck down by Congress or a court is the type of speculative injury that does not rise to the level of a present case or controversy required for Article III standing. See infra at 155.

with political parties.[89] The Court analyzes each concern in turn.

1) Vagueness

As the Court noted above, the campaign finance system has been functioning for over 25 years despite the presence of the very same "vague" language to which Plaintiffs object. See 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(i). Plaintiffs have provided no explanation as to why the application of this coordination formula to the context of political parties chills political speech any more than when applied to expenditures coordinated with political candidates. Furthermore, the Court notes that the FEC's regulations have now been promulgated in final form. It is therefore possible that many, perhaps even all, of Plaintiffs' vagueness concerns have been remedied by the regulations' contents. See Chamber/NAM Br. at 13 (stating that while the FEC's now-repealed regulations on coordination "did not solve all the vagueness problems, it took useful steps toward alleviating them").[90] Although Plaintiffs discount the [89] Although Plaintiffs have not directed this argument specifically at Section 214(a) (it is directed more explicitly at Section 214(c)), it is a central theme of the McConnell Plaintiffs' briefing and the Court presumes that they intend for it to be applied to Section 214(a) as well.

[90] The regulations promulgated by the FEC define coordinated communications as those not paid for by the candidate or the political party, that meet one content and one conduct standard. Final Rules; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures, 68 Fed. Reg. 421, 453 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 109.21). The conduct standards include: (1) communications made, produced, or distributed at the request or suggestion of the candidate or party, or at the request or suggestion of a payor who receives the candidate or party's assent; (2) material involvement by the candidate or party in decisions regarding the content, intended audience, means or mode, media outlet used, the timing or frequency, or the size or prominence of the communication; (3) one or more substantial discussions about the communication between the payor and the candidate clearly identified in the (continued...)

value of such regulations because of the "ebb and flow of administrative practice," they provide no support for their theory that laws restricting speech cannot be shaped by regulations because of the nature of administrative practices. In addition, as described in more detail below, see infra at 167, any issues arising from the enforcement of these regulations can be challenged via lawsuit under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), or clarified through the advisory opinion procedure codified at 2 U.S.C. § 437f.[91]

2) Agreement

The Court addresses next Plaintiffs' argument that Section 214(a) violates the Constitution because it does not require the existence of an "agreement" as a predicate to the finding of coordination. Plaintiffs cite to four cases in support of their theory that an agreement is required for an expenditure to be coordinated. The Court addresses each in turn, finding that none support Plaintiffs' argument.

In Buckley, the Supreme Court found that Congress could limit coordinated communication which concern the candidate's or political party committee's campaign plans, projects, activities, or needs that are material to the creation, production or distribution of the communication. Id. at 454. The regulation also creates a safe harbor for responses to inquiries about legislative or policy issues. Id. at 455. The content standards can be found at 68 Fed. Reg. 421, 453 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 109.21(c)).

[91] The statute provides in part:

> Not later than 60 days after the Commission receives from a person a complete written request concerning the application of [FECA] . . . or a rule or regulation prescribed by the [FEC], with respect to a specific transaction or activity by the person, the [FEC] shall render a written advisory opinion relating to such transaction or activity to the person.

expenditures to "prevent attempts to circumvent [FECA] through prearranged or coordinated expenditures amounting to disguised contributions." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 47. In rejecting FECA's limitation on independent expenditures, the Supreme Court distinguished independent from coordinated expenditures, noting that expenditures "made totally independently of the candidate and his campaign . . . . may well provide little assistance to the candidate's campaign and indeed may prove counterproductive." Id. (emphasis added). The Supreme Court noted that "[t]he absence of prearrangement and coordination of an expenditure with the candidate . . . not only undermines the value of the expenditure to the candidate, but also alleviates the danger that expenditures will be given as a quid pro quo for improper commitments from the candidate." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 47. The coordinated expenditure provision Buckley upheld defined coordinated expenditures as those "authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate." Id. at 47 n.53 (quoting FECA § 608(c)(2)(B)). The Supreme Court cited to the House and Senate reports, especially the more detailed Senate report which included the following "example illustrating the distinction between 'authorized or requested' expenditures . . . and independent expenditures":

> "(A) person might purchase billboard advertisements endorsing a candidate. If he does so completely on his own, and not at the request or suggestion of the candidate or his agent's (sic) that would constitute an 'independent expenditure on behalf of a candidate' under section 614(c) of the bill. The person making the expenditure would have to report it as such.
> "However, if the advertisement was placed in cooperation with the candidate's campaign organization, then the amount would constitute a gift by the supporter and an expenditure by the candidate just as if there had been a direct > contribution enabling the candidate to place the advertisement himself. It would be so reported by both."

Id. (quoting S.Rep. No. 93- 689, p. 18 (1974), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1974, p. 5604) (alteration in original). Based on this guidance, the Supreme Court found that "the 'authorized or requested' standard of the Act operates to treat all expenditures placed in cooperation with or with the consent of a candidate, his agents, or an authorized committee of the candidate as contributions." Id.

In Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Comm. v. FEC, 518 U.S. 604 (1996) ("Colorado I"), the Supreme Court found that an advertisement made by a political party was not a coordinated expenditure, in part because of "uncontroverted evidence that this advertising campaign was developed by the Colorado Party independently and not pursuant to any general or particular understanding with a candidate." Colorado I, 518 U.S. at 614 (plurality opinion) ("[W]e therefore treat the expenditure, for constitutional purposes, as an 'independent' expenditure, not an indirect campaign contribution.").

This District Court grappled with the troublesome First Amendment line between coordinated and independent expenditures in FEC v. Christian Coalition, 52 F. Supp. 2d 45 (D.D.C. 1999). In her decision, which was not subjected to appellate review, Judge Joyce Hens Green explained:

> This Court is bound by both the result and the reasoning of Buckley, even when they point in different directions. While Buckley confidently assured that coordinated expenditures fell within the Act's limits on contributions, it also reasoned that spending money on one's own political speech is an act entitled to constitutional protection of the highest order. Expressive coordinated > expenditures bear certain hallmarks of a cash contribution but also contain the highly-valued political speech of the spender. I take from Buckley and its progeny the directive to tread carefully, acknowledging that considerable coordination will convert an expressive expenditure into a contribution but that the spender should not be deemed to forfeit First Amendment protections for her own speech merely by having engaged in some consultations or coordination with a federal candidate.

Christian Coalition, 52 F. Supp. 2d at 91 (citations omitted). In addressing "coordination as it applies to expressive coordinated expenditures by corporations," id., Judge Green noted that "[t]he fact that the candidate has requested or suggested that a spender engage in certain speech indicates that the speech is valuable to the candidate, giving such expenditures sufficient contribution-like qualities to fall within the Act's prohibition on contributions." Id. at 92. However, the absence of such overtures would not, in Judge Green's view, prevent an expenditure from being coordinated.

> In the absence of a request or suggestion from the campaign, an expressive expenditure becomes "coordinated" where the candidate or her agents can exercise control over, or where there has been substantial discussion or negotiation between the campaign and the spender over, a communication's: (1) contents; (2) timing; (3) location, mode, or intended audience (e.g., choice between newspaper or radio advertisement); or (4) "volume" (e.g., number of copies of printed materials or frequency of media spots). Substantial discussion or negotiation is such that the candidate and spender emerge as partners or joint venturers in the expressive expenditure, but the candidate and spender need not be equal partners. This standard limits § 441b's contribution prohibition on expressive coordinated expenditures to those in which the candidate has taken a sufficient interest to demonstrate that the expenditure is perceived as valuable for meeting the campaign's needs or wants.

Id. Judge Green acknowledged that this standard still left "room for factual dispute," which in turn could "chill some speech." Id. But such deficiencies were deemed acceptable given that "expressive coordinated expenditures present real dangers to the integrity of the electoral process." Id.

In Colorado II, the Supreme Court expounded on the difficulty in determining the point at which an expenditure becomes a coordinated expenditure. The Supreme Court also commented on the functional approach which Congress had adopted, and the Buckley Court accepted, to balance First Amendment rights and the state's interest in preventing campaign finance corruption.

> The First Amendment line between spending and donating is easy to draw when it falls between independent expenditures by individuals or political action committees (PACs) without any candidate's approval (or wink or nod), and contributions in the form of cash gifts to candidates. But facts speak less clearly once the independence of the spending cannot be taken for granted, and money spent by an individual or PAC according to an arrangement with a candidate is therefore harder to classify. As already seen, Congress drew a functional, not a formal, line between contributions and expenditures when it provided that coordinated expenditures by individuals and nonparty groups are subject to the Act's contribution limits, 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(i). In Buckley, the Court acknowledged Congress's functional classification, and observed that treating coordinated expenditures as contributions "prevent[s] attempts to circumvent the Act through prearranged or coordinated expenditures amounting to disguised contributions." Buckley, in fact, enhanced the significance of this functional treatment by striking down independent expenditure limits on First Amendment grounds while upholding limitations on contributions (by individuals and nonparty groups), as defined to include coordinated expenditures.

Colorado II, 533 U.S. at 442-443 (citations omitted). Also, in that case, the Supreme Court found that "coordinated spending . . . covers a spectrum of activity." Id. at 445.

This Court agrees that "First Amendment clarity demands a definition of 'coordination' that provides the clearest possible guidance to candidates and constituents, while balancing the Government's compelling interest in preventing corruption of the electoral process with fundamental First Amendment rights to engage in political speech and political association." Christian Coalition, 52 F. Supp. 2d at 91. However, the Court finds nothing in the cited precedent, or Plaintiffs' arguments, demanding that for an expenditure to be coordinated there must be an agreement. The Court's reading of these cases suggests the very opposite. At the very least, the cases state that substantive requests and suggestions, or "wink or nod" arrangements, can render subsequent expenditures to be "coordinated," a standard that does not equate to agreement.[92] Therefore, the Court rejects the argument that agreements are a constitutional prerequisite to the finding that an expenditure is coordinated, and finds that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated that Section 214(a) violates the Constitution.

REV_00165486

b. Section 214(b)

Section 214(b) repealed the FEC regulations on coordination in effect at the time BCRA was enacted. BCRA § 214(b). Plaintiffs concede that Congress has the power to repeal the regulations. What Plaintiffs argue, however, is that "Congress had a duty to provide a narrow, precise, and objective definition for the coordination concept" but failed

---

[92] Defendants offered this hypothetical to illustrate the type of coordination the "request or suggestion" standard is intended to cover:

> A candidate suggests to a wealthy individual, "If you want to help, you might finance some political advertisements advocating my election"; the individual does not reply, but a week later, buys $100,000 worth of air time to advocate the candidate's election.

Gov't Br. at 185. According to the Chamber of Commerce, this hypothetical "is realistic . . . . Candidates and their parties routinely make general requests for public support." Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 6.

REV_00165487

to do so and "by repealing the FEC's regulatory definition, Congress substantially aggravated the constitutional violation." Chamber/NAM Br. at 13 n. 6. Since the FEC promulgated regulations on January 3, 2003, this "aggravation" claim is moot.

c. Section 214(c)

Because Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' challenge to Section 214(c) is nonjusticiable, Gov't Br. at 183-85; Int. Br. at 139-40, the Court will address this issue first as its resolution may preclude consideration of the merits of the Plaintiffs' other arguments. Preliminarily, the Court notes that BCRA provides this Court with jurisdiction to hear "any action brought for declaratory or injunctive relief to challenge the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act," and instructs it to "expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of the action." BCRA § 403; 2 U.S.C. § 437h note. This grant does not extend to the consideration of FEC regulations, and it does not permit the Court to go beyond its Article III powers to address claims that are nonjusticiable. Clark v. Valeo, 559 F.2d 642, 650 n. 11 (D.C. Cir. 1977) ("To the extent [the dissent's] language may be read as suggesting a view that Congress may 'command' the judiciary to act contrary to the rules relative to ripeness the Supreme Court has developed 'for its own governance in the cases confessedly within its jurisdiction,' we respectfully disagree.") (citations omitted). Cognizant of its authority, the Court now turns to each of Defendants' justiciability claims.

1) Article III Standing

Plaintiffs have the burden of establishing standing to bring their suit by demonstrating that they have: (1) suffered an "injury in fact;" (2) which is "fairly traceable to the conduct complained of;" and (3) is capable of judicial redress. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 (1992). In the First Amendment context, the standing requirements are somewhat relaxed. Parties have > standing to challenge a statute on grounds that it is facially overbroad, regardless of whether [their] own conduct could be regulated by a more narrowly drawn statute, because of the danger of tolerating, in the area of First Amendment freedoms, the existence of a penal statute susceptible of sweeping and improper application.

> Of course, in order to have standing, an individual must present more than allegations of a subjective chill. There must be a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm.

Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 816-17 (1975) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

In terms of the "injury in fact" prong, it is true that Plaintiffs have "not alleged any concrete and particularized injury from [Section] 214(c)'s instructions to the Commission to promulgate a new regulation." Gov't Br. at 184. However, Bigelow instructs that Plaintiffs do not have to allege a particularized injury, they must only show a specific objective harm. Bigelow, 421 U.S. at 816-17. Plaintiffs allege that the Constitution requires an agreement before an expenditure may be considered coordinated. McConnell Br. at 84; Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 8 n. 10 (stating that Section 214(c) "fairly read, rejects the constitutional holding" that the "First Amendment demanded a narrow agreement standard of coordination"). The fact that Section 214(c) directs that the FEC's regulations on coordination not require

"agreement or formal collaboration," from Plaintiffs' perspective, presents a specific future harm of impermissibly overbroad regulations. McConnell Opp'n at 53 n.24 (arguing that "since" no constitutional regulation consistent with BCRA can be promulgated (because of the statute's disavowal of an 'agreement' standard)" it would be futile to delay "litigation until regulations are promulgated, litigation is appropriate now").[93] This argument was addressed above and found to be inconsistent with the holdings of Buckley and its progeny.[94]

[93] Plaintiffs, despite purporting to have standing to challenge Section 214(c), have not clearly articulated the basis for their position. This theory represents what the Court has gleaned from their terse briefings. See Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 7-8; Chamber/NAM Reply at 7-10; McConnell Opp'n at 53 ("For reasons discussed fully in the submission of the Chamber of Commerce Plaintiffs . . . this assertion [that plaintiffs' coordination arguments are not justiciable at this time] are meritless.").

[94] McConnell Plaintiffs argue that the language of Section 214(c) violates the Constitution because it does not require "some form of agreement with the candidate [to] be present to find coordination. BCRA, of course, forbids the FEC from requiring that any sort of agreement – formal or otherwise – be required." McConnell Opp'n at 54 n.26. The Court disagrees with Plaintiffs, interpreting Section 214(c) under the doctrine of noscitur a sociis. "The maxim noscitur a sociis, that a word is known by the company it keeps, while not an inescapable rule, is often wisely applied where a word is capable of many meanings in order to avoid the giving of unintended breadth to the Acts of Congress." Jareki v. G.D. Searle & Co., 367 U.S. 303, 307 (1961). Given that "agreement" in Section 214(c) is immediately followed by the words "or formal collaboration," narrows the Court's reading of the term to cover formal agreements. This interpretation also appears to match the intent of Congress. See 148 Cong. Rec. S2144 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002) (Sen. Russ Feingold) ("Unfortunately, based on a single district court decision, the Federal Election Commission's current regulation defining when general public political communications funded by outside groups are considered coordinated with candidates or parties fails to account for certain types of coordination that may well occur in real-world campaigns. The FEC regulation is premised on a very narrowly defined concept of 'collaboration or agreement' between outside groups and candidates or parties. This current FEC regulation fails to cover a range of de facto and informal coordination between outside groups and candidates or parties that, if permitted, could frustrate the purposes of the bill.").

Therefore, Plaintiffs' allegation that they will be injured by regulations which by Congressional direction will be constitutionally overbroad, is not an injury-in-fact.[95]

Even if this Court were to find that Plaintiffs have alleged an injury-in-fact, Plaintiffs would still lack standing to bring their Section 214(c) challenge because their claim lacks redressability. To establish standing, Plaintiffs are required to show that it is "likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 167 (1997). Even if this Court were to strike Section 214(c) from BCRA, other provisions dealing with coordinated expenditures to candidates and parties would still govern and count contributions as any expenditures made at the request or suggestion of a candidate–covering behavior which falls short of formal collaboration or [95] The AFL-CIO, the Chamber of Commerce and NAM assert that "BCRA's vague and overbroad coordination standards will inevitably spur more . . . wide-ranging and burdensome investigations." AFL-CIO Br. at 13; Chamber/NAM at 14 ("[T]he Chamber and NAM[] know from painful, first-hand experience how a vague and overbroad concept of 'coordination' permits unfounded charges and investigations that seriously burden and chill participation in legislative initiatives.") These Plaintiffs point to the FEC's investigations into their broadcasts made in 1995 and 1996 (the Chamber of Commerce's advertisements were run in response to those aired by the AFL-CIO) to support this proposition. The Court finds a harm that may be caused by potential future investigations to be the type of speculative injury Lujan rejects as a basis for standing. Furthermore, the Court notes that the regulatory regime under which these investigations were conducted was far broader than that which BCRA appears to endorse. See Christian Coalition, 52 F. Supp. 2d at 89-91 (rejecting the FEC's "insider trading" or "conspiracy" standard for coordination). The regulations in place prior to 2000 considered expenditures to be coordinated when they were "[m]ade by or through any person who is, or has been, authorized to raise or expend funds, who is, or has been, an officer of an authorized committee, or who is, or has been, receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate, the candidate's committee or agent." 11 C.F.R. § 109.1(b)(4)(i)(B) (1999 ed.) agreement. See 2 U.S.C. § 441a(a)(7)(B)(i), (ii). As the Court explained above in finding Section 214(a) constitutional, there is nothing inherently unconstitutional about the "cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of" language found in FECA § 441(a)(7)(B)(i) or (ii), 2 U.S.C. § 441(a)(7)(B)(i), (ii). Therefore, Plaintiffs' challenge to Section 214(c) cannot redress their claimed injury of having coordination defined as something broader than an agreement.

Based on the foregoing, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to establish the injury in fact and redressability elements required for Article III standing with regard to their challenge to Section 214(c).

2) Ripeness

In the alternative, the Court examines Defendants' assertion that Plaintiffs' Section 214(c) claims are not ripe for judicial review at this time. Defendants maintain that since Section 214(c) does not require or prohibit any actions by Plaintiffs, but merely directs the FEC to promulgate new regulations which were not final until after briefing and oral arguments in this case were completed, "neither the Court nor plaintiffs can know how the revised regulations will affect plaintiffs or have any basis for evaluating whether those regulations will contravene constitutional principles." Gov't. Br. at 183-84; see also Int. Br. at 140 ("[T]here is nothing meaningful for this Court to review . . . until there is actually a new definition in place."). This defect, Defendants argue, renders Plaintiffs' claims not yet ripe.

It is presumed that "federal courts lack jurisdiction unless the contrary appears affirmatively from the record," and "[i]t is the responsibility of the complainant clearly to allege facts demonstrating that he is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute and the exercise of the court's remedial powers." Renne v. Geary, 501 U.S. 312, 315 (1991). In commencing the ripeness analysis, the Eighth Circuit provides guidance:

> In order for a claim to be justiciable under Article III, it must be shown to be a ripe controversy. Ripeness is peculiarly a question of timing, intended to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements. In short, the doctrine of ripeness is intended to forestall judicial determinations of disputes until the controversy is presented in clean-cut and concrete form. . . .
> [The] ripeness inquiry in the context of this [First Amendment] facial challenge . . . focuses on three elements: (1) hardship to the parties by withholding review; (2) the chilling effect the challenged law may have on First Amendment liberties; and (3) fitness of the controversy for judicial review. Our ripeness inquiry is not to be applied mechanically but rather, with flexibility.

New Mexicans for Bill Richardson v. Gonzales, 64 F.3d 1495, 1499-1500 (10th Cir. 1995) (citations and quotation marks omitted).

Plaintiffs' arguments focus on the first two prongs of the ripeness analysis. They allege that Section 214 creates a situation whereby it is unclear what actions may render an expenditure "coordinated" under BCRA. This predicament, Plaintiffs claim, chills their speech and associational rights, which is the direct and immediate hardship they assert. See Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 10. Since BCRA is "self-enforcing," in that "it can be used against people in its current form," Plaintiffs maintain that the case is fit for judicial review. Tr. at 296 (Baran).

REV_00165493

In light of the authority presented by the D.C. Circuit, the Court disagrees with Plaintiffs and finds their challenge to Section 214(c) not ripe for review. In Martin Tractor Co. v. FEC, a number of parties sought declaratory and injunctive relief from certain provisions of FECA. Martin Tractor Co. v. FEC, 627 F.2d 375, 377 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Nat'l Chamber Alliance for Politics v. FEC, 449 U.S. 954 (1980). Limited to "soliciting" its hourly employees twice a year, the Martin Tractor Company complained that Section 441b(b)(4)(B) of FECA had restricted, in a constitutionally impermissible manner, its ability to communicate with its hourly employees about its PAC. Id. at 382. Neither the statute nor the regulations defined "solicit" or "solicitation." Id. at 383. The Court of Appeals determined, despite the vagueness of the undefined term "solicit" and the lack of clarifying regulatory language, that "the extent of the chill induced by the statutory provision at issue . . . is a very limited one." Id. at 384. This conclusion was based on two factors. First, the statute provided an "advisory opinion (AO) mechanism . . . authorized to give advice concerning the Act's application to specific factual situations," and mandated that such counsel be provided within 60 days of a request for advice. Id. 384-86. Second, the D.C. Circuit found that the legal rights alleged by Martin Tractor were "uncertain," id. at 386, and that unlike cases which had found ripeness in similar circumstances, the "adversarial posture assumed by the parties and contours of their dispute" were not clear, id. at 387. Specifically, the fact that the FEC "has said or done nothing . . . to indicate how it construes the term 'solicit,'" left the court "without substantial guidance to decide this case or even to frame the constitutional issues at stake." Id. at 387.

The situation this Court faces is virtually identical to that of Martin Tractor. Plaintiffs here similarly complain about the chilling effect of an ambiguous term. Plaintiffs, like those in Martin Tractor, have the option of seeking a chill-reducing AO if they fear their actions may be construed as "coordination."[96] In addition, since briefing and oral argument in the case occurred prior to the FEC's promulgation of final regulations and the regulations affect the vagueness alleged, the Court does not know the "contours of [the] dispute." In other [96] Plaintiffs' argument that Buckley should be construed as rejecting the opportunity for AO guidance as a factor in determining ripeness is completely incorrect, and in their own words, is "[n]onsense." Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. Buckley found that since the AO procedure in FECA at that time was available only to "candidates, federal officeholders, and political committees," the AO mechanism did "not assure that the vagueness concerns will be remedied prior to the chilling of political discussion by individuals and groups in this or future years." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 41 n. 47. This is no longer the case. See Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 386 n.44 (explaining why Buckley rejected the AO rationale and noting that "[b]oth of these aspects of the AO mechanism have been amended and the susceptibility of the FECA to challenge on the grounds of vagueness has consequently been reduced.").

Section 437f of FECA requires the FEC to provide an advisory opinion within 60 days of receiving a "written request concerning the application of [FECA] . . . or a rule or regulation prescribed by the" FEC. 2 U.S.C. § 437f(a)(1). The advisory opinions may be relied upon by the requester or any other person involved in an "identical transaction or activity with respect to which such advisory opinion is rendered." Id. at § 437f(c)(1). Such persons who "act[] in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion, shall not, as a result of any such act, be subject to any sanction provided by" FECA. Id. § 437f(c)(2).

Plaintiffs also assert that it is "wildly implausible" and "impractical" to believe that the FEC could handle the thousands of AO requests they envision would result from the Court's decision today. Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. Whether or not there would be such an influx of requests, and whether or not the FEC would be in a position to handle them, are not questions before this Court and Plaintiffs have provided the Court with no basis, other than their unsupported assertion, for finding that the AO mechanism would be unworkable for solving coordination problems.

words, the Court does not know to what extent the regulations have clarified the vagueness Plaintiffs contend would chill their rights. Regulations in the past have clarified this very issue, Chamber/NAM Br. at 13 (stating that the FEC's now-repealed regulations on coordination "took useful steps toward alleviating" vagueness problems), and it is therefore likely that some, if not all, of Plaintiffs concerns have been addressed. For example, the ACLU maintains that because of Section 214 it "may not be able to discuss a . . . vote or position with a Representative or Senator if the ACLU will subsequently produce a box score that praises or criticizes the official's stand. This feature of BCRA acts as a continuing prior restraint . . . ." ACLU Br. at 20. However, the FEC's recently promulgated regulations appear to assuage this fear, creating a safe harbor for "inquiries about legislative or policy issues." Final Rules; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures, 68 Fed. Reg. at 455 (Jan. 3, 2003) (to be codified at 11 C.F.R. § 109.21(f)). To decide Plaintiffs' claims at this juncture would entangle the Court in a dispute that has not been "presented in a clean-cut and concrete form," the exact situation the ripeness doctrine is designed to avoid. Gonzales, 64 F.3d at 1499.

The Chamber of Commerce and NAM seek to distinguish Martin Tractor from the current case on its facts. Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. First, they state that "[p]laintiff there did not claim immediate injury." Id. This is not the case. Martin Tractor alleged that "but for the [section] 441b restrictions and the threat of sanctions, [it] would resume the extent and manner of communication [it] engaged in previously." Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 382.

Second, Plaintiffs presume, based on the fact the court stated that the AO mechanism "argues against constitutional adjudication on a barren record," Id. at 385, that the appellants in that case had "provided no factual record." Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. If the Plaintiffs had referred to the footnote immediately following the court's statement, they would have seen that the court meant a record bare of any indication of how the FEC planned to enforce the provision, as opposed to a barren factual record. See Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 385 n.39 (citing cases holding "equitable relief inappropriate where administrative intent has not come to fruition or is unknown" and "case ripe where pertinent regulations and AO have been issued") (emphasis added). Next, the Chamber of Commerce and NAM appear to suggest that the Martin Tractor decision was the product of prudential concerns, and not an Article III ripeness determination. Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. Although the court stated, "we find the cases nonjusticiable as a constitutional matter and inappropriate for adjudication as a prudential matter," if Plaintiffs had looked at the footnote immediately following that statement, they would have read the Court's conclusion that "[s]ince we hold that these appellants present no justiciable 'case or controversy' we need not decide or consider the circumstances under which a court might decline for prudential reasons alone to reach the merits of a constitutional challenge to FECA." Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 378 & n.5. Lastly, the Chamber of Commerce and NAM point out that Martin Tractor discounted Buckley's ripeness holding for "lack of a broad package of expedited challenges such as exist here." Chamber/NAM Reply at 8. The Martin Tractor court did note that the case before it provided "no similar urgency of decision . . . that outweighs the inadvisability of premature constitutional adjudication," although its decision was also informed by "the comparative speed with which an advisory opinion on specific conduct can be secured." Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 388.[97] Accordingly, the Court finds that Martin Tractor is applicable to the pending cases.

The cases at bar do differ from Martin Tractor, in one material respect. Unlike the case before the Martin Tractor court, where there was no indication the FEC would ever promulgate regulations to reduce the vagueness of the undefined term, Congress in this instance has explicitly ordered the FEC to promulgate regulations on this very matter in an expedited fashion, and the FEC did so on January 3, 2003. This fact argues against finding these cases ripe for adjudication. As the Eighth Circuit explained, [97] The Court also notes that although the Martin Tractor court took Buckley's statement that "ripeness is peculiarly a question of timing," Buckley, 424 U.S. at 114, to describe the timing of that case in relation to the 1976 Presidential election, Martin Tractor, 627 F.2d at 388, a close reading of Buckley shows that the Supreme Court was referring to developments that had taken place in "the passage of months between the time of the decision of the Court of Appeals and our present ruling," Buckley, 424 U.S. at 114. The Supreme Court made its ripeness determination in the context of a separation of powers challenge to FECA's establishment of the FEC. Id. at 113. The Court finds that the challenge considered here differs greatly from that Buckley faced when it conducted the ripeness analysis described above. The separation of powers concerns raised in Buckley did not depend on the future promulgation of regulations, but focused solely on the constitutionality of the powers granted to the FEC. See id. at 113. The Buckley defendants could not claim that future regulations would shape the contours of the plaintiffs' claims. As such, this Court finds that the Buckley ripeness determination was made under circumstances that distinguish it from the case at bar and that its reasoning does not require the Court to forego Article III justiciability requirements in this case.

> [m]any ripeness cases require finality of the government action that is challenged. This requirement is intended, in part, to guard against courts passing on the legality of actions that do not, in and of themselves, alter or burden the rights, duties or obligations of the claimant. For example, orders that merely embody a precursor to the later formulation of actual regulations will, as a general rule, not support a finding of ripeness.

Gonzales, 64 F.3d at 1504 n.5 (citations omitted) (finding that, unlike the cases presented here, since the "challenged provision itself delineates the proscribed conduct and neither directs nor requires further administrative or legislative enactments for its effect" the case was ripe for adjudication); see also El Dia v. Hernandez Colon, 963 F.2d 488, 496 (1st Cir. 1992) (finding the "policies that underscore the ripeness doctrine militate strongly against granting discretionary (declaratory) relief" where the executive order challenged was "merely a precursor to the later formulation of actual regulations"). Moreover, as long as Plaintiffs abide by the regulations in good faith, they will not be subject to sanctions under FECA. 2 U.S.C. § 438(e) ("[A]ny person who relies upon a rule or regulation proscribed by the [FEC] . . . and who acts in good faith in accordance with such rule or regulation, shall not, as a result of such act, be subject to any sanction provided by [FECA].").

The Court acknowledges that the regulations may still be vetoed by Congress[98] or face

[98] Under the Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. 553(d), and the Congressional Review of Agency Rulemaking Act, 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1), the FEC's regulations must be submitted to Congress and do not take effect until 60 days after Congress receives the FEC's report on the regulations or the rule is published in the Federal Register, whichever is later. 5 U.S.C. § 801(a)(3). The regulations were transmitted to Congress on December 18, 2002 and published in the Federal Register on January 3, 2003. Final Rules; Coordinated and Independent Expenditures, 68 Fed. a court challenge. Regardless, the regulations shape the "contours" of Plaintiffs' complaints regarding Section 214(c). However, since the regulations are not properly before this Court, Plaintiffs' claims in this regard are not ripe. Again, it is possible that many, perhaps all, of Plaintiffs' concerns have been remedied by the recently promulgated regulations. The proper venue for any complaints Plaintiffs believe have not been addressed by the new regulations is not this special court, but in a single-judge court pursuant to a lawsuit brought under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). See BCRA § 403. Although Plaintiffs decry the lengthy nature of suits brought under the APA, the Court lacks the jurisdiction to rule on the regulations and cannot ignore the absence of Article III ripeness in order to provide Plaintiffs with the forum they prefer.[99] regulations within 60 days by passing a joint resolution disapproving the regulations. See 5 U.S.C. § 802.

Accordingly, the Court does not reach the merits of Plaintiffs' challenges to Section 214(c), as they are not ripe for adjudication.

[99] Plaintiffs should also be aware that should they challenge the FEC's regulations, they may seek a stay from the FEC or a court to prevent the application of the rule pending its review. 5 U.S.C. § 705. The law provides: "When an agency finds that justice so requires, it may postpone the effective date of action taken by it, pending judicial review. On such conditions as may be required and to the extent necessary to prevent irreparable injury, the reviewing court, including the court to which a case may be taken on appeal from or on application for certiorari or other writ to a reviewing court, may issue all necessary and appropriate process to postpone the effective date of an agency action or to preserve status or rights pending conclusion of the review proceedings." Id.

> specifies that coordination applies not only to a "contribution or expenditure" in the defined sense that requires express advocacy, but "also includes any direct or indirect payment . . . ." (emphasis added). BCRA § 214(d) extends coordination to an "electioneering communication." These provisions remove express advocacy as a content standard and give no substitute.

Chamber/NAM Opp'n at 8 (emphasis in original). The Court does not find Section 214(d) to have the effect on FECA that Plaintiffs assert. Section 214(d) amends FECA Section 441b, which limits contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, so that the definition of "contribution or expenditure" under that section "includes a contribution or expenditure, as those terms are defined in section 301" of FECA, 2 U.S.C. § 431(8), (9). BCRA § 214(d); FECA § 441b(b)(2); 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(2). The definitions of "contribution" and "expenditure" in FECA Section 301 have not been amended by BCRA.[100] Plaintiffs' complaints about the definition's inclusion of "direct or indirect payment" are also misplaced as this provision preexisted BCRA and is therefore not subject to this Court's review.

Given the fact that Plaintiffs' understanding of Section 214(d) is mistaken, the Court has no basis upon which to review the provision, cannot fathom the nature of their claims, and therefore does not find the provision unconstitutional.

[100] BCRA Section 203 adds "electioneering communication" to FECA Section 441b(b)(2)'s definition of "contribution or expenditure."

REV_00165501

C. BCRA Title III

Section 311: Clarity Standards for Identification of Sponsors of Election-Related Advertising

Section 311 amends Section 318 of FECA, 2 U.S.C. 441d, adding details and requirements for the identification of sponsors of political advertising. Included in the provision is the extension of FECA's requirements to electioneering communications, as defined in BCRA Section 201. BCRA § 311(1); FECA § 318(a); 2 U.S.C. § 441d(a). Pursuant to Section 318 of FECA, such communications must clearly state information about the sponsor, 2 U.S.C. § 441d(a); Section 311 adds various requirements related to the identification of the sponsor in the communication itself which are not challenged in the present litigation. See BCRA § 311(2), FECA § 318(c)-(d); 2 U.S.C. § 441d(c)-(d).

Plaintiffs' briefing on Section 311 is limited to a single sentence in a footnote in the McConnell Plaintiffs' Opening Brief:

> BCRA's requirement that political ads contain information identifying the candidate supported by the communication,[101] the party responsible for the content of the information, and/or an indication that the candidate approves the content of the communication . . . is . . . invalid, at least when applied to electioneering communications (and, for that matter, anything other than express advocacy).

McConnell Pls.' Br. at 56 n.22; see also Tr. at 303 (Baran).[102] This argument is presented as a corollary to Plaintiffs' contention that "if the Court agrees that the electioneering communications provisions cannot stand, the attendant disclosure provisions should likewise fall, because the disclosure provisions constitute a regulation of . . . speech that the government may not regulate in the first place. Id. at 55-56. Given that the Court finds BCRA's electioneering communication definition constitutional, Plaintiffs' argument is rejected.

[101] It is not clear to the Court where the Plaintiffs find this purported requirement from the text of Section 311.

V. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the Court finds that the Paul Plaintiffs' challenge is without merit. The Court finds that the disclosure requirements in Section 201, with one exception, are constitutional, as well as Sections 202, 214(a), 214(d) and 311. The Court concludes that a challenge to Sections 212 and the remainder of Section 214 is not justiciable.

In contrast with Judge Henderson's characterization of our approach, we believe that the resolution of these eleven suits required a careful and judicious review of all the evidence, pleadings, and arguments in a fair manner to all the parties. We are satisfied that we accomplished this goal in an as expedited a manner as possible and thereby served "the strong public interest in election law clarity and stability." Henderson Op. at 6 n.1.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 24, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

Based on your public comments yesterday, I am concerned that you may have inaccurate and incomplete information about Miguel Estrada's qualifications and about the historical practice with respect to judicial confirmations. Therefore, I write to respectfully reiterate and explain our conclusion that you and certain other Senators are applying an unfair double standard -- indeed, a series of unfair double standards -- to Miguel Estrada.

First, your request for confidential attorney-client memoranda Mr. Estrada wrote in the Office of Solicitor General seeks information that, based on our review, has not been demanded from past nominees to the federal courts of appeals. We are informed that the Senate has not requested memoranda such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department -- including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office. Nor have such memoranda been demanded from nominees in similar attorney-client situations: The Senate has not demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as Senate lawyers, such as memoranda written by Stephen Breyer as a Senate counsel before Justice Breyer was confirmed to the First Circuit in 1980. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as law clerks to Supreme Court Justices or other federal or state judges. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had worked for private clients.

The very few isolated examples you have cited were not nominees for federal appeals courts. Moreover, those situations involved Executive Branch accommodations of targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues that were primarily related to allegations of malfeasance or misconduct in a federal office. We respectfully do not believe these examples support your request. Our conclusion about the general lack of support and precedent for your position is buttressed by the fact that every living former Solicitor General (four Democrats and three Republicans) has strongly opposed your request and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. In short, the traditional practice of the Senate and the Executive Branch with respect to federal appeals court nominations stands in contrast to your request here and supports our conclusion that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. (Also, contrary to your suggestion yesterday, please note that no one in the Executive Branch has reviewed these memoranda since President Bush took office in January 2001.)

Second, you suggested that "no judicial nominee that I'm aware of, for such a high court, has ever had so little of a record." I respectfully disagree. Miguel Estrada has been a very accomplished lawyer, trying cases before federal juries, briefing and arguing numerous appeals before federal and state appeals courts, and arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, among his other significant work. His record and breadth of experience exceeds that of many judicial nominees, which is no doubt why the American Bar Association -- which you have labeled the "gold standard" -- unanimously rated him "well-qualified." In noting yesterday that Mr. Estrada's career had been devoted to "arguing for a client," you appeared to imply that only those with prior judicial service (or perhaps "a lot of [law review] articles") may serve on the federal appeals courts. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial service at the time of their appointments. Indeed, Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist, White, and Powell -- to name three of the most recent -- had not served as judges before being confirmed to the Supreme Court. And like Mr. Estrada, two appointees of President Clinton to the D.C. Circuit (Judge David Tatel and Judge Merrick Garland) had similarly spent their careers "arguing for a client," but were nonetheless confirmed.

As the Chief Justice noted in his 2001 Year-End Report, moreover, "[t]he federal Judiciary has traditionally drawn from a wide diversity of professional backgrounds." The Chief Justice cited Justice Louis Brandeis, Justice John Harlan, Justice Byron White, Judge Thurgood Marshall (as nominee to the Second Circuit), Judge Learned Hand, and Judge John Minor Wisdom as just a few examples of great judges who had spent virtually their entire careers "arguing for a client" before becoming Supreme Court Justices or federal appeals court judges. As these examples show, had the "arguing for a client" standard been applied in the past, it would have deprived the American people of many of our most notable appellate judges. Based on our understanding, this standard has not been applied in the past. This further explains why we have concluded that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

Third, you stated that "when you went to those hearings, Mr. Estrada answered no questions." The record demonstrates otherwise. Mr. Estrada answered more than 100 questions at his hearing (and another 25 in follow-up written answers). He explained in some detail his approach to judging on many issues, and did so appropriately without providing his personal views on specific legal or policy questions that could come before him – which is how previous judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have appropriately answered questions. Indeed, at his hearing, Mr. Estrada was asked and answered more questions, and did so more fully, than did President Clinton's appointees to this same court. Judge David Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Judith Rogers and Merrick Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions. The three appointees of President Clinton – combined – thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, like Mr. Estrada, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions at the hearing. Judge Rogers refused to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Mr. Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty, stating that he would follow precedent. In short, we believe that your criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing reveals that another unfair double standard is being applied to Mr. Estrada.

Fourth, you stated that the Founding Fathers "came to the conclusion that the Senate ought to ask a whole lot of questions" of judicial nominees. We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate should make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. But your characterization of the Senate's role with respect to judicial nominations is not consistent with our reading of historical or traditional practice. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." The Federalist 76. The Framers anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." Id. Moreover, the Senate did not hold hearings on judicial nominees for much of American history, and the hearings for lower-court nominees in modern times traditionally have not included the examination of personal views that you have advocated. (My letter of February 12, 2003, to Senators Daschle and Leahy contains more detail on this point.) Indeed, just a few years ago, Senator Biden made clear, consistent with the traditional practice, that he would vote to confirm an appeals court judge if he were convinced that the nominee would follow precedent and otherwise was of high ability and integrity.

In short, it appears that you are seeking to change the Senate's traditional standard for assessing judicial nominees. We respect your right to advocate a change, but we do not believe that the standard you seek to apply is consistent with the Framers' vision, the traditional Senate practice, or the Senate's treatment of President Clinton's nominees. Rather, we believe a new standard is being devised and applied to Miguel Estrada.

Fifth, you stated yesterday that a "filibuster" is not an appropriate term to describe what has been occurring in the Senate. We respectfully disagree. Democrat Senators have objected to unanimous consent motions to schedule a vote, and they have indicated that they will continue to do so. That tactic is historically and commonly known as a filibuster, and is a dramatic escalation of the tactics used to oppose judicial nominees. Indeed, in 1998, Senator Leahy stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators." 144 Cong. Rec. S6522 (June 18, 1998). In our judgment, the tactics now being employed again show that Miguel Estrada is receiving differential treatment.

As I have said before, I appreciate and respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process. You have expressed concern that you do not know enough about Mr. Estrada's views, but you have not submitted any follow-up questions to him. We respectfully submit that the Senate has ample information and has had more than enough time to consider questions about the qualifications and suitability of a nominee submitted more than 21 months ago. Most important, we believe that a majority of Senators have now concluded that they possess sufficient information on Mr. Estrada and would vote to confirm him. We believe it is past time for the Senate to vote on this nominee, and we urge your support.

Sincerely,

DRAFT

May __, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter of April 30.

You propose that the President and Senate leader of the opposite party select in equal numbers members of citizen judicial nominating commissions in each State who would then select one nominee for each judicial vacancy. The President then would be required to nominate the individual selected by the commission and the Senate required to confirm that individual, at least absent "evidence" that the candidate is "unfit for judicial service." You propose this as a permanent change to the constitutional scheme for appointment of federal judges.

We respectfully disagree with your proposal as inconsistent with the Constitution, with the history and traditions of the Nation's federal judicial appointments process, and with the soundest approach for appointment of highly qualified federal judges, as the Founders determined. Rather, as President Bush and many Senators of both parties have stated in the past, the solution to the broken judicial confirmation process is for the Senate to exercise its constitutional responsibility to vote up or down on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

I. The Constitution, the Current Problem, and the Solution

Article II of the Constitution provides: "The President shall nominate, and by with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges of the supreme court, and all other Officers of the United States." During the first Congress and throughout most of this Nation's history, the Senate has both recognized and exercised its constitutional responsibility under Article II to hold majority, up-or-down votes on a President's nominations within a reasonable time after nomination. The Framers intended that this Senate vote on nominations would prevent Presidential appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist 76.

Your proposal would effectively transfer the nomination and confirmation power from the President and the Senate to a group of unelected and unaccountable private citizens. As the Supreme Court has explained, however, the Appointments Clause is "more than a matter of etiquette or protocol; it is among the significant structural safeguards of the constitutional scheme. By vesting the President with the exclusive power to select the principal (noninferior) officers of the United States, the Appointments Claude prevents congressional encroachment upon the Executive and Judicial Branches. This disposition was also designed to assure a higher quality of appointments: the Framers anticipated that the President would be less vulnerable to interest-group pressure and personal favoritism than would a collective body." Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651, 659 (1997) (citations omitted). Importantly, as the Supreme Court has also explained, the Appointments Clause not only guards against encroachment "but also preserves another aspect of the Constitution's structural integrity by preventing the diffusion of the appointment power." Freytag v. CIR, 501 U.S. 868, __ (1991). Therefore, "neither Congress nor the Executive can agree to waive the structural protections" afforded by the Appointments Clause. Id. These principles and precedents amply demonstrate the constitutional and structural problems with any proposal to transfer the constitutional responsibilities of the President and the Senate to a group of unelected and unaccountable private citizens.

That said, we very much appreciate your recognition that the Senate's judicial confirmation process is "broken." The precise problem, in our judgment, is that the Senate has too often failed in recent years to hold votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination (often because a minority of Senators has used procedural tactics to prevent the Senate from voting and expressing its majority will). Many appeals court nominees have waited years for hearings; many others have never received votes. Today, for example, although the Senate never before has denied a vote to an appeals court nominee on account of a filibuster, a minority of Senators are engaged in unprecedented simultaneous filibusters to prevent up or down votes on two superb nominees, Priscilla Owen and Miguel Estrada, who were nominated two years ago and who have the support of a majority of the Senate.

The problem of the Senate not holding votes on certain judicial nominees is a relatively recent development, albeit not new to this President. In the Administrations of both President George H.W. Bush in the 102nd Congress and President Clinton in the 106th Congress, for example, too many appeals court nominees never received up-or-down votes. The problem has reached a new level in the 107th and 108th Congress, however, during this President's tenure.

President Bush's commitment to solving this problem also is not new. In June 2000, during the Presidential campaign, then-Governor Bush emphasized that the Senate should hold up-or-down votes on all nominees within a reasonable time after nomination (60 days). Last fall, after two additional years of Senate delays that were causing a judicial vacancy crisis (an "emergency situation," in the words of the American Bar Association), the President proposed a comprehensive three-Branch plan to solve the problem. President Bush stated that this three-Branch plan should apply now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. In particular, he proposed that judges provide one-year advance notice of retirement where possible; in March 2003, the Judicial Conference adopted the President's recommendation. The President proposed that Presidents nominate judges within 180 days of learning of a vacancy; the President is complying with this part of the plan and already has submitted nominations, for example, for the 15 new judgeships created on November 2, 2002. The President also proposed that the Senate vote up or down on judicial nominees within 180 days of receiving a nomination, a generous period of time for all Senators to evaluate nominees and to have their voices heard and their votes counted.

In the past, you and Senators of both parties have publicly agreed with the need for timely Senate votes on judicial nominees. On March 7, 2000, for example, you stated: "It is an example of Government not fulfilling its constitutional mandate because the President nominates, and we are charged with voting on the nominees. . . . I also plead with my colleagues to move judges with alacrity – vote them up or down. But this delay makes a mockery of the Constitution, makes a mockery of the fact that we are here working, and makes a mockery of the lives of the very sincere people who have themselves forward to be judges and then they hang out there in limbo."

In the 2000 campaign, moreover, several Democrat Senators such as Senator Leahy and Senator Harkin publicly agreed with then-Governor Bush's proposal for timely votes on nominees. In addition, Senator Specter in 2002, Senator Leahy in 1998, and Senator Bob Graham in 1991 all introduced Senate proposals to ensure timely up-or-down votes on judicial nominees. The Chief Justice, speaking on behalf of the Judiciary, also has expressly asked the Senate to ensure up-or-down votes on nominees. And the American Bar Association, for its part, adopted a resolution last summer asking the Senate to hold prompt votes on judicial nominations, stating: "Vote them up or down. But don't hang them out to dry."

In seeking to fix the broken Senate confirmation process, we respectfully ask that you and other Senators consider these past statements and prescriptions, a sample of which are listed below, and ensure timely up-or-down Senate votes on all judicial nominees, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate:

- Senator Leahy on October 3, 2000, stated: "Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this."

- Senator Leahy on June 18, 1998, stated: "I have stated over an over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators."

- Senator Daschle on October 5, 1999, stated: "As Chief Justice Rehnquist has recognized, 'The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much. . . . I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination."

- Senator Harkin on September 14, 2000, stated: "I'll just close by saying that Governor Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination."

    - Senator Harkin on October 6, 2000, stated that then-Governor Bush's proposal for an up-or-down vote within 60 days of nomination was a "great idea."

- Senator Biden on March 19, 1997, stated: "I respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated is entitled to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor."

- Senator Bob Graham on April 24, 1991, introduced a bill that would require the Judiciary Committee to report a nomination within 90 days of nomination and would require an up-or-down vote on the floor within 120 days of nomination. Senator Graham stated: "I consider it a judicial emergency when a judgeship is vacant for one day more than necessary."

- Senator Kennedy on February 3, 1998, stated: "We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote. If our Republican colleagues do not like them, vote against them. But give them a vote."

    - On September 21, 1999, Senator Kennedy stated: "It is true that some Senators have voiced concerns about these nominations. But that should not prevent a roll call vote which gives every Senator the opportunity to vote 'yes' or 'no.' . . . [D]elays can only be described as an abdication of the Senate's constitutional responsibility to work with the President and ensure the integrity of the courts."

- Senator Durbin on September 28, 1998, stated: "Vote the person up or down. . . . I am not suggesting that we would give our consent to all of these nominees. I am basically saying that this process should come to a close. The Senate should vote."

- Senator Feinstein on September 16, 1999, stated: "A nominee is entitled to a vote. Vote them up; vote them down."

    - Senator Feinstein on October 4, 1999, stated: "Our institutional integrity requires an up-or-down vote."

- Senator Harry Reid on June 9, 2001, stated: "I think we should have up-or-down votes in the committee and on the floor."

- Senator Feingold on March 8, 2000, stated: "All Judge Paez has ever asked for was this opportunity: an up or down vote on his confirmation. Yet for years, the Senate has denied him that simple courtesy."

- Senator Kohl: on September 21, 1999, stated: "These nominees, who have to put their lives on hold waiting for us to act, deserve an up or down vote."

    - On May 15, 1997, Senator Kohl stated: "[L]et's breathe life back into the confirmation process. Let's vote on the nominees who have already been approved by the Judiciary Committee, and let's set a timetable for future hearings on pending judges. Let's fulfill our constitutional responsibilities."

- Senator Lincoln on September 14, 2000, stated: "If we want to respect the government again, then government must act respectably. It's my hope that we'll take the necessary steps to give these men and these women especially the up or down vote that they deserve."

- Senator Boxer on January 28, 1998, stated: "I think, whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democratic side, let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote."

    - Senator Boxer on May 14, 1997, stated: "According to the U.S. Constitution, the President nominates, and the Senate shall provide advice and consent. It is not the role of the Senate to obstruct the process and prevent numbers of highly qualified nominees from even being given the opportunity for a vote on the Senate floor."

- Senator Sarbanes on December 15, 1997, stated: "This politicization . . . has been extended to include the practice of denying nominees an up or down vote on the Senate floor or even in the Judiciary Committee. If the majority of the Senate opposes a judicial nominee enough to derail a nomination by an up or down vote, then at least the process has been served."

    - Senator Sarbanes on March 19, 1997, stated: "It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed. You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an up or down vote. That is the problem today."

- Senator Levin on September 14, 2000, stated: "The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether to not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts."

    - Senator Levin on May 24, 2000, stated: "The candidates for these vacancies . . . deserve to have an up or down vote on their nominations."

II. Other Points Regarding Your Proposal

I also want to make three other points regarding your proposal.

First, contrary to an implicit suggestion in your proposal, the members of these citizen committees themselves will bring their own views about the best qualities for judicial candidates, and their own preferences and visions and ideologies. But there is an important difference between these private citizens, on the one hand, and the President and 100 Senators, on the other. The American people did not elect these citizens to exercise this critical constitutional responsibility and cannot hold them accountable for their exercise of it.

Moreover, the Framers of the Constitution expressly considered and rejected a committee nomination process, concluding that such a process was unlikely to focus on the "intrinsic merit of the candidate." Federalist 76 (quotes to follow from Federalist 76). As Hamilton explained, "in every exercise of the power of appointing to offices by an assembly of men we must expect to see a full display of all the private and party likings and dislikes, partialities and antipathies, attachments and animosities, which felt by those who compose the assembly." It will "rarely happen that the advancement of the public service will be the primary object either of party victories or of party negotiations."

By contrast, "[t]he sole and undivided responsibility of one man" – the President – "will naturally beget a livelier sense of duty and a more exact regard to reputation. He will, on this account, feel himself under stronger obligations, and more interested to investigate with care the qualities requisite to the stations to be filled, and to prefer with impartiality the persons who may have the latest pretensions to them." The Framers wanted the President alone to exercise the power of nomination, moreover, because the "blame of a bad nomination would fall upon the President singly and absolutely." In a committee nomination process, by contrast, "all idea of responsibility is lost."

For these reasons, the Framers concluded that the President alone was to nominate and the Senate as a body was to vote on the President's nominations.

Second, you explain that your proposal would ensure the merit of federal judges. In your letter to President Bush of March 16, 2001, however, you and Senator Leahy expressed their view that the American Bar Association ratings provide "unique, unbiased and essential information" about judicial candidates, and provide an "independent, apolitical evaluation" of their qualifications. You referred to the ABA rating as the "gold standard" for evaluating nominees. To date, all 42 of the President's appeals court nominees rated so far have received "well-qualified" or "qualified" ratings. By the standard outlined in your letter of March 16, 2001, all of these appeals court nominees warrant your support.

Third, you explain that your proposal would avoid "extremist" judges. The Framers intended that the President would nominate judges and the Senate as a body would vote up-or-down on the nominations to express the majority will of the Senate. The constitutional scheme of Presidential appointment and majority vote in the Senate ensures that the nominees are not unfit.

Fourth, we assume that you mean to include Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen in your description of "extremist" given the extraordinary filibusters of their nominations. Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen represent the mainstream of American law and American values, as indicated by the fact that the President nominated them and a majority of the Senate supports them. Moreover, Miguel Estrada is supported by prominent Democrat lawyers such as Seth Waxman and Ron Klain and by a bipartisan group of 15 former colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, among many others. He worked for four years in the Clinton Administration. He was unanimously rated "well-qualified" by the American Bar Association. Priscilla Owen is supported by three former Democrat Justices on the Texas Supreme Court with whom she served and 15 past Presidents of the State Bar of Texas. She also received a unanimous "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association. These nominees are the mainstream. It bears note, moreover, that you and other Democrat Senators have supported nominees such as Jay Bybee and Michael McConnell who, if anything, have more significant public statements on the issues that concern you. We therefore believe that an unfair double standard is being applied to both Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

* * *

Thank you for your letter. We agree that the Senate judicial confirmation process is broken. The President believes that the fix is for the Senate to ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable time after nomination, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Subject: EPA FUNDED PANEL URGES U.S. TO BAN ASBESTOS IMPORTS ; MANY MEMBERS HAVE TIES TO INDUSTRY; RECOMMENDATION SURPRISES OBSERVERS

All - this will likely find its way into the current debate, or Murray/Cantwell will make part of the asbestos debate. I think Murray has long sponsored a permanent ban on asbestos use bill. Insurers don't have a dog in the fight, and NAM is looking into whether or not some of their members would oppose a entire ban of the product.

NEWS

PANEL URGES U.S. TO BAN ASBESTOS IMPORTS ; MANY MEMBERS HAVE TIES TO INDUSTRY; RECOMMENDATION SURPRISES OBSERVERS St. Louis Post-Dispatch 4 May 2003

Andrew Schneider Of The Post-Dispatch

A blue-ribbon panel funded by the Environmental Protection Agency has issued a surprising recommendation calling on Congress to ban the import, production and distribution of products containing asbestos.

The deadly mineral is no longer mined in the United States, yet the government says about 30 millions pounds of the lethal fibers are being imported into the country each year.

The findings come as a shock to some of those who have long advocated a ban because so many of the panel's members have ties to industries involved with asbestos. That gives the panel's recommendations extraordinary weight, those involved with the asbestos issue say, and could aid efforts already under way in the Senate to outlaw the importation of the deadly fibers.

The U.S. Geological Survey, which tracks the import and export of minerals, says an additional "untold millions" of pounds of asbestos material crosses U.S. borders unlabeled and mixed with other products.

The order for the creation of the panel came last year from the EPA's inspector general. The office had been investigating the agency's failure to take action over 20 years in dealing with the asbestos contamination of miners and their families in the tiny town of Libby, Mont. Hundreds of people had died and thousands were sickened from asbestos-related disease caused by inhalation of tremolite fibers that contaminated a now-closed vermiculite mine operated by W.R. Grace & Co.

As early as 1982, the EPA had documented the dangers of the tainted ver miculite and showed that it constituted a significant health risk not only to the miners and residents of Libby, but to hundreds of communities throughout the country where the vermiculite was shipped and processed into home insulation and other products. The agency did nothing with the information.

The inspector general said a panel from the asbestos industry, government and environmental, labor, academic and medical experts should be assembled and review the government's handling of the toxic fibers. It gave a $200,000 contract to Global Environment & Technology to gather and present the recommendations.

Many in government who have fought the asbestos battle for years said they expected little to come out of the panel because the dominant number of participants came from industries somehow involved with asbestos. Unions representing steelworkers, auto workers and miners did not accept the invitation to participate, nor did any leading environmental or medical groups.

"It is surprising that a ban was recommended, and its importance cannot be overstated," said J. Brent Kynoch, managing director of Environmental Information Association, which represents environmental industry professionals. "The recommendations have major significance because the EPA funded the collection of information," said Kynoch, who participated in the meetings.

The 71-page document recommends a ban that is almost identical to that introduced in June by Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash. Murray was strident in her efforts to educate her colleagues on the prevalence of asbestos throughout the country.

Asbestos is a killer. The fibers, which can only be seen through a microscope, can be inhaled into the lungs, where they are deeply embedded into the tissue or impaled into the lining of the lungs or abdomen. There, the fibers fester and scar, eventually making the lungs uselessly rigid. Cancerous tumors can also fill lungs with mustard-yellow fluid, the consistency of honey, until the vital organs can no longer absorb life-sustaining oxygen.

Murray said Friday that she applauds the action of the EPA- sponsored panel.

"This report reinforces two things I have been saying for a long time. First, asbestos is still a serious problem in this country. Second, Congress needs to pass the Ban Asbestos in America Act now.

"This report makes it increasingly difficult for anyone to oppose this needed legislation."

No action was taken on Murray's bill in the last session, but the senator says she plans to reintroduce the legislation in the next several weeks.

Wide-ranging recommendations

EPA consultants questioned 53 authorities from various private, industry and government organizations. In October, 37 of these experts met to hammer out the recommendations. In addition to the ban, the panel recommended increased education of asbestos risks, handling, sampling and testing methods, and the reduction of unintended asbestos in products and the development of a national mesothelioma registry. Mesothelioma is an almost always fatal, quick- killing cancer of the thin linings of major organs. It is caused by asbestos exposure.

One of the more obvious and easily implemented recommendations was that government agencies enforce existing asbestos regulations. It recommends that the EPA, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Consum er Product Safety Commission and state regulators "focus on more stringent, predictable and consistent enforcement" of laws and regulations already on the books.

The need for stiffer enforcement by all government agencies is well-documented by research conducted by public interest groups and congressional investigators.

For example, in November 2000, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer collected and analyzed samples of dust from 31 brake-repair garages across the country. Dangerous levels of asbestos were detected in 21 of the locations. Public health experts said the exposure levels were so high in some locations that more than one in 10 mechanics working without protective gear would likely contract cancer.

Yet OSHA headquarters did nothing, even though many of its regional inspectors said they were frustrated by their agency's cavalier attitude to worker safety.

The Seattle newspaper also tested replacement brakes purchased at dozens of parts stores and found that most contained asbestos, even though the boxes were marked "asbestos free."

The Consumer Product Safety Commission said at the time that there was nothing it could do about it.

Naturally occurring asbestos

The ban, as proposed, targets products with asbestos intentionally added, but the report repeatedly discusses the proven danger of products containing naturally occurring asbestos, such as the tremolite and actinolite fibers found in Libby.

"Incidences of asbestos contamination in talc, vermiculite, play sand, crayons and art supplies have arisen," the report said.

Crayola and two other major crayon manufacturers removed asbestos-containing talc from their products two years ago after the Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported finding trace amounts of asbestos in dozens of crayons it tested.

But little attention was paid to the health of workers at the talc mine in upstate New York where the fine white powder is mined. The company, in Gouverneur, insists there is no danger.

But in the small mining villages of Talcville and Balmat, scores of old miners can be found sucking oxygen from tanks to keep their asbestos-encrusted lungs from failing.

The same scenes can be found in the Iron Range of Minnesota and Michigan, where hundreds of taconite miners, railroaders and barge crews have died or been sickened by asbestos-caused illnesses.

The Mining Safety and Health Administration, under the administration of President Bill Clinton, said it was "appalled" that its agency knew 45 years ago that the miners at Libby were in grave danger and did nothing. The then-administrator, Davitt McAteer, promised "it will never happen again," and started an intensive inspection program of all talc and taconite mines and the nation's three remaining vermiculite operations. The agency's efforts stalled after Clinton left office.

The contamination problems become even more complex for government regulators, the panel said, when you're dealing with naturally occurring asbestos in the soil. The panel raised the issue of California, where, it said, 20 percent of the soil contains high levels of tremolite. Chris Bowman of the Sacramento Bee has been reporting for years on schools and large residential areas being built on ground heavily contaminated with tremolite, which investigators working in Libby have shown to be more toxic than other asbestos fibers.

Science must catch up

Most agencies have worked under the assumption that products that contained less than 1 percent asbestos were not harmful and need not be regulated.

"Products with less than 1 percent can also be dangerous if in handling the product there is a significant fiber release," the report said. This was confirmed by three years of extensive testing of products produced with the asbestos-contaminated vermiculite from the W.R. Grace mine in Libby.

Tests by the EPA, the Canadian government, private scientists and Grace itself have repeatedly documented that the insulation, believed to be in the attics and wall of as many as 35 million homes, immediately generated dangerously high levels of exposure when even gently disturbed.

The EPA's long-awaited notifications to homeowners of the dangers of the Zonolite vermiculite insulation is now expected within two weeks, the agency says.

The EPA has declined to talk publicly about its reactions to the panel's recommendation. But when it comes to banning asbestos the agency has a right to be somewhat gun-shy.

In 1989, after years of research, the EPA announced a ban of most asbestos-containing products. But in 1991, the agency was sued by American and Canadian asbestos interests, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit overturned most of the ban.

The EPA urged that the court's decision be appealed, but the White House of President George Bush refused to allow its Justice Department to go against the asbestos industry.

In a statement Friday, the agency said, "EPA is still reviewing the draft report and has made no specific determinations on any of the recommendations included in the report."

Thirty-one countries have already banned asbestos on the grounds that there is no safe exposure level.

"The ban in the United States is long overdue," said Barry Castleman, a nationally recognized authority in asbestos issues and a former science adviser to the European Commission on matters involving the ban.

"The political pressure from some industries to fight an asbestos ban has been enormous, but this report is the clearest signal possible that Sen. Murray's legislation must be passed and implemented as soon as possible," said Castleman, who participated in the EPA-funded panel.

"The ban will be good for American businesses and their workers," he said. "No longer will American manufacturers have to compete with asbestos products from China and other countries where workers are not protected from the killer fibers."

How about 5-5:30 on Thursday. He has to go to an award ceremony at 6pm - so we would have to do before. What do you think? Orr - How is the traffic at that time?

Testimony of Wayne A. Abernathy
Assistant Secretary for Financial Institutions
U.S. Department of the Treasury before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit Committee on Financial Services
U.S. House of Representatives

May 8, 2003

Good morning Chairman Bachus, Ranking Member Sanders, and members of the subcommittee. I am honored to appear before you today in what is, as I understand from the announcement by Committee Chairman Oxley and Ranking Member Frank, the first of a series of hearings "on continuing the current national standards contained in the Fair Credit Reporting Act." Chairman Oxley has said that he looks forward "to developing legislation that will command broad, bipartisan support," and Congressman Frank has stressed, that "It is very important that we legislate this year, as key provisions of the law will expire." In a February letter to Representative Hinojosa, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan called for making the FCRA uniform standards permanent, and wrote, "Limits on the flow of information among financial market participants . . . may lead to an increase in the price or a reduction in the availability of credit, as well as a reduction in the optimal sharing of risk and reward." We in turn look forward to working with you in the days to come.

As a beginning, I am grateful for the opportunity to discuss a subject that has been of great importance to every man, woman, and child in America. It is important to the young couple who buys their first home—and every subsequent home—to the worker who applies for his or her first job—and every subsequent job—to the young entrepreneur applying for a loan to start a business, or seeking new customers or verifying their credit purchases.

It furthers Internet commerce, facilitates background checks on children's day care providers, and is responsible for $300 billion or more each year of credit extended to people who once stood outside the fringe of mainstream financial institutions looking in. And of increasing importance each day, it gives merchants the information to unmask would-be identity thieves, speeds alerts to law enforcement officials—crossing state lines faster than the crooks—and distributes notices instantly all across the nation to start the process of restoring the records of identity theft's victims.

I refer to our national credit system and the network of consumer information that under girds it. Seven years ago, Congress began an experiment, to test whether this information network was in fact a national market, within the meaning of Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution that merited uniform national standards for its regulation. Today and in subsequent days you will be listening to reports on what has happened. You will build a record of how the uniform standards under the FCRA are used to provide credit, tailor insurance products, speed up retail purchases of goods and services, increase access to financing for small business owners to expand their operations and provide jobs, to open doors to good jobs for workers with good records, to increase the variety of investment opportunities for those workers to build nest eggs for retirement or for college for their children.

Let me illustrate with a couple of personal examples. I still recall as a young child, my mother taking me by the hand into our local bank to open up my passbook savings account. By the way, let me mention that I was given my first lessons in financial education by my parents—who taught me how to balance a checkbook, how to save for the future, not to borrow for what I didn't need, and many other similar lessons—and we would like to encourage parents today to do the same for their children.

In those days when my mother first took me into a bank, if a new customer wanted a bank loan, say to finance a family vacation, the bank was very likely to say, "We would love to have you as a customer. Open up a checking or savings account and bank with us a while so that we can get to know you, and after a few months we can talk about a personal loan." Today, I can walk for the first time into nearly any bank anywhere in America, and, choosing from a variety of financial services, obtain a product tailored for the needs and condition of my family and me. That financial product is readily available not because the banker knows a lot about me from its own experience. It is available because the banker can look, nearly instantaneously, at my credit history and learn who I am, confident that he is getting the full story. And those products are available to me in such variety, not just from what the bank knows about me, but because it knows a million people like me and know how to price my risk. And that is just as true for the small bank as it is for the large bank.

I still vividly remember a family vacation in 1965. Traveling by car from south Florida, where we then lived, my parents discovered—in Wisconsin—that we had spent a bit more than planned at our stop along the way at the New York World's Fair. In Wisconsin, the travelers checks ran out. Today, not a problem. Many of our vacation expenses would be on a credit card, we could obtain a cash advance from an ATM machine, we could even get extension of credit from a Wisconsin bank. Not so in 1965. A bank loan fifteen hundred miles from home was not an option. Fortunately, our predicament occurred on a week day during business hours, and my parents at last found the office of a national finance company that would loan us the money to get back home—at much higher, finance company interest rates.

Because of the evolution of our national financial system, supported by a national information network, such stories today sound quaint. But those, and far greater difficulties than those, made up the fabric of our consumer finance system not so very long ago.

Of particular importance to the Treasury is the central role that the FCRA's uniform national standards play today in combating identity theft. Identity theft is a crime that strikes directly at the integrity of our consumer financial system. It is one of the fastest growing crimes in America. By some estimates, there will be as many as one million new victims this year, with many times that number already in the ranks of sufferers.

In a recent national survey of homeowners, 12% reported having been casualties of identity theft, and 22% reported knowing family, friends, or acquaintances who have been. It is hard to think of another crime that has touched such a large portion of Americans. In that same survey, 90% said that they were concerned that they might be a target of identity theft. A separate survey recently found that Americans are more concerned about becoming a victim of identity theft than they are of losing their job. No wonder that 83% believe that the government should take steps to fight the crime.

Many suffer from the unauthorized use of their own legitimate credit card. This is one of the milder versions of the crime, and today perhaps the most common. Fortunately, it is also an aspect where perhaps the greatest work has been achieved in fighting it. As long as the consumer is diligent and promptly reports lost or stolen cards or unauthorized charges, the direct liability to the card holder is zero. The Truth in Lending Act sets the maximum loss at $50, but credit card companies have found that there are great benefits in consumer confidence from eliminating all liability for the innocent victim. The loss still occurs, though, and it adds up to billions each year, ultimately born by all card users in higher prices and higher interest rates.

Credit card companies also have elaborate and well-designed information-sharing systems in place, neuronetworks, that monitor customers' accounts and quickly notify them of charges that are out of the ordinary, such as purchases outside the customers' normal buying patterns or far from home. This is an important deterrent to this type of identity theft. Other financial sectors are working on deterrents appropriate for their business. Much more needs to be done.

The crime occurs in great variety. As I speak, somewhere, someone is using someone else's good name to engage in fraud, to steal from a furniture store, rob a bank account, engage in stock swindles, write bad checks, run up huge phone bills, escape gambling debts, shield illegal drug deals, create false résumés, impersonate doctors or other professionals, destroy reputations.

Do not look for patriotism among identity thieves. When our soldiers, sailors, and airmen move to the front lines to engage the enemy, the identity thieves are ready to take advantage of their absence to steal their identities to commit fraud. I would guess that the soldier in the Third Infantry Division in Baghdad is not giving much thought to his bank account, or worrying about his credit cards, certainly not looking at his financial statements. But the fraudster is paying attention, for he knows that the fraud could go undetected for a long time, unless friends and family are vigilant, on the watch here at home over the financial affairs of the service man and woman overseas.

Not even the dead are immune from identity theft. Necrolarceny is one of the more repulsive, but not uncommon, faces of the crime. Thieves scan the obituaries, gather the information provided there to impersonate the deceased. From the obituary, the thief harvests a wealth of knowledge: the full name, a maiden name, age, names of family members, possibly education and charitable activities—all types of information that the thief can draw from to impersonate the deceased and, possibly, other family members. And closing down financial accounts are not usually high on the To Do List of bereaved family members. Yet there may be a tragic surprise awaiting when a will reaches probate and the family members learn how financially active their mother was in the days and weeks following her death.

No one sitting in this hearing room is immune from identity theft. Undoubtedly, there are many here who have been victimized or know someone who has. There may be some here who are being victimized right now and won't know of it for several more weeks or months.

Perhaps someone is dumpster diving, going through your trash to get important bits of information about you or your accounts. Perhaps someone will call, impersonating a government employee, asking to "verify" some of your personal data in order to continue to send you your Social Security check or veterans benefits. Maybe you will be snared by a supposedly "free" service on the Internet, that only needs your name, address, date of birth, and so on, in order to provide you with access to the free service.

Arguably, the most virulent form of identity theft occurs where the crook takes your good name and uses it to open new accounts that you know nothing of, with the statements going to places you have never been, so that weeks and months pass without your knowledge of the fraud. The crook may even keep up minimum payments for a time until he can max out on the credit limits. Then he disappears, the payments stop and the creditors come looking. But they don't find the crook. They don't look for the crook. They look for you. And you discover the fraud when you can't pay for your dinner because your charge will not clear. Your home equity loan is turned down because there already is a lien on your house. You lose your job, because, though your boss is very sorry and thought you were an exemplary employee, he can't have someone in such a sensitive job who has such a poor credit history.

And then you find perhaps the ugliest face of all the ugly faces associated with the crime of identity theft, the face of the victim. Where do you go? How do you begin to clear your name? How do you convince creditors all around the country that you never made those transactions, that there must be some mistake? Do you turn to your local police department? They might fill out a police report, but victims report that many do not. What can the local police do about it anyway? The crime took place in Bigtown, not in your home town. Will the Bigtown police take up the case? Maybe, but you live in Virginia. Who will handle a case for a victim living in Charlottesville, for fraudulent transactions made in Miami, Denver, and San Francisco, with money borrowed over the Internet from a bank headquartered in Philadelphia? Crooks have long sought to exploit State lines to avoid punishment.

The General Accounting Office reports that it can take victims as many as 175 man hours to clear their name and their records. That would be the equivalent of more than one full month of 8-hour days, five-day work weeks of full-time work. Of course, that is spread out over time, over months and sometimes years, with thousands of dollars of expenses.

What role have the uniform national standards in the FCRA played in the fight against identity theft? First of all, we need to recognize that it is not information that makes the crime possible. It is lack of information. The identity thief wears a mask. He impersonates someone he is not. Information made possible by the FCRA allows the merchant or the banker to look behind the mask. Uniform, up to date information allows the merchant or the banker to know more about his customer than the thief does. And when the thief crosses State lines to strike again, through FCRA information sharing, warnings cross the border faster than the thief and meet him at his next stop, sometimes with the sheriff. And when it comes to clearing the records of victims, it is the information networks under the FCRA that get the word out nationwide to clear records of fraudulent accounts.

Much is already being done by the Administration to fight identity theft. Law enforcement agencies from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Secret Service, to the United States Postal Service Inspection Service are actively investigating identity theft cases and bringing perpetrators to justice. The Federal Trade Commission provides important victim assistance information to consumers who have been victimized by identity thieves. And federal financial regulators are working to ensure that financial institutions have security systems in place to detect identity theft attempts.

And so I am proud to say that the Administration is deeply concerned about the problem of identity theft in the crime's increasingly varied and sinister forms. We are committed to building upon current efforts to fight it, so that we can see greater success in deterring the crime, increasing the likelihood of catching the crooks, and reducing the time it takes to restore the victim's good name. We look forward to working with you as we develop creative solutions to the challenges we face in these efforts.

In closing, let me reemphasize that we agree with Committee Chairman Oxley and Ranking Member Frank, that the uniform national standards under the FCRA have been important to consumers and businesses alike, and that they fulfill an important function in our economy today, with very important economic consequences. We look forward to working with you on the details of such legislation in the coming days and weeks.

Thank you. I will now be pleased to answer your questions.

Governor George W. Bush:
A COMPREHENSIVE PLAN TO REFORM THE CIVIL JUSTICE SYSTEM
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

A litigation explosion is clogging America's civil courts, costing U.S. high-tech companies, small businesses, and consumers more than $150 billion a year. Worse, over 50 cents of every dollar paid out in the average tort case goes not to the injured parties, but to paying lawyers' fees and transaction costs.

Governor George W. Bush believes that civil justice reform should be a presidential concern. But the Clinton-Gore Administration and the trial lawyers' lobby have opposed reform efforts in Congress. Despite opposition from these same special interests in Texas, Governor Bush fought for – and won – passage of seven major tort reform bills in his first legislative session, saving Texans an estimated $2.9 billion. As President, Governor Bush will fight to reform the federal civil justice system, just as he reformed the Texas system. The objective of his reform plan is not lower awards for victims, but higher standards for lawyers.

To protect the innocent against frivolous federal suits, Governor Bush will:

- Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a "Three Strikes, You're Out" rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims.
- Limit "fishing expeditions" by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of"junk science" by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony.
- Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute.
- Enact the "Teacher Protection Act" to shield teachers from meritless lawsuits arising out of efforts to maintain classroom discipline.

To encourage reasonable settlements, Governor Bush will:

- Enact a "Fair Settlement Rule," requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees.

To curb forum shopping and improve access to federal courts, Governor Bush will:

- Allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only "minimal diversity" exists – i.e., where any plaintiff is from a different state than any defendant.
- Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity.
- Expand class-action removal rules so that national cases are heard in a federal forum.

To protect clients against unscrupulous lawyers, Governor Bush will:

- Enact a "Client's Bill of Rights" to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees and the potential range of those fees.

REV_00165630

To ensure that private lawyers do not profit unreasonably at public expense, Governor Bush will:

- Require private lawyers who contract to represent states or municipalities to return any excessive fees to their governmental clients.
- Issue an Executive Order prohibiting federal agencies from paying contingency fees.

The Need for Legal Reform

America was founded upon the rule of law. Many of the defining moments of U.S. history have been legal victories: protecting free speech, ending segregation, ensuring the right to vote, safeguarding private property.

Today, however, a combination of frivolous lawsuits, trial attorneys who abuse the system for profit, and the lure of windfall recoveries is transforming America from a lawful society to a litigious one. As a result, America's civil courts are clogged by a litigation explosion:

- The number of civil lawsuits has tripled since 1960.

- In 1997 alone, there were over 15 million lawsuits filed in state courts – one every two seconds.

- According to testimony before the Civil Rules Advisory Committee, representative businesses experienced a 300 percent to 1000 percent increase in class action suits against them from 1988 to 1998.

As the number of lawsuits has increased, so too has the size of the awards. The top ten jury verdicts in 1999 totaled almost $9 billion – three times the 1998 total ($2.8 billion), and twelve times the total awarded in 1997 ($862 million). However, according to the actuarial consulting firm of Tillinghast-Towers Perrin, more than 50 cents on the dollar paid out in the average tort case goes to lawyers, experts, and other transaction costs – not the injured parties.

The litigation explosion imposes a variety of costs – economic and otherwise – on the country, on commerce, and on individuals. In the first instance, clogged courts have led to significant delays in justice. On average, state civil actions that go to trial take more than two years from filing to verdict. The American Medical Association has found that the average delay for a medical liability claim is even longer, from 2 to 5 years.

The economic costs imposed by the litigation explosion have escalated. Between 1930 and 1994, tort costs grew four times faster than the U.S. economy. Tillinghast-Towers Perrin estimated in 1995 that the direct cost of tort litigation to American businesses and consumers totaled $152 billion – more than double the 1984 level of $67 billion, and two and a half times what is spent annually on police and fire protection nationwide.

The costs imposed by runaway civil litigation fall especially heavily on high-tech businesses and small businesses:

- High technology companies are almost twice as likely to be the subject of a class action securities suit as companies in other industries.

- One in four small-business owners have either been sued or threatened with a suit.

- In the face of skyrocketing premiums, about one in eight small businesses are not covered by liability insurance, making them especially vulnerable to being bankrupted by a single lawsuit.

- The cost of a business owner's defense in the average civil suit is estimated at $100,000 – twice the average small-business owner's salary.

The tort costs imposed by the litigation explosion are, in turn, passed on to individual consumers in the form of a hidden "lawsuit tax":

- The costs attributable to litigation constitute an estimated $8 of an $11.50 DPT vaccine, $191 of a $578 tonsillectomy, $170 of a $1,000 motorized wheelchair, and $3,000 of an $18,000 heart pacemaker.

- The "lawsuit tax" – the cost of lawsuits in terms of higher prices and insurance premiums – has been estimated at $466 per person in South Carolina, $547 per person in Michigan, $574 per person in California, and over $1,000 per person in Washington, D.C.

Finally, in addition to delaying justice and imposing economic costs on businesses and individuals, the litigation explosion extracts a systemic cost – a loss in confidence in the civil courts. Indeed, a 1997 Opinion Research Corporation survey found that only 35 percent of those interviewed felt "the justice system works and people get the justice they deserve." A majority of Americans agree with Michigan Senator Spencer Abraham, who has observed, "Our legal system is broken. The United States has been transformed from a nation of friends and neighbors into a nation of actual and potential litigants."

The Goals of Civil Justice Reform

Governor Bush has shown that in the fight for civil justice reform, leadership can prevail over special interests. The trial lawyers' lobby opposed his efforts in Texas, providing 25 percent of his opponent's campaign contributions in his first race for Governor, and nearly 40 percent of his opponent's contributions in his reelection campaign. Despite this opposition, Governor Bush fought for – and won – passage of ten major pieces of tort reform legislation, over three legislative sessions, that have limited joint-and-several liability, curbed forum shopping, and punished frivolous suits.

As a result, since 1996, Texans and Texas businesses have received an estimated $2.9 billion in savings through insurance rate reductions. Lawsuits filed for injuries or damages not related to motor vehicle accidents decreased 30 percent. The number of personal-injury cases filed decreased from 13 percent of all civil cases in 1994 to 10 percent in 1998.

Governor Bush believes that reform of the federal civil justice system must be a presidential concern. Unfortunately, the Clinton-Gore Administration, together with special interest groups – particularly the trial lawyers' lobby – has opposed key reform measures. In 1995, President Clinton vetoed both the Securities Litigation Reform Act and the Products Liability Reform Act. Notwithstanding the concerted opposition of the trial lawyers, Congress managed to override the President's veto of the Securities Litigation Reform Act by a vote of 319-100 in the House and 68-30 in the Senate – with every Republican Senator voting to override, except for Senators McCain, Shelby, Cohen, and Specter.

In 1998, again over the opposition of the trial lawyers, Congress enacted the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act, which passed the House by voice vote and the Senate 79-21, with every Republican Senator voting for it, except Senators McCain and Shelby.

Other than these two securities bills – both of which had the strong support of the high-tech community and were seen as vital to emerging high-tech companies – all significant efforts at legal reform at the federal level have stalled.

Governor Bush will make it a priority as President to implement a comprehensive legal reform plan. His plan respects federalism and the constitutional design, allocating authority to the states over substantive state tort law and to the federal government over the procedures in the federal courts. Its objective is not to lower awards for victims, but to raise standards of conduct for trial attorneys. Accordingly, to ensure a civil justice system that is swift, efficient, predictable, and fair, Governor Bush's reform plan will:

1. Protect innocent victims by imposing meaningful, mandatory penalties on litigants bringing frivolous federal suits.

2. Encourage reasonable, fair, and timely settlements.

3. Curb "forum shopping" by providing improved access to impartial federal courts.

4. Protect clients from unscrupulous lawyers.

5. Require trial lawyers representing governmental bodies to be compensated at a level commensurate with public service.

Goal 1: Protect the Innocent by Deterring Frivolous Litigation

Governor Bush believes that litigation must never be used as a weapon against the innocent. And when it is used as such, there must be consequences. That is why the first goal of his reform plan is to protect the innocent by deterring frivolous and junk lawsuits.

REV_00165633

A primary cause of the litigation explosion has been the proliferation of frivolous suits:

- According to the San Antonio Express-News, a dozen students who took a Microsoft computer certification course at the Houston branch of Southern Methodist University are suing the school after failing a certification test, alleging, among other things, they were misled into thinking the course would be easy.

- The Sacramento Bee recently reported that a man is seeking $25,000 in damages from a tattoo parlor for misspelling the word "villain" on his right forearm – even though the spelling ("villian") was provided by the plaintiff, who did not notice the error until years later.

- A self-described "milkaholic" recently sued the Safeway supermarket chain and the Washington State Dairy Products Commission in federal district court, claiming that he suffered clogged arteries and a mild stroke because they failed to put a warning label on milk saying it was "addictive." The case was dismissed, but the court declined to impose any sanctions on the attorney.

This increase in frivolous litigation is largely attributable to the weakening of key rules of federal court procedure, as well as the abuse of certain rights of action:

A. Rule 11

Attorneys and clients currently face little penalty for filing frivolous cases. The principal deterrent, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11, which requires attorneys to certify that legal filings have a basis in law and in fact, was weakened by amendment in 1993. Specifically, (1) sanctions were made discretionary; (2) attorneys' fees of the opposing party were eliminated as the preferred punishment; (3) the Rule was made inapplicable to discovery abuses; and (4) a "safe harbor" was established, providing attorneys who file frivolous actions with 21 days to amend their claims with impunity.

According to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, these changes rendered Rule 11 "toothless." For example:

- Last year a man who attended an Elton John concert sued the City of San Diego and a beer vendor because, after drinking beer, he allegedly suffered "emotional distress" when he found women using the men's room. His case was dismissed, and the judge warned the plaintiff's attorney – under penalty of Rule 11 – not to try again. But Rule 11 proved such a minor deterrent that he refiled anyway. The result for having twice filed a frivolous claim and imposing significant costs on the defendants: a mere $4,000 fine.

REV_00165634

As President, Governor Bush will establish a meaningful deterrent to frivolous suits in the federal courts by proposing legislation to:

Strengthen Rule 11 to Deter Frivolous Lawsuits: Rule 11 will be amended to (1) make sanctions mandatory; (2) reinstate attorneys' fees and expenses as the preferred sanction; (3) require Rule 11 certification for discovery; and (4) eliminate the safe harbor for those who file frivolous suits and seek to withdraw them without sanction.

Authorize Double or Treble Damages for Egregiously Frivolous Claims: Governor Bush will propose legislation amending Rule 11 to expressly authorize federal judges to award defendants double or triple damages in cases involving egregiously frivolous claims.

Adopt a "Three Strikes, You're Out" Rule for Attorneys Who Repeatedly File Frivolous Federal Suits: If an attorney files three egregiously frivolous suits, that attorney will be barred from practicing in federal court for three years – one year for each suit.

B. Discovery

The abuse of discovery is another factor contributing to the surge in frivolous suits. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(1) permits discovery with respect to any issue relevant to the "subject matter involved in the pending action." This expansive rule allows litigants to engage in wide-ranging "fishing expeditions," demanding documents, records, and depositions on virtually any conceivable topic in the hope of uncovering something incriminating.

While there are many cases where discovery proceeds without substantial abuse, discovery nonetheless consumes on average about 50 percent of the total cost of litigation, and as much as 90 percent of the cost of litigation in cases where discovery is actively employed.

The federal Civil Rules Advisory Committee has proposed limiting discovery to matters specifically "relevant to the claim or defense of any party." This proposal is currently pending Supreme Court and congressional review. As President, to limit costly and wideranging "fishing expeditions," Governor Bush will propose legislation to:

Amend the Discovery Rules to Allow Inquiry Only into Issues Actually in Dispute: In order to limit unnecessary time and expense in civil litigation and to prevent "fishing expeditions," Governor Bush will adopt the proposed new rules limiting discoverable information to matters specifically "relevant to a claim or defense of any party."

C. Junk Science

The exploitation of "junk science" has contributed to the amount of high-profile, frivolous litigation. This is due to the weakening of the legal standard for the use of expert and scientific evidence. The 1923 case of Frye v. United States held that, in order to be admissible, novel scientific evidence not only had to be relevant to the case, but had to be "generally accepted" as reliable by the relevant scientific community.

However, in 1975, Federal Rule of Evidence 702 displaced the "generally accepted" standard with a much broader, and much less demanding standard, permitting any scientific testimony so long as it will "assist the trier of fact."

As President, in order to limit frivolous suits based on junk science, Governor Bush will:

Raise the Standard for Admission of Scientific Testimony: In order to limit the ability of experts to testify about questionable theories lacking in good scientific basis, Governor Bush will:

- Propose legislation codifying the original Frye test, requiring that expert testimony be "generally accepted" in the scientific community.
- Issue an Executive Order providing that the federal government, in its role as a litigator, will never rely on junk science, but will rely only on evidence generally accepted as reliable in the relevant scientific community.
- Amend the Rules of Civil Procedure through legislation strongly encouraging federal judges to convene expert Scientific Advisory Panels to assist in resolving questionable scientific disputes.

D. RICO

A fourth reason for the proliferation of frivolous suits is the abuse by plaintiffs' lawyers of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statute ("RICO").
RICO, enacted in 1970, was specifically designed as a weapon against "organized crime," and explicitly permits triple damages.

Under RICO, government prosecutors can bring criminal or civil actions, and private parties can invoke RICO's civil penalties in private causes of action. Over the past 20 years, however, civil RICO has been increasingly abused, as opportunistic litigants use the threat of triple damages to extract lucrative settlements in ordinary business-related lawsuits.

As the Supreme Court has noted, "in its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite different from the original conception of its enactors." For example:

- Lawyers recently invoked RICO in a federal class-action lawsuit against Nintendo, complaining that the company is engaged in "racketeering activity" by selling the popular "Pokémon" trading cards. These lawyers claim that by placing rare cards in selected packages, Nintendo is turning children into gamblers. At least nine similar cases have already been filed against sports-card manufacturers.

REV_00165636

To end the civil abuse of the RICO statute, Governor Bush will:

Eliminate the Private Cause of Action Under RICO: To limit the coercive – and unintended – use of RICO in ordinary civil litigation, Governor Bush will propose legislation to repeal the private cause of action under RICO. However, the legislation will leave untouched the full range of state tort remedies available to litigants, as well as the full scope of government criminal and civil RICO prosecutions.

E. School Discipline

One area where frivolous litigation is particularly destructive is in the nation's schools. Sixty-five percent of public school teachers charge that discipline is a "serious" problem in their schools, and 88 percent think that academic achievement would improve "substantially," if persistent troublemakers were removed from classes.

Unfortunately, the threat of litigation has made it more difficult to enforce discipline in the classroom:

- In the last two years, almost one-third of all high school principals reported being involved in lawsuits or out-of-court settlements, versus only nine percent ten years ago.
- Twenty percent of high school and middle school principals report spending 5-10 hours per week in activities to avoid litigation; six percent report spending as much as 10-20 hours a week doing the same.
- Ninety-nine percent of principals say their policy on reporting bad behavior has been modified because of liability costs and concerns.

To ensure that litigation is not used as a weapon against the innocent, and to empower teachers and principals to maintain discipline in the classroom, Governor Bush will:

Enact the "Teacher Protection Act": The Teacher Protection Act will shield teachers, principals, and school board members acting in their official capacity from federal liability arising out of their efforts to maintain discipline in the classroom, so long as they do not engage in reckless or criminal misconduct. In addition, plaintiffs who bring meritless claims in federal court challenging teacher and principal disciplinary actions will be liable for the legal expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred in the defense of the teachers and principals.

Goal 2: Encourage Timely, Good-Faith Settlements

Governor Bush believes lawsuits should be viewed as the best lawyers have always viewed them – as a last resort. Early settlement is to be desired whenever possible. That is why the second goal of his federal legal reform is to encourage cases to be ended when a fair settlement is at hand. And when that offer is unreasonably refused, there must be consequences.

REV_00165637

Abraham Lincoln urged his fellow lawyers to "[d]iscourage litigation. Persuade your neighbors to compromise whenever you can. Point out to them how the nominal winner is often a real loser – in fees, expenses, and waste of time." Governor Bush believes this advice is as sound today as it was 150 years ago. In his view, the law should not only deter and punish bad-faith, frivolous lawsuits, but it should also promote justice through timely and reasonable settlements.

A mechanism already exists to facilitate settlements. Under Rule 68 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if a plaintiff rejects an "offer of judgment" (i.e., a settlement offer) before trial, the plaintiff is liable for the defendant's costs incurred thereafter, if the plaintiff fails to obtain a judgment at trial as favorable as the proposed settlement.

Unfortunately, courts have gutted Rule 68 by interpreting "costs" to exclude the defendant's legal bills. As a result, according to the Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure of the U.S. Judicial Conference, the Rule has been "largely ineffective." However, in the opinion of the Federal Judicial Center, if "costs" were defined to include reasonable attorneys' fees, and if the Rule were applied to "offers of judgment" by both plaintiffs and defendants, the rule "could contribute significantly" to swifter and less expensive justice.

Accordingly, to increase the incentives for good-faith settlements, Governor Bush will:

Enact a "Fair Settlement Rule" to Promote Settlements and Discourage Prolonged Litigation: Legislation will be proposed amending Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 68 to put "teeth" into the Rule's "offer of judgment" regime. The legislation will clarify, among other things, that if either party – defendant or plaintiff – rejects a timely, reasonable, and good-faith settlement offer, and ultimately loses the case or receives a judgment substantially less than the amount offered, that party must pay the other party's litigation costs – including legal fees – that were incurred after the settlement was rejected.

Goal 3: Curb "Forum Shopping" by Improving Access to Federal Courts

The parties to a lawsuit are entitled to have their dispute resolved impartially. However, trial lawyers today employ a wide array of technical rules in what is called "forum shopping," to manipulate the courts for tactical advantage. Thus, the third goal of Governor Bush's civil justice reform plan is to restore the design of the Framers of the Constitution by improving access to impartial federal courts.

A. Diversity Litigation

Article III of the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to "controversies . . . between citizens of different States." When Congress created the lower federal courts through the Judiciary Act of 1789, it provided that these courts could hear such "diversity" cases. The Framers viewed federal diversity jurisdiction as necessary to prevent local biases and regional prejudices against out-of-state enterprises.

REV_00165638

The Constitution itself requires only "minimal" diversity; in other words, a federal court has the power to hear a case so long as at least one plaintiff is a citizen of a different state than at least one defendant. However, in 1806 in Strawbridge v. Curtiss, the Supreme Court interpreted the diversity statutes to require "complete" diversity. Under this standard, every plaintiff must be from a different state than every defendant. This is the standard that controls under today's diversity statute, which, in addition, requires the amount in controversy to exceed $75,000.

The judicially created "complete diversity" requirement makes it harder for many out-of-state litigants to access the impartial forum of a federal court. Enterprising plaintiffs' lawyers routinely "defeat diversity" in interstate disputes simply by tinkering with the parties to the case. So long as at least one plaintiff and one defendant – even in a case involving thousands – are from the same state, the plaintiffs' lawyer can guarantee that the case stays in a friendly "hometown" court and prevent the defendants from removing the case to federal court.

Thus, to limit forum shopping and improve litigants' access to an impartial federal forum, Governor Bush will introduce legislation to:

Allow Removal of Large Cases From State to Federal Court Where Only "Minimal Diversity" Exists: Governor Bush will amend the diversity jurisdiction statute to allow removal of claims from state to federal court where there is only "minimal diversity" – i.e., where any defendant is from a different state than any plaintiff – so long as the amount in controversy exceeds $500,000.

Raise the Amount in Controversy for Removal Where There is "Complete Diversity": In order to avoid unduly increasing the caseload in federal courts, and because federal diversity jurisdiction is designed for larger interstate disputes, Governor Bush will raise the amount in controversy for complete diversity jurisdiction from $75,000 to $100,000.

B. State Class Action Lawsuits

Many interstate class actions assert claims that are marginal, at best. But because the cases are brought on behalf of thousands (and sometimes millions) of claimants, the potential exposure is enormous, often exceeding a defendant's assets. Clever attorneys carefully draft their cases so that removal to federal court, which under current law requires complete diversity in class actions, is impossible, and they seek out the friendliest state court judge they can find.

Unlike federal courts, which have stringent standards for certifying a class, some state courts have proved extremely willing to certify a large class early on in litigation. As a result, many defendants facing state court class actions choose to settle early, even if the case is without merit, rather than risk certification and the ensuing economic exposure that class actions entail.

REV_00165639

Judge John Nangle, who chairs the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, has noted that these coercive settlements frequently result in "munificent grants" of fees to the attorneys, but minimal benefits (such as largely worthless coupons) to the putative class members. For example:

- In a class action against a record company to recover the price paid for an album by the rock group Milli Vanilli (that contained the voices of other performers), the court awarded the lawyers $675,000, while the class members received $1 to $3 each.

- In a class action suit against a cereal maker for using oats sprayed with trace amounts of a pesticide, liability was uncontested – but the lawyers were paid nearly $1.75 million for less than six months of work, while class members who happened to save their cereal boxes ended up with coupons to buy more cereal.

- And in a 1993 class action suit in Alabama against the Bank of Boston, which allegedly had taken excessive escrow fees from customer accounts, the plaintiffs' lawyers negotiated a settlement that permitted the bank to charge class member accounts for the costs of the litigation, including attorneys' fees totaling $8.5 million. As a result, one objecting class member received a credit for $2.19 on his account – but was charged $91.33 for the cost of obtaining the credit.

A RAND Institute for Civil Justice study indicates that in consumer (i.e., non-personal injury) state class action suits, settlements often provide class counsel with more money than all class members combined.

Moreover, when state courts preside over class actions involving claims of residents of more than one state (especially nationwide class actions), they often end up dictating the substantive laws of other states, sometimes over the protests of those states. For example, The New York Times reported last year that, as a result of a nationwide class action, one Illinois state court was in a position to "make what amounts to a national rule on insurance… overturn[ing] insurance regulations or state laws in New York, Massachusetts, and Hawaii."

In response to the abuse of state class actions, the House passed the Interstate Class Action Jurisdiction Act in September 1999. This Act, which is pending in the Senate, would give federal courts jurisdiction in class action cases involving even minimal diversity – where any member of the proposed class is a citizen of a different state from any defendant. The Act contains important exceptions for cases where a substantial majority of the class members are citizens of the same state and the claims are governed primarily by that state's law, where the primary defendants are states or state officials, and where the class has fewer than 100 members or the action is for less than $1 million.

As President, to curb state class action abuses, Governor Bush will:

Expand Class-Action Removal Rules: Governor Bush will sign the Interstate Class Action Jurisdiction Act, changing the law to give federal courts jurisdiction in class action cases involving even minimal diversity.

Goal 4: Protect Clients Against Unscrupulous Attorneys

Governor Bush's fourth goal of civil justice reform comes directly from the lawyers' code of ethics: a client should not be charged excessive or unreasonable fees.

The American Bar Association Model Rules of Professional Conduct provide that "[a] lawyer is a representative of clients, an officer of the legal system and a public citizen having special responsibility for the quality of justice." The Model Rules go on to state, in explicit terms, that "[a] lawyer's fee shall be reasonable."

Nevertheless, some unscrupulous attorneys take advantage of unsuspecting and unsophisticated clients and make enormous amounts of money for very little work:

- In a series of related cases involving a fatal school bus accident, the lawyers for the victims' families received an estimated $50 million out of an aggregate settlement of $156 million intended for the families – even though liability was uncontested.

- In a medical malpractice case in which liability was also uncontested, the plaintiff's contingency fee lawyer did nothing but write three letters – and received 40 percent of the injured girl's $400,000 settlement.

Unfortunately, under current law, a client who has been mistreated by his lawyer has very little recourse. He or she can file a complaint with the lawyer's respective state bar, but such complaints rarely result in action. Alternatively, the client can file a separate breach of contract suit in state court against the unethical attorney. This, too, is rarely effective.

Thus, to ensure that attorneys' fees in federal court are reasonable, and that clients always have recourse when dealing with an unethical lawyer in federal court, Governor Bush will propose legislation to:

Enact a "Client's Bill of Rights": The "Client's Bill of Rights" will amend the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to:

- Give federal trial courts express authority to hear challenges to the reasonableness of attorneys' fees from the parties in any case before them.
- Allow the federal trial court to maintain authority to hear fee challenges for up to one year after final judgment.
- Require all attorneys practicing in federal court to give a series of truthful disclosures to their clients, informing them of their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees, the court's authority to review those fees, and the potential range of those fees.

Goal 5: Require Lawyers Representing Governmental Agencies to be Compensated at a Level Commensurate with Public Service

Governor Bush believes that any lawyer working for the public should be paid a reasonable fee – in keeping with the code of ethics and the pay scale expected in private practice. That is why the fifth goal of his reform plan is aimed at curbing the excessive fees some private lawyers have received while working in the public interest.

All lawyers have an ethical responsibility to charge a "reasonable" fee. But Governor Bush believes that when a lawyer contracts with the government to represent the public, that lawyer has, and should have, an even higher obligation to act ethically and be reasonably compensated. In recent years, however, there have been numerous instances of attorneys working for the public and charging grossly excessive fees.

For example, in the recent litigation against the tobacco companies, many states contracted with private lawyers on a contingency fee basis to undertake the suits on their behalf. These cases resulted in settlements that paid the lawyers unprecedented amounts for what was, in effect, a public service:

- In Florida, the lawyers will receive $3.43 billion, or 26 percent of the state's $13.2 billion recovery; this translates into an estimated fee of roughly $23,000 an hour.

- In Mississippi, the lawyers will receive $1.43 billion, or 35 percent of the state's $4.1 billion recovery; this represents an estimated fee of about $7,500 an hour.

- In Texas, the lawyers will receive fees totaling $3.3 billion, or 19 percent of the state's $17.4 billion recovery; this translates into an estimated fee of well over $100,000 an hour.

In Texas, no law existed to prevent private lawyers from profiting at the public's expense.

REV_00165642

Thus, Governor Bush sought and signed legislation sharply restricting the power of the state Attorney General and state agencies to hire contingency fee lawyers in the future.

At the federal level, mechanisms already exist for ensuring that individuals in a fiduciary capacity abide by a higher ethical standard. For example, Section 4958 of the Tax Code currently penalizes executives of nonprofit organizations who abuse their fiduciary duty by profiting from "excess benefit transactions" – i.e., by paying themselves excessive fees. If they do so, the law imposes a 200 percent penalty on the excess, unless the individual returns it to the nonprofit organization. This penalty is never intended to be collected, but rather to force individuals who abuse positions of trust to disgorge excessive fees.

The reason for the "excess benefit" provision is that, because nonprofits have no profit motive, there is no stockholder check on those payments; nonprofit donors give their money expecting that employees will respect their fiduciary duties. The same principle should apply to individuals working for the government. States and municipalities also have no profit motive to rein in excessive payments, and taxpayers likewise expect public servants to fulfill their fiduciary duties to the people.

Thus, as President, Governor Bush will ensure that the abuses of the state tobacco litigation are not repeated in the future. Specifically, he will propose legislation to:

Require Private Lawyers Contracting with States and Municipalities to Return Excessive Fees to Their Governmental Clients: The legislation will extend the "excess benefit" provisions of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities. As a result, any compensation collected in excess of a reasonable fee will have to be returned to the state or city that hired the private lawyers. The reasonableness of the fees will be assessed using the standard judicial "lodestar" method of multiplying the hours worked by a reasonable hourly rate and any appropriate risk factor.

Prohibit the Federal Government from Hiring Contingency Fee Lawyers: As President, Governor Bush will issue an Executive Order prohibiting the federal government from hiring private lawyers on anything other than an hourly basis.

Minority Rules: Filibustering the Constitution
by James L. Swanson
James L. Swanson, a senior fellow in constitutional studies at the Cato Institute, is editor in chief of the Cato Supreme Court Review.
This afternoon, Sen. John Cornyn, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on the Constitution, will convene a hearing on the following subject: "Judicial Nominations, Filibusters, and the Constitution: When a Majority is Denied Its Right to Consent." It's about time. For the past three months Senate Democrats have filibustered the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Last week they made official their hitherto informal filibuster of the nomination of Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. And it might not end there. In the future other nominees, including to the U.S. Supreme Court, might become filibuster targets.
Today's hearing is a timely and much needed antidote to the rancorous politicization that has plagued the judicial confirmation process. Expert testimony will explore a number of arcane but important subjects, including the historical origins of filibusters, their purposes, the obscure Senate rules that allow them, the difference between the Senate's executive and legislative calendar, the meaning of advice and consent, and more.
However wide-ranging the testimony, by the end of today four things should be obvious: First, the Constitution requires only a simple majority of 51 senators to confirm a judicial nomination. Second, any Senate rule or procedure -- filibuster included -- that allows the minority of the body to prevent the majority from consenting to a judicial nomination is in conflict with the Constitution. Third, in such a conflict, the Constitution is supreme. Thus, finally, any Senate rule that contradicts the Constitution by denying the majority its right to consent to a judicial appointment cannot stand.
No one disputes that the Senate has a legitimate role in filling judicial vacancies. The Appointments Clause of Article II, section 2 of the Constitution is clear: The president "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint...Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States." To express consent senators do the obvious -- they vote in favor of a nomination. And no one can dispute that the Appointments Clause requires a simple majority of 51 senators for confirmation. Elsewhere in the Constitution, when the Framers intended more than simple majorities, they said so, as they did by requiring a two-thirds majority to convict in an impeachment trial, expel a member, overcome a presidential veto, approve a treaty, or propose a Constitutional Amendment. The filibuster, which under Senate rules requires 60 votes to bring a nomination to a vote, rewrites the Appointments Clause by requiring a supermajority for confirmation. On "Meet the Press" Sen. Tom Daschle claimed that "in controversial issues [including judicial nominations] the founding fathers have said that it ought to take a supermajority to pass." Constitutional text and more than two centuries of precedent prove Sen. Daschle wrong.
This is not to say that all filibusters raise constitutional questions.

There is a long history of their use in the legislative context, and they can serve a legitimate purpose by not foreclosing debate on legislation prematurely. But in the executive context, when presidential appointments are at issue, filibustering appellate nominees is an unprecedented, though still not necessarily unconstitutional, step. If employed merely to guarantee a reasonable and limited period of debate before proceeding to an up or down vote, a brief filibuster might pass constitutional muster. But in the cases of Estrada and Owen, when the filibuster is being used not to debate, but to kill their nominations by denying the majority its right to consent to them, serious constitutional issues arise.

Yes, the Constitution permits the Senate to set its own rules. But that is hardly a blank check entitling the Senate to amend the Appointments Clause by raising the confirmation bar from simple majority to super majority, to aggrandize power by upsetting the balance between the congressional and the executive branches, and to threaten the independence of the third branch, the federal judiciary. The conclusion is inescapable. Whenever Senate Democrats, a minority of the body, filibuster judicial nominations, obstruct an up or down vote, and deny the majority its right to consent to the appointments, they subvert the Constitution.

But what is the remedy? Should the president order the Justice Department to sue Sen. Daschle and seek relief in the form of an up or down floor vote on the filibustered nominees? Or is Majority Leader Bill Frist the proper plaintiff, or the nominees themselves? While such a claim might prevail, federal courts frown on settling political disputes between the other branches, or among feuding members of the same branch. There is a simpler solution. Change the rules. That's right. The majority could simply change the Senate rules to allow a simple majority of 51 Senators to end debate and bring a judicial nomination to the floor for an up or down vote. Although existing Senate rules require a supermajority to change them (how convenient for obstructionists), these rules are not laws, or carved in stone like the Ten Commandments. They are merely internal procedures, and under any proper understanding of the history and theory of legislative bodies, no prior Senate can exercise perpetual, dead-hand control over the present one.

It can be done without litigation, within the Senate by its own members, and it can be done immediately. Like Dorothy in the "Wizard of Oz," who always had the power to return home but didn't know it, Senate Republicans have always had the power to end the filibuster subversion and bring the Senate home to the Constitution. Will they do it?

INTRODUCTION

Even before the April 1, 2003 hearing on Carolyn Kuhl's nomination by President Bush to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, significant opposition to Kuhl's confirmation had arisen because of her troubling record as a lawyer and judge. Throughout her career — as a lawyer in the Reagan Administration Justice Department, in private practice, and as a state judge — Kuhl has followed a legal philosophy harmful to the rights and interests of ordinary Americans. This is particularly true in three areas: women's rights and reproductive freedom, other civil rights, and access to justice.

Kuhl's hearing on April 1 not only failed to dispel the serious concerns that had been raised about her record, but in fact reinforced them. At her hearing, Kuhl refused to answer certain questions (such as those relating to her jurisprudential views of Roe v. Wade), she changed the subject and avoided answering other questions, and, whether intentional or not, her responses to a number of questions asked by Senators regarding troublesome aspects of her record were untrue and misleading in critical respects.

For example, in a landmark sexual harassment case decided by the Supreme Court, Kuhl as a Reagan Justice Department official had urged the Court to rule in favor of the employer, under a definitional standard that would have made it very difficult for women to prove sexual harassment in the workplace. The Court did not adopt Kuhl's standard and ruled unanimously for the female employee. Nonetheless, when questioned about this case at her hearing, Kuhl called her disagreement with the Court "technical" and sought to portray the ruling as a victory for her position.

In another Supreme Court case, Kuhl had filed a brief urging the Court to overturn the important and well-settled doctrine of associational standing, which allows organizations to file suit on behalf of their members and thus facilitates access to justice by ordinary Americans. When asked about this case at her hearing, Kuhl stated that her name was not on the brief, thereby deflecting questions about her extreme views. Kuhl's response was flatly incorrect. Although Kuhl has since acknowledged the error in her testimony, she has never answered Senators' fundamental concerns about the "frontal attack" that her own former supervisor says she launched in this case against the doctrine of associational standing.

These and other disturbing aspects of Kuhl's hearing testimony are further discussed below with respect to each of the three fundamental areas of concern about Kuhl's record: women's rights and reproductive freedom; other civil rights issues; and access to justice. Combined with the concerns already raised by Kuhl's record, it is clear that her confirmation should be rejected.

- Kuhl's record on women's rights, including reproductive freedom

  - Trying to overturn Roe v. Wade

Senators' concerns: When Kuhl served as Deputy Assistant Attorney General, she specifically urged that the Department of Justice seek to have the Supreme Court overturn Roe v. Wade.

REV_00165679

According to Charles Fried, Acting Solicitor General at the time, Kuhl was the co-author of "[t]he most aggressive memo" to him from within the Justice Department urging the Department to file an amicus curiae brief in the Supreme Court in the Thornburgh case calling for "outright reversal of Roe."[1] Kuhl then co-authored precisely such a brief, which contended that Roe was "so far flawed that this Court should overrule it and return the law to the condition in which it was before that case was decided."[2] The Supreme Court rejected Kuhl's attack on Roe.

Kuhl's testimony: In response to questions about her role in the Thornburgh case, Kuhl attempted to deflect Senators' concerns about her troubling position by asserting that she was merely representing a client, President Reagan, who believed that Roe should be overruled.[3] Kuhl specifically and repeatedly declined to answer Senator Feinstein's question as to whether she believes that Roe was correctly decided. Kuhl Hearing, at 45-47.

The facts: To the extent Kuhl claimed that as a Justice Department attorney she was representing the President in Thornburgh, the same could be said of every attorney in the Justice Department, including everyone who weighed in with Acting Solicitor General Fried as to whether the government should even file an amicus brief in this case (since it was not a party), let alone what position it should take. The fact remains that, as reported by Fried — who was the recipient of all of those memos — "[t]he most aggressive memo came from my friends Richard Willard and Carolyn Kuhl in Civil, who recommended that we urge outright reversal of Roe."[4] Notwithstanding Kuhl's refusal now to disclose her views, it is clear that she went far beyond her role as a Justice Department attorney in her "aggressive" efforts to overturn Roe v. Wade.

- Continuing her anti-choice advocacy

Senators' concerns: In private practice, Kuhl filed an amicus curiae brief in Rust v. Sullivan on behalf of an anti-choice group in support of the federal "gag rule" that prohibited family clinics getting federal aid from discussion abortion with patients. Although Kuhl's brief primarily addressed First Amendment issues, she began the brief with a free standing quotation that attacked the Court's decisions upholding a women's right to choose abortion as causing a "major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence."[5] Referring to this brief, Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl whether it was fair to say that at the time Kuhl wrote it she was "still a critic of the Supreme Court's jurisprudence on abortion?" Kuhl Hearing, at 49.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl again deflected efforts by Senator Feinstein to learn her jurisprudential views of the Court's abortion decisions, stating that her brief in Rust v. Sullivan was written "on behalf of a client" and also that it "primarily addresses the First Amendment issue there. . ." Kuhl Hearing, at 50.

The facts: Kuhl was correct in her overall description of her brief, which makes the free standing quote with which she began the brief all the more indicative of her disagreement with the Court's decisions protecting a woman's reproductive freedom. Indeed, Kuhl never actually answered Senator Feinstein's question or explained why she began a brief about a First Amendment issue with a free standing quote attacking the Court's abortion decisions.

- Seeking to limit sexual harassment protections

Senators' concerns: As Deputy Solicitor General, Kuhl co-authored an amicus curiae brief for the United States and the EEOC in the Supreme Court supporting the employer in the landmark sexual harassment case of Meritor Savings Bank v. Vinson. The plaintiff, Mechelle Vinson, a bank employee, alleged that her supervisor had forced her to submit to unwelcome sexual advances over a number of years, during which time she was afraid that she would lose her job if she refused. The position that Kuhl took, had it been adopted by the Court, would have made it more difficult for women to prove sexual harassment in the workplace. Specifically, as Senator Feinstein observed, Kuhl's brief "took the side of the employer" and "argued in support of the District Court's ruling that what occurred was simply a voluntary personal relationship between coworkers and that that would not be actionable under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act." As Senator Feinstein further observed, Kuhl's brief "ignored the power held by a supervisor over [a] subordinate in these circumstances . . . ." Kuhl Hearing, at 51. Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl if she had been involved in the decision to file a government brief taking the side of the employer in this case. Id. at 51-2.

Kuhl's testimony: While Kuhl acknowledged that she had been involved in that decision, she then immediately tried to deflect Senator Feinstein's concerns about the position she had taken in favor of the employer. According to Kuhl, "the Supreme Court's decision in Meritor closely tracked the brief that we filed. The reasoning is nearly identical to what we were urging on the Court." Id. at 52. Kuhl further testified that "[t]he only reason" the Department had urged a "reversal" of the ruling below in favor of Ms. Vinson had to do with what she called "the very technical interpretation of the Court's findings of fact," namely, that the trial court had found any sexual relationship between Ms. Vinson and her supervisor to be "voluntary." Id. According to Kuhl, this was "a technical issue on which the Supreme Court and we disagreed" and that the Justice Department was "happy with the decision" in this case. Id.

The facts: Kuhl's testimony was astonishing in light of the fact that her amicus brief had urged the Court to overturn the Court of Appeals' decision and to rule against Ms. Vinson, while the Court, in an opinion by then-Justice Rehnquist, unanimously ruled in favor of Ms. Vinson. In addition, what Kuhl called a "technical" disagreement — defining "voluntary" or "consensual" conduct to preclude any finding that the conduct was "unwelcome" — in fact went to the very crux of what an employee needs to prove in order to establish a claim for sexual harassment based on a hostile work environment, and formed the basis upon which the Court ruled in favor of Ms. Vinson. Rehnquist's opinion flatly rejected Kuhl's position, holding that "the fact that sex-related conduct was 'voluntary,' in the sense that the complainant was not forced to participate against her will, is not a defense to a sexual harassment suit brought under Title VII."[6] Kuhl's assertion that the Court's ruling tracked the government's brief and the implication in her testimony that it was a victory for the government appears to be confirmation spin by Kuhl intended to deflect the fact that her brief had unsuccessfully urged a far tougher standard for proving sexual harassment generally, as well as a ruling for the employer in this specific case.

Senator Feinstein, appropriately "puzzled" by Kuhl's testimony concerning this case,[7] asked Kuhl in post-hearing questions for a further explanation, as did Senator Biden. In her replies, Kuhl continued to maintain that the Court's unanimous ruling for Ms. Vinson was in line with Kuhl's brief in support of the employer. According to Kuhl, her brief "argued for a standard based on whether sexual advances made in the workplace were 'unwelcome.' . . . The Supreme Court accepted the United States' argument that the appropriate standard was whether the advances were unwelcome."[8] What Kuhl does not state, however, is that her brief defined "unwelcome" sexual advances in such a manner that non-forcible sexual conduct — "voluntary" or "consensual" in the words of Kuhl's brief — would not be considered "unwelcome."[9] The Supreme Court, as discussed above, unanimously rejected such a narrow definition of "unwelcome," holding that a woman need not have been "forced to participate [in sexual activity] against her will" in order to establish sexual harassment.

- Supporting sex discrimination in education

Senators' concerns: In 1993, Kuhl co-authored an amicus curiae brief in the Supreme Court for three private women's colleges in support of a petition for a writ of certiorari filed by the Virginia Military Institute, a public all-male college in Virginia. In a lawsuit brought by the United States, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit had held that VMI's denial of admission to women violated the Equal Protection Clause. In an effort to continue to deny admission to women but remain a public institution, VMI filed a cert. petition with the Supreme Court, asking the Court to overturn the Fourth Circuit's ruling. Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl about her brief. Kuhl Hearing, at 61.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl testified that her brief "was not a brief in support of the constitutionality of VMI. . . It was a brief in support of the petition for certiorari." Id. She said that her brief was narrowly focused on the importance of women's colleges and asked that the Court "take that case so as to clarify that all-women's schools could — were not unconstitutional essentially." Id.

The facts: Kuhl's brief was filed on behalf of three private women's colleges. VMI, by contrast, was (and still is) a state-supported public institution, and the constitutionality of private single-sex schools was not at issue in the case. Moreover, while it is true that Kuhl's brief did not expressly defend the constitutionality of allowing VMI to continue to deny admission to women yet remain a public institution, it is equally true that Kuhl's brief stated that it was filed "in support of petitioners" — VMI — and that it specifically urged that "the petition for certiorari should be granted."[10] VMI's cert. petition, in turn, expressly asked the Court to "grant certiorari and reverse the decision of the court of appeals . . ."[11]

According to contemporaneous press reports, Kuhl's brief was filed as part of VMI's campaign to enlist private women's colleges in its effort to continue to exclude women.[12] As Kuhl admitted at her hearing, the colleges that signed her brief were referred to her through "counsel who was representing VMI." Kuhl Hearing, at 62. In fact, VMI's counsel of record on its cert. petition was Richard Willard, Kuhl's former colleague at the Department of Justice (and co-author with her of the "most aggressive" memo to Fried in the Thornburgh case urging that the Department argue for Roe v. Wade to be overturned).

In her written answers to post-hearing questions from Senator Kennedy, Kuhl attempted to dispel concerns that her brief supported VMI's efforts to continue to exclude women by stating that the brief "did not express a view as to how the Supreme Court should rule with respect to the constitutionality of VMI's program."[13] However, if Kuhl had been concerned at the time that her brief not imply support for VMI, she could have stated in the brief that the private women's colleges took no position as to the constitutionality of VMI's exclusion of women; Kuhl failed to do so.

- Dismissing claim of egregious privacy violation

Senators' concerns: Much of the questioning of Kuhl at her April 1 hearing focused on her disturbing 1999 ruling dismissing invasion of privacy claims brought by Azucena Sanchez-Scott, a recovering breast cancer patient, whose doctor had brought another professionally attired man into the examination room without disclosing that the man was not a medical professional but a drug company salesman. The man then witnessed an examination of Ms. Sanchez-Scott's breasts and abdomen during which she was half-naked. In a recent letter to Senator Hatch opposing Kuhl's confirmation, Ms. Sanchez-Scott explained that "I felt violated because I had disrobed for my examination. . . As a cancer survivor, I trusted that my doctor would make decisions in my best interest."[14] Senator Durbin told Kuhl that he considered the Sanchez-Scott case "the most troubling of anything you have been involved in." Kuhl Hearing, at 72. Senator

For example, "Jedwiga Sebrechts, executive director for the Women's College Coalition in Washington, said that 20 women's colleges contacted her office after being approached by VMI lawyers to join in the briefs. The coalition was approached, too, she said. . . Schumer stated, "I don't think I have seen a more disturbing ruling from a judicial nominee since I have been in the Senate." Id. at 108.

Specifically, Ms. Sanchez-Scott filed suit against the doctor, the drug company, and the salesman for invasion of privacy, with an additional claim against the doctor for professional negligence. Judge Kuhl granted a motion by the defendants to dismiss Ms. Sanchez-Scott's invasion of privacy claims outright, effectively holding that there was no set of facts that Ms. Sanchez-Scott could prove that would entitle her to any relief on the invasion of privacy claims and precluding her from presenting those claims to a jury. According to Judge Kuhl's ruling from the bench, since Ms. Sanchez-Scott had not specifically objected to the man's presence, "I think it cannot be said that there was a reasonable expectation of privacy."[15]

The California Court of Appeal unanimously reversed Kuhl's ruling, holding that Ms. Sanchez-Scott's complaint had alleged "highly offensive conduct," and making it clear that she had a well established right to privacy.[16] The court specifically noted that "[n]o decisional authority supports" the assertion that Ms. Sanchez-Scott had no legal grounds for her invasion of privacy charge.[17] In other words, Judge Kuhl had no legal basis for throwing out Ms. Sanchez-Scott's claim.

In light of these facts and the Court of Appeal's unanimous reversal of Kuhl's ruling, Senator Durbin asked Kuhl to explain her "concept of privacy, as it applies to that fact situation." Kuhl Hearing, at 73. Senator Schumer, after reviewing the facts with Kuhl, stated that "I think most Americans would be horrified to hear that your view of privacy rights, particularly in that situation, depended on someone who was scared and upset having to ask questions." Id. at 108. He asked Kuhl, "How do you explain the ruling issued in this case, and what can you tell us to assuage so many of my colleagues' concerns that you have too narrow a view of privacy rights?" Id.

Kuhl's testimony and the facts: Kuhl's oral and written testimony about the Sanchez-Scott case reinforces the Senators' concerns:

1. Although she denied this at her hearing, Kuhl has now admitted that she did in fact dismiss invasion of privacy claims against the doctor

At her hearing, Kuhl did not answer the critical questions about her ruling and her troubling view of privacy rights. Rather, she testified that Ms. Sanchez-Scott had not asserted any invasion of privacy claims against the doctor and that she had not dismissed Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claims against him.[18] This testimony was completely incorrect, as Kuhl admitted a month later in 18 For example, Kuhl testified that "[t]he claims against the doctor were tort claims for failure to obtain consent from the woman in the examining room that was the doctor's examination room. . . . And the claim against the third party who came into the room was an invasion of privacy claim." Kuhl Hearing, at 123. And Kuhl answered "[t]hat is correct" when Senator Hatch asked her "It is my understanding that the particular motion to dismiss that you had granted had nothing to do with the claims against the doctor and that your ruling would have a brief letter to Senator Hatch.[19] Through this testimony, however, Kuhl had deflected Senators' serious concerns about her disturbingly narrow and legally erroneous views of a medical patient's privacy rights. Thus, to this day, Kuhl has not answered, for example, Senator Durbin's question about her "concept of privacy, as it applies to" the facts of this case, or Senator Schumer's question asking "what can you tell us to assuage so many of my colleagues' concerns that you have too narrow a view of privacy rights?"

In addition, as Kuhl now admits in her letter to Senator Hatch, she indeed threw out of court in their entirety Ms. Sanchez-Scott's invasion of privacy claims against all of the defendants — the doctor, the drug company, and the drug salesman. Had Kuhl's ruling not been reversed on appeal, two of the wrongdoers, the drug company and the salesman, would have avoided all liability to Ms. Sanchez-Scott for their unconscionable actions, and the doctor likewise would not have been held liable on the invasion of privacy claim.

2. Kuhl created the misimpression that she had affirmatively "allowed" a claim against the doctor to go forward

At Kuhl's hearing on April 1, Senator Sessions asked, "you allowed the lawsuit to go forward against the physician, but did not allow it to go forward against the third party who the doctor had allowed to come into the room." Kuhl replied, "Yes, Senator." Kuhl Hearing, at 80. In fact, the additional claim against the doctor for professional negligence was not the subject of the motion to dismiss before Kuhl, and Kuhl therefore had no choice as to whether that claim proceeded. It was thus misleading for Kuhl to testify that she had "allowed" that claim against the doctor to go forward in the sense that Kuhl had some choice or that she had affirmatively ruled in favor of Ms. Sanchez-Scott.[20] allowed the claims against the doctor to go forward. Is that right?" Kuhl Hearing, at 122-23 (emphasis added). Similarly, in a post-hearing letter to Senator Arlen Specter dated April 15, 2003, Kuhl described the invasion of privacy claim against the drug company as a "separate claim" from the claim against the doctor. Letter from Carolyn B. Kuhl to Hon. Arlen Specter (Apr. 15, 2003)(hereafter "Kuhl Letter to Sen. Specter"), at 2.

Moreover, while Kuhl never mentioned this in her testimony or in her post-hearing answers, the remaining claim against the doctor for professional negligence was stayed during Ms. Sanchez-Scott's appeal of her dismissal of the privacy claims,[21] which took more than a year.[22] Thus, not only would Kuhl's ruling have eliminated Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claims in their entirety, but that ruling also substantially delayed the case and was a significant obstacle to Ms. Sanchez-Scott's ability to obtain justice.

3. Kuhl's testimony as to why she did not follow relevant precedent conflicts with her ruling in this case

In her testimony on April 1 and also in her April 15 letter to Senator Specter, Kuhl fostered the misimpression that California privacy law was unclear at the time of her ruling dismissing Ms. Sanchez-Scott's claims. For example, she testified at her hearing that "I was trying to interpret California law. What was being cited to me was Michigan precedent [i.e., the Michigan Supreme Court's decision in DeMay v. Roberts, in which a doctor brought along a man not connected with the medical profession to assist him in a childbirth]. I think that the Court of Appeal has clarified the law in this area." Kuhl Hearing, at 74.[23] The implication of Kuhl's testimony, that there was no California case law to follow and that she did not follow the "Michigan precedent" that was being cited to her because it would not help "interpret California law," cannot withstand scrutiny.

In Kuhl's ruling from the bench dismissing Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claims, Kuhl in fact acknowledged that the Michigan case had already been recognized by the California Supreme Court. As Kuhl stated, "[i]t's a much more important case and much more significant case that the Supreme Court — our Supreme Court has picked it up and cited it. There's no question about it." Sanchez-Scott Transcript, at 8. Kuhl's "problem" with the Michigan case at the time was not that it was from Michigan but that she considered it factually distinguishable; according to Kuhl, "[t]he patient there was in labor, not undergoing a more routine medical examination . . . ." Id. at 3. In sharp contrast, the unanimous Court of Appeal decision reversing Kuhl not only found that "this case [Sanchez-Scott] is very much like the 1881 seminal case of DeMay v. Roberts . . . which first recognized a tortious invasion of privacy," but also noted that "DeMay has been relied on by several California courts, including the Supreme Court, in analyzing propositions concerning the intrusion tort." 86 Cal. App. 4th at 374.

4. Kuhl's misplaced reliance on a letter from Justice Paul Turner

At her hearing on April 1 and in her letter to Senator Specter, Kuhl cited a letter favorable to her sent to members of the Judiciary Committee by Justice Paul Turner, the author of the Court of Appeal's decision that unanimously reversed her dismissal of Ms. Sanchez-Scott's common law invasion of privacy claim. While it is not surprising that Justice Turner may now want to assist his judicial colleague in her quest for a lifetime seat on the federal bench, his letter is erroneous in significant respects and the best evidence of what he thought about this case and Kuhl's ruling remains his own contemporaneous opinion overturning Kuhl's ruling on behalf of a unanimous Court of Appeal.

Turner's letter now suggests that Kuhl's ruling was "a trial judge making a tough call in the context of competing legal interests . . . ."[24] Significantly, however, Kuhl's ruling never identified any such "competing legal interests." Her ruling was based solely on her belief that [23] Similarly, in her letter to Senator Specter, Kuhl stated, "I had to determine [Ms. Sanchez-Scott's] rights under California law. California law clearly gave her a tort action against the doctor whose responsibility it was to obtain her consent before he invited any other person into the examining room. . . Regarding the separate claim against the drug company representative, the law was less clear . . ." Kuhl Letter to Sen. Specter, at 2.

Ms. Sanchez-Scott had no claim for invasion of privacy as a matter of law because she had never asked why the unidentified man was there or objected to his presence. Sanchez-Scott Transcript, at 2, 3. As Justice Turner's opinion for the unanimous appellate court demonstrates, neither he nor his colleagues had any problem overturning Kuhl's ruling; there was no dissent, and no indication in the opinion that it was a "tough call."

To the contrary, the Court of Appeal's opinion made clear that every patient has a "legally well-established expectation of privacy," and further noted that the defendants had failed to cite "any authority which permits a male drug salesperson to be present in an examination room during the examination of a partially disrobed woman." 86 Cal. App. 4th at 375-76 (emphasis added). In great contrast to his recent letter, Turner's ruling for the Court of Appeal never identified or sought to balance a so-called "competing legal interest" to Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy rights. In the plainest of language belying any claim now that this case was a "tough call," Justice Turner wrote in the court's decision:

> A breast cancer patient who goes into an oncologist's office to be examined does not, nor should she, take a risk that what goes on in the examination room will be seen or heard by anyone other than medical personnel. She does not take a risk that a drug salesperson will be a part of the process during which her breasts will be examined.

86 Cal. App. 4th at 376. The Court of Appeal's opinion reversing Kuhl continued, "we conclude that jurors could conclude a breast cancer patient such as plaintiff had an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the medical examination room of her oncologist. No decisional authority supports a contrary conclusion." Id. (emphasis added).

The Turner letter ends by asserting that "Judge Kuhl concluded that the mentorship program, which was designed to improve treatment for breast cancer patients, was a sufficient justification for allowing the drug salesperson to be present during the examination... [A] strong argument can be made that she correctly assessed the competing societal interests the California Supreme Court requires all jurists in this state to weigh in determining whether the tort of intrusion has occurred." Turner Letter, at 2-3. This statement has no basis whatsoever in Judge Kuhl's ruling or that of the Court of Appeal.

As the transcript of the hearing before Kuhl makes clear, Kuhl never "assessed" any "competing societal interests" nor discussed the purpose of the drug company's so-called "mentorship program" that put its salesman in the exam room. To the contrary, Kuhl's ruling was premised solely on her legally erroneous belief that there could be no invasion of privacy as a matter of law because Ms. Sanchez-Scott had not affirmatively objected to the man's presence or asked why he was there. Sanchez-Scott Transcript, at 2. As far as Judge Kuhl was concerned, the man could have been a janitor in a white lab coat.

Justice Turner's opinion for the Court of Appeal likewise did not "assess" "competing societal interests" or evaluate the purposes of the "mentorship program," which was factually irrelevant to the Court of Appeal's ruling. There was no legitimate purpose for the salesman to be in the exam room, and the court's opinion never identified one. To the contrary, Justice Turner's opinion states that "[w]hen the totality of the circumstances of the intrusion is examined . . . we conclude that the complaint alleges highly offensive conduct involving a cancer patient whose breasts were observed by a drug salesperson, whose occupation was never disclosed, during an examination inside the confines of a physician's office. It bears emphasis that there are specific allegations that plaintiff was never advised as to [the drug salesman's] role, other than that he was there to watch." 86 Cal. App. 4th at 377-78 (emphasis added). Justice Turner's opinion reversing Kuhl's ruling in Sanchez-Scott remains the best evidence of his and the Court of Appeal's view of the law and of Kuhl's unjustifiable dismissal of Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claim.

- Kuhl's record on other civil rights issues

  - Crusading for a tax exemption for Bob Jones University

Senators' concerns: As Senator Leahy observed (Kuhl Hearing, at 37), Kuhl was identified as one of a "band of young zealots" within the Department of Justice who were the architects of the Reagan Administration's decision to reverse long-standing IRS policy that denied tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University and other racially discriminatory private schools.[25] In particular, Kuhl and another Justice Department colleague wrote a 40-page memorandum to Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds strenuously arguing that the IRS should "reverse its position" in the case and "accord tax-exempt status" to Bob Jones.[26] Reynolds accepted the memorandum and forwarded it to the Attorney General. The Department's radical reversal of civil rights policy championed by Kuhl ignited a firestorm of criticism and was repudiated by the Supreme Court in an 8-1 ruling in the Bob Jones case. Senator Leahy asked Kuhl to address her role in this matter, specifically noting how much opposition there was in the Department at that time to the reversal of this civil rights policy. Kuhl Hearing, at 37.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl testified that, for two reasons, "I regret having taken the position that I did in support of the government's change of position. . . ." Kuhl Hearing, at 37. The first was that "I did not at that time understand the traditional role of the Justice Department, which is to defend the positions of the agencies as long as there is a reasonable argument that can be made in defense of those agencies. . . ." Id. at 39. (At this, an incredulous Senator Leahy stated, "But that is almost hornbook law. . . .You didn't learn that in law school?" Id.) The second, according to Kuhl, was that the decision "did not properly put the nondiscrimination principle that should have been primary in this decision first." Id.

The facts: As Senator Leahy suggested (id. at 41), this testimony appears to be a confirmation conversion. While Kuhl has previously indicated that she came to believe the government's reversal of course in Bob Jones was wrong, she has never before, to our knowledge, stated the basis for that belief as one grounded in the importance of enforcing the civil rights laws and putting the principle of nondiscrimination first. To the contrary, both of the two public explanations that have previously been given for Kuhl's asserted change of mind are grounded in political error, not concern about the primacy of the civil rights laws.

First, in June 2001, on the eve of the announcement of Kuhl's nomination, she responded to a written question from Senator Boxer about Bob Jones by stating that she believed the government's decision to reverse position in the Bob Jones case was wrong "in part because it appeared insensitive to minorities, regardless of the nondiscriminatory motives of those involved in the decision."[27] This is similar to an explanation given in January 2003 by former Solicitor General Charles Fried in support of Kuhl's nomination. According to Fried, by 1985, "I knew she had come to believe (as did I) that she had been wrong, if for no other reason than seeming to side with Bob Jones confused the Reagan administration's message that we were strongly committed to civil rights and racial equality while opposed to quotas."[28]

At Kuhl's confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy, like Senator Leahy, also sought to learn whether Kuhl, prior to her nomination, had ever expressed the sort of substantive regret about her position in Bob Jones that she seemed to be stating at her hearing. Senator Kennedy quoted the foregoing statement by Fried and observed that, according to Fried, Kuhl had told him she had come to believe she was wrong on Bob Jones "politically because it sent the wrong message." Kuhl Hearing, at 86 (emphasis added). Kuhl admitted that she and Fried did discuss the fact that "taking that position had really been a disaster for the Reagan administration, absolute disaster," and that she did not know whether she had "expressed this to" Fried that they had "the wrong focus" and that "the policies of nondiscrimination should have come forward. . . ." Id.

The second reason given by Kuhl in her testimony on April 1 for her asserted "regret" about Bob Jones is that the government should have defended the IRS policy because a "reasonable argument" could have been made to support it. Kuhl Hearing at 39. Significantly, nowhere in the critical 40-page memorandum that Kuhl and Cooper wrote at the time does the memo even suggest the existence of a "reasonable argument" in defense of the IRS policy, let alone that the Department of Justice should defend it. To the contrary, the memorandum concludes by stating that "[f]rom the foregoing, it is clear that the Service's interpretation of Section 501(c)(3) of the 1954 Code is at odds with the statute's language and legislative history . . . ."[29] It is also significant to note that under questioning from Senator Leahy, Kuhl stated that she could not think of any other case during her entire tenure in the Justice Department in which she had recommended that the government confess error in the Supreme Court except for Bob Jones. Kuhl Hearing, at 42.

At Kuhl's hearing, Senator Hatch elicited from Kuhl the testimony that she had no "decision-making authority" at this time in the Justice Department. Id. at 15. This of course is beside the point, as Senator Kennedy noted. Id. at 83. The concern is not that Kuhl herself made the ultimate decision to reverse long-standing policy denying tax exemptions to Bob Jones University and other racially discriminatory private schools, but that she believed this was the right thing to do and played a major role in bringing about that disturbing decision.

- Opposing affirmative action, trying to restrict discrimination remedies, and criticizing protection of workers

Referring specifically to Kuhl's statement in an article that she had written while in private practice that she considered affirmative action to be "a divisive societal manipulation," Senator Durbin asked Kuhl "have you changed your position on that?" Kuhl Hearing, at 71. Kuhl did not answer Senator Durbin's question nor a similar written question from Senator Kennedy.[30] Instead, she testified that "the primary thrust of that article was to state the importance of individual remedies and of putting persons who have been discriminated against back in the place where they should have been, absent that discrimination, and that was the thrust of that article." Kuhl Hearing, at 71-72. The problem, of course, as Kuhl well knows, is that in many instances of discrimination, such as when people are intentionally kept out of unions and apprenticeship programs on the basis of race for years on end, the actual victims may not be identifiable. Only by requiring some form of affirmative action can the situation be remedied, as was the case in Local 28 of the Sheet Metal Workers' International Ass'n v. EEOC, 478 U.S. 421 (1986). Nonetheless, Kuhl filed a brief in that case taking the position that relief under Title VII could be granted only to identifiable victims of discrimination,[31] a position that the Supreme Court rejected.

In Kuhl's post-hearing answers, she tried to dispel concerns about her opposition to affirmative action by stating that the article about which Senators had questioned her — the article in which she had called affirmative action "a divisive societal manipulation" — was written "before the Supreme Court settled" the issue of affirmative action in its 1995 decision in the Adarand case.[32] However, Kuhl's article was written after the Court's decision upholding affirmative action in the Local 28 case (indeed, she refers to that decision in her article[33]), which means that there was already established law in this area and that she was critical of it.

Kuhl was also questioned about another article she had written, "Employment at the Will of the Courts,"[34] which, as Senator Edwards described it, focused on "the costs to employers and society of the laws against unfair treatment of workers. . ."[35] In response to Senator Edwards' question as to why she had chosen to focus on such matters rather than on the "costs to workers and society of discrimination on the basis of race, sex, or other arbitrary factors or other forms of unfair treatment of workers,"[36] Kuhl stated that she "disagree[d] with the question's characterization of the article," and attempted to portray her article in a light more favorable to the legal protection of workers.[37] The fact remains, however, that Kuhl's article appeared to disapprove of the trend in the law away from the doctrine of "employment at will" and toward protecting employees from adverse employment decisions that are not based on "good faith and fair dealing."[38] According to Kuhl, "[t]he practical effect of this jurisprudence and of the destruction of the doctrine of employment at will is to inhibit employer action and to decrease labor mobility."[39] The article also appears to question some of the positive effects of anti-discrimination laws:

> [I]f a member of a protected class is fired, and if the employer has no credible explanation for his treatment of the employee . . . a finder of fact may well conclude that the unexplained motivation is in reality an unlawful one (race, sex, age, etc.). . . Employers must act toward employees in the protected classes in such a way that they can explain the fairness of their actions toward the employee. If an employer cannot do so, he risks the expense of a lawsuit and statutory penalties.[40]

Most Americans would likely conclude that this is a good thing; Kuhl did not say that it is.

- Other aspects of her record on civil rights matters

In post-hearing questions, Senator Leahy observed that "[m]any Americans would not be comfortable with a judge whose intelligence and reason were not tempered by experience and compassion," and asked, "Can you please give us an example of a situation in which you displayed, as a lawyer, understanding for the human situation, such as the sting felt by women or minorities victimized by discrimination?"[41]

In her response, Kuhl did not cite a single instance pertaining to her career "as a lawyer." Instead, Kuhl focused on two rulings she has issued as a judge, the same two rulings she has cited repeatedly in other written answers and in her testimony on April 1 in an effort to dispel the serious concerns about her record on civil rights raised by her years in the Reagan Administration and in private practice.[42] Apart from the fact that Kuhl has only been able to cite two rulings in her more than seven years as a state judge that she believes speak favorably to her record on civil rights, a review of these cases indicates that they do not in negate the serious concerns her record has raised.

In one of those cases, Iwekaogwu v. City of Los Angeles, 75 Cal. App. 4th 803 (1999), Kuhl, sitting by designation on the Court of Appeal, wrote a decision upholding a judgment in favor of an African American employee who had been unlawfully retaliated against by his employer when he complained that he had been subjected to employment discrimination on the basis of race and national origin. As recounted in Kuhl's decision, the facts presented a clear case of retaliation, and the Court of Appeal was unanimous in its ruling. The issues involved in this case were totally different from those presented, for example, in Bob Jones, and Kuhl's ruling in this clear-cut case of retaliation does not in any way change the fact that, in the Bob Jones matter, she urged that the IRS policy be reversed and a tax exemption given to a private school that practiced blatant race discrimination.

In the other case repeatedly cited by Kuhl, Grobeson v. City of Los Angeles, No. BC150151 (L.A. Superior Court, June 29, 1998), Kuhl overturned on due process grounds disciplinary action taken against an openly gay police officer because the police department had failed to give the officer proper notice of the charges against him. Kuhl's ruling did not turn on the officer's sexual orientation or in any way affirmatively protect the officer from discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Neither of these cases repeatedly cited by Kuhl dispels the serious concerns raised by her actions in such cases as Bob Jones or other civil rights matters.[43]

- Kuhl's record on access to justice

  - Seeking to curtail citizens' access to the courts

Senators' concerns: As Deputy Solicitor General, Kuhl aggressively sought to restrict access to the federal courts, co-authoring a brief and arguing before the Supreme Court in a case in which she urged the Court to abandon the doctrine of associational standing, International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America v. Brock, 477 U.S. 274 (1986). Associational standing is a well-recognized and important doctrine that permits organizations to file lawsuits on behalf of their members, making it easier for them to vindicate their common legal rights and interests. At Kuhl's hearing, Senator Feinstein specifically questioned Kuhl about the Brock case and asked Kuhl to explain her opposition to the doctrine of associational standing. Kuhl Hearing, at 53-57.

Kuhl's testimony: In response to Senator Feinstein's question, Kuhl testified, "[t]he position of the United States in UAW v. Brock I believe was set before I came to the Solicitor General's Office. I argued that case. I had just recently come to the office and I argued it, but I am not on the brief. If you look at the brief in that case, I am not on the brief. . . I didn't have any trouble arguing the position. It was a position that – well, the government had won in the court below, so we were defending a winning argument in the court below in that case." Kuhl Hearing, at 54-55 (emphasis added).

[43] Disturbing information about Kuhl's pro bono record also emerged at her hearing. Under questioning from Senator Feinstein, Kuhl admitted that in her entire career in private practice, spanning a total of some 12 years, including 9 as a partner in a prestigious law firm, she had handled only two pro bono cases. Kuhl Hearing, at 60-61.[43] Although Kuhl sought to excuse this on the ground that she was raising children while at the same time trying to be a partner in a law firm (Kuhl Hearing, at 61), it is worth noting that during this same period Kuhl managed, among other things, to find the time to draft the amicus brief in the Supreme Court supporting VMI's efforts to continue to exclude women as well as the amicus brief in support of an anti-choice group in Rust v. Sullivan. Across this country, many law firm associates and partners are also parents, and yet they make the time to fulfill their ethical obligations to perform pro bono work.

The facts: Kuhl's testimony that her name was not on the government's brief in this case was demonstrably incorrect, as Senator Leahy pointed out in post-hearing questions to Kuhl.[44] Although Kuhl has since admitted that her testimony was incorrect,[45] her erroneous testimony at her hearing left unanswered Senators' concerns about what Charles Fried himself described as Kuhl's "frontal attack" on the doctrine of associational standing.

Moreover, Kuhl's testimony about this case was inconsistent with the facts in another critical respect. Kuhl's Supreme Court brief marked the first time in the case that the government had taken the position that the doctrine of associational standing should be overturned; this argument was not the basis on which the government had prevailed in the court of appeals,[46] and Kuhl's testimony that she was merely "defending a winning argument in the court below" by urging that associational standing be overturned cannot withstand scrutiny.

The court of appeals had ruled in favor of the government, holding that the UAW lacked standing under the facts of this particular case and the requirements for associational standing.[47] Defending that "winning argument" is a far cry from urging the Supreme Court to overturn the doctrine of associational standing altogether. Indeed, the government's brief to the Supreme Court opposing the UAW's petition for a writ of certiorari — a brief on which Kuhl's name does not appear — in fact acknowledged that the doctrine of associational standing was well-settled and did not ask the Court to overrule it.[48]

The argument for overturning associational standing was made only in the later brief bearing Kuhl's name. According to Charles Fried, Kuhl's boss at the time, it was "my Deputy and Counselor, Carolyn Kuhl" who "launched a frontal attack" in Brock, "arguing that groups should not have standing to make claim except as they could show themselves to be representatives of classes of individuals in traditional class actions." Order and Law, at 207, n.5 (1991).

In fact, Kuhl's argument was so extreme, procedurally as well as substantively, that it prompted numerous organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce and the AMA, to oppose not only the government's legal position in the Supreme Court but also to criticize its "litigating tactics" for raising such an important matter for the first time at that juncture in the case.[49]

As with Thornburgh, Kuhl has sought to minimize the extremism of the position that she advocated by claiming that she was merely a government lawyer doing her job representing the government.[50] But so were all of the other government attorneys who had litigated this case before Kuhl got involved, and who had not advocated that the doctrine of associational standing be overturned. Moreover, in her written answers to Senator Leahy, Kuhl went a step further and suggested that this extreme position was not necessarily her own view.[51] However, just as it was Kuhl, as Fried recounts, who in Thornburgh wrote "the most aggressive memo" advocating reversal of Roe v Wade, so too it was Kuhl, as Fried also recounts, who in Brock launched the "frontal attack" on the doctrine of associational standing.

- Trying to limit protection for whistleblowers

Senators' concerns: In a unanimous ruling strongly critical of Judge Kuhl in Liu v. Moore, the California Court of Appeal reversed Kuhl's ruling that prevented a whistleblower from getting monetary relief under California's anti-SLAPP law, explaining that Kuhl's decision was an improper "nullification of an important part of California's anti-SLAPP legislation." 69 Cal. App. 4th 745, 748 (1999). In this case, a plaintiff had sued Deborah Moore, a whistleblower, causing her to incur substantial legal expenses, and then voluntarily dismissed the complaint before Kuhl could rule on Ms. Moore's motion for legal costs to which she was entitled under the anti-SLAPP law. At Kuhl's hearing, Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl about this case, noting that, according to Ms. Moore's attorney, her ruling would have prevented Ms. Moore from pursuing her right under the law to recover the nearly $40,000 in legal costs that she had incurred. Noting the harsh language of the Court of Appeal's decision reversing Kuhl's ruling, Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl to respond to the Court of Appeal's criticism of her decision and a letter she had received from Ms. Moore's attorney. Kuhl Hearing, at 58.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl claimed that the issue before her was "an issue of first impression," and that she had "struggled a good bit" with the question of what jurisdiction remained with the court when the party suing the whistleblower dismissed the complaint before the court could rule on the whistleblower's motion for legal costs. Kuhl Hearing, at 58-59.

The facts: In its sharply worded, unanimous decision reversing Kuhl's ruling, the Court of Appeal "struggled" not at all with the issue of jurisdiction, disposing of it in a footnote. 69 Cal. App. 4th at 751, n.3.[52]

- Seeking to invalidate qui tam access to the courts to combat fraud

Senators' concerns: In private practice, Kuhl had urged the federal courts to strike down the qui tam provisions of federal law that allow private citizens to file suit to combat fraud against the government. The federal courts rejected such arguments and upheld the law. Additional information about Kuhl's efforts in this regard emerged after Kuhl's hearing. Specifically, according to written questions posed by Senators Grassley and Schumer, Kuhl had attached to a brief that she filed in the Ninth Circuit in 1993 arguing the unconstitutionality of the qui tam provisions a copy of a memorandum written four years earlier by the Department of Justice

51 Kuhl's answers to Senator Leahy's post-hearing questions (ans. 3d) (Apr. 29, 2003).

52 According to a letter from Ms. Moore's attorney to Senator Feinstein's office, it was Judge Kuhl, and not the plaintiff who had filed the frivolous suit, who had raised the jurisdictional question in the first place; the plaintiff had "never argued that the Court lacked jurisdiction to rule on [Ms. Moore's] motion" for legal costs. Office of Legal Counsel, opining that "[t]he Office of Legal Counsel believes the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act are patently unconstitutional." Kuhl told the court that the OLC memorandum had recently been "released for publication" by the Department of Justice, but did not affirmatively tell the court that the OLC memorandum did not represent an official position of the Department.[53] In light of this, Senator Schumer, noting the ethical obligation of all lawyers "to refrain from acts which mislead the court," asked Kuhl whether she had "fulfilled [her] obligation to be candid with the court."[54]

Kuhl stated that she did not believe that "reference to the position of the Office of Legal Counsel in the brief was misleading to the court."[55] Apparently, however, the Department of Justice did not agree, for it took what Senator Schumer called "the unusual step of submitting a letter to the court clarifying the government's position."[56] In that letter to the court, the Justice Department stated that it had come to its attention that the OLC memorandum of 1989 had been submitted to the court and was writing "to make clear to the Court" that the OLC memorandum "was never adopted by the Attorney General, and does not represent the position of the United States."[57]

CONCLUSION

As the foregoing makes clear, Kuhl's testimony at her confirmation hearing raised serious credibility concerns in addition to the other significant concerns already raised by her record. As the New York Times recently explained:

> Carolyn Kuhl . . . seems to have undergone a classic confirmation conversion. As a lawyer and as a California state court judge, she advocated objectionable positions on civil rights, abortion and privacy. But at her confirmation hearings, she backpedaled furiously. Her testimony may have been tactically shrewd, but it failed to allay serious concerns about how she would perform as a judge. The Senate should not confirm her. . .
>
> Under questioning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Judge Kuhl repeatedly retracted or minimized her positions. . . Judge Kuhl's many shifts are suspect because of their timing. It is also clear, given this administration's track record, that she was chosen precisely because of the actions she now seeks to distance herself from. The White House can tell from her record that she shares its conservative agenda, including opposition to abortion rights and skepticism about civil rights. It is unlikely that when she spoke with the administration she was as quick to renounce her past as she was before the Senate.

"Another Unworthy Judicial Nominee," The New York Times (Apr. 24, 2003).

As documented here and in our initial report opposing Kuhl's confirmation, Kuhl's record simply does not support giving her a lifetime appointment to the federal court of appeals, the court of last resort for most Americans. Far from meeting the burden of demonstrating a record of commitment to "protecting the rights of ordinary Americans" and to "the progress made on civil rights, women's rights and individual liberties" — important criteria for confirmation — Kuhl has tried to turn back the clock on these significant matters. Her hearing and her subsequent written answers to Senators' questions served to reinforce this conclusion. The Senate Judiciary Committee should reject Carolyn Kuhl's confirmation.

People For the American Way Report Executive Summary:
Carolyn Kuhl's Hearing Strengthened the Case Against Her Confirmation

The April 1, 2003 hearing on Carolyn Kuhl's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit not only failed to dispel the serious concerns that had been raised about her record, but in fact reinforced them. This is true with respect to each of the three fundamental areas of concern about Kuhl's record: women's rights and reproductive freedom; other civil rights issues; and access to justice. Combined with the concerns previously raised by Kuhl's record, it is clear that her confirmation should be rejected.

KUHL'S RECORD ON WOMEN'S RIGHTS

- Trying to overturn Roe v. Wade: the Thornburgh case

  Senators' concerns: According to then-Solicitor General Charles Fried, Kuhl and a Justice Department colleague had given him "the most aggressive memo" from within the Department urging that the government file an amicus curiae brief in the Thornburgh case calling for "outright reversal of Roe." The brief that Kuhl then co-authored contended that Roe was "so far flawed that this Court should overrule it and return the law to the condition in which it was before that case was decided." The Court rejected Kuhl's arguments and re-affirmed Roe.

  Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl refused to answer questions as to whether she believes that Roe was wrongly decided. She testified that she was merely a lawyer representing a client in this case, President Reagan.

  The facts: All of the other Justice Department attorneys who worked on the issue were also representing the same client, but it was Kuhl who was "the most aggressive" in pressing to have Roe overturned, clearly going beyond the obligations of a government attorney.

- Other anti-choice advocacy: Rust v. Sullivan

  Senators' concerns: In private practice, Kuhl filed an amicus curiae brief in Rust v. Sullivan on behalf of an anti-choice group in support of the federal "gag rule" that prohibited family clinics getting federal aid from discussion abortion with patients. Although Kuhl's brief primarily addressed First Amendment issues, she began the brief with a free standing quotation that attacked the Court's decisions upholding a women's right to choose abortion as causing a "major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence." Referring to this brief, Senator Feinstein asked Kuhl whether it was fair to say that at the time Kuhl wrote it she was "still a critic of the Supreme Court's jurisprudence on abortion?"

People For the American Way
2000 M Street, NW • Suite 400 • Washington, D.C. • 20036 • 202-467-4999 • fax 202-293-2672 • www.pfaw.org

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl again deflected efforts to learn her jurisprudential views of the Court's abortion decisions, stating that her brief in Rust v. Sullivan was written "on behalf of a client" and also that it "primarily addresses the First Amendment issue there. . ."

The facts: Kuhl was correct in her overall description of her brief, which makes the free standing quote with which she began the brief all the more indicative of her disagreement with the Court's decisions protecting a woman's reproductive freedom. Indeed, Kuhl never actually answered Senator Feinstein's question or explained why she began a brief about a First Amendment issue with a free standing quote attacking the Court's abortion decisions.

- Seeking to limit sexual harassment protections: Meritor Savings Bank v. Vinson

Senators' concerns: As Deputy Solicitor General, Kuhl co-authored an amicus curiae brief for the United States and the EEOC in the Supreme Court supporting the employer in this landmark sexual harassment case. In an opinion by then-Justice Rehnquist, the Court ruled unanimously for the employee. The position that Kuhl took, had it been adopted by the Court, would have made it more difficult for women to prove sexual harassment in the workplace.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl testified that the Court's position "closely tracked" her brief and described the discrepancy between the Court's ruling for Ms. Vinson and her brief urging a decision in favor of the employer as based on a "technical issue" on which Kuhl and the Court disagreed.

The facts: Kuhl's testimony was utterly disingenuous. Not only had the Court rejected her argument that it should rule for the employer, but it flatly rejected as too narrow the definitional standard of proof of sexual harassment that she had urged, a standard under which a woman would virtually have had to have been raped in order to prove that workplace sexual conduct was unwelcome.

- Supporting sex discrimination in education: the VMI case

Senators' concerns: While in private practice, Kuhl filed an amicus curiae brief in the Supreme Court on behalf of three private women's colleges in support of VMI's cert. petition, in which VMI sought reversal of the appellate ruling that its exclusion of women violated the Equal Protection Clause.

Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl testified that her brief did not support the constitutionality of VMI but was narrowly focused on the importance of women's colleges.

The facts: Kuhl's brief was filed as part of VMI's campaign to enlist women's colleges in its efforts to remain a public institution yet continue to exclude women; Kuhl admitted that the colleges that signed her brief had been referred to her through VMI's counsel. If Kuhl had been concerned that her brief "in support of" VMI's cert. petition not imply support for VMI, Kuhl could easily have stated in her brief that the women's colleges took no position on the constitutionality of VMI's exclusion of women, but she failed to do so.

REV_00165698

- Dismissing claim of egregious privacy violation: the Sanchez-Scott case

  Senators' concerns: Kuhl dismissed invasion of privacy claims asserted by Azucena Sanchez-Scott, a breast cancer survivor, whose doctor had brought a male drug company salesman into the exam room without disclosing who he was. The man then witnessed an intimate examination of Ms. Sanchez-Scott during which she was half naked. Kuhl held that there was no invasion of privacy as a matter of law because Ms. Sanchez-Scott had not objected to the man's presence. The Court of Appeal unanimously reversed Kuhl.

  Although Kuhl denied this at her hearing, Kuhl has now admitted that she did in fact dismiss invasion of privacy claims against the doctor: Kuhl testified that Ms. Sanchez-Scott had not asserted invasion of privacy claims against the doctor and that she had not dismissed any such claims against him. This testimony was flatly incorrect, as Kuhl admitted a month after her hearing in a letter to Senator Hatch. Had Kuhl's ruling not been reversed, all of the wrongdoers, including the doctor, would have escaped liability for the invasion of privacy.

  Kuhl created the misimpression that she had affirmatively "allowed" a claim against the doctor to go forward: Kuhl testified that she had "allowed" a separate claim against the doctor for professional negligence to go forward, when in fact that claim was not the subject of the motion to dismiss and Kuhl had no choice as to whether it proceeded. It was therefore misleading for Kuhl to testify that she had "allowed" that claim to proceed in the sense that Kuhl had some choice or that she had affirmatively ruled in favor of Ms. Sanchez-Scott. Moreover, Kuhl neglected to mention that the other claim was stayed pending the appeal of her dismissal of the privacy claims.

  Kuhl's testimony as to why she did not follow relevant precedent conflicts with her ruling: Kuhl testified that California law was unclear and that what was cited to her by Ms. Sanchez-Scott was a Michigan Supreme Court case. This testimony conflicted with her ruling, in which Kuhl acknowledged that the Michigan case had already been recognized by the California Supreme Court. Kuhl's ruling made clear that her "problem" at the time with the Michigan case was not that it was from Michigan, but that she considered it distinguishable. The Court of Appeal did not, and cited it in its unanimous decision reversing Kuhl.

  Kuhl's misplaced reliance on a letter from Justice Paul Turner: At Kuhl's hearing and in a letter to Senator Specter, Kuhl cited a letter favorable to her sent to the Judiciary Committee by Justice Paul Turner, the author of the Court of Appeal's decision that unanimously reversed her dismissal of Ms. Sanchez-Scott's invasion of privacy claim. Turner's letter states that Kuhl had "concluded" that the drug company's "mentorship program," which put its salesman in the exam room, "was a sufficient justification" for allowing him to be present during the exam, and that a "strong argument can be made" that Kuhl had "correctly assessed the competing societal interests" required to be weighed in order to determine whether there had been an invasion of privacy. This statement has no basis whatsoever in Kuhl's ruling or that of Justice Turner for the Court of Appeal, neither of which identified let alone "assessed" any interest competing with Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claim. Kuhl's ruling was based entirely on Ms. Sanchez-Scott's failure to ask why the man was there or object to his presence; as far as Kuhl was concerned, he could have been a janitor in a white lab coat. Although Justice Turner understandably now wants to assist a judicial colleague in her quest for a lifetime federal judgeship, his opinion reversing Kuhl's ruling in Sanchez-Scott remains the best evidence of his and the Court of Appeal's view of the law and of Kuhl's unjustifiable dismissal of Ms. Sanchez-Scott's privacy claim.

KUHL'S RECORD ON OTHER CIVIL RIGHTS ISSUES

- Crusading for a tax exemption for Bob Jones University

  Senators' concerns: Kuhl was identified as one of a "band of young zealots" within the Justice Department who were the architects of the Reagan Administration's decision to reverse long-standing IRS policy that denied tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University and other racially discriminatory private schools. Kuhl and a colleague co-authored a 40-page memorandum strenuously arguing that the IRS should "reverse its position" in the case and "accord tax-exempt status" to Bob Jones. In an 8-1 ruling, the Supreme Court repudiated Kuhl's position.

  Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl testified that she regretted the position she took in the Bob Jones case because she did not understand that the Justice Department's role was to defend agency positions than can reasonably be defended (which Senator Leahy thought she should have learned in law school), and also because her position did not put the principle of nondiscrimination first.

  The facts: Kuhl's testimony appears to be a confirmation conversion. Although Kuhl has previously stated she came to believe she was wrong on Bob Jones, the reason she previously gave was that it was a political disaster for the Reagan Administration. As for her assertion now that the IRS policy was "reasonable" and therefore should have been defended, nowhere does the critical 40-page memo she wrote at the time even suggest the existence of a reasonable argument in defense of the IRS policy.

- Opposing affirmative action, trying to restrict discrimination remedies, and criticizing protection of workers

  Senators' concerns: While in private practice, Kuhl wrote an article expressing her opposition to affirmative action, which she called "a divisive societal manipulation." She was asked whether she had changed her position on this.

  Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl did not answer this question. Instead, she sought to dispel concerns about her opposition to affirmative action by stating that the Supreme Court had settled the matter in the Adarand case.

  The facts: Kuhl's article was written after (and indeed appears to criticize) the Court's decision in the Local 28 case, in which the Court had rejected Kuhl's argument that relief under Title VII could be granted only to identifiable victims of discrimination, even in cases of long-standing, intentional discrimination. There was thus established law concerning affirmative action when Kuhl wrote her article, and she was critical of it.

Senators' concerns: Kuhl was also questioned about her article "Employment at the Will of the Courts," and asked why she had chosen to focus on "the costs to employers and society of the laws against unfair treatment of workers."

Kuhl's testimony and the facts: Although Kuhl tried to portray her article in a light more favorable to the protection of workers, the fact remains that her article appeared to disapprove of the trend way from the doctrine of "employment at will" and toward protecting workers from adverse employment decisions not based on "good faith and fair dealing." Kuhl wrote, "[t]he practical effect of this jurisprudence . . . is to inhibit employer action and to decrease labor mobility."

- Other aspects of Kuhl's record on civil rights matters

Senators' concerns: Senator Leahy asked Kuhl to give an example of a situation in which "you displayed, as a lawyer, understanding of the human situation, such as the sting felt by women or minorities victimized by discrimination."

Kuhl's testimony and the facts: In her response, Kuhl did not cite a single instance pertaining to her career "as a lawyer." Instead, she focused on two rulings she has issued as a judge, the same two rulings she has cited repeatedly in her testimony, including in a letter to Senator Specter, in an effort to dispel the serious concerns about her civil rights record. Apart from the fact that Kuhl has only been able to cite two rulings in more than seven years as a state judge that she believes speaks favorably to her record on civil rights, neither of these cases negates the serious concerns that her record on civil rights has raised, including her efforts to give a tax-exemption to Bob Jones University. One presented a clear case of retaliation against an African American employee who had complained about employment discrimination, and Kuhl, writing for a unanimous appellate panel, upheld a jury verdict in his favor. In the other, Kuhl overturned disciplinary action against an openly gay police officer on due process grounds because he had not been given proper notice of the charges against him. Kuhl's ruling did not turn on the officer's sexual orientation or in any way affirmatively protect him from discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

- Kuhl's dismal pro bono record

At Kuhl's hearing, she admitted that during her nearly 12 years in private practice, she had handled only two pro bono cases. While Kuhl sought to excuse this on the ground that she was raising two children while trying to be a law firm partner, during the same period she found time to draft the Supreme Court amicus brief supporting VMI's efforts to continue to exclude women, as well as an amicus brief in support of an anti-choice group in Rust v. Sullivan. Across this country, many law firm associates and partners are also parents, yet they make the time to fulfill their ethical obligations to perform pro bono work.

REV_00165701

KUHL'S RECORD ON ACCESS TO JUSTICE

- Seeking to curtail citizens' access to the courts: UAW v. Brock

  Senators' concerns: As Deputy Solicitor General, Kuhl asked the Supreme Court to overturn the well-settled doctrine of associational standing, an argument the government had not made previously in the case. According to her own supervisor at the time, former Solicitor General Charles Fried, it was Kuhl who launched this "frontal attack." The move prompted such organizations as the Chamber of Commerce and the AMA to oppose Kuhl's extremist position, criticizing not only the government's legal argument but also its "litigating tactics" for raising such an important matter for the first time at this juncture. The Court rejected Kuhl's argument without dissent.

  Kuhl's testimony: At her hearing on April 1, although Kuhl acknowledged that she had argued the case in the Supreme Court, she denied that her name was on the government's brief, asserted that the government's legal position had been set without her involvement, and that she was merely defending "a winning argument in the court below."

  The facts: Kuhl's testimony that her name was not on the brief was flatly incorrect, as she later acknowledged when Senator Leahy pointed this out to her in written questions; Kuhl admitted that she had co-authored the brief. Her testimony was also incorrect as to the decision of the court below, which held that the UAW did not have standing in this particular case, not that the doctrine of associational standing should be overturned. Prior to Kuhl's involvement in the case, the government had in fact filed a brief in the Supreme Court describing the doctrine of associational standing as "well settled." Kuhl failed to justify her extreme position.

- Trying to limit protection for whistleblowers

  Senators' concerns: In a unanimous ruling strongly critical of Judge Kuhl in Liu v. Moore, the California Court of Appeal reversed Kuhl's ruling that prevented a whistleblower from getting monetary relief under California's anti-SLAPP law, explaining that Kuhl's decision was an improper "nullification of an important part of California's anti-SLAPP legislation."

  Kuhl's testimony: Kuhl claimed that the issue before her was one of first impression and that she had "struggled a good bit" with whether she had jurisdiction to consider Ms. Moore's claim for compensation.

  The facts: In its sharply worded, unanimous decision reversing Kuhl's ruling, the Court of Appeal "struggled" not at all with the issue of jurisdiction, disposing of it in a footnote.

- Seeking to invalidate qui tam access to the courts to combat fraud

  Senators' concerns: In private practice, Kuhl had urged the federal courts to strike down the qui tam provisions of federal law that allow private citizens to file suit to combat fraud against the federal government. The courts rejected these arguments and upheld the law.

REV_00165702

After Kuhl's hearing, additional information about Kuhl's efforts in this regard emerged from questions posed by Senators Grassley and Schumer. Kuhl had attached to a brief she filed in 1993 with the Ninth Circuit arguing the unconstitutionality of the qui tam provisions a copy of a memo written four years earlier by the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, stating that OLC believed the qui tam provisions to be unconstitutional. Kuhl told the court that the memo had recently been "released for publication" by the Justice Department, but did not affirmatively tell the court that it did not represent an official position of the Department. In light of this, Senator Schumer asked Kuhl whether she had fulfilled her ethical obligation "to be candid with the court."

Kuhl's testimony and the facts: Kuhl replied that she did not believe that "reference to the position of the Office of Legal Counsel was misleading to the court." Apparently, the Justice Department disagreed, for it wrote a letter to the court stating that it had learned that the OLC memo had been submitted to the court and was writing "to make clear to the Court" that the OLC memo "was never adopted by the Attorney General, and does not represent the position of the United States."

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

May 6, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter of April 30.

You propose that the President and Senate leader of the opposite party select in equal numbers members of citizen judicial nominating commissions in each State and circuit who would then select one nominee for each judicial vacancy. The President then would be required to nominate the individual selected by the commission and the Senate required to confirm that individual, at least absent "evidence" that the candidate is "unfit for judicial service." You propose this as a permanent change to the constitutional scheme for appointment of federal judges.

We appreciate and share your stated goal of repairing the "broken" judicial confirmation process and the "vicious cycle" of "delayed" Senate nominees. But we respectfully disagree with your proposal as inconsistent with the Constitution, with the history and traditions of the Nation's federal judicial appointments process, and with the soundest approach for appointment of highly qualified federal judges, as the Founders determined. Rather, as President Bush and many Senators of both parties have stated in the past, the solution to the broken judicial confirmation process is for the Senate to exercise its constitutional responsibility to vote up or down on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

I. The Constitution, the Current Problem, and the Solution

Article II of the Constitution provides: The President "shall nominate, and by with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States . . . ." During the first Congress and throughout most of this Nation's history, the Senate has both recognized and exercised its constitutional responsibility under Article II to hold majority, up-or-down votes on a President's nominees within a reasonable time after nomination. The Framers intended that the Senate vote on nominations would prevent Presidential appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist 76.

Your proposal would effectively transfer the nomination power of the President and the confirmation power of the Senate to a group of unelected and unaccountable private citizens. As the Supreme Court has explained, however, the Appointments Clause is "more than a matter of etiquette or protocol; it is among the significant structural safeguards of the constitutional scheme. By vesting the President with the exclusive power to select the principal (noninferior) officers of the United States, the Appointments Claude prevents congressional encroachment upon the Executive and Judicial Branches. This disposition was also designed to assure a higher quality of appointments: the Framers anticipated that the President would be less vulnerable to interest-group pressure and personal favoritism than would a collective body." Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651, 659 (1997) (citations omitted). Importantly, as the Supreme Court has also explained, the Appointments Clause not only guards against encroachment "but also preserves another aspect of the Constitution's structural integrity by preventing the diffusion of the appointment power." Freytag v. CIR, 501 U.S. 868, 878 (1991). Therefore, "neither Congress nor the Executive can agree to waive this structural protection" afforded by the Appointments Clause. Id. at 880. These principles and precedents amply demonstrate the constitutional and structural problems with any proposal to transfer the constitutional responsibilities of the President and the Senate to a group of unelected and unaccountable private citizens.

That said, we very much appreciate your recognition that the Senate's judicial confirmation process is "broken." The precise problem, in our judgment, is that the Senate has too often failed in recent years to hold votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination (often because a minority of Senators has used procedural tactics to prevent the Senate from voting and expressing its majority will). Many appeals court nominees have waited years for votes; many others have never received votes. Today, for example, although the Senate never before has denied a vote to an appeals court nominee on account of a filibuster, a minority of Senators are engaged in unprecedented simultaneous filibusters to prevent up or down votes on two superb nominees, Priscilla Owen and Miguel Estrada, who were nominated two years ago and who have the support of a majority of the Senate.

The problem of the Senate not holding votes on certain judicial nominees is a relatively recent development, albeit not new to this Presidency. In the Administrations of both President George H.W. Bush in the 102nd Congress and President Clinton in the 106th Congress, for example, too many appeals court nominees never received up-or-down votes. As President Bush has explained, however, the problem has persisted and significantly worsened in the 107th and 108th Congresses during this President's tenure.

President Bush's commitment to solving this problem also is not new. In June 2000, during the Presidential campaign, then-Governor Bush emphasized that the Senate should hold up-or-down votes on all nominees within a reasonable time after nomination (60 days). Last fall, after two additional years of Senate delays that were causing a judicial vacancy crisis (an "emergency situation," in the words of the American Bar Association), the President proposed a comprehensive three-Branch plan to solve the problem. President Bush stated that this three-Branch plan should apply now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. In particular, he proposed that judges provide one-year advance notice of retirement where possible; in March 2003, the Judicial Conference adopted the President's recommendation. The President proposed that Presidents nominate judges within 180 days of learning of a vacancy; the President is complying with this part of the plan and already has submitted nominations, for example, for the 15 new judgeships created on November 2, 2002. The President also proposed that the Senate vote up or down on judicial nominees within 180 days of receiving a nomination, a generous period of time for all Senators to evaluate nominees and to have their voices heard and their votes counted.

In the past, you and Senators of both parties have publicly agreed with the need for timely Senate votes on judicial nominees. On March 7, 2000, for example, you stated: "The basic problem is it takes so long for us to debate those qualifications. It is an example of Government not fulfilling its constitutional mandate because the President nominates, and we are charged with voting on the nominees. . . . I also plead with my colleagues to move judges with alacrity – vote them up or down. But this delay makes a mockery of the Constitution, makes a mockery of the fact that we are here working, and makes a mockery of the lives of very sincere people who have put themselves forward to be judges and then they hang out there in limbo."

In the 2000 campaign, moreover, several Democrat Senators such as Senator Leahy and Senator Harkin publicly and expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush's proposal for timely votes on nominees. In addition, Senator Specter in 2002, Senator Leahy in 1998, and Senator Bob Graham in 1991 all introduced Senate proposals to ensure timely up-or-down votes on judicial nominees. The Chief Justice, speaking on behalf of the federal Judiciary, also has expressly asked the Senate to ensure prompt up-or-down votes on nominees. And the American Bar Association, for its part, adopted a resolution last summer asking the Senate to hold prompt votes on judicial nominations, stating: "Vote them up or down, but don't hang them out to dry."

In seeking to fix the broken Senate confirmation process, we respectfully ask that you and other Senators consider these past statements, a sample of which are listed below, advocating timely up-or-down Senate votes on judicial nominees and ensure such votes no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate:

- Senator Leahy on October 3, 2000, stated: "Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this."

- Senator Leahy on June 18, 1998, stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators."

- Senator Daschle on October 5, 1999, stated: "As Chief Justice Rehnquist has recognized, 'The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' An up or down vote, that is all we ask for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much. . . . I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination."

- Senator Harkin on September 14, 2000, stated: "I'll just close by saying that Governor Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination."

    - Senator Harkin on October 6, 2000, stated that then-Governor Bush's proposal for an up-or-down vote within 60 days of nomination was a "great idea."

- Senator Biden on March 19, 1997, stated: "I respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated is entitled to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor."

- Senator Bob Graham on April 24, 1991, introduced a bill that would require the Judiciary Committee to report a nomination within 90 days of nomination and would require an up-or-down vote on the floor within 120 days of nomination. Senator Graham stated: "I consider it a judicial emergency when a judgeship is vacant for one day more than necessary."

- Senator Kennedy on February 3, 1998, stated: "We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote. If our Republican colleagues don't like them, vote against them. But give them a vote."

    - On September 21, 1999, Senator Kennedy stated: "It is true that some Senators have voiced concerns about these nominations. But that should not prevent a roll call vote which gives every Senator the opportunity to vote 'yes' or 'no.' . . . These delays can only be described as an abdication of the Senate's constitutional responsibility to work with the President and ensure the integrity of our federal courts."

- Senator Durbin on September 28, 1998, stated: "I am not suggesting that we would give our consent to all of these nominees. I am basically saying that this process should come to a close. The Senate should vote."

- Senator Feinstein on September 16, 1999, stated: "A nominee is entitled to a vote. Vote them up; vote them down."

    - Senator Feinstein on October 4, 1999, stated: "Our institutional integrity requires an up-or-down vote."

- Senator Harry Reid on June 9, 2001, stated: "I think we should have up-or-down votes in the committee and on the floor."

REV_00165708

- Senator Feingold on March 8, 2000, stated: "All Judge Paez has ever asked for was this opportunity: an up or down vote on his confirmation. Yet for years, the Senate has denied him that simple courtesy."

- Senator Kohl on September 21, 1999, stated: "These nominees, who have to put their lives on hold waiting for us to act, deserve an up or down vote."

    - Senator Kohl on May 15, 1997, stated: "[L]et's breathe life back into the confirmation process. Let's vote on the nominees who already have been approved by the Judiciary Committee, and let's set a timetable for future hearings on pending judges. Let's fulfill our constitutional responsibilities."

- Senator Lincoln on September 14, 2000, stated: "If we want people to respect their government again, then government must act respectably. It's my hope that we'll take the necessary steps to give these men and these women especially the up or down vote that they deserve."

- Senator Boxer on January 28, 1998, stated: "I think, whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democratic side, let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote."

    - Senator Boxer on May 14, 1997, stated: "According to the U.S. Constitution, the President nominates, and the Senate shall provide advice and consent. It is not the role of the Senate to obstruct the process and prevent numbers of highly qualified nominees from even being given the opportunity for a vote on the Senate floor."

- Senator Sarbanes on December 15, 1997, stated: "This politicization . . . has been extended to include the practice of denying nominees an up or down vote on the Senate floor or even in the Judiciary Committee. If the majority of the Senate opposes a judicial nominee enough to derail a nomination by an up or down vote, then at least the process has been served."

    - Senator Sarbanes on March 19, 1997, stated: "It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed. You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an up-or-down vote. That is the problem today."

- Senator Levin on September 14, 2000, stated: "The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether or not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts."

REV_00165709

- Senator Levin on May 24, 2000, stated: "These Michigan candidates . . . deserve to have an up or down vote on their nominations. . . . The Senate slowdown has a serious impact on the administration of justice."

II. Additional Points Regarding Your Proposal

I also want to make three other points regarding your proposal.

First, contrary to an implicit suggestion in your proposal, the members of these citizen committees themselves will bring their own views about the best qualities for judicial candidates, and their own preferences and visions and ideologies. But there is an important difference between these private citizens, on the one hand, and the President and 100 Senators, on the other. The American people did not elect these citizens to exercise this critical constitutional responsibility and cannot hold them accountable for their exercise of it.

Moreover, the Framers of the Constitution expressly considered and rejected a committee nomination process, concluding that such a process was unlikely to focus on the "intrinsic merit of the candidate." Federalist 76. As Hamilton explained, "in every exercise of the power of appointing to offices by an assembly of men we must expect to see a full display of all the private and party likings and dislikes, partialities and antipathies, attachments and animosities, which are felt by those who compose the assembly." Id. It will "rarely happen that the advancement of the public service will be the primary object either of party victories or of party negotiations." Id.

By contrast, "[t]he sole and undivided responsibility of one man" – the President – "will naturally beget a livelier sense of duty and a more exact regard to reputation. He will, on this account, feel himself under stronger obligations, and more interested to investigate with care the qualities requisite to the stations to be filled, and to prefer with impartiality the persons who may have the fairest pretensions to them." Id. The Framers wanted the President alone to exercise the power of nomination, moreover, because the "blame of a bad nomination would fall upon the President singly and absolutely." Federalist 77. In a committee nomination process, by contrast, "all idea of responsibility is lost." Id.

For these reasons, the Framers concluded that the President alone was to nominate and the Senate as a body was to vote up or down on the President's nominations.

Second, you explain that your proposal would ensure the merit of federal judges. In your letter to President Bush of March 16, 2001, however, you and Senator Leahy expressed the view that the American Bar Association ratings provide "unique, unbiased and essential information" about judicial candidates, and provide an "independent, apolitical" evaluation of their qualifications. You referred to the ABA rating as the "gold standard" for evaluating nominees. All 42 of the President's appeals court nominees rated so far have received "well-qualified" or "qualified" ABA ratings. By the standard outlined in your letter of March 16, 2001, all of these appeals court nominees warrant your support.

Third, you explain that your proposal would avoid "extremist" judges. The Framers intended that the President would nominate judges and the Senate as a body would vote up-or-down on the nominations to express the majority will of the Senate. The constitutional scheme of Presidential appointment and majority vote in the Senate ensures that the nominees are not unfit. And your proposal would not preclude judges you might label as "extremist" from emerging from the citizen committees. Indeed, even more troubling is the fact that your proposal would not prevent judges whom both the President and a majority of the Senate might view as "extremist" from emerging from the citizen committees, yet the President and Senate would be essentially powerless to prevent the appointment.

One final point warrants mention. We assume that you include Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen in your description of "extremists" given the extraordinary ongoing filibusters of their nominations. But Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen represent the mainstream of American law and American values, as indicated by the fact that the President nominated them and a majority of the Senate supports them. Moreover, Miguel Estrada is supported by prominent Democrat lawyers such as Seth Waxman and Ron Klain and by a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, among many others. He worked for four years in the Clinton Administration. He was unanimously rated "well-qualified" by the American Bar Association. Priscilla Owen is supported by three former Democrat Justices on the Texas Supreme Court with whom she served and 15 past Presidents of the State Bar of Texas. She also received a unanimous "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association.

These two nominees are the mainstream. It bears note, moreover, that you and other Democrat Senators have supported nominees such as Jay Bybee and Michael McConnell who (unlike Mr. Estrada and Justice Owen) have taken strong public positions contrary to yours on significant issues of concern to you. We believe that an unfair double standard is being applied to both Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

* * *

We appreciate your desire to fix the broken judicial confirmation process. The President believes that the fix is for the Senate to exercise its constitutional responsibility and ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable time after nomination, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

HR 1926 IH

108th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 1926

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

May 1, 2003

Mr. HAYWORTH introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003' (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

`SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) INITIAL TAXES- There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.
`(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY- In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(c) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION; EXCESS FEE- For purposes of this section--

`(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION-

`(A) IN GENERAL- The term `excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

`(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE- For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of--

`(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

`(ii) a reasonable fee based on--

`(I) the number of hours of non-duplicative, professional quality legal work provided by the collecting attorney of material value to the outcome of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (D) of subsection (h)(2),

`(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

`(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE-

`(i) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

`(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is--

`(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

`(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or `(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

`(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term `skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

`(iv) LIMITATION- An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES- Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee--

`(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and `(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

`(2) EXCESS FEE- The term `excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

`(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY- For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

`(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF- For purposes of this section, the term `applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

`(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES- For purposes of this section--

`(1) COLLECTING ATTORNEY- The term `collecting attorney' means any person engaged in the practice of law who represents--

`(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

`(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

`(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

`(D) any assignee or other holder of claims described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

`(2) TAXABLE PERIOD- The term `taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of--

`(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or `(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

`(3) CORRECTION-

`(A) GENERAL RULE- Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

`(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

`(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS- In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

`(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE- No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

`(4) LIMITED REASONABLE CAUSE- For purposes of section 4962(a), an excess fee transaction shall not be treated as an event which was due to reasonable cause if the amount of the fee provided would exceed the value of the services received in exchange therefor determined with the maximum adjustment rate allowed under subsection (c)(1)(C).

`(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS-

`(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE- Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

`(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT- The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney--

`(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

`(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

`(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM-

`(1) IN GENERAL- In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

`(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including--

`(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

`(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

`(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

`(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

`(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

`(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

`(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and `(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

`(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF- The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

`(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

`(i) REGULATIONS- The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations to prevent avoidance of the purposes of this section and regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.'.

Subject: story on Senate's nuclear plan on filibusters

Hatch group may go +nuclear, on judges
Plan would limit use of Rule XXII in Dem filibusters
By Alexander Bolton and Geoff Earle
Several senior Republican senators are seeking wider party backing for a bold plan that would break the Democrats, filibuster of President Bush,s judicial nominees.
Their approach calls for employing a rarely used parliamentary tactic to overturn current Senate procedures.
Under the strategy envisioned by Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), among others, the Republicans would strip any Senate minority * currently the Democrats * of their ability to filibuster presidential nominees.

Approval by Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Tenn.), which is being sought, would all but assure that the plan would go forward.

Under the most likely scenario now under discussion, they would secure a ruling from the chair that Senate Rule XXII does not apply to executive submissions to the Senate * and that includes judicial nominees. Rule XXII provides for unlimited debate on all legislative issues that reach the floor unless three-fifths of the Senate calls a halt.

With such an approach, a favorable ruling from the chair on limiting the scope of Rule XXII could stand after only a simple majority approved it.

Anticipating these moves, Democrats have already asked the Senate parliamentarian to weigh in on the issue in their defense.

From the standpoint of the proponents, the appeal of this &silver-bullet8 strategy is that it would quash the Democratic blockade without requiring 60 votes, the number needed by current rules to halt such delaying tactics, or 67 votes, the number needed to change a filibustered Senate rule.

One drawback of this proposed tactic is that it might destroy whatever is left of the working relationship between Democrats and Republicans. That is why some legislative experts liken the parliamentary tool to a legislative nuclear bomb.

Under the most likely scenario, the presiding officer of the Senate * perhaps Vice President Dick Cheney * would rule that a filibuster of presidential nominees is unprotected by Rule XXII.

Democrats would need 51 votes to overturn that ruling. In practical terms, that means they would need the help of two GOP defectors * three if Sen. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) votes with Republicans, as he often has.

Another alternative would be to change the rule through the Senate Rules Committee. But that process would entail extensive hearings and negotiations, and would be unlikely to attract Democratic support.

Democrats would view any change of Senate rules that circumscribed the rights of the minority party and was not approved by two-thirds of the chamber as an abuse of majority power.

However, with few exceptions, Senate Republicans view the filibuster of circuit court nominees, a tactic that until recently was rarely used, as an abuse of minority power.

Democrats are filibustering Bush,s nominations of Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, respectively. This has prompted an outcry from conservatives in Congress and around the country.

And Republicans on the Judiciary Committee expect Democrats soon to filibuster two more Bush nominees: Bill Pryor, nominated to the 11th Circuit Court, and Carolyn Kuhl, nominated to the 9th Circuit Court, said Margarita Tapia, spokeswoman for the panel.

However, what may be really at stake is the future makeup of the Supreme Court. The justices on the high tribunal have now served together for nearly a decade. Three of the nine justices are over 70 years old.

Although Senate Republican leaders have kept their parliamentary strategy close to the vest, Hatch offered an insight into it in during an interview Friday with The Hill.

Hatch said the Democratic filibuster is &violative of the Constitution8 and &totally politicizing of the judicial selection process,8 adding: &I know how to break it, and I will when the time comes.8

When asked how he would break the Democratic blockade, Hatch said: &You,ve got to deny Rule XXII on the executive calendar. I think you,ll see this in the not-too-distant future because the process is broken and it can,t continue like this.8

All regular Senate business*that is to say all public and private bills*is placed on the legislative calendar. Business sent to the Senate from the White House, such as treaties, executive branch nominees and judicial branch nominees, are placed on the executive calendar.
Hatch believes the Senate has a right to set its own rules * in this case the right to filibuster * for the legislative calendar but not for the executive calendar because that would entail imposing Senate rules on the executive branch and would violate the Constitution,s separation of powers.
&The executive branch and the judicial branch are co-equal [with the legislative branch],8 Hatch said.
However, when pressed later about how specifically he would curtail Rule XXII, Hatch said: &Rule XXII should not apply to the executive calendar. I, m not going to go into the plan. There are a variety of methodologies we, re looking at.8
The current Senate stalemate over nominees is the culmination of the increasingly intense battle over the ideological makeup of the federal judiciary, and a sign, many GOP lawmakers say, that the judicial nominating process is &broken.8
&I think it,s a big problem,8 said Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.), the chairman of the Senate Rules Committee. &I think it,s unconstitutional, but I would defer to Senator Hatch about what is the best way to deal with the problem. I don,t think we can let this stand. We cannot let the Democrats set this [precedent] in perpetuity for them and for us, requiring 60 votes to confirm a judge.8
Lott said the Senate Republican leadership &has to make the final call, but there are a number of us who think we,ve got to take some further action*I think Ted Stevens [of Alaska], Orrin Hatch and a number of others.8
Lott said that there are ways to change how the Senate does business without enlisting the support of 67 senators, the number needed for a filibustered rule change, but he would not reveal any specific details: &I don,t want to get into it right now. I don,t want to reveal our hand because if we say what exactly we are entertaining, the Democrats will try to find a way to block it.8
One GOP leadership aide said Frist is open to the suggestions of Hatch and others but will not make any hasty decisions.
&We,re not going to rule out any rules changes,8 said the aide. &Mr. Frist may do something later but he,s not going to tear up the rules book. He is going to proceed in a very slow and deliberative way.8
&We,ve learned in the past just because a member or aide says he knows the way to do something that may not be what the parliamentarian says,8 the aide added.
However, when asked if he has solicited the parliamentarian about curbing Rule XXII, Hatch said: &I know what the parliamentarian is going to say.8
A Senate Democratic leadership aide warned against an attempt by Hatch to exempt judicial nominees from the Senate,s filibuster rules. &Rule XXII obviously does apply to nominees, no matter how he wants to parse it.8
If Republicans were able to force a change by jamming through a procedural ruling, &It would be a nuclear winter in the Senate,8 said the aide. &This place would fall apart. It would be dire consequences if that happened, in my opinion.8
The aide said that Hatch doesn,t have the case he thinks he has to win a ruling of the chair, based on the Senate,s precedents, because Republicans have in effect already acknowledged the Democratic filibuster of Miguel Estrada.
&He,s got a precedent of five cloture votes on Estrada, so he doesn,t have a very good precedent,8 said the aide.
The aide also pointed to other times when there have been filibusters and cloture votes on judicial nominees. He called &ludicrous8 GOP claims that the ongoing Democratic filibusters of Estrada and Owen were unprecedented. Cloture was filed to end a filibuster against Abe Fortas,s elevation to chief justice of the Supreme Court. Cloture was also filed and invoked on Stephen Breyer when he was a federal appeals court nominee in 1980.
Those arguments aside, the aide conceded that it might be possible for Republicans to force a rules change by moving that Rule XXII does not apply to judicial nominees and then getting a favorable ruling from the chair.

Then the key question would be, &How would the chair rule, and how would the parliamentarian rule, and would the chair listen to his ruling?8 said the aide. The chair would not necessarily have to hew to that advice) although the aide said it would be extraordinary to ignore the parliamentarian,s ruling.

Hatch group may go +nuclear, on judges
Plan would limit use of Rule XXII in Dem filibusters
By Alexander Bolton and Geoff Earle
Several senior Republican senators are seeking wider party backing for a bold plan that would break the Democrats, filibuster of President Bush,s judicial nominees.
Their approach calls for employing a rarely used parliamentary tactic to overturn current Senate procedures.
Under the strategy envisioned by Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), among others, the Republicans would strip any Senate minority * currently the Democrats * of their ability to filibuster presidential nominees.

Approval by Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Tenn.), which is being sought, would all but assure that the plan would go forward.
Under the most likely scenario now under discussion, they would secure a ruling from the chair that Senate Rule XXII does not apply to executive submissions to the Senate * and that includes judicial nominees. Rule XXII provides for unlimited debate on all legislative issues that reach the floor unless three-fifths of the Senate calls a halt.
With such an approach, a favorable ruling from the chair on limiting the scope of Rule XXII could stand after only a simple majority approved it.
Anticipating these moves, Democrats have already asked the Senate parliamentarian to weigh in on the issue in their defense.
From the standpoint of the proponents, the appeal of this &silver-bullet8 strategy is that it would quash the Democratic blockade without requiring 60 votes, the number needed by current rules to halt such delaying tactics, or 67 votes, the number needed to change a filibustered Senate rule.
One drawback of this proposed tactic is that it might destroy whatever is left of the working relationship between Democrats and Republicans. That is why some legislative experts liken the parliamentary tool to a legislative nuclear bomb.

Under the most likely scenario, the presiding officer of the Senate * perhaps Vice President Dick Cheney * would rule that a filibuster of presidential nominees is unprotected by Rule XXII.
Democrats would need 51 votes to overturn that ruling. In practical terms, that means they would need the help of two GOP defectors * three if Sen. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) votes with Republicans, as he often has.
Another alternative would be to change the rule through the Senate Rules Committee. But that process would entail extensive hearings and negotiations, and would be unlikely to attract Democratic support.
Democrats would view any change of Senate rules that circumscribed the rights of the minority party and was not approved by two-thirds of the chamber as an abuse of majority power.
However, with few exceptions, Senate Republicans view the filibuster of circuit court nominees, a tactic that until recently was rarely used, as an abuse of minority power.
Democrats are filibustering Bush,s nominations of Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, respectively. This has prompted an outcry from conservatives in Congress and around the country.
And Republicans on the Judiciary Committee expect Democrats soon to filibuster two more Bush nominees: Bill Pryor, nominated to the 11th Circuit Court, and Carolyn Kuhl, nominated to the 9th Circuit Court, said Margarita Tapia, spokeswoman for the panel.
However, what may be really at stake is the future makeup of the Supreme Court. The justices on the high tribunal have now served together for nearly a decade. Three of the nine justices are over 70 years old.
Although Senate Republican leaders have kept their parliamentary strategy close to the vest, Hatch offered an insight into it in during an interview Friday with The Hill.
Hatch said the Democratic filibuster is &violative of the Constitution8 and &totally politicizing of the judicial selection process,8 adding: &I know how to break it, and I will when the time comes.8
When asked how he would break the Democratic blockade, Hatch said: &You,ve got to deny Rule XXII on the executive calendar. I think you,ll see this in the not-too-distant future because the process is broken and it can,t continue like this.8
All regular Senate business*that is to say all public and private bills*is placed on the legislative calendar. Business sent to the Senate from the White House, such as treaties, executive branch nominees and judicial branch nominees, are placed on the executive calendar.
Hatch believes the Senate has a right to set its own rules * in this case the right to filibuster * for the legislative calendar but not for the executive calendar because that would entail imposing Senate rules on the executive branch and would violate the Constitution,s separation of powers.
&The executive branch and the judicial branch are co-equal [with the legislative branch],8 Hatch said.
However, when pressed later about how specifically he would curtail Rule XXII, Hatch said: &Rule XXII should not apply to the executive calendar. I, m not going to go into the plan. There are a variety of methodologies we, re looking at.8
The current Senate stalemate over nominees is the culmination of the increasingly intense battle over the ideological makeup of the federal judiciary, and a sign, many GOP lawmakers say, that the judicial nominating process is &broken.8
&I think it,s a big problem,8 said Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.), the chairman of the Senate Rules Committee. &I think it,s unconstitutional, but I would defer to Senator Hatch about what is the best way to deal with the problem. I don,t think we can let this stand. We cannot let the Democrats set this [precedent] in perpetuity for them and for us, requiring 60 votes to confirm a judge.8
Lott said the Senate Republican leadership &has to make the final call, but there are a number of us who think we,ve got to take some further action*I think Ted Stevens [of Alaska], Orrin Hatch and a number of others.8
Lott said that there are ways to change how the Senate does business without enlisting the support of 67 senators, the number needed for a filibustered rule change, but he would not reveal any specific details: &I don,t want to get into it right now. I don,t want to reveal our hand because if we say what exactly we are entertaining, the Democrats will try to find a way to block it.8

One GOP leadership aide said Frist is open to the suggestions of Hatch and others but will not make any hasty decisions.

&We,re not going to rule out any rules changes,8 said the aide. &Mr. Frist may do something later but he,s not going to tear up the rules book. He is going to proceed in a very slow and deliberative way.8

&We,ve learned in the past just because a member or aide says he knows the way to do something that may not be what the parliamentarian says,8 the aide added.

However, when asked if he has solicited the parliamentarian about curbing Rule XXII, Hatch said: &I know what the parliamentarian is going to say.8

A Senate Democratic leadership aide warned against an attempt by Hatch to exempt judicial nominees from the Senate,s filibuster rules. &Rule XXII obviously does apply to nominees, no matter how he wants to parse it.8

If Republicans were able to force a change by jamming through a procedural ruling, &It would be a nuclear winter in the Senate,8 said the aide. &This place would fall apart. It would be dire consequences if that happened, in my opinion.8

CQ TODAY - LEGAL AFFAIRS

Hatch to Introduce Asbestos Settlement Measure Soon
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, intends to circulate by Friday draft legislation that would shield businesses and their insurers from lawsuits related to asbestos exposure with the aim of introducing the measure by early next week.

Hatch said Tuesday he is intent on moving the bill even though meetings between business lobbyists and labor officials held at his behest have not yielded agreement on such matters as the size of a compensation fund and medical criteria claimants must meet to be paid.

"This is a problem you can't ignore," Hatch said.

Businesses and their insurers want Congress to define how much they have to pay in claims related to asbestos exposure. The substance, which has been linked to lung cancer and other diseases, was long used in insulation. The total cost of past and future claims has been estimated at as much as $265 billion.

Hatch's bill would establish a fund made up of contributions from businesses and insurers. Business lobbyists have proposed a $90 billion fund. Hatch said labor officials have asked for a $120 billion fund. He will include language setting the overall amount of the fund at $108 billion, and indications are he is unlikely to budge from that number.

While Hatch has not revealed the details of his draft bill, business lobbyists would like to see a measure in which claims on the fund are handled by examiners working under a fund administrator. The examiners would have access to an expert medical panel to help them evaluate claims.

Under the proposal being discussed by businesses, individuals who claim bodily harm from asbestos exposure would no longer be able to file lawsuits in regular courts. Instead, they would have to apply to the trust fund for compensation. Eligible claimants would be slotted into one of several medical categories for claims payments. The decision of an examiner could be appealed to a special asbestos claims court. Beyond that, decisions could be appealed further to a federal appellate court, which would have to consider whether they were "arbitrary and capricious," a relatively high legal standard

Contributions to the trust fund would be split between businesses and insurance companies. Business lobbyists have tentatively agreed to a formula for allocating their share. But insurance firms still have questions about their share, such as how to divide payments among primary insurance companies and reinsurance firms.

Hatch said he intends to require contributions from foreign reinsurers as well as domestic ones. He acknowledged there could be a "constitutional problem" with doing so, but seemed confident that he could produce language to address the issue.

Business lobbyists said the bill might include language to limit constitutional challenges to the bill to a defined period of time - such as 90 days - after its enactment.

All sides have discussed whether the bill should require the federal government to backstop the trust fund, in case it runs out of money before all asbestos claimants have received compensation. Lobbyists said labor officials are insisting on such a guarantee. But Hatch said he had "no desire" to put taxpayers on the hook for paying asbestos claims.

Lobbyists are discussing whether it is possible to ask for a provision that would require future Congresses that make changes to the fund to assume any financial consequences of doing so.

Businesses and labor officials also still differ on how much money should be paid to claimants according to what medical category they fall under. The Asbestos Alliance, a broad coalition of businesses and insurers, privately remains ready to drop its support for a fund and instead press for legislation establishing a set of medical criteria under which plaintiffs could sue in regular courts for asbestos-related problems. Several such bills are pending in both chambers.

Hatch said he wants to make payments into the fund tax-deductible and claims paid by the fund tax-free.

Hatch has spent weeks waiting for the sides to come to a final agreement, and signaled Tuesday that he does not want to wait any longer.

But he acknowledged that moving a bill will be more difficult if business and labor are not united behind him.

"If it goes down, I will have done everything I know how to do," Hatch said.

Amendment Aims to Protect Old Glory From Desecration
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
The House Judiciary Constitution Subcommittee will mark up a measure Wednesday that would propose a constitutional amendment to ban flag desecration.
The congressional battle over flag desecration began after a 1989 Supreme Court ruling that state laws against flag burning violated the First Amendment. A year later, the high court ruled that a federal flag-burning law (PL 101-131) was unconstitutional as well.
The resolution (H J Res 4) would amend the Constitution to give Congress the authority to pass laws barring desecration of the flag. If Congress passes the resolution, it would go to the states. Support of 38 states is needed for ratification. The proposal has a seven-year deadline for ratification.
The House has passed flag measures four times since 1995. But similar proposals died in the Senate in 1990, 1995 and 2000, never drawing more than 63 votes, short of the two-thirds needed.
An increase in public patriotism following the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and the war in Iraq could boost the amendment's margin of passage in the House this year. But opponents say it is still not likely to produce enough votes to push the proposal through the narrowly divided Senate.
The markup will follow a hearing on the resolution that is scheduled for 3 p.m. Wednesday in 2237 Rayburn.

The May 15 deadline for filing your public financial disclosure report is near. I previously issued guidance on this obligation on March 18, 2003, encouraging you to file your form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline (see attached for a copy).

It is important that you meet this May 15 deadline because your report may be released to the public – i.e., the press – as of June 15, and an adequate review by the Counsel's office is your first and perhaps best defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit personal financial information. I would like to do all I can in this compressed time framework to ensure that your report is complete and ready for release.

If you need assistance or have any questions regarding your report, please contact me by return e-mail or at x2608, and I will provide the advice or help you need to move this matter off your plate.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

FROM: NANETTE R. EVERSON
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: 2003 ETHICS BRIEFING AND PUBLIC FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS

This memorandum provides guidance concerning your mandatory annual ethics briefing and your duty to file a public financial disclosure report (SF 278) by May 15, 2003. As explained more fully below, you will have several opportunities to satisfy the annual training requirement but I encourage you to file your draft public financial disclosure form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline. The Counsel's Office must make your report available to the public within 30 days of your filing, and an adequate review by my office is your first and perhaps best line of defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit your personal financial information.

Ethics Briefings Are Tailored To Each Office

How Ethics Briefings Are Structured And "Ethics In A Nutshell"

The ethics laws require one hour of live training for all commissioned officers every year. This year the Counsel's Office is providing customized training that focuses on the specialized ethics issues that occur in each office. This training also includes those important non-commissioned officers, such as the "gatekeepers" who schedule meetings and the administrative assistants who screen documents and telephone calls, who are vital to ensuring that the commissioned staff does not inadvertently stumble by participating in matters or attending meetings while possessing financial interests that could be affected by these matters or meetings.

Additionally, because the ethics laws are complex, the Counsel's Office has created "Ethics in a Nutshell" cards that will be provided at your briefing. These wallet-sized cards have been well received, I believe, because they summarize ethics rules and identify common mistakes so that you won't have to refer to dense regulations to achieve ethics compliance.

Help Us Schedule Your Ethics Briefing And Tailor The Briefing To Your Genuine Needs

The several White House offices have widely varying ethics concerns and issues. To cite just a couple examples, the co-sponsorship and co-branding issues that arise frequently in the USA Freedom Corps Office rarely arise in the other offices, and the Advance Office faces gift and volunteer-management issues more frequently than other offices. For these reasons, I continue to create a customized power point briefing for each office to address your unique ethics needs. While it may be human nature to shy away from discussing difficult issues, I can help you during the ethics briefing by teaching directly to your tough questions—generically and anonymously—in your office-wide briefing. The most successful training is relevant training, and we are at our best when we team together to ensure that we teach to the issues that matter as well as the basics. So, in addition to suggesting dates that are convenient for you, please also either e-mail or telephone me in advance with any issues that you believe should be addressed in the briefing.

Thus far during 2003, over half of the commissioned officers have been trained using this targeted format at the following office briefings: February 6 - National Economic Council; February 19 - Legislative Affairs; February 28 - Intergovernmental Affairs; March 17 - Advance; March 18 - Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives; and, March 19 - White House Military Office.

For those commissioned officers who miss their particular office's briefing, there will be three general sessions on April 1st, April 8th , and May 6th, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. in room 450, EEOB. Additionally, I provide a monthly briefing on the third Wednesday of every month for all new employees, from 10:00 to 11:00 in either room 450 or room 472 EEOB (check with me in advance to verify the location).

I understand that other events often arise without notice, and that these crises may require that we schedule an individual briefing to suit your needs (as I have done for all the incoming officers). This one-on-one format affords officers an opportunity to discuss issues—such as a possible job search—that you would not raise in public. If you have attended any briefing this year with me—either in your new employee ethics briefing or with your office—you have satisfied your regulatory requirement and need not attend any other briefings. However, if you desire an individualized briefing, please call me directly at extension 6-2608 (office) or at 494-5607 (cell). I realize fully how hard all of you are working, and the importance of the other issues you must resolve, and I will work with you to help you achieve ethics compliance.

Annual Financial Disclosure Reporting Requirement

The ethics laws also require commissioned officers to file an annual public financial disclosure report (SF 278). Your annual report is due no later than May 15, 2003. There are several points I would like to underscore, however:

- In order to comply with the law and to help speed the review of your report, the sooner you provide a draft to the Counsel's Office, in room 158, EEOB, the more help we can provide to you. Every year, many filers wait until the last minute to submit their report, and this causes frustration on the part of commissioned officers who have many questions to ask of my small staff of lawyers and ethics professionals.
- There is only one non-negotiable: do not submit your brokerage statements in lieu of filling out the form. The Office of Government Ethics (OGE) takes the view that any documents attached to the form may be released to the public, and this would raise serious privacy, security, and ethics concerns regarding such statements.

REV_00165895

- The annual filing should be fairly straightforward to those of you who have done this before. It is recommended that you refer to your last report during your preparation of your 2002 report, to simplify the task of filing and to ensure consistency in your reporting. Please note, however, that the information required by the annual report is somewhat different from the information that you provided when you filed as a new entrant: e.g., the annual report covers calendar year 2002 only, but does require the disclosure of transaction and gift information.
- The law requires that the reports for Assistants to the President and Deputy Assistants to the President be submitted to OGE for review.
- As you complete your form, remember that, as an annual filer, you must complete all schedules except for Part II of Schedule D.
- As with a tax return, you are responsible for the accuracy and completeness of your form. (A list of common problems in filling out an SF 278 is attached.)

Enclosed is a blank copy of the SF 278. This form is also available via the OGE Internet web-site, at http://www.usoge.gov; to download, click on the link for "Forms, Publications, and Other Ethics Documents," click on "OGE and SF forms," and then toggle down to the instructions.

If you have questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me or either Sandy Mabry (at 6-5071), Gary Phillips (at 6-5336), or Emory Rounds (at 6-5067).

Thus far during 2003, over half of the commissioned officers have been trained using this targeted format at the following office briefings: February 6 - National Economic Council; February 19 - Legislative Affairs; February 28 - Intergovernmental Affairs; March 17 - Advance; March 18 - Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives; and, March 19 - White House Military Office.

For those commissioned officers who miss their particular office's briefing, there will be three general sessions on April 1st, April 8th , and May 6th, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. in room 450, EEOB. Additionally, I provide a monthly briefing on the third Wednesday of every month for all new employees, from 10:00 to 11:00 in either room 450 or room 472 EEOB (check with me in advance to verify the location).

I understand that other events often arise without notice, and that these crises may require that we schedule an individual briefing to suit your needs (as I have done for all the incoming officers). This one-on-one format affords officers an opportunity to discuss issues—such as a possible job search—that you would not raise in public. If you have attended any briefing this year with me—either in your new employee ethics briefing or with your office—you have satisfied your regulatory requirement and need not attend any other briefings. However, if you desire an individualized briefing, please call me directly at extension 6-2608 (office) or at 494-5607 (cell). I realize fully how hard all of you are working, and the importance of the other issues you must resolve, and I will work with you to help you achieve ethics compliance.

Annual Financial Disclosure Reporting Requirement

The ethics laws also require commissioned officers to file an annual public financial disclosure report (SF 278). Your annual report is due no later than May 15, 2003. There are several points I would like to underscore, however:

- In order to comply with the law and to help speed the review of your report, the sooner you provide a draft to the Counsel's Office, in room 158, EEOB, the more help we can provide to you. Every year, many filers wait until the last minute to submit their report, and this causes frustration on the part of commissioned officers who have many questions to ask of my small staff of lawyers and ethics professionals.
- There is only one non-negotiable: do not submit your brokerage statements in lieu of filling out the form. The Office of Government Ethics (OGE) takes the view that any documents attached to the form may be released to the public, and this would raise serious privacy, security, and ethics concerns regarding such statements.

REV_00165899

- The annual filing should be fairly straightforward to those of you who have done this before. It is recommended that you refer to your last report during your preparation of your 2002 report, to simplify the task of filing and to ensure consistency in your reporting. Please note, however, that the information required by the annual report is somewhat different from the information that you provided when you filed as a new entrant: e.g., the annual report covers calendar year 2002 only, but does require the disclosure of transaction and gift information.
- The law requires that the reports for Assistants to the President and Deputy Assistants to the President be submitted to OGE for review.
- As you complete your form, remember that, as an annual filer, you must complete all schedules except for Part II of Schedule D.
- As with a tax return, you are responsible for the accuracy and completeness of your form. (A list of common problems in filling out an SF 278 is attached.)

Enclosed is a blank copy of the SF 278. This form is also available via the OGE Internet web-site, at http://www.usoge.gov; to download, click on the link for "Forms, Publications, and Other Ethics Documents," click on "OGE and SF forms," and then toggle down to the instructions.

If you have questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me or either Sandy Mabry (at 6-5071), Gary Phillips (at 6-5336), or Emory Rounds (at 6-5067).

The May 15 deadline for filing your public financial disclosure report is near. I previously issued guidance on this obligation on March 18, 2003, encouraging you to file your form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline (see attached for a copy).

It is important that you meet this May 15 deadline because your report may be released to the public) i.e., the press) as of June 15, and an adequate review by the Counsel's office is your first and perhaps best defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit personal financial information. I would like to do all I can in this compressed time framework to ensure that your report is complete and ready for release.

If you need assistance or have any questions regarding your report, please contact me by return e-mail or at x2608, and I will provide the advice or help you need to move this matter off your plate.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

FROM: NANETTE R. EVERSON
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: 2003 ETHICS BRIEFING AND PUBLIC FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS

This memorandum provides guidance concerning your mandatory annual ethics briefing and your duty to file a public financial disclosure report (SF 278) by May 15, 2003. As explained more fully below, you will have several opportunities to satisfy the annual training requirement but I encourage you to file your draft public financial disclosure form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline. The Counsel's Office must make your report available to the public within 30 days of your filing, and an adequate review by my office is your first and perhaps best line of defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit your personal financial information.

Ethics Briefings Are Tailored To Each Office

How Ethics Briefings Are Structured And "Ethics In A Nutshell"

The ethics laws require one hour of live training for all commissioned officers every year. This year the Counsel's Office is providing customized training that focuses on the specialized ethics issues that occur in each office. This training also includes those important non-commissioned officers, such as the "gatekeepers" who schedule meetings and the administrative assistants who screen documents and telephone calls, who are vital to ensuring that the commissioned staff does not inadvertently stumble by participating in matters or attending meetings while possessing financial interests that could be affected by these matters or meetings.

Additionally, because the ethics laws are complex, the Counsel's Office has created "Ethics in a Nutshell" cards that will be provided at your briefing. These wallet-sized cards have been well received, I believe, because they summarize ethics rules and identify common mistakes so that you won't have to refer to dense regulations to achieve ethics compliance.

Help Us Schedule Your Ethics Briefing And Tailor The Briefing To Your Genuine Needs

The several White House offices have widely varying ethics concerns and issues. To cite just a couple examples, the co-sponsorship and co-branding issues that arise frequently in the USA Freedom Corps Office rarely arise in the other offices, and the Advance Office faces gift and volunteer-management issues more frequently than other offices. For these reasons, I continue to create a customized power point briefing for each office to address your unique ethics needs. While it may be human nature to shy away from discussing difficult issues, I can help you during the ethics briefing by teaching directly to your tough questions—generically and anonymously—in your office-wide briefing. The most successful training is relevant training, and we are at our best when we team together to ensure that we teach to the issues that matter as well as the basics. So, in addition to suggesting dates that are convenient for you, please also either e-mail or telephone me in advance with any issues that you believe should be addressed in the briefing.

Thus far during 2003, over half of the commissioned officers have been trained using this targeted format at the following office briefings: February 6 - National Economic Council; February 19 - Legislative Affairs; February 28 - Intergovernmental Affairs; March 17 - Advance; March 18 - Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives; and, March 19 - White House Military Office.

For those commissioned officers who miss their particular office's briefing, there will be three general sessions on April 1st, April 8th , and May 6th, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. in room 450, EEOB. Additionally, I provide a monthly briefing on the third Wednesday of every month for all new employees, from 10:00 to 11:00 in either room 450 or room 472 EEOB (check with me in advance to verify the location).

I understand that other events often arise without notice, and that these crises may require that we schedule an individual briefing to suit your needs (as I have done for all the incoming officers). This one-on-one format affords officers an opportunity to discuss issues—such as a possible job search—that you would not raise in public. If you have attended any briefing this year with me—either in your new employee ethics briefing or with your office—you have satisfied your regulatory requirement and need not attend any other briefings. However, if you desire an individualized briefing, please call me directly at extension 6-2608 (office) or at 494-5607 (cell). I realize fully how hard all of you are working, and the importance of the other issues you must resolve, and I will work with you to help you achieve ethics compliance.

Annual Financial Disclosure Reporting Requirement

The ethics laws also require commissioned officers to file an annual public financial disclosure report (SF 278). Your annual report is due no later than May 15, 2003. There are several points I would like to underscore, however:

- In order to comply with the law and to help speed the review of your report, the sooner you provide a draft to the Counsel's Office, in room 158, EEOB, the more help we can provide to you. Every year, many filers wait until the last minute to submit their report, and this causes frustration on the part of commissioned officers who have many questions to ask of my small staff of lawyers and ethics professionals.
- There is only one non-negotiable: do not submit your brokerage statements in lieu of filling out the form. The Office of Government Ethics (OGE) takes the view that any documents attached to the form may be released to the public, and this would raise serious privacy, security, and ethics concerns regarding such statements.

REV_00165934

- The annual filing should be fairly straightforward to those of you who have done this before. It is recommended that you refer to your last report during your preparation of your 2002 report, to simplify the task of filing and to ensure consistency in your reporting. Please note, however, that the information required by the annual report is somewhat different from the information that you provided when you filed as a new entrant: e.g., the annual report covers calendar year 2002 only, but does require the disclosure of transaction and gift information.
- The law requires that the reports for Assistants to the President and Deputy Assistants to the President be submitted to OGE for review.
- As you complete your form, remember that, as an annual filer, you must complete all schedules except for Part II of Schedule D.
- As with a tax return, you are responsible for the accuracy and completeness of your form. (A list of common problems in filling out an SF 278 is attached.)

Enclosed is a blank copy of the SF 278. This form is also available via the OGE Internet web-site, at http://www.usoge.gov; to download, click on the link for "Forms, Publications, and Other Ethics Documents," click on "OGE and SF forms," and then toggle down to the instructions.

If you have questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me or either Sandy Mabry (at 6-5071), Gary Phillips (at 6-5336), or Emory Rounds (at 6-5067).

The May 15 deadline for filing your public financial disclosure report is near. I previously issued guidance on this obligation on March 18, 2003, encouraging you to file your form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline (see attached for a copy).

It is important that you meet this May 15 deadline because your report may be released to the public) i.e., the press) as of June 15, and an adequate review by the Counsel's office is your first and perhaps best defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit personal financial information. I would like to do all I can in this compressed time framework to ensure that your report is complete and ready for release.

If you need assistance or have any questions regarding your report, please contact me by return e-mail or at x2608, and I will provide the advice or help you need to move this matter off your plate.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

FROM: NANETTE R. EVERSON
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: 2003 ETHICS BRIEFING AND PUBLIC FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS

This memorandum provides guidance concerning your mandatory annual ethics briefing and your duty to file a public financial disclosure report (SF 278) by May 15, 2003. As explained more fully below, you will have several opportunities to satisfy the annual training requirement but I encourage you to file your draft public financial disclosure form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline. The Counsel's Office must make your report available to the public within 30 days of your filing, and an adequate review by my office is your first and perhaps best line of defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit your personal financial information.

Ethics Briefings Are Tailored To Each Office

How Ethics Briefings Are Structured And "Ethics In A Nutshell"

The ethics laws require one hour of live training for all commissioned officers every year. This year the Counsel's Office is providing customized training that focuses on the specialized ethics issues that occur in each office. This training also includes those important non-commissioned officers, such as the "gatekeepers" who schedule meetings and the administrative assistants who screen documents and telephone calls, who are vital to ensuring that the commissioned staff does not inadvertently stumble by participating in matters or attending meetings while possessing financial interests that could be affected by these matters or meetings.

Additionally, because the ethics laws are complex, the Counsel's Office has created "Ethics in a Nutshell" cards that will be provided at your briefing. These wallet-sized cards have been well received, I believe, because they summarize ethics rules and identify common mistakes so that you won't have to refer to dense regulations to achieve ethics compliance.

Help Us Schedule Your Ethics Briefing And Tailor The Briefing To Your Genuine Needs

The several White House offices have widely varying ethics concerns and issues. To cite just a couple examples, the co-sponsorship and co-branding issues that arise frequently in the USA Freedom Corps Office rarely arise in the other offices, and the Advance Office faces gift and volunteer-management issues more frequently than other offices. For these reasons, I continue to create a customized power point briefing for each office to address your unique ethics needs. While it may be human nature to shy away from discussing difficult issues, I can help you during the ethics briefing by teaching directly to your tough questions—generically and anonymously—in your office-wide briefing. The most successful training is relevant training, and we are at our best when we team together to ensure that we teach to the issues that matter as well as the basics. So, in addition to suggesting dates that are convenient for you, please also either e-mail or telephone me in advance with any issues that you believe should be addressed in the briefing.

Thus far during 2003, over half of the commissioned officers have been trained using this targeted format at the following office briefings: February 6 - National Economic Council; February 19 - Legislative Affairs; February 28 - Intergovernmental Affairs; March 17 - Advance; March 18 - Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives; and, March 19 - White House Military Office.

For those commissioned officers who miss their particular office's briefing, there will be three general sessions on April 1st, April 8th , and May 6th, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. in room 450, EEOB. Additionally, I provide a monthly briefing on the third Wednesday of every month for all new employees, from 10:00 to 11:00 in either room 450 or room 472 EEOB (check with me in advance to verify the location).

I understand that other events often arise without notice, and that these crises may require that we schedule an individual briefing to suit your needs (as I have done for all the incoming officers). This one-on-one format affords officers an opportunity to discuss issues—such as a possible job search—that you would not raise in public. If you have attended any briefing this year with me—either in your new employee ethics briefing or with your office—you have satisfied your regulatory requirement and need not attend any other briefings. However, if you desire an individualized briefing, please call me directly at extension 6-2608 (office) or at 494-5607 (cell). I realize fully how hard all of you are working, and the importance of the other issues you must resolve, and I will work with you to help you achieve ethics compliance.

Annual Financial Disclosure Reporting Requirement

The ethics laws also require commissioned officers to file an annual public financial disclosure report (SF 278). Your annual report is due no later than May 15, 2003. There are several points I would like to underscore, however:

- In order to comply with the law and to help speed the review of your report, the sooner you provide a draft to the Counsel's Office, in room 158, EEOB, the more help we can provide to you. Every year, many filers wait until the last minute to submit their report, and this causes frustration on the part of commissioned officers who have many questions to ask of my small staff of lawyers and ethics professionals.
- There is only one non-negotiable: do not submit your brokerage statements in lieu of filling out the form. The Office of Government Ethics (OGE) takes the view that any documents attached to the form may be released to the public, and this would raise serious privacy, security, and ethics concerns regarding such statements.

REV_00165942

- The annual filing should be fairly straightforward to those of you who have done this before. It is recommended that you refer to your last report during your preparation of your 2002 report, to simplify the task of filing and to ensure consistency in your reporting. Please note, however, that the information required by the annual report is somewhat different from the information that you provided when you filed as a new entrant: e.g., the annual report covers calendar year 2002 only, but does require the disclosure of transaction and gift information.
- The law requires that the reports for Assistants to the President and Deputy Assistants to the President be submitted to OGE for review.
- As you complete your form, remember that, as an annual filer, you must complete all schedules except for Part II of Schedule D.
- As with a tax return, you are responsible for the accuracy and completeness of your form. (A list of common problems in filling out an SF 278 is attached.)

Enclosed is a blank copy of the SF 278. This form is also available via the OGE Internet web-site, at http://www.usoge.gov; to download, click on the link for "Forms, Publications, and Other Ethics Documents," click on "OGE and SF forms," and then toggle down to the instructions.

If you have questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me or either Sandy Mabry (at 6-5071), Gary Phillips (at 6-5336), or Emory Rounds (at 6-5067).

The May 15 deadline for filing your public financial disclosure report is near. I previously issued guidance on this obligation on March 18, 2003, encouraging you to file your form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline (see attached for a copy).

It is important that you meet this May 15 deadline because your report may be released to the public) i.e., the press) as of June 15, and an adequate review by the Counsel's office is your first and perhaps best defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit personal financial information. I would like to do all I can in this compressed time framework to ensure that your report is complete and ready for release.

If you need assistance or have any questions regarding your report, please contact me by return e-mail or at x2608, and I will provide the advice or help you need to move this matter off your plate.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

FROM: NANETTE R. EVERSON
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: 2003 ETHICS BRIEFING AND PUBLIC FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS

This memorandum provides guidance concerning your mandatory annual ethics briefing and your duty to file a public financial disclosure report (SF 278) by May 15, 2003. As explained more fully below, you will have several opportunities to satisfy the annual training requirement but I encourage you to file your draft public financial disclosure form very soon, and certainly before the statutory deadline. The Counsel's Office must make your report available to the public within 30 days of your filing, and an adequate review by my office is your first and perhaps best line of defense when faced with press inquiries, some of which may come from persons seeking to exploit your personal financial information.

Ethics Briefings Are Tailored To Each Office

How Ethics Briefings Are Structured And "Ethics In A Nutshell"

The ethics laws require one hour of live training for all commissioned officers every year. This year the Counsel's Office is providing customized training that focuses on the specialized ethics issues that occur in each office. This training also includes those important non-commissioned officers, such as the "gatekeepers" who schedule meetings and the administrative assistants who screen documents and telephone calls, who are vital to ensuring that the commissioned staff does not inadvertently stumble by participating in matters or attending meetings while possessing financial interests that could be affected by these matters or meetings.

Additionally, because the ethics laws are complex, the Counsel's Office has created "Ethics in a Nutshell" cards that will be provided at your briefing. These wallet-sized cards have been well received, I believe, because they summarize ethics rules and identify common mistakes so that you won't have to refer to dense regulations to achieve ethics compliance.

Help Us Schedule Your Ethics Briefing And Tailor The Briefing To Your Genuine Needs

The several White House offices have widely varying ethics concerns and issues. To cite just a couple examples, the co-sponsorship and co-branding issues that arise frequently in the USA Freedom Corps Office rarely arise in the other offices, and the Advance Office faces gift and volunteer-management issues more frequently than other offices. For these reasons, I continue to create a customized power point briefing for each office to address your unique ethics needs. While it may be human nature to shy away from discussing difficult issues, I can help you during the ethics briefing by teaching directly to your tough questions—generically and anonymously—in your office-wide briefing. The most successful training is relevant training, and we are at our best when we team together to ensure that we teach to the issues that matter as well as the basics. So, in addition to suggesting dates that are convenient for you, please also either e-mail or telephone me in advance with any issues that you believe should be addressed in the briefing.

Thus far during 2003, over half of the commissioned officers have been trained using this targeted format at the following office briefings: February 6 - National Economic Council; February 19 - Legislative Affairs; February 28 - Intergovernmental Affairs; March 17 - Advance; March 18 - Office of Faith Based and Community Initiatives; and, March 19 - White House Military Office.

For those commissioned officers who miss their particular office's briefing, there will be three general sessions on April 1st, April 8th , and May 6th, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. in room 450, EEOB. Additionally, I provide a monthly briefing on the third Wednesday of every month for all new employees, from 10:00 to 11:00 in either room 450 or room 472 EEOB (check with me in advance to verify the location).

I understand that other events often arise without notice, and that these crises may require that we schedule an individual briefing to suit your needs (as I have done for all the incoming officers). This one-on-one format affords officers an opportunity to discuss issues—such as a possible job search—that you would not raise in public. If you have attended any briefing this year with me—either in your new employee ethics briefing or with your office—you have satisfied your regulatory requirement and need not attend any other briefings. However, if you desire an individualized briefing, please call me directly at extension 6-2608 (office) or at 494-5607 (cell). I realize fully how hard all of you are working, and the importance of the other issues you must resolve, and I will work with you to help you achieve ethics compliance.

Annual Financial Disclosure Reporting Requirement

The ethics laws also require commissioned officers to file an annual public financial disclosure report (SF 278). Your annual report is due no later than May 15, 2003. There are several points I would like to underscore, however:

- In order to comply with the law and to help speed the review of your report, the sooner you provide a draft to the Counsel's Office, in room 158, EEOB, the more help we can provide to you. Every year, many filers wait until the last minute to submit their report, and this causes frustration on the part of commissioned officers who have many questions to ask of my small staff of lawyers and ethics professionals.
- There is only one non-negotiable: do not submit your brokerage statements in lieu of filling out the form. The Office of Government Ethics (OGE) takes the view that any documents attached to the form may be released to the public, and this would raise serious privacy, security, and ethics concerns regarding such statements.

REV_00165950

- The annual filing should be fairly straightforward to those of you who have done this before. It is recommended that you refer to your last report during your preparation of your 2002 report, to simplify the task of filing and to ensure consistency in your reporting. Please note, however, that the information required by the annual report is somewhat different from the information that you provided when you filed as a new entrant: e.g., the annual report covers calendar year 2002 only, but does require the disclosure of transaction and gift information.
- The law requires that the reports for Assistants to the President and Deputy Assistants to the President be submitted to OGE for review.
- As you complete your form, remember that, as an annual filer, you must complete all schedules except for Part II of Schedule D.
- As with a tax return, you are responsible for the accuracy and completeness of your form. (A list of common problems in filling out an SF 278 is attached.)

Enclosed is a blank copy of the SF 278. This form is also available via the OGE Internet web-site, at http://www.usoge.gov; to download, click on the link for "Forms, Publications, and Other Ethics Documents," click on "OGE and SF forms," and then toggle down to the instructions.

If you have questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me or either Sandy Mabry (at 6-5071), Gary Phillips (at 6-5336), or Emory Rounds (at 6-5067).

Remarks on Judicial Independence and Judicial Confirmation Process
May 9, 2003
Draft #3

Thank you all very much, and welcome to the White House. More than 200 years ago this month, our Founding Fathers gathered in Philadelphia to draft the Constitution. When they finished four months later, they had created something remarkable: a truly independent judiciary.

Our Founding Fathers were wise men. They knew that freedom and justice depend on fair and impartial judges. And they knew that politics can poison the judiciary, by preventing judges from doing their duty and upsetting the balance of power between our three branches of government. So they designed a system where the President alone would nominate judges, and the Senate would vote up or down on the nominees within a reasonable amount of time.

Today, we are facing a Constitutional crisis. The judicial independence that our Founding Fathers enshrined in the Constitution is in jeopardy. The swift justice promised to all Americans is endangered. And the judicial confirmation process is broken.

Highly qualified judicial nominees are waiting years to get up-or-down votes from the Senate, while partisans search in vain for reasons to reject them. Their obstructionist tactics are setting bad precedents that threaten judicial independence. Meanwhile, vacancies on the bench and overcrowded court dockets are causing lengthy delays for citizens seeking justice.

I want to fix this problem and make the judicial confirmation process work as the Framers intended. We have a responsibility to uphold the founding ideal of a truly independent judiciary.

Acknowledgments
- Senators and bar leaders: TK

Exactly two years ago, I announced my first 11 judicial nominees to the federal appeals courts. I chose men and women of talent and integrity, highly qualified nominees who represent the mainstream of American law and American values. Eight of them waited more than a year to get an up-or-down floor vote from the Senate. Four of them are still waiting. That's two years that these men and women have had to put their lives on hold. And that's a disgrace.

Since taking office, I have sent to the Senate 42 highly qualified nominees for the federal courts of appeals. To date, only 22 of them have received a vote in the Senate, and 10 of the remaining 20 nominees have been waiting more than a year for a floor vote. More appeals court nominees have had to wait over a year for a hearing in my Presidency than in the last 50 years combined. This is not just business as usual. This is absurd, and it's hurting America.

The Senators who are playing politics with these nominees are depriving the American people of top-notch judges. I take my Constitutional obligation to nominate judges seriously, and I choose my nominees with great care. The men and women I have nominated are a historically diverse group whose character and credentials are impeccable.

This group includes Miguel Estrada, my selection for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Miguel Estrada has served in the Justice Department under Presidents of both political parties. He has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and he has earned the American Bar Association's highest mark, a unanimous rating of well-qualified. If confirmed, Miguel would be the first Hispanic American ever to serve on a court that is often considered the second highest in the land.

Miguel Estrada's nomination has strong support from citizens and leaders in both parties, and from a majority of Senators. Yet after two years, he still cannot get an up-or-down floor vote. A group of Democratic Senators has forced Miguel to answer questions not asked of other nominees, sought confidential Justice Department memos not sought for other appeals court nominees, and filibustered for three months to prevent a vote on his nomination.

Never before has there been a successful filibuster to prevent an up-or-down floor vote on an appeals court nominee. This is an unprecedented move that threatens judicial independence. At a time when Americans are fed up with partisanship and our courts face a vacancy crisis, this is a dangerous move in the wrong direction.

Miguel Estrada is not the only judicial nominee who has been mistreated by partisans in the Senate. Justice Priscilla Owen, a nominee to the Fifth Circuit in Texas, has also become the target of a filibuster. Priscilla Owen is an extraordinarily qualified nominee who has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995. Like Miguel Estrada, she has earned the American Bar Association's highest rating of unanimous well-qualified. And she has strong bipartisan support, including endorsements from three former Democrat Texas Supreme Court Justices with whom she served and 15 past Presidents of the Texas Bar. Yet Priscilla Owen has been waiting two years for an up or down vote.

The list goes on, but the trend is clear. Of the 22 nominees waiting for a vote, most have served as judges and all who have been rated by the American Bar Association have received "well-qualified" or "qualified" ratings. Some Democrat Senators have referred to those ratings as the "gold standard." Yet these same Senators ignore those high marks when it comes to nominees they cannot pigeonhole, and opt instead to apply a double standard.

Senators Bill Frist and Orrin Hatch have worked hard to overcome these stall tactics and they are doing a great job. I know that these problems are not new. In the past three Presidential Administrations, too many nominees never received votes. Now the situation is worse than ever, and the need for reform is greater than ever.

While Senators bicker and stall and nurse old grudges, American justice is suffering. Dockets are overcrowded, judges are overworked, and citizens are waiting too long for their cases to be heard. Regional appeals courts have a 14 percent vacancy rate, and filings in those courts reached an all-time high again last year. The Sixth Circuit, which covers Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee, has four vacancies on a 16-judge court. The D.C. Circuit has four vacancies on a 12-judge court.

Of the 22 open seats that could be filled by nominees waiting for Senate confirmation, 18 have been classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Judicial Conference of the United States. The secretary of that group says this shortage of judges is "staggering." The American Bar Association calls this an "emergency situation." And the Chief Justice recently said that these vacancies and rising caseloads threaten the proper functioning of the federal courts, and asked the Senate to give every nominee a prompt up-or-down vote.

The bitterness and partisanship that have taken over the judicial confirmations process also threaten judicial independence, by forcing nominees to commit to a point of view on controversial issues before they have even taken the bench. In America, our entire rule of law – and our entire democracy – depend on judicial independence. A confirmations process that undermines judicial independence, while also failing to fill benches and possibly scaring away future candidates, is clearly broken.

Six months ago, I proposed a plan to fix this process and end the vacancy crisis. This plan would apply no matter who lives in this house, or who controls the Senate. Here's how it would work: Federal judges on the Courts of Appeals and District Courts would notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, whenever this is possible. The President would then submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. The Senate Judiciary Committee would hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. And the full Senate would hold an up-or-down floor vote on a nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. That's six months, and that's plenty of time.

Since I announced this plan, the Judicial Conference has done its part, by adopting the one-year advance notice requirement for judges. I have done my part, by committing to submit nominations within 180 days and signing an Executive Order to formalize this commitment. Now we're waiting on the Senate to do its duty.

The bipartisan group of freshman Senators who are here today share my commitment to make this process work again. As newcomers, they see the futility of the endless bickering and one-up-man-ship that blocks good judges from the bench.

These Senators have proven that they are willing to put aside the past and restore civility and dignity to this process. Under the leadership of Republican John Cornyn of Texas and Democrat Mark Pryor of Arkansas, they sent a letter to the Senate leadership last week. This is what it said:

"None of us were parties to any of the reported past offenses, whether real or perceived. None of us believe that the ill will of the past should dictate the terms and direction of the future. Each of us firmly believes that the United States Senate needs a fresh start."

I believe a fresh start is possible, and I stand with these Senators as they work toward making that happen. My plan offers a simple way to end the cycle of bitterness and move forward for the sake of the country. The American people – and the ideals of American justice – deserve no less.

May God bless each one of you, and may He continue to bless the United States of America.

2 - yes, I'm doing one - will send through staffing tomorrow.
3 - ari is going to preview the speech tomorrow - but can we get the most recent version/final version of the speech before then? We can maybe look at doing a backgrounder with the press after - but most of them will be traveling with the President.

1. Yes, there were some changes.

2. For the fact sheet, are you doing a draft (I hope)? Should we have an attachment to fact sheet that includes some of the D statements in past?

3. Should we have a background briefing for reporters either tomorrow night or Friday after the event?

Class Actions
Leahy Seeks Support to Narrow Class Action Bill Before Senate Vote
With a Senate vote on class action legislation possible before the end of May, Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), the Senate Judiciary Committee's ranking minority member, is soliciting co-sponsors for a competing bill, narrower in scope than the measure voted out of a divided Judiciary Committee in early April, according to Judiciary Committee sources.
Leahy's bill--as summarized in a "Dear Colleague" dated April 30 obtained by BNA--would impose stiffer requirements for transferring a state class action to federal court than the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee.
Attempt to Address Judiciary Concern
Leahy's alternative is an attempt to address concerns about the pending legislation expressed by the federal judiciary and other opponents of the bill, according to a series of letters between Leahy and the U.S. Judicial Conference obtained by BNA.
Leahy's alternative would require class member residency to cover at least three different states before a class action filed in state court could be transferred to federal court. In addition, Leahy's proposal would require an amount in controversy threshold of $15 million.

No specific language for Leahy's bill has yet been drafted, committee staff told BNA.
The Class Action Fairness Act (S. 274)--approved 12-7 by the Judiciary Committee on April 11--would allow multistate class actions to be transferred to federal court when at least one plaintiff and one defendant are from different states and the amount in controversy is at least $5 million. The measure would allow a class action to remain in state court if more than two-thirds of the plaintiffs and the primary defendant are from the same state.
Original Bill Targets Abuses
Heavily supported by business groups, the original Senate bill is an attempt to address what proponents cite as "abuses of the class action device," which include huge attorneys' fees at the expense of class members, coupon settlements in lieu of cash, confusing notices to potential class members, and state court judges imposing their rulings on residents of other states.
To address these problems, S. 274 would require increased court scrutiny over coupon settlements and appointment of class counsel, and require that notices to class members be written in "plain English."
Leahy's bill would address coupon settlements by requiring that attorneys' fees paid to class counsel "be based on the value of the coupons actually redeemed," according to the "Dear Colleague" letter.
In addition, the Leahy alternative would prohibit collusive settlements by limiting the scope of any release of future legal rights by class members. Leahy's proposal would also require that notices be sent to class members when a class is certified and at the time of settlement.
Critics Say Original Bill Too Broad
Critics of the current bill, including consumer groups, environmental organizations, and other public interest advocates, say it is too broad, would create delays in hearing class actions, and would impose added expense on plaintiffs.
On March 26 the U.S. Judicial Conference, the federal judiciary's chief policy-making body, expressed its opposition to S. 274, saying it would "unduly burden" federal courts and interfere with state control over cases traditionally heard in state court. The conference urged that "sufficient limitations and threshold requirements" be included in any final bill.
Following the statement from the Judicial Conference, Leahy, in letters dated April 9 and 11th, requested that the conference provide specific language to implement its recommendation on class action legislation.
The Judicial Conference, in a reply dated April 25, declined to offer specific language "out of deference to Congress's judgment and the political process." However, the conference noted it would have "no objection" to proposals (1) to increase the jurisdictional amount in controversy beyond the $5 million threshold in the current bill, (2) to increase the number of class members required to transfer a class action to federal court, and (3) to allow a federal judge discretion to refuse jurisdiction according to criteria decided by Congress.
In the letter, the conference emphasized that "any minimal diversity bill will result in certain cases being litigated in federal court that would not previously have been subject to federal jurisdiction. The effects of this transfer should be assessed in determining the appropriateness of various limitations on the availability of minimal diversity jurisdiction."
Effort to Restore Provision on Consolidated Suits
In a separate development, business interests are attempting to restore a provision of the original class action bill which was deleted at the request of Sens. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) and Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), according to staff at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.
The bill, as originally introduced, would have covered suits where the plaintiff purports to act for the general public--known as private attorney general actions--and suits where monetary damage claims of 100 or more persons are consolidated or joined.
During the Judiciary Committee's final markup session on the bill April 11, Specter and Feinstein said including those types of suits in the bill was "overreaching." Specter warned that the bill's broad language could sweep in mass tort claims from a chemical spill, preventing residents from a single state from bringing a class action in state court.

Hatch agreed to remove the suits from the bill, but indicated he expected to work out compromise language to address Feinstein's and Specter's concerns at a later date.
Hatch and Specter are now close to an agreement which would put back in the bill "consolidated cases which are considered to be the functional equivalent of class actions," according to Matthew Webb, director of legal reform policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.
However, mass torts "were never envisioned to be included in the bill in the first place," Webb said, adding that language would probably be worked out to address the distinction.

FYI. Here is latest. I will add phrase about pay, and I think they also watered down the "constitutional" reference too much. Let me know your thoughts and additions/edits. (Note that at this point, Speechwriting will strongly resist any significant change as you can tell from email to me.)

Remarks on Judicial Independence and Judicial Confirmation Process
May 9, 2003
Draft #5

Good morning, and welcome to the White House. I am pleased all of you could be here to stand for a truly independent federal judiciary.

The Framers of the Constitution knew that freedom and justice depend on fair and impartial judges. To ensure judges of the highest quality and integrity, they designed a system in which the President would nominate judges, the Senate would vote up or down on the nominees, and the judges would serve for life.

Today, we are facing a crisis in the federal courts. Highly qualified judicial nominees are waiting years to get up-or-down votes from the Senate, while partisans search in vain for reasons to reject them. The obstructionist tactics of a small group of Senators are setting a pattern that threatens judicial independence. Meanwhile, vacancies on the bench and overcrowded court dockets are causing delays for citizens seeking justice.

The judicial confirmation process is broken, and it must be fixed. Every person nominated to the federal bench deserves a timely vote.

Acknowledgments
- Senators and bar leaders: TK

Exactly two years ago, I announced my first 11 nominees to the federal appeals courts. I chose men and women of talent and integrity – highly qualified nominees who represent the mainstream of American law and American values. Eight of them waited more than a year to get an up-or-down vote in the Senate. As of today, four of them have waited two years. Their treatment by a group of United States Senators is a disgrace.

Since taking office, I have sent to the Senate 42 superb nominees for the federal courts of appeals. To date, only 22 of them have received a vote in the Senate – and nine of the remaining 20 nominees have been waiting more than a year for a floor vote. More appeals court nominees have had to wait over a year for a hearing in my Presidency than in the last 50 years combined. This is not just business as usual. This is an abdication of public responsibility, and it is hurting America.

As President, I have the Constitutional responsibility to nominate excellent judges, and I take that responsibility seriously. The men and women I have nominated are a historically diverse group whose character and credentials are impeccable.

This group includes Miguel Estrada, my selection for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Miguel Estrada has served in the Justice Department under Presidents of both political parties. He has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and he has earned the American Bar Association's highest mark, a unanimous rating of well qualified. If confirmed, Miguel would be the first Hispanic American ever to serve on the court that is often considered the second highest in the land.

Miguel Estrada's nomination has strong support from citizens and leaders in both parties, and from a majority of Senators. Yet after two years, he still cannot get an up-or-down floor vote. A group of Democratic senators has insisted that Mr. Estrada answer questions that other nominees were not required to answer. These senators have sought confidential Justice Department memos not sought for other appeals court nominees – a request opposed by all living former Solicitors General because of the damage it would do to our legal system. These senators have also filibustered for three months to prevent a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination.

Never before has there been a successful filibuster to prevent an up-or-down floor vote on an appeals court nominee. This is an unprecedented tactic that threatens judicial independence, and adds to the vacancy crisis in our courts.

Justice Priscilla Owen, whom I have nominated to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, has also become the target of a filibuster. Justice Owen is an extraordinarily well qualified nominee who has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995. Like Miguel Estrada, she has earned the American Bar Association's unanimous rating of well qualified. She has strong bipartisan support, including endorsements from three Democrats who served with her on the Texas Supreme Court, and 15 past Presidents of the Texas Bar. Yet Justice Owen has been waiting two years for an up or down vote on the Senate floor.

The list goes on, and the trend is clear. Of the 20 circuit court nominees awaiting a vote, all who have been rated by the American Bar Association have received "well qualified" or "qualified" ratings. Some Democratic senators have referred to those ratings as the "gold standard." Yet these same senators have ignored those high marks, and applied a double standard to some nominees.

The Senate has a Constitutional responsibility to hold an up or down vote, and that vote should come within a reasonable amount of time after nomination. Throughout most of our history, the Senate has exercised this responsibility. During the Administrations of Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton, however, too many nominees never received votes. And today the situation is worse than ever, making the need for reform greater than ever.

While senators stall and hold on to old grudges, American justice is suffering. Dockets are overcrowded, judges are overworked, and citizens are waiting too long for their cases to be heard. The regional appeals courts have a 14 percent vacancy rate, and filings in those courts reached an all-time high again last year. The Sixth Circuit, which covers Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee, has four vacancies on a 16-judge court. The D.C. Circuit has four vacancies on a 12-judge court.

Of the 20 open seats that could be filled by nominees waiting for Senate confirmation, 16 have been classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Judicial Conference of the United States. The American Bar Association calls this an "emergency situation." And the Chief Justice recently said that these vacancies and rising caseloads threaten the proper functioning of the federal courts, and asked the Senate to give every nominee a prompt up-or-down vote.

The bitterness and partisanship that have taken over the judicial confirmations process also threaten judicial independence. Some senators have tried to force nominees to take positions on controversial issues, before they even take the bench. This would be a violation of judicial ethics, and contrary to the Constitutional design of a separate and independent judicial branch.

Six months ago, I proposed a plan to end the vacancy crisis and make this process work again. This plan would apply no matter who lives in the White House, or which party controls the Senate. Here's how it would work: Judges on the federal appellate and district courts would notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, whenever that is possible. The President would then submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a vacancy or intended retirement. The Senate Judiciary Committee would hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. And the full Senate would vote on a nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. The goal is to have a new judge ready to take the bench on the same day the sitting judge retires.

Since I announced this plan, the Judicial Conference has done its part, by adopting the one-year advance notice policy for judges. I have done my part, with an executive order formalizing my commitment to submit nominations within 180 days after notification of a vacancy. Now we are waiting on the Senate to do its duty – and commit to timely up-or-down votes for every nominee.

Majority Leader Frist and Judiciary Committee Chairman Hatch are pushing hard for progress on this issue, and they are doing a great job. I am also pleased that ten freshman senators of both parties have come together to demand the return of dignity and civility to this process. As newcomers, they see the futility of the endless bickering that blocks good judges from the bench.

Under the leadership of Republican John Cornyn of Texas and Democrat Mark Pryor of Arkansas, these senators sent a letter to the Senate leadership last week. This is what it said: "None of us were parties to any of the reported past offenses, whether real or perceived. None of us believe that the ill will of the past should dictate the terms and direction of the future. Each of us firmly believes that the United States Senate needs a fresh start."

I believe a fresh start is possible, and I stand with these senators as they work to fix the confirmation process. My plan offers a simple way to end the cycle of bitterness and move forward for the sake of the country. Let each member of the Senate vote as he or she thinks best – but give every nominee a vote.

Thank you, and God bless you.

Thanks,

Welcome to "Ask the White House" -- an online interactive forum where you can submit questions to Bush administration officials.

Today's guest: Counsel to the President Judge Alberto Gonzales

Today's topic: The President's judicial nominees and the nominating process.

Judge Gonzales

Good afternoon. Thanks for joining me on "Ask the White House". This is an important day to participate in this online discussion as tomorrow is the two year anniversary of the president's first 11 Appeals Court nominations. Of those nominations, four still have yet to receive an up or down vote. Let's get started.

Eddie, from Macon Ga writes:

On todays local news there was a story about a possible lawsuit by Senators Saxby Chambliss Ga and Lindsey Graham SC regarding the democrats blocking of President Bushs nominations. What kind of results or impact do you think will be made by such a move? Thank you!

Judge Gonzales

As the President has said, the Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote on judicial nominees. Without endorsing any specific approach, we applaud Senators Chambliss and Graham for seeking a solution to a broken process.

Karen, from Needham MA writes:

What are the presidents plans regarding the filibuster against Miguel Estrada?

Judge Gonzales

As the President has said, he intends to stand beside Miguel Estrada until he is sworn in as a judge on the D. C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Miguel is well qualified and represents the American dream. Despite a remarkable record of achievement he is being held to a double standard. The President will continue to work with Senators of both parties to get him the up or down vote he deserves.

Rebecca, from Goshen, Ohio writes:

I was wondering what is it like to work with the President?

Judge Gonzales

Good question, it is an honor to work with George W. Bush. The President is a remarkable person. It is hard to be around the President and not learn, just by watching and listening. It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

Henry, from Oceanside, California writes:

What does it matter if 2-3 nominees dont get approved? Over 120 already have been. Isnt this a good batting average for the Senate?

Judge Gonzales

Each nominee is entitled to a vote and to be considered on his or her merits. Every qualified nominee should be confirmed in a timely manner. Only half of the President's appeals court nominees have recevied an up or down vote and nine of the pending nominees have been waiting more than a year for a vote.

Patrick, from Richardson, TX writes:

Though a bipartisan merit selection system for federal judicial appointments would have political drawbacks for whoever is president--such as the loss of a tool to reward core constituencies and an inability to shape the ideological direction of the courts, 1 do you see any advantages from such a system, and 2 could there ever be the political will to seek an institutionalized compromise that would back away from the historic drive to pack the federal courts the impulse behind Marbury v. Madison afterall?

Judge Gonzales

The framers of the Constitution wanted one person to be responsible and accountable for the nomination of federal judges, and the Senate as a whole to vote on the nominees.

Lori, from Corpus Christi, TX writes:

Have you found a good tex-mex restaurant in the nations capital?

Judge Gonzales

My family and I miss Texas and the great Tex-Mex food in Austin...and of course Corpus Christi. Although we love Washington, we look forward to the day we can return to my beloved State. Go Astros!

Shaun, from San Antonio writes:

Judge Gonzales, heres a tough one for you... Dallas Cowboys or Houston Texans?

Judge Gonzales

Houston Oilers!!!!!!!

Gregory, from Sandusky, OH writes:

Since the advise and consent role of Congress, as spelled out in the Constitution, specifically states that a simple majority vote is required, is it not unconstitutional for the Senate Democrats to insist that a 60 favorable vote to break a fillibuster is needed for the whole Senate to vote up or down on a judicial nomination?

Judge Gonzales

The Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote. It is unprecedented for a minority of Senators to block a vote on an appeals court nominee by means of a filibuster. Both Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen have the support of a majority of Senators, and should receive a vote and be confirmed.

James, from New York, NY writes:

When you say nine appeals court nominees have been waiting for more than one year, are you including Justice Owen and Judge Pickering? They did receive votes, after all, even though the votes were negative. Then the President renominated them when the Republicans regained control of the Senate, and theyve been waiting about four months since then. In fact, is it not disregarding the Senates constitutional function of advice and consent for the President to reappoint nominees who were voted down?

Judge Gonzales

The President continues to support both nominees, believes they deserve a vote, and is confident they will be confirmed. And to clarify, in the last Congress, they did not receive a vote in the full Senate and we know that both would have been confirmed if they received an up or down vote.

Curtis, from Washington, DC writes:

The Senate Democrats have used one of your statements on a Priscilla Owen dissent to discredit her. However, you issued a statement on July 16, 2002 supporting Justice Owen. Can you clarify the discrepency?

Judge Gonzales

There is no discrepancy. I strongly support Priscilla Owen and continue to believe she is well qualified. She is a woman of integrity and will be an outstanding judge on the Fifth Circuit. The fact that she and I disagreed on some opinions is not unusual or noteworthy and does not in any way affect my strong support for her.

Rich, from New York City writes:

What is your reaction to Senator Schumers idea that the President give up his right to nominating judges and hand over the process to unelected and unaccountable boards in the states?

Judge Gonzales

I responded to Senator Schumer's letter earlier this week and advised him that we believed his plan to be inconsistent with the Constitution and would not produce the best qualified judges. We will post my response to the Senator after my online discussion is over. Check back in about 30 minutes.

 Posted at 6:45pm **

Rafael, from Englewood, Colorado writes:

Does the President employ a litmus test when selecting his nominees?

Judge Gonzales

No.

George, from Maryland writes:

What is it like to work in the White House?

Judge Gonzales

It is an honor. People from all over the world come to Washington and peer through the black iron rod gates for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time. I am proud and privileged.

---

susan, from Michigan writes:

Will the White House pressure the Senate to hold hearings and confirm the Sixth Circuit nominees from Michigan despite the negative blue slips submitted by Michigans Democrat senators?

Judge Gonzales

There is a vacancy crisis in the Sixth Circuit. The President has four nominees from Michigan to that court pending; three have been pending more than a year without even a hearing. These well qualified nominees deserve hearings and votes. The people of Michigan and the other people in the Sixth Circuit are being harmed by these delays.

Alexander, from Hebron, CT writes:

Mr. Gonzales, Senate Democrats alledge that the Constitutions advise and consent provisions not only empower the Senate to push against a judicial nominee who hasnt fully answered questions, but requires the Senate to do so. How would you respond to those who say that the President shouldnt have nominees rubber stamped.

Judge Gonzales

Your question refers to Miguel Estrada. Mr. Estrada answered questions in an all day hearing, responded to numerous written questions, and met with a number of Senators all to provide information about his qualifications. He provided more information than has been required of past appeals court nominees. He is being held to an unfair double standard. While we do not expect the Senate to rubber stamp the President's nominees we expect the Senate to treat the nominees fairly and give them votes.

Rich, from New York City writes:

Could you and Miguel Estrada take Chuck Schumer and Ted Kennedy in a tag team wrestling match? Could tag team wrestling be a compromise to the gridlock which has kept so many nominees in limbo?

Judge Gonzales

ooops, got to go! Thank you all for joining me today in this on line discussion. Everyone should watch the President's speech tomorrow on judicial independence and the confirmation process at 10:30 a.m. ET. It will be web cast on WhiteHouse.Gov. Thanks again.

2 YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF LIBERAL DEMOCRAT OBSTRUCTIONISM TOMORROW
MAJORITY NEEDS TO USE "NUCLEAR" OPTION TO BREAK UNCONSTITUTIONAL POWER PLAY

President Bush will be giving a speech in the White House Rose Garden tomorrow decrying the obstructionism by liberal Democrats in the Senate who have blocked some of his highly-qualified judicial nominees for 2 years as of tomorrow. Christian Coalition of America President Roberta Combs said, "It is outrageous that the left-wingers in the Democrat Party have blocked many of President Bush's judicial nominees for 2 years as of May 9th. They lost control of the Senate last November because of such obstructionism. Secondly, they are beginning to lose their Hispanic base. As Hispanics learn about the outrageous treatment of Miguel Estrada, an American success story, they are realizing their pro-family values are not shared by such left-wingers."

The Christian Coalition urges the majority to do what Vice President Nelson Rockefeller did in 1975 and change the Senate "standing rules" to make it easier to break a filibuster, i.e. what's being called the "nuclear" option, mentioned in a Senate hearing this week entitled: "Judicial Nominations, Filibusters and the Constitution: When a Majority is denied its right to consent." A clear majority of United States Senators want to vote and will vote for highly-qualified judicial nominees Miguel Estrada (filibustered for over 3 months) and Priscilla Owen (in her 2nd month of being filibustered.) The U.S. Constitution does not say 3/5 of Senators are required to confirm judges; just a simple majority.

Sixty votes are required to break a filibuster and the 5 additional votes to stop debate could come from any of the following Senators: Senator Mark Pryor (D-AR) 202-224-2353; Senator Blanche Lincoln (D-AR) 202-224-4843; Senator Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) 202-224-4041; Senator Thomas Carper (D-DE) 202-224-2441; Senator Bob Graham (D-FL) 202-224-3041; Senator Daniel Inouye (D-HI) 202-224-3934; Senator Evan Bayh (D-IN) 202-224-5623; Senator Mary Landrieu (D-LA) 202-224-5824; Senator Max Baucus (D-MT) 202-224-2651; Senator Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) 202-224-5521; Senator John Edwards (D-NC) 202-224-3154; Senator Kent Conrad (D-ND) 202-224-2043; Senator Byron Dorgan (D-ND) 202-224-2551; Senator Ernest Hollings (D-SC) 202-224-6121; Senator Tom Daschle (D-SD) 202-224-2321; Senator Tim Johnson (D-SD) 202-224-5842; Senator Robert Byrd (D-WV) 202-224-3954.

A C T I O N:

Please join the the "Obstructionism Day" Rally tomorrow at noon at the "Senate Swamp" which is located between the U.S. Capitol Building and the Russell Senate Office Building.

Please call your two Senators and ask them to vote to confirm President Bush's judicial nominees, most especially, Miguel Estrada, Justice Priscilla Owen, and Judge Charles Pickering. In addition, ask them to vote to STOP any filibuster, i.e. vote to stop endless debate on the Senate floor. Welcome to "Ask the White House" -- an online interactive forum where you can submit questions to Bush administration officials.

Today's guest: Counsel to the President Judge Alberto Gonzales

Today's topic: The President's judicial nominees and the nominating process.
Judge Gonzales
Good afternoon. Thanks for joining me on "Ask the White House". This is an important day to participate in this online discussion as tomorrow is the two year anniversary of the president's first 11 Appeals Court nominations. Of those nominations, four still have yet to receive an up or down vote. Let's get started.

Eddie, from Macon Ga writes:
On todays local news there was a story about a possible lawsuit by Senators Saxby Chambliss Ga and Lindsey Graham SC regarding the democrats blocking of President Bushs nominations. What kind of results or impact do you think will be made by such a move? Thank you!

Judge Gonzales
As the President has said, the Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote on judicial nominees. Without endorsing any specific approach, we applaud Senators Chambliss and Graham for seeking a solution to a broken process.

Karen, from Needham MA writes:
What are the presidents plans regarding the filibuster against Miguel Estrada?

Judge Gonzales
As the President has said, he intends to stand beside Miguel Estrada until he is sworn in as a judge on the D. C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Miguel is well qualified and represents the American dream. Despite a remarkable record of achievement he is being held to a double standard. The President will continue to work with Senators of both parties to get him the up or down vote he deserves.

Rebecca, from Goshen, Ohio writes:
I was wondering what is it like to work with the President?

Judge Gonzales
Good question, it is an honor to work with George W. Bush. The President is a remarkable person. It is hard to be around the President and not learn, just by watching and listening. It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

Henry, from Oceanside, California writes:
What does it matter if 2-3 nominees dont get approved? Over 120 already have been. Isnt this a good batting average for the Senate?

Judge Gonzales
Each nominee is entitled to a vote and to be considered on his or her merits. Every qualified nominee should be confirmed in a timely manner. Only half of the President's appeals court nominees have recevied an up or down vote and nine of the pending nominees have been waiting more than a year for a vote.

Patrick, from Richardson, TX writes:

Though a bipartisan merit selection system for federal judicial appointments would have political drawbacks for whoever is president--such as the loss of a tool to reward core constituencies and an inability to shape the ideological direction of the courts, 1 do you see any advantages from such a system, and 2 could there ever be the political will to seek an institutionalized compromise that would back away from the historic drive to pack the federal courts the impulse behind Marbury v. Madison afterall?

Judge Gonzales
The framers of the Constitution wanted one person to be responsible and accountable for the nomination of federal judges, and the Senate as a whole to vote on the nominees.

Lori, from Corpus Christi, TX writes:
Have you found a good tex-mex restaurant in the nations capital?

Judge Gonzales
My family and I miss Texas and the great Tex-Mex food in Austin...and of course Corpus Christi. Although we love Washington, we look forward to the day we can return to my beloved State. Go Astros!

Shaun, from San Antonio writes:
Judge Gonzales, heres a tough one for you... Dallas Cowboys or Houston Texans?

Judge Gonzales
Houston Oilers!!!!!!!

Gregory, from Sandusky, OH writes:
Since the advise and consent role of Congress, as spelled out in the Constitution, specifically states that a simple majority vote is required, is it not unconstitutional for the Senate Democrats to insist that a 60 favorable vote to break a fillibuster is needed for the whole Senate to vote up or down on a judicial nomination?

Judge Gonzales
The Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote. It is unprecedented for a minority of Senators to block a vote on an appeals court nominee by means of a filibuster. Both Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen have the support of a majority of Senators, and should receive a vote and be confirmed.

James, from New York, NY writes:
When you say nine appeals court nominees have been waiting for more than one year, are you including Justice Owen and Judge Pickering? They did receive votes, after all, even though the votes were negative. Then the President renominated them when the Republicans regained control of the Senate, and theyve been waiting about four months since then. In fact, is it not disregarding the Senates constitutional function of advice and consent for the President to reappoint nominees who were voted down?

Judge Gonzales
The President continues to support both nominees, believes they deserve a vote, and is confident they will be confirmed. And to clarify, in the last Congress, they did not receive a vote in the full Senate and we know that both would have been confirmed if they received an up or down vote.

Curtis, from Washington, DC writes:
The Senate Democrats have used one of your statements on a Priscilla Owen dissent to discredit her. However, you issued a statement on July 16, 2002 supporting Justice Owen. Can you clarify the discrepency?

Judge Gonzales
There is no discrepancy. I strongly support Priscilla Owen and continue to believe she is well qualified. She is a woman of integrity and will be an outstanding judge on the Fifth Circuit. The fact that she and I disagreed on some opinions is not unusual or noteworthy and does not in any way affect my strong support for her.

Rich, from New York City writes:
What is your reaction to Senator Schumers idea that the President give up his right to nominating judges and hand over the process to unelected and unaccountable boards in the states?

Judge Gonzales
I responded to Senator Schumer's letter earlier this week and advised him that we believed his plan to be inconsistent with the Constitution and would not produce the best qualified judges. We will post my response to the Senator after my online discussion is over. Check back in about 30 minutes.

Rafael, from Englewood, Colorado writes:
Does the President employ a litmus test when selecting his nominees?

Judge Gonzales
No.

George, from Maryland writes:
What is it like to work in the White House?

Judge Gonzales
It is an honor. People from all over the world come to Washington and peer through the black iron rod gates for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time. I am proud and privileged.

---

susan, from Michigan writes:
Will the White House pressure the Senate to hold hearings and confirm the Sixth Circuit nominees from Michigan despite the negative blue slips submitted by Michigans Democrat senators?

Judge Gonzales
There is a vacancy crisis in the Sixth Circuit. The President has four nominees from Michigan to that court pending; three have been pending more than a year without even a hearing. These well qualified nominees deserve hearings and votes. The people of Michigan and the other people in the Sixth Circuit are being harmed by these delays.

Alexander, from Hebron, CT writes:
Mr. Gonzales, Senate Democrats alledge that the Constitutions advise and consent provisions not only empower the Senate to push against a judicial nominee who hasnt fully answered questions, but requires the Senate to do so. How would you respond to those who say that the President shouldnt have nominees rubber stamped.

Judge Gonzales
Your question refers to Miguel Estrada. Mr. Estrada answered questions in an all day hearing, responded to numerous written questions, and met with a number of Senators all to provide information about his qualifications. He provided more information than has been required of past appeals court nominees. He is being held to an unfair double standard. While we do not expect the Senate to rubber stamp the President's nominees we expect the Senate to treat the nominees fairly and give them votes.

Rich, from New York City writes:
Could you and Miguel Estrada take Chuck Schumer and Ted Kennedy in a tag team wrestling match? Could tag team wrestling be a compromise to the gridlock which has kept so many nominees in limbo?

Judge Gonzales
ooops, got to go! Thank you all for joining me today in this on line discussion. Everyone should watch the President's speech tomorrow on judicial independence and the confirmation process at 10:30 a.m. ET. It will be web cast on WhiteHouse.Gov. Thanks again.

;;;;;;; Welcome to "Ask the White House" -- an online interactive forum where you can submit questions to Bush administration officials.

;;;;;;; Today's guest: Counsel to the President Judge Alberto Gonzales

;;;;;;; Today's topic: The President's judicial nominees and the nominating process.
;;;;;;;;
;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; Good afternoon. Thanks for joining me on "Ask the White House". This is an important day to participate in this online discussion as tomorrow is the two year anniversary of the president's first 11 Appeals Court nominations. Of those nominations, four still have yet to receive an up or down vote. Let's get started.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Eddie, from Macon Ga writes:
;;;;;;; On todays local news there was a story about a possible lawsuit by Senators Saxby Chambliss Ga and Lindsey Graham SC regarding the democrats blocking of President Bushs nominations. What kind of results or impact do you think will be made by such a move? Thank you!

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; As the President has said, the Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote on judicial nominees. Without endorsing any specific approach, we applaud Senators Chambliss and Graham for seeking a solution to a broken process.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Karen, from Needham MA writes:
;;;;;;; What are the presidents plans regarding the filibuster against Miguel Estrada?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; As the President has said, he intends to stand beside Miguel Estrada until he is sworn in as a judge on the D. C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Miguel is well qualified and represents the American dream. Despite a remarkable record of achievement he is being held to a double standard. The President will continue to work with Senators of both parties to get him the up or down vote he deserves.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Rebecca, from Goshen, Ohio writes:
;;;;;;; I was wondering what is it like to work with the President?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; Good question, it is an honor to work with George W. Bush. The President is a remarkable person. It is hard to be around the President and not learn, just by watching and listening. It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Henry, from Oceanside, California writes:
;;;;;;; What does it matter if 2-3 nominees dont get approved? Over 120 already have been. Isnt this a good batting average for the Senate?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; Each nominee is entitled to a vote and to be considered on his or her merits. Every qualified nominee should be confirmed in a timely manner. Only half of the President's appeals court nominees have recevied an up or down vote and nine of the pending nominees have been waiting more than a year for a vote.

;;;;;;; Patrick, from Richardson, TX writes:
;;;;;;; Though a bipartisan merit selection system for federal judicial appointments would have political drawbacks for whoever is president--such as the loss of a tool to reward core constituencies and an inability to shape the ideological direction of the courts, 1 do you see any advantages from such a system, and 2 could there ever be the political will to seek an institutionalized compromise that would back away from the historic drive to pack the federal courts the impulse behind Marbury v. Madison afterall?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; The framers of the Constitution wanted one person to be responsible and accountable for the nomination of federal judges, and the Senate as a whole to vote on the nominees.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Lori, from Corpus Christi, TX writes:
;;;;;;; Have you found a good tex-mex restaurant in the nations capital?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; My family and I miss Texas and the great Tex-Mex food in Austin...and of course Corpus Christi. Although we love Washington, we look forward to the day we can return to my beloved State. Go Astros!

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Shaun, from San Antonio writes:
;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales, heres a tough one for you... Dallas Cowboys or Houston Texans?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; Houston Oilers!!!!!!!

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Gregory, from Sandusky, OH writes:
;;;;;;; Since the advise and consent role of Congress, as spelled out in the Constitution, specifically states that a simple majority vote is required, is it not unconstitutional for the Senate Democrats to insist that a 60 favorable vote to break a fillibuster is needed for the whole Senate to vote up or down on a judicial nomination?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; The Senate has a constitutional responsibility to provide an up or down vote. It is unprecedented for a minority of Senators to block a vote on an appeals court nominee by means of a filibuster. Both Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen have the support of a majority of Senators, and should receive a vote and be confirmed.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; James, from New York, NY writes:
;;;;;;; When you say nine appeals court nominees have been waiting for more than one year, are you including Justice Owen and Judge Pickering? They did receive votes, after all, even though the votes were negative. Then the President renominated them when the Republicans regained control of the Senate, and theyve been waiting about four months since then. In fact, is it not disregarding the Senates constitutional function of advice and consent for the President to reappoint nominees who were voted down?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; The President continues to support both nominees, believes they deserve a vote, and is confident they will be confirmed. And to clarify, in the last Congress, they did not receive a vote in the full Senate and we know that both would have been confirmed if they received an up or down vote.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Curtis, from Washington, DC writes:
;;;;;;; The Senate Democrats have used one of your statements on a Priscilla Owen dissent to discredit her. However, you issued a statement on July 16, 2002 supporting Justice Owen. Can you clarify the discrepency?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; There is no discrepancy. I strongly support Priscilla Owen and continue to believe she is well qualified. She is a woman of integrity and will be an outstanding judge on the Fifth Circuit. The fact that she and I disagreed on some opinions is not unusual or noteworthy and does not in any way affect my strong support for her.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Rich, from New York City writes:
;;;;;;; What is your reaction to Senator Schumers idea that the President give up his right to nominating judges and hand over the process to unelected and unaccountable boards in the states?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; I responded to Senator Schumer's letter earlier this week and advised him that we believed his plan to be inconsistent with the Constitution and would not produce the best qualified judges. We will post my response to the Senator after my online discussion is over. Check back in about 30 minutes.

;;;;;;;  Posted at 6:45pm **
;;;;;;; Click here to read the letter (in PDF format).

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Rafael, from Englewood, Colorado writes:
;;;;;;; Does the President employ a litmus test when selecting his nominees?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; No.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; George, from Maryland writes:
;;;;;;; What is it like to work in the White House?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; It is an honor. People from all over the world come to Washington and peer through the black iron rod gates for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time. I am proud and privileged.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; susan, from Michigan writes:
;;;;;;; Will the White House pressure the Senate to hold hearings and confirm the Sixth Circuit nominees from Michigan despite the negative blue slips submitted by Michigans Democrat senators?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; There is a vacancy crisis in the Sixth Circuit. The President has four nominees from Michigan to that court pending; three have been pending more than a year without even a hearing. These well qualified nominees deserve hearings and votes. The people of Michigan and the other people in the Sixth Circuit are being harmed by these delays.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Alexander, from Hebron, CT writes:
;;;;;;; Mr. Gonzales, Senate Democrats alledge that the Constitutions advise and consent provisions not only empower the Senate to push against a judicial nominee who hasnt fully answered questions, but requires the Senate to do so. How would you respond to those who say that the President shouldnt have nominees rubber stamped.

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; Your question refers to Miguel Estrada. Mr. Estrada answered questions in an all day hearing, responded to numerous written questions, and met with a number of Senators all to provide information about his qualifications. He provided more information than has been required of past appeals court nominees. He is being held to an unfair double standard. While we do not expect the Senate to rubber stamp the President's nominees we expect the Senate to treat the nominees fairly and give them votes.

;;;;;;;

;;;;;;; Rich, from New York City writes:
;;;;;;; Could you and Miguel Estrada take Chuck Schumer and Ted Kennedy in a tag team wrestling match? Could tag team wrestling be a compromise to the gridlock which has kept so many nominees in limbo?

;;;;;;; Judge Gonzales
;;;;;;; ooops, got to go! Thank you all for joining me today in this on line discussion. Everyone should watch the President's speech tomorrow on judicial independence and the confirmation process at 10:30 a.m. ET. It will be web cast on WhiteHouse.Gov. Thanks again.

&The opportunity for senators to engage in unlimited debate on important national issues and nominations has often served the nation well. Again and again, this time-honored parliamentary tool has promoted bipartisan consultation and consensus. We urge Senate Republicans and Democrats to defeat any attempt to destroy the very essence of what has made the Senate such a unique and effective institution.

The President today gave an important speech on the 2 year anniversary of the first batch of nominees and the Senate obstruction that is currently taking place. A link to the proceedings is below.
http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2003/05/20030509-4.html Senator Frist, also today, offered his "Filibuster Reform" plan. Below is a synopsis:
Senator Frist?s proposed change to Rule 22 tracks normal cloture procedure with exceptions:

1) Applies only to nominations.

2) Cloture cannot be filed until a nomination has been pending for 12 hours.

3) Cloture requirements decline on succeeding votes: 60, 57, 54, 51 and finally a simple majority of those present and voting. (This latter feature is based on the premise that the Constitution does not state a floor.)

4) A follow-up cloture motion cannot be filed until disposition of the prior cloture motion.

S. Res 85 as introduced by previously Senator Miller

- applied to all debate, not just nominations- did not provide a 12 hour wait- stopped at 51 There are 10 GOP co-sponsors and Miller. Including freshmen Cornyn and Chambliss. A previous similar proposal introduced by Liebermann and Harkin in 1995 (applied to all debate) was voted up by 19 Democrats, many of whom still serve, including POTUS wannabes Lieberman, Kerry, and Graham..

Dole highlights Edwards' block of judicial nominee

By JOHN WAGNER, Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON -- U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Dole on Friday tried to publicly pressure U.S. Sen. John Edwards to let the Senate consider a judicial candidate from North Carolina whose nomination has languished for two years.

Dole, a Republican, sent a letter to Edwards, a Democrat, and later held a conference call with reporters to highlight the plight of U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle, whom President Bush nominated to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in May 2001.

Edwards has refused to return a "blue slip" that would allow the Senate Judiciary Committee to convene a hearing on Boyle's nomination. Dole's Republican predecessor, U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, employed the same tactic during the Clinton Administration to block a string of Democratic nominees from his home state.

"I'm calling on my colleague and friend to return the blue slips," Dole said. "It's time for the cycle of blame and recriminations to end."

Feuding between North Carolina's senators has kept the state from having a single judge on the 15-member panel since 1999. The 4th Circuit, which hears appeals from five Southeastern states, is the last stop for federal cases before they reach the U.S. Supreme Court.

Boyle is now one of two pending nominees from North Carolina. Last month, Bush nominated Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan to the 4th Circuit as well.

Edwards spokes-man Mike Briggs urged "quick action" by the Senate on the Duncan nomination. Though Duncan is a Republican, he said Edwards considers her "a consensus nominee."

Dole, however, said she thinks Boyle should get a hearing first because he was nominated first.

Dole said the federal judiciary is facing a "vacancy crisis" created by "a handful of Democratic senators for political and partisan reasons."

But when asked about Helms' actions during the Clinton administration, she declined several times to characterize them.

Briggs noted Friday that in a previous letter to Dole, Edwards proposed setting up a bipartisan commission to recommend judges from North Carolina. Dole did not accept the proposal.

Dole, Edwards at odds over judge nomination

By Kevin Begos

JOURNAL WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON

A 10-year-old dispute over federal judges has sparked the first public battle between Sens. John Edwards and Elizabeth Dole, suggesting that the political ghost of Jesse Helms still looms over North Carolina.

Dole, a freshman, joined other Republicans yesterday when she criticized Edwards for holding up the nomination of Judge Terrence Boyle, one of President Bush's nominees to the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Dole sent a letter to Edwards complaining about his actions, and she later held a conference call with reporters on the same subject. Earlier in the day, Bush highlighted the issue of judicial nominees during a White House news conference.

"It's a crisis made worse by senators," Dole said during the conference call. Dole then ducked questions about whether Helms used the same tactics to block Clinton-era nominees during a time when her husband, former Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, was the Senate majority leader for Republicans.

Dole said she wanted to leave "the bitterness of the past behind" to find a process that would guarantee all presidential nominees a Senate hearing.

Despite Dole's comments, some said that ignoring the Helms' legacy and trying to pin blame on Edwards is politics as usual, not a force for change. "She's got the Senate seat of the champion blocker of them all," said Ferrel Guillory, the head of the Southern Politics, Media and Public Life program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"Clearly, Helms spent much of his career blocking nominees."

To expect Edwards and other Democrats to ignore the past is unrealistic, Guillory said, adding that "trying to put pressure on Edwards with Boyle is just going back to the same cycle."

"She could be a force for helping to break the cycle," he said of Dole.

Edwards responded to Dole's criticism with a statement saying that he was "pleased to work with President Bush and Sen. Dole to reach agreement on a consensus nominee for the Fourth Circuit Court" - Allyson Duncan, a Republican lawyer from Raleigh.

The larger battle in Washington has been over the Democrats' efforts to block the nominations of Michael Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and of Priscilla Owen to the Fourth U.S.

Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

But in North Carolina, the Boyle nomination has been a political football for more than 10 years.

Boyle, a former Helms aide, was first nominated during the first Bush administration. He was re-nominated two years ago, but Edwards has used Senate rules to block any hearing for Boyle, suggesting that Boyle's views are tooextreme to effectively represent the state.

Edwards wants to move quickly on the Duncan nomination, but Dole said that Boyle should get a hearing first because he has been waiting so long for one.

Dole also said that the delays "endanger American justice" and that the vacancies on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals are a "judicial emergency." However, she did not respond to questions about Helms' previous stand, which held that there was no need for more federal judges.

The chief justice of the Fourth Circuit echoed that opinion when Clinton nominees were being blocked.

Luke,

Here is the sample t-shirt logo. I did not add the disclaimer because I can't figure out how to do it in the program I was working in.

On T-Shirts we need a decision tomorrow morning.

Subject: FYI - Class Action Bills

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:
In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.
In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115.
S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.
H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.
The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP:
http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

HR 1115 IH

108th CONGRESS
H. R. 1115

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

`CHAPTER 114--CLASS ACTIONS

`Sec.
`1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.
`1712. Protection against loss by class members.
`1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.
`1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.
`1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.
`1716. Definitions.

`Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`Sec. 1712. Protection against loss by class members

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.
`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`Sec. 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and
`(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing--

`(A) the subject matter of the class action;
`(B) the members of the class;
`(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;
`(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement--

`(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

`(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
`(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
`(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
`(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

`(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
`(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
`(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

`(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
`(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`Sec. 1716. Definitions

`(1) CLASS ACTION- The term `class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.

`(2) CLASS COUNSEL- The term `class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
`(3) CLASS MEMBERS- The term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION- The term `plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.

`(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT- The term `proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.'.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT- The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

--1711'.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION- Section 1332 is amended--

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

`(d)(1) In this subsection--

`(A) the term `class' means all of the class members in a class action;

`(B) the term `class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

`(C) the term `class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

`(D) the term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which--

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

`(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

`(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which--

`(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

`(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

`(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

`(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

`(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

`(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

`(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

`(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

`(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

`(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to--

`(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

`(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

`(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

`(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

`(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if--

`(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).'.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS-

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting `(a) or (d)' after `1332'.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking `(d)' and inserting `(e)'.

`Sec. 1453. Removal of class actions

`(a) DEFINITIONS- In this section, the terms `class', `class action', `class certification order', and `class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

`(b) IN GENERAL- A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed--

`(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

`(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

`(c) WHEN REMOVABLE- This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

`(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL- The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

`(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS- The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

`(f) EXCEPTION- This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves--

`(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

`(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

However, original jurisdiction would not apply in any action in which: (a) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed and the claims will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed; (b) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the Federal district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (c) the number of plaintiff class members in the aggregate is less than 100. SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members~~ are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

For your information, during the week of May 12, 2003, the Department of Homeland Security will hold TOPOFF 2, a national Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) exercise. The scenario for TOPOFF 2 includes a simulated radiological dispersion device (RDD) detonation in Seattle and a bioterrorism attack in Chicago. TOPOFF 2 is the second in a series of directed domestic counterterrorism exercises. Planning for this exercise began in June 2000. The exercise will focus on the nation,s response capabilities including pharmaceutical stockpile distribution procedures, law enforcement intervention techniques, detection and decontamination capabilities, and national incident management mechanisms. Participants include twenty-five Federal agencies, numerous state and local government entities, and 76 hospitals. Canada will also participate.

The White House role is not a primary training focus for TOPOFF 2. White House exercise participation will not impact normal White House operations. A simulated news network, the Virtual News Network (VNN), will be broadcast to exercise participants to keep them informed of events taking place in the exercise.

For questions, please contact Jim Kish of the Homeland Security Council (6-2276).

Brett -
Advance has worked with the state part in indiana to make up the attached logo.
They'd like to print it onto 7,000 buttons (minus the "staff" insignia), which they will hand out to folks as they leave the event.
your thoughts and legal guidance?

This isn't a final logo. But, the concept is close to what we would

Luke,

Here is the sample t-shirt logo. I did not add the disclaimer because I can't figure out how to do it in the program I was working in.

On T-Shirts we need a decision tomorrow morning.

Luke,

Here is the sample t-shirt logo. I did not add the disclaimer because I can't figure out how to do it in the program I was working in.

On T-Shirts we need a decision tomorrow morning.

House Judiciary Committee hearing on H.R. 1115 - Class Action Fairness Act of 2003

Here's the earlier information I passed along - comparing HR1115 to S274, although S274 as you know has been changed by committee. (I still don't have reported text yet of S. 274)

Subject: FYI - Class Action Bills

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:
In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.
In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115.
S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.
H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.
The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP:
http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

HR 1115 IH

108th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 1115

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

`CHAPTER 114--CLASS ACTIONS

`Sec.
`1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.
`1712. Protection against loss by class members.
`1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.
`1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.
`1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.
`1716. Definitions.

`Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`Sec. 1712. Protection against loss by class members

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.
`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`Sec. 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and
`(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing--

`(A) the subject matter of the class action;
`(B) the members of the class;
`(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;
`(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement--

`(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

`(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
`(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
`(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
`(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

`(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
`(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
`(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

`(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
`(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`Sec. 1716. Definitions

`In this chapter--

`(1) CLASS ACTION- The term `class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal

--1711'.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION- Section 1332 is amended--

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

`(d)(1) In this subsection--

`(A) the term `class' means all of the class members in a class action;

`(B) the term `class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

`(C) the term `class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

`(D) the term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which--

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

`(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

`(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which--

`(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

`(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

`(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

`(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

`(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

`(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

`(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

`(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

`(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to--

`(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

`(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if--

`(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).'.

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants~~, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions~~, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction ~~of~~ for interstate class actions.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members~~ are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

Yes, perhaps stray comment was too understated. One thing that might be helpful to give some context to the letter, then, is to begin it by mentioning that his comments were on the Senate floor and were in direct response to the President's remarks.

Agree with general concern, but also note that this was much more than a stray comment. This was Sen. Daschle's response on Senate floor to the President's Rose Garden speech -- and obviously is and will be their primary talking point on this issue as reflected in NY Times yesterday.

Subject: RE: timing

I sent you a few suggestions, but the bigger question to me is whether we continue to respond to every stray comment by the leadership and if so whether the letters should continue to go out over the Judge's signature. On balance, I think we should continue current practice, but perhaps it's worth the three of us having a conversation with Hobbs & Bartlett to make sure.

If you all agree with general idea, we should try to get Daschle letter out today.

End Original ARMS Header

For your information, during the week of May 12, 2003, the Department of Homeland Security will hold TOPOFF 2, a national Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) exercise. The scenario for TOPOFF 2 includes a simulated radiological dispersion device (RDD) detonation in Seattle and a bioterrorism attack in Chicago. TOPOFF 2 is the second in a series of directed domestic counterterrorism exercises. Planning for this exercise began in June 2000. The exercise will focus on the nation,s response capabilities including pharmaceutical stockpile distribution procedures, law enforcement intervention techniques, detection and decontamination capabilities, and national incident management mechanisms. Participants include twenty-five Federal agencies, numerous state and local government entities, and 76 hospitals. Canada will also participate.

The White House role is not a primary training focus for TOPOFF 2. White House exercise participation will not impact normal White House operations. A simulated news network, the Virtual News Network (VNN), will be broadcast to exercise participants to keep them informed of events taking place in the exercise.

For questions, please contact Jim Kish of the Homeland Security Council (6-2276).

For your information, during the week of May 12, 2003, the Department of Homeland Security will hold TOPOFF 2, a national Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) exercise. The scenario for TOPOFF 2 includes a simulated radiological dispersion device (RDD) detonation in Seattle and a bioterrorism attack in Chicago. TOPOFF 2 is the second in a series of directed domestic counterterrorism exercises. Planning for this exercise began in June 2000. The exercise will focus on the nation,s response capabilities including pharmaceutical stockpile distribution procedures, law enforcement intervention techniques, detection and decontamination capabilities, and national incident management mechanisms. Participants include twenty-five Federal agencies, numerous state and local government entities, and 76 hospitals. Canada will also participate.

The White House role is not a primary training focus for TOPOFF 2. White House exercise participation will not impact normal White House operations. A simulated news network, the Virtual News Network (VNN), will be broadcast to exercise participants to keep them informed of events taking place in the exercise.

For questions, please contact Jim Kish of the Homeland Security Council (6-2276).

Gay GOP Group Readies for 2004 Elections
Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A gay Republicans group says it is trying to get beyond the flap over Sen. Rick Santorum's derogatory remarks about homosexual behavior, yet it is that very controversy that helped double the attendance at its annual convention.

Comments by the conservative Republican from Pennsylvania, the GOP takeover of the Senate last year and the upcoming presidential race were the main topics that lured more than 200 people to the Log Cabin Republicans' annual convention, which ends here Saturday night. That's more than twice the attendance of last year's meeting.

Santorum has been a center of attention since an April 7 interview with The Associated Press in which he brought up a pending Supreme Court case over a Texas sodomy law and likened gay behavior to incest and polygamy.

"It was a reminder to all that we had work to do," Patrick Guerriero, director of the group, said Saturday about the increased attendance.

On Friday, about 200 gay members of the GOP met for more than an hour with three White House officials at the Eisenhower Executive Office Building - Joseph O'Neill, the White House AIDS czar, Brett Kavanaugh, associate White House counsel, and Holly Kuzmich, associate director of the White House domestic policy council.

Ken Lisaius, a White House spokesman, downplayed the meeting, saying it was one of many policy meetings requested by groups looking for ways to further the president's initiatives. The group talked about AIDS, education and judicial nominees for the federal bench, he said.

Guerriero said the Bush administration has invited gay Republicans to discussions about AIDS, judicial nominations and other policy issues. Still, the Log Cabin Republicans believe the White House could have distanced itself further from the Santorum controversy.

"If we were completely satisfied that the Republican Party was as inclusive as we wished, we would cease to exist," Guerriero said. "It's obvious that the issue of inclusiveness in the Republican Party is going to be a major issue."

An estimated 1 million gay and lesbian Americans voted for President Bush in 2000, he said. The gay Republicans attending the annual convention, complete with get-out-the-vote workshops and congressional briefings, are convinced that gays and lesbians, if they don't vote for Bush, could be partly responsible for "losing the White House," he said.

JUDICIARY
Budget, Finance Chairmen May Oppose Hatch Asbestos Bill
Legislation expected this week from Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch aimed at reforming the compensation system for asbestos-related injuries may face opposition from Senate budgeters and tax writers who are concerned about provisions in the bill that fall under their jurisdictions, sources said. The legislation is partly the product of intense private-sector negotiations that the Judiciary panel has been overseeing with the goal of finding a way to limit companies' liability while providing adequate compensation to victims. As envisioned by Hatch, the legislation would establish a $108 billion trust fund to compensate victims of asbestos-related illnesses. Companies' contributions to the fund would be tax deductible, while the payments to victims would be tax exempt. "Those tax ramifications belong in Finance, not Judiciary," a GOP source said. "That's just not Chairman Hatch's prerogative."Finance Chairman Grassley , has yet to see specifics of how the trust fund would work, but expects tax provisions to move through his committee, a Grassley spokeswoman said. "Since Chairman Hatch is a senior member of Finance, we anticipate being able to work through those issues with him," she said. Grassley is also a senior member of the Judiciary panel.

The legislation may also sound alarms among members of the Budget Committee, sources said. The bill will probably call for the establishment of a separate court system and possibly an administrative body to oversee the compensation program.

Backers of the legislation have yet to estimate the costs of those elements, and they were not provided for in the FY04 budget resolution, sources noted, making the bill subject to a point of order. Budget Chairman Nickles earlier this year introduced his own more-limited asbestos bill that called for stand-alone medical criteria to evaluate claims of asbestos injuries.

Scrutiny from the Budget and Finance panels could complicate an already tortured process of shaping the bill, sources close to the negotiations said. The opposition could fade once a bill is finalized and Hatch vets it with his fellow committee chairmen, one lobbyist said. Until now, Hatch has been focused on working with Democrats on Judiciary so he could get a bill he could move, the lobbyist said. A closely held draft of Hatch's legislation has begun circulating to some offices of members of the Judiciary panel. The draft omits some key details still being hammered out, such as

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:

In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.

In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115.

S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.

H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.

The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP: http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

The Honorable F. James Sensenbrenner, Jr.
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter presents the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 2341, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2001" (counterpart to S. 1712 in the Senate). We appreciate your timely consideration of this important measure. The Department and the Administration support both of these bills.

Class action abuses have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before other, duplicative actions purporting to represent the same class with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race for the attorneys to see who among them can settle his or her case the fastest, thereby getting any attorneys' fees and binding all class members in perpetuity. In addition, this race to the preferred State courthouse results in class action filings in jurisdictions known for generous awards (and thus settlements). The resolution of these class actions in State court results in the first State to adjudicate a claim imposing its laws on class members from other States and on those other States themselves, which may have similar actions pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly that for which diversity jurisdiction sought to provide a Federal forum, preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiff class members.

H.R. 2341 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members, actions that fail to serve the plaintiff class members and actions that prejudice the defendants.

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures that would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant in actions where minimal diversity existed and the total amount in controversy totaled at least $2 million. The Department fully supports this change, which recognizes the Federal interest in such significant litigation. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect States and their citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Section 3, entitled "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for class members whose rights are often being adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing and in fora with which the class members have no connection, where settlements are, in effect, imposed on class members. Too often class members receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide useful notice about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that class members receive adequate information, this section would establish more specific pleading requirements in appropriate circumstances and require settlement notices provided to class members to be in plain English and in a specified, easy-to-read format.

Section 6 would permit immediate appeal of class certification decisions but – avoiding concerns voiced about previous legislation – would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless it was necessary to preserve evidence. Thus, immediate appeal of certification decisions would be crucial to efficient management of class actions and to permit the re-filing of a proper class action or the filing of an individual action.

Opponents of class action reform similar to H.R. 2341 (such as H.R. 1875, passed by the House in the previous Congress), incorrectly assert that the expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction infringes on State courts and will result in a flood of class action litigation in Federal courts. Such criticism overlooks both the valid interest Federal courts have in cases that involve interstate commerce and defendants and plaintiffs from many States, as well as the inefficiency that duplication in State courts causes in the current system. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State class members and award unsupportable damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, could not have been foreseen when section 1332 was initially enacted.

In sum, H.R. 2341 is an important step in reforming class action litigation. It would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances involving a relatively small class where the primary defendants were within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for those class actions involving parties from numerous States.

As a result of the Department's review of H.R. 2341, we do have some suggested technical amendments, particularly with respect to sections 3 and 4, that we would be happy to discuss with the members of the Committee.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be of further assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to submission of this letter.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

`CHAPTER 114--CLASS ACTIONS

`Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`Sec. 1712. Protection against loss by class members

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.
`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and

`(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
`(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
`(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

`(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

`(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
`(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

`(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

`(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

`(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

`(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

`(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members~~ are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

Subject: FYI - Class Action Bills

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:
In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.
In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115. S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.
H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.
The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP:
http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

HR 1115 IH

108th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 1115

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

`1716. Definitions.

`Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`Sec. 1712. Protection against loss by class members

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.
`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`Sec. 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and
`(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing--

`(A) the subject matter of the class action;
`(B) the members of the class;
`(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;
`(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement--

`(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

`(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
`(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
`(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
`(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

`(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
`(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
`(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

`(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
`(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`Sec. 1716. Definitions

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

`(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. `(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). `(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL- The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

`(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS- The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

Federal District Court Jurisdiction for Interstate Class Actions (Sec. 4)	Provide that Federal district courts would have original jurisdiction over any class-action lawsuits where the total claims exceed $2 million if any of the plaintiffs is a citizen of different State from any of the defendants, or either a plaintiff or a defendant resides in a foreign country. However, original jurisdiction would not apply in any action in which: (a) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed and the claims will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed; (b) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the Federal district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (c) the number of plaintiff class members in the aggregate is less than 100. HR 1115 108th Congress-Introduced House ~~(red, strikethrough text)~~

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants~~, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions~~, and for other purposes.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

Sec. 6. Report on class action settlements.
~~Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.~~
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members~~ are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

The Honorable F. James Sensenbrenner, Jr.
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter presents the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 2341, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2001" (counterpart to S. 1712 in the Senate). We appreciate your timely consideration of this important measure. The Department and the Administration support both of these bills.

Class action abuses have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before other, duplicative actions purporting to represent the same class with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race for the attorneys to see who among them can settle his or her case the fastest, thereby getting any attorneys' fees and binding all class members in perpetuity. In addition, this race to the preferred State courthouse results in class action filings in jurisdictions known for generous awards (and thus settlements). The resolution of these class actions in State court results in the first State to adjudicate a claim imposing its laws on class members from other States and on those other States themselves, which may have similar actions pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly that for which diversity jurisdiction sought to provide a Federal forum, preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiff class members.

H.R. 2341 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members, actions that fail to serve the plaintiff class members and actions that prejudice the defendants.

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures that would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant in actions where minimal diversity existed and the total amount in controversy totaled at least $2 million. The Department fully supports this change, which recognizes the Federal interest in such significant litigation. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect States and their citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Section 3, entitled "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for class members whose rights are often being adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing and in fora with which the class members have no connection, where settlements are, in effect, imposed on class members. Too often class members receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide useful notice about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that class members receive adequate information, this section would establish more specific pleading requirements in appropriate circumstances and require settlement notices provided to class members to be in plain English and in a specified, easy-to-read format.

Section 6 would permit immediate appeal of class certification decisions but – avoiding concerns voiced about previous legislation – would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless it was necessary to preserve evidence. Thus, immediate appeal of certification decisions would be crucial to efficient management of class actions and to permit the re-filing of a proper class action or the filing of an individual action.

Opponents of class action reform similar to H.R. 2341 (such as H.R. 1875, passed by the House in the previous Congress), incorrectly assert that the expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction infringes on State courts and will result in a flood of class action litigation in Federal courts. Such criticism overlooks both the valid interest Federal courts have in cases that involve interstate commerce and defendants and plaintiffs from many States, as well as the inefficiency that duplication in State courts causes in the current system. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State class members and award unsupportable damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, could not have been foreseen when section 1332 was initially enacted.

In sum, H.R. 2341 is an important step in reforming class action litigation. It would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances involving a relatively small class where the primary defendants were within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for those class actions involving parties from numerous States.

As a result of the Department's review of H.R. 2341, we do have some suggested technical amendments, particularly with respect to sections 3 and 4, that we would be happy to discuss with the members of the Committee.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be of further assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to submission of this letter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant

TESTIMONY OF VIET D. DINH,
ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, OFFICE OF LEGAL POLICY,
BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
ON THE "CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT OF 2003."

May 15, 2003

Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to be here this morning to present the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 1115, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003." The Department of Justice supports this bill, which is virtually identical to H.R. 2341 passed by the House of Representatives in the 107th Congress, also with our strong support. Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your leadership on this important legislation, and the leadership of the bill's bi-partisan group of sponsors.

Class action abuses have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before duplicative actions purporting to represent the same class with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race to the courthouse for the attorneys to see who among them can file and then settle his or her case the fastest and thereby collect millions in attorneys fees. The losers in this race are the class members who often gain little or nothing through the settlement, yet are bound in perpetuity.

The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003 contains three distinct, but necessary components: (1) a number of provisions relating to the administration of class actions in Federal courts, which have been collectively dubbed a "Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights;" (2) expanded federal court diversity jurisdiction to ensure that class actions with national implications can be heard in federal courts; and (3) expedited appellate review of class certification decision. I would like to briefly address each in turn.

Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights

Section 3 of H.R. 1115, entitled the "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for class members whose rights are often adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing in fora with which the class members have no connection, and where settlements are, in practical effect, imposed on class members. Too often class members receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide any meaningful information about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that class members receive adequate information, this section would require settlement notices provided to class members to be in plain English and in a standardized, easy-to-read format.

Federal Court Jurisdiction for National Class Actions

REV_00166582

In addition to the problem of duplicative class actions being filed in numerous states, certain local courthouses have become known for particularly generous. The threat of these large awards often coerces defendants to agree to disproportionately high settlement amounts. Often, these tiny jurisdictions are the first to adjudicate a class action claim and impose their laws on class members from other States and on those States themselves, where similar actions may be pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly why the Founders created diversity jurisdiction: to provide a Federal forum preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiff class members.

H.R. 1115 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity and jurisdictional amount requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members – actions that fail to serve the plaintiff class and prejudice the defendants. Specifically, sections 4 and 5 of H.R.1115 provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction by relaxing the "complete diversity" rule. The Act would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant, so long as there is "minimal diversity," the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2 million, and the lawsuit is not primarily intra-state in nature.

Importantly, H.R. 1115 also contains an anti-circumvention measure. Section 4 provides that – regardless of the label placed on a lawsuit by the State court – an action will be "deemed" a class action if: (1) the named plaintiff (exclusive of a State attorney general) purports to act for the interests of its members who are not named parties to the action; or (2) the monetary relief claims of 100 or more other persons are proposed to be tried jointly in the action on the grounds the claims involve common questions of law or fact. This definition would appropriately encompass "private attorney general suits" in which an individual seeks to recover on behalf of the general public, as well as "mass actions" brought on behalf of plaintiffs who claim that their suits present common questions of law or fact that should be resolved in a single proceeding.

The Department fully supports these changes to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures, which recognize the Federal interest in significant class action litigation that truly involves multiple interstate plaintiffs and defendants. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect each State and its citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Prior witnesses before this committee have described the multi-billion dollar judgment awarded in Madison County, Illinois against State Farm Insurance for repairing automobiles with "aftermarket parts" as distinguished from original manufacturers' parts. That decision applied Illinois law to plaintiffs in all 50 states, even though such a ruling was contrary to state insurance regulations in New York, Massachusetts, and Hawaii among other places. The State Farm case is not an isolated example. Right now, for instance, we are following with interest a case in Oklahoma where a nationwide class has been certified against DaimlerChrylser Corporation. The Oklahoma courts plan to apply Michigan law to adjudicate, on behalf of residents of all 50 states, claims that Chrysler should not have installed certain airbags that comply federal safety standards.

Opponents of class action reform similar to H.R. 1115, incorrectly assert that the expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction infringes on State courts and will result in a flood of class action litigation in Federal courts. Such criticism overlooks both the valid interest Federal courts have in cases that involve interstate commerce and parties from many States, as well as the inefficiency that duplication in State courts causes in the current system. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State class members and award unsupportable damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, could not have been foreseen when 28 U.S.C. § 1332 was initially enacted.

Interlocutory Appeal of Class Certification Decision

Because the court's certification decision often is decisive — a decision to certify may place insurmountable pressure on the defendant to settle, while a refusal to certify may force the plaintiffs to abandon their claims — the bill permits immediate appeal of certification decisions as a matter of right. Immediate appeals of certification decisions can be crucial to efficient management of class actions, preventing the nightmare situation where parties engage in years of expensive litigation under a ruling on the class certification, only to have the appeals court reverse the class certification determination. Contrary to concerns voiced about previous legislative proposals, H.R. 1115 would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless the court finds that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice.

Conclusion

In sum, H.R. 1115 is an important step in reforming class action litigation. It would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances such as where the class is relatively small or where the primary plaintiffs and defendants are within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for truly interstate class actions.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. I would be pleased to answer any questions that the Committee may have on this subject.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--

(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

`(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

`(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. (b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d)(1) In this subsection—

"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;

"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—

"(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

HEADLINE: EDITORIALS : How to bork a nominee Leon Holmes gets the treatment

BODY: BORK IS no longer a proper noun in Washington, as in Judge Robert Bork, but a verb. It means to launch a vicious, irrelevant, roundhouse campaign against a judicial nominee, throwing in everything, including a couple of kitchen sinks.

The term stems from the treatment of Judge Bork when he was nominated to the Supreme Court. Not satisfied with relevant criticisms, the judge's more partisan critics reached back to criticize everything he'd said or done from approximately the age of three, and quite a few things he hadn't.

That borking has become a Washington tradition by now-indeed, an addiction-is illustrated by the sharp but impressively mean-spirited editorial we reprint on today's page from the Washington Post. It's a textbook example of borking; students in political science classes should cut it out and save it, like a ripe specimen of that low art.

Notice that, unable to find anything contemporary to criticize about Little Rock's Leon Holmes-an outstanding scholar, advocate and thinker who has just been nominated to the federal bench-the Posthas had to go back years and even decades to dig up any utterance it could use against him, including one that went back to 1980-yes, 1980-and for which he apologized as soon as it was brought to his attention.

The other citation-a quote from Scripture in an article co-written with his wife in April of 1997-is so wrenched out of context that you might never guess it was a philosophical rumination on the Book of Ephesians.

As any smear artist knows, there's no need to go into detail. Especially relevant detail. In this case the innocent reader would be left with no idea of what kind of nominee, or man, Leon Holmes really is. Which is the whole purpose of borking: to make the nominee look like the biggest, scariest menace that ever came down confirmation road. Instead, to quote an informal recommendation from a colleague, Leon Holmes is the kind of guy he'd be willing to shoot dice with over the phone.

The charge that Mr. Holmes is in favor of the subjugation of women would amuse anyone who's ever met Susan Holmes, his wife and co-author, or any of the women in the law for whom he has been mentor, role model, supporter and encourager.

But we're glad to see that the Post has not lost its talent for irony.
Alas, in this case it's unintended irony.

For the Post accuses the president of radicalizing judicial nominations by his choice of Leon Holmes for the bench, when it is the one being radical, going back or decades to find words from a much younger Leon Holmes that fail to show
the proper reverence for the politically correct gods of today.

In the process, the Post has ignored the legal acumen and philosophical learning that the mature Leon Holmes has demonstrated day after day, year after year, in his career and life. Forget all that; the Post is determined to crucify this nominee even if it has to use old, rusty nails. It takes a couple of stray quotes and equates them with the man's whole career. A neat trick, if a low one.

A confession: In recent years we've found ourselves growing soft on the Post's editorial page; on its good days it started to look like one of those old-fashioned liberal organs not beyond the reach of reason. Clearly we were mistaken.

When the chance to do a little borking came up, the Post has leaped at it.
As if it couldn't help itself. Even if it means using low means to attain a purely ideological end. Which may be the worst thing about borking; it's habit-forming.
Once it becomes ingrained in a paper's character, there's no telling when it will seep out again.

Recent Key Quotes & Developments

- The Wall Street Journal (12/31/010) reported that anti-Taliban forces in Afghanistan confiscated a computer containing, among other things, the elements of a "plan to developed a 'home-brew nerve gas,'" and the text of a letter saying that "'hitting the Americans and Jews is a target of great value and has its rewards in this life and, God willing, the afterlife.'"

- "The first magazine for women in nearly 10 years has hit the shelves of the war-ravaged country. Seerat (Attitude) does not look like a standard glossy magazine. [It is] crudely churned out on an old-fashioned printing machine. Three women [journalists] are funding the weekly magazine out of their own pockets. 500 copies of Seerat, which costs 2,000 Afghanis (10 cents), are being distributed by its authors to colleges, bookshops and other institutions. All they have asked is that the ministry, which reads it for censorship, does not change any of the articles. 'We are a long way behind the technology that other newspapers have used for a long time. Please send us magazines. Any help and all ideas are welcome,' [say the journalists.]" (AFP, 12/26/01)

Message

Osama bin Laden is a coward who murders innocents, including women and children and Muslims.

We are a long way from finished in Afghanistan. Much difficult and dangerous work is yet to come. Many terrorists are still hiding in heavily fortified bunkers in rugged territory. They are said to be prepared for a long stay underground. But they are in for a sudden change of plans – because one by one, we are going to find them. Piece by piece, we will destroy their network of terror.

The U.S. is leading a global coalition that has made great progress in the war on terrorism:

- Began to destroy al-Qaeda's grip on Afghanistan by driving the Taliban from power.
- Disrupted al-Qaeda's global operations and terrorist financing networks.
- Helped the innocent people of Afghanistan recover from the Taliban's reign of terror.
- Helped Afghans put aside long-standing differences to form a new interim government that represents all Afghans – including women.

In Case You Missed It...

- "We've disrupted any number of training camps, and it does take training to become a polished, successful murderer or mass murderer. You just don't walk out of grade school with that kind of knowledge; you need to practice and be taught by experts." (Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, 1/3/02)

Facts of the Day

- The U.S. government has already spent more than $32 million in fiscal year 2002 to help assist Afghani refugees return to their homes in Afghanistan.
- President Bush's call for American kids to send $1 to America's Fund for Afghan Children has helped raise nearly $2 million, which has been spent on hats, socks, coats, tents, school supplies and other important humanitarian items that have been shipped to Afghanistan.

FOR INTERNAL USE ONLY -- CONTAINS MARKET SENSITIVE INFORMATION

SUBJECT: Electricity Industry Restructuring

ACTION FORCING EVENT

Several Members of Congress have introduced bills to bring competition and consumer choice to the electricity industry. The bills vary in form from proposals that completely restructure the electric industry by ordering the states to adopt legislation opening the industry to competition to stand-alone bills that repeal legislation that has governed for decades but is now regarded as an obstacle to competition that needs to be removed.

Eight states including California and Pennsylvania are implementing their own versions of retail competition, and dozens more are considering legislative proposals. However, since electricity markets are increasingly regional in nature, federal legislation is necessary to address issues arising from interstate commerce.

[(b)(5)]

INTRODUCTION

What does "restructuring" mean?
Restructuring means opening up parts of the electricity industry -- distribution and transmission facilities -- to competition. Under the resulting new system, called "retail competition," consumers would be allowed to choose their own electricity suppliers much like they now choose their long-distance telephone service provider. Electricity policy is moving in this direction because of demands by customers that they be allowed to choose their own suppliers instead of being captive to the local utility. Proponents of competition believe it will lead to increased efficiency in the industry and reduced costs to consumers. There is some data that attempts to quantify these predicted benefits; these data are discussed below.

Under electricity restructuring, competition would replace regulation as the primary mechanism to set electricity generation prices. Utilities would be required to open their distribution and transmission wires to all qualified sellers. The transmission and distribution of electricity would continue to be regulated because they will remain monopolies for the foreseeable future. Thus, the system would be restructured, not completely deregulated.

How does the current system work?
Generally, under State law, electric utilities are monopolies that have both an exclusive right and responsibility to serve all consumers in a particular area. Most utilities are vertically integrated suppliers of generation and distribution services to the end customer. The vast majority of states regulate utility prices through a process known as cost-of-service or rate-of-return regulation. State regulators set the rates that utilities may charge based on the full cost of generating, transmitting and distributing electricity plus a fair rate of return on the invested capital.

[(b)(5)]

[(b)(5)]

Competition in the electricity sector at the wholesale level, which was mandated by the Congress in the Energy Policy Act of 1992, was projected by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) in 1996 to save between $3 and $5 billion per year.

[(b)(5)]

Some homeowners in Eastern Washington State pay as little as 2 cents per kilowatt hour (kWh), while the people of Long Island pay 800 percent more -- as much as 16 cents per kWh.

[(b)(5)]

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

In the 105th Congress, a number of legislative proposals for Federal legislation with respect to electricity regulation reforms have been introduced. These include bills narrowly targeted at particular issues, such as repeal of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (PUHCA) and the establishment of a federal matching fund for State public purpose programs. There are also several more comprehensive proposals, each of which would make substantial amendments to the principal relevant Federal statutes. A chart attached to this memorandum summarizes the major bills.

The major issues addressed are:

[(b)(5)]

Bills offered by Rep. DeLay, Rep. Schaefer, and Sen. Bumpers would mandate retail competition by 1999, 2000, and 2003, respectively. Rep. Markey's bill takes a different approach and would require States to consider retail competition and provide utilities incentives to pursue competition.

00300000000130

The proposals also differ in their respective approaches to stranded cost recovery. Sen. Bumpers' proposal would allow utilities to fully recover fully stranded costs, Rep. DeLay's bill would prohibit any stranded cost recovery, while other bills leave the decision entirely to the States.

Many of the bills call for the repeal of The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (PUHCA). This Act, passed during the Depression, is the piece of legislation which still governs the electricity industry. It mandated regulated utilities be vertical monopolies. In its place, FERC and the States would be given additional access to corporate books and records. Several of the legislative proposals give FERC additional authority to address affiliate transactions, mergers and market power.

Many of the bills repeal the mandatory purchase requirement of section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act (PURPA) which sought to reform the vertically integrated electric utility monopolies by making it possible for non utility electricity generators to sell power wholesale to electric utilities. Rep. Markey's bill would condition the repeal of PUHCA and section 210 of PURPA on a State's adoption of retail competition.

While a number of the legislative proposals make clear that States have the authority to provide support for public benefits, several of the proposals have included specific provisions providing support for public benefits. Bills offered by Rep. DeFazio and Sen. Jeffords include provisions establishing a federal matching fund to support low-income customers, renewable resources, energy efficiency, and research and development. Sen. Jeffords, Sen. Bumpers, Rep. Markey and Rep. Schaefer have included provisions establishing a renewable portfolio standard.

Some of the proposals contain provisions addressing utility air emissions regulation. Sen. Bumpers' bill would require EPA to prepare a report on the effect of differing emissions standards on competition; Rep. Markey and Sen. Jeffords would give EPA broad authority to set emissions caps for a number of pollutants and to provide for a cap and trade system for these pollutants.

Many of the bills also address a broad range of other issues, including clarification of jurisdictional boundaries between federal government and states, reliability, consumer disclosure, and universal service.

Stranded Costs.

Stranded costs are costs that were incurred by utilities to serve their customers with the understanding that state regulatory commissions would allow the costs to be recovered through electric rates.

Bush Pushes Stimulus Plan

By DAVID ESPO, AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) - President Bush journeyed to the Capitol on Wednesday to lobby for legislation to help victims of the recession, but Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said Republicans ``refused to negotiate seriously'' over health care for the unemployed.

With Bush's blessing, House GOP leaders readied a new economic stimulus bill for a vote, including an additional 13 weeks of unemployment benefits and health insurance subsidies for recession victims as well as tax breaks for individuals and businesses. The cost was $216 billion over three years.

House passage was assured, given the GOP majority, although Democrats dismissed the bill in advance as a political gesture that could not reach Bush's desk.

In the Democratic-controlled Senate, there appeared to be more than 50 votes for the measure, and Republicans were discussing fresh concessions to win more converts. But the GOP was unable to count the 60 votes needed to force final approval over the opposition of Daschle and other members of his party.

In an unusual working visit to the Capitol, Bush met privately with moderate House Democrats as well as a bipartisan group of senators, three Democrats among them, who support the GOP measure. In brief remarks to reporters, Bush did not mention Daschle by name, but his reference was unmistakable.

``This bill will pass the House. It's got enough votes to pass the Senate,'' he said. ``And therefore, I look forward to working with both bodies (House and Senate) in any way I can to convince those who are reluctant to get a bill done, that this makes sense for America.''

His spokesman, Ari Fleischer, was more direct. ``The president would be delighted if Sen. Daschle were to sign on'' to the deal with moderate Democrats, he said. ``The president would be delighted if Sen. Daschle would let it come to a vote.... Why block progress?''

Daschle, D-S.D., attacked regularly by Republicans as an obstructionist, saw it differently.

``We have come more than half way in meeting our Republican colleagues on an array of tax questions that they have said were important to them.... But to date they have been unwilling to accept even a modicum of change, even some degree of limited help for these unemployed workers in both unemployment compensation as well as health care.''

Daschle also said, ``We regret very much that our Republican colleagues, at least so far, have refused to come to the table to negotiate seriously on health and unemployment benefits in spite of the fact that millions of people are unemployed today.''

The House bill approves 13 additional weeks of unemployment benefits for those laid off since the March onset of the recession, money for health insurance subsidies for the unemployed and rebates of up to $600 for lower-wage earners who did not qualify for this summer's checks.

The bill also would cut the current 27 percent income tax rate to 25 percent effective Jan. 1, four years earlier than planned. Beginning in 2002, that rate applies to taxable income between $27,950 and $67,700 for individuals, and between $46,700 and $112,850 for married couples.

In addition, the bill would let businesses write off 30 percent annually of the cost of new investment for the next three years, and ease a corporate minimum tax that can boost corporations' tax bills even in unprofitable years.

The main stumbling block concerned health insurance benefits for the unemployed.

The House GOP bill provides laid-off workers with a tax credit equal to 60 percent of the cost of a health insurance policy, money they could use to purchase their own coverage if they wished.

Democrats want a direct 75 percent subsidy for job-related health insurance coverage that many workers are eligible to keep after losing their jobs.

The money would go to the employer, rather than to the individual as Republicans want. For laid-off workers who did not have health insurance on the job, Democrats proposed expanded coverage under Medicaid, the federal-state program that provides health care for the poor.

The House bill was crafted to incorporate many concessions that Republicans have made in several weeks of bargaining with the Democrats, since the GOP muscled through legislation on a party-line vote several weeks ago.

That bill did not include the additional 13 weeks of unemployment benefits, and had a repeal of the alternative minimum tax that would have given billions of dollars to large corporations, Enron and IBM among them.

Democrats opposed it overwhelmingly, and quickly launched radio commercials against three GOP lawmakers who voted for it.

Daschle cited concessions Democrats made in the discussions, saying he had agreed to GOP proposals for business tax relief, and he had been willing to ``look at rates,'' the GOP proposals for accelerated tax cuts.

White House: Enron Official Phoned

By KAREN GULLO, Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - Enron Chairman Kenneth L. Lay reached out to two of President Bush's Cabinet officers when the energy company was collapsing, the White House disclosed Thursday as the Justice Department opened a criminal investigation of Enron's bankruptcy.
Bush, who received significant campaign contributions from Lay and other Enron executives, said he himself has never discussed Enron's financial problems with its embattled corporate chairman. The president said he last saw Lay in Texas at spring fund-raiser for former first lady Barbara Bush's literacy foundation.
Lay also was among a group of some 20 business leaders who came to the White House early in the Bush administration to discuss the state of the economy, Bush said.
Many Enron employees lost their life savings when the company filed for bankruptcy Dec. 2.
``What anybody's going to find out is that this administration will fully investigate issues such as the Enron bankruptcy, to make sure we can learn from the past and make sure workers are protected,'' Bush said.
But Lay did seek the ear of other top-level administration officials last fall. According to White House press secretary Ari Fleischer, Lay telephoned Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill amid Enron's collapse ``to advise him about his concern about the obligations of Enron and whether they would be able to meet those obligations.''
Lay also told O'Neill that Enron ``was heading to bankruptcy,'' Fleischer said.
O'Neill received calls from Lay on Oct. 28 and Nov. 8, said Treasury spokeswoman Michele Davis. It was on Oct. 16 that Enron made its stunning disclosure of a $638 million third-quarter loss.

In a separate phone call to Commerce Secretary Don Evans, Lay similarly worried that the company might have to default on its obligations. He brought to the secretary's attention ``that he was having problems with his bond rating and he was worried about its impact on the energy sector,'' Fleischer said.
After that conversation, Evans spoke to O'Neill ``and they both agreed no action should be taken to intervene with their bond holders,'' Fleischer said.
The spokesman had said Wednesday he did not know of anyone in the White House who discussed Enron's financial situation.
Fleischer also brushed aside talk of any conflict in the Justice Department investigation and said there was no reason to turn the probe over to a special counsel.
Lay gave $25,000 to a leadership committee headed by then-senator and now Attorney General John Ashcroft, according to the Center for Public Integrity.
An attorney for Enron welcomed Ashcroft's inquiry, the latest in a series of governmental probes into the company's demise, saying the investigation would ``bring light to the facts.''
``We want to get to the bottom of this too,'' said Robert Bennett, a Washington attorney representing the Houston-based company. ``A lot of decent and honorable people work at Enron and we should wait until the facts are out.''
Bush ordered a separate review Thursday of pension and corporate disclosure rules that could jeopardize workers' savings. ``There has been a wave of bankruptcies that have caused many workers to lose their pensions and that is deeply troubling to me,'' Bush said.
The Justice Department is forming a national task force to look into the company's dealings. The group will be headed by lawyers at the department's criminal division and include prosecutors in Houston, San Francisco, New York and several other cities, said a Justice Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity.
The official declined to say when the investigation began. Enron faces civil investigations by the Labor Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission and subpoenas from congressional committees.
All are looking into the energy trading company's collapse, the largest bankruptcy filing in U.S. history.
The failure hit employees and investors hard. Workers were prohibited from selling company stock from their Enron-heavy 401(k) retirement accounts as the company's stock plummeted. Many lost their life's savings.
Enron executives cashed out more than $1 billion in stock when it was near its peak.
Former Enron chief executive Jeffrey Skilling, who left the helm nearly two months before the company's swift descent, welcomes the investigation, said spokeswoman Judy Leon. Skilling has said he had no idea, despite Enron's falling stock values, that the company was on the brink of failure.
Formed in 1985, Enron had 20,000 employees and was once the world's top buyer and seller of natural gas and the largest electricity marketer in the United States. It also marketed coal, pulp, paper, plastics, metals and fiber-optic bandwidth.
One likely focus of the Justice Department investigation is possible fraud based on Enron's heavy reliance on off-balance-sheet partnerships which took on Enron debt. The partnerships masked Enron's financial problems and left its credit ratings healthy so it could obtain the cash and credit crucial to running its trading business.
The Houston-based company went bankrupt after its credit collapsed and its main rival, Dynegy Inc., backed out of an $8.4 billion buyout plan late last year.
Just a year ago, stock of Enron, the nation's largest buyer and seller of natural gas, traded at $85 per share. Today it is less than $1.
Lay has close ties to Bush and his father, the former president. Lay was a top contributor to the younger Bush's 2000 presidential campaign.
The company played a key role earlier this year when a White House task force met with business executives and other interests to fashion a national energy policy. The task force was headed by Vice President Dick Cheney.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.
  - Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.
