Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

October 8, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter sets forth the Administration's views concerning the manager's amendment version of H.R. 4187, the "Presidential Records Act Amendments of 2002." We believe that enactment of this bill is unnecessary and inappropriate and, more importantly, the bill is unconstitutional.

I.

The motivation underlying introduction of H.R. 4187 appears to be some concern in Congress with respect to Executive Order 13233, 66 Fed. Reg. 56025 (Nov. 5, 2001). President Bush issued the Order last November in order to establish polices and procedures governing consideration of the assertion of constitutionally based privileges in connection with the release of presidential records of prior administrations by the National Archives and Records Administration ("NARA") under the Presidential Records Act ("PRA"), 44 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2207. H.R. 4187 would purport to supersede President Bush's Order and put in its place congressionally prescribed procedures.

We respectfully suggest that much of the congressional concern underlying H.R. 4187 is based on a misunderstanding of the purpose and effect of the Executive Order. The Order does not operate to preclude the release of any presidential records. In fact, its most significant policy innovation is a provision establishing that the incumbent President ordinarily will not object to the release of records authorized for release by the former President. The Order merely establishes reasonable and appropriate procedures for review of documents and for privilege determinations to be made. The Order expressly refrains from indicating whether and under what circumstances privileges should be asserted.

Indeed, the Executive Order has operated to facilitate the release of records. Pursuant to the terms of the Order, representatives of former President Ronald Reagan -- the only President whose presidential records are ready for release by NARA after expiration of the PRA's 12-year restricted access period -- reviewed the 68,000 pages of records for which notice was provided in 2001, and on November 29, 2001, former President Reagan, through his representative, stated that he was not asserting constitutional privilege over any of the 68,000 pages. Since that time, representatives of President Bush have reviewed the records, and all of those 68,000 pages have been released. The procedures of the Order are working well, and presidential records are being released to the public consistent with the review that the Constitution requires be available to the former and incumbent Presidents in order that they can determine whether to exercise their constitutional authority.

Much criticism directed at the Order has apparently been premised on the view that a former President should have no right to assert privileges over his presidential records. That criticism is unfounded because the Supreme Court has definitively held, in an opinion by Justice William Brennan, that both incumbent and former Presidents retain the right to assert constitutionally based privileges with respect to the presidential records of the former President. See Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425 (1977). And the PRA expressly preserved the authority of former Presidents in this regard. See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(2). We are disappointed that much of the commentary on the Order never confronts the Supreme Court's ruling or this provision of the PRA.

It bears emphasis that, as under the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA), a denied requester can bring suit to challenge a privilege assertion any time that a former or incumbent President asserts a privilege. In other words, the courts will have the final word on the validity of any assertion of privilege. Neither the former nor the incumbent President will possess unreviewable authority to withhold records.

Other criticism of the Executive Order has suggested that the Order threatens Congress's exercise of its authority to seek presidential records in order to discharge its legislative responsibilities. This is incorrect. The only provision in the Order that is pertinent to congressional requests and subpoenas is section 6. That section is not intended to change the law in any way with respect to the legal effectiveness of congressional subpoena return dates, the practice of the executive and legislative branches of engaging in an accommodation process regarding congressional requests for privileged executive branch information, or the period of time that the Constitution requires a former or incumbent President be afforded in order to consider whether to assert a constitutionally based privilege. Section 6 merely sets forth the time periods that will generally apply to the reviews undertaken by former and incumbent Presidents in response to congressional requests for presidential records.

There also have been some questions raised about the fact that under the Executive Order a denied requester must initiate litigation against a former President who asserts a privilege, rather than requiring the former President who asserts a privilege to sue the incumbent President's Administration to block release. The Supreme Court has held that former Presidents have the constitutional right to assert privileges over their records. If such a privilege is asserted, we believe it most appropriate for the requester who disagrees with the privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation -- rather than requiring the former President to take the extraordinary step of suing the incumbent President's Administration. As a practical matter, it is no more difficult for a requester to file suit when a former President asserts a privilege than for an unsuccessful requester to file an ordinary FOIA suit. Because this procedure is so common in the FOIA context, we think it is an entirely appropriate model for these purposes.

In short, Executive Order 13233 is faithful to the PRA and to the Supreme Court's case law; it sets out appropriate procedures that satisfy both the congressional purposes underlying the PRA and the constitutional prerogatives and interests of former and incumbent Presidents; and implementation of the Order is going well. There is no need for legislation concerning the Order.

II.

In any event, H.R. 4187 is unconstitutional. The PRA, which H.R. 4187 would amend, provides for the release of presidential records of prior administrations, but it expressly recognizes that any such release is subject to assertion of constitutionally based privileges: "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to confirm, limit, or expand any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President." 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(2). And the PRA makes no effort to establish policies or procedures for asserting constitutionally based privileges under the PRA, but instead leaves that to the executive branch. See 124 Cong. Rec. 34,895 (1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) (legislation not "designed to prejudge" issues "involving the manner of assertion of the constitutional privilege"); 44 U.S.C. § 2206 ("The Archivist shall promulgate . . . regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this [Act]. Such regulations shall include . . . provisions for notice by the Archivist to the former President when the disclosure of particular documents may adversely affect any rights and privileges which the former President may have.").

Consistent with the Constitution and Congress's recognition of the constitutional requirements applicable to privilege claims, the executive branch has been responsible for the establishment of procedures for assertion of constitutionally based privileges under the PRA. The preamble to H.R. 4187, however, states that its purpose is to end that by "establish[ing] procedures for the consideration of claims of constitutionally based privilege against disclosure of Presidential records." That purpose, however, is beyond Congress's legislative authority. The presidential privileges are constitutionally based. Thus, Congress lacks the authority to regulate by legislation the procedures for exercising this constitutional power, which belongs exclusively to the President. This has long been recognized, as reflected in testimony in 1975 by then-Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel Antonin Scalia. See Statement of Antonin Scalia, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, on S. 2170, the Congressional Right to Information Act, before the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations, Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, Oct. 23, 1975.

Objecting to legislation setting out requirements governing the manner in which the President's constitutionally based privileges may be asserted, Assistant Attorney General Scalia testified that "[t]he Constitutional basis of Executive privilege means that the President may exercise it without Congressional leave and in spite of Congressional disapproval. In other words, the privilege does not fall within that group of powers which the President may exercise in the silence of Congress but not in derogation of legislation." Id. at 14. To support this position, the Assistant Attorney General quoted several passages from the Supreme Court decision in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). Id., quoting from 418 U.S. at 705 (executive privilege is derived from "the supremacy of each branch within its own assigned area of constitutional duties"), 708 ("The privilege is fundamental to the operation of government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution."), and 711 ("Nowhere in the Constitution . . . is there any explicit reference to a privilege of confidentiality, yet to the extent this interest relates to the effective discharge of a President's powers, it is constitutionally based.").

Assistant Attorney General Scalia went on in his testimony to object to a provision "requir[ing] that Executive privilege be claimed only by the President himself in writing, setting forth the grounds on which it is based." Statement at 14. That provision was substantially the same as section 2208(a)(4) of H.R. 4187 as introduced, a portion of which remains in the substitute bill under section 2208(b)(1). The Assistant Attorney General stated "that Congress lacks the power to preclude the President from adopting . . . reasonable alternative methods of claiming privilege, which he feels to be justified in the circumstances." Id. at 15.

The constitutional principle that is applicable here is that, given "the supremacy of each branch within its own assigned area of constitutional duties," Nixon, 418 U.S. at 705, it is for the President, not the Congress, to set forth the procedural requirements for exercising the constitutionally based privileges available to former and incumbent Presidents. Although Assistant Attorney General Scalia's testimony focused on a particular provision that is comparable to a particular provision in H.R. 4187, the same analysis applies to the remaining provisions in H.R. 4187 because they also seek to regulate the exercise of the constitutionally based presidential privileges, a process that must remain within the discretion of the President.

Other provisions of H.R. 4187 raise specific constitutional concerns beyond the overarching problem of lack of legislative authority (which renders the bill unconstitutional in its entirety). Section 2208(a)(3) would purport to limit the incumbent and former Presidents to a 20-day period, with the possibility of a 20-day extension, to review records and determine whether to assert privilege. Given the volume of records that are involved in the PRA process, that brief period almost always will be unreasonable and therefore constitute an impermissible burden on the Presidents' exercise of their constitutional authority. A similar constitutional concern is raised by section 2208(c), which directs the Archivist to release records subject to a privilege claim by a former President after expiration of a 20-day period unless otherwise directed by a court in an action brought by the former President. Providing that a former President's claim of privilege is effective for only 20 days, and thereafter only with the approval of an officer of another branch of government, would significantly undercut the effect of the claim of privilege and may well also constitute an unconstitutional burden on the former President's exercise of his constitutional authority, as recognized by the Supreme Court in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services.

Section 2208(d)(2) would raise a constitutional concern if it were somehow read to direct the Archivist not to follow an incumbent President's directive to him to withhold records on the basis of privilege if the records have been requested by a congressional committee or the courts. If read in this way, the provision would turn the executive branch hierarchy on its head, making the Archivist superior to the President – in contravention of the settled principle that the President has the constitutional authority to supervise and direct executive branch officials in the discharge of their responsibilities. See Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926).

Finally, to return to the overarching constitutional problem identified earlier in this letter, the attempt in section 3 of the bill to declare that Executive Order 13233 "shall have no force or effect" would itself have no force or effect because Congress lacks the authority to override the President's exercise of his constitutional authority in this area.

In sum, H.R. 4187 constitutes an unconstitutional encroachment on presidential constitutional authority.

III.

Thank you for considering our views. If we can be of further assistance in this matter, please feel free to contact this office. The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this letter from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

Based on my understanding of the conversation -

You have worked with White House Counsel's Office to arrive at the determination that the position of the Personal Aide to the First Lady is similar in stature to the that of the Personal Aide to the President and therefore is always serving in an official capacity while traveling in support of the respective principal.

Please respond if this is correct.

U. S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

October 8, 2002

The Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

During the hearing on September 26, 2002, on the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, you and Senator Schumer restated your request that the Department of Justice disclose certain confidential and privileged appeal, certiorari, and amicus memoranda that Mr. Estrada authored when he was a career lawyer in the Office of the Solicitor General.

As we indicated in our letter of June 5, 2002, we must respectfully decline your request. The relevant historical, policy, and legal considerations implicated by your request demonstrate that disclosure of these memoranda from the Office of the Solicitor General would undermine the integrity of the decisionmaking process in that Office.

The Committee's request threatens the proper functioning of the Office of the Solicitor General. Indeed, all seven living former Solicitors General—from Archibald Cox to Seth P. Waxman—have written to the Committee and explained that the Committee's broad and unprecedented request would have a debilitating effect on the ability of the United States to represent itself in litigation. Their letter explained that, as Solicitors General, their "decisionmaking process required the unbridled, open exchange of ideas—an exchange that simply cannot take place if attorneys have reason to fear that their private recommendations are not private at all, but vulnerable to public disclosure." Thus, "[a]ny attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests—a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself."

Longstanding historical Senate practice reinforces the position of the former Solicitors General that confidential, deliberative documents from the Office of Solicitor General have been, and should remain, confidential during confirmation hearings. As the attached charts demonstrate, since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Those 67 nominees—of whom 38 had no prior judicial experience—include eight former lawyers with the Office of the Solicitor General. Our review of each of these 67 nominees' hearing records establishes that in none of these cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the nominee while a Department lawyer. In fact, we could find no nominee for whom the Senate Judiciary Committee even requested that the Department produce such materials.[1] The Committee's request with respect to Mr. Estrada therefore is unprecedented.

Of particular relevance are the appellate-court nominees who previously had been Assistants to the Solicitor General or Deputy Solicitors General, and had not served as judges at the time of their nomination—the same position Mr. Estrada occupies now. The nominees, nominated by Presidents of both political parties and confirmed by Senates controlled by both political parties, are:

- Samuel A. Alito Jr. (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1981-85; confirmed to the Third Circuit, 1990);
- Danny J. Boggs (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1973-75; confirmed to the Sixth Circuit, 1986);
- William C. Bryson (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1978-79; Deputy Solicitor General, 1986-94; confirmed to the Federal Circuit, 1994);
- Frank H. Easterbrook (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1974-77; Deputy Solicitor General, 1978-79; confirmed to the Seventh Circuit, 1985);
- Daniel M. Friedman (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1959-68; Deputy Solicitor General, 1968-78; confirmed to the appellate division of the Court of Claims (later the Federal Circuit), 1982);
- Richard A. Posner (Assistant to the Solicitor General, 1965-67; confirmed to the Seventh Circuit, 1981); and
- A. Raymond Randolph (Deputy Solicitor General, 1975-77; confirmed to the D.C. Circuit, 1990).

In none of these cases did the Department of Justice provide to the Committee the nominees' appeal, certiorari, or amicus recommendations. And in none of these cases did the Committee request that the Department do so.

The policy considerations implicated by the Committee's request underscore the strength of the Department's position and demonstrate that previous Senate Judiciary Committees have recognized the essential, long-term interest of the United States in protecting the integrity of such memoranda. The need to ensure the integrity of the process by which the Solicitor General makes litigation decisions for the United States is extraordinarily important. As the former Solicitors General explained, the interest in receiving honest, candid assessments of possible litigation positions, agency interests,

[1] The nomination of Stephen S. Trott to the Ninth Circuit was delayed by a dispute between the Committee and the Department with respect to access to internal documents wholly unrelated to Judge Trott. See Ruth Marcus, "Impasse Over Justice Documents Ends; Papers Turned Over; Senate Confirms Trott to Court of Appeals," Wash. Post., Mar. 25, 1998, at A23. The Committee never requested that the Department provide it with documents created by Judge Trott as a Department lawyer.

and Supreme Court opinions would be severely compromised by disclosure in this context. It is important to add, furthermore, that memoranda written by Assistants to the Solicitor General present legal arguments supporting the litigation position of the United States, not their personal views. These memoranda seek to determine the legal arguments that are appropriate in government briefs, not the legal or policy preferences of their author.

Furthermore, the Committee's need to assess a nominee's performance, intellect, and integrity can be accommodated in ways other than intruding into the deliberative process of the Office of the Solicitor General. For example, the Committee can review the nominee's written briefs and oral arguments, consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time, and examine the nominee's written performance reviews. In Mr. Estrada's case, for example, there is a substantial body of information about his tenure in the Office of the Solicitor General. Former Solicitor General Seth Waxman, who supervised Mr. Estrada, has written to the Committee in support of his nomination. Mr. Waxman wrote:

> During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views—or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States.

Moreover, 14 of Mr. Estrada's former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General have written the Committee to emphasize his ability, collegiality, and integrity:

> We also know Miguel to be a delightful and charming colleague, someone who can engage in open, honest, and respectful discussion of legal issues with others, regardless of their ideological perspectives. Based on our experience as his colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, we are confident that he possesses the temperament, character, and qualities of fairness and respect necessary to be an exemplary judge. In combination, Miguel's exceptional legal ability and talent, his character and integrity, and his deep and varied experience as a public servant and in private practice make him an excellent candidate for service on the federal bench.

Finally, Mr. Estrada has sent the Judiciary Committee copies of his performance evaluations from his tenure in the Office. These documents indicate that Mr. Estrada's supervisors gave him ratings of "outstanding"—the highest possible score—in every category for every evaluation period.

It bears emphasis that the long-standing historical practice, policy considerations, and views of the former Solicitors General are fully supported by applicable legal principles. At the outset, it is important to note that the memoranda sought by the Committee are indisputably within the scope of the deliberative process, attorney-client, and attorney work-product privileges. The Supreme Court has recognized "the valid need for protection of communications between high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties." Houchins v. KQED, 438 U.S. 1, 35 n.27 (1978). Indeed, the Court has explained that "the importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion. Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process." Id. (internal quotation omitted). The deliberative process privilege's ultimate purpose is to prevent injury to the quality of agency decisions by allowing government officials freedom to debate alternative approaches in private. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 151 (1975). Based on these principles, courts have long recognized the Executive Branch's authority to protect the integrity of documents and other materials which would reveal advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated.[2] See In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 737 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

As a matter of law and tradition, these privileges can be overcome only when Congress establishes a "demonstrably critical" need for the requested information. Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 731 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc). It is insufficient for the requested material merely to "have some arguable relevance" to appropriate Congressional function. Id. at 733. In assessing whether Congress' possesses a "demonstrably critical" need for the material in question, one crucial consideration is whether Congress can obtain reasonably equivalent information from alternative sources that would satisfy its legitimate needs. In this instance, we again note that the Committee has full access to Mr. Estrada's briefs and oral arguments, to the information provided by Mr. Waxman, to the letter from former colleagues in the Solicitor General's office, and to his performance reviews. The Committee also is free to contact any of Mr. Estrada's former supervisors and colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General to seek further information about Mr. Estrada's temperament, fairness, analytical skills and abilities or any other matters the Committee appropriately deems relevant to its inquiry. Because the Committee has adequate sources of information about Mr. Estrada, among other reasons, it cannot establish the "demonstrably critical" need for the deliberative materials in question.

None of the seven examples cited during Mr. Estrada's hearing as precedent for the Committee's request—the nominations of Judge Frank Easterbrook to the Seventh Circuit, Judge Robert Bork and Chief Justice William Rehnquist to the Supreme Court, Benjamin Civiletti to be Attorney General and Deputy Attorney General, William Bradford Reynolds to be Associate Attorney General, Judge Stephen Trott to the Ninth Circuit, and Jeffrey Holmstead to be Assistant Administrator at the Environmental Protection Agency—supports the Committee's request in this matter.

[2] For discussion of the history of assertions of the deliberative process privilege, see History of Refusals by Executive Branch Officials to Provide Information Demanded by Congress: Part I--Presidential Invocations of Executive Privilege vis-à-vis Congress, 6 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 751 (1982); History of Refusals by Executive Branch Officials to Provide Information Demanded by Congress: Part II--Invocations of Executive Privilege by Executive Officials, 6 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 782 (1982).

REV_00152289

Of the seven cited nominees, the hearings of only two—Judge Bork and Judge Easterbrook—involved documents from their service in the Office of the Solicitor General. Senator Schumer placed into Mr. Estrada's hearing record a single, two-page amicus recommendation memorandum that Judge Easterbrook authored as an Assistant to the Solicitor General. The official record of Judge Easterbrook's confirmation hearing contains no references to this document, and based on a comprehensive review of the Department's files, we do not believe that the Department authorized its release in connection with Judge Easterbrook's nomination. Senator Schumer's possession of this memorandum does not suggest that the Department waived applicable privileges and authorized its disclosure in connection with Judge Easterbrook's or any other nomination.

The hearing record of Judge Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court demonstrates that the Committee received access to a limited number of documents related to three specific subjects of heightened interest to the Committee, two of which were related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues and triggered specific concerns by the Committee. The vast majority of memoranda authored or received by Judge Bork when he served as Solicitor General were neither sought nor produced. And the limited category of documents that were produced to the Committee did not reveal the internal deliberative recommendations or analysis of Assistants to the Solicitor General regarding appeal, certiorari, or amicus recommendations in pending cases.

The remaining five nominations cited at the hearing similarly do not justify the disclosure of deliberative material authored by Mr. Estrada. None of the limited documents disclosed in the hearings for those five nominations involved deliberative memoranda from the Office of the Solicitor General. The Committee with respect to those five nominations requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Moreover, as noted above, with respect to the nomination of Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents wholly unrelated to Judge Trott's service with the Department. Again, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda authored or received by these nominees were never sought or received by the Committee. In sum, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memoranda from Office of Solicitor General—and deliberative Department of Justice materials more broadly—must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process.

In conclusion, we emphasize that the Department of Justice appreciates and profoundly respects the Judiciary Committee's legitimate need to evaluate Mr. Estrada's qualifications for the federal bench. We again suggest, however, that the information currently available is more than adequate to allow the Committee to determine whether Mr. Estrada is qualified to be a federal judge.

Thank you for considering the Department's views on this matter. Mr. Estrada's nomination for a position on an important federal court of appeals has now been pending for 518 days. There is no disagreement about the fact that he is a talented, experienced and exceptionally well-qualified nominee with strong and widespread bipartisan support. In fact, after an intensive investigation, the American Bar Association found Mr. Estrada to be unanimously well-qualified for a judgeship on the District of Columbia Circuit. We sincerely hope that the Committee and the Senate will approve Mr. Estrada's nomination before the close of the 107th Congress.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

Dear Mr. Perelman:

As you know, the Office for Victims of Crime of the United States Department of Justice had commissioned you to manufacture awards plaques used by President George W. Bush for an April 16, 2002 event honoring individuals and organizations who have performed outstanding service on behalf of crime victims.

Enclosed are three three by five inch index cards on which a copy of the President's signature is affixed solely for the purpose of inscribing the signature upon the award plaque.

Attached is also an agreement to memorialize the terms and conditions pursuant to which the White House is providing you with a copy of the signature of the President and pursuant to which the White House will permit you to reproduce this copy solely upon the award plaque.

Your signature below will confirm that you are properly authorized to enter into this agreement on half of Trophy Mart and that you agree to abide by the terms and conditions set out therein. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely

Harriet Miers
Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary

Hi Brett, per Jennifer's instructions, I'm holding the money mail described below pending your suggestion as to why the President can't accept personal donations, ie, "have a cup of coffee on me." We'd like to get these letters our ASAP, especially because OA has already mailed checks returning their contributions. Thanks for your help with this, & please call me at x6-2716 if you have any questions. Elizabeth

Hi Jennifer, per our conversation, the following is a draft of our letter returning personal contributions to the President. The 2 letters this will answer express overall support for the President, and then finish with "PS, here is $2 for a donut and a cup of coffee," and "PS, lunch is on me." Call me at 6-2716 if you have any questions. Thanks, Elizabeth

Dear XXX,

You will or may have already received a check under separate cover.

President Bush is unable to accept personal contributions. Accordingly, a check has been issued.

Thank you for your kind words. The President sends his best wishes.

DRAFT

October 9, 2002

Chairman Reed, Ranking Member Allard, distinguished members of the Subcommittee, thank you for inviting me to testify on the subject of affordable housing preservation.

You have asked me to discuss specifically several matters that concern the preservation of the existing stock of affordable housing. I am happy to do that, but before doing so I would like to describe several of the Department's initiatives to increase the available inventory of affordable housing.

In the fiscal year just completed, the Federal Housing Administration's basic multifamily housing insurance program, Section 221(d)(4), experienced a very substantial increase in activity. Overall, FHA made commitments for 198 new construction or substantially rehabilitated projects, with over 38,000 units and totaling $2.8 billion worth of mortgage loans. That total dollar figure is easily the biggest number for the program in the last 10 years, and could well be a record. It is almost double our activity in FY 2001. Last year FHA made commitments for 139 projects, with over 21,000 units, totaling $1.5 billion. That amounts to a 42 percent increase in the number of projects, a 79 percent increase in apartment units and an 85 percent increase in the dollar value of commitments.

One major reason for this dramatic increase is that, in FY 2002, HUD was able to operate Section 221 (d)(4) on a self-sustaining basis. By raising the mortgage insurance premium to 80 basis points, we were able to end the program's dependence on credit subsidy and terminate the need for appropriations. There is no longer any need for the industry to be concerned about program delays and stoppages because of credit subsidy issues. During the last eight years – from 1994 through 2001 - FHA's credit subsidy programs had to discontinue operations three times.

I know that many people in the industry were concerned that raising the premium would cripple the program. Clearly, that did not happen.

Having put Section 221(d)(4) on a self-sustaining basis, FHA is now in a position to reduce the insurance premium to 57 basis points, which will make the financing of new or rehabilitated apartments more affordable. The reduction is a result of a comprehensive review of the credit subsidy calculations for all FHA multifamily programs, the first such analysis in a decade. You may recall from my confirmation hearing that I made a commitment to conduct this study. FHA began work on the study in June of last year, and we completed it in time for the new credit subsidy calculations and premiums to be included in the President's Budget for FY 2003 and to go into effect at the beginning of this fiscal year. We have lowered the premium on several self-sustaining programs, and lowered the credit subsidy rate on almost all of those that still require credit subsidy. The proposed notice for the premium reduction was published in the Federal Register for comment in August with comments due by September 30. We expect the final notice to be published within a matter of days and FHA will permit Section 221(d)(4) commitments that have not closed to be reprocessed at the 57 basis point premium.

There are other reasons for the sharp rise in commitments. Shortly after he came to HUD, Secretary Martinez announced his support for a 25 percent increase in the statutory per unit limits for the FHA multifamily mortgage insurance programs. This was the first increase since 1992. The increase helps to make the FHA programs more feasible in high cost areas where the programs had not been used for several years. Philadelphia, for instance, has seen its first FHA-insured multifamily projects in more than 5 years. Mortgage insurance applications have been submitted to finance developments in Washington D.C., Baltimore, St Louis and suburban Minneapolis that would not have been submitted without the increase in the limits.

The Multifamily Accelerated Processing (MAP) program is another contributing factor. Having now completed two full years of this program, we have done more to standardize the process, and we have demonstrated to the development industry that FHA field staff can and will provide an expedited review of the mortgage insurance application packages.

I also want to briefly touch upon some of this Administration's FY 2003 budget proposals that will increase access to or add to the current inventory of affordable housing.

The Administration's budget for this fiscal year includes an additional $200 million in funding for 34,000 rental housing vouchers, in addition to the 1.5 million vouchers currently being utilized by low-income families. The Senate Appropriations Committee only provided funding for 17,000 new vouchers. The Administration strongly urges Congress to fully fund our request, either by the full Senate or in conference.

Although the national vacancy rate is close to an all-time high – 8.5% in the second quarter this year – there are still areas of the country with a low vacancy rate. To address this problem, the Administration also supports the development of affordable housing through programs such as the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit, which supports about 100,000 new or rehabilitated rental units each year. Two years ago, Congress enacted a 40 percent increase in the volume limits for the LIHTC, and caps for tax-exempt housing bond financing were also raised last year. States can direct these resources to the local markets where supply is constrained or rents are highest.

In addition, the Administration has asked for increased funding this fiscal year for the HOME block grant program. At the proposed $1.8 billion funding level, HOME will produce 23,000 new affordable units and a similar number of rehabilitated units. Provision of these units will be made through decisions by local governments concerning their own affordable housing needs. Families with extremely low incomes will occupy over one-half of these units. By law, voucher holders have access to all units developed with HOME and/or LIHTC support.

HUD's Section 202 elderly housing, Section 811 disabled housing and Housing Opportunities for Persons with AIDS programs also produce thousands of new units a year for special populations.

I would also like to report progress on one of the first initiatives I undertook after becoming FHA Commissioner, and that was to take a look at the large number of projects in the development pipeline in the Section 202 and Section 811 programs. A report prepared for GAO had indicated that there were over 100 Section 202 projects from the years 1992 to 1997 that had not reached initial closing. I directed our Office of Multifamily Housing to determine the status of these projects. We learned that the pipeline data was badly out of date. Of the 100 projects listed as being in the pipeline, 25 had cancelled - some years ago - and 18 had already closed. I then directed our staff to bring as many of these old project commitments as possible to closing, and I am pleased to report that we closed 30 of them.

At the end of FY 2002, the combined total of Section 202 and Section 811 projects funded between 1992 and 1997 that had not reached initial closing is now down to 26. That number represents only 1.3% of 2058 projects funded during that six-year period. This fiscal year, I expect those 26 will be closed or cancelled, unless they are in litigation.

We will continue to try and make improvements to ensure the timely development of affordable housing under these programs and are working with our field staff to help accomplish this. We recently completed two training sessions for our field staff, the first such training in 11 years. In addition, we changed the awards process so that it does not reward sponsors that previously have unable to demonstrate that they can develop affordable housing in a timely manner. Finally, the Department expects to hire a consultant to help us determine if we are providing sufficient funds to develop our Section 202 and 811 projects.

I would now like to address some of the issues this Subcommittee has raised concerning the preservation of the existing stock of affordable housing.

Preservation of the Existing Section 8 and Section 202 Affordable Housing Stock

The Department is committed to preserving the existing stock of affordable rental housing. Over the last few years, Congress through legislation has provided for financial tools to provide incentives and assist project owners to preserve the affordable housing stock. Working with Congress, the Department has been successful in a number of areas in its efforts to preserve the affordable housing stock as well provide incentives to the owners.

The Department implemented Mark-to Market and Mark-Up-to-Market to provide opportunities for owners to make capital improvements and the necessary repairs to ensure the units are decent, safe and sanitary for the residents and to ensure the units remain affordable.

Since the inception of the Mark-to-Market program, HUD's Office of Multifamily Housing Assistance Restructuring (OMHAR) has successfully closed debt restructurings on 571 properties. These properties include over 46,000 units and are now subject to 30-year Use Agreements. They were provided with over $62 million in escrows to repair properties, and an infusion of approximately $40 million in immediate Reserve for Replacement deposits, increasing the long-term physical stability of the properties. In addition, OHMAR has processed Section 8 contract renewals and reduced rents on over 120,000 units, resulting in annual Section 8 savings of over $105 million.

The Mark-Up-to-Market program, created in FY 1999, has been similarly successful. In its first four years, through FY 2002, 632 Section 8 contracts have been renewed and 58,000 affordable housing units were preserved under this program. To be eligible for Mark-Up-to-Market, a property must: 1) not have a low and moderate income use restriction that cannot be eliminated by unilateral action of the owner, 2) be decent, safe, and sanitary, 3) not be owned by a nonprofit entity, 4) not be a Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation project, and 5) have rents exceeding 100% of Fair Market Rents.

Additionally, the Department uses its statutory authority to enter into multiple-year Section 8 contracts for those owners choosing the Mark-up-to-Market rent increase option. Owners must enter into a contract at a minimum of five years, but not to exceed 20 years. Payments under the contracts are subject to the availability of appropriations. To limit the possible cost to the Government for implementing the MU2M option, the Department capped the rent increase at the comparable market rent or 150% of Fair Market Rents, whichever is lower.

The Department also recognizes the important contribution that has been made by nonprofit owners in the development and the preservation of affordable housing. This is particularly true for those nonprofit sponsors who have developed Section 202 affordable housing for the elderly and persons with disabilities. Many of the older Section 202 projects have Section 8 rental assistance. The owners of these projects are eligible to apply for an increase in their rents to cover the cost of capital repairs. The program requirements and process for obtaining the rental increase is described in chapter 15 of the Section 8 contract renewal guide. From FY 1999 through FY 2002, 1,092 Section 8 contracts in the Section 202 program have been renewed, with more than 80,000 affordable elderly and disabled housing units preserved.

For all Section 8 programs combined, during the last four fiscal years, a total of 10,695 Section 8 contracts were renewed and over 778,000 affordable housing units have been preserved.

HUD's Interpretation of Section 8 Contractual Provisions for State Finance Agency-Financed Multifamily Projects

The Department's Office of General Counsel recently issued a legal opinion regarding the contractual provisions governing the term of Section 8 Housing Assistance Payment Contract (HAP) between a State Housing Finance Agency and an owner for a State Housing Finance Agency-financed project executed prior to 1980. It is HUD's position that this is neither a new policy nor a reinterpretation. The Section 8 contracts in question provide that the term of the Contract terminates "on the date of the last payment of principal due on the permanent financing." It is my understanding that up until the recent OGC opinion, Housing Finance Agencies have interpreted the HAP contract language to mean that new financing is included as "permanent financing," and that the contract does not terminate when an owner refinances the original mortgage.

The Department has identified approximately 1400 Section 8 HAP contracts at most that potentially could be impacted by this recent OGC opinion. This maximum number could be further reduced by the dozen or so states that have strong prepayment restrictions. In an effort to lessen the impact of this opinion on the existing assisted tenancies, minimize the loss of affordable housing units, and to assure the availability of continued rental assistance for project residents, HUD has proposed to the State Housing Finance Agencies two alternatives for the affected project owners:

1) The owner may elect to extend the maximum term of the HAP contract from the date of the prepayment to terminate at the originally scheduled maturity date of the permanent financing, or
2) The owner may elect to renew the project-based Section 8 contract in accordance with the Multifamily Assisted Housing Reform and Affordability Act (MAHRA).

However, an affected owner could choose neither option and exercise the right to opt out of the Section 8 contract. Regardless of the chosen option, the owner must provide HUD and the tenants with the proper one-year notice of HAP contract termination.

We recognize the concerns of project owners, state agencies, and members of Congress about the potential consequences for the affordable housing stock, and we have been discussing the situation and possible options with the Council of State Housing Finance Agencies, among others.

Status of Regulations That Will Allow Nonprofit Organizations to Create For-profit Limited Partnerships For The Section 202 Program

The original law that allowed for-profit participation in the Section 202 program was included in the American Homeownership and Economic Opportunity Act of 2000. It was the Department's position that rule making was required to implement the provisions of the law related to the Section 202 program. Language was added to the fiscal year 2002 Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Appropriations Act earlier this year to clarify that Congress wanted the Department to implement the provisions related to refinancing of existing Section 202 projects without rule making. On August 23, 2002, the Department issued Notice H 2002-16 to implement this provision of the law.

However, the law does not direct HUD to implement without rulemaking the part of the statute that allows a for-profit partnership to receive a capital advance under the Section 202 program. I am pleased to report to you that we have completed drafting the required regulation and expect to have it in Departmental clearance by the end of the week. The Department is anxious to complete the rule making process and will be proceeding with an interim rule to expedite implementation. We know that the nonprofit organizations are eager to use the capital advance to leverage additional funds to develop more additional affordable housing or services for the elderly. HUD funded eight Section 202 projects in fiscal year 2001 where the sponsors indicated that they anticipated developing a mixed-finance project.

HUD's Enforcement of Regulations When Owners Opt Out of Section 8 Contracts

We have been pleased to work with the members of this Subcommittee to ensure that owners with developments that have project-based Section 8 assistance provide proper notice when opting-out of the Section 8 program. It was never the intent of the Department to reward owners who do not comply with the required Federal notice requirements. The forthcoming revisions to the Section 8 Contract Renewal guide will clarify this point. We have worked with our Offices of General Counsel and Public and Indian Housing to develop a consistent policy that does not reward owners yet protects the tenants at the projects where the owner chooses to opt-out.

Any owner who fails to provide proper one-year opt-out notification must permit the tenants to remain in their units without increasing their portion of the rent for whatever period of time is necessary to meet all of the notification requirements. Eligible families residing in the property will be issued vouchers when the contract expires. The family may use the voucher to remain in their current unit or elect to use the voucher to move to another property. Should the family elect to remain in their current unit, the voucher housing assistance payments contract does not commence until the full one-year notice requirement has been met. The effect of this action is that the owner will not receive any voucher assistance payments until proper notice has been provided to the tenants.

In instances where project owners need additional time to meet the one-year notice requirement, they are encouraged to enter into a short-term contract renewal with a term long enough to ensure that the tenants receive a full one-year notice of contract expiration. Otherwise, the owner will only receive the tenant portion of the rent the families were paying under the expired contract until the full one-year notice period has been met.

Status of the Utilization of Interest Reduction Payments Funds to Rehabilitate Existing Affordable Housing

The Department will continue to consider the implementation of Section 236(s) depending on the availability of future year Section 236 recaptures. HUD had not been given authority to use the funds from the Office of Management and Budget until the spring of 2002. This was due to questions regarding the availability of funds derived from old contract authority converted to budget authority.

As Members know, the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act included a $300 million rescission of recaptured IRP funds from mortgages insured by Section 236 that have been prepaid. At this time, it does not appear that there are adequate funds beyond the rescission to implement a program.

Estimates of future prepayments, which provide the recaptured funds available for rehabilitation, are uncertain. Two initiatives by the Department that help to preserve the affordable stock have reduced the amount of future IRP funds available for recapture. HUD allows Section 236 owners to decouple the IRP from the mortgage at prepayment in return for extended affordability restrictions. Those IRP funds are not available for recapture.

In addition, Section 236 owners with Section 8 subsidies may apply to have their Section 8 rents marked up to market. Approximately $40 million in IRP funds have been used to capitalize project reserves for replacement for projects that have been marked-to-market by OMHAR.

This concludes my statement, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this Subcommittee.

The Miguel Estrada Confirmation Hearing

Ronald D. Rotunda
The George Mason University Foundation Professor of Law
George Mason University School of Law

A few days ago, during the judicial confirmation for Miguel Estrada, Senator Patrick Leahy invoked my name and writings to support his claim the attorney-client privilege is not "binding on the Congress." As much as I respect Senator Leahy, on this issue we could not disagree more.

It is true that, as Senator Leahy states: "No statute or Senate or House rule applies the attorney-client privilege to Congress. In fact, both the Senate and the House have explicitly refused to formally include the privilege in their rules." But surely it is incorrect to conclude that this evidentiary privilege (along with the related attorney work product privilege) has no applicability within the walls of the Senate. Could the Senate call David Kendall, the lawyer for former President Clinton, and rummage through all of his memoranda? Could the Senate successfully subpoena all documents and drafts of documents generated by the lawyers for John Walker Lindh? The also privilege applies to the Government, because, several years ago, Congress enacted a statute that requires government lawyers to follow state ethics rules. And these rules require lawyers to follow a broader of confidentiality than that encompassed by the more narrow evidentiary privilege.

It is also true, as the Senator stated, that "the government's employer is not a single person but the United States of America." He then adds, "the government obviously includes the United States Senate." But his apparent conclusion — that the attorney-client privilege does not exist when the Senate wants documents — is incorrect. Several federal courts have ruled that the privilege is inapplicable when government lawyers working for President Clinton tried to prevent Government prosecutors from subpoenaing them in a criminal investigation. But that does not mean the Senate has complete access to all Executive Branch files. If the Senate does not really recognize the attorney-privilege, does any Executive Branch attorney have carte blanche power to examine the drafts of notes between a Senator and the Senate Committee counsel?

The Senator argued that the Senate has the right to consider Mr. Estrada's attorney work product created during his career government lawyer in the Solicitor General's office for five years during the Clinton administration. This demand is part of a larger campaign, which I have consistently opposed, for the Senate to predict how a nominee will vote on legal issues in deciding whether to consent to his appointment as a federal judge.

The basic the premise is that Senators are entitled to consider Estrada's – or any nominee's – views; therefore, they are entitled to question the nominee about how he would rule on specific legal issues and they can gather private memoranda to help them predict how the nominee will rule. This premise is simply wrong. If a nominee made any such promises (to the Senate or the President) that would violate judicial ethics and litigants' rights to a fair hearing and due process. Releasing the files of a career government lawyer so that the Senate can pick through them during a confirmation hearing would also seriously hamstring the work of such lawyers. It is no surprise all living former Solicitors General — from both parties — have opposed this.

Granted, whether it's a good idea or not, the Senate is indeed legally free to vote against a nominee for any reason or no reason, because nothing in the Constitution says they can't. That doesn't mean it's a good idea for Senators to do this; it just means that no court will stop them. It also does not by any means follow that the Senate is entitled to question a nominee under oath about what his views are on specific legal issues, or to pick through his work as a career government lawyer.

Questioning candidates about how they think specific legal questions should be answered once they are on the bench forces them to take positions without any of the groundwork that properly forms the basis for judicial decisionmaking. It presents legal issues as abstract intellectual questions rather than as the flesh-and-blood disputes, involving real people and real facts, with legal briefs that argue for legal rules in light of these specific facts. (It is somewhat ironic that some of the advocates of antiseptic legal decisionmaking also cast themselves as the advocates for the disenfranchised, whose real-life problems are said to be ignored by those who are better off.).

These kind of questions may encourage some nominees to trim their sails in various directions when they answer, publicly allying themselves with one legal view or another (based on the politics of the moment), in order to maximize the chances of their being confirmed. Both this risk and the inflexibility created by sworn answers without a record in a real case will deprive litigants of something they are clearly entitled to by the Constitution: an unbiased judge who is not bound by anything other than precedent and his or her best effort to determine what the law is.

Perhaps most frightening, just where will we go with the kind of questioning? The witnesses are under oath, after all. What happens if a judge later decides a case in a manner that appears inconsistent with the way the nominee answered a Senator's question about that issue? How long will we wait before someone demands that the Judge be impeached – either for lying under oath at the confirmation hearing or for "breaching his trust" with the Senate?

Advocates of Senate questioning are likely to respond to these problems with the argument that, if Senators are in fact entitled to consider a nominee's legal views, then they must be entitled to gather the data upon which to base judgments on that issue. And how can they do that, the argument will conclude – particularly for a candidate without a long paper trail – if they cannot ask the nominee his or her views on legal issues?

The answer is that the ban on questioning of a judicial candidate on how she or she will vote on particular legal questioning does indeed restrict the scope of the Senate's power, as it restricts the President's power.

The President, like the Senators, should not ask nominees how they will vote on particular issues. The Senators should ask the nominee if he or she has made any promises to the President and reject them if they have. Second, history should teach us to be more modest in our ability to predict. Some Democrats now say the President should nominate judges like Justice Souter. They forget that many Democrats opposed him when he was nominated. Justices Douglas and Frankfurter are about as different as one could imagine, yet the same President nominated both of them.

Executive-congressional disputes over confidential information are as old as the Republic, and Mr. Estrada finds himself in the middle of one. The Department of Justice is resisting turning over these old memoranda because it is following the advice of all the former living Solicitors General. The Department has its institutional concerns, and the Senate has not seen fit to issue a subpoena or to test this issue in the courts. Is profoundly unfair to engage in this institutional dispute in the judicial confirmation context by holding a nominee, a court, and the judiciary hostage.

Charles G. Wolf
Fix the Fund
184 Thompson St., Apt. 2-O
New York, NY 10012-2531

Dear Mr. Wolf,

Thank you for your recent letter regarding the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, as well as all of your work on behalf of victims' families through the Fix the Fund organization.

The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund is an unprecedented program that reflects the compassion of the President, the Congress, and the American taxpayers. As you know, some aspects of the program, such as the collateral offset requirement, were mandated by Congress in the legislation that created the Fund. In many other respects, the legislation provides little guidance for the Special Master. The President's directive to Special Master Feinberg has been to ensure that each and every claimant receives the fairest possible compensation, consistent with the statute. While there are many different views regarding the best way to achieve that goal, I can assure you that the Fund is being administered with that sole purpose in mind. It is not being used to promote tort reform or any other policy goal.

There are many difficult issues that the Special Master faces in administering the Fund. I am forwarding your briefing paper to Mr. Feinberg and asking that he take your views into consideration as he continues to administer the Fund.

Finally, I wish to convey the President's sympathy for the loss of your wife, Katherine, as well as the President's gratitude for your dedication to your country and to the victims' families.

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.

Bush summons GOP senators to move judicial nominees ahead
JESSE J. HOLLAND
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) _ The White House sharply criticized Senate Democrats on Wednesday for blocking an appeals court nominee, as President Bush summoned Republican senators to discuss how to break the logjam.
Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., is trying to get a federal appeals court seat for a former aide, U.S. District Judge Dennis Shedd. It hit a serious bump Tuesday when the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee delayed a vote in what might have been its last meeting of the year.
``I took you at your word,'' an angry Thurmond told the committee's chairman, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who GOP senators said had promised to let the Shedd nomination come before the committee.
``In 48 years in the Senate,'' he said, ``I have never been treated in such a manner.''
Leahy ``failed to uphold his commitment to Senator Strom Thurmond, the longest-serving member of the United States Senate, for a vote on Dennis Shedd before the end of the year,'' White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. ``This promise had been made to Senator Thurmond on several occasions.''
Bush invited GOP members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to the White House for a chat on how to move the nomination forward. No Democrats were invited.
Fleischer sidestepped a question on why Bush didn't invite Leahy, whom he blames for the problem.
``I don't think this is a question of the president talking to the chairman of the committee. This is a question of the chairman of the committee doing what he told Senator Thurmond he would do.''
Leahy delayed the Shedd vote, saying it was too contentious to get done quickly. Had the committee begun debating Shedd's nomination to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., Leahy said, nominations of 17 district court judges that were cleared and sent to the Senate would not have moved.
Thurmond's anger over the delay was echoed by other Senate Republicans, who fear that Tuesday's voting session was the last of the legislative year. If it was, the rest of President Bush's nominees will be stuck in legislative limbo until a new Congress convenes next year.
Besides Shedd, one of those stranded would be Miguel Estrada, Bush's choice for the U.S. Appeals Court in the District of Columbia and a rumored choice for a Supreme Court seat if a vacancy should open.
Bush also blasted the Senate over Estrada.
``There are senators who are playing politics with this good man's nomination,'' Bush said, receiving a standing ovation at a White House celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month. ``There are senators who would rather not give him the benefit of the doubt, senators looking for a reason to defeat him as opposed to looking for a reason to herald his intelligence, his capabilities his talent. I strongly object to the way this man is going to be treated in the United States Senate.''
``I hope that the Senate will change hands next year so we can correct some of these terrible injustices,'' Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., fumed.
Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., defended the work of the Democratic-led committee. ``I defy anyone to come up with a better record,'' Daschle said.
Bush has nominated 126 U.S. Appeals Court and U.S. District Court nominees, and the Senate has confirmed 80: 14 judges to appeals courts and 66 to district courts.
The committee also has rejected two nominees, Texas Supreme Court Judge Priscilla Owen and U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, denying them votes in the full Senate, and has not voted on Estrada and other controversial nominees.
Republicans say they consider the refusal to vote on Shedd an insult to Thurmond, the oldest person ever to serve in Congress. Thurmond ends his 48-year career in the Senate in January, and Shedd's nomination is among the last outstanding pieces of business South Carolina's senior senator

``It's his last request in the Senate,'' Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said. ``I don't believe we should treat Senator Thurmond this way, and I don't believe we should treat this eminent judge this way.''
Thurmond, along with Sens. Hatch and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, want to force Leahy to hold one more voting session to consider Shedd's nomination and that of University of Utah professor Michael McConnell to the Denver-based 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The senators insist Leahy promised votes this year on both judges.
When asked later whether he would consider having another voting session this year, Leahy said he didn't know.
Shedd, supported by both Thurmond and Sen. Ernest ``Fritz'' Hollings, D-S.C., has stirred up controversy in South Carolina with his rulings as a judge. Officials from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People say Shedd has shown a pattern of ruling against plaintiffs in civil rights cases. The Dale City, Va.-based Disabled Action Committee also has objected to Shedd's nomination, contending his opinions show a ``disregard for laws protecting the disabled'' and ``a high level of insensitivity on issues of race.''

Appeals Court Revives Florida Law Limiting Damage Lawsuits
The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) - A 1999 law shielding Florida businesses from some lawsuits and limiting awards in court cases was revived Wednesday by an appeals court.
The 1st District Court of Appeal said a lower-court judge erred in ruling the law unconstitutional because the plaintiffs failed to say how the law would directly hurt them.
Businesses hailed the 1999 law as a major victory in their fight against liability lawsuits. It puts a 12-year deadline on lawsuits against most products, and a 20-year limit for lawsuits against airplane manufacturers over design flaws.
Other highlights include a formula to determine when a business must pay for damages in a case that isn't entirely its fault and caps on punitive damages unless a victim can prove the wrongdoing was intentional.
Consumer groups, trial lawyers, labor groups and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had challenged the law. They argued it denied citizens access to the courts, undercut the independence of the courts and treated people differently under the law.

DRAFT 10/08/02

The Honorable John F. Kerry
Chairman
Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As you know, through several ongoing initiatives, the Administration is committed to improving the access of small businesses to government procurement opportunities. In particular, we share your concern about the detrimental effects of contract bundling. However, we are concerned that S. 2466, the Small Business Federal Contractor Safeguard Act, would impede our ability to effectively address contract bundling.

On March 19, 2002, the President announced his Small Business Agenda, a plan to help create an environment where small businesses can flourish. The President's plan calls for the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to prepare a strategy for unbundling contracts, where practicable, and to review Department and agency contracting practices to determine whether these practices reflect a strong commitment to full and open competition. To help carry out the President=s Agenda, my office formed two inter-agency working groups, one focusing on competition and the other focusing on contract bundling issues. The working groups have been considering comments received from the public as they prepare strategies and recommendations that would implement the President's Agenda.

At this point, we are on the verge of presenting to the President an aggressive strategy on contract bundling that will include recommendations for actions to be taken under the existing statutory framework. Considering where we are in this process, it would be an unfortunate time for statutory changes. If enacted now, S. 2466 would add a significant layer of confusion for the contracting community and delay our ability to address real and significant concerns about contract bundling.

As we proceed, we look forward to sharing our views with the Congress, the small business community, and all interested parties.

Sincerely,

Angela B. Styles
Administrator

JESSE J. HOLLAND
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) _ The White House sharply criticized Senate Democrats on Wednesday for blocking an appeals court nominee, as President Bush summoned Republican senators to discuss how to break the logjam.
Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., is trying to get a federal appeals court seat for a former aide, U.S. District Judge Dennis Shedd. It hit a serious bump Tuesday when the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee delayed a vote in what might have been its last meeting of the year.
``I took you at your word,'' an angry Thurmond told the committee's chairman, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who GOP senators said had promised to let the Shedd nomination come before the committee.
``In 48 years in the Senate,'' he said, ``I have never been treated in such a manner.''
Leahy ``failed to uphold his commitment to Senator Strom Thurmond, the longest-serving member of the United States Senate, for a vote on Dennis Shedd before the end of the year,'' White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. ``This promise had been made to Senator Thurmond on several occasions.''
Bush invited GOP members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to the White House for a chat on how to move the nomination forward. No Democrats were invited.
Fleischer sidestepped a question on why Bush didn't invite Leahy, whom he blames for the problem.
Leahy delayed the Shedd vote, saying it was too contentious to get done quickly. Had the committee begun debating Shedd's nomination to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., Leahy said, nominations of 17 district court judges that were cleared and sent to the Senate would not have moved.
Thurmond's anger over the delay was echoed by other Senate Republicans, who fear that Tuesday's voting session was the last of the legislative year. If it was, the rest of President Bush's nominees will be stuck in legislative limbo until a new Congress convenes next year.
Besides Shedd, one of those stranded would be Miguel Estrada, Bush's choice for the U.S. Appeals Court in the District of Columbia and a rumored choice for a Supreme Court seat if a vacancy should open.
Bush also blasted the Senate over Estrada.
``There are senators who are playing politics with this good man's nomination,'' Bush said, receiving a standing ovation at a White House celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month. ``There are senators who would rather not give him the benefit of the doubt, senators looking for a reason to defeat him as opposed to looking for a reason to herald his intelligence, his capabilities his talent. I strongly object to the way this man is going to be treated in the United States Senate.''
``I hope that the Senate will change hands next year so we can correct some of these terrible injustices,'' Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., fumed.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., defended the work of the Democratic-led committee. ``I defy anyone to come up with a better record,'' Daschle said.

Bush has nominated 126 U.S. Appeals Court and U.S. District Court nominees, and the Senate has confirmed 80: 14 judges to appeals courts and 66 to district courts.

The committee also has rejected two nominees, Texas Supreme Court Judge Priscilla Owen and U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, denying them votes in the full Senate, and has not voted on Estrada and other controversial nominees.

Republicans say they consider the refusal to vote on Shedd an insult to Thurmond, the oldest person ever to serve in Congress. Thurmond ends his 48-year career in the Senate in January, and Shedd's nomination is among the last outstanding pieces of business South Carolina's senior senator has left.

``It's his last request in the Senate,'' Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said. ``I don't believe we should treat Senator Thurmond this way, and I don't believe we should treat this eminent judge this way.''

Thurmond, along with Sens. Hatch and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, want to force Leahy to hold one more voting session to consider Shedd's nomination and that of University of Utah professor Michael McConnell to the Denver-based 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The senators insist Leahy promised votes this year on both judges.

When asked later whether he would consider having another voting session this year, Leahy said he didn't know.

Shedd, supported by both Thurmond and Sen. Ernest ``Fritz'' Hollings, D-S.C., has stirred up controversy in South Carolina with his rulings as a judge. Officials from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People say Shedd has shown a pattern of ruling against plaintiffs in civil rights cases. The Dale City, Va.-based Disabled Action Committee also has objected to Shedd's nomination, contending his opinions show a ``disregard for laws protecting the disabled'' and ``a high level of insensitivity on issues of race.''

BODY:
A House committee voted without dissent today to overturn President Bush's executive order that delayed release of President Ronald Reagan's papers and allowed relatives of future presidents to keep papers secret.

Representative Dan Burton, the Indiana Republican who is chairman of the Government Reform Committee, said: "I have great respect for President Bush. He's doing a superb job in these very difficult times. However, on this issue, I think he's gotten some advice that wasn't very good." Other members were blunter. For example, Representative Doug Ose, Republican of California, said the executive order "violates not only the spirit but also the letter of the Presidential Records Act."

Mr. Ose added, "It undercuts the public's right to be fully informed about how its government operated in the past. It is an affront to the citizens of this country."

The executive order, which Mr. Bush issued last Nov. 1, changed the rules for release of presidential papers under the 1978 records act, which provided for the automatic release of papers, with exceptions for matters like national security and law enforcement, 12 years after a president's term. Before the order was issued, the Bush administration obtained temporary delays on releasing the Reagan papers.

Historians and journalists sued to overturn the order, saying it violated the 1978 law. The administration says the case, pending in federal district court here, should be dismissed because almost all the papers were released this year.

Besides voiding the executive order, the bill the House panel adopted on a voice vote today said that presidents and former presidents -- but not relatives or vice presidents, as the order allowed -- could invoke executive privilege to keep specific papers secret. Former presidents would have to go to court to establish their claims. But people seeking the release of records would have to sue to obtain access to records an incumbent president wanted to withhold.

It was not clear whether the full House -- let alone the Senate -- would act on the bill in this session.

Still, after today's committee backing, the bill would probably have support in the next Congress.

The Bush administration, in a letter from Assistant Attorney General Daniel J. Bryant to Mr. Burton, attacked the bill as "unnecessary and inappropriate and, more importantly, unconstitutional." Mr. Bryant wrote that 68,000 pages of Reagan records had been released, showing the bill was not needed. As to the Constitution, Mr. Bryant wrote that "Congress lacks the authority to regulate by legislation the procedures for exercising" executive privilege.

The order has been defended by Alberto R. Gonzales, the White House counsel, who contended that it concerned only mechanical changes in procedures for releasing records. Mr. Gonzales wrote in The Washington Post that "the president's order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also respecting the constitutional rights of former presidents."

Representative Steve Horn, a California Republican who leads the subcommittee on government efficiency and helped devise the bill, said the order allowed presidents and former presidents "to prevent records from being released whether they claim executive privilege or not." ÿ

Julie Thomas is the FLOTUS "Brian Montgomery." And, when he travels on AF1 with the President, he is designated "Trip Director" and therefore, official.

Kate has it right. Ari and Scott always should be presumed to be there for official purposes absent contrary evidence.
Who is the POTUS analogue of Julie Thomas and how is he/she treated?

Kate and I have been trying to work our way through these manifests for political trips. See below for some info she found out regarding staff involvement in the political portion of the mixed trips. Does it seem reasonable to you that I could use this as a guideline for future trips?

That said, in the interest of consistency, I have some questions about how this should be applied to other bills. For instance, if Ari does not directly participate in the political portion of the trip and therefore we do not include him in the political bills for AirOps, do I apply this same logic to his hotel bill if it was an overnight. Or, do I err on the side of safety and just always mark him political on airfare and other bills? I'm having trouble trying to determine how to handle some of the senior staff that were not addressed in the "Official Travelers" memo...well, mostly just Ari and Scott McClellan. Am I just making this too complicated?

Also, for FLOTUS travel, do the same "official travelers" rules apply? I got your message on Sarah Garrison. But, does Julie Thomas (as Trip Director) get marked as official?

I feel like I am trapped in a 5th Grade Word Problem class and I can't get out.....

ok, I think I am done. I will bring it to you soon.

-Reed Dickens said that he takes the press into the fundraisers and works at the event because they are all pool press. I marked him political. Josh Deckard does the same thing.

-Kelly Gannon sets up the press risers for these events. I marked her political.

-Reed said Ari and other senior staff usually watch it on tv either in the staff holding room or in the back. I did not mark Ari or Scott McClellan as political. However, I marked Scott Stanzel who is in Media Affairs. He might stand with the pool and answer questions from local reporters.

-The ADs or Reed told me that the policy guys who are on the trip for the purpose of the official event, (i.e. homeland security, etc.) usually just watch, but not necessarily in the holding room. I did not mark these as political.

See article below--Senator Sarbanes is seeking Federal investigations of Chairman Korsmo's (legal) appearance at the Clayburgh fundraiser last week. He still hasn't sent over questions for me, and says he won't vote me out of Committee until I've answered them.

FHLBank Regulator's Role In Fundraiser Sparks Inquiry

By DAWN KOPECKI

Of DOW JONES NEWSWIRES

WASHINGTON -- House and Senate lawmakers have asked for a federal investigation into Federal Housing Finance Board Chairman John Korsmo's involvement in a fundraiser held last week for a North Dakota Republican.

Korsmo has come under fire for lending his name as a "special guest" to a Washington fundraiser that solicited $500 apiece from invitees, including executives at some of the banks Korsmo regulates.

Korsmo heads the federal agency charged with overseeing the 12 Federal Home
Loan Banks, which lend money to their 8,000 member institutions at below-market rates. Korsmo, who once chaired the North Dakota Republican Party, was an active GOP fundraiser in the state before the Bush administration tapped him to chair the Finance Board last autumn.

Korsmo said the candidate, Rick Clayburgh, is a close personal friend who Korsmo helped get elected as the North Dakota tax commissioner in 1996.

Friend or not, Korsmo's appearance at the event and the role he or the agency had in soliciting donations are now under scrutiny.

"Mr. Korsmo's appearance at this event raises questions that Mr. Clayburgh used Mr. Korsmo's position in government to help solicit contributions from banking executives subject to his regulation," California Rep. Henry Waxman, the ranking Democrat on the House Committee on Government Reform, wrote in a letter sent this week to Chairman Dan Burton, R-Ind.

Senate Banking Chairman Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., also sent letters this week to the General Accounting Office, the Finance Board's Inspector General and Korsmo himself, requesting a federal investigation.

He was particularly critical of Korsmo considering the new ethics guidelines recently adopted by the agency at Korsmo's urging.

"In my view, your conduct in the matter of the Clayburgh for Congress fundraiser raises serious questions as to whether you have lived up to the standard you set for yourself," Sarbanes wrote Korsmo in a letter sent Wednesday.

Sarbanes also asked Comptroller General David Walker on Wednesday to investigate the matter, seeking to find out to what extent Korsmo or his staff were involved in soliciting donations or identifying contributors. Sarbanes also asked Walker to find out whether any of the Home Loan Bank executives invited to the event, or any other involving Korsmo, have been the subject of any recent or ongoing supervisory matters before the Finance Board.

"The willing and high-profile involvement of an independent, federal financial regulator in a political fundraiser to which senior executives of the regulated institutions are invited raises a serious question as to whether Mr. Korsmo is meeting the standard he and the ethics attorney hired by the board set at the September 12 meeting," Sarbanes wrote.

Korsmo said he consulted his in-house counsel as well as an outside ethics officer before agreeing to participate in the fundraiser, which was hosted by House Financial Services Chairman Michael Oxley, R-Ohio.

"I don't know who they invited, I wasn't involved in the planning," Korsmo told Dow Jones Newswires. "Most of the people who were there I didn't know."

Korsmo said he was told more than 500 people were invited to the fundraiser, though fewer than two dozen actually attended.

He also said his relationship with the candidate and his family made this particular fundraiser unique.

In addition to helping Clayburgh with his 1996 campaign, Korsmo chaired the state Republican party when the candidate's father ran for the U.S. Senate.
He also said he served on the North Dakota Board of Higher Education with Clayburgh's mother, Bev.

"Those are perhaps the unique circumstances that lead to me being asked to be involved," he said. "I can't perceive of another situation where anyone's going to ask me again, so it's a moot point in my mind as to what will happen in the future."

Several calls to Rick Clayburgh's campaign office in North Dakota were not returned. A spokeswoman for Rep. Oxley declined to comment.

Clayburgh is vying for the at-large seat held by Rep. Earl Pomeroy, a Democrat.

Who knows what a court would eventually determine, but the description of the "program" the Secty. can administer in the House language seems quite broad: "The Secretary of the Treasury shall be responsible for carrying out A PROGRAM FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE for commercial property and casualty insurers,as provided in this Act." Even so, I suppose using the "provisions of this Act" language wouldn't hurt.

On review of S. 2600, it seems to us that the "Program" set forth in section 4, over which the Secretary has regulatory authority pursuant to section 5, does not encompass the federal cause of action under section 10. Therefore, if the question is whether the Secretary's section 5 authority would enable him to assert the right to approve settlements of federal causes of action under section 10, courts may very dubious. One way to get past this hurdle would be to rewrite section 5(a) by substituting something like "the provisions of this Act" for "the Program." (There may, of course, still be other obstacles to the Secretary's assertion of settlement-approval authority; we are further looking at this question.)

TESTIMONY OF
PAMELA OLSON, ASSISTANT SECRETARY (TAX POLICY),
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE ON
TREASURY AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT
ON CORPORATE INVERSION TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Chairman, Senator _____, and distinguished Members of the Subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing relating to corporate inversion transactions.

In recent months, several high-profile U.S. companies have announced plans to reincorporate outside the United States. The documents prepared for shareholder approval and filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission cite substantial reductions in overall corporate taxes as a key reason for the transactions. While these so-called corporate inversion transactions are not new, there has been a marked increase recently in the frequency, size, and profile of the transactions.

On February 28, 2002, the Treasury Department announced that it was studying the issues arising in connection with these corporate inversion transactions and the implications of these transactions for the U.S. tax system and the U.S. economy. On May 17, 2002, the Treasury Department released its report on the tax policy implications of corporate inversion transactions. (A copy of the Treasury report is attached.) The Treasury report describes the mechanics of the transactions, the current tax treatment of the transactions, the current tax treatment of the companies post-inversion, the features of our tax laws that facilitate the transactions or that may be exploited through such transactions, and the features of our tax laws that drive companies to consider these transactions.

Inversion transactions implicate fundamental issues of tax policy. The U.S. tax system can operate to provide a cost advantage to foreign-based multinational companies over U.S.-based multinational companies. The Treasury report identifies two distinct classes of tax reduction that are available to foreign-based companies and that can be achieved through an inversion transaction. First, an inversion transaction may be used by a U.S.-based company to achieve a reduction in the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from U.S. operations. In addition, through an inversion transaction, a U.S.-based multinational group can substantially reduce or eliminate the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from its foreign operations.

An inversion is a transaction through which the corporate structure of a U.S.-based multinational group is altered so that a new foreign corporation, typically located in a low- or no-tax country, replaces the existing U.S. parent corporation as the parent of the corporate group. In order to provide context for consideration of the policy issues that arise, the Treasury report includes a technical description of the forms of the inversion transaction and the potential tax treatment of the various elements of the transaction under current law. The transactional forms through which the basic reincorporation outside the United States can be accomplished vary as a technical matter, but all involve little or no immediate operational change and all are transactions in which either the shareholders of the company or the company itself are subject to tax. This reincorporation step may be accompanied by other restructuring steps designed to shift the ownership of the group's foreign operations outside the United States. The restructuring steps involving movement of foreign subsidiaries are complex and varied, but, like the reincorporation itself, are transactions that are subject to tax. When all the transactions are complete, the foreign operations of the company will be outside of the U.S. taxing jurisdiction and the corporate structure also may provide opportunities to reduce the U.S. tax on U.S. operations.

Market conditions have been a factor in the recent increase in inversion activity. Although the reincorporation step triggers potential tax at the shareholder level or the corporate level, depending on the transactional form, that tax liability may be less significant because of current economic and market factors. The company's shareholders may have little or no gain inherent in their stock and the company may have net operating losses that reduce any gain at the company level. While these market conditions may help facilitate the transactions, they are not, however, what motivates a company to undertake an inversion. U.S.-based companies and their shareholders are making the decision to reincorporate outside the United States largely because of the tax savings available. It is that underlying motivation that we must address.

The ability to achieve a substantial reduction in taxes through a transaction that is complicated technically but virtually transparent operationally is a cause for concern as a policy matter. As we formulate a response, however, we must not lose sight of the fact that an inversion is not the only route to accomplishing the same type of reduction in taxes. A U.S.-based start-up venture that contemplates both U.S. and foreign operations may incorporate overseas at the outset. An existing U.S. group may be the subject of a takeover, either friendly or hostile, by a foreign-based company. In either case, the structure that results provides tax-savings opportunities similar to those provided by an inversion transaction. A narrow policy response to the inversion phenomenon may inadvertently result in a tax code favoring the acquisition of U.S. operations by foreign corporations and the expansion of foreign controlled operations in the United States at the expense of domestically managed corporations. In turn, other decisions affecting the location of new investment, choice of suppliers, and employment opportunities may be adversely affected. While the openness of the U.S. economy has always made -- and will continue to make -- the United States one of the most attractive and hospitable locations for foreign investment in the world, there is no merit in policies biased against domestic control and domestic management of U.S. operations.

The policy response to the recent corporate inversion activity should be broad enough to address the underlying differences in the U.S. tax treatment of U.S.-based companies and foreign-based companies, without regard to how foreign-based status is achieved. Measures designed simply to halt inversion activity only address these transactions at the surface level and in the short run. Measures that are targeted too narrowly would have the unintended effect of encouraging a shift to other forms of transactions and structures to the detriment of the U.S. economy in the long run.

An immediate response is needed to address the U.S. tax advantages that are available to foreign-based companies through the ability to reduce the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from U.S. operations. Inappropriate shifting of income from the U.S. companies in the corporate group to the foreign parent or its foreign subsidiaries represents an erosion of the U.S. corporate tax base. It provides a competitive advantage to companies that have undergone an inversion or otherwise operate in a foreign-based group. It creates a corresponding disadvantage for their U.S. competitors that operate in a U.S.-based group. Moreover, exploitation of inappropriate income-shifting opportunities erodes confidence in the fairness of the tax system.

The Treasury Department has made specific proposals relating to legislative and regulatory changes that are needed to address these transactions and the opportunities available through such transactions. Both the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee have held hearings on this subject and members of both committees have crafted legislation in response to these transactions. We are working closely with these committees to ensure the enactment of appropriate legislation.

We also must continue our work to address the U.S. tax disadvantages for U.S.-based companies that do business abroad relative to their counterparts in our major trading partners. The U.S. international tax rules can operate to impose a burden on U.S.-based companies with foreign operations that is disproportionate to the tax burden imposed by our trading partners on the foreign operations of their companies. The U.S. rules for the taxation of foreign-source income are unique in their breadth of reach and degree of complexity. Both the recent inversion activity and the increase in foreign acquisitions of U.S. multinationals are evidence that the competitive disadvantage caused by our international tax rules is a serious issue with significant consequences for U.S. businesses and the U.S. economy. A comprehensive reexamination of the U.S. international tax rules and the economic assumptions underlying them is needed. As we consider appropriate reformulation of these rules we should not underestimate the benefits to be gained from reducing the complexity of the current rules. Our system of international tax rules should not disadvantage U.S.-based companies competing in the global marketplace.

As we work to address these important issues, we must keep our focus on the overarching goal of maintaining the attractiveness of the United States as the most desirable location in the world for incorporation, headquartering, foreign investment, business operations, and employment opportunities, in order to achieve an ever higher standard of living for all Americans.

TESTIMONY OF
PAMELA OLSON, ASSISTANT SECRETARY (TAX POLICY),
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE ON
ON CORPORATE INVERSION TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Chairman, Senator _____, and distinguished Members of the Subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing relating to corporate inversion transactions.

In recent months, several high-profile U.S. companies have announced plans to reincorporate outside the United States. The documents prepared for shareholder approval and filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission cite substantial reductions in overall corporate taxes as a key reason for the transactions. While these so-called corporate inversion transactions are not new, there has been a marked increase recently in the frequency, size, and profile of the transactions.

On February 28, 2002, the Treasury Department announced that it was studying the issues arising in connection with these corporate inversion transactions and the implications of these transactions for the U.S. tax system and the U.S. economy. On May 17, 2002, the Treasury Department released its report on the tax policy implications of corporate inversion transactions. (A copy of the Treasury report is attached.) The Treasury report describes the mechanics of the transactions, the current tax treatment of the transactions, the current tax treatment of the companies post-inversion, the features of our tax laws that facilitate the transactions or that may be exploited through such transactions, and the features of our tax laws that drive companies to consider these transactions.

Inversion transactions implicate fundamental issues of tax policy. The U.S. tax system can operate to provide a cost advantage to foreign-based multinational companies over U.S.-based multinational companies. The Treasury report identifies two distinct classes of tax reduction that are available to foreign-based companies and that can be achieved through an inversion transaction. First, an inversion transaction may be used by a U.S.-based company to achieve a reduction in the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from U.S. operations. In addition, through an inversion transaction, a U.S.-based multinational group can substantially reduce or eliminate the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from its foreign operations.

An inversion is a transaction through which the corporate structure of a U.S.-based multinational group is altered so that a new foreign corporation, typically located in a low- or no-tax country, replaces the existing U.S. parent corporation as the parent of the corporate group. In order to provide context for consideration of the policy issues that arise, the Treasury report includes a technical description of the forms of the inversion transaction and the potential tax treatment of the various elements of the transaction under current law. The transactional forms through which the basic reincorporation outside the United States can be accomplished vary as a technical matter, but all involve little or no immediate operational change and all are transactions in which either the shareholders of the company or the company itself are subject to tax. This reincorporation step may be accompanied by other restructuring steps designed to shift the ownership of the group's foreign operations outside the United States. The restructuring steps involving movement of foreign subsidiaries are complex and varied, but, like the reincorporation itself, are transactions that are subject to tax. When all the transactions are complete, the foreign operations of the company will be outside of the U.S. taxing jurisdiction and the corporate structure also may provide opportunities to reduce the U.S. tax on U.S. operations.

Market conditions have been a factor in the recent increase in inversion activity. Although the reincorporation step triggers potential tax at the shareholder level or the corporate level, depending on the transactional form, that tax liability may be less significant because of current economic and market factors. The company's shareholders may have little or no gain inherent in their stock and the company may have net operating losses that reduce any gain at the company level. While these market conditions may help facilitate the transactions, they are not, however, what motivates a company to undertake an inversion. U.S.-based companies and their shareholders are making the decision to reincorporate outside the United States largely because of the tax savings available. It is that underlying motivation that we must address.

The ability to achieve a substantial reduction in taxes through a transaction that is complicated technically but virtually transparent operationally is a cause for concern as a policy matter. As we formulate a response, however, we must not lose sight of the fact that an inversion is not the only route to accomplishing the same type of reduction in taxes. A U.S.-based start-up venture that contemplates both U.S. and foreign operations may incorporate overseas at the outset. An existing U.S. group may be the subject of a takeover, either friendly or hostile, by a foreign-based company. In either case, the structure that results provides tax-savings opportunities similar to those provided by an inversion transaction. A narrow policy response to the inversion phenomenon may inadvertently result in a tax code favoring the acquisition of U.S. operations by foreign corporations and the expansion of foreign controlled operations in the United States at the expense of domestically managed corporations. In turn, other decisions affecting the location of new investment, choice of suppliers, and employment opportunities may be adversely affected. While the openness of the U.S. economy has always made -- and will continue to make -- the United States one of the most attractive and hospitable locations for foreign investment in the world, there is no merit in policies biased against domestic control and domestic management of U.S. operations.

The policy response to the recent corporate inversion activity should be broad enough to address the underlying differences in the U.S. tax treatment of U.S.-based companies and foreign-based companies, without regard to how foreign-based status is achieved. Measures designed simply to halt inversion activity only address these transactions at the surface level and in the short run. Measures that are targeted too narrowly would have the unintended effect of encouraging a shift to other forms of transactions and structures to the detriment of the U.S. economy in the long run.

An immediate response is needed to address the U.S. tax advantages that are available to foreign-based companies through the ability to reduce the U.S. corporate-level tax on income from U.S. operations. Inappropriate shifting of income from the U.S. companies in the corporate group to the foreign parent or its foreign subsidiaries represents an erosion of the U.S. corporate tax base. It provides a competitive advantage to companies that have undergone an inversion or otherwise operate in a foreign-based group. It creates a corresponding disadvantage for their U.S. competitors that operate in a U.S.-based group. Moreover, exploitation of inappropriate income-shifting opportunities erodes confidence in the fairness of the tax system.

The Treasury Department has made specific proposals relating to legislative and regulatory changes that are needed to address these transactions and the opportunities available through such transactions. Both the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee have held hearings on this subject and members of both committees have crafted legislation in response to these transactions. We also must continue our work to address the U.S. tax disadvantages for U.S.-based companies that do business abroad relative to their counterparts in our major trading partners. See article below--Senator Sarbanes is seeking Federal investigations of Chairman Korsmo's (legal) appearance at the Clayburgh fundraiser last week. He still hasn't sent over questions for me, and says he won't vote me out of Committee until I've answered them.

FHLBank Regulator's Role In Fundraiser Sparks Inquiry

By DAWN KOPECKI

Of DOW JONES NEWSWIRES

WASHINGTON -- House and Senate lawmakers have asked for a federal investigation into Federal Housing Finance Board Chairman John Korsmo's involvement in a fundraiser held last week for a North Dakota Republican.

Korsmo has come under fire for lending his name as a "special guest" to a Washington fundraiser that solicited $500 apiece from invitees, including executives at some of the banks Korsmo regulates.

Korsmo heads the federal agency charged with overseeing the 12 Federal Home
Loan Banks, which lend money to their 8,000 member institutions at below-market rates. Korsmo, who once chaired the North Dakota Republican Party, was an active GOP fundraiser in the state before the Bush administration tapped him to chair the Finance Board last autumn.

Korsmo said the candidate, Rick Clayburgh, is a close personal friend who Korsmo helped get elected as the North Dakota tax commissioner in 1996.

Friend or not, Korsmo's appearance at the event and the role he or the agency had in soliciting donations are now under scrutiny.

"Mr. Korsmo's appearance at this event raises questions that Mr. Clayburgh used Mr. Korsmo's position in government to help solicit contributions from banking executives subject to his regulation," California Rep. Henry Waxman, the ranking Democrat on the House Committee on Government Reform, wrote in a letter sent this week to Chairman Dan Burton, R-Ind.

Senate Banking Chairman Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., also sent letters this week to the General Accounting Office, the Finance Board's Inspector General and Korsmo himself, requesting a federal investigation.

He was particularly critical of Korsmo considering the new ethics guidelines recently adopted by the agency at Korsmo's urging.

"In my view, your conduct in the matter of the Clayburgh for Congress fundraiser raises serious questions as to whether you have lived up to the standard you set for yourself," Sarbanes wrote Korsmo in a letter sent Wednesday.

Sarbanes also asked Comptroller General David Walker on Wednesday to investigate the matter, seeking to find out to what extent Korsmo or his staff were involved in soliciting donations or identifying contributors. Sarbanes also asked Walker to find out whether any of the Home Loan Bank executives invited to the event, or any other involving Korsmo, have been the subject of any recent or ongoing supervisory matters before the Finance Board.

"The willing and high-profile involvement of an independent, federal financial regulator in a political fundraiser to which senior executives of the regulated institutions are invited raises a serious question as to whether Mr. Korsmo is meeting the standard he and the ethics attorney hired by the board set at the September 12 meeting," Sarbanes wrote.

Korsmo said he consulted his in-house counsel as well as an outside ethics officer before agreeing to participate in the fundraiser, which was hosted by House Financial Services Chairman Michael Oxley, R-Ohio.

"I don't know who they invited, I wasn't involved in the planning," Korsmo told Dow Jones Newswires. "Most of the people who were there I didn't know."

Korsmo said he was told more than 500 people were invited to the fundraiser, though fewer than two dozen actually attended.

He also said his relationship with the candidate and his family made this particular fundraiser unique.

In addition to helping Clayburgh with his 1996 campaign, Korsmo chaired the state Republican party when the candidate's father ran for the U.S. Senate.
He also said he served on the North Dakota Board of Higher Education with Clayburgh's mother, Bev.

"Those are perhaps the unique circumstances that lead to me being asked to be involved," he said. "I can't perceive of another situation where anyone's going to ask me again, so it's a moot point in my mind as to what will happen in the future."

Several calls to Rick Clayburgh's campaign office in North Dakota were not returned. A spokeswoman for Rep. Oxley declined to comment.

Clayburgh is vying for the at-large seat held by Rep. Earl Pomeroy, a Democrat.

Keith:

Senator Bond called us yesterday evening - he wants Ken to accompany him to a proposed new IRS tax facility in Kansas City (Ken will be there today raising money for Talent). We wanted your guidance - from your point of view, is it ok for the Director of Political Affairs to be at a prospective place like this when pending legislation is involved?

Here is the background:
The 1998 IRS Restructuring and Reform Act initiated a study of how to improve services to taxpayers and increase productivity. The study indicated that the Kansas City Service Center is a priority for receiving a replacement facility. Senator Bond plans to write legislation converting an old downtown post office into a revitalized IRS facility, thereby meeting those recommendations. Bond will today tour the old post office facility and wants Ken to accompany him.

?? 49 U.S.C. 28103 -- Railroads

&[I]n a claim for personal injury to a passenger, death of a passenger, or damage to property of a passenger arising from or in connection with the provision of rail passenger transportation, . . ., punitive damages, to the extent permitted by applicable State law, may be awarded in connection with any such claim only if the plaintiff establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm that is the subject of the action was the result of conduct carried out by the defendant with a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of others.8

1. Mr. Mangano, I would like to know more about your statement that more people are homeless today than 10 years ago, despite the creation of 40,000 programs to deal with it. That is a stunning revelation and very depressing. Please expand on your statement.

   In a study completed by the Urban Institute here in Washington D.C., the prime researcher, Dr. Martha Burt, concluded that programs for homeless people now numbered 40,000. In reports from around the country, the increase in homelessness has averaged between 3% and 5% annually for the past ten years. These reports from jurisdictions are supplemented by the Annual Report of the U.S. Conference of Mayors On Hunger and Homelessness. Requests for emergency shelters in their survey of 27-29 cities indicate that demand rose 5% in 1996, 3% in 1997, 11% in 1998, 12% in 1999, 15% in 2000, and 13% in 2001.

   Tonight, across the country more families will be sheltered, more people will be on the streets, and more shelters overflowing than in the past ten years.

   While these numbers are indeed disheartening after two decades of response, there are hopeful signs. New research and technologies are available to create innovative and entrepreneurial responses to homelessness. The positive by-product of the proliferation of programs is that new innovative and performance-based programs have been generated and have demonstrated the ability to end homelessness. The "housing first" approach is especially efficacious for those experiencing chronic homelessness.

2. By the nature of your compliments to the Committee on the logic of PL 107-95, there is a suggestion that its logic should be a model for larger efforts in this country. Is that true?

   There is no question that Public Law 107-95 offers a variety of initiatives that model appropriate activities in our goal of reducing and ending homelessness. For example, the attention that the law offers to prevention as an appropriate response to homelessness parallels the Council's attention on this overlooked issue. As indicated in my testimony before the Committee, the themes of accountability, self-sufficiency, and the emphasis on a housing response in PL 107-95 are indeed themes of the larger effort now engaged in by the Council and its Chairman.

3. You referenced Dr. Dennis Culhane from Pennsylvania, who has testified before this Committee on these matters. Dr. Culhane has suggested we look hard at trying to avoid sending chronically homeless people-- single individuals with very serious, recurring problems- to emergency shelters - that the nature and severity of their problems do not lend themselves to the kinds of services available at emergency shelters and that the use of emergency shelters by chronically homeless people simply clogs the emergency shelter system - - that chronically homeless people need something different, principally mental health, substance abuse, and transitional residential services and shelter. Do you agree or disagree with Dr. Culhane and why?

Dr. Culhane's research and testimony and intuition serve him well in his suggestions that emergency shelters are inappropriate responses to the needs of those experiencing chronic homelessness. "Housing first" efforts in various parts of our country, especially New York and San Francisco, indicate that rather than offering emergency shelters to those who are disabled and long term homeless, permanent housing with clinically-based supportive services is an appropriate and efficacious response. The combination of assertive community treatment teams that provide clinically oriented case management, outreach and tenancy stabilization with scattered site and master leased housing units is working. His acknowledgement that people experiencing chronic homelessness need "mental health, substance abuse services" is recognized, and innovative programs across the country are providing such services in conjunction with permanent housing.

4. Is providing temporary shelter to a chronically homeless person doing that person any good?

   If the sheltering is "temporary" in the sense of less than a week or so, offering a time to come in off the streets while next step options are being constellated, that stay may not be detrimental. Longer stays, however, often lead to a spiraling down into a subculture of homelessness that "institutionalizes" the person in the shelter environment. People experiencing chronic homelessness most often require treatment, whether mental health or substance abuse or both. Appropriate medications monitored over time and/or detoxification are readily needed. Neither is available generally in emergency shelters.

5. Does the interagency committee enjoy a relationship with VA's advisory committee? If so, please describe it.

   The Advisory Committee has offered its forum for dialogue with the Executive Director of the Interagency Council. Additionally, informal conversations between the Advisory Chair and the Council have taken place on several occasions as have conversations between other members of the Advisory Committee and the Council. However, no formal relationship exists between the Committee and the Council nor is the Council a member of the Committee in any capacity including ex officio.

6. Do you think that your advisory committee will make any recommendations directly to VA in the future concerning VA's homeless assistance programs? Can you give me a possible scenario for the committee to make such recommendations?

   There is an ongoing relationship between the Council and the Veterans Administration by virtue of the VA's membership on the Council. By statute, Secretary Principi is a member of the Council and did attend the Council's first meeting in six years on July 18 of this year. Further, the Council has re-developed its Senior Policy Group which has met twice with VA participation. We are instituting a Program Managers Working Group this month and anticipate VA participation. In each of these forums, the opportunity to recommend policy and resource deployment is possible.

7. I know you don't speak for HUD, but please ask Secretary Martinez the following: what plans does HUD have to coordinate homeless assistance activities for veterans in the spirit of PL 100-95?

   In my work with Secretary Martinez, I have found him to be straight forward and open handed. That spirit has created the opportunity for the first ever joint application between three federal agencies, the Departments of Housing and Urban Development, Health and Human Services and the Veterans Administration. That work of coordination, key to PL 107-95, is central to the work of the Council and supported fully by Secretary Martinez. In his public statements, the Secretary has made plain his call for coordination of resources for any profile of homeless people.

8. The HUD-VASH Section 8 voucher program is one of the topics in our homeless assistance act. Can you give me any idea of Secretary Martinez's plans to provide additional Section 8 vouchers for this program?

   You are correct. The Council does not speak for HUD. I do know the efficacy of the HUD-VASH Program in creating units for homeless veterans. My hope would be that this vital program to create movement off the streets and out of shelters for homeless veterans would continue and expand. I would recommend that contact be made directly with Secretary Martinez concerning the Department's plans. I do know from conversations that I have had with him that he is very supportive of homeless veterans and is making the resources of HUD available to them through a variety of programs.

Senator Dodd called Secretary Card and repeated the message he gave Nick last night: "Daschle doesn't care if we get a bill. The President, Oxley and I want a bill, but no one else cares. You have our bottom line."

Dodd said that they would NOT be willing to adopt the HR1 language preserving state caps and stricter state standards. He made the point quickly; it's possible that he didn't mean it.

Sec. Card asked for economic analysis of failure to get a bill vs. a bill with only federal court and consolidation. Glenn is putting something together.

Subject: Important points about punitive negotiations

1. Under the Senate bill as it was passed, the federal court will apply the relevant state law determined to be applicable by the federal district court. That would include the relevant state-law standards on liability and damages, including punitive damages. Therefore, if the district court determined that Texas law applied to the tort suits arising out of an act of terrorism brought under this section, and Texas law caps punitive damages, then those caps would apply in the suits brought under this section.

2. There is some confusion about the meaning of the "federal cause of action." As in the 9/11 bill passed last year, that is simply a device to ensure federal jurisdiction over these cases. Without this provision and without geographic diversity among the parties in some cases, there would be no federal jurisdiction over many state tort suits arising out of acts of terrorism -- and thus no ability to consolidate the cases in a single federal court. The federal cause of action thereby allow all the tort cases arising out of an act of terrorism to be removed to and consolidated in a single federal court.

3. Importantly, however, as noted above, the actual substantive law on liability and damages that the federal court will apply is the state law determined to be applicable by the federal court.

4. Some state-law standards for awards of punitive damages are quite lax. In these negotiations, we are simply attempting to ensure a federal floor on the standard for awarding punitive damages so that any of these particularly loose state-law standards are not applied in tort cases arising out of acts of terrorism. Such loose state-law standards could be very unfair and economically destabilizing in the post-terrorism-attack context (and even today as businesses and insurers plan for the economic aftermath of terrorism attacks).

5. The "construction" language merely makes clear that any otherwise applicable state-law bans and caps on punitives that would apply in tort cases under this section continue to apply notwithstanding the federal floor on the standard for punitives that we are proposing. Sen. Daschle et al appear to have cleverly exploited this opening. By objecting to the construction paragraph, they appear to be attempting to create a MAJOR loophole/ambiguity that would allow future plaintiffs to argue that our provision on punitives not only imposes a federal floor on the standard, but also actually trumps the applicable state-law bans and caps that otherwise would apply to claims for punitive damages. In other words, they apparently are trying to make punitive damages MORE readily available than it was even in the Senate bill as it was passed. That is a very neat trick on their part. But it is absurd -- and would result in us moving very far LEFT from the Senate bill if we accepted this loophole/ambiguity. And of course, if they are not silently trying to create such a loophole, they should not object to us making this point clear in the legislation.

CURRENT

Regarding the claim of executive privilege over certain Justice Department documents that included a number of prosecution and declination memos, including Clinton Administration memos re whether to seek an independent counsel in the Gore fundraising matter:
Ranking cmte member Henry Waxman (D-CA): "An imperial presidency or an imperial Justice Department conflicts with the democratic principles of our nation" (Chicago Tribune, 12/14).
House Gov't Reform chair Dan Burton (R-IN), "Your guy's acting like he's king." (Boston Globe, 12/14).

Russ Baker, The Nation, re Presidential Records Act executive order: "Kavanaugh, who once defended Starr's insatiable appetite for information as being not about politics but about the sanctity of the law, has apparently changed his tune."

Stanley Kutler, Chicago Tribune, re Presidential Records Act executive order: "Bush's action drips with irony. A few years ago, Kavanaugh worked with Kenneth Starr, and eagerly argued that President Clinton had no right to retain documents, no executive privilege, and must yield to every demand made by the Office of Independent Counsel."

STARR

Abner Mikva, Chicago Tribune, Aug. 5, 1998: "This [ruling] will materially affect the way public business is going to be done and to the detriment of public business."

Lloyd Cutler: Meanwhile, the inner workings of the White House have already been affected by years of investigative scrutiny. For example, White House lawyers are now careful not to take notes, Mr. [Lloyd] Cutler said. "When the attorney-client privilege with a Government lawyer is virtually destroyed, that means you don't dare take notes," he said. "You are going to be cautious about what you say and the President will be cautious about what he tells you. That's a serious blow to the Presidency ."

Judge David Tatel of D.C. Circuit, dissenting in Lindsey case on government attorney-client privilege: "As a result, Presidents may well shift their trust on all but the most routine legal matters from White House counsel, who undertake to serve the Presidency, to private counsel who represent its occupant. . . . I doubt that White House counsel can perform any of these functions without the candor made possible by the attorney-client privilege. As I said at the outset, weakening the privilege may well cause Presidents to shift their trust from White House lawyers who have undertaken to serve the Presidency, to private lawyers who have not."

CURRENT

Regarding the claim of executive privilege over certain Justice Department documents that included a number of prosecution and declination memos, including Clinton Administration memos re whether to seek an independent counsel in the Gore fundraising matter:
Ranking cmte member Henry Waxman (D-CA): "An imperial presidency or an imperial Justice Department conflicts with the democratic principles of our nation" (Chicago Tribune, 12/14).
House Gov't Reform chair Dan Burton (R-IN), "Your guy's acting like he's king." (Boston Globe, 12/14).

Russ Baker, The Nation, re Presidential Records Act executive order:
"Kavanaugh, who once defended Starr's insatiable appetite for information as being not about politics but about the sanctity of the law, has apparently changed his tune."

Stanley Kutler, Chicago Tribune, re Presidential Records Act executive order:
"Bush's action drips with irony. A few years ago, Kavanaugh worked with Kenneth Starr, and eagerly argued that President Clinton had no right to retain documents, no executive privilege, and must yield to every demand made by the Office of Independent Counsel."

STARR

Abner Mikva, Chicago Tribune, Aug. 5, 1998: "This [ruling] will materially affect the way public business is going to be done and to the detriment of public business."

Lloyd Cutler: Meanwhile, the inner workings of the White House have already been affected by years of investigative scrutiny. For example, White House
lawyers are now careful not to take notes, Mr. [Lloyd] Cutler said.
"When the attorney-client privilege with a Government lawyer is virtually destroyed, that means you don't dare take notes," he said. "You are going to be cautious about what you say and the President will be cautious about what he tells
you. That's a serious blow to the Presidency."

Judge David Tatel of D.C. Circuit, dissenting in Lindsey case on government attorney-client privilege: "As a result, Presidents may well shift their trust on all but the most routine legal matters from White House counsel, who undertake to serve the Presidency, to private counsel who represent its occupant. . . . I doubt that White House counsel can perform any of these functions without the candor made possible by the attorney-client privilege.
As I said at the outset, weakening the privilege may well cause Presidents to shift their trust from White House lawyers who have undertaken to serve
Presidency, to private lawyers who have not."

Attached is letter sent from Nick to Sen. Dodd today, which addresses the new wrinkle that Daschle et al have raised.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Chris:

First, I want to thank you for your extraordinary personal efforts to get a terrorism insurance bill over the last year and, in particular, the last few weeks. My hope is that the effort comes to fruition, but the hurdles, frankly, seem to be increasing.

Per our conversation on Friday, I can understand why you would like to alter your role as full-time intermediary. However, I hope you will be willing to continue on at least a part-time basis. I can,t offer much in the way of pay, but I can probably assure significant grief. In that vein, the following is intended to inform your thinking as we go forward by reviewing a little past history and by setting a context for where we are.

Currently, our most significant hang-up revolves around the inclusion of subsection (c) (2), the &Construction8 clause, of H.R. 1, the &No Child Left Behind Act8; i.e., its inclusion is now labeled a & non-starter8 by Senator Daschle,s office. I find this odd for two reasons:

ú The &offer8 provided to me by Senator Daschle,s office some weeks ago was, literally, a page ripped from H.R. 1 (See Attachment A). Subsection (c), &Limitation on Punitive Damages(8 contains two subsections: &(1) General Rule8 and &(2) Construction.8 No one, publicly or privately, ever mentioned that this much ballyhooed offer was only intended to convey half of subsection (c) until 11:00 p.m. Thursday night. (I apologize for allowing my darker side to engage in this rather obvious game of &Who-struck-John8 so, now to the more important point.)

ú Under S.2600, as it was passed, the federal court will apply the relevant state law determined to be applicable by the federal district court: &The substantive law for decision(shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism(occurred.8 That would include the relevant state-law standards on liability and damages, including punitive damages. Therefore, if the district court determined that Texas law applied to the tort suits arising out of an act of terrorism brought under this section, and Texas law caps punitive damages, then those caps would apply in the suits brought under this section. If, however, it determined that New York law applied, and New York law does not cap punitive damages, then caps would not apply.

There is obviously some confusion about the meaning of the "federal cause of action." As in P.L. 107-42, the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, the bill passed last year to deal with suits arising out of the September 11 attacks, this provision is a device to ensure federal jurisdiction over these cases. Without this provision and without geographic diversity among the parties in some cases, no federal jurisdiction would exist over many state tort suits arising out of acts of terrorism -- and thus there would be no ability to consolidate the cases in a single federal court. The federal cause of action thereby allows all the tort cases arising out of an act of terrorism to be removed to and consolidated in a single federal court.

Importantly, however, as noted above, the actual substantive law on liability and damages that the federal court will apply is the state law determined to be applicable by the federal court. That is the case in H.R. 1, in P.L. 107-42, and in S.2600 the bill passed by the Senate, as well as in other legislation such as the Y2K statute.

In other words, the construction clause merely makes clear that otherwise applicable state-law limits on punitive damages continue to apply (as in the Senate bill as passed). Elimination of the construction clause would make punitive damages more readily available than they were even in the Senate bill as passed. It would also create a further anomaly) claims against terrorists are exempt from S.2600 as passed by the Senate and can be brought under state law in state court. Without the &construction8 clause of H.R. 1, terrorists could benefit from state caps and limits on punitive damages, but American businesses sued in federal court could not. The absurdity of such a policy is, I hope, apparent.

Forgive all the substantive detail, but it is necessary to make the point that the new position is a roll back on the punitive damages issue from even the Senate bill and, therefore, untenable. Without some agreement on this issue, which should not even be an issue, we cannot even get to a final resolution on the appropriate minimum standard for awards of punitive damages. I am open to any and all advice on how to proceed. I, ll call later today.

Thanks, Chris.

Sincerely,

Nicholas E. Calio

Currently, our most significant hang-up revolves around the inclusion of subsection (c)(2), the "Construction" clause, of H.R. 1, the "No Child Left Behind Act"; i.e., its inclusion is now labeled a "non-starter" by Senator Daschle's office. I find this odd for two reasons:

How Can We Give Missouri Families Economic Security And Keep Our Schools And Neighborhoods Safe?

REV_00152787

Jim Talent

Missouri Families First Plan

Jim Talent has a real plan for Missouri families.

His plan is built on the simple premise: everything government does or does not do today, gets passed on to our children and grandchildren.

Jim Talent's plan asks more from government. Safe schools and neighborhoods, affordable quality health care, jobs and economic security.

Jim's Plan: Restoring A Sense Of Security To Our Neighborhoods

■ Jim Talent has a plan to make help make our neighborhoods safe again. Jim's plan recognizes we need new ideas that come from parents, policy makers, community leaders and law enforcement to prevent the victimization of children.

■ Congressman Jim Talent co-sponsored Aimee's Law to make sure that those convicted of murder, rape or child molestation actually go to jail. And, he led the fight to increase the number of police officers on the street and fought for mandatory prison time for anyone who uses a gun in a crime.

■ He led efforts to stop domestic violence and he co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, which allocated $3.6 billion for shel ters and sexual assault prevention programs.

■ Jim voted for Project Exile providing $100 million to states to fight gun violence and would require mandatory prison time for violent offenders who use a gun in the commission of a crime.

A Compassionate Plan To Improve Education

■ Jim supports increased funding, restoring accountability and returning local control to Missouri's public schools. He understands parents and teachers know what's best for kids.

■ Jim believes every child deserves to learn in a safe environment. He continues to fight for legislation to protect students and teachers.

National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) and the St. Louis Police Fraternal Organization (SLPFO) have endorsed Talent's plan to put more police on the street.

A Proven Record On Health Care

■ Jim Talent's mother lost her battle with breast cancer, so his plan is dedicated to initiatives increasing access to quality health care for women and children.

■ Over 40 million men, women and children go uninsured each year. Jim's plan expands health care access to millions of those currently uninsured – by giving them access to quality health care at no cost to the taxpayer.

■ Jim was an original co-sponsor of the Patients' Bill of Rights and led the bipartisan fight to provide access to quality, affordable health care and hold insurance companies accountable.

■ Jim's Missouri First Health Security Initiative provides affordable health care for Missouri's working families, improves health care for women and children and provides an immediate Medicare prescription drug benefit.

Paid for by the Missouri Republican Party, Harvey Tettlebaum, Treasurer.

You may recall that the attachment circulated with this LRM had contained two amendments for your consideration -- the first, an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the second, the other a less extensive 7page amendment. FYI, we now understand that S. 2483, as amended by the second (7 page) amendment will is the version of the bill that the Senate Small Business Committeee will seek to bring before the full Senate.

Here's a self mailer with the same photo of President Bush and Talent we used in the last piece. No quote from the President. Do you have to run it through the approval process up there or are we o.k.?

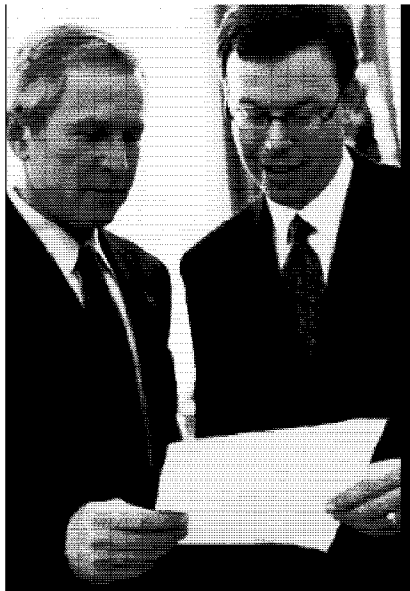
Fighting For Missouri Jobs And Missouri Families

■ As Chairman of the Small Business Committee, Jim succeeded in building bipartisan support on legislation that resulted in job creation, tax relief and economic growth.



■ Jim is committed to helping create jobs and protecting our economic security by allowing workers and families to keep more of what they earn. He supports a permanent repeal of the death tax and marriage penalty.

Jim Talent Fights For Missouri First

■ Jim is an author of the historic, bipartisan Welfare Reform bill that became law in 1996. That law has helped millions of people move from government dependency into jobs and self-sufficiency.

How Can We Give Missouri Families Economic Security And Keep Our Schools And Neighborhoods Safe?

REV_00152835

Jim Talent

Missouri Families First Plan

Jim Talent has a real plan for Missouri families.

His plan is built on the simple premise: everything government does or does not do today, gets passed on to our children and grandchildren.

Jim Talent's plan asks more from government. Safe schools and neighborhoods, affordable quality health care, jobs and economic security.

Jim's Plan: Restoring A Sense Of Security To Our Neighborhoods

■ Jim Talent has a plan to make help make our neighborhoods safe again. Jim's plan recognizes we need new ideas that come from parents, policy makers, community leaders and law enforcement to prevent the victimization of children.

■ Congressman Jim Talent co-sponsored Aimee's Law to make sure that those convicted of murder, rape or child molestation actually go to jail. And, he led the fight to increase the number of police officers on the street and fought for mandatory prison time for anyone who uses a gun in a crime.

■ He led efforts to stop domestic violence and he co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, which allocated $3.6 billion for shel ters and sexual assault prevention programs.

■ Jim voted for Project Exile providing $100 million to states to fight gun violence and would require mandatory prison time for violent offenders who use a gun in the commission of a crime.

A Compassionate Plan To Improve Education

■ Jim supports increased funding, restoring accountability and returning local control to Missouri's public schools. He understands parents and teachers know what's best for kids.

■ Jim believes every child deserves to learn in a safe environment. He continues to fight for legislation to protect students and teachers.

National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) and the St. Louis Police Fraternal Organization (SLPFO) have endorsed Talent's plan to put more police on the street.

A Proven Record On Health Care

■ Jim Talent's mother lost her battle with breast cancer, so his plan is dedicated to initiatives increasing access to quality health care for women and children.

■ Over 40 million men, women and children go uninsured each year. Jim's plan expands health care access to millions of those currently uninsured – by giving them access to quality health care at no cost to the taxpayer.

■ Jim was an original co-sponsor of the Patients' Bill of Rights and led the bipartisan fight to provide access to quality, affordable health care and hold insurance companies accountable.

■ Jim's Missouri First Health Security Initiative provides affordable health care for Missouri's working families, improves health care for women and children and provides an immediate Medicare prescription drug benefit.

Paid for by the Missouri Republican Party, Harvey Tettlebaum, Treasurer.

Whitewater Lawyer Turns Proponent of Presidential Power
By Dana Milbank
Washington Post Staff Writer
Tuesday, October 15, 2002; Page A17
W here there is controversy, there is Brett Kavanaugh.
The legal fight after Vincent Foster's suicide? Kavanaugh led it.

The Starr report on Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky? Kavanaugh co-wrote it.
President Bush's order limiting the release of presidential papers? Kavanaugh drafted it.
The probe of Clinton's pardon of Marc Rich? Kavanaugh was in the thick of it.
The hotly contested judicial nominations of Priscilla Owens and Miguel Estrada? Kavanaugh coordinated them.
Indeed, for the past eight years, Kavanaugh, 37, has had a hand in virtually every high-profile legal battle involving presidential power. But for Bethesda native Kavanaugh, there's an intriguing twist: As a lawyer working for Kenneth Starr during the Whitewater investigation, he was devoted to restricting the powers of the president. Now, as a lawyer in the Bush White House, he is devoted to expanding the chief executive's powers.
Within a few years, Kavanaugh's work has gone from being described as "a serious blow to the presidency," as Clinton lawyer Lloyd Cutler put it, to promoting an "imperial presidency," as Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.) put it.
The political opposition sees rank hypocrisy. "Kavanaugh, who once defended Starr's insatiable appetite for information on presidential doings as being not about politics but about the sanctity of the law, has apparently changed his tune," according to the liberal Nation magazine. "The ironies abound."
A cynical view of Kavanaugh's actions would be that he bases his legal reasoning on his conservative views -- that he supports broad powers for a Republican president and circumscribed powers for a Democratic president. A more charitable explanation is that Kavanaugh is merely a good lawyer, forcefully representing the best interests of his client at the moment.
Asked about Kavanaugh's ideology, Craig Lerner, a former colleague from the Whitewater investigation, replied: "He's a terrific lawyer."
Kavanaugh declined to be quoted in this article, but his administration colleagues say he has been consistent in the positions he took for Starr and now for Bush. Under Starr, they say, he was seeking to rein in presidential privileges in a criminal matter; as a counsel to Bush, he is seeking to defend presidential privileges in civil matters.
"The need for information in criminal proceedings is a trump card," said another former Starr lieutenant now in the Bush administration. "In civil litigation, a president gets the benefit of the doubt a lot more."
For the dozen former Starr underlings with high-level jobs in or appointments by the Bush administration -- including two in the White House and three in the Justice Department -- that explanation is something of a personal rationale. The real test will come if the Bush administration is facing a criminal probe. "You might have to reassess based on what Brett does at that point," the former Starr colleague said.
For a man with such a record of controversial cases, Kavanaugh has few enemies. Even legal opponents find him charming, and his friends say he has none of the hard edges of an ideologue. "I don't view him as a hard-core right-wing Republican, said Doug Gansler, a Democrat who is the Maryland state's attorney in Montgomery County. "He's seemingly much more moderate than his writings and words would suggest."
Mark Tuohey, who as a Starr deputy in 1994 and 1995 hired Kavanaugh, said he's "never viewed Brett as somebody of ideological purity. I always felt very comfortable that Brett looked at things through a legal prism, not a political prism." Still, said Tuohey, a Vinson & Elkins partner and self-described Democrat, it would be hard to say that the anti-Clinton work Kavanaugh did for Starr is ideologically consistent with the pro-Bush work he's now doing. "I think it's a stretch," Tuohey said.
After college and law school at Yale, Kavanaugh clerked for federal appellate judge Alex Kozinski and Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, and worked briefly at President George H.W. Bush's Justice Department.. In between and after stints on the Whitewater investigation, Kavanaugh spent about three years at Starr's firm, Kirkland & Ellis.
For Starr, Kavanaugh went to the Supreme Court in the Foster case, arguing, unsuccessfully, that the lawyer-client confidentiality expires at death. He represented Starr in efforts to get Hillary Clinton's notes related to the Foster matter, to get lawyer Bruce Lindsey's notes in the Lewinsky affair, and to get testimony from Secret Service agents. His greatest fame, though, came as an author of the Starr report -- the legal piece, not the explicit narrative.

In the White House, Kavanaugh developed an executive order related to the Presidential Records Act, giving former presidents and their families more power to prevent the release of presidential papers. The order infuriated historians, and an effort to overturn it is underway in Congress.

Kavanaugh was also at the center of efforts to prevent Congress from getting access to Clinton's pardon records and to documents related to the 1996 Clinton fundraising investigation. He's found himself at the center of Bush's judicial selections and a fight with the Senate Governmental Affairs committee over the administration's Enron documents. And he is involved in the liability provisions in the terrorism insurance legislation that have set off a fight on Capitol Hill.

Still, Kavanaugh finds time to speak at occasional gathering of the Federalist Society, a club of elite conservative lawyers. But for those who see that as evidence he's an ideologue, Kavanaugh also belongs to the American Bar Association -- the organization Kavanaugh's office has removed from the judicial selection process.

Mark Tuohey, who as a Starr deputy in 1994 and 1995 hired Kavanaugh, said he's "never viewed Brett as somebody of ideolog ical purity. I always felt very comfortable that Brett looked at things through a legal prism, not a political prism." Still, said Tuohey, a Vinson & Elkins partner and self-described Democrat, it would be hard to say that the a nti-Clinton work Kavanaugh did for Starr is ideologically consistent with the p ro-Bush work he's now doing. "I think it's a stretch," Tuohey said.

After college and law school at Yale, Kavanaugh clerked for federal appellate judge Alex Kozinski and Supreme Court Justice An thony M. Kennedy, and worked briefly at President George H.W. Bush's Justice De partment. In between and after stints on the Whitewater investigation, Kavanaug h spent about three years at Starr's firm, Kirkland & Ellis.

For Starr, Kavanaugh went to the Supreme Court in the Foster case, arguing, unsuccessfully, that the lawyer-client confidentia lity expires at death. He represented Starr in efforts to get Hillary Clinton's notes related to the Foster matter, to get lawyer Bruce Lindsey's notes in the Lewinsky affair, and to get testimony from Secret Service agents. His greatest fame, though, came as an author of the Starr report -- the legal piece, not th e explicit narrative.

In the White House, Kavanaugh developed an exec utive order related to the Presidential Records Act, giving former presidents a nd their families more power to prevent the release of presidential papers. The order infuriated historians, and an effort to overturn it is underway in Congr ess.

Kavanaugh was also at the center of efforts to prevent Congress from getting access to Clinton's pardon records and to documen ts related to the 1996 Clinton fundraising investigation. He's found himself at the center of Bush's judicial selections and a fight with the Senate Governmen tal Affairs committee over the administration's Enron documents. And he is invo lved in the liability provisions in the terrorism insurance legislation that ha ve set off a fight on Capitol Hill.

Still, Kavanaugh finds time to speak at occasio nal gathering of the Federalist Society, a club of elite conservative lawyers. But for those who see that as evidence he's an ideologue, Kavanaugh also belong s to the American Bar Association -- the organization Kavanaugh's office has re moved from the judicial selection process.

You may recall that the attachment circulated with this LRM had contained two amendments for your consideration -- the first, an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the second, the other a less extensive 7page amendment. FYI, we now understand that S. 2483, as amended by the second (7 page) amendment will is the version of the bill that the Senate Small Business Committeee will seek to bring before the full Senate.

makes the point somewhat re the dispute with terrorism insurance.

_____Forward Header_____

REVIEW & OUTLOOK
Irrational Legal Exuberance

Last week's Nobel Prize for economics was shared by Daniel Kahneman for work exploring irrational decision-making. It will surprise no one that one of Mr.
Kahneman's current interests has been, to quote the second line of a recent paper, "to investigate the sources of arbitrariness in punitive damage awards."

The academic community has pretty much come to a consensus that the system produces crazy results. In a criminal case, the jury's job is limited to deciding a single issue, guilt or innocence, and this works fine. Forcing the same citizens to make open-ended, contextless decisions on punitive damages is a recipe for capriciousness, and that's exactly what study after study has found.

Even liberal scholars like Cass Sunstein (one of Mr. Kahneman's co-authors) have joined the chorus for reform, though chances remain thin as long as trial lawyers -- er, Democrats -- control the U.S. Senate. Last week a long-awaited terrorism insurance bill was hung up once again over Democratic insistence that trial lawyers be allowed to seek punitive damages against building owners or airlines or other companies that are victims of terrorist attacks. Meanwhile, the courts are struggling to make sense of existing cases.

In the term just begun, the U.S. Supreme Court will hear an appeal of a Utah jury award in favor of a policyholder who caused a car crash and who sued State Farm for refusing to settle a case brought by the victim. State Farm eventually paid $186,000 to the man's victim, but a jury still awarded the policyholder $145 million in punitive damages for the aggravation of having to sue his insurance company.

Or take another case that provides a window into jury deliberations. It involves a rollover accident in a secondhand, 15-year-old Ford Bronco, driven by a teenager who had been driving all night and swerved to miss another vehicle. The Bronco's roof greatly exceeded federal safety standards for passenger cars (there was no standard for light trucks at the time), yet a jury found Ford was 78% at fault for the deaths of three passengers and awarded $290 million in punitive damages.

The trial judge immediately threw out the finding and ordered a new trial amid clear signs of juror misconduct. One juror had repeatedly cited evidence not presented in the trial, and a second juror admitted to making up her mind largely on the basis of a dream. Both jurors were crucial to reaching the necessary two-thirds majority to produce the tainted result. Even so, a California appeals court second-guessed the trial judge and upheld the original $290 million. Ford is now appealing to the California Supreme Court.

It's true that punitive damages constitute less than 5% of total awards, and some argue we'd be better off trying to bring order to pain-and-suffering awards, which exhibit nearly as much random variation but account for about half of all money awarded. The risk of unpredictable punitive awards, however, is what drives corporate defendants to settle even bogus cases. That's why the plaintiffs' bar loves punitive damages. The zenith of absurdity was last month's $28 billion award in the case of a smoker who, despite the urgings of her loved ones and doctor, persisted in a two-pack-a-day habit, saying she was an "adult."

Hardly anyone doesn't recognize the need for tort reform, with the exception of Ralph Nader, the trial lawyers and their Senate chattels. Punitive damages is an obvious place to start bringing rationality back into the legal system. Is anyone in the Bush Administration still interested?

Mike --

I wanted to follow up on our conversation concerning Nicholas Calio's travel to speak at the Business-Government Relations Council (BGRC). The TEFOS form as submitted stated the nature of the meeting was "political." However, in our discussion, you indicated that in fact it was not a partisan event and he was speaking in his official capacity to the attendees to give a legislative update. A review of the the draft agenda indicates that members from both parties are invited/attending and presenting on panels. The box for "political" was checked for no particular reason. There was no indication that the trip is in fact political as defined in the relevant regulations. See 5 CFR 2635.204(f) (political activity is taking active part in in political management or political campaigns); 41 CFR 304-1.8(a)(2) (exempting from official travel regulations travel performed for "partisan rather than an official purpose").

We did not find the "Business-Government Relations Council" listed as a "political organization," see http://eforms.irs.gov/search_result.asp , in IRS records of filings of political organizations. In our conversation you indicated that in fact you did not believe that the BGRC was a political organization.

Based on our conversation and further review of facts, I changed the nature of the trip from "political" to "official" with your agreement. Please confirm with Mr. Calio that the trip is in fact official and the facts stated above are correct. If in fact the trip is "political", please let me know immediately as we may have to address additional issues.

Please call me if you have any questions at 456-7909.

The Honorable John F. Kerry
Chairman
Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The purpose of this letter is to express the U. S. Small Business Administration's (SBA) concerns with S. 2483, the National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act of 2002 as Senator Bond proposes to amend it.

As I previously stated in my letter of July 23, 2002, regarding S. 2483, the Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) are already legislatively mandated to provide regulatory training and counseling, and a number of SBA's other functions to small businesses. The Office of Advocacy and the Ombudsman, also fulfill parts of the role envisioned by the proposed legislation. We remain concerned that the legislation, as amended, continues to appear to create for the SBDCs a role that is unnecessarily duplicative of their existing mandate and of other Federal functions. The proposal would authorize an additional $5 million annually for the SBDC program, and given current budget constraints, it is difficult for SBA to support additional appropriations for the SBDC program to fund activities most of which are already authorized to be conducted either by the SBDCs or by other entities.

S. 2483, as amended, also raises liability concerns, as I discussed in my previous letter. There are legal issues of potential liability for the grantees and SBA if an SBDC or affiliate gives wrong regulatory compliance advice to a small business resulting in loss, penalty, fine, or criminal indictment of the business. Furthermore, issues of confidentiality and privacy are also raised since provisions in the act would permit the grantees to withhold information on the substance of the counseling, as well as the businesses and entrepreneurs counseled using Federal funds appropriated to the SBA.

Thank you for the opportunity to express my concerns with S.2483 as amended.

Sincerely,

Hector V. Barretto
Administrator

Cc: The Honorable Christopher S. Bond

It is highly unlikely that conference will delete the provisions on blocked assets based on comments by Senator Dodd and Rep. Oxley tonight. Therefore, Dr. Rice should be prepared to call them (and Sen.
Sarbanes) and make the case against the provisions -- but also then say that, at a minimum, the President needs the ability to waive these provisions in his appropriate, cabined discretion. She should be prepared then to propose and discuss the compromise language that Jock has given to me (and Matt). Matt, please let us know if you have any additional insights.

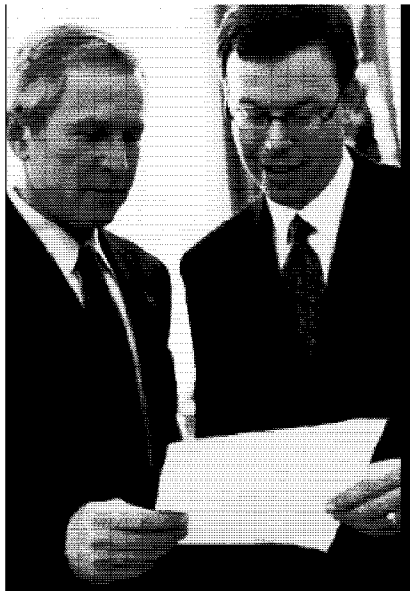
Fighting For Missouri Jobs And Missouri Families

■ As Chairman of the Small Business Committee, Jim succeeded in building bipartisan support on legislation that resulted in job creation, tax relief and economic growth.



■ Jim is committed to helping create jobs and protecting our economic security by allowing workers and families to keep more of what they earn. He supports a permanent repeal of the death tax and marriage penalty.

Jim Talent Fights For Missouri First

■ Jim is an author of the historic, bipartisan Welfare Reform bill that became law in 1996. That law has helped millions of people move from government dependency into jobs and self-sufficiency.

How Can We Give Missouri Families Economic Security And Keep Our Schools And Neighborhoods Safe?

REV_00152969

Jim Talent

Missouri Families First Plan

Jim Talent has a real plan for Missouri families.

His plan is built on the simple premise: everything government does or does not do today, gets passed on to our children and grandchildren.

Jim Talent's plan asks more from government. Safe schools and neighborhoods, affordable quality health care, jobs and economic security.

Jim's Plan: Restoring A Sense Of Security To Our Neighborhoods

■ Jim Talent has a plan to make help make our neighborhoods safe again. Jim's plan recognizes we need new ideas that come from parents, policy makers, community leaders and law enforcement to prevent the victimization of children.

■ Congressman Jim Talent co-sponsored Aimee's Law to make sure that those convicted of murder, rape or child molestation actually go to jail. And, he led the fight to increase the number of police officers on the street and fought for mandatory prison time for anyone who uses a gun in a crime.

■ He led efforts to stop domestic violence and he co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, which allocated $3.6 billion for shel ters and sexual assault prevention programs.

■ Jim voted for Project Exile providing $100 million to states to fight gun violence and would require mandatory prison time for violent offenders who use a gun in the commission of a crime.

A Compassionate Plan To Improve Education

■ Jim supports increased funding, restoring accountability and returning local control to Missouri's public schools. He understands parents and teachers know what's best for kids.

■ Jim believes every child deserves to learn in a safe environment. He continues to fight for legislation to protect students and teachers.

National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) and the St. Louis Police Fraternal Organization (SLPFO) have endorsed Talent's plan to put more police on the street.

A Proven Record On Health Care

■ Jim Talent's mother lost her battle with breast cancer, so his plan is dedicated to initiatives increasing access to quality health care for women and children.

■ Over 40 million men, women and children go uninsured each year. Jim's plan expands health care access to millions of those currently uninsured – by giving them access to quality health care at no cost to the taxpayer.

■ Jim was an original co-sponsor of the Patients' Bill of Rights and led the bipartisan fight to provide access to quality, affordable health care and hold insurance companies accountable.

■ Jim's Missouri First Health Security Initiative provides affordable health care for Missouri's working families, improves health care for women and children and provides an immediate Medicare prescription drug benefit.

Paid for by the Missouri Republican Party, Harvey Tettlebaum, Treasurer.

No, Justice did not opine, but Treasury informally advises strong support for H.R. 5603 - To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to suspend the tax-exempt status of designated terrorist organizations, and for other purposes.

Treasury has some concerns with H.R. 5596 - To amend section 527 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to eliminate notification and return requirements for State and local party committees and candidate committees and avoid duplicate reporting by certain State and local political committees of information required to be reported and made publicly available under State law, and for other purposes. The concern is that the bill would impose administrative burden on the IRS.
However, the concerns would not raise to the level of a veto threat.

1. This bill will significantly improve the legal system. It gets all cases into a single federal court for pre-trial and trial proceedings. That important procedure will prevent the conflicting rulings, home cooking, forum shopping, and outrageous verdicts and judgments that the tort system produces every day in local courts around the country.

2. The final deal is an improvement from the Senate bill, which did NOT have consolidation (contrary to popular belief).

3. We would have preferred to improve the legal system even more, particularly with respect to existing state laws on punitive damages, but ultimately the choice was between no bill and accepting only the improvements described above. Given the importance of this bill to the economy, and given the indisputable fact that this bill will improve the legal system, the President decided to seek a bill, help American workers and the economy, and improve the legal system.

4. We sought a ban on punitive damages, as the President often stated, and we are disappointed that there is not such a ban. But the Senate leadership was willing to kill the bill rather than accept any positive provision on punitives. The President was not willing to kill the bill so long as the bill improved the legal system, which this bill clearly will do.

Background: Without the bill, state laws on liability, damages, and punitives would apply. With the bill, state laws on liability, damages, and punitives will apply, but in a single federal court that will hear all cases. No one can credibly say that the bill worsens existing law on liability, damages, or punitive damages.

Missouri Families First Plan

Jim Talent has a real plan for Missouri families.

His plan is built on the simple premise: everything government does or does not do today, gets passed on to our children and grandchildren.

Jim Talent's plan asks more from government. Safe schools and neighborhoods, affordable quality health care, jobs and economic security.

Jim's Plan: Restoring A Sense Of Security To Our Neighborhoods

■ Jim Talent has a plan to make help make our neighborhoods safe again. Jim's plan recognizes we need new ideas that come from parents, policy makers, community leaders and law enforcement to prevent the victimization of children.

■ Congressman Jim Talent co-sponsored Aimee's Law to make sure that those convicted of murder, rape or child molestation actually go to jail. And, he led the fight to increase the number of police officers on the street and fought for mandatory prison time for anyone who uses a gun in a crime.

■ He led efforts to stop domestic violence and he co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, which allocated $3.6 billion for shel ters and sexual assault prevention programs.

■ Jim voted for Project Exile providing $100 million to states to fight gun violence and would require mandatory prison time for violent offenders who use a gun in the commission of a crime.

A Compassionate Plan To Improve Education

■ Jim supports increased funding, restoring accountability and returning local control to Missouri's public schools. He understands parents and teachers know what's best for kids.

■ Jim believes every child deserves to learn in a safe environment. He continues to fight for legislation to protect students and teachers.

National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) and the St. Louis Police Fraternal Organization (SLPFO) have endorsed Talent's plan to put more police on the street.

A Proven Record On Health Care

■ Jim Talent's mother lost her battle with breast cancer, so his plan is dedicated to initiatives increasing access to quality health care for women and children.

■ Over 40 million men, women and children go uninsured each year. Jim's plan expands health care access to millions of those currently uninsured – by giving them access to quality health care at no cost to the taxpayer.

■ Jim was an original co-sponsor of the Patients' Bill of Rights and led the bipartisan fight to provide access to quality, affordable health care and hold insurance companies accountable.

■ Jim's Missouri First Health Security Initiative provides affordable health care for Missouri's working families, improves health care for women and children and provides an immediate Medicare prescription drug benefit.

judicial nominations and confirmation; we would like to have you and one other Associate White House Counsel participate in this session. The session is scheduled for Nov. 8, Friday, 9:00-11:30. It would be great if you could come, and your input on who else would be good to invite would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks.

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General Washington, D.C. 20530

The Honorable Lamar Smith
Chairman
Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, and Homeland Security
Committee on the Judiciary
U. S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Thank you for your letter regarding the creation of the Federal Crime Victims Fund under the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 ("VOCA") (42 U.S.C.§ 10601(b)). The first part of this letter responds to your request for an accounting of the monies in excess of the $535 million cap that are not distributed to State victims' assistance programs. In this part, we also respond to related questions concerning the Crime Victims Fund following our recent meetings. The second part of this letter responds to your request for the views of the Department of Justice on S. 783, the "Crime Victims Assistance Act of 2001," and H.R. 1092, a bill "[t]o ensure that amounts in the Victims of Crime Fund are fully obligated."

A. RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE CRIME VICTIMS FUND AND THE FEASIBILITY OF REMOVING THE CAP

1. What is the Crime Victims Fund and how does it support programs for crime victims?

The Crime Victims Fund (the Fund) collects fines from Federal criminal cases, bond forfeitures, and penalty assessments. The Department of Justice (DOJ) is responsible for prosecuting criminals and for collecting the payment of fines. The Administrative Office of the United States Courts (AOUSC) also is responsible for collecting money from offenders through the Clerks of Court, and for providing financial information on the Fund deposits, which are held by the United States Treasury. The Department's Debt Collection Management staff and Executive Office for United States Attorneys Financial Litigation track and report overall debt collection activities for the Fund.

The Office for Victims of Crime (OVC) administers deposits into the Fund. These collections are available for obligation and expenditure by OVC during the fiscal year following their collection. The Fund supports five program areas outlined in VOCA: crime victim compensation; crime victim assistance; Children's Justice Act program; national scope training and technical assistance; and, services to victims of Federal crimes. In addition, a small portion of the Fund supports an Antiterrorism Emergency Reserve fund administered by OVC to provide compensation to victims of international terrorism and to provide assistance to States and communities in the aftermath of a terrorist attack or incident involving mass violence.

Recent appropriation acts have established three earmarks on the Fund to: 1) support victim witness coordinator and advocate positions for the 93 United States Attorney Offices; 2) support victim specialist positions in the FBI; and 3) maintain a Federal victim notification system.

2. Why is there a cap on amounts that can be expended from the Crime Victims Fund?

An independent statutory limitation on Fund obligations first was imposed by the FY 2000 DOJ appropriations act, after deposits into the Fund increased by more than 200 percent in FY 1999, jumping from $324 million to $985 million in a single year. More than half of total deposits in FY 1999 were attributable to the payment of a fine in a single case, United States v. F. Hoffman-La Roche, Ltd. The $500M cap on expenditures from the Fund in FY 2000 left $485.1M for obligation in subsequent fiscal years. The FY 2000 limitation on obligations still allowed an increase of $176 million (or 54 percent) above the amount available for grants from the Fund in FY 1999. The FY 2001 appropriations act continued the practice of limiting obligations from the Fund in that year, setting the cap at $537.5 million.

In FY 2000, a second extraordinary year of collections, approximately $776.9M was deposited in the Fund to support OVC programs during FY 2000. The FY 2000 "cap" of $537.5M provided an increase of $37.5 million for Crime Victims programs and left the remaining $239.4 million for future year obligations. The amounts collected but not available for obligation as a result of these annual caps represent a "rainy day" fund intended to offset fluctuations in deposits into the Crime Victims Fund. Consequently, the capping of these disbursements from the Fund ensures a level of consistency of funding, without which services to victims could suffer.

Example:In FY 2001, $544.4M was deposited into the Crime Victims Fund. The DOJ FY 2002 appropriations act, however, established a $550M cap to provide an incremental increase in funding available to support authorized programs. To fully realize the increase in fund availability, $5.6M was taken from the "rainy day" account to make-up the shortfall in current year Fund deposits.

3. How much money has been collected for the Crime Victims Fund since its inception?

From 1985, the first year deposits were made into the Crime Victims Fund, through 2001, a total of $5,017,349,583 has been collected. The chart below illustrates yearly Fund collections since 1985:

REV_00153029

Historical Crime Victim Fund Collections
(in millions)

1985	$68 M	1994	$185 M
1986	63 M	1995	234 M
1987	77 M	1996	529 M
1988	94 M	1997	363 M
1989	133 M	1998	324 M
1990	146 M	1999	985 M
1991	128 M	2000	777 M
1992	221 M	2001	544 M
1993	145 M	2002	635 M	(est)

Actual collections for FY 2002 through the end of April totaled $450,803,962.

4. Where does the money come from? What are the biggest sources of money?

The major portion of the Crime Victims Fund is derived from significant fines levied against corporations. For example, in 1996, the Fund received more than $29 million from Caremark, Inc., a home health care provider whose principals pleaded guilty to criminal charges stemming from its improper payment to doctors and other professionals to induce them to refer patients to Caremark. Other large fines include a payment of $15.25 million from C.R. Bard, Inc., for billing the Government for defective heart catheters; a fine of $12.8 million from Lockheed in a Foreign Corrupt Practices Act case involving bribery and the Egyptian government; a $13.5 million fine from the Iroquois Pipeline Operating Company; and a $340 million fine paid by Daiwa Bank following the settlement of its illegal trading fraud case.

5. What happens to amounts collected above the cap on the Crime Victims Fund?

Amounts collected above the cap on the Crime Victims Fund are held in reserve for future use in supporting programs authorized by the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (VOCA), 42.U.S.C. 10601 et. seq..

6. Are amounts awarded to States from the Crime Victims Fund fully expended by the end of the grant period?

VOCA authorizes States to expend funds over a four year period of time. For the most part, States do fully expend funds within that period. At the end of the four year funding cycle, however, a small amount typically is deobligated and returned to the Crime Victims Fund, or used at the discretion of the Director to replenish the Anititerroism Emergency Reserve, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 10601(e).

7. What would be the impact of removing the cap on the Crime Victims Fund?

Initially, removal of the cap on the Crime Victims Fund would mean that amounts collected in the year of the removal would be augmented by amounts previously collected but not yet available for expenditure. Hence, based on the average collections for the past three years ($768.8M) and the amount previously collected but not hitherto available for expenditure, the total amount available for obligation could be as much as $1.5B in the first fiscal year. States would have four years to expend their portion (which is nearly 90%) of these funds. Undoubtedly, this would represent a one time windfall in funding. An unprecedented increase in collections in one fiscal year that is not sustained in a following fiscal year well may put States in the position of having to "retool" their infrastructures to handle a sudden influx of funds, only to find themselves having to wind down or eliminate these services the following year. States would fund programs under the victim assistance program that they could potentially have insufficient funds to continue beyond the grant cycle. For States, this is an expensive process that can result in erratic hiring and firing of victim services staff. Further, this can put States in an untenable position of leaving victims without recourse when services that were funded in the preceding year cannot be offered in a succeeding year. Additionally, the complete exhaustion of the reserve would mean that in future years, if Crime Victim Fund collections were to decline, as they have since 1999, there would be no means to supplement collections to ensure an even flow of funds to support victim services.

8. Is there a reason to reserve amounts collected above the cap on the Crime Victims Fund?

The statutory limitation on obligations provides a tool for Congress and the President to ensure stability in the Fund for years in which deposits to the Fund may decline. Bountiful years permit reasonable growth in Crime Victims Programs, while also providing a cushion in the Fund that can be drawn upon when collections decline. We believe this strategy to be desirable because, as shown in the chart above, deposits into the Fund have declined in 5 of the last 16 years. The capping of monies from the Fund ensures a level of consistency in the funding provided to States for victim services. Without some consistency, victim services could suffer.

9. What is a reasonable option for addressing the demand for increased funding for victim services and responding to the desire for more measured spending?

The Department believes that the current system of fines deposited into the Crime Victims Fund and a cap on the fund to ensure stability of victim services provided is adequate to meet current demand. However, Congress could consider the addition of discretionary funding on top of the available funds in the Crime Victims Fund if increased demand exists.

B. VIEWS ON S. 783 AND H.R. 1092

1. S. 783

a. TITLE I - AMENDMENTS AFFECTING VICTIMS RIGHTS IN FEDERAL SYSTEM

REV_00153031

Title I of S. 783 contains a number of provisions aimed at granting rights to victims of crime at various stages of prosecution and punishment. The Administration strongly supports victims' rights and has endorsed S.J. Res. 35, a proposed amendment to the Constitution aimed at protecting the rights of victims of violent crime in both Federal and State proceedings. We understand that S. 783 preceded the development of S.J. Res. 35, the latter of which reflected a collaborative effort to address the needs of victims. Thus, we reiterate support of the constitutional amendment proposed by S.J. Res. 35, which can serve as a framework for the development of any statutes that might be necessary to implement it.

b. TITLE II - CREATION OF THREE NEW GRANT PROGRAMS

Title II of S. 783 would create three new crime victim grant programs, discussed hereafter in turn:

i. Pilot Programs to Enforce Compliance with State Crime Victim Rights Laws

Section 201 of S. 783 would create a new grant program to fund pilot programs to enforce compliance with State crime victim rights laws. We note that the Administration strongly supports a victims rights amendment to the Constitution, which would become a vehicle by which compliance with victim rights laws could be enforced. We believe that this approach to enforcement ultimately would provide a more consistent enforcement approach than individual State-by-State enforcement efforts.

But, if this new grant program were to be enacted, then we propose several modifications. First, this particular program vests grant-making authority in the "Attorney General, acting through the Director" of OVC. In all other current grant programs funded by OVC, the grant-making authority is directly vested in the Director of OVC. Similarly, the other two grant programs proposed as a part of S. 783 vest the grant making authority directly in the Director of OVC. For consistency, we suggest deleting "the Attorney General, acting through" in section 201(b)(1) and (b)(2)(A). Additionally, we suggest that Congress replace "the Attorney General" found in section 201(e) with "the Director".

Second, if enactment of this grant program were pursued, then we also recommend deleting "and" at the end of section 201(d)(2)(B) and inserting a new subparagraph, to read: "(D) representatives of nonprofit, nongovernmental domestic violence or sexual assault services providers; and". The compliance authority well may find it desirable to have such expertise, because a significant proportion of crime victims are victims of domestic violence or sexual assault. Also, many States provide additional rights to victims of domestic violence or sexual assault.

ii. Victim Notification Grant Program

Section 202 of S. 783 would create a second new grant program in VOCA (Victim Notification Grants) as section 1404D. This grant program would be funded under 1404(c)(1)(A) of VOCA and authorizes the OVC Director to make grants for demonstration projects, aid to victims of Federal crimes, and training and technical assistance services to eligible crime victim assistance programs. Because OVC already funds the Federal victim notification system, as a cost saving measure, any new grant program for this purpose should allow the States to tap into this Federal system, or replicate this existing system. Further, OVC would require compatibility of notification systems, where appropriate.

REV_00153032

iii. Restorative Justice Grants Program

Section 203 of S. 783 would create the third new grant program (Restorative Justice Grants) by adding section 1404E to VOCA. The Restorative Justice grant programs would be funded under 1404(c)(1)(A) of VOCA, which authorizes the OVC Director to make grants for demonstration projects, aid to victims of Federal crimes, and training and technical assistance services to eligible crime victim assistance programs.

As an initial matter, we do not support the use of resources dedicated for victim services for the promulgation of restorative justice projects, if only because such projects are offender centered, rather than victim centered. It is our opinion that, at a minimum, in instances of violent crimes, the concept of restorative justice may be designed to make the offender feel better about his actions, at the expense of the victim's well-being. Therefore, this grant program runs contrary to OVC's overarching purpose and mission.

In the event that enactment of this grant program were pursued, however, then section 203, which includes the proposed section 1404E(a) amendment to VOCA, should be amended to insert ", except that community-based restorative justice programs are not appropriate in cases involving violent crimes or crimes against persons, such as domestic violence, child abuse, elder abuse, or sexual assault" after "juvenile justice systems". As noted above, we believe restorative justice to be generally inappropriate in cases of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, or elder abuse, because in such cases one party often has controlled or intimidated the other, generally for a sustained period of time. Under such circumstances, even the most skilled mediator may be hard pressed to shift the balance of power, making restorative justice dangerous and highly questionable.

c. TITLE III - VOCA AMENDMENTS

Generally, these amendments already have been incorporated in the USA PATRIOT Act, which was enacted on October 26, 2001. We have examined the specific provisions of S. 783 that would amend VOCA, but currently are not enacted:

Section 301(b) of S. 783 would codify the existing cap on the amount of money available for obligation by the Director of OVC in any fiscal year.[1] Specifically, the bill would amend

[1]As background, we note that a similar provision to § 301(b) of S. 783 was previously enacted as § 621(b) of the USA PATRIOT Act, Pub. L. No. 107-56 on October 26, 2001. That Section 1402(c) of VOCA by requiring the Director to obligate at least 90%, but no more than 110%, of the total amount available from the preceding fiscal year. However, the formal codification of the cap under section 301(b) contrasts sharply with H.R. 1092's provisions removing the cap entirely.

Section 1 of H.R. 1092 would require the Director of OVC to obligate all sums collected into the Fund in a fiscal year during the subsequent fiscal year, and section 2 of the bill would mandate that any provision modifying this requirement specifically refer to new subsection 42 U.S.C. 10601(h)(1), and that the amending legislation specifically state that it supersedes that section. Thus, the effect of H.R. 1092 would be to remove the current cap on the amount of money that can be obligated in any fiscal year, a cap that traditionally has been set through the appropriations process.

Thus, the provisions in H.R. 1092 and S. 783 concerning capping the annual expenditures from the Crime Victims Fund contradict each other. We also strongly oppose provisions establishing a permanent floor and a ceiling for distribution of funds from the Crime Victims Fund. It is important that the Department have the flexibility to recommend this cap during the development of the budget each fiscal year, rather than having it established permanently in statute. This would allow the Department the flexibility to adjust the cap based on an annual review of actual collections and to minimize the effect of fluctuations in deposits on the availability of funds. Further, if both S. 783 and H.R. 1092 were enacted (on the grounds that they amend different sections of VOCA), OVC would be placed in the untenable position of being required to implement two contradictory legal mandates.

In addition, we recommend that existing limitations on the use of discretionary funds available for special projects at the discretion of the Director under section 1404(c) of VOCA be harmonized with the current limitations on obligations for the antiterrorism emergency reserve. This would allow greater flexibility for the OVC Director to direct limited funding to meet unexpected shifting priorities, should the need for prompt action to assist victims of Federal crimes arise. To accomplish this goal, we recommend insertion of the following new section into the bill:

"Sec. ___. Crime Victims Fund.

Section 1402(d)(5)(c) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 is amended by inserting 'and amounts available for grants pursuant to section 1404(c)' after "subparagraph (A)"."

This limitation on obligation periods would maintain a control over expenditures out of the fund, continue to provide for the necessary "rainy day fund," but would allow greater flexibility for OVC to respond to emerging best practices in the victim's field, while allowing greatest flexibility to respond to changing priorities.

2. H.R. 1092

Sections A and B(1)(c) of this letter discuss the implications of H.R. 1092 upon the Fund.

Thank you for the opportunity to present our views. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be of additional assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the perspective of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the submission of this letter.

President's Remarks on Judges 10/17/02 in Georgia

I'm for Saxby because he will help me make sure that the judges I nominate get a fair hearing and get confirmed. (Applause.) My job is to -- my job is to put good, honorable, hardworking, intelligent, capable people on the federal bench; people who will not use the bench to serve as a legislator, but people who will sit on the bench to strictly interpret the United States Constitution.

And the record of this Senate is a lousy record. (Applause.) If you look -- if you look at the record, the percentage of my nominees who have been approved and look at the reason why they haven't, you'll find that they're playing too much politics in Washington, D.C. (Applause.) They're slow playing the process. And when some of my really good nominees got a hearing, they distorted their records. They listened to the small groups of special interests in Washington, D.C. For the sake of a good, sound federal judiciary, I need a United States senator who will stand strong for my nominees, and that is Saxby Chambliss. (Applause.)

The Honorable John F. Kerry
Chairman
Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The purpose of this letter is to express the U. S. Small Business Administration's (SBA) concerns with S. 2483, the National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act of 2002 as Senator Bond proposes to amend it.

As I previously stated in my letter of July 23, 2002, regarding S. 2483, the Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) are already legislatively mandated to provide regulatory training and counseling, and a number of SBA's other functions to small businesses. The Office of Advocacy and the Ombudsman, also fulfill parts of the role envisioned by the proposed legislation. We remain concerned that the legislation, as amended, continues to appear to create for the SBDCs a role that is unnecessarily duplicative of their existing mandate and of other Federal functions. The proposal would authorize an additional $5 million annually for the SBDC program, and given current budget constraints, it is difficult for SBA to support additional appropriations for the SBDC program to fund activities most of which are already authorized to be conducted either by the SBDCs or by other entities.

S. 2483, as amended, also raises liability concerns, as I discussed in my previous letter. There are legal issues of potential liability for the grantees and SBA if an SBDC or affiliate gives wrong regulatory compliance advice to a small business resulting in loss, penalty, fine, or criminal indictment of the business. Furthermore, issues of confidentiality and privacy are also raised since provisions in the act would permit the grantees to withhold information on the substance of the counseling, as well as the businesses and entrepreneurs counseled using Federal funds appropriated to the SBA.

Thank you for the opportunity to express my concerns with S.2483 as amended.

Sincerely,

Hector V. Barretto
Administrator

This is too negative. Be upbeat that we got a deal that will help the economy, workers, and the legal system. Not as much as we would have liked, to be sure.

draft response from karl to hank greenberg:

Dear Hank:

Oakley passed on your views regarding liability provisions in the terrorism insurance bill. Thank you for the note) and for the strong show of support. As you know, we did not get everything we hoped for in terms of liability limits. We fought the good fight, but in the end we could not persuade the other side to accept a bill over the objection of the trial bar. We decided, ultimately, that the bill was too important to the economy, even in the scaled-back version. Perhaps, under better circumstances, we can revisit the issue.

Best wishes,

I know this was not your preferred position - but below is exactly what I was afraid of. It will undermine all future talks.
Lawmakers, White House Agree On Terrorism Insurance
After innumerable false starts and a year's worth of dickering, negotiators on terrorism reinsurance reached a final legislative agreement today that has been given the green light by leading House and Senate conferees and the White House. Sources said that drafting had begun and that the negotiators would scramble to coll ect enough signatures on the conference report in time to have the measure approved by unanimous consent in the Senate today. Leadership sources confirmed that the deal was brokered after a marathon bargaining session that stretched from Wednesday night to early this afternoon. Sources said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., House Financial Services Chairman Oxley, their aides, and White House negotiators hammered out the final deal. Dodd worked into the early morning hours alongside his staff, and Oxley was i n attendance for a portion of the evening, sources said.. The negotiators were expected to issue an official announcement about the terms of the deal after presstime today.
The House and Senate negotiators and White House officials agreed late Wednesday night that they would get rid of their dispute over what evidentiary standard to apply to the awarding of punitive damages against property owners implicated in terror-related lawsuits by simply eliminating any reference to punitive damages in the con ference report, sources said today. That agreement was reached several hours after the House left town for the November election. The Senate bill was silent on punitive damages associated with terror-related lawsuits brought against businesses. The House bill contained a raft of changes, including the barring of any collective punitive damages. Congressional sources said negotiators in the room Wednesday night agreed to retain only the language common to both the House and Senate bills consolidating terror-related cases in federal court. The economic side of the bill is expected to be a melding of the House and Senate versions and White House perspectives.

Remarks by President on Miguel Estrada to United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce 10/17/02

. . . Rosario mentioned my appointments to my government. I am proud to serve many, many exceptional Hispanic Americans. One of my jobs is to put the best people in the right jobs in every branch of government. I've done so in the Executive Branch, and I'll do so in the Judiciary Branch, as well. Right now the Senate Judiciary Committee is now considering a friend of mine, a guy named Mike -- Miguel Estrada.
He's my nominee for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. If confirmed, he'll be the first Hispanic ever to serve on this important court.

No one can deny that he's well-qualified. No one can deny he's a great lawyer and that he's highly skilled. Yet, unfortunately, there are senators who play politics with Miguel Estrada's nomination. There are senators searching for any reason to defeat him.

I call upon the Senate leadership to treat Miguel Estrada with dignity and respect, and to bring his nomination up for the full Senate to confirm him before they adjourn.

He's an American success story. He's an inspiration to many Americans. And he'll be an outstanding judge. . . .

~~Dear~~To Members of the House Republican Leadership:

~~I am writing on~~On behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the world's largest business ~~federation,~~federation representing more than three million businesses and organizations of every size, sector and region, I write to urge you to support the proposed terrorism insurance compromise negotiated today and to explain why we strongly support the liability provisions of the proposed terrorism insurance compromise.

It is vital that the Congress pass this legislation before adjourning for the year. The economy has lost more than $15 billion and 300,000 jobs in the construction industry alone as a result of a lack of terrorism insurance coverage. ~~This~~We expect this legislation ~~would~~to provide a much needed ~~n almost instantaneous~~boost to the economy, providing jobs to hundreds of thousands of workers across the country.

Although the U.S. Chamber would have preferred more extensive litigation management provisions, ~~even simply~~ providing a federal cause of action and consolidation of claims has significant benefits:

- First, without this legislation, and the federal cause of action that it provides, businesses would have absolutely NO protection from predatory lawsuits that result from any future terrorist incident – they would still face forum shopping and multiple claims in state ~~courts, home cooking, and forum~~ courts; courts known for rendering outrageous awards.
- ~~shopping across the country;~~
- Second, having these trials in federal court will provide consistent rulings, fair procedures for both plaintiffs and defendants, and~~yet will still~~ provide for the use of ~~state law, so that if a state bans punitive damages, that ;~~ relevant state laws that ban or otherwise limit the availability of punitive damages;
- Third, this legislation will prevent a "rush to the court-house," which ~~gives~~would otherwise give early lawsuit filers an advantage over later claimants~~, and gives them the potential ability to bankrupt a defendant, leaving other claimants without any recourse to compensation~~; and
- ~~Finally,~~Fourth, the proposal represents an improvement over the Senate bill, which did not contain consolidation for trial purposes. This provision will significantly reduce administrative and legal costs, reduce~~ing~~ redundant, repetitive and costly discovery, and will enable both plaintiffs and defendants to deal with only one trial, rather than multiple trials with potentially~~repetitive trials with~~ inconsistent outcomes~~, discouraging settlements and encouraging lawsuits~~.

~~Without this bill, state laws on liability, damages, including punitive damages, will apply, and state court judges would preside over decisions. With the legislation, state laws on liability, damages and punitive damages will apply, but in a single federal court with a federal judge presiding. There are 21 states with laws addressing punitive damages, from Virginia, which prohibits punitive damages, to other states that cap recoveries.~~

Of course, we would have preferred to improve the legal system even more, particularly with respect to punitive damages. However, these improvements are substantial, which will add some needed momentum to the economy and is far preferable to no improvements~~. and nobill.~~

~~Further, given the importance of this bill to the economy, and the fact~~bill. Ultimately we believe that this bill will improve the legal rights of both plaintiffs and ~~defendants, we believe that this legislation, which~~defendants and, importantly will help American workers and the economy~~, is preferable to no action~~.

Considering the negative impacts on the economy that doing nothing will entail, moving a bill that backstops ~~reinsures and provides for federal court proceedings is preferable to continued stalemate with Senate Democrats resulting in continued harm to the economy.~~ reinsurers and provides for exclusive federal court jurisdiction and consolidation is preferable to a continued stalemate. In short, it is the U.S. Chamber's view that this proposed solution is preferable to no action and that it should be enacted into law.

Sincerely,

R. Bruce Josten

Not sure the DoJ Reauth bill is "bill signing ceremony material". Will called me on this as well. Keep in mind that we'd have to invite Leahy to that event if we were to do it (it was his bill).

The Pledge bill is a Tim Hutchinson bill, and would make for a great signing ceremony here or on the road. SC, AR, GA are all good locations to highlight the reasons why the Pledge bill was needed (left-wing activist judges) and the fact that the President is committed to making sure common sense judges are put on the bench... obviously, then highlighting the fact that the Dem controlled Senate has impeded his efforts.

I sent an email to Nick earlier today suggesting signing ceremony for the Pledge bill.

Will Maschella of Sensenbrenner's staff just called me with suggestion for signing ceremonies for pledge of allegiance bill and DOJ reauthorization (which has new dct judgeships in it).

On the judgeships, the President likely would mention these new judgeships as part of the larger judges event now tentatively slated (which may not occur, however, until after election). On the Pledge resolution, not sure what we are doing, but I raise it for you all. In any event, on both, we should obviously include and praise Sensenbrenner.

Coddy,

Anything on our slate card yet?

On another matter, Franklin County (Columbus) would like to send out the attached slate. The photo of the POTUS on the cover was taken by the local Republican Party at a Franklin County event some time ago. Is this ok to print? Just thought we should check since this too will have our

CQ MONITOR NEWS
POLITICS & ELECTIONS
Section 527 PACs Can Avoid Some Disclosure Requirements
By Derek Willis, CQ Staff Writer
Oct. 16, 2002 - The House on Wednesday passed by voice vote a bill (HRÿ 5596) that eliminates some recordkeeping and filing requirements for political committees organized under Section 527 of the Internal Revenue Code.
ÿÿÿÿThe bill, introduced Oct. 10 by Rep. Kevin Brady , R-Texas, would permit state and local 527 organizations to avoid federal disclosure requirements if the same information is reported and publicly available under state law.
ÿÿÿÿThe measure was cosponsored by Rep. Lloyd Doggett, D-Texas, the author of a 2000 measure (PL 106-230) that set reporting requirements for 527 groups, which became known as "stealth PACs" during the 2000 presidential campaign.
ÿÿÿÿGroups formed under Section 527 previously had no disclosure requirements, and the legislation was intended to shed light on political groups that were spending money to influence federal elections, but not expressly advocating a candidate.
ÿÿÿÿBrady%s bill also had the support of Reps. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., and Martin T. Meehan, D-Mass., the cosponsors of a campaign finance overhaul law (HRÿ2356 - PLÿ107-155).
ÿÿÿÿBrady and David Vitter, R-La., had pressed for passage of the bill, saying that small political committees were being forced to disclose information to the IRS even though most of them had no role in federal elections.

ÿÿÿÿÿAn earlier proposal by Brady was placed in a broader tax measure (HRÿ 3991) that failed to pass the House under suspension of the rules on April 10.

Subject: Re: Sensenbrenner/judges/pledge

Not sure the DoJ Reauth bill is "bill signing ceremony material". Will called me on this as well. Keep in mind that we'd have to invite Leahy to that event if we were to do it (it was his bill).

The Pledge bill is a Tim Hutchinson bill, and would make for a great signing ceremony here or on the road. SC, AR, GA are all good locations to highlight the reasons why the Pledge bill was needed (left-wing activist judges) and the fact that the President is committed to making sure common sense judges are put on the bench... obviously, then highlighting the fact that the Dem controlled Senate has impeded his efforts.

I sent an email to Nick earlier today suggesting signing ceremony for the Pledge bill.

Subject: Sensenbrenner/judges/pledge

Will Maschella of Sensenbrenner's staff just called me with suggestion for signing ceremonies for pledge of allegiance bill and DOJ reauthorization (which has new dct judgeships in it).

On the judgeships, the President likely would mention these new judgeships as part of the larger judges event now tentatively slated (which may not occur, however, until after election). On the Pledge resolution, not sure what we are doing, but I raise it for you all. In any event, on both, we should obviously include and praise Sensenbrenner.

Coddy,

Anything on our slate card yet?

On another matter, Franklin County (Columbus) would like to send out the attached slate. The photo of the POTUS on the cover was taken by the local Republican Party at a Franklin County event some time ago. Is this ok to print? Just thought we should check since this too will have our disclaimer.

Thanks,
Shane

that's good. does leg think it would be helpful for the secretary to put our line in his speech? i.e. we're pleased with the progress that's been made to pass terrorism insurance, confident that there we'll have broad bipartisan support for the agreeemnt, important that congress act quickly on this when they return because it's so important to jobs.....

Brett:

You may recall that in late July/early August, we answered a complaint by Judicial Watch seeking under FOIA documents relating to the anthrax attacks from the Secret Service, CDC, and the Office of Administration. We anticipate that the Court will soon issue a scheduling order. Secret Service has now released its responsive documents, and CDC has searched for and located its responsive documents. Would you be able to check with OA to find out the status and likely completion date of its search?

5 CFR 734.502(a) provides that individuals employed in the Executive Office of the President (such as Ken) and Senate-confirmed officials may engage in political activity while on duty and in their offices. The specific example given in that section is as follows: an official within these 2 categories may hold a partisan political meeting or reception in a government office. (Note that no fundraisers may be held in government office buildings.)

Moreover, as a general matter, it is perfectly appropriate for Ken to participate in policy/political briefings with people around the country who support the President's agenda.

Brett-

Once you identify names that will be included would you mind sending them to me and/or Andrew? I would imagine that the names you suggest to be included in remarks are the President's judicial nominees and may not really need to be vetted. If that is indeed the case please let Andrew know so he doesn't go to the trouble of researching them.

Thanks!

Dear Friend,

During my more than 35 years of public service, I have sought to increase the involvement of women in the workplace and the political process. I am so proud that while Secretary of Transportation, 62% of my workforce was comprised of women and minorities. Again, bringing people just like you into leadership positions and promoting greater participation of women in government has been at the center of my career.

Throughout my travels across North Carolina, I have had an opportunity to meet with many wonderful teachers. Teachers undertake a noble calling to prepare our youth for the future. I have listened to their concerns about education and the concerns of parents as well. If elected to serve as your US Senator, education will be one of my top priorities.

First Lady Laura Bush also has a passion for education. Mrs. Bush serves as a comforting force to our country, a role model, and an advocate for women and children. I am truly honored that the First Lady is coming to our great state to address us. It is my hope that you will be able to join me and Laura for what promises to be a memorable evening.

I know that the power of women helping women should never be underestimated. Looking forward to seeing you and with heartfelt thanks for your support,

You are cordially invited to dinner with

Laura Bush
First Lady of the United States

Elizabeth Dole

my only concern would be that inviting them could let the cat out of the bag w/current Members on the Hill, who would then want to be invited or informed about the event earlier than we want to inform them. I suppose if the invitation didn't specify the content of the President's speech, it might be okay. If they are only told that it's a event to call for the fair treatment of judicial nominees no matter who's in control in the Sen. and WH, we would be okay.

The plane did NOT have a presidential seal on it. I don't want anyone make sense for you to call them the State?

Card comes back to S.C. to stump for Graham

By VALERIE BAUERLEIN
Staff Writer

When Andrew Card arrived in Columbia as a freshman at USC, he came on the train from Massachusetts, carrying a trunk and a duffel bag in the August heat.

"By the time I got up to the Horseshoe, I was a sweaty young man," Card said.

A lot has changed in 30 years.

When Card arrived in Columbia on Wednesday, he came on a chartered plane, carrying the presidential seal. Card is the White House chief of staff and one of President Bush's closest advisers.

He was in town to raise money and build momentum for Lindsey Graham, the Republican nominee for U.S. Senate.

"I am here because I care about South Carolina and the values that the people of South Carolina have," Card said.

Graham has conservative credentials that match the state, Card said, and a voice that Bush needs in Congress. The U.S. Senate is narrowly divided, with 50 Democrats, 49 Republicans and one independent. Bush needs help pushing his agenda through Congress, Card said.

But Card also said he came to visit because he relished his time here.

Card graduated from USC with a degree in engineering in 1971. He got married while he was a student, and had two of his three children here. He worked throughout college, delivering newspapers and managing the McDonald's near Fort Jackson.

During USC's homecoming festivities this month, the Carolina Alumni Association honored him as one its most distinguished graduates.

"I'm living proof that you can be not the most distinguished student and still be a distinguished alumnus," Card said.

After graduation, Card returned to Massachusetts where he was elected to the state legislature. He got to know the Bush family and worked in both the Reagan and the first Bush administrations, including a stint as transportation secretary. He was a lobbyist through most of the Clinton administration in the 1990s before going to work for George W. Bush.

Card, 55, said that while his life has changed since he was a student, so has Columbia and so have South Carolina politics.

When Card started school in the late 1960s, Democrat Fritz Hollings had just been elected to the U.S. Senate, Strom Thurmond had just switched to the Republican Party and the late U.S. Rep. Floyd Spence was about the only other Republican in the state.

Joked Graham, a spry 47: "God, you are old."
Graham faces Democrat Alex Sanders in the Nov. 5 election.
"It's very unusual the way (Graham) so consistently hides behind his Washington, D.C., surrogates," said Sanders' campaign spokesman Chad Clanton. "Why doesn't he step out on his own and tell people why he wants to be their senator?"

We are negotiating still on that provision. As to the overall status, we have reached agreement with all of the Dem conferees, but some House Republicans are upset and are being worked on by Matt Kirk and Brian Conklin in Leg Affairs. We still expect passage when Congress returns, but that is not a sure thing because of some House R anger and the fact that some Members in both Houses all along thought the bill unnecessary.

Amy, the WH counsel's office asked me to alert OAG that the WH has tentatively scheduled an East Room presidential event for Tuesday at 1:40 to highlight the Senate's failure to confirm judges. If it continues to be scheduled, the AG (in addition to the DAG and Viet, among others) should receive an oral invitation tomorrow for the event.

These also were 10/24/02:

President's Remarks on Judges in North Carolina 10/24/02

And speaking about benches, another reason we need Elizabeth Dole in the Senate, besides the fact that she's going to do a great job for North Carolina, is I've got to have United States senators who will work with me to make sure our federal judiciary is strong. The record -- (applause.) I'm picking good people to be judges, good, solid, honorable people to be the judges on the federal judiciary; people who will strictly interpret the Constitution of the United States. Not people who will use the bench to write new legislation. (Applause.)

And the record of this United States Senate is a lousy record. (Applause.) They have politicized the process. They have distorted the records of many of our good candidates we put forward. They're playing petty politics with the candidates that I put up there. We're not getting a hearing fast enough. The percentage of judges is the worst in modern history, percentage of judges approved. And that's not right.

Let me tell you about one, Terry Boyle from North Carolina, I nominated for the 4th Circuit Court. I nominated him a long while ago. He can't even get a hearing. For the sake of a good, sound judiciary, we need to change the United States Senate, and you can start by electing Elizabeth Dole to the Senate. (Applause.)

TERRORISM INSURANCE:
THE HOBSON'S CHOICE FOR THE ADMINISTRATION
By Victor E. Schwartz*

People use the term "Hobson's Choice," but many do not know its origin. In England, a man named Hobson provided horse carriage service from one town to another. Customers were required to take the next horse in line, regardless of how unsuitable it appeared for travel; that was the only way passengers could move between towns.

Unfortunately, the Bush Administration recently faced such a "Hobson's Choice" with terrorism insurance legislation. If Administration officials were to have a bill that would help the economy and create jobs to help assure that there was full insurance against terrorism for business and property owners, they had to accede, at least in part, to the Senate Democratic leadership and the wealthy personal injury lobby.

As The Wall Street Journal has indicated, terrorism insurance legislation is necessary to assure that lenders can confidently loan money to businesses and property owners and start new projects. These projects would create meaningful jobs for hard-hat workers and help our economy when it needs it most.

Federal money is a prop for federal terrorism insurance. In light of that fact, reasonable liability limits should be placed on anyone's right to sue. Moreover, both common sense and the national interest suggest that if there is another tragedy, liability lawsuits should be limited to people's needs, not wealthy personal injury lawyer greed.

As the terrorism insurance legislation developed in the House of Representatives, meaningful liability reforms accompanied the proposal. Punitive damages were limited; joint and several liability limits were also imposed, so that a relatively innocent business did not pay for harm caused by terrorisms; and curbs were placed on contingency fees.

When it comes to limits on our liability system, the Senate is a very different body than the House. A wealthy personal injury lawyer, Fred Baron, has stated that the personal injury bar, in effect, "own the Senate." For that reason, the much-needed terrorism insurance bill has been held captive by both the Democratic leadership and the wealthy personal injury lawyers since December 2001.

The nation's economy has had greater needs in 2002, and the need for terrorism insurance and putting people back to work has become more urgent. Whether one was to have any liability limits in the Senate bill came down to choices. One choice was to fight for limits on punitive damages. While some Democrats, such as Senator Dodd (D-CT), supported sound reform in this area, the punitive damage proposals put forth by the Democratic leadership would have made a bad situation worse. What few people know is that some of those proposals, which set forth a standard for when punitive damages could be awarded, would have simultaneously created a right to bring punitive damage lawsuits in a number of states that presently do not have them.

In October 2002, it was clear that only one civil justice reform provision could be obtained in the terrorism bill. In light of this "devil's choice," created by the Democratic leadership in the Senate and their wealthy personal injury friends, the White House was faced with a difficult choice. It could have either a weak punitive damage standard or have all cases consolidated before a single federal judge in a single federal court. The White House chose the second option, and that was the wiser choice. This is why.

The single federal court provision awards one of the most serious problems in our civil justice system today – forum shopping by wealthy personal injury lawyers seeking to bring their cases in what personal injury lawyers themselves call "magic" jurisdictions. Others, such as the American Tort Reform Association, call the same jurisdictions "judicial hellholes." These include courts in certain jurisdictions which foster claims made by plaintiffs, however that might be obtained. In that regard, even if clear standards on punitive damages had existed in the terrorism bill, these courts would have likely ignored these federally mandated provisions, but stretch them to the edge to allow claims. In light of the Administration's "Hobson's Choice," these courts cannot be reached.

Again, this does not suggest that all Democrats block liability reform. Unless there is a change in the Senate leadership, this Administration will continue to be faced with "Hobson's Choices" when it comes to societal goals versus the desires of the wealthy personal injury bar. The Administration chose to put a jolt in the economy this time, and chose to create jobs. They also will confine claims brought by wealthy personal injury lawyers to a federal court. More was needed, but the choice for more was not attainable now.

U.S. May Ask Court to Dismiss a $1 Trillion Suit Linking Saudis to Al Qaeda and 9/11
By PHILIP SHENON

ASHINGTON, Oct. 24 ? The Bush administration is closely monitoring a private lawsuit accusing members of the Saudi royal family of ties to Al Qaeda, and may move in a federal court here to dismiss or delay the suit, which was brought by relatives of Sept. 11 victims, according to administration officials.

Advertisement

Government laywers, the officials said, are trying to determine whether the case threatens to damage Saudi-American relations, which would give them reason to block the suit. The suit seeks $1 trillion in damages and is being pursued here by nearly 3,000 of the relatives.

A State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he knew of no plans by the United States to take action in court, but he said the issue of the lawsuit had been raised in recent meetings of top American and Saudi officials.

"The Saudis have made their concerns known at a senior level," he said.

The legal team representing the families is led by one of the nation's leading plaintiff's lawyers, Ron Motley, of Charleston, S.C., who is best known for obtaining a landmark $350 billion settlement from the tobacco industry in the late 1990's.

"This has become a true mission for me," said Mr. Motley, whose folksy, country-lawyer style masks what adversaries have described as his ferociousness in pretrial maneuvering. "The individuals that we've sued faciliated the events of Sept. 11."

Bush administration officials say senior Saudi officials have complained to their American counterparts that the suit could damage the already strained relationship between the two countries.

The Saudis have been especially alarmed, the Americans say, because the list of defendants includes two of the most prominent members of the Saudi royal family: Prince Sultan bin Abdelaziz al-Saud, the defense minister, and Prince Turki bin Faisal, the former spy chief and the new Saudi ambassador to Britain.

The Saudi Embassy in Washington said it had no comment on the lawsuit, and did not respond to requests for comment from Prince Sultan or Prince Turki.

But Americans close to the royal family say the suit has so alarmed Prince Turki's lawyers that he has been advised to avoid all travel to the United States, and that other wealthy Saudis defendants are threatening to move billions of dollars out of the United States for fear that their assets here could be seized.

Mr. Motley's legal team includes many of the other lawyers involved in the huge tobacco settlement, as well as Allan Gerson, a Washington lawyer who brought suit against Libya on behalf of families of victims of the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988.

Mr. Gerson, an international law specialist, said he was not surprised that the government would consider intervening to derail the lawsuit.

"There will probably be an effort by the government to seek dismissal or deferral of the case on the grounds that at this particularly sensitive juncture in U.S.-Saudi relations, a suit like this would put the interests of private claimaints ahead of the interests of state," he said.
He is optimistic that the courts would reject such a move.
The lawsuit repeats accusations that have been widely circulated since Sept. 11 about Saudi financial support for Al Qaeda, mostly through Islamic charity groups and Saudi banks.
Liz Alderman, of Armonk, N.Y., whose son Peter died in the World Trade Center, said she had joined in the suit becuase "there is no other way for the truth to come out."
"I've learned and I believe that an awful lot of the funding that enabled the terrorists to attack America was provided by Saudi Arabia," she said.
American officials insist they know of no evidence to support the suit's principle accusations, including its charge that Prince Sultan "publicly supported and funded several Islamic charities that were sponsoring Osama bin Laden."
Nor, the Americans say, do they know of any support for the suit's charge that Prince Turki negotiated a deal with Al Qaeda in 1998 in which the terror network agreed to end its efforts to subvert the Saudi monarchy in exchange for a Saudi promise not to demand the extradition of Qaeda leaders.
Wyche Fowler, American ambassador to Saudi Arabia from 1996 until last year, said that in his years in the embassy, he had never seen any evidence to suggest that members of the royal family had given money to Islamic charities with the intent of aiding Al Qaeda.
"Saudis are not in the business of funding terrorists against their friend, the United States," he said, adding that he had been impressed by the Saudi government's recent commitment to tighten scrutiny on charities.
Mr. Motley has vowed to pursue members of the Saudi royal family and other prominent Saudis even more aggressively than he pursued tobacco executives a decade ago. He said he is eager to seize Saudi assets in the United States if the defendants refuse to submit to court orders for depositions and the presentation of written evidence.
"The tobacco people were bad guys in that they had knowledge about the dangers of cigarettes," Mr. Motley said. "But they never intentionally launched an attack against the United States."

PRESIDENT BUSH ANNOUNCES HIS PLAN TO ENSURE TIMELY CONSIDERATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINEES

Today the President outlined his plan to ensure timely consideration of judicial nominees. The President calls for it to apply both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The objective is to fix, on a permanent and bipartisan basis, a judicial confirmation process that is clearly broken.

THE CURRENT CRISIS:

- There is a vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary. Today, there are 79 vacancies out of the 849 authorized federal judgeships, a 9% vacancy rate. The 12 regional federal appeals courts face a particularly serious crisis, with 28 vacancies out of 167 judgeships, a 17% vacancy rate.

    - ✓ In 1998, at a time when there were 50 judicial vacancies, Chairman Leahy stated that the number of vacancies represented a "judicial vacancy crisis."
    - ✓ Chief Justice Rehnquist's 2001 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary noted the "alarming number of judicial vacancies."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 described the current status of the federal judiciary as an "emergency situation."
    - ✓ The Executive Secretary of the Judicial Conference of the United States, which is the federal judiciary's governing body, stated in May 2002 that the shortage of federal judges is "staggering."
    - ✓ Caseloads in the federal courts continue to grow dramatically. Filings in the federal appeals courts reached an all-time high last year.

- The Senate has not lived up to its responsibility to hold fair hearings and prompt votes on judicial nominees.

    - ✓ The Senate has voted on only 80 of the President's 131 nominees overall and, even more problematic, has voted on only 14 of the President's 32 appeals court nominees. By contrast, in the first two years of the past three Administrations, 60 of the 65 appeals court nominees were confirmed.
    - ✓ Fifteen appeals court nominees have had to wait more than a year just for a hearing (many are still waiting). That number is more than the number of appeals court nominees who had to wait a year for a hearing in the last 50 years combined.
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 stated that as a result of current delays in the judicial confirmation process, "the federal courts suffer, and so does the rule of law." The report stated that the Senate Judiciary Committee's refusal to allow "confirmation proceedings in the full Senate is simply unacceptable to our notion of an appropriate and constitutional nomination process" and added: "Vote them up or down. Don't hang them out to dry."

- ✓ The Chief Justice of the United States, speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in his 2001 Year-End Report, "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."
- ✓ The 2000 report of the bipartisan Citizens for Independent Courts stated that "the views of individual Senators, while vital, should not be allowed to undermine collective decision-making in an open, deliberative process" and stated that "the Senate process should proceed expeditiously to a committee hearing, committee review and voting, and floor consideration and voting."

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL

This plan requires specific commitments from everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of federal judges:

- First, the plan encourages federal appeals and district court judges to notify the President of their intended retirement dates at least a year in advance whenever possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge can be a lengthy process even under the best of circumstances, advance notice is necessary to prevent extended unnecessary judicial vacancies. The President's call to the Judiciary builds on existing Judicial Conference recommendations and is intended to create a seamless process whereby a new federal judge is ready to take the bench at or near the time a sitting federal judge retires.

- Second, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This would ensure that nominees are promptly submitted to the Senate and would help expedite the process by which home-State Senators, Representatives, bar leaders, and others provide their recommendations and assessments of possible judicial candidates to the President.

- Third, it calls on the Senate Judiciary Committee to commit to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. The Committee has engaged in too many delays of too many nominees for too many years. A strict deadline, which will apply no matter who is President and which party controls the Senate, is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. Ninety days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct any necessary research before holding a hearing.

- Fourth, it calls on the full Senate to commit to hold an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of receiving a judicial nomination. That is a generous period designed to give both the Committee and the full Senate ample time to evaluate nominees and answer any questions they may have.

REVISED BRIEFING PAPER

REMARKS ON JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS
Tuesday, October, 29, 2002
1:40 p.m. – 2:10 p.m.
East Room
Alberto R. Gonzales

I. PURPOSE

To speak about the judicial vacancy crisis and Senate confirmation process and to propose a specific plan for the timely consideration of judicial nominees.

II. BACKGROUND

The process for Senate confirmation of judges remains broken, exacerbating a judicial vacancy crisis that the Chief Justice of the United States has termed "alarming." The Senate's delay in holding hearings and up-or-down floor votes on judges has been a problem for many years, but is now worse than ever.

Many observers, including the Chief Justice and most recently the American Bar Association, have called for the Senate to give every judicial nominee a timely hearing and up-or-down vote. At your initial announcement of judicial nominees on May 9, 2001, you called for the Senate to ensure a timely hearing and vote for all judicial nominees, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Attorney General John Ashcroft
Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson
Solicitor General Ted Olson
Judge Alberto Gonzales
Bar leaders, Justice Department officials, lawyers, and others to be determined

    - ✓ Caseloads in the federal courts continue to grow dramatically. Filings in the regional federal appeals courts reached an all-time high last year.

- The Senate has not lived up to its responsibility to hold fair hearings and prompt votes on judicial nominees.

    - ✓ The Senate has voted on only 80 of the President's 131 nominees overall and, even more problematic, has voted on only 14 of the President's 32 appeals court nominees. By contrast, in the first two years of the past three Administrations, 60 of the 65 appeals court nominees were confirmed.
    - ✓ Fifteen appeals court nominees have had to wait more than a year just for a hearing (many are still waiting). That number is more than the number of appeals court nominees who had to wait a year for a hearing in the last 50 years combined.
    - ✓ The Chief Justice of the United States, speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in his 2001 Year-End Report, "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 stated that as a result of delays in the judicial confirmation process, "the federal courts suffer, and so does the rule of law." The report stated that the Senate Judiciary Committee's refusal to allow "confirmation proceedings in the full Senate is simply unacceptable to our notion of an appropriate and constitutional nomination process" and added: "Vote them up or down. Don't hang them out to dry."

- ✓ The 2000 report of the bipartisan Citizens for Independent Courts stated that "the views of individual Senators, while vital, should not be allowed to undermine collective decision-making in an open, deliberative process" and stated that "the Senate process should proceed expeditiously to a committee hearing, committee review and voting, and floor consideration and voting."

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL

This President's plan requires specific commitments from everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of federal judges:

- First, the plan calls on federal appeals and district court judges to notify the President of their intended retirement dates at least a year in advance whenever possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge can be a lengthy process even under the best of circumstances, advance notice is necessary to prevent extended unnecessary judicial vacancies. The President's call to the Judiciary builds on existing Judicial Conference recommendations and is intended to create a seamless process whereby a new federal judge is ready to take the bench at or near the time a sitting federal judge retires.

- Second, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This would ensure that nominees are promptly submitted to the Senate and would help expedite the process by which home-State Senators, Representatives, bar leaders, and others provide their recommendations and assessments of possible judicial candidates to the President.

- Third, the plan calls on the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. The Committee has engaged in too many delays of too many nominees for too many years. A strict deadline, which will apply no matter who is President and which party controls the Senate, is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. Ninety days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct any necessary research before holding a hearing.

- Fourth, it calls on the full Senate to hold an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of receiving a judicial nomination. That is a generous period designed to give both the Committee and the full Senate ample time to evaluate nominees and answer any questions they may have.

From the WA Post Today: (excerpt from an unrelated story about POTUS travel by Milbank)

President Bush says the percentage of judges confirmed by the Senate this term is "way below those confirmed under President Clinton or President Bush or President Reagan." Democrats, who control the Senate, say they have confirmed "a record number of judges."
Who's correct?
According to a Brookings Institution analysis, the confirmation rate for the 107th Congress, 61 percent, is lower than the 90 percent Clinton enjoyed in his first two years -- when his own party controlled the Senate. Democrats prefer to point out they have confirmed more judges -- 79 -- than the 69 the GOP Congress confirmed in Clinton's last two years, the 106th Congress. In that Congress, the Senate confirmed 62 percent of Clinton's choices, virtually identical to the current rate.

Since the Judicial event has moved to Wednesday at 1:40pm, can we move the Judge's radio time to later in the afternoon to talk through what the

PRESIDENT BUSH ANNOUNCES HIS PLAN TO ENSURE TIMELY CONSIDERATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINEES

Today the President outlined his plan to ensure timely consideration of judicial nominees. The President calls on the Senate and the Judiciary to join him in adopting this plan and to apply it both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The objective is to fix, on a permanent and bipartisan basis, a judicial confirmation process that is clearly broken.

THE CURRENT CRISIS

- There is a vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary. As of this week, there are 79 vacancies out of the 849 authorized federal judgeships, a 9% vacancy rate. The 12 regional federal appeals courts face a particularly serious crisis, with 28 vacancies out of 167 judgeships, a 17% vacancy rate.

    - ✓ In 1998, at a time when there were 50 judicial vacancies, Chairman Leahy stated that the number of vacancies represented a "judicial vacancy crisis."
    - ✓ Chief Justice Rehnquist's 2001 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, issued when there were 94 vacancies, called the situation "alarming."
    - ✓ The Secretary of the Judicial Conference of the United States, which is the federal judiciary's governing body, stated in May 2002 that the overall shortage of federal judges is "staggering."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 described the status of the federal judiciary as an "emergency situation."
    - ✓ Caseloads in the federal courts continue to grow dramatically. Filings in the federal appeals courts reached an all-time high last year.

- The Senate has not lived up to its responsibility to hold fair hearings and prompt votes on judicial nominees.

    - ✓ The Senate has voted on only 80 of the President's 131 nominees overall and, even more problematic, has voted on only 14 of the President's 32 appeals court nominees. By contrast, in the first two years of the past three Administrations, 60 of the 65 appeals court nominees were confirmed.
    - ✓ As of November, 15 of President Bush's appeals court nominees will have been forced to wait more than a year just for a hearing (many are still waiting). That number is more than the number of appeals court nominees who had to wait a year for a hearing in the last 50 years combined.
    - ✓ The Chief Justice of the United States, speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in his 2001 Year-End Report, "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 stated that as a result of delays in the judicial confirmation process, "the federal courts suffer, and so does the rule of law." The report stated that the Senate Judiciary Committee's refusal to allow "confirmation proceedings in the full Senate is simply unacceptable to our notion of an appropriate and constitutional nomination process" and added: "Vote them up or down. Don't hang them out to dry."
    - ✓ The 2000 report of the bipartisan Citizens for Independent Courts stated that "the views of individual Senators, while vital, should not be allowed to undermine collective decision-making in an open, deliberative process" and stated that "the Senate process should proceed expeditiously to a committee hearing, committee review and voting, and floor consideration and voting."

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL

This President's plan requires specific commitments from everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of federal judges:

- Third, the President calls on the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. The Committee has engaged in too many delays of too many nominees for too many years. A strict deadline, which will apply no matter who is President and which party controls the Senate, is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. Ninety days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct any necessary research before holding a hearing.

- Fourth, the President calls on the full Senate to hold an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of receiving a judicial nomination. That is a generous period designed to give both the Committee and the full Senate ample time to evaluate nominees and answer any questions they may have.

Does that mean 100% for Boyden as well? I'll take care of AG and Ted, but can you quickly follow up with the other people being acknowledged so that we can be 100% sure when we pre-brief President. Last thing we want, of course, is for him to acknowledge someone not there or not to acknowledge someone there. Thanks!!

Per my voicemail: We end at lunch on Thursday so there isn't an afternoon schedule to change to. And the morning is already booked w/ people who can't change.

We really do hope you can come -- the panel will be interesting and the dinner afterwards lots of fun. If you can't make it though, we'd like to know as soon as possible. It will leave us with a hole to fill and we'll need as much time as possible to scramble and fill it. [Any suggestions?]. So . . . please email or call (608-6190) as soon as you can to let me know whether you can make it or not.

Take care,
Paul

Thanks for agreeing to speak at the LSF on October 30. We have scheduled you for a panel at 4:30 PM along with Keith Ausbrook and (we hope) Alex Azar. The subject is basically a "mid year" review of the Bush Administration -- it's success and failures -- and how the Bush administration and the conservative movement can work together in the send half of the 1st term.

The event is at Lansdowne Resort -- directions are at www.lansdowneresort.com. Your panel will run to approx. 5:45. After a short break the group will reconvene at approx. 6:15 for cocktails, followed by dinner and a dinner speaker [we believe it will be Judge Loren Smith -- though he needs to clear a conflict] at which we hope you will be our guest.

On another note -- nice piece in the Post today.

See you then,
Paul

Coal operators face February deadline on existing 404s

Unless the Dept. of Justice issues a clarification by February of a federal judge's May ruling banning new Section 404 permits for coal mines, almost all existing 404s issued out of the Huntington, W.Va., office of the Corps of Engineers will lapse.

If those 404s do expire, it would mean the sudden and extensive shutdown of — or at least production cutbacks at — surface coal mines in most of southern West Virginia and much of eastern Kentucky. That's because they won't be able to add any overburden to valley fills covered by those 404 permits. Deep mines often need 404s, but that's usually for something like putting a culvert in a stream to carry an access road. That's the kind of work that's only done during initial mine development, so a lapse of the 404 probably won't affect those operations.

Almost all 404s are actually sub-permits under a master permit, called Nationwide 21. And, like mining permits, the Nationwide 21 permit has to be renewed every five years. The last one actually expired in February 2002, but coal companies with existing permits covered by it were given a grace year until February 2003 before the permits will lapse. The problem for the Corps and DOJ is that it isn't clear whether a May 8 injunction from U.S. District Judge Charles Haden that banned most new valley fill permits applies to renewal of the permits issued under the last Nationwide 21.

Basically, the only permits not affected by the February deadline are the handful that the Huntington office issued between February of this year and May 8, when the Haden decision stopped all 404 work. Permits issued during that period are part of a new Nationwide 21 permit with a five-year life.

Another problem is that since May, the Corps has been sitting on a number of 404 applications while it waits for clarification from DOJ on whether the post-mining land uses meet Haden's criteria that fills only be permitted if they are later put to a "constructive use." For example, Premium Energy has a pending 404 related to a change at one of its strip operations that would involve putting a connector road for the planned King Coal Highway over part of the reclaimed area.

The Corps is gathering material for DOJ on what should be the definition of "constructive use" and whether Nationwide 21 renewal is subject to the Haden order. Hopefully, DOJ can clarify things in the next few weeks, a Corps official said.

To make matters more unclear, there is the possibility any clarification might get appealed by Kentuckians for the Commonwealth back to Haden as a violation of his order.

President Offers Plan to Expedite Judicial Confirmations
By DAVID STOUT

ASHINGTON, Oct. 30 * President Bush, who has been frustrated by Democrats in his efforts to shape the federal judiciary, suggested a new method today for handling judicial appointments and ending a situation that he said "endangers the quality of justice in America."

"Today, I'm proposing a clean start for the process of nominating and confirming federal judges," Mr. Bush told an audience that included officials of the American Bar Association. "We must have an even-handed, predictable procedure from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn in."

Under Mr. Bush's proposal, district and appeals court judges would notify the president of their intended retirement at least a year in advance. The president would submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a vacancy. The Senate Judiciary Committee would hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination, and the full Senate would vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the submission of a nomination.

"This procedure should apply now and in the future," Mr. Bush said, "no matter who lives in this house or who controls the Senate. We must return fairness and dignity to the judicial confirmation process."

Senator Patrick J. Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who heads the Senate Judiciary Committee, did not immediately respond to Mr. Bush's proposal.

But on Monday, he complained in a letter to the president that the White House appeared to want to "politicize" the judicial selection process to "create a partisan campaign issue."

"Meaningful consultation, ideological balance and a depoliticizing of the judicial nomination process are all matters I remain willing to discuss," Mr. Leahy said. "We have accomplished a good deal already. We could accomplish much more working more closely together."

That was the precisely the tone the White House sought to set in a statement preceding Mr. Bush's announcement. "The objective is to fix, on a permanent and bipartisan basis, a judicial confirmation process that is clearly broken," the White House statement said.

Mr. Bush, addressing the gathering in the East Room this afternoon, picked up the same theme. "Whatever the explanation, we clearly have a poisoned and polarized atmosphere in which well-qualified nominees are neither voted up or down," the president said. "They are just left in limbo." He said the situation was unfair to nominees and their families and discouraged good people from wanting to be judges.

Whether the confirmation process is "clearly broken" is a matter of debate. Mr. Bush said there was a 9 percent vacancy rate in federal district courts and a 17 percent vacancy rate on appeals courts.

Mr. Bush has accused the Democrat-controlled Senate of doing "a lousy job" on his nominations, as he phrased it in a recent campaign stop in Michigan. He has repeatedly said that the slow confirmation process is just another reason that the country would be better off if the Senate were controlled by Republicans again, after the Nov. 5 elections.

Democrats have complained that some of Mr. Bush's nominees are overly conservative, and opponents have blocked several of them, though more than 80 have been confirmed, including 14 for federal appeals courts. Democrats have said that most mainstream Bush nominees have been confirmed easily.

The Democrats have also accused Republicans of conveniently overlooking their own past recalcitrance on judicial nominees when the Senate was controlled by Republicans.

Appeals court judgeships have become increasingly important, since nominees for the United States Supreme Court often come from those benches. The present line-up of the Supreme Court has been intact since 1994, and while no current justice has hinted at retirement, Justice John Paul Stevens is 82 and two other justices are in their 70's.

Holding out an olive branch to senators, Mr. Bush said, "The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together."

Remarks by President in South Dakota 10/31/02

I need somebody I can work with in the Senate to make sure that the crisis of our -- in our judiciary gets solved. (Applause.) There's too many vacancies in our -- on our federal benches, which means the dockets are crowded. It means Americans aren't getting the justice they deserve. The Senate has done a lousy job with my nominees. I need a senator with whom I can work to make sure -- (applause) -- to make sure that we stop playing petty partisan politics with the judicial nominations I've sent up; to make sure people's records aren't distorted; and to make sure we have a bench that is full of judges who aren't there to write the law, they're there to strictly interpret the United States Constitution.
(Applause.) And make no mistake about it; that senator is John Thune.

A letter from some 9/11 families may be published in the paper tomorrow. The letter will urge the President, in essence, not to intervene against the plaintiff-families in the suits they have filed against some foreign governments and foreign entities and individuals.
All press questions are probably best referred to State if possible.
State's public position remains that the United States is aware of these suits, is not a party to them, and has no present intention to intervene.
Note, however, that some government departments may be (and likely will be) served with discovery requests, in which case the US would respond appropriately. Also, the United States may be called upon by a court at some point to provide its legal interpretation of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act or the Airline Stabilization Act, in which case the United States would provide its interpretation of the law.

A Post editorial will run soon, although exactly when is uncertain. I think it will be very positive about the substance of the President's proposal, both on the time frames and the right to timely hearings and timely votes. The one tweak is that they may think a negative Committee vote perhaps should suffice to block a nomination. They do agree, however, that the blue slip process is an "abomination." In the usual on-the-one-hand, on-the-other style, it probably also will say something to the effect that the President needs to make amends for the Clinton nominees who were blocked.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

Pending before the Court is non-agency defendants' motion for a stay of proceedings pending appeal of this Court's October 17, 2002, September 9, 2002, and July 11, 2002 Orders authorizing limited discovery from defendants on threshold issues, and ordering defendants to produce non-privileged documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests, along with a privilege log identifying those documents for which defendants believe there is a valid basis for the assertion of a privilege. Upon careful consideration of defendants' motion, the response and reply thereto, and the relevant legal authority, and for the following reasons, it is by the Court hereby ORDERED that defendants' motion for a stay is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

Non-agency defendants move for a stay of, inter alia, this Court's October 17, 2002 Order, which requires them, consistent with this Court's August 2, 2002 Order and July 11, 2002 Memorandum Opinion and Order, to respond to plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories and to produce by no later than November 5, 2002, non-privileged documents responsive to plaintiffs' First Request for Document Production, along with a log identifying specific documents or particularized categories of documents for which they assert that a privilege precludes production, and. Defendants seek a stay to pursue an appeal to the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, on the grounds that this Court's Orders implicate important constitutional and statutory questions that are best resolved by the Court of Appeals before litigation proceeds any further in this case.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

The following factors are to be considered when determining whether a stay pending appeal is warranted:

> (1) the likelihood that the party seeking the stay will prevail on the merits of the appeal; (2) the likelihood that the moving party will be irreparably harmed absent a stay; (3) the prospect that others will be harmed if the court grants the stay; and (4) the public interest in granting the stay. To justify the granting of a stay, a movant need not > always establish a high probability of success on the merits. Probability of success is inversely proportional to the degree of irreparable injury evidenced. A stay may be granted with either a high probability of success and some injury, or vice versa.

Cuomo v. United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 772 F.2d 972, 974 (D.C. Cir. 1985); Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm'n v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 842, 843 (D.C. Cir. 1977). It is "the movant's obligation to justify the court's exercise of such an extraordinary remedy." Cuomo, 772 F.2d at 978. This Circuit has recently reiterated that a moving party must satisfy "stringent standards required for a stay pending appeal." Summers v. Howard University, 2002 WL 31269623 (D.C. Cir., Oct. 10, 2002). Where a moving party fails to establish a substantial case on the merits, and further fails to "demonstrate that the balance of equities or the public interest strongly favors the granting of a stay," a motion for stay is properly denied. Cuomo, 772 F.2d at 972.

A. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

Recognizing that this Court has, on numerous occasions, rejected their arguments to this effect, defendants nevertheless continue to assert that court orders requiring them to respond in any fashion to plaintiffs' discovery requests creates an "unconstitutional burden" on the Executive Branch unless plaintiffs are first required to demonstrate "compelling need" for the discovery sought. Defendants have cited no authority, and indeed this Court knows of none, which supports this proposition. To the contrary, every case cited by the defendants in support of their position involved precisely the same procedure adopted by this Court in this case. Moreover, the U.S. Supreme Court has recently confirmed the continued validity of the precedent of long-standing relied upon by this Court in the Orders and Opinions contested by defendants. As recently as 1997, the nation's highest court held

> In sum, "[i]t is settled law that the separation-of-powers doctrine does not bar every exercise of jurisdiction over the President of the United States." . . . the Judiciary may severely burden the Executive Branch by reviewing the legality of the President's official conduct....[emphasis added]

Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 705, 117 S.Ct. 1636, 1650 (1997). Here, as in Jones, this Court is of the opinion that defendants "err[ ] by presuming that interactions between the Judicial Branch and the Executive, even quite burdensome interactions, necessarily rise to the level of constitutionally forbidden impairment of the Executive's ability to perform its constitutionally mandated functions." See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 702, 117 S.Ct. at 1648.

Notwithstanding this U.S. Supreme Court precedent, and the absolute dearth of authority supporting their arguments, defendants nevertheless contend that requiring them to review documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests, disclose those for which no viable claim of privilege exists, and assert any applicable privileges with respect to specific documents, impermissibly interferes with "core Article II" functions and imposes an unconstitutional burden on the Executive Branch. The Court rejects these arguments and is not persuaded by defendants' assertion that they have demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of their appeal of this Court's Orders.

B. Irreparable Harm

Under this Circuit's precedent, the harms to each party are tested for "substantiality, likelihood of occurrence, and adequacy of proof." Cuomo 772 F.2d at 976, 977. The Court must consider the significance of the change from the status quo which would arise in the absence of a stay, as well as likelihood of occurrence of the claimed injury, when determining whether defendants have truly met their burden of demonstrating irreparable harm justifying imposition of a stay. See id.

The fact of the matter is that the offices of the President and Vice President currently respond to discovery requests on a regular basis, asserting executive privilege with respect to specific requests for particular items when necessary. See, e.g. Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 704, 117 S. Ct. at 1649. Plaintiffs correctly point out that, in the cases cited by the defendants, stays of court orders authorizing discovery against officers of the Executive Branch have been granted only in cases where a court ordered production of a particular document after a viable claim of privilege had been made. See e.g., Nixon v. Sirica, 487 F.2d at 721 (approving stay of District Court orders either allowing or refusing disclosure of specific documents for which President has made a particularlized claim of privilege).

Moreover, it is in fact defendants who seek to change the status quo by asking this Court to relieve them of their responsibility to respond to plaintiffs' discovery requests and assert executive privilege where appropriate. Defendants' argument that any "discovery directed at" them imposes an unconstitutional burden on them absent a showing by plaintiffs of "compelling need" represents a dramatic new argument with respect to invocation of executive privilege, and contemplates the wholesale elimination of an entire step in the established discovery processes in this context. Furthermore, defendants themselves concede that, at least in some respects, they are seeking to expand the executive privilege, not simply rely on its settled contours. See Def.'s Mot. for Stay at 8 (claiming that requiring disclosure of documents which "may not be technically privileged" would nonetheless impose unconstitutional burdens on the Executive Branch).

There is no doubt that, if defendants' premise is accepted that compliance with this Court's discovery order imposes an unconstitutional burden, defendants would suffer irreparable harm if the proceedings before this Court were not stayed to enable them to seek appellate review of such an order. However, this Court has consistently rejected, and continues to reject, in reliance upon established precedent of long-standing, defendants' central argument, namely that requiring the Vice President and members of the Executive Branch to merely review documents requested by the plaintiffs and assert executive privilege where appropriate, is unconstitutional. Defendants cannot be permitted to manufacture irreparable harm by simply stating a legal principle with no precedential support whatsoever, and then claiming irreparable harm if they believe a court order violates that principle.

Accordingly, there is insufficient likelihood of "irreparable harm" to the defendants to justify a stay. Both the Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court have approved the very "harm" defendants point to: discovery procedures in which a request for documents from a member of the Executive is made in the context of judicially supervised discovery, the document is either produced or a privilege is asserted with respect to the document, and, in the latter case, the party seeking the document must demonstrate that the public need for the document outweighs the interests underlying the privilege in order to obtain production of the document. See, e.g., Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 704-05; In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20, 22, 24;

Dellums v. Powell, 561 F.2d 242, 247, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1977); see also Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 439-455 (1977).

C. Public Interest

Conversely, the harm to both the plaintiffs and the public of granting the stay is substantial, likely, and adequately proven. As plaintiffs point out, Congress, Executive agencies, and the public have been debating the energy policy developed by defendants without the benefit of the information sought by plaintiffs in this case. In some instances, final actions have already been taken. As time proceeds, the value of the information sought by plaintiffs and the public declines substantially, thereby effectively denying plaintiffs the relief to which they contend they are entitled. Additionally, both Congress and the Judicial Branch have recognized the public interest in avoiding "piecemeal " litigation occasioned by stays and interlocutory appeals. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 690 (1974).

Therefore, upon balancing of relevant factors, this Court concludes that there exists no factual or legal predicate for granting defendants a stay pending appeal. Accordingly, defendants' motion for stay pending appeal is hereby DENIED; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' alternative motion for an extension of time in which to respond to plaintiffs' first request for document production is GRANTED; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that defendants shall fully comply with this Court's outstanding Orders by no later than November 29, 2002.

Additionally, pursuant to the hearing held on defendant's motion for stay on October 31, 2002, and for the reasons given in open court, it is by the Court hereby

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall file their response to defendants' motion for certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) by no later than November 6, 2002 and defendants shall file their reply by no later than November 8, 2002; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' motion for certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) shall be considered at the currently scheduled November 13, 2002 hearing on all pending motions; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall file a reply in support of their motions to compel by no later than November 7, 2002.

Drudge now has Rep. Thune up 3 as well, which would mean R's net
+1 seat with Louisiana still to come. All VERY early, of course.

[Based on early exit polls, GOP is set to gain Missouri, Minnesota and Georgia; DEMS set to gain North Carolina, Colorado, and Arkansas]

If these held, it would net-0 thus far with South Dakota (and then Louisiana) still to be decided.

I believe we have a date and time that will work for the VCF meeting. This Friday from 2:30pm to 3:30pm in the Civil Conference Room 3143.

Peter's meeting with Phil and John would follow. Paul hopefully would be available by phone. The weekly meeting with the Special Master would be pushed to next week.

Let me know if this meets with everyone's approval.

In checking Peter Keisler's calendar for this Friday, Peter could meet 8:30-9:30. The other possibility is 1:30-2:30, as Phil and John have a 2:30 meeting with Peter.

The meeting on VCF issues -- tentatively scheduled for this Thursday at 8:30am -- has been cancelled. In speaking with all the proposed participants, it appears as if there is no workable time for everyone (including Brett Kavanaugh, who is not copied on this email) to meet on Thursday.

In light of what needs to get accomplished in the coming days, and the importance of the issues that need to be resolved during that time, I recommend we try to reschedule for this Friday. Those of us at DOJ can push our weekly meeting with the Special Master back to Monday morning.

Let me know your thoughts and availability.

CHALK UP A BIG ONE for Priscilla Owen, an unsung winner of last Tuesday's election, and a partial architect of the Republican victory. Owen is the Texas judge who was a Bush nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. She was described by the American Bar Association as "highly qualified," but her nomination never made it to the Senate floor. The ten Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee who served as the gatekeepers objected that she was much too "extreme." What made her "extreme" was her support for parental notification in the case of abortion for minors, a position that over 80 percent of Americans support. Liberal interest groups prevailed on liberal senators, themselves to the left of their party. Two of these senators, Dianne Feinstein and Charles Schumer, announced their intention to make unquestioning support for unrestricted abortion a litmus test for approving judges. Owen went down.

George W. Bush did not forget Owen. In every speech he made in his whirlwind tour just before the election, he was careful to include in his brief against Democrats that they were refusing to let his judges even be voted on. He said this in New Hampshire, in Colorado, in the Carolinas, in Missouri and in Minnesota, in Georgia and Texas. All of these states will now have Republican senators. Feinstein and Schumer are still in the Senate, but in the minority, where their power to block nominees will be vastly reduced. They will be able to vote against Bush nominees on the floor of the Senate, but they will no longer be able to keep them from getting there. Owen will come up again.

What fired up Republican voters? Things just like this. Owen would almost certainly have won on the floor of the Senate, as would Charles Pickering, another ill-fated nominee. But the Democrats used their majority on the committee to keep these Bush picks from reaching the floor. Committee chairman Patrick Leahy also broke his word on a long-standing matter of senatorial courtesy, refusing to let the last nominee of Strom Thurmond (retiring now at the age of 100) come to a vote in committee. As reporter Byron York explained, "Leahy lied."

Then came New Jersey. What do you do in a key Senate race with a clod of a candidate who is rapidly sinking under the combined weight of multiple scandals? You yank him out and replace him with...Frank Lautenberg, who is ancient and graceless but not actually under indictment. New Jersey had rules for changing steeds in midstream, meant to be used in cases of the illness or death of the candidate (not his moral impairment), and then not to be used any later than 51 days before the election. When Torricelli was yanked, there were 36 days to go. But what are a few laws among friends? They found a state supreme court packed with donors to Democrats. Legalists screamed, but the justices paid no attention. Lautenberg replaced Torricelli on the ballot, and he won.

Or did he? The 2000 Florida recount is often described as a red flag to Democrats--sure to enrage and inspire their fervent supporters. What is said less often (but is no less true) is that Florida is also a red flag to conservatives, who remember with loathing the legal contortions of Al Gore and the law-bending, deadline-extending antics of the Florida courts. Of what did the Supreme Court of New Jersey remind all these people? The Florida supreme court. The Lautenberg switch was everything that they detested: It was opportunistic. It was extra-legal. It was Gorean. And it was Clintonesque. At the time, it was hailed as the masterstroke that would save the Senate for Democrats, but that failed to work out as expected. What does it profit a party if it wins in New Jersey but loses in New Hampshire, Georgia, and Missouri? Lautenberg, like Schumer and Leahy, is now in the Senate, but in the minority. Which will not be all that much fun.

And then came the crash that killed Senator Wellstone. Democrats tried to use this as a means to silence Norm Coleman, suggesting that it was indecent for him to criticize Wellstone's replacement, meanwhile using the feelings stirred up by the death of the senator to whip up their own base. They whipped it up too much, at a memorial service that turned into a foot-stomping rally, repelling voters all over the country who thought that booing and jeering at some of the mourners was not the best way to honor the dead. The service didn't just help to elect Coleman, by dissipating the aura of reverence. Consultants believe there was a spillover, affecting many other tight races. Too many people found the event all too distasteful. And they made the Democrats pay.

DIFFERENT AS THEY ARE, these three things all have something in common, at least for conservatives. They raise what we can describe as the seemliness issue, the issue of decency. They are all cases where the Democrats tried to play smashmouth, blithely bent the law, took too much advantage of loopholes. They were too clever by half, too greedy by half, too eager to dispense with all courtesies. Most Americans don't like to see their judges vetted and vetoed by NARAL; they don't like to see judges trashed at the bidding of NARAL; and they don't like to see people trolling for votes at a funeral. The word for it all is Clintonian.

Clinton himself took a huge hit on Tuesday, sinking his reputation as a political rock star and mastermind. Everywhere he campaigned he left a trail of defeated candidates. He went to Florida to get revenge on Jeb Bush, who seemed to be in a squeaker. After he left, Bush opened a large lead. Clinton's beaming face at Paul Wellstone's memorial also went a long way toward sinking Walter Mondale, and helped feed the backlash. (This also should put an end to the great debate stemming out of the 2000 election, namely: Could Clinton have won it for Gore if Gore had used him? The answer is in now: It's no.)

The blowback from the rally appeared overnight, but other effects were long term and more subtle. Bush could make few direct hits at the people who shot down his judges, who were from safe states, or near the start of their tenure. But he could use them against vulnerable candidates running in key races in other parts of the country, saying that the Democrats there would be part of the system that gave the Leahys and Schumers their power. Did this work as an issue? Ask Ron Kirk, who was regarded as a bright rising star in the Texas Democratic party. Kirk suffered when he failed to stand up for Owen, who is also a native of Texas. Kirk is now history, having lost his race for the Senate by 12 points.

Kirk, of course, never got to vote against Owen, but he paid the price anyhow. So did some others. When the Judiciary Committee took down Mississippi's Judge Pickering, Georgia Democrat Zell Miller took to the floor of the Senate to warn that this vote would cost his party the statehouse in Mississippi. He didn't know the half of it. Last Tuesday, the issue helped bring down Miller's fellow Georgia Democrats Governor Roy Barnes and Senator Max Cleland. Like Kirk, Cleland didn't vote on the judges, but his place in the Senate's Democratic majority had helped make it possible. Bush could not hurt Leahy in Vermont, Schumer in New York, or Feinstein in California, but by taking down Cleland and fending off Kirk, he could push them all back into minority status, where they now have less power. Cleland took the hit for the work of the Leahys and Feinsteins. Nobody said life is fair.

Midterm elections can turn on turnout, and on turnout Republicans won. By all accounts, they were raring to get to the voting booths. According to a Gallup poll on Monday, November 4, 64 percent of Republicans said they were "very eager" to vote, while only about half of Democrats did. And what had them so worked up? Judges and arrogance; New Jersey and Wellstone; a long, long parade of in-your-face crassness, going back in time to the Clinton era, and threatening to continue in the future. For the moment, at least, this tide has been halted. Call it nemesis, call it comeuppance, call it sweet beyond measure. And call it Judge Owen's revenge.

Here's the deal on SAFETY Act/Indemnification.

It's all being driven by the House. Their idea is to push the SAFETY Act -- it is very important to Armey -- and drop the Warner indemnification language. Senate side recognizes that they will have a Warner/Allen problem if they drop the 85-804 language, but believes that is a problem with which they can live.

We have some other big issues. We are going to let them run with this and see where they end up.

On chem site security, it's a dead end. Not going to go anywhere. Sorry.

DIFFERENT AS THEY ARE, these three things all have something in common, at least for conservatives. They raise what we can describe as the seemliness issue, the issue of decency. They are all cases where the Democrats tried to play smashmouth, blithely bent the law, took too much advantage of loopholes. They were too clever by half, too greedy by half, too eager to dispense with all courtesies. Most Americans don't like to see their judges vetted and vetoed by NARAL; they don't like to see judges trashed at the bidding of NARAL; and they don't like to see people trolling for votes at a funeral. The word for it all is Clintonian.

Clinton himself took a huge hit on Tuesday, sinking his reputation as a political rock star and mastermind. Everywhere he campaigned he left a trail of defeated candidates. He went to Florida to get revenge on Jeb Bush, who seemed to be in a squeaker. After he left, Bush opened a large lead. Clinton's beaming face at Paul Wellstone's memorial also went a long way toward sinking Walter Mondale, and helped feed the backlash. (This also should put an end to the great debate stemming out of the 2000 election, namely: Could Clinton have won it for Gore if Gore had used him? The answer is in now: It's no.)

The blowback from the rally appeared overnight, but other effects were long term and more subtle. Bush could make few direct hits at the people who shot down his judges, who were from safe states, or near the start of their tenure. But he could use them against vulnerable candidates running in key races in other parts of the country, saying that the Democrats there would be part of the system that gave the Leahys and Schumers their power. Did this work as an issue? Ask Ron Kirk, who was regarded as a bright rising star in the Texas Democratic party. Kirk suffered when he failed to stand up for Owen, who is also a native of Texas. Kirk is now history, having lost his race for the Senate by 12 points.

Kirk, of course, never got to vote against Owen, but he paid the price anyhow. So did some others. When the Judiciary Committee took down Mississippi's Judge Pickering, Georgia Democrat Zell Miller took to the floor of the Senate to warn that this vote would cost his party the statehouse in Mississippi. He didn't know the half of it. Last Tuesday, the issue helped bring down Miller's fellow Georgia Democrats Governor Roy Barnes and Senator Max Cleland. Like Kirk, Cleland didn't vote on the judges, but his place in the Senate's Democratic majority had helped make it possible. Bush could not hurt Leahy in Vermont, Schumer in New York, or Feinstein in California, but by taking down Cleland and fending off Kirk, he could push them all back into minority status, where they now have less power. Cleland took the hit for the work of the Leahys and Feinsteins. Nobody said life is fair.

Midterm elections can turn on turnout, and on turnout Republicans won. By all accounts, they were raring to get to the voting booths. According to a Gallup poll on Monday, November 4, 64 percent of Republicans said they were "very eager" to vote, while only about half of Democrats did. And what had them so worked up? Judges and arrogance; New Jersey and Wellstone; a long, long parade of in-your-face crassness, going back in time to the Clinton era, and threatening to continue in the future. For the moment, at least, this tide has been halted. Call it nemesis, call it comeuppance, call it sweet beyond measure. And call it Judge Owen's revenge.

Commissioner Richard L. Gregg
Financial Management Service – U.S. Department of the Treasury before the Subcommittee on Government Efficiency, Financial Management and Intergovernmental Relations House Committee on Government Reform
November 12, 2002
"Federal Debt Collection: What Progress Have We Made During the Past Year?"

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

Thank you for inviting me to testify this afternoon to provide an update on the Financial Management Service's (FMS) implementation of the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996 (DCIA). As always, the Subcommittee's and your strong personal support has helped the Treasury Department in implementing a remarkably successful government-wide debt collection program that provides exceptional leadership across government, has significantly increased the collection of delinquent debt, and has greatly improved the government's ability to accurately report outstanding delinquent debt.

Mr. Chairman, I understand you are retiring at the end of this Congress. I would like to take this opportunity to state that it has truly been a pleasure to work with you and your staff. I believe you leave behind an important legacy in greatly improving the government's debt collection. I would like to wish you all the best in the coming years.

It is now apparent that Treasury's debt collection program is a fully mature one, and it has developed into an integral component of federal financial management. You may be interested to know that the Treasury program has become a benchmark model. The United Kingdom and an Australian state government are both studying our policies and procedures as they develop their centralized debt collection programs.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I will discuss our future/near-term program plans as well as update you on our overall progress. Before I discuss these two issues, I would like to begin by giving you a brief program report on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) participation in the program, as well as share my views on the initiative commonly referred to as "gainsharing".

I am pleased to report a substantial increase in the number of delinquent debt referrals from the USDA. Specifically I would single out the Rural Housing Service, from which we received approximately $231 million in cross-servicing referrals in FY02. Through FY01, we had received only $8.5 million. The Farm Service Agency has also taken some recent positive steps in transferring debts to FMS. The Food and Nutrition Service, I would add, continued to excel in its participation. You may be assured that Treasury remains committed to working with USDA to eliminate any barriers to program participation.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the DCIA also includes a provision designed to provide an incentive known as gainsharing for agencies to increase collections of delinquent debt by reimbursing them for certain expenses related to collection. Although no funds have actually been appropriated for gainsharing accounts for reimbursement purposes, we have implemented procedures that would enable us to activate the program if and when funds do become available.

Program Accomplishments

Since enactment of the DCIA, FMS has collected about $15 billion in delinquent debt. Since FMS was given responsibility for centralized collection of debt, we have sharply increased collections through program changes, adding numerous payment streams and categories of debt, and have actively worked with agencies to overcome obstacles. In FY02 alone, Treasury collected about $2.8 billion in delinquent debt, including $1.4 billion in past due child support; $1.2 billion in federal non-tax debt; and almost $180 million in state and federal tax debt.

Treasury has also worked hard to have agencies refer eligible debt in a timely manner. Last fall, at your suggestion, Secretary O'Neill wrote to the heads of all departments and agencies on the importance of debt referral. In the last year, FMS made important enhancements to the Treasury Report on Receivables Due from the Public (TROR) which enables us to more thoroughly monitor and evaluate agency referral and collection performance by generating computerized five-year trend analysis reports. Also, in the last year, more than 1,100 agency participants attended FMS workshops, conferences, symposia, and seminars on debt collection throughout the country. FMS also conducts meetings with agency Chief Financial Officers (CFO) and finance offices on debt referral and other debt collection developments.

These actions have produced outstanding results. For both the Treasury Offset Program and cross-servicing, currently 93 percent of debt identified as eligible has been referred. To put this in perspective, at the end of FY99, agencies had referred to Treasury only 43 percent of their delinquent cross-servicing debt identified as eligible. During the first four years of the program – 1997 through 2000 – agencies referred roughly $4.3 billion for cross-servicing. In the two years since then, agencies have referred an additional $6 billion.

Mr. Chairman, I would like at this time to give the Subcommittee a progress report on some of Treasury's collection initiatives.

REV_00154180

Benefit Payment Offset

With the cooperation of the Social Security Administration (SSA), the offset of benefit payments, an extraordinarily complex undertaking, continues to go smoothly. In fact, for FY02, FMS collected approximately $55 million in federal non-tax debts through this program.

And as you know, Mr. Chairman, the House version of the welfare reform legislation includes a provision to authorize offset of federal payments including SSA payments to improve collection of delinquent child support debt. FMS and the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) are working with the Senate in an effort to include a similar provision in the Senate version of the bill. An estimated $50 to $100 million annually in lost child support collections are at stake. This provision would enable us to aggressively target the collection of these funds.

Continuous Federal Tax Levy

With the good support of the IRS, implementation of the continuous federal tax levy initiative continues to go smoothly. Of all the payments being levied, Social Security benefit payments account for most of the levies. For FY02, approximately $60 million was collected, primarily as a result of the SSA benefit levy, which accounts for $43 million of the total.

State Income Tax Debt Collection

FMS implemented the program to collect delinquent state tax debt in 2000. For FY02, $119 million was collected. Currently, 26 of 41 states that collect state income tax and the District of Columbia are participating. Next year, six additional states are expected to begin. FMS is actively encouraging the remaining states to participate. For example, FMS has entered into discussions with the State of California, and as a result, FMS intends to visit with state officials shortly to discuss the program.

Administrative Wage Garnishment

FMS issued the regulations to enable federal program agencies to garnish private sector wages in 1998. FMS views Administrative Wage Garnishment (AWG) as a useful collection tool with enormous potential. So that agencies can take full advantage of FMS' centralized processes and established safeguards, we strongly encourage them to use administrative wage garnishment through Treasury's cross-servicing program.

Some agencies are currently using this debt collection tool through FMS, including the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Another agency, HHS, has recently published regulations and several others are preparing to publish regulations which will allow them to participate. FMS is also working closely with the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense to help facilitate their participation.

Contract for the Services of Private Collection Agencies

As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, the present contract with private collection agencies went into effect October 1, 2001. We reduced the number of collectors from eleven to five, and have seen solid improvements in performance and service. Since the inception of this program in early 1998, PCAs have collected $109 million. For FY02, PCAs collected $43 million, up from $34 million for FY01.

Future/Near-Term Plans

Centralized Federal Salary Offset

In 2001, FMS began phasing in federal salary payment offsets. Of the five major salary paying agencies, USDA's National Finance Center and the Department of the Interior, both of which process payroll for numerous federal agencies, now participate.

REV_00154182

The U.S. Postal Service and the Department of Defense have committed to participate by the end of this calendar year. In addition to collecting federal non-tax debt, we have also begun to collect tax debt by levying federal salaries. We collected $1.9 million for FY02.

Offset of Non-Treasury Disbursed Vendor Payments

I am pleased to tell you that another new element of our debt collection program is close to fruition. FMS has completed systems testing of the new offset of non-Treasury disbursed payments. We are currently working with the Department of Defense and the U.S. Postal Service to test the transfer of data files between our respective systems. Debts in the FMS debtor database will be compared to Department of Defense and U.S. Postal Service vendor payments. When there is a match, DOD and USPS will offset the payment. This will also be done for debts under continuous tax levy. We believe this initiative holds great promise and will significantly enhance debt collection, and we plan to implement the program later this calendar year.

Delinquent Debtor Database Information Sharing

Barring delinquent debtors from obtaining federal loans and loan guarantees is a high priority for both FMS and for those federal agencies with loan authority. FMS has been developing a system we call "Debt Check" that will allow lending agencies to access information from the FMS delinquent debtor database so that government loans are not made to previously identified delinquent debtors. The database is designed to complement existing sources of information available to agencies – to provide an additional tool to bar delinquent debtors from obtaining federal loan assistance. Debt Check is scheduled to be implemented as a Web-based initiative with the Small Business Administration next month, and other agencies will be phased in gradually.

Conclusion

Mr. Chairman, in summary, Treasury's debt program is one that is both robust and effective, one that has consistently met or exceeded its performance measures. This concludes my remarks. I would be happy to answer any questions you or the members of the Subcommittee might have.

Hi Matt:
The attached is the 'final' version of the legislative text, for your review.
The actual conference report will be reprinted without a date at the bottom, but I'll do that once all of the other pieces are finished. I also did another document comparing the Oct. 17 draft (AYO02.921) to this one , so please call if you'd like me to fax over a copy of that.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

TITLE I—TERRORISM INSURANCE PROGRAM

Sec. 101. Congressional findings and purpose.
Sec. 102. Definitions.
Sec. 103. Terrorism Insurance Program.
Sec. 104. General authority and administration of claims.
Sec. 105. Preemption and nullification of pre-existing terrorism exclusions.
Sec. 106. Preservation provisions.
Sec. 107. Litigation management.
Sec. 108. Termination of Program.

TITLE II—TREATMENT OF TERRORIST ASSETS

Sec. 201. Satisfaction of judgments from blocked assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and State sponsors of terrorism.

TITLE III—FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD PROVISIONS

Sec. 301. Certain authority of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

TITLE I—TERRORISM INSURANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 101. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the ability of businesses and individuals to obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to economic growth, urban development, and the construction and maintenance of public and private housing, as well as to the promotion of United States exports and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected world;

(2) property and casualty insurance firms are important financial institutions, the products of which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient use of financial resources and enhance the ability of the economy to maintain stability, while responding to a variety of economic, political, environmental, and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

(3) the ability of the insurance industry to cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by potential acts of terrorism in the United States can be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist attacks, while maintaining the stability of the economy;

(4) widespread financial market uncertainties have arisen following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, including the absence of information from which financial institutions can make statistically valid estimates of the probability and cost of future terrorist events, and therefore the size, funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by such acts of terrorism;

(5) a decision by property and casualty insurers to deal with such uncertainties, either by termi-

nating property and casualty coverage for losses arising from terrorist events, or by radically escalating premium coverage to compensate for risks of loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously hamper ongoing and planned construction, property acquisition, and other business projects, generate a dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress economic activity; and

(6) the United States Government should provide temporary financial compensation to insured parties, contributing to the stabilization of the United States economy in a time of national crisis, while the financial services industry develops the systems, mechanisms, products, and programs necessary to create a viable financial services market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to establish a temporary Federal program that provides for a transparent system of shared public and private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, in order to—

(1) protect consumers by addressing market disruptions and ensure the continued widespread availability and affordability of property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

(2) allow for a transitional period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses, while preserving State insurance regulation and consumer protections.

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

In this title, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

(A) CERTIFICATION.—The term ''act of terrorism'' means any act that is certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General of the United States—

(3) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION.—Each entity that meets the definition of an insurer under this title shall participate in the Program.

(b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—No payment may be made by the Secretary under this section with respect to an insured loss that is covered by an insurer, unless—

(1) the person that suffers the insured loss, or a person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim with the insurer;

(2) the insurer provides clear and conspicuous disclosure to the policyholder of the premium charged for insured losses covered by the Program and the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program—

(2) PROGRAM YEAR 3.—Not later than September 1, 2004, the Secretary shall, based on the factors referred to in section 108(d)(1), determine whether the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) should be extended through Program Year 3.

(d) STATE RESIDUAL MARKET INSURANCE ENTITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall issue regulations, as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, that apply the provisions of this title to State residual market insurance entities and State workers' compensation funds.

(i) the Secretary shall not make any payment under this title for any portion of the amount of such losses that exceeds $100,000,000,000; and

(ii) no insurer that has met its insurer deductible shall be liable for the payment of any portion of that amount that exceeds $100,000,000,000.

REV_00154270

(B) INSURER SHARE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall determine the pro rata share of insured losses to be paid by each insurer that incurs insured losses under the Program.

(3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 during the period beginning on the first day of the Transition Period and ending on the last day of Program Year 1, or during Program Year 2 or Program Year 3, and the Congress shall determine the procedures for and the source of any payments for such excess insured losses.

(5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be final, unless expressly provided, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(6) INSURANCE MARKETPLACE AGGREGATE RETENTION AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (7), the insurance marketplace aggregate retention amount shall be—

REV_00154271

(A) for the period beginning on the first day of the Transition Period and ending on the last day of Program Year 1, the lesser of—

(i) $10,000,000,000; and

(ii) the aggregate amount, for all insurers, of insured losses during such period;

(B) for Program Year 2, the lesser of—

(i) $12,500,000,000; and

(ii) the aggregate amount, for all insurers, of insured losses during such Program Year; and

(C) for Program Year 3, the lesser of—

(i) $15,000,000,000; and

(ii) the aggregate amount, for all insurers, of insured losses during such Program Year.

(7) RECOUPMENT OF FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) MANDATORY RECOUPMENT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the mandatory recoupment amount for each of the periods referred to in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (6) shall be the difference between—

REV_00154272

(i) the insurance marketplace aggregate retention amount under paragraph (6) for such period; and

(ii) the aggregate amount, for all insurers, of insured losses during such period that are not compensated by the Federal Government because such losses—

(I) are within the insurer deductible for the insurer subject to the losses; or

(II) are within the portion of losses of the insurer that exceed the insurer deductible, but are not compensated pursuant to paragraph (1).

(B) NO MANDATORY RECOUPMENT IF UNCOMPENSATED LOSSES EXCEED INSURANCE MARKETPLACE RETENTION.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), if the aggregate amount of uncompensated insured losses referred to in clause (ii) of such subparagraph for any period referred to in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (6) is greater than the insurance marketplace aggregate retention amount under paragraph (6) for such period, the mandatory recoupment amount shall be $0.

(C) MANDATORY ESTABLISHMENT OF SURCHARGES TO RECOUP MANDATORY RECOUPMENT AMOUNT.—The Secretary shall collect, for repayment of the Federal financial assistance provided in connection with all acts of terrorism (or acts of war, in the case of workers compensation) occurring during any of the periods referred to in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (6), terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums in an amount equal to any mandatory recoupment amount for such period.

(D) DISCRETIONARY RECOUPMENT OF REMAINDER OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—To the extent that the amount of Federal financial assistance provided exceeds any mandatory recoupment amount, the Secretary may recoup, through terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums, such additional amounts that the Secretary believes can be recouped, based on—

(i) the ultimate costs to taxpayers of no additional recoupment;

(ii) the economic conditions in the commercial marketplace, including the capitalization, profitability, and investment returns of the insurance industry and the current cycle of the insurance markets;

(iii) the affordability of commercial insurance for small- and medium-sized businesses; and

(iv) such other factors as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(8) POLICY SURCHARGE FOR TERRORISM LOSS RISK-SPREADING PREMIUMS.—

(A) POLICYHOLDER PREMIUM.—Any amount established by the Secretary as a terrorism loss risk-spreading premium shall—

(i) be imposed as a policyholder premium surcharge on property and casualty insurance policies in force after the date of such establishment;

(ii) begin with such period of coverage during the year as the Secretary determines appropriate; and

(iii) be based on a percentage of the premium amount charged for property and casualty insurance coverage under the policy.

(B) COLLECTION.—The Secretary shall provide for insurers to collect terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums and remit such amounts collected to the Secretary.

(C) PERCENTAGE LIMITATION.—A terrorism loss risk-spreading premium (including any additional amount included in such premium on a discretionary basis pursuant to paragraph (7)(D)) may not exceed, on an annual basis, the amount equal to 3 percent of the premium charged for property and casualty insurance coverage under the policy.

(D) ADJUSTMENT FOR URBAN AND SMALLER COMMERCIAL AND RURAL AREAS AND DIFFERENT LINES OF INSURANCE.—

(i) ADJUSTMENTS.—In determining the method and manner of imposing terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums, including the amount of such premiums, the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(I) the economic impact on commercial centers of urban areas, including the effect on commercial rents and commercial insurance premiums, particularly rents and premiums charged to small businesses, and the availability of lease space and commercial insurance within urban areas;

(II) the risk factors related to rural areas and smaller commercial centers, including the potential exposure to loss and the likely magnitude of such loss, as well as any resulting cross-subsidization that might result; and

(III) the various exposures to terrorism risk for different lines of insurance.

(ii) RECOUPMENT OF ADJUSTMENTS.—Any mandatory recoupment amounts not collected by the Secretary because of adjustments under this subparagraph shall be recouped through additional terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums.

(E) TIMING OF PREMIUMS.—The Secretary may adjust the timing of terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums to provide for equivalent application of the provisions of this title to policies that are not based on a calendar year, or to apply such provisions on a daily, monthly, or quarterly basis, as appropriate.

REV_00154277

(f) CAPTIVE INSURERS AND OTHER SELF-INSURANCE ARRANGEMENTS.—The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC or the appropriate State regulatory authority, apply the provisions of this title, as appropriate, to other classes or types of captive insurers and other self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities (such as workers' compensation self-insurance programs and State workers' compensation reinsurance pools), but only if such application is determined before the occurrence of an act of terrorism in which such an entity incurs an insured loss and all of the provisions of this title are applied comparably to such entities.

(g) REINSURANCE TO COVER EXPOSURE.—

(1) OBTAINING COVERAGE.—This title may not be construed to limit or prevent insurers from obtaining reinsurance coverage for insurer deductibles or insured losses retained by insurers pursuant to this section, nor shall the obtaining of such coverage affect the calculation of such deductibles or retentions.

(2) LIMITATION ON FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—The amount of financial assistance provided pursuant to this section shall not be reduced by reinsurance paid or payable to an insurer from other sources, except that recoveries from such other sources, taken together with financial assistance for the Transition Period or a Program Year provided pursuant to this section, may not exceed the aggregate amount of the insurer's insured losses for such period. If such recoveries and financial assistance for the Transition Period or a Program Year exceed such aggregate amount of insured losses for that period and there is no agreement between the insurer and any reinsurer to the contrary, an amount in excess of such aggregate insured losses shall be returned to the Secretary.

(h) GROUP LIFE INSURANCE STUDY.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary shall study, on an expedited basis, whether adequate and affordable catastrophe reinsurance for acts of terrorism is available to life insurers in the United States that issue group life insurance, and the extent to which the threat of terrorism is reducing the availability of group life insurance coverage for consumers in the United States.

(2) CONDITIONAL COVERAGE.—To the extent that the Secretary determines that such coverage is not or will not be reasonably available to both such insurers and consumers, the Secretary shall, in consultation with the NAIC—

REV_00154279

(A) apply the provisions of this title, as appropriate, to providers of group life insurance; and

(B) provide such restrictions, limitations, or conditions with respect to any financial assistance provided that the Secretary deems appropriate, based on the study under paragraph (1).

(i) STUDY AND REPORT.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the insurance field, shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage, including personal lines.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

SEC. 104. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF CLAIMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Program, including authority—

REV_00154280

(b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES.—The Secretary may issue interim final rules or procedures specifying the manner in which—

(1) insurers may file and certify claims under the Program;

(2) the Federal share of compensation for insured losses will be paid under the Program, including payments based on estimates of or actual insured losses;

(3) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repayment from or reimburse any insurer, based on estimates of insured losses under the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions in section 103; and

(4) the Secretary will determine any final netting of payments under the Program, including payments owed to the Federal Government from any insurer and any Federal share of compensation for insured losses owed to any insurer, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions in section 103.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall consult with the NAIC, as the Secretary determines appropriate, concerning the Program.

(d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may employ persons or contract for services as may be necessary to implement the Program.

(e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may assess a civil monetary penalty in an amount not exceeding the amount under paragraph (2) against any insurer that the Secretary determines, on the record after opportunity for a hearing—

(A) has failed to charge, collect, or remit terrorism loss risk-spreading premiums under section 103(e) in accordance with the requirements of, or regulations issued under, this title;

(B) has intentionally provided to the Secretary erroneous information regarding premium or loss amounts;

(C) submits to the Secretary fraudulent claims under the Program for insured losses;

(D) has failed to provide the disclosures required under subsection (f); or

REV_00154282

(E) has otherwise failed to comply with the provisions of, or the regulations issued under, this title.

(2) AMOUNT.—The amount under this paragraph is the greater of $1,000,000 and, in the case of any failure to pay, charge, collect, or remit amounts in accordance with this title or the regulations issued under this title, such amount in dispute.

(3) RECOVERY OF AMOUNT IN DISPUTE.—A penalty under this subsection for any failure to pay, charge, collect, or remit amounts in accordance with this title or the regulations under this title shall be in addition to any such amounts recovered by the Secretary.

(f) SUBMISSION OF PREMIUM INFORMATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall annually compile information on the terrorism risk insurance premium rates of insurers for the preceding year.

(2) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—To the extent that such information is not otherwise available to the Secretary, the Secretary may require each insurer to submit to the NAIC terrorism risk insurance premium rates, as necessary to carry out paragraph (1), and the NAIC shall make such information available to the Secretary.

REV_00154283

(3) AVAILABILITY TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall make information compiled under this subsection available to the Congress, upon request.

(g) FUNDING.—

(1) FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—There are hereby appropriated, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are hereby appropriated, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay reasonable costs of administering the Program.

SEC. 105. PREEMPTION AND NULLIFICATION OF PRE-EXISTING TERRORISM EXCLUSIONS.

(a) GENERAL NULLIFICATION.—Any terrorism exclusion in a contract for property and casualty insurance that is in force on the date of enactment of this Act shall be void to the extent that it excludes losses that would otherwise be insured losses.

(b) GENERAL PREEMPTION.—Any State approval of any terrorism exclusion from a contract for property and casualty insurance that is in force on the date of enactment of this Act, shall be void to the extent that it excludes losses that would otherwise be insured losses.

(c) REINSTATEMENT OF TERRORISM EXCLUSIONS.—Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b) or any provision of State law, an insurer may reinstate a preexisting provision in a contract for property and casualty insurance that is in force on the date of enactment of this Act and that excludes coverage for an act of terrorism only—

(1) if the insurer has received a written statement from the insured that affirmatively authorizes such reinstatement; or

(2) if—

(A) the insured fails to pay any increased premium charged by the insurer for providing such terrorism coverage; and

(B) the insurer provided notice, at least 30 days before any such reinstatement, of—

(i) the increased premium for such terrorism coverage; and

SEC. 106. PRESERVATION PROVISIONS.

(a) STATE LAW.—Nothing in this title shall affect the jurisdiction or regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State over any insurer or other person—

(1) except as specifically provided in this title; and

(2) except that—

(A) the definition of the term ''act of terrorism'' in section 102 shall be the exclusive definition of that term for purposes of compensation for insured losses under this title, and shall preempt any provision of State law that is inconsistent with that definition, to the extent that such provision of law would otherwise apply to any type of insurance covered by this title;

(B) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on December 31, 2003, rates and forms for terrorism risk insurance covered by this title and filed with any State shall not be subject to prior approval or a waiting period under any law of a State that would otherwise be applicable, except that nothing in this title affects the ability of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory, and, with respect to forms, where a State has prior approval authority, it shall apply to allow subsequent review of such forms; and

(C) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and for so long as the Program is in effect, as provided in section 108, including authority in subsection 108(b), books and records of any insurer that are relevant to the Program shall be provided, or caused to be provided, to the Secretary, upon request by the Secretary, notwithstanding any provision of the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting such access.

(b) EXISTING REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to alter, amend, or expand the terms of coverage under any reinsurance agreement in effect on the date of enactment of this Act. The terms and conditions of such an agreement shall be determined by the language of that agreement.

SEC. 107. LITIGATION MANAGEMENT.

(a) PROCEDURES AND DAMAGES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary makes a determination pursuant to section 102 that an act of terrorism has occurred, there shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from such act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or relating to such act of terrorism, except as provided in subsection (b).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (b).

(3) SUBSTANTIVE LAW.—The substantive law for decision in any such action described in paragraph (1) shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which such act of terrorism occurred, unless such law is otherwise inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law.

(4) JURISDICTION.—For each determination described in paragraph (1), not later than 90 days after the occurrence of an act of terrorism, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall designate 1 district court or, if necessary, multiple district courts of the United States that shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim (including any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death) relating to or arising out of an act of terrorism subject to this section. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall select and assign the district court or courts based on the convenience of the parties and the just and efficient conduct of the proceedings. For purposes of personal jurisdiction, the district court or courts designated by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall be deemed to sit in all judicial districts in the United States.

(5) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in an action under paragraph (1) that are attributable to punitive damages shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this title.

(b) EXCLUSION.—Nothing in this section shall in any way limit the liability of any government, an organization, or person who knowingly participates in, conspires to commit, aids and abets, or commits any act of terrorism with respect to which a determination described in subsection (a)(1) was made.

(c) RIGHT OF SUBROGATION.—The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment or claim paid by the United States under this title.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect—

(1) any party's contractual right to arbitrate a dispute; or

(2) any provision of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107–42; 49 U.S.C. 40101 note.).

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) that arise out of or result from acts of terrorism that occur or occurred during the effective period of the Program.

SEC. 108. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—The Program shall terminate on December 31, 2005.

(b) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Program, the Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, recoupment, reimbursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during the period in which the Program was in effect under this title, in accordance with the provisions of section 103 and regulations promulgated thereunder.

REV_00154290

(c) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This title is repealed on the final termination date of the Program under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be construed—

(1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or causing to be taken, such actions under subsection (b) of this section, paragraph (4), (5), (6), (7), or (8) of section 103(e), or subsection (a)(1), (c), (d), or (e) of section 104, as in effect on the day before the date of such repeal, or applicable regulations promulgated thereunder, during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (b) of this section is in effect; or

(2) to prevent the availability of funding under section 104(g) during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (b) of this section is in effect.

(d) STUDY AND REPORT ON THE PROGRAM.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary, in consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry and of policy holders, other experts in the insurance field, and other experts as needed, shall assess the effectiveness of the Program and the likely capacity of the property and casualty insurance industry to offer insurance for terrorism risk after termination of the Program, and the availability and affordability of such insurance for various policyholders, including railroads, trucking, and public transit.

(2) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1) not later than June 30, 2005.

TITLE II—TREATMENT OF TERRORIST ASSETS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as provided in subsection (b), in every case in which a person has obtained a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim based upon an act of terrorism, or for which a terrorist party is not immune under section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the blocked assets of that terrorist party (including the blocked assets of any agency or instrumentality of that terrorist party) shall be subject to execution or attachment in aid of execution in order to satisfy such judgment to the extent of any compensatory damages for which such terrorist party has been adjudged liable.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of subsection (a) in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment in aid of execution or execution against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(2) EXCEPTION.—A waiver under this subsection shall not apply to—

(2) in subsection (b)(2)(B), by inserting after "the date of enactment of this Act" the following: "(less amounts therein as to which the United States has an interest in subrogation pursuant to subsection (c) arising prior to the date of entry of the judgment or judgments to be satisfied in whole or in part hereunder)";

(3) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), and (f) as subsections (e), (f), and (g), respectively; and

(4) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection (d):

"(d) DISTRIBUTION OF ACCOUNT BALANCES AND PROCEEDS INADEQUATE TO SATISFY FULL AMOUNT OF COMPENSATORY AWARDS AGAINST IRAN.—

REV_00154294

"(1) PRIOR JUDGMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the event that the Secretary determines that 90 percent of the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) are inadequate to pay the total amount of compensatory damages awarded in judgments issued as of the date of the enactment of this subsection in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A) with respect to Iran, the Secretary shall, not later than 60 days after such date, make payment from such amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) to each party to which such a judgment has been issued in an amount equal to a share, calculated under subparagraph (B), of 90 percent of the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) that have not been subrogated to the United States under this Act as of the date of enactment of this subsection.

"(B) CALCULATION OF PAYMENTS.—The share that is payable to a person under subparagraph (A), including any person issued a final judgment as of the date of enactment of this subsection in a suit filed on a date added by the amendment made by section 686 of Public Law 107–228, shall be equal to the proportion that the amount of unpaid compensatory damages awarded in a final judgment issued to that person bears to the total amount of all unpaid compensatory damages awarded to all persons to whom such judgments have been issued as of the date of enactment of this subsection in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A) with respect to Iran.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT JUDGMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall pay to any person awarded a final judgment after the date of enactment of this subsection, in the case filed on January 16, 2002, and identified in subsection (a)(2)(A) with respect to Iran, an amount equal to a share, calculated under subparagraph (B), of the balance of the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) that remain following the disbursement of all payments as provided by paragraph (1). The Secretary shall make such payment not later than 30 days after such judgment is awarded.

"(B) CALCULATION OF PAYMENTS.—To the extent that funds are available, the amount paid under subparagraph (A) to such person shall be the amount the person would have been paid under paragraph (1) if the person had been awarded the judgment prior to the date of enactment of this subsection.

"(3) ADDITIONAL PAYMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the disbursement of all payments under paragraphs (1) and (2), the Secretary shall make an additional payment to each person who received a payment under paragraph (1) or (2) in an amount equal to a share, calculated under subparagraph (B), of the balance of the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) that remain following the disbursement of all payments as provided by paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(B) CALCULATION OF PAYMENTS.—The share payable under subparagraph (A) to each such person shall be equal to the proportion that the amount of compensatory damages awarded that person bears to the total amount of all compensatory damages awarded to all persons who received a payment under paragraph (1) or (2).

"(4) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall bar, or require delay in, enforcement of any judgment to which this subsection applies under any procedure or against assets otherwise available under this section or under any other provision of law.

"(5) CERTAIN RIGHTS AND CLAIMS NOT RELINQUISHED.—Any person receiving less than the full amount of compensatory damages awarded to that party in a judgment to which this subsection applies shall not be required to make the election set forth in subsection (a)(2)(B) or, with respect to subsection (a)(2)(D), the election relating to relinquishment of any right to execute or attach property that is subject to section 1610(f)(1)(A) of title 28, United States Code, except that such person shall be required to relinquish rights set forth—

"(A) in subsection (a)(2)(C); and

"(B) in subsection (a)(2)(D) with respect to enforcement against property that is at issue in claims against the United States before an international tribunal or that is the subject of awards by such tribunal.

"(6) GUIDELINES FOR ESTABLISHING CLAIMS OF A RIGHT TO PAYMENT.—The Secretary may promulgate reasonable guidelines through which any person claiming a right to payment under this section may inform the Secretary of the basis for such claim, including by submitting a certified copy of the final judgment under which such right is claimed and by providing commercially reasonable payment instructions. TERRORISM INSURANCE:

THE HOBSON'S CHOICE FOR THE ADMINISTRATION
By Victor E. Schwartz*

People use the term "Hobson's Choice," but many do not know its origin. In England, a man named Hobson provided horse carriage service from one town to another. Customers were required to take the next horse in line, regardless of how unsuitable it appeared for travel; that was the only way passengers could move between towns.

Unfortunately, the Bush Administration recently faced such a "Hobson's Choice" with terrorism insurance legislation. If Administration officials were to have a bill that would help the economy and create jobs to help assure that there was full insurance against terrorism for business and property owners, they had to accede, at least in part, to the Senate Democratic leadership and the wealthy personal injury lobby.

As The Wall Street Journal has indicated, terrorism insurance legislation is necessary to assure that lenders can confidently loan money to businesses and property owners and start new projects. These projects would create meaningful jobs for hard-hat workers and help our economy when it needs it most.

Federal money is a prop for federal terrorism insurance. In light of that fact, reasonable liability limits should be placed on anyone's right to sue. Moreover, both common sense and the national interest suggest that if there is another tragedy, liability lawsuits should be limited to people's needs, not wealthy personal injury lawyer greed.

As the terrorism insurance legislation developed in the House of Representatives, meaningful liability reforms accompanied the proposal. Punitive damages were limited; joint and several liability limits were also imposed, so that a relatively innocent business did not pay for harm caused by terrorisms; and curbs were placed on contingency fees.

When it comes to limits on our liability system, the Senate is a very different body than the House. A wealthy personal injury lawyer, Fred Baron, has stated that the personal injury bar, in effect, "own the Senate." For that reason, the much-needed terrorism insurance bill has been held captive by both the Democratic leadership and the wealthy personal injury lawyers since December 2001.

The nation's economy has had greater needs in 2002, and the need for terrorism insurance and putting people back to work has become more urgent. Whether one was to have any liability limits in the Senate bill came down to choices. One choice was to fight for limits on punitive damages. While some Democrats, such as Senator Dodd (D-CT), supported sound reform in this area, the punitive damage proposals put forth by the Democratic leadership would have made a bad situation worse. What few people know is that some of those proposals, which set forth a standard for when punitive damages could be awarded, would have simultaneously created a right to bring punitive damage lawsuits in a number of states that presently do not have them.

In October 2002, it was clear that only one civil justice reform provision could be obtained in the terrorism bill. In light of this "devil's choice," created by the Democratic leadership in the Senate and their wealthy personal injury friends, the White House was faced with a difficult choice. It could have either a weak punitive damage standard or have all cases consolidated before a single federal judge in a single federal court. The White House chose the second option, and that was the wiser choice. This is why.

The single federal court provision awards one of the most serious problems in our civil justice system today – forum shopping by wealthy personal injury lawyers seeking to bring their cases in what personal injury lawyers themselves call "magic" jurisdictions. Others, such as the American Tort Reform Association, call the same jurisdictions "judicial hellholes." These include courts in certain jurisdictions which foster claims made by plaintiffs, however that might be obtained. In that regard, even if clear standards on punitive damages had existed in the terrorism bill, these courts would have likely ignored these federally mandated provisions, but stretch them to the edge to allow claims. In light of the Administration's "Hobson's Choice," these courts cannot be reached.

Again, this does not suggest that all Democrats block liability reform. Unless there is a change in the Senate leadership, this Administration will continue to be faced with "Hobson's Choices" when it comes to societal goals versus the desires of the wealthy personal injury bar. The Administration chose to put a jolt in the economy this time, and chose to create jobs. They also will confine claims brought by wealthy personal injury lawyers to a federal court. More was needed, but the choice for more was not attainable now.

Subject: NARA Paper V2

;;;Tim, Pls see attached new write-up for NARA signature. It is intended as a simple statement that says we will not be in violation of records keeping provisions by removing the Non-Record feature. Adam is going to run it by WH Counsel to make sure that this statement will be sufficient and then propose it anew to NARA. I am coordinating with Adam to meet with NARA Counsel as a way of bringing this front and center on their agenda.

MEMORANDUM

The Executive Office of the President (EOP), Office of Administration (OA) has been in discussion with the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) regarding planned changes to the EOP E-mail system from the Lotus Notes to the Microsoft (MS) Exchange-Outlook software suite. This change is being made as part of a strategic EOP-wide systems migration. The transition from Lotus to Exchange-Outlook will not carry over the "Non-Record" feature that existed in the Lotus application insofar as this feature is not supported in the MS Exchange product suite and there is no practical technical solution to engineer this feature. Effective with this change, the OCIO will capture all EOP E-mail for records management consistent with established EOP and NARA provisions. There will be no provision for system users to predefine E-mail that would not be records managed. This memorandum establishes NARA's acknowledgement of EOP's plans as stated here and that EOP's not carrying over the "Non-Record" feature does not in any way impede compliance with the NARA records management provisions.

All I was aware would be in the Homeland Security bill was the House's Safety Act and possibly the Warner/Thompson amendment (that Brett worked out) that doesn't mandate indemnification but directs the President to examine it and include certain critera. Both are good. I am hearing that there may actually be legislative indemnity, that Lockheed got even more than they were asking for. Is this true or is it just someone misunderstanding the Warner/Thompson language? Please let me know asap.

Effective immediately, please include the FET taxes in each of your bids, contracts, and final invoices for White House trips. The White House will not longer be responsible for reporting and payment of this tax and the responsibility reverts back to the press charter carrier (in this case United).

The White House Travel Office press billing has been outsourced to American Express and their press charter program to Air Partner, Inc.

FYI - WHMO has provided a list of items from Offutt AFB that the President used on 9/11 (still waiting to hear back from Barksdale AFB). The items identified so far are:

- Command Center Swivel Chair w/old US Strategic Command Seal
-Secure Telephone
- Plastic Water Pitcher
- Plate under Pitcher
- Goblet
- Paper coasters w/old US Strategic Command Seal
- Video Tele-Conference Center Chair

I recommend we advise we would like all these items to recreate the image down the road (even though we may not use all). Do you agree?

Issues to address:
1. Who should pay to ship these items to DC ?
2. Is it okay to store them in 501 EEOB?

WASHINGTON (AP) ? Now 20 years old, the Federalist Society has grown from a tiny group of conservative college students to an influential power in Washington, though most people still don't recognize its name.
President Bush turns to the lawyers' group for judicial candidates. Attorney General John Ashcroft fills his staff with its members. Two other Bush Cabinet members, the president's top Supreme Court lawyer and Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia were involved in the group's founding.
"Who would have thought 20 years ago that that little organization of students at a couple of law schools would have evolved today to a power of such proportions?" Scalia said this week at the group's convention. "It could have been a grand flop."
The society is celebrating its anniversary this week in Washington, though the gathering also has turned into a post-election party over Republican victories in the midterm election.
While the society has no party affiliation, many of the 30,000 lawyers involved in the organization are Republicans.
Most seem amused by the group's mystique.
Solicitor General Theodore Olson, the president's Supreme Court lawyer, said they've been accused of secretly building power behind a seductive facade of intellectual debate. Events are open to the public and membership is open to anyone, he said.
"What a disguise. From that small secret beginning 20 years ago, hiding in plain sight," he said during a gala Thursday night.
Ashcroft joked at that same dinner that the stereotypes can make it uncomfortable to associate with the group.
"There are some who would paint the Federalist Society as a nefarious, underground cabal with secret handshakes and blood oaths. I called all of you here tonight because I want to know who squealed," he said.
Also at the event were Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham, who was a founder of the Harvard Law School chapter, and Interior Secretary Gale Norton, who advised student founders.
The Federalist Society does not lobby Congress, instead using public forums on subjects like lawsuit limits to influence opinion. The group's name comes from the Federalist Papers, written by the founding fathers. Its mission is backing individual liberties and traditional values.
Liberals have no group as large, although the American Constitution Society and the Equal Justice Society act in a similar way to advance their causes.
Erwin Chemerinsky, a liberal University of Southern California law professor, said Federalist Society members claim it's an open organization but at many events "there's not a black face in the room" and there's an atmosphere of partisanship.
At Thursday's dinner, the crowd ? including Scalia ? was entertained by a series of Bill Clinton jokes and jabs at liberals.

Olson told of a critic who complained that the group represented a serious threat to minorities, women, workers, the poor, the elderly, the disabled and environmentalists. "He didn't mention ? I think an oversight ? the multi-gendered," Olson said.
Olson got more laughs when he said that Clinton had a hard time keeping White House attorneys, describing him as "a man who went through counsels to the president as if they were breath mints ? I thought of better ways to express it, but I thought I'd better leave it at that."

FOUNDED: In 1982 by students who believed professors at the top law schools were too liberal. Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham was a founder of the Harvard Law School chapter. Interior Secretary Gale Norton advised the founders. Justice Antonin Scalia, then a law professor, agreed to be an adviser to students.
MEMBERSHIP: Conservatives and libertarians. About 30,000 involved in society activities.
COLLEGES: With chapters on about 150 law school campuses, the society recruits members early with the chance to meet prominent public officials and judges.
BUDGET: $3.2 million, funded mainly by donations from conservative groups.
FORUMS: The group uses public forums ? with liberal and conservative experts ? to explore legal subjects.
QUOTE: "Most Americans don't know who they are. Some of the Americans who do think of them as a secret club, which they aren't. They're not like a cult. They're very open and engaged." ? Cass Sunstein, a liberal law professor at the University of Chicago.

Dear Mr./Ms. _____:

As you know from recent discussions between our organizations, the Office of Administration (OA), Executive Office of the President (EOP) is engaged in a time-sensitive and critical effort to update the EOP's information technology infrastructure to support the needs of OA's customer offices. Part of this effort involves converting to a standard office management suite of software centered on the Microsoft Office line of products that includes Exchange, Outlook, Word, Excel and PowerPoint. Despite our significant efforts to convert the "record/non-record" function currently in place with the legacy system (designed around Lotus Notes), we have concluded that this feature is not supportable in the new Microsoft environment. The absence of this feature will cause all e-mail sent henceforth within, to, or from offices served by the EOP's information technology infrastructure to be records managed in the Automated Records Management System (ARMS).

Because it will no longer be possible for e-mail sent by EOP system account holders to be designated as "non-record" at the time of creation, all EOP system e-mail--including non-record materials--will eventually be sent to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). For Presidential records, this will occur during a Presidential transition. For Federal records generated by components of the EOP that generate Federal records, this will take place as part of the records accession process. At present, approximately 1.5% of the e-mail handled by the system is designated as "non-record."

I want to emphasize that the reasons for this change are purely technical. We realize that NARA is encouraging the development of information systems that will prevent unnecessary record keeping by allowing senders to classify messages as "non-records," or "temporary records," or otherwise allow senders to identify an item as something other than a permanent record. In this light, we acknowledge that the step we need to take at this time is a step back, and we are taking it in order to maintain and protect our infrastructure in accordance with industry standards. As we develop long-term plans for the EOP network, we will continue to examine and pursue options that would allow us to preserve only those records that we are required to keep.

We note that the fact that a particular message is not a record under Federal law does not necessarily change because it is, contrary to its true status, retained. Already, there is a large quantity of non-record messages labeled as "records" simply because the sender used the default setting. We understand that the Archives has properly treated these materials as non-records for purposes of applicable information disclosure processes despite their default identification as records. These materials fall into two broad categories. For offices covered by the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. § 2201, et. seq.,"Personal records," as defined at 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3), are not presidential records, and are not subject to disclosure under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). For offices that generate Federal records pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 3101, et. seq., documents that do not meet the definition of an agency record under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Such items, which will likely be no more than marginally greater in number due to the technical change discussed in this letter, should continue to be withheld from disclosure under these processes. Accordingly, we trust and understand that the National Archives will, to the best of its ability, identify such personal records and non-records, and segregate them from records identified for disclosure in response to a request under one of the above-cited laws.

Thank you for consulting with us concerning this development. If you have any questions or would like to further discuss this matter, please call me at _____, or _____ or my office at _____.

Dear Mr. Stern:

The Office of Administration (OA) in the Executive Office of the President (EOP) is updating the EOP,s information technology infrastructure. Part of this effort involves converting to a standard office management suite of software centered on the Microsoft Office line of products that includes Exchange, Outlook, Word, Excel and PowerPoint. We are informed that the &record/non-record8 function currently in place with the legacy system (designed around Lotus Notes) is not feasible in the new Microsoft environment. Therefore, all EOP system e-mail--including non-record materials--will eventually be sent to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). For Presidential records, this will occur during a Presidential transition. For Federal records generated by components of the EOP that generate Federal records, this will take place as part of the records accession process. We write to make clear our continued understanding that NARA has no legal authority to unilaterally release non-records to the public under either the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. õ 2201, et. seq., or the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. õ 552.

Thank you for your work on this matter.

Dear Mr./Ms. _____:

As you know from recent discussions between our organizations, the Office of Administration (OA), Executive Office of the President (EOP) is engaged in a time-sensitive and critical effort to update the EOP's information technology infrastructure to support the needs of OA's customer offices. Part of this effort involves converting to a standard office management suite of software centered on the Microsoft Office line of products that includes Exchange, Outlook, Word, Excel and PowerPoint. Despite our significant efforts to convert the "record/non-record" function currently in place with the legacy system (designed around Lotus Notes), we have concluded that this feature is not supportable in the new Microsoft environment. The absence of this feature will cause all e-mail sent henceforth within, to, or from offices served by the EOP's information technology infrastructure to be records managed in the Automated Records Management System (ARMS).

Because it will no longer be possible for e-mail sent by EOP system account holders to be designated as "non-record" at the time of creation, all EOP system e-mail--including non-record materials--will eventually be sent to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). For Presidential records, this will occur during a Presidential transition. For Federal records generated by components of the EOP that generate Federal records, this will take place as part of the records accession process. At present, approximately 1.5% of the e-mail handled by the system is designated as "non-record."

I want to emphasize that the reasons for this change are purely technical. We realize that NARA is encouraging the development of information systems that will prevent unnecessary record keeping by allowing senders to classify messages as "non-records," or "temporary records," or otherwise allow senders to identify an item as something other than a permanent record. In this light, we acknowledge that the step we need to take at this time is a step back, and we are taking it in order to maintain and protect our infrastructure in accordance with industry standards. As we develop long-term plans for the EOP network, we will continue to examine and pursue options that would allow us to preserve only those records that we are required to keep.

We note that the fact that a particular message is not a record under Federal law does not necessarily change because it is, contrary to its true status, retained. Already, there is a large quantity of non-record messages labeled as "records" simply because the sender used the default setting. We understand that the Archives has properly treated these materials as non-records for purposes of applicable information disclosure processes despite their default identification as records. These materials fall into two broad categories. For offices covered by the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. § 2201, et. seq.,"Personal records," as defined at 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3), are not presidential records, and are not subject to disclosure under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). For offices that generate Federal records pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 3101, et. seq., documents that do not meet the definition of an agency record under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Such items, which will likely be no more than marginally greater in number due to the technical change discussed in this letter, should continue to be withheld from disclosure under these processes. Accordingly, we trust and understand that the National Archives will, to the best of its ability, identify such personal records and non-records, and segregate them from records identified for disclosure in response to a request under one of the above-cited laws.

Thank you for consulting with us concerning this development. If you have any questions or would like to further discuss this matter, please call me at _____, or _____ or my office at _____.

Sincerely,

DRAFT – FOR DISCUSSION PURPOSES ONLY NOT FOR DISTRIBUTION

The Honorable Max Baucus
United States Senate
511 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Baucus:

Thank you for your recent letter to me regarding the health insurance provisions of the recently enacted Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform Act of 2002.

I share your view that the direct assistance to states and the new health insurance tax credit in the new law can make a difference in preventing additional workers and their families from losing health coverage. This assistance is provided without the states having to assume any costs of the coverage. With the new credit, the federal government will be paying 65 percent of the premiums, with the worker paying the remaining 35 percent. The total amount of assistance under the credit program is not capped.

You raised three issues in your letter. First, you indicated your view that states should not be able to enter into arrangements with individual insurers through state-based coverage options. One of the types of "qualified health insurance" under the act, however, is coverage through an arrangement entered into by a State and an issuer of health insurance coverage. Nothing in the statute prevents state-elected coverage from being individual coverage, as long as it meets the four requirements for state-elected coverage (guaranteed issue, no imposition of preexisting condition exclusions, nondiscriminatory premiums, and same benefits). Preventing a state from electing to arrange for individual coverage would limit the flexibility of a state to fashion a program of qualified coverage that best fits its needs.

Second, you addressed in your letter the meaning of the term "similarly situated" for purposes of the application of the nondiscriminatory-premium and same-benefit requirements for state-elected coverage. The clause "similarly situated" in the statute is contained in the clause "similarly situated individual who is not a qualifying individual." If a plan charges the same premium, and provides the same benefit, to all individuals who have the same health risk factors, the nondiscriminatory-premium and same-benefit requirements are satisfied. Thus, the "similarly-situated" rule prevents states from using the credit to indirectly subsidize coverage of individuals who are not eligible for the credit.

Each qualified health insurance plan must ensure access to each qualifying individual. Thus, we agree with your statement that a state-elected program would not be qualified health insurance if it accepted some but not all qualifying individuals while other state-elected alternatives accepted the denied individuals.

Third, your letter addressed the interpretation of the three-month rule as it pertains to health insurance coverage provided by the states under the new tax credit. It is important to note that the three-month rule is not an eligibility rule for the credit. An individual who does not have three months of "creditable coverage" would not be denied the credit. The three-month rule is the way that the statute defines the group of people for whom the four special requirements identified in your letter (guaranteed issue, no pre-existing condition exclusions, nondiscriminatory premiums, and same benefits) must apply in order for state-elected coverage options to be qualified health insurance for purposes of the tax credit.

Under the law, the four state-elected coverage requirements must apply only with respect to an individual whose aggregate of the periods of "creditable coverage" is three months as of the date on which the individual seeks to enroll in the state-elected coverage. The statute defines "creditable coverage" by reference to another Internal Revenue Code section, which in turn provides that a period of coverage prior to a 63-day break in coverage is not counted. Thus, for example, if someone is covered under an employer-sponsored group health plan and then loses that coverage and remains without creditable coverage for 63 days, then the coverage prior to the 63-day break would not be counted in determining whether the individual has three months of coverage.

It is equally important to be aware that a state may offer coverage options that extend the four special requirements of guaranteed issue, no pre-existing condition exclusions, nondiscriminatory premiums, and same benefits to individuals without three months of creditable coverage. Likewise, a state could apply one or more of the four standards to individuals who have met a lesser coverage requirement (such as three months of coverage counting periods before a 63-day break in coverage). Such insurance would be eligible for the credit. The law simply permits a state to offer a plan that charges a person without three months of coverage a different premium than someone who is not eligible for the credit, to impose a preexisting condition limitation, to provide that person different benefits than someone who is not eligible for the credit, or to deny access to coverage. This permissive rule provides needed flexibility to states in arranging coverage for people who have been out of the insurance market for a significant period of time.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to discuss this important provision and, hopefully, clarify its impact on the individuals it will assist. Please feel free to contact me if I can be of further assistance on the credit.

Sincerely,

Paul H. O'Neill

For offices covered by the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. § 2201, et. seq.,"Personal records," as defined at 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3), are not presidential records, and are not subject to disclosure under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). For offices that generate Federal records pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 3101, et. seq., documents that do not meet the definition of an agency record under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Such items, which will likely be no more than marginally greater in number due to the technical change discussed in this letter, should continue to be withheld from disclosure under these processes. Accordingly, we trust and understand that the National Archives will, to the best of its ability, identify such personal records and non-records, and segregate them from records identified for disclosure in response to a request under one of the above-cited laws.

Thank you for consulting with us concerning this development. If you have any questions or would like to further discuss this matter, please call me at _____, or _____ or my office at _____.

Sincerely,

Manny Gonzales was a greeter at the event (a political/welcome event) and James Tobin was listed a host organization however his notes indicate he helped out on several aspects of the trip. I don't believe he actually met POTUS. Thanks for your help.

Brett -

I'm the new Katye Balls over in Presidential Correspondence.

I have a question regarding the below Memo. I just want to clarify the perameter "performing an official duty at an otherwise political event." My understanding is this would include Motorcade, volunteers or other assistance which would have been performed regardless of the nature of the trip.

Where do greeters stand on this list? I have James Tobin - Regional Political Director for the RNC and Manny Gonzales - Chairman for the Otero County GOP. They greeted POTUS. Please confirm if they should receive a letter on official stationary.

Thank you for your help. I appreciate your assistance.

if it answers your questions, then i'm comfortable with it. one conern: it addresses the logistical and volunteer personnel, but not the actual participants (the ones that would typically be for HS) in the events - the candidate, his family, other event hosts, etc.

for example, which stationery should the president use to thank the kennedy's, who hosted a finance event for gov. jeb bush at their residence on friday?

MEMORANDUM FOR KATHARINE BALLS

FROM: BRETT KAVANAUGH

SUBJECT: THANK YOU NOTES

You asked about use of stationery for thank-you notes to people who may have assisted the President on a political trip or the mixed portion of an official-political trip. As a general matter, you should use political stationery only for those who assisted directly and solely with political events. You should use official stationery for notes to those who assisted with official events, who assisted on both aspects of a mixed trip, who assisted with official functions on an otherwise political trip, and for whom a clear determination cannot be made. As a general matter, for example, notes to airport greeters and motorcade drivers can be on official stationery regardless of the nature of the trip.

We will revisit these guidelines if and when the President becomes a candidate for re-election to the Presidency.

Yes, you were correct. We did discuss this issue previously.

Just to confirm, going forward, the Press Secretary (Ari, Scott, or designated respresentative) on POTUS trips will be considered official regardless of nature of trip.

With regards to FLOTUS trips, your previous email below states that the Press Secretary on FLOTUS trips could be considered mixed on mixed trips. Based on today's conversation, have we decided to apply the same rules as POTUS trips (as stated above) or does your email below apply? Or are they both the same thing and I am just missing the point? It's very possible...

Kate and I have been trying to work our way through these manifests for political trips. See below for some info she found out regarding staff involvement in the political portion of the mixed trips. Does it seem reasonable to you that I could use this as a guideline for future trips?

That said, in the interest of consistency, I have some questions about how this should be applied to other bills. For instance, if Ari does not directly participate in the political portion of the trip and therefore we do not include him in the political bills for AirOps, do I apply this same logic to his hotel bill if it was an overnight. Or, do I err on the side of safety and just always mark him political on airfare and other bills? I'm having trouble trying to determine how to handle some of the senior staff that were not addressed in the "Official Travelers" memo...well, mostly just Ari and Scott McClellan. Am I just making this too complicated?

Also, for FLOTUS travel, do the same "official travelers" rules apply? I got your message on Sarah Garrison. But, does Julie Thomas (as Trip Director) get marked as official?

I feel like I am trapped in a 5th Grade Word Problem class and I can't get out.....

ok, I think I am done. I will bring it to you soon.

-Reed Dickens said that he takes the press into the fundraisers and works at the event because they are all pool press. I marked him political. Josh Deckard does the same thing.

-Kelly Gannon sets up the press risers for these events. I marked her political.

-Reed said Ari and other senior staff usually watch it on tv either in the staff holding room or in the back. I did not mark Ari or Scott McClellan as political. However, I marked Scott Stanzel who is in Media Affairs. He might stand with the pool and answer questions from local reporters.

-The ADs or Reed told me that the policy guys who are on the trip for the purpose of the official event, (i.e. homeland security, etc.) usually just watch, but not necessarily in the holding room. I did not mark these as political.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

In re RICHARD B. CHENEY, Vice President of the United States, et al.,
Petitioners.	No. 02-5354
	[Civil Action Nos. 01-1530, 02-631 (EGS)]

REPLY TO APPELLEES' RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS

This case involves far more than an ordinary discovery dispute. Plaintiffs seek and the district court ordered extensive disclosure of communications between senior executive branch officials and those with information relevant to advice that was being formulated for the President. The district court ordered this extensive discovery and disclosure based on a mistaken interpretation of the APA and a failure to heed important separation of powers principles. Moreover, in the context of a statute, i.e., the FACA, that is primarily about disclosure, there is little practical difference between unconstitutionally overbroad discovery and constitutionally problematic interpretations of the statute. Both this Court and the Supreme Court have struggled to interpret the FACA to keep its disclosure obligations and other provisions within constitutional bounds. The district court undermined those efforts by allowing extensive and intrusive discovery based on the mere allegation that the membership of the NEPDG deviated from the President's plan. That was a clear error that can and should be corrected via mandamus.

1. The Vice President And Other Petitioners May Obtain Effective Appellate Review Of The District Court's Orders Without Incurring Criminal Contempt Sanctions.

Plaintiffs urge that the Vice President cannot obtain review of discovery orders raising significant statutory and constitutional questions without going into criminal contempt. That contention is flatly at odds with In re Kessler, 100 F.3d 1015 (D.C. Cir. 1996), on which plaintiffs seek to rely. Opp. 8. The Court in that case concluded that mandamus would not be available to review discovery of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. Citing

United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992), the Court drew a distinction between the President and subordinate officers, and expressed concern that if the Court permitted immediate review by an agency official "three levels down from that of the Secretary of HHS," all executive branch officials might claim an immediate right of review. Id. at 1017. As the Court's reasoning makes clear, whatever the limits on immediate review of discovery orders, they do not encompass the President or the Vice President, who, with an independent constitutional role, is not simply a subordinate officer. See also Vice President's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss Appeal (explaining that the Vice President's appeal is clearly proper under Nixon).

Indeed, the Court has subsequently questioned its decision to deny mandamus relief to the FDA Commissioner in In re Kessler. The Court explained that its ruling rested on the mistaken view that the Commissioner could have obtained review by incurring civil contempt sanctions, and recognized that review of a discovery order by a party can, in fact, only be obtained by going into criminal contempt. In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d 1051, 1064 (D.C. Cir. 2000). The Court concluded "that the disobedience and contempt route to appeal cannot be labeled an adequate means of relief for a party-litigant." Id. at 1065. Accordingly, in light of the important separation of powers issues raised in the petition, this Court should exercise jurisdiction to review the claims of all petitioners.

Contrary to plaintiffs' assertion, the Court in In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20 (D.C. Cir. 2000), did not "establish[] that a writ is unavailable 'absent a specific and wellsubstantiated claim that some important privilege will be infringed if discovery is allowed to proceed.'" Opp. at 8 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d at 24). To be sure, the Court recognized that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order," id. at 23, and found that in the circumstances of the orders on review, which involved the rejection of various privileges, the government had not established an entitlement to mandamus review. However, the Court did not hold that a claim of privilege was a necessary prerequisite to mandamus review, and did not purport to set out a general rule.

Indeed, in In re Sealed Case, the Court rejected the assertion that the Independent Counsel "would not be irreparably harmed by the orders because the orders allowed him to redact any Rule 6(e) material and thus he would not be required to provide any confidential investigative material to the movants." 151 F.3d at 1062. The Court explained that the Independent Counsel "is not troubled solely by the possibility that Rule 6(e) material might be disclosed, but also by the prospect of disclosing even the identities of members of the press with whom the IC and his staff have spoken." Id. at 392. The Court also observed that the limitation on disclosing protected material would not "assuage petitioner's fear that discovery and an adversarial hearing will divert petitoner's focus * * *." Ibid.

As we explained in our petition, principles of comity preclude intrusive requests for testimony even from high-ranking subordinate officials. See, e.g., In re United States, 197 F.3d 310, 313 (8th Cir. 1999) ("[h]igh-ranking government officials * * * should not, absent extraordinary circumstances, be called to testify regarding their reasons for taking official actions'") (quoting In re United States, 985 F.2d 510, 512 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting Simplex Time Recorder Co. v. Secretary of Labor, 766 F.2d 575, 586 (D.C. Cir. 1985))); In re Office of Inspector General, 933 F.2d 276, 278 (5th Cir. 1991) (same). As the Eighth Circuit concluded in In re United States, "[i]f other persons can provide the information sought, discovery will not be permitted against such an official." 197 F.3d at 313.

Those principles apply with even greater force here where the intrusive discovery requests are directed to the Vice President in a case in which the Vice President is not properly a party and the review should be limited to the administrative record. Plaintiffs' intrusive request, approved by the district court, requires the Vice President to review, and absent a claim of privilege, disclose, all of his communications with other NEPDG group members outside the context of group meetings, as well as his communications with agency personnel and with outside individuals. See App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Plainly, the Vice President should not be subjected to this burden absent extraordinary circumstances. Fundamental principles of comity require that discovery to the President or the Vice President be an avenue of last resort, not an enterprise to be undertaken without any showing of need.

The absence of any legitimate need for discovery of the Vice President is underscored by the extensive discovery already obtained by plaintiffs. Although, as we have demonstrated, the court erred in permitting any discovery, the government did not seek a protective order with respect to the agency defendants. The government to date has released approximately 36,000 documents (including documents redacted to safeguard privileged material). The district court at no point explained why it should not, in the first instance, require plaintiffs to produce support from these documents for their wholly unsubstantiated claims of irregularity before authorizing discovery to the Vice President. Indeed, plaintiffs have, at no time, even attempted to argue that some information from those documents demonstrates a possible violation of the FACA. Even apart from the other constitutional and statutory concerns raised by the district court's discovery orders, mandamus relief would be warranted on this basis alone.

In sum, as the district court itself recognized, the Vice President's claims will escape effective review by this Court on an appeal from final judgment. By their nature, the Vice President's claims, and the harm resulting from the district court's orders can only be meaningfully reviewed now. This Court's decisions leave no doubt that the Vice President and other petitioners need not go into criminal contempt to obtain review of those orders. Indeed, as we have explained elsewhere, see Opposition to Motion to Dismiss the Appeal, the Court has appellate jurisdiction under Nixon. By granting mandamus review in the extraordinary context of this case, however, the Court can avoid definitively resolving the contours of Nixon's appellate jurisdiction holding.

2. The FACA Does Not Reverse Presumptions Of Regularity And Permit Discovery

REV_00154681

Based On Allegations That Members of A Government Group Met With Private Persons.

The mistaken premise of plaintiffs' argument, which they never squarely confront, is that Congress, by enacting the FACA, authorized far-reaching discovery based on the mere allegation that a group composed entirely of government officers and employees had contacts with private persons.

As an initial matter, plaintiffs' opposition leaves no doubt that they regard the mere fact of contacts between committee members and private persons as a sufficient basis to permit discovery. Plaintiffs believe that they have established an entitlement to discovery based on a statement in a House committee staff report that energy company and trade association representatives "met with Vice President Cheney or members or staff of the White House energy task force during the development of the White House energy plan." Ex. 1 to Opp. at 1. Private persons meet with government officials regarding most major economic policy initiatives. Such contacts are entirely proper and do not, as the case law makes abundantly clear, trigger the applicability of FACA's requirements. See, e.g., Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 452 (1989) (cautioning against construction that "would extend FACA's requirements to any group of two or more persons, or at least any formal organization, from which the President or an executive agency seeks advice"); Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 915 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS") ("Congress did not intend FACA to extend to episodic meetings between government officials and a consultant" and "[t]o do so would achieve the absurd result Public Citizen warned against: reading FACA to cover every instance when the President (or an agency) informally seeks advice from two or more private citizens"); cf. Nader v. Barody, 396 F. Supp. 1231 (D.D.C. 1975) (bi-weekly White House meetings with major business organizations and private sector groups do not create FACA committees) . If discovery is permitted on the basis of the allegations here, it would (improperly) follow that discovery should be permitted in every case in which a plaintiff asserts that members of a purely intragovernmental group had contacts with private persons or were influenced by their views.

Congress could not have intended that the allegation of such contacts -- which, in any event, would not establish the existence of a FACA committee -- would authorize plaintiffs to discover the inner workings of intragovernmental groups. Congress itself exempted intragovernmental groups from the FACA's reach, and certainly did not intend to convert such groups into FACA committees because a committee member had contact with a private citizen. Such a statute would be flatly unconstitutional. It is no answer to argue that the Petition raises only a discovery issue and not a question about the FACA's ultimate coverage. In the context of a statute that is primarily about disclosure and which raises serious separation of powers problems if not properly cabined, ordering massive discovery against the Vice President raises concerns no less profound than those at issue in Public Citizen and AAPS.

Plaintiffs misconceive the problem when they urge that "The Administrative Procedure Act * * * does not forbid discovery of Petitioners." Opp. 10. As we have shown, the APA does make clear that judicial review is to be made on the basis of the administrative record. But the more immediate question here is whether Congress, in enacting the FACA, intended to permit discovery based on statements of the kind on which plaintiffs rely. The FACA itself contains no provision for judicial enforcement and does not suggest that Congress wished to sanction this type of intrusion. To the contrary, routine discovery into the contacts between the members of an intragovernmental group and private persons would be flatly at odds with Congress's express exclusion of intragovernmental groups from FACA requirements. By omitting any express right of private enforcement, Congress intended that the statute be enforced only as consistent with the APA. The APA itself permits discovery only in very limited circumstances, and Congress could not have believed that the availability of APA review would provide a warrant for the kind of discovery rarely available under that statute.[1] Still less could the availability of APA review authorize party discovery to the Vice President, who, as plaintiffs concede, is not an agency within the meaning of that statute. And such a result would be inconsistent with Congress's decision to exclude the President and Vice President from the disclosure requirements of the FOIA. Nor is there any reason to believe that Congress wished to allow a plaintiff to circumvent APA limitations by seeking a writ of mandamus against the Vice President. Indeed, even where mandamus review is available, it is also generally limited to an administrative record, see Texas Rural Legal Aid, Inc. v. Legal Services Corp., 940 F.2d 685, 698 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

Congress enacted the FACA against the background presumption of regularity repeatedly emphasized by the Supreme Court and this Court. See United States v. Chemical Foundation, 272 U.S. 1, 14-15 (1926) ("in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that [public officers] have properly discharged their official duties."); Morris v. Sullivan, 897 F.2d 553, 560 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (same). As plaintiffs concede, that "presumption can shield an agency from discovery based upon unsupported allegations that it has acted in bad faith." Opp. 12 n.7 (citing National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. FDA, 491 F.2d 1141, 1145 (2d Cir. 1974)). Apparently recognizing that there is no basis for overcoming that presumption here, plaintiffs observe that "[t]his is not the only basis for discovery in an APA case, however, and was not the grounds cited by the District Court in permitting discovery." Opp. 12 n.7.

[1] Walter O. Boswell Memorial Hospital v. Heckler, 749 F.2d 788 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cited by plaintiffs, admonishes that the APA requires review of "the full administrative record," id. at 792 (quoting Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 420 (1971)), but simultaneously directed the district court to "prevent any improper supplementation" of the administrative record, ibid., which is what plaintiffs seek here. In Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. v. Train, 519 F.2d 287 (D.C. Cir. 1975), plaintiffs provided specific evidence that the agency had failed to provide the court with the full administrative record. Id. at 289 (plaintiff's affidavit "listed several documents which had been relied upon by the Administrator * * * but which were not included among those filed with the court"). In contrast, plaintiffs here merely point to the unremarkable fact that members of the NEPDG "met with" individual members or staff of the committee.

The difficulty with plaintiffs' argument is that their entire suit is premised on the assumption that petitioners departed from the President's instructions and included as members of the NEPDG persons who were not government officers or employees, and then misrepresented the group's composition in the final report. Indeed, the district court believed that discovery was warranted precisely because "the government doesn't always comply with the law." App. 217. The court's decision to authorize broad discovery thus turns directly on its mistaken reversal of the governing presumption of regularity. Under that presumption, a plaintiff could not obtain broad discovery even from an agency official based on a mere allegation that he had misrepresented the composition of an agency group. It follows, a fortiori, that the presumption of regularity precludes discovery when the consequences of ordering discovery are to permit far-reaching discovery into the means by which the Vice President receives advice in order to make recommendations to the President in carrying out his core constitutional prerogatives.

3. Plaintiffs' Reading Of The FACA Would Render Its Application Unconstitutional.

Plaintiffs similarly misunderstand the constitutional concerns raised by the district court's orders. The issue is not whether the Constitution categorically prohibits discovery of the Executive. Opp. 12. The key statutory issue is that Congress manifestly did not intend to create a means by which plaintiffs can reverse normal presumptions of regularity and seek discovery into the communications of the President or Vice President merely by alleging that members of a governmental group had contacts with outside persons.

If Congress had done so, however, it would have created an unconstitutional interference with the Executive's discharge of Article II functions. It would have created constitutional problems of the same sort – albeit in some respects even more serious – as would be created by applying FACA's substantive requirements so as to restrict the means by which the President and Vice President communicate with private citizens, and the means by which the Vice President gathers views in the course of preparing his recommendations to the President. As the Supreme Court and this Court have made clear, such restrictions present "formidable constitutional difficulties." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466. Courts have been willing to adopt "extremely strained construction[s]" to minimize these problems, see AAPS, 997 F.2d at 906. The reading of the statute accepted by the district court generates the type of infringement that the courts have sought to avoid by permitting discovery into all contacts of a governmental group with each other, government personnel, and private persons, based on the allegation that one or more members of the group met with private persons. That reading – which is wholly without anchor in the statute – would improperly burden the President's ability to employ groups of high-level government officials as a means of obtaining advice. Indeed, in some respects, the constitutional intrusion here is even more significant than that at issue in Public Citizen or AAPS. Those cases threatened to restrict the President's means of obtaining advice from private persons. Plaintiffs' argument would restrict not only contacts with private persons but would even cause the President to hesitate before creating any working group consisting wholly of Cabinet Officers.

As plaintiffs do not dispute, the Courts in Public Citizen and AAPS recognized serious constitutional concerns although no claims of Executive Privilege were at issue. Their unexplained assertion that these cases involved "entirely different concerns," Opp. 14, cannot mask the constitutional problems created by the district court's application of the statute.

Plaintiffs urge that the "Vice President Is Not the President," Opp. 16, thereby suggesting that the orders at issue here raises no greater concerns than if they were directed to any other federal official. Plaintiffs fail to recognize that the reading of the statute that they advocate burdens the President's ability to gather advice from groups of his most trusted government advisors, as well as his ability to use these groups to receive wholly proper input from private persons.

In any event, plaintiffs' assertion that the constitutional status of the Vice President is "no different from any other cabinet officer," Opp. at 17, seriously misconstrues the role of the Vice President in the constitutional scheme. Like the President, the Vice President has a "unique constitutional position." Franklin, 505 U.S. at 800. He alone, among senior executive-branch officials, is "totally protected from the President's removal power." Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1295 (D.C. Cir. 1993). He alone is designated by the Constitution to serve as Acting President (see U.S. CONST. amend. XXV), or to "become President" upon the death of the President elect (id., amend. XX, § 3), or upon the removal, death, or resignation of the President (see id., amend. XXV, § 1). Indeed, he and the President are the only two public officials in the United States who are elected through a process involving every State, see id., art. II, § 1 & amend. XII., and are thus "the only elected officials who represent all the voters in the Nation." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 795 (1983). Similarly, the Presidency and Vice Presidency are the only two offices that are defined in Article II of the Constitution, rather than by statute. Finally, the Vice President alone has legislative functions as the President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 4. Plaintiffs' suggestion that the Vice President's stature is no different than that of "every member of the Electoral College," Opp. at 17, illustrates the extent to which their contention is wholly without basis. And here, the Vice President was acting, in his constitutionally-based capacity, recognized by Congress in 3 U.S.C. § 106, of assisting the President in a matter "specially assigned to the Vice President by the President in the discharge of executive duties and responsibilities."

4. Plaintiffs Cannot Properly Subject the Vice President To Discovery As A Party.

Plaintiffs' discovery requests are premised on the Vice President's party status. In their opposition, plaintiffs make no serious effort to explain why the Vice President is properly named as a defendant. As plaintiffs do not dispute, the Vice President cannot properly be named a defendant under the APA. Plaintiffs urge that the President or Vice President may properly be named as defendants as long as the order of relief is directed to subordinates. That is not the case, as Swan v. Clinton, 100 F.3d 973 (D.C. Cir. 1996), the case on which they place primary reliance, makes clear. That case does not hold, as plaintiffs contend, that "a court may claim jurisdiction over the President under section 1361, but ultimately issue injunctive relief against lower-level executive officers." Appellees' Response at 18. To the contrary, in Swan, the Court added numerous additional governmental defendants to the case specifically in order to avoid deciding the serious constitutional question whether plaintiff had standing to sue the President for injunctive or declaratory relief. 100 F.3d at 980-81. This had the effect of mooting the plaintiff's claim against the President directly.

The plaintiffs in Chamber of Commerce v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1325 (D.C. Cir. 1996), also relied on by plaintiffs, did not name the President as a defendant, limiting their suit to the actions of a Head of an Executive agency in implementing an Executive Order. Moreover, Reich involved a person whose office was created by statute, and he was sued in connection with carrying out a substantive policy that had immediate impact on private parties. The Vice President is a constitutional officer and he is sued solely in connection with his giving of advice. In any event, plaintiffs make no attempt to explain how this case would fall into the limited doctrine of Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 188-91 (1958), that was the basis of the ruling in Chamber of Commerce. Nor do plaintiffs address the Supreme Court's recent decisions admonishing against the use of judicially implied rights of action and efforts to use broad writs to circumvent particular limits on jurisdiction. See Pet. 20.

Finally, plaintiffs suggest that mandamus relief should be unavailable because the Vice President did not immediately appeal the order denying his motion to dismiss. This gets matters backwards. The Vice President sought review by this Court only after the government responded to other discovery requests, sought a protective order, and attempted to resolve the dispute on summary judgment. He invoked this Court's mandamus jurisdiction only when it became clear that no means were available in district court to halt the discovery process at issue here. This Court cannot properly sanction party discovery to the Vice President without recognizing that he is, in fact, not properly a party to the case at all.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and those stated in our Petition, this Court should exercise its jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1651, vacate the discovery orders issued by the district court, direct the court to decide the case on the basis of the administrative record and such supplemental affidavits as it may require, and direct that the Vice President be dismissed as a defendant.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

In re RICHARD B. CHENEY, Vice President of the United States, et al.,	)
Petitioners.	)	No. 02-5354
	)	[Civil Action Nos. 01-1530, 02-631 (EGS)]

REPLY TO APPELLEES' RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY MOTION FOR STAY PENDING APPELLATE REVIEW

1. A Stay Is Required To Preserve The Status Quo.

Plaintiffs contend that a stay is not required to provide meaningful review of the arguments set out in our Petition for Writ of Mandamus. That argument is without basis and merely restates plaintiffs' position on the merits of the petition, which we have fully addressed in the Petition and Reply. Indeed, even the district court recognized that if the government's arguments are correct, "defendants would suffer irreparable harm if the proceedings before this Court were not stayed to enable them to seek appellate review of such an order." App. 370.

As we explained in our petition, principles of comity preclude intrusive requests for testimony even from high-ranking subordinate officials, and the violation of those principles cannot be remedied on a later appeal. See, e.g., In re United States, 197 F.3d 310, 313 (8th Cir. 1999) ("[h]igh-ranking government officials * * * should not, absent extraordinary circumstances, be called to testify regarding their reasons for taking official actions'") (quoting In re United States, 985 F.2d 510, 512 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting Simplex Time Recorder Co. v. Secretary of Labor, 766 F.2d 575, 586 (D.C. Cir. 1985))).

Those principles apply with even greater force here where the intrusive discovery requests are directed to the Vice President in a case in which the Vice President is not properly a party and the review should be limited to the administrative record. Indeed, here, the Vice President, who has an independent constitutional role and is not merely a subordinate officer, was acting at the specific request of the President. Plaintiffs' intrusive request, approved by the district court, requires the Vice President to review, and absent a claim of privilege, disclose, all of his communications with other NEPDG group members outside the context of group meetings, as well as his communications with agency personnel and with outside individuals. See App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Requiring such disclosure would surely have a chilling effect on the President's ability in the future to rely upon the Vice President as he has done here. Plainly, the Vice President should not be subjected to this burden absent extraordinary circumstances. And equally plainly, the orders directing that discovery cannot be meaningfully reviewed on appeal from final judgment.

As our petition and reply also make clear, such orders can be subject to review even when they do not result in disclosure of "highly privileged" material. Cf. Opp. 7 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20, 23 (D.C. Cir. 2000)). To be sure, in that case, the Court observed that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order," id. at 23, and found that in the circumstances of the orders on review, which involved the rejection of various privileges, the government had not established an entitlement to mandamus review. However, the Court did not hold that a claim of privilege was a prerequisite for mandamus review and did not purport to set out a general rule.

Indeed, in In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d 1051, 1064 (D.C. Cir. 2000), the Court rejected the assertion that the Independent Counsel "would not be irreparably harmed by the orders because the orders allowed him to redact any Rule 6(e) material and thus he would not be required to provide any confidential investigative material to the movants." 151 F.3d at 1062. The Court explained that the Independent Counsel "is not troubled solely by the possibility that Rule 6(e) material might be disclosed, but also by the prospect of disclosing even the identities of members of the press with whom the IC and his staff have spoken." Id. at 392. The Court also observed that the limitation on disclosing protected material would not "assuage petitioner's fear that discovery an adversarial hearing will divert petitioner's focus * * *." Ibid. More generally, the Court has recognized that context, not a mechanical rule, matters in exercising mandamus jurisdiction. See In re Papandreou, 139 F.3d 247, 251 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (foreign government's opposition to jurisdictional discovery under the FSIA, which raised concerns even "beyond those of ordinary privilege," warranted "immediate review").

Moreover, In re Kessler, 100 F.3d 1015 (D.C. Cir. 1996), on which plaintiffs seek to rely, Opp. 6, is flatly at odds with their position here. In that case, the Court declined to issue a writ to preclude discovery of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. Citing United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992), the Court drew a distinction between the President and subordinate officers, and expressed concern that if the Court permitted immediate review by an agency official "three levels down from that of the Secretary of HHS," all executive branch officials might claim an immediate right of review. Id. at 1017. As the Court's reasoning makes clear, whatever the limits on immediate review of discovery orders, they do not encompass the President and the Vice President. See also Vice President's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss Appeal (explaining that, under Nixon, the President may appeal from discovery orders that would generally only be reviewed after litigant incurs contempt sanctions); Reply to Appellees' Response to Emergency Petition for Writ of Mandamus at 8-9 (explaining that constitutional concerns applicable to President apply as well to Vice President).[1]

Petitioners assert, without basis, that the reading of the FACA adopted by the district

[1] Indeed, the Court has subsequently questioned its decision to deny mandamus relief to the FDA Commissioner in In re Kessler. The Court explained that it had acted on the mistaken view that the Commissioner could have obtained review by incurring civil contempt sanctions, and recognized that review of a discovery order by a party could only be obtained by going into criminal contempt. In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d at 1064. The Court concluded "that the disobedience and contempt route to appeal cannot be labeled an adequate means of relief for a party-litigant." Id. at 1065.

court will not chill the way in which the President obtains advice. As the Supreme Court and this Court have made clear, restrictions on the ways in which the President gathers advice and receives communications from private persons present "formidable constitutional difficulties." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466. Courts have been willing to adopt "extremely strained construction[s]" to minimize these problems, see Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1993). Moreover, FACA, by its own terms, does not apply to groups made up of exclusively government employees, a limit that is critical to its constitutionality. Despite all this, plaintiffs here propose a reading of the statute, accepted by the district court, that effectively reads this limitation out of the statute and generates the type of infringement that the courts have sought to avoid. Their reading of the FACA, which permits discovery into all contacts of a governmental group with each other, government personnel, and private persons, can burden the means by which the President seeks advice just as surely as imposition of the FACA's open-meeting and notice requirements. If discovery of the kind permitted here is routinely available, the President may well hesitate before using such groups at all, and group members will hesitate before having entirely proper contacts with private persons. Plaintiffs ignore the teachings of the Supreme Court and this Court when they urge that such a chill on the President's means of obtaining advice presents no significant constitutional concern.

Moreover, these same concerns make clear that this is no ordinary discovery dispute. In the context of a statute that is primarily about disclosure, and must be carefully interpreted to avoid unconstitutional interference with Article II powers, an improper discovery order directed to the Vice President raises the same kind of separation of powers problems as an improper interpretation of the FACA. The resulting unconstitutional interference with the Vice President cannot be fully remedied at the end of the case, nor should the Vice President have to go into criminal contempt to have his constitutional interests vindicated. In short, a stay and immediate review will promote interbranch comity and avoid chilling effects on executive deliberations.

B. Plaintiffs Will Experience No Harm From The Granting Of A Stay.

While the harm to petitioners in the absence of a stay is significant and irreparable, plaintiffs can identify no credible harm that would result from the granting of a stay. The delay resulting from granting the stay will not be significant: the merits of the mandamus petition are now fully briefed. If the Court wishes additional briefing on the Vice President's appeal, we will proceed on whatever highly expedited schedule the Court deems appropriate.

Plaintiffs' claims of obstruction and delay on the part of the government, Opp. 11-12, are baseless. The numerous department heads who are defendants in this litigation have been participating in discovery for some time and have already produced thousands of pages of documents, including all requested documents that were received from or sent to individuals outside the government and summaries of communications with outsiders contained in internal government documents otherwise protected by executive privilege. Moreover, this discovery continues and will be unaffected by the requested stay with respect to petitioners. In light of the significant discovery plaintiffs have already received and continue to obtain, the delay caused by a stay cannot credibly be advanced as a harm.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should grant a stay of discovery against the movants pending review by this Court of the petition and appeal.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC. and SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiffs-Appellees v. RICHARD B. CHENEY, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES Defendant-Appellant	No. 02–5355 [District Court C.A. Nos. 01-1530, 02-631]

OPPOSITION TO APPELLEES' MOTIONS TO DISMISS THE APPEAL OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The Vice President of the United States respectfully responds to the Motion to Dismiss Appeal filed by plaintiff Sierra Club and joined in by plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc.

A. Plaintiffs in these actions allege that the National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG") – an intragovernmental Presidential advisory group established by President Bush, composed of the Heads of Departments and close Presidential advisors, including the Vice President – operated in violation of procedures established by the Federal Advisory Committee Act ("FACA"), 5 U.S.C. App. 2. Plaintiffs named as defendants the Vice President, the NEPDG, and various federal officials and private individuals.

The government moved to dismiss on statutory and constitutional grounds. As the government emphasized in that motion to dismiss, plaintiffs' suits are, on their face, devoid of merit: the FACA has no application to committees that are "composed wholly of full-time, or permanent part-time, officers or employees of the Federal Government." Id. § 3(2). The President's memorandum established the NEPDG as an entity composed exclusively of federal officers and employees. App. 117-18.[1] The NEPDG's final report confirms that it operated as such. See Reliable, Affordable, and Environmentally Sound Energy For America's Future: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group ("Report") (available at www.whitehouse.gov/energy). As the government also urged in its motion to dismiss, application of the FACA to a group of close Presidential advisors led by the Vice President would interfere with the President's discharge of his Article II functions and therefore be unconstitutional. See Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 909-10 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS"). The government also asked that the Vice President, who is not an "agency" within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act, be dismissed as a defendant.

[1] "App." refers to the Appendix filed on November 12, 2002, in connection with the motion to stay discovery pending appeal and petition for mandamus.

The court denied the motion to dismiss, refused to dismiss the Vice President as a defendant and precluded the government from filing a motion for summary judgment. Instead, the court ordered broad-ranging discovery, including discovery into the inner workings of and communications within the Office of the Vice President. The documents covered by the discovery order include communications between the Vice President and other NEPDG members outside the context of group meetings, between the Vice President and agency personnel, and between the Vice President and outside individuals. See, e.g., App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Indeed, that discovery calls for disclosure that is, in significant respects, greater than would be triggered by a finding of a FACA violation.

B. The Vice President has appealed from the orders authorizing discovery into his office and has also joined in the Petition for Writ of Mandamus filed on November 12, 2002. Plaintiffs' contentions notwithstanding, the present appeal falls squarely within the principles recognized in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). The district court recognized, consistent with the teachings of the Supreme Court and this Court, that application of the FACA to the NEPDG would raise substantial constitutional concerns. App. 171. In seeking to avoid that constitutional question, however, the court has authorized discovery that itself offends the separation of powers and interbranch comity. Especially absent a special showing of need, courts may not properly require the Vice President to produce to private persons the details of the process by which he obtains information, particularly when, as here, that information is being gathered in order to advise the President in the performance of his core constitutional prerogatives.

As we urged in our petition, the Court may address the propriety of the discovery orders and the Vice President's status in the exercise of its mandamus jurisdiction. If it does so, it can avoid deciding the precise contours of Nixon's appellate jurisdiction holding. If the Court declines to exercise mandamus jurisdiction, plaintiffs take the view that the Vice President could only test the validity of the court's orders by going into criminal contempt. Plaintiffs' extraordinary assertion that the Vice President must suffer criminal sanctions in order to obtain effective appellate review of important constitutional and statutory claims is flatly at odds with Nixon and broader principles of interbranch comity. Indeed, the Court in Nixon refused to countenance such a suggestion where, because of the President's third-party status, review would have been available by civil contempt.

Plaintiffs' grounds for dismissal are largely challenges to the merits of the Vice President's appeal. Plaintiffs contend that no reviewable question is presented in the absence of a specific claim of privilege. That argument fundamentally misunderstands the separation-of-powers problems that flow from the district court's view that the FACA permits intrusive discovery into the Office of the Vice President based on the mere allegation that an intragovernmental group established by the President and led by the Vice President may have included outside members. If the FACA were thought to allow private litigants to delve into the Vice President's office merely by raising unfounded questions regarding the President's good faith, the statute would plainly raise constitutional concerns of the first magnitude. Indeed, the district court's discovery orders – which extend to communications outside the context of FACA meetings - envisions disclosures of the internal workings of the Vice President's office that are in significant respects greater than would be required if the FACA actually applied to the NEPDG.

Plaintiffs further argue that this case is distinguishable from Nixon because the Vice President has been named as a party and may seek review following final judgment. This argument is doubly flawed.

First, the Vice President was not properly made a party to the suit. The Vice President is not an "agency" within the meaning of the APA, and the scope of non-statutory review recognized by this Court does not extend either to actions directly against the Vice President or to the type of error alleged in this case. Thus, any discovery requests to the Vice President in this case should properly have taken the form of a third-party subpoena. The Vice President is not precluded from seeking review of improper discovery orders because the district court also erred in refusing to dismiss him as a party.

Second, plaintiffs' suggestion that review of the Vice President's contentions is available after final judgment blinks reality. Once the improper discovery is concluded, no meaningful review of the issues presented here would be possible. A later appeal on the merits (if the district court were to issue judgment against the government) would have no impact on the issues now presented for review. Thus, short of contempt, the Vice President would have no meaningful opportunity to obtain review of the district court's order, the very circumstance addressed by the Supreme Court's decision in Nixon.

ARGUMENT

A. As set out in our mandamus petition, the district court erred in ordering an extensive intrusion into the internal workings of the Office of the Vice President for three related reasons.

First, the FACA contains no provision for judicial review, and its provisions are enforceable pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act and its limitations. See Claybrook v.

Slater, 111 F.3d 904, 908-09 (D.C. Cir. 1997). Absent extraordinary circumstances, where the public record makes clear that a government working group consists entirely of government officers and employees, there is no basis for overcoming established principles of judicial review of Executive action and ordinary presumptions of regularity, and permitting discovery based on mere allegations that the group may have included outside members. Review is limited to the administrative record and supplemental declarations filed by the government. See, e.g., Florida Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 744 (1985).

Second, where discovery in a FACA suit is sought against the Vice President, constitutional concerns compound the importance of deciding the case in accordance with settled principles of judicial review. As the Supreme Court and this Court have recognized, application of the FACA in ways that could compromise the manner in which the President gathers advice raise extremely serious constitutional questions. The Supreme Court and this Court have thus sought to ensure that the statute is interpreted to avoid constitutional infirmities. See Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 445-46 (1989); AAPS, 997 F.2d at 909-10. The district court in this case recognized that application of the FACA here might implicate precisely the types of concerns identified in those cases, but nonetheless ordered far-reaching discovery. App. 171.

The district court's discovery orders create constitutional problems similar to those it, this Court, and the Supreme Court have sought to avoid. Plaintiffs seek to subject the Vice President to intrusive discovery based on a simple allegation that the Presidential memorandum establishing the NEPDG, and the group's own final report, misstate the group's de facto membership. An interpretation of the FACA that would permit such discovery based on a simple assertion of irregularity would seriously impair the President's and the Vice President's interest in receiving confidential advice that this Court emphasized in AAPS.

Indeed, the discovery approved by the district court would allow plaintiffs to delve into

the Vice President's communications to an extent that would not be available even if they prevailed on the merits of their suit. Plaintiffs seek not only information about NEPDG meetings, but discovery as to communications between the Vice President and other group members outside the context of group meetings, between the Vice President and agency personnel, and between the Vice President and outside individuals -- none of which would be available under the FACA or the FOIA. See, e.g., App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Moreover, it does so in the context of an advisory group that the President has limited to federal officials. The FACA expressly excludes such intragovernment groups from is scope, 5 U.S.C. App. 2, § 3(2), and that limitation is critical to avoiding unconstitutional interference with the executive branch's discharge of the President's Article II functions. By permitting, upon a mere allegation of "unofficial membership," discovery beyond even the disclosures that would be available upon a finding that the FACA applied, the district court severely undermined, if not eliminated, this critical limitation in the statute.

Third, there is no basis for subjecting the Vice President to discovery as a party. As plaintiffs conceded, App. 148, the President and Vice President are not "agencies" subject to the APA, see Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992). The district court erred in believing it could nevertheless retain jurisdiction over the Vice President as a defendant on the theory that his actions might be subject to review by way of mandamus. App. 169. It was the President who established the NEPDG, prescribed its mission, and specified its membership, and the Vice President and members of the NEPDG acted on his behalf in preparing the group's recommendations and gathering the information and producing the documents necessary to do so. The powers of the President are involved in this case as well. As discussed in our mandamus petition, because of established restrictions on suits directly against the President – even in the case of constitutional challenges to Presidential action – the traditional means for obtaining judicial review is to sue the Head of the Executive Department who is charged with their implementation. See, e.g., Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 464 (1994). Plaintiffs may not evade restrictions on suing the President by suing the Vice President, who is not the Head of an Executive Department who could be subject to suit on such a theory, who has a distinct constitutional stature in his own right, and who acted here in the performance of his constitutionally-based role, recognized by Congress, of "providing assistance to the President in the performance of functions specifically assigned to the Vice President by the President in the discharge of executive duties and responsibilities." 3 U.S.C. § 106.

Moreover, this Court's cases permitting nonstatutory review of Presidential action (in a suit against a Head of a Department) are limited to cases in which the President is alleged to have acted outside his authority, see Chamber of Commerce v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1327-28 (D.C. Cir. 1996), and, as explained in our Petition, any suggestion in this Court's cases that nonstatutory review is freely available to enforce a federal statute must be read in light of the Supreme Court's recent decisions addressing judicially implied rights of action and efforts to use broad writs to circumvent particular limits on jurisdiction. See Petition at 18. Plaintiffs' allegations that some NEPDG members may have had discussions with nongovernment employees cannot plausibly be construed to fall within that narrow category of nonstatutory review.

B. As discussed in our petition, because the district court has committed clear and significant error with immediate and irreparable consequences, the Court can, and should, exercise its supervisory mandamus authority.

Exercising that mandamus authority would eliminate the need for the Court to resolve the scope of the Court's appellate jurisdiction under United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). However, if the Court reaches the issue, the Vice President's appeal may properly proceed under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. In Nixon, the Supreme Court permitted the President to seek immediate review of an order refusing to quash a subpoena without going into civil contempt, holding that the order was final and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See 418 U.S. at 690-92. The Court concluded that "[t]o require a President of the United States to place himself in the posture of disobeying an order of a court merely to trigger the procedural mechanism for review of the ruling would be unseemly, and would present an unnecessary occasion for constitutional confrontation between two branches of the Government." Id. at 691-92.

It would be similarly unseemly to compel the Vice President -- the only Article II officer other than the President named in the Constitution, see U.S. Const., Art. II, § 1 – to go into contempt in order to obtain appellate review of an order authorizing discovery into his conduct in advising the President on matters of the highest significance. Indeed, if this Court were to conclude that appellate and mandamus review were unavailable, the Vice President, who has (improperly) been made a defendant in this suit, could obtain effective appellate review only by subjecting himself to criminal contempt sanctions. See Byrd v. Reno, 180 F.3d 298, 300-02 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (while civil contempt cannot serve as the basis for a party to appeal a discovery order, criminal contempt could). It would be more than "unseemly" to require the Vice President to take such steps in order to secure timely review of orders that implicate serious separation of powers issues and directly affect the conduct of his office and his ability to gather confidential advice in carrying out functions assigned him by the President. That is especially so here, because plaintiffs seek to obtain documents that represent the working papers of a group of top-level government officials who were constituted as a group by the President to give advice to the President, and in which the President himself therefore has a direct interest deriving from the Opinions and Recommendations Clauses of the Constitution.

C. Plaintiffs urge that the district court's orders do not fall within the principles set out in Nixon, stressing that President Nixon had presented a claim of executive privilege and that review of his claim would have been unavailable on appeal because he was not a party to the underlying proceeding. The decision in Nixon did not announce a principle limited to claims of executive privilege. It turned, instead, on the "unseeml[iness]" of requiring the President to incur a contempt citation. See 418 U.S. at 691-92. As plaintiffss recognize, Nixon addressed the question of whether the President is required to submit to contempt to obtain review of an order denying a motion to quash that would otherwise be unappealable under the collateral order doctrine. The Court made clear that the President need not incur contempt sanctions to seek review of significant claims that would otherwise escape appellate review. That holding resolves the question whether the Vice President must incur criminal contempt sanctions to obtain review of the significant claims at issue on this appeal, and makes clear that the denial of a motion for a protective order (the party equivalent of the motion denied in Nixon) is reviewable here.[2]

That question is distinct from the underlying merits of this case and cannot be meaningfully reviewed after final judgment. The issue now before this Court is whether the Vice President can properly be made subject to sweeping discovery requests despite the constitutional and statutory objections outlined above. An appeal from a later adverse judgment, if one issues, could not remedy the intrusion sanctioned by the district court. Moreover, in the likely event that the government prevails in the underlying litigation, it is altogether possible that this Court would have no opportunity to address even prospectively the propriety of the type of discovery authorized here. Whether the government can ultimately prove there were no "unofficial members" of the NEPDG (which is decidedly not its burden under the FACA), it will

[2] Plaintiffs place heavy reliance on In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20 (D.C. Cir. 2000), in which the Court declined to exercise its mandamus authority to review a discovery order. The Court observed that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order." Id. at 23. Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestion, however, the Court did not hold that such review of a discovery order would be unavailable "absent a specific and well-substantiated 'claim that some important privilege will be infringed if discovery is allowed to proceed.'" Motion at 7 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d at 24). The Court, in the passage quoted, addressed the particular claims at issue and did not purport to set out a general rule.

have been forced to disclose a great deal of information that would not be disclosed even if the FACA applied. In particular, when discovery demonstrates that the NEPDG's membership conformed to the President's memorandum, and so the FACA is altogether inapplicable, it will be impossible (and far too late) to remedy the separation of powers problems created by the district court's orders.

Plaintiffs' emphasis on the Vice President's party status only underscores the error of their contentions. As noted, the district court erred in failing to dismiss the Vice President as a defendant. That error cannot properly be used to foreclose the Vice President's ability to seek effective review of the court's discovery plan. Moreover, as discussed, because the Vice President is a party, he can only obtain appellate review, under plaintiffs' theory, by subjecting himself to criminal contempt sanctions. The Vice President is not required to flout a court order in order to obtain meaningful review of substantial constitutional and statutory claims.

In sum, because of the special concerns that obtain when the President or Vice President seek review of significant rulings that cannot be adequately addressed on appeal from final judgment, jurisdiction is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 as well as 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a).

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

In re RICHARD B. CHENEY, Vice President of the United States, et al.,
Petitioners.	No. 02-5354
	[Civil Action Nos. 01-1530, 02-631 (EGS)]

REPLY TO APPELLEES' RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS

This case involves far more than an ordinary discovery dispute. Plaintiffs seek and the district court ordered extensive disclosure of communications between senior executive branch officials and those with information relevant to advice that was being formulated for the President. The district court ordered this extensive discovery and disclosure based on a mistaken interpretation of the APA and a failure to heed important separation of powers principles. Moreover, in the context of a statute, i.e., the FACA, that is primarily about disclosure, there is little practical difference between unconstitutionally overbroad discovery and constitutionally problematic interpretations of the statute. Both this Court and the Supreme Court have struggled to interpret the FACA to keep its disclosure obligations and other provisions within constitutional bounds. The district court undermined those efforts by allowing extensive and intrusive discovery based on the mere allegation that the membership of the NEPDG deviated from the President's plan. That was a clear error that can and should be corrected via mandamus.

1. The Vice President And Other Petitioners May Obtain Effective Appellate Review Of The District Court's Orders Without Incurring Criminal Contempt Sanctions.

Plaintiffs urge that the Vice President cannot obtain review of discovery orders raising significant statutory and constitutional questions without going into criminal contempt. That contention is flatly at odds with In re Kessler, 100 F.3d 1015 (D.C. Cir. 1996), on which plaintiffs seek to rely. Opp. 8. The Court in that case concluded that mandamus would not be available to review discovery of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. Citing

United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992), the Court drew a distinction between the President and subordinate officers, and expressed concern that if the Court permitted immediate review by an agency official "three levels down from that of the Secretary of HHS," all executive branch officials might claim an immediate right of review. Id. at 1017. As the Court's reasoning makes clear, whatever the limits on immediate review of discovery orders, they do not encompass the President or the Vice President, who, with an independent constitutional role, is not simply a subordinate officer. See also Vice President's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss Appeal (explaining that the Vice President's appeal is clearly proper under Nixon).

Indeed, the Court has subsequently questioned its decision to deny mandamus relief to the FDA Commissioner in In re Kessler. The Court explained that its ruling rested on the mistaken view that the Commissioner could have obtained review by incurring civil contempt sanctions, and recognized that review of a discovery order by a party can, in fact, only be obtained by going into criminal contempt. In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d 1051, 1064 (D.C. Cir. 2000). The Court concluded "that the disobedience and contempt route to appeal cannot be labeled an adequate means of relief for a party-litigant." Id. at 1065. Accordingly, in light of the important separation of powers issues raised in the petition, this Court should exercise jurisdiction to review the claims of all petitioners.

Contrary to plaintiffs' assertion, the Court in In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20 (D.C. Cir. 2000), did not "establish[] that a writ is unavailable 'absent a specific and wellsubstantiated claim that some important privilege will be infringed if discovery is allowed to proceed.'" Opp. at 8 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d at 24). To be sure, the Court recognized that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order," id. at 23, and found that in the circumstances of the orders on review, which involved the rejection of various privileges, the government had not established an entitlement to mandamus review. However, the Court did not hold that a claim of privilege was a necessary prerequisite to mandamus review, and did not purport to set out a general rule.

Indeed, in In re Sealed Case, the Court rejected the assertion that the Independent Counsel "would not be irreparably harmed by the orders because the orders allowed him to redact any Rule 6(e) material and thus he would not be required to provide any confidential investigative material to the movants." 151 F.3d at 1062. The Court explained that the Independent Counsel "is not troubled solely by the possibility that Rule 6(e) material might be disclosed, but also by the prospect of disclosing even the identities of members of the press with whom the IC and his staff have spoken." Id. at 392. The Court also observed that the limitation on disclosing protected material would not "assuage petitioner's fear that discovery and an adversarial hearing will divert petitoner's focus * * *." Ibid.

As we explained in our petition, principles of comity preclude intrusive requests for testimony even from high-ranking subordinate officials. See, e.g., In re United States, 197 F.3d 310, 313 (8th Cir. 1999) ("[h]igh-ranking government officials * * * should not, absent extraordinary circumstances, be called to testify regarding their reasons for taking official actions'") (quoting In re United States, 985 F.2d 510, 512 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting Simplex Time Recorder Co. v. Secretary of Labor, 766 F.2d 575, 586 (D.C. Cir. 1985))); In re Office of Inspector General, 933 F.2d 276, 278 (5th Cir. 1991) (same). As the Eighth Circuit concluded in In re United States, "[i]f other persons can provide the information sought, discovery will not be permitted against such an official." 197 F.3d at 313.

Those principles apply with even greater force here where the intrusive discovery requests are directed to the Vice President in a case in which the Vice President is not properly a party and the review should be limited to the administrative record. Plaintiffs' intrusive request, approved by the district court, requires the Vice President to review, and absent a claim of privilege, disclose, all of his communications with other NEPDG group members outside the context of group meetings, as well as his communications with agency personnel and with outside individuals. See App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Plainly, the Vice President should not be subjected to this burden absent extraordinary circumstances. Fundamental principles of comity require that discovery to the President or the Vice President be an avenue of last resort, not an enterprise to be undertaken without any showing of need.

The absence of any legitimate need for discovery of the Vice President is underscored by the extensive discovery already obtained by plaintiffs. Although, as we have demonstrated, the court erred in permitting any discovery, the government did not seek a protective order with respect to the agency defendants. The government to date has released approximately 36,000 documents (including documents redacted to safeguard privileged material). The district court at no point explained why it should not, in the first instance, require plaintiffs to produce support from these documents for their wholly unsubstantiated claims of irregularity before authorizing discovery to the Vice President. Indeed, plaintiffs have, at no time, even attempted to argue that some information from those documents demonstrates a possible violation of the FACA. Even apart from the other constitutional and statutory concerns raised by the district court's discovery orders, mandamus relief would be warranted on this basis alone.

In sum, as the district court itself recognized, the Vice President's claims will escape effective review by this Court on an appeal from final judgment. By their nature, the Vice President's claims, and the harm resulting from the district court's orders can only be meaningfully reviewed now. This Court's decisions leave no doubt that the Vice President and other petitioners need not go into criminal contempt to obtain review of those orders. Indeed, as we have explained elsewhere, see Opposition to Motion to Dismiss the Appeal, the Court has appellate jurisdiction under Nixon. By granting mandamus review in the extraordinary context of this case, however, the Court can avoid definitively resolving the contours of Nixon's appellate jurisdiction holding.

2. The FACA Does Not Reverse Presumptions Of Regularity And Permit Discovery

REV_00154731

Based On Allegations That Members of A Government Group Met With Private Persons.

The mistaken premise of plaintiffs' argument, which they never squarely confront, is that Congress, by enacting the FACA, authorized far-reaching discovery based on the mere allegation that a group composed entirely of government officers and employees had contacts with private persons.

As an initial matter, plaintiffs' opposition leaves no doubt that they regard the mere fact of contacts between committee members and private persons as a sufficient basis to permit discovery. Plaintiffs believe that they have established an entitlement to discovery based on a statement in a House committee staff report that energy company and trade association representatives "met with Vice President Cheney or members or staff of the White House energy task force during the development of the White House energy plan." Ex. 1 to Opp. at 1. Private persons meet with government officials regarding most major economic policy initiatives. Such contacts are entirely proper and do not, as the case law makes abundantly clear, trigger the applicability of FACA's requirements. See, e.g., Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 452 (1989) (cautioning against construction that "would extend FACA's requirements to any group of two or more persons, or at least any formal organization, from which the President or an executive agency seeks advice"); Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 915 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS") ("Congress did not intend FACA to extend to episodic meetings between government officials and a consultant" and "[t]o do so would achieve the absurd result Public Citizen warned against: reading FACA to cover every instance when the President (or an agency) informally seeks advice from two or more private citizens"); cf. Nader v. Barody, 396 F. Supp. 1231 (D.D.C. 1975) (bi-weekly White House meetings with major business organizations and private sector groups do not create FACA committees) . If discovery is permitted on the basis of the allegations here, it would (improperly) follow that discovery should be permitted in every case in which a plaintiff asserts that members of a purely intragovernmental group had contacts with private persons or were influenced by their views.

Congress could not have intended that the allegation of such contacts -- which, in any event, would not establish the existence of a FACA committee -- would authorize plaintiffs to discover the inner workings of intragovernmental groups. Congress itself exempted intragovernmental groups from the FACA's reach, and certainly did not intend to convert such groups into FACA committees because a committee member had contact with a private citizen. Such a statute would be flatly unconstitutional. It is no answer to argue that the Petition raises only a discovery issue and not a question about the FACA's ultimate coverage. In the context of a statute that is primarily about disclosure and which raises serious separation of powers problems if not properly cabined, ordering massive discovery against the Vice President raises concerns no less profound than those at issue in Public Citizen and AAPS.

Plaintiffs misconceive the problem when they urge that "The Administrative Procedure Act * * * does not forbid discovery of Petitioners." Opp. 10. As we have shown, the APA does make clear that judicial review is to be made on the basis of the administrative record. But the more immediate question here is whether Congress, in enacting the FACA, intended to permit discovery based on statements of the kind on which plaintiffs rely. The FACA itself contains no provision for judicial enforcement and does not suggest that Congress wished to sanction this type of intrusion. To the contrary, routine discovery into the contacts between the members of an intragovernmental group and private persons would be flatly at odds with Congress's express exclusion of intragovernmental groups from FACA requirements. By omitting any express right of private enforcement, Congress intended that the statute be enforced only as consistent with the APA. The APA itself permits discovery only in very limited circumstances, and Congress could not have believed that the availability of APA review would provide a warrant for the kind of discovery rarely available under that statute.[1] Still less could the availability of APA review authorize party discovery to the Vice President, who, as plaintiffs concede, is not an agency within the meaning of that statute. And such a result would be inconsistent with Congress's decision to exclude the President and Vice President from the disclosure requirements of the FOIA. Nor is there any reason to believe that Congress wished to allow a plaintiff to circumvent APA limitations by seeking a writ of mandamus against the Vice President. Indeed, even where mandamus review is available, it is also generally limited to an administrative record, see Texas Rural Legal Aid, Inc. v. Legal Services Corp., 940 F.2d 685, 698 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

Congress enacted the FACA against the background presumption of regularity repeatedly emphasized by the Supreme Court and this Court. See United States v. Chemical Foundation, 272 U.S. 1, 14-15 (1926) ("in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that [public officers] have properly discharged their official duties."); Morris v. Sullivan, 897 F.2d 553, 560 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (same). As plaintiffs concede, that "presumption can shield an agency from discovery based upon unsupported allegations that it has acted in bad faith." Opp. 12 n.7 (citing National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. FDA, 491 F.2d 1141, 1145 (2d Cir. 1974)). Apparently recognizing that there is no basis for overcoming that presumption here, plaintiffs observe that "[t]his is not the only basis for discovery in an APA case, however, and was not the grounds cited by the District Court in permitting discovery." Opp. 12 n.7.

[1] Walter O. Boswell Memorial Hospital v. Heckler, 749 F.2d 788 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cited by plaintiffs, admonishes that the APA requires review of "the full administrative record," id. at 792 (quoting Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 420 (1971)), but simultaneously directed the district court to "prevent any improper supplementation" of the administrative record, ibid., which is what plaintiffs seek here. In Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. v. Train, 519 F.2d 287 (D.C. Cir. 1975), plaintiffs provided specific evidence that the agency had failed to provide the court with the full administrative record. Id. at 289 (plaintiff's affidavit "listed several documents which had been relied upon by the Administrator * * * but which were not included among those filed with the court"). In contrast, plaintiffs here merely point to the unremarkable fact that members of the NEPDG "met with" individual members or staff of the committee.

The difficulty with plaintiffs' argument is that their entire suit is premised on the assumption that petitioners departed from the President's instructions and included as members of the NEPDG persons who were not government officers or employees, and then misrepresented the group's composition in the final report. Indeed, the district court believed that discovery was warranted precisely because "the government doesn't always comply with the law." App. 217. The court's decision to authorize broad discovery thus turns directly on its mistaken reversal of the governing presumption of regularity. Under that presumption, a plaintiff could not obtain broad discovery even from an agency official based on a mere allegation that he had misrepresented the composition of an agency group. It follows, a fortiori, that the presumption of regularity precludes discovery when the consequences of ordering discovery are to permit far-reaching discovery into the means by which the Vice President receives advice in order to make recommendations to the President in carrying out his core constitutional prerogatives.

3. Plaintiffs' Reading Of The FACA Would Render Its Application Unconstitutional.

Plaintiffs similarly misunderstand the constitutional concerns raised by the district court's orders. The issue is not whether the Constitution categorically prohibits discovery of the Executive. Opp. 12. The key statutory issue is that Congress manifestly did not intend to create a means by which plaintiffs can reverse normal presumptions of regularity and seek discovery into the communications of the President or Vice President merely by alleging that members of a governmental group had contacts with outside persons.

If Congress had done so, however, it would have created an unconstitutional interference with the Executive's discharge of Article II functions. It would have created constitutional problems of the same sort – albeit in some respects even more serious – as would be created by applying FACA's substantive requirements so as to restrict the means by which the President and Vice President communicate with private citizens, and the means by which the Vice President gathers views in the course of preparing his recommendations to the President. As the Supreme Court and this Court have made clear, such restrictions present "formidable constitutional difficulties." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466. Courts have been willing to adopt "extremely strained construction[s]" to minimize these problems, see AAPS, 997 F.2d at 906. The reading of the statute accepted by the district court generates the type of infringement that the courts have sought to avoid by permitting discovery into all contacts of a governmental group with each other, government personnel, and private persons, based on the allegation that one or more members of the group met with private persons. That reading – which is wholly without anchor in the statute – would improperly burden the President's ability to employ groups of high-level government officials as a means of obtaining advice. Indeed, in some respects, the constitutional intrusion here is even more significant than that at issue in Public Citizen or AAPS. Those cases threatened to restrict the President's means of obtaining advice from private persons. Plaintiffs' argument would restrict not only contacts with private persons but would even cause the President to hesitate before creating any working group consisting wholly of Cabinet Officers.

As plaintiffs do not dispute, the Courts in Public Citizen and AAPS recognized serious constitutional concerns although no claims of Executive Privilege were at issue. Their unexplained assertion that these cases involved "entirely different concerns," Opp. 14, cannot mask the constitutional problems created by the district court's application of the statute.

Plaintiffs urge that the "Vice President Is Not the President," Opp. 16, thereby suggesting that the orders at issue here raises no greater concerns than if they were directed to any other federal official. Plaintiffs fail to recognize that the reading of the statute that they advocate burdens the President's ability to gather advice from groups of his most trusted government advisors, as well as his ability to use these groups to receive wholly proper input from private persons.

In any event, plaintiffs' assertion that the constitutional status of the Vice President is "no different from any other cabinet officer," Opp. at 17, seriously misconstrues the role of the Vice President in the constitutional scheme. Like the President, the Vice President has a "unique constitutional position." Franklin, 505 U.S. at 800. He alone, among senior executive-branch officials, is "totally protected from the President's removal power." Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1295 (D.C. Cir. 1993). He alone is designated by the Constitution to serve as Acting President (see U.S. CONST. amend. XXV), or to "become President" upon the death of the President elect (id., amend. XX, § 3), or upon the removal, death, or resignation of the President (see id., amend. XXV, § 1). Indeed, he and the President are the only two public officials in the United States who are elected through a process involving every State, see id., art. II, § 1 & amend. XII., and are thus "the only elected officials who represent all the voters in the Nation." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 795 (1983). Similarly, the Presidency and Vice Presidency are the only two offices that are defined in Article II of the Constitution, rather than by statute. Finally, the Vice President alone has legislative functions as the President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 4. Plaintiffs' suggestion that the Vice President's stature is no different than that of "every member of the Electoral College," Opp. at 17, illustrates the extent to which their contention is wholly without basis. And here, the Vice President was acting, in his constitutionally-based capacity, recognized by Congress in 3 U.S.C. § 106, of assisting the President in a matter "specially assigned to the Vice President by the President in the discharge of executive duties and responsibilities."

4. Plaintiffs Cannot Properly Subject the Vice President To Discovery As A Party.

Plaintiffs' discovery requests are premised on the Vice President's party status. In their opposition, plaintiffs make no serious effort to explain why the Vice President is properly named as a defendant. As plaintiffs do not dispute, the Vice President cannot properly be named a defendant under the APA. Plaintiffs urge that the President or Vice President may properly be named as defendants as long as the order of relief is directed to subordinates. That is not the case, as Swan v. Clinton, 100 F.3d 973 (D.C. Cir. 1996), the case on which they place primary reliance, makes clear. That case does not hold, as plaintiffs contend, that "a court may claim jurisdiction over the President under section 1361, but ultimately issue injunctive relief against lower-level executive officers." Appellees' Response at 18. To the contrary, in Swan, the Court added numerous additional governmental defendants to the case specifically in order to avoid deciding the serious constitutional question whether plaintiff had standing to sue the President for injunctive or declaratory relief. 100 F.3d at 980-81. This had the effect of mooting the plaintiff's claim against the President directly.

The plaintiffs in Chamber of Commerce v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1325 (D.C. Cir. 1996), also relied on by plaintiffs, did not name the President as a defendant, limiting their suit to the actions of a Head of an Executive agency in implementing an Executive Order. Moreover, Reich involved a person whose office was created by statute, and he was sued in connection with carrying out a substantive policy that had immediate impact on private parties. The Vice President is a constitutional officer and he is sued solely in connection with his giving of advice. In any event, plaintiffs make no attempt to explain how this case would fall into the limited doctrine of Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 188-91 (1958), that was the basis of the ruling in Chamber of Commerce. Nor do plaintiffs address the Supreme Court's recent decisions admonishing against the use of judicially implied rights of action and efforts to use broad writs to circumvent particular limits on jurisdiction. See Pet. 20.

Finally, plaintiffs suggest that mandamus relief should be unavailable because the Vice President did not immediately appeal the order denying his motion to dismiss. This gets matters backwards. The Vice President sought review by this Court only after the government responded to other discovery requests, sought a protective order, and attempted to resolve the dispute on summary judgment. He invoked this Court's mandamus jurisdiction only when it became clear that no means were available in district court to halt the discovery process at issue here. This Court cannot properly sanction party discovery to the Vice President without recognizing that he is, in fact, not properly a party to the case at all.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and those stated in our Petition, this Court should exercise its jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1651, vacate the discovery orders issued by the district court, direct the court to decide the case on the basis of the administrative record and such supplemental affidavits as it may require, and direct that the Vice President be dismissed as a defendant.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

In re RICHARD B. CHENEY, Vice President of the United States, et al., Petitioners.	)	No. 02-5354 [Civil Action Nos. 01-1530, 02-631 (EGS)]

REPLY TO APPELLEES' RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY MOTION FOR STAY PENDING APPELLATE REVIEW

1. A Stay Is Required To Preserve The Status Quo.

Plaintiffs contend that a stay is not required to provide meaningful review of the arguments set out in our Petition for Writ of Mandamus. That argument is without basis and merely restates plaintiffs' position on the merits of the petition, which we have fully addressed in the Petition and Reply. Indeed, even the district court recognized that if the government's arguments are correct, "defendants would suffer irreparable harm if the proceedings before this Court were not stayed to enable them to seek appellate review of such an order." App. 370.

As we explained in our petition, principles of comity preclude intrusive requests for testimony even from high-ranking subordinate officials, and the violation of those principles cannot be remedied on a later appeal. See, e.g., In re United States, 197 F.3d 310, 313 (8th Cir. 1999) ("[h]igh-ranking government officials * * * should not, absent extraordinary circumstances, be called to testify regarding their reasons for taking official actions'") (quoting In re United States, 985 F.2d 510, 512 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting Simplex Time Recorder Co. v. Secretary of Labor, 766 F.2d 575, 586 (D.C. Cir. 1985))).

Those principles apply with even greater force here where the intrusive discovery requests are directed to the Vice President in a case in which the Vice President is not properly a party and the review should be limited to the administrative record. Indeed, here, the Vice President, who has an independent constitutional role and is not merely a subordinate officer, was acting at the specific request of the President. Plaintiffs' intrusive request, approved by the district court, requires the Vice President to review, and absent a claim of privilege, disclose, all of his communications with other NEPDG group members outside the context of group meetings, as well as his communications with agency personnel and with outside individuals. See App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Requiring such disclosure would surely have a chilling effect on the President's ability in the future to rely upon the Vice President as he has done here. Plainly, the Vice President should not be subjected to this burden absent extraordinary circumstances. And equally plainly, the orders directing that discovery cannot be meaningfully reviewed on appeal from final judgment.

As our petition and reply also make clear, such orders can be subject to review even when they do not result in disclosure of "highly privileged" material. Cf. Opp. 7 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20, 23 (D.C. Cir. 2000)). To be sure, in that case, the Court observed that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order," id. at 23, and found that in the circumstances of the orders on review, which involved the rejection of various privileges, the government had not established an entitlement to mandamus review. However, the Court did not hold that a claim of privilege was a prerequisite for mandamus review and did not purport to set out a general rule.

Indeed, in In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d 1051, 1064 (D.C. Cir. 2000), the Court rejected the assertion that the Independent Counsel "would not be irreparably harmed by the orders because the orders allowed him to redact any Rule 6(e) material and thus he would not be required to provide any confidential investigative material to the movants." 151 F.3d at 1062. The Court explained that the Independent Counsel "is not troubled solely by the possibility that Rule 6(e) material might be disclosed, but also by the prospect of disclosing even the identities of members of the press with whom the IC and his staff have spoken." Id. at 392. The Court also observed that the limitation on disclosing protected material would not "assuage petitioner's fear that discovery an adversarial hearing will divert petitioner's focus * * *." Ibid. More generally, the Court has recognized that context, not a mechanical rule, matters in exercising mandamus jurisdiction. See In re Papandreou, 139 F.3d 247, 251 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (foreign government's opposition to jurisdictional discovery under the FSIA, which raised concerns even "beyond those of ordinary privilege," warranted "immediate review").

Moreover, In re Kessler, 100 F.3d 1015 (D.C. Cir. 1996), on which plaintiffs seek to rely, Opp. 6, is flatly at odds with their position here. In that case, the Court declined to issue a writ to preclude discovery of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. Citing United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992), the Court drew a distinction between the President and subordinate officers, and expressed concern that if the Court permitted immediate review by an agency official "three levels down from that of the Secretary of HHS," all executive branch officials might claim an immediate right of review. Id. at 1017. As the Court's reasoning makes clear, whatever the limits on immediate review of discovery orders, they do not encompass the President and the Vice President. See also Vice President's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss Appeal (explaining that, under Nixon, the President may appeal from discovery orders that would generally only be reviewed after litigant incurs contempt sanctions); Reply to Appellees' Response to Emergency Petition for Writ of Mandamus at 8-9 (explaining that constitutional concerns applicable to President apply as well to Vice President).[1]

[1] Indeed, the Court has subsequently questioned its decision to deny mandamus relief to the FDA Commissioner in In re Kessler. The Court explained that it had acted on the mistaken view that the Commissioner could have obtained review by incurring civil contempt sanctions, and recognized that review of a discovery order by a party could only be obtained by going into criminal contempt. In re Sealed Case, 151 F.3d at 1064. The Court concluded "that the disobedience and contempt route to appeal cannot be labeled an adequate means of relief for a party-litigant." Id. at 1065.

court will not chill the way in which the President obtains advice. As the Supreme Court and this Court have made clear, restrictions on the ways in which the President gathers advice and receives communications from private persons present "formidable constitutional difficulties." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466. Courts have been willing to adopt "extremely strained construction[s]" to minimize these problems, see Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1993). Moreover, FACA, by its own terms, does not apply to groups made up of exclusively government employees, a limit that is critical to its constitutionality. Despite all this, plaintiffs here propose a reading of the statute, accepted by the district court, that effectively reads this limitation out of the statute and generates the type of infringement that the courts have sought to avoid. Their reading of the FACA, which permits discovery into all contacts of a governmental group with each other, government personnel, and private persons, can burden the means by which the President seeks advice just as surely as imposition of the FACA's open-meeting and notice requirements. If discovery of the kind permitted here is routinely available, the President may well hesitate before using such groups at all, and group members will hesitate before having entirely proper contacts with private persons. Plaintiffs ignore the teachings of the Supreme Court and this Court when they urge that such a chill on the President's means of obtaining advice presents no significant constitutional concern.

Moreover, these same concerns make clear that this is no ordinary discovery dispute. In the context of a statute that is primarily about disclosure, and must be carefully interpreted to avoid unconstitutional interference with Article II powers, an improper discovery order directed to the Vice President raises the same kind of separation of powers problems as an improper interpretation of the FACA. The resulting unconstitutional interference with the Vice President cannot be fully remedied at the end of the case, nor should the Vice President have to go into criminal contempt to have his constitutional interests vindicated. In short, a stay and immediate

B. Plaintiffs Will Experience No Harm From The Granting Of A Stay.

While the harm to petitioners in the absence of a stay is significant and irreparable, plaintiffs can identify no credible harm that would result from the granting of a stay. The delay resulting from granting the stay will not be significant: the merits of the mandamus petition are now fully briefed. If the Court wishes additional briefing on the Vice President's appeal, we will proceed on whatever highly expedited schedule the Court deems appropriate.

Plaintiffs' claims of obstruction and delay on the part of the government, Opp. 11-12, are baseless. The numerous department heads who are defendants in this litigation have been participating in discovery for some time and have already produced thousands of pages of documents, including all requested documents that were received from or sent to individuals outside the government and summaries of communications with outsiders contained in internal government documents otherwise protected by executive privilege. Moreover, this discovery continues and will be unaffected by the requested stay with respect to petitioners. In light of the significant discovery plaintiffs have already received and continue to obtain, the delay caused by a stay cannot credibly be advanced as a harm.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should grant a stay of discovery against the movants pending review by this Court of the petition and appeal.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC. and SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiffs-Appellees v. RICHARD B. CHENEY, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES Defendant-Appellant	No. 02–5355 [District Court C.A. Nos. 01-1530, 02-631]

OPPOSITION TO APPELLEES' MOTIONS TO DISMISS THE APPEAL OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The Vice President of the United States respectfully responds to the Motion to Dismiss Appeal filed by plaintiff Sierra Club and joined in by plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc.

A. Plaintiffs in these actions allege that the National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG") – an intragovernmental Presidential advisory group established by President Bush, composed of the Heads of Departments and close Presidential advisors, including the Vice President – operated in violation of procedures established by the Federal Advisory Committee Act ("FACA"), 5 U.S.C. App. 2. Plaintiffs named as defendants the Vice President, the NEPDG, and various federal officials and private individuals.

The government moved to dismiss on statutory and constitutional grounds. As the government emphasized in that motion to dismiss, plaintiffs' suits are, on their face, devoid of merit: the FACA has no application to committees that are "composed wholly of full-time, or permanent part-time, officers or employees of the Federal Government." Id. § 3(2). The President's memorandum established the NEPDG as an entity composed exclusively of federal officers and employees. App. 117-18.[1] The NEPDG's final report confirms that it operated as such. See Reliable, Affordable, and Environmentally Sound Energy For America's Future: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group ("Report") (available at www.whitehouse.gov/energy). As the government also urged in its motion to dismiss, application of the FACA to a group of close Presidential advisors led by the Vice President would interfere with the President's discharge of his Article II functions and therefore be unconstitutional. See Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 909-10 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS"). The government also asked that the Vice President, who is not an "agency" within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act, be dismissed as a defendant.

[1] "App." refers to the Appendix filed on November 12, 2002, in connection with the motion to stay discovery pending appeal and petition for mandamus.

The court denied the motion to dismiss, refused to dismiss the Vice President as a defendant and precluded the government from filing a motion for summary judgment. Instead, the court ordered broad-ranging discovery, including discovery into the inner workings of and communications within the Office of the Vice President. The documents covered by the discovery order include communications between the Vice President and other NEPDG members outside the context of group meetings, between the Vice President and agency personnel, and between the Vice President and outside individuals. See, e.g., App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Indeed, that discovery calls for disclosure that is, in significant respects, greater than would be triggered by a finding of a FACA violation.

B. The Vice President has appealed from the orders authorizing discovery into his office and has also joined in the Petition for Writ of Mandamus filed on November 12, 2002. Plaintiffs' contentions notwithstanding, the present appeal falls squarely within the principles recognized in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). The district court recognized, consistent with the teachings of the Supreme Court and this Court, that application of the FACA to the NEPDG would raise substantial constitutional concerns. App. 171. In seeking to avoid that constitutional question, however, the court has authorized discovery that itself offends the separation of powers and interbranch comity. Especially absent a special showing of need, courts may not properly require the Vice President to produce to private persons the details of the process by which he obtains information, particularly when, as here, that information is being gathered in order to advise the President in the performance of his core constitutional prerogatives.

As we urged in our petition, the Court may address the propriety of the discovery orders and the Vice President's status in the exercise of its mandamus jurisdiction. If it does so, it can avoid deciding the precise contours of Nixon's appellate jurisdiction holding. If the Court declines to exercise mandamus jurisdiction, plaintiffs take the view that the Vice President could only test the validity of the court's orders by going into criminal contempt. Plaintiffs' extraordinary assertion that the Vice President must suffer criminal sanctions in order to obtain effective appellate review of important constitutional and statutory claims is flatly at odds with Nixon and broader principles of interbranch comity. Indeed, the Court in Nixon refused to countenance such a suggestion where, because of the President's third-party status, review would have been available by civil contempt.

Plaintiffs' grounds for dismissal are largely challenges to the merits of the Vice President's appeal. Plaintiffs contend that no reviewable question is presented in the absence of a specific claim of privilege. That argument fundamentally misunderstands the separation-of-powers problems that flow from the district court's view that the FACA permits intrusive discovery into the Office of the Vice President based on the mere allegation that an intragovernmental group established by the President and led by the Vice President may have included outside members. If the FACA were thought to allow private litigants to delve into the Vice President's office merely by raising unfounded questions regarding the President's good faith, the statute would plainly raise constitutional concerns of the first magnitude. Indeed, the district court's discovery orders – which extend to communications outside the context of FACA meetings - envisions disclosures of the internal workings of the Vice President's office that are in significant respects greater than would be required if the FACA actually applied to the NEPDG.

Plaintiffs further argue that this case is distinguishable from Nixon because the Vice President has been named as a party and may seek review following final judgment. This argument is doubly flawed.

First, the Vice President was not properly made a party to the suit. The Vice President is not an "agency" within the meaning of the APA, and the scope of non-statutory review recognized by this Court does not extend either to actions directly against the Vice President or to the type of error alleged in this case. Thus, any discovery requests to the Vice President in this case should properly have taken the form of a third-party subpoena. The Vice President is not precluded from seeking review of improper discovery orders because the district court also erred in refusing to dismiss him as a party.

Second, plaintiffs' suggestion that review of the Vice President's contentions is available after final judgment blinks reality. Once the improper discovery is concluded, no meaningful review of the issues presented here would be possible. A later appeal on the merits (if the district court were to issue judgment against the government) would have no impact on the issues now presented for review. Thus, short of contempt, the Vice President would have no meaningful opportunity to obtain review of the district court's order, the very circumstance addressed by the Supreme Court's decision in Nixon.

ARGUMENT

A. As set out in our mandamus petition, the district court erred in ordering an extensive intrusion into the internal workings of the Office of the Vice President for three related reasons.

First, the FACA contains no provision for judicial review, and its provisions are enforceable pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act and its limitations. See Claybrook v.

Slater, 111 F.3d 904, 908-09 (D.C. Cir. 1997). Absent extraordinary circumstances, where the public record makes clear that a government working group consists entirely of government officers and employees, there is no basis for overcoming established principles of judicial review of Executive action and ordinary presumptions of regularity, and permitting discovery based on mere allegations that the group may have included outside members. Review is limited to the administrative record and supplemental declarations filed by the government. See, e.g., Florida Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 744 (1985).

Second, where discovery in a FACA suit is sought against the Vice President, constitutional concerns compound the importance of deciding the case in accordance with settled principles of judicial review. As the Supreme Court and this Court have recognized, application of the FACA in ways that could compromise the manner in which the President gathers advice raise extremely serious constitutional questions. The Supreme Court and this Court have thus sought to ensure that the statute is interpreted to avoid constitutional infirmities. See Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 445-46 (1989); AAPS, 997 F.2d at 909-10. The district court in this case recognized that application of the FACA here might implicate precisely the types of concerns identified in those cases, but nonetheless ordered far-reaching discovery. App. 171.

The district court's discovery orders create constitutional problems similar to those it, this Court, and the Supreme Court have sought to avoid. Plaintiffs seek to subject the Vice President to intrusive discovery based on a simple allegation that the Presidential memorandum establishing the NEPDG, and the group's own final report, misstate the group's de facto membership. An interpretation of the FACA that would permit such discovery based on a simple assertion of irregularity would seriously impair the President's and the Vice President's interest in receiving confidential advice that this Court emphasized in AAPS.

Indeed, the discovery approved by the district court would allow plaintiffs to delve into

the Vice President's communications to an extent that would not be available even if they prevailed on the merits of their suit. Plaintiffs seek not only information about NEPDG meetings, but discovery as to communications between the Vice President and other group members outside the context of group meetings, between the Vice President and agency personnel, and between the Vice President and outside individuals -- none of which would be available under the FACA or the FOIA. See, e.g., App. 246, Requests for Production; App. 251, 253, Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, ¶ B and Interrogatories Nos. 3-6. Moreover, it does so in the context of an advisory group that the President has limited to federal officials. The FACA expressly excludes such intragovernment groups from is scope, 5 U.S.C. App. 2, § 3(2), and that limitation is critical to avoiding unconstitutional interference with the executive branch's discharge of the President's Article II functions. By permitting, upon a mere allegation of "unofficial membership," discovery beyond even the disclosures that would be available upon a finding that the FACA applied, the district court severely undermined, if not eliminated, this critical limitation in the statute.

Third, there is no basis for subjecting the Vice President to discovery as a party. As plaintiffs conceded, App. 148, the President and Vice President are not "agencies" subject to the APA, see Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992). The district court erred in believing it could nevertheless retain jurisdiction over the Vice President as a defendant on the theory that his actions might be subject to review by way of mandamus. App. 169. It was the President who established the NEPDG, prescribed its mission, and specified its membership, and the Vice President and members of the NEPDG acted on his behalf in preparing the group's recommendations and gathering the information and producing the documents necessary to do so. The powers of the President are involved in this case as well. As discussed in our mandamus petition, because of established restrictions on suits directly against the President – even in the case of constitutional challenges to Presidential action – the traditional means for obtaining judicial review is to sue the Head of the Executive Department who is charged with their implementation. See, e.g., Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 464 (1994). Plaintiffs may not evade restrictions on suing the President by suing the Vice President, who is not the Head of an Executive Department who could be subject to suit on such a theory, who has a distinct constitutional stature in his own right, and who acted here in the performance of his constitutionally-based role, recognized by Congress, of "providing assistance to the President in the performance of functions specifically assigned to the Vice President by the President in the discharge of executive duties and responsibilities." 3 U.S.C. § 106.

Moreover, this Court's cases permitting nonstatutory review of Presidential action (in a suit against a Head of a Department) are limited to cases in which the President is alleged to have acted outside his authority, see Chamber of Commerce v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1327-28 (D.C. Cir. 1996), and, as explained in our Petition, any suggestion in this Court's cases that nonstatutory review is freely available to enforce a federal statute must be read in light of the Supreme Court's recent decisions addressing judicially implied rights of action and efforts to use broad writs to circumvent particular limits on jurisdiction. See Petition at 18. Plaintiffs' allegations that some NEPDG members may have had discussions with nongovernment employees cannot plausibly be construed to fall within that narrow category of nonstatutory review.

B. As discussed in our petition, because the district court has committed clear and significant error with immediate and irreparable consequences, the Court can, and should, exercise its supervisory mandamus authority.

Exercising that mandamus authority would eliminate the need for the Court to resolve the scope of the Court's appellate jurisdiction under United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). However, if the Court reaches the issue, the Vice President's appeal may properly proceed under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. In Nixon, the Supreme Court permitted the President to seek immediate review of an order refusing to quash a subpoena without going into civil contempt, holding that the order was final and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See 418 U.S. at 690-92. The Court concluded that "[t]o require a President of the United States to place himself in the posture of disobeying an order of a court merely to trigger the procedural mechanism for review of the ruling would be unseemly, and would present an unnecessary occasion for constitutional confrontation between two branches of the Government." Id. at 691-92.

It would be similarly unseemly to compel the Vice President -- the only Article II officer other than the President named in the Constitution, see U.S. Const., Art. II, § 1 – to go into contempt in order to obtain appellate review of an order authorizing discovery into his conduct in advising the President on matters of the highest significance. Indeed, if this Court were to conclude that appellate and mandamus review were unavailable, the Vice President, who has (improperly) been made a defendant in this suit, could obtain effective appellate review only by subjecting himself to criminal contempt sanctions. See Byrd v. Reno, 180 F.3d 298, 300-02 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (while civil contempt cannot serve as the basis for a party to appeal a discovery order, criminal contempt could). It would be more than "unseemly" to require the Vice President to take such steps in order to secure timely review of orders that implicate serious separation of powers issues and directly affect the conduct of his office and his ability to gather confidential advice in carrying out functions assigned him by the President. That is especially so here, because plaintiffs seek to obtain documents that represent the working papers of a group of top-level government officials who were constituted as a group by the President to give advice to the President, and in which the President himself therefore has a direct interest deriving from the Opinions and Recommendations Clauses of the Constitution.

C. Plaintiffs urge that the district court's orders do not fall within the principles set out in Nixon, stressing that President Nixon had presented a claim of executive privilege and that review of his claim would have been unavailable on appeal because he was not a party to the underlying proceeding. The decision in Nixon did not announce a principle limited to claims of executive privilege. It turned, instead, on the "unseeml[iness]" of requiring the President to incur a contempt citation. See 418 U.S. at 691-92. As plaintiffss recognize, Nixon addressed the question of whether the President is required to submit to contempt to obtain review of an order denying a motion to quash that would otherwise be unappealable under the collateral order doctrine. The Court made clear that the President need not incur contempt sanctions to seek review of significant claims that would otherwise escape appellate review. That holding resolves the question whether the Vice President must incur criminal contempt sanctions to obtain review of the significant claims at issue on this appeal, and makes clear that the denial of a motion for a protective order (the party equivalent of the motion denied in Nixon) is reviewable here.[2]

That question is distinct from the underlying merits of this case and cannot be meaningfully reviewed after final judgment. The issue now before this Court is whether the Vice President can properly be made subject to sweeping discovery requests despite the constitutional and statutory objections outlined above. An appeal from a later adverse judgment, if one issues, could not remedy the intrusion sanctioned by the district court. Moreover, in the likely event that the government prevails in the underlying litigation, it is altogether possible that this Court would have no opportunity to address even prospectively the propriety of the type of discovery authorized here. Whether the government can ultimately prove there were no "unofficial members" of the NEPDG (which is decidedly not its burden under the FACA), it will

[2] Plaintiffs place heavy reliance on In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20 (D.C. Cir. 2000), in which the Court declined to exercise its mandamus authority to review a discovery order. The Court observed that "[i]n the normal course * * * mandamus is not available to review a discovery order." Id. at 23. Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestion, however, the Court did not hold that such review of a discovery order would be unavailable "absent a specific and well-substantiated 'claim that some important privilege will be infringed if discovery is allowed to proceed.'" Motion at 7 (quoting In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d at 24). The Court, in the passage quoted, addressed the particular claims at issue and did not purport to set out a general rule.

have been forced to disclose a great deal of information that would not be disclosed even if the FACA applied. In particular, when discovery demonstrates that the NEPDG's membership conformed to the President's memorandum, and so the FACA is altogether inapplicable, it will be impossible (and far too late) to remedy the separation of powers problems created by the district court's orders.

Plaintiffs' emphasis on the Vice President's party status only underscores the error of their contentions. As noted, the district court erred in failing to dismiss the Vice President as a defendant. That error cannot properly be used to foreclose the Vice President's ability to seek effective review of the court's discovery plan. Moreover, as discussed, because the Vice President is a party, he can only obtain appellate review, under plaintiffs' theory, by subjecting himself to criminal contempt sanctions. The Vice President is not required to flout a court order in order to obtain meaningful review of substantial constitutional and statutory claims.

In sum, because of the special concerns that obtain when the President or Vice President seek review of significant rulings that cannot be adequately addressed on appeal from final judgment, jurisdiction is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 as well as 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a).

REV_00154757

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should deny plaintiffs' motion to dismiss the appeal.

Brett -

I'm the new Katye Balls over in Presidential Correspondence.

I have a question regarding the below Memo. I just want to clarify the perameter "performing an official duty at an otherwise political event." My understanding is this would include Motorcade, volunteers or other assistance which would have been performed regardless of the nature of the trip.

Where do greeters stand on this list? I have James Tobin - Regional Political Director for the RNC and Manny Gonzales - Chairman for the Otero County GOP. They greeted POTUS. Please confirm if they should receive a letter on official stationary.

Thank you for your help. I appreciate your assistance.

if it answers your questions, then i'm comfortable with it. one conern: it addresses the logistical and volunteer personnel, but not the actual participants (the ones that would typically be for HS) in the events - the candidate, his family, other event hosts, etc.

for example, which stationery should the president use to thank the kennedy's, who hosted a finance event for gov. jeb bush at their residence on friday?

MEMORANDUM FOR KATHARINE BALLS

FROM: BRETT KAVANAUGH

SUBJECT: THANK YOU NOTES

You asked about use of stationery for thank-you notes to people who may have assisted the President on a political trip or the mixed portion of an official-political trip. As a general matter, you should use political stationery only for those who assisted directly and solely with political events. You should use official stationery for notes to those who assisted with official events, who assisted on both aspects of a mixed trip, who assisted with official functions on an otherwise political trip, and for whom a clear determination cannot be made. As a general matter, for example, notes to airport greeters and motorcade drivers can be on official stationery regardless of the nature of the trip.

We will revisit these guidelines if and when the President becomes a candidate for re-election to the Presidency.

Subject: Re: Revised EOP e-mail disclaimer

There are some technical issues regarding the disclaimer you should be aware of that may affect the length and type of the waiver we would want on the system.

If we program the system to attach a waiver to each e-mail, the waiver will appear each time you send an e-mail. In other words, if Ed sent an E-mail to me, and I replied and Ed replied back, the disclaimer would appear 3 times on the e-mail chain.

There is a way we can implement the disclaimer and set people's default settings so the waiver would not appear again if the sender used the reply, reply with history, or forward functions. It would, however, appear if the person used "send." In order to do this, the disclaimer would need to be embedded in the signature line.

However, if somebody sent a message from an outside e-mail address and the EOP account holder responded by "reply," the disclaimer would not appear anywhere in the e-mail.

If we use the "signature line" method for installing the waiver, we can put the standard disclaimer in each account, but people could change it. They could also change the default settings for when it appears.

There is another method we could use that would ensure the disclaimer would appear in each e-mail and could not be changed with the user. Using this method, a program could be inserted that would insert the disclaimer only when sent to the outside. It then would not appear in e-mails sent within the EOP. (In other words, it would not appear, for example, in an e-mail sent from the White House Office to OMB.)

In addition to the waiver, there are other ways we can educate users:

1. We can add a paragraph to the standard OA-62 form that people sign when they are given a computer account.

2. We can make an additional disclaimer appear on logon next to or after the security statement.

3. Management can send a Postmaster notice to all staff.

It would be great if you can pass on your thoughts so I can give the technical staff a sense of where they should prepare to go.

Subject: Revised EOP e-mail disclaimer

Brad -- I think you basically got it nailed -- your first draft is better than advertised, and I wouldn't call it a rough-cut. And I agree w/ you that this is all pretty standard stuff. All these fax cover sheets and e-mail footers out there have only minor variations in what has become standard text for standard disclaimers. None of which have been read in years.

In fact, it's b/c the standard clauses about "intended only for the recipient(s)" and the "please delete if you've rec'd this in error" have become so ROUTINE that I would propose that we lead with a line up front about what is DIFFERENT about WH e-mail: Unlike virtually any other organization, it is automatically and (in effect) permanently preserved, whether the sender or the recipient like it or not.

In other words, I'm not very confident that including these new footers is likely to convince a lot of random unintended recipients out there to dutifully delete WH e-mails and notify the EOP. And though labelling never hurts, I have no great confidence that these footers, in and of themselves, will persuade the courts to regard them as confidential (still, it's better than to be arguing about un-labelled documents).

No, I see the problem with e-mail continues to be a recurring and apparently commonplace lack of judgment about what WH staff (and Wall St. brokers and law firms and everyone else in the country) opt to put into their e-mails. What they attach to them. What they decide to forward. According to some of our colleagues who've rev'd WH e-mail in order to comply with document subpoenas, this problem (about judgment) is very real here.

So the proposed first line in the att'd revised footer is designed to do two things:
In terms of having even a prayer of influencing behavior, it's a shot at reminding WH staff and their correspondents that THIS STUFF IS NEVER GONNA BE DELETED. And also, it serves as a kind of basic NOTICE -- especially to citizens, politicians, campaign staff, state & local officials, corporate America, lobbyists and others OUTSIDE the WH -- that unlike what may be the case with any number of their own private or even business e-mail accounts, there is very little in the way of privacy or control over anything they transmit into the EOP.

The text I've suggested comes direct from the current WH Staff Manual, p. A-11, the first sentence under the sub-heading "E-Mail", and is thus also derived from Brett's memo on the PRA that was issued by the Judge on Feb. 26, 2001.

Please let me know what you think. Thanks -- E.

How about this instead:

Dear Mr. Stern:

The Office of Administration (OA) in the Executive Office of the President (EOP) is updating the EOP,s information technology infrastructure. Part of this effort involves converting to a standard office management suite of software centered on the Microsoft Office line of products that includes Exchange, Outlook, Word, Excel and PowerPoint. We are informed that the &record/non-record8 function currently in place with the legacy system (designed around Lotus Notes) is not feasible in the new Microsoft environment. Therefore, all EOP system e-mail--including non-record materials--will eventually be sent to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). For Presidential records, this will occur during a Presidential transition. For Federal records generated by components of the EOP that generate Federal records, this will take place as part of the records accession process. We write to make clear our continued understanding that NARA has no legal authority to unilaterally release non-records to the public under either the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. õ 2201, et. seq., or the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. õ 552.

Thank you for your work on this matter.

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <F_40QWB003_OA.TXT_1>

Dear Mr./Ms. _____:

As you know from recent discussions between our organizations, the Office of Administration (OA), Executive Office of the President (EOP) is engaged in a time-sensitive and critical effort to update the EOP's information technology infrastructure to support the needs of OA's customer offices. Part of this effort involves converting to a standard office management suite of software centered on the Microsoft Office line of products that includes Exchange, Outlook, Word, Excel and PowerPoint. Despite our significant efforts to convert the "record/non-record" function currently in place with the legacy system (designed around Lotus Notes), we have concluded that this feature is not supportable in the new Microsoft environment. The absence of this feature will cause all e-mail sent henceforth within, to, or from offices served by the EOP's information technology infrastructure to be records managed in the Automated Records Management System (ARMS).

Because it will no longer be possible for e-mail sent by EOP system account holders to be designated as "non-record" at the time of creation, all EOP system e-mail--including non-record materials--will eventually be sent to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). For Presidential records, this will occur during a Presidential transition. For Federal records generated by components of the EOP that generate Federal records, this will take place as part of the records accession process. At present, approximately 1.5% of the e-mail handled by the system is designated as "non-record."

I want to emphasize that the reasons for this change are purely technical. We realize that NARA is encouraging the development of information systems that will prevent unnecessary record keeping by allowing senders to classify messages as "non-records," or "temporary records," or otherwise allow senders to identify an item as something other than a permanent record. In this light, we acknowledge that the step we need to take at this time is a step back, and we are taking it in order to maintain and protect our infrastructure in accordance with industry standards. As we develop long-term plans for the EOP network, we will continue to examine and pursue options that would allow us to preserve only those records that we are required to keep.

We note that the fact that a particular message is not a record under Federal law does not necessarily change because it is, contrary to its true status, retained. Already, there is a large quantity of non-record messages labeled as "records" simply because the sender used the default setting. We understand that the Archives has properly treated these materials as non-records for purposes of applicable information disclosure processes despite their default identification as records. These materials fall into two broad categories. For offices covered by the Presidential Records Act, 44 U.S.C. § 2201, et. seq.,"Personal records," as defined at 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3), are not presidential records, and are not subject to disclosure under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). For offices that generate Federal records pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 3101, et. seq., documents that do not meet the definition of an agency record under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Such items, which will likely be no more than marginally greater in number due to the technical change discussed in this letter, should continue to be withheld from disclosure under these processes. Accordingly, we trust and understand that the National Archives will, to the best of its ability, identify such personal records and non-records, and segregate them from records identified for disclosure in response to a request under one of the above-cited laws.

Thank you for consulting with us concerning this development. If you have any questions or would like to further discuss this matter, please call me at _____, or _____ or my office at _____.

Sincerely,

i don't think the issue i raised below has been resolved yet. obviously, the big chunk of political travel for the midterms is over - but, it would still be wise to get the issue resolved.

thanks

if it answers your questions, then i'm comfortable with it. one conern: it addresses the logistical and volunteer personnel, but not the actual participants (the ones that would typically be for HS) in the events - the candidate, his family, other event hosts, etc.

for example, which stationery should the president use to thank the kennedy's, who hosted a finance event for gov. jeb bush at their residence on friday?

Brett -
Thank you for doing this. I feel like this answers most of the questions, but I don't know if Blake has any other concerns. Otherwise, this is great.

Thanks again,
Katye Balls

FROM: BRETT KAVANAUGH

SUBJECT: THANK YOU NOTES

You asked about use of stationery for thank-you notes to people who may have assisted the President on a political trip or the mixed portion of an official-political trip. As a general matter, you should use political stationery only for those who assisted directly and solely with political events. You should use official stationery for notes to those who assisted with official events, who assisted on both aspects of a mixed trip, who assisted with official functions on an otherwise political trip, and for whom a clear determination cannot be made. As a general matter, for example, notes to airport greeters and motorcade drivers can be on official stationery regardless of the nature of the trip.

We will revisit these guidelines if and when the President becomes a candidate for re-election to the Presidency.

Subject: Non-Presidential White House events and photographs

Patrick,
One idea that came out of the brainstorming session of a recent meeting between OSI, OPL, and OPA, was to have Karl purchase a digital camera that could be used by his staff to photograph events where the President is not in attendance (i.e. events with staff that are held here at the White House) and perhaps supplement the White House Photographers photos at events he does attend. The question came up as to whether there would be any legal restrictions on the use of this camera and the distribution (via e-mail) of the photographs that would be taken.

Would you be willing to run by the correct Associate Counsel (ethics??) to get an opinion on this matter.

Thanks,
Doug

I think that in December we should re-convene some kind of meeting/working group to strategize about victims compensation and blocked assets issues on a going-forward basis. Main issues I see are:

(i) administrative action w/r/t blocked assets (what can be done, what should be done?)
(ii) legislative fix/delay w/r/t blocked assets (any hope?)
(iii) affirmative push on comprehensive victims compensation legislation (Armitage letter approach: how to propose, how to get done?)

Sure could use some help in getting the status of the letter to the T&P committee regarding stopping the process of emailing questions to OA. I understand that Ben has drafted the response we'd send back to them when they send us email questions. But we still need the first letter that informs them of the discontinuance of the practice? who's got the ball on this?

I am sure you saw the latest weyrich piece praising the President, but just in case:

Right after Republicans won their unexpected victory in the off-year elections, an article appeared in the front section of The Washington Post that suggested prominent Bush aides were concerned that the Republicans were going to push those dreadful social issues.

Soon to be Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott (R- MS) said he intended to bring up the partial birth abortion bill which had passed the House by a near-two to one margin this year, but which then-Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-SD) failed to call up in the Senate.

The Post piece said that Bush aides expressed dismay over this development and suggested that Bush dealing with partial birth abortion at the beginning of the 108th Congress was equivalent to Bill Clinton's calling up gays in the military as soon as he took office. Never mind that the partial birth abortion measure is favored by over 70 percent of the public, whereas Clinton's initiative on gays in the military was opposed by a similar majority.

Anyway, a senior White House aide told me that the morning that piece appeared in the Post, Bush staff members, at their regular early-morning meeting, looked at each other and said, "Who could have said that?" Later, they concluded that the piece was concocted by the Post. That paper HATES the social issues and it may be that this was their way of whistling past the graveyard.

The article had its impact, however. Social conservatives, who are used to being betrayed by Republicans, mostly believed the Post piece and were downhearted. "Once again we've been had," the leader of a national Christian group told me. "They want our work at the grass roots level. Then as soon as they get in, they kick us in the face."

The problem is that there is no truth to the Post story. If someone did indeed give those anonymous quotes to the Post, they were not in a position to know or influence Bush's mindset on the issue. Look at the record of the Bush Administration during its first two years, just on the issue of the sanctity of life.

The administration, through the Department of Justice, formally supported the Ohio law on partial birth abortion in the courts.

The President has supported the banning of all human cloning. He urged passage of the bill to ban cloning which then passed the House but which never saw the light of day in the Senate.

Bush opposed taxpayer financed embryonic stem cell research. And he signed the Born Alive Infant Protection Act at a public ceremony.

The administration supported the child custody protection act, as well as the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act.

The administration took a highly controversial position on euthanasia as reflected in the Justice Department's work on the Oregon case.

In another controversial move, the Department of HHS issued a new regulation allowing states to use the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) to provide health coverage for prenatal care and delivery to mothers and their unborn children-helping to ensure that low income mothers have healthy pregnancies and that their babies are born healthy.

Bush cut off funding for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and at the same time, on the morning after his inauguration, reaffirmed the Mexico City policy, which had been established by President Ronald Reagan, but rescinded by Bill Clinton as his first official act in office. The Mexico City policy says that taxpayer funds should not be used to pay for abortions either here or abroad or to advocate or actively promote abortion.

The administration promoted adoption throughout the nation with Public Service Announcements (PSAs).

And of course the President made remarks in a call to participants at the annual March for Life and issued a proclamation on the National Sanctity of Human Life Day in 2002.

All of this just as the administration was getting itself organized and on top of many, many other pro-family initiatives.

While it is understandable that conservatives, who have been betrayed many times, would believe the Post, it is surprising in view of the record of this administration, which has done more for life than either the administrations of Ronald Reagan or Bush's father.

Of course, there is more to be done. All late-term abortions - not just partial birth abortions - should be outlawed. The Abortion Non-Discrimination Act and the Child Custody Protection Act didn't see action in the Senate so they should be passed again by the House and this time by the Senate and signed into law by the President. The same for the cloning ban, as well as the Unborn Victims of Violence Act. And there is the Vitter amendment that deals with Planned Parenthood.

And, of course, there is the issue of confirming the President's outstanding nominees for the federal judiciary. Senator Daschle has made it clear that his Democrats will filibuster any judicial nominee in whom they can find any trace of pro-life sentiment. That was why he went to the trouble of getting 45 votes against Sen. Strom Thurmond's nominee for the court of appeals, Dennis Shedd. It takes 41 votes to sustain a filibuster and Daschle wanted Bush to understand he can stop any judge he wishes.

Having won back control of the Senate with strongly pro-life candidates, it is highly unlikely that the Bush Administration will cut and run on the life issues now. On the contrary, the impressive record of the administration suggests that it will continue on the path it started on the day after Bush's inauguration when he re-instated the Mexico City policy.

Agree with all the changes other than those to the first bullet point in the second section (under "if asked"). I would not point to the language as we will not want this to be misconstrued as saying that the language doesn't apply to the Commission. Prefer my prior formulation on the fact that this is "standard language."

Subject: Talking points for Ari on Commission signing

Here are suggested talking points for Ari. Any comments? I wasn't sure about references to the joint inquiry given that we've had disputes with them, but on balance I think its a helpful analogy.

The President expects that the Comission will conduct a bipartisan, careful review of the facts concerning the September 11 attacks. The President strongly supports the Commission in its effort to examine all the evidence, get the facts and learn the lessons of the September 11 tragedy.

The Commission will have access to a great deal of highly sensitive information concerning the September 11 attacks. As soon as the Commission members are granted security clearances, and the Congress is ready to share the materials, they will immediately be given access to the extensive records already compiled by the congressional joint inquiry into the terrorist attacks. This information includes hundreds of thousands of pages of documents and testimony from hundreds of executive branch witnesses vital to the inquiry.

In addition, the statute provides that the Commission may seek additional information from the federal and state governments to further the work of the Commission. Just as the Administration has worked with the congressional joint inquiry on its requests for information from the executive branch, we will work with the Commission.

If Asked Only:

As the signing statement language relating to disclosures of information to the legislative branch makes clear, it refers specifically to provisions other than the Commission. Presidents frequently make clear in signing statements that they are not abrogating their constitutional responsibilities and authorities, including with regard to disclosures. We expect to work with the Commission on a case-by-case basis to resolve any issues that should arise regarding particular information requests.

I'm not going to speculate about what information the Commission may request or how those issues would be resolved in the future. The Commission has not even begun its work, so these questions are premature. The President is committed to the success of the Commission and looks forward to working with them to get the facts and take steps to improve our ability to prevent future attacks.

All,

Please let me know by COB today if you will have materials for Wednesday's WHJSC binder. We're hoping to print the JSC binder tomorrow morning to allow time to prepare the POTUS binder for Thursday's meeting. Any head start you can provide as to candidates that may be included in the POTUS binder would be much appreciated, as we can begin the data sheet/memo process today.

Thanks,

Senate oversight of judicial nominees should rest on statesmanship, not partisanship.

Republicans did it when Bill Clinton was president. Democrats, most recently, have done it under George W. Bush. Their common activity: partisan manipulation of how federal judicial nominations are handled.

The Washington Post recently found similar patterns when it looked at how Clinton's judicial nominees had fared under a GOP-controlled Senate compared to Bush's nominees before a Democratic-controlled one. The key finding: Neither major party has been simon-pure in handling the nominations.

Concluded the Post: "For all the rhetoric, the performance of the Republican Senate in that 105th Congress was essentially identical to the Democratic Senate's performance in the Congress just past." In both cases, the party in charge let a certain number move forward for final consideration while, as the Post put it, a "relatively large number of nominees" weren't acted on "at a time when individual courts were hurting."

Soon, Bush will have the advantage of sending nominations to a Senate controlled by his own party. Some Democrats have expressed concern that the Senate majority will merely rubber-stamp Bush's nominees, allowing the administration to pack the judiciary with radical right-wingers.

Making judgments on the soundness of nominees' judicial philosophies, of course, can be a matter of perspective. What some of Bush's critics might label as radicalism (wariness, for example, about expanding Congress's regulatory powers under the Constitution's Commercial Clause) could be legitimately regarded as judicial prudence.

Bush has proposed a sound idea to set time limits on how long nominations can be held up in the Senate. As a practical matter, however, the administration will have great difficulty convincing the Senate (traditionally obsessive about its legislative prerogatives) to agree to the change, even with Republicans in control of the chamber.

Since the GOP will have only a slim majority in the Senate, moderate lawmakers, as the normal swing voters, will likely have the power to make or break Bush's judicial nominations. Centrists within both parties (such as Nebraska's Ben Nelson on the Democratic side) can serve the public interest well by avoiding blind, partisan-driven voting. They should exercise independent judgment.

If enough senators place civic-mindedness above narrow partisanship, there is no reason the Senate's "advise and consent" process can't produce a positive outcome for the nation.

Subject: Tony Feather meeting

Tony is coming to town next week and I'd like to arrange a meeting for all of us if possible. While I've obviously been communicating regularly with him, I think it's time for him to sit down and talk with y'all about moving forward next year. He obviously has broader political knowledge than I do and will provide helpful insight, as well as gain insight from the meeting that he can take to others as PFA rolls out it's '03 plan. The main topic will be strategy for USSC, so we can plan accordingly, but there will be no set agenda - just an informal back & forth. He will be in town on the 11-12 and I'm still waiting to find his availability.

Please consider this email a heads up, and I'll get back to you by early next week with times and we'll see what we can work out for everyone. Thanks - I think this will be helpful and hope you'll be willing to join. Of course others are welcome if you think appropriate. JO from Charlotte paper:

GOP leaders plan sequel to 2002 story

By ROB CHRISTENSEN, Staff Writer

RALEIGH -- State Republican Party leaders, in their first meeting since their sweeping victories in the midterm elections, began to turn their attention toward unseating North Carolina's two marquee Democratic incumbents in 2004 -- Gov. Mike Easley and Sen. John Edwards.
The state GOP Executive Committee met Saturday and exchanged congratulations on the election of Elizabeth Dole to the U.S. Senate, the capture of the state House, the domination of the statewide judicial races and the newly-won control of a record 45 of the state's 100 boards of county commissioners. But the Republicans have also begun laying plans for the next election cycle. "The 2004 campaign has already begun, and it's going to be a huge year," state GOP Chairman Bill Cobey told about 75 party leaders meeting at the Velvet Cloak Inn.
The White House has begun courting GOP Congressman Richard Burr of Winston-Salem to run for Edwards' seat in 2004, several GOP insiders said. The White House is offering to provide the same sort of assistance for Burr -- helping him with money, political expertise and the backing of the president -- that it did this year for Dole.
President Bush and in particular his chief political adviser, Karl Rove, were active in recruiting and supporting Republican Senate candidates across the country this year, even if it meant becoming involved in GOP primaries.
Burr was traveling as part of a House delegation in Europe on Saturday and could not be reached for comment.
But Burr has in the past expressed uncertainty over whether to run for higher office or seek re-election. Burr, who was elected to his fifth term in the House last month, is potentially in line to be House Commerce Committee chairman if he stays for a few more years.
Although not well-known across the state, Burr, 47, is regarded by party insiders as a rising star -- personable, photogenic and bright, with an ability to compete for swing suburban voters as Edwards does. He also has a campaign war chest of nearly $2 million.
Taking on Edwards
Edwards has not said whether he plans to run for a second term in 2004 or whether he will seek the Democratic nomination for president. He can legally do both, but most observers expect him to choose between the two.
Cobey said Edwards' hold on the Senate seat is "not secure at all -- especially with George W. Bush on the ticket."
"His [polling] numbers are down," Cobey said. "We are excited about taking him on and winning. My analysis is that he understands the predicament he is in. If he runs for president he has to stay pretty far to the left, and that doesn't go down well in North Carolina."

Burr is not the only Republican looking at running for the Edwards seat. Jim Snyder, a Lexington lawyer who finished second to Dole during the GOP primary in September, is also considering seeking the Senate seat.

But who for governor?

While the White House is apparently hoping to clear the field for Burr in the Senate contest, the GOP gubernatorial primary appears wide open without a clear front-runner.

Among those looking at the governor's race is N.C. Supreme Court Chief Justice I. Beverly Lake Jr.

Lake, a former state senator who was the Republican nominee for governor in 1980, has discussed a possible challenge to Easley, GOP insiders said. "I'm flattered that people would suggest that," Lake said. "Certainly, I have taken that road once before. It's an office that I have been interested in the past. I certainly can't say at the moment I have given it any serious thought. I may have to soon. But I haven't at the moment."

Lake, who defeated Democratic Chief Justice Henry Frye in 2000, has one of the best-known names in Tar Heel politics. His father, I. Beverly Lake Sr., is a former state Supreme Court justice and was a Democratic candidate for governor in 1960 and 1964.

Field shaping up

Other Republicans looking at running against Easley include former Charlotte Mayor Richard Vinroot, state Senate Republican leader Patrick Ballantine of Wilmington, Raleigh lawyer and former Carolina Hurricanes president Jim Cain, Southern Pines insurance executive George Little and Charlotte Mayor Patrick McCrory.

Among the potential GOP gubernatorial candidates, Vinroot, who lost to Easley in 2000, has been the most active in soliciting support around the state.

Vinroot has the advantages and disadvantages of having twice run for governor. He is among the best-known of the potential candidates, but some GOP activists think the party needs a fresher face.

The two men Vinroot defeated in 2000 to win the GOP nomination -- state House GOP leader Leo Daughtry of Smithfield and former state Rep. Chuck Neely of Raleigh -- have said it is not likely that they will try again in 2004.

The Easley outlook

Easley has signaled that he plans to seek a second term. But with the state in a continuing budget crisis, Easley's approval ratings dropped from 49 percent to 44 percent between April and November, according to the Elon University Poll.

There are some worries in Republican circles that no GOP candidate has emerged who is strong enough to defeat a sitting governor.

Since the state constitution was amended in 1978 to allow governors to seek a second successive term, no sitting governor has been defeated.

And Cobey cautioned the Republican Party leaders Saturday that despite their midterm successes, there are no guarantees about 2004.

"Our opposition is not going to lay down and play dead," Cobey said.

Editorial: Judicial nominations need bi-partisan standards

Look up "partisanship" in the dictionary and the only definition needed is the federal judicial appointment process.

Perhaps no other process is so packed with political poison as the president's responsibility to nominate federal judges.

President Bush, with 79 federal judicial vacancies to fill as of November, has found out the hard way that "reaching out" to U.S. Senate Democrats oftentimes leads to a bare-knuckle brawl when it comes to judicial nominations.

Unfortunately, his predecessor, Bill Clinton, discovered the same thing courtesy of Republicans.

Both parties are guilty of determining a judge's qualifications for office by party labels or simply nixing a candidate for political reasons.

This detestable practice has become an unwelcome tradition and does not serve the best interests of the public, which is more interested in swift and fair justice than political power plays.

Whether he is tired of fighting or simply punch-drunk, Bush has offered a meaningful proposal that could alleviate much of the politics from the judicial nomination process.

The president's proposal includes federal judges providing a year's notice before leaving office. The president would then have 180 days to nominate a replacement, with the Senate judicial committee having 90 days to consider the nomination. The full Senate would have another 90 days to vote for confirmation. Bush also wants to include the American Bar Association in the process.

The proposal has merit in that guidelines would prevent judicial nominees from languishing in the Senate for months on end, a much-used delaying tactic by both sides. The inclusion of the ABA helps reduce at least some of the partisan bickering and contrasts with earlier proposals to remove ABA participation.

Clearly, something has to be done for the federal justice system to be able to function properly without lawmakers creating political obstacles. The president's proposal will speed up the process and is a step in the right direction.

Would orally be more advantageous for us? Hard to know. There are only 7, I believe: Dole, Chambliss, Cornyn, Talent, Coleman, Alexander, Graham.

Just spent about 30 minutes explaining to Sen.-elect Alexander's CoS the process by which we request candidates for judicial, U.S. Attorney, and U.S. Marshal positions. Do you think we should send our letter to the new guys? Esp. where they are the only GOP Senator (like Coleman and Chambliss)? Your thoughts?

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
DURING FEDERAL JUDICIAL APPOINTEES ANNOUNCEMENT

May 9, 2001
The East Room

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Attorney General, it's good to see you, sir, and happy birthday. Today is his birthday. Also, Judge Al Gonzales. Judge Gonzales is a great friend of mine who, fortunately, is my lawyer and is a part of the process, judicial selection process. Thank you for being here, Judge.

I'm also honored to welcome members of the United States Senate who are here to welcome the nominees to Washington: of course, Senator Orrin Hatch, Chairman of the Judiciary; as well as Senator Patrick Leahy, ranking member on the Judiciary. It's good to see you men, thank you both for coming.

John Warner, George Allen, George Voinovich and last, but not least, Senator Strom Thurmond. Welcome. (Applause.) Thank you all for coming.

I'm pleased to welcome my judicial nominees to the White House. And I'm pleased to welcome their family and friends, as well.

This is a proud moment for all of you, and it's a proud moment for me, as well. A President has fewer greater responsibilities than that of nominating men and women to the courts of the United States. A federal judge holds a position of great influence and respect, and can hold it for a lifetime.

When a President chooses a judge, he is placing in human hands the authority and majesty of the law. He owes it to the Constitution and to the country to choose with care. I have done so.

With me this afternoon are my first 11 judicial nominees, individuals of experience and character. Four of them serve as United States district judges, all four confirmed by unanimous votes. Two others are sitting judges on state supreme courts. Four have served as law clerks in the Supreme Court of the United States. One has served here as an associate counsel to the President. One already holds the position for which I nominate him, by recess appointment of President Clinton.

These men and women have followed different paths to this nomination. They come from diverse backgrounds, and will bring a wide range of experience to the bench. All have sterling credentials and have met high standards of legal training, temperament and judgment.

As a group, they command broad, bipartisan support among those who know them and who have served with them. I submit their names to the Senate with full confidence that they will satisfy any test of judicial merit.

These first nominations are also an opportunity to outline the standards by which I will choose all federal judges. The American people expect judges of the highest caliber, and my nominees will meet that test. A judge, by the most basic measure, has an obligation shared by the President and members of Congress. All of us are constitutional officers, sworn to serve within the limits of our Constitution and laws. When we observe those limits, we exercise our rightful power. When we exceed those limits, we abuse our powers.

Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench. To paraphrase the third occupant of this house, James Madison, the courts exist to exercise not the will of men, but the judgment of law. My judicial nominees will know the difference. Understanding this will make them more effective in the defense of rights guaranteed under the Constitution, the enforcement of our laws, and more effective in assuming that justice is done to the guilty and for the innocent.

My standard is informed by the oath that each judge will take: to administer justice without respect to persons, and to do equal right to poor and to the rich. A good judge exercises these powers with discernment, courage and humility. These are commitments, not just to philosophy, but of character.

My nominees today and in the years to come will be notable for their distinction and accomplishments. And all will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity. With today's 11 nominees, we continue a constitutional process that involves all three branches of government.

For many weeks now, we have sought and received advice from senators of both parties. I now submit these nominations in good faith, trusting that good faith will also be extended by the United States Senate. Over the years, we have seen how the confirmation process can be turned to other ends. We have seen political battles played out in committee hearings -- battles that have little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee.

This is not good for the Senate, for our courts or for the country.

There are, today, over a hundred vacancies on the federal courts, causing backlogs, frustration and delay of justice. I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house, and no matter who controls the senate.

I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process. And with this distinguished group of nominees awaiting confirmation, there is no better opportunity than right now. I congratulate all of you on your service past, and for your service to come.

God bless. (Applause.)

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
ON JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

October 30, 2002
The East Room

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Thank you, Al. He's -- everybody must have a good lawyer, and I got one in Al Gonzales.

I want to welcome you all here to the White House. Thank you for coming.

The federal courts play a central role in American justice, protecting the innocent, punishing the guilty, resolving disputes and upholding the rule of law. Yet, today, our federal courts are in crisis.

The judicial confirmation process does not work as it should. Nominees are too often mistreated, votes are delayed, hearings are denied, and dozens of federal judgeships sit empty, and this endangers the quality of justice in America.

Everyone knows these facts. Everyone knows the system isn't working. These concerns are not new. And we will not find a solution in an endless cycle of blame and bitterness.

Today, I'm proposing a clean start for the process of nominating and confirming federal judges. We must have an even-handed, predictable procedure from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn in. This procedure should apply now and in the future, no matter who lives in this house or who controls the Senate. We must return fairness and dignity to the judicial confirmation process.

I want to thank the Judge Al Gonzales for working on this initiative and I want to thank his team for working hard. I appreciate John Ashcroft's service to our country; he is a great Attorney General. (Applause.) And I'm not saying that just because his wife and her twin sister are here. (Laughter.)

I'm so pleased that Ted Olson, the Solicitor General, is with us. I thank Fred Fielding, the former counsel to President Ronald Reagan. Boyd Gray is with us, former counsel to Number 41. Dennis Archer is with us today, President-elect of the American Bar Association and, of course, the former mayor of Detroit. Mr. Mayor, thank you for coming. Thomas Hayward, Chair of the Committee of Federal Judicial Improvements for the American Bar Association. And all of you, thank you for your interest in this subject.

Nearly 18 months ago, at an event right here in the East Room, I introduced my first 11 nominees to the Court of Appeals. I urged Senators of both parties to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to each nominee. Thus far, only three of these 11 nominations have been brought to a vote in the United States Senate.

The eight who are stalled in the Judiciary Committee include people such as John Roberts. John Roberts has argued 38 cases before the Supreme Court. He has served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States. He's widely regarded as one of the best Supreme Court lawyers in America.

And they include Miguel Estrada, who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and has served in the Justice Department under Presidents of both political parties as a federal prosecutor and as the Assistant to the Solicitor General.

The Judiciary Committee has prevented full Senate action on people such as Priscilla Owen, who has served brilliantly on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995, and was overwhelmingly reelected by the people of Texas in the year 2000. Mr. Roberts, Mr. Estrada and Justice Owen have the highest ratings from the American Bar Association, which some Democrat Senators have called, "the gold standard." They have broad support among lawyers in both political parties. Both Mr. Roberts and Mr. Estrada have the support of former President Clinton's Solicitor General. Justice Owen is supported by three former Democrat justices of the Texas Supreme Court.

In all, I have sent to the Senate 32 nominees for the Court of Appeals. They are well qualified men and women with experience, intelligence, character and bipartisan home state support. They represent the mainstream of American law and American values. Yet the Senate has confirmed only 14 of these 32 nominees, which is far below the pace of past Senates at the start of an administration. It's a lousy record. Not one of my nine pending nominees to fill vacancies on the Sixth and D.C. Circuit Courts has received a Senate vote, not one. As of November, 15 of my Appeals Court nominees will have been forced to wait over a year for a hearing. That's more in this Presidency than under the previous nine Presidents combined.

There's no good reason why any nominee should endure a year, a year-and-a-half, or more, without the courtesy of an up or down floor vote; there is not one good reason why. Whatever the explanation, we clearly have a poisoned and polarized atmosphere in which well qualified nominees are neither voted up or down; they are just left in limbo. This is unfair to the nominees and their families. This process discourages good people from serving as judges. It's also unfair to the courts themselves, which are forced to handle a growing caseload without the judges they need.

Nine percent of all federal judgeships in America are now vacant, nine percent. Of the 12 regional Courts of Appeals, the courts right below the Supreme Court, there is a 17 percent vacancy rate. The Court of Appeals for the D.C. Court, which rules on many significant Constitutional and regulatory issues, now operates with one-third of its judgeships empty. And the Sixth Court of Appeals which covers Kentucky and Ohio, Michigan and Tennessee, is nearly half empty, with nine active judges doing the work of 16.

Meanwhile, the number of federal appeal court filings reached an all-time high this year. Benches are empty, the number of court filings has increased to an all-time high. We can expect them to increase even further as a result of the war on terror, corporate fraud prosecutions, and issues arising out of the September the 11th attacks.

The judicial vacancies go unfulfilled, we will see more crowded dockets and longer delays. The federal courts will be unable to act in a timely manner to protect constitutional rights, to resolve civil disputes, and enforce the criminal laws, the environmental laws, and the civil rights laws that affects the lives and liberties of every single American. Chief Justice Rehnquist has called this situation alarming. The American Bar Association's report has described the current status of the federal judiciary as an emergency situation.

The judicial crisis is the result of a broken system, and we have a duty to repair it. I want to work with the Senate to fashion a new approach to filling federal court vacancies. We should leave behind the arguments and grievances of the past. We need to fix this problem together. That's why we've come to Washington, to fix problems. And each branch of government can contribute and must contribute to a better system.

So today, I'm offering four specific proposals to break the logjam in Washington and bring the federal courts of appeals and district courts to full strength.

First, I call on federal judges on the courts of appeals and district courts to notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, whenever this is possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge is a lengthy process under the best of circumstances, judges who retire without advance notice can unintentionally create a judicial vacancy that can last for many months. The request for one year advance notice builds on existing policy of the judiciary and will help us work toward a system in which a new federal judge is ready to take the bench on a day the sitting judge retires -- that's the goal.

Second, I propose that Presidents submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. In other words, we have a responsibility as well to make sure the judiciary is sound and whole. This will speed up the sometimes time-consuming process of obtaining recommendations and evaluations from home-state senators and representatives and governors and bar leaders, while leaving ample time for Presidents to vet and choose nominees of the highest quality.

Third, I call on the Senate Judiciary -- Senate Judiciary Committee to commit to holding a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. A strict deadline is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. And 90 days is more than enough time for the committee to conduct necessary research before holding a hearing -- that's plenty of time.

Finally, I call on the full Senate to commit to an up or down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. This is a very generous period of time that will allow all the Senators to evaluate nominees and have their votes counted.

Our proposals would not favor Democrats or Republicans. The plan would be fair and would apply to -- regardless of who the President is. It doesn't matter who the President is. What matters is a system which works.

For the first time in years, the judicial confirmation process would work as it was intended to work. All Senators would have a chance to make their voices heard, and their views known, and that's important. All nominees would have the certainty of an up or down Senate floor vote within a reasonable period of time, and that is important. All Presidents would know that their judicial nominations would be addressed promptly. All Americans would see a more dignified process, and have their federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and their liberties. And the vacancy crisis would be resolved once and for all.

I urge every member of the Senate, in particular those serving on the Judiciary Committee, to carefully consider this new beginning for the judicial nomination process, to weigh their responsibilities, to look at the vacancy problem we have, to act in a responsible fashion.

The failure of the judicial confirmation process is harming the administration of justice in America. That is a fact. The current state of affairs is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet our responsibilities under the Constitution. The Constitution has given us a shared duty and we must meet that duty together.

Thank you all for coming.

Kathy -- I do not know how we handle interns and official travel (I handle the TEFOS forms). I am not sure that putting the intern on the same train with a staff member makes a difference. I cc'd others in the Office who have handled employee/detailee matters to see if they have advice. (the case of political travel would be a different analysis I would think--official funds/travel are not involved).

Nanette -- any guidance on this?

Subject: intern travel

Ben - Faith Based Initiatives has requested that an intern, Brian Goebel, travel to Philadelphia for the Faith-Based regional conference. He wants to leave tomorrow morning at 6:37 am and return tomorrow evening at 8:30 pm. No other staff member will be accompanying him on these specific trains.

Can he go? I am assuming if he can go, we cannot pay him per diem. We had an instance of an intern being approved for travel previously with Andrew McGarrity, who accompanied Coddy Johnson to Nashville on political travel.

I am just on the phone with Catharine Ryun, who says she thinks they can arrange for him to travel together with her on the same trains. Does that make a difference? Let me know.
Thanks.

Salvation Army "Angels"

The Salvation Army "Angels" have arrived and are waiting for you to make their Christmas wish come true. Angels are hanging on the trees in the West Wing Lobby and the West Wing Ground Floor Lobby. Please select an Angel
from one of the trees and let Ann Gray, the West Wing Receptionist, (x6-2605) know which one you've chosen.

You may return your wrapped gifts with the code attached to the outside no later than December 19 to Ann Gray in the West Wing Lobby.

Help us make sure no "Angels" are forgotten!

Thank you.

Brett,

Viet asked me to draft a thank you letter to Judge Nelson for providing the President his notice of retirement in the one year time frame. Nelson specifically noted in his notice that he was complying with the President's request. Viet thought that Judge Gonzales should send the letter. It is attached.

The Honorable Thomas G. Nelson
United States Circuit Judge
Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
P.O. Box 1339
304 North 8th Street
Boise, ID 83701-1339

Dear Judge Nelson:

I write to thank you for your recent notification to the President of your intent to retire from regular active service as a United States Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit on November 14, 2003. As you noted in your letter, the President has requested that members of the Federal Judiciary provide one year's notice of their intent to retire. The process of nomination and confirmation can be lengthy under the best of circumstances. The notice you have provided allows the President to set the process in motion, so that a nominee will be ready to take the bench upon your retirement from active service.

Your letter indicates that you plan to continue to serve as a senior judge. The President greatly appreciates your continued service to this country.

Sincerely,

REV_00155263

Salvation Army "Angels"

The Salvation Army "Angels" have arrived and are waiting for you to make their Christmas wish come true. Angels
are hanging on the trees in the West Wing Lobby and the West Wing Ground Floor Lobby. Please select an Angel
from one of the trees and let Ann Gray, the West Wing Receptionist, (x6-2605) know which one you've chosen.

You may return your wrapped gifts with the code attached to the outside no later than December 19 to Ann Gray in the West Wing Lobby.

Help us make sure no "Angels" are forgotten!

Thank you.

Kathy -- I do not know how we handle interns and official travel (I handle the TEFOS forms). I am not sure that putting the intern on the same train with a staff member makes a difference. I cc'd others in the Office who have handled employee/detailee matters to see if they have advice. (the case of political travel would be a different analysis I would think--official funds/travel are not involved).

Nanette -- any guidance on this?

Subject: intern travel

travel to Philadelphia for the Faith-Based regional conference. He wants to leave tomorrow morning at 6:37 am and return tomorrow evening at 8:30 pm. No other staff member will be accompanying him on these specific trains.

Can he go? I am assuming if he can go, we cannot pay him per diem. We had an instance of an intern being approved for travel previously with Andrew McGarrity, who accompanied Coddy Johnson to Nashville on political travel.

I am just on the phone with Catharine Ryun, who says she thinks they can arrange for him to travel together with her on the same trains. Does that make a difference? Let me know.
Thanks.

The Judicial Conference (through its Judicial Resources Committee) surveys the judgeship needs of the courts every other year. A threshold for the number of weighted filings per judgeship is the key factor in determining when an additional judgeship will be requested. Other factors may include geography, number of senior judges, and mix of cases. The Judicial Conference presents its judgeship recommendations to Congress.
